Questions referred

Is the list of grounds for excluding public works contractors contained in Article 24 of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199) exhaustive?

If that list is not exhaustive, does a provision which lays down (in order to protect transparency in the economic functioning of the State) that the status of owner, partner, main shareholder or management executive of a media undertaking is incompatible with the status of owner, partner, main shareholder or management executive of an undertaking contracting to perform a works, supply or services contract for the State, or for a legal person in the public sector in the broad sense, serve purposes which are compatible with the general principles of Community law and is that total prohibition on the award of public contracts to such undertakings compatible with the Community principle of proportionality?

If, within the meaning of Article 24 of Directive 93/37/EEC, the list of grounds for excluding contractors contained therein is an exhaustive list or if the national provision at issue cannot be construed as serving purposes which are compatible with the general principles of Community law or if, finally, the prohibition introduced in it is not compatible with the Community principle of proportionality, does the above directive, in preventing the inclusion, as grounds for excluding contractors from public works procurement procedures, of cases where the contractor, its executives (such as the owner of the undertaking or its main shareholder, partner or management executive), or intermediaries acting for the said executives, work in media undertakings which are able to exercise an undue influence on the public works procurement procedure, because of the influence which they are able to exert in general, infringe the general principles of the protection of competition and transparency and Article 5(2) of the Treaty establishing the European Community which enacts the principle of subsidiarity?

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

12 November 2009 (*)

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations – Public procurement –Directive 93/38/EEC – Contract notice – Consultancy project – Criteria for automatic exclusion – Qualitative selection and award criteria)

ACTION under Article 226 EC for failure to fulfil obligations, brought on 12 April 2007,

Commission of the European Communities, represented by M. Patakia and D. Kukovec, acting as Agents, with an address for service in Luxembourg, applicant,

Hellenic Republic, represented by D. Tsagkaraki, acting as Agent, and by K. Christodoulou, dikigoros, with an address for service in Luxembourg, defendant,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber), composed of K. Lenaerts, President of the Third Chamber acting as President of the Fourth Chamber, R. Silva de Lapuerta, E. Juhász (Rapporteur), G. Arestis, and J. Malenovský, Judges,

Advocate General: E. Sharpston,

Registrar: L. Hewlett, Principal Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 10 July 2008, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 9 July 2009,

Judgment

1 By its application, the Commission of the European Communities seeks a declaration that, by introducing de facto an additional criterion for automatic exclusion beyond those which are expressly provided for in Article 31(2) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84), to the detriment of foreign consultancy firms, and by failing to distinguish in the contest in question between qualitative selection and award criteria, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Community legislation on public procurement, more specifically Articles 4(2), 31(1) and (2) and 34(1)(a) of the Directive, as interpreted by the Court, the principle of mutual recognition of formal qualifications which applies to the Community law on public procurement and Articles 12 EC and 49 EC.

Legal context

2 Article 2 of Directive 93/38, in the version applicable at the time of the facts of the present case, provided:

‘1. This Directive shall apply to contracting entities which:

(a) are public authorities or public undertakings and exercise one of the activities referred to in paragraph 2;

2. Relevant activities for the purposes of this Directive shall be:

...

(c) the operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, trolley bus, bus or cable.

3 Article 14(1)(c)(i) of that directive provided:

‘1. This Directive shall apply to:

...

(c) contracts awarded by contracting entities carrying out activities referred to in Annexes III, IV, V, and VI, provided that the estimated value, net of VAT, is not less than:

(i) ECU 400 000 in the case of supply and service contracts;

4 Under Article 4(2) of Directive 93/38:

‘Contracting entities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between different suppliers, contractors or service providers’.

5 Article 31 of that directive read as follows:

‘1. Contracting entities which select candidates to tender in restricted procedures or to participate in negotiated procedures shall do so according to objective criteria and rules which they lay down and which they shall make available to interested suppliers, contractors or service providers.

2. The criteria used may include the criteria for exclusion specified in Article 23 of [Council] Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts [OJ English Special Edition 1971 (II) p. 682] and in Article 20 of [Council] Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts [OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1].

3. The criteria may be based on the objective need of the contracting entity to reduce the number of candidates to a level which is justified by the need to balance the particular characteristics of the contract award procedure and the resources required to complete it. The number of candidates selected must, however, take account of the need to ensure adequate competition.’

6 Article 23 of Directive 71/305 and Article 20 of Council Directive 77/62, which were worded in similar terms, set out, under Title IV, Chapter 1, entitled ‘Criteria for qualitative selection’, situations in which a supplier could be excluded from participation in the contract. Those situations relate to either the personal circumstances of the supplier, that is to say, bankruptcy, winding up, suspension of business activities, administration by a court, or conviction, or the conduct of the supplier, that is to say, grave professional misconduct, failure to fulfil obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions or taxes or serious misrepresentation.

7 Those two articles were repeated in Article 24 of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) and Article 20 of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), which codified Directives 71/305 and 77/62.

8 Article 34(1) of Directive 93/38 provided:

'1. Without prejudice to national laws, regulations or administrative provisions on the remuneration of certain services, the criteria on which the contracting entities shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) the most economically advantageous tender, involving various criteria depending on the contract in question, such as: delivery or completion date, running costs, cost-effectiveness, quality, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical merit, after-sales service and technical assistance, commitments with regard to spare parts, security of supplies and price; or

(b) the lowest price only.'

9 Finally, Article 2(6) of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14), in the version applicable at the time of the facts of the present case, headed 'Requirements for review procedures', read as follows:

'The effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law. Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.'

10 The wording of that provision is almost identical to that of Article 2(6) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

The contract notice in question and the pre-litigation procedure

11 In the present case, the Commission's complaints concern certain terms and conditions appearing in a contract notice issued by ERGA OSE AE ('ERGA OSE'), a public entity owned by the Greek railways body. That notice related to the carrying out of a study concerning property and electro-mechanical projects in connection with the construction of a railway station.

12 The contract notice in question, numbered 2003/S 205-185214 and 2003/S 206-186119, was published on 16 October 2003. The terms and conditions of that notice were based on the national legal requirements then in force, namely Law 716/1977.

13 For the purposes of the examination of this action, the material terms of the disputed contract notice are the following:

'Section III: Legal, economic financial and technical information

2.1 Information concerning the individual situation of ... service providers and the formalities necessary to assess their minimum economic and technical capacity:

...

2.1.3 Technical capacity – Supporting evidence required: A. Expressions of interest will be accepted if submitted by:

(a) Greek consultancy firms which are enrolled in the corresponding national register and possess a certificate:

(b) Foreign consultancy firms, constituted under the legislation of a Member State of the European Union or the [European Economic Area (EEA)] and which have their central administration, principal place of business or statutory seat within the European Union or the EEA … Foreign consultants must possess formal and substantive qualifications for each category of study corresponding to those required for Greek consultants who are enrolled in the Greek register of Consultants, and consultancy firms must have staff for each category of study corresponding to the staff required for Greek consultancy firms …

It is stressed that foreign consultancy firm/consultants who submitted an expression of interest in [ERGA OSE] tendering procedure in the six months preceding the date of their expression of interest in the present competition and who declared qualifications corresponding to certificate categories different from those now being asked for will not be accepted.

Section IV: Procedure

'IV. (1) Nature of procedure: open

IV.(2) Award criteria:

The most economically advantageous offer, in conformity with the following criteria …:

Taking account of Article 34(1)(a) of Directive 93/38, the contract will be awarded in accordance with the following criteria:

1. Specific and general experience, in particular design work on similar projects either by consultancy firms or consultants and their scientific staff.

2. Real capacity to conduct a study within the timescale planned together with obligations assumed regarding the carrying-out of other studies and the specific scientific and operational staff proposed to conduct the study in question as well as the equipment in relation to the object of the study, order of priority: none.

14 Under the Greek system, the certificates of consultancy firms and consultants are categorised according to experience and consultancy undertaken and are registered according to that experience. Foreign consultancy firms and consultants are not required to be so registered. For each contract, specific categories of certificate are required, according to the experience required for that contract.

15 Law 716/1977 has been repealed and replaced by Law 3316/2005.

16 Following a complaint, on 28 June 2005 the Commission wrote to the competent Greek authorities, pointing out that some of the terms of the contract notice in question contravened certain provisions of Directive 93/38 and the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality. The Greek authorities replied by letter of 22 July 2005. After considering that reply, on 18 October 2005 the Commission sent a letter of formal notice to the Hellenic Republic. The two complaints set out in that letter concerned, first, discrimination against foreign consultancy firms or consultants by reason of the formulation of the second paragraph of Section III, point 2(1.3)(b) of the contract notice in question and, second, the lack of distinction between qualitative selection criteria and award criteria in Section IV, point 2 of that notice.

17 Since it did not find the Greek authorities' reply of 14 December 2005 to that letter of formal notice to be satisfactory, on 4 July 2006 the Commission sent a reasoned opinion to the Hellenic Republic, to which the latter replied by letter of 30 August 2006. Unconvinced by that reply, the Commission decided to bring the present action.

The action

18 The Hellenic Republic objects that the action is inadmissible.

19 Firstly, it points out that Law 716/1977, which formed the basis of the contract notice in question, was repealed by a new law before the date on which the time-limit set in the reasoned opinion expired, that is to say, before the point in time at which the question whether there has been a failure to fulfil obligations falls to be assessed. Contract notices issued on the basis of the new law no longer contain clauses such as those in issue in the present case. Proceedings for a declaration of failure to fulfil obligations are not intended to stigmatise a Member State but to enable it to enact legislation which complies with Community law, that objective having now been attained with Law 3316/2005.

20 Secondly, the Hellenic Republic submits, essentially, that Article 2(6) of Directive 92/13 was transposed into Greek law by Article 4(2) of Law 2252/1997, pursuant to which after the contract has been awarded it can no longer be challenged. Accordingly, revocation a posteriori of the contract concluded on the basis of the contract notice in question, which constitutes a one-off contract since it relates to preparation of a study, is not possible, particularly since the award of that contract was upheld by three judicial decisions at national level, delivered in proceedings for interim measures. Thus, the Hellenic Republic suggests, in fact, that the Commission's action has become devoid of purpose.

22 Firstly, it must be noted that, as is apparent from both the Commission's application and reply and as it confirmed at the hearing before the Court, the action does not concern incomplete or incorrect transposition of Directive 93/38 into national law, or even a consistent administrative practice based on Law 716/1977 that did not comply with that directive, but rather misapplication of the latter in the procurement procedure in question.

23 The Commission alone is competent to decide whether it is appropriate to bring proceedings against a Member State for failure to fulfil its obligations and to determine the conduct or omission attributable to the Member State concerned on the basis of which those proceedings should be brought. It may therefore ask the Court to find that, in not having achieved, in a specific case, the result intended by the directive, a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations (Joined Cases C–20/01 and C–28/01 Commission v Germany [2003] ECR I–3609, paragraph 30, and the case-law cited). Accordingly, the repeal of Law 716/1977 and the adoption of a new law before expiry of the time-limit set in the reasoned opinion do not render the present action devoid of purpose.

24 Secondly, it must be pointed out that, in accordance with the case-law of the Court, Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665, the content of which is identical to that of Article 2(6) of Directive 92/13, cannot affect an action brought under Article 226 EC (Case C–503/04 Commission v Germany [2007] ECR I–6153, paragraph 34). Those directives, by requiring the Member States to take the measures necessary to ensure that decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively, cannot be regarded as also regulating the relationship between the Member States and the Community and thus affecting the application of Article 226 EC (see, to that effect, Case C–275/08 Commission v Germany [2009] ECR I–0000, paragraphs 33 and 35).

25 In any event, the fact that, it might no longer be possible to revoke the contract in question does not render the infringement proceedings devoid of purpose.

26 Furthermore, it must be noted that, when the time-limit of two months prescribed in the reasoned opinion expired, that is to say, on 4 September 2006, the contract at issue had not run its full course, although that is the condition required under the settled case-law of the Court for the Commission's action to be considered inadmissible (see, inter alia, Case C–394/02 Commission v Greece [2005] ECR I–4713, paragraph 18, and the case-law cited, and Case C–237/05 Commission v Greece [2007] ECR I–8203, paragraph 29).

27 It is apparent from the case file that the contract at issue comprised two consultancy projects which were to be carried out by the successful tenderer. Notwithstanding the fact that, as the Hellenic Republic claims, the second project was contingent on the first, it is not disputed that they formed a whole as regards performance of the obligations of the successful tenderer. According to the actual statement of the Hellenic Republic at the hearing before the Court, the second project had not yet been completed and, consequently, delivered to the awarding body on 4 September 2006. Accordingly, at that date, the contract at issue had not run its full course.

28 Having regard to the foregoing considerations, it must be held that the Commission's action is admissible.

Substance

29 It should be noted at the outset that, as is apparent from the documents in the case, ERGA OSE is a public undertaking whose activity involves the operation of public services providing networks in the field of railway transport. It is therefore a contracting entity within the meaning of Article 2(1)(a) and 2(c) of Directive 93/38. In addition, the estimated value of the contract to which the contract notice in question relates is EUR 3 240 000 and therefore greatly exceeds the threshold set in Article 14(1)(c)(i) of that directive. Consequently, the contract award procedure in question falls within the scope of that directive.

30 The complaints raised in the present action relate, firstly, to the clause in Section III, point 2.1.3 (b), second paragraph, of the contract notice in question and, secondly to Section IV, point 2, of that notice.

The clause in Section III, point 2.1.3(b), second paragraph, of the contract notice in question

31 The Commission submits that the clause in Section III, point 2.1.3(b), second paragraph, of the contract notice in question – according to which foreign consultancy firms or consultants who had submitted an expression of interest in ERGA OSE tendering procedures in the six months preceding the date of their expression of interest in the competition and who had declared qualifications corresponding to certificate categories different from those now required would not be accepted – disregarded Article 31(1) and (2) of Directive 93/38, in that it introduced a ground of exclusion additional to those exhaustively authorised by Community law in the field of public procurement. That clause also introduced discrimination against foreign consultancy firms and consultants, in breach of the principle of equal treatment set out in Article 4(2) of Directive 93/38 and resulting from Articles 12 EC and 49 EC. It also fails to have regard to the principle of mutual recognition of diplomas and other evidence of formal qualifications.

32 First of all, it must be pointed out that the Commission does not challenge the Greek system of categorising the certificates of consultancy firms and consultants according to experience and consultancy undertaken, nor their registration according to that experience. Nor does it deny that the Member States have the power to request proof of that experience or the fact that foreign consultancy firms and consultants are not required to be registered and that they may prove their experience in any way.

33 After that preliminary comment, it must be noted, firstly, that the procedure to which the contract notice in question related was an open procedure. Questioned on that point at the hearing, the Commission admitted that Article 31 of Directive 93/38 gave rise to the problem of whether it was applicable to that type of procedure, having regard to the fact that, in paragraph 1 thereof, it expressly refers to restricted and negotiated procedures and not to open procedures. It stated on that occasion that its complaint with regard to the clause in question was essentially based on a breach of Article 4(2) of that directive.

34 In those circumstances, the view must be taken that the Commission has withdrawn its complaint alleging breach, by that clause, of Article 31 of Directive 93/38.

35 Secondly, the clause in question, formulated in clear and unequivocal terms, must be understood as meaning that, if foreign consultancy firms or consultants had taken part in a procedure launched by the same contracting entity, that is to say, ERGA OSE, in the six months preceding the new tendering procedure and if, in the earlier procedure, they had declared qualifications corresponding to certificate categories different from those being asked for in the new procedure, in accordance with the Greek system of categorising diplomas, they would not be allowed to participate in that new procedure.

36 However, the Hellenic Republic submits that that clause has always been applied to the effect that any interested operator in doubt as to its scope could request clarification from the contracting entity concerned and was entitled to submit evidence, by any appropriate means, that it met the conditions for participation in the procedure in question.

37 In that regard, it is clear that, in accordance with the settled case-law of the Court, the principle of equal treatment entails the principle of transparency. Those principles, which constitute the basis of the Community directives on public procurement, mean, in particular, that tenderers, even potential tenderers, must generally be on an equal footing and have equality of opportunity in formulating the terms of their applications to take part and their tenders (see, to that effect, Case C–470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I–11617, paragraph 93, and Case C–213/07 Michaniki [2008] ECR I–0000, paragraphs 44 and 45 and the case-law cited).

38 In particular, potential tenderers must be in a position of equality as regards the scope of the information in a contract notice. It is not consistent with those principles for one category of those concerned to have to request clarification and additional information from the contracting entity as to the actual meaning of the content of a contract notice, where its formulation would leave no room for doubt in the mind of a reasonably well-informed and diligent potential tenderer.

39 In addition, the Court has held that Article 4(2) of Directive 93/38, in prohibiting any discrimination between tenderers, also protects those who were discouraged from tendering because they were placed at a disadvantage by the procedure followed by a contracting entity (Case C–16/98 Commission v France [2000] ECR I–8315, paragraph 109).

40 It cannot be disputed that the clause in question, with its clear formulation, is likely to have a dissuasive effect on foreign consultancy firms or consultants, as was moreover, the case here.

41 That clause will clearly induce them to think that any difference between the qualifications declared in an earlier procedure launched by the same contracting body and the qualifications required for the procedure to which the contract notice in question relates has the automatic effect of excluding them from participating in that contract.

42 Consequently, a foreign tenderer such as the complainant to the Commission does not enjoy equality of opportunity with non-foreign tenderers because of the clearly dissuasive wording of that clause and the need, despite that wording, to take additional steps to obtain clarification as to the conditions for admission to the tendering procedure.

43 It is therefore clear that the way in which the contract notice in question is worded gives rise to a difference in treatment by reason of the Member State of establishment of those concerned, to the detriment of foreign candidates, and the Hellenic Republic has offered no justification for that difference.

44 Thirdly, in accordance with recital 34 in the preamble to Directive 93/38, ‘the relevant Community rules on mutual recognition of diplomas, certificates or other evidence of formal qualifications apply when evidence of a particular qualification is required for participation in an award procedure or a design contest’.

45 In the present case, it is indeed apparent from the wording of the clause in Section III, point 2.1.3 (b), second paragraph, of the contract notice in question that foreign candidates who had previously submitted an expression of interest in other contract notices issued by the same contracting entity were not, unlike national candidates, able to rely on all their diplomas or professional qualifications before that entity.

46 However, that clause, as it is worded, does not enable it to be asserted that that entity would refuse on principle to take account of diplomas or evidence of professional qualifications issued by another Member State.

47 It follows that the Commission's complaint alleging breach of the Community rules of mutual recognition of evidence of formal qualifications is unfounded.

48 In the light of the foregoing considerations, it must be held that the clause in question does not comply with Article 4(2) of Directive 93/38.

49 In those circumstances, it is not necessary to examine the Commission's other allegations which also seek a finding of such discriminatory treatment.

Section IV, point 2, of the contract notice in question

50 The Commission submits that point 2 of Section IV of the contract notice in question, headed 'Award criteria', confuses, in an unacceptable way, criteria for the qualitative selection of tenderers and criteria for the award of contracts. It submits that Directive 93/38 introduces a system analogous to that established by Directive 92/50, under which two phases of the procedure must be distinguished, the first establishing the tenderer selection criteria and the second consisting of laying down the award criteria for the contract. There are therefore two separate stages to the award procedure which have different objectives, although, according to the Commission, the simultaneous checking of the candidates' suitability and the awarding of the contract is not prohibited.

51 In that regard, it is apparent from case-law that, while the Community directives on public procurement do not in theory preclude the examination of the tenderers' suitability and the award of the contract from taking place simultaneously, the two procedures are nevertheless distinct and are governed by different rules (see, by analogy, Case 31/87 Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635, paragraphs 15 and 16, and Case C–532/06 Lianakis and Others [2008] ECR I–251, paragraph 26).

52 The suitability of tenderers is to be checked by the authorities awarding contracts in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing and of technical capability (the 'qualitative selection criteria') referred to, in the present case, in Articles 30 and 31 of Directive 93/38 (see, by analogy, Beentjes, paragraph 17, and Lianakis and Others, paragraph 27).

53 By contrast, the award of contracts is based on the criteria set out, in the present case, in Article 34(1) of that directive, namely, the lowest price or the economically most advantageous tender (see, by analogy, Beentjes, paragraph 18, and Lianakis and Others, paragraph 28).

54 However, although in the latter case, as is attested by the use of the expression 'for example', Article 34(1) of Directive 93/38 does not set out an exhaustive list of the criteria which may be chosen by the contracting authorities, and therefore leaves it open to the authorities awarding contracts to select the criteria on which they propose to base their award of the contract, their choice is nevertheless limited to criteria aimed at identifying the tender which is economically the most advantageous (see, by analogy, Beentjes, paragraph 19; Case C–19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I–7725, paragraphs 35 and 36; Case C–513/99 Concordia Bus Finland [2002] ECR I–7213, paragraphs 54 and 59; Case C–315/01 GAT [2003] ECR I–6351, paragraphs 63 and 64; and Lianakis and Others, paragraph 29).

55 Therefore, 'award criteria' do not include criteria that are not aimed at identifying the tender which is economically the most advantageous, but are instead essentially linked to the evaluation of the tenderers' ability to perform the contract in question (see, by analogy, Lianakis and Others, paragraph 30).

56 In the present case, the criteria selected as 'award criteria' by the contracting authority, in point 2 of Section IV of the contract notice in question, relate to the experience and real capacity to ensure proper performance of the contract in question. Those are criteria which concern the tenderers' ability to perform the contract and which therefore do not have the status of 'award criteria' pursuant to Article 34(1) of Directive 93/38, which the Greek Government, moreover, has not seriously disputed.

57 In the light of the foregoing, it must be held that point 2 of Section IV of the disputed contract notice does not comply with Article 34(1) (a) of Directive 93/38.

58 Having regard to all the foregoing considerations, it must be held that, by reason, firstly, of the exclusion, by virtue of Section III, point 2.1.3(b), second paragraph, of the contract notice in question of foreign consultancy firms or consultants who had submitted an expression of interest in ERGA OSE tendering procedures in the six months preceding the date of their expression of interest in the current competition and who had declared qualifications corresponding to certificate categories different from those now required and, secondly, of the failure to distinguish in Section IV, point 2, of that notice between qualitative selection criteria and award criteria for the contract in question, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 4(2) and 34(1)(a) of Directive 93/38.

59 The application is dismissed as to the remainder.

Costs

60 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Under the first subparagraph of Article 69(3) of those rules, the Court may nevertheless order that the costs be shared or that the parties bear their own costs where each party succeeds on some and fails on other heads, or where the circumstances are exceptional. Since the Commission and the Hellenic Republic have each been partially unsuccessful in their pleadings, they should bear their own costs.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that, by reason, firstly, of the exclusion, by virtue of Section III, point 2.1.3 (b), second paragraph, of the contract notice in question issued by ERGA OSE on 16 October 2003, numbered 2003/S 205-185214 and 2003/S 206-186119, of foreign consultancy firms or consultants who had submitted an expression of interest in ERGA OSE tendering procedures in the six months preceding the date of their expression of interest in the current competition and who had declared qualifications corresponding to certificate categories different from those now required and, secondly, of the failure to distinguish in Section IV, point 2, of that notice between qualitative selection criteria and award criteria for the contract in question, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 4(2) and 34(1)(a) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications;

2. Dismisses the remainder of the application;

3. Orders the Commission of the European Communities and the Hellenic Republic to bear their own costs.

Defendant: Hellenic Republic (represented by: D. Tsagkaraki, acting as Agent, and by K. Christodoulou, dikigoros)

Re:

Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Infringement of Articles 4(2), 31(1) and (2) and 34(1)(a) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84) and of Articles 12 and 49 EC - Selection of candidates for a restricted or negotiated procedure - Criteria for exclusion

Operative part of the judgment

The Court:

1. Declares that, by reason, firstly, of the exclusion, by virtue of Section III, point 2.1.3(b), second paragraph, of the contract notice in question issued by ERGA OSE on 16 October 2003, numbered 2003/S 205-185214 and 2003/S 206-186119, of foreign consultancy firms or consultants who had submitted an expression of interest in ERGA OSE tendering procedures in the six months preceding the date of their expression of interest in the current competition and who had declared qualifications corresponding to certificate categories different from those now required and, secondly, of the failure to distinguish in Section IV, point 2, of that notice between qualitative selection criteria and award criteria for the contract in question, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 4(2) and 34(1)(a) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications.

2. Dismisses the remainder of the application.

3. Orders the Commission of the European Communities and the Hellenic Republic to bear their own costs.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
Sharpston
delivered on 9 July 2009 (1)

Case C-199/07

Commission of the European Communities
Hellenic Republic

(Treaty infringement proceedings – Public procurement – Procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors – Criteria for the exclusion of candidates)

1. In this case which concerns a particular procurement procedure for design and consultancy services organised by the Greek railway authority, the Commission alleges that Greece is in breach of its obligations under Council Directive 93/38/EEC ('the Directive'), (2) the principle of equal treatment embodied in Article 12 EC, Article 49 EC which guarantees the freedom to provide services within the Community, and the principle of mutual recognition of professional qualifications.

Relevant Community legislation

2. Article 12 EC prohibits discrimination on the grounds of nationality.

3. Article 49 EC prohibits restrictions on the freedom to provide services in respect of nationals who are established in a Member State other than that of the person for whom the services are intended.

The Directive

4. The Directive coordinates the procurement procedures of entities which are public authorities or public undertakings (3) operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors.

5. The Directive provides for three types of procedure:

– 'open procedures', in which all interested suppliers, contractors or service providers may submit tenders;

– 'restricted procedures', in which only candidates invited by the contracting entity may submit tenders;

– 'negotiated procedures', in which the contracting entity consults suppliers, contractors or service providers of its choice and negotiates the terms of the contract with one or more of them. (4)

6. 'Design contests' are defined as national procedures which enable a contracting entity to acquire a plan or design selected by a jury after having been put out to competition. (5)

7. Article 4(1) provides that when organising, inter alia, design contests, contracting entities must apply procedures which are adapted to the provisions of the Directive. Article 4(2) states: 'Contracting entities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between different suppliers, contractors or service providers.'

8. Contracts awarded by entities carrying out activities in the transport sector where the estimated value (net of VAT) is not less than EUR 400 000 in the case of supply and service contracts or EUR 5 000 000 in the case of works contracts fall within the scope of the Directive. (6)

9. Articles 30 to 38 (Chapter V of the Directive) cover the qualification, the selection and the award aspects of a procurement procedure. Article 31 provides:

'1. Contracting entities which select candidates to tender in restricted procedures or to participate in negotiated procedures shall do so according to objective criteria and rules which they lay down and which they shall make available to interested suppliers, contractors or service providers.

2. The criteria used may include the criteria for exclusion specified in Article 23 of Directive 71/305/EEC and in Article 20 of Directive 77/62/EEC. (7)

3. The criteria may be based on the objective need of the contracting entity to reduce the number of candidates to a level which is justified by the need to balance the particular characteristics of the contract award procedure and the resources required to complete it. The number of candidates selected must, however, take account of the need to ensure adequate competition.'

10. The criteria on which contracting entities are to base the award of contracts are set out in Article 34, the relevant paragraphs of which provide:

'1. Without prejudice to national laws, regulations or administrative provisions on the remuneration of certain services, the criteria on which the contracting entities shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) the most economically advantageous tender, involving various criteria depending on the contract in question, such as: delivery or completion date, running costs, cost-effectiveness, quality, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical merit, after-sales service and technical assistance, commitments with regard to spare parts, security of supplies and price; or

(b) the lowest price only.

2. In the case referred to in paragraph 1(a), contracting entities shall state in the contract documents or in the tender notice all the criteria which they intend to apply to the award, where possible in descending order of importance.'

Directive 92/13/EEC

11. Council Directive 92/13/EEC (8) provides that Member States must take the measures necessary to ensure that decisions taken by contracting entities may be reviewed effectively on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the procurement field or national rules implementing that law. (9) Article 2(6) of Directive 92/13 provides:

'The effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law. Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.'

Background to the infringement proceedings

The contested procedure

12. The following facts are uncontested.

13. On 24 October 2003 notice of a competition for various engineering and associated design services in the context of the development of the Thriaso Pedio complex on the outskirts of Athens ('the contested procedure') was published in the Official Journal of the European Union. It was stated to be an open procedure. The contracting entity was ERGA OSE AE.

14. ERGA OSE AE is a public entity which supplies public services in the area of railway transport. The estimated value of the contract for which notice of the contested procedure was issued was EUR 3 240 000; well above the thresholds in Article 14(1)(c) of the Directive.

15. The notice of the contested procedure was issued by the contracting entity in accordance with the national legal requirements then in force, namely Law 716/1977. (10)

16. Section III of the competition notice covered the legal, economic financial and technical information that candidates were required to provide. The relevant terms are set out below:

(2.1) Information concerning the individual situation of ... service providers and the formalities necessary to assess their minimum economic and technical capacity:

(2.1.3) Technical capacity - Supporting evidence required: A. Expressions of interest will be accepted if submitted by

(a) Greek consultancy firms which are enrolled in the corresponding national register and possess a certificate:

(b) Foreign consultancy firms, constituted under the legislation of a Member State of the European Union or the EEA and which have their central administration, principal place of business or statutory seat within the European Union or the EEA ... Foreign consultants must possess formal and substantive qualifications for each category of study corresponding to those required for Greek consultants who are enrolled in the Greek register of Consultants, and consultancy firms must have staff for each category of study corresponding to the staff required for Greek consultancy firms

It is stressed that foreign consultancy firm/consultants who submitted an expression of interest in ERGA OSE AE tendering procedure in the six months preceding the date of their expression of interest in the present competition and who declared qualifications corresponding to certificate categories different from those now being asked for will not be accepted.' (11)

17. Section IV of the contested notice covers the procedural aspects of the competition.

'(1) Nature of procedure: open

...

(2) Award criteria:

the most economically advantageous offer, in conformity with the following criteria ...:

Taking account of Article 34(1)(a) of Directive 93/38/EEC, the contract will be awarded in accordance with the following criteria:

1. Specific and general experience, in particular design work on similar projects either by consultancy firms or consultants and their scientific staff.

2. Real capacity to conduct a study within the timescale planned together with obligations assumed regarding the carrying-out of other studies and the specific scientific and operational staff proposed to conduct the study in question as well as the equipment in relation to the object of the study …'

18. It is common ground that the reference to categories of qualifications in clause III 2.1.3.b ('the contested clause') reflects the fact that Greece operates a system of classification of engineers which groups them into categories according to the length, level and complexity of their studies, and further classifies engineering firms in groups according to the classifications of their engineers. A corresponding system of classification did not exist for foreign consultancy firms and consultants; consequently such firms were not obliged to be registered in this way.

Pre-litigation procedure

19. During 2004 the Commission received two complaints from a firm which stated that it did not submit an application for the contested procedure, because it considered itself necessarily excluded on the ground that it was a foreign firm and it had taken part less than six months previously in a competition with the same contracting entity, with a classification different from that asked for in the contested procedure.

20. Examining that complaint, the Commission took the view that the criterion in the contested clause of the competition notice (i) introduced a ground of exclusion additional to those exhaustively listed in Article 31(2) of Directive 93/38 and (ii) discriminated against foreign consultancy firms or consultants in breach of the Greek authorities' obligations under Community law.

21. On 28 June 2005, the Commission wrote to the Greek authorities to investigate the complaint. The Greek authorities replied on 22 July 2005.

22. Dissatisfied with the response that it had received, the Commission sent Greece a letter of formal notice on 18 October 2005.

23. The Greek authorities replied on 14 December 2005. They emphasised that the contested clause did not require foreign firms to register, but merely provided a means of establishing their experience. The Greek authorities contended that ERGA OSE AE had not in fact exclude a foreign firm on the basis of that clause.

24. The Commission considered the response of the Greek authorities to be inadequate, and so issued a reasoned opinion on 4 July 2006. It concluded that the contested clause contravened the Directive, the principle of mutual recognition of diplomas and the principle of equality of treatment, and that it failed to make the distinction between selection and award criteria which is a legal requirement in this field.

25. On 30 June 2006 the Greek authorities provided a response arguing (i) that the national legislation on which the competition notice was based (Law 716/1977) had been changed, so that any infringement action would be inadmissible; (ii) that the contracts had already been awarded to third parties in good faith and therefore could not be annulled; and (iii) that the contested clause had absolutely no effect on freedom of competition.

26. Dissatisfied with the Greek authorities' reply to its reasoned opinion the Commission launched the present infringement proceedings.

Admissibility

27. The Greek authorities argue that the action is inadmissible on three grounds. First, they contend that they complied with the reasoned opinion before its deadline expired. Second, they assert that the scope of the Commission's action extends beyond the objections raised in the pre-litigation procedure. Third, they contend that it is no longer possible to remedy the alleged infringement by annulling the contracts already concluded under the contested procedure, because of certain practical reasons (see points 39 to 41 below) and the effects of Article 2(6) of Directive 92/13.

28. In my view the Commission's action is admissible.

Compliance with the reasoned opinion

Arguments of the parties

29. The Greek authorities argue that they complied with the reasoned opinion before the expiry of its deadline, since Law 716/1977 was repealed and replaced by Law 3316/2005 which outlawed the use of provisions such as the contested clause and clarified the distinction between selection and award criteria.

30. In reply the Commission explains that the subject-matter of the action is not the national legal framework. Therefore, the repeal of Law 716/1977 is irrelevant to the current proceedings.

Assessment

31. I agree with the Commission.

32. Given that the Commission's case is based solely upon the contested procedure, the repeal of Law 716/1977 has no bearing on the substance of the Commission's action and therefore cannot render it inadmissible.

Scope of the action

33. The Greek authorities object that the scope of the action was extended beyond the matters raised during the pre–litigation procedure in two respects. First, they claim that the Commission first raised the complaint that Greece had failed to annul the award procedure in the reasoned opinion, rather than in the letter of formal notice. Second, they argue that the complaint that the violation of Community law is due to a persistent administrative practice is raised for the first time in the Commission's application. Greece also contends that the petitum of the reasoned opinion is vague and imprecise.

34. The Commission explains that the scope of its action is limited to the contested procedure. In its reply, the Commission expressly confirms that it does not allege that the Greek authorities' violation of Community law is due to a persistent administrative practice.

Assessment

35. It is well established that the subject-matter of proceedings brought under Article 226 EC is circumscribed by the pre-litigation procedure; and that consequently the Commission's reasoned opinion and the application must be based on the same grounds. (12)

36. In my view, the Greek Government has failed to demonstrate that the Commission has extended the subject-matter of its action beyond what is set out in the reasoned opinion. The Commission does not seek a declaration that the Greek authorities annul the award procedure. Nor is it alleging a violation of Community obligations due to a persistent administrative practice. (13)

37. The scope of the action is therefore consistent with the pre-litigation procedure.

38. The conditions to be fulfilled for bringing an action under Article 226 EC are likewise well established in the Court's case–law. In essence, the application must state the subject-matter of the proceedings and summarise the pleas in law on which it is based, and the statement must be sufficiently clear and precise to enable the defendant to prepare its defence and the Court to rule on the application. (14)

39. In my opinion the petitum to the reasoned opinion sets out the grounds of the Commission's complaint in a manner which enables the Greek authorities to be aware of the case against them. I therefore do not agree that the Commission's application is vague and imprecise.

Impossibility of remedying the alleged breach

40. The Greek authorities argue that it is impossible to remedy the alleged infringement for legal and practical reasons.

41. As regards the legal reasons, they contend that the contested procedure cannot be revoked and the contracts which have been awarded under it cannot be annulled at national level. In particular, the national legislation implementing Article 2(6) of Directive 92/13 means that the powers of the body responsible for review are restricted to awarding damages.

42. The Commission argues that Directive 92/13 does not apply to the current action and that Greece cannot therefore rely on it.

43. As regards the practical reasons, the Greek authorities allege that the project is part-financed by the Communities and as such is subject to a timetable which cannot be changed.

44. It is also argued that if the contested procedure were to be annulled and re-run it would distort competition.

Assessment

45. The arguments on the legal effect of annulment relate to the rights and remedies of an injured party at national level. In my view those issues are not relevant to the matters that must be determined in the current infringement proceedings.

46. More particularly, Directive 92/13 requires Member States to ensure that decisions taken by contracting entities may be reviewed effectively at national level for breaches of the Community rules in the public procurement field. (15) It is therefore concerned with remedies in national proceedings where an individual seeks redress before national authorities. Infringement proceedings under Article 226 EC are of an entirely different character. Such actions take place at Community level; and the issue is whether the Member State is in breach of its obligations under Community law. Accordingly, Directive 92/13 is irrelevant to the present proceedings.

47. The Greek authorities have submitted no evidence to substantiate their claims that practical reasons make it impossible to render the contested procedure compliant. It is therefore unnecessary to consider that argument further.

48. In those circumstances the action is admissible.

The declaration sought

49. The Commission seeks a declaration that, by introducing de facto an additional criterion for automatic exclusion beyond those which are expressly provided for in Article 31(2) of the Directive, to the detriment of foreign consultancy firms, and by failing to distinguish in the contest in question between qualitative selection and award criteria Greece has failed to fulfil the obligations flowing from Community legislation on public procurement, more specifically Articles 4(2), 31(1) and (2) and 34(1)(a) of the Directive as interpreted by the Court, the principle of mutual recognition of formal qualifications which is governed by Community law on public procurement and Articles 12 and 49 EC.

50. The grounds on which the declaration is sought give rise to two preliminary remarks.

51. First, the legal and factual basis upon which the declaration is sought must be clear. Secondly, the Commission bears the burden of proof in proceedings under Article 226 EC and must place before the Court the information to establish that the obligation in question has not been fulfilled. (16)

Substantive arguments of the parties

52. The Commission raises six grounds of complaint which I have grouped together as follows. First, I examine the alleged breach of the criteria concerning qualifications, selection and award procedures. Secondly, I consider the alleged breach of the principles of non-discrimination and transparency.

Breach of the criteria concerning qualifications, selection and award procedures

Article 31(1) and (2) of the Directive

53. Article 31 opens with an express reference to restricted and negotiated procedures. (17) The contested procedure was, however, an open procedure. (18) It is therefore necessary to consider whether, and if so to what extent, the Commission can claim that Greece has breached its obligations under Article 31 during the contested procedure.

54. In response to questions posed at the hearing, the Commission conceded that Article 31 does not expressly refer to the open procedure, but argued that its provisions should apply by analogy. It is not entirely clear what the Commission meant by that; and the Commission did not elaborate further during the oral procedure.

55. However, in its application the Commission refers to Commission v Spain, (19)Teckal (20) and Commission v Spain (21) in support of its position. In those cases, the Court held that the only permissible exceptions to the scope of application of the public procurement directives are those which are exhaustively and expressly mentioned therein. It may therefore be that the Commission's argument is that the only grounds on which a contracting entity may exclude a candidate from a tendering procedure, irrespective of whether the procedure applied is restricted, negotiated or open, are those expressly listed in Article 31(2).

56. That argument requires one to take the general principle derived from those cases as to when the directives should apply and to use it to redraft a specific provision of a particular directive in order to extend that provision's scope from specific procedures to all procedures.

57. I do not consider that to be appropriate.

58. In the present case, it is common ground that the contested procedure fell within the scope of Directive 93/38. The general principle laid down by the Court in those cases is therefore already satisfied. It seems to me to be entirely different – and impermissible – to use that general principle to rewrite a text that opens with the words, 'Contracting entities which select candidates to tender in restricted procedures or to participate in negotiated procedures …' so as to render everything that follows applicable, not to restricted procedures and negotiated procedures, but to all procedures. The obvious and natural reading is that the provision applies to the two procedures expressly identified. It does not apply to the remaining procedure (the open procedure used to award the contested contract).

59. Three further factors reinforce that interpretation of Article 31.

60. First, if the draftsman had wished what followed the opening words of the article to apply to all procedures, nothing could have been simpler to express. He had only to omit the words 'which select candidates to tender in restricted procedures or to participate in negotiated procedures'.

61. Second, the language used in the next subparagraph (Article 31(2)) strongly suggests that the criteria for exclusion there listed – even for restricted and negotiated procedures – are not exhaustive. To illustrate the point: the English text states 'The criteria used may include the criteria specified in Article 23 of Directive 71/305/EEC and in Article 20 of Directive 77/62/EEC.' The French text has 'Les critères utilisés peuvent inclure ceux d'exclusion énumérés à l'article 23 de la directive 71/305/CEE et à l'article 20 de la directive 77/62/CEE' and the German 'Die angewandten Kriterien können die in Artikel 23 der Richtlinie 71/305/EWG und Artikel 20 der Richtlinie 77/62/EWG angegebenen Ausschließungsgründe einschließen'. (22) The words 'may include' in the various language versions of the text indicate (so far as I can tell, quite consistently) that the selection criteria referred to are indicative, not exhaustive.

62. Third, that reading is reinforced by the third subparagraph. Article 31(3) contains further permissive language (that contracting authorities 'may' base the criteria for exclusion on a particular ground, not that they 'must') and directly relates the ground there identified ('the objective need to reduce the number of candidates to a level which is justified by the need to balance the particular characteristics of the contract award procedure and the resources required to complete it') to restricted and negotiated procedures. In open procedures, there is (by definition) no initial reduction of the number of candidates: rather, 'all interested suppliers, contractors or service providers may submit tenders'. (23) The safeguard clause contained in the final sentence of Article 31(3) ('The number of candidates selected must, however, take account of the need to ensure adequate competition') is likewise perfectly intelligible in the context of restricted and negotiated procedures, but meaningless when applied to open procedures. Nothing can 'ensure adequate competition' more than throwing the procedure open to all comers.

63. Finally, the Commission seeks to place some reliance on La Cascina and Others. (24) However, I do not agree that that assists the Court in interpreting Article 31 of the Directive. In La Cascina and Others the Court held that Article 29 of Directive 92/50/EC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (25) lays down (exhaustively) the seven grounds for excluding candidates from participation in a contract. However, Article 31 of the Directive is structured differently from Article 29 of Directive 92/50. Article 31(1) contains the mandatory elements, which are that candidates shall be selected according to 'objective criteria and rules which they lay down' and provides that contracting entities 'shall make [these] available to interested suppliers, contractors or service providers'. Unlike Article 29, Article 31(2) and (3) then allow Member States some discretion as to the exclusion criteria that they may apply.

64. I therefore conclude that the Commission's complaint that the contested procedure was in breach of Article 31(1) and (2) is misconceived.

Article 34(1)(a) of the Directive

65. The Commission contends that, in breach of their obligations under Article 34(1)(a), the Greek authorities failed to distinguish in this particular contest between qualitative selection criteria and award criteria.

66. In a restricted or negotiated procedure, the tendering procedure comprises two stages: a first stage at which (applying selection criteria) the contracting entity selects the candidates whom it invites to submit applications or to enter into negotiations; and a second stage at which (applying award criteria) the contracting entity decides to whom the contract should be awarded.

67. In an open procedure, the contracting entity merely has to decide (from amongst those interested service providers who submit applications) to whom the contract should be awarded.

68. The contested procedure was an open procedure.

69. It is therefore unclear to me upon what basis the Commission alleges that the contracting entity conducted a two-stage process which involved applying both selection and award criteria.

70. The complainant did not submit an application in the contested procedure, because it considered itself to be excluded automatically by the wording of clause 2.1.3 of section III of the competition notice. The Commission has not placed any evidence before the Court, whether in respect of the contested procedure or other tendering procedures, to substantiate its allegation that the Greek authorities have failed to distinguish between the selection and award criteria.

71. Accordingly, I conclude that this ground of complaint is unfounded.

Breach of the principle of mutual recognition under the Directive

72. The Commission alleges that the Greek authorities have failed to fulfil their obligation to apply the principle of mutual recognition. The Commission identifies no substantive provision of the Directive in support of this contention, but states that it is basing itself upon recitals 34 and 36 in the preamble to the Directive. (26) However, it is settled case-law that the preamble to a Community act does not have binding force. (27)

73. There is therefore no basis for considering that argument further.

74. Therefore, there remain two issues for the Court to consider: whether the Greek authorities are in breach of their Treaty obligations concerning the mutual recognition of formal qualifications and whether the way the contested procedure was handled breached the principles of non-discrimination and transparency (the arguments under Article 4(2) of the Directive and Articles 12 EC and 49 EC).

Mutual recognition of formal qualifications under the Treaty

75. The principle of mutual recognition of formal qualifications is derived from the Court's case-law on freedom of establishment. (28) It is, however, equally applicable to the provision of services. (29)

76. The Commission argues that the effect of the contested clause is to prevent candidates from proving their qualifications and experience on the basis of the rules that would apply in their home Member States.

77. The Greek authorities dispute the Commission's interpretation of the contested clause, contending that establishing proof of technical experience and qualifications is less onerous for foreign than it is for national firms. They assert that no candidate was excluded from participation in the competition on the basis of the contested clause.

78. The complainant itself did not submit an application, because it considered itself necessarily to be excluded from the contested procedure. Whether or not the Greek authorities would have recognised its formal qualifications was therefore never put to the test. Nor has the Commission submitted any evidence to the Court to demonstrate that the contracting entity failed to recognise the formal qualifications of a candidate from another Member State who did submit an application for consideration in the contested procedure.

79. It follows that this ground of complaint should be dismissed as unfounded.

Breach of the principles of non-discrimination and transparency

Article 4(2) of the Directive

80. It is common ground that the contested procedure falls within the scope of the Directive (30) and accordingly that ERGA OSE AE is subject to its rules.

81. Article 4(2) of the Directive provides that contracting entities 'shall ensure' that there is no discrimination between different suppliers, contractors or service providers.

82. In its case-law on public procurement, the Court refers interchangeably to 'the principle of non-discrimination' and 'the principle of equal treatment'. It has stated in terms that the principle of equal treatment lies at the heart of the public procurement directives. (31) It has likewise explained that the principle of non-discrimination in public procurement is a specific enunciation of the eponymous general principle of Community law. (32)

83. The principle of equal treatment implies, in turn, an obligation of transparency which governs all procedures for the award of public contracts, (33) in order to afford to all potential candidates equality of opportunity in formulating their applications to participate. (34)

84. The obligation of transparency requires a contracting entity to ensure that all potential applicants have ready access to the conditions that apply concerning the submission of applications. That includes information on the formal qualifications required of candidates in order to participate.

As the Court stated in Commission v France: (35) '... Article 4(2) of the Directive, in prohibiting any discrimination between tenderers, also protects those who are discouraged from tendering because they have been placed at a disadvantage by the procedure followed by a contracting entity'.

85. In that case, the Court held that the publication of limited information in the Official Journal of the European Communities amounted to discrimination, because those candidates who had access to the additional information published in the national journal were at an advantage since they had the full facts available to them concerning the exact scope of the projected works. (36)

86. Did the Greek authorities satisfy the requirements of Article 4(2) in relation to the contested procedure?

87. The Greek authorities argue that the contested clause does not exclude potential participants. In their view, it merely indicated that diplomas and official attestations, and proof of general technical experience, were required to demonstrate that the tenderer possessed a specified minimal technical competence. Greece argues that foreign consultancy firms or consultants had, indeed, certain advantages over national tenderers, in as much as they were permitted to show that they met the conditions by any appropriate means, including taking account of prior declarations concerning their experience. Moreover, Greece reiterates that any candidate in doubt as to his position had merely to request clarification from the adjudicating authority.

88. The Commission contends that the contested clause can only be interpreted as meaning that foreign design or consultancy firms would be classified according to the classification of previous qualifications submitted to the contracting entity (in the previous six months). The Commission points out that this condition dissuaded the complainant from participating in the contested procedure. The Commission also considers that the contested clause introduced a supplementary condition which is particularly difficult for foreign design or consultancy firms to meet.

89. I agree with the Commission.

90. First, in my view the contested clause was inherently likely to have a dissuasive effect on foreign consultancy firms or consultants, because it indicates (expressly) that they would not be accepted as candidates in certain specific circumstances.

91. Second, the Greek authorities have not shown that information clarifying how the candidature of consultancy firms or consultants would be handled was readily accessible to potential candidates when the competition notice was published.

92. Finally, I do not accept the Greek authorities' argument that, because potential foreign candidates in doubt as to their eligibility could have made enquiries with the contracting entity if they wished to establish their position, there was no dissuasive effect. Transparency requires that the potential tenderer be able to decide, on the basis of the published information readily available to him, whether or not to submit a tender. It is not sufficient that, if he takes the initiative and goes to the trouble and expense of making further detailed enquiries, he can establish the true position. (37) That is so a fortiori where (as here) the published terms of the invitation to tender indicate expressly that a particular category of potential candidates from other Member States, to which he belongs, will be excluded from consideration.

93. It is, moreover, clear that at least one potential candidate (the complainant) was indeed dissuaded from submitting an application.

94. I therefore conclude that the contested procedure failed to meet the requirements of Article 4(2) of the Directive.

Articles 12 and 49 EC

95. Discrimination based on nationality which prevents or hinders the taking up of the freedom to provide services is, of course, prohibited under Article 49 EC – the specific expression, as regards services, of the general prohibition on discrimination based on nationality found in Article 12 EC.

96. However, since the contested procedure falls within the scope of the Directive, it is unnecessary to consider the application of those Treaty provisions of Community law. (38)

Costs

97. Both the Commission and the Greek Government have asked for costs. In my view, the Commission is entitled to succeed on one ground only of its application. The way in which the proceedings have been conducted by the parties has not been particularly helpful to the Court in defining the parameters of the case and clarifying the arguments on which each side relies.

98. Pursuant to the first subparagraph of Article 69(3) of the Rules of Procedure, each party should therefore bear its own costs.

Conclusion

99. I therefore propose that the Court should:

– declare that, by including the contested clause in the competition notice (2003/S 205-185214) without providing further information on the eligibility of foreign consultancy firms or consultants to submit their candidature, the Greek authorities have failed to comply with their obligations under Article 4(2) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors;

– dismiss the remainder of the application;

– order each party to bear their own costs.

29 – It is settled case-law that Article 49 EC requires not only the elimination of all discrimination on grounds of nationality against service providers, but also the abolition of any restriction which is liable to prohibit, impede or render less advantageous the activities of a service provider established in another Member State where he lawfully provides similar services. 36 – See Case C-16/98 Commission v France, cited in footnote 35, paragraph 111.

37 – I do not suggest that the transparency obligation is breached where a more detailed information pack can be acquired by the potential tenderer on simple application to the contracting entity: see my Opinion in Case C–241/06 Lämmerzahl [2007] ECR I–8415, points 70 to 73.

Questions referred

1. Is Commission Regulation No 314/2002 ([1]) invalid in the light of Article 15 of Council Regulation No 1260/2001 on the common organisation of the markets in the sugar sector ([2]) and in the light of the principles of proportionality and non-discrimination, in that it does not provide, for calculation of the contribution on production, for the exclusion from the financing requirements of those quantities of sugar contained in processed products, which are exported without benefit of an export refund?

2. In the event that the answer to that question is in the negative:

   Is Regulation No 1686/2005 ([3]) invalid in the light of Commission Regulation No 314/2002 and of Article 15 of Council Regulation No 1260/2001 and of the principle of proportionality, in that it fixes a contribution on production for sugar which is calculated on the basis of an 'average loss' per tonne exported, which does not take account of the quantities exported without a refund, although those same quantities are included in the total used for evaluation of the total loss to be financed?

(2007/C 117/33)

Language of the case: German

Parties

Applicant: Commission of the European Communities (represented by: M. Condou-Durande and W. Bogensberger, Agents)

Defendant: Federal Republic of Germany

Form of order sought

The applicant claims that the Court should:

— declare that, by not adopting the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to implement Council Directive 2003/86/EC of 22 September 2003 on the right to family reunification ([1]), or, by not informing the Commission of such provisions, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive;

— order the Federal Republic of Germany to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The period prescribed for transposition of Directive 2003/86/EC expired on 3 October 2005.

Action brought on 12 April 2007 — Commission of the European Communities v Hellenic Republic

(2007/C 117/34)

Language of the case: Greek

Parties

Applicant: Commission of the European Communities (represented by: M. Patakia and D. Kukovec)

Defendant: Hellenic Republic

Form of order sought

— declare that, by introducing de facto an additional criterion for automatic exclusion beyond those which are expressly provided for in Article 31(2) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC ([1]) of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, to the detriment of foreign consultancy firms, and by failing to distinguish in the contest in question between qualitative selection criteria and award criteria, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil obligations flowing from Community legislation on public procurement, more specifically Articles 4(2), 31(1) and (2) and 34(1)(a) of Directive 93/38/EEC, as interpreted by the Court of Justice of the European Communities, the principle of mutual recognition of formal qualifications which is governed by Community law on public procurement, and Articles 12 and 49 of the Treaty;

— order the Hellenic Republic to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The Commission received a complaint concerning irregularities in connection with a design contest announced by ERGA OSA AE in 2003 for 'Studies relating to building and electrical-engineering works and installations — first phase of the group of stations in the Thriasio Plain'.

In light of the Court's case-law, the Commission submits that the condition for consultancy firms' participation in the design contest which envisages their grading, in accordance with the Greek system, in classes, and indeed in the 'specified' classes, introduces de facto a ground of exclusion beyond the grounds of exclusion which are expressly mentioned in Article 31(2) of Directive 93/38/EEC, and amounts in some instances to discrimination against foreign consultancy firms, in breach of Article 4(2) of Directive 93/38/EEC.

The Commission also submits that that condition in the foregoing notice of competition infringes the principle of mutual recognition of diplomas, certificates or other evidence of formal qualifications and Articles 12 and 49 EC.

The Commission further contends that the notice of competition does not separate the selection and award stages and confuses the selection criteria with the award criteria, in breach of Articles 31 and 34 of Directive 93/38/EEC.

Finally, the Commission contends that the repeal, relied on by the Greek authorities, of a law previously in force did not eliminate the infringement alleged against it, since it is the misapplication of the relevant Community provisions by the Greek authorities that is at issue, and not a failure adequately to transpose them into Greek law.

Consequently, the Commission submits that the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 4(2), 31(1) and (2) and 34(1)(a) of Directive 93/38/EEC and has infringed the principle of mutual recognition of formal qualifications and Articles 12 and 49 EC.

Question referred

Where a consortium without legal personality has participated as such in a procedure for the award of a public contract and has not been awarded that contract, is Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC [1] of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC [2] of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, to be interpreted as precluding the possibility under national law for an individual member of that consortium to bring an action against the decision awarding the contract?

THE COURT (Seventh Chamber), composed of U. Lohmus, President of the Chamber, P. Lindh and A. Arabadjiev (Rapporteur), Judges, Advocate General: M. Poiares Maduro,

Registrar: R. Grass,

after hearing the Advocate General,

makes the following

Order

On those grounds, the Court (Seventh Chamber) hereby:

1. Dismisses the appeal.

2. Orders Diy-Mar Insaat Sanayi ve Ticaret Ltd Sirketi and Musa Akar to pay the costs.

1. By their appeal the companies Diy-Mar Insaat Sanayi ve Ticaret Ltd Sirketi and Musa Akar ask the Court to set aside the order of the Court of First Instance of the European Communities of 17 January 2007 in Case T129/06 Diy-Mar Insaat Sanayi ve Ticaret and Akar v Commission , not published in ECR, (the order under appeal') dismissing as inadmissible their action which sought, first, annulment of the decision of the Commission MK/KS/DELTUR/(2005)/SecE/D/1614 of 23 December 2005 relating to the award of public works contracts for the construction of educational facilities in the provinces of Siirt and Diyarbakir (the contested decision'), and, secondly, suspension of the operation of the award procedure in question.

Background to the dispute

2. Following publication of a notice of the awarding of a public works contract relating to the construction of educational facilities in the Turkish provinces of Siirt and Diyarbakir (EuropeAid/12160l/C/W/TR), on 21 October 2005 the appellants lodged their application documents with the delegation of the Commission of the European Communities in Turkey.

3. On conclusion of the award procedure, by decision of 29 November 2005 the Commission awarded the contract to the undertaking ILCI Ins. San. Ve Tic, AS. By letter of 2 December 2005, the appellants requested that the Commission cancel that decision. The Commission rejected that request by the contested decision, which was contained in a letter of 23 December 2005 sent to the appellants by fax on the same day.

4. The decision included information on legal remedies and drew the appellants' attention to the right available to them under Article 230 EC to bring before the Community courts an action for annulment of the decision awarding the contract, within a period of two months from the date of the letter.

Procedure before the Court of First Instance and the order under appeal

5. Through two lawyers practising in Turkey, on 21 and 23 February 2006 the appellants lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance first a version in English and then a version in Turkish of an application for annulment of the contested decision (the first application').

6. Following a letter dated 21 March 2006 from the Registry of the Court of First Instance which informed them that their action could not be dealt with because for the purposes of proceedings they had to be represented by a lawyer authorised to practise before a court of a Member State of the European Union or of another State which is a party to the Agreement on the European Economic Area (the EEA Agreement'), on 6 April 2006 the appellants lodged, through Mr Ç. ahin, a lawyer who is a member of the Düsseldorf bar (Germany), a translation in German of the English language version of the first application.

7. After the Registrar of the Court of First Instance informed Mr ahin that he had omitted to sign the German language version of the application, he provided, on 26 April 2006, a new copy of that version which bore his signature. That is the date on which the action was registered under reference T129/06.

8. On 16 August 2006, the Commission raised an objection of inadmissibility, on the basis of Article 114 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, on the ground that the action was out of time.

9. The appellants claimed that there were circumstances which were such that the irregularities attached to the lodging of their application were excusable.

10. By the order under appeal the Court of First Instance held, first, that the first application did not comply with an essential procedural condition which must be observed if an action is not to be inadmissible, namely the requirement to submit an application bearing the signature of a lawyer authorised to practise before a court of a Member State or of another State which is a party to the EEA Agreement, and, second, that such a breach of procedure could not be cured after expiry of the period prescribed for bringing the action. The Court of First Instance held that only the German language version of the application signed by Mr ahin and lodged at the Registry on 26 April 2006 could be considered to be in proper form.

11. In that regard, the Court of First Instance ruled that the action, which had not been validly lodged until 26 April 2006, had to be declared out of time, given that the period prescribed for an action of annulment of the contested decision had expired on 6 March 2006.

12. In response to the appellants' argument that the fact that their action was lodged late, as a consequence of the failure by the Commission to inform them in the contested decision of the rules of representation before the Community courts, constituted an excusable error which precluded the application to them of the time-limits for bringing an action, the Court of First Instance stated that in relation to the time-limits for bringing an action the concept of excusable error had, in accordance with settled case-law, to be interpreted strictly. The Court stated that such an error can concern only exceptional circumstances in which, in particular, the conduct of the institution concerned has been such as to give rise to a pardonable confusion in the mind of a party acting in good faith and exercising all the diligence required of a normally experienced trader.

13. In the light of the above, the Court of First Instance held, at paragraph 44 of the order under appeal, that it could not be concluded from the circumstances relied on by the appellants that there had been excusable error on their part.

14. Consequently the Court of First Instance dismissed the action as inadmissible on the ground that it was out of time and ordered the appellants to pay the costs.

The forms of order sought by the parties

15. The appellants claim that the Court should:

- set aside the contested order;

- annul the contested decision;

- alternatively, refer the case back to the Court of First Instance for a ruling on the substance, and

- order the Commission to pay the costs.

16. The Commission contends that the Court should:

- dismiss the appeal by declaring it to be unfounded, and

- order the appellants to pay the costs.

The appeal

17. Under Article 119 of the Rules of Procedure, where the appeal is clearly inadmissible or clearly unfounded, the Court may at any time, acting on a report from the Judge-Rapporteur and after hearing the Advocate General, by reasoned order, and without opening the oral procedure, dismiss the appeal.

18. In support of their appeal, the appellants rely on two grounds of appeal.

The first ground of appeal

Arguments of the parties

19. The appellants' criticism of the Court of First Instance is that it infringed Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance and Article 24 of the Statute of the Court of Justice, which also applies to the Court of First Instance under the first paragraph of Article 53 of the Statute.

20. In essence, the appellants claim that those provisions place on the Community courts the obligation to establish the facts and to act on their own initiative and accordingly, in this case, the Court of First Instance was bound to take action when on 21 and 23 February 2006 it received the first application signed by a lawyer who was not authorised to represent them.

21. According to the appellants, the Court of First Instance was under an obligation, first, to draw their attention to this procedural error, relating to the capacity to represent a party, before expiry of the period prescribed for the lodging of the action, and, secondly, to clarify the facts with which the first application was concerned and to order the Commission to produce the relevant documents and records.

22. For its part, the Commission does not accept that the Court of First Instance was bound to inform the appellants, before expiry of the period laid down by Community law for the bringing of an action for annulment, that the first application signed by two Turkish lawyers did not comply with the formal requirements laid down in Articles 19 and 21 of the Statute of the Court of Justice and contends accordingly that the action had not properly been brought before the Court of First Instance.

23. In that regard, the Commission states that, while it is true that the Statute of the Court of Justice and the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance permit non-compliance with certain procedural requirements of an application to be cured, by a procedure of rectification, it is no less true that, even in those cases, the consequence of failure to rectify within the period allowed by the Registrar, as is clear from Article 44(6) of those rules, is that the application is inadmissible.

24. It follows, according to the Commission, that an application such as that in this case, which is vitiated by non-compliance with a requirement in respect of which neither the Statute of the Court of Justice nor the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance provide for any possibility of rectification, is on any view of the matter inadmissible. In the absence of any provision requiring the Court of First Instance to advise the signatories of documents who do not satisfy the requirements of Article 19 of the Statute of the Court of Justice that such a document is not properly before the Court, the Court of First Instance is also not bound to give such advice within a period which enables the applicant to lodge an application within the prescribed period.

Findings of the Court

25. Neither the provisions relied on by the appellants nor any other provision of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance and of the Statute of the Court of Justice place any obligation on the Court of First Instance to advise the party lodging an action that his application is inadmissible when it has not been signed by a lawyer authorised to appear before the Community courts.

26. While it is true that the Statute of the Court of Justice and the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance provide for the possibility of rectifying an application which does not comply with certain procedural requirements, it is also true that, on any view of the matter, non-compliance with the mandatory condition of representation by a lawyer authorised to practise before a court of a Member State or of another State which is a party to the EEA Agreement is not one of the requirements which can be rectified after expiry of the time-limit for bringing an action, in accordance with the second paragraph of Article 21 of the Statute of the Court of Justice and Article 44(6) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance.

27. Having regard to the foregoing, the Court must hold that, by not inviting the appellants to rectify their application before expiry of the period for bringing the action at the time of receipt on 21 and 23 February 2006 of the first application signed by a lawyer who was not authorised to appear before the Community courts, the Court of First Instance did not commit any breach of procedure.

28. Accordingly, the first ground of appeal must be dismissed as clearly unfounded.

The second ground of appeal

Arguments of the parties

29. By their second ground of appeal, the appellants claim that the Court of First Instance infringed Community law inasmuch as it disregarded the fact that the contested decision gave information which was incomplete or incorrect on the rules relating to the pursuit of legal remedies. Since that decision did not state either how or by whom an action could be brought and restricted itself to informing those persons to whom it was addressed that there was a legal remedy and that there was a time-limit for pursuit of that remedy, the appellants were led to think that their application could be submitted in Turkish and by themselves. Where the information on the rules applicable to the pursuit of legal remedies is missing, incorrect or incomplete, the time-limit in respect of bringing an action for annulment is not two months, but a year.

30. In addition, the appellants claim that nationals of non-member States should receive information on legal remedies which is more comprehensive than that provided to citizens of the Union.

31. The response of the Commission is that under Community law there is neither a general obligation to inform the persons to whom measures are addressed of the legal remedies which are open to th em nor an obligation to state the time-limits for availing themselves thereof.

32. While it is true that it cannot be denied that the Court of Justice and the Court of First Instance might, under Article 45 of the Statute of the Court of Justice, treat the provision by a Community institution of incorrect information on the rules for the pursuit of legal remedies as equivalent to unforeseeable circumstances or force majeure with the consequence that no right of the parties concerned should be prejudiced by the expiry of a time-limit, that does not apply in these proceedings.

33. The contested decision, which restricted itself to providing the information that that there was a legal remedy, what time-limit applied to that remedy and which court had jurisdiction, and which was silent on all the procedural formalities relating to lodging an application, could not have engendered any confusion in the minds of the appellants.

34. Lastly, the Commission rejects the appellants' argument that nationals of non-member States should receive information on legal remedies which is more comprehensive than that given to citizens of the Union, since information deemed correct and sufficient for the latter must also be so when given to nationals of non-member States.

Findings of the Court

35. The Court of First Instance was fully entitled to rule that the fact that the contested decision did not state that legal proceedings could properly be brought only through a lawyer authorised to practise before a court of a Member State or of another State which is a party to the EEA Agreement did not lead the appellants to commit an excusable error the consequence of which was that the Community rules of public policy governing time-limits for bringing actions could be set aside for their benefit.

36. As was stated in paragraph 42 of the order under appeal, excusable error can concern only exceptional circumstances in which, in particular, the conduct of the institution concerned had been such as to give rise to a pardonable confusion in the mind of a party concerned acting in good faith and exercising all the diligence required of a normally experienced trader (Case C195/91 P Bayer v Commission [1994] ECR I5619, paragraphs 26 to 28).

37. However, as was determined in paragraphs 43 and 44 of the order under appeal, since the condition that the application must be signed by a lawyer authorised to practise before a court of a Member State is an essential procedural condition laid down by the Statute of the Court of Justice and published, inter alia, in the Selected Instruments taken from the Treaties of the European Union and in the Official Journal of the European Union , the appellants were thus put in a position to be aware of the existence of that condition and cannot reasonably maintain that the conduct of the Commission caused a pardonable confusion in their minds as to the rules relating to their legal representation before the Community courts. In those circumstances, the appellants cannot be considered to have shown all the diligence required of a normally experienced trader.

38. That conclusion cannot be affected by the appellants' argument that the nationals of non-member States should receive information on legal remedies which is more comprehensive than that given to citizens of the Union.

39. It was the duty of the two lawyers who lodged the first application to read the relevant texts, in particular Article 19 of the Statute of the Court of Justice, and thereby make themselves aware of the rules relating to representation before the Community courts.

40. Consequently, it follows from that analysis that there is no merit in the appellants' claim that the Court of First Instance infringed Community law by declining to hold that their error was excusable.

41. Further, as the Commission correctly states, it is clear from the case-law of the Court that the Community institutions are not subject to any general obligation to inform the persons to whom their measures are addressed of the judicial remedies available or to any obligation to state the time-limits applicable to them (see, to that effect, the order in Case C153/98 P Guérin automobiles v Commission [1999] ECR I1441, paragraph 15).

42. It follows that the second ground of appeal must also be rejected as clearly unfounded.

43. Since both of the appellants' grounds of appeal have been unsuccessful, the appeal must be dismissed.

Costs

44. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, applicable in appeal proceedings by virtue of Article 118 thereof, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission has applied for costs and the appellants have been unsuccessful, the latter must be ordered to pay the costs.

Case C-163/07 P

Diy-Mar Insaat Sanayi ve Ticaret Ltd Sirketi

and

Commission of the European Communities

(Appeal – Public works contracts – Admissibility – Essential procedural conditions – Mandatory representation of natural or legal persons by a lawyer authorised to practise before a court of a Member State – Appeal clearly unfounded)

Summary of the Order

1. Procedure – Application initiating proceedings – Formal requirements

(Statute of the Court of Justice, Arts 21, second para., 24 and 53, first para.; Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, Arts 44(6) and 64)

2. Acts of the institutions – General obligation to inform the addressees of measures of the judicial remedies available and of the time-limits – None

1. Neither Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance nor Article 24 of the Statute of the Court of Justice, also applicable to the Court of First Instance pursuant to the first paragraph of Article 53 of that Statute, nor any other provision of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance and of the Statute of the Court of Justice, place any obligation on the Court of First Instance to advise the party lodging an action that his application is inadmissible when it has not been signed by a lawyer authorised to appear before the Community courts.

   While it is true that the Statute of the Court of Justice and the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance provide for the possibility of rectifying an application which does not comply with certain procedural requirements, it is also true that, on any view of the matter, non-compliance with the mandatory condition of representation by a lawyer authorised to practise before a court of a Member State or of another State which is a party to the Agreement on the European Economic Area is not one of the requirements which can be rectified after expiry of the time-limit for bringing an action, in accordance with the second paragraph of Article 21 of the Statute of the Court of Justice and Article 44(6) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance.

2. The Community institutions are not subject to any general obligation to inform the persons to whom their measures are addressed of the judicial remedies available or to any obligation to state the time-limits applicable to them.

Form of order sought

set aside the order of the Court of First Instance of the European Communities of 17 January 2007 in Case T-129/06, [1] served on the appellants on 26 January 2007, and annul the contested decision of the respondent of 23 December 2005 No MK/KS/DELTUR/(2005)/SecE/D/1614;

alternatively, to uphold the pleas in law raised by the appellant at first instance and to set aside the order of the Court of First Instance referred to above and annul the contested decision of the respondent of 23 December 2005 No MK/KS/DELTUR/(2005)/SecE/D/1614 in so far as incompatible with those pleas in law;

in the further alternative, to set aside the order of the Court of First Instance referred to above and to refer the matter back to the Court of First Instance; order the respondent to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The appellants base their appeal against the order of the Court of First Instance on the following grounds.

The Court is not required, in appraising the facts in proceedings before, it to have regard only to the contentions of the parties and to decide the case solely on the basis of evidence put forward by them. Rather, Article 21 of the Statute of the Court of Justice makes it clear that the Courts of the European Communities are under an obligation to appraise the facts of the proceedings and can, on their own initiative, not only take active steps, but are also under a duty to do so when the circumstances require.

Since, in the present case, the Court of First Instance did not assess whether the respondent had set out proper reasons in the contested decision, and the appellants learned only of the failure to observe formal requirements only after one month had expired, that is to say, after the end of the prescribed period, it infringed Article 21 of the Statute of the Court of Justice, Article 64 of its Rules of Procedure and substantive Community law regarding the principles relating to the scope of the presumption of legality of legal acts and the doctrine of the apparent existence of an act. Where acts of the administration contain particularly serious and blatant errors, Community law requires that these be treated as null and void.

Had the appellants been properly informed of the remedies available to them, they would have instructed a qualified lawyer and accordingly brought proceedings within the prescribed period. The contention of the Court of First Instance that the appellants and their Turkish lawyers had not used the care that is required of an applicant who is aware of all relevant matters did not relieve the respondent of the duty to provide details of the remedies that were available.

« Recours en indemnité – Requête introductive d'instance – Exigences de forme – Irrecevabilité manifeste »

Dans l'affaire T-395/07,

Dimosthenis Balatsoukas, demeurant à Athènes (Grèce), représenté par M^e^ S. Lampropoulos, avocat, partie requérante,

contre

Commission des Communautés européennes,

partie défenderesse,

ayant pour objet une demande en réparation du préjudice prétendument subi par le requérant du fait de l'inaction de la Commission à la suite du dépôt de plusieurs plaintes relatives à l'exclusion alléguée d'économistes et de petites et moyennes entreprises du secteur privé de certains appels d'offres lancés par le ministère grec du Développement, notamment dans le cadre d'une action s'inscrivant dans le troisième cadre communautaire d'appui, destiné à l'amélioration de la compétitivité des entreprises,

LE TRIBUNAL DE PREMIÈRE INSTANCE
DES COMMUNAUTÉS EUROPÉENNES (première chambre), composé de M^me^ V. Tiili, président, M. F. Dehousse et M^me^ I. Wiszniewska–Białecka (rapporteur), juges, greffier : M. E. Coulon,

rend la présente

Ordonnance

Faits et procédure

1 En décembre 2005, le requérant, qui serait économiste de formation, aurait saisi le bureau des Communautés européennes en Grèce de deux plaintes relatives à de prétendues violations du droit communautaire par le ministère grec du Développement lors de la publication de certains avis de marchés publics dans le cadre du « programme cofinancé sur la Compétitivité ». Ces avis excluraient la participation à ces marchés du secteur privé de la recherche, dont le requérant relèverait.

2 Ces plaintes auraient été transférées à la Commission en janvier 2006 et enregistrées sous les références « 2006/4227 SG(2006) A/749/2 » et « 2006/4228 SG(2006) A/750/2 ».

3 En juin 2006, le requérant aurait adressé au secrétariat général de la Commission une plainte complémentaire portant sur la même question. En août 2006, la direction générale « Marché intérieur » de la Commission aurait informé le requérant du fait que ses plaintes seraient transmises aux services compétents de la Commission « afin qu'ils vérifient s'ils sont conformes aux règlements applicables ».

4 En septembre 2006, le requérant aurait à nouveau envoyé une lettre à la Commission, explicitant ses plaintes et lui demandant de « les transmettre à toute instance compétente ». En novembre 2006, il aurait adressé une lettre au membre de la Commission en charge de la politique de concurrence, M^{me} Kroes, l'appelant à « l'aider ainsi que tous les citoyens actifs en Grèce pour réagir à cette violation permanente et flagrante des idées de la grande famille européenne qui sont systématiquement violées en Grèce ». Le requérant aurait ensuite été informé du fait que cette dernière lettre avait été transmise à « une personne responsable de la question » et n'aurait depuis reçu aucune réponse de la part de la Commission.

5 Par requête déposée au greffe du Tribunal le 24 octobre 2007, le requérant a introduit le présent recours.

Conclusions de la partie requérante

6 Le requérant conclut à ce qu'il plaise au Tribunal :

– accueillir les moyens du recours et de la demande en indemnité ;

– indemniser le requérant de son manque à gagner qui s'élève à 100 000 euros, au taux d'intérêt légal ;

– enjoindre la Commission de verser au requérant, à titre de préjudice moral, « pour l'atteinte à son existence professionnelle et en tant que citoyen », la somme de 30 000 euros, au taux d'intérêt légal ;

– condamner la Commission aux dépens.

En droit

7 Aux termes de l'article 111 du règlement de procédure du Tribunal, lorsque le recours est manifestement irrecevable, le Tribunal peut, sans poursuivre la procédure, statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée.

8 En l'espèce, le Tribunal s'estime suffisamment éclairé par les pièces du dossier et décide, en application de cet article, de statuer sans poursuivre la procédure.

9 En vertu de l'article 21, premier alinéa, du statut de la Cour de justice, applicable à la procédure devant le Tribunal conformément à l'article 53, premier alinéa, du même statut, et de l'article 44, paragraphe 1, sous c) et d), du règlement de procédure, la requête doit, notamment, contenir l'objet du litige, les conclusions et l'exposé sommaire des moyens invoqués. Ces éléments doivent être suffisamment clairs et précis pour permettre à la partie défenderesse de préparer sa défense et au Tribunal de statuer sur le recours, le cas échéant sans autres informations. Afin de garantir la sécurité juridique et une bonne administration de la justice, il est nécessaire, pour qu'un recours soit recevable, que les éléments essentiels de fait et de droit, sur lesquels celui-ci se fonde, ressortent, à tout le moins sommairement, mais d'une façon cohérente et compréhensible, du texte de la requête elle-même (ordonnances du Tribunal du 28 avril 1993, De Hoe/Commission, T–85/92, Rec. p. II–523, point 20, et du 21 mai 1999, Asia Motor France e.a./Commission, T–154/98, Rec. p. II–1703, point 49 ; arrêt du Tribunal du 15 juin 1999, Ismeri Europa/Cour des comptes, T–277/97, Rec. p. II–1825, point 29).

10 Pour satisfaire à ces exigences, une requête visant à la réparation des dommages prétendument causés par une institution communautaire doit contenir les éléments qui permettent d'identifier le comportement que le requérant reproche à l'institution, les raisons pour lesquelles il estime qu'un lien de causalité existe entre le comportement et le préjudice qu'il prétend avoir subi, ainsi que le caractère et l'étendue de ce préjudice. En revanche, une demande tendant à obtenir une indemnité quelconque manque de précision nécessaire et doit par conséquent être considérée comme irrecevable (arrêts de la Cour du 2 décembre 1971, Zuckerfabrik Schöppenstedt/Conseil, 5/71, Rec. p. 975, point 9, et du Tribunal du 10 juillet 1990, Automec/Commission, T–64/89, Rec. p. II–367, point 73, et du 8 juin 2000, Camar et Tico/Commission et Conseil, T–79/96, T–260/97 et T–117/98, Rec. p. II–2193, point 181 ; ordonnance du Tribunal du 5 février 2007, Sinara Handel/Conseil et Commission, T–91/05, Rec. p. II-245, point 87).

11 En l'espèce, par sa demande, le requérant tend à obtenir réparation du préjudice prétendument subi du fait de son exclusion, en tant que soumissionnaire potentiel, d'un nombre d'appels d'offres lancés par le ministère grec du Développement et, dans une mesure incertaine, du fait de l'inaction de la Commission saisie de plusieurs plaintes à ce sujet. Il fait valoir qu'un délai raisonnable se serait écoulé depuis le dépôt des plaintes auprès de la Commission, sans que celle-ci l'informe « au sujet de ses décisions » y relatives, et que le « manque à gagner résultant de son exclusion illégale dépasse les 100 000 euros». En outre, il fait état de la « grave atteinte à son existence professionnelle et humaine » et demande réparation à la Commission, pour le préjudice moral qu'il aurait subi à ce titre. Selon lui, un lien de causalité existerait entre ces préjudices allégués et le fait qu'il aurait été illégalement exclu des avis de marché en cause. Il soutient que le ministère grec du Développement aurait violé de nombreuses dispositions du droit communautaire primaire et que de nombreux règlements communautaires auraient également été violés, sans toutefois préciser l'auteur de ces dernières violations alléguées.

14 Il s'ensuit que le présent recours doit être rejeté comme étant manifestement irrecevable, sans qu'il soit nécessaire de le signifier à la Commission.

Sur les dépens

15 La présente ordonnance étant adoptée avant la notification de la requête à la Commission et avant que celle-ci n'ait pu exposer des dépens, il suffit de décider que le requérant supportera ses propres dépens, conformément à l'article 87, paragraphe 1, du règlement de procédure.

Par ces motifs,

LE TRIBUNAL (première chambre)

ordonne :

1) Le recours est rejeté comme manifestement irrecevable.

2) M. Dimosthenis Balatsoukas supportera ses propres dépens.

Language of the case: English

Parties

Applicant: Evropaïki Dynamiki - Proigmena Systimata Tilepikoinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE (represented by: N. Korogiannakis, lawyer)

Defendant: Commission of the European Communities

Form of order sought

Annul the Commission's decision of the Direction General for Informatics to reject the bid of the applicant - filed in response to the open Call for Tender ENTR/05/86 - Content Interoperability for European eGovernment Services (OJ S128 08/7/2006) communicated to the applicant by letter dated 13 July 2007 and to award the contracts to the successful contractor;

order the Commission (DIGIT) to pay the applicant's legal and other costs and expenses incurred in connection with this application, even if the current application is rejected;

order the Commission (DIGIT) to pay the applicant's damages suffered on account of the tendering procedure in question for an amount of EUR 3.5 million for lot 2.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicant submitted a bid in response to the defendant's call for an open tender for the contract 'content interoperability technologies for European eGovernment services' (OJ 2006/S 128-136080). The applicant contests the decision to reject its bid and to award the contract to another bidder.

The pleas in law and main arguments relied on by the applicant are identical to those relied on in Case T-300/07 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission[1].

ACTION brought under Articles 235 EC, 238 EC and 288 EC for an order that the Commission make good damage suffered as a result of its failure to comply with contractual obligations in the context of the performance of the EDC-53007 EEBO/27873 contract relating to the project entitled 'e-Content Exposure and Business Opportunities',

THE GENERAL COURT (Fourth Chamber), composed of O. Czúcz, President, I. Labucka and K. O'Higgins (Rapporteur), Judges,

Registrar: C. Kantza, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 11 March 2009,

gives the following

Judgment

Background to the dispute

1 On 22 December 2000, the Council of the European Union adopted Decision 2001/48/EC adopting a multiannual Community programme to stimulate the development and use of European digital content on the global networks and to promote linguistic diversity in the information society (OJ 2001 L 14, p. 32).

2 Following a call for proposals launched by the Commission of the European Communities in the context of that multiannual Community programme ('eContent programme'), the applicant, Evropaïki Dynamiki – Proigmena Systimata Tilepikoinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE, was awarded the project entitled 'e-Content Exposure and Business Opportunities' ('the eEBO project'). The objective of that project was in particular to contribute to achieving the overall aims of the eContent programme by providing a platform to raise public awareness of the activities developed in the context of that programme, to disseminate them and to enable access to them, complementary to the existing measures and means. It was concerned, in particular, with ensuring that the eContent programme was as efficient as possible, increasing the number of participants in the projects of that programme through the use of various means of mass communication and by efforts in the area of public relations.

3 On 3 July 2002, the European Community, represented by the Commission, concluded with the applicant contract EDC-53007 EEBO/27873 concerning the eEBO project. Under Article 2(1) of that contract, the duration of the project was fixed at 18 months from the day after the date on which the contract at issue was signed, that is to say, from 4 July 2002.

4 The tasks to be fulfilled by the applicant within the context of the eEBO project were, in accordance with Article 1(1) of the contract at issue, defined in Annex I thereto, entitled 'Description of Work' ('the technical annex'). The conditions of performance of those tasks were set out in Annex II to the contract at issue, entitled 'General Conditions' ('the general conditions').

5 The technical annex provided that the project comprised three essential elements: first, the establishment and management of an interactive communication system by means of a public relations and communications centre enabling interaction between the projects financed in the context of the eContent programme, as well as between the participants of those projects and the press; second, the organisation of a think tank designed to create a common vision, to address business opportunities and to enable European industries to establish a strong foothold and high visibility in the digital content sector; and, third, support for the public relations and communications centre and the think tank by the provision of contributions, strategic information, media monitoring and publicity related to the eContent programme.

6 The technical annex also contained a detailed work plan comprising eight parts (work packages) and providing, for each work package, that one or more documents be drawn up and delivered to the Commission according to a predetermined timetable set out in a table in paragraph 4 of that annex.

7 The maximum financial contribution for the eEBO project was fixed at EUR 500 000, in accordance with Article 3 of the contract at issue. The conditions governing reimbursement of the eligible costs were set out in Articles 13 to 16 of the general conditions, which provided in particular that, in order to be eligible, the costs had to 'be incurred during the duration of the project' and that they would be reimbursed only where they were justified by the participant.

8 Under Article 5 of the contract at issue, '[t]he Court of First Instance of the European Communities and, in the case of an appeal, the Court of Justice of the European Communities shall have sole jurisdiction to hear any disputes between the Community, on the one hand, and the contractors, on the other hand, as regards the validity, the application or any interpretation of this contract', which was governed by the law of Luxembourg.

9 Under Article 2(2)(h) of the general conditions, the applicant was required to 'take part in meetings concerning the supervision, monitoring and evaluation of the project which are relevant to [it]'. Article 2(3) provided that the Commission could, in certain circumstances, be assisted by independent experts in the framework of those meetings.

10 Article 5(1) of the general conditions also obliged the applicant to conclude 'membership agreements' with each of the other participants in the eEBO project. Article 5(2) allowed the applicant and the other participants in the eEBO project to conclude subcontracts where necessary for the performance of their work. However, 'the Commission's prior written approval [was] required … where the cumulative amount of the subcontracts of a participant [exceeded] 20% of his estimated eligible costs … or EUR 100 000'.

11 Article 7(3)(b) of the general conditions provided that '[t]he Commission [could] immediately terminate this contract … from the date of receipt of the registered letter with acknowledgement of receipt sent by [it] … where the participant directly concerned [had] not fully performed his contractual obligations despite a written request from the Commission … to remedy a failure to comply with such obligations within a period not exceeding one month'.

12 Article 7(6) provided that 'contractors [were to] take appropriate action to cancel or reduce their commitments, upon receipt of the letter from the Commission notifying them of the termination of the contract …'.

13 Finally, under Article 18(1) of the general conditions, '[t]he Commission, or any representative authorised by it, [could] initiate a technical verification in respect of a participant up to the contract completion date in order to verify that the project [was] being or [had] been carried out in accordance with the conditions indicated by the contractor'. Article 18(4) added that '[a] report on the technical verification of the project [was to] be sent to the contractor concerned', who could 'communicate his observations to the Commission within a month'.

14 On 12 August 2002, the Commission paid, as an advance, a sum of EUR 150 000 to the applicant, in accordance with Article 3(3) of the contract at issue.

15 By email of 26 November 2002, Mr O., an administrator in the Directorate General ('DG') 'Information Society' of the Commission, requested information from the applicant concerning four technical documents which should have been delivered in the first five months. Mr O. also questioned the applicant as to why the eEBO project had not been presented during a conference in Copenhagen (Denmark). He emphasised the importance of regular coordination with a project relating to an Internet portal connected to the eContent programme ('the PICK project') and suggested that the applicant make all the documents to be delivered accessible via its Internet site in order to 'make … interaction [among the participants of the project] improve a bit'.

16 During a meeting with the applicant's representatives on 4 December 2002, and in the course of a telephone conversation with the eEBO project coordinator on 10 December 2002, the Commission expressed its concerns with regard to certain delays in the progress of the work.

17 On 21 January 2003, during a meeting with the applicant's representatives in Luxembourg, the Commission reiterated its concerns relating to certain delays in the organisation of a think tank summit. It requested that the applicant provide the Commission with a detailed plan indicating all the dates and participants at that event no later than 5 February 2003. The Commission stated that it would otherwise have to renegotiate the contract at issue with the applicant.

18 On 5 February 2003, the applicant presented a detailed plan entitled 'Strategic and operation plan of think tank'.

19 By letter of 6 March 2003, the Commission invited the applicant to present to it, during a review meeting, the work completed during the first nine months of the eEBO project. It also decided to have that review conducted by two independent experts.

20 On 20 March 2003, the review meeting took place in Luxembourg.

21 During a meeting on 28 April 2003, the Commission informed the applicant of the contents of the evaluation report drafted by the two independent experts. By letter of the same day, it also notified the applicant of its decision to initiate the procedure provided for under Article 7 of the general conditions. In that letter, the Commission pointed out that the review of the eEBO project had brought to light the existence of 'very serious' problems, in particular by reason of the accumulation of significant delays in the completion of certain major stages of the project, such as the organisation of a think tank summit. The Commission requested that the applicant and its partners should 'not undertake any new project activities' and should 'make their decision whether, in the light of the present situation, a continued commitment of the human and financial resources engaged so far in this project [were] still justified'.

22 In that letter, the applicant was also invited to take a position on the various points of criticism and to present an action plan for overcoming the problems which had been identified. Finally, the Commission reserved the right to have the requested action plan reviewed by independent experts and to terminate the contract pursuant to the provisions of Article 7 of the general conditions if the proposed action plan was not satisfactory.

23 On 12 May 2003, the applicant submitted to the Commission an action plan to resolve the problems identified. Acknowledging certain problems and some delays, the applicant undertook to adopt 'a constructive approach in order to address the situation' and stated that it had 'undertaken all the necessary actions to remedy the situation'. In particular, it provided a list of events at which the eEBO project would be 'present', a detailed agenda for the organisation of the think tank summit with a fixed date for that summit, and an explanation concerning the noted problems of cooperation with certain consultants and the managers of a separate project.

24 By letter of 16 May 2003, the Commission informed the applicant of its decision to terminate the contract pursuant to Article 7(3)(b) of the general conditions. It indicated that the action plan submitted by the applicant '[did] not address satisfactorily the issues [detected] in the review and [did] not provide enough elements as to judge what timescale and effort [were] needed to fulfil all the tasks described in the technical annex'. It stated in particular that that action plan did not indicate which measures would be taken to solve the delays which had been identified and when those measures would be adopted. It also observed that no advisory board had been set up, no drafting of theme papers had been undertaken, and no press events had been staged in preparation for the think tank summit.

25 By fax of 27 May 2003, the applicant expressed its surprise at the termination of the contract at issue and its disagreement with several matters mentioned in the letter of 16 May 2003. It claimed that that decision was unfair and completely devastating for its efforts to organise the summit and project. It also pointed out that it had serious grounds for suspecting that some people officially involved with the project were in a conflict-of-interest situation. Moreover, the applicant announced that it would continue to prepare the think tank summit, as the organisation of that summit had already begun and was therefore not covered by the prohibition on undertaking new project activities connected with the eEBO project which had been notified to it by letter of 28 April 2003. Finally, the applicant asserted that all tasks described in the technical annex had already been fulfilled or were going to be fulfilled within the time-limits fixed, and it provided a new detailed agenda for the think tank summit in which that summit was scheduled to be held on 13 June 2003 in Athens (Greece).

26 By letters of 2 and 6 June 2003, the Commission pointed out to the applicant that, as the contract at issue had been terminated, the Commission would not support the organisation of the summit and 'that, naturally, no expenses incurred after the termination of the contract [could] be charged to the contract'.

27 On 13 June 2003, the think tank summit opened in Athens.

28 By letter of 18 July 2003, Mr H.-R., Head of Unit 4 'Information market' within Directorate E 'Interfaces, knowledge and content technologies, Applications, Information market' of DG 'Information Society', thanked the applicant for having sent him a preliminary report at the conclusion of the think tank summit and stated that the outcome of that event 'will certainly contribute to the continued attempts to develop the eContent market'.

29 By letter of 18 December 2003, the applicant reiterated its claim that the decision to terminate the contract at issue was 'absolutely unfair and unjustified', since all the assigned tasks had been successfully implemented. The applicant also requested that the Commission organise a new project review, excluding all officials in a conflict-of-interest situation from any participation in that procedure. Finally, it raised a number of questions concerning the relations which two of its consultants and the two independent experts had had with the Commission's representatives over the course of the previous five years.

30 During a meeting held on 5 February 2004, the applicant stated that Mr V., its managing director, had been the victim of blackmail by its two consultants. It also claimed that one of the two independent experts had a conflict of interest.

32 On 22 April 2004, the Commission's internal audit service made several preliminary observations. It stated that 'there [was] no material evidence of a conflict of interest regarding the reviewers of the project', that 'even though it [was] highly probable that [one of the independent experts had known the applicant's two consultants], as all of them [had] worked in the framework of [another contract], there [was] no evidence that [the independent expert] [had been] requested by the two others to give a negative opinion on the project during the review' and that the applicant '[had] not yet provided to the Commission any evidence of the "blackmail" from their two consultants, which [had been] referred to during the meeting of 5 February 2004'. The service also stated that, from a technical standpoint, the decision to end the project seemed therefore to be appropriate. Nevertheless, in order to confirm its conclusions, the Commission's internal audit service recommended the appointment of two new independent experts to review the file once more.

33 By letter of 14 June 2004, the Commission notified the applicant of its decision to order a technical verification by two new independent experts in accordance with Article 18 of the general conditions.

34 By letter of 20 July 2004, Ms M., Head of Unit 5 'Cognition' within Directorate E of DG 'Information Society', requested from the applicant additional information concerning the status of its personnel, in particular concerning its two consultants, and the costs charged by the applicant to the contract at issue.

35 The applicant provided that information on 30 July 2004.

36 By letter of 6 October 2004, the Commission thanked the applicant for the information provided and pointed out to it potential irregularities as regards Articles 14 and 15 of the general conditions concerning the use of the two consultants. It also notified the second evaluation report. As that report confirmed the previous review of the project and the fact that the different documents requested for each of the work packages of the technical annex had not been delivered or had been delivered late, the Commission informed the applicant that it would be basing its determination of the eligible costs on that technical verification.

37 By fax of 12 October 2004, the applicant expressed disagreement with the conclusions of the second evaluation report on the ground that, first, it had 'never agreed to the mandate of this committee' and that, secondly, 'experts paid by [the Commission's] own department and who are invited, in practical terms, just to generate a report to validate an unfair decision taken … [the previous] year [could] not be considered as "independent" or impartial'. It also stressed the lack of independence of the first two reviewers of the project.

38 By letter of 12 November 2004, the Commission rejected the applicant's claims and informed the applicant that it had passed to the next step in determining the eligible costs pursuant to Articles 13 and 16 of the general conditions and that it had fixed the eligible costs of the project at EUR 90 515. As an advance payment of EUR 150 000 had been made to the applicant at the beginning of the project, the Commission announced that it would be issuing a recovery order for EUR 59 485.

39 By fax of 9 December 2004, the applicant again called into question the validity of the first evaluation report and expressed its doubts as to the impartiality of the new 'evaluation committee'. It also requested information concerning the calculation of the eligible costs made by the Commission.

40 By letter of 22 December 2004, the Commission responded to the applicant's criticisms and referred to the letter of 12 November 2004 for details of how the eligible costs had been calculated.

41 By fax of 4 January 2005, the applicant reiterated its criticisms, repeated its request for information and proposed a new review by the European Anti-Fraud Office.

42 By letter of 7 March 2005, the Commission responded to the points of criticism set out by the applicant in the fax of 4 January 2005 and stated that it would be issuing a recovery order for the amount of EUR 59 485, pointing out that, in the absence of payment before the date specified, it would add interest and could recover the amount either by offsetting it against any payments due or by enforcing payment.

43 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court on 17 May 2005, the applicant brought an action under Article 230 EC for annulment of the Commission's decisions to terminate the contract at issue, to reimburse an amount of labour costs not exceeding EUR 85 971 and to issue a recovery order for an amount of EUR 59 485. That application was registered as Case T-205/05.

44 By letter of 24 June 2005, the Commission sent a debit note for EUR 59 485 to the applicant, with an expiry date of 7 August 2005.

45 By letter of 8 July 2005, the Commission informed the applicant that it was offsetting the amount stated on the debit note against amounts still owing to the applicant.

46 By a separate document, lodged at the Registry of the Court on 5 August 2005, the Commission raised an objection of inadmissibility in Case T-205/05 under Article 114(1) of the Court's Rules of Procedure. The applicant lodged its observations on that objection on 26 September 2005.

47 By order of 26 February 2007, the Fourth Chamber of the Court ruled that the applicant's action in Case T-205/05 was inadmissible on the ground that 'it [sought] the annulment, pursuant to Article 230 EC, of measures of a purely contractual nature' (order of the Court of 26 February 2007 in Case T-205/05 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, not published in the ECR, paragraph 56).

48 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court on 4 September 2007, the applicant brought the present action under Articles 235 EC, 238 EC and 288 EC.

49 Acting upon a report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court (Fourth Chamber) decided to open the oral procedure and, by way of measures of organisation of procedure as provided for in Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure, requested the parties to reply to certain written questions and to provide it with certain documents. The parties complied with those requests within the prescribed period.

50 The parties presented oral argument and replied to the questions put by the Court at the hearing, which took place on 11 March 2009.

Forms of order sought by the parties

51 The applicant claims that the Court should:

– order the Commission to pay it the amount of EUR 172 588.62 constituting unpaid eligible costs incurred in the framework of the contract;

– order the Commission to pay it the amount of EUR 1 000 corresponding 'to the damage suffered [to] its fame and goodwill';

– order the Commission to pay its legal and other costs and expenses incurred in connection with the present action.

52 The Commission contends that the Court should:

– dismiss all the applicant's claims;

– order the applicant to pay the costs.

Law

53 The applicant essentially raises two pleas in law based, firstly, on the failure to comply with contractual obligations and, secondly, on an infringement of the principles of sound administration and transparency, in conjunction with the existence of a conflict of interest.

The first plea based: failure to comply with the contractual obligations

54 The applicant claims in essence that the Commission's decision to terminate the contract at issue is vitiated by manifest errors of assessment, was not adopted in accordance with the procedure laid down by Article 7(3)(b) of the general conditions, and is based on incorrect and unfounded evaluation reports.

55 In the first place, with regard to the allegation that the contract at issue is vitiated by manifest errors of assessment, the applicant submits that the Commission 'terminated the contract [at issue] referring to minor delays which occur in all projects of this type, and for which in any event the responsibility did not lie with [the applicant]'.

56 Firstly, the applicant takes the view that '[t]he alleged delays in the implementation of the [e]EBO project were mainly due to the fact that [it] did not dispose of the adequate [elements] … from the "PICK" project and had therefore to develop itself the technical platform and the IT solutions for numerous applications'. However, in its view, the Commission was responsible for contacting the contractor of the PICK project and insisting on the fulfilment of its contractual obligations.

57 The applicant points out that 'the PICK project contractor was refusing to assist [it] to implement its contractual obligations using all possible means', in particular by refusing to provide it with the source code for certain software. It also disputes the Commission's arguments justifying that refusal on grounds of intellectual rights and claims that, in any event, the Commission should have informed it in a timely manner that the software module which was supposed to be made available to it was covered by such rights.

58 Secondly, the applicant submits that 'its conflict with [its consultants] and the fact that the Commission was taking their side [were] the only cause[s] of the interruption of the project and in no way the proof of the existence of problems in the performance of the [contract at issue]'. The applicant takes the view that the Commission should have '[taken] the necessary measures in order to assure that [that] situation would not lead to a conflict of interest or to any kind of bias for or against the entities involved'. The failure to perform the contract at issue was the responsibility solely of its consultants, who were 'involved in a [range of Community] funded projects' and 'had close social links with the officials responsible for the project'.

59 In the second place, the applicant submits that the Commission also breached its contractual obligations concerning the organisation of the think tank summit.

60 First, although the applicant never argued that the Commission had a contractual obligation to participate in the organisation of that event, it takes the view that 'it was the responsibility of the Commission to initiate contacts in order to include [that event] in the official agenda' of the Greek Presidency of the European Union in 2003 ('the Greek Presidency'). However, it submits, the Commission failed immediately to contact the Greek Minister for Foreign Affairs to obtain his authorisation to include the think tank summit on the official agenda. According to the applicant, despite its repeated requests, the Commission did not send a letter to the minister until 3 February 2003, that is to say, after a delay of three months. Any delay in the organisation of that summit was therefore attributable to the Commission, since 'the proper execution of the contract [at issue] would require that the Commission undertake the necessary steps to assist the applicant to fulfil its contractual obligations with the Commission and not the contrary'.

61 The applicant further claims that, 'even if [the Commission] had rightfully terminated the [eEBO] project, quod non, [it] should have accepted to reimburse [the costs incurred by the think tank summit] that took place successfully during the Greek Presidency … in compliance [with] the terms of the contract [at issue]'. According to the applicant, by writing a letter to the Greek authorities confirming the applicant's request to have that summit added to the programme of the Greek Presidency, the Commission 'itself accepted and validated the organisation of the event during the Greek Presidency before the termination of the [eEBO] project'. Therefore the Commission could not arbitrarily terminate that project and should 'accept all the responsibilities which arise from the implementation of this event which was requested by the Commission to the Greek Presidency'.

62 Secondly, the applicant argues that the Commission made no comments on or suggested any improvements to the agenda of the event when it was presented. It also takes the view that the Commission committed another breach of the contract at issue by insisting that the think tank summit be held in Rome (Italy) during the Italian Presidency of the European Union in 2003.

63 Thirdly, the applicant challenges the Commission's argument that the event was not international in scope, since it was composed almost exclusively of Greek participants. In its view, 'the event was attended by many representatives of many nationalities' and 'many international market actors, media and media-related projects decided for obvious reasons of [organisational] economy to be present through [sending] their local correspondents, partners or representatives'. The applicant considers that the Commission 'did not do its part of the deal in order to attract further international attention' since it 'did not attend [the think tank summit], it did not advertise it through all its channels and web sites, it did not support it in many ways, etc.'.

64 Finally, the applicant submits that the think tank summit was a genuine success and that, contrary to the Commission's assertion, the summit lasted three days, from 13 to 15 June 2003. Moreover, according to the applicant, no new action was undertaken following the letters from the Commission of 28 April and 16 May 2003. The applicant claims that it 'simply completed all the actions and activities which [had been] triggered [before that first date]'.

65 In the third place, the applicant submits that, contrary to the reviewers' assertions, the requested documents and the applications provided for in the contract at issue were delivered to the Commission.

66 Firstly, the applicant submits that 'the [Commission] never … informed [it] on whether something was going wrong in the context of the [eEBO] project between July 2002 and early December 2002 and [that the Commission] never criticised [its performance in the framework of the contract at issue as being] against [its] contractual obligations'. In the applicant's view, the same applies 'for the subsequent period after December 2002, when the two experts were threatening and blackmailing [it]'.

67 Secondly, the applicant argues that '[a]lthough entirely developed by [it] and not through the "PICK" project, the technical application [which it] provided … is fully compliant with the terms of the contract [at issue]' and '[a]s a whole … [is] substantially better than the one proposed in the Technical Annex of the contract [at issue]'.

68 Thirdly, the applicant disputes the Commission's argument concerning the delays in respect of the documents to be delivered which had to be produced during the first six months of the project. It claims that the proper performance of the contract justified taking measures a little later in order to take the results of the think tank summit into account, that those delays could, in any event, be easily redressed and that, finally, it provided everything within the time-limits. The applicant also claims that the 'minor' delays observed contributed, in any case, to a 'better implementation of the project'.

69 Fourthly, the applicant submits that 'its work was compliant to the contract [at issue]', that 'all the [elements provided] were compliant to the contract [at issue]' and that '[t]wo progress reports [concerning the eEBO project] containing the necessary elements were submitted [to the Commission]'. According to the applicant, '[a]ll [of those] project systems were made available through [its] own developed platform', but neither those responsible from the Commission nor the independent reviewing experts accessed that platform, though it 'was clearly demonstrated to the reviewers and the Commission project officer, and it [had been] positively embraced'.

70 Finally, with regard to the example presented by the Commission and relating to the failure to present the eEBO project at certain press briefings, the applicant responds that '[s]ince international events take place all the time, there is no foundation [to] the argument that if one event was not covered, no other event of equal or higher significance could replace it in the near future'. According to the applicant, '[it] had the opportunity … to cover a number of subsequent events which were of even higher importance than what … was originally proposed' and, in any event 'it would make more sense to initiate this exercise after [the think tank summit], to take into account its findings and directions'.

71 In the fourth place, the applicant takes the view that the Commission caused it 'significant losses and damages' by 'abusively' deciding to pay only part of the eligible costs on the first cost statement, even though 'the services and [elements] … corresponding to the three cost statements were delivered to [the Commission] in compliance [with] the terms of the contract [at issue]'. The applicant disputes in particular the Commission's refusal to reimburse to it the costs connected with the organisation of the think tank summit. In its view, 'although it is true that [that event] took place after the … termination of the project, [it] was part of the contractual obligations of the parties, it was scheduled far before this decision was taken and it could not have been cancelled a few weeks before it took place'. The applicant also claims that '[t]he Commission has never motivated its decision to reject part of the costs of the project' and 'has not even commented on [the applicant's] argument … that some of the costs paid after the project was terminated could not be avoided any more'.

72 The applicant accordingly takes the view that it is entitled to reimbursement of all the 'allowable costs' which it incurred under the contract at issue, that is to say, the sum of EUR 174 647.65 relating to the first cost statement, the sum of EUR 31 025.81 relating to the second cost statement, and the sum of EUR 57 430.16 relating to the third cost statement, in other words a total amount of EUR 263 103.62, from which it is, however, necessary to deduct the sum of EUR 90 515 paid by the Commission, with the result that the final amount is EUR 172 588.62.

73 Fifthly, the applicant submits that the termination by the Commission of the contract at issue and the absence of its officials at the think tank summit adversely affected its reputation. Accordingly, the applicant claims that it 'was indirectly excluded from any further [eContent sector] programme'. The applicant estimates the amount of damages to its reputation at the 'symbolic' amount of EUR 1 000.

74 The Commission disputes the applicant's arguments.

75 First of all, it is apparent from paragraph 34 of the application that the applicant seeks to place in issue both the Community's contractual and its non-contractual liability. However, it must be stated that the arguments raised by the applicant in the context of its first plea relate only to contractual liability.

76 According to case-law, the jurisdiction of the Community Courts under an arbitration clause to determine a dispute concerning a contract falls to be determined solely with regard to Article 238 EC and the terms of the clause itself (Case C-209/90 Commission v Feilhauer [1992] ECR I-2613, paragraph 13, and judgment of 12 September 2007 in Case T-449/04 Commission v Trends, not published in the ECR, paragraph 29).

77 It follows that, in the present case, the Court has jurisdiction pursuant to Article 238 EC and the arbitration clause included in Article 5(2) of the contract at issue.

78 Moreover, in accordance with the first paragraph of Article 288 EC, the contractual liability of the Community is governed by the law applicable to the contract in question, that is to say, Luxembourg law, which is designated by the parties in Article 5(1) of the contract at issue.

79 Although the civil law of Luxembourg allows the parties to a contract to make contractual provision for the possibility of unilateral termination in the case where one of the parties fails to fulfil its obligations, that possibility may be subject to judicial review and misuse thereof may lead to the award of damages (Ravarani, G., La responsabilité civile des personnes privées et publiques, 2nd edition, Pasicrisie luxembourgeoise, Luxembourg, 2006, paragraph 467, citing, by way of example, a judgment of the Cour d'appel of 13 July 2005, No 28210 of the case list).

80 In the present case, Article 7(3)(b) of the general conditions provides that 'the Commission may immediately terminate this contract … from the date of receipt of the registered letter with acknowledgement of receipt sent by [it] … where the participant directly concerned has not fully performed his contractual obligations despite a written request from the Commission, or the coordinator in agreement with the other contractors, or, in the case of a member, the contractor involved, to remedy a failure to comply with such obligations within a period not exceeding one month'.

81 With regard to the formal requirement under Article 7(3) of the general conditions, namely the sending of a 'written request from the Commission … to remedy a failure to comply with [the contractual] obligations within a period not exceeding one month', it should be noted that that condition was fulfilled. In its letter of 28 April 2003, the Commission informed the applicant of a variety of points of criticism raised in the first evaluation report and requested it to present an action plan to resolve the problems identified. Whilst expressly reserving the right to terminate the contract at issue pursuant to Article 7(3)(b) of the general conditions in the event that the action plan proposed should be ineffective, the Commission also pointed out that, if it had to terminate, the letter in question was to be regarded as the written warning required by that article.

82 With regard to the formal requirement under Article 7(3) of the general conditions, namely the fact that the contracting party did not fully perform its contractual obligations, it is necessary to examine in turn the different problems in implementing the contract at issue which have been raised by the Commission.

– The delays in the delivery of certain documents

83 It is clear from the documents in the case-file, and in particular from the evaluation reports, that the applicant did not provide several documents at the precise time laid down in the contract at issue. The applicant itself acknowledged that there had been numerous delays in sending several documents to the Commission. Thus, in a table in paragraph 2.2 of the two six-month progress reports produced by the applicant in accordance with the contract and annexed to the reply, the applicant acknowledges that certain documents were delivered with at least one month's delay. The same is true of its reply of 12 May 2003 to the first evaluation report. In paragraph 8 of the reply, the applicant even asserted that some of those delays had contributed to a 'better implementation of [the] project'.

84 Without rebutting the Commission's detailed contentions concerning those delays, the applicant, by way of defence, invokes principally hindrances for which it was not responsible and which explain the delays in implementation of the project. The necessary conclusion, however, is that none of those obstacles can justify the applicant's failure to fulfil its own contractual obligations within the respective periods laid down in the contract at issue.

85 First, with regard to the applicant's arguments that the onus was on the Commission to contact the joint contractor of the PICK project and to initiate contacts with the Greek Presidency with regard to the think tank summit, it should be noted that Article 1(1) of the contract at issue expressly states that it was for the contractors to carry out the work set out in the technical annex. The term 'contractor' is defined in Article 1(2) of the general conditions as 'a legal entity, an international organisation or the Joint Research Centre … which has concluded this contract with the Community'. That term therefore excludes the Commission, which signed the contract at issue for and on behalf of the Community. Furthermore, the applicant was the 'coordinator' of the eEBO project and therefore, as such, responsible for the scientific, financial and administrative coordination of all the works in accordance with Article 2(1) of the general conditions.

86 Moreover, as the Commission has correctly pointed out, the description of the tasks in the technical annex demonstrates that it was the applicant which was principally responsible for carrying them out. Therefore, with regard to the think tank summit, for example, paragraph 3.1.4.2 of that annex states that '[e]EBO proposes to organise that conference in cooperation with the Greek Presidency' and, a little later, that '[e]EBO will provide the think tank with logistical and organisational support, and draft the declaration of the summit'. The description of Work package 6 covering that summit is even clearer in that respect: '[eEBO's] senior experts, who will play a major role in the organisation of the summit, will produce a strategic theme paper including a draft declaration. Based on close links to the Greek Government, [the eEBO] experts will be in a position to ensure the highly attractive support of the Greek Presidency'. Finally, the applicant acknowledged in paragraphs 17 and 55 of the reply and during the hearing that it '[had] never argued that the [Commission] had a contractual obligation to participate [in] the organisation of that event'.

87 Secondly, the applicant's argument that it was not itself that had failed to fulfil its obligations, but rather its two consultants, must be rejected. Whatever the legal status of those consultants with respect to the contract at issue, the applicant itself is the party which concluded that contract with the Commission. Consequently, it was responsible for the successful implementation thereof vis-à-vis the Commission.

88 The applicant acknowledges as much in its reply of 12 October 2004 to the second evaluation report, in which it maintains that 'all the personnel involved in the eEBO project from our company are full-time employees or independent consultants who are directly hired by our company, in accordance with the national legislation, [and] they are under the sole technical supervision of our company'. It is likewise stated in Article 6 of the unsigned contract with one of its consultants, which the applicant produced in response to the questions of the Court, that '[the applicant] is [ultimately] responsible for the Project results towards the Commission'.

– The partial failure to carry out certain services

89 In order to rebut the Commission's argument, based on the detailed conclusions of the second evaluation report, to the effect that certain documents were provided only in draft form, the applicant merely repeats several times that those documents 'were consistent with the contract [at issue]' or 'complied with the terms of the contract [at issue]' without producing those documents so as to allow the Court to assess whether they were consistent with the contract at issue. It must therefore be held that the applicant has not adduced concrete evidence capable of demonstrating that it complied fully with its contractual obligations by delivering the required documents.

90 Thus, with regard to the press review to be supplied, the applicant maintains in paragraph 10 of the reply that that review had been completed and was available online. It must, however, be noted that the address provided does not allow access to the document or make it possible to establish the existence of the press review in question. It would, none the less, have been easy for the applicant to attach that document or to provide a CD-Rom as an annex to the application or the reply. The same applies in regard to the database of press contacts.

91 It must also be stated that, contrary to the applicant's claims, it is not correct that the Commission 'never informed [it] on whether something was going wrong in the context of the [eEBO] project between July 2002 and early December 2002, and [that it] never criticised [its performance in the framework of the contract at issue] as being against [its] contractual obligations'. Indeed, Mr O. had already complained of delays in the delivery of certain documents, including the database and the extranet, in an email sent to the applicant on 26 November 2002.

92 Furthermore, the applicant has adduced no evidence of the positive comments allegedly made by the Commission and the reviewers in connection with its publication and data platform. On the contrary, as the Commission stated in paragraph 65 of the rejoinder, the first evaluation report reached the clear conclusion that the platform was not accessible and that the product presented during the review meeting was not satisfactory. The reviewers also reached that conclusion in the second evaluation report after having noted, for example, that the extranet for the press had still not been provided.

93 Finally, the applicant has failed to demonstrate the soundness of its claim that the Commission and the reviewers waited until 17 December 2007 before attempting to access its platform. Quite to the contrary, it is apparent from an email annexed to the defence that Mr O. had tried to connect to the internet site using the access code and password provided by the applicant since December 2002, but that no connection was possible.

– The complete failure to carry out certain services

94 It should be noted that the applicant does not dispute the fact that it did not take part in the previews of two events, but claims that the refusal to take part must be attributed to its two consultants. However, for the reasons stated above, the applicant cannot avoid responsibility on the basis of the failures of its two consultants.

95 Concerning the promotional leaflets, the quarterly compilation of press releases and kits and the quarterly reports on the electronic content sector, the applicant merely maintains, in paragraphs 11 and 12 of the reply, that they ‘were compliant [with] the terms of the contract [at issue]’. The applicant also claims that the promotional leaflets were distributed ‘in an electronic manner’, but nevertheless did not provide copies of those documents in the context of the present dispute. Furthermore, in its reply to the second evaluation report, the applicant made no comment on the lack of delivery of the other documents referred to above.

96 In regard to the document relating to the qualities of the members of the think tank, the applicant acknowledged in its reply to the second evaluation report that it had not delivered that document because of the difficulties which it had encountered in having the think tank summit included on the agenda of the Greek Presidency.

97 Finally, with regard to the press and project extranet, the applicant maintains, in its reply to the second evaluation report, that this was accessible from the platform which it had created. However, in the absence of evidence as to the existence of that platform, the Court is not in a position to determine whether that claim is well founded.

– The delivery of documents inconsistent with the terms of the contract

98 The Commission submits that the applicant also infringed its obligation to deliver to it each document separately and directly.

99 It follows from Article 2(1)(d) of the general conditions and from Article 4 of the contract at issue that each document was to be delivered on the dates laid down in the contract at issue. That is also apparent from the table establishing the due dates for each document included in the technical annex. For that reason the Commission was justified in claiming, in paragraph 30 of its defence, that ‘[i]t is not enough to argue that the [document] is online somewhere and that it would be [the Commission’s] fault if it did not find it’.

– The think tank summit

100 Paragraph 3.1.4 and Work package 6 of the technical annex provided that the applicant was to organise a think tank summit involving sectoral and political representatives at ‘the highest level’. That summit, to be organised ‘preferably in conjunction with the Greek EU Presidency’, was to last for three days and be chaired by ‘a prominent industry leader’. For Work package 6, three documents had to be delivered: first, a ‘strategic and operational plan’ for the event, to be delivered during the third month of the eEBO project; secondly, the details of the participants at that summit, to be delivered during the sixth month; and, thirdly, a declaration with an ‘impact at European level and beyond', which had to be supplied after the summit, during the 17th month.

101 First of all, concerning the document entitled 'Strategic and operation plan of think tank', it is apparent from the documents before the Court that this was delivered to the Commission on 5 February 2003, that is to say, at least three months after the due date provided for in the contract at issue.

102 Next, concerning the details of the participants at that summit, the applicant acknowledged in its reply to the second evaluation report that it had never delivered that document.

103 Finally, the declaration with an 'impact at European level and beyond' appears to have been delivered five months early.

104 It should be noted, moreover, that it is not clear that the summit actually lasted three days, as provided for in the contract at issue. The applicant's statements on this point are contradictory. Whilst maintaining in paragraph 15 of the reply that the summit took place in Athens on 13 June 2003, the applicant claims, in paragraph 21 of that same document, that the 'live demonstrations of projects, networking sessions, group meetings, brain-storming sessions, etc.' in reality '[took] place on 13, 14 and 15 June 2003'. Since the applicant bears the burden of proof in this regard, it must be concluded that it has not demonstrated that the summit in fact lasted three days as provided for in the contract at issue.

105 Finally, the Commission also states that the applicant organised that event although it had been, first, requested, by letter of 28 April 2003, 'not [to] undertake any new [eEBO project] activities', second, notified by letter of 16 May 2003 of the termination of the contract at issue and, third, warned in clear terms by letter of 2 June 2003 of the fact that '[that] event [was] not supported by the European Commission and that, naturally, no expenses incurred after the termination of the contract [at issue] [could] be charged to the contract'.

106 It should be noted that Article 7(6) of the general conditions stipulates that 'contractors shall take appropriate action to cancel or reduce their commitments, upon receipt of the letter from the Commission notifying them of the termination of the contract [at issue]'.

107 Consequently, under that article, the applicant ought to have cancelled the summit or, at least, no longer have undertaken further activities after 16 May 2003. The applicant's argument that it did not undertake any new actions and merely completed all the actions and activities which had been commenced before 28 April 2003 is therefore not relevant.

108 Furthermore, contrary to the applicant's claims in paragraph 51 of the application, it is not true that the Commission accepted and validated the organisation of the event by sending a letter to the Greek Presidency on 3 February 2003. As the Commission points out in paragraph 30 of the rejoinder, it is apparent from that letter sent to the Greek Ministry of Economy and Finance that the Commission merely 'confirmed that [the eEBO project] was an EC funded project and that one of the tasks of the project was to organise a … think tank summit in Greece during the Greek EU presidency'.

109 Finally, concerning the applicant's argument that 'the Commission … tried to oblige [it] to transfer against its will the [think tank summit] from Athens to Rome, thus violating the terms of the contract [at issue]', the only document provided in support of those allegations is an email from its two consultants of 20 January 2003. However, it is apparent from that document that the transfer of the event under the Italian Presidency of the European Union in 2003 was merely a proposal to improve the chances of success of the eEBO project. Furthermore, as the Commission points out in paragraph 31 of the rejoinder, that proposal came from the applicant's representatives themselves. In any event, even if the Commission had indeed suggested to the applicant that it organise the think tank summit under the following presidency of the European Union, that would not constitute a breach of the contract at issue, because the description in Work package 6 in the technical annex specifies only that that summit was to be organised 'preferably in conjunction with the Greek EU Presidency'. The summit under the Greek Presidency was therefore not an obligation as to results.

110 Consequently, for the reasons set out above, the applicant has not shown that the Commission acted in breach of its contractual obligations by terminating the contract at issue.

111 Finally, in light of the foregoing considerations, it must be concluded that the Commission acted correctly in law in taking the view that the applicant had not complied in full with its contractual obligations. In those circumstances, it is not necessary to examine the parties' other arguments as to whether or not it was unlawful for some of the tasks to be subcontracted to the applicant's consultants or as to the more or less international scope of the think tank summit. The contract at issue was therefore not terminated in breach of the contractual terms binding on the parties to the dispute.

112 The first plea must accordingly be rejected.

The second plea: infringement of the principles of sound administration and transparency, and the existence of a conflict of interest

113 The applicant claims that the Commission infringed the principles of sound administration, transparency and conflict of interest on the ground that the independent project reviewers had a conflict of interest and that the Commission treated the applicant unfairly.

114 First, while pointing out that it did not claim that any prior social or professional relations between consultants and Commission officials or reviewers should be forbidden or regarded a priori as constituting a cause for concern, the applicant nevertheless takes the view that where such relations exist and a third party alleges that those relations interfere with those officials' assessment, the Commission should act immediately, take the necessary measures and avoid conflicts of interest. The applicant claims that it notified the Commission of the relations between the two experts and certain Commission officials and reviewers and alleges that those relations were the cause of the dysfunctions within the project. According to the applicant, the Commission ought to have taken the necessary measures consisting, at the very least, in organising an independent evaluation of the problems arising from the project, by granting the applicant the basic right to be heard and by conducting an inquiry into its allegations.

115 Secondly, the applicant claims that the Commission interfered in the relations between the two experts and itself, because '[t]he project officer did put pressure (on numerous occasions and repeatedly since December 2002) on [the applicant] to implement the instructions of the two experts which were infringing the terms of the contract'.

116 Thirdly, the applicant maintains that it is the same problems of conflicts of interest which were behind the lack of cooperation with the PICK project.

117 The Commission, first of all, contends that the applicant has not established that Luxembourg law permitted it to rely on the infringement of principles such as sound administration, transparency and conflict of interest in the context of contractual liability. According to the Commission, the action must be dismissed as being inadmissible on the ground that those principles are based on non-contractual liability, which is not applicable where the parties are bound by a contract, as in the present case.

118 Secondly, the Commission contends that, in any event, the principles of sound administration, transparency and conflict of interest were not infringed.

Findings of the Court

119 In the context of the present issue, the applicant appears to raise simultaneously the question of the Community's contractual and non-contractual liability.

120 With regard to the Community's non-contractual liability, it must be stated that, if the applicant takes the view that the Commission's decision to terminate the contract at issue caused it damage, it did not, however, indicate in its application whether the infringement of the principles of sound administration and transparency and the conflict of interest are to be construed as giving rise to non-contractual liability on the part of the Community.

121 Under Article 44(1)(c) of the Court's Rules of Procedure, however, the application must state the subject-matter of the proceedings and a summary of the pleas in law on which the application is based.

122 Pursuant to the case-law, irrespective of any question of terminology, that summary must be sufficiently clear and precise to enable the defendant to prepare its defence and the Court to rule on the application, if need be without having to seek further information (see, to that effect, Case T-84/96 Cipeke v Commission [1997] ECR II-2081, paragraph 31, and order in Case T-154/98 Asia Motor France and Others v Commission [1999] ECR II-1703, paragraph 49).

123 Consequently, in the absence of a clear and precise summary by the applicant with regard to the Commission's infringement of its obligations under the general principles relating to individuals under Article 235 EC and the second paragraph of Article 288 EC, there is no need to analyse the question of non-contractual liability.

124 Moreover, as the Community institutions are subject to obligations arising under the general principles raised in relation to individuals exclusively within the framework of the exercise of their administrative responsibilities, and as the relationship between the parties is clearly contractual in nature, the applicant can allege only that the Commission breached contractual terms or the law applicable to the contract at issue.

125 In the present case, it is therefore necessary to examine whether the Commission breached its contractual obligations.

– The Commission's obligations in the context of the first evaluation

126 First, it should be pointed out that Article 2(2)(h) of the general conditions allows the Commission to organise review meetings. Article 2(3) authorises the Commission to be assisted by independent experts under three conditions. First, it must take all appropriate steps to ensure that experts assisting it during such a meeting treat the data which is communicated to them as confidential. Next, it must communicate the names of those experts to the contractor prior to the meeting. Finally, it must take into account any objections on the part of the participants based on 'legitimate interests'. The concept of 'legitimate interest' is defined in Article 1(27) of the general conditions as 'any interest, in particular of a commercial nature, of a participant which may be invoked in the cases provided for in [these general conditions] provided that he demonstrates that the damage to that interest is likely, given the circumstances, to cause a specific prejudice that is disproportionate, considering the objectives of the provision in respect of which it is invoked'.

127 In the present case, the Commission cannot be accused of having breached the first condition laid down by Article 2(3) of the general conditions (namely, the adoption of appropriate measures to ensure that the independent experts treat as confidential the information communicated to them) because the first two independent experts both signed a declaration of confidentiality.

128 Concerning, next, the last condition laid down by that article, namely the consideration of the contractor's objections based on legitimate interests, it should be stated that the applicant has not pleaded infringement of any legitimate interest likely to cause a specific prejudice which would be disproportionate within the terms of the general conditions. By taking part in the review meeting of 20 March 2003, the applicant was in a position to express a view on the essential questions which were the subject of the review (see, to that effect, Case T-29/02 GEF v Commission [2005] ECR II-835, paragraphs 220 and 221) and voluntarily subjected itself to the evaluation committee's assessments (see, to that effect, Case C–114/94 IDE v Commission [1997] ECR I–803, paragraphs 45 to 54). The applicant was also requested by the Commission to respond in writing to the various points of criticism expressed in the first evaluation report, which it did by submitting an action plan on 12 May 2003. It is apparent from the documents before the Court that the Commission took account of the objections set out by the applicant in that response before terminating the contract at issue and that the applicant was therefore given the opportunity to have a proper and fair hearing.

129 Finally, the second condition laid down by Article 2(3) of the general conditions, namely the communication prior to the review meeting of the names of the independent experts assisting the Commission, was not complied with. Nevertheless, the applicant did not make any comments on the choice of those experts in its formal reply to the first evaluation report of 12 May 2003. In those circumstances, the Commission was entitled to form the view that the applicant had implicitly accepted the appointment of those two independent experts as reviewers.

130 Secondly, according to settled case-law, the existence of professional relations between an official and a third party cannot, in principle, imply that the official's independence is, or appears to be, undermined where that official is called to take a view on a case involving that third party (Case T-89/01 Willeme v Commission [2002] ECR-SC I-A-153 and II-803, paragraph 58; Case T-137/03 Mancini v Commission [2005] ECR-SC I-A-7 and II-27, paragraph 33; and Case T-100/04 Giannini v Commission [2008] ECR-SC I-A-0000 and II-0000, paragraph 224). The existence of such contacts does not, in itself, establish to the requisite legal standard that the relations between those persons went beyond what is normal (Case T-157/04 De Bry v Commission [2005] ECR-SC I-A-199 and II-901, paragraph 35).

131 Thus, the mere fact that one of the independent experts responsible for evaluating the eEBO project or certain Commission officials worked with the applicant's consultants on a separate project does not in itself suffice to establish a conflict of interest. In addition, the applicant itself states, in paragraph 45 of the application, that it 'does not argue that any previous social or professional contact between consultants and Commission officials or evaluators should be prohibited or considered a priori as dubious'.

132 In the present case, the applicant has not adduced any facts capable of explaining the extent to which the existence of professional relations between its consultants, certain officials and one of the two first reviewers of the eEBO project might have undermined the independence of those reviewers. On the contrary, it is apparent from the file before the Court, and particularly from paragraphs 2 and 3 of the application and from the unsigned contract between the applicant and one of the two independent experts which was produced by the applicant in response to the Court's questions, that the applicant recruited the two consultants because of their good relations with the officials involved in the eContent programme. Furthermore, it is common case that the second independent expert responsible for reviewing the eEBO project never had any professional or personal relations with the applicant's consultants or with the Commission officials responsible for that project.

133 Likewise, the applicant has also adduced no evidence that the Commission officials 'took the side' of its consultants or 'put pressure' on the applicant to carry out the instructions of those consultants. In paragraph 30 of the reply, the applicant refers to 'threats' which it allegedly received from its two consultants. However, it has put forward no evidence to substantiate those allegations.

134 For its part, the Commission stated that it had chosen the independent experts responsible for the review of the eEBO project at random and provided a copy of the declarations of confidentiality and absence of conflicts of interest signed by those experts. The Commission therefore took all the measures necessary to avoid a conflict of interest.

135 As has been pointed out above, it is true that the Commission did not reveal the names of the reviewers prior to the first review meeting of 20 March 2003, as it was required to do by Article 2(3) of the general conditions. Nevertheless, as the Commission correctly noted in its pleadings and in the course of the hearing, that first review was followed by an internal audit, itself followed by a second review carried out by two new independent experts. However, the applicant itself acknowledged during the hearing that the alleged conflict of interest which it had raised related only to the first review.

136 Consequently, in light of the foregoing considerations, the applicant's arguments relating to the Commission's obligations in connection with the first review must be rejected.

– The Commission's obligations in the context of the internal audit

137 The applicant complains that the Commission failed to communicate to it the result of its internal audit carried out in April 2004 and did not invite it to submit its observations.

138 Suffice it to note that the Commission has the right to request an internal audit from its audit service in accordance with Chapter 8 of Title IV of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1) (see also Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of Regulation No 1605/2002 (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1)). There is no obligation to communicate the result of such audits to third parties. Furthermore, the internal auditors enjoy complete independence in the performance of their audits, with the result that they can freely decide whom to question and under what conditions. Consequently, the applicant's arguments in that context must be rejected.

– The Commission's obligations in the context of the second review

139 The second review was based on Article 18(1) of the general conditions. Under that article, '[t]he

Commission, or any representative authorised by it, may initiate a technical verification in respect of a participant up to the contract completion date in order to verify that the project is being or has been carried out in accordance with the conditions indicated by the contractor'. Article 18(2) states that '[p]rior to the carrying out of the technical verification, the Commission [had to] communicate to the participants the identity of the authorised representatives who [were] intended to perform the verification' and '[had to] take account of any objection on the part of participants based on legitimate interests'. Finally, Article 18(4) adds that '[a] report on the technical verification of the project [had to] be sent to the contractor concerned', who could 'communicate his observations to the Commission within a month'.

140 In the present case, the Commission in fact notified the identity of the reviewers to the applicant in a letter of 14 June 2004, that is to say, before conducting the technical assessment. The two reviewers also signed declarations of confidentiality and of absence of conflicts of interest. Although the Commission does not appear to have formally requested the applicant to communicate to it its observations on the assessment report within one month, as it ought to have done under Article 18 of the general conditions, suffice it to state that, de facto, the applicant was in a position to submit its observations on that report in a letter of 12 October 2004. It should also be noted that, in the letters of 10 November and 22 December 2004, the Commission took those observations into account in concluding that they did not address the problems identified. In those circumstances, the Commission cannot be accused of having breached the terms of the contract at issue.

– The alleged interference of the Commission in the relations between the applicant and its two consultants

141 The applicant submits that the Commission unlawfully interfered in its relations with its two consultants.

142 It must be stated that the applicant has not adduced any evidence in support of its allegations. The only document which it has provided is the transcript of a telephone conversation of 10 December 2002 between Mr O. and one of its employees. However, that document does not in any way indicate that the Commission unlawfully interfered in the relations between the applicant and its consultants. Furthermore, the applicant has provided no evidence showing that the Commission had requested it 'to take actions ([that is to say] execute payments in favour of the consultants which were not in proportion with the quality and the quantity of the services delivered by them), [without regard to] the contractual obligations of the parties'.

143 It follows from the foregoing considerations that the second plea must be rejected as unfounded.

144 In the light of all the above considerations, the action must be dismissed in its entirety.

Costs

145 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. As the applicant has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs, in accordance with the form of order sought by the Commission.

On those grounds,

THE GENERAL COURT (Fourth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Dismisses the action;

2. Orders Evropaïki Dynamiki – Proigmena Systimata Tilepikoinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE to pay the costs.

Action brought on 4 September 2007 - Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission

Language of the case: English

Parties

Applicant: Evropaïki Dynamiki (Athens, Greece) (represented by: N. Korogiannakis, lawyer)

Defendant: Commission of the European Communities

Form of order sought

Order the Commission to pay the applicant the amount of EUR 172.588,62 which constitute unpaid eligible costs incurred by the applicant in the framework of contract No EDC-53007 EEBO/27873; order the Commission to pay the symbolic amount of EUR 1.000 corresponding to the damage suffered at its fame and goodwill;

order the Commission to pay the applicant's legal and other costs and expenses incurred in connection with this application.

Pleas in law and main arguments

This application, pursuant to Articles 238 EC and 235 EC, seeks compensation for damages caused by the decision of the Commission of 16 May 2003 to terminate the contract No EDC-53007 EEBO/27873 signed with the Commission, concerning the project "e-Content Exposure and Business Opportunities" ("EEBO") to be carried out in the framework of the multi-annual Community programme to stimulate the development and use of European digital content on the global networks and to promote linguistic diversity in the information society (2001-2005) and involving M. Fischer and M. Marthinsen in the implementation of the project as external consultants.

In support of its claims the applicant argues that the contracting authority (DG INFSO) decision to terminate the contract contains evident errors of assessment resulting in failure to fulfil its contractual obligations. Moreover, it is submitted that the contested decision was taken in violation of the principles of good administration and transparency and that on several occasions, specific Commission agents failed to eliminate alleged conflicts of interest. In light of the above, the applicant claims to be entitled to compensation for the services rendered as well as to eligible costs incurred in the framework of the execution of the contract including interest from the date these amounts became due.

1 L'article 89, paragraphe 1, du règlement (CE, Euratom) n° 1605/2002 du Conseil, du 25 juin 2002, portant règlement financier applicable au budget général des Communautés européennes (JO L 248, p. 1), dans sa version applicable au litige, c'est-à-dire tel que modifié par le règlement (CE, Euratom) n° 1995/2006 du Conseil, du 13 décembre 2006 (JO L 390, p. 1, ci–après le « règlement financier »), dispose :

2 Aux termes de l'article 93 du règlement financier :

« 1. Sont exclus de la participation aux procédures de passation de marchés les candidats ou les soumissionnaires :

b) qui ont fait l'objet d'une condamnation prononcée par un jugement ayant autorité de chose jugée pour tout délit affectant leur moralité professionnelle ;

c) qui, en matière professionnelle, ont commis une faute grave constatée par tout moyen que les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent justifier ;

2. Les candidats ou soumissionnaires doivent attester qu'ils ne se trouvent pas dans une des situations prévues au paragraphe 1 […]

3. Les modalités d'exécution fixent la durée maximale pendant laquelle les situations visées au paragraphe 1 entraînent l'exclusion des candidats ou soumissionnaires de la participation à un marché. Cette durée maximale ne dépasse pas dix ans. »

3 L'article 94 du règlement financier dispose :

« Sont exclus de l'attribution d'un marché, les candidats ou les soumissionnaires qui, à l'occasion de la procédure de passation de ce marché :

c) se trouvent dans l'un des cas d'exclusion de la procédure de passation de ce marché visés à l'article 93, paragraphe 1. »

4 L'article 95, paragraphe 1, du règlement financier prévoit qu'une base de données centrale commune, notamment, aux institutions, est créée et gérée par la Commission, dans le respect de la réglementation communautaire relative au traitement des données à caractère personnel. La base de données centrale contient des informations détaillées concernant les candidats et les soumissionnaires qui sont dans l'une des situations visées à l'article 93, à l'article 94 ou à l'article 96, paragraphe 1, sous b), et paragraphe 2, sous a), du règlement financier.

6 L'article 97, paragraphe 1, du règlement financier dispose :

« 3. Les marchés de travaux ont pour objet soit l'exécution, soit conjointement la conception et l'exécution de travaux ou d'ouvrages relatifs à une des activités mentionnées à l'annexe I de la directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, soit la réalisation, par quelque moyen que ce soit, d'un ouvrage répondant aux besoins précisés par le pouvoir adjudicateur. Un ouvrage est le résultat d'un ensemble de travaux de bâtiment ou de génie civil destiné à remplir par lui-même une fonction économique ou technique.

4. Les marchés de services ont pour objet toutes les prestations intellectuelles et non intellectuelles autres que les marchés de fournitures, de travaux et les marchés immobiliers. Ces prestations sont énumérées aux annexes II A et II B de la directive 2004/18/CE.

5. […] Un marché ayant pour objet des services et ne comportant des travaux qu'à titre accessoire par rapport à l'objet principal du marché est considéré comme un marché de services. »

9 L'article 133, paragraphe 2, premier alinéa, des modalités d'application, prévoit que « [d]ans les cas visés à l'article 93, paragraphe 1, [sous …] c) […], du règlement financier, les candidats ou soumissionnaires sont exclus des marchés et subventions pour une durée maximale de deux ans à compter du constat du manquement, confirmé après échange contradictoire avec le contractant ».

10 L'article 135 des modalités d'application prévoit :

« 1. Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs établissent des critères de sélection clairs et non discriminatoires.

2. Les critères de sélection s'appliquent dans toute procédure de passation de marchés afin que soit évaluée la capacité financière, économique, technique et professionnelle du candidat ou du soumissionnaire.

Le pouvoir adjudicateur peut fixer des niveaux minimaux de capacité en deçà desquels des candidats ne peuvent pas être retenus.

3. Tout soumissionnaire ou candidat peut être invité à justifier de son autorisation à produire l'objet visé par le marché selon le droit national : inscription au registre du commerce ou de la profession ou déclaration sous serment ou certificat, appartenance à une organisation spécifique, autorisation expresse, inscription au registre TVA.

5. L'étendue des informations demandées par le pouvoir adjudicateur pour preuve de la capacité financière, économique, technique et professionnelle du candidat ou soumissionnaire et les niveaux minimaux de capacité exigés conformément au paragraphe 2, ne peuvent aller au-delà de l'objet du marché et tiennent compte des intérêts légitimes des opérateurs économiques, en ce qui concerne en particulier la protection des secrets techniques et commerciaux de l'entreprise. »

11 L'article 137, paragraphe 2, des modalités d'application dispose :

« La capacité technique et professionnelle des opérateurs économiques peut être justifiée, selon la nature, la quantité ou l'importance et l'utilisation des fournitures, services ou travaux à fournir, sur la base d'un ou de plusieurs des documents suivants :

a) l'indication des titres d'études et professionnels du prestataire ou de l'entrepreneur et/ou des cadres de l'entreprise et, en particulier, du ou des responsables de la prestation ou de la conduite des travaux ;

b) la présentation d'une liste :

i) des principaux services et livraisons de fournitures effectués au cours des trois dernières années, indiquant leur montant, leur date et leur destinataire, public ou privé ;

ii) des travaux exécutés au cours des cinq dernières années, indiquant leur montant, leur date et leur lieu. La liste des travaux les plus importants est appuyée de certificats de bonne exécution précisant s'ils ont été effectués dans les règles de l'art et menés régulièrement à bonne fin ;

c) une description de l'équipement technique, de l'outillage et du matériel employés pour exécuter un marché de services ou de travaux ;

d) une description de l'équipement technique et des mesures employées pour s'assurer de la qualité des fournitures et services, ainsi que des moyens d'étude et de recherche de l'entreprise ;

e) l'indication des techniciens ou des organismes techniques, qu'ils soient ou non intégrés à l'entreprise, en particulier de ceux qui sont responsables du contrôle de la qualité ;

f) en ce qui concerne les fournitures, des échantillons, descriptions et/ou photographies authentiques et/ou des certificats établis par des instituts ou services officiels chargés du contrôle de la qualité, reconnus compétents et attestant la conformité des produits aux spécifications ou normes en vigueur ;

g) une déclaration indiquant les effectifs moyens annuels du prestataire ou de l'entrepreneur et l'importance du personnel d'encadrement pendant les trois dernières années ;

h) l'indication de la part du marché que le prestataire de services a éventuellement l'intention de sous-traiter ;

i) pour les marchés publics de travaux et de services et uniquement dans les cas appropriés, l'indication des mesures de gestion environnementale que l'opérateur économique pourra appliquer lors de la réalisation du marché.

Lorsque le destinataire des services et livraisons visés au premier alinéa, [sous] b), i), était un pouvoir adjudicateur, les opérateurs économiques fournissent la justification desdits services et prestations sous la forme de certificats émis ou contresignés par l'autorité compétente. »

« 1. Les États membres peuvent instaurer soit des listes officielles d'entrepreneurs, de fournisseurs ou de prestataires de services agréés soit une certification par des organismes de certification publics ou privés.

[…]

3. L'inscription certifiée par les organismes compétents sur des listes officielles ou le certificat délivré par l'organisme de certification ne constitue une présomption d'aptitude, à l'égard des pouvoirs adjudicateurs des autres États membres, que par rapport à l'article 45, paragraphe 1, et paragraphe 2, [sous] a) à d) et g), à l'article 46, à l'article 47, paragraphe 1, [sous] b) et c), et à l'article 48, paragraphe 2, [sous] a), i), [et sous] b), e), g) et h), pour les entrepreneurs, paragraphe 2, [sous] a), ii), [et sous] b), c), d) et j), pour les fournisseurs, et paragraphe 2, [sous] a), ii), [et sous] c) à i), pour les prestataires de services. »

13 En 2006, le Parlement a publié un appel d'offres relatif à l'entretien et à la maintenance des équipements automatiques, de la menuiserie et des équipements assimilés des bâtiments du Parlement à Bruxelles.

14 À la suite du dépôt, par la requérante, Entrance Services, d'un recours en annulation devant le Tribunal contre la décision du 1er décembre 2006 d'attribuer le marché à Kone Belgium SA (ci-après « Kone »), le Parlement a annulé l'ensemble de la procédure d'appel d'offres par décision du 29 janvier 2007 pour le motif, notamment, que, « sans préjuger du bien-fondé de l'action envisagée par la société Entrance Services, il conv[enait], dans l'intérêt de l'institution, d'annuler la procédure d'appel d'offres et de ne pas signer le contrat envisagé avec [Kone] et d'engager un nouvel appel d'offres ».

15 La requérante s'est alors désistée de son action par courrier adressé au greffe du Tribunal le 5 février 2007.

17 Aux fins de l'évaluation de la capacité technique et professionnelle, le cahier des clauses administratives de l'appel d'offres exigeait – tout comme celui de la première procédure d'appel d'offres – que les soumissionnaires soient agréés dans les catégories D5, D20 et P1 prévues par la loi belge du 20 mars 1991 organisant l'agréation des entrepreneurs de travaux belges (Moniteur belge du 6 avril 1991, p. 7 244, ci-après la « loi belge ») et par l'arrêté royal du 26 septembre 1991 fixant certaines mesures d'application de la loi belge (Moniteur belge du 18 octobre 1991, p. 23 286, ci-après l'« arrêté royal »), ou leur équivalent dans leur pays d'origine. Il exigeait également que les soumissionnaires jouissent d'un agrément « ISO 9001 » et d'un agrément « VCA », ou leur équivalent dans le pays d'origine.

18 En ce qui concerne la capacité économique et financière des soumissionnaires, il était requis que ceux-ci soient agréés dans la classe 3 prévue par la loi belge et l'arrêté royal ou son équivalent dans le pays d'origine.

19 Conformément à l'article 12 du cahier des charges, le marché devait être attribué au soumissionnaire le moins-disant.

20 Trois offres ont été déposées à la suite de cet appel d'offres.

21 Les offres ont été ouvertes le 10 mai 2007 par la commission d'ouverture, qui les a déclarées conformes. Il est apparu, à cette occasion, que l'offre de la requérante était plus élevée que celle de Kone mais moins élevée que celle du troisième soumissionnaire.

22 Par lettre du 14 mai 2007, la requérante a attiré l'attention du Parlement sur l'implication de Kone dans le cartel des ascenseurs, cette affaire ayant donné lieu à une décision, adoptée par la Commission le 21 février 2007, dans laquelle cette dernière a, notamment, conclu à la violation, par cette entreprise, de l'article 81 CE [décision de la Commission C (2007) 512 final, du 21 février 2007, relative à une procédure d'application de l'article 81 [CE] (Affaire COMP/E-1/38.823 – Ascenceurs et escaliers mécaniques), dont un résumé est publié au Journal officiel du 26 mars 2008, C 75, p. 19].

23 La requérante a exigé que Kone soit, en conséquence, exclue de la procédure d'appel d'offres pour avoir commis une faute professionnelle grave.

24 Par courrier du 15 mai 2007, le Parlement a demandé à la requérante de produire des copies des justificatifs des agréments requis par le cahier des clauses administratives, qui ne figuraient pas dans le dossier de cette dernière.

25 La requérante a répondu à cette demande par courrier du 21 mai 2007 aux termes duquel elle indiquait ce qui suit :

« Catégorie D5

Menuiserie générale – charpentes et escaliers en bois

Les travaux de menuiserie générale seront effectués par une société agréée en 'menuiserie générale' qui effectuera les travaux en sous-traitance et sous notre responsabilité.

Catégorie P1

Installations électriques des bâtiments, y compris installations de groupes électrogènes, équipements de détection d'incendie et de vol, télétransmissions dans les bâtiments et leur périphérie et installations ou équipements de téléphonie mixte.

Travaux qui ne sont pas repris dans l'appel d'offres, mais font partie du contrat de la société s'occupant de la gestion HVAC de vos immeubles. »

27 À la suite de la réunion du comité d'évaluation, l'un des membres de ce comité a adressé la question suivante au service financier central du Parlement :

« Dans le cadre d'un appel d'offres ouvert que nous avons engagé il y a quelques mois, nous nous apprêtons à établir le [procès-verbal] du comité d'évaluation et de proposer une attribution à notre ordonnateur compétent.

Or, nous sommes confrontés à la difficulté suivante :

Dans le cadre de cette adjudication, l'offre la moins-disante a été remise par [Kone].

Or vous n'ignorez pas que cette dernière a fait l'objet d'une sanction prononcée par la Commission européenne pour des faits d'entente illicite.

Dans ces conditions, auriez-vous l'obligeance de nous faire savoir si, à la suite de la décision prise par la Commission, [Kone] a été inscrite sur la 'black list' des sociétés à exclure ou si, au contraire, nous pouvons lui attribuer le marché. »

28 La réponse du service financier central du Parlement a été la suivante :

D'autre part, nous vous rappelons que les sanctions imposées par la Commission dans le cadre de la politique pour la concurrence ne rentrent pas parmi les critères d'exclusion prévus aux articles 93 et 94 [du règlement financier], ni parmi les causes de sanction prévues à l'article 96 [paragraphe 1, de ce même règlement], pourvu que ces sanctions en matière de concurrence ne constituent pas des faits pouvant rentrer en même temps parmi les 'fautes professionnelles graves' prévues à l'article 93 [paragraphe 1, sous c), du règlement financier]. »

29 La décision d'écarter l'offre de la requérante a été communiquée à cette dernière par le Parlement par lettre du 14 août 2007.

30 Par télécopie du 23 août 2007, la requérante a demandé au Parlement de préciser quels étaient les critères de sélection non remplis, ainsi que les caractéristiques et avantages relatifs à l'offre retenue et le nom de l'attributaire du marché.

31 Par télécopie du 31 août 2007, le Parlement a répondu en indiquant, d'une part, que la requérante ne remplissait pas les critères de sélection relatifs aux agréments dans les catégories D5 et P1 et, d'autre part, que l'offre retenue était celle de Kone.

Procédure et conclusions des parties

32 Par acte déposé au greffe du Tribunal le 7 septembre 2007, la requérante a introduit le présent recours.

33 Par acte déposé au greffe le 28 novembre 2007, le Parlement a formé une demande de procédure accélérée en vertu de l'article 76 bis du règlement de procédure du Tribunal.

34 Par courrier enregistré au greffe le 14 décembre 2007, la requérante s'est jointe à cette demande.

35 La demande de procédure accélérée a été accueillie par décision de la troisième chambre communiquée aux parties le 29 janvier 2008.

36 Sur rapport du juge rapporteur, le Tribunal (troisième chambre) a décidé d'ouvrir la procédure orale.

37 Lors de l'audience du 23 mai 2008, les parties ont été entendues en leurs plaidoiries et en leurs réponses aux questions posées par le Tribunal.

38 À la suite de l'audience, le Parlement a transmis, par courrier enregistré au greffe le 27 mai 2008, plusieurs documents à propos desquels la requérante a présenté ses observations par courrier enregistré au greffe le 16 juin 2008.

39 La requérante conclut à ce qu'il plaise au Tribunal :

– annuler la décision par laquelle le Parlement a écarté son offre et a attribué le marché à un autre soumissionnaire ;

– condamner le Parlement aux dépens.

40 Le Parlement conclut à ce qu'il plaise au Tribunal :

– rejeter le recours ;

– condamner la requérante aux dépens.

41 La requérante présente, en substance, trois moyens à l'appui de son recours.

43 Par son deuxième moyen, la requérante avance, en substance, que le Parlement a violé les dispositions du règlement financier et des modalités d'application en exigeant, de la part des soumissionnaires, certains agréments pour la réalisation de travaux.

44 Par son troisième moyen, la requérante soutient que Kone et Wycor NV, le troisième soumissionnaire, ne disposaient pas non plus desdits agréments et que le marché a, dès lors, été attribué à Kone en violation du principe d'égalité entre soumissionnaires consacré par l'article 89, paragraphe 1, du règlement financier.

45 À titre liminaire, et en réponse à une allégation de la requérante lors de l'audience, il y a lieu de préciser, concernant l'applicabilité ratione temporis des modalités d'application, telles que modifiées successivement par le règlement n° 1261/2005 et par le règlement n° 1248/2006, que l'article 2 du règlement n° 1248/2006 prévoit que les procédures de passation de marchés publics lancées avant l'entrée en vigueur de ce règlement restent soumises aux règles applicables au moment où ces procédures ont été lancées.

48 La procédure d'appel d'offres ayant, en l'espèce, été lancée après l'entrée en vigueur du règlement n° 1248/2006, c'est dans leur version, telle que modifiée par ce dernier règlement, que les modalités d'application s'appliquent au présent litige.

Sur le premier moyen, tiré de la violation de l'article 10 du cahier des clauses administratives et de l'article 93, paragraphe 1, du règlement financier

49 La requérante soutient que Kone, l'attributaire du marché, a été sanctionnée par la Commission, par décision de celle-ci du 21 février 2007, pour avoir participé à des ententes sur le marché de l'installation et de l'entretien des ascenseurs, l'infraction consistant en le trucage des appels d'offres, la fixation des prix, l'attribution des projets, la répartition des marchés et l'échange d'informations commercialement importantes et confidentielles, au moins de 1995 à 2004.

50 L'amende fixée à 70 millions d'euros infligée à Kone a toutefois été réduite de 100 %, cette entreprise ayant été la première à fournir des renseignements sur l'entente en cause.

51 La requérante estime cependant que cette réduction d'amende ne fait pas disparaître l'infraction.

52 La requérante fait valoir, en substance, que, dans ces conditions, Kone avait commis une faute professionnelle grave et qu'elle se trouvait dans une situation d'exclusion visée à l'article 10 du cahier des clauses administratives, reproduisant les termes de l'article 93, paragraphe 1, sous b) et c), du règlement financier et que, partant, le Parlement ne pouvait lui attribuer le marché sans violer ces dispositions.

53 Le Parlement soutient, en substance, d'une part, que Kone ne pouvait être exclue sur la base de l'article 93, paragraphe 1, sous b), du règlement financier, dans la mesure où Kone n'avait pas fait l'objet d'une condamnation prononcée par un jugement ayant autorité de chose jugée.

55 En effet, selon le Parlement, Kone ne figurait pas dans la base de données de la Commission, constituée conformément à l'article 95 du règlement financier, comportant les données nominatives des entités qui font l'objet d'une exclusion de l'attribution ou de la participation à des marchés des institutions communautaires ; dès lors le Parlement ne pouvait valablement exclure Kone de la participation à la procédure d'appel d'offres en cause.

56 En outre, le Parlement considère, en substance, que la gravité de la faute n'était pas établie en l'espèce, dès lors que Kone avait fourni des renseignements sur l'entente et avait activement participé à la découverte des faits, son repentir pouvant être considéré comme une circonstance atténuante.

Appréciation du Tribunal

58 La décision de la Commission du 21 février 2007 prise à l'encontre de Kone ne constituant pas une condamnation prononcée par un jugement ayant autorité de chose jugée, le premier grief avancé par la requérante, tiré de la violation de cette disposition, ne saurait prospérer.

59 En ce qui concerne le second grief, tiré de la violation de l'article 93, paragraphe 1, sous c), du règlement financier, il convient de rappeler qu'il résulte des dispositions des articles 93 et 94 du règlement financier et de l'article 133 des modalités d'application que le pouvoir adjudicateur, s'il constate, par tout moyen qu'il peut justifier, l'existence d'une faute grave en matière professionnelle commise par un soumissionnaire, doit exclure ce dernier de la procédure de passation de marché. Il en découle une obligation, pour le pouvoir adjudicateur, dès lors que celui-ci est informé, au cours de la procédure, d'une prétendue faute grave en matière professionnelle commise par un soumissionnaire, de vérifier cette information et, si cette faute grave est établie à suffisance de droit, d'exclure le soumissionnaire en question de la procédure. À défaut de précisions à cet égard dans les réglementations pertinentes, il y a lieu de constater que le pouvoir adjudicateur dispose d'une certaine marge d'appréciation en ce qui concerne l'appréciation de la gravité de la faute pouvant être retenue contre le soumissionnaire.

60 En l'espèce, la requérante a informé le Parlement, par lettre du 14 mai 2007, que Kone avait fait l'objet d'une décision par laquelle la Commission sanctionnait une violation par cette entreprise des règles de concurrence.

62 La décision de la Commission sanctionnait Kone du fait d'avoir, notamment, truqué des appels d'offres dans le cadre de marchés publics et le Parlement a admis, lors de l'audience en réponse à une question posée par le Tribunal, que ce type d'acte pouvait constituer une faute grave au sens de l'article 93, paragraphe 1, sous c), du règlement financier. La Commission elle-même, dans la décision du 21 février 2007, qualifie la violation des règles de concurrence commise par les différentes entreprises membres du cartel de « très grave » (points 657 et suivants de la décision de la Commission).

63 Or, c'est notamment en vue de sanctionner ce type de comportement que l'article 93, paragraphe 1, sous c), du règlement financier impose au pouvoir adjudicateur d'exclure la participation de telles entreprises à des marchés publics communautaires.

66 Il y a lieu d'observer, tout d'abord, que c'est à juste titre que le Parlement avance qu'il lui appartenait de vérifier si le soumissionnaire était enregistré dans la base de données de la Commission.

68 Il résulte, en effet, des dispositions des articles 93 à 95 du règlement financier que, contrairement à la thèse soutenue par le Parlement, la seule absence d'enregistrement dans la base de données ne saurait créer une présomption irréfragable que le soumissionnaire n'a pas commis de faute grave en matière professionnelle.

70 Or, l'analyse des offres, datée du 31 mai 2007, qui a été communiquée par le Parlement en annexe au mémoire en défense, laisse apparaître que le Parlement s'est référé uniquement à la déclaration sur l'honneur transmise par Kone et paraît n'avoir réservé aucune autre suite à la lettre de la requérante l'informant de la décision de la Commission concernant l'infraction aux règles de concurrence, après avoir interrogé la base de données de la Commission. La fiche du procès-verbal d'évaluation relative à Kone mentionne en effet « OK, rien à signaler » sous la rubrique « Recevabilité des offres […] iii) en matière professionnelle, ont commis une faute grave ».

71 Interrogé à cet égard lors de l'audience, le Parlement n'a pas été en mesure de préciser les démarches entreprises par ses services, autres que la consultation de la base de données de la Commission.

72 Or, il ressort par ailleurs d'une pièce déposée par le Parlement lors de l'audience et datée du 31 mai 2007, que le service financier central du Parlement a été interrogé par un membre du comité d'évaluation, afin de savoir si, à la suite de la décision prise par la Commission, Kone avait été inscrite sur la liste des sociétés à exclure ou si, au contraire, le marché pouvait être attribué à Kone. À cette question, le service financier central du Parlement a répondu que Kone n'était pas reprise sur la liste de sociétés à exclure. Par ailleurs, ce service a précisé ce qui suit :

76 Partant, l'argumentation avancée à cet égard par le Parlement ne saurait prospérer.

78 À titre surabondant, il y a lieu d'examiner les deuxième et troisième moyens avancés par la requérante.

Sur le deuxième moyen, tiré de la violation des articles 97 et 98 du règlement financier ainsi que de l'article 135, paragraphe 5, et de l'article 137 des modalités d'application

79 Le moyen se subdivise en deux branches.

80 Par la première branche de son moyen, la requérante soutient que, en exigeant des soumissionnaires qu'ils justifient de la possession d'un agrément dans les catégories D5, D20 et P1 pour établir leur capacité technique à exécuter le marché, le Parlement a violé les articles 97 et 98 du règlement financier ainsi que l'article 137 des modalités d'application, dans la mesure où, selon cette dernière disposition, la capacité technique des soumissionnaires peut uniquement être vérifiée par la production d'un ou de plusieurs documents mentionnés par cette disposition. La prise en compte de tout autre document que ceux visés à l'article 137 est donc exclue.

81 Lors de l'audience, la requérante a invoqué, à l'appui de cette argumentation, les arrêts de la Cour du 10 février 1982, Transporoute et travaux (76/81, Rec. p. 417), et du 9 juillet 1987, CEI et Bellini (27/86 à 29/86, Rec. p. 3347).

82 La requérante avance en outre que, contrairement à l'article 52, paragraphe 1, de la directive 2004/18, les modalités d'application ne prévoient pas que les institutions européennes peuvent exiger des soumissionnaires qu'ils fassent la preuve de leur capacité technique par la production d'un document attestant de leur inscription sur une liste officielle d'opérateurs agréés par les États membres.

83 Par la seconde branche de son moyen, la requérante soutient que, en exigeant des soumissionnaires qu'ils justifient d'un agrément dans les catégories D5, D20 et P1 pour établir leur capacité technique et professionnelle ainsi que d'un agrément dans la classe 3 pour établir leur capacité économique et financière, et en écartant l'offre de la requérante au motif qu'elle ne fournit pas la preuve de deux de ces agréments, le Parlement a violé les articles 97 et 98 du règlement financier et l'article 135, paragraphe 5, des modalités d'application.

84 En effet, conformément à l'article 135, paragraphe 5, des modalités d'application, l'étendue des informations demandées par le pouvoir adjudicateur pour prouver la capacité financière, économique, technique et professionnelle du candidat ne pourrait aller au-delà de l'objet du marché.

85 La requérante fait observer que, en exigeant des soumissionnaires qu'ils détiennent un agrément dans les catégories D5, D20 et P1, le Parlement s'est référé à la loi belge et à l'arrêté royal. Or, cette réglementation ne concerne que les marchés de travaux, qui ne peuvent, en principe, être attribués qu'à des entrepreneurs agréés, aux termes des articles 2 et 3 de la loi belge, et non les marchés de fournitures et de services.

87 Selon la requérante, il résulte, par ailleurs, de l'article 5, paragraphe 6, de l'arrêté royal – qui prévoit, notamment, que, « dans le cas où l'ouvrage comprend des travaux de nature différente, dont l'importance relative est plus ou moins égale, celui-ci pourra être classé dans plusieurs des catégories ou sous-catégories concernées » et que, « en toute hypothèse, l'adjudicataire ne devra être agréé que dans l'une des catégories ou sous-catégories prévues » – que, pour un marché, le pouvoir adjudicateur ne peut exiger qu'un seul agrément. Quant à la classe dans laquelle cet agrément doit être produite, elle est déterminée par le montant de la soumission, selon l'article 3, paragraphe 3, de l'arrêté royal.

90 Les opérateurs intéressés par le marché sont, en effet, selon la requérante, des entreprises prestataires de services qui ne disposent pas d'agréments d'entrepreneurs de travaux.

91 De plus, la requérante allègue que de tels agréments ne permettent pas d'établir la capacité technique du soumissionnaire à exécuter le marché de services concerné.

92 Par ailleurs, la requérante soutient que de tels agréments vont au-delà de l'objet du marché, celui-ci ne comportant aucune tâche visée par la catégorie P1, ce dernier type de tâches étant exécuté par la société chargée de la gestion dite « HVAC » des immeubles.

93 Enfin, selon la requérante, l'article 11 du cahier des clauses administratives, s'appuyant prétendument sur la loi belge, exige trois agréments alors que la loi belge n'autorise les pouvoirs adjudicateurs qu'à en réclamer un seul pour un même marché.

94 Le Parlement conteste ces allégations.

Appréciation du Tribunal

– Quant à la première branche du moyen

95 L'article 135, paragraphe 3, des modalités d'application dispose :

96 Il convient d'avoir égard à la version anglaise de cette disposition, qui est ainsi rédigée :

« Any tenderer or candidate may be asked to prove that he is authorised to perform the contract under national law, as evidenced by inclusion in a trade or professional register, or a sworn declaration or certificate, membership of a specific organisation, express authorisation, or entry in the VAT register. »

97 La version française utilise l'expression « produire l'objet visé par le marché », tandis que la version anglaise emploie les mots « perform the contract » et la version allemande les mots « Erbringung der Auftragsleistung ».

100 L'article 135, paragraphe 3, des modalités d'application doit alors être interprété en ce sens qu'un agrément constitue une autorisation de produire l'objet visé par le marché ou encore d'exécuter le contrat.

supra, dès lors que cette directive a été abrogée par la directive 93/37/CEE du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux (JO L 199, p. 54), laquelle a, à son tour, été abrogée par la directive 2004/18 et que la formulation des dispositions des modalités d'application, qui résultent d'un règlement, n'est pas exactement identique à celle de l'article 26 de la directive 71/305.

106 La première branche du moyen avancé par la requérante ne saurait dès lors être accueillie.

– Quant à la seconde branche du moyen

107 Premièrement, il y a lieu de relever que le Parlement impose, dans le cadre de l'appel d'offres faisant l'objet du présent litige, que les soumissionnaires établissent qu'ils possèdent un agrément dans les catégories D5, D20 et P1, ou leur équivalent dans leur pays d'origine, un agrément « ISO 9001 » et un agrément « VCA », ou leur équivalent dans le pays d'origine, et, enfin, un agrément dans la classe 3 ou son équivalent dans le pays d'origine.

108 Il en résulte que les soumissionnaires devaient disposer des agréments requis selon le droit de leur pays d'origine – ce pays pouvant être la Belgique – mais il n'en découle pas pour autant que le marché était soumis aux conditions fixées par le droit belge en ce qui concerne l'exigence de tels agréments.

109 En effet, la procédure d'appel d'offres, ayant été lancée par une institution communautaire, était régie par le droit communautaire, et, en l'espèce, par les dispositions du règlement financier et des modalités d'application, et non par le droit belge.

110 La nature et le nombre des agréments requis par le droit belge pour les procédures de passation de marchés publics menées en Belgique sont dès lors sans incidence en l'espèce. En outre, ainsi que le relève à juste titre le Parlement, le droit belge n'empêche pas un entrepreneur de disposer de plusieurs agréments. Tel était, d'ailleurs, le cas des deux autres soumissionnaires.

111 Deuxièmement, il est établi que l'appel d'offres portait sur un marché de services, mais que les travaux y représentaient une part non négligeable. Contrairement à ce qu'a avancé la requérante à cet égard, le Parlement n'a pas soutenu que le marché devrait être requalifié en marché de travaux, mais bien qu'il s'agissait d'un marché de services, quand bien même les travaux occupaient une part prépondérante du marché durant la première année d'exécution du contrat.

114 Le marché portait en effet sur la maintenance de 14 751 portes normales en bois et de 783 portes RF (résistance au feu) en bois, la maintenance de 2 564 stores électriques métalliques, de 25 éléments de rideaux et de volets intérieurs électriques en métal, de 15 867 stores intérieurs manuels avec des rails et d'autres parties métalliques, de 30 portes automatiques en métal, de 17 portes « sectionnelles » métalliques, de 20 barrières automatiques métalliques et de 414 portes SMS (système modulaire de sécurité) et CA (contrôle d'accès) et la maintenance de 2 564 stores électriques, de 30 portes automatiques, de 17 portes « sectionnelles », de 20 barrières automatiques et de 414 portes SMS et CA.

115 Il y a lieu de relever à cet égard que, tout d'abord, l'agrément dans la catégorie D5 (menuiserie générale, charpentes et escaliers en bois) était relatif à la maintenance de 14 751 portes normales en bois et de 783 portes RF en bois. Ensuite, l'agrément dans la catégorie D20 (menuiserie métallique) correspondait à la maintenance de 2 564 stores électriques métalliques, de 25 éléments de rideaux et de volets intérieurs électriques en métal, de 15 867 stores intérieurs manuels avec des rails et d'autres parties métalliques, de 30 portes automatiques en métal, de 17 portes « sectionnelles » métalliques, de 20 barrières automatiques métalliques et de 414 portes SMS et CA. Enfin, l'agrément dans la catégorie P1 (installations électriques des bâtiments) se justifiait en raison de la maintenance de 2 564 stores électriques, de 30 portes automatiques, de 17 portes « sectionnelles », de 20 barrières automatiques et de 414 portes SMS et CA.

117 En troisième lieu, quant à l'argument selon lequel l'agrément dans la catégorie P1 (installations électriques des bâtiments) n'est pas pertinent dans la mesure où le marché ne comporte aucune prestation relevant de cette catégorie, il est clairement démenti par la liste des travaux fournie par le Parlement.

120 La requérante n'ayant apporté aucun élément à l'appui de ses allégations de nature à démontrer l'inexactitude des affirmations du Parlement à cet égard, il y a lieu de considérer que ce grief est dénué de fondement.

121 Il convient, par conséquent, de conclure que la requérante n'a pas établi qu'il était injustifié que le Parlement exige la possession d'un agrément dans la catégorie P1.

122 En quatrième lieu, il y a lieu d'écarter l'argument de la requérante visant à soutenir que l'exigence de trois agréments pour des marchés de travaux était disproportionnée, eu égard au fait que le marché était, à titre principal, un marché de services.

124 La seconde branche du deuxième moyen doit dès lors être rejetée comme non fondée.

Sur le troisième moyen, tiré de la violation du principe d'égalité de traitement entre soumissionnaires, consacré par l'article 89, paragraphe 1, du règlement financier

126 La requérante a soutenu, dans la requête, que les deux autres soumissionnaires ne détenaient pas non plus tous les agréments requis par l'article 11 du cahier des clauses administratives.

127 À la suite de l'audience, le Parlement a communiqué copie des agréments qui avaient été accordés par décision ministérielle du 6 novembre 2006 à Wycor et du 6 juillet 2007 à Kone.

129 Le Parlement estime que Kone disposait donc des agréments requis préalablement à l'attribution du marché.

130 La requérante soutient cependant que, lorsque le comité d'évaluation a proposé, le 21 mai 2007, d'attribuer le marché à Kone, celle-ci n'avait pas encore obtenu les agréments requis par le cahier des clauses administratives et que l'on ignore si elle en disposait lors de l'attribution du marché, la date de la décision d'attribution n'étant pas connue.

131 Dès lors, selon la requérante, en écartant son offre pour le motif qu'elle n'avait pas produit tous les agréments requis et en attribuant le marché à un autre soumissionnaire, alors qu'il se trouvait dans la même situation, le Parlement a violé le principe d'égalité entre soumissionnaires consacré à l'article 89, paragraphe 1, du règlement financier.

Appréciation du Tribunal

132 D'une part, il y a lieu de constater que, contrairement à ce que soutient la requérante, celle-ci et Kone ne se trouvaient pas dans des situations similaires.

134 Le Parlement n'a dès lors pas attribué le marché à un soumissionnaire se trouvant dans la même situation que la requérante.

135 D'autre part, Kone ayant apporté la preuve qu'elle disposerait des agréments au moment de la prise d'effet de la décision d'attribution, le comité d'évaluation a valablement pu considérer qu'elle remplissait les conditions fixées par l'avis de marché à cet égard.

136 Le moyen avancé par la requérante est, dès lors, dépourvu de fondement.

137 Aux termes de l'article 87, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure, toute partie qui succombe est condamnée aux dépens, s'il est conclu en ce sens. Le Parlement ayant succombé, il y a lieu de le condamner aux dépens, conformément aux conclusions de la requérante.

Par ces motifs,

LE TRIBUNAL (troisième chambre)

déclare et arrête :

1) La décision du Parlement européen de rejeter l'offre soumise par Entrance Services et d'attribuer le marché à un autre soumissionnaire, dans le cadre de la procédure d'appel d'offres concernant l'entretien et la maintenance des équipements automatiques, de la menuiserie et des équipements assimilés des bâtiments du Parlement à Bruxelles, est annulée.

2) Le Parlement est condamné aux dépens.

Action brought on 7 September 2007 - Entrance Services v Parliament

(Case T-333/07)

Language of the case: French

Parties

Applicant: Entrance Services NV (Vilvoorde, Belgium) (represented by: A. Delvaux and V. Bertrand, lawyers)

Defendant: European Parliament

Form of order sought

Declare the action for annulment admissible;

Annul the decision by which the Parliament rejected the applicant's tender and granted the contract to another tenderer, a decision notified to the applicant on 14 August 2007;

Order the Parliament to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

By this action the applicant seeks the annulment of the decision of the Parliament of 14 August 2007 rejecting its tender submitted in the framework of the tender procedure for the conclusion of a contract for repair and maintenance of automatic equipment, joinery and similar equipment in European Parliament buildings in Brussels [(contract for the provision of services 2007-2010) (call for tender No IFIN-BATIBRU-JLD-S0765-00)]. [1]

In support of its action the applicant claims, first, an infringement of Article 10 of the schedule of administrative clauses and of Article 93(1) of the Financial Regulation, [2] in that the Parliament accepted a tender submitted by a tenderer which, according to the applicant, was excluded under Article 10 of the schedule of administrative clauses as a result of a finding by the Commission that it had participated in a cartel.

Second, the applicant maintains that the Parliament infringed Articles 97 and 98 of the Financial Regulation and Article 137 of the Implementing Regulation [3] by requiring tenderers to establish their technical capacity to carry out the contract by means of evidence other than that referred to by those provisions.

Third, the applicant relies on a plea alleging the infringement of Articles 97 and 98 of the Financial Regulation and of Article 135(5) of the Implementing Regulation, in that the Parliament required tenderers to demonstrate their economic and financial capacity to carry out the contract by means of evidence not provided for in those provisions, and in that it rejected the applicant's tender on the ground that it had failed to provide the evidence required.

Finally, the applicant submits that the contested decision should be annulled because it infringes the equality principle laid down in Article 89(1) of the Financial Regulation, in that the Parliament rejected its tender and awarded the contract to another tenderer even though it was in the same situation as the applicant with regard to the non-production of the certifications required by Article 11 of the schedule of administrative clauses.

Parties

Applicant: Evropaïki Dynamiki - Proigmena Systimata Tilepikoinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE (Athens, Greece) (represented by: N. Korogiannakis, lawyer)

Defendant: Commission of the European Communities

Form of order sought

Annul the Commission's decision of the Direction General for Informatics to reject the bid of the applicant, filed in response to the open Call for Tender ENTR/05/078 - YOUR EUROPE Lot 1 (Editorial Work and Translations) for "Your Europe Portal Management and Maintenance" (OJ 2006/S 143-153057) communicated to the applicant by letter dated 21 May 2007 ("the decision on Lot 1") and to award the contracts to the successful contractor, annul the Commission's decision (DIGIT) to reject the bid of the applicant filed in response to the open Call for Tender ENTR/05/078 -YOUR EUROPE Lot 2 (Infrastructure Management) for "Your Europe Portal Management and Maintenance" (OJ 2006/S 143-153057) communicated to the applicant by letter dated 13 July 2007 ("the decision on Lot 2") and to award the contracts to the successful contractors;

order the Commission (DIGIT) to pay the applicant's damages suffered on account of the tendering procedure in question for an amount of EUR 1 125 000 Euros for Lot 1 and EUR 825 000 Euros for Lot 2;

order the Commission (DIGIT) to pay the applicant's legal and other costs and expenses incurred in connection with this application, even if the current application is rejected.

Pleas in law and main arguments

In support of its claims the applicant argues that, in the framework of the tendering procedure ENTR/05/078 YOUR EUROPE Lot 1 (Editorial Work and Translations) for "Your Europe Portal Management and Maintenance" (OJ 2006/S 143-153057) and ENTR/05/078 - YOUR EUROPE Lot 2 (Infrastructure Management) for "Your Europe Portal Management and Maintenance" (OJ 2006/S 143-153057), the contracting authority, DG DIGIT of the European Commission, failed to comply with its obligations foreseen in the Financial Regulation[1], its Implementing Rules and Directive 2004/18/EC[2] as well as the principles of transparency and equal treatment

The applicant moreover submits that the contracting authority committed several manifest errors of assessment which resulted in the rejection of its bid. Furthermore, the contracting authority allegedly infringed its obligation to state reasons for its decision and, in particular, to inform the applicant on the relative merits of the successful tenderer.

The applicant requests, hence, that the decision of the European Commission to reject its bid and to award the contract to the successful tenderer be annulled and that the defendant is ordered to pay all legal expenses related to the proceedings even in case the application is rejected. In the alternative, if the contract has already been executed by the time the Court reached its decision or if it is no longer possible to annul the decision, the applicant requests monetary compensation (damages) of EUR 1 125 000 for Lot 1 and EUR 825 000 for Lot 2 in accordance with Articles 235 and 288 EC.

Form of order sought

Annulment of the Commission's rejection decision.

Pleas in law and main arguments

By this action, the applicant seeks the annulment of the Commission's decision of 22 May 2007 rejecting its tender submitted in connection with the tendering procedure 'Post-editing services PER 2007' [1] on account of an absence of evidence of relevant experience.

In support of its application for annulment of the contested decision, the applicant claims that the Commission erred manifestly in its reading of its application because the call for tenders related precisely to its area of activity, which the applicant claims to have stated in its tender. The applicant also states that it had already secured a public contract in that area from the Commission and that the services provided on that occasion were never called in question.

In addition, the applicant claims that the contested decision is based on manifestly incorrect reasons and that that error amounts to a lack of reasoning.

Judgment

Legal context

1 Procedures for the award of service contracts by the European Parliament are subject to Title V of Part 1 of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1) ('the Financial Regulation') and to Title V of Part 1 of Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1) ('the Implementing Rules'). Those provisions are based on the Community directives in the field, in particular, as regards service contracts, on Council 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended in particular by Directive 97/52/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1), now repealed and replaced by Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation states:

> ‘The contracting authority shall notify all candidates or tenderers whose applications or tenders are rejected of the grounds on which the decision was taken, and all tenderers whose tenders are admissible and who make a request in writing of the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the tenderer to whom the contract is awarded.
> However, certain details need not be disclosed where disclosure would hinder application of the law, would be contrary to the public interest or would harm the legitimate business interests of public or private undertakings or could distort fair competition between those undertakings.’

3 Article 149(3) of the version of the Implementing Rules applicable to the facts of the case provides:

> ‘In the case of contracts awarded by the Community institutions on their own account, under Article 105 of the Financial Regulation, the contracting authority shall inform all unsuccessful tenderers or candidates, simultaneously and individually, as soon as possible after the award decision and within the following week at the latest, by mail and fax or e-mail, that their application or tender has not been accepted; specifying in each case the reasons why the tender or application has not been accepted.
> The contracting authority shall, at the same time as the unsuccessful candidates or tenderers are informed that their tenders or applications have not been accepted, inform the successful tenderer of the award decision, specifying that the decision notified does not constitute a commitment on the part of the contracting authority.
> Unsuccessful tenderers or candidates may request additional information about the reasons for their rejection in writing by mail, fax or e-mail, and all tenderers who have put in an admissible tender may obtain information about the characteristics and relative merits of the tender accepted and the name of the successful tenderer, without prejudice to the second subparagraph of Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation. The contracting authority shall reply within no more than fifteen calendar days from receipt of the request.

Facts

4 The applicant, VIP Car Solutions SARL, is a hire company providing chauffeur-driven vehicles.

5 In a contract notice published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union of 16 September 2006 (OJ 2006 S 177), the Parliament issued call for tenders PE/2006/06/UTD/1 for chauffeur-driven car and minibus service for Members of the European Parliament during part-sessions in Strasbourg (‘the call for tenders’).

6 Under point IV.2.1 of the invitation to tender the contract was to be awarded to the tender offering best value for money assessed on the following weighted criteria: price (55%), vehicle fleet provided (quantity and quality) (30%), measures taken or specific to the vehicles to meet environmental requirements (7%), staff social policy (6%) and tender presentation (2%).

7 The final date for receipt of tenders or requests to participate was 27 October 2006. Three tenders were deposited within the period prescribed, including that of the applicant. On 6 November 2006 the commission for the opening of tenders declared that the three tenders complied with the invitation to tender.

8 On 30 November 2006, the tender evaluation committee (‘the evaluation committee’) proposed to award the contract to a tenderer other than the applicant; that tenderer having received a total of 566 points, made up as follows: 290 points for the price, 180 points for the vehicle fleet, 42 points for environmental measures, 36 points for social policy and 18 points for tender presentation.

9 The applicant was placed second, with a total of 504 points, made up as follows: 343.5 points for the price, 135 points for the vehicle fleet, 0 points for environmental measures, 18 points for social policy and 8 points for tender presentation.

10 On 3 January 2007, the Parliament awarded the contract to the tenderer proposed by the evaluation committee ('the successful tenderer').

11 On 9 January 2007, the Parliament sent the following e-mail to the applicant:

> 'Please find attached the letter regarding your tender. You will receive the original of this letter by registered post. Please acknowledge receipt of this [e-mail?].'

12 By means of this unsigned and undated letter attached to the e-mail, the Parliament informed the applicant of the decision not to accept its tender under the invitation to tender ('the contested decision').

13 The contested decision states, inter alia, the following:

> 'The reasons for the rejection of your tender are as follows: tender not tender offering best value for money with regard to the award criteria.
>
> You can obtain additional information on the reasons for the rejection of your tender, without prejudice to a possible legal challenge.
>
> If you apply in writing, you will be able to obtain information on the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the party to which the contract has been awarded.
>
> However, certain details will not be disclosed where disclosure would hinder application of the law, would be contrary to the public interest or would harm the legitimate business interests of public or private undertakings or could distort fair competition between those undertakings ...'

14 By e-mail of 10 January 2007, the applicant replied as follows:

> 'We acknowledge receipt of your [e-mail] regarding the rejection of our tender. However, as you propose, we wish to know the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the tenderer to which the contract has been awarded. As our tender was not more advantageous in economic terms, could you indicate the hourly rate proposed by the successful company [?]'

15 By letter of 15 January 2007, the applicant again asked the Parliament to notify it of the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender, the name of the company to which the contract had been awarded and the price offered by the successful tenderer. It pointed out that at that date it had still not received the original of the registered letter stating that its tender had been rejected.

16 By letter of 23 January 2007, the Parliament replied to the applicant's e-mail of 10 January 2007. Citing Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation, it recalled the weighted award criteria laid down in the call for tenders and then stated the following:

> 'As the successful tender received the highest marks ... for the above-mentioned criteria taken together (566), it was for that reason classified in first place.
> In spite of offering a slightly lower price, your tender received 504 points, and was accordingly placed second.'

17 In that letter the Parliament also notified the applicant of the name of the tenderer to which the contract had been awarded.

18 On 24 January 2007, the Parliament sent the applicant the original of the letter informing it of the decision to reject its tender.

19 By e-mail of 31 January 2007, the Parliament asked the applicant if it had received that letter. By e-mail of the same day the applicant replied that it had not.

20 By letter of 1 March 2007, the applicant pointed out, via its lawyer, that it had offered an exceptional price in the call for tenders and asked for a copy of the bid submitted by the successful tenderer in order to know the price the latter had submitted.

21 By letter of 20 March 2007 addressed to the applicant's lawyer, the Parliament rejected that request, citing the second subparagraph of Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation, and added the following:

'... We wish to point out that within 48 days of the signing of the contract the call for tender[s] will give rise to the publication, in the Official Journal of the European Union, of a contract award notice containing the essential information, such as the price paid.

We note that your "clients know that they had offered an exceptional price".

At any event, we are bound to remind you that price was not the only award criterion. The qualitative and functional criteria are of particular importance for an institution such as ours and may justify a higher cost.

Our assessment "that in spite of offering a slightly lower price" related precisely to that aspect of the invitation to tender; we indicated in particular that although your clients' tender had received the highest score with regard to price, the total score determined by the evaluation committee, which took into account all of the criteria listed in the specifications, did not enable them to win the contract. As they have already been informed, their tender received a total of 504 points, against 566 for that of the tenderer to which the contract has been awarded.'

22 By letter of 23 March 2007, the applicant stated that, since the price criterion counted for 55% in the evaluation of tenders, the award of the contract to a tenderer other than itself was impossible and the refusal to disclose the price offered by the successful tenderer prevented it from verifying the terms on which the contract had been awarded before expiry of the period for bringing proceedings before the Court of First Instance.

23 On 7 April 2007, the contract award notice was published in the Supplement to the Official Journal (OJ 2007 S 69). It indicated that the price offered by the successful tenderer was EUR 26 per hour outside the schedule and EUR 37.50 per hour in accordance with the schedule.

Procedure and forms of order sought

24 The applicant brought the present action by application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 23 March 2007.

25 As one member of the Chamber was unable to sit in the present case, the President of the Court of First Instance designated another judge to complete the Chamber pursuant to Article 32(3) of the Rules of Procedure.

26 Upon hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court of First Instance (Sixth Chamber) decided to open the oral procedure and, in the context of the measures of organisation of procedure laid down in Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure, requested the parties to produce documents. The parties complied with that request within the period prescribed.

27 The parties submitted oral argument and replied to the questions put by the Court at the hearing on 9 December 2008.

28 In its application, the applicant claims that the Court should:

– declare the action admissible;

– annul the contested decision;

– annul all measures adopted subsequently to the contested decision;

– order the Parliament to pay the sum of EUR 500 000 by way of damages;

– order the Parliament to pay one-off costs amounting to EUR 5 000;

– order the Parliament to pay the costs.

29 In its reply, the applicant claims in addition that the Court should:

– instruct the Parliament to organise a proper procedure for calls for tenders.

30 In its defence the Parliament contends that the Court should:

– dismiss the action for annulment;

– dismiss the claim for damages;

– dismiss the application to order the Parliament to pay one-off costs amounting to EUR 5 000;

– order the applicant to pay the costs.

31 In its rejoinder, the Parliament contends in addition that the Court should:

– dismiss the application to instruct it to organise a proper procedure for calls for tenders.

32 At the hearing, in reply to a question from the Court, the applicant withdrew the head of claim in which it had applied for the Parliament to be ordered to pay one-off costs amounting to EUR 5 000; this withdrawal was noted in the minutes of the hearing.

Law

The application for annulment of the contested decision

33 The applicant essentially raises two pleas in law, alleging first infringement of the obligation to provide an adequate statement of reasons and secondly that the refusal to disclose the price offered by the successful tenderer is improper.

The first plea, based on infringement of the obligation to provide an adequate statement of reasons

34 In its application the applicant notes that in the call for tenders the price criterion counted for 55%, in other words more than half of the total for the award criteria. It emphasises that it offered the lowest price, EUR 31.70 per hour. However, it received only 504 points compared with 566 points for the successful tenderer. The applicant states that it cannot understand this difference in the number of points when it submitted the best tender from the point of view of price. In its view, on mathematical grounds the contract could not be awarded to another tenderer.

35 In its reply, the applicant points out that the Parliament admitted having made a mistake in calculating its total points, which demonstrates that the evaluation committee failed to undertake its duties properly.

36 As regards the criterion of the vehicle fleet, the applicant states that the Parliament had arbitrarily allocated two-thirds of the points to the quantitative aspect and only one-third to the qualitative aspect. It asserts that it had never been informed of that apportionment, which it considers unjustified, as the ownership of the vehicles is not more important than their quality. Since the tenderers all received the same score for the quality criterion, the difference in the number of points between the applicant and the successful tenderer should have been smaller.

37 As regards the criterion relating to environmental measures, the applicant considers it impossible for it to have received a zero score. In fact, like the successful tenderer, it is subject to French legislation on chauffeur-driven transport companies, which requires vehicles to be in an excellent state of mechanical repair and to undergo annual checks. Hence, it maintains that all its vehicles are recent models fitted with particle filters. In its opinion, the difference of 42 points cannot therefore be justified on the sole ground that the tenderer had signed the anti-pollution charter of the Mairie de Paris.

38 With regard to the social policy criterion, one of the two open-ended contracts of the successful tenderer was, according to the applicant, in fact a fixed-term contract for additional work, or even a temporary contract. The contract in question was entitled 'Intermittent employment contract for an unlimited period', two terms which, in the opinion of the applicant, are antonyms. Moreover, according to the applicant, the employment contracts of both the applicant and the successful tenderer come from the national association of chauffeur-driven vehicle undertakings. Hence the difference in the number of points between the two tenderers was not objectively justified.

39 Finally, the applicant maintains that the tender presentation criterion related to the form of the tender and not to its substance. The tender of the successful tenderer could therefore not be 'unquestionably better' on the basis of that criterion. Furthermore, the applicant was the only one to submit its tender in the form of a DVD in addition to a presentation which complied with all the required formalities. Nevertheless, it received a lower score than the successful tenderer.

40 It its defence, the Parliament states that the award criteria other than the price had a weighting of 45% and could therefore affect the outcome of the evaluation of the various tenders. It maintains that it operated objectively when examining the tenders.

41 In that regard, the Parliament states that the evaluation committee awarded a score in respect of each criterion from 0 to 10, the score obtained then being multiplied by the percentage for the criterion. As regards the two main criteria, namely the price and the quantitative aspect of the vehicle fleet, in order to be objective the evaluation committee decided to evaluate the score of the current contract, which was neutral in relation to the contract to be awarded, and to multiply this first objective score by the ratio between the services provided by the preceding contractor and those offered by each of the tenderers.

42 For the score relating to the price the evaluation committee thus considered that the price under the existing contract, that is to say EUR 33, should be regarded as reasonable and it awarded it a mark of 6. As the prices offered by the applicant and the successful tenderer were respectively EUR 31.70 and EUR 37.50 per hour, the following results were obtained:

– for the successful tenderer: 33: 37.5 x 6 x 55 = 290.4 points.

43 With regard to the vehicle fleet criterion, according to the Parliament the evaluation committee considered that the quantitative aspect took precedence and allocated two thirds of the score to it, in other words 20 points. A score of 6 was awarded to the fleet of 60 vehicles offered by the previous contractor. For the applicant the evaluation committee recorded a fleet of 70 vehicles (60 cars and 10 minibuses) and for the successful tenderer a fleet of 60 vehicles. According to the Parliament, for the sake of comparability, account was also taken of the direct availability of the vehicles. In that regard, a coefficient of 0.5 was applied to the applicant's vehicle fleet because 67 of the 70 vehicles were to be leased from another company. This evaluation therefore produced the following results:

– for the applicant: 70: 60 x 6 x 0.5 x 20 = 70 points;

– for the successful tenderer: 60: 60 x 6 x 1 x 20 = 120 points.

44 As regards the criterion relating to the quality of the vehicle fleet, the applicant and the successful tenderer both received a score of 10, which after weighting for this criterion led to the award of the following points:

– for the applicant: 6 x 10 = 60 points;

– for the successful tenderer: 6 x 10 = 60 points.

45 The Parliament admits that the evaluation committee made a mistake in recording 135 points for the criterion relating to the applicant's vehicle fleet. In fact, the number of points was 130, which means that the applicant received a total of 499 points and not 504 points.

46 The Parliament maintains that only the successful tenderer submitted information for the criterion relating to environmental measures, namely that it complied with the anti-pollution charter of the Mairie de Paris and that its vehicles, of recent manufacture, were fitted with particle filters, which led to the award of the following points:

– for the successful tenderer: 6 x 7 = 42 points.

47 With regard to the social policy criterion, the Parliament asserts that the successful tenderer proposed two types of open-ended employment contracts, one of which was for intermittent staff, whereas the applicant's drivers had only fixed-term employment contracts. The Parliament argues that, taking account of the weighting applied to this criterion, the difference between the two tenders was reflected in the following allocation of points:

– for the applicant: 3 x 6 = 18 points;

– for the successful tenderer: 6 x 6 = 36 points.

48 Finally, as regards the tender presentation criterion, in the opinion of the Parliament the successful tenderer's presentation was undeniably better, so that, having regard to the weighting attached to this criterion, the following points were awarded:

– for the applicant: 4 x 2 = 8 points;

– for the successful tenderer: 9 x 2 = 18 points.

49 The total number of points awarded to each tender was therefore made up as follows:

– for the applicant: 343 + 70 + 60 + 0 + 18 + 8 = 499 points; – for the successful tenderer: 290 + 120 + 60 + 42 + 36 + 18 = 566 points.

50 The Parliament states that, upon verification, the authorising officer realised that the vehicle fleet of the successful tenderer consisted of 70 vehicles, leading in fact to the award of a total of 586 points.

51 The Parliament thus maintains that the tender of the successful tenderer offered distinct qualitative advantages over that of the applicant, whose tender was better only on price. In that regard, the Parliament notes that the contract was to be awarded to the tenderer offering best value for money. Since the procedure did not involve tenderers being classified solely on the basis of price, the contract could not be awarded directly to the financially lowest tender.

52 In its reply, the Parliament adds that the applicant appears to confuse a lack of objectivity with the discretion of the contracting authority, with regard to which review by the Court of First Instance must be confined to verifying that no manifest error of assessment has been committed.

53 As regards the criterion relating to the vehicle fleet, the Parliament, citing the case-law of the Court of Justice, argues that an evaluation committee may decide to attach specific weight to the subheadings of an award criterion which are defined in advance, by dividing among those headings the points awarded for that criterion by the contracting authority when the contract documents or the notice were prepared, provided first that that decision does not alter the criteria for the award of the contract set out in the contract documents or the contract notice, secondly that it does not contain elements which, if they had been known at the time the tenders were prepared, could have affected that preparation, and thirdly that it was not adopted on the basis of matters likely to give rise to discrimination against one of the tenderers. According to the Parliament, the applicant has not shown that these conditions were not met in the present case.

54 As to environmental measures, the Parliament notes that the applicant's tender did not state how it satisfied that criterion, which explains its zero score.

55 Finally, as regards the last award criterion, the Parliament maintains that a presentation in the form of a DVD does not of itself justify considering the applicant's tender as being better presented than that of the successful tenderer. The deciding factor, according to the Parliament, was the attractive and convincing nature of the tender and not the medium.

– Findings of the Court

56 It must be noted at the outset that the Parliament, in the same way as the other institutions, has a broad discretion with regard to the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender. The Court's review of the exercise of that discretion is therefore limited to checking that the rules governing the procedure and statement of reasons are complied with, the facts are correct and there is no manifest error of assessment or misuse of powers (see, by analogy, Case T–211/02 Tideland Signal v Commission [2002] ECR II–3781, paragraph 33, and judgment of 10 September 2008 in Case T–465/04 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, not published in the ECR paragraph 45).

57 Under Article 1 of the administrative specifications of the invitation to tender, the award of the contract in question was governed by the Financial Regulation and the Implementing Rules.

58 Consequently, as regards the statement of reasons for the contested decision by which it rejected the applicant's tender, the Parliament was under an obligation in the present case to apply Article 100 (2) of the Financial Regulation and Article 149(3) of the Implementing Rules.

59 It follows from these articles and from the case-law of the Court of First Instance that the Parliament will meet its obligation to state reasons if it satisfies itself, first, that it has immediately notified all rejected tenderers of the reasons for the rejection of their tender and then provides tenderers who submitted an admissible tender and who expressly request it with the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the tenderer to which the contract was awarded within fifteen calendar days of receipt of a written request (see, to that effect and by analogy, judgment of 10 September 2008 in Case T–465/04 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, cited in paragraph 56 above, paragraph 47).

60 Such a manner of proceeding satisfies the purpose of the duty to state reasons enshrined in Article 253 EC, according to which the reasoning followed by the authority which adopted the measure must be disclosed in a clear and unequivocal fashion so as, on the one hand, to make the persons concerned aware of the reasons for the measure and thereby enable them to defend their rights and, on the other, to enable the Court to exercise its supervisory jurisdiction (Case T–465/04 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, cited in paragraph 56 above, paragraph 48).

61 Moreover, it must be emphasised that where, as in the present case, a Community institution has broad powers of appraisal, respect for the rights guaranteed by the Community legal order in administrative procedures is of even more fundamental importance. Those guarantees include, in particular, the duty of the competent institution to provide adequate reasons for its decisions. Only in this way can the Court verify whether the factual and legal elements upon which the exercise of the power of appraisal depends were present (Case C–269/90 Technische Universität München [1991] ECR I–5469, paragraph 14; Case T–241/00 Le Canne v Commission [2002] ECR II–1251, paragraphs 53 and 54; and Case T–465/04 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, cited in paragraph 56 above, paragraph 54).

62 It should also be pointed out that the requirements to be satisfied by the statement of reasons depend on the circumstances of each case, in particular the content of the measure in question, the nature of the reasons given and the interest which the addressees of the measure, or other parties to whom it is of direct and individual concern, may have in obtaining explanations (see Case C–367/95 P Commission v Sytraval and Brink's France [1998] ECR I–1719, paragraph 63 and the case-law cited).

63 Finally, the obligation to state reasons is an essential procedural requirement, as distinct from the question whether the reasons given are correct, which goes to the substantive legality of the contested measure (Case C–17/99 France v Commission [2001] ECR I–2481, paragraph 35, and judgment of 12 November 2008 in Case T–406/06 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, not published in the ECR, paragraph 47).

64 In this regard, it must be considered that in its application the applicant essentially claims infringement of the obligation to state reasons, in that it was unable to understand why it was not awarded the contract, having offered the lowest price in circumstances where that criterion counted for 55% in the evaluation of tenders. It must also be noted that in its defence the Parliament understood the applicant's line of argument as complaining that the Parliament had not stated reasons for the contested decision by which it refused to award the contract to the applicant.

65 In any event, according to settled case-law, the statement of the reasons on which a decision adversely affecting a person is based must allow the Court to exercise its power of review as to its legality and must provide the person concerned with the information necessary to enable him to decide whether or not the decision is well founded. Accordingly, the fact that a statement of reasons is lacking or inadequate, hindering that review of legality, constitutes a matter of public interest which may, and even must, be raised by the Community judicature of its own motion (Case C-166/95 P Commission v Daffix [1997] ECR I-983, paragraphs 23 and 24, and judgment of 10 September 2008 in Case T-272/06 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Court of Justice, not published in the ECR, paragraphs 27 and 28 and the case-law cited).

66 Hence, in the present case, as the applicant submitted an admissible tender within the meaning of Article 149(3) of the Implementing Rules, it is necessary to examine not only the contested decision but also the letter of 23 January 2007 sent to the applicant in reply to its express request for additional information on the decision to award the contract in question, in order to establish whether the Parliament met the requirement to state adequate reasons laid down in the Financial Regulation and in the Implementing Rules.

67 It must be found, first of all, that in the contested decision the Parliament confined itself, in accordance with the first subparagraph of Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation, to stating the reasons for rejecting the applicant's tender. It indicated that the applicant's tender was 'not the tender offering the best value for money with regard to the award criteria'.

68 Then, in its letter of 23 January 2007, the Parliament merely indicated the following:

> 'As the successful tender received the highest marks ... for the above-mentioned criteria taken together (566), it was for that reason classified in first place.
> In spite of offering a slightly lower price, your tender received 504 points, and was accordingly placed second.'

69 Hence, although the Parliament replied within the period laid down in Article 149(3) of the Implementing Rules, it did not give the applicant any information on the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender, except that the price proposed by the applicant was slightly lower, despite being required to provide such information under the Financial Regulation and the Implementing Rules.

70 Such a reply does not disclose in a clear and unequivocal fashion the reasoning followed by the Parliament so as, on the one hand, to make the applicant aware of the reasons for the measure and thereby enable it to defend its rights and, on the other, to enable the Court to exercise its power of review.

71 Moreover, in the circumstances of the case, that information was all the more necessary as the price offered by the applicant was lower than that offered by the successful tenderer and the price criterion was allocated a weight of 55% in the overall evaluation of the tenders. Hence, the applicant was not in possession of any fact that would enable it to understand why its tender had not been successful in the tendering procedure.

72 It should be added that the Parliament sent the applicant a further letter on 20 March 2007 in reply to its letter of 1 March 2007.

73 In that regard, according to the case-law, if the institution concerned sends a letter in response to a request from the applicant seeking additional explanations about a decision before instituting proceedings but after the date laid down in Article 149(3) of the Implementing Rules, that letter may also be taken into account when examining whether the statement of reasons in the case in question is adequate. The requirement to state reasons must be assessed in the light of the information which the applicant possessed at the time of instituting proceedings, it being understood, however, that the institution is not permitted to replace the original statement of reasons by an entirely new statement (see to that effect and by analogy, Case T-465/04 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, cited in paragraph 56 above, paragraph 59).

74 However, it must be stated that the letter of 20 March 2007 contains no information on the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender. In fact, the Parliament merely repeated what it had already told the applicant in its letter of 23 January 2007.

75 Finally, it must be noted that the Parliament provided information on the statement of reasons for the contested decision in the course of the court proceedings. In its defence statement it details the points awarded to the applicant and to the successful tenderer for each of the award criteria and the reasons which, in its opinion, justified those scores.

76 However, the fact that the Parliament provided the reasons for that decision in the course of the proceedings does not compensate for the inadequacy of the initial statement of reasons for the contested decision. It is settled case-law that the reasons for a decision cannot be explained for the first time ex post facto before the Court, save in exceptional circumstances which, in the absence of urgency, are not present in this case (see, to that effect, Case T–61/89 Dansk Pelsdyravlerforening v Commission [1992] ECR II–1931, paragraph 131, and judgment of 24 September 2008 in Case T–264/06 DC-Hadler Networks v Commission, not published in the ECR, paragraph 34).

77 It follows from all of the foregoing that the decision by which the Parliament refused to award the contract to the applicant is vitiated by the absence of an adequate statement of reasons in accordance with Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation and Article 149(3) of the Implementing Rules.

78 Accordingly, the first plea must be upheld.

The second plea, based on the impropriety of the refusal to disclose the price offered by the successful tenderer.

79 The applicant maintains that the refusal to disclose the price proposed by the successful tenderer is improper. First, according to the applicant, the price offered by that tenderer does not fall within the scope of the second subparagraph of Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation. The applicant contends that its disclosure would not harm the successful tenderer. Moreover, in a context of transparency, it would be normal to know the precise reasons for the rejection of a tender for a contract of this size.

80 The applicant also points out that the price offered by the successful tenderer had to be published in the Supplement to the Official Journal within 48 days of signature of the contract. Hence, disclosure of that price could not harm the legitimate business interests of the successful tenderer or distort fair competition.

81 The Parliament's refusal to meet the applicant's request also had the effect of shortening the period for bringing proceedings before the Court.

82 The Parliament replies that Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation does not imply an absolute obligation to disclose the price offered by the successful tenderer. It contends that the 'characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender' consist rather in a comparative description of the tenders. Accordingly, the contracting authority retains a degree of discretion as regards the information it is required to disclose to the unsuccessful tenderer.

83 Moreover, it is legitimate to regard the price as one of the factors whose disclosure would harm the business interests of an undertaking, within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 100 (2) of the Financial Regulation. Such information should therefore be disclosed only as a last resort. The Parliament recognises, however, that the price offered by the successful tenderer was contained in the contract award notice published in the Supplement to the Official Journal.

84 Moreover, the refusal to disclose the price offered by the successful tenderer did not prevent the applicant from bringing proceedings before the Court within the prescribed period.

85 In reply to a question put by the Court at the hearing, the Parliament developed its line of argument by stating that, until publication of the award notice, the contract could still have been annulled as a result of challenges brought before signature of the contract. In that case, non-disclosure of the price would make it possible to prevent the other tenderers from knowing that aspect of the tender of the successful tenderer, which could therefore resubmit its tender on the same terms.

– Findings of the Court

86 As a preliminary matter, it must be pointed out that the Parliament, in response to the applicant's request of 10 January 2007 for additional information, merely indicated that the price offered by the successful tenderer was slightly higher than the applicant's. That price, that is to say, EUR 26 per hour outside the schedule and EUR 37.50 in accordance with the schedule, was disclosed publicly in the contract award notice of 7 April 2007.

87 However, pursuant to the first subparagraph of Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation, the Parliament was required to notify the unsuccessful tenderer, upon written request, of the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender.

88 Hence, in response to the applicant's written request the Parliament was obliged to inform it of the price offered by the successful tenderer, that price being one of the characteristics and one of the relative advantages of the successful tender, particularly as, in the circumstances of the case, this criterion counted for 55% in the evaluation of the tenders.

89 None of the arguments put forward by the Parliament is capable of calling that finding into question.

90 First, the argument that the contracting authority retains a degree of discretion does not justify its refusal to disclose to the unsuccessful tenderer who requests it in writing the price offered by the successful tenderer. In that regard, the Parliament cannot simply state that the price is not one of the characteristics and relative advantages of the tender of an undertaking to which a contract is awarded where, as indicated above, that criterion counted in the present case for 55% in the evaluation of the tenders.

91 Secondly, while it is true that pursuant to the second subparagraph of Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation certain details need not be disclosed where disclosure would hinder application of the law, would be contrary to the public interest or would harm the legitimate business interests of public or private undertakings or could distort fair competition between those undertakings, in its statement of defence the Parliament does not explain how, in the present case, disclosure of the price offered by the successful tenderer would harm its business interests and, moreover, it notes that the price was mentioned in the contract award notice.

92 Thirdly, the argument that the contracting authority may decide, as it is permitted to do under Article 101 of the Financial Regulation, to abandon the procurement or cancel the award procedure before the contract is signed does not absolve the Parliament, in the circumstances of the case, from notifying the applicant of the price offered by the successful tenderer. To accept such an argument would be tantamount to rendering meaningless the obligation to provide a statement of reasons laid down in the first subparagraph of Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation and in Article 149(3) of the Implementing Rules.

93 In these circumstances, the second plea must be upheld.

94 It follows from all of the foregoing that the contested decision must be annulled.

The application for annulment of measures adopted subsequently to the contested decision

95 In its third head of claim, the applicant asks the Court to annul all the measures adopted subsequently to the contested decision.

96 In this regard, It should be noted that, under the first paragraph of Article 21 of the Statute of the Court of Justice, which applies to the procedure before the Court of First Instance by virtue of the first paragraph of Article 53 of that statute, and under Article 44(1)(c) of the Rules of Procedure, all applications must indicate the subject-matter of the dispute and contain a summary of the pleas in law on which the application is based. That statement must be sufficiently clear and precise to enable the defendant to prepare its defence and the Court to exercise its power of review. In order to guarantee legal certainty and the sound administration of justice, it is necessary that the basic legal and factual particulars relied on be indicated, at least in summary form, coherently and intelligibly in the application itself (orders in Case T–85/92 De Hoe v Commission [1993] ECR II–523, paragraph 20, and Case T–294/04 Internationaler Hilfsfonds v Commission [2005] ECR II–2719, paragraph 23).

97 In the present case, the applicant does not specify the measures to which its third head of claim relates and does not put forward any arguments in support of its request.

98 Accordingly, the third head of claim must be dismissed as inadmissible.

The claim for compensation

99 In its application the applicant claims that the Parliament should be ordered to pay EUR 500 000 in damages.

100 In its reply, the applicant points out that it met all the conditions for award of the contract. Consequently, the Parliament infringed all of the rules of law governing the award of the contract and the applicant's claim for damages is admissible.

101 With regard to the damage sustained, the applicant states that it suffered economically by not being the undertaking to which the contract was awarded. It was unable to benefit from the advantages that it was legitimately entitled to expect.

102 The Parliament contends that the applicant's claim for damages is inadmissible.

103 According to settled case-law, an application seeking compensation for damage caused by a Community institution must state the evidence from which the conduct alleged against the institution can be identified, the reasons for which the applicant considers there to be a causal link between that conduct and the damage it claims to have suffered, and the nature and extent of that damage (Case T–38/96 Guérin automobiles v Commission [1997] ECR II–1223, paragraph 42, and Case T–19/01 Chiquita Brands and Others v Commission [2005] ECR II–315, paragraph 65).

104 In the present case, it must be found that the claim for damages contained in the application, which is merely the subject of a head of claim, lacks even the most basic details.

105 Even supposing that the application stated the evidence from which the conduct alleged against the Parliament can be identified, it is silent as to the nature and character of the alleged damage and the reasons for which the applicant considers there to be a causal link between that conduct and the damage.

106 Furthermore, and even supposing that it would have been admissible to do so, the applicant has not in fact attempted to remedy these omissions in its reply.

107 It follows that as far as the claim for damages is concerned the application does not meet the conditions laid down in Article 44(1) (c) of the Rules of Procedure.

108 In those circumstances, the claim for damages must be declared inadmissible.

The request to instruct the Parliament to organise a proper procedure for calls for tenders 109 At the stage of the reply, the applicant asked the Court to instruct the Parliament to organise a proper procedure for calls for tenders.

110 Under Article 44(1)(c) of the Rules of Procedure an applicant is required to state in the application the subject-matter of the proceedings and the form of order sought. Although Article 48(2) of those rules authorises, in certain circumstances, new pleas in law to be introduced in the course of proceedings, the provision cannot in any circumstances be interpreted as authorising the applicant to bring new claims before the Court and thereby to modify the subject-matter of the proceedings (Case T–28/90 Asia Motor France and Others v Commission [1992] ECR II–2285, paragraph 43, and Case T–2/99 T. Port v Council [2001] ECR II–2093, paragraph 34; see also, by analogy, Case 232/78 Commission v France [1979] ECR 2729, paragraph 3).

111 It follows that the head of claim requesting that the Court instruct the Parliament to organise a proper procedure for calls for tenders must be dismissed as inadmissible.

112 For the sake of completeness, it should be noted that in an action for annulment founded on Article 230 EC, the jurisdiction of the Community judicature is confined to reviewing the legality of the contested measure and that, according to settled case-law, the Court cannot, in the exercise of its jurisdiction, issue directions to the Community institutions (Case C–5/93 P DSM v Commission [1999] ECR I–4695, paragraph 36, and Case T–145/98 ADT Projekt v Commission [2000] ECR II–387, paragraph 83). If the contested measure is annulled, it is for the institution concerned to adopt, in accordance with Article 233 EC, the necessary measures to comply with the judgment annulling that measure (Case T–67/94 Ladbroke Racing v Commission [1998] ECR II–1, paragraph 200, and Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, cited in paragraph 56 above, paragraph 35).

Costs

113 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Parliament has been unsuccessful, and the applicant has applied for costs, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Sixth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Annuls the decision by which the European Parliament refused to award the contract under tender procedure PE/2006/06/UTD/1 to VIP Car Solutions SARL;

2. Dismisses the action as to the remainder;

3. Orders the Parliament to pay the costs.

VIP Car Solutions SARL

European Parliament

(Public service contracts – Community tender procedure – Transport for Members of the Parliament in chauffeur-driven cars and minibuses during part-sessions in Strasbourg – Rejection of a tenderer's bid – Duty to state reasons – Refusal to disclose the price offered by the successful tenderer – Action for damages)

Summary of the Judgment

1. European Communities' public procurement – Conclusion of a contract following a call for tenders – Discretion of the institutions – Judicial review – Limits

2. Acts of the institutions – Statement of reasons – Obligation – Scope – Decision, in an award procedure for a public service contract, to reject a tender

   (Art. 253 EC; Council Regulation No 1605/2002, Art. 100(2); Commission Regulation No 2342/2002, Art. 149(3))

3. Procedure – Application initiating proceedings – Formal requirements

   (Statute of the Court of Justice, Arts 21, first para., and 53, first para.; Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, Art. 44(1)(c))

4. Procedure – Application initiating proceedings – Subject-matter of the dispute

   (Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, Arts 44(1)(c) and 48(2))

5. Actions for annulment – Jurisdiction of the Community judicature – Claim seeking that directions be issued to an institution – Inadmissibility

   (Arts 230 EC and 233 EC)

1. The Parliament has a broad discretion with regard to the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender. The Court's review of the exercise of that discretion is therefore limited to checking that the rules governing the procedure and statement of reasons are complied with, the facts are correct and there is no manifest error of assessment or misuse of powers.

2. It follows from Article 100(2) of Regulation No 1605/2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities and Article 149(3) of Regulation No 2342/2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation that the Community institution will meet its obligation to state reasons for its decision, in an award procedure for a public services contract, to reject a tender, if it satisfies itself, first, that it has immediately notified all rejected tenderers of the reasons for the rejection of their tender and then provides tenderers who submitted an admissible tender and who expressly request it with the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the tenderer to which the contract was awarded within 15 calendar days of receipt of a written request.

Where a Community institution has broad powers of appraisal, respect for the rights guaranteed by the Community legal order in administrative procedures is of even more fundamental importance. Those guarantees include, in particular, the duty of the competent institution to provide adequate reasons for its decisions. Only in this way can the Court verify whether the factual and legal elements upon which the exercise of the power of appraisal depends were present.

If the institution concerned sends a letter in response to a request from the applicant seeking additional explanations about a decision before instituting proceedings but after the date laid down in Article 149(3) of Regulation No 2342/2002, that letter may also be taken into account when examining whether the statement of reasons in the case in question is adequate. The requirement to state reasons must be assessed in the light of the information which the applicant possesses at the time of instituting proceedings, it being understood, however, that the institution is not permitted to replace the original statement of reasons by an entirely new statement.

However, the fact that the institution concerned provided the reasons for the decision to reject a tender in the course of the proceedings does not compensate for the inadequacy of the initial statement of reasons for that decision. The reasons for a decision cannot be explained for the first time ex post facto before the Court, save in exceptional circumstances.

3. Under the first paragraph of Article 21 of the Statute of the Court of Justice, which applies to the procedure before the Court of First Instance by virtue of the first paragraph of Article 53 of that statute, and under Article 44(1)(c) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, all applications must indicate the subject–matter of the dispute and contain a summary of the pleas in law on which the application is based. That statement must be sufficiently clear and precise to enable the defendant to prepare its defence and the Court to exercise its power of review. In order to guarantee legal certainty and the sound administration of justice, it is necessary that the basic legal and factual particulars relied on be indicated, at least in summary form, coherently and intelligibly in the application itself.

   In that context, an application seeking compensation for damage caused by a Community institution must state the evidence from which the conduct alleged against the institution can be identified, the reasons for which the applicant considers there to be a causal link between that conduct and the damage it claims to have suffered, and the nature and extent of that damage.

4. Under Article 44(1)(c) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance an applicant is required to state in the application the subject-matter of the proceedings and the form of order sought. Although Article 48(2) of those rules authorises, in certain circumstances, new pleas in law to be introduced in the course of proceedings, the provision cannot in any circumstances be interpreted as authorising the applicant to bring new claims before the Community Courts and thereby to modify the subject-matter of the proceedings.

(see para. 110)

5. In an action for annulment founded on Article 230 EC, the jurisdiction of the Community judicature is confined to reviewing the legality of the contested measure and the Court cannot, in the exercise of its jurisdiction, issue directions to the Community institutions. If the contested measure is annulled, it is for the institution concerned to adopt, in accordance with Article 233 EC, the necessary measures to comply with the judgment annulling that measure.

Action brought on 23 March 2007 - VIP Car Solutions v Parliament

Language of the case: French

Parties

Applicant: VIP Car Solutions (Hoenheim, France) (represented by G. Welzer, lawyer)

Defendant: European Parliament

Form of order sought

The Court is asked to:

annul the decision of the European Parliament not to award the contract PE/2006/06/UTD/1 - transport for Members of the European Parliament during sessions in Strasbourg, notified on 24 January 2007;

annul all subsequent acts;

order the Parliament to pay the sum of EUR 500 000 as damages;

order the Parliament to pay the costs of the legal proceedings;

order the Parliament to pay one-off costs amounting to EUR 5 000

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicant challenges the decision of the European Parliament rejecting its tender in tender procedure PE/2006/06/UTD/1 - transport for Members of the European Parliament during sessions in Strasbourg. [1]

In support of its action, the applicant relies, first, on an infringement of the award criteria contained in the call for tenders, particularly, concerning price inasmuch as it claims to have offered the lowest price and that that criteria should have accounted for 55% in the award of the contract.

Moreover, the applicant asserts that the contested decision breached Article 100 of the Financial Regulation, [2] under which certain details need not be disclosed where disclosure would harm the legitimate business interests of private undertakings or could distort fair competition between those undertakings. According to the applicant, the information which it requested, namely the price offered by the successful tenderer, does not fall within the scope of the Article and, consequently, the refusal to disclose it to the applicant is improper.

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby rules:

Read in the light of the principle of equal treatment of economic operators and the ensuing obligation of transparency, Article 36(2) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997, precludes the contracting authority in a tendering procedure from stipulating at a later date the weighting factors and sub-criteria to be applied to the award criteria referred to in the contract documents or contract notice.

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns, in essence, the interpretation of Articles 23(1), 32 and 36 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1) (Directive 92/50').

2. The reference has been made in the context of two sets of proceedings brought by (1) the consortium of consultancy firms and experts comprising Emm. G. Lianakis AE (universal successor in title to Emm. Lianakis EPE), Sima Anonymi Techniki Etairia Meleton kai Epivlepseon and Nikolaos Vlachopoulos (the Lianakis consortium') and (2) the consortium of Planitiki AE, Aikaterini Georgoula and Dimitrios Vasios (the Planitiki consortium'), against Dimos Alexandroupolis (Municipality of Alexandroupolis) and the consortium of N. Loukatos kai Synergates AE Meleton, Eratosthenis Meletitiki AE, A. Pantazis - Pan. Kyriopoulos kai syn/tes (Filon OE) - Nikolaos Sideris (the Loukatos consortium'), concerning the award of a contract to carry out a project in respect of the cadastre, town plan and implementing measure for part of the Municipality of Alexandroupolis.

3. Directive 92/50 coordinates the procedures for the award of public service contracts.

4. To that end, the Directive determines which contracts must be subject to an award procedure and the procedural rules to be followed, including, in particular, the principle of equal treatment of economic operators, the criteria for the qualitative selection for operators (qualitative selection criteria') and the criteria for the award of contracts (award criteria').

5. Thus, Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50 provides that [c]ontracting authorities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between different service providers'.

6. Article 23(1) of the Directive provides that [c]ontracts shall be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Chapter 3 [namely Articles 36 and 37], taking into account Article 24, after the suitability of the service providers not excluded under Article 29 has been checked by the contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria referred to in Articles 31 and 32'.

7. According to Article 32 of the Directive:

1. The ability of service providers to perform services may be evaluated in particular with regard to their skills, efficiency, experience and reliability.

2. Evidence of the service provider's technical capability may be furnished by one or more of the following means according to the nature, quantity and purpose of the services to be provided:

(a) the service provider's educational and professional qualifications and/or those of the firm's managerial staff and, in particular, those of the person or persons responsible for providing the services;

(b) a list of the principal services provided in the past three years, with the sums, dates and recipients, public or private, of the services provided:

...

(c) an indication of the technicians or technical bodies involved, whether or not belonging directly to the service provider, especially those responsible for quality control;

(d) a statement of the service provider's average annual manpower and the number of managerial staff for the last three years;

(e) a statement of the tool, plant or technical equipment available to the service provider for carrying out the services;

(f) a description of the service provider's measures for ensuring quality and his study and research facilities;

8. Article 36 of Directive 92/50 provides:

1. Without prejudice to national laws, regulations or administrative provisions on the remuneration of certain services, the criteria on which the contracting authority shall base the award of contracts may be:

(a) where the award is made to the economically most advantageous tender, various criteria relating to the contract: for example, quality, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical assistance and after-sales service, delivery date, delivery period or period of completion, price; or

(b) the lowest price only.

2. Where the contract is to be awarded to the economically most advantageous tender, the contracting authority shall state in the contract documents or in the contract notice the award criteria which it intends to apply, where possible in descending order of importance.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

9. In 2004, the Municipal Council of Alexandroupolis issued a call for tenders for a contract to carry out a project in respect of the cadastre, town plan and implementing measure for the Palagia area, a part of Alexandroupolis with fewer than 2 000 inhabitants. The budget for the project was EUR 461 737.

10. The contract notice referred to the award criteria in order of priority: (1) the proven experience of the expert on projects carried out over the last three years; (2) the firm's manpower and equipment; and (3) the ability to complete the project by the anticipated deadline, together with the firm's commitments and its professional potential.

11. Thirteen consultancies responded to the call for tenders, including in particular the Lianakis and Planitiki consortia, and the Loukatos consortium.

12. During the evaluation procedure, in order to evaluate the tenderers' bids, the project award committee of the Municipality of Alexandroupolis (the Project Award Committee') defined the weighting factors and sub-criteria in respect of the award criteria referred to in the contract notice.

13. Accordingly, it set weightings of 60%, 20% and 20% for each of the three award criteria referred to in the contract notice.

14. In addition, it stipulated that experience (first award criterion) should be evaluated by reference to the value of completed projects. Thus, for experience on projects worth up to EUR 500 000, a tenderer would be awarded 0 points; between EUR 500 000 and EUR 1 000 000, 6 points; between EUR 1 000 000 and EUR 1 500 000, 12 points; and so on up to a maximum score of 60 points for experience on projects worth over EUR 12 000 000.

15. A firm's manpower and equipment (second award criterion) were to be assessed by reference to the size of the project team. A tenderer would therefore be awarded 2 points for a team of 1 to 5 persons, 4 points for a team of 6 to 10 persons, and so on up to a maximum score of 20 points for a team of more than 45 persons.

16. Finally, the Project Award Committee decided that the ability to complete the project by the anticipated deadline (third award criterion) should be assessed by reference to the value of the firm's commitments. Accordingly, a tenderer would be awarded the maximum score of 20 points for work worth less than EUR 15 000; 18 points for work worth between EUR 15 000 and EUR 60 000; 16 points for work worth between EUR 60 000 and EUR 100 000; and so on down to a minimum score of 0 points for work worth more than EUR 1 500 000.

17. In application of those rules, the Project Award Committee allocated first place to the Loukatos consortium (78 points), second place to the Planitiki consortium (72 points) and third place to the Lianakis consortium (70 points). Consequently, in its report of 27 April 2005, it proposed that the project be awarded to the Loukatos consortium.

18. By decision of 10 May 2005, the Municipal Council of Alexandroupolis approved the Project Award Committee's report and awarded the project to the Loukatos consortium.

19. The Lianakis and Planitiki consortia took the view that the Loukatos consortium could only have been awarded the project as a result of the Project Award Committee's subsequent stipulation of the weighting factors and sub-criteria in respect of the award criteria referred to in the contract notice, and challenged the decision taken by the Municipal Council of Alexandroupolis, initially before the Council itself and subsequently before the Simvoulio tis Epikratias (Greek Council of State; Simvoulio tis Epikratias') on the basis, in particular, of allegations of infringement of Article 36(2) of Directive 92/50.

20. In those circumstances, the Simvoulio tis Epikratias decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

If the contract notice for the award of a contract for services makes provision only for the order of priority of the award criteria, without stipulating the weighting factors for each criterion, does Article 36 of Directive 92/50 allow criteria to be weighted by the evaluation committee at a later date and, if so, under what conditions?'

The question referred for a preliminary ruling

21. By its question, the referring court asks in essence whether, in a tendering procedure, Article 36(2) of Directive 92/50 precludes the contracting authority from stipulating at a later date the weighting factors and sub-criteria to be applied to the award criteria referred to in the contract documents or contract notice.

22. The Commission submitted in its written observations that, before replying to the question referred, it is necessary to consider whether, in a tendering procedure, Directive 92/50 precludes the contracting authority from taking into account as award criteria' rather than as qualitative selection criteria' the tenderers' experience, manpower and equipment, or their ability to perform the contract by the anticipated deadline.

23. In that regard, even if - formally - the national court has limited its question to the interpretation of Article 36(2) of Directive 92/50 in relation to a possible later change to the award criteria, that does not prevent the Court from providing the national court with all the elements of interpretation of Community law which may enable it to rule on the case before it, whether or not reference is made thereto in the question referred (see Case C392/05 Alevizos [2007] ECR I0000, paragraph 64 and the case-law cited).

24. Accordingly, it is necessary, first of all, to establish the lawfulness of the criteria chosen as award criteria', before considering whether it is possible for the weighting factors and sub-criteria in respect of the award criteria referred to in the contract documents or contract notice to be set at a later date.

Criteria chosen as award criteria' (Articles 23 and 36(1) of Directive 92/50)

25. It must be borne in mind that Article 23(1) of Directive 92/50 provides that a contract is to be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Articles 36 and 37 of the Directive, taking into account Article 24, after the suitability of the service providers not excluded under Article 29 has been checked by the contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria referred to in Articles 31 and 32.

26. The case-law shows that, while Directive 92/50 does not in theory preclude the examination of the tenderers' suitability and the award of the contract from taking place simultaneously, the two procedures are nevertheless distinct and are governed by different rules (see, to that effect, in relation to works contracts, Case 31/87 Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635, paragraphs 15 and 16).

27. The suitability of tenderers is to be checked by the authorities awarding contracts in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing and of technical capability (the qualitative selection criteria') referred to in Articles 31 and 32 of Directive 92/50 (see, as regards works contracts, Beentjes , paragraph 17).

28. By contrast, the award of contracts is based on the criteria set out in Article 36(1) of Directive 92/50, namely, the lowest price or the economically most advantageous tender (see, to that effect, in relation to works contracts, Beentjes , paragraph 18).

29. However, although in the latter case Article 36(1) of Directive 92/50 does not set out an exhaustive list of the criteria which may be chosen by the contracting authorities, and therefore leaves it open to the authorities awarding contracts to select the criteria on which they propose to base their award of the contract, their choice is nevertheless limited to criteria aimed at identifying the tender which is economically the most advantageous (see, to that effect, in relation to public works contracts, Beentjes , paragraph 19; Case C19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I7725, paragraphs 35 and 36; and, in relation to public service contracts, Case C513/99 Concordia Bus Finland [2002] ECR I7213, paragraphs 54 and 59, and Case C315/01 GAT [2003] ECR I6351, paragraphs 63 and 64).

30. Therefore, award criteria' do not include criteria that are not aimed at identifying the tender which is economically the most advantageous, but are instead essentially linked to the evaluation of the tenderers' ability to perform the contract in question.

31. In the case in the main proceedings, however, the criteria selected as award criteria' by the contracting authority relate principally to the experience, qualifications and means of ensuring proper performance of the contract in question. Those are criteria which concern the tenderers' suitability to perform the contract and which therefore do not have the status of award criteria' pursuant to Article 36(1) of Directive 92/50.

32. Consequently, it must be held that, in a tendering procedure, a contracting authority is precluded by Articles 23(1), 32 and 36(1) of Directive 92/50 from taking into account as award criteria' rather than as qualitative selection criteria' the tenderers' experience, manpower and equipment, or their ability to perform the contract by the anticipated deadline.

Subsequent stipulation of weighting factors and sub-criteria in respect of the award criteria referred to in the contract documents or contract notice

33. It must be borne in mind that Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50 requires contracting authorities to ensure that there is no discrimination between different service providers.

34. The principle of equal treatment thus laid down also entails an obligation of transparency (see, to that effect, in relation to public supply contracts, Case C275/98 Unitron Scandinavia and 3-S [1999] ECR 8291, paragraph 31, and, in relation to public works contracts, SIAC Construction , paragraph 41).

35. Furthermore, it follows from Article 36(2) of Directive 92/50 that where the contract has to be awarded to the economically most advantageous tender, the contracting authority must state in the contract documents or in the contract notice the award criteria which it intends to apply, where possible in descending order of importance.

36. According to the case-law, Article 36(2), read in the light of the principle of equal treatment of economic operators set out in Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50 and of the ensuing obligation of transparency, requires that potential tenderers should be aware of all the elements to be taken into account by the contracting authority in identifying the economically most advantageous offer, and their relative importance, when they prepare their tenders (see, to that effect, in relation to public contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications industries, Case C87/94 Commission v Belgium [1996] ECR I2043, paragraph 88; in relation to public works contracts, Case C470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I11617, paragraph 98; and, in relation to public service contracts, Case C331/04 ATI EAC and Others [2005] ECR I10109, paragraph 24).

37. Potential tenderers must be in a position to ascertain the existence and scope of those elements when preparing their tenders (see, to that effect, in relation to public service contracts, Concordia Bus Finland , paragraph 62, and ATI EAC and Others , paragraph 23).

38. Therefore, a contracting authority cannot apply weighting rules or sub-criteria in respect of the award criteria which it has not previously brought to the tenderers' attention (see, by analogy, in relation to public works contracts, Universale-Bau and Others , paragraph 99).

39. That interpretation is supported by the purpose of Directive 92/50 which aims to eliminate barriers to the freedom to provide services and therefore to protect the interests of economic operators established in a Member State who wish to offer services to contracting authorities established in another Member State (see, in particular, Case C380/98 University of Cambridge [2000] ECR I8035, paragraph 16).

40. To that end, tenderers must be placed on an equal footing throughout the procedure, which means that the criteria and conditions governing each contract must be adequately publicised by the contracting authorities (see, to that effect, in relation to public works contracts, Beentjes , paragraph 21, and SIAC Construction , paragraphs 32 and 34; also, in relation to public service contracts, ATI EAC and Others , paragraph 22).

41. Contrary to the doubts expressed by the referring court, those findings do not conflict with the interpretation by the Court of Justice of Article 36(2) of Directive 92/50 in ATI EAC and Others.

42. In the case that gave rise to that judgment, the award criteria and their weighting factors, together with the sub-criteria of those award criteria had in fact been established beforehand and published in the contract documents. The contracting authority concerned had merely stipulated subsequently, shortly before the opening of the envelopes, the weighting factors to be applied to the sub-criteria.

43. In that judgment, the Court held that Article 36(2) of Directive 92/50 does not preclude proceeding in that way, provided that three very specific conditions apply, namely that the decision to do so:

- does not alter the criteria for the award of the contract set out in the contract documents;

- does not contain elements which, if they had been known at the time the tenders were prepared, could have affected that preparation; and

- was not adopted on the basis of matters likely to give rise to discrimination against one of the tenderers (see, to that effect, ATI EAC and Others , paragraph 32).

44. It must be noted that in the case in the main proceedings, by contrast, the Project Award Committee referred only to the award criteria themselves in the contract notice, and later, after the submission of tenders and the opening of applications expressing interest, stipulated both the weighting factors and the sub-criteria to be applied to those award criteria. Clearly that does not comply with the requirement laid down in Article 36(2) of Directive 92/50 to publicise such criteria, read in the light of the principle of equal treatment of economic operators and the obligation of transparency.

45. Having regard to the foregoing, the answer to the question referred must therefore be that, read in the light of the principle of equal treatment of economic operators and the ensuing obligation of transparency, Article 36(2) of Directive 92/50 precludes the contracting authority in a tendering procedure from stipulating at a later date the weighting factors and sub-criteria to be applied to the award criteria referred to in the contract documents or contract notice.

Costs

46. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

Case C-532/06

Emm. G. Lianakis AE and Others

v

Dimos Alexandroupolis and Others

(Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Simvoulio tis Epikratias)

(Directive 92/50/EEC – Public service contracts – Carrying out of a project in respect of the cadastre, town plan and implementing measure for a residential area – Criteria which may be accepted as 'criteria for qualitative selection' or 'award criteria' – Economically most advantageous tender – Compliance with the award criteria set out in the contract documents or contract notice – Subsequent determination of weighting factors and sub-criteria in respect of the award criteria referred to in the contract documents or contract notice – Principle of equal treatment of economic operators and obligation of transparency)

1. Approximation of laws – Procedures for the award of public service contracts – Directive 92/50 – Award of contracts

(Council Directive 92/50, Arts 23(1), 32 and 36(1))

2. Approximation of laws – Procedures for the award of public service contracts – Directive 92/50 – Award of contracts

(Council Directive 92/50, Art. 36(2))

1. In a tendering procedure, a contracting authority is precluded by Articles 23(1), 32 and 36 (1) of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by Directive 97/52, from taking into account as 'award criteria' rather than as 'qualitative selection criteria' the tenderers' experience, manpower and equipment and their ability to perform the contract by the anticipated deadline.

   While that directive does not in theory preclude the examination of the tenderers' suitability and the award of the contract from taking place simultaneously, the two procedures are nevertheless distinct and are governed by different rules. The suitability of tenderers is to be checked in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing and of technical capability referred to in Articles 31 and 32 of the directive, whereas the award of contracts is to be based on the criteria set out in Article 36(1), namely, the lowest price or the economically most advantageous tender.

2. Read in the light of the principle of equal treatment of economic operators and the ensuing obligation of transparency, Article 36(2) of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by Directive 97/52, precludes the contracting authority in a tendering procedure from stipulating at a later date the weighting factors and sub-criteria to be applied to the award criteria referred to in the contract documents or contract notice. Article 36(2) requires that potential tenderers should be aware of all the elements to be taken into account by the contracting authority in identifying the economically most advantageous offer, and their relative importance, when they prepare their tenders. Therefore, a contracting authority cannot apply weighting rules or sub-criteria in respect of the award criteria which it has not previously brought to the tenderers' attention.

If the tender notice for the award of a contract for services makes provision only for the order of priority of the award criteria, without stipulating the weighting factors for each criterion, does Article 36 of Directive 92/50/EEC [1] relating to the coordination of the procedures for the award of public service contracts allow criteria to be weighted by the evaluation committee at a later date and, if so, under what conditions?

Consorzio Elisoccorso San Raffaele v Elilombarda Srl and Azienda Ospedaliera Ospedale Niguarda Ca' Granda di Milano. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Consiglio di Stato - Italy. Case C-492/06.

In Case C-492/06,

REFERENCE for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC from the Consiglio di Stato (Italy), made by decision of 21 February 2006, received at the Court on 28 November 2006, in the proceedings

Consorzio Elisoccorso San Raffaele

v

Elilombarda Srl,

Azienda Ospedaliera Ospedale Niguarda Ca' Granda di Milano,

THE COURT (Sixth Chamber), composed of P. Kris, President of the Chamber, L. Bay Larsen (Rapporteur) and J.-C. Bonichot, Judges,

Advocate General: Y. Bot,

Registrar: R. Grass,

the Court, proposing to give its decision by reasoned order in accordance with the first subparagraph of Article 104(3) of its Rules of Procedure,

after hearing the Advocate General,

makes the following

Order

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), (Directive 89/665').

2. The reference has been made in the course of proceedings between Consorzio Elisoccorso San Raffaele (the Consorzio') and Elilombarda Srl (Elilombarda'), the leader of a consortium in the process of being formed, regarding a procedure for the award of a public contract.

Legal context

Community legislation

3. Article 1 of Directive 89/665 provides:

1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC..., decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

4. Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665 provides:

The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

5. In the words of Article 26(1) of Directive 92/50:

Tenders may be submitted by groups of service providers. These groups may not be required to assume a specific legal form in order to submit the tender; however, the group selected may be required to do so when it has been awarded the contract.'

National legislation

6. The national legislation relating to the award of public supply, public works and public services contracts (see, respectively, Law No 109 of 11 February 1994 (GURI No 41, 19 February 1994), Legislative Decree No 358 of 24 July 1992 (GURI No 188, 11 August 1992) and Legislative Decree No 157 of 17 March 1995 (GURI No 104, 6 May 1995)) does not preclude or limit the right of the individual companies forming part of a consortium' or a group of undertakings' to bring an action individually.

7. According to the settled case-law of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), undertakings which are members of a consortium or of a group of undertakings have the right to challenge individually the measures relating to the public contract for which they have tendered.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

8. On 30 November 2004, the Azienda Ospedaliera Ospedale Niguarda Ca' Granda di Milano published, as contracting authority, a contract notice in respect, inter alia, of a helicopter rescue service by reference to a ceiling of EUR 25 900 000.

9. Two bids were submitted. The first was submitted by Elilombarda acting as leader of a consortium which was in the process of being formed between itself and Helitalia SpA and the second was submitted by the Consorzio, consisting of Elilario Italia SpA and Air Viaggi San Raffaele Srl.

10. On 28 April 2005, the contracting authority awarded the contract to the Consorzio to which the decision was notified by registered letter of 10 May 2005.

11. Elilombarda brought an action against that decision, among others, on its own behalf and acting individually, before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Lombardia (Lombardy Regional Administrative Court, the TAR Lombardia').

12. In the context of those proceedings, the Consorzio raised a plea of inadmissibility submitting that the action had been brought not by the consortium in the process of being formed which, according to the Consorzio, alone had standing to bring an action before the court in order to defend its interest in being the successful tenderer for that contract, but an individual economic operator which formed part of that consortium.

13. The TAR Lombardia rejected the plea of inadmissibility, citing the case-law of the Consiglio di Stato, and upheld the action, annulling the measures adopted by the contracting authority.

14. The Consorzio lodged an appeal before the Consiglio di Stato which, as a preliminary point, had to examine the decision of the TAR Lombardia relating to the admissibility of the action brought by Elilombarda.

15. In its order for reference, the Consiglio di Stato states, first, that the national legislation relating to the award of public contracts does not preclude or limit the right of the individual undertakings which form part of a consortium to bring an action independently and, secondly, that the TAR Lombardia did apply the principles set out in that regard in the case-law of the Consiglio di Stato.

16. However, the Consiglio di Stato raises the issue of whether, given the Court's judgment in Case C-129/04 Espace Trianon and Sofibail [2005] ECR I-7805, Article 1 of Directive 89/665 precludes an action brought by an individual member of a tendering consortium against a decision awarding a contract.

17. Against that background, the Consiglio di Stato decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

Where a consortium without legal personality has participated as such in a procedure for the award of a public contract and has not been awarded that contract, is Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665 ... to be interpreted as precluding the possibility under national law for an individual member of that consortium to bring an action against the decision awarding the contract?'

18. Under the first subparagraph of Article 104(3) of the Rules of Procedure, where the answer to a question referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling may be clearly deduced from existing case-law, the Court may, after hearing the Advocate General, give its decision by reasoned order.

19. By its question, the national court asks whether Article 1 of Directive 89/665 is to be interpreted as precluding the possibility under national law for an individual member of a consortium without legal personality which has participated as such in a procedure for the award of a public contract and has not been awarded that contract to bring an action against the decision awarding that contract.

20. In that regard, it must be borne in mind that, under Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, Member States are required to ensure that the review procedures provided for by the Directive are available at least' to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement of the Community law concerning public contracts or of the national rules transposing that law.

21. It follows that Directive 89/665 lays down only the minimum conditions to be satisfied by the review procedures established in domestic law to ensure compliance with the requirements of Community law concerning public contracts (see Case C-315/01 GAT [2003] ECR I-6351, paragraph 45 and the case-law cited).

22. In its judgment in Espace Trianon and Sofibail , the Court interpreted Article 1 of Directive 89/665 with regard to a situation in which the national legal order required that an action for annulment of a decision awarding a public contract be brought by all the members forming a tendering consortium.

23. By reference to a situation such as that covered by the questions which had been referred to it for a preliminary ruling, the Court pointed out, in paragraphs 19 to 21 of that judgment, that:

- a consortium may be considered to be a person having an interest in obtaining a public contract within the meaning of Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, as it has demonstrated its interest in obtaining the public contract at issue by tendering for it and that

- nothing in the case in the main proceedings prevented the members of the consortium from together bringing, in their capacity as associates or in their own names, an action for annulment of the disputed decisions.

24. The Court thus arrived at the conclusion, in paragraph 22 of that judgment, that the national procedural rule in question did not limit the availability of an action in a way contrary to Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665.

25. Consequently, the Court held that Article 1 of Directive 89/665 is to be interpreted as not precluding the national law of a Member State from providing that only the members of a consortium without legal personality which has participated, as such, in a procedure for the award of a public contract and has not been awarded that contract, acting together, may bring an action against the decision awarding the contract.

26. By so doing, the Court, as correctly observed by Elilombarda and the Commission of the European Communities in their written observations, only established a minimum threshold for the availability of review procedures concerning calls for tender which is guaranteed by Directive 89/665.

27. It in no way precluded other Member States from making those review procedures more widely available under their national laws by enshrining a concept of standing to bring proceedings which is wider than the minimum guaranteed by the directive.

28. In the absence of a specific provision in that regard, it is for the national legal order of each Member State to establish in particular whether and under which conditions standing to bring review proceedings may be extended to companies which are part of a consortium which has tendered as such.

29. In that regard, it must be stated that since there are detailed procedural rules governing the remedies intended to protect rights conferred by Community law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities, they must not compromise the effectiveness of Directive 89/665 (see Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraph 72), the objective of which is to ensure that decisions taken unlawfully by contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible.

30. However, contrary to the submission of the Cypriot Government, an interpretation of Article 1 of Directive 89/665 which permits the capacity to bring an action to be extended to each of the members of a consortium which has tendered in a procedure for the award of a public contract does not undermine that objective, but, on the contrary, seems capable of aiding its attainment.

31. Therefore, the answer to the question referred must be that Article 1 of Directive 89/665 is to be interpreted as not precluding the possibility, under national law, for an individual member of a consortium without legal personality which has participated as such in a procedure for the award of a public contract and has not been awarded that contract to bring an action against the decision awarding that contract.

Costs

32. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Sixth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 is to be interpreted as not precluding the possibility, under national law, for an individual member of a consortium without legal personality which has participated as such in a procedure for the award of a public contract and has not been awarded that contract to bring an action against the decision awarding that contract.

composed of K. Lenaerts, President of the Chamber, T. von Danwitz, R. Silva de Lapuerta, E. Juhász (Rapporteur) and G. Arestis, Judges, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 20 November 2008,

Advocate General: J. Mazák,

Registrar: R. Grass,

gives the following

Judgment

1 By its application, the Commission of the European Communities asks the Court to declare that, by rejecting tenders in respect of medical devices bearing the CE certification marking, without, in any event, the competent contracting authorities of Greek hospitals having complied with the procedure provided for in Council Directive 93/42/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning medical devices (OJ 1993 L 169, p. 1), as amended by Regulation (EC) No 1882/2003 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 September 2003 (OJ 2003 L 284, p. 1) ('Directive 93/42'), the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8(2) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), as amended by Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001 (OJ 2001 L 285, p. 1) ('Directive 93/36'), and Articles 17 and 18 of Directive 93/42.

Legal context

2 Article 8(1) to (4) of Directive 93/36 provides:

‘1. The technical specifications defined in Annex III shall be given in the general or contractual documents relating to each contract.

2. Without prejudice to the legally binding national technical rules, in so far as these are compatible with Community law, the technical specifications mentioned in paragraph 1 shall be defined by the contracting authorities by reference to national standards implementing European standards, or by reference to European technical approvals or by reference to common technical specifications.

3. A contracting authority may depart from paragraph 2 if:

(a) the standards, European technical approvals or common technical specifications do not include any provision for establishing conformity or technical means do not exist for establishing satisfactorily the conformity of a product to these standards, European technical approvals or common technical specifications;

(b) the application of paragraph 2 would prejudice the application of Council Directive 86/361/EEC of 24 July 1986 on the initial stage of the mutual recognition of type approval for telecommunications terminal equipment [(OJ 1986 L 217, p. 21)] or Council Decision 87/95/EEC of 22 December 1986 on standardisation in the field of information technology and telecommunications [(OJ 1987 L 36, p. 31)] or other Community instruments in specific service or product areas;

(c) use of these standards, European technical approvals or common technical specifications would oblige the contracting authority to acquire supplies incompatible with equipment already in use or would entail disproportionate costs or disproportionate technical difficulties, but only as part of a clearly defined and recorded strategy with a view to change-over, within a given period, to European standards, European technical approvals or common technical specifications;

(d) the project concerned is of a genuinely innovative nature for which use of existing European standards, European technical approvals or common technical specifications would not be appropriate.

4. Contracting authorities invoking paragraph 3 shall record, wherever possible, the reasons for doing so in the tender notice published in the Official Journal of the European Communities or in the contract documents and in all cases shall record these reasons in their internal documentation and shall supply such information on request to Member States and to the Commission.’

3 Annex III to Directive 93/36, entitled ‘Definition of certain technical specifications’, provides:

1. Technical specifications: the totality of the technical prescriptions contained in particular in the tender documents, defining the characteristics required of a material, product or supply, which permits a material, a product or a supply to be described in a manner such that it fulfils the use for which it is intended by the contracting authority. These technical prescriptions shall include levels of quality, performance, safety or dimensions, including the requirements applicable to the material, the product or the supply as regards quality assurance, terminology, symbols, testing and test methods, packaging, marking or labelling.

2. Standard: a technical specification approved by a recognised standardising body for repeated and continuous application, compliance with which is in principle not compulsory.

3. European standard: a standard approved by the European Committee for standardisation (CEN) or by the European Committee for Electrotechnical Standardisation (Cenelec) as “European standard (EN)” or “Harmonisation documents (HD)” according to the common rules of these organisations.

4. European technical approval: a favourable technical assessment of the fitness for use of a product, based on fulfilment of the essential requirements for building works, by means of the inherent characteristics of the product and the defined conditions of application and use. The European agreement shall be issued by an approval body designated for this purpose by the Member State.

5. Common technical specification: a technical specification laid down in accordance with a procedure recognised by the Member States to ensure uniform application in all Member States which has been published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.'

4 The third, fifth, eighth, thirteenth, seventeenth and twenty-first recitals in the preamble to Directive 93/42 state:

'Whereas the national provisions for the safety and health protection of patients, users and, where appropriate, other persons, with regard to the use of medical devices should be harmonised in order to guarantee the free movement of such devices within the internal market;

Whereas medical devices should provide patients, users and third parties with a high level of protection and attain the performance levels attributed to them by the manufacturer; whereas, therefore, the maintenance or improvement of the level of protection attained in the Member States is one of the essential objectives of this Directive;

...

Whereas, in accordance with the principles set out in the Council resolution of 7 May 1985 concerning a new approach to technical harmonisation and standardisation [(OJ 1985 C 136, p. 1)], rules regarding the design and manufacture of medical devices must be confined to the provisions required to meet the essential requirements; whereas, because they are essential, such requirements should replace the corresponding national provisions; whereas the essential requirements should be applied with discretion to take account of the technological level existing at the time of design and of technical and economic considerations compatible with a high level of protection of health and safety;

...

Whereas, for the purpose of this Directive, a harmonised standard is a technical specification (European standard or harmonisation document) adopted, on a mandate from the Commission, by either [the CEN or Cenelec] or both of these bodies in accordance with Council Directive 83/189/EEC of 28 March 1983 laying down a procedure for the provision of information in the field of technical standards and regulations [(OJ 1983 L 109, p. 8)], and pursuant to the ... general guidelines [on cooperation between the Commission and these two bodies signed on 13 November 1984]; ... whereas, for specific fields, what already exists in the form of European Pharmacopoeia monographs should be incorporated within the framework of this Directive; whereas, therefore, several European Pharmacopoeia monographs may be considered equal to the abovementioned harmonised standards;

...

Whereas medical devices should, as a general rule, bear the CE mark to indicate their conformity with the provisions of this Directive to enable them to move freely within the Community and to be put into service in accordance with their intended purpose;

...

Whereas the protection of health and the associated controls may be made more effective by means of medical device vigilance systems which are integrated at Community level.'

5 According to Article 1(1) thereof, Directive 93/42 is to apply to medical devices and their accessories. For the purposes of that directive, accessories are to be treated as medical devices in their own right.

6 In accordance with Article 2 of Directive 93/42, Member States are required to take all necessary steps to ensure that medical devices may be placed on the market and/or put into service only if they comply with the requirements laid down in that directive when duly supplied and properly installed, maintained and used in accordance with their intended purpose.

7 Under Article 3 of that directive, the medical devices must meet the essential requirements set out in Annex I to the directive which apply to them, taking account of their intended purpose.

8 Article 4(1) of Directive 93/42 prohibits Member States from creating any obstacle to the placing on the market or the putting into service within their territory of medical devices bearing the CE marking provided for in Article 17 of that directive, which indicate that they have been the subject of an assessment of their conformity in accordance with the provisions of Article 11 thereof.

9 Pursuant to Article 5(1) of Directive 93/42, Member States are to presume compliance with the essential requirements referred to in Article 3 of that directive in respect of medical devices which are in conformity with the relevant national standards adopted pursuant to the harmonised standards the references of which have been published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

10 Article 5(2) thereof states that, for the purposes of Directive 93/42, reference to harmonised standards also includes the monographs of the European Pharmacopoeia notably on surgical sutures, the references of which have been published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

11 Article 5(3) of Directive 93/42 refers to Article 6(2) thereof with regard to the measures to be taken by the Member States if a Member State or the Commission considers that the harmonised standards do not entirely meet the essential requirements referred to in Article 3 of that directive.

12 Article 8 of that directive, entitled 'Safeguard clause', is worded as follows:

'1. Where a Member State ascertains that the devices referred to in Article 4(1) and (2)[,] second indent, when correctly installed, maintained and used for their intended purpose, may compromise the health and/or safety of patients, users or, where applicable, other persons, it shall take all appropriate interim measures to withdraw such devices from the market or prohibit or restrict their being placed on the market or put into service. The Member State shall immediately inform the Commission of any such measures, indicating the reasons for its decision and, in particular, whether non-compliance with this Directive is due to:

(a) failure to meet the essential requirements referred to in Article 3;

(b) incorrect application of the standards referred to in Article 5, in so far as it is claimed that the standards have been applied;

(c) shortcomings in the standards themselves.

2. The Commission shall enter into consultation with the parties concerned as soon as possible. Where, after such consultation, the Commission finds that:

– the measures are justified, it shall immediately so inform the Member State which took the initiative and the other Member States; where the decision referred to in paragraph 1 is attributed to shortcomings in the standards, the Commission shall, after consulting the parties concerned, bring the matter before the Committee referred to in Article 6(1) within two months if the Member State which has taken the decision intends to maintain it and shall initiate the procedures referred to in Article 6,

– the measures are unjustified, it shall immediately so inform the Member State which took the initiative and the manufacturer or his authorised representative established within the Community.

3. Where a non-complying device bears the CE marking, the competent Member State shall take appropriate action against whomsoever has affixed the mark and shall inform the Commission and the other Member States thereof.

4. The Commission shall ensure that the Member States are kept informed of the progress and outcome of this procedure.'

13 Article 10 of Directive 93/42 provides:

'1. Member States shall take the necessary steps to ensure that any information brought to their knowledge, in accordance with the provisions of this Directive, regarding the incidents mentioned below involving a Class I, IIa, IIb or III device is recorded and evaluated centrally:

(a) any malfunction or deterioration in the characteristics and/or performance of a device, as well as any inadequacy in the labelling or the instructions for use which might lead to or might have led to the death of a patient or user or to a serious deterioration in his state of health;

(b) any technical or medical reason in relation to the characteristics or performance of a device for the reasons referred to in subparagraph (a), leading to systematic recall of devices of the same type by the manufacturer.

2. Where a Member State requires medical practitioners or the medical institutions to inform the competent authorities of any incidents referred to in paragraph 1, it shall take the necessary steps to ensure that the manufacturer of the device concerned, or his authorised representative established in the Community, is also informed of the incident.

3. After carrying out an assessment, if possible together with the manufacturer, Member States shall, without prejudice to Article 8, immediately inform the Commission and the other Member States of the incidents referred to in paragraph 1 for which relevant measures have been taken or are contemplated.'

14 Article 11 of Directive 93/42 regulates the procedure for assessing the compliance of medical devices with the requirements of that directive. For this purpose, as is stated in the 15th recital in the preamble to that directive, medical devices are grouped into four product classes and the checks to which they are subject are progressively stricter depending on the vulnerability of the human body and taking account of the potential risks associated with the technical design and manufacture of those devices.

15 Article 14b of that directive provides:

'Where a Member State considers, in relation to a given product or group of products, that, in order to ensure protection of health and safety and/or to ensure that public health requirements are observed pursuant to Article [30 EC], the availability of such products should be prohibited, restricted or subjected to particular requirements, it may take any necessary and justified transitional measures. It shall then inform the Commission and all the other Member States giving the reasons for its decision. The Commission shall, whenever possible, consult the interested parties and the Member States and, where the national measures are justified, adopt necessary Community measures in accordance with the procedure referred to in Article 7(2).'

16 Under Article 17(1) of Directive 93/42, medical devices, other than devices which are custom-made or intended for clinical investigations, which are considered to meet the essential requirements referred to in Article 3 thereof must bear the CE marking of conformity when they are placed on the market.

17 Article 18 of that directive states:

'Without prejudice to Article 8:

(a) where a Member State establishes that the CE marking has been affixed unduly, the manufacturer or his authorised representative established within the Community shall be obliged to end the infringement under conditions imposed by the Member State;

(b) where non-compliance continues, the Member State must take all appropriate measures to restrict or prohibit the placing on the market of the product in question or to ensure that it is withdrawn from the market, in accordance with the procedure in Article 8.

18 Annex I to that directive, entitled 'Essential requirements', states in Part I, entitled 'General requirements':

'1. The devices must be designed and manufactured in such a way that, when used under the conditions and for the purposes intended, they will not compromise the clinical condition or the safety of patients, or the safety and health of users or, where applicable, other persons, provided that any risks which may be associated with their use constitute acceptable risks when weighed against the benefits to the patient and are compatible with a high level of protection of health and safety.

2. The solutions adopted by the manufacturer for the design and construction of the devices must conform to safety principles, taking account of the generally acknowledged state of the art.

In selecting the most appropriate solutions, the manufacturer must apply the following principles in the following order:

– eliminate or reduce risks as far as possible (inherently safe design and construction),

– where appropriate[,] take adequate protection measures[,] including alarms if necessary, in relation to risks that cannot be eliminated, – inform users of the residual risks due to any shortcomings of the protection measures adopted.

3. The devices must achieve the performances intended by the manufacturer and be designed, manufactured and packaged in such a way that they are suitable for one or more of the functions referred to in Article 1(2)(a), as specified by the manufacturer.

19 Directive 93/36 was transposed into Greek law, principally, by way of Presidential Decree 370 of 14 June 1993 (FEK A' 199/1995). Article 16 of that presidential decree essentially reproduces Article 8 of Directive 93/36.

20 Joint Ministerial Decree DY7/oik.2480, making Greek legislation consistent with Directive 93/42…, of 19 August 1994 (FEK B' 679), transposed that directive into Greek law. In addition, the Ethnikos Organismos Farmakon (the national authority for medicines, 'the EOF') was designated under Article 19(3) of Law 2889/2001 as the competent authority in respect of medical devices.

The pre-litigation procedure

21 The Commission received a complaint according to which certain hospitals in Greece, which organised calls for tenders in order to obtain medical devices, had acted in breach of the obligations under Directive 93/36 in conjunction with Directive 93/42.

22 According to that complaint, certain Greek hospitals rejected tenders in respect of medical devices on grounds of public health, despite the certification of those products with the CE marking and, in any event, without the safeguard procedure provided for by Directive 93/42 being applied.

23 On 20 April 2004, in the context of the investigation of the complaint in question, the Hellenic Republic forwarded to the Commission the EOF's Circular 19384 of 2 April 2004 ('Circular 19384'), which recognised, first, that certain committees responsible for procurement in hospitals had rejected on grounds of non-conformity tenders submitted by companies in respect of numerous medical devices bearing the CE marking, without prior examination by the EOF and noted, second, that in certain cases the non-conformity concerned specifications arbitrarily fixed by the hospitals. That circular served as a reminder of the exclusive legal procedure which those committees were bound to follow and the details of that procedure.

24 By letter of 8 November 2004, the complainant furnished further information indicating that, in spite of distributing Circular 19384, the competent committees of certain hospitals, such as the general hospitals of Komotiní, Messolonghi, Agios Nikolaos of Crete and Heraklion, continued to be in breach of the rules.

25 In the light of that information, the Commission opened infringement proceedings against the Hellenic Republic under Article 226 EC by sending it, on 21 March 2005, a letter of formal notice. In its response of 24 May 2005, that Member State did not contest the fact that certain Greek hospitals were not acting in conformity with relevant Community provisions, but stressed the exceptional nature of the cases referred to by the Commission, which, according to that State, did not attest to the existence of a large-scale, horizontal infringement of Community law in that area.

26 On 19 December 2005, the Commission issued a reasoned opinion setting out the failure of the Hellenic Republic to fulfil its obligations under Article 8(2) of Directive 93/36 and Articles 17 and 18 of Directive 93/42 in relation to the award of public supply contracts for medical devices and calling on that Member State to comply with the opinion within two months of its receipt.

27 In its response of 9 February 2006 to that reasoned opinion, the Hellenic Republic claimed that it had taken the necessary measures to ensure the proper application of Community law and that the cases referred to in that reasoned opinion were exceptions to normal practice. As well as the adoption of Circular 19384, it also stated that systematic checks on the quality of hospital supplies were carried out by the EOF at the request of those hospitals. The Hellenic Republic stated that the national hospitals increasingly comply with the instructions of that body.

28 However, the Commission had knowledge of new information according to which the infringement at issue was still continuing. Moreover, it was apparent from the information received that the EOF was not competent to exercise any administrative control over the hospitals or to impose any penalty on them, and that so far no other body in the Greek legal order had exercised any powers in this area.

29 Taking the view that the Hellenic Republic had failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8(2) of Directive 93/36 in conjunction with Articles 17 and 18 of Directive 93/42, the Commission brought the present action.

30 The Commission submits that Directive 93/36 establishes a precise framework concerning any contracting authority's definition of technical requirements imposed on devices included in a tender. According to Article 8(2) of that directive, reference to national standards implementing European standards, to European technical approvals or to common technical specifications is obligatory both in the tender notice and in the assessment of conformity of the products which are the subject of the tender. The Commission underlines the fact that derogations from the principle enshrined in Article 8(2) are set out exhaustively in Article 8(3).

31 The Commission maintains that the calls for tenders issued by the Greek hospitals refer, in accordance with Article 8(2) of Directive 93/36, to the requirement of a European technical approval particular to medical devices, that is, the CE marking, which is also laid down in Directive 93/42. None the less, the contracting authorities proceeded to exclude tenders of certain medical devices bearing the CE marking, without such exclusion being covered by one of the categories of derogations provided for by Article 8(3) of Directive 93/36.

32 As regards Directive 93/42, the Commission states that it prescribes in detail the procedures for approving, certifying and placing medical devices on the market, but also for checking them, such as to leave no doubt as to the certified qualitative characteristics and no discretion on the part of the national authorities beyond the framework established by the provisions of the directive.

33 The Commission states that the essential requirements of conformity and safety which apply to medical devices are specified in Annex I to Directive 93/42 and that products bearing the CE marking satisfy all those requirements. Article 3 of that directive, in conjunction with Article 17 thereof, sets out the basis on which the mark of conformity of those devices is legitimate and they may, therefore, circulate freely in the internal market.

34 The Commission maintains that it is possible that certain medical devices, despite bearing the CE marking, are considered by doctors to endanger the health or safety of patients. In that case, the Commission points out that such devices may be rejected by the contracting authorities, but only in the context of the safeguard procedure provided for in Directive 93/42 and described in Circular 19384.

35 The Commission states that instead of applying that safeguard procedure, the contracting authorities proceeded directly to reject the tenders of medical devices bearing the CE marking. The Commission submits that, in one case concerning Heraklion general hospital, the EOF was informed, but its ruling, according to which the medical devices in question had to be accepted, was not complied with.

36 However, according to the Commission, it follows from settled case-law that the existence of a directive approximating the laws of the Member States, such as Directives 93/36 and 93/42, and stating that the compliance of products included in tenders with the technical prescriptions of that directive is necessarily certified by the CE marking, gives rise to the obligation on the part of the Member States to follow the special procedures of that directive where the validity of the certification is disputed.

37 The Commission maintains that, despite the adoption of Circular 19384 and the sending of a reminder on 19 January 2006, that is to say two years later, after the Commission's reasoned opinion, the unlawful conduct of the contracting authorities, as well as the Greek authorities' failure to review those authorities, persist. The Commission notes that the cases of which it is aware are characteristic examples of a practice which seems to be standard in Greek hospitals. The Hellenic Republic's argument based on the existence of national procedures to penalise any notified infringement of the rules on public contracts cannot in any way justify the infringement at issue.

38 The Hellenic Republic submits that hospitals, in their role as contracting authorities, do comply with the relevant provisions of Community law and national law in the area of supplies. It submits that the cases of certain hospitals not acting in accordance with the relevant Community provisions are purely and simply exceptions, from which it cannot be deduced that there is a large-scale horizontal infringement of Community law in the area at issue.

39 The Hellenic Republic maintains, moreover, that the EOF did issue Circular 19384, as well as a reminder on 19 January 2006, relating to the appropriate way of assessing medical devices for the purpose of their supply. Consequently, it took the measures necessary to ensure the proper application of Community law. That Member State explains, furthermore, that the reason why no penalties have yet been imposed on the hospitals which do not comply with the relevant Community provisions is that the body of inspectors of health and welfare services (Soma Epitheoriton Ipiresion Igias kai Pronias) is still undertaking an inquiry into that question.

40 It is settled case-law that, where the Commission relies on detailed complaints revealing repeated failures to comply with the provisions of a directive, it is incumbent on the Member State concerned to contest specifically the facts alleged in those complaints (see, to that effect, Case 272/86 Commission v Greece [1988] ECR 4875, paragraph 19, and Case C-494/01 Commission v Ireland [2005] ECR I-3331, paragraph 46).

41 However, in the present case, the Hellenic Republic has neither provided specific evidence to contradict the allegations made by the Commission nor challenged in substance and in detail the Commission's assertions. That Member State simply acknowledged in its defence and in Circular 19384 that certain hospitals had acted in breach of the relevant Community provisions.

42 Consequently, the facts alleged by the Commission must be regarded as proven.

43 According to the Court's case-law, contracting authorities which have issued an invitation to tender for the supply of medical devices bearing the CE marking cannot reject, on grounds of protection of public health, the tender in respect of such products, directly and without following the safeguard procedure provided for in Articles 8 and 18 of Directive 93/42. If a contracting authority considers that the tender in respect of medical devices bearing the CE marking may compromise public health, it is required to inform the competent authority with a view to setting that safeguard procedure in motion (Case C-6/05 Medipac-Kazantzidis [2007] ECR I-4557, paragraph 55).

44 It should be observed that the Hellenic Republic also does not dispute the failure of the contracting authorities of the Greek hospitals criticised by the Commission to comply with Article 8(2) of Directive 93/36 and Articles 17 and 18 of Directive 93/42, relating to the procedures for the award of public contracts concerning medical devices bearing the CE marking.

45 By contrast, the Hellenic Republic claims that the cases referred to by the Commission are exceptional and cannot, therefore, constitute an infringement.

46 According to the Court's established case-law, even if the applicable national legislation itself complies with Community law, a failure to fulfil obligations may arise due to the existence of an administrative practice which infringes that law (see, in particular, Case C-278/03 Commission v Italy [2005] ECR I-3747, paragraph 13 and Case C–441/02 Commission v Germany [2006] ECR I-3449, paragraph 47).

47 In the present case, as is apparent from the observations of the parties, this action for failure to fulfil obligations is not intended to call into question the compliance of the Hellenic Republic's transposition of Directives 93/36 and 93/42, but is confined to the question of the application of those provisions by the competent Greek authorities.

48 In order for a failure to fulfil obligations to be found on the basis of the administrative practice followed in a Member State, the Court has held that the failure to fulfil obligations can be established only by means of sufficiently documented and detailed proof of the alleged practice; that administrative practice must be, to some degree, of a consistent and general nature; and, in order to find that there has been a general and consistent practice, the Commission may not rely on any presumption (Case C-156/04 Commission v Greece [2007] ECR I-4129, paragraph 50 and the case-law cited).

49 It must be pointed out that, according to the information in the file before the Court, the products in question are products fulfilling the requirements of the European Pharmacopoeia technical standard and must, by their very nature, be purchased repeatedly and regularly by hospitals and, consequently, with an established degree of regularity.

50 None the less, at least 16 hospital contracting authorities rejected the medical devices in question, during tendering procedures, including the hospitals of Komotiní, Messolonghi, Agios Nikolaos of Crete, Venizeleio-Pananeio of Heraklion, Attica, Agios Savvas, Elpis, Argos, Korgialenio-Benakio, Geniko Nosokomio of Kalamata, Nauplie, P. & A. Kyriakou, Sparta, Panakardiko of Tripoli, Elena Venizelou and Asklipiio Voula.

51 The list of the hospitals mentioned by the Commission shows a variety in the size of the establishments, since some of the largest Greek hospitals such as Agios Savvas, Kyriakou and Asklipiio Voula are referred to, as well as medium-sized hospitals such as Argos, Agios Nikolaos of Crete or Sparta.

52 Moreover, that list refers to establishments with a geographical coverage encompassing the entire country with, in particular, hospitals in Athens, in the Peloponnese and on Crete, but concerns also a wide field of competence, including general hospitals, a children's hospital, a hospital treating cancer-related illnesses and a maternity hospital.

53 Therefore, it can be deduced that the administrative practice of the contracting authorities in question, contrary to Article 8(2) of Directive 93/36 and Articles 17 and 18 of Directive 93/42, demonstrates a certain degree of consistency and generality.

54 Where the Commission has adduced sufficient evidence to show that a Member State's authorities have developed a repeated and persistent practice which is contrary to the provisions of a directive, it is incumbent on that Member State to challenge in substance and in detail the information thus produced and the consequences flowing therefrom (Commission v Ireland, paragraph 47), which is not so in the present case.

55 Moreover, it is apparent from the file before the Court that the unlawful conduct of the Greek hospital contracting authorities was not sufficiently reviewed and penalised by the competent Greek authorities. The defendant Member State has merely justified the lack of intervention on the part of its services by referring to the fact that the body of inspectors of health and welfare services was, at the time of the proceedings, carrying out an inquiry into the question and that it had not completed its work.

56 In view of the above, it must be declared that, by rejecting tenders in respect of medical devices bearing the CE certification marking, without the competent contracting authorities of Greek hospitals having complied with the procedure provided for in Directive 93/42, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8(2) of Directive 93/36 and Articles 17 and 18 of Directive 93/42.

Costs

57 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission applied for costs against the Hellenic Republic and the latter has been unsuccessful, the Hellenic Republic must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that, by rejecting tenders in respect of medical devices bearing the CE certification marking, without the competent contracting authorities of Greek hospitals having complied with the procedure provided for in Council Directive 93/42/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning medical devices, as amended by Regulation (EC) No 1882/2003 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 September 2003, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8(2) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001, and Articles 17 and 18 of Directive 93/42, as amended by Regulation No 1882/2003;

2. Orders the Hellenic Republic to pay the costs.

Case C-489/06

v

Hellenic Republic

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations – Directives 93/36/EEC and 93/42/EEC – Public contracts – Procedures for the award of public supply contracts – Hospital supplies)

1. Approximation of laws – Medical devices – Directive 93/42

(Council Directives 93/36, as amended by Directive 2001/78, Art. 8(2), and 93/42, as amended by Regulation No 1882/2003, Arts 8, 17 and 18)

2. Actions for failure to fulfil obligations – Proof of failure – Burden of proof on Commission – Presumptions – Not permissible – Failure to fulfil obligations arising from an administrative practice contrary to Community law

(Art. 226 EC)

1. Contracting authorities which have issued an invitation to tender for the supply of medical devices bearing the CE marking cannot reject, on grounds of protection of public health, the tender in respect of such products, directly and without following the safeguard procedure provided for in Articles 8 and 18 of Directive 93/42 concerning medical devices, as amended by Regulation No 1882/2003. If a contracting authority considers that the tender in respect of medical devices bearing the CE marking may compromise public health, it is required to inform the competent authority with a view to setting that safeguard procedure in motion.

   In that context, a practice of the contracting authorities, which demonstrates a certain degree of consistency and generality, consisting of rejecting tenders in respect of medical devices bearing the CE certification marking, without the procedure provided for in Directive 93/42 being respected amounts to a failure on the part of a Member State to fulfil its obligations under Article 8(2) of Directive 93/36 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by Directive 2001/78, and Articles 17 and 18 of Directive 93/42.

2. In proceedings under Article 226 EC for failure to fulfil obligations, in order for a failure to fulfil obligations to be found on the basis of the administrative practice followed in a Member State, the failure to fulfil obligations can be established only by means of sufficiently documented and detailed proof of the alleged practice; that practice must be, to some degree, of a consistent and general nature; and, in order to find that there has been a general and consistent practice, the Commission may not rely on any presumption.

   Where the Commission has adduced sufficient evidence to show that a Member State's authorities have developed a repeated and persistent practice which is contrary to the provisions of a directive, it is incumbent on that Member State to challenge in substance and in detail the information thus produced and the consequences flowing therefrom.

Re:

Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Infringement of Article 8(2) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and of Articles 17 and 18 of Council Directive 93/42/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning medical devices (OJ 1993 L 169, p. 1) - Rejection of medical devices, in the context of calls for tenders for supplies to public hospitals in Greece, on grounds relating to the 'general sufficiency and safety of use' of the devices, notwithstanding their certification with the CE marking, and without, in any event, the procedure provided for in Directive 93/42/EEC being followed

The Court:

Declares that, by rejecting tenders in respect of medical devices bearing the CE certification marking, without the competent contracting authorities of Greek hospitals having complied with the procedure provided for in Council Directive 93/42/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning medical devices, as amended by Regulation (EC) No 1882/2003 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 September 2003, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8(2) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001, and Articles 17 and 18 of Directive 93/42, as amended by Regulation No 1882/2003;

Orders the Hellenic Republic to pay the costs.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
Mazák
delivered on 20 November 2008 (1)

Case C–489/06

Commission of the European Communities
v
Hellenic Republic

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations – Free movement of goods – Directives 93/36/EEC and 93/42/EEC – Hospital purchase of medical devices bearing the CE marking – Protective measures – Public supply contract)

1. By this action the Commission asks the Court to declare that, by rejecting tenders in respect of medical devices bearing the CE certification marking, without, in any event, the competent contracting authorities of Greek hospitals having followed the procedure set out in Council Directive 93/42/EEC (the Medical Devices Directive), (2) Greece has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8(2) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC (the Public Supply Contracts Directive) (3) and Articles 17 and 18 of Directive 93/42.

I – The legal framework

A – Community law

2. With regard to Directive 93/42, as I explain in point 33 of this Opinion, in Medipac-Kazantzidis (4) – delivered after the closure of the written procedure in the present case – the Court, in my view, has now settled the issue concerning the obligations of the contracting authorities, and the procedure to be followed by them, in cases such as those complained of in the present proceedings. I therefore do not consider it necessary to set out the whole legal framework of Directive 93/42, as this has been done exhaustively in Medipac-Kazantzidis.

3. Paragraphs 1 to 4 of Article 8 of Directive 93/36 respectively provide:

2. Without prejudice to the legally binding national technical rules, in so far as these are compatible with Community law, the technical specifications mentioned in paragraph 1 shall be defined by the contracting authorities by reference to national standards implementing European standards, or by reference to European technical approvals or by reference to common technical specifications.

3. A contracting authority may depart from paragraph 2 if:

(a) the standards, European technical approvals or common technical specifications do not include any provision for establishing conformity or technical means do not exist for establishing satisfactorily the conformity of a product to these standards, European technical approvals or common technical specifications;

(b) the application of paragraph 2 would prejudice the application of Council Directive 86/361/EEC [(5)] … or Council Decision 87/95/EEC [(6)] … or other Community instruments in specific service or product areas;

(c) use of these standards, European technical approvals or common technical specifications would oblige the contracting authority to acquire supplies incompatible with equipment already in use or would entail disproportionate costs or disproportionate technical difficulties, but only as part of a clearly defined and recorded strategy with a view to change-over, within a given period, to European standards, European technical approvals or common technical specifications;

(d) the project concerned is of a genuinely innovative nature for which use of existing European standards, European technical approvals or common technical specifications would not be appropriate.

4. Contracting authorities invoking paragraph 3 shall record, wherever possible, the reasons for doing so in the tender notice published in the Official Journal of the European Communities or in the contract documents and in all cases shall record these reasons in their internal documentation and shall supply such information on request to Member States and to the Commission.'

4. Annex III to Directive 93/36, entitled 'Definition of certain technical specifications', provides:

'For the purposes of this Directive the following terms shall be defined as follows:

1. Technical specifications: the totality of the technical prescriptions contained in particular in the tender documents, defining the characteristics required of a material, product or supply, which permits a material, a product or a supply to be described in a manner such that it fulfils the use for which it is intended by the contracting authority. These technical prescriptions shall include levels of quality, performance, safety or dimensions, including the requirements applicable to the material, the product or the supply as regards quality assurance, terminology, symbols, testing and test methods, packaging, marking or labelling.

2. Standard: a technical specification approved by a recognised standardising body for repeated and continuous application, compliance with which is in principle not compulsory.

3. European standard: a standard approved by the European Committee for standardisation (CEN) or by the European Committee for Electrotechnical Standardisation (Cenelec) as "European standard (EN)" or "Harmonisation documents (HD)" according to the common rules of these organisations.

4. European technical approval: a favourable technical assessment of the fitness for use of a product, based on fulfilment of the essential requirements for building works, by means of the inherent characteristics of the product and the defined conditions of application and use. The European agreement shall be issued by an approval body designated for this purpose by the Member State.

5. Common technical specification: a technical specification laid down in accordance with a procedure recognised by the Member States to ensure uniform application in all Member States which has been published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.'

B – National law

5. Directive 93/36 was transposed into Greek law, principally, by way of Presidential Decree No 370 (FEK A' 199/1995). Article 16 of that decree essentially reproduces the wording of Article 8 of Directive 93/36.

6. Joint Ministerial Decree No DY7/oik.2480 of 19 August 1994 (FEK B' 679), bringing Greek legislation into line with Directive 93/42, transposed that directive into Greek law.

7. In addition, the Ethnikos Organismos Farmakon (the Greek authority responsible for ensuring the implementation of the Community directives on medical devices, under the Ministry of Health, 'EOF'), was designated under Article 19 of Law No 2889/2001 as the competent authority in respect of medical devices.

II – Facts, pre-litigation procedure and forms of order sought

8. The Commission received a complaint relating to the phenomenon of rejection of medical devices – in particular, surgical sutures – in the context of calls for tenders for supplies to public hospitals in Greece, on grounds relating to the 'general sufficiency and safety of use' of such devices, notwithstanding their certification with the CE marking, (7) and without, in any event, the safeguard procedure provided for in Directive 93/42 being followed.

9. On 20 April 2004, in the context of the Commission's investigation, the Greek authorities forwarded the Commission the EOF's circular, No 19384, of 2 April 2004 ('Circular No 19384'). According to the circular, it was recognised that 'certain committees responsible for procurement in hospitals have … rejected on grounds of non-conformity offers presented by companies and concerning numerous medical devices certified with the CE marking, without the necessary prior examination by the EOF' and that 'in certain cases the non-conformity concerned specifications arbitrarily fixed by the hospitals'. It went on to state that 'the companies concerned had therefore brought the matter before the Greek courts and the competent European institutions which had decided in the companies' favour'. According to the Greek authorities, Circular No 19384 thus served as a reminder of the legal procedure which the committees were bound to follow and the details of that procedure.

10. In the light of the above developments, the Commission services informed the complainant that they intended to close the case. However, by letter of 8 November 2004, the complainant furnished further information indicating that, in spite of distributing the circular, the competent committees of certain hospitals (including, the general hospitals of Komotini, Messolonghi, Agios Nikolaos in Crete and Venizelio-Pananio of Heraklion in Crete) continued to be in breach of the rules.

11. By way of example, in one particular call for tenders, the general hospital of Komotini rejected a large part of the complainant's tender, on the ground that the devices were inappropriate in spite of bearing the CE marking and of the fact that they were produced in accordance with the European Pharmacopoeia. Despite having received the EOF circular, the hospital refused to comply with its directions to send the devices for checking by the EOF.

12. Similarly, the general hospital of Messolonghi rejected the complainant's tender and closed the call for tender without informing the EOF or sending samples for control. A similar pattern of events arose in a tendering procedure conducted by the general hospital of Agios Nikolaos in Crete.

13. Finally, in a case concerning a call for tenders by the general hospital of Heraklion in Crete, although it informed the EOF beforehand, in compliance with the circular, it failed to comply with the EOF's decision, which considered the medical devices to be safe.

14. On the basis of this information, the Commission sent the Hellenic Republic a letter of formal notice on 21 March 2005, and opened formal proceedings under Article 226 EC against that Member State for failure to fulfil obligations.

15. In their response of 24 May 2005, the Greek authorities did not contest the fact that certain Greek hospitals were not acting in conformity with relevant Community provisions, but merely stressed the exceptional character of the cases referred to by the Commission. In their view, those cases did not attest to the existence of a large-scale, horizontal infringement of Community law.

16. On 19 December 2005, the Commission issued a reasoned opinion in which it stated that the Hellenic Republic had failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8(2) of Directive 93/36 and Articles 17 and 18 of Directive 93/42 in relation to the award of public supply contracts of medical devices and called on that Member State to comply with the reasoned opinion within two months of its notification.

17. In its response of 9 February 2006, Greece argued that it had taken the necessary measures to ensure proper application of Community law and that the cases enumerated in the Commission's reasoned opinion were merely exceptions to the general practice. It also pointed out that Greek legislation as such was consistent with Community law. In addition to Circular No 19384 and the reminder of 19 January 2006, Greece also referred to the fact that, at the hospitals' request, the EOF carried out systematic controls of the quality of supplies. Finally, Greece underlined the fact that compliance by the national hospitals of the EOF's instructions was becoming increasingly systematic.

18. However, on the basis of new information, the Commission learned that the infringement at issue was in fact still continuing. The information suggested that the incidents were anything but isolated and exceptional and, what is more, the contracting authorities were not sanctioned for their unlawful conduct in any way. According to the complainant, instances of compliance by the hospitals were in fact rather rare. Moreover, it became clear from the information made available to the Commission that the EOF was neither competent to exercise any administrative control over the hospitals nor to impose any sanction on them, and that so far no other body (judicial or otherwise) in the Greek legal order had exercised any powers in this area. In support of its claims, the Commission cites a number of decisions by the supreme administrative court, namely the Symvoulio tis Epikrateias (the Council of State), more particularly its 'suspension committee', as examples of a general tendency on the part of the court to reject appeals against the decisions of the contracting authorities which were in breach of the directives and of the circulars applicable in this area.

19. Accordingly, the Commission took the view that the infringement, the facts of which the Greek authorities never contested, persisted, and that the measures taken by the national authorities to end it were neither sufficient nor effective. The Commission thus brought the present action before the Court.

20. Having submitted written pleadings, neither party requested a hearing.

21. The Commission claims that the Court should:

'– declare that, by rejecting tenders in respect of medical devices bearing the CE certification marking, without, in any event, the competent contracting authorities of Greek hospitals having followed the procedure set out in Directive 93/42, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8(2) of Directive 93/36 and Articles 17 and 18 of Directive 93/42;

– order the Hellenic Republic to pay the costs.'

22. The Greek Government contends that the Court should dismiss the application.

III – Assessment

A – Arguments of the parties

23. The Commission submits that Directive 93/36 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts establishes a precise framework concerning any contracting authority's definition of technical requirements imposed on devices included in an offer. According to Article 8 (2) of that directive, the reference to national standards implementing European standards, to European technical approvals or to common technical specifications is obligatory both in the tender notice and in the evaluation of compliance of the products which are the subject of the tender. The Commission underlines the fact that derogations from the principle enshrined in Article 8(2) are set out exhaustively in Article 8(3).

24. The Commission further maintains that the calls for tenders issued by the Greek hospitals refer to the requirement under Article 8(2) of Directive 93/36 for a European technical approval particular to medical devices, that is, the CE certification marking, which is also laid down in Directive 93/42. None the less, the contracting authorities proceeded to exclude tenders of medical devices bearing the CE marking, even though exclusion on this basis is clearly not one of the derogations provided for by Article 8(3) of Directive 93/36.

25. As regards Directive 93/42 concerning medical devices, the Commission submits that the specific and exclusive procedures – for certifying such devices and placing them on the market, as well as for contesting their suitability – are laid down in such detail that there can be no doubt as to the certified qualitative characteristics nor is there any discretion on the part of the national authorities beyond the framework established by the directive.

26. The Commission argues that the essential requirements of compliance and safety which apply to medical devices are enumerated in Annex I to Directive 93/42 and that products bearing the CE marking meet all those requirements. Article 3, in conjunction with Article 17 of Directive 93/42, sets out the basis for recognising that the devices in question are compliant, and may circulate freely in the internal market.

27. The Commission argues that it may be that certain medical devices, despite bearing the CE marking, are considered by the doctors to endanger the health and safety of patients. In such cases, however, the Commission makes clear that such devices may only be rejected by the contracting authorities in the context of the safeguard procedure provided for in Articles 8 and 18 of Directive 93/42 and described in Circular No 19384.

28. The Commission submits that instead of applying the safeguard procedure the Greek contracting authorities proceeded directly to rejecting the tenders of medical devices bearing the CE marking.

29. However, according to the Commission, it follows from settled case-law that the existence of a directive approximating the laws of the Member States, such as Directives 93/36 and 93/42, and stating that the compliance of the products included in the tenders with all the technical provisions of the directive is necessarily certified with the CE marking, gives rise to the obligation of a Member State to respect the special procedures of the directive concerning disputation of the validity of certification. (8)

30. The Commission maintains that, despite the adoption of Circular No 19384 and the sending of a reminder two years later, the unlawful conduct of the contracting authorities, as well as the Greek authorities' failure to control or sanction it, persists.

31. The Greek Government submits that hospitals, in their role as contracting authorities, do comply with the relevant provisions of Community law and of national law in the area of public procurement. It takes the view that the fact that certain hospitals were not acting in accordance with relevant Community provisions merely constitutes an exception to the general rule, from which, however, one should not deduce the existence of a large-scale horizontal infringement of Community law in the area at issue.

32. Moreover, the Greek Government maintains that, in any event, the EOF distributed Circular No 19384 and, on 19 January 2006, Circular No 4051, which both served as a reminder as to how properly to assess devices for the purposes of their supply. Therefore, the EOF took the necessary measures to ensure proper application of Community law. In addition, the Greek Government explains that the reason why it has not yet determined the sanctions to be imposed on hospitals which do not act in accordance with relevant Community provisions is that the inspectors of the Soma Epitheoriton Ipiresion Igias kai Pronias (Health and Welfare Services Inspection Body) are still in the process of carrying out an investigation.

B – Appraisal

33. First of all, with regard to Directive 93/42, I would like to refer to the recent case of Medipac-Kazantzidis (9) – delivered after the closure of the written procedure in this case – where the Court held that 'a contracting authority, which has issued an invitation to tender for the supply of medical devices and specified that those devices must comply with the European Pharmacopoeia and bear the CE marking, [is precluded] from rejecting, directly and without following the safeguard procedure provided for in Articles 8 and 18 of Directive 93/42, on grounds of protection of public health, the materials proposed, if they comply with the stated technical requirement. If the contracting authority considers that those materials may jeopardise public health, it is required to inform the competent national authority with a view to setting that safeguard procedure in motion.'

34. That part of the present case being settled, the main issue that remains to be analysed is the question of the burden of proof.

35. In this regard, the Commission is seeking to prove, on the basis of certain individual cases, that the conduct of the Greek hospitals, in their capacity as contracting authorities, evinces a consistent administrative practice which is unlawful and which is neither controlled nor sanctioned by the competent authorities. As a result, the Commission is seeking to obtain a finding that Greece has generally failed to fulfil its obligations under Community law.

36. In Commission v Germany, (10) the Court held that 'a failure to fulfil obligations may arise due to the existence of an administrative practice which infringes Community law, even if the applicable national legislation itself complies with that law'.

37. In that connection, the Court stated in another Commission v Greece case (11) that 'so far as concerns the possibility of finding that there has been a failure to fulfil obligations on the basis of the administrative practice followed in a Member State, the Court has already established the applicable criteria. In those circumstances, the failure to fulfil obligations can be established only by means of sufficiently documented and detailed proof of the alleged practice; that administrative practice must be, to some degree, of a consistent and general nature; and, in order to find that there has been a general and consistent practice, the Commission may not rely on any presumption.'

38. In the present case, the Commission issued the reasoned opinion on 19 December 2005, in which it stated that Greece had failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8(2) of Directive 93/36 and under Articles 17 and 18 of Directive 93/42 in relation to the award of public supply contracts of medical devices, and called on that Member State to comply with the opinion within two months of its notification.

39. On 9 February 2006, Greece responded to the reasoned opinion and submitted that it had taken the necessary measures to ensure proper application of Community law, inter alia, through the distribution of Circular No 19384 on 2 April 2004 and of the reminder on 19 January 2006, drawing the hospitals' attention to their Community law obligations. In my view, this approach indicates that the Greek Government: (i) accepted the existence of the factual situations underlying the allegations set out in the reasoned opinion; (ii) in seeking to remedy the problem, took further measures (that is, the reminder of 19 January 2006); and (iii) failed to provide any substantive answer to the conduct complained of.

40. In its application, the Commission submits that despite adopting Circular No 19384 and sending the reminder two years later, the unlawful conduct of the contracting authorities, as well as the failure by the Greek authorities to control it, persists. In its view, the cases that were brought to its attention are indicative of what seems to be common practice in Greek hospitals, of the fact that the infringement in question is anything but isolated and exceptional, as maintained by the Greek Government, and that the conduct of the contracting authorities responsible continues to go unchecked.

41. Before considering the merits of the Commission's complaint, I will first deal with the Greek Government's contention that the Commission is not justified in drawing general conclusions as to the existence of a large-scale horizontal infringement of Community law from the examination of specific – regarded by that State as 'exceptional' – cases by presuming alleged systemic failures by Greece to fulfil its obligations.

42. In the ensuing paragraphs, I will seek to establish why, in my view, the alleged infringement may be considered to be of a general and persistent nature.

43. In this connection, I think it would be helpful to set out at length the relevant parts of the judgment in Commission v Ireland ('Irish Waste case'). (12) In this case, the Court held that whilst it is incumbent upon the Commission to prove the allegation that the obligation has not been fulfilled, (13) 'the Member States are required, under Article 10 EC, to facilitate the achievement of the Commission's tasks, which consist, in particular, pursuant to Article 211 EC, in ensuring that the provisions of the Treaty and the measures taken by the institutions pursuant thereto are applied [(14)] … In this context, account should be taken of the fact that, where it is a question of checking that the national provisions intended to ensure effective implementation of the directive are applied correctly in practice, the Commission [having no] investigative powers of its own in the matter, is largely reliant on the information provided by any complainants and by the Member State concerned [(15)] … It follows in particular that, where the Commission has adduced sufficient evidence of certain matters in the territory of the defendant Member State, it is incumbent on the latter to challenge in substance and in detail the information produced and the consequences flowing therefrom [(16)] … In such circumstances, it is indeed primarily for the national authorities to conduct the necessary on-the-spot investigations, in a spirit of genuine cooperation and mindful of each Member State's duty … to facilitate the general task of the Commission [(17)] … Thus, where the Commission relies on detailed complaints revealing repeated failures to comply with the provisions of the directive, it is incumbent on the Member State to contest specifically the facts alleged in those complaints [(18)] … Likewise, where the Commission has adduced sufficient evidence to show that a Member State's authorities have developed a repeated and persistent practice which is contrary to the provisions of a directive, it is incumbent on that Member State to challenge in substance and in detail the information produced and the consequences flowing therefrom.' (19)

44. Furthermore, in Commission v Italy (20) the Court held that 'that obligation rests on the Member States under the duty of genuine cooperation, enshrined in Article 10 EC, throughout the procedure provided for by Article 226 EC'.

45. It is in this context that I shall consider the merits of this case.

46. First of all, as the Court held in Commission v Ireland, (21) 'the Commission may seek a finding that provisions of a directive have not been complied with because a general practice contrary thereto has been adopted by the authorities of a Member State, using particular situations to shed light on that practice'.

47. In this case, I consider that it is apparent from the documents before the Court that there have been at least 14 instances – known to the Commission – of hospitals acting as contracting authorities in the incorrect and unlawful manner described above.

48. Those 14 cases of alleged infringement of Community law concern the following hospitals: Attica, Athens Agios Savvas, Elpis, Argos, Korgialenio-Benakio Red Cross Hospital of Athens, General Hospital of Kalamata (in the Peloponnese peninsula), the General Hospital of Nafplio, Athens General Children's Hospital P. & A. Kiriakou, Siros (in the Cyclades), the General Hospital of Sparta, General Hospital Panarkadiko of Tripolis, the Elena Venizelou General and Maternity Hospital, the Asklipio General Hospital of Voula Attiki and Kos.

49. It would appear from the documents before the Court that some of the largest hospitals in Greece are included in that list, namely: Attica, Agios Savvas (a well-known cancer hospital), Korgialenio-Benakio, Kiriakou and Elena Venizelou.

50. In addition, I consider that those instances would appear to reflect both a wide geographic coverage and a number of areas of specialisation, including general hospitals, a children's hospital, a cancer treatment hospital and a maternity hospital. (22)

51. In this respect, I agree with the views of Advocate General Geelhoed in his Opinion in Commission v Ireland (23) that 'although isolated cases may in themselves be sufficient to establish an infringement … a structural infringement suggests that there is a more general practice or a pattern of non-compliance which is also likely to keep recurring. In the case of a directive it implies that the substantive content of the directive, for whatever reason, is not brought into practice and that the result of the directive is not attained within the Member State. An indication of this might be that the practice is not restricted to a particular locality in a Member State, but is more widespread in that more situations which are contrary to the terms of the directive occur simultaneously within the territory of the Member State.' That, indeed, appears to be the case here.

52. Finally, it should be borne in mind, in this respect, that the relevant product in the present proceedings is a product that hospitals need to purchase on a recurrent and regular basis. Therefore, given the nature of the product at issue in the present proceedings – as opposed to one that is purchased on a one-off basis – the general practice complained of by the Commission is, in my view, likely to keep recurring.

53. I therefore consider that, on the basis of the considerations set out in points 45 to 51 above, and the similarity and recurrent nature of the situations in question, there seems to be a generalised and systemic failure on the part of the contracting authorities to comply with Directives 93/36 and 93/42 and on the part of the Hellenic Republic. (24)

54. In the light of the above, it should be noted that once the Commission has adduced sufficient evidence to show that a Member State's authorities have developed a repeated and persistent practice contrary to the provisions of Directives 93/36 and 93/42, it is for that Member State to challenge, in substance and in detail, the information produced and the consequences flowing therefrom.

55. However, the crux of the present case is that the Greek Government has failed to contest any of the claims in relation to any of these hospitals. (25) Moreover, Greece has presented neither arguments nor specific evidence to contradict or to challenge, in substance and in detail, the Commission's allegations.

56. In fact, in Circular No 19384, in the pre-litigation phase and, in particular, in its defence in the present proceedings, the Greek Government recognises the fact that 'certain hospitals acted in breach of relevant Community provisions'.

57. Therefore, in the light of the Greek Government's failure to contest the Commission's allegations and to provide sufficient evidence in rebuttal, those allegations must be regarded as substantiated. (26)

58. I consider that the Commission has provided sufficient proof of Greece's infringement of Community law. That proof is only reinforced by the fact, apparent from the documents before the Court and not contested by the Greek Government, that the contracting authorities' unlawful conduct is neither controlled nor sanctioned by that Member State.

59. It follows from the case-law cited in point 43 of this Opinion that Greece was required, under Article 10 EC, to facilitate the achievement of the Commission's tasks in proceedings under Article 226 EC.

60. Therefore, instead of simply denying (27) that it is possible, on the basis of the individual cases (which in any event it did not contest), to find a general failure to fulfil obligations, pursuant to its duty under Article 10 EC, Greece should have rather furnished evidence of instances where the two directives at issue were correctly applied. To this end, it should have provided an estimate of the average number of calls for tenders issued annually by a hospital in order to show that the instances known to the Commission were, on the basis of their number, geographical spread and nature of specialisation, indeed exceptional, and that, in relation to all the other cases, no general deficiencies underpinned them. However, in both the pre-litigation phase and its written submissions in these proceedings, the Greek Government manifestly failed to do either.

61. The only and one argument advanced by the Greek Government is that the Commission has failed to prove that the instances known to it are not isolated and exceptional incidents.

62. In my view, having regard to, on the one hand, the number, the geographical spread and the range of specialisation of the hospitals, and, on the other, the fact that they include some of the largest hospitals in Greece, it would appear that the Greek hospitals' conduct amounts to a generalised breach and thus may not be considered to be confined to those 14 instances known to the Commission.

63. Indeed, as the Commission has shown, the number of instances of infringement by the contracting authorities and the failure to control and sanction such conduct at administrative and judicial levels – both generally and in individual cases – lead to a different conclusion from that advocated by Greece. I consider therefore that both the action of the contracting authorities and the practice of the relevant supervisory authorities render the infringement of the lawful procedure systemic in nature.

64. The Commission has demonstrated that the existence of the factual situations which are the subject of the various instances complained of, given their number and nature, can only be explained by a pattern of non-observance of Community law obligations on a larger scale. In such a situation, taken together and seen in context, the instances of conduct complained of cannot be regarded as mere isolated incidents but rather symptomatic of a policy of administrative practice contrary to that Member State's obligations. (28)

65. Indeed, the conduct of public tendering procedures in breach of Directive 93/36 by a large number of hospitals is contrary to the obligations of the Greek authorities under Article 8(2) thereof.

66. The Commission correctly points out that the measures taken by the Greek Government to remedy those infringements, after it had been advised of them by the Commission, merely consist of the EOF's adoption of a regulatory act, namely Circular No 19384, and of the sending of a reminder two years later. It should be noted that the latter was sent on 19 January 2006, one month after the Commission had sent its reasoned opinion to the Greek authorities.

67. However, it is apparent from the documents before the Court that the contracting authorities' unlawful conduct, as well as the failure by the Greek authorities to control and sanction it, persists.

68. In view of the above considerations, I agree with the Commission that the cases brought to its attention constitute examples which are indicative of a common practice in Greek hospitals as regards the supply of medical devices.

69. The Greek authorities' argument – based on the existence of national (appeal) procedures, which are designed to deal with every infringement relating to public procurement – does not justify breach of the relevant Community rules by the Member State.

70. As the Court stated in Brasserie du Pêcheur and Factortame, (29) it 'has consistently held that the right of individuals to rely on the directly effective provisions of the Treaty before national courts is only a minimum guarantee and is not sufficient in itself to ensure the full and complete implementation of the Treaty'.

71. Indeed, a failure to fulfil an obligation ensuing from an administrative practice of a Member State assumes that a particular pattern of behaviour can be discerned on the part of the authorities of the defendant Member State. (30)

72. I am of the view that this is the case here. As appears from the documents before the Court, the administrative practice complained of, illustrated by numerous examples, is clearly, to some degree, of a consistent and general nature and is coupled, at the same time, with a lack of control, enforcement and sanctions. (31) In addition, according to the Commission's submissions, as set out in point 18 of this Opinion, it would appear – as is evident from the general tendency to reject the appeals against the contracting authorities' decisions – that, far from disagreeing with the incorrect and unlawful construction of the applicable provisions by the contracting authorities, the Council of State has rather confirmed it. (32)

73. On this basis, I consider that the administrative practice complained of by the Commission as described above is likely to persist. Moreover, it would appear that such an infringement by the Hellenic Republic is not only liable to have adverse effects on specific interests protected by Directives 93/36 and 93/42 but also, more generally, on the objectives promoted by those directives.

74. Indeed, in the present case the remedy for the situation lies not merely in taking action to resolve a number of individual cases which do not comply with the Community law obligation in question, but in a revision of the general policy and administrative practice of the Member State at issue. (33)

75. In addition, the conclusion – that the administrative practice complained of is clearly, to some degree, of a consistent and general nature, and is coupled with a lack of control, enforcement and sanction – would appear to be paradoxically confirmed by the Greek Government's argument that the sanctions could not (yet) have been imposed, since, at the time of lodging its rejoinder, the investigation by its Health and Welfare Services Inspection Body was still ongoing. In fact, prima facie, that investigation would appear unduly protracted, not least because the information that came to light during the administrative procedure under Article 226 EC could have enabled the Greek authorities to further their own investigation. In particular, from the documents before the Court the Commission first informed Greece of the contracting authorities' conduct on 26 September 2003 and Greece lodged its rejoinder on 19 April 2007. Therefore at least three and a half years had elapsed since the date on which Greece was first advised of the conduct at issue.

76. In my view, it should be noted here that the present case manifestly meets the criteria of time (the fact that the situation of non-compliance has existed over a long period of time) and of seriousness (the degree to which the actual situation in the Member State deviates from the result intended to be achieved by the Community obligation). (34)

77. Finally, the action for failure to fulfil obligations is objective and the protracted nature of the authorities' investigation cannot serve to expunge Greece's failure to fulfil its obligations. In Commission v Belgium (35) the Court stated that it 'has consistently held that a Member State may not plead provisions, practices or circumstances in its internal legal order to justify a failure to comply with obligations under Community directives'.

78. Therefore, it follows from the case-law referred to above that in the absence of evidence to the contrary produced by the Greek Government, the Commission must be held to have demonstrated to the requisite legal standard that by rejecting tenders in respect of medical devices bearing the CE marking, without, in any event, the competent contracting authorities of Greek hospitals having followed the procedure set out in Directive 93/42, Greece has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directives 93/36 and 93/42. (36)

IV – Costs

79. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. The Commission has applied for costs against Greece.

V – Conclusion

80. I am therefore of the opinion that the Court should:

– declare that, by rejecting tenders in respect of medical devices bearing the CE certification marking, without, in any event, the competent contracting authorities of Greek hospitals having followed the procedure set out in Council Directive 93/42/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning medical devices, as amended by Regulation (EC) No 1882/2003 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 September 2003, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8(2) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts and Articles 17 and 18 of Directive 93/42 concerning medical devices;

– order the Hellenic Republic to pay the costs.

Papanikolaou Hospital of Thessaloniki ('one of the largest in the country'), the University Hospital of Patras, the Greek Navy Hospital in Athens, Agia Sofia Hospital of Athens ('the largest hospital for children in the country'), Kifisia Hospital for Accidents (KAT, 'one of the major hospitals in Athens') and Tzanio Hospital ('the major hospital of Piraeus').

27 – Cf. with what the Court essentially held in Case 272/86 Commission v Greece, cited in footnote 13, that although it is incumbent on the Commission to prove its allegation, the Member State is not entitled, where the Commission has produced sufficient evidence to show the failure to fulfil obligations, merely to deny its existence. The Member State has to contest substantively and in detail the information produced and the consequences thereof. If it does not do so, the allegations must be regarded as substantiated.

31 – Similarly to Case C-494/01 Commission v Ireland, cited in footnote 12, Greece would appear (i) to have failed generally to create and/or enforce the necessary legal and administrative framework for the proper application and enforcement of provisions of Directives 93/36 and 93/42, as well as (ii) to apply and enforce the provisions in casu. Indeed, objectively, there would appear to be a general tendency on the part of the Greek authorities to tolerate situations in which those provisions were not complied with (cf. Case C-494/01 Commission v Ireland, cited in footnote 12, paragraph 132).

32 – As regards the compatibility with Community law of a practice related to a 'neutral' provision of national law, in the context of judicial behaviour, see the judgment in Case C-129/00 Commission v Italy [2003] ECR I-14637. There, the Court set out the circumstances in which a national judicial practice is capable of amounting to a failure by a Member State to fulfil its obligations under Article 226 EC.

33 – See the Opinion of Advocate General Geelhoed in Case C-494/01 Commission v Ireland, cited in footnote 12, point 48, where he goes on to say that: 'restricting the remedial action to identified cases of non-compliance would after all leave other situations of non-compliance intact until they too have been identified and challenged … by the Commission in new infringement proceedings … In the meantime a situation contrary to that envisaged by the Community measure persists.'

Action brought on 27 November 2006 - Commission of the European Communities v Hellenic Republic

(Case C-489/06)

Language of the case: Greek

Parties

Applicant: Commission of the European Communities (represented by: M. Patakia and X. Lewis)

Defendant: Hellenic Republic

Form of order sought

declare that, by rejecting tenders in respect of medical devices bearing the CE certification marking, without, in any event, the competent contracting authorities of Greek hospitals having followed the procedure set out in Directive 93/42/EEC, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8(2) of Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 [1] coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts and Articles 17 and 18 of Council Directive 93/42/EEC of 14 June 1993 [2] concerning medical devices;

order the Hellenic Republic to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The Commission received a complaint relating to the phenomenon of rejection of medical devices, in the context of calls for competition for supplies to public hospitals in Greece, on grounds relating to the 'general sufficiency and safety of use' thereof, notwithstanding their certification with the CE marking, and without, in any event, the procedure provided for in Directive 93/42/EEC concerning medical devices being followed.

Under Directive 93/36/EEC coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, the tender procedures must be conducted on the basis of the relevant national technical standards implementing European standards, of European technical approvals or of common technical specifications. The Commission considers that, by deciding in the instances at issue that the CE marking did not constitute an appropriate and binding guarantee of the suitability of the products in the tenders, without any of the prescribed exceptions which justify divergence from the directive's provisions being applicable, the Greek contracting authorities infringed the obligations owed by them in that regard under Article 8(2).

At the same time, the Commission points out an infringement of Directive 93/42/EEC concerning medical devices, which lays down specific and exclusive procedures for certifying such devices and placing them on the market, as well as for contesting their suitability. The information available to the Commission reveals continual breach, by the competent Greek authorities which have rejected tenders, of the legal procedures for checking the suitability of medical devices. None of the stages of the procedure provided for in Article 18 of the directive was observed where the correctness of certification - pursuant to Article 17 of the directive - with the CE marking was disputed.

Also, in the Commission's submission, the Greek authorities' claim that the measures which they have taken to eliminate the abovementioned phenomenon are sufficient is contradicted by the very facts and, in any event, in accordance with the Court of Justice's case-law, the existence of national procedures which are designed to deal with every infringement relating to public procurement does not justify infringement of the relevant Community rules by the Member State.

The Commission considers therefore that the Hellenic Republic has infringed its obligations under Directive 93/36/EEC, in particular Article 8(2), and under Directive 93/42/EEC, in particular Articles 17 and 18.

Arrêt

1 Par sa requête, la Commission des Communautés européennes demande à la Cour de constater que, en maintenant en vigueur l'article 7, paragraphe 2, de la loi 2955/2001 relative aux «Fournitures des hôpitaux et autres unités de santé des régimes régionaux de santé et de prévoyance et autres dispositions» (FEK A' 256/2.11.2001, ci-après la «loi 2955») et en adoptant les dispositions d'exécution des arrêtés ministériels conjoints DY6a/oik.38611 et DY6a/oik.38609, du 12 avril 2005(FEK 518/19.04.2005), la République hellénique a manqué à l'obligation qui lui incombe en vertu de l'article 6, paragraphe 3, de la directive 93/36/CEE du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de fournitures (JO L 199, p. 1), telle que modifiée par la directive 2001/78/CE de la Commission, du 13 septembre 2001 (JO L 285, p. 1, ci–après la «directive 93/36»), ainsi qu'à l'obligation d'assurer une concurrence réelle et équitable, telle que définie par la jurisprudence de la Cour.

Le cadre juridique

La réglementation communautaire

2 Conformément à l'article 5 de la directive 93/36, les dispositions de celle-ci prévoyant des mesures de coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de fournitures s'appliquent à des marchés dont la valeur dépasse les seuils fixés au paragraphe 1, dudit article 5.

3 L'article 6 de la directive 93/36 prévoit:

2. Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent passer leurs marchés de fournitures en recourant à la procédure négociée en cas de dépôt de soumissions irrégulières en réponse à une procédure ouverte ou restreinte ou en cas de dépôt de soumissions inacceptables en vertu des dispositions nationales conformes au titre IV, pour autant que les conditions initiales du marché ne soient pas substantiellement modifiées. Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs publient dans ces cas un avis d'adjudication, à moins qu'ils n'incluent dans ces procédures négociées toutes les entreprises qui satisfont aux critères visés aux articles 20 à 24 et qui, lors de la procédure ouverte ou restreinte antérieure, ont soumis des offres conformes aux exigences formelles de la procédure d'adjudication.

3. Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent passer leurs marchés de fournitures en recourant à la procédure négociée sans publication préalable d'un avis d'adjudication dans les cas suivants:

a) lorsqu'aucune soumission ou aucune soumission appropriée n'a été déposée en réponse à une procédure ouverte ou restreinte, pour autant que les conditions initiales du marché ne soient pas substantiellement modifiées et à condition qu'un rapport soit communiqué à la Commission;

b) lorsque les produits concernés sont fabriqués uniquement à des fins de recherche, d'expérimentation, d'étude ou de développement, cette disposition ne comprenant pas la production en quantités visant à établir la viabilité commerciale du produit ou à amortir les frais de recherche et de développement;

c) lorsque, en raison de leur spécificité technique, artistique ou pour des raisons tenant à la protection des droits d'exclusivité, la fabrication ou la livraison des produits ne peut être confiée qu'à un fournisseur déterminé;

d) dans la mesure strictement nécessaire, lorsque l'urgence impérieuse, résultant d'événements imprévisibles pour les pouvoirs adjudicateurs en question n'est pas compatible avec les délais exigés par les procédures ouvertes, restreintes ou négociées visées au paragraphe 2. Les circonstances invoquées pour justifier l'urgence impérieuse ne doivent en aucun cas être imputables aux pouvoirs adjudicateurs;

e) pour les livraisons complémentaires effectuées par le fournisseur initial et destinées soit au renouvellement partiel de fournitures ou d'installations d'usage courant, soit à l'extension de fournitures ou d'installations existantes, lorsque le changement de fournisseur obligerait le pouvoir adjudicateur à acquérir un matériel de technique différente entraînant une incompatibilité ou des difficultés techniques d'utilisation et d'entretien disproportionnées. La durée de ces marchés, ainsi que des marchés renouvelables, ne peut pas, en règle générale, dépasser trois ans.

4 L'article 7, paragraphes 1 et 2, de la loi 2955/2001 prévoit:

«Adjudication avec offre de prix par analyse ou par acte.

1. Les besoins des régimes de santé régionaux et de leurs unités décentralisées, ainsi que les besoins des hôpitaux liés aux régimes de santé régionaux, peuvent être couverts par l'organisation de procédures d'adjudication pour l'achat et la location d'appareils et consommables médicaux, selon la méthode de l'offre, par les fournisseurs, de prix par analyse de laboratoire ou par acte de diagnostic ou de soins. Le prix proposé comprend la cession des appareils, des réactifs, du matériel consommable et l'entretien pour toute la durée du contrat.

5 Sur le fondement de l'article 7, paragraphe 2, de la loi 2955, des arrêtés ministériels conjoints ont été adoptés, lesquels fixent les prix plafonds pour des matériels médicaux y étant énumérés. En particulier, les arrêtés ministériels conjoints DY6a/G.P.73754, du 24 juillet 2002 (FEK 984/31.07.2002), et 8130, du 30 décembre 2003 (FEK B' 1952/30.12.2003), modifiés par la suite par les arrêtés ministériels DY6a/oik.38611 et DY6a/oik.38609, du 12 avril 2005, fixent un prix plafond pour des matériels d'ostéosynthèse, de chirurgie maxillo-faciale, de stimulateurs cardiaques et défibrillateurs, d'électrodes et de matériel de chirurgie cardiaque, ainsi que des filtres d'hémodialyse pour rein artificiel avec les lignes artério-veineuses nécessaires.

7 Estimant que ladite réglementation nationale grecque n'était pas conforme à l'article 6, paragraphe 3, de la directive 93/36, la Commission a engagé à l'encontre de la République hellénique la procédure en manquement prévue à l'article 226 CE en lui adressant, le 18 octobre 2004, une lettre de mise en demeure. Dans leur réponse, les autorités grecques n'ont pas contesté les allégations de la Commission quant à la non-conformité de l'article 7, paragraphe 2, de la loi 2955 avec la directive 93/36 et se sont engagées à abroger cette disposition.

9 Dans sa réponse, du 9 février 2006, la République hellénique a confirmé que les procédures de modification de la réglementation nationale litigieuse seraient achevées à la fin du mois de mai de l'année 2006, date à laquelle une nouvelle loi serait votée par le Parlement grec.

10 N'ayant toutefois reçu aucune communication relative à l'adoption de la nouvelle loi, la Commission a décidé d'introduire le présent recours.

Sur le recours

13 En second lieu, il ressort du silence de la République hellénique qu'elle ne conteste pas que la réglementation nationale litigieuse n'est pas conforme aux obligations découlant des règles fondamentales et des principes généraux du traité, en particulier l'égalité de traitement et l'obligation de transparence.

14 La République hellénique conclut néanmoins au rejet du recours, en faisant valoir que, dans le cadre de la réforme législative relative aux fournitures dans le domaine de la santé, un projet de loi incluant un article relatif à l'abrogation de l'article 7, paragraphe 2, de la loi 2955 va être déposé. Elle précise que le retard est dû aux modifications importantes apportées par ledit projet de loi, qui vise à créer un nouvel environnement juridique dans le domaine très sensible de la santé, et qui garantira tant l'achèvement sans obstacle des procédures de passation de marchés que l'approvisionnement régulier des hôpitaux en matériel indispensable de technique médicale.

16 Or, la disposition litigieuse étant restée en vigueur à l'expiration du délai imparti dans l'avis motivé, le recours introduit par la Commission doit être considéré comme fondé.

17 Par conséquent, il convient de constater que, en maintenant en vigueur l'article 7, paragraphe 2, de la loi 2955 ainsi que les dispositions d'exécution des arrêtés ministériels conjoints DY6a/oik.38611 et DY6a/oik.38609, du 12 avril 2005, la République hellénique a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de l'article 6, paragraphe 3, de la directive 93/36 ainsi que des principes généraux du traité, en particulier l'égalité de traitement et l'obligation de transparence.

18 En vertu de l'article 69, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure, toute partie qui succombe est condamnée aux dépens, s'il est conclu en ce sens. La Commission ayant conclu à la condamnation de la République hellénique et cette dernière ayant succombé en ses moyens, il y a lieu de la condamner aux dépens.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (huitième chambre) déclare et arrête:

1) En maintenant en vigueur l'article 7, paragraphe 2, de la loi 2955/2001 relative aux «Fournitures des hôpitaux et autres unités de santé des régimes régionaux de santé et de prévoyance et autres dispositions» ainsi que les dispositions d'exécution des arrêtés ministériels conjoints DY6a/oik.38611 et DY6a/oik.38609, du 12 avril 2005, la République hellénique a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de l'article 6, paragraphe 3, de la directive 93/36/CEE du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de fournitures, telle que modifiée par la directive 2001/78/CE de la Commission, du 13 septembre 2003, ainsi que des principes généraux du traité, en particulier l'égalité de traitement et l'obligation de transparence.

2) La République hellénique est condamnée aux dépens.

Recours en manquement - Examen du bien-fondé par la Cour - Situation à prendre en considération - Situation à l'expiration du délai fixé par l'avis motivé (Art. 226 CE) (cf. point 15)

Objet

Manquement d'État - Violation de l'art. 6, par. 3, de la directive 93/36/CEE du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de fournitures (JO L 199, p. 1) ainsi que de l'obligation de garantir une concurrence effective et loyale - Disposition nationale classant en catégories l'ensemble des substances à usage médical et fixant un prix maximal déterminé pour chaque catégorie - Disposition constitutive d'un cadre réglementaire qui permet de recourir à la procédure négociée pour des marchés publics de fournitures portant sur des groupes entiers de produits de cette nature, qui se caractérisent par l'impossibilité d'opérer une comparaison.

Dispositif

1) En maintenant en vigueur l'article 7, paragraphe 2, de la loi 2955/2001 relative aux «Fournitures des hôpitaux et autres unités de santé des régimes régionaux de santé et de prévoyance et autres dispositions» ainsi que les dispositions d'exécution des arrêtés ministériels conjoints DY6a/oik.38611 et DY6a/oik.38609, du 12 avril 2005, la République hellénique a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de l'article 6, paragraphe 3, de la directive 93/36/CEE du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de fournitures, telle que modifiée par la directive 2001/78/CE de la Commission, du 13 septembre 2001, ainsi que des principes généraux du traité, en particulier l'égalité de traitement et l'obligation de transparence.

2) La République hellénique est condamnée aux dépens.

Defendant: Hellenic Republic (represented by: S. Chala and D. Tsagkaraki, Agents)

Re:

Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Infringement of Article 6(3) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and of the obligation to ensure effective and fair competition - National provision placing all material for medical use into categories and setting a specific maximum price for each category - Provision forming part of a legislative framework which allows use of the negotiated procedure for public supply contracts in respect of whole groups of products of that nature which are not comparable

Operative part of the judgment

The Court:

1. Declares that, by retaining in force Article 7(2) of Law 2955/2001 relating to the 'Supplies of hospitals and other health units of regional health and pension schemes and other provisions' and Joint Ministerial Decisions DY6a/oik.38611 and DY6a/oik.38609 of 12 April 2005, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 6(3) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001 and has infringed general principles of the Treaty, in particular equal treatment and the obligation of transparency;

2. Orders the Hellenic Republic to pay the costs.

Action brought on 24 November 2006 - Commission of the European Communities v Hellenic Republic

(Case C-481/06)

Language of the case: Greek

Parties

Applicant: Commission of the European Communities (represented by: M. Patakia and X. Lewis)

Defendant: Hellenic Republic

Form of order sought

declare that, by retaining in force Article 7(2) of Law 2955/2001, and by means of the Joint Ministerial Decisions (DI6a/ik 38611 and DI6a/ik 38609 of 12 April 2005) implementing that provision, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligation flowing from Article 6(3) of Directive 93/36/EEC [1] coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts and its obligation, as laid down by the case-law of the Court of Justice of the European Communities, to ensure effective and fair competition;

order the Hellenic Republic to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The Commission received a complaint relating to the provision of Greek legislation which has placed all material for medical use into categories and set a specific maximum price for each category. That provision, in conjunction with the joint ministerial decisions implementing it, constitutes a legislative framework which allows the direct award of public supply contracts for whole groups of the foregoing products which are classified as not comparable.

In the light of the case-law of the Court of Justice, the Commission considers that the legislative framework in question is contrary to Article 6(3) of Directive 93/36 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts and to the obligation to ensure effective and fair competition. Inasmuch as that provision is in the nature of an exception, it must be interpreted narrowly and it is not possible to allow direct awards for whole categories of products. Also, contracting authorities must make sure that effective competition is preserved and ensure transparency in the public supply field, which is not possible with direct awards, apart from the exceptional cases laid down in Article 6(3) of Directive 93/36.

The Greek authorities did not contest the Commission's submissions or the existence of the alleged infringement and announced their intention to amend the legislative provision at issue. Nevertheless, no such amendment had been made known up until the date on which the action was brought.

The Commission consequently considers that the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligation under Article 6(3) of Directive 93/36 and its obligation to ensure effective and fair competition.

Advocate General: J. Mazák,

Registrar: B. Fülöp, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 11 November 2008, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 19 February 2009,

gives the following

Judgment

1 By its application, the Commission of the European Communities seeks a declaration from the Court that, by reason of the fact that the Landkreise (administrative districts) Rotenburg (Wümme), Harburg, Soltau–Fallingbostel and Stade directly concluded with Stadtreinigung Hamburg (City of Hamburg Cleansing Department) a contract for waste disposal without there having been a call for tenders in the context of a formal tendering procedure at European Community level for that services contract, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under the combined provisions of Article 8 and Titles III to VI of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

Legal context

Community law

2 Article 1 of Directive 92/50 provides:

'For the purposes of this Directive:

(a) public service contracts shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority, ...

(b) contracting authorities shall mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

Body governed by public law means any body:

– established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

– having legal personality and – financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law.

(c) service provider shall mean any natural or legal person, including a public body, which offers services. A service provider who submits a tender shall be designated by the term tenderer and one who has sought an invitation to take part in a restricted or negotiated procedure by the term candidate.'

3 Pursuant to Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50:

'Contracting authorities may award public service contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice in the following cases:

(b) when, for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the services may be provided only by a particular service provider.'

The factual background to the case and the pre-litigation procedure

4 Four Landkreise in Lower Saxony, namely Rotenburg (Wümme), Harburg, Soltau-Fallingbostel and Stade, concluded a contract on 18 December 1995 with Stadtreinigung Hamburg relating to the disposal of their waste in the new incineration facility at Rugenberger Damm, with a capacity of 320 000 tonnes per annum. That facility is intended to produce both electricity and heat and its construction was to be completed by 15 April 1999.

5 In that contract, Stadtreinigung Hamburg reserve a capacity of 120 000 tonnes per annum for the four Landkreise in question, for a price calculated using the same formula for each of the parties concerned. That price is to be paid to the facility's operator, the other party to the contract with Stadtreinigung Hamburg, through the intermediary of the latter. The contract is to run for 20 years. The parties agreed to open negotiations five years at the latest before the end of that contract in order to make a decision as to its extension.

6 The contract at issue was concluded directly between the four Landkreise and Stadtreinigung Hamburg without following the tendering procedure provided for in Directive 92/50.

7 By letter of formal notice sent on 30 March 2004, pursuant to the first paragraph of Article 226 EC, the Commission informed the German authorities that, by concluding a contract on waste disposal directly, without issuing a call for tenders or conducting a tendering procedure at European level, the Federal Republic of Germany had disregarded the combined provisions of Article 8 and of Titles III to VI of Directive 92/50.

8 By letter of 30 June 2004 to the Commission, the Federal Republic of Germany stated that the contract at issue finalised an agreement on the shared performance of a public service which was the responsibility of the Landkreise concerned and the City of Hamburg. That Member State explained that the cooperation at district level at issue, the subject-matter of which was an activity taking place within the ambit of the State, did not affect the market and therefore did not fall within the scope of the law on public procurement.

9 Since it considered, despite these explanations, that the Landkreise concerned were public contracting authorities, that the contract on waste disposal was a contract for services for pecuniary interest, concluded in writing, which exceeded the threshold set for the application of Directive 92/50, and that, consequently, it fell within the scope of that directive, the Commission sent a reasoned opinion on 22 December 2004 to the Federal Republic of Germany pursuant to the first paragraph of Article 226 EC.

10 By letter of 25 April 2005, the Federal Republic of Germany reiterated its previous arguments.

11 Taking the view that that line of argument could not refute the claims set out in the reasoned opinion, the Commission decided, under the second paragraph of Article 226 EC, to bring this action.

The action

12 The Commission submits, first, that the Landkreise concerned must be regarded as contracting authorities within the meaning of Directive 92/50 and that the contract at issue is a written contract for pecuniary interest exceeding the threshold set for the application of that directive. In addition, waste disposal is an activity classified as a ‘service’ for the purposes of category 16 in Annex IA to that directive.

13 The Federal Republic of Germany contends, for its part, that the contract at issue is the culmination of a transaction internal to the administrative authorities and that, consequently, it does not fall within the scope of Directive 92/50.

14 According to that Member State, the contracting parties concerned must be regarded as providing administrative cooperation in the performance of their public tasks. In that respect, Stadtreinigung Hamburg could be regarded not as a service provider acting in return for payment, but as a body governed by public law responsible for waste disposal and offering administrative cooperation to neighbouring local authorities in return for reimbursement of its operating costs.

15 In this connection, the Kingdom of the Netherlands, like the Federal Republic of Germany, bases its arguments on paragraphs 16 and 17 of the judgment in Case C-380/98 University of Cambridge [2000] ECR I-8035, concluding that ‘provision of services’ must be understood as referring exclusively to provision of services which may be offered on the market by operators under certain fixed conditions.

16 Those two Member States submit that the content of the contract at issue goes beyond what is provided for under a ‘service contract’ for the purposes of Directive 92/50, since it requires the Landkreise concerned, in return for treatment of waste in the Rugenberger Damm facility, to make available to Stadtreinigung Hamburg, at an agreed rate, landfill capacity which the Landkreise do not themselves use, in order to alleviate the lack of landfill capacity confronting the City of Hamburg.

17 The Federal Republic of Germany also points out that that legal relationship is described in the preamble to the contract as a 'regional cooperation agreement for waste disposal'. It paves the way for cooperation between the contracting parties who, if necessary, will assist each other in the performance of their legal obligation to dispose of waste and will therefore perform that service jointly in the region concerned. It is thus envisaged that, in certain circumstances, the Landkreise concerned will agree to reduce, for a specified period, the quantity of waste delivered in the event of the treatment facility malfunctioning. They thus agree to limit their right to performance of the contract.

18 According to the Commission, the services provided in the present case cannot be regarded as administrative cooperation, insofar as the refuse disposal services do not carry out their activities under statute or other unilateral measures, but on the basis of a contract.

19 The Commission adds that the only permitted exceptions to the application of the directives on public procurement are those which are exhaustively and expressly mentioned therein (see, Case C–107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I-8121, paragraph 43, concerning Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1)). It submits that, in Case C-84/03 Commission v Spain [2005] ECR I-139, paragraphs 38 to 40, the Court confirmed that contracts for horizontal cooperation concluded by local authorities, such as that which the present case concerns, are subject to the law on public procurement.

20 The Federal Republic of Germany disputes that interpretation of the judgment in Commission v Spain, taking the view that in the case which gave rise to those proceedings the Court did not expressly hold that all agreements concluded between administrative bodies fell within the scope of public procurement law but merely criticised the Kingdom of Spain for its general exclusion of agreements concluded between public law bodies from the scope of that law.

21 Secondly, the Commission does not accept that the Federal Republic of Germany can rely on the 'in house' exception, according to which contracts awarded by a contracting authority where, first, the public body exercises over the other contracting party, which is a person legally distinct from that public body, control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and in so far as, secondly, that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the public body do not fall within the scope of the public procurement directives (see, to that effect, Teckal, paragraphs 49 and 50). According to the Commission, the condition relating to the existence of such control is not fulfilled in the present case, since none of the contracting bodies concerned exercises any power over the management of Stadtreinigung Hamburg.

22 By contrast, the Federal Republic of Germany takes the view that, in the context of the Hamburg Metropolitan Region, the requirement relating to the intensity of the control exercised, which must be measured against the yardstick of the public interest (see, to that effect, Case C–26/03 Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau [2005] ECR I-1, paragraph 50), is satisfied since the authorities concerned exercise reciprocal control over each other. Any divergence from the objectives jointly defined would cause the cooperation to cease altogether. The principle of 'give and take' implies that Stadtreinigung Hamburg and the Landkreise concerned have an interest in maintaining that cooperation and, consequently, in complying with the objectives jointly defined.

23 On the basis of the judgment in Case C-295/05 Asemfo [2007] ECR I-2999, the Kingdom of the Netherlands submits that the condition relating to the intensity of the control exercised may be fulfilled even if the control exercised by the public body concerned is more limited than that exercised over its own departments. It does not regard that condition as implying identical control. Only similar control is required.

24 In the Commission's opinion, that judgment does not constitute a relaxation of the case-law resulting from Teckal. It finds only that the criterion relating to the intensity of the control exercised may also be satisfied where a specific legal framework establishes a relationship of dependency and subordination, allowing similar control to be exercised by several contracting authorities. That is not the situation in the present case.

25 Thirdly, the Commission submits that the Federal Republic of Germany has not proved that, for technical reasons, solely Stadtreinigung Hamburg was in a position to conclude the contract at issue and that, consequently, it could rely on the derogation provided for in Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50.

26 The Federal Republic of Germany submits that, had a call for tenders been issued, Stadtreinigung Hamburg would not necessarily have been able to submit a tender because, in 1994, that city did not have the capacity to recover waste that could have prompted it to participate in such a call for tenders. It is only in the light of the need of the Landkreise concerned to recover their waste, which only later became apparent, and of the assurance that the Landkreise would use a future facility that the construction of Rugenberger Damm facility was envisaged.

27 That Member State also points out that the said Landkreise were assured that the facility planned by Stadtreinigung Hamburg would be commissioned within a foreseeable period, an assurance that no other tenderer would have been able to provide.

28 Fourthly, the Commission rejects the arguments of the Federal Republic of Germany that the application of Directive 92/50 must be excluded, pursuant to Article 86(2) EC, where, as in the present case, it leads to the performance by public bodies of the task of waste disposal assigned to them being obstructed.

29 The Federal Republic of Germany considers that the interpretation of Directive 92/50 adopted by the Commission would lead, first, to the Landkreise concerned being unable to entrust waste disposal – which is a task in the public interest at Community level – to Stadtreinigung Hamburg, and to their having to entrust that task to the operator providing the most economically advantageous offer, without any guarantee that the public service would be carried out satisfactorily or on a permanent basis, and, secondly, to the capacities of the new plant not being used profitably.

30 That Member State points out that if the contract at issue had not been concluded, none of the parties would have been able to perform its public task. The City of Hamburg, in particular, would not have been able to build a facility with extra capacity in order to then try, without any guarantee of success, on economic grounds to sell unused capacity on the market.

31 First of all, it must be observed that the Commission's action concerns only the contract concluded between Stadtreinigung Hamburg and four neighbouring Landkreise for reciprocal treatment of waste, and not the contract governing the relationship between Stadtreinigung Hamburg and the operator of the Rugenberger Damm waste treatment facility.

32 Pursuant to Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50, public service contracts are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and one of the contracting authorities listed in Article 1(b) of that directive, which includes regional or local authorities such as the Landkreise concerned in this action for failure to fulfil obligations.

33 Under Article 1(c) of that directive, the service provider party to the contract may be 'any natural or legal person, including a public body'. Thus, the fact that the service provider is a public entity distinct from the beneficiary of the services does not preclude the application of Directive 92/50 (see, to that effect, Commission v Spain, paragraph 40, regarding a public supply and works contract).

34 However, the Court's case-law shows that a call for tenders is not mandatory where a public authority which is a contracting authority exercises over the separate entity concerned control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, provided that that entity carries out the essential part of its activity with the public authority or with other controlling local or regional authorities (see, to that effect, Teckal, paragraph 50, and Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau, paragraph 49).

35 Likewise, the Court has held, in respect of the delegation by a municipality of a public service to an inter-municipal cooperative the object of which was exclusively to provide services to the affiliated municipalities, that that could legally take place without a call for tenders, since it considered that, notwithstanding the autonomous aspects of that cooperative's management by its board, the affiliated municipalities had to be regarded as together exercising control over it (see, to that effect, Case C-324/07 Coditel Brabant [2008] ECR I–0000, paragraph 41).

36 However, it is undisputed in the present case that the four Landkreise concerned do not exercise any control which could be described as similar to that which they exercise over their own departments, whether over the other contracting party, namely Stadtreinigung Hamburg, or over the operator of the Rugenberger Damm waste incineration facility, which is a company whose capital consists in

37 It must nevertheless be observed that the contract at issue establishes cooperation between local authorities with the aim of ensuring that a public task that they all have to perform, namely waste disposal, is carried out. That task relates to the implementation of Council Directive 75/442/EEC of 15 July 1975 on waste (OJ 1975 L 194, p. 39), which requires the Member States to draw up plans for waste management providing, in particular for 'appropriate measures to encourage rationalisation of the collection, sorting and treatment of waste', one of the most important of such measures being, pursuant to Article 5(2) of Council Directive 91/156/EEC of 18 March 1991, amending Directive 75/442 (OJ 1991 L 78, p. 32), ensuring that waste be treated in the nearest possible installation.

38 In addition, it is common ground that the contract between Stadtreinigung Hamburg and the Landkreise concerned must be analysed as the culmination of a process of inter-municipal cooperation between the parties thereto and that it contains requirements to ensure that the task of waste disposal is carried out. The purpose of that contract is to enable the City of Hamburg to build and operate a waste treatment facility under the most favourable economic conditions owing to the waste contributions from the neighbouring Landkreise, making it possible for a capacity of 320 000 tonnes per annum to be attained. For that reason, the construction of that facility was decided upon and undertaken only after the four Landkreise concerned had agreed to use the facility and entered into commitments to that effect.

39 The subject-matter of that contract, as expressly indicated in the first clauses thereof, is primarily the undertaking given by Stadtreinigung Hamburg that it would make available annually to the four Landkreise concerned a treatment capacity of 120 000 tonnes of waste with a view to thermal utilisation in the Rugenberger Damm facility. As is subsequently stated in the contract, Stadtreinigung Hamburg does not assume any responsibility for the operation of that facility and does not offer any guarantee in that regard. In the event of the facility ceasing to operate or malfunctioning, its obligations are limited to offering replacement capacity, that obligation being conditional, however, in two respects. First, the disposal of the City of Hamburg's waste has to take priority and, secondly, some capacity must be available in other facilities to which Stadtreinigung Hamburg has access.

40 In return for the treatment of their waste in the Rugenberger Damm facility, as described in the preceding paragraph of this judgment, the four Landkreise concerned are to pay Stadtreinigung Hamburg an annual fee, the method of calculation and means of payment of which are specified in the contract. The waste delivery and removal capacity are to be agreed upon for each week between Stadtreinigung Hamburg and a representative designated by those Landkreise. It is also apparent from the contract that Stadtreinigung Hamburg, which has a right to the payment of damages against the operator of the facility, undertakes, should those Landkreise have suffered damage, to defend the latter's interests against that operator by means of litigation if necessary.

41 The contract at issue also provides for some commitments on the part of the contracting local districts that are directly related to the public service objective. While the City of Hamburg assumes responsibility for most of the services forming the subject-matter of the contract concluded between it and the four Landkreise concerned, the latter are to make available to Stadtreinigung Hamburg the landfill capacity which they do not use themselves in order to alleviate the lack of landfill capacity of the City of Hamburg. They also agree to take for disposal in their landfill the quantities of slag remaining after incineration that cannot be utilised in proportion to the quantities of waste which they have delivered.

42 Moreover, under the contract, the parties thereto must, if need be, assist each other in the context of the performance of their legal obligation to dispose of waste. It is thus provided, inter alia, that in some circumstances, for example where the facility concerned has temporarily exceeded its capacity, the four Landkreise concerned agree to reduce the amount of waste delivered and thus to restrict their right of access to the incineration facility.

43 Lastly, the supply of waste disposal services gives rise to payment to the operator of the facility only. By contrast, the terms of the contract at issue show that the cooperation which the latter establishes between Stadtreinigung Hamburg and the four Landkreise concerned does not give rise to any financial transfers between those entities other than those corresponding to the reimbursement of the part of the charges borne by those Landkreise but paid by Stadtreinigung Hamburg to the operator.

44 It thus appears that the contract in question forms both the basis and the legal framework for the future construction and operation of a facility intended to perform a public service, namely thermal incineration of waste. That contract was concluded solely by public authorities, without the participation of any private party, and does not provide for or prejudice the award of any contracts that may be necessary in respect of the construction and operation of the waste treatment facility.

45 The Court has pointed out, in particular, that a public authority has the possibility of performing the public interest tasks conferred on it by using its own resources, without being obliged to call on outside entities not forming part of its own departments, and that it may do so in cooperation with other public authorities (see Coditel Brabant, paragraphs 48 and 49).

46 The Commission stated at the hearing, moreover, that, had the cooperation at issue here taken place by means of the creation of a body governed by public law to which the various local authorities concerned entrusted performance of the task in the public interest of waste disposal, it would have accepted that the use of the facility by the Landkreise concerned did not fall under the rules on public procurement. It takes the view, however, that, in the absence of such a body for inter-municipal cooperation, a call for tenders should have been issued for the service contract concluded between Stadtreinigung Hamburg and the Landkreise concerned.

47 It must be observed though, first, that Community law does not require public authorities to use any particular legal form in order to carry out jointly their public service tasks. Secondly, such cooperation between public authorities does not undermine the principal objective of the Community rules on public procurement, that is, the free movement of services and the opening-up of undistorted competition in all the Member States, where implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations and requirements relating to the pursuit of objectives in the public interest and the principle of equal treatment of the persons concerned, referred to in Directive 92/50, is respected, so that no private undertaking is placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis competitors (see, to that effect, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau, paragraphs 50 and 51).

48 It must, furthermore, be stated that there is nothing in the information in the file submitted to the Court to indicate that, in this case, the local authorities at issue were contriving to circumvent the rules on public procurement.

49 In the light of all those factors, and without there being any need to rule on the other pleas of the Federal Republic of Germany in its defence, the Commission's action must be dismissed.

Costs

50 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Federal Republic of Germany applied for costs and the Commission has been unsuccessful, the Commission must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds, the Court (Grand Chamber) hereby:

1. Dismisses the action;

2. Orders the Commission of the European Communities to pay the costs.

Case C-480/06

v

Federal Republic of Germany

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations – Directive 92/50/EEC – No formal European tendering procedure for the award of waste treatment services – Cooperation between local authorities)

Summary of the Judgment

Approximation of laws – Procedures for the award of public service contracts – Directive 92/50 – Scope
(Council Directive 92/50, Art. 1)

A contract which forms both the basis and the legal framework for the future construction and operation of a facility intended to perform a public service, namely thermal incineration of waste, in so far as it was concluded solely by public authorities, without the participation of any private party, and does not provide for or prejudice the award of any contracts that may be necessary in respect of the construction and operation of the waste treatment facility does not fall within the scope of application of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts.

A public authority has the possibility of performing the public interest tasks conferred on it either by using its own resources or in cooperation with other public authorities, without being obliged to call on outside entities not forming part of its own departments. In that connection, first, Community law does not require public authorities to use any particular legal form in order to carry out jointly their public service tasks. Secondly, such cooperation between public authorities does not undermine the principal objective of the Community rules on public procurement, that is, the free movement of services and the opening-up of undistorted competition in all the Member States, where implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations and requirements relating to the pursuit of objectives in the public interest and the principle of equal treatment of the persons concerned, referred to in Directive 92/50, is respected, so that no private undertaking is placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis competitors.

delivered on 19 February 2009 (1)

Case C–480/06

Commission of the European Communities
v
Federal Republic of Germany

(Public service contracts – Scope of Directive 92/50/EEC – Procedure for the award of public service contracts – Technical reasons)

Introduction

1. In this case, brought under Article 226 EC, the Commission of the European Communities is asking the Court to declare that the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under the combined provisions of Article 8 and Titles III to VI of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, (2) on the ground that the Landkreise (administrative districts) Harburg, Rotenburg (Wümme), Soltau-Fallingbostel and Stade directly concluded with the refuse collection services of the City of Hamburg a contract for waste disposal without there having been a call for tenders in the context of an open or restricted tendering procedure at Community level for that services contract.

2. The rules on procedures for the award of public service contracts introduced by Directive 92/50 constitute one of the measures intended to establish the internal market by contributing to the removal of barriers to the freedom to provide services. It cannot be denied that they constitute measures which benefit both providers of services and their recipients.

3. In the present case, refuse disposal is a service the recipients of which are four administrative districts. In reality, the number of recipients is much greater. The administrative districts in fact are only intermediaries for their inhabitants who are the final recipients of that service. It is worth pointing out that, should it become apparent that a service provider had been chosen contrary to the requirements of Community law, it is those inhabitants whose interests would be harmed most.

I – Legal context

4. Pursuant to Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50, 'public service contracts' are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority, to the exclusion of the contracts listed in paragraphs (i) to (ix) of that provision.

5. Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 provides:

'"contracting authorities" shall mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

"Body governed by public law" means any body:

– established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

– having legal personality and – financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law.

6. Under Article 1(c) of Directive 92/50, a 'service provider' means any natural or legal person, including a public body, which offers services.

7. Under Article 8 of Directive 92/50, contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex IA are to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI of that directive. Annex IA covers, under category No 16 'sewage and refuse disposal services; sanitation and similar services'.

8. The structure of Article 11 of Directive 92/50 shows clearly that contracting authorities are to award their service contracts using the open procedure or the restricted procedure, apart from in the cases set out in paragraphs 2 and 3 of that article, where contracting authorities may award their public service contracts either by negotiated procedure, with prior publication of a contract notice (the case referred to in paragraph 2) or a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice (the case referred to in paragraph 3).

9. Under Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50, contracting authorities may award public service contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice where, for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the services may be provided only by a particular service provider.

II – Facts

10. The Commission's action concerns a contract concluded between the administrative districts of Harburg, Rotenburg (Wümme), Sotau-Fallingbostel and Stade ('the districts') on the one hand and the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services on the other ('the contract in dispute').

11. The districts and the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services are bodies governed by public law responsible for waste disposal.

12. The Land of Lower Saxony, in which the districts are situated, the Land of Schleswig-Holstein and the Free and Hanseatic City of Hamburg make up the Hamburg Metropolitan Region.

13. The contract in dispute was concluded on 18 December 1995 directly, without an open or restricted tendering procedure at Community level. It is apparent from the preamble to the contract that the refuse disposal services of the City of Hamburg offered the districts, by letter of 30 November 1994, a partial capacity of 120 000 tonnes per year of the total annual capacity of the waste incineration plant at Rugenberger Damm ('the Rugenberger Damm plant') and the districts accepted that offer by letter of 6 January 1995.

14. In the contract in dispute, the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services agreed to make available to the districts a capacity of 120 000 tonnes per year for the purpose of the incineration of waste in the Rugenberger Damm plant and the districts agreed to pay the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services an annual fee, part of which was fixed and part of which depended on the amount delivered.

15. The contract in dispute provided that its duration was to be 20 years from 15 April 1999 since, at the time the contract was concluded, work on the Rugenberger Damm plant was at the planning stage.

III – Pre-litigation procedure and procedure before the Court

16. The Commission decided to act following a complaint from a citizen who considered that he was paying excessive charges for waste management.

17. Since it took the view that, by directly concluding a contract for waste disposal in which the contracting parties were the districts and the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services without a call for tenders or tendering procedure at Community level, the Federal Republic of Germany might have infringed the combined provisions of Article 8 and Titles III to VI of Directive 92/50, the Commission, on 30 March 2004, sent a letter of formal notice to the Federal Republic of Germany pursuant to Article 226 EC.

18. The Federal Republic of Germany replied by letter of 30 June 2004. It stated that, from its perspective, the contract in dispute was an agreement on the shared performance of a public service which was the responsibility of the districts and the City of Hamburg and that it was a question of cooperation at local district level.

19. Being dissatisfied with the comments of the Federal Republic of Germany, the Commission sent it a reasoned opinion dated 22 December 2004 in which it declared that the contract in dispute fell within the scope of Directive 92/50 and that, consequently, the direct conclusion of the contract between the districts and the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services had infringed that directive.

20. Notwithstanding the arguments set out by the Federal Republic of Germany in its answer to the reasoned opinion of 25 April 2005, the Commission brought the present action, by which it asked the Court to declare that the Federal Republic of Germany had failed to fulfil its obligations under the combined provisions of Article 8 and Titles III to VI of Directive 92/50 and to order the Federal Republic of Germany to pay the costs.

21. On the basis of arguments set out in its defence and rejoinder, the Federal Republic of Germany requested the Court to dismiss the action and to order the applicant to pay the costs.

22. By order of the President of the Court of 14 June 2007, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Republic of Finland were given leave to intervene in this case in support of the form of order sought by the Federal Republic of Germany. However, the Republic of Finland has not lodged a statement in intervention.

23. The Federal Republic of Germany requested a hearing. That hearing took place on 11 November 2008 in the presence of the agents of the Federal Republic of Germany and of the Commission.

IV – Analysis

24. In its application, the Commission starts from the hypothesis that the districts are contracting authorities within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, that the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services are service providers for the purposes of Article 1(c) of Directive 92/50 and that the contract in dispute concluded between the districts and the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services is a public service contract for the purposes of Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50. Since the object of the contract in dispute is a service listed in Annex IA to Directive 92/50 and that it is not one of the cases which would warrant the award of that contract using the negotiated procedure with prior publication of a contract notice (Article 11(2) of Directive 92/50) or use of the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice (Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50), the contract in dispute could only have been concluded by using, as appropriate, the open procedure or the restricted procedure, in accordance with Article 11(4) of Directive 92/50.

25. I intend to examine the merits of the Commission's complaint in the light of the arguments put forward by the Federal Republic of Germany, in which it does not deny that the contract in dispute was not the subject of a call for tenders, but seeks to establish that the districts were not obliged to issue a call for tenders for the purposes of concluding the contract in dispute, on four grounds.

26. First, the contract in dispute is an example of cooperation between State bodies and, thus, concerns only internal relationships of the organisation of the State in the performance of public tasks. It follows that it does not fall under Directive 92/50. Secondly, the contract in dispute does not constitute a contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of that directive. Thirdly, even if the contract at issue should be regarded as a contract for the purposes of Directive 92/50, there is a technical reason, within the meaning of Article 11(3)(b) thereof, on the grounds of which the contract could have been concluded using a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice. Fourthly, in accordance with Article 86(2) EC, it was not necessary to initiate an open or restricted procedure, given that such a procedure would have prevented the districts and City of Hamburg refuse disposal services from carrying out their duties.

27. In defence of its position, the Federal Republic of Germany submits that the contract in dispute was a transaction internal to the State which, as a general rule, does not fall within the scope of Directive 92/50. It submits, like the Netherlands Government, that that directive concerns the award of tenders to undertakings and applies only where the State has decided that it does not want to carry out a task itself but to procure the corresponding service on the market.

28. In this connection, the Court has held that the directives on public procurement (3) are, in general, applicable in the case where a contracting authority plans to conclude a contract for pecuniary interest with an entity which is legally distinct from it, whether or not that entity is itself a contracting authority. (4) Likewise, that directive applies both where a contract is awarded for the purposes of fulfilling the task of meeting needs in the general interest and where it is unrelated to that task. (5)

29. However, according to the Court there is an exception to that general rule. The directives on public procurement are not applicable, even if the contracting party is an entity legally distinct from the contracting authority, where two conditions are met. First, the public authority, which is a contracting authority, must exercise over the distinct entity in question a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, secondly, that entity must carry out the essential part of its activities with the local authority or authorities which control it. (6)

30. It is moreover in accordance with that derogation that the Court has held that it is impossible automatically to exclude relations established between public law institutions from the scope of those directives on public procurement, regardless of the nature of those relations. (7)

31. In the present case, it is obvious that, as the Federal Republic of Germany states, the contract in dispute is a means of cooperation between State bodies. It does not follow from that fact alone, however, that the contract in dispute does not fall within the scope of Directive 92/50. The opposite finding would be possible only were it to be established that the two conditions set out for the first time in the judgment in Teckal are met.

32. As the Federal Republic of Germany correctly points out, there is another option for a public authority falling within the definition of a ‘contracting authority’ for the purpose of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 to avoid the application of that directive. That is a situation in which a public authority performs the tasks conferred on it in the public interest by using its own administrative, technical and other resources, without being obliged to call on outside entities not forming part of its own departments. Since in such a case there can be no question of a contract for pecuniary interest concluded with an entity legally distinct from the contracting authority, there is therefore no need to apply the Community rules in the field of public procurement. (8)

33. That means that public authorities are not obliged, when performing tasks in the public interest, to turn to the market to obtain the provision of a service. They have the option of choosing between using their own resources (in which case, Directive 92/50 is not applicable) or turning to the market.

34. In this respect, I do not share the opinion held by the Federal Republic of Germany that, in the present case, cooperation between two distinct State bodies can be considered to amount to the use of the resources of the contracting authority. The City of Hamburg refuse disposal services cannot be regarded as the resources of the districts concerned, which are the contracting authorities.

B – Public service contracts for the purposes of Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50

35. The Federal Republic of Germany takes the view that the contract in dispute is not a public service contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50 for three reasons. (9) First, the contract is an internal measure of wider cooperation between State bodies covered by the Hamburg Metropolitan Region. Secondly, the refuse collection services of the City of Hamburg are not, in relation to the contract, service providers but, on the other hand, as the public body responsible for waste disposal, offer administrative assistance to the districts, who also deal with waste disposal. Thirdly, as regards its content, the contract goes beyond a contract for current services.

36. I am of the opinion that those arguments are not such as to cast doubt on the conclusion that the contract entered into between, on the one hand, the four districts and, on the other, the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services is a public service contract within the meaning of Article 1 (a) of Directive 92/50.

37. It is apparent from the Court's case-law that the existence of a contract for the purpose of Article 1(a) of Directive 93/36 requires an agreement between two separate persons. (10)

38. That condition is indeed fulfilled in the present case. Moreover, the subject-matter of the contract in dispute, that is, the incineration of waste, falls within the services covered by category No 16 of Annex IA to Directive 92/50.

39. Since the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services cannot be regarded as the districts' own resources, (11) the application of Directive 92/50 could only be excluded if the two cumulative conditions for the application of the exception which I referred to in point 29 of this Opinion were fulfilled.

40. Thus, it is necessary to examine whether the districts exercise over the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services a control which is similar to that which they exercise over their own departments and whether the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services carry out the essential part of their activities with the districts.

41. The Court has been required on several occasions to consider the condition relating to 'similar control'. It is clear from its case-law that, in order to determine whether a public authority exercises over the other party to the contract a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, it is necessary to take account of not only all the legislative provisions but also the relevant circumstances. It must result from that examination that a contracted body is subject to a control which enables the contracting authority to influence that body's decisions. That must be a power of decisive influence over both strategic objectives and significant decisions of that entity. (12)

42. The Federal Republic of Germany submits, in this connection, that the condition of similar control was fulfilled, since the districts concerned exercise a reciprocal control over one another at the level of the Hamburg Metropolitan Region.

43. On this issue, there is nothing to indicate that the districts participate in the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services and thus exercise control over them.

44. Besides, as the Commission correctly observes, the refuse disposal services do not perform their activities for the districts under statute or other public law provisions, but on the basis of a contract. The contract in dispute represents the only legal connection between the districts and the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services and that contract does not make it possible for the districts to exercise control.

45. In my opinion, a general reference to common objectives is clearly insufficient; in order for control to exist, there must be something more substantial.

46. The principle of 'something given for something received', on which cooperation in Hamburg Metropolitan Region is founded according to the Federal Republic of Germany, allows the districts to exercise, at the most, an indirect control over the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services.

47. Since the first condition for the application of the exception is not, in my view, fulfilled, it is unnecessary to examine whether the second has been met. I note, however, that waste disposal represents only part of the activities of the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services.

48. In the light of the foregoing, I can find nothing which indicates that the contract in dispute does not constitute a public service contract for the purpose of Directive 92/50. That means that it could only lawfully have been awarded in accordance with that directive.

C – Negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice as an exception to the general rule for the award of public service contracts

49. In its defence, the Federal Republic of Germany also submits that the only party with which the districts could conclude the contract in dispute was the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services, who had a guaranteed site for the construction of a waste incineration plant. The fact that in the Hamburg Metropolitan Region no other site was available for the construction of such plants and that the existing plants did not have enough capacity available constitutes a technical reason within the meaning of Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50 which would justify the award of a public service contract using the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contact notice.

50. It is evident from the structure of Article 11 of Directive 92/50 that paragraph 3 is an exception to the general rule in paragraph 4, according to which contracting authorities must award their service contracts using the open procedure or the restricted procedure.

51. In this respect, as an exception to the rules seeking to guarantee the effectiveness of the rights granted by the EC Treaty in the public service contracts sector, Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted strictly, and the burden of proving the existence of exceptional circumstances justifying a derogation lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances. (13)

52. The Court has already had to consider the existence of 'technical reasons' in Joined Cases C–20/01 and C–28/01 Commission v Germany. (14) The Court ruled that a technical reason relating to environmental protection might, in certain circumstances, be taken into consideration in order to assess whether the contract at issue could be awarded to a given supplier. Admittedly, in that judgment the Court did not give an exhaustive definition of technical reasons, but it did define them negatively by stating the facts which did not constitute technical reasons for the purposes of Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50.

53. In Commission v Greece, (15) the Court held, concerning Article 20(2)(c) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, (16) which includes a rule similar to that set out in Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50, that the application of that provision was subject to two cumulative conditions, namely, first, that there are technical reasons connected to the works which are the subject-matter of the contract and, secondly, that those technical reasons make it absolutely necessary to award that contract to a particular contractor.

54. I am of the view that, having regard to the case-law cited, the Federal Republic of Germany has not proven that the use of Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50 was justified in the present case.

55. If we were to accept the Federal Republic of Germany's line of argument, which is based on Council Directive 75/442/EEC on waste, (17) that would mean that that directive would deprive Directive 92/50 of its full effect.

D – Directive 92/50 as a factor preventing the districts from performing the task of waste disposal

56. The Federal Republic of Germany also submits that the only way in which the districts and City of Hamburg refuse disposal services, as public law bodies charged with waste disposal, could undertake their duties was by concluding the contract in dispute. Directive 92/50 obliges the districts to award a contract to the service provider offering the lowest prices or the most economically advantageous offer in an open or restricted procedure. Thus, the obligation stemming from Directive 92/50 to issue the call for tenders in an open or restricted tendering procedure would prevent performance of the duties which the districts and City of Hamburg refuse disposal services are obliged to undertake. By virtue of Article 86(2) EC, it does not apply, as such, to the districts and City of Hamburg refuse disposal services.

57. Article 86(2) EC provides that undertakings entrusted with the operation of services of general economic interest or having the character of a revenue-producing monopoly must be subject to the rules contained in the Treaty, in particular to the rules on competition, in so far as the application of such rules does not obstruct the performance, in law or in fact, of the particular tasks assigned to them. The Court has ruled that, in the case of a provision which allows, in certain circumstances, derogation from the rules of the Treaty, that article is to be interpreted strictly (18) and that it was incumbent on the Member State or the undertaking which sought to rely on that provision to show that the conditions for its application were fulfilled. (19)

58. I am of the opinion that the Federal Republic of Germany has not satisfied the burden of proof imposed on it.

59. It appears that the Federal Republic of Germany's line of argument is based, as regards this issue, on two premisses. First, if the contract in dispute had not existed, neither the districts not the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services would have been able to carry out their duties in relation to waste disposal. The Rugenberger Damm plant was built only as a result of that contract. Secondly, the contract in dispute would not have been concluded if the districts had carried out a call for tenders as part of an open or restricted tendering procedure because, in such a procedure, it would have been necessary to award the contract to the service provider with the lowest prices or the offer which was most economically advantageous.

60. In my opinion, both the first and the second premiss are incorrect.

61. I am not convinced that the contract in dispute was the only means of enabling the performance of the duties in relation to waste disposal. As the Commission correctly points out, the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services could also have offered their available facilities to other takers. (20)

62. Nor do I consider that the application of the open or restricted procedure would have precluded the conclusion of such a contract, in the form in which it was concluded between the districts and the City of Hamburg refuse disposal services, given that, in those procedures, a tender must be awarded to the service provider with the lowest prices or the most economically advantageous offer.

63. The Court has already held that in order to award contracts the contracting authority may rely, where the tender is awarded to the most economically advantageous offer, on various criteria which may change according to the tender at issue, and that each of the award criteria used by the contracting authority to identify the most economically advantageous offer need not necessarily be of a purely economic nature. (21) The Court has explicitly stated that the contracting authority could take into account criteria relating to the preservation of the environment at the various stages of a public procurement procedure. (22)

V – Conclusion

64. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court should rule as follows:

– declare that the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under the combined provisions of Article 8 and Titles III to VI of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, on the ground that the Landkreise of Harburg, Rotenburg (Wümme), Soltau-Fallingbostel and Stade directly concluded with the City of Hamburg refuse collection services a contract for waste disposal and that there had been no call for tenders in the context of an open or restricted tendering procedure at Community level for that services contract;

– order the Federal Republic of Germany to pay the costs;

– order the Kingdom of the Netherlands, as intervener, to pay its own costs.

Dans l'affaire C-480/06, ayant pour objet un recours en manquement au titre de l'article 226 CE, introduit le 24 novembre 2006,

Action brought on 24 November 2006 - Commission of the European Communities v Federal Republic of Germany

(Case C-480/06)

Language of the case: German

Parties

Applicant: Commission of the European Communities (represented by: X. Lewis and B. Schima, Agents)

Defendant: Federal Republic of Germany

Form of order sought

A declaration that the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8 in conjunction with Titles III to VI of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, [1] in that the Landkreise Rotenburg (Wümme), Harburg, Soltau-Fallingbostel and Stade concluded a waste disposal services contract with Stadtreinigung Hamburg directly and did not make that service contract subject to a Community-wide open or restricted tender procedure;

An order that the Federal Republic of Germany pay the costs of the proceedings.

Pleas in law and main arguments

On 18 December 1995 four local counties (Landkreise) in Lower Saxony concluded a waste disposal services contract with Stadtreinigung Hamburg (Hamburg city cleaning authority), a body governed by a public law. That contract was concluded without carrying out an award procedure and without a Community-wide call for tenders.

The Landkreise are contracting authorities and the contract at issue is a service contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing which exceeds the relevant threshold for the application of Directive 92/50/EEC and thus falls within the scope of that directive.

The fact that Stadtreinigung Hamburg as a body governed by public law is itself a contracting authority within the meaning of Directive 92/50/EEC does not alter the fact that the contract in dispute falls within the scope of that directive: as the Court of Justice has expressly declared, the directives on procurement law are always applicable if a contracting authority intends to conclude a contract for pecuniary interest in writing with a body which is distinct, in form, from itself and which has the power to make decisions independently of that authority.

There are no facts apparent which justify a private award of the contract at issue in the form of a negotiated procedure without a prior contract notice.

The Commission also does not agree with the view of the Federal Government that cooperation between local authorities as a product of municipal autonomy is not subject to procurement law, regardless of the legal form which it may take. Municipal autonomy cannot lead to a situation where local authorities are permitted to disregard the provisions on public awards of contracts. In so far as those local authorities were to conclude contracts on the provision of services with other bodies, even if those bodies were also contracting authorities themselves, they would be subject to procurement law. The German Government was also not able to prove that the service contract at issue could only be granted to a specific service provider for technical reasons.

For those reasons the Commission comes to the conclusion that the Federal Republic of Germany infringed Directive 92/50/EEC by directly concluding a waste disposal services contract without carrying out an award procedure and without a Community-wide call for tenders.

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 13 March 2008,

Judgment

1 This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) and Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by ('Directive 89/665').

2 The reference was made in the context of proceedings between pressetext Nachrichtenagentur GmbH ('PN'), on the one hand, and the Republik Österreich (Bund), APA-OTS Originaltext – Service GmbH ('APA-OTS') and APA Austria Presse Agentur registrierte Genossenschaft mit beschränkter Haftung ('APA'), on the other, concerning a contract for press agency services.

Legal framework

3 Article 3(1) of Directive 92/50 provides:

'1. In awarding public service contracts or in organising design contests, contracting authorities shall apply procedures adapted to the provisions of this Directive.'

4 Under Article 8 of that directive:

'Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI'.

5 Article 9 of that directive states:

'Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I B shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.'

6 Article 10 of the same directive provides:

'... Contracts which have as their object services listed in both Annexes I A and I B shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI where the value of the services listed in Annex I A is greater than the value of the services listed in Annex I B. Where this is not the case, they shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.'

7 Article 11(3) of that directive provides:

'Contracting authorities may award public service contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice in the following cases:

(e) for additional services not included in the project initially considered or in the contract first concluded but which have, through unforeseen circumstances, become necessary for the performance of the service described therein, on condition that the award is made to the service provider carrying out such service:

– when such additional services cannot be technically or economically separated from the main contract without great inconvenience to the contracting authorities,

– when such services, although separable from the performance of the original contract, are strictly necessary for its completion.

However, the aggregate estimated value of contracts awarded for additional services may not exceed 50% of the amount of the main contract;

(f) for new services consisting in the repetition of similar services entrusted to the service provider to which the same contracting authorities awarded an earlier contract, provided that such services conform to a basic project for which a first contract was awarded according to the procedures referred to in paragraph 4. As soon as the first project is put up for tender, notice must be given that the negotiated procedure might be adopted and the total estimated cost of subsequent services shall be taken into consideration by the contracting authorities when they apply the provisions of Article 7. This procedure may be applied solely during the three years following the conclusion of the original contract.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

8 APA was established in Austria as a limited liability registered cooperative following the Second World War. Almost all of the Austrian daily newspapers as well as the Austrian radio and television broadcasting corporation, ORF, were members of the cooperative. Together with its subsidiaries, APA is the main operator on the news agencies market in Austria and traditionally provides the Republik Österreich (Bund) with various news agency services.

9 PN has been present on the Austrian news agency market since 1999 but has hitherto issued press releases for the Austrian federal authorities to a limited extent only. PN has fewer journalists working for it than APA and does not have available to it such large archives as APA.

10 In 1994, prior to its accession to the European Union, the Republik Österreich (Bund) concluded an agreement ('the basic agreement') with APA relating to the provision of certain services for remuneration. That agreement essentially allows the Austrian federal authorities to access and use current information (the so-called 'basic service'), to request historical information and previous press releases from an APA database, known as 'APADok', and to use the APA original text service, known as 'OTS', both for the information they provide and for the dissemination of their own press releases. The APADok database contains the data from the basic service since 1 January 1988 and the press releases handled by the OTS service since 1 January 1989.

11 The basic agreement was concluded for an indefinite period, subject to a clause by which the parties waived the right to terminate the agreement until 31 December 1999.

12 Article 2(c) of the basic agreement provided:

'For online inquiries for APA information services as defined in Article 1, APA shall bill as licensing revenues for the use of the electronic data processing system, per minute (net) CPU, a price corresponding to the lowest graduated consumer price of the official tariff (currently ATS 67, HT per minute CPU) less 15%.'

13 The agreement also included provisions relating to the date of the first price increase, the maximum amount of each increase and indexation of prices on the basis of the consumer price index for 1986, the reference value being the index figure calculated for 1994. Article 5(3) of the agreement provided inter alia: '... it is expressly agreed that the values of the remuneration provided for in Article 2(a) and (b) shall be guaranteed to be constant. For the calculation of the indexation, the starting point shall be the 86 consumer price index (CPI 86) published by the Austrian Central Statistics Office (ÖSTAT) or the following index replacing it.'

14 In September 2000, APA established a wholly-owned subsidiary, APA-OTS, in the form of a limited liability company. The two companies are bound by a contract excluding profit and loss, which, according to APA and APA-OTS, provides for APA-OTS to be integrated financially, organisationally and economically within APA and for APA-OTS to conduct and manage its business on the basis of instructions from APA. APA-OTS is furthermore required to pass its annual profits to APA, whilst APA has to make good any annual losses incurred by APA-OTS.

15 In September 2000, APA transferred to APA-OTS the operation of its OTS service. This alteration was notified to the Republik Österreich (Bund) in October 2000. An authorised employee of APA gave an assurance to the Austrian authorities that, following that transfer, APA was jointly and severally liable with APA-OTS, and that there would be no change in the overall service performed. The Austrian authorities thereupon authorised the future provision of the OTS service by APA-OTS, and the remuneration for that service has since then been paid direct to APA-OTS.

16 Furthermore, the provisions of the basic agreement were amended by an initial supplemental agreement signed in 2001 and effective as from 1 January 2002. When the transition was made to the euro, that supplemental agreement adjusted the initial contract, as described in paragraphs 17 to 20 of this judgment.

17 First, the amount of the annual charge for the use of editorial articles and media archives, ATS 10 080 000, was replaced with EUR 800 000. Under the indexation clause, the price for 2002 should have been ATS 11 043 172 (converted to EUR 802 538.61 due to transition to the euro). The decision was made to use not that amount but the rounded-off figure of EUR 800 000, giving a reduction of 0.3%.

18 Secondly, the price fixed for online inquiries for APA information services, which had been ATS 67 per minute, was replaced with a price of EUR 4.87 per minute. Apart from the rounding-off effected at the time of transition to the euro, the basic amount of that price remained unchanged.

19 Thirdly, for the calculation of the indexation, the index calculated for 1994 on the basis of the consumer price index for 1986 was replaced, as reference point, by the index calculated for 2001 on the basis of the consumer price index for 1996. In that regard, the first supplemental agreement amended inter alia amended Article 5(3) of the basic agreement to read as follows:

'It is expressly agreed that the values of the remuneration provided for in Article 2(a) and (b) shall be guaranteed to be constant. For the calculation of the indexation, the starting point shall be the 96 consumer price index (CPI 96) published by the Austrian Central Statistics Office (ÖSTAT) or the following index replacing it.'

20 Fourthly, by way of derogation from that indexation mechanism, some prices were fixed immediately for 2002 to 2004. The price of ATS 8.50 per line for inclusion of press releases in the OTS service was replaced by fixed prices of EUR 0.66 per line for 2002, EUR 0.67 for 2003 and EUR 0.68 for 2004. Had the indexation clause been applied, the price for 2002 should have been ATS 9.31 per line (rounded off to EUR 0.68 per line). The price was thus reduced by 2.94% for 2002 and 1.47% for 2003.

21 A second supplemental agreement, signed in October 2005 and effective as from 1 January 2006, introduced two further amendments to the basic agreement. By that second supplemental agreement, the basic agreement was amended as described in paragraphs 22 and 23 of this judgment.

22 First, the waiver of the right to terminate the agreement, agreed in the basic agreement until 31 December 1999, was agreed once again until December 2008.

23 Secondly, the reduction given on the price for online inquiries for APA information services, fixed at 15% in the basic agreement, was increased to 25%. In that regard, the second supplemental agreement amended Article 2(c) of the basic agreement as follows:

'The following provisions of the [basic agreement as amended by the first supplemental agreement] shall be amended as follows as from 1 January 2006:

1. Article 2(c): the percentage of 15% shall be replaced by 25%.

24 In 2004, PN offered its news agency services to the Republik Österreich (Bund), but that offer did not lead to the signing of an agreement.

25 By actions brought on 4 and 19 July 2006, PN sought, by way of principal head of claim, a declaration from the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Procurement Office) that the severing of the basic agreement, following the restructuring of APA in 2000, and the supplemental agreements signed in 2001 and 2005, which it referred to as 'de facto awards', were unlawful and, in the alternative, that the choice of the various award procedures in question was unlawful.

26 In regard to the time-limits for bringing an action, the Bundesvergabeamt points out that, whilst the transactions complained of date back to 2000, 2001 and 2005, the legal remedy available under domestic law in respect of unlawful awards of contracts, namely an application for a declaration having the effect of dissolving the agreement, was created only subsequently, that is to say with effect from 1 February 2006. The period provided for this legal remedy is six months from the date of the unlawful award. The Bundesvergabeamt deems it appropriate to apply Paragraph 1496 of the Austrian General Civil Code (Allgemeines Bürgerliches Gesetzbuch – ABGB), under which limitation periods do not run if the requisite legal remedy is not available, provided that such application is compatible with Community law.

27 In those circumstances, the Bundesvergabeamt decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Are the terms "awarding" in Article 3(1) of Directive 92/50… and "awarded" in Articles 8 and 9 of that directive to be interpreted as encompassing circumstances in which a contracting authority intends to obtain services in the future from a service provider established as a limited liability company where those services were previously supplied by a different service provider who is the sole shareholder in the future service provider and has control of the future service provider? In such a case is it legally relevant that the contracting authority has no guarantee that throughout the entire period of the original contract the shares in the future service provider will not be disposed of in whole or in part to third parties and moreover has no guarantee that the membership of the original service provider, which is in the form of a co-operative society, will remain unchanged throughout the entire contract period?

(2) Are the terms "awarding" in Article 3(1) of Directive 92/50… and "awarded" in Articles 8 and 9 of that directive to be interpreted as encompassing circumstances in which, during the period of validity of a contract concluded for an indefinite period with certain service providers for the joint provision of services, a contracting authority agrees with those service providers amendments to the charges for specified services under the contract and reformulates an index-linking clause, where these amendments result in different charges and are made upon the changeover to the euro?

(3) Are the terms "awarding" in Article 3(1) of Directive 92/50… and "awarded" in Articles 8 and 9 of that directive to be interpreted as encompassing circumstances in which, during the period of validity of a contract concluded for an indefinite period with certain service providers for the joint provision of services, a contracting authority agrees with those service providers to amend the contract, first, renewing for a period of three years a waiver of the right to terminate the contract by notice, the waiver no longer being in force at the time of the amendment, and second, also laying down a higher rebate than before for certain volume-related charges within a specified area of supply?

(4) If the answer to any of the first three questions is that there is an award: is Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50…, or are any other provisions of Community law, such as, in particular, the principle of transparency, to be interpreted as permitting a contracting authority to obtain services by awarding a single contract in a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, where parts of the services are covered by exclusive rights as referred to in Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50/EEC? Or do the principle of transparency or any other provisions of Community law require in the case of an award of mostly non-priority services that a contract notice is none the less published prior to the contract award, to enable undertakings in the sectors concerned to assess whether services are in fact being awarded that are subject to an exclusive right? Or do the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts require that in such a case services can only be awarded in separate tender procedures, according to whether they are or are not subject to exclusive rights, in order to allow at least competitive tendering as to part?

(5) If the answer to the fourth question is to the effect that a contracting authority may award services which are not subject to exclusive rights in a single procurement procedure together with services which are subject to an exclusive right: can an undertaking which does not have any right to deal with data that is subject to an exclusive right possessed by an undertaking which has a dominant position in the market establish that in that respect it has the capacity, for the purposes of procurement law, to provide a comprehensive service to a contracting authority, by relying on Article 82 EC and an obligation derived from that provision on the market-dominant undertaking which has the power of disposal over the data and is established in a Member State to provide the data on reasonable conditions?

(6) If the answer to the first, second and third questions is to the effect that the partial contract transfer in 2000 and/or one or both of the contract amendments referred to constituted new awards; and furthermore should the fourth question be answered to the effect that either when awarding a contract for services not subject to exclusive rights by means of a separate award procedure, or when awarding a combined contract (in the present case for press releases, the basic service and rights to use APADok), a contracting authority should have first published a contract notice to ensure that the intended contract award was transparent and capable of being reviewed:

Is "harmed" in Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665… and in Article 2(1)(c) of that directive to be interpreted as meaning that an undertaking in a case such as the present one is harmed, within the meaning of those provisions of Directive 89/665…, simply where he has been deprived of the opportunity to participate in a procurement procedure because the contracting authority did not, prior to making the award, publish a contract notice, on the basis of which the undertaking could have tendered for the contract to be awarded, could have submitted an offer or could have had the claim that exclusive rights were involved reviewed by the competent procurement review body?

(7) Are the Community law principle of equivalence and the Community law requirement for effective legal protection, or the principle of effectiveness, to be interpreted, having regard to any other relevant provisions of Community law, as conferring an individual and unconditional right on an undertaking against a Member State such that it has at least six months from the time when it could have known that a contract award infringed procurement law to bring legal proceedings before the competent national authority to seek damages following the contract award on account of an infringement of Community procurement law, while it must be allowed additional time for periods when it could not make such a claim owing to the absence of a statutory basis in national law, in circumstances where under national law claims for damages based on infringements of national law are normally subject to a limitation period of three years from the date of knowledge of the wrongdoer and of the damage and, in the absence of legal protection in a particular area of law, the limitation period does not (continue to) run?'

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

28 The Court notes as a preliminary point that, even though the agreement at issue in the main proceedings was concluded prior to the Republic of Austria's accession to the European Union, the relevant Community rules apply to such an agreement as from the date of that State's accession (see, to that effect, Case C–76/97 Tögel [1998] ECR I–5357, paragraph 14).

29 By its first three questions, the Bundesvergabeamt asks, essentially, in which circumstances amendments to an existing agreement between a contracting authority and a service provider may be regarded as constituting a new award of a public services contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50.

30 Directive 92/50 does not provide a specific answer to those questions, but it does contain a number of pertinent indications which should be placed in the overall framework of Community rules governing public procurement.

31 It is clear from the case-law that the principal objective of the Community rules in the field of public procurement is to ensure the free movement of services and the opening-up to undistorted competition in all the Member States (see Case 26/03 Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau [2005] ECR I-1, paragraph 44). That two-fold objective is expressly set out in the second, sixth and twentieth recitals in the preamble to Directive 92/50.

32 In order to pursue that two-fold objective, Community law applies inter alia the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality, the principle of equal treatment of tenderers and the obligation of transparency resulting therefrom (see, to that effect, Case C-275/98 Unitron Scandinavia and 3-S [1999] ECR I-8291, paragraph 31; Case C-324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress [2000] ECR I-10745, paragraphs 60 and 61; and Case C-496/99 P Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta [2004] ECR I-3801, paragraphs 108 and 109).

33 Directive 92/50 implements those principles and that obligation of transparency in respect of contracts coming within its ambit and concerning, either solely or for the most part, services listed in Annex I A thereto, by requiring inter alia certain award procedures. For contracts coming within its ambit and concerning, either solely or for the most part, services listed in Annex I B thereto, the directive does not impose the same rules for the award procedures, but that category of public contracts nevertheless remains subject to the fundamental rules of Community law and the obligation of transparency resulting therefrom (see, to that effect, Case C-507/03 Commission v Ireland [2007] ECR I-0000, paragraphs 26, 30 and 31).

34 In order to ensure transparency of procedures and equal treatment of tenderers, amendments to the provisions of a public contract during the currency of the contract constitute a new award of a contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50 when they are materially different in character from the original contract and, therefore, such as to demonstrate the intention of the parties to renegotiate the essential terms of that contract (see, to that effect, Case C-337/98 Commission v France [2000] ECR I-8377, paragraphs 44 and 46).

35 An amendment to a public contract during its currency may be regarded as being material when it introduces conditions which, had they been part of the initial award procedure, would have allowed for the admission of tenderers other than those initially admitted or would have allowed for the acceptance of a tender other than the one initially accepted.

36 Likewise, an amendment to the initial contract may be regarded as being material when it extends the scope of the contract considerably to encompass services not initially covered. This latter interpretation is confirmed in Article 11(3)(e) and (f) of Directive 92/50, which imposes, in respect of contracts concerning, either solely or for the most part, services listed in Annex I A thereto, restrictions on the extent to which contracting authorities may use the negotiated procedure for awarding services in addition to those covered by an initial contract.

37 An amendment may also be regarded as being material when it changes the economic balance of the contract in favour of the contractor in a manner which was not provided for in the terms of the initial contract.

38 It is in the light of the aforegoing considerations that the questions referred to the Court are to be answered.

The first question

39 By its first question, the Bundesvergabeamt is referring to the transfer to APA-OTS in 2000 of the OTS services hitherto provided by APA. It asks, essentially, whether a change in the contractual partner, in circumstances such as those at issue in the main proceedings, is a new award of contract within the meaning of Articles 3(1), 8 and 9 of Directive 92/50.

40 As a rule, the substitution of a new contractual partner for the one to which the contracting authority had initially awarded the contract must be regarded as constituting a change to one of the essential terms of the public contract in question, unless that substitution was provided for in the terms of the initial contract, such as, by way of example, provision for sub-contracting.

41 According to the order for reference, APA-OTS is established as a limited liability company and therefore has separate legal personality from APA, the initial contractor.

42 It is also common ground that, since the OTS services were transferred from APA to APA-OTS in 2000, the contracting authority makes payment for those services directly to APA-OTS, and no longer to APA.

43 However, some of the specific characteristics of the transfer of the activity in question permit the conclusion that such amendments, made in a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, do not constitute a change to an essential term of the contract.

44 According to the information in the case-file, APA-OTS is a wholly-owned subsidiary of APA, APA has the power to instruct APA-OTS in the conduct and management of its business and the two companies are bound by a contract under which profit and loss are transferred to and assumed by APA. The case-file also shows that a person authorised to represent APA assured the contracting authority that, following the transfer of the OTS services, APA was jointly and severally liable with APA-OTS and that there would be no change in the overall performance experienced.

45 Such an arrangement is, in essence, an internal reorganisation of the contractual partner, which does not modify in any fundamental manner the terms of the initial contract.

46 In that context, the Bundesvergabeamt asks whether legal consequences follow from the fact that the contracting authority does not have an assurance that the shares in APA-OTS will not be transferred to third parties at any time during the currency of the contract.

47 If the shares in APA-OTS were transferred to a third party during the currency of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, this would no longer be an internal reorganisation of the initial contractual partner, but an actual change of contractual partner, which would, as a rule, be an amendment to an essential term of the contract. Such an occurrence would be liable to constitute a new award of contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50.

48 Similar reasoning would apply if the transfer of shares in the subsidiary to a third party was already provided for at the time of transfer of the activities to the subsidiary (see, to that effect, Case C-29/04, Commission v Austria [2005] ECR I-9705, paragraphs 38 to 42).

49 Until such a development occurs, however, the analysis in paragraph 45 of this judgment remains valid, namely that the situation envisaged is an internal reorganisation of the contractual partner. This conclusion is not affected by the fact that there is no guarantee that the shares in the subsidiary will not be transferred to a third party at any time during the currency of the contract.

50 The Bundesvergabeamt also asks what legal consequences arise from the lack of guarantee, for the contracting authority, that there will be no changes in the composition of the shareholders in the service provider at any time during the currency of the contract.

51 Public contracts are regularly awarded to legal persons. If a legal person is established as a public company listed on a stock exchange, it follows from its very nature that the composition of its shareholders is liable to change at any time. As a rule, such a situation does not affect the validity of the award of a public contract to such a company. The situation may be otherwise in exceptional cases, such as when there are practices intended to circumvent Community rules governing public contracts.

52 Similar considerations apply in the case of public contracts awarded to legal persons established not as publicly-listed companies but as limited liability registered cooperatives, as in the main proceedings. Any changes to the composition of the shareholders in such a cooperative will not, as a rule, result in a material contractual amendment.

53 Accordingly, the conclusion in paragraph 45 of this judgment is not affected by those considerations either.

54 It follows that the answer to the first question must be that the terms ‘awarding’ and ‘awarded’, used in Articles 3(1), 8 and 9 of Directive 92/50, must be interpreted as not covering a situation, such as that in the main proceedings, where services supplied to the contracting authority by the initial service provider are transferred to another service provider established as a limited liability company, the sole shareholder of which is the initial service provider, controlling the new service provider and giving it instructions, provided that the initial service provider continues to assume responsibility for compliance with the contractual obligations.

The second question

55 By its second question, the Bundesvergabeamt refers to the amendments made to the basic agreement by the first supplemental agreement, signed in 2001 and effective as from 1 January 2002. It asks, essentially, whether certain price amendments constitute a new award of a contract for the purposes of Directive 92/50.

56 This question concerns, first, the conversion of prices to euros without changing their intrinsic amount, secondly, the conversion of prices to euros entailing a reduction in their intrinsic amount and, thirdly, the reformulation of a price indexation clause.

57 The answer must be that, where, following the changeover to the euro, an existing contract is changed in the sense that the prices initially expressed in national currency are converted into euros, it is not a material contractual amendment but only an adjustment of the contract to accommodate changed external circumstances, provided that the amounts in euros are rounded off in accordance with the provisions in force, including those of Council Regulation (EC) No 1103/97 of 17 June 1997 on certain provisions relating to the introduction of the euro (OJ 1997 L 162, p. 1).

58 Where the rounding off of the prices converted into euros exceeds the amount authorised by the relevant provisions, that is an amendment to the intrinsic amount of the prices provided for in the initial contract. The question then arises as to whether such a change in prices constitutes a new award of a contract.

59 It is evident that the price is an important condition of a public contract (see, to that effect, Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta, paragraph 117).

60 Amending such a condition during the period of validity of the contract, in the absence of express authority to do so under the terms of the initial contract, might well infringe the principles of transparency and equal treatment as between tenderers (see, to that effect, Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta, paragraph 121).

61 Nevertheless, the conversion of contract prices into euros during the course of the contract may be accompanied by an adjustment of their intrinsic amount without giving rise to a new award of a contract, provided the adjustment is minimal and objectively justified; this is so where it tends to facilitate the performance of the contract, for example, by simplifying billing procedures.

62 In the situation at issue in the main proceedings, the annual fee for the use of editorial articles and media archives was reduced by a mere 0.3% in order to give a round figure to facilitate calculations. Moreover, the per-line prices for inclusion of press releases in the OTS service were reduced by 2.94% and 1.47% for 2002 and 2003 respectively, so that they would be expressed in round figures, also liable to facilitate calculations. Not only did those price adjustments relate to a small amount, but they also operated to the detriment rather than to the advantage of the contractor, who consented to a reduction in the prices which would have resulted from the conversion and indexation rules normally applicable.

63 In such circumstances, it can be found that an adjustment to the prices of a public contract during its currency does not constitute an amendment to the essential conditions of that contract such as to constitute a new award of a contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50.

64 With respect to the reformulation of the indexation clause, the Court notes that Article 5(3) of the basic agreement provided inter alia that '[f]or the calculation of the indexation, the starting point [was to] be the 86 consumer price index (CPI 86) published by the Austrian Central Statistics Office (ÖSTAT) or the following index replacing it.'

65 It follows that the basic agreement had provided for the price index to which it referred to be replaced by a subsequent index.

66 The first supplemental agreement replaced the price index referred to in the basic agreement, namely the 1986 consumer price index (VPI 86) published by ÖSTAT, by a more recent index, namely the 1996 consumer price index (VPI 96), also published by ÖSTAT.

67 As stated in paragraph 19 of this judgment, that supplemental agreement used as a reference point the index calculated for 2001, the year in which it was concluded, instead of the one for 1994, the year in which the basic agreement was concluded. That updating of the reference point is consistent with the updating of the price index.

68 It follows that the first supplemental agreement merely applied the stipulations of the basic agreement as regards keeping the indexation clause up to date.

69 In such circumstances, the Court considers that the reference to a new price index does not constitute an amendment to the essential conditions of the initial agreement such as to constitute a new award of a contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50.

70 It follows that the answer to the second question must be that the terms 'awarding' and 'awarded', used in Articles 3(1) and 8 and 9 of Directive 92/50, must be interpreted as not covering an adjustment of the initial agreement to accommodate changed external circumstances, such as the conversion to euros of prices initially expressed in national currency, the minimal reduction in the prices in order to round them off, and the reference to a new price index where provision was made in the initial agreement to replace the price index fixed previously.

The third question

71 By its third question, the Bundesvergabeamt refers to the amendments made to the basic agreement by the second supplemental agreement, signed in October 2005 and effective as from 1 January 2006.

72 The Bundesvergabeamt asks, essentially, whether a new award of a contract results, first, from a renewal of the waiver of the right to terminate the contract by notice and, secondly, from an increase in the rebates granted on the prices of certain services covered by the contract.

73 First of all, as regards the conclusion of a new waiver of the right to terminate the contract during the period of validity of a contract concluded for an indefinite period, the Court observes that the practice of concluding a public services contract for an indefinite period is in itself at odds with the scheme and purpose of the Community rules governing public contracts. Such a practice might, over time, impede competition between potential service providers and hinder the application of the provisions of Community directives governing advertising of procedures for the award of public contracts.

74 Nevertheless, Community law, as it currently stands, does not prohibit the conclusion of public service contracts for an indefinite period.

75 Likewise, a clause by which the parties undertake not to terminate for a given period a contract concluded for an indefinite period is not automatically considered to be unlawful under Community law governing public procurement.

76 As is apparent from paragraph 34 of this judgment, in determining whether the conclusion of such a clause constitutes a new award of contract, the relevant criterion is whether that clause must be regarded as being a material amendment to the initial contract (see, to that effect, Commission v France, paragraphs 44 and 46).

77 The clause at issue in the main proceedings formally sets out the waiver of any right to terminate the contract during the period from 2005 to 2008.

78 The Court notes, however, that, following the expiry on 31 December 1999 of the waiver of the right to terminate contained in the basic agreement, the contract at issue in the main proceedings could have been terminated at any time, subject to notice being given. It remained in effect, however, for the period from 2000 to 2005 inclusive, since neither the contracting authority nor the service provider exercised their right to terminate the contract.

79 There is nothing in the case-file to indicate that, during the period from 2005 to 2008 covered by the waiver of the right to terminate the contract, the contracting authority would have actually considered terminating the contract during its currency and put it out to tender again if that clause had not been present. Even if it had intended to do so, the time period envisaged by the waiver, namely three years, was not such that it would have been prevented from doing so for an excessive period in relation to the time necessary to organise such a procedure. In those circumstances, it has not been demonstrated that such a waiver of the right to terminate the contract, provided that it is not systematically re-inserted in the contract, entails a risk of distorting competition, to the detriment of potential new tenderers. Consequently, it cannot be held to be a material amendment to the initial agreement.

80 It follows that, in circumstances such as those at issue in the main proceedings, the presence of a waiver of the right to terminate the contract for a period of three years during the period of validity of a services contract concluded for an indefinite period does not constitute a new award of a contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50.

81 Secondly, regarding the higher rebate provided for in the second supplemental agreement, the Court observes that the basic agreement provided, in respect of the services in question, for ‘a price corresponding to the lowest graduated consumer price of the official tariff … less 15%’.

82 According to the information provided to the Court, that reference is to the degressive tariff applied by APA, in application of which the prices of the services in question are reduced when the use of those services by APA's contractual partner increases.

83 According to the same information, the increase in the rate of the rebates from 15% to 25%, provided for by the second supplemental agreement, is tantamount to applying a lower price. Even though the formal presentation may be different, the reduction of a price and the increase of a rebate have a comparable economic effect.

84 In those circumstances, the increase of the rebate may be interpreted as coming within the ambit of the clauses laid down in the basic agreement.

85 Moreover, an increase in the rebate, which has the effect of reducing the remuneration received by the contractor as compared to what was initially provided for, does not shift the economic balance of the contract in favour of the contractor.

87 It follows from the foregoing that, in a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, the fact of laying down, in a supplemental agreement, rebates greater than those initially provided for on certain volume-related prices within a specific area of supply, is not to be regarded as being a material contractual amendment and therefore is not a new award of a contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50.

88 Consequently, the answer to the third question must be that the terms 'awarding' and 'awarded', used Articles 3(1), 8 and 9 of Directive 92/50, must be interpreted as not covering a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, where a contracting authority, through the use of a supplemental agreement, agrees with the contractor, during the period of validity of a contract concluded with it for an indefinite period, to renew for a period of three years a waiver of the right to terminate the contract by notice, the waiver no longer being in force at the time of the amendment, and agrees with it to lay down higher rebates than those initially provided for in respect of certain volume-related prices within a specified area of supply.

89 In the light of the answers given to the first, second and third questions, it is not necessary to answer the fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh questions.

Costs

90 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the referring court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby rules:

1. The terms 'awarding' and 'awarded', used in Articles 3(1), 8 and 9 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, must be interpreted as not covering a situation, such as that in the main proceedings, where services supplied to the contracting authority by the initial service provider are transferred to another service provider established as a limited liability company, the sole shareholder of which is the initial service provider, controlling the new service provider and giving it instructions, provided that the initial service provider continues to assume responsibility for compliance with the contractual obligations.

2. The terms 'awarding' and 'awarded', used in Articles 3(1) and 8 and 9 of Directive 92/50, must be interpreted as not covering an adjustment of the initial agreement to accommodate changed external circumstances, such as the conversion to euros of prices initially expressed in national currency, the minimal reduction in the prices in order to round them off, and the reference to a new price index where provision was made in the initial agreement to replace the price index fixed previously.

3. The terms ‘awarding’ and ‘awarded’, used Articles 3(1), 8 and 9 of Directive 92/50, must be interpreted as not covering a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, where a contracting authority, through the use of a supplemental agreement, agrees with the contractor, during the period of validity of a contract concluded with it for an indefinite period, to renew for a period of three years a waiver of the right to terminate the contract by notice, the waiver no longer being in force at the time of the amendment, and agrees with it to lay down higher rebates than those initially provided for in respect of certain volume-related prices within a specified area of supply.

v

Republik Österreich (Bund) and Others

(Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Bundesvergabeamt)

(Public procurement – Directive 92/50/EEC – Procedures for the award of public service contracts – Concept of 'award of a contract')

Summary of the Judgment

1. Approximation of laws – Procedures for the award of public service contracts – Directive 92/50 – Award of a contract – Meaning – Amendments to the provisions of a public contract during the currency of the contract

(Council Directive 92/50, Arts 3(1), 8 and 9)

2. Approximation of laws – Procedures for the award of public service contracts – Directive 92/50 – Award of a contract – Meaning – Amendments to the provisions of a public contract during the currency of the contract

(Council Directive 92/50, Arts 3(1), 8 and 9)

3. Approximation of laws – Procedures for the award of public service contracts – Directive 92/50 – Award of a contract – Meaning – Amendments to the provisions of a public contract during the currency of the contract

(Council Directive 92/50, Arts 3(1), 8 and 9)

1. The terms 'awarding' and 'awarded', used in Articles 3(1), 8 and 9 of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts must be interpreted as not covering a situation where services supplied to the contracting authority by the initial service provider are transferred to another service provider established as a limited liability company, the sole shareholder of which is the initial service provider, controlling the new service provider and giving it instructions, provided that the initial service provider continues to assume responsibility for compliance with the contractual obligations.

Amendments to the provisions of a public contract during the currency of the contract constitute a new award of a contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50 when they are materially different in character from the original contract and, therefore, such as to demonstrate the intention of the parties to renegotiate the essential terms of that contract. An amendment to a public contract during its currency may be regarded as being material when it introduces conditions which, had they been part of the initial award procedure, would have allowed for the admission of tenderers other than those initially admitted.

Although the substitution of a new contractual partner for the one to which the contracting authority had initially awarded the contract must be regarded as constituting such a material change to one of the essential terms of the public contract in question, unless that substitution was provided for in the terms of the initial contract, the fact remains that an internal reorganisation of the contractual partner does not modify in any fundamental manner the terms of the initial contract. Accordingly, when the new contractual partner is a wholly-owned subsidiary of the former contractual partner and the latter has the power to instruct the subsidiary in the conduct and management of its business and the two companies are bound by a contract under which profit and loss are transferred, such an arrangement does not constitute a change to an essential term of the contract liable to constitute a new award of contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50.

2. The terms 'awarding' and 'awarded', used in Articles 3(1) and 8 and 9 of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts must be interpreted as not covering an adjustment of the initial agreement to accommodate changed external circumstances, such as the conversion to euros of prices initially expressed in national currency, a minimal reduction in the prices in order to round them off, and a reference to a new price index where provision was made in the initial agreement to replace the price index fixed previously.

Amendments to the provisions of a public contract during the currency of the contract constitute a new award of a contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50 when they are materially different in character from the original contract and, therefore, such as to demonstrate the intention of the parties to renegotiate the essential terms of that contract. An amendment to a public contract during its currency may be regarded as being material when it introduces conditions which, had they been part of the initial award procedure, would have allowed for the admission of tenderers other than those initially admitted.

Where, following the changeover to the euro, an existing contract is changed in the sense that the prices initially expressed in national currency are converted into euros, it is not a material contractual amendment but only an adjustment of the contract to accommodate changed external circumstances, provided that the amounts in euros are rounded off in accordance with the provisions in force. Moreover, such a conversion of contract prices into euros during the course of the contract may be accompanied by an adjustment of their intrinsic amount, which may even exceed the amount authorised by the relevant provisions relating to the introduction of the euro, without giving rise to a new award of a contract, provided the adjustment is minimal and objectively justified; this is so where it tends to facilitate the performance of the contract, for example, by simplifying billing procedures. With respect to the reformulation of the indexation clause, the reference to a new price index does not constitute an amendment to the essential conditions of the initial agreement such as to constitute a new award of a contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50 in so far as that reformulation merely applied the stipulations of the basic agreement as regards keeping the indexation clause up to date.

3. The terms 'awarding' and 'awarded', used Articles 3(1), 8 and 9 of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts must be interpreted as not covering a situation where a contracting authority, through the use of a supplemental agreement, agrees with the contractor, during the period of validity of a contract concluded with it for an indefinite period, to renew for a period of three years a waiver of the right to terminate the contract by notice, the waiver no longer being in force at the time of the amendment, and agrees with it to lay down higher rebates than those initially provided for in respect of certain volume-related prices within a specified area of supply.

Since the relevant criterion for determining whether the conclusion of a new waiver of the right to terminate the contract constitutes a new award of contract is whether that clause must be regarded as being a material amendment to the initial contract, a clause which does not entail a risk of distorting competition, to the detriment of potential new tenderers, cannot be held to be such an amendment and, therefore, does not constitute a new award of a contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50.

The increase in the rate of the rebates, provided for by a supplemental agreement, having a comparable economic effect to a price reduction and therefore being liable to be interpreted as coming within the ambit of the clauses laid down in the basic agreement, is not to be regarded as being a material contractual amendment and therefore is not a new award of a contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50. Moreover, an increase in the rebate, which has the effect of reducing the remuneration received by the contractor as compared to what was initially provided for, does not shift the economic balance of the contract in favour of the contractor. Additionally, the mere fact that the contracting authority obtains a greater rebate on part of the services covered by the contract is not liable to entail a distortion of competition to the detriment of potential tenderers.

3. The terms 'awarding' and 'awarded', used Articles 3(1), 8 and 9 of Directive 92/50, must be interpreted as not covering a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, where a contracting authority, through the use of a supplemental agreement, agrees with the contractor, during the period of validity of a contract concluded with it for an indefinite period, to renew for a period of three years a waiver of the right to terminate the contract by notice, the waiver no longer being in force at the time of the amendment, and agrees with it to lay down higher rebates than those initially provided for in respect of certain volume-related prices within a specified area of supply.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
KOKOTT delivered on 13 March 2008 1

Case C–454/06

pressetext Nachrichtenagentur GmbH

(Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Bundesvergabeamt (Austria))

(Public procurement contracts – News agencies – Concept of 'award' – Contractual amendment – Negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice – Exclusivity rights – Proof of standing of the contractor – 'Essential facilities' – Effective legal protection – Directives 92/50/EEC and 89/665/EEC)

I – Introduction

1. In this case the Austrian Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Procurement Office) is referring to the Court of Justice a very comprehensive series of questions on the interpretation of various provisions of Community law in the field of public procurement law. The essential issue is the interpretation of the concept of 'award' in the context of public procurement law. In particular it is necessary to clarify in what circumstances an amendment to an existing contract is to be regarded as the award of a new public service contract, with the result that where appropriate a public procurement procedure must be carried out beforehand and undertakings left out of consideration are to be afforded legal protection.

2. The background to this reference for a preliminary ruling is a bitter dispute relating to the supply of news agency services to the Austrian federal authorities, in which pressetext Nachrichtenagentur, a relatively new supplier on the Austrian market, is taking legal action in relation to contractual relations which traditionally exist between the Republic of Austria and the long-established Austria Presse Agentur and which were the subject of amendments in the years 2000, 2001 and 2005.

II – Legal background

A – Community law

3. Community law in this case is governed by two directives in the area of public procurement law, namely:

– Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (2) ('Directive 92/50'); and

– Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public workscontracts, (3) as amended by Directive 92/50 ('Directive 89/665'). (4)

1. Relevant provisions of Directive 92/50

4. Article 1(f) in the general provisions in Title I of Directive 92/50 contains the following definition:

'[For the purposes of this Directive] negotiated procedures shall mean those national procedures whereby authorities consult service providers of their choice and negotiate the terms of the contract with one or more of them'.

5. Article 3 of Directive 92/50 also in Title I provides as follows:

'1. In awarding public service contracts or in organising design contests, contracting authorities shall apply procedures adapted to the provisions of this Directive.

2. Contracting authorities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between different service providers.

6. Title II of Directive 92/50 contains Articles 8 to 10 under the heading 'Two-tier application' which are worded as follows:

'Article 8

Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex IA shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI.

Article 9

Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex IB shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.

Article 10

Contracts which have as their object services listed in both Annexes IA and IB shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI where the value of the services listed in Annex IA is greater than the value of the services listed in Annex IB. Where this is not the case, they shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.'

7. Title III of Directive 92/50 is headed 'Choice of award procedures and rules governing design contests'. It contains Article 11(3), which contains the following provision:

'Contracting authorities may award public service contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice in the following cases:

(b) when, for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the services may be provided only by a particular service provider;

8. Article 31(3) of Directive 92/50, which is in Title VI, provides as follows:

'If, for any valid reason, the service provider is unable to provide the references requested by the contracting authority, he may prove his economic and financial standing by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate.'

2. Relevant provisions of Directive 89/665

9. Article 1 of Directive 89/665 provides as follows:

'1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC, and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles … on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

2. Member States shall ensure that there is no discrimination between undertakings claiming injury in the context of a procedure for the award of a contract as a result of the distinction made by this Directive between national rules implementing Community law and other national rules.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

10. Article 2 of Directive 89/665 provides as follows:

'1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting-aside of decisions taken unlawfully …;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

2. The powers specified in paragraph 1 may be conferred on separate bodies responsible for different aspects of the review procedure.

5. The Member States may provide that where damages are claimed on the grounds that a decision was taken unlawfully, the contested decision must first be set aside by a body having the necessary powers.

B – National law

11. The element of Austrian law to be highlighted is Paragraph 331 of the Bundesvergabegesetz (Law on federal procurement) in the version that entered into force on 1 February 2006 (5) (hereinafter referred to as the 'BVergG 2006'), which forms the legal basis for the proceedings for a declaration brought before the Federal Procurement Office, and provides in part as follows:

'(1) Where an undertaking had an interest in the conclusion of a contract within the scope of application of this Federal Law, it may, in so far as it has suffered harm in consequence of the alleged infringement, apply for a declaration that:

1. the decision to make a direct award or to conduct a procurement procedure without prior publication was unlawful on account of a breach of this Federal Law or regulations made under it or on account of an infringement of directly effective Community law, or

4. a contract award which has been made directly to an undertaking without any other undertakings having participated in the procedure was manifestly unlawful under this Federal Law.'

12. According to Paragraph 332(2) and (3) of the BVergG 2006, the right to a declaration provided for in Paragraph 331 of the BVergG 2006 lapses not later than six months after the contract has been awarded.

13. It follows from Paragraph 132(3) of the BVergG 2006 that a successful application under Paragraph 331(1)(4) of that law will result in the contractual relationship being void as from the time of a definitive declaration of illegality.

14. The action for damages is to be distinguished from proceedings for a declaration; in the case of the former it is the Austrian civil courts that have jurisdiction rather than the Federal Procurement Office. Under Paragraph 341(2) of the BVergG 2006, an action for damages is admissible only if proceedings for a declaration have been successfully conducted.

III – Facts and main proceedings

15. The factual background to this case as it appears from the information contained in the order for reference may be summarised as follows.

A – The news agencies involved in the proceedings

16. Austria Presse Agentur ('APA') was established in Austria after the Second World War (6) in the form of a cooperative society, (7) of which nearly all Austrian daily newspapers and also Austrian broadcaster, ORF, are members. Together with its group companies, APA is the market leader in the news agencies market in Austria and traditionally provides the Republic of Austria with various news agency services.

17. Pressetext Nachrichtenagentur GmbH ('PN') has been active on the Austrian news agencies market since 1999 but has hitherto issued press releases for federal departments to a limited extent only. PN also has fewer journalists working for it than APA and does not have available to it such a large archive as APA. In 2004 PN offered the Republic of Austria news agency services; this offer did not however result in the conclusion of a contract.

B – The relevant contractual relations between APA and the Republic of Austria

18. In 1994, prior to its accession to the European Union, the Republic of Austria entered into a basic agreement with APA, relating to the provision of certain services for remuneration. (8) This basic agreement essentially allowed Austrian federal departments to access and use current information (basic service), to use historical information and previous press releases from an APADok database maintained by APA and to use APA's original text service 'OTS', both for its own purposes and for issuing its own press releases. The APADok database contains data from the basic service from 1 January 1988 and OTS releases from 1 June 1989.

19. The basic agreement was entered into for an indefinite period, and provided that neither party would seek to terminate the agreement before 31 December 1999 at the earliest. The basic agreement likewise contained provisions concerning the date of the first price increases, the maximum amount of each increase and the indexation of prices on the basis of the 1986 consumer price index and as reference value the index figure calculated for 1994.

20. In September 2000 APA established a wholly-owned subsidiary APA-OTS Originaltext-Service GmbH ('APA-OTS'). The undertakings are bound by a contract excluding profit and loss, which, according to information from APA and APA-OTS, provides for APA-OTS to be integrated financially, organisationally and from an economic point of view within the APA undertaking and for APA–OTS to proceed in the conduct and management of its business on the basis of instructions from APA. APA-OTS is likewise required to pass its annual surpluses to APA, whilst in return APA has to make good any annual shortfalls incurred by APA-OTS.

21. APA transferred to APA-OTS the operation of its OTS original text service. This alteration was notified to the Republic of Austria in October 2000, and an authorised employee of APA gave an assurance in response to a query by the Federal Chancellery that following the hiving-off APA was operating on a basis of joint and several liability with APA-OTS, and that there would be no change in the 'overall performance experienced'. According to its own statements, the Federal Chancellery thereupon authorised the future provision of OTS services by APA-OTS, and the remuneration for these services was thenceforth paid direct to APA-OTS.

22. In 2001 the remuneration provisions in the 1994 basic agreement were amended by a first supplemental agreement. In addition to the conversion of remuneration from Austrian schillings into euro this supplemental agreement laid down maximum levels of remuneration for the years 2002, 2003 and 2004, (9) which could not be increased, for the inclusion in OTS of releases by federal departments. In addition the indexation clause was adjusted by reference to a new index, a successor index to the one used in the basic agreement.

23. In October 2005 a second supplemental agreement, with effect from 1 January 2006, amended the basic agreement in the version of the first supplemental agreement in two further respects: the reduction in fees for online access from the information services of the APA was increased from 15% to 25%, and the parties agreed a renewal of their waiver of the right to terminate, extending it to 31 December 2008.

C – The proceedings before the Federal Procurement Office (proceedings for a declaration of illegality)

24. Before the Federal Procurement Office PN is seeking a legal remedy against acts that in its view contravened procurement law in connection with the involvement of APA-OTS as the service provider for the Republic of Austria and in connection with the two supplemental agreements to the basic agreement between APA and the Republic of Austria.

25. By its applications lodged on 4 and 19 July 2006 PN seeks a declaration by the Federal Procurement Office under Paragraph 331 of the BVergG 2006 that the separation of the contract by the restructuring of APA in 2000, and the supplemental agreements of 2001 and 2005, described by it as 'de facto awards', were unlawful; in the alternative it seeks a declaration that the decision to opt for the procurement procedures at issue was unlawful. (10)

26. In regard to the time-limits for applications the Federal Procurement Office maintains that, whilst the actions complained of dated back to 2000, 2001 and 2005, the legal remedy available under domestic law in respect of unlawful awards of contracts, namely an application for a declaration of illegality having the effect of dissolving the contract, was created only subsequently, that is to say with effect from 1 February 2006. The period provided for this legal remedy is six months from the date of the unlawful award. However, the Federal Procurement Office considers it appropriate to apply Paragraph 1496 of the Allgemeines Bürgerliches Gesetzbuch (General Civil Code – ABGB) under which limitation periods do not run if the requisite legal remedy is not available, provided that such application is compatible with Community law.

IV – Order for reference and proceedings before the Court of Justice

27. By order of 7 November 2006, drawn up on 10 November 2006 and registered at the Court on 13 November 2006, the Federal Procurement Office stayed the proceedings and referred the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Are the terms "awarding" in Article 3(1) of Directive 92/50/EEC and "awarded" in Articles 8 and 9 of that directive to be interpreted as encompassing circumstances in which a contracting authority intends to obtain services in the future from a service provider established as a limited liability company where those services were previously supplied by a different service provider who is the sole shareholder in the future service provider and has control of the future service provider? In such a case is it legally relevant that the contracting authority has no guarantee that throughout the entire period of the original contract the shares in the future service provider will not be disposed of in whole or in part to third parties and moreover has no guarantee that the membership of the original service provider, which is in the form of a cooperative society, will remain unchanged throughout the entire contract period?

(2) Are the terms "awarding" in Article 3(1) of Directive 92/50/EEC and "awarded" in Articles 8 and 9 of that directive to be interpreted as encompassing circumstances in which, during the period of validity of a contract concluded for an indefinite period with certain service providers for the joint provision of services, a contracting authority agrees with those service providers amendments to the charges for specified services under the contract and reformulates an index-linking clause, where these amendments result in different charges and are made upon the changeover to the euro?

(3) Are the terms "awarding" in Article 3(1) of Directive 92/50/EEC and "awarded" in Articles 8 and 9 of that directive to be interpreted as encompassing circumstances in which, during the period of validity of a contract concluded for an indefinite period with certain service providers for the joint provision of services, a contracting authority agrees with those service providers to amend the contract, first, renewing for a period of three years a waiver of the right to terminate the contract by notice, the waiver no longer being in force at the time of the amendment, and, second, also laying down a higher rebate than before for certain volume-related charges within a specified area of supply?

(4) If the answer to any of the first three questions is that there is an award:

Is Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50/EEC or are any other provisions of Community law, such as, in particular, the principle of transparency, to be interpreted as permitting a contracting authority to obtain services by awarding a single contract in a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, where parts of the services are covered by exclusive rights as referred to in Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50/EEC? Or do the principle of transparency or any other provisions of Community law require in the case of an award of mostly non-priority services that a contract notice is none the less published prior to the contract award, to enable undertakings in the sectors concerned to assess whether services are in fact being awarded that are subject to an exclusive right? Or do the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts require that in such a case services can only be awarded in separate tender procedures, according to whether they are or are not subject to exclusive rights, in order to allow at least competitive tendering as to part?

(5) If the answer to the fourth question is to the effect that a contracting authority may award services which are not subject to exclusive rights in a single procurement procedure together with services which are subject to an exclusive right:

Can an undertaking which does not have any right to deal with data that is subject to an exclusive right possessed by an undertaking which has a dominant position in the market establish that in that respect it has the capacity, for the purposes of procurement law, to provide a comprehensive service to a contracting authority, by relying on Article 82 EC and an obligation derived from that provision on the market-dominant undertaking which has the power of disposal over the data and is established in a Member State to provide the data on reasonable conditions?

(6) If the answer to the first, second and third questions is to the effect that the partial contract transfer in 2000 and/or one or both of the contract amendments referred to constituted new awards; and furthermore should the fourth question be answered to the effect that either when awarding a contract for services not subject to exclusive rights by means of a separate award procedure, or when awarding a combined contract (in the present case for press releases, the basic service and rights to use APADok), a contracting authority should have first published a contract notice to ensure that the intended contract award was transparent and capable of being reviewed:

Is "harmed" in Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665/EEC and in Article 2(1)(c) of that directive to be interpreted as meaning that an undertaking in a case such as the present one is harmed, within the meaning of those provisions of Directive 89/665/EEC, simply where it has been deprived of the opportunity to participate in a procurement procedure because the contracting authority did not, prior to making the award, publish a contract notice, on the basis of which the undertaking could have tendered for the contract to be awarded, could have submitted an offer or could have had the claim that exclusive rights were involved reviewed by the competent procurement review body?

(7) Are the Community law principle of equivalence and the Community law requirement for effective legal protection, or the principle of effectiveness, to be interpreted, having regard to any other relevant provisions of Community law, as conferring an individual and unconditional right on an undertaking against a Member State such that it has at least six months from the time when it could have known that a contract award infringed procurement law to bring legal proceedings before the competent national authority to seek damages following the contract award on account of an infringement of Community procurement law, while it must be allowed additional time for periods when it could not make such a claim owing to the absence of a statutory basis in national law, in circumstances where under national law claims for damages based on infringements of national law are normally subject to a limitation period of three years from the date of knowledge of the wrongdoer and of the damage and, in the absence of legal protection in a particular area of law, the limitation period does not (continue to) run?'

28. In the proceedings before the Court of Justice, PN, APA and APA-OTS, the Republic of Austria and the Commission of the European Communities presented written and oral submissions. Written submissions were also submitted by the Austrian Federal Chancellery in its capacity as a public awarding authority and by the Lithuanian Government. The French Government made oral submissions.

V – Admissibility of the reference for a preliminary ruling

29. Before dealing substantively with the questions referred it is appropriate to make some brief preliminary observations on the admissibility of the reference for a preliminary ruling.

A – Entitlement of the Federal Procurement Office to make a reference

30. The Austrian Federal Procurement Office is a permanent body established by law whose competence in procurement cases is mandatory where the federal government is the contracting authority. (11) It reaches a determination in adversarial proceedings on the basis of provisions of Austrian federal law. In that connection it is both the first and last instance. (12) Its members are not bound by instructions in regard to the exercise of the tasks conferred on them and are appointed for at least five years and, in part, for an indefinite period. (13)

31. Accordingly, the Federal Procurement Office is a court within the meaning of Article 234 EC (14) and is entitled to make references for a preliminary ruling to the Court of Justice. The Court of Justice has already on several occasions (15) responded to requests for a preliminary ruling from the Federal Procurement Office. (16)

B – Admissibility of the reference for a preliminary ruling: general aspects

32. The criticism expressed by APA and APA-OTS of the complex and not readily comprehensible formulation of the reference for a preliminary ruling does not alter the fact that the questions referred are intelligible overall. The factual and legal framework of the questions is apparent to a sufficient degree from the clarifications given by the Federal Procurement Office in the order for reference, which likewise indicates why those questions were deemed essential to a resolution of the dispute in this case.

33. In particular it may be inferred from the order for reference that the reference for a preliminary ruling is intended to clarify whether in the national proceedings the taking of detailed evidence of particular facts is necessary or whether the dispute in the main proceedings may be determined without such taking of evidence.

34. On that point it should be observed that it is for the national court to decide at what stage of the procedure it should send a reference for a preliminary ruling to the Court of Justice. (17) The determinant factor is that the referring court sufficiently sets out the factual and legal framework underpinning its request for an interpretation of Community law and otherwise gives all information to the Court of Justice which it needs in order to provide a useful answer to this request. (18) Contrary to the view of APA and APA-OTS, that is the case here. Thus there are no objections in general terms to the admissibility of the reference for a preliminary ruling.

C – Admissibility of the sixth question in particular

35. However, a specific problem of admissibility arises in respect of the sixth question referred, which concerns the interpretation of the concept of ‘harm’ in Article 1(3) and Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665.

36. In the main proceedings that are brought under Paragraph 331 of the BVergG 2006, the Federal Procurement Office is competent only to make a declaration of a violation of the procurement law but not to award damages, which is a matter reserved to the Austrian civil courts. (19) Accordingly, it cannot submit to the Court of Justice any questions for a preliminary ruling relating to damages or the criteria for the award thereof. (20)

37. Against that background, the sixth question referred is only admissible to the extent to which it concerns the criteria for admissibility of an application for review under Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665. However, in so far as the sixth question refers to Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665, it is inadmissible since the latter provision directly concerns the grant of damages.

D – Interim conclusion

38. Overall, therefore, this reference for a preliminary ruling is admissible save for that part of the sixth question that concerns Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665.

VI – Substantive assessment of the questions referred

39. In substance this extremely extensive reference for a preliminary ruling seeks clarification as to the circumstances under which the amendment of an existing agreement may be deemed to constitute an award of a public service contract with the consequence that an award procedure must be conducted beforehand and legal remedies are available to undertakings not considered.

40. The highly interesting further question whether any limits are set by procurement law or other provisions of Community law to the conclusion of continuing legal obligations without limit as to time is not a matter raised by the present proceedings. Since the basic agreement of 1994 that was entered into for an indefinite period was concluded before the Republic of Austria's accession to the European Union, (21) this problem requires no further discussion, even as a preliminary question. (22)

A – The first, second and third questions

41. By its first three questions the Federal Procurement Office seeks to ascertain the circumstances under which amendments to existing contractual relations between a contracting authority and a service provider are to be deemed to constitute a new award of a public service contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50.

42. That problem has not hitherto been discussed in detail in the case-law of the Community Courts. (23)

1. Preliminary observation: the criterion of a material contractual amendment

43. It is above all in the case of contracts for continuing obligations and contracts of long duration that it may become necessary during the currency thereof to adjust their content if contractual provisions – for example, owing to unforeseen changes in external circumstances – prove no longer to be appropriate. Where a contract is brought into line with the altered circumstances, such adjustment may assist the attainment of the aim of the contract.

44. If, however, the original contract concerned a public contract subsequent amendments to its terms always give rise to the question whether an award procedure (a new one, as the case may be) is to be conducted. In that connection a potential area of conflict regularly opens up between the endeavour to ensure an efficient as possible continuation of the conduct of the contract, on the one hand, and the requirement that equal opportunities be maintained for all current and potential awardees, on the other.

45. Fundamentally, it is not precluded from the outset that subsequent amendments to the terms of existing contracts may (once more, in some cases) satisfy the criterion of an award of a public contract with the consequence that an award procedure must be undertaken. For under settled case-law the legal concepts that define the scope of the procurement directives are to be interpreted broadly. (24)

46. However, the interpretation of the concept of an award must in the end be guided by the objectives of the relevant directive. The coordination of the procedures for the award of public contracts is intended to eliminate obstacles to freedom of movement for goods and services and protect the interests of economic operators from other Member States. (25) It is a matter of ensuring that contracting authorities do not give preference to domestic tenderers or applicants and in the award of the contract are not influenced by considerations other than economic ones. (26)

47. Accordingly, Directive 92/50 too has as its principal objective the free movement of services and the opening-up to competition that is undistorted and as comprehensive as possible. (27) That requires a transparent and non-discriminatory method of proceeding in the award of public service contracts, with the result that equal opportunities of all possible service providers are guaranteed.

48. Against the background of that objective, not every amendment, however slight, to contracts for public services requires a prior award procedure. Only materialcontractual amendments which are such as to distort competition on the relevant market and to favour the contracting authority's contractual partner as against other possible service providers justify conducting a new procurement procedure. (28)

49. In particular there must always be a presumption that there has been a material contractual amendment where other service providers might have been deterred from applying for the public contract by the original less favourable terms, or might now in the light of the new contractual terms be interested in applying for the public contract; or where an application by a tenderer who was unsuccessful at that time might be successful under the new contractual terms. (29)

50. These preliminary observations form the basis for my subsequent discussion of the first three questions referred.

2. First question

a) First part of the first question: involvement of APA-OTS

51. In the first part of its first question the Federal Procurement Office essentially seeks to ascertain whether it is to be deemed a new award of an already existing public service contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50 where a contracting authority accepts that the carrying-out of a part of the contract is to be assigned to the awardee's subsidiary company, to which the awardee has a right to issue instructions and which is wholly owned by the awardee, even if its 100% shareholding is not guaranteed to subsist for the whole duration of the contract.

52. The background to this question is the hiving-off by APA in 2000 of the OTS services to its subsidiary company APA-OTS. Irrespective of whether this restructuring within the APA group stemmed from a contract-splitting, a takeover of a contract, novation or subrogation, (30) it is in any event clear that thenceforth the abovementioned services were directly provided, with the approval of the Federal Chancellery, by APA-OTS and that the remuneration therefor was paid directly to APA-OTS.

53. In any event, in regard to practical implementation of the contract in 2000 there was a partial change in service provider.

54. A change in service provider during the currency of a public contract prima facie indicates a material contractual amendment, as an undertaking which did not have to compete with other bidders and whose selection did not depend upon any comparison with any other bidders is, after all, entrusted wholly or in part with the carrying-out of the public contract. Inherent in such a manner of proceeding is the danger of circumvention of procurement law and the concomitant risk of distortion of competition on the relevant market and giving preference to the new service provider over other possible service providers.

55. However, the particular circumstances of the individual case may result in a situation where alterations on the part of the service provider exceptionally do not entail any material contractual amendment. In that respect the two following categories of cases in particular must be considered.

56. The first category of cases concerns the involvementof subcontractors by the contractual partner of the contracting authority. In order not to restrict unduly the possible group of service providers Directive 92/50 expressly confers on the contracting authority the possibility of permitting subcontracts to be awarded to third parties. (31) A characteristic feature of this category is that the main supplier retains full contractual liability for performance of the services contract or at any rate remains jointly responsible for it, even after the subcontract has been awarded.

57. The second category concerns organisational changesof a purely internal nature on the part of the contractual partner of the contracting authority. That may include the involvement of one of its subsidiary companies in carrying out the contract. How close the connection between the awardee and its subsidiary company has to be does not need to be definitively established in the present case. Such subsidiary companies are caught in any event where they are controlled by the awardee in a manner similar to its own in-house departments. The involvement of the subsidiary company in the carrying-out of the contract is therefore similar, on the part of the service provider, to an in-house transaction, (32) none of the conditions under which the public contract is performed being altered, at any rate from an economic point of view.

58. It is certain in both cases that the alteration in respect of the service provider does not lead to any distortion of competition or therefore to any material contractual amendment.

59. An event such as the transfer in 2000 of the OTS services to APA-OTS is at first sight similar to the award of a subcontract by APA (first category). That view is supported by the fact that the services concerned are henceforth provided by a legal person other than APA, whereby APA itself remains jointly and severally liable for the carrying-out of the public services contract as a whole, including the tasks taken over by APA-OTS.

60. However, on closer inspection an entity such as APA-OTS resembles not so much an autonomous subcontractor of APA as rather a company department of APA. An event such as the involvement of APA-OTS in the carrying-out of the public services contract in 2000 constitutes no more than a purely internal reorganisation by the service provider APA (second category).

61. It is true that part of the services to be supplied by APA is being supplied by another legal person, APA-OTS. However, from an economic point of view, APA-OTS is not a third party, as it is wholly controlled by its parent company APA. Not only the 100% ownership of it by APA, but also APA's right to issue instructions, and an agreement excluding profit and loss ensure that APA-OTS is governed by its parent company like one of the parent company's own departments. Therefore, from an economic point of view, there has been no material change in regard to the conditions for implementing the public contract.

62. The transaction in 2000 thus did not lead to any material contractual amendment; therefore, it did not need to be treated as a (new) award of a public services contract.

63. That is not precluded by the fact that APA's 100% ownership of APA-OTS is not guaranteed for the entire duration of the public contract. (33) It is true that APA could theoretically at any time transfer shares in APA-OTS to third parties. However, only the actually foreseeable events at that time are relevant to the issue of whether there was a material change to the contract and with it a new award of a public services contract in 2000.

64. The principle of legal certainty requires that the obligation to conduct an award procedure must always be evaluated ex ante, that is to say at the time of entry into the transaction. (34) For both from the perspective of the contracting authority and its business partner and from the perspective of competitors not considered, it must be possible to ascertain already at the time of the transaction whether or not an award procedure was to be conducted. Subsequent circumstances may at most be taken into consideration where at the time of the transaction it could have been foreseen that they would occur.

65. It is apparent from the file that at the time of the involvement of APA-OTS in the implementation of the public contract there were no specific indications of any imminent disposal of shares by APA. In these circumstances I maintain my view that a transaction such as that in 2000 gave rise to no material contractual amendment and thus did not require an award procedure to be conducted.

b) Second part of the first question: membership composition of the APA

66. The Federal Procurement Office would also like to know whether in regard to the transaction in 2000 it makes any difference that the members comprising the APA grouping might change during the currency of the contract.

67. Such an alteration will only be significant in terms of procurement law if it results in at least a partial change of service provider and thus constitutes a material contractual amendment.

68. If, for example, the supplier of the service contract is a mere consortium without legal personality, each of its members will normally have rights and obligations through the contract with the contracting authority. Any change in the composition of the consortium can then lead to a situation in which an undertaking that did not have to compete with other bidders and whose selection was not based on a comparison with other possible suppliers is wholly or partly entrusted with implementing the public contract. That – subject to the exceptions described above (35) – would amount to a material contractual amendment. (36)

69. On the other hand, if the service provider is a legal person, it alone will be the contracting authority's contractual partner; any subsequent changes in the composition of its shareholders will not result in any material contractual amendment. (37)

70. In the present case it is apparent from the file that APA is a 'registered society with limited liability'. It may therefore be assumed that APA has legal personality. Subject to the findings of the Federal Procurement Office on this point, it is only APA itself which is to be regarded as the contractual partner of the Republic of Austria and not the members of the society. In a case such as this, any changes within the membership of the society give rise to no material contractual amendment.

3. Third question

71. By its third question the Federal Procurement Office essentially seeks to ascertain whether it is to be regarded as a new award of a public service contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50 where the contracting authority and the service provider amend a contract for the provision of services during the currency thereof in the following manner:

– a previously agreed waiver of entitlement to give notice which has expired is renewed for a three-year period; and – certain amounts of remuneration differ from those hitherto agreed because a price rebate increased by 10 percentage points is granted.

72. The background to this question is the second supplemental agreement to the basic agreement agreed in 2005 between APA and the Republic of Austria.

a) First part of the third question: renewal of waiver of entitlement to give notice

73. The first part of the third question relates to the renewal agreed in 2005 by the contractual partners of a waiver of entitlement to give notice which had expired.

74. It would be problematical from the point of view of public procurement law to agree, in addition to a relationship creating continuing obligations, also to a long-term waiver of entitlement to give notice or even to agree that termination by the contracting authority should be altogether excluded. For such an agreement would permanently exclude any competition between the possible service providers and therefore run counter to the aims of the public procurement directives.

75. However, it is otherwise in the case of a waiver of entitlement to give notice, such as the one agreed in 2005, which is limited to three years. Such waiver of entitlement to give notice cannot from the outset be regarded as impermissible in terms of public procurement law. However, it must be examined whether such a waiver ought to have been subject to a public procurement procedure. That depends on whether the waiver of entitlement to give notice is regarded as a material contractual amendment to the existing basic agreement. (38)

76. In order to be categorised as a material contractual amendment, a waiver of entitlement to give notice that is limited to a few years must be liable to distort competition on the relevant market and favour the contracting authority's contractual partner as against other possible service providers. (39)

77. This can only exceptionally be the case when there are concrete reasons for supposing, at the time when the waiver was agreed, that the contracting authority would otherwise have resiled from the existing contract during the currency of the waiver. It is only then that other possible service providers would at all have been able to entertain serious hopes of displacing the current service provider during this period, either wholly or in part.

78. The first observation to be made in this connection is that the contracting authority was under no legal obligation prematurely to terminate an existing contractual relationship that came into existence without infringing applicable law; the accession of the Republic of Austria to the European Union did not create any obligation on the contracting authority to terminate the existing basic agreement or to make a new award in respect thereof. (40) Therefore, whilst it might have been legally possible for the Republic of Austria to terminate the services contract with APA as from the expiry of the originally agreed waiver of entitlement to give notice (1994), it was in no way mandatory for it to do so.

79. Secondly, in 2005 – subject to findings to be made by the Federal Procurement Office – there was no economic incentive for the Republic of Austria during the comparatively foreseeable period of the waiver of the right to terminate, that is to say until the end of 2008, to change to another service provider. As far as can be ascertained, the contracting authority was able reasonably to assume that in the period until 2008 there would be no equivalent offers under more favourable conditions such as to justify the expenditure entailed by making a change.

80. According to the information available, the renewed waiver of the right to terminate agreed in 2005 for a three-year period therefore entailed no risk of a distortion of competition and is therefore not to be regarded as a material amendment to the basic agreement.

b) Second part of the third question: agreement as to higher price reductions

81. The second part of the third question relates to the price reductions agreed in 2005 for online requests to APA's information services. Whilst the basic agreement provided for a price reduction of 15% for this service provided to the Austrian federal departments, a 25% price reduction has applied since the second supplemental agreement.

82. As already mentioned, (41) there can be a new award of an existing public services contract only if a material contractual amendment is carried out. That also applies to amendments to the contractually agreed remuneration. Even if the detailed rules governing payments as such constitute a material part of the contract, (42) not every amendment, however slight, to the originally agreed provisions concerning payment may be automatically regarded as a material contractual amendment.

83. First of all it must be examined whether the increase by 10 percentage points in the originally agreed price reduction constituted an amendmentto the payment terms applicable to the public services contract.

84. APA and APA-OTS argue that the 25% price reduction now granted was merely the logical development of existing provisions of the basic agreement. The basic agreement already referred to an APA graduated tariff. The new higher price reduction is to be equated with the introduction of a new lower graduated tariff in the APA price list.

85. In that regard it must be noted that the actual assessment of the relevant facts in the main proceedings is a matter for the Federal Procurement Office. In the order for reference, which for the purposes of these preliminary ruling proceedings sets out the relevant factual framework, (43) the alteration in percentage figures from 15% to 25% is presented as a 'higher discount than before'. This points to an amendment of the payment terms.

86. This assessment is also borne out by the fact that even the initial 15% price reduction referred to the 'lowest graduated tariff'. Even when the basic agreement was entered into in 1994, the contracting authority was therefore granted the most favourable tariff level that was conceivable. Under those circumstances, it is unlikely that the contractual partners at that time were planning to go over to an even more favourable price category or even regarded that as possible. If, in the year 2005, a price reduction enhanced by 10 percentage points is granted which is then applied to the lowest graduated tariff, that points to a genuine price alteration and not just to a logical progression of the calculation of remuneration as laid down in the basic agreement.

87. Such a price amendment may however only be regarded as a material contractual amendment if it is actually such as to distort competition on the relevant market and to favour the contractual partner of the contracting authority over and above other service providers.

88. In order to assess this aspect, the extent of the price alteration in respect of the relevant service has to be examined and this price amendment has to be placed in the context of the significance of the public contract as a whole.

89. As regards first of all the price amendment itself, the risk of distortion of competition in the event of price reductions is less than in the event of price increases. For the reduction in remuneration works in favour of the contracting authority and normally improves the economic efficacy of the implementation of the contract.

90. None the less, it cannot be ruled out from the outset that an agreement concerning lower remuneration may also have a distorting effect on competition. That has been rightly pointed out by the Lithuanian Government.

91. The determinant factor is always the conditions the contracting authority could have achieved on the market at the time of the contractual amendment. If, for example, the prices for the service provided for under the agreement have generally fallen on the market since the original award of the public contract, the mere agreement for a lower remuneration than before affords no guarantee of the observance of the principle of competition and of the principle of economic efficacy. The test is rather whether, at the time of the contractual amendment, other possible service providers could have offered the contracting authority the service required at a yet more favourable price.

92. From the information available there is however no specific indication that, in the present case, on implementation of an award procedure the contracting authority could have achieved a price for an equivalent service even more favourable than the price it secured under the second supplemental agreement to the basic agreement with APA as the current service provider.

93. As regards, finally, the significance of the price amendment occurring in relation to the public contract as a whole, it must be borne in mind that the increased rebate was agreed only for one of the services agreed to be provided (the online request service from the information services of APA) and not, for example, for all the services to be provided by APA. Even if a price reduction increased by 10 percentage points is not insignificant in relation to the part-service concerned, in relation to the overall contract it carries significantly less weight.

94. Ultimately, it is for the Federal Procurement Office to make the necessary findings in regard to the significance of the price amendment as regards both the relevant part-service and the public contract in its entirety.

95. On the basis of the information available to the Court, I am not of the view that a price amendment of the kind contained in the second supplemental agreement of 2005 and effected by the increase in discount should be deemed to be a material contractual amendment.

4. Second question

96. By its second question the Federal Procurement Office essentially seeks to ascertain whether it is to be regarded as a new award of a public contract within the meaning of Directive 92/50, where the contracting authority and the service provider amend a services contract existing between them during its currency in such a way that:

– the contractually agreed remuneration on the conversion of the currency is no longer paid in the national currency but in euro,

– the index-linking clause in the contract is updated by the addition of a reference to a successor index of the index previously used, and – certain remuneration now differs from remuneration previously agreed.

97. The background to this question is the first supplemental agreement of 2001, which provided for those changes to the provisions concerning remuneration.

98. Purely technical adjustments to the contract which have no significant influence on the relationship between the contracting authority and its contractual partner do not even constitute an amendment to the substance of the contract. They cannot, be regarded, a fortiori, as a material contractual amendment which requires the implementation of an award procedure.

99. Where an existing agreement was amended on the occasion of a currency conversion to the euro in such a way that the previously agreed remuneration is to be expressed in the new currency, but without any material increase or reduction, this does not constitute a material contractual amendment but merely a technical adjustment of an existing contract to bring it in line with altered external circumstances. (44) The rounding up or down of the newly calculated amounts in euro that may be necessary under the applicable legal provisions is also subsumed within this technical adjustment.

100. Similarly a reference to an index other than that originally agreed may also be a purely technical contractual adjustment, in so far as both indices are equivalent. The order for reference points to such equivalence by stating that the new index is the successor index to the previous index. The Federal Procurement Office will however also have to satisfy itself that the mode of operation of the new index is equivalent to that of the previous index. That means in particular that the baskets of goods, or other reference quantities, to which the relevant indices relate, must essentially be equivalent.

101. However, if a currency recalculation or an index adjustment is used by the contractual partners as a reason for substantively altering the originally agreed payments, that goes beyond a purely technical amendment in its effects. Then it can no longer be precluded from the outset that there is a material contractual amendment affecting competition between service providers.

102. In the present case the order for reference states that the adjustments to the framework contract made by the first supplemental agreement led to maximum fees being applicable to the inclusion of certain broadcasts by the federal services in the OTS for 2002, 2003 and 2004; those fees could not be increased.

103. The Federal Procurement Office will have to examine whether that represented a material change in comparison with the remuneration agreed in the basic agreement. The relevant factor in that connection is the way in which the indexed remuneration agreed in the basic agreement might, on an objective view, have been expected to progress on the basis of indications available in 2001.

104. If the maximum remuneration laid down for 2002, 2003 and 2004 substantially accords with the prices which in all likelihood would have resulted from application of the index-linking clause in the basic agreement, there is no material contractual amendment. (45) If, conversely, they clearly depart from the price trends to be expected under the basic agreement, it will be necessary to examine the effects of this alteration on competition, in which connection the yardsticks set out above on the second part of the third question (46) apply.

105. On the basis of the information available to the Court, I am in any event of the view that price amendments such as those agreed in the first supplemental agreement were within the parameters of annual price increases foreseeable for 2001; for this reason alone, they did not constitute a material contractual amendment.

B – Fourth and fifth questions

106. The fourth and fifth questions, in which the Federal Procurement Office devotes its attention to the applicable award procedure and proof of standing of a service provider, are based on the supposition that the 2000, 2001 and 2005 transactions are in any event to be regarded as awards of a public services contract.

107. On the basis of the information available to the Court, I am of the view that none of these events constituted such an award. (47) Accordingly, I shall examine the fourth and fifth questions merely in the alternative.

1. Fourth question

108. By its fourth question the Federal Procurement Office essentially seeks to ascertain whether a public services contract may be awarded as a single contract in a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, if the contract predominantly concerns non-priority services and a right of exclusivity within the meaning of Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50 does not exist for all but only for some of the services to be provided.

a) Priority and non-priority services

109. Directive 92/50 distinguishes in Articles 8 to 10 between priority and non–priority services. The former are defined in Annex IA to the directive and the latter in Annex IB. The background to these provisions is that, owing to their specific nature, contracts for non-priority services a priori are accorded no cross-border significance such as to warrant the conduct of an award procedure. (48)

110. Following the submissions of APA and APA-OTS, the Federal Procurement Office assumes that news agency services such as those agreed to be provided in the present case constitute a mix of priority and non-priority services, (49) and that the non-priority services clearly predominate in value.

111. If that view is regarded as correct, (50) the public services contract awarded to APA comes overall under the regime for non-priority services (Article 10 of Directive 92/50). That means it is a public contract not subject to any specific public procurement procedure for the purposes of Title III of Directive 92/50. (51)

b) Applicability of the transparency rule

112. Even in procurement procedures for which the public procurement directives provide no specific public procurement procedures, it is none the less settled case-law that the public authorities are bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the EC Treaty, in general, and the principle of non–discrimination on grounds of nationality in particular. (52) The Court has clarified only recently that this also applies to the award of contracts concerning non-priority services. (53)

113. Thus, if there is a certain cross-border interest in a contract for non-priority services, the transparency rule derived from the fundamental freedoms applies to it and the contract may not be awarded in disregard of all transparency. (54)

114. It will be for the Federal Procurement Office to examine whether there is a clear cross-border interest in the provision of news agency services that form the subject-matter of the contract in the present case. (55) In that connection regard must be had inter alia to the following considerations:

– The fact that a number of news agencies are internationally active suggests that there may be a cross-border interest. The entry onto the market of PN in 1999 shows that the Austrian market is not without interest for new service providers.

– Cooperation agreements currently existing between various news agencies active on their home markets, as mentioned in the oral proceedings, do not from the outset preclude certain of those agencies from seeking to strengthen their future involvement on a market such as the Austrian one by having a local presence of their own.

– Militating against a cross-border interest could be the fact that a large part of the services required by the Austrian federal authorities display specific references to Austria and also to regional events in that country.

c) Substance of the transparency rule

115. Substantively, it follows from the transparency rule that a sufficient degree of advertising has to be secured. (56) What precise requirements flow from that rule for awards of contracts for which the directives on procurement lay down no specific award procedures is currently unclear. It is certain only that the transparency rule does not necessarily entail a duty to call for tenders. (57)

116. Ultimately, it is incumbent on the contracting authority to assess in each individual case the requisite degree of advertising in order for the relevant award procedure to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of the public procurement procedure to be reviewed. (58)

117. In general terms the transparency rule should not be interpreted in such a way that an award procedure ought always to be applied which accords with the procurement directives in all particulars. (59) For otherwise the distinction between contract awards within the scope of those directives and those not caught by them would be lost; the financial thresholds laid down by the Community legislature would also largely be deprived of their meaning in such a case.

118. A fortiori, under the transparency rule the requirements for award procedures in respect of which the procurement directives do not require specific award procedures may not be more far reaching than those applicable to the conduct of award procedures for which such procedures are laid down in the directives. (60) For the procurement directives are no more than an illustration of the transparency rule as it applies to certain particularly significant award procedures. (61)

119. In relation to public contracts which wholly or predominantly concern non-priority services the transparency rule can require no greater degree of advertising than for contracts wholly or predominantly concerning priority services.

120. Contracts for services which, owing to protection of exclusive rights, (62) can be performed only by a specific service provider may always be awarded in a negotiated procedure without any prior notification of the award, irrespective of whether the services concerned are priority or non-priority services. For if Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50 allows such a procedure for priority services, a fortiori, it must be permissible to award non-priority services under this procedure. To that extent the values expressed in Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50 may be transposed to the area of non-priority services. Where Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50 requires no prior notification of the award, no further inference may be drawn from the transparency rule. (63)

121. Reasonable transparency ensuring that the award is opened to competition and a review of the impartiality of the procurement procedure may, in the case of services, as defined in Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50, also be secured by a subsequent publication.

d) Award of a mixed service contract as a single contract

122. It remains to be examined whether a public contract may be awarded in a negotiated procedure as a single contract without any prior publication of the contract notice where an exclusive right within the meaning of Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50 subsists not for all but only for certain of the services to be provided.

123. Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50 derogates from the rules ensuring the effectiveness of the rights conferred by the EC Treaty in relation to public service contracts; as such, it must, as a matter of principle, be interpreted strictly. (64) In relation to awards concerning services taken as a whole, this tends to indicate that recourse may be had to a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice only in the case of the services specifically covered by Article 11(3).

124. However, a separate award of services under Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50 may be considered only if the public contract is divisible. In that connection it is not merely the theoretical divisibility of the contract which is relevant; attention must also be paid to the intended use and practical efficacy of the services, depending on whether they are supplied separately or by one supplier.

125. In the present case APA and APA-OTS, the Republic of Austria and the Federal Chancellery have persuasively demonstrated the close interconnectedness of the various news agency services agreed under the basic agreement. Thus it is not objectively appropriate for editorial contributions to be provided by one service provider and to transmit reactions to them through the intermediary of another service provider, because it cannot be established with certainty that both service providers serve the same end-users. A report in newspaper A cannot be responded to by a statement in newspaper B. It is also of considerable significance in ensuring that the service is user-friendly to have access to networked databases via a uniform user surface.

126. It cannot be argued that the contractual elements are separable, for example, on the basis of the fact that the OTS services are in the meantime provided by APA-OTS and no longer by APA. As already stated, that amounts to no more than an internal reorganisation on the part of the service provider; from an economic point of view there was no change of service provider, rather APA–OTS is controlled by APA as its own corporate department. (65) The various services also continue to be networked and accessible via a uniform user surface.

127. Subject to an actual assessment by the Federal Procurement Office, all these matters militate against a finding that the contract for services between the Republic of Austria and APA is separable and thus against any obligation for there to be separate awards of items under the contract.

128. That is not altered by the fact that the services contract in this case concerns both priority and non-priority services. As a glance at Article 10 of Directive 92/50 shows, it is by no means necessary for priority and non-priority services to be awarded separately in each case. (66)

129. It would be otherwise only if the contracting authority had assembled the individual services into a single services contract arbitrarily or only for the purpose of circumventing the provisions on award procedures. (67) There are however no indications of this in the present case. On the contrary, from the information available to the Court, there were objective reasons in favour of an award of all the services at issue in a single contract. (68)

e) Interim conclusion

130. In summary the answer to the fourth question may be stated thus:

A public contract for services may be awarded as a single contract under a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, if the contract is predominantly for non-priority services and an exclusive right as referred to in Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50 subsists not for all but only for certain of the services to be provided, unless the individual services were assembled into a single contract for services arbitrarily or in order to circumvent procurement provisions.

2. Fifth question

131. By its fifth question the Federal Procurement Office would essentially like to know whether an undertaking may demonstrate its standing to perform a public contract by the mere assertion that another undertaking is obliged under Article 82 EC to make certain data available to it on reasonable conditions.

132. The background to this question is the fact that the provision of news agency services, as sought in this case by the Austrian federal authorities, presupposes access to a comprehensive archive from which inter alia historical information and texts may be obtained. According to the information in the order for reference, PN does not have anything like a historical data archive which would be comparable to that held by APA. Moreover, APA does not grant its competitors access to its archives, in any event not for the purpose of selling on the data obtainable there. It must now be clarified whether PN may contend as proof of its standing within the meaning of Article 31 of Directive 92/50 that it has legal entitlement to access the APA archives, in particular the APADok database.

133. This is an allusion to the doctrine of competition law known as the 'essential facilities doctrine'. Under the relevant case-law, it may be regarded as an abuse under Article 82 EC – albeit only under exceptional circumstances – for a market-dominant undertaking to refuse another undertaking access to essential goods, services or data ('essential facilities'). (69) In such cases Article 82 EC may found a mandatory requirement on the part of the market-dominant undertaking to enter into a contract.

134. However, in the present case it may remain open whether a database such as the APADok archive operated by APA contains data essential to its competitors, that is to say is an 'essential facility', and whether there are exceptional circumstances which would require APA to grant its competitors access on reasonable conditions to its archives.

135. For a service provider which, in regard to its admission to an award procedure, wishes to refer to the resources of other establishments or undertakings has to prove that it can actually avail itself of those resources. (70) Otherwise the contracting authority will have before it no persuasive comparison of that service provider's standing with that of other possible service providers. If the contracting authority merely were to trust in the potential ability of the service provider to avail itself of those resources, the authority would be running the risk of awarding the contract to an undertaking whose standing would prove, in retrospect, to be deficient, that is in the event of difficulties arising in regard to accessing the requisite resources. At the same time it might be withholding the contract from another undertaking with actual standing. Such conduct would be in keeping neither with the notion of equality as between all possible service providers nor with the principle of efficacy in the award procedure.

136. A news agency such as PN cannot therefore merely assert that it is entitled to access the archives of APA but must specifically prove that such access will actually be granted to it, for instance in the form of an express assurance to that effect or in the form of a licence agreement already entered into. Otherwise it cannot successfully demonstrate its standing in an award procedure by a reference to APA's archives.

137. The often brief time-limits within which a decision must be reached in the award procedure are inimical to clarification, which is frequently time-consuming, of complex legal questions in connection with Article 82 EC and the 'essential facilities doctrine'. The undertaking concerned must bring any dispute on these matters to a conclusion before applying for a public contract.

138. Accordingly, as to the fifth question, I conclude that an undertaking cannot demonstrate its standing to perform a public contract for services by the mere assertion that another undertaking is obliged under Article 82 EC to make certain data available to it on reasonable conditions.

C – Sixth and seventh questions

139. In its sixth and seventh questions the Federal Procurement Office seeks information about the extent of legal protection to be afforded to an undertaking not taken into consideration by a contracting authority. The logical assumption underlying these questions too is that transactions such as those in 2000, 2001 and 2005 are to be regarded as awards of public contracts for services. This is also conceded by the Federal Procurement Office in its order for reference.

140. On the basis of the information available to the Court, I am, as already mentioned, of the opinion that none of these transactions constituted such an award. (71) Accordingly, I am examining the sixth and seventh questions only in the alternative.

1. Sixth question

141. The sixth question referred by the Federal Procurement Office concerns the interpretation of the concept of 'harm' in Article 1(3) and Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665. As already mentioned, (72) this question is admissible only in relation to Article 1(3) of the directive.

142. By its question the Federal Procurement Office is essentially seeking to ascertain whether a review procedure is to be carried out where the applicant claims that it missed the opportunity of participating in an award procedure owing to the fact that there was an unlawful failure to publish a contract notice or whether the applicant must in addition prove its own standing to perform the relevant public contract. Accordingly, it is necessary to elucidate further the question as to who is entitled to apply for a review.

143. Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 permits the Member States to restrict the right to bring an application in relation to a review procedure for the award of public contracts in two respects: (73) on the one hand, through the requirement that the applicant should have an interest in the relevant public contract and, on the other, through the requirement of existing or imminent harm to the applicant. In this way public interest actions and actions brought by applicants with no prospect of success may be excluded.

144. However, that must not affect the practical effectiveness of the directive. (74) The restrictions on the entitlement to bring an action must therefore be construed in the light of the twofold aim of the directive: on the one hand, the individual must be afforded an effective legal remedy in connection with the award of public contracts and, on the other, the requisite review of the lawfulness of the decisions by contracting authorities must be facilitated.

145. For, as is apparent from the first and second recitals in its preamble, Directive 89/665 seeks to strengthen the means available at national and Community levels in order to secure the actual application of the Community directives in the sphere of public procurement. To that end the Member States are obliged under Article 1(1) of the directive to ensure that unlawful decisions by contracting authorities can be reviewed effectively and as swiftly as possible. (75)

146. Against that background, entitlement to bring an action in procurement review proceedings may not be restricted disproportionately. In particular the admissibility of an application for review must not be subject to the same requirements as apply in regard to whether it is well founded. (76)

147. It cannot therefore be the case that already at the stage of lodgement of the application the person concerned is required to produce specific evidence of actual harm or that such harm is imminent. In order for there to be entitlement to make an application for review, it must be sufficient that, in addition to the infringement of the law by the contracting authority, the person concerned persuasively asserts an interest in the contract at issue and the possibility of the occurrence of damage.

148. The possibility of harm to the person concerned must be presumed where it is not manifestly excluded that the applicant would have received the award if the legal infringement alleged had not occurred. Where, as in the present case, the public contract is awarded directly (77) without prior contract notice, it follows from the fact that the person concerned is – allegedly unlawfully – precluded from participating in the award procedure that he may have lost a contract and thus suffered loss. (78)

149. Nor may actual proof of standing be required of the person concerned at the stage of an application for review; in the same way, he cannot be required to provide evidence that he would have received the award if the alleged infringement had not taken place. (79) Otherwise access to the review procedure would be rendered impossible in practice or at any rate excessively difficult. (80) In particular in cases of direct awards such as the present case, it would be barely possible for the person concerned to provide actual proof of standing, since he would have no accurate information about the requirements laid down by the contracting authority because of the lack of a prior contract notice.

150. Only by way of exception may an application for review be rejected as inadmissible ab initio by reference to a lack of standing on the part of the person concerned, namely where that lack of standing is so plainly obvious at the time of the application as to require no further examination. Everything else is a question of the merits of the application.

151. On the sixth question I therefore conclude that an application for review under Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 is admissible if the applicant persuasively asserts an interest in the public contract, the existence of a legal error and the possible harm suffered or about to be suffered. If the contract was awarded without prior publication of a contract notice, it follows from the fact that the person concerned was precluded from participating in the award procedure that he may have suffered harm unless there is a manifest lack of standing on its part.

2. Seventh question

152. By its seventh question the Federal Procurement Office essentially seeks to ascertain whether it is consistent with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness for national law to provide, in the case of an application, in a matter of procurement law, for a declaration of illegality which is a mandatory requirement of a subsequent claim for damages, a limitation period of no more than six months from the date of the award that is alleged to be contrary to procurement law. The Federal Procurement Office also questions whether the principle of effectiveness requires any additional periods in which there was no effective remedy under national law to be added to the abovementioned period of six months.

153. The background to this question is that PN made its applications for review to the Federal Procurement Office only in July 2006, that is to say within six months of the entry into force of the new procedural provisions in Paragraph 331 of the BVergG 2006 on 1 February 2006, yet more than six months after the matters at dispute in this case that date back to 2000, 2001 and 2005. According to the Federal Procurement Office, direct awards ('de facto awards') can be 'proceeded against effectively' in Austria only since the date of entry into force of Paragraph 331 of the BVergG 2006.

154. Directive 89/665 makes no express provision concerning the periods applicable to review proceedings under Article 1 thereof.

155. The starting point for the reply to the question submitted to the Court is therefore the principle ofprocedural autonomy enjoyed by the Member States. (81) It is settled case-law that, in the absence of Community rules in the field, it is for the domestic legal system of each Member State to designate the courts and tribunals having jurisdiction and to lay down the detailed procedural rules governing actions for safeguarding rights which individuals derive from Community law, provided, first, that such rules are not less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions (principle of equivalence) and, secondly, that they do not render virtually impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of rights conferred by Community law (principle of effectiveness). (82) Both principles are also reflected in Article 1 of Directive 89/665; the principle of equivalence in Article 1(2) and the principle of effectiveness in Article 1(1).

156. The principle of equivalence is a manifestation of the general principle of equal treatment and non-discrimination, (83) which requires that comparable situations must not be treated differently and that different situations must not be treated in the same way unless such treatment is objectively justified. (84)

157. The Commission and APA and APA-OTS rightly pointed to a specific peculiarity in that connection which differentiates review proceedings in procurement matters. Thus, Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 requires Member States to facilitate as rapid a review as possible of infringements of procurement law. In this way, first, effective legal protection is to be ensured and, secondly, legal certainty is to be created as swiftly as possible. In light of this objective, it is justified in the case of applications for review under Directive 89/665, in appropriate cases, to provide for shorter periods than the limitation periods governing claims for damages under the general domestic legal provisions.

158. The principle of equivalence does not therefore preclude a six-month limitation period for applications for review such as, for example, the one provided for in Paragraph 332(2) and (3) of the BVergG 2006, even if under national law the general limitation period for claims for damages is longer.

159. However, it remains to be examined in the light of the principleof effectiveness whether a limitation period, such as that provided for under Austrian law for applications for a declaration, does not render it virtually impossible or excessively difficult for the persons concerned subsequently to assert their rights to claim damages under Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665.

160. In principle it is not contrary to the principle of effectiveness to lay down reasonable limitation periods for bringing legal proceedings, since to do so is an application of the basic principle of legal certainty. (85)

161. The reasonableness of a limitation period is therefore to be adjudged in the light of the nature and legal consequences of the relevant remedy and of the relevant rights and interests of all the persons concerned.

162. Accordingly, in applications for review that seek to have contracts which have already been concluded declared invalid – whether retroactively or for the future – an absolute limitation period of six months is in principle entirely reasonable. (86) For the particularly onerous legal consequences of invalidating a contract already concluded justify laying down a period that runs regardless of whether the applicant was aware, or at least ought to have been aware, that the award of the contract was contrary to procurement law. There is a clear need, both for the contracting authority and for its contract partner, for legal certainty as to the validity of the concluded contract and this should be protected.

163. In relation to a case such as this one, it must however be borne in mind that an absolute limitation period of six months, such as that provided for in Paragraph 332(2) and (3) of the BVergG 2006 for applications for a declaration under Paragraph 331(1) of that law, affects not only those who actually seek the invalidation of a contract that has already been concluded but also those who merely wish to take an essential procedural step in preparation for a subsequent action for damages before the Austrian civil courts.

164. So, if the person concerned only becomes aware more than six months later of the damage he has suffered as a result of an award of a public contract contrary to procurement law without prior publication of a contract notice (direct award or de facto award), he cannot apply to the civil courts even for damages since in order to do so it is mandatory under Paragraph 341(2) of the BVergG 2006 that he should first have applied for a declaration, which, however, by this stage would be time-barred.

165. Therefore, the limitation period in Paragraph 332(2) and (3) of the BVergG 2006 goes beyond its actual scope in also affecting subsequent proceedings for which it is unreasonably stringent. The contracting authority does not have the same need for legal certainty with regard to mere applications for damages as it does with regard to the validity of a contract already concluded.

166. In so far as a Member State avails itself of the possibility provided for in Article 2(2) and (5) of Directive 89/665, and makes the bringing of actions for damages dependent on an earlier successful application for a declaration of invalidity, the relevant limitation periods must be structured and applied in such a way that the actual implementation of the claim for damages is not rendered virtually impossible or excessively difficult. (87)

167. To summarise, the principle of effectiveness requires that the time-limit for an application for a declaration which the applicant is merely making in preparation for bringing an action for damages should not start to run before the applicant was aware or ought to have been aware of the occurrence of the damage. Conversely, in so far as the applicant intends, by such an application for a declaration, also to obtain a ruling that the contract concluded by the public contracting authority is invalid, more stringent time-limits may be laid down which start to run, irrespective of actual or possible awareness of any damage.

168. The national courts must, where possible, interpret national law in such a way that observance of the principle of effectiveness deriving from Directive 89/665 is assured, and if necessary must disapply any provision in so far as its application would, in the circumstances of the case, lead to a result contrary to Community law. (88)

169. In a case such as this one, in which there was a direct award without prior publication of a contract notice, this means that the time-limit for the application for a declaration may not start to run until the person concerned was aware or ought to have been aware of the alleged infringement of procurement law, in a case where the application is a necessary precondition of a subsequent action for damages.

170. In its order for reference, the Federal Procurement Office indicates that, in its opinion, a result that complies with Community law can in fact be achieved, first, by applying the newly created remedy in Paragraph 331(1)(4) of the BVergG 2006 to events which occurred before this provision entered into force and, secondly, by calculating the applicable time-limits by reference to specific provisions of general civil law, with the result that they do not start to run until the applicant becomes aware of the damage and are extended by periods when there was no effective remedy.

171. To summarise in regard to the seventh question:

The principle of effectiveness requires that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 be interpreted as meaning that a reasonable period must be allowed in the case of an application for review which under national law is a mandatory prerequisite of a subsequent action for damages; that period may not begin to run until the person concerned was aware or should have been aware of the alleged infringement of procurement law, and it must be extended by periods when there was no effective legal remedy. The national court must interpret national procedural law as far as possible so that this result is achieved and, if necessary, must disapply any provision in so far as its application would, in the circumstances of the case, lead to a result contrary to Community law.

VII – Conclusion

172. Against the background of the foregoing, I propose that the Court should answer only the first three questions submitted to it by the Austrian Federal Procurement Office as follows:

(1) Generally on the first, second and third questions:

A contract within the scope of Directive 92/50 whose terms are amended during its currency does not require an award procedure to be carried out unless that amendment is material.

(2) Specifically on the first question:

(a) No material contractual amendment can be presumed to have occurred where the contracting authority accepts that performance of a part of a public contract be transferred to the contractor's subsidiary company which is a wholly-owned subsidiary governed by it in the same way as its own in-house departments. That is not altered by the fact that in theory the contractor might at a subsequent time transfer shares in the subsidiary company to third parties.

(b) If the contractor is a legal person, any changes occurring in the composition of its shareholders during the currency of the contract does not constitute a material contractual amendment.

(3) Specifically on the second and third questions:

(a) No material contractual amendment may be presumed where purely technical adjustments of the contract are carried out in light of altered external circumstances; that includes the conversion into euro of remuneration originally expressed in national currency and the reference to a new index which is an equivalent successor index to a previously used index.

(b) Nor is there a material contractual amendment where in the case of a public services contract without limit as to time the parties have agreed not to give notice for three years, unless there is firm evidence that during the abovementioned period the contracting authority would otherwise have terminated the existing contract for legal or economic reasons.

(c) Whether the alteration of a price for a part of the services to be provided constitutes a material contractual amendment depends on the significance of the price amendment in question, both in relation to the part-service concerned and in relation to the public contract in its entirety.

2 – OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1. This directive was repealed and replaced by Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114). The latter amendment was, however, to be transposed into national law by 31 January 2006 only. Since it was not transposed into Austrian law prior to that date, it is without relevance to the facts of the main proceedings which concern the years 2000, 2001 and 2005.

4 – Further amendments to this directive are to be found in Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 amending Council Directives 89/665/EEC and 92/13/EEC with regard to improving the effectiveness of review procedures concerning the award of public contracts (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31; 'Directive 2007/66'). The latter amendments only came into force on 9 January 2008 and will have to be transposed by 20 December 2009; they are therefore without relevance to the facts of the main proceedings.

The current organisation of the Federal Procurement Office on the basis of the BVergG 2006 is, according to the order for reference, essentially the same as at the time of the Koppensteiner case.

16 – Similarly the Court recognised a federal procurement supervisory committee, at that time in Germany, as entitled to make a reference (Dorsch Consult, cited in footnote 14, paragraph 38).

21 – See Case C-76/97 Tögel [1998] ECR I–5357, paragraphs 53 and 54. Unlike the actions which are at issue in these proceedings and date back to 2000, 2001 and 2005, that is to say, within the temporal application of Community law, the procurement directives were not applicable to the basic agreement because in 1994 the Republic of Austria was not a Member State of the European Union.

22 – On the specific problem of the coupling of a contract without limit as to time with a waiver of a right to terminate, see below, in particular point 74 of this Opinion.

23 – A preliminary reference by the German Oberlandesgericht (Higher Regional Court) Rostock did not lead to a judgment of the Court (Case C-50/03, removed from the register on 9 November 2004).

24 – On the broad interpretation of various concepts defining the scope of the procurement directives, see Case C-373/00 Adolf Truley [2003] ECR I–1931, paragraph 43; Case C-129/04 Espace Trianon and Sofibail [2005] ECR I–7805, paragraph 73; and Case C-119/06 Commission v Italy [2007] ECR I-0000, paragraph 43.

26 – University of Cambridge (cited in footnote 25), paragraph 17; Felix Swoboda (cited in footnote 15), paragraph 45; and Bayerischer Rundfunkand Others (cited in footnote 25), paragraph 36.

27 – Case C-26/03 Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau [2005] ECR I–1, paragraphs 44 and 47, and Bayerischer Rundfunkand Others (cited in footnote 25), paragraph 39.

28 – To that effect, see also Case C-337/98 Commission v France [2000] ECR I–8377, paragraphs 46, 50 and 51, and Case C-496/99 P Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta [2004] ECR I–3801, paragraph 117, where reference is made to significant contractual provisions or tender conditions.

29 – Admittedly, it is not always easy in practice to distinguish between material and non-material contractual amendments because that has to be decided on a case-by-case basis. The use of uncertain legal concepts requiring interpretation is however unavoidable in any area of law and is far from unknown in procurement law.

30 – There does not seem to be any consensus between the parties to the main proceedings on this point. Nor does the order for reference use any uniform terminology. However, it is for the Federal Procurement Office to clarify how the translation is to be classified under civil law.

31 – See Articles 25 and 32(2)(c) and (h) of Directive 92/50 and Case C-176/98 Holst Italia [1999] ECR I–8607, paragraphs 26 and 27. However, the award of subcontracts for carrying out substantive parts of the contract may be restricted under national law (Siemensand ARGE Telekom, cited in footnote 15, paragraph 45).

32 – On the criteria for an in-house transaction, see in particular Case C-107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I–8121, paragraph 50, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau (cited in footnote 27), paragraph 49, Case C–458/03 Parking Brixen [2005] ECR I–8585, paragraph 62, and Case C-295/05 Asemfo [2007] ECR I–2999, paragraph 55; on the concept of the in-house transaction, see my Opinion in Parking Brixen, points 1 and 2.

33 – The same is true of the dissolubility of the profit and loss exclusion agreement.

34 – See my Opinion in Parking Brixen (cited in footnote 32), paragraph 56. The question of the actual foreseeability of an assignment of shares to third parties also plays a significant role in Case C-29/04 Commission v Austria [2005] ECR I–9705, paragraphs 38 to 41; Case C-410/04 ANAV [2006] ECR I–3303, paragraphs 30 to 32; and Parking Brixen (cited in footnote 32), paragraph 67(c).

35 – See above, points 55 to 58 of this Opinion.

36 – The judgment in Case C-57/01 Makedoniko Metro and Mikhaniki [2003] ECR I–1091, paragraph 61, merely clarifies that making provision for the composition of consortia of bidders is within the competence of the Member States. Accordingly, it is for the Member States to determine whether changes in the composition of such consortia are indeed permissible. However that is to be distinguished from the question which is relevant for present purposes, namely whether such changes occurring after the contract has been awarded are to be deemed to constitute material amendments to the contract and accordingly satisfy the criteria of an award of a public contract. The latter question is a matter of Community law.

37 – If one wished to treat any change in the ownership of a legal person as giving cause to carry out a new award procedure, the award of public contracts would in the case of listed companies whose shareholders sometimes change on a day-to-day basis be rendered practically impossible.

39 – See above, points 48 and 49 of this Opinion.

40 – In this connection see Tögel (cited in footnote 21), paragraphs 53 and 54.

41 – See above, points 48 and 49 of this Opinion.

42 – In this connection see Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta (cited in footnote 28), paragraph 117.

44 – It is true that an adjustment to the contract on the occasion of the currency conversion would not have been absolutely necessary because the legal framework conditions already existing ensured that all amounts previously expressed in the national currency would in future be understood as euro amounts, without that implying any change in the existing contractual obligations (see also Articles 3 and 5 of Council Regulation (EC) No 1103/97 of 17 June 1997 on certain provisions relating to the introduction of the euro (OJ 1997 L 162, p. 1). However, as APA and APA-OTS correctly point out, an express adjustment to the contract may, in a contract for continuing obligations, such as the contract at issue, be appropriate none the less in order to avoid the increased administrative burden of repeatedly performing a currency conversion.

45 – The maximum line charges agreed in the first supplemental agreement for 2002, 2003 and 2004 are only slightly different. Subject to a closer examination by the Federal Procurement Office, such slight price differences appear to move from year to year within the framework of the general price trends to be anticipated in subsequent years based on projections from 2001.

46 – See above, points 81 to 94 of this Opinion.

47 – See my comments on the first, second and third questions above, points 41 to 105 of this Opinion.

48 – Case C-507/03 Commission v Ireland (cited in footnote 25), paragraph 25.

49 – APA and APA-OTS are of the opinion that their documentation services are to be assigned to the 'Library services' sector, CPC Reference No 96311 and their OTS services to the 'Electronic message and information services' sector, CPC Reference No 75232.

50 – The order for reference defines the factual framework in which the questions referred are to be answered; see on that point the case-law cited in footnote 43.

51 – Under Article 9 in conjunction with Article 10 of Directive 92/50, only Articles 14 and 16 of the directive are applicable to such contracts, which are of no relevance to the matters at issue here. The other procedural provisions laid down in Directive 92/50, in particular those concerning tenders with prior notification of the award procedure, do not apply to those contracts (Case C–507/03 Commission v Ireland, cited in footnote 25, paragraphs 23 and 24). However, the prohibition on discrimination in Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50 applies (Case C-234/03 Contseand Others [2005] ECR I–9315, paragraph 47).

52 – Parking Brixen (cited in footnote 32), paragraph 46; see also Case C-324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress [2000] ECR I–10745, paragraph 60, Case C-231/03 Coname [2005] ECR I–7287, paragraph 16, Case C-264/03 Commission v France [2005] ECR I–8831, paragraph 33, ANAV (cited in footnote 34), paragraph 18, and Case C-6/05 Medipac-Kazantzidis [2007] ECR I-4557, paragraph 33; see also the order of 3 December 2001 in Case C-59/00 Vestergaard [2001] ECR I–9505, paragraph 20.

55 – Case C-507/03 Commission v Ireland (cited in footnote 25), paragraphs 29 and 30; to the same effect, see Case C–380/05 Centro Europa 7 [2008] ECR I–0000, paragraph 67.

56 – Telaustria and Telefonadress (cited in footnote 52), paragraph 62; Coname (cited in footnote 52), paragraphs 16 and 17; Parking Brixen (cited in footnote 32), paragraph 49; and ANAV (cited in footnote 34), paragraph 21.

57 – Coname (cited in footnote 52), paragraph 21; there is a misunderstanding in Parking Brixen (cited in footnote 32), paragraph 50, which in the German version mentions 'Ausschreibung' (tender) which presumably is a mistranslation of the French term

'mise en concurrence' (call for competition).

58 – Telaustria and Telefonadress (cited in footnote 52), paragraph 62; Parking Brixen (cited in footnote 32), paragraphs 49 and 50; and ANAV (cited in footnote 34), paragraph 21. Useful indications are provided in this connection by the Commission interpretative communication on the Community law applicable to contract awards not or not fully subject to the provisions of the public procurement directives (OJ 2006 C 179, p. 2).

71 – See my comments on the first, second and third questions above, points 41 to 105 of this Opinion.

73 – The reference to public supply and public works contracts must, since the extension of the scope of Directive 89/665 by Directive 92/50, be interpreted as relating to all public contracts including contracts for services. The fact that only Article 1(1) but not Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 was amended accordingly seems to be attributable to a drafting oversight on the part of the Community legislature which was corrected for future cases by Directive 2007/66.

76 – The mere fact that at the end of the review proceedings there may be no evidence of actual or potential damage does not in itself militate against the admissibility of the application for review; see in this connection Case C-249/01 Hackermüller [2003] ECR I–6319, paragraph 27.

Are the terms 'awarding' in Article 3(1) of Directive 92/50/EEC [1] and 'awarded' in Articles 8 and 9 of that directive to be interpreted as encompassing circumstances in which a contracting authority intends to obtain services in the future from a service provider established as a limited liability company where those services were previously supplied by a different service provider who is the sole shareholder in the future service provider and has control of the future service provider? In such a case is it legally relevant that the contracting authority has no guarantee that throughout the entire period of the original contract the shares in the future service provider will not be disposed of in whole or in part to third parties and moreover has no guarantee that the membership of the original service provider, which is in the form of a co-operative society, will remain unchanged throughout the entire contract period?

Are the terms 'awarding' in Article 3(1) of Directive 92/50/EEC and 'awarded' in Articles 8 and 9 of that directive to be interpreted as encompassing circumstances in which, during the period of validity of a contract concluded for an indefinite period with certain service providers for the joint provision of services, a contracting authority agrees with those service providers amendments to the charges for specified services under the contract and reformulates an index-linking clause, where these amendments result in different charges and are made upon the changeover to the euro?

Are the terms 'awarding' in Article 3(1) of Directive 92/50/EEC and 'awarded' in Articles 8 and 9 of that directive to be interpreted as encompassing circumstances in which, during the period of validity of a contract concluded for an indefinite period with certain service providers for the joint provision of services, a contracting authority agrees with those service providers to amend the contract, first, renewing for a period of three years a waiver of the right to terminate the contract by notice, the waiver no longer being in force at the time of the amendment, and second, also laying down a higher rebate than before for certain volume-related charges within a specified area of supply?

If the answer to any of the first three questions is that there is an award:

Is Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50/EEC, or are any other provisions of Community law, such as, in particular, the principle of transparency, to be interpreted as permitting a contracting authority to obtain services by awarding a single contract in a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, where parts of the services are covered by exclusive rights as referred to in Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50/EEC? Or do the principle of transparency or any other provisions of Community law require in the case of an award of mostly non-priority services that a contract notice is none the less published prior to the contract award, to enable undertakings in the sectors concerned to assess whether services are in fact being awarded that are subject to an exclusive right? Or do the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts require that in such a case services can only be awarded in separate tender procedures, according to whether they are or are not subject to exclusive rights, in order to allow at least competitive tendering as to part?

If the answer to the fourth question is to the effect that a contracting authority may award services which are not subject to exclusive rights in a single procurement procedure together with services which are subject to an exclusive right:

Can an undertaking which does not have any right to deal with data that is subject to an exclusive right possessed by an undertaking which has a dominant position in the market establish that in that respect it has the capacity, for the purposes of procurement law, to provide a comprehensive service to a contracting authority, by relying on Article 82 EC and an obligation derived from that provision on the market-dominant undertaking which has the power of disposal over the data and is established in a Member State to provide the data on reasonable conditions?

If the answer to the first, second and third questions is to the effect that the partial contract transfer in 2000 and/or one or both of the contract amendments referred to constituted new awards; and furthermore should the fourth question be answered to the effect that either when awarding a contract for services not subject to exclusive rights by means of a separate award procedure, or when awarding a combined contract (in the present case for press releases, the basic service and rights to use APADok), a contracting authority should have first published a contract notice to ensure that the intended contract award was transparent and capable of being reviewed:

Is 'harmed' in Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665/EEC [2] and in Article 2(1)(c) of that directive to be interpreted as meaning that an undertaking in a case such as the present one is harmed, within the meaning of those provisions of Directive 89/665/EEC, simply where he has been deprived of the opportunity to participate in a procurement procedure because the contracting authority did not, prior to making the award, publish a contract notice, on the basis of which the undertaking could have tendered for the contract to be awarded, could have submitted an offer or could have had the claim that exclusive rights were involved reviewed by the competent procurement review body?

Are the Community law principle of equivalence and the Community law requirement for effective legal protection, or the principle of effectiveness, to be interpreted, having regard to any other relevant provisions of Community law, as conferring an individual and unconditional right on an undertaking against a Member State such that it has at least six months from the time when it could have known that a contract award infringed procurement law to bring legal proceedings before the competent national authority to seek damages following the contract award on account of an infringement of Community procurement law, while it must be allowed additional time for periods when it could not make such a claim owing to the absence of a statutory basis in national law, in circumstances where under national law claims for damages based on infringements of national law are normally subject to a limitation period of three years from the date of knowledge of the wrongdoer and of the damage and, in the absence of legal protection in a particular area of law, the limitation period does not (continue to) run?

In Case C450/06,

REFERENCE for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC from the Conseil d'Etat (Council of State) (Belgium), made by decision of 24 October 2006, received at the Court on 6 November 2006, in the proceedings

Varec SA

v

Belgian State,

intervener:

Diehl Remscheid GmbH & Co.,

THE COURT (Third Chamber), composed of A. Rosas, President of Chamber, J.N. Cunha Rodrigues (Rapporteur), J. Kluka, P. Lindh and A. Arabadjiev, Judges,

Advocate General: E. Sharpston,

Registrar: R. Grass,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

- Varec SA, by J. Bourtembourg and C. Molitor, avocats,

- the Belgian Government, by A. Hubert, acting as Agent, assisted by N. Cahen, avocat,

- the Austrian Government, by M. Fruhmann, acting as Agent,

- the Commission of the European Communities, by B. Stromsky and D. Kukovec, acting as Agents, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 25 October 2007,

gives the following

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 1(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, read in conjunction with Article 15(2) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997, must be interpreted as meaning that the body responsible for the reviews provided for in Article 1(1) must ensure that confidentiality and business secrecy are safeguarded in respect of information contained in files communicated to that body by the parties to an action, particularly by the contracting authority, although it may apprise itself of such information and take it into consideration. It is for that body to decide to what extent and by what process it is appropriate to safeguard the confidentiality and secrecy of that information, having regard to the requirements of effective legal protection and the rights of defence of the parties to the dispute and, in the case of judicial review or a review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC, so as to ensure that the proceedings as a whole accord with the right to a fair trial.

1. The reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1; Directive 89/665').

2. The reference was made in proceedings between Varec SA (Varec') and the Belgian State, represented by the Minister for Defence, concerning the award of a public contract for the supply of track links for Leopard' tanks.

Legal context

3. Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 provides:

The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC, and 92/50/EEC..., decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.'

4. Article 33 of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) repeals Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1), and provides that the references to that repealed directive are to be construed as references to Directive 93/36. Similarly, Article 36 of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) repeals Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the co-ordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1971 L 185, p. 5), and provides that references to Directive 71/305 are to be construed as references to Directive 93/37.

5. Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665 provides:

Where bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character, written reasons for their decisions shall always be given. Furthermore, in such a case, provision must be made to guarantee procedures whereby any allegedly illegal measure taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article [234 EC] and independent of both the contracting authority and the review body.

The members of such an independent body shall be appointed and leave office under the same conditions as members of the judiciary as regards the authority responsible for their appointment, their period of office, and their removal. At least the President of this independent body shall have the same legal and professional qualifications as members of the judiciary. The independent body shall take its decisions following a procedure in which both sides are heard, and these decisions shall, by means determined by each Member State, be legally binding.'

6. According to Article 7(1) of Directive 93/36, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1; Directive 93/36'):

The contracting authority shall, within 15 days of the date on which the request is received, inform any eliminated candidate or tenderer of the reasons for rejection of his application or his tender and any tenderer who has made an admissible tender of the characteristics and relative advantages of the tender selected as well as the name of the successful tenderer.

However, contracting authorities may decide that certain information on the contract award, referred to in the preceding subparagraph, shall be withheld where release of such information would impede law enforcement or otherwise be contrary to the public interest or would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of particular undertakings, public or private, or might prejudice fair competition between suppliers.'

7. Article 9(3) of Directive 93/36 provides:

Contracting authorities who have awarded a contract shall make known the result by means of a notice. However, certain information on the contract award may, in certain cases, not be published where release of such information would impede law enforcement or otherwise be contrary to the public interest, would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of particular enterprises, public or private, or might prejudice fair competition between suppliers.'

8. Article 15(2) of Directive 93/36 provides:

The contracting authorities shall respect fully the confidential nature of any information furnished by the suppliers.'

9. The provisions of Articles 7(1), 9(3) and 15(2) of Directive 93/36 have been substantially reproduced in Article 6, the fifth subparagraph of Article 35(4), and Article 41(3) respectively of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

National legislation

10. Article 87 of the Decree of the Regent of 23 August 1948 establishing the procedure before the Administrative Section of the Conseil d'Etat (Moniteur belge of 23 to 24 August 1948, p. 6821), provides:

Parties, their advisers and the government commissioner may inspect the case-file at the registry.'

11. According to the third and fourth subparagraphs of Article 21 of the Coordinated Laws on the Conseil d'Etat of 12 January 1973 (Moniteur belge of 21 March 1973, p. 3461):

Where the defendant fails to lodge the administrative file within the prescribed period, without prejudice to Article 21a, the facts alleged by the applicant shall be deemed to have been proven, unless they are manifestly inaccurate.

Where the administrative file is not in the possession of the defendant, he shall inform the Chamber seised of the action accordingly. The Chamber may order that the administrative file be lodged, on penalty of a fine in accordance with Article 36.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

12. On 14 December 2001, the Belgian State initiated a contract award procedure in respect of the supply of track links for Leopard' tanks. Two tenderers submitted bids, namely Varec and Diehl Remscheid GmbH & Co. (Diehl').

13. When examining those tenders, the Belgian State considered that the tender submitted by Varec did not satisfy the technical selection criteria and that that tender was unlawful. By contrast, it took the view that the tender submitted by Diehl satisfied all the selection criteria, that it was lawful and that its prices were normal. Consequently, the Belgian State awarded the contract to Diehl by decision of the Minister for Defence of 28 May 2002 (the award decision').

14. On 29 July 2002, Varec brought an action for annulment of the award decision before the Conseil d'Etat. Diehl was granted leave to intervene.

15. The file delivered to the Conseil d'Etat by the Belgian State did not include Diehl's tender.

16. Varec requested that that tender be added to the file. The same request was made by the Auditeur of the Conseil d'Etat who was responsible for drawing up a report (the Auditeur').

17. On 17 December 2002, the Belgian State added Diehl's tender to the file, explaining that neither the plans of the whole of the proposed track link nor those of its constituent parts were included. It stated that these had been returned to Diehl in accordance with the specification and at Diehl's request. It further stated that that was why it could not place those documents on the file and that, if it was essential that they be included, it would be necessary to ask Diehl to provide them. The Belgian State also observed that Varec and Diehl are in dispute about the intellectual property rights to the plans in question.

18. By letter of the same date, Diehl informed the Auditeur that the version of its tender that was placed on the file by the Belgian State contained confidential data and information, and that it was objecting on the ground that third parties, including Varec, would be able to peruse those confidential data and information relating to business secrets included in the tender. According to Diehl, certain passages in Annexes 4, 12 and 13 to its tender contain specific data concerning the detailed revisions of the relevant manufacturing plans and also the industrial process.

19. In his report of 23 February 2006, the Auditeur concluded that the award decision should be annulled on the ground that in the absence of the defendant's cooperation in the sound administration of justice and fair proceedings, the only possible sanction is the annulment of the administrative measure whose lawfulness is not established where documents are excluded from inter partes proceedings'.

20. The Belgian State challenged that conclusion and requested the Conseil d'Etat to rule on the issue of respecting the confidentiality of Diehl's tender documents containing information relating to business secrets which had been placed on the file in the proceedings before that court.

21. In those circumstances, the Conseil d'Etat decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

Must Article 1(1) of [Directive 89/665], read with Article 15(2) of [Directive 93/36] and Article 6 of [Directive 2004/18], be interpreted as meaning that the authority responsible for the appeal procedures provided for in that article must ensure confidentiality and observance of the business secrets contained in the files communicated to it by the parties to the case, including the contracting authority, whilst at the same time being entitled to apprise itself of such information and take it into consideration?'

Admissibility

22. Varec submits that in order to resolve the dispute before the Conseil d'Etat it is not necessary for the Court to answer the question referred for a preliminary ruling.

23. In that regard, it must be observed that, in proceedings under Article 234 EC, which is based on a clear separation of functions between the national courts and the Court of Justice, any assessment of the facts in the case is a matter for the national court. Similarly, it is solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. Consequently, where the questions submitted by the national court concern the interpretation of Community law, the Court of Justice is, in principle, bound to give a ruling (see, in particular, Case C326/00 IKA [2003] ECR I1703, paragraph 27; Case C145/03 Keller [2005] ECR I2529, paragraph 33; and Case C419/04 Conseil général de la Vienne [2006] ECR I5645, paragraph 19).

24. Nevertheless, the Court has also held that, in exceptional circumstances, it can examine the conditions in which the case was referred to it by the national court, in order to assess whether it has jurisdiction (see, to that effect, Case 244/80 Foglia [1981] ECR 3045, paragraph 21). The Court may refuse to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (see, in particular, Case C379/98 PreussenElektra [2001] ECR I2099, paragraph 39; Case C390/99 Canal Satélite Digital [2002] ECR I607, paragraph 19; and Conseil général de la Vienne , paragraph 20).

25. It must be pointed out that that is not the case here. If the Conseil d'Etat follows the form of order proposed by the Auditeur, it will have to annul the award decision which is before it, without examining the substance of the dispute. On the other hand, if the provisions of Community law which the Conseil d'Etat seeks to have interpreted justify the confidential treatment of the documents of the file at issue in the main proceedings, it will be in a position to examine the substance of the dispute. For those reasons it may be concluded that the interpretation of those provisions is necessary for the resolution of the dispute in the main proceedings.

Merits

26. In the question referred to the Court, the Conseil d'Etat refers both to Directive 93/36 and to Directive 2004/18. Since Directive 2004/18 has replaced Directive 93/36, it is necessary to establish which of the two directives is relevant to the examination of the question referred.

27. It must be borne in mind that, according to settled case-law, procedural rules are generally held to apply to all proceedings pending at the time when they enter into force, whereas substantive rules are usually interpreted as not applying, in principle, to situations existing before their entry into force (see Case C-201/04 Molenbergnatie [2006] ECR I2049, paragraph 31 and the case-law cited).

28. The dispute in the main proceedings concerns the right to the protection of confidential information. As the Advocate General noted in point 31 of her Opinion, such a right is in essence a substantive right, even if its application can have procedural consequences.

29. The right crystallised when Diehl submitted its tender in the award procedure at issue in the main proceedings. Since that date was not specified in the order for reference, it is appropriate to conclude that it falls between 14 December 2001, the date of the call for tenders, and 14 January 2002, the date of the opening of bids.

30. Directive 2004/18 had not yet been adopted at that time. It follows that the provisions of Directive 93/36 must be taken into consideration for the purposes of the dispute in the main proceedings.

31. There is no provision in Directive 89/665 which expressly governs the protection of confidential information. It is necessary, in that respect, to refer to that directive's general provisions, and in particular to Article 1(1).

32. Article 1(1) provides that the Member States are to take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of, inter alia, Directive 93/36, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

33. Since the objective of Directive 89/665 is to ensure compliance with Community law in the field of public procurement, Article 1(1) of that directive must be interpreted in the light of the provisions of Directive 93/36 as well as of other provisions of Community law in the field of public procurement.

34. The principal objective of the Community rules in that field is the opening-up of public procurement to undistorted competition in all the Member States (see, to that effect, Case C26/03 Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau [2005] ECR I1, paragraph 44).

35. In order to attain that objective, it is important that the contracting authorities do not release information relating to contract award procedures which could be used to distort competition, whether in an ongoing procurement procedure or in subsequent procedures.

36. Furthermore, both by their nature and according to the scheme of Community legislation in that field, contract award procedures are founded on a relationship of trust between the contracting authorities and participating economic operators. Those operators must be able to communicate any relevant information to the contracting authorities in the procurement process, without fear that the authorities will communicate to third parties items of information whose disclosure could be damaging to them.

37. Accordingly, Article 15(2) of Directive 93/36 provides that the contracting authorities are obliged to respect fully the confidential nature of any information furnished by the suppliers.

38. In the specific context of informing an eliminated candidate or tenderer of the reasons for the rejection of his application or tender, and of publishing a notice of the award of a contract, Articles 7(1) and 9(3) of Directive 93/36 give the contracting authorities the discretion to withhold certain information where its release would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of particular undertakings, public or private, or might prejudice fair competition between suppliers.

39. Admittedly, those provisions relate to the conduct of the contracting authorities. It must nevertheless be acknowledged that their effectiveness would be severely undermined if, in an appeal against a decision taken by a contracting authority in relation to a contract award procedure, all of the information concerning that award procedure had to be made unreservedly available to the appellant, or even to others such as the interveners.

40. In such circumstances, the mere lodging of an appeal would give access to information which could be used to distort competition or to prejudice the legitimate interests of economic operators who participated in the contract award procedure concerned. Such an opportunity could even encourage economic operators to bring an appeal solely for the purpose of gaining access to their competitors' business secrets.

41. In such an appeal, the respondent would be the contracting authority and the economic operator whose interests are at risk of being damaged would not necessarily be a party to the dispute or joined to the case to defend those interests. Accordingly, it is all the more important to provide for mechanisms which will adequately safeguard the interests of such economic operators.

42. In a review, the body responsible for the review procedure assumes the obligations laid down by Directive 93/36 with regard to the contracting authority's respect for the confidentiality of information. The effective review' requirement provided for in Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, read in conjunction with Articles 7(1), 9(3) and 15(2) of Directive 93/36, therefore imposes on that body an obligation to take the measures necessary to guarantee the effectiveness of those provisions, and thereby to ensure that fair competition is maintained and that the legitimate interests of the economic operators concerned are protected.

43. It follows that, in a review procedure in relation to the award of public contracts, the body responsible for that review procedure must be able to decide that the information in the file relating to such an award should not be communicated to the parties or their lawyers, if that is necessary in order to ensure the protection of fair competition or of the legitimate interests of the economic operators that is required by Community law.

44. The question arises whether that interpretation is consistent with the concept of a fair hearing in accordance with Article 6 of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, signed in Rome on 4 November 1950 (ECHR').

45. As the order for reference shows, Varec claimed before the Conseil d'Etat that the right to a fair hearing means that both parties must be heard in any judicial procedure, that the adversarial principle is a general principle of law, that it has a foundation in Article 6 of the ECHR, and that that principle means that the parties are entitled to a process of inspecting and commenting on all documents or observations submitted to the court with a view to influencing its decision.

46. The Court notes that Article 6(1) of the ECHR provides inter alia that everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal...'. The European Court of Human Rights has consistently held that the adversarial nature of proceedings is one of the factors which enables their fairness to be assessed, but it may be balanced against other rights and interests.

47. The adversarial principle means, as a rule, that the parties have a right to a process of inspecting and commenting on the evidence and observations submitted to the court. However, in some cases it may be necessary for certain information to be withheld from the parties in order to preserve the fundamental rights of a third party or to safeguard an important public interest (see Rowe and Davis v The United Kingdom [GC] no 28901/95, º61, ECHR 2000II, and V v Finland no 40412/98, º75, ECHR 2007...).

48. One of the fundamental rights capable of being protected in this way is the right to respect for private life, enshrined in Article 8 of the ECHR, which flows from the common constitutional traditions of the Member States and which is restated in Article 7 of the Charter of fundamental rights of the European Union, proclaimed in Nice on 7 December 2000 (OJ 2000 C 364, p. 1) (see, in particular, Case C62/90 Commission v Germany [1992] ECR I2575, paragraph 23, and Case C404/92 P X v Commission [1994] ECR I4737, paragraph 17). It follows from the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights that the notion of private life' cannot be taken to mean that the professional or commercial activities of either natural or legal persons are excluded (see Niemietz v Germany , judgment of 16 December 1992, Series A no 251B, º29; Société Colas Est and Others v France , no 37971/97, º41, ECHR 2002III; and also Peck v The United Kingdom no 44647/98, º57, ECHR 2003I). Those activities can include participation in a contract award procedure.

49. The Court of Justice has, moreover, acknowledged that the protection of business secrets is a general principle (see Case 53/85 AKZO Chemie and AKZO Chemie UK v Commission [1986] ECR 1965, paragraph 28, and Case C36/92 P SEP v Commission [1994] ECR I1911, paragraph 37).

50. Finally, the maintenance of fair competition in the context of contract award procedures is an important public interest, the protection of which is acknowledged in the case-law cited in paragraph 47 of this judgment.

51. It follows that, in the context of a review of a decision taken by a contracting authority in relation to a contract award procedure, the adversarial principle does not mean that the parties are entitled to unlimited and absolute access to all of the information relating to the award procedure concerned which has been filed with the body responsible for the review. On the contrary, that right of access must be balanced against the right of other economic operators to the protection of their confidential information and their business secrets.

52. The principle of the protection of confidential information and of business secrets must be observed in such a way as to reconcile it with the requirements of effective legal protection and the rights of defence of the parties to the dispute (see, by analogy, Case C-438/04 Mobistar [2006] ECR I6675, paragraph 40) and, in the case of judicial review or a review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC, in such a way as to ensure that the proceedings as a whole accord with the right to a fair trial.

53. To that end, the body responsible for the review must necessarily be able to have at its disposal the information required in order to decide in full knowledge of the facts, including confidential information and business secrets (see, by analogy, Mobistar , paragraph 40).

54. Having regard to the extremely serious damage which could result from improper communication of certain information to a competitor, that body must, before communicating that information to a party to the dispute, give the economic operator concerned an opportunity to plead that the information is confidential or a business secret (see, by analogy, AKZO Chemie and AKZO Chemie UK v Commission , paragraph 29).

55. Accordingly, the answer to the question referred must be that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, read in conjunction with Article 15(2) of Directive 93/36, must be interpreted as meaning that the body responsible for the reviews provided for in Article 1(1) must ensure that confidentiality and business secrecy are safeguarded in respect of information contained in files communicated to that body by the parties to an action, particularly by the contracting authority, although it may apprise itself of such information and take it into consideration. It is for that body to decide to what extent and by what process it is appropriate to safeguard the confidentiality and secrecy of that information, having regard to the requirements of effective legal protection and the rights of defence of the parties to the dispute and, in the case of judicial review or a review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC, so as to ensure that the proceedings as a whole accord with the right to a fair trial.

Costs

56. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

Opinion of Advocate General Sharpston delivered on 25 October 2007. Varec SA v Belgian State. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Conseil d'Etat - Belgium. Public procurement - Review - Directive 89/665/EEC - Effective review - Meaning - Balance between the adversarial principle and the right to observance of business secrets - Protection, by the body responsible for the review, of the confidentiality of information provided by economic operators. Case C-450/06.

1. The Belgian Conseil d'Etat (Council of State) asks whether a body hearing an appeal concerning the award of a public contract must protect the confidentiality of business secrets while remaining entitled to take account of evidence containing them.

2. The issue highlights the conflict between the right of one party to require production of and access to relevant evidence and that of another to maintain the confidentiality of certain evidence vis-à-vis a business competitor.

Community legislation

3. Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 (2) requires Member States to ensure that, as regards procedures falling within the scope of the directives coordinating award procedures for public works, supply and service contracts, (3) decisions taken by contracting authorities can be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the remainder of the directive, if it is alleged that Community public procurement law or national implementing rules have been infringed.

4. The directive then sets out conditions to be observed in such review procedures, with a view to ensuring a speedy and efficient outcome in accordance with Community law. However, it is silent in respect of the treatment of confidential information contained in documents submitted or requested as evidence. Under Article 2(8), the review body must follow a procedure in which both sides are heard'.

5. Questions of confidentiality at the award stage in public supply contracts were dealt with, at the time of the award of the contract in the main proceedings, in Directive 93/36, (4) in particular by Article 15(2), which provided: The contracting authorities shall respect fully the confidential nature of any information furnished by the suppliers.' In addition, Articles 7(1) and 9(3) provided for notice to be given of the award, subject to the contracting authority's discretion to withhold certain information where its release, inter alia, would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of particular undertakings, public or private, or might prejudice fair competition between suppliers'.

6. Directive 93/36 was repealed and replaced with effect from 31 January 2006 by Directive 2004/18, (5) Article 6 of which provides: Without prejudice to the provisions of this Directive, in particular those concerning the obligations relating to the advertising of awarded contracts and to the information to candidates and tenderers ..., and in accordance with the national law to which the contracting authority is subject, the contracting authority shall not disclose information forwarded to it by economic operators which they have designated as confidential; such information includes, in particular, technical or trade secrets and the confidential aspects of tenders.'

Belgian legislation

Confidentiality of tender documents

7. Article 32 of the Belgian Constitution (6) guarantees public access to administrative documents as a general rule. Among exceptions to that rule is Article 6(1) of the Law of 11 April 1994 on administrative publicity, (7) which allows an authority to refuse access if the interest in granting it is outweighed by the interest in protecting, inter alia, business or manufacturing information of a confidential nature.

8. The requirement for a public contracting authority to respect the confidentiality of business secrets contained in documents submitted to it is embodied in various provisions of the Belgian legislation covering award procedures - in particular, at the time of the award in issue in the main proceedings, Articles 25(4), 51(4) and 80(4) of the Royal Decree of 8 January 1996 on public works, supply and service contracts and on public works concessions.

9. Since then, the Law of 15 June 2006 on public procurement and certain works, supply and service contracts has been enacted to transpose Directive 2004/18. The first two paragraphs of Article 11 read:

Neither the contracting authority nor any person who, by reason of the duties or functions with which he is entrusted, has knowledge of confidential information relating to a contract or to the award or performance of the contract, communicated by candidates, tenderers, suppliers or service providers, shall divulge any such information. The information concerned shall include in particular technical or commercial secrets and confidential aspects of tenders.

In the event of a review procedure, the review body and the contracting authority shall take care to ensure the confidential nature of the information referred to in the preceding paragraph.'

10. However, like most of the other provisions of that law, Article 11 has not yet entered into force. (8)

Proceedings before the Conseil d'Etat

11. Appeals against decisions in award procedures may be brought before the Conseil d'Etat. In matters of judicial review, procedure before that court is governed in particular by a Decree of the Regent of 23 August 1948 and by the Coordinated Laws of 12 January 1973.

12. Article 6 of the Decree of the Regent requires the defendant authority to lodge the administrative file with the registry within 60 days from service of the application. If the file is not in the possession of that authority, there is further provision for it to be required of the authority which does hold it.

13. Article 87 of the Decree of the Regent provides that parties and their lawyers may inspect the file at the registry, a right which is also affirmed in Article 19 of the Coordinated Laws.

14. Article 21 of the Coordinated Laws allows the applicant to request an order that the defendant authority lodge the administrative file. It further provides that, if the file is not lodged within the time-limit set, the facts alleged by the applicant are to be deemed proven unless they are manifestly inaccurate. The Conseil d'Etat states that the latter provision applies also when only part of the file has not been lodged.

15. It appears from the order for reference that the Conseil d'Etat has consistently held that neither the Law of 11 April 1994 nor the Royal Decree of 8 January 1996 (9) can be relied upon to prevent a court reviewing the validity of an administrative decision from examining documents which are essential for it to be able to assess whether an alleged ground for annulment is well founded. (10)

16. It appears also that no provision governing procedure before the Conseil d'Etat explicitly allows anything in the documents lodged to be treated as confidential vis-à-vis a party to the proceedings.

Facts and procedure

17. The main proceedings arise out of an invitation to tender for the supply of tank track links, issued by the Belgian Defence Ministry. Two bids were received, one from Varec SA (Varec'), the other from Diehl Remscheid GmbH & Co (Diehl'). On 28 May 2002, the contract was awarded to Diehl. The award decision listed a number of technical, administrative and legal grounds for excluding Varec's bid but concluded that Diehl satisfied all the selection criteria. That conclusion was based on, inter alia, certain plans and samples annexed to Diehl's bid. At Diehl's request, those items were returned to it after evaluation of the bids.

18. Varec, in its challenge before the Conseil d'Etat, asserts that Diehl's bid did not in fact comply with all the criteria for the award. In order to evaluate that claim, it considers, the plans and samples referred to in the preceding paragraph should be examined as evidence both by the reviewing court and by the party who has asked for that review to take place.

19. However, the file lodged by the defendant contracting authority does not contain the relevant items, because they were returned to Diehl. Diehl, which has intervened in the proceedings, objects to lodging them on the ground that they embody confidential information and business secrets to which it does not wish Varec to have access. The auditeur (11) considers that if the contracting authority does not lodge a complete file, thereby failing in its duty to assist in ensuring proper administration of justice and fair proceedings, there is no alternative but to annul the contested award.

20. In those circumstances, the Conseil d'Etat asks the Court:

Must Article 1(1) of [Directive 89/665/EEC], read with Article 15(2) of [Directive 93/36/EEC], and Article 6 of [Directive 2004/18/EC], be interpreted as meaning that the authority responsible for the appeal procedures provided for in that article must ensure confidentiality and observance of the business secrets contained in the files communicated to it by the parties to the case, including the contracting authority, whilst at the same time being entitled to apprise itself of such information and take it into consideration?'

21. Written observations have been submitted by the Belgian and Austrian Governments and by the Commission. Varec has not submitted observations because, in its view, the answer to the question posed is not necessary in order to resolve the dispute before the Conseil d'Etat.

22. No hearing has been requested and none has been held.

23. It should be added that, by the same judgment, the Conseil d'Etat also asked the Belgian Constitutional Court for a preliminary ruling on the question:

Do Articles 21 and 23 of the Coordinated Laws on the Council of State of 12 January 1973, interpreted as meaning that the confidential documents in the administration's file must be placed in the administrative file and must be communicated to the parties, infringe Article 22 of the Constitution, whether or not read with Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights and Article 17 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, where they do not enable business secrets to be safeguarded?' (12)

24. The Constitutional Court delivered its ruling on 19 September 2007.

25. I had originally envisaged delivering this Opinion on 20 September 2007. However, when I learned of the date set for the Constitutional Court's judgment, I considered it preferable, in order best to assist this Court in reaching its decision, to allow myself the opportunity of consulting that judgment first, and consequently postponed the delivery of this Opinion.

26. In its judgment, the Constitutional Court held essentially that it would be contrary to Article 22 of the Constitution, read with Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights and Article 17 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to interpret the provisions in question as precluding a defendant authority from relying on the confidentiality of items in the administrative file in order to prevent their communication to the parties and as precluding the Conseil d'Etat from assessing the alleged confidential nature of such items. However, it would be consistent with those higher norms to interpret the provisions as allowing the defendant authority to rely on confidentiality for such purposes and the Conseil d'Etat to assess the confidential nature of the items.

Assessment

Admissibility

27. Varec's view that the answer to the question posed is not necessary in order to resolve the dispute before the Conseil d'Etat - a somewhat surprising view, if Varec originally sought production of the disputed evidence - might be interpreted as implicitly casting doubt on the admissibility of the reference for a preliminary ruling.

28. However, the Court has consistently held that in principle it is for the national courts alone to determine, having regard to the particular features of each case, both the need to refer a question for a preliminary ruling and the relevance of that question'. (13)

29. I see nothing in the circumstances of the present case that would justify calling into question the Conseil d'Etat's assessment that an answer to the question posed is necessary to enable it to give judgment. If Varec's claim is that Diehl's tender did not meet all the criteria for the award of the contract, if it has not withdrawn that claim in respect of the content of the disputed plans and samples, and if Diehl continues to object to Varec's gaining access to those items, then, given the procedural rules applicable in the Conseil d'Etat, an answer to the question referred seems relevant to any decision as to the pursuit of the procedure before that court.

Applicable legislation

30. In view of the Court's case-law to the effect that procedural rules generally apply to all proceedings pending at the time when they enter into force, whereas substantive rules do not usually apply, in principle, to situations existing before their entry into force, (14) it is necessary to consider whether the rules whose interpretation is sought are procedural or substantive.

31. I agree here with the Commission. A right to the protection of confidential information, although it has procedural ramifications, and even though the context in which it arises before the Conseil d'Etat is largely a procedural one, is in essence a substantive right. That right first crystallised, in the main proceedings, when Diehl submitted its tender in the original award procedure. What is at issue now is the ongoing protection of that continuing substantive right.

32. Consequently, the Community law which falls to be interpreted is that in force at the time of the award procedure in 2002, namely Directives 89/665 and 93/36, to the exclusion of Directive 2004/18. (15) It may be added that in any event Article 6 of the latter directive, although more elaborately worded than Article 15(2) of Directive 93/36, contains essentially the same substantive provision, so that the situation after its entry into force is no different.

The question referred

Transparency and effective review

33. Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 requires Member States to ensure that award decisions can be reviewed effectively. Decisions cannot be reviewed effectively unless the reviewing body has at its disposal all the evidence relevant to assessing whether they were taken in accordance with all the applicable rules and conditions. Transparency, which is an important feature of public procurement procedures, must be guaranteed in order to ensure that public funds are spent honestly and efficiently, on the basis of a serious assessment and without any kind of favouritism or quid pro quo whether financial or political'. (16)

34. Consequently, if it is alleged before a review body acting pursuant to Directive 89/665 that a contract was awarded irregularly, and that information taken into account by the contracting authority provides evidence of the irregularity, then the review body can carry out its duty of effective review to the full extent only if it has that information at its disposal.

The right to a fair hearing

35. As this Court has held, it would infringe a fundamental principle of law to base a judicial decision on facts or documents of which the parties, or one of them, have not been able to take cognisance and in relation to which they have not therefore been able to state their views. (17)

36. The European Court of Human Rights has also held that a fundamental aspect of the right to a fair hearing in all civil or criminal proceedings is that both parties must be heard and enjoy equality of arms, so that each party must be able to take cognisance of observations or evidence submitted by the other party - or by an independent judicial official, by an administration or by the court whose judgment is appealed against - and to comment on them. (18)

37. Consequently, where a review body takes information into account in its decision, at least the substance of that information, in so far as it affects that decision, should in principle be available also to all the principal parties to the proceedings (19) in order to respect their right to a fair hearing.

38. However, it may be thought that a party's right to a fair hearing is in no way impaired if he is denied access to evidence which is not taken into account to his detriment and which could not have been taken into account in his favour. Such evidence could thus legitimately be withheld from him in order to protect, for example, business secrets, on the basis of a reasonable and duly substantiated application for confidential treatment.

39. Under the European Convention on Human Rights and under the Charter of Fundamental Rights, (20) the right to a fair hearing is an unqualified right. However, it does not follow that the entitlement to disclosure of relevant evidence is likewise an absolute right. The European Court of Human Rights has indeed consistently held, even in the context of criminal proceedings, that evidence may be withheld where that is necessary to preserve the fundamental rights of another individual or to safeguard an important public interest.

40. However, such measures restricting the rights of the defence are permissible only when they are strictly necessary, and any difficulties caused to the defence by a limitation on its rights must be sufficiently counterbalanced by the procedures followed by the judicial authorities. (21)

The right to protection of business secrets

41. Directive 93/36, governing award procedures, explicitly requires contracting authorities to protect tenderers' business secrets, in particular vis-à-vis other tenderers. Directive 89/665, governing review procedures, does not explicitly extend that requirement to review bodies.

42. All the observations submitted (22) express the view that there is none the less an implicit requirement for such bodies to protect business secrets, and I agree. A right to such protection is recognised in principle in Community law.

43. Under Article 41 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights, the right to good administration includes the right of every person to have access to his or her file, while respecting the legitimate interests of confidentiality and of professional and business secrecy'. A general obligation to respect business secrecy is imposed on the Community institutions by Article 287 EC, and confirmed in a number of legislative provisions, particularly in the field of competition. That obligation, admittedly, is thus binding only on the Community institutions but, in SEP , (23) the Court made specific reference to the existence of a general principle of the right of undertakings to the protection of their business secrets', of which the Treaty article and subordinate provisions were an expression.

44. Moreover, where confidentiality is protected at the award stage of a procurement procedure, that protection would be liable to lose all value if it were not ensured equally at any subsequent review stage.

45. To adapt the words of the Court in AKZO Chemie , (24) a failure to protect information submitted as confidential at the award stage of such a procedure would lead to the unacceptable consequence that an unsuccessful tenderer might be inspired to challenge an award - or even to submit a tender manifestly doomed to rejection, with a view to being entitled to challenge the award - solely in order to gain access to a competitor's business secrets.

46. However, as with the entitlement to disclosure of relevant evidence, the right to confidential treatment of information is not absolute. For example, the rights conferred by Article 8(1) of the European Convention on Human Rights, which include the confidentiality of private, and in some circumstances business, correspondence, (25) may pursuant to Article 8(2) be restricted, where necessary and in accordance with the law, in order, inter alia, to protect the rights of others.

Reconciling the conflicting interests

47. It is evident that conflicts are likely to arise between the right to confidential treatment of business secrets, the need for transparency in the field of public procurement, the duty of review bodies to ensure effective review and the right of all parties to a fair hearing.

48. To the extent possible, those interests should obviously be reconciled, although it will not always be feasible to reconcile them fully. In particular, it will in some cases be necessary to restrict one party's right - to require confidential treatment of business secrets or to have access to all the evidence in the file - in order to ensure that the very substance or essence of the other party's right, or the court's power and duty of effective review, is not impaired. However, any restriction must not go beyond what is necessary for that purpose, and a fair balance must be struck between the conflicting rights. (26)

49. Where rights are not absolute, (27) they must be considered in relation to their function. Restrictions may be imposed, provided that they meet objectives of general interest and do not constitute a disproportionate and intolerable interference impairing the very substance of the rights. (28)

50. In award review proceedings of the kind in issue in the present case, the review body could first examine any disputed evidence itself and then place on the file accessible to all the principal parties only such evidence as it judges relevant to deciding the case before it. Evidence which is not placed on the file should not be taken into account. Some evidence might however be placed on the file in a masked, truncated or otherwise edited form in order to protect business secrets, if the court or tribunal concerned considered that full disclosure of the evidence in question would genuinely be detrimental to the legitimate interests of a party which had made an application requesting confidentiality of that information.

51. A reasonable and pragmatic solution could be for the review body to request the party holding the evidence to provide an edited version which could be made available to the other party or parties - subject to the review body's own supervision in order to ensure that only genuinely confidential elements which do not appear decisive to the resolution of the dispute are edited out. In that case, even if the review body has seen evidence concealed from certain parties, it should endeavour not to use that evidence in any way which could infringe those parties' rights to a fair hearing and to equality of arms.

An illustration

52. An example of that type of approach may be seen in the Steel Beams ' cases before the Court of First Instance. (29) In March and April 1994, 11 undertakings brought actions for the annulment of a Commission decision under the ECSC Treaty concerning concerted practices by producers of steel beams. The actions were dealt with together and, for part of the procedure, joined.

53. Article 23 of the ECSC Statute of the Court of Justice provided: Where proceedings are instituted against a decision of one of the institutions of the Community, that institution shall transmit to the Court all the documents relating to the case before the Court.'

54. The Commission did not however lodge all the documents until requested to do so by the Court of First Instance. In its covering letter, it stated that some of the documents might contain business secrets or that they fell under the obligation of confidentiality in Article 47 of the ECSC Treaty, (30) so that not all of them should be accessible in their entirety to all the parties. Some of the applicants, however, sought to have access to the whole file.

55. At that time, the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance dealt with confidentiality only in Article 116(2), which allowed confidential documents to be omitted from the case-file communicated to an intervener. Under Article 5(3) of the Instructions to the Registrar, however, parties' lawyers or agents, or persons authorised by them, were entitled to inspect the original case-file, including administrative files produced before the Court, and to request copies or extracts of documents.

56. The Court of First Instance was thus faced with problems very similar to those now faci ng the Conseil d'Etat.

57. In the first of its three orders addressing those problems, that Court rejected the argument that Article 23 of the ECSC Statute, together with the principle audi alteram partem , meant that all parties should have unconditional, unlimited access to the file forwarded by the Commission. It noted that Article 47 of the ECSC Treaty guaranteed the confidentiality of professional, in particular business, secrets in order to protect the legitimate interests of undertakings, and decided that the only way to balance the requirements of Article 23 of the Statute and the adversarial nature of judicial proceedings against the protection of the business secrets of individual undertakings was to examine the specific situation of the undertakings concerned. On that basis, it removed one document from the file, restricted full access to certain documents to one applicant only (the others being entitled to consult a non-confidential version), and reserved a decision on documents classified by the Commission as internal until it had received further information. (31)

58. In a second order made after receiving that information and hearing further argument, the Court of First Instance made it clear that the purpose of Article 23 of the Statute was to enable the Court to exercise its power of review of the legality of the contested decision, having regard to the rights of the defence', and not to guarantee all the parties unconditional and unrestricted access to the administrative file' or to enable the applicants to peruse the files of the institution concerned as they see fit'. (32) It also distinguished the documents transmitted pursuant to Article 23 of the Statute from the case-file constituted in accordance with the Instructions to the Registrar. The parties had access only to the latter, which contained the documents to be taken into consideration in deciding the case. Documents transmitted to the Court but not placed in the case-file remained wholly extraneous to the proceedings' and would not be taken into consideration by the Court in deciding the case. (33) On that basis, it examined the documents in question in the light of the submissions and decided that some were relevant and should be placed on the case-file and communicated to the parties. In a third and final order, it examined two further documents and decided that one of them should be placed on the file. (34)

59. Thus, in a situation of possible conflict between a need to consider all the relevant evidence, a need to allow all parties access to that evidence and a need to protect the confidentiality of some of it, the approach taken by the Court of First Instance was (a) to screen the evidence itself at a preliminary stage, (b) to include only the relevant evidence in the case-file, (c) to make all that evidence available to all the parties, subject to the masking' of certain details of certain documents vis-à-vis certain parties, and (d) to take into consideration only the evidence in the case-file to which the parties had access.

60. That solution was adopted, pragmatically and with due regard to each of the interests at stake, in a regulatory context similar to that facing the Conseil d'Etat in the main proceedings. It was subsequently enshrined in the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance. (35)

Conclusions to be drawn

61. Although neither that pragmatic solution nor, a fortiori, the rule laid down in those Rules of Procedure can constitute any binding precedent for a national court, I consider that they provide helpful, practical guidance as to the approach to be taken, which must conform with the rules applicable to that court, in so far as they do not conflict with any higher norm.

62. As regards review bodies functioning in conformity with Directive 89/665, such higher norms include those which flow from that directive and from Directive 93/36 (or now Directive 2004/18), both as interpreted in the light of the right to the protection of business secrets and the right to a fair hearing. The principles to be applied are the following: (a) a party may not refuse to communicate evidence to the review body on the ground of business secrecy; (b) a party communicating evidence to the review body may ask for it to be treated as confidential, in whole or in part, vis-à-vis another party; (c) all principal parties should have access to all evidence relevant to the outcome of the review, in a form adequate to enable them to comment on it; (d) the review body should take care not to use any evidence withheld from one or more principal parties in any way which could infringe those parties' rights to a fair hearing and to equality of arms.

63. The assessment can only be on a case-by-case basis, and must seek to assure the greatest protection of each interest - confidentiality of business secrecy and the right to a fair hearing - which is achievable without impairing the substance of the other, and to strike as fair a balance as is possible between the two.

Final remarks

64. As regards the specific situation confronting the Conseil d'Etat, I would make three final remarks.

65. First, it seems clear that when Article 11 of the Law of 15 June 2006 (36) enters into force, the obligation to protect the confidentiality of business secrets in review proceedings will be explicit in Belgium.

66. Second, I note that, in a case referred to by the Belgian Government in its observations, (37) the Conseil d'Etat appears to have already taken an approach consistent with that which I have outlined above. The case concerned an undertaking's challenge to a decision granting registration of a competitor's medicinal product. The administrative authority lodged two versions of its file with the Conseil d'Etat - a version containing confidential documents relating to the medicinal product and a non-confidential version. The auditeur in his report examined the issue and concluded that the confidential documents should not be available to the applicant. The court decided that it was not necessary to rule on that question, since the application could be conclusively dismissed on a ground which did not involve examination of those documents.

67. Furthermore, the approach taken by the Constitutional Court in its judgment of 19 September 2007 is also largely consistent with the approach set out above. After considering the general principles of the right to a fair hearing in adversarial proceedings, and the right to protection of confidentiality of business secrets, that court concluded that the Conseil d'Etat should be able to assess the confidential nature of the information, in order to strike a balance between those two rights.

68. Finally, it appears from the order for reference that Varec may in fact already have had access to at least some of the disputed elements of the file, apparently outside the strict context of the award or review proceedings. If that is so, it might, depending on the actual circumstances, be a factor to be taken into account when deciding whether and to what extent to accord confidential treatment.

Conclusion

69. In the light of all the above considerations, I am of the opinion that the Court should give the following reply to the question raised by the Conseil d'Etat:

Article 1(1) of Council Directive 89/665, read in conjunction with the provisions of Council Directive 93/36 relating to the protection of confidential information, requires a review body

(a) to take cognisance of the whole of the administrative file and other evidence on which the contracting authority based its award and

(b) to accord confidential information the same protection as is accorded to it at the award stage.

Those obligations must be carried out subject to the right to a fair hearing and to equality of arms, which implies in particular that the review body should take care not to use any evidence withheld from one or more principal parties in any way which could infringe those rights.

(3) - The provision refers to Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682), Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1), and Directive 92/50, cited in footnote 2. Directive 71/305 was however repealed and replaced by Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), and Directive 77/62 was repealed and replaced by Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1). Since the time of the award in the main proceedings, all the directives concerned have been repealed and replaced by Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

Judgment of the Court (Second Chamber) of 3 April 2008
Commission of the European Communities v Kingdom of Spain. Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Directive 89/665/EEC - Public supply and works contracts - Review procedures for the award of public contracts. Case C-444/06.

In Case C444/06,

ACTION under Article 226 EC for failure to fulfil obligations, brought on 26 October 2006,

Commission of the European Communities, represented by X. Lewis, acting as Agent, assisted by C. Fernandez Vicién and I. MorenoTapia Rivas, abogados, with an address for service in Luxembourg, applicant,

v

Kingdom of Spain, represented by F. Díez Moreno, acting as Agent, with an address for service in Luxembourg,

defendant,

THE COURT (Second Chamber), composed of C.W.A. Timmermans, President of the Chamber, L. Bay Larsen, K. Schiemann, J. Makarczyk (Rapporteur) and P. Kris, Judges,

Advocate General: E. Sharpston,

Registrar: R. Grass,

having regard to the written procedure,

having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby:

1. By failing to lay down a mandatory period for the contracting authority to notify the decision on the award of the contract to all the tenderers and by failing to provide for a mandatory waiting period between the award of the contract and its conclusion, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992;

2. Dismisses the action as to the remainder;

3. Orders the Kingdom of Spain to pay two thirds of all the costs. The Commission of the European Communities is ordered to pay the other third.

1. By its application, the Commission of the European Communities asks the Court of Justice to declare that, by failing to provide for a mandatory period for the contracting authority to notify the decision on the award of a contract to all the tenderers, by failing to provide for a mandatory waiting period between the award of the contract and its conclusion and by allowing an annulled contract to continue to have legal effects, the Kingdom of Spain failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1, the review directive').

Legal context

Community legislation

2. Article 1 of the review directive is worded as follows:

The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

3. Article 2(1) of that directive states:

The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.'

4. Article 2(6) of the review directive states:

The effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law.

Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.'

National legislation

Law on public procurement

5. Article 41(1) of the Law on public procurement (Ley de Contratos de las Administraciones Publicas), approved by Royal Legislative Decree 2/2000 (Real Decreto Legislativo 2/2000) of 16 June 2000 (BOE No 148 of 21 June 2000, p. 21775), as amended by Law No 62/2003 on Fiscal, Administrative and Social Measures (ley 62/2003, de medidas fiscales, administrativas y del orden social) of 30 December 2003 (BOE No 313 of 31 December 2003, p. 46874, the Law on public procurement'), provides that the contractor must demonstrate the provision of a definitive guarantee within a period of 15 days from notification to him of the award of the contract.

6. Article 53 of the Law on public procurement states:

Contracts shall be formed by award of the competent contracting authority, irrespective of the procedure or form of award used.'

7. Article 54 of that law states:

1. Public contracts shall be finalised by an administrative document within a period of 30 days from the day following the notification of the award ...'

2. Subject to the exceptions provided for by this Law, their finalisation shall be conditional upon the provision by the undertaking of the guarantees provided for in this law for the protection of the public interest.

3. Where, for reasons for which the contractor is responsible, the contract cannot be finalised within the period laid down, the authority may decide to terminate that contract, subject to the contractor being heard and, where the latter lodges an objection, to a report from the Council of State or an equivalent advisory body in the autonomous region concerned. In such circumstances, the provisional guarantee shall be forfeited and the loss sustained shall be made good.

Where the public authority is responsible for the failure to finalise [the public contract], the contractor shall receive damages for the harm caused by the delay, regardless of whether he is entitled to claim the annulment of the public contract pursuant to Article 111(d).

4. The contract cannot be performed until it has been finalised, save in the cases provided for in Articles 71 and 72.'

8. According to Article 60a of the Law on public procurement, the persons interested in participating in a call for tenders and, in any event, the tenderers, may request the adoption of interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement of the applicable law or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract.

9. According to Article 65(1) of the Law on public procurement, once definitive, an administrative declaration to the effect that the acts preparatory to the contract or the award of the contract are invalid is to give rise, in all cases, to the invalidity of the contract itself, which is accordingly to be set aside.

10. According to Article 65(3) of that law, if the administrative declaration of invalidity of a contract seriously disrupts public services, provision may be made for the effects of the contract to continue on the same conditions, until urgent measures have been taken to avoid any harm.

11. It follows from Article 93(1) of the Law on public procurement that, once the contracting authority has awarded a public contract, regardless of the procedure followed, the award is to be notified to the participants in the call for tenders and, after the finalisation of the contract, is communicated to the competent authority responsible for keeping the public register of contracts referred to in Article 118 of that law for the purposes provided for in Article 58 thereof.

12. Pursuant to Article 93(5) of that law, the contracting authority is to communicate to any unsuccessful candidate or tenderer who so requests, within a period of 15 days of receipt of that request, the reasons for the rejection of its candidature or its offer, as well as the features of the successful contractor's offer which were decisive in the decision to award the contract to the latter.

13. Article 83(4) of the implementing rules for the Law on public procurement (Reglamento general de la Ley de Contratos de las Administraciones Publicas), approved by Royal Decree 1098/2001 (Real Decreto 1098/2001) of 12 October 2001 (BOE No 257, of 26 October 2001, p. 39252) provides that the result of the assessment of the tenders submitted is to be notified, indicating the successful bids, the unsuccessful bids and the reasons for rejection.

Law No 30/1992

14. Law No 30/1992 on the rules governing the public authorities and the common administrative procedure (ley 30/1992 de Regimen Jurídico de las Administraciones Publicas y del Procedimiento Administrativo comun) of 26 November 1992 (BOE No 285 of 27 November 1992, p. 40300), as amended by Law No 4/1999 of 13 January 1999, (Law on the common administrative procedure'), provides in Article 58:

1. Decisions and administrative acts affecting their rights and interests shall be notified to the persons concerned, in accordance with the rules provided for in the following article.

2. All notification shall be made in the 10 days following the date on which the act was adopted. It shall contain the full text of the decision and shall state whether or not it is a final administrative decision. It shall give details of the possibilities of review and the body before which any review must be applied for, without prejudice to fact that the persons concerned may bring, where appropriate, any other action which they consider necessary.'

15. According to Article 107(1) of that law, review may be sought of decisions and administrative acts which decide, directly or indirectly, the substance of the case, make it impossible to continue the procedure or to put up a defence, or cause irreparable harm to legitimate rights or interests.

16. Article 111 of that law sets out the interim measures which may be applied for in the context of administrative review proceedings, in particular the suspension of the contested acts.

Background to the dispute and the prelitigation procedure

17. By letter of 30 November 2001, the Commission requested the Kingdom of Spain to submit its observations on the compatibility of the Law on public procurement with the review directive in the light of the impact of Case C81/98 Alcatel Austria and Others [1999] ECR I7671.

18. Since it did not consider the responses given by the Kingdom of Spain, by letter of 27 February 2002, to be satisfactory, the Commission gave it formal notice on 16 October 2002. On 7 July 2004, the Commission, having considered the observations submitted in response to that formal notice by the Kingdom of Spain, issued a reasoned opinion inviting that Member State to take the measures necessary to comply with the opinion within a period of two months from the date of its receipt.

19. In those circumstances, having found that the legislation at issue had not been amended by the end of that period, the Commission decided to bring the present action.

The action

20. The Commission claims that the Spanish legislation infringes Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of the review directive and puts forward three pleas in law, the first two of which should be dealt with together.

The first and second pleas

21. By those pleas, the Commission claims that the national legislation at issue does not comply with the review directive in that certain provisions of that legislation in combination prevent unsuccessful tenderers from effectively instituting review proceedings against a decision to award a contract before the conclusion as such of the contract resulting from it.

Arguments of the parties

22. According to the Commission, the breach of obligations is established, regardless of the scope of the concept of finalisation' of a contract which appears in the Spanish legislation, that is to say, whether such finalisation is considered to be equivalent to the conclusion as such of the contract or merely to constitute an administrative formality, in which case the conclusion takes place at the same time as the award of the contract.

23. As regards the first view, that is to say that the finalisation of the contract - which, in the Commission's submission, is the moment when the contract fulfils all the legal requirements and when its performance can begin - is equivalent to its conclusion within the meaning of the review directive, the Commission claims that the obligations imposed by that directive have not been fulfilled in that the unsuccessful tenderers do not have the necessary guarantees in order to challenge an unlawful decision to award a contract before the finalisation of the contract resulting from it.

24. According to the Commission, in the absence of an obligation to notify the decision to all the persons concerned at the same time and a waiting period during which the contract cannot be finalised, thereby denying the unsuccessful tenderers the possibility of a reasonable period in which to instigate, before the conclusion of the contract, appropriate review proceedings, the Spanish legislation does not comply with the requirements of the review directive.

25. As regards the second view, according to which the conclusion of the contract takes place at the same time as the award of the contract, finalisation being a mere administrative formality, the Commission claims that the legal problem identified in the assessment of the first view is actually more serious, in that there is no act of awarding the contract in question capable of giving rise to review proceedings independent of the act of concluding the contract relating to that tendering procedure.

26. Since no review proceedings are possible against the act of awarding at a stage earlier than the conclusion of the contract where any infringement of the applicable law may still be corrected and where the tenderer who brings the review proceedings may still hope to become the contractor, the Spanish legislation does not provide complete legal protection before the conclusion of the contract, contrary to the requirements of Article 2(1) of the review directive.

27. At the outset, the Kingdom of Spain defines the scope which should be given, respectively, to the act of awarding the contract and the finalisation of the contract which follows it.

28. That Member State contends that the act of awarding the contract leads, by itself, to the conclusion of the contract awarded, and that contract is treated as existing from the adoption of that act. The act is subject to the formal requirement of notification, which has to be carried out before the contract can produce its effects in respect of the persons concerned.

29. It states that the finalisation of the contract, a mere administrative formality, is of only secondary importance to the act of awarding the contract. That finalisation is, however, a necessary condition for the performance of the contract concerned.

30. According to the Kingdom of Spain, the question whether the Law on public procurement complies with the review directive must be assessed with regard to the review proceedings which can be brought, first, prior to the act of awarding the contract and, second, against that act of awarding the contract itself. That is, moreover, the conclusion of the judgment in Alcatel Austria and Others , which draws a distinction between the stage prior to the conclusion of the contract, in other words the stage before the award of the contract, to which Article 2(1) of the directive applies, and the stage subsequent to its conclusion, in other words the stage which follows the act of awarding the contract, to which the second subparagraph of Article 2(6) of the directive applies.

31. Spanish law is consistent, according to the Kingdom of Spain, with that distinction. Concerning, first, the measures which precede the award of the contract, the Kingdom of Spain states that a number of review proceedings are possible. Concerning, second, that award itself, it states that the administrative decision prior to that award is notified to all the participants in the tendering procedure in the 10 days following its adoption and that that decision, like any administrative act, may be the subject of review proceedings, pursuant to the law governing the common administrative procedure. That Member State further adds that the suspension of the contested act may be ordered as an interim measure.

32. Lastly, the Kingdom of Spain contends that the definitive conclusion of an act, and thus of a contract, does not preclude the possibility of bringing revocation proceedings against that act itself.

Findings of the Court

33. It should, at the outset, be stated that, in examining this action, it is necessary to take into consideration the explanations of the law provided by the Kingdom of Spain which are not disputed by the Commission. Those explanations are based on the interpretations in the caselaw of the national courts as to the effects which follow from the act of awarding the contract and the finalisation of the contract respectively, since those legal concepts are matters of national law.

34. Thus, the arguments put forward by the Commission in support of the first and second pleas must be analysed in the light of the finding that, according to the law of the Member State in question, first, the act of awarding the contract leads automatically to the formation of the contract to which it relates and, accordingly, determines, of itself, the rights and duties of the parties and, second, the finalisation of that contract is a formality required exclusively so that the contract awarded can be performed, and cannot alter the contract or add to it.

35. According to recitals (1) and (2) in the preamble to the review directive, it seeks to reinforce existing arrangements, at both national and Community levels, for ensuring the effective application of Community directives on the award of public contracts, in particular at the stage where infringements can still be rectified.

36. In that regard, Article 1(1) of the review directive requires Member States to put in place review procedures which are effective and as rapid as possible against the decisions taken by the contracting authorities which infringe Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

37. It follows from the caselaw of the Court that the combined provisions of Article 2(1)(a) and (b) and the second subparagraph of Article 2(6) of the directive are to be interpreted as meaning that the Member States are required to ensure that the contracting authority's decision prior to the conclusion of the contract as to the bidder in a tender procedure with which it will conclude the contract is in all cases open to review in a procedure whereby an applicant may have that decision set aside if the relevant conditions are met, notwithstanding the possibility, once the contract has been concluded, of obtaining an award of damages (see Alcatel Austria and Others , paragraph 43).

38. Moreover, the complete legal protection which must accordingly be ensured before the conclusion of the contract pursuant to Article 2(1) of the review directive presupposes, in particular, the duty to inform the tenderers of the award decision before the conclusion of the contract so that they may have a real possibility of initiating review proceedings.

39. That same protection requires provision to be made for the unsuccessful tenderer to examine in sufficient time the question of whether the decision to award is valid. In the light of the need to guarantee the effectiveness of the review directive, it follows that a reasonable period must pass between the moment when the award decision is communicated to the unsuccessful tenderers and the conclusion of the contract in order to allow them, inter alia, to bring an application for interim measures until the conclusion of the contract.

40. In this case, it must be pointed out that, first, it is not disputed that the Spanish legislation authorises review proceedings against acts of contracting authorities prior to the award of the public contract. Further, in accordance with Article 107(1) of the Law on the common administrative procedure, the persons concerned are able to initiate review proceedings against the procedural acts where they decide, directly or indirectly, the substance of the case, make it impossible to continue the procedure or to put up a defence, or cause irremediable harm to legitimate rights or interests. In the context of those review proceedings, interim measures can be taken, in particular the suspension of the contested acts.

41. Second, the act of awarding the contract is notified to all the tenderers, in accordance with Articles 58(1) and (2) of the Law on the common administrative procedure and Article 93(1) of the Law on public procurement. That notification must be made according to the rules of general law applicable to administrative acts, namely within the 10 days following the adoption of that act awarding the contract, and must give details of the possibilities of review.

42. However, inasmuch as the act of awarding the contract leads de jure to the conclusion of the contract, it follows that the decision of the contracting authority, by which it chooses the contractor from amongst the tenderers cannot be the subject of specific review proceedings prior to the conclusion as such of that contract.

43. Third, it must be pointed out that the finalisation of the contract may be concurrent with the award of the contract concerned, or follow it within a very short period. The finalisation as, moreover, the Kingdom of Spain acknowledges, is not subject to any minimum period and may occur from the moment that the contractor demonstrates the provision of a definitive guarantee, since the legislation only requires that it be provided at the latest within 15 days of notification of the award of the contract. Therefore, the performance of the contract may commence before the award has been the subject of all the notifications required.

44. It follows that, in certain cases, no effective review proceedings can be brought against the act of awarding the contract before the performance as such of the contract although the objective of the review directive is to ensure that unlawful decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible (see, to that effect, Case C470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraph 74).

45. Fourth, the fact that there is the option of bringing proceedings for the annulment of the contract itself is not such as to compensate for the impossibility of challenging the mere act of awarding the contract concerned, before the contract is concluded.

46. Consequently, the legislation at issue does not allow unsuccessful tenderers to bring review proceedings in accordance with the requirements of the review directive against the decision to award a public contract resulting from it.

47. The first two pleas are, accordingly, well founded.

The third plea

Arguments of the parties

48. According to the Commission, the review directive is infringed by the exception which seeks to protect public services provided for in Article 65(3) of the Law on public procurement, according to which, if the administrative declaration of invalidity of a contract seriously disrupts public services, provision may be made for the effects of that contract to continue, on the same conditions, until urgent measures have been taken to avoid any harm.

49. The Commission claims that those provisions confer on the contracting authority too wide a discretion in respect of the implementation of the administrative decision annulling the award of a contract and, accordingly, the contract resulting from it.

50. It also claims that the provisions at issue may, in a not insignificant number of cases, render ineffective the review proceedings of the unsuccessful tenderers leading to the annulment of the unlawful decisions of the contracting authorities, which is contrary to the Member States' duty to ensure that the review procedures provided for pursuant to Article 1 of the review directive make it possible to annul or to have annulled the unlawful decisions taken by those authorities. The effectiveness of that directive would thus be compromised, inasmuch as the invalidity or the annulment of those decisions would be deprived of any effect.

51. The Kingdom of Spain contends for its part that the contested provisions envisage proceedings only by way of exception against contracts which are declared invalid for reasons of public interest, subject to review by the courts.

52. According to that Member State, the Commission has not established that proceedings against the continuation of contracts annulled in this way constitute a normal situation as regards the application of the legislation at issue.

Findings of the Court

53. In this case, it is not disputed that the preservation of the effects of a contract subject to an administrative declaration of invalidity such as that provided for in the contested national legislation can only occur in the case of a serious disruption to public services.

54. Consequently, as is clear from the wording of Article 65(3) of the Law on public procurement, such preservation is only intended to apply in exceptional cases and pending the adoption of urgent measures. In addition, that preservation applies, as the Kingdom of Spain has stated without being contradicted by the Commission, subject to review by the courts.

55. Thus, it appears that the aim of the provision is not to prevent the enforcement of the declaration of invalidity of a specific contract, but to avoid, where the public interest is at stake, excessive and potentially prejudicial consequences of the immediate enforcement of the declaration, pending the adoption of urgent measures, in order to ensure the continuity of public services.

56. In those circumstances, the Commission has not demonstrated that the contested legislation undermines the requirements of the review directive.

57. Consequently, the third plea must be dismissed as unfounded.

58. Having regard to the foregoing, it must be declared that, by failing to lay down a mandatory period for the contracting authority to notify the decision on the award of the contract to all the tenderers and by failing to provide for a mandatory waiting period between the award of the contract and its conclusion, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of the review directive.

Costs

59. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs, if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Under Article 69(3) of those Rules, where each of the parties succeeds on some and fails on other heads, or where the circumstances are exceptional, the Court may order that the costs be shared or that the parties bear their own costs.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

60. In this dispute account is to be taken of the fact that the Court has not upheld the Commission's action for a declaration of failure to fulfil obligations in its entirety.

61. The Kingdom of Spain must therefore be ordered to pay two thirds of all the costs. The Commission is ordered to pay the other third.

Case C-444/06

v

Kingdom of Spain

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations – Directive 89/665/EEC – Public supply and works contracts – Review procedures for the award of public contracts)

Summary of the Judgment

Approximation of laws – Review procedures in respect of the award of public supply and public works contracts – Directive 89/665 – Member States under an obligation to provide for review procedures in respect of decisions awarding contracts
(Council Directive 89/665, Arts 2(1)(a) and (b), and 6, second para.)

A Member State fails to fulfil its obligations under Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Council Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 92/50, where its legislation fails to provide for a mandatory period for the contracting authority to notify the decision on the award of a contract to all the tenderers or to provide for a mandatory waiting period between the award of the contract and its conclusion.

The combined provisions of Article 2(1)(a) and (b) and the second subparagraph of Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 are to be interpreted as meaning that the Member States are required to ensure that the contracting authority's decision prior to the conclusion of the contract as to the bidder in a tender procedure with which it will conclude the contract is in all cases open to review in a procedure whereby an applicant may have that decision set aside if the relevant conditions are met, notwithstanding the possibility, once the contract has been concluded, of obtaining an award of damages. Moreover, the complete legal protection which must accordingly be ensured before the conclusion of the contract pursuant to Article 2(1) of the directive presupposes, in particular, the duty to inform the tenderers of the award decision before the conclusion of the contract so that they may have a real possibility of initiating review proceedings. That same protection requires provision to be made for the unsuccessful tenderer to examine in sufficient time the question of whether the decision to award is valid. In the light of the need to guarantee the effectiveness of Directive 89/665, the objective of which is to ensure that unlawful decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible, it follows that a reasonable period must pass between the moment when the award decision is communicated to the unsuccessful tenderers and the conclusion of the contract in order to allow them, inter alia, to bring an application for interim measures until the conclusion of the contract.

Judgment of the Court (Second Chamber) of 3 April 2008 - Commission of the European Communities v Kingdom of Spain

(Case C-444/06) [1]

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Directive 89/665/EEC - Public supply and works contracts - Review procedures for the award of public contracts)

Language of the case: Spanish

Parties

Applicant: Commission of the European Communities (represented by: X. Lewis, acting as Agent, and C. Fernandez Vicién and I. Moreno-Tapia Rivas, abogados)

Defendant: Kingdom of Spain (represented by: F. Díez Moreno, Agent)

Re:

Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Breach of Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33) - National legislation not in conformity with the directive

Operative part of the judgment

The Court:

Declares that, by failing to lay down a mandatory period for the contracting authority to notify the decision on the award of the contract to all the tenderers and by failing to provide for a mandatory waiting period between the award of the contract and its conclusion, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992;

Dismisses the action as to the remainder;

Orders the Kingdom of Spain to pay two thirds of all the costs. The Commission of the European Communities is ordered to pay the other third.

(Case C-444/06)

Language of the case: Spanish

Parties

Applicant: Commission of the European Communities (represented by: X. Lewis, acting as Agent, C. Fernandez Vicién and I. Moreno-Tapia Rivas, lawyers)

Defendan: Kingdom of Spain

Form of order sought

declare that, by failing to provide for a mandatory period within which the contracting authority has to notify the decision on the award of the contract to all the bidders, by failing to provide for a mandatory waiting period between the decision on the award of the contract and its performance and by allowing an annulled contract to continue to have legal effect, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC [1] of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts order Kingdom of Spain to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The Commission considers that the Spanish rule on the review of public contracts is not consistent with Directive 89/665 according to the interpretation given by the Court of Justice in Case C-81/98 Alcatel Austria and Others [1999] ECR I-7671.

In particular, the Spanish legislation:

does not provide for a mandatory period within which the contracting authority has to notify the decision on the award of the contract to all the bidders, does not provide for a mandatory waiting period between the decision on the award of the contract and its performance and, allows an annulled contract to continue to have legal effect.

gives the following

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. A contracting entity, within the meaning of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors is required to apply the procedure laid down in that directive only for the award of contracts which relate to activities carried out by that entity in one or more of the sectors listed in Articles 3 to 7 of that directive.

2. An entity such as Fernwärme Wien GmbH is to be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 2004/17 and the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts.

3. All contracts awarded by an entity which is a body governed by public law, within the meaning of Directive 2004/17 or Directive 2004/18, which relate to activities carried out by that entity in one or more of the sectors listed in Articles 3 to 7 of Directive 2004/17 must be subject to the procedures laid down in that directive. However, all other contracts awarded by such an entity in connection with the exercise of other activities are covered by the procedures laid down in Directive 2004/18. Each of these two directives applies without distinction between the activities carried out by that entity to accomplish its task of meeting needs in the general interest and activities which it carries out under competitive conditions, and even where there is an accounting system intended to make a clear internal separation between those activities in order to avoid cross financing between those sectors.

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1) and Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2. The reference was made in the course of proceedings between Ing. Aigner, Wasser-Wärme-Umwelt GmbH (Ing. Aigner') and Fernwärme Wien GmbH (Fernwärme Wien') concerning the regularity of a public procurement procedure instituted by the latter.

Legal context

Community legislation

3. Directive 2004/17 coordinates the procurement procedures in specific sectors, that is to say, those of water, energy, transport and postal services. It follows and repealed Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84), which concerned the same subject-matter.

4. The particular characteristics of the sectors covered by Directive 2004/17 are highlighted in the third recital in the preamble thereto, which states that it is necessary to coordinate procurement procedures in these sectors because of the closed nature of the markets in which the contracting entities concerned operate, due to the existence of special or exclusive rights granted by the Member States concerning the supply to, provision or operation of networks for providing the service concerned.

5. The second section of Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 2004/17 and the second section of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 provide that contracting authorities', inter alia, are bodies governed by public law', that is to say ... any body:

- established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character,

- having legal personality and financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law'.

6. In accordance with Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 2004/17:

For the purposes of this Directive,

...

(b) a public undertaking is any undertaking over which the contracting authorities may exercise directly or indirectly a dominant influence by virtue of their ownership of it, their financial participation therein, or the rules which govern it.'

7. Article 2(2) of that directive provides:

This Directive shall apply to contracting entities:

(a) which are contracting authorities or public undertakings and which pursue one of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7;

(b) which, when they are not contracting authorities or public undertakings, have as one of their activities any of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7, or any combination thereof and operate on the basis of special or exclusive rights granted by a competent authority of a Member State.'

8. Articles 3 to 7 of Directive 2004/17 list the sectors to which the Directive applies. These are gas, heat and electricity (Article 3), water (Article 4), transport services (Article 5), postal services (Article 6) and exploration for, or extraction of, oil, gas, coal or other solid fuels, as well as ports and airports (Article 7).

9. Article 3(1) of that directive provides:

As far as gas and heat are concerned, this Directive shall apply to the following activities:

(a) the provision or operation of fixed networks intended to provide a service to the public in connection with the production, transport or distribution of gas or heat; or

(b) the supply of gas or heat to such networks.'

10. Article 9 of that directive states as follows:

1. A contract which is intended to cover several activities shall be subject to the rules applicable to the activity for which it is principally intended.

However, the choice between awarding a single contract and awarding a number of separate contracts may not be made with the objective of excluding it from the scope of this Directive or, where applicable, Directive 2004/18/EC.

2. If one of the activities for which the contract is intended is subject to this Directive and the other to the abovementioned Directive 2004/18/EC and if it is objectively impossible to determine for which activity the contract is principally intended, the contract shall be awarded in accordance with the abovementioned Directive 2004/18/EC.

11. Article 20(1) of that directive, under the heading Contracts awarded for purposes other than the pursuit of an activity covered or for the pursuit of such an activity in a third country', provides:

This Directive shall not apply to contracts which the contracting entities award for purposes other than the pursuit of their activities as described in Articles 3 to 7 or for the pursuit of such activities in a third country, in conditions not involving the physical use of a network or geographical area within the Community.'

12. Finally, Article 30 of Directive 2004/17, under the heading Procedure for establishing whether a given activity is directly exposed to competition', provides:

1. Contracts intended to enable an activity mentioned in Articles 3 to 7 to be carried out shall not be subject to this Directive if, in the Member State in which it is performed, the activity is directly exposed to competition on markets to which access is not restricted.

2. For the purposes of paragraph 1, the question of whether an activity is directly exposed to competition shall be decided on the basis of criteria that are in conformity with the Treaty provisions on competition, such as the characteristics of the goods or services concerned, the existence of alternative goods or services, the prices and the actual or potential presence of more than one supplier of the goods or services in question.

13. Title II, Chapter II, Section 3 of Directive 2004/18 lists the contracts which are outside the scope of that directive. These include contracts in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors. Article 12, dealing with those contracts, provides:

This Directive shall not apply to public contracts which, under Directive 2004/17/EC, are awarded by contracting authorities exercising one or more of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7 of that Directive and are awarded for the pursuit of those activities, ...

14. The abovementioned Community legislation was transposed into Austrian law by the Federal law on the award of public procurement contracts (Bundesvergabegesetz) 2006.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

15. Fernwärme Wien was established by constituent instrument of 22 January 1969 for the purpose of supplying district heating to homes, public institutions, offices, undertakings etc. in the City of Vienna. For that purpose it uses energy produced by the disposal of waste rather than energy from non-renewable sources.

16. Fernwärme Wien, which has legal personality, is wholly owned by the City of Vienna, which appoints and removes managers and the members of the company's supervisory board and gives them a discharge from responsibility. In addition, through the Kontrollamt der Stadt Wien (Monitoring Office of the City of Vienna), the city is also authorised to monitor the economic and financial management of the company.

17. In parallel to its district heating activities, Fernwärme Wien is engaged in the general planning of refrigeration plants for large real estate projects. In carrying out that activity it competes with other undertakings.

18. On 1 March 2006, Fernwärme Wien instituted a public procurement tendering procedure for the installation of refrigeration plants in a future commercial office complex in Vienna, stating that the Austrian legislation relating to public procurement did not apply to the contract in question. Ing. Aigner participated in this procedure by submitting a tender. Having been informed, on 18 May 2006, that its offer would no longer be considered because of negative references, it challenged that decision before the referring court, submitting that the Community rules on public procurement should be applied.

19. The national court notes that the activities of Fernwärme Wien with regard to the operation of a fixed district heating network fall indisputably within the scope of Directive 2004/17. However, its activities with regard to the refrigeration plants do not fall within the field of application of that directive. It therefore asks whether the latter activities are also covered by the provisions of that directive by application, mutatis mutandis , of the principles laid down in Case C44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others [1998] ECR I73, paragraphs 25 and 26, an approach commonly referred to in legal literature as the contagion theory'. In accordance with the interpretation given by the referring court of that judgment, where one activity carried out by a body falls within the scope of the public procurement directives, all the other activities carried out by that body, irrespective of their possible industrial or commercial character, are also covered by those directives.

20. If the judgment in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others refers only to contracting authorities and, more specifically, the concept of bodies governed by public law', in the sense that, where a body meets needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, it must be considered a body governed by public law' within the meaning of the Community rules, irrespective of whether it carries out, in parallel, other activities of a different nature, the referring court asks whether Fernwärme Wien constitutes a body governed by public law, that is to say a contracting authority, within the meaning of Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18.

21. Finally, the referring court asks whether, when a body carries out activities not having an industrial or commercial character and, in parallel, activities in competitive conditions, whether it is possible to distinguish the latter activities and not to include them in the scope of the Community rules on public procurement, it is possible to establish a separation between those two types of activities and, accordingly, the absence of economic interference between them. In that regard, the referring court refers to point 68 of the Opinion of Advocate General Jacobs of 21 April 2005 in the case which gave rise, following the withdrawal of the reference for a preliminary ruling, to the order for removal from the register of 23 March 2006 (Case C174/03 Impresa Portuale di Cagliari , not published in the ECR), where it is proposed that the principle arising from the judgment in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others be tempered in that manner.

22. Having regard to the foregoing, the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien (Public Procurement Review Chamber of the Province of Vienna) decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

1. Must Directive 2004/17... be interpreted as meaning that a contracting entity which pursues one of the sectoral activities referred to in Article 3 of that directive also falls within the scope of that directive in relation to an activity pursued in parallel under competitive conditions?

2. In the event that this is the case only in respect of contracting authorities: must an undertaking such as [Fernwärme Wien] be characterised as a body governed by public law within the meaning of Directive 2004/17 or Directive 2004/18... if it provides district heating in a given area without any real competition, or must the market for domestic heating, which also includes energy sources such as gas, oil, coal etc., be taken into account?

3. Must an activity pursued under competitive conditions by a company which also pursues activities of a non industrial or non commercial nature be included within the scope of Directive 2004/17 or Directive 2004/18 if, through effective precautions such as separate balance sheets and accounts, cross financing of the activities pursued under competitive conditions can be excluded?'

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

The first question

23. By this question, the referring court asks whether a contracting entity within the meaning of Directive 2004/17, which carries on activities in one of the sectors listed in Articles 3 to

7 of that directive, is required to apply the procedure laid down in that directive for the award of contracts to the activities carried out by that entity in parallel, under competitive conditions, in sectors not governed by those provisions.

24. In order to answer that question, it must be noted that Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18 have noteworthy differences with regard both to the entities subject to the rules laid down in those respective directives and to their nature and scope.

25. With regard, firstly, to the entities to which the rules of those directives apply, it should be noted that, unlike Directive 2004/18 which, by virtue of the first subparagraph of Article 1(9) thereof, applies to contracting authorities', Directive 2004/17 refers, in Article 2 thereof, to contracting entities'. It is apparent from Article 2(2)(a) and (b) that Directive 2004/17 applies not only to contracting entities which are contracting authorities', but also to those which are public undertakings' or undertakings which operate on the basis of special or exclusive rights granted by a competent authority of a Member State', in so far as all those entities pursue one of the activities listed in Articles 3 to 7 thereof.

26. Secondly, it follows from Articles 2 to 7 of Directive 2004/17 that the coordination for which it provides does not extend to all spheres of economic activity, but relates to specifically defined sectors, which, moreover, is confirmed by the fact that that directive is commonly referred to as the sectoral directive'. However, the scope of Directive 2004/18 includes almost all sectors of economic life, thus justifying its being commonly known as the general directive'.

27. In such circumstances, it must be stated at this early stage that the general scope of Directive 2004/18 and the restricted scope of Directive 2004/17 require the provisions of the latter to be interpreted narrowly.

28. The boundaries between the fields of application of those two directives are also drawn by explicit provisions. Thus, Article 20(1) of Directive 2004/17 provides that the latter does not apply to contracts which the contracting entities award for purposes other than the pursuit of their activities as described in Articles 3 to 7 thereof. The equivalent of that provision in Directive 2004/18 is Article 12(1), which provides that that directive does not apply to public contracts which are awarded by contracting authorities exercising one or more of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7 of Directive 2004/17.

29. Thus, the field of application of Directive 2004/17 is strictly circumscribed, which does not permit the procedures laid down therein to be extended beyond that field of application.

30. Consequently, the abovementioned provisions leave no room for application, in the context of Directive 2004/17, of the approach known as contagion theory' which was developed following the judgment in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others. That judgment was given by the Court in the context of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), that is to say in an area which at present falls within the ambit of Directive 2004/18.

31. Accordingly, as rightly observed by, inter alia, the Hungarian, Austrian and Finnish Governments and by the Commission of the European Communities, only those contracts awarded by an entity which is a contracting entity' within the meaning of Directive 2004/17, in connection with and for the exercise of activities in the sectors listed in Articles 3 to 7 of that directive, fall within the field of application thereof.

32. Moreover, that is the conclusion which emerges also from Joined Cases C462/03 and C463/03 Strabag and Kostmann [2005] ECR I5397, paragraph 37). In that judgment, the Court held that, if a contract does not concern the exercise of one of the activities governed by the sectoral directive, it will be governed by the rules laid down in the directives concerning the award of public supply, works or service contracts, as applicable.

33. Having regard to the foregoing, the answer to the first question must be that a contracting entity, within the meaning of Directive 2004/17, is required to apply the procedure laid down in that directive only for the award of contracts which relate to activities carried out by that entity in one or more of the sectors listed in Articles 3 to 7 of that directive.

The second question

34. By its second question, the referring court asks whether an entity such as Fernwärme Wien is to be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of Directive 2004/17 or of Directive 2004/18.

35. In that regard, it should be borne in mind that, as is apparent from paragraph 5 of this judgment, the provisions of the second subparagraph of Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 2004/17 and the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 contain identical definitions of the concept of body governed by public law'.

36. It is clear from those provisions that a body governed by public law' is any body which, firstly, was established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, secondly, has legal personality and, thirdly, is financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law. In accordance with the case-law of the Court, those three conditions are cumulative (Case C¡237/99 Commission v France [2001] ECR I939, paragraph 40, and the case-law cited).

37. Furthermore, since the aim of the directives in relation to awarding public contracts is to avoid, inter alia, the possibility that a body financed or controlled by the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law may choose to be guided by considerations other than economic ones, the concept of a body governed by public law' must be interpreted in functional terms (Case C337/06 Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others [2007] ECR I0000, paragraphs 36 and 37, and the case-law cited).

38. In the present case, it is common ground that the latter two criteria established by the rules set out in paragraph 36 of the present judgment are fulfilled, given that Fernwärme Wien has legal personality and that the City of Vienna wholly owns the share capital of that entity and monitors its economic and financial management. It remains to be considered whether the entity was established specifically to meet needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character.

39. With regard, firstly, to the purpose of the establishment of the entity in question and the nature of the needs met, it is appropriate to note that, as is apparent from the documents before the Court, Fernwärme Wien was established specifically for the purpose of supplying district heating to homes, public institutions, offices, undertakings etc. in the City of Vienna by means of the use of energy produced by the destruction of waste. At the hearing before the Court, it was stated that, at present, that heating system serves approximately 250 000 homes, numerous offices and industrial plants and, in practice, all public buildings. To provide heating for an urban area by means of an environmentally-friendly process constitutes an aim which is undeniably in the general interest. It cannot, therefore, be disputed that Fernwärme Wien was established specifically to meet needs in the general interest.

40. In that regard, it is immaterial that such needs are also met or can be met by private undertakings.

It is important that they should be needs which, for reasons in the general interest, the State or a regional authority generally chooses to meet itself or over which it wishes to retain a decisive influence (see, to that effect, Case C360/96 BFI Holding [1998] ECR I6821, paragraphs 44, 47, 51 and 53, and Joined Cases C223/99 and C260/99 Agorà and Excelsior [2001] ECR I3605, paragraphs 37, 38 and 41).

41. Secondly, in order to ascertain whether the needs met by the entity in question in the main proceedings have a character other than industrial or commercial, account must be taken of all the relevant law and facts such as the circumstances prevailing at the time when the body concerned was established and the conditions under which it exercises its activity. In that regard, it is important to check, inter alia, whether the body in question carries on its activities in a situation of competition (Case C18/01 Korhonen [2003] ECR I5321, paragraphs 48 and 49).

42. As stated in paragraph 39 of the present judgment, Fernwärme Wien was established specifically for the purpose of supplying district heating in the City of Vienna. It is common ground that the pursuit of profit did not underlie its establishment. While it is not impossible that those activities may generate profits distributed in the form of dividends to shareholders of the entity, the making of such profits can never constitute its principal aim (see, to that effect, Korhonen , paragraph 54).

43. With regard, subsequently, to the relevant economic environment or, in other words, the relevant market which must be considered in order to ascertain whether the entity in question is exercising its activities in competitive conditions, account must be taken, as the Advocate General proposes in points 53 and 54 of his Opinion, having regard to the functional interpretation of the concept of a body governed by public law', of the sector for which Fernwärme Wien was created, that is to say the supply of district heating by means of the use of energy produced by the burning of waste.

44. It is clear from the order for reference that Fernwärme Wien enjoys a virtual monopoly in that sector, since the two other undertakings operating in that sector are of negligible size and accordingly cannot constitute true competitors. Furthermore, there is a considerable degree of autonomy in this sector, since it would be very difficult to replace the district heating system by another form of energy, since this would require large-scale conversion work. Finally, the City of Vienna attaches a particular importance to this heating system, not least for reasons of environmental considerations. Thus, having regard to the pressure of public opinion, it would not permit it to be withdrawn, even if that system were to operate at a loss.

45. Having regard to the various indications provided by the referring court and as the Advocate General observes in point 57 of his Opinion, Fernwärme Wien is currently the only undertaking capable of meeting such needs in the general interest in the sector under consideration, so that it might choose to be guided by considerations other than economic ones in the award of its contracts.

46. In the judgments in BFI Holding (paragraph 49) and Agorà and Excelsior (paragraph 38), the Court held that the existence of significant competition may be an indication in support of the conclusion that there is no need in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character. In the circumstances of the case in the main proceedings, it is clear from the reference for the preliminary ruling that the criterion requiring the existence of significant competition is far from fulfilled.

47. It must be borne in mind that it is immaterial whether, in addition to its duty to meet needs in the general interest, an entity is free to carry out other profit-making activities, provided that it continues to attend to the needs which it is specifically required to meet. The proportion of profit-making activities actually pursued by that entity as part of its activities as a whole is also irrelevant for its classification as a body governed by public law (see, to that effect,

Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others , paragraph 25; Korhonen , paragraphs 57 and 58; and Case C373/00 Adolf Truley [2003] ECR I1931, paragraph 56).

48. In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the second question must be that an entity such as Fernwärme Wien is to be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 2004/17 and the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18.

The third question

49. By its third question, the referring court asks whether all contracts awarded by an entity which is a body governed by public law, within the meaning of Directive 2004/17 or Directive 2004/18, are to be subject to the rules of one or the other of those directives if, through effective precautions, a clear separation is possible between the activities carried out by that body to accomplish its task of meeting needs in the general interest and the activities which it carries out in competitive conditions, so that cross financing between the two types of activities can be excluded.

50. It should be borne in mind in that regard that the problem underlying that question was examined by the Court for the first time in the case which gave rise to the judgment in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others relating to the interpretation of Directive 93/37 on public works contracts, and that the Court came to the conclusion, in paragraph 35 of that judgment, that all contracts, of whatever nature, entered into by a contracting authority were to be subject to the rules of that directive.

51. The Court reiterated that position, with regard to public service contracts, in the judgments in BFI Holding (paragraphs 55 and 56) and Korhonen (paragraphs 57 and 58) and, with regard to public supply contracts, in the judgment in Adolf Truley (paragraph 56). That position also applies to Directive 2004/18, which represents a recasting of the provisions of all the preceding directives on the award of public contracts which it follows (see, to that effect, Bayerischer Rundfunk , paragraph 30).

52. That conclusion is inescapable also in respect of entities which use an accounting system intended to make a clear internal separation between the activities carried out by them to accomplish their task of meeting needs in the general interest and activities which they carry out in competitive conditions.

53. As the Advocate General points out in points 64 and 65 of his Opinion, there must be serious doubts that, in reality, it is possible to establish such a separation between the different activities of one entity consisting of a single legal person which has a single system of assets and property and whose administrative and management decisions are taken in unitary fashion, even ignoring the many other practical obstacles with regard to reviewing before and after the event the total separation between the different spheres of activity of the entity concerned and the classification of the activity in question as belonging to a particular sphere.

54. Thus, having regard to the reasons of legal certainty, transparency and predictability which govern the implementation of procedures for all public procurement, the case-law of the Court set out in paragraphs 50 and 51 of the present judgment must be followed.

55. Nevertheless, as is apparent from paragraph 49 of the present judgment, the question posed by the referring court at the same time relates to Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18.

56. In that regard, it should be noted that, in the context of the examination of the second question referred for a preliminary ruling, it was held that an entity such as Fernwärme Wien is to be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of Directive 2004/17 or of Directive 2004/18. Furthermore, in examining the first question referred for a preliminary ruling, the Court concluded that a contracting entity, within the meaning of Directive 2004/17, is required to apply the procedure laid down in that directive only for the award of contracts which relate to activities carried out by that entity in one or more of the sectors listed in Articles 3 to 7 thereof.

57. It is appropriate to state that, in accordance with the case-law of the Court, contracts awarded in the sphere of one of the activities expressly listed in Articles 3 to 7 of Directive 2004/17 and contracts which, although different in nature and thus capable normally, as such, of falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18, are used in the exercise of activities defined in Directive 2004/17 fall within the scope of the latter directive (see, to that effect, Strabag and Kostmann , paragraphs 41 and 42).

58. Consequently, the contracts awarded by an entity such as Fernwärme Wien are covered by the procedures laid down in Directive 2004/17 since they are connected with an activity which it carries out in the sectors listed in Articles 3 to 7 thereof. However, all other contracts awarded by such an entity in connection with the exercise of other activities are covered by the procedures laid down in Directive 2004/18.

59. The answer to the third question must therefore be that all contracts awarded by an entity which is a body governed by public law, within the meaning of Directive 2004/17 or Directive 2004/18, which relate to activities carried out by that entity in one or more of the sectors listed in Articles 3 to 7 of Directive 2004/17 must be subject to the procedures laid down in that directive. However, all other contracts awarded by such an entity in connection with the exercise of other activities are covered by the procedures laid down in Directive 2004/18. Each of these two directives applies without distinction between the activities carried out by that entity to accomplish its task of meeting needs in the general interest and activities which it carries out under competitive conditions, and even where there is an accounting system intended to make a clear internal separation between those activities in order to avoid cross-financing between those sectors.

Costs

60. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

Case C-393/06

Ing. Aigner, Wasser-Wärme-Umwelt, GmbH

v

Fernwärme Wien GmbH

(Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien)

(Public contracts – Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC – Contracting entity pursuing activities falling in part within the field of application of Directive 2004/17/EC and in part within that of Directive 2004/18/EC – Body governed by public law – Contracting authority)

Summary of the Judgment

1. Approximation of laws – Procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors – Directive 2004/17 – Scope

   (European Parliament and Council Directives 2004/17, Arts 3 to 7 and 20(1), and 2004/18, Art. 12(1))

2. Approximation of laws – Procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts – Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18 – Contracting authorities

   (European Parliament and Council Directives 2004/17, Art. 2(1)(a), second subpara., and 2004/18, Art. 1(9), second subpara.)

3. Approximation of laws – Procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts – Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18 – Scope

   (European Parliament and Council Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18)

1. A contracting entity, within the meaning of Directive 2004/17 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, is required to apply the procedure laid down in that directive only for the award of contracts which relate to activities carried out by that entity in one or more of the sectors listed in Articles 3 to 7 of that directive.

   Article 20(1) of Directive 2004/17 provides that the latter does not apply to contracts which the contracting entities award for purposes other than the pursuit of their activities as described in Articles 3 to 7 thereof. The equivalent of that provision in Directive 2004/18 is the first paragraph of Article 12, which provides that that directive does not apply to public contracts which are awarded by contracting authorities exercising one or more of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7 of Directive 2004/17. Thus, the field of application of Directive 2004/17 is strictly circumscribed, which does not permit the procedures laid down therein to be extended beyond that field of application.

2. Under the second subparagraph of Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 2004/17 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors and the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, a ‘body governed by public law’ is any body which, first, was established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, secondly, has legal personality and, thirdly, is financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law. Those three conditions are cumulative.

An entity established specifically for the purpose of supplying district heating to homes, public institutions, offices, undertakings in a local authority area by means of the use of energy produced by the destruction of waste, which has legal personality and of which the local authority wholly owns the share capital and monitors its economic and financial management, meets the two latter conditions laid down by those directives.

With regard to the first condition, it cannot be disputed that such an entity was established specifically to meet needs in the general interest. To provide heating for an urban area by means of an environmentally-friendly process constitutes an aim which is undeniably in the general interest. In that regard, it is immaterial that such needs are also met or can be met by private undertakings. It is important that they should be needs which, for reasons in the general interest, the State or a regional authority generally chooses to meet itself or over which it wishes to retain a decisive influence.

In order to ascertain whether the needs met by the entity in question have a character other than industrial or commercial, account must be taken of all the relevant law and facts such as the circumstances prevailing at the time when the entity concerned was established and the conditions under which it exercises its activity. In that regard, it is common ground that the pursuit of profit did not underlie its establishment. With regard, subsequently, to the relevant market which must be considered in order to ascertain whether the entity in question is exercising its activities in competitive conditions, account must be taken, having regard to the functional interpretation of the concept of a 'body governed by public law', of the sector for which that entity was created, that is to say, the supply of district heating by means of the use of energy produced by the burning of waste. In the sector under consideration, the entity in question enjoys a virtual monopoly. Furthermore, there is a considerable degree of autonomy in this sector, since it would be very difficult to replace the district heating system by another form of energy, and the local authority in question attaches a particular importance to this heating system, not least for reasons of environmental considerations, such that it would not permit it to be withdrawn, even if that system were to operate at a loss. Thus, since the entity in question is currently the only undertaking capable of meeting such needs in the general interest in the sector under consideration, it might choose to be guided by considerations other than economic ones in the award of its contracts.

It is immaterial whether, in addition to its duty to meet needs in the general interest, an entity is free to carry out other profit-making activities, provided that it continues to attend to the needs which it is specifically required to meet. The proportion of profit-making activities actually pursued by that entity as part of its activities as a whole is also irrelevant for its classification as a body governed by public law.

3. All contracts awarded by an entity which is a body governed by public law, within the meaning of Directive 2004/17 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors or Directive 2004/18 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, which relate to activities carried out by that entity in one or more of the sectors listed in Articles 3 to 7 of Directive 2004/17 must be subject to the procedures laid down in that directive. However, all other contracts awarded by such an entity in connection with the exercise of other activities are covered by the procedures laid down in Directive 2004/18. Each of these two directives applies without distinction between the activities carried out by that entity to accomplish its task of meeting needs in the general interest and activities which it carries out under competitive conditions, and even where there is an accounting system intended to make a clear internal separation between those activities in order to avoid cross financing between those sectors.

Reference for a preliminary ruling - Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien - Interpretation of Article 2(1) and of Article 3 of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1) and interpretation of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114) - Award of contract for heating equipment - The contracting authority is an undertaking controlled by the City of Vienna providing public services (district heating) - Body governed by public law - Assessment of the condition of competition - Application of European market award procedures also to activities carried out under competitive conditions (in the present case, air conditioning systems) - Contamination theory - No cross-subsidies

1. A contracting entity, within the meaning of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors is required to apply the procedure laid down in that directive only for the award of contracts which relate to activities carried out by that entity in one or more of the sectors listed in Articles 3 to 7 of that directive.

2. An entity such as Fernwärme Wien GmbH is to be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 2004/17 and the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts.

3. All contracts awarded by an entity which is a body governed by public law, within the meaning of Directive 2004/17 or Directive 2004/18, which relate to activities carried out by that entity in one or more of the sectors listed in Articles 3 to 7 of Directive 2004/17 must be subject to the procedures laid down in that directive. However, all other contracts awarded by such an entity in connection with the exercise of other activities are covered by the procedures laid down in Directive 2004/18. Each of these two directives applies without distinction between the activities carried out by that entity to accomplish its task of meeting needs in the general interest and activities which it carries out under competitive conditions, and even where there is an accounting system intended to make a clear internal separation between those activities in order to avoid cross financing between those sectors

[1] - OJ C 310, 16.12.2006.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer delivered on 22 November 2007. Ing. Aigner, Wasser-Wärme-Umwelt, GmbH v Fernwärme Wien GmbH. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien - Austria. Public contracts - Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC - Contracting entity pursuing activities falling in part within the field of application of Directive 2004/17/EC and in part within that of Directive 2004/18/EC - Body governed by public law - Contracting authority. Case C-393/06.

I - Introduction

1. The Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien (Procurement Review Tribunal of the Province of Vienna) has referred three questions on the interpretation of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts and Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors. (2)

2. Those questions provide the Court with the opportunity to delimit the scope of the aforementioned directives and to define, once again, the concept of a body governed by public law' when that body acts as a contracting authority'.

3. The object of this reference for a preliminary ruling is to ascertain whether a public undertaking, as defined in Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 2004/17, is caught by the provisions of that directive when it carries out activities which are not included in Articles 3 to 7 (first question). If the reply to that question is negative, the order for reference asks whether, in any event, such an undertaking must be classified as a body governed by public law' on the grounds that it is engaged, without any real competition, in satisfying needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character (the supply of district heating in the City of Vienna), which are governed by Directive 2004/18, despite the fact that it also carries out activities in a different market in competitive conditions (second question). Finally, the referring court enquires whether, if the undertaking demonstrated that the two activities are managed financially as watertight compartments, it would not be caught by those provisions (third question).

4. At the heart of those questions lies the infection theory' (formulated in the judgment in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others), (3) which states that all the activities of a contracting authority are governed by the procurement directives, unless (qualification introduced by Advocate General Jacobs in the opinion in Impresa Portuale di Cagliari , (4) removed from the register) it can be shown that there is no cross-subsidisation between contracts for activities carried out on the open market and contracts concluded in non-competitive conditions.

5. However, under Austrian law, the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien does not have the status of a court or tribunal; moreover, appeals against its decisions may be brought before the Verwaltunsgerichtshof (Administrative Court). My stance on the definition of court or tribunal for the purposes of Article 234 EC, which I explained in the opinion in De Coster , (5) being well-known, I feel obliged, in order to avoid inconsistency, to advise the Court to dismiss this reference for a preliminary ruling at the outset.

II - The legal framework

A - Austrian legislation

6. The Wiener Vergaberechtschutzgesetzes (6) (Law of Vienna on remedies in procurement law) confers on the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien jurisdiction to review the award of contracts by the Province of Vienna and by other contracting authorities in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (Paragraph 1).

7. In accordance with Paragraph 2, that independent administrative chamber exercises jurisdiction at first and sole instance and its decisions are not subject to review by administrative action (subparagraph 2), although a judicial appeal may be brought before the Verwaltunsgerichtshof (subparagraph 4).

8. The Vergabekontrollsenat is composed of seven members, nominated by the Government of the Province for a renewable mandate of six years (Paragraph 3(1)). The members must possess specific economic or technical knowledge in the field of public contracts (Paragraph 3(2)); they must carry out their functions independently and are not bound by any instructions (Paragraph 3(3)), and they do not receive any remuneration (Paragraph 3(4)).

B - Community law

1. Directive 2004/18

9. Directive 2004/18 consolidates the pre-existing secondary legislation in a single text, (7) harmonising at Community level the national procurement procedures in order to bring them into line with the principles of the Treaty which govern the award of public contracts (recitals 1 and 2). The directive governs contracts which it classifies as public' in Article 1(2), which are not excluded by Articles 12 to 18, which are for amounts equal to or greater than those indicated in Article 7, and which are concluded by contracting authorities.

10. Under Article 1(9), contracting authorities' means regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, and associations thereof. A body governed by public law' means any body: (1) established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character; (2) having legal personality; and (3)(a) financed, for the most part, by regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or (3)(b) subject to management supervision by those bodies; or (3)(c) having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.

2. Directive 2004/17

11. Directive 2004/17 (8) pursues a similar aim to that of Directive 2004/18 in respect of supply, works and service contracts (which are defined in Article 1(2)) in certain sectors characterised by their closed nature, due to the grant of special or exclusive rights (recitals 1 to 3).

12. In accordance with Article 2(2), the directive applies to contracting entities' which pursue one of the activities referred to in Articles 3 (gas, heat and electricity), 4 (water), 5 (transport), 6 (postal services) and 7 (exploration for, or extraction of, oil, gas, coal or other solid fuels, as well as ports and airports), unless those activities are performed under competitive conditions on markets to which access is not restricted (Article 30(1)).

13. In addition to contracting authorities' (which are defined, in Article 2(1)(a), in the same terms as in Directive 2004/18), the directive also classifies public undertakings' as contracting entities'. A public undertaking is any undertaking over which the contracting authorities may exercise, directly or indirectly, a dominant influence by virtue of their ownership of it, their financial participation therein, or the rules which govern it. They exercise such an influence when (1) they hold the majority of the undertaking's subscribed capital, or (2) they control the majority of the votes attaching to shares issued by the undertaking, or (3) they appoint more than half of the undertaking's administrative, management or supervisory body.

14. The directive also defines as contracting entities' organisations which, while they are not contracting authorities' or public undertakings', carry out any of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7 on the basis of special or exclusive rights (Article 2(2)(b)).

15. Article 20(1) excludes from the scope of the directive contracts which the contracting entities award for purposes other than those referred to in Articles 3 to 7.

III - The facts of the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

16. Fernwärme Wien GmbH is an undertaking established on 22 January 1969 and duly registered in the Vienna Companies Register, so acquiring legal personality. Its object is the supplying of district heating to homes, public institutions, offices, undertakings and other premises in the municipal district of Vienna. Without prejudice to that activity, the company is also engaged, in competition with other operators, in the general planning of refrigeration plants for large real estate projects.

17. Following successive amendments of the founding contract, in which its objects remained unchanged, the undertaking is currently a limited liability company and is wholly owned by Vienna City Council. (9) The Kontrollamt (Monitoring Office) of Vienna checks the undertaking's finances while the municipality, exercising its rights in the general meeting, appoints and removes the directors, approves their management, and does the same in respect of the members of the supervisory board.

18. By announcement in the Amtsblatt der Stadt Wien (Official Journal of the City of Vienna) of 1 March 2006, Fernwärme Wien published an invitation to tender for the construction of a refrigeration plant for an office and shopping centre in Vienna (called TownTown'), stating that national procurement law did not apply.

19. Ing. Aigner, Wasser-Wärme-Unwelt GmbH, which accepted the published conditions, participated in the selection process by submitting two tenders - a main tender and an alternative. On 18 May 2006, Fernwärme Wien informed the applicant that the second tender had been rejected, a decision which the applicant challenged before the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien.

20. Fernwärme Wien called into question that body's jurisdiction, which is conditional on the defendant undertaking's being a contracting entity' or a contracting authority' for the purpose of Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18. In view of the nature of the dispute before it, the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien has stayed the proceedings and referred the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Must Directive 2004/17/EC... be interpreted as meaning that a contracting entity which carries out activities in the sectors referred to in Article 3... also falls within the scope of that directive in relation to an activity pursued in parallel under competitive conditions?

(2) In the event that this is the case only in respect of contracting authorities: must an undertaking such as Fernwärme Wien Ges.m.b.H. be characterised as a body governed by public law within the meaning of Directive 2004/17/EC or Directive 2004/18/EC if it provides district heating in a given area without any real competition, or must the market for domestic heating, which also includes energy sources such as gas, oil and coal, be taken into account?

(3) Must an activity pursued under competitive conditions by a company which also pursues activities of a nonindustrial or noncommercial nature be included within the scope of Directive 2004/17/EC or Directive 2004/18/EC if, through effective precautions such as separate balance sheets and accounts, crossfinancing of the activities pursued under competitive conditions can be excluded?'

IV - The procedure before the Court of Justice

21. The parties to the main proceedings, the Commission, and the Austrian, Hungarian and Finnish Governments submitted written observations, and the representatives of Ing. Aigner, the Austrian Government and the Commission presented oral argument at the hearing on 11 October 2007.

V - The jurisdiction of the Court of Justice

22. In HI , (10) the Court held that the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien must be regarded as a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC (paragraph 28). In accordance with its settled case-law on that definition, the Court found that the Vergabekontrollsenat complies with the criteria of being established by law, having compulsory jurisdiction and an inter partes procedure, and applying rules of law (paragraph 26), and that, on account of its composition and functioning, it satisfies the requirements of permanence and independence (paragraph 27).

23. Six months earlier, in my Opinion in De Coster , I criticised that case-law for being too flexible and not sufficiently consistent', (11) and I proposed a change of bearing with a view to taking a firmer course (12) which, by focusing on the raison d'être of the preliminary ruling, would encourage fruitful cooperation between courts.

24. For that purpose, I propose that, as a general rule, Article 234 EC should cover only bodies forming part of the judicial power of every State, when they carry out their judicial duties in the proper sense, including, by way of an exception, those bodies which, while not belonging to that structure, have the final word in the national legal order, provided that they satisfy the requirements laid down in case-law, in particular, the requirements of independence and the adversarial nature of the proceedings.

25. In accordance with that stricter interpretation, the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien is not included in the definition because it is not part of the Austrian judicial structure (independent administrative chamber') and its decisions, which exhaust the administrative remedies available, may be challenged by judicial action before the Verwaltunsgerichtshof. (13)

26. It is not appropriate to reproduce here the points I made in the De Coster Opinion (paragraphs 75 to 79) concerning the undesirability of an administrative authority, no matter how independent, intervening in a dialogue between courts, and repeated in the Opinion in Case C195/06 Osterreichischer Rundfunk (ORF) (14) (paragraphs 35 to 36). Nor is it appropriate to overlook the fruitful collaboration of the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien in the interpretation of public procurement law. (15) However, even entering into the realms of legal possibilism, the arguments which justified opening up the preliminary ruling dialogue to bodies which are not strictly judicial in nature lose much of their force in a Community of 27 States at a time when that field of Community law and its interpretation are fully consolidated. (16)

27. Recent developments in case-law reveal (17) greater zeal in identifying the features which define the concept of a court or tribunal, especially independence, allowing a glimpse of a position close to that in De Coster. (18) Thus, in Schmid , (19) the Court held that it lacked jurisdiction to hear a reference from the Berufungssenat V der Finanzlandesdirektion (Fifth Appeal Chamber of the Regional Finance Authority) for Vienna, Lower Austria and Burgenland, while, in Syfait and others , (20) the Court likewise ruled inadmissible a reference from the Epitropi Antagonismou (Greek Competition Commission). (21)

28. That trend is abundantly clear if regard is had to the fact that, in the past, the Court did deal with questions referred for a preliminary ruling by bodies similar to the ones mentioned, such as the Spanish economic and administrative courts (22) and the Spanish Tribunal de Defensa de la Competencia (Competition Court). (23)

29. The years have gone by and the Opinion in De Coster (24) is still quite valid, for which reason, not only for the sake of consistency but also with total conviction, I maintain that the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien is not a court or tribunal for the purposes of Article 234 EC and I propose that the Court should declare that it lacks jurisdiction to consider the questions which that body has referred for a preliminary ruling.

30. I cherish the hope that the judges whom I address will be persuaded of the virtues of the proposal set out in De Coster , (25) but, in case they do not follow my recommendation, I shall now go on to analyse, in the alternative, the substance of the present reference for a preliminary ruling, with the intention of fulfilling my duty, acting with complete impartiality and independence, to deliver an opinion in open court.

VI - Analysis of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

A - Directives 2004/17 and 2004/18: two routes towards a single objective (first question)

31. Community public procurement law pursues an immediate, limited aim: coordination of the procedures for the award of public contracts. However, as may be deduced from recital 2 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 and recital 9 in the preamble to Directive 2004/17, and also from the case-law of the Court, (26) that is nothing more than an instrument for the achievement of a more important objective, namely, the development of effective competition in the sector, in the interests of establishing the fundamental freedoms in European integration. The purpose is, therefore, to eliminate barriers to freedom of movement by protecting the interests of economic operators in one Member State who wish to sell goods or services to contracting entities in other Member States. Accordingly, it is necessary to avoid the risk of preference being given to national tenderers (buy national'), excluding the possibility that the body responsible for awarding the contract may be guided by considerations other than economic (27) (for that reason, the essential criterion when awarding a contract is that of the lowest or economically most advantageous tender).

1. A personal dimension

32. Like its predecessors, Directive 2004/18 delimits its scope as follows: subjectively, by defining, on the one hand, the terms contractor', supplier' and service provider', and, on the other, the term contracting authority' (Article 1(8) and (9)); and objectively, by defining public works contracts', public service contracts' and public supply contracts', together with public works concession' and service concession' (Article 1(2) to (4)).

33. So, contracts governed by Directive 2004/18, which are approved by a contracting authority, must be awarded in all the Member States in accordance with the principles and the procedural rules laid down in the directive.

34. The emphasis is thus placed on the personal dimension, since the conclusive criterion is not the nature of the activity but rather who performs it, because all public procurement is subject to the procedural coordination undertaken by the secondary legislation.

35. That requirement is so fundamental that, in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others , the Court extended the application of the Community legislation (in that case, Directive 93/37) to all the activities of bodies governed by public law, arguing that the legislature does not make a distinction between contracts relating to needs in the general interest and contracts which are unrelated to that task, and citing the interests of legal certainty (paragraphs 32 and 34).

2. A material harmonisation

36. However, that intersectoral' (the adjective used by the Commission in its written observations) harmonisation was abandoned in Directive 2004/17 which, rather than applying to all the activities of the contracting entities, concerns only those activities set out in Articles 3 to 7.

37. The reason that the subject-matter of Directive 2004/17 is so specific is that, originally, contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors were not harmonised (28) owing to the diverse nature of the legal status (public or private) of the bodies responsible for those services. It was necessary to avoid making those services subject to different systems depending on whether they come under the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law, or whether they come under bodies governed by private law, and the hope was that experience would provide a definitive solution. (29)

38. The opportunity arose on the adoption of Directive 93/38, which coordinated public procurement procedures in those excluded markets and defined the contracting bodies without reference to their legal status (public or private). The directive also took into account the capacity of national authorities to influence the behaviour of such entities, due to the closed nature of the markets concerned and to the existence of special or exclusive rights, for the purposes of also opening up those markets to competition (recitals 9, 11 and 12). That was the justification for the fact that, in addition to the entities referred to in the standard directives in the field, the scope ratione personae of the directive included public undertakings and affiliated undertakings (Article 1(2) and (3)), and care was taken to specify that such undertakings were governed by the directive only if they carried out activities in the sectors referred to therein (recital 13 (30) and Article 2).

39. Directive 2004/17 follows the same course (recitals 2 and 3) and identifies contracting entities without reference to their legal status (recital 10). Therefore, in addition to contracting authorities, which are identified in the same terms as in Directive 2004/18, the directive defines as contracting entities public undertakings and entities which have special or exclusive rights, provided that they carry out the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7 (Articles 2(1) and (2) and 20(1)).

40. Accordingly, Directive 2004/17 governs procurement in what are traditionally known as excluded sectors', and its spirit is different to that prompting Directive 2004/18. The conclusive criterion is not the contracting entity but rather the nature of the activity to which the contract concerned relates, and the directive applies only to the sectors concerned.

41. That view is based on a twofold approach. On the one hand, the first paragraph of Article 12 of Directive 2004/18 excludes from its ambit contracts awarded by contracting authorities exercising the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7 of Directive 2004/17, which draws attention to the importance of the material scope in the application of the latter provision. On the other hand, Directive 2004/17 is aimed at promoting the establishment of free competition, for which reason, pursuant to Article 30(1) thereof, it does not apply where the activities concerned are carried out on markets to which access is not restricted.

42. Therefore, the contracting authorities referred to in Directive 2004/18 are subject to Directive 2004/17 if they fall within its material scope, whereas the same does not apply to public undertakings and the holders of special or exclusive rights per se.

43. Those factors support the view that the infection theory does not apply to the present case. In the Opinion in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others , Advocate General Léger pointed out that the scope of Directive 93/37 (and that of Directive 2004/18) is not determined according to the activity in respect of which contracts are awarded but rather by reference to the characteristics of the body entering into the contract (paragraph 81). In other words, whereas Directive 2004/18 focuses on the concept of a contracting authority', in respect of which, for reasons of legal certainty, it is not appropriate to embark on the task of determining which part of the organisation is aimed at meeting needs in the general interest and which part is aimed at other objectives, Directive 2004/17 enables perfect delimitation of the material sphere of the activities of the contracting entities', by providing specific guidelines in that regard in Article 9.

44. To put it another way, if a contracting authority', in the strictest sense, within the meaning of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 and Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 2004/17, invites tenders for activities not mentioned in Articles 3 to 7 of the latter directive, the former will apply. However, if the body which pursues activities outside that sphere is a public undertaking or holds special or exclusive rights (Article 2(1)(b) and 2(b) of Directive 2004/17) neither of the two directives applies.

45. In short, I propose that the Court should reply to the first of the three questions submitted by the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien, declaring that Directive 2004/17 does not govern contracts which contracting entities', within the meaning of Article 2(2), conclude in respect of activities not mentioned in Articles 3 to 7.

46. That solution is founded on Community case-law. In the judgment in Strabag and Kostmann , (31) the Court held that Directive 93/38 (and therefore Directive 2004/17 too) applies to contracting entities' in so far as they carry out activities in the material sectors provided for therein. Otherwise, contracts concluded by those entities are subject, where applicable, to the legislation on public procurement (paragraph 37).

B - The concept of a body governed by public law: the significance of the level of competition in the market (second question)

47. All those who have taken part in these preliminary ruling proceedings are agreed that the contract in the main proceedings concerns an activity of Fernwärme Wien which does not come under Directive 2004/17 (the construction of a refrigeration plant for an office and shopping centre), for which reason, in line with the reply I have proposed to the first question, it is appropriate to ascertain, as the referring court requests, whether the undertaking is a contracting authority because, if it were, it would be governed by Directive 2004/18.

48. Specifically, it is necessary to determine whether Fernwärme Wien is a body governed by public law. It is not in dispute that the undertaking has legal personality and is closely connected with Vienna City Council, which owns its capital, directly and indirectly. The uncertainty concerns the first legislative requirement, which is whether its particular aim is to satisfy needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character.

49. Further, it is common ground that the object of the undertaking is in the general interest, since it provides a district heating service by means of an environmentally friendly system, such as waste combustion. (32) The core of the dispute is therefore merely to decide whether that service has an industrial or commercial character.

50. For that purpose, it is necessary to take into account all the relevant legal and factual circumstances, such as those prevailing at the time of establishment of the body concerned and the conditions under which it exercises its activity, (33) including, in particular, the fact that it does not aim primarily at making a profit, the fact that it does not bear the risks, and any public financing of the activity in question. (34)

51. In that connection, it is necessary to examine the effect on the concept of the structure of the sector in which the body concerned carries out its activity. First of all, the wording of the directive makes no reference at all to whether or not there may be competition with private undertakings, (35) a situation which might be indicative that the public interest to be satisfied is industrial or commercial in nature (36) but would be insufficient to exclude considerations other than the economic, (37) since the fact that it pursues its activity in a closed market is not essential for the purposes of identifying a body as one governed by public law. (38)

52. The second question referred by the national court falls within the ambit of that case-law; it seeks to delimit the market concerned with a view to establishing the level of competition, but it starts from an erroneous premiss (which has been adopted by all those who have participated in these preliminary ruling proceedings), as is clear from the considerations I set out in my analysis of the first question.

53. In fact, Directive 2004/18 is founded on a subjective theory, applying to any organisational structure which acts as a contracting authority', regardless of the material sphere in which it operates (infection theory), unless it awards contracts that are excluded pursuant to Articles 12 to 18. In the case of bodies governed by public law', the directive requires such bodies to have been specifically established for the purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, so the market to be taken into consideration in order to assess the level of competition and identify whether the activity of such a body is industrial or commercial is the market for which the body was founded, (39) which, in the case of Fernwärme Wien, is the supply of district heating by means of waste combustion.

54. Any other approach would lead to a result at odds with the functional interpretation put forward in Community case-law, (40) thereby compromising the effectiveness of Directive 2004/18. In order to avoid the application of that provision, it would suffice for a body established solely to meet needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, to pursue strictly commercial activities while retaining its initial objects, and, when it increases the markets in which it participates, that body would avoid being classified as a body governed by public law, with the result that all its contracts, regardless of their nature, would be concluded free from the requirements of the harmonised Community legislation. In essence, my view supplements the solution in Universale-Bau , (41) which concerned a converse situation in which the undertaking in question had been established for an exclusively private activity and subsequently became responsible for running a public service. In both cases, the functional interpretation is guided by the fact that undertakings which meet needs in the general interest and are capable of operating outside market forces may award contracts without having regard to those forces.

55. Directive 2004/18 leaves no alternative, since, just as the State and regional or local authorities continue to be classified as contracting authorities when they award contracts in open sectors, so do the structures which those regional or local authorities establish with legal personality and under their control for the purposes of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character.'

That interpretation is redolent of aspects of the case-law of the Court. In Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others , the Court noted that the condition that the body must have been established for the specific purpose of meeting such needs does not mean that it may meet only such needs (paragraph 26) and may not engage in other activities, even when such tasks constitute the greater part of its activity, because the legal definition does not take into account the relative importance of such tasks within its overall business (paragraphs 25, 26 and 31). (42)

56. In the light of those considerations, I propose that the Court should inform the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien that the supply of district heating is the market which it must examine for the purposes of determining whether Fernwärme Wien is to be classified as a body governed by public law', within the meaning of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18.

57. In any event, the examination to which the second question relates appears to be immaterial because, in the light of the information set out in the order for reference, regardless of which sector is delimited (district heating alone or heating produced by means of other fuel as well), Fernwärme Wien is currently the only undertaking capable of meeting that need in the general interest, being able to act in line with criteria other than strictly economic, a situation which justifies the intervention of Community law in order to harmonise the award criteria, open up the market to competition, and guarantee its transparency.

C - Whether there has been an infringement of the infection theory (third question)

58. The Commission has failed to grasp correctly the point of the third question. The Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien does not seek to ascertain the importance of the level of competition in the market concerned in order to establish whether the public procurement directives apply, which is the subject-matter of the second question. More simply, the referring court asks whether a contracting entity or a contracting authority which carries out in parallel industrial or commercial activities in an open market, is, with regard to the those activities, subject to the 2004 directives if, by using mechanisms such as separate balance sheets and accounts, it eliminates the risk of cross-financing between the different spheres of its business activity.

59. The question is without pertinence so far as Directive 2004/17 is concerned, for, as I have indicated, contracting entities are governed by its provisions only when they carry out activities in the material sectors which form the subject-matter of the directive, unless those activities are pursued in conditions of free competition, in which case, pursuant to Article 30(1), the harmonising provisions of the directive do not apply.

60. The analysis is restricted, therefore, to establishing whether contracting authorities, in particular bodies governed by public law, which carry on activity in both competitive and closed markets, must comply with Directive 2004/18 when they award contracts in open markets in the circumstances set out in the third question (absence of cross-financing).

61. The infection theory is based on the objectives of the Community legislation harmonising public procurement, which are set out in paragraph 31 of this Opinion. The intention is that those who have the capacity to award contracts should be guided by economic criteria, thereby avoiding the temptation to follow other guidelines which give preference to national tenderers to the detriment of foreign ones, so contracting authorities' which, by definition, are capable of avoiding market forces, must in all cases comply with Directive 2004/18. In its definition of a public contract, that directive does not require the contract to be related to the contracting authority's task of meeting needs in the general interest (Article 1(2), in conjunction with Annexes I and II). The Court previously put forward that reasoning in the judgment in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others (paragraph 32) in connection with Directive 93/37.

62. As the Court pointed out in paragraph 34 of that judgment, the infection theory is also based on the principle of legal certainty, in accordance with which the definition of a body governed by public law must not take into account the specific proportion of the industrial or commercial activities concerned.

63. In the Opinion in Impresa Portuale di Cagliari (paragraph 68), Advocate General Jacobs suggests an exception for cases where it may be demonstrated that there is complete economic, financial and accounting separation between the different types of activity of a body governed by public law.

64. I see no problem in accepting his suggestion in theory; (43) the prudence which must guide the framers of case-law requires it to be dismissed for, as the Community market now stands, experience teaches us that economic activities and business relationships are highly complex, making it extremely difficult to effect such a radical separation as that proposed by my colleague, which, as the order for reference states, appears possible only between independent undertakings, and, even then, not always. Even if the accounts are kept separately and cross-subsidisation is excluded, the strategic management, the structural decisions and the assets are one and there is nothing to guarantee that the different spheres of activity are watertight or that, in crisis situations, the rules of conduct of a closed market will not have an effect on those of an industrial or commercial activity, leading the contracting body governed by public law to be guided by sub-economic' criteria - a risk which would give rise to the application of the Community provisions harmonising the award of public contracts. Thus, the principle of legal certainty, on which the position of the Court in this area is founded, calls for those rules to be maintained.

65. In that regard, there are also many other practical obstacles, since the burden of proving that the activity concerned is independent from the other sectors of activity falls to the body governed by public law', so that it would be necessary to establish a method of reviewing (in advance or a posteriori) the initial decisions on procurement taken by that body and of verifying, first of all, that its different areas of activity are completely separate and, next, that the contract awarded falls within the sector excluded from Community harmonisation; otherwise, it would be possible to exclude at will the application of that body of rules. That approach complicates the intricate Community system of public procurement, (44) and it would not, therefore, be appropriate to adopt a solution which, without bestowing any benefit whatsoever, jeopardises a fundamental principle such as that of legal certainty.

66. In summary, I consider that, in any event, a body governed by public law' falls under Directive 2004/18, regardless of the nature of the contracts it concludes, unless those contracts are expressly excluded by the Directive (Articles 12 to 18).

VII - Conclusion

67. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court should:

(1) Declare that it lacks jurisdiction to answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien, because that body is not a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC.

(2) In the alternative, if it were to hold the reference admissible, declare that:

(a) A contracting entity, within the meaning of Article 2(2) of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, is not subject to the provisions of that directive when it carries out activities other than those referred to in Articles 3 to 7 thereof.

(b) The market which must be analysed for the purpose of determining its level of competition and ascertaining whether the undertaking Fenwärme Wien GmbH is a body governed by public law, for the purposes of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, is the market for the supply of district heating in the City of Vienna.

(c) Where tenders are invited by a body governed by public law for the contracts referred to in Directive 2004/18, those contracts are always governed by the provisions of that directive, even when they are performed in competitive conditions.'

(7) - In the field of public procurement, the approximation of laws began with Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ English Special Edition: Series I Chapter 1971(II), p. 682), which, after a number of amendments, was consolidated under the same title in Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54). The coordination of procedures for the award of public supply contracts was initially governed by Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 (OJ 1977 L 13, p.

1) and subsequently by Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1). Public service contracts were subject to Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1). Prior to their inclusion in Directive 2004/18, the foregoing provisions were updated in European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1).

(8) - The directive succeeds Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84).

(9) - A 99.999% stake is held by Wien Energie GMBH and a 0.001% stake by Wiener Stadwerke Holding AG. The former is owned by the latter, whose sole shareholder is the City of Vienna.

La notion de juridiction en droit communautaire', Liber amicorum Bo Vesterdorf, Emile Bruylant, Brussels, 2007 (printing underway), draws attention to the ambiguous inconsistency of the caselaw which persists in focusing on characteristics which, for the most part, are neither specific nor exclusive to the concept of a court or tribunal, thereby making it more difficult to define the term correctly.

(12) - Moitinho de Almeida, J.C., La notion de juridiction d`un Etat membre (article 177 du traité CE)', Mélanges F. Schockweiler, Baden-Baden, Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft, pp. 463, 464 and 478, observes that the development of Community case-law has given rise to a number of uncertainties which the Court must resolve.

(13) - That fact is not mentioned in the judgment in HI.

(15) - By way of example, in addition to HI , attention should also be drawn to Case C470/99 Universale-Bau [2002] ECR I11617.

(16) - In the Opinion in Case C54/96 Dorsch Consult [1997] ECR I4961, Advocate General Tesauro observed that, if a body is not a judicial body, it does not become one simply because there is no better solution' (paragraph 40).

(25) - Cienfuegos, M., La nocion comunitaria de organo jurisdiccional de un Estado miembro ex artículo 234 del Tratado CE y su necesaria revision', Gaceta Jurídica de la Union Europea y de la Competencia, July/August 2005, No 238, p. 26, warns of the insufficiency of interim solutions, such as making stricter the traditional criterion of the independence of the referring court, by tailoring its application to each individual case, and proposes, in line with the De Coster Opinion, a general alteration of the definition of court or tribunal.

(26) - Inter alia , the judgments in Case 103/88 Fratelli Costanzo [1989] ECR 1839, paragraph 18 in fine; Case C360/96 BFI Holding [1998] ECR I6821, paragraph 41; Case C380/98 University of Cambridge [2000] ECR I8035, paragraph 16; and Case C237/99 Commission v France [2001] ECR I939, paragraph 41.

(27) - Judgments in Mannesmann Anlagenbau and Others , paragraph 33; BFI Holding , paragraph 42; University of Cambridge , paragraph 17; and Commission v France , paragraph 42.

(28) - Articles 3(4) and (5) of Directive 71/305 and 2(2) of Directive 77/62.

(29) - Fourth to sixth recitals in the preamble to Directive 71/305 and sixth to eighth recitals in the preamble to Directive 77/62. That view is confirmed in the recital 8 in the preamble to Directive 93/38.

(30) - That recital excludes from the scope of Directive 93/38... activities of those entities which either fall outside the sectors of water, energy and transport services or outside the telecommunications sector, or which fall within those sectors but are nevertheless directly exposed to competitive forces in markets to which entry is unrestricted'.

(31) - Joined Cases C462/03 and C463/03 [2005] ECR I5397, which, by decision of the Court, was decided without an advocate general's opinion.

(32) - The Court has taken a generous approach to the definition of needs in the general interest'. The Court has not restricted the definition to the institutional operation of the State or to the concept of public order (judgments in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others paragraph 24, and Case C283/00 Commission v Spain [2003] ECR I11697, paragraph 85), and has extended it to the organisation of fairs, exhibitions and other similar initiatives (judgment in Joined Cases C223/99 and C260/99 Agorà and Excelsior [2001] ECR I3605, paragraphs 33 and 34); to the buying, selling and leasing of properties and the supply of property management services for a local authority (judgment in Case C18/01 Korhonen and Others [2003] ECR I5321, paragraphs 41 and 45); and to the construction of housing intended for selling or leasing to families of low means (judgment in Commission v France , paragraph 47).

(33) - Judgments in Case C373/00 Adolf Truley [2003] ECR I1931, paragraph 66, and Korhonen and Others , paragraphs 48 and 59.

(34) - Judgment in Korhonen and Others , paragraph 59.

(35) - Judgment in BFI Holding , paragraph 40.

(36) - Judgments in BFI Holding , paragraph 49; Agorà and Excelsior , paragraph 38 in fine ; and Adolf Truley , paragraph 60.

(37) - Judgments in BFI Holding , paragraph 43, and Adolf Truley , paragraph 61. According to paragraph 44 of the judgment in BFI Holding , it is hard to imagine any activities that could not be carried on by private undertakings, and therefore the absence of competition would render meaningless the term body governed by public law' used in the directives.

(38) - Judgment in BFI Holding , paragraph 47 in fine.

(39) - In BFI Holding , the Court noted that the absence of an industrial or commercial character is a criterion intended to clarify the meaning of the term needs in the general interest' (paragraph 32).

(40) - Judgments in Case C353/96 Commission v Ireland [1998] ECR I8565, paragraph 36; BFI Holding , paragraph 62; Commission v France, paragraph 43; Case C214/00 Commission v Spain [2003] ECR I4667, paragraph 53; and Commission v Spain (C283/00), paragraph 73.

(41) - In that case the Court held that the activities pursued by a body should be taken into account to establish whether the body was established to meet needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character (paragraph 56).

(42) - For similar reasoning see the judgments in BFI Holding (paragraphs 55 and 56), Adolf Truley (paragraph 56) and Korhonen and Others (paragraph 58).

(43) - In fact, Advocate General Jacobs seeks to transfer to the field of public procurement concepts from the field of State aid which is incompatible with the common market, which is the subject-matter of Commission Directive 2006/111/EC of 16 November 2006 on the transparency of financial relations between Member States and public undertakings as well as on financial transparency within certain undertakings (OJ 2006 L 318, p. 17), and of its identically titled predecessor Commission Directive 80/723/EEC of 25 June 1980 (OJ 1980 L 195, p. 35).

(44) - In the Opinion cited (paragraph 60), Advocate General Jacobs draws attention to that complexity, which is also pointed out by the Commission in its Communication - Public procurement in the European Union, COM(98) 143 final, of 11 March 1998, p. 3, and in the Green Paper - Public procurement in the European Union: exploring the way forward, COM(96) 583 final, of 27 November 1996, p. 5, point 2.10, and p. 8, point 3.6.

Questions referred

Must Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors [1] (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1) ('Directive 2004/17/EC') be interpreted as meaning that a contracting entity which pursues one of the sectoral activities referred to in Article 3 of that directive also falls within the scope of that directive in relation to an activity pursued in parallel under competitive conditions?

In the event that this is the case only in respect of contracting authorities: must an undertaking such as Fernwärme Wien GmbH. be characterised as a body governed by public law within the meaning of Directive 2004/17/EC or Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts [2] (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114) ('Directive 2004/18/EC') if it provides district heating in a given area without any real competition, or must the market for domestic heating, which also includes energy sources such as gas, oil, coal etc., be taken into account?

Must an activity pursued under competitive conditions by a company which also pursues activities of a non-industrial or non-commercial nature be included within the scope of Directive 2004/17/EC or Directive 2004/18/EC if, through effective precautions such as separate balance sheets and accounts, cross-financing of the activities pursued under competitive conditions can be excluded?

Does a contract classified as a 'licence in respect of public land' exclude the application of Council Directive 92/50/EEC [1] of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, where, notwithstanding the award by the municipal authority to the contractor of the exclusive right to exploit for profit advertising space on street furniture supplied to the municipal authority, the contract requires the contractor to supply a number of services for the benefit of the authority (provision of street furniture, and of space for municipal posters)?

Where there is no price in the classic sense of that term, may the valuable consideration for the services supplied to the municipal authority consist in the waiver by the authority of advertising revenue from which the financial payments and contributions in kind and display fees provided for in the contract are, as in this case, to be deducted?

3. Does the principal or ancillary nature of the various obligations provided for in the contract have any relevance to the application of the aforementioned directive?'

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber), composed of G. Arestis, President of the Eighth Chamber, acting as President of the Fourth Chamber, R. Silva de Lapuerta, E. Juhasz (Rapporteur), J. Malenovsku and T. von Danwitz, Judges, Advocate General: D. Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer,

Registrar: L. Hewlett, Principal Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 18 October 2007,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

- Frigerio Luigi & C. Snc, by M. Boifava, avvocato,

- the Commission of the European Communities, by C. Zadra and X. Lewis, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 26(1) and (2) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001, precludes national provisions, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, which exclude candidates or tenderers entitled under the law of the Member State concerned to provide the service in question, including those composed of groups of service providers, from submitting a tender, in a procedure for the award of a public service contract with a value greater than the threshold for application of Directive 92/50, solely on the ground that those candidates or tenderers do not have a legal form corresponding to a specific category of legal persons, namely that of a company with share capital. It is for the national court, to the full extent of its discretion under national law, to interpret and apply national law in accordance with the requirements of Community law and, in so far as such an interpretation is not possible, to disapply any provision of national law which is contrary to those requirements.

1. The reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 26 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended by Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001 (OJ 2001 L 285, p. 1) (Directive 92/50'), Article 4(1) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), Articles 39 EC, 43 EC, 48 EC and 81 EC, Article 9 of Council Directive 75/442/EEC of 15 July 1975 on waste (OJ 1975 L 194, p. 39), as amended by Council Directive 91/156/EEC of 18 March 1991 (OJ 1991 L 78, p. 32) (Directive 75/442'), and Article 7 of Directive 2006/12/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 5 April 2006 on waste (OJ 2006 L 114, p. 9).

2. That reference has been submitted in the course of proceedings between Frigerio Luigi & C. Snc (Frigerio'), a partnership under Italian law, and the Comune di Triuggio (Municipality of Triuggio) concerning the award of a contract for the operation of environmental hygiene services.

Legal context

Community legislation

3. Directive 92/50 seeks to coordinate procurement procedures for the award of public service contracts. According to the second recital in the preamble thereto, the directive contributes to the progressive establishment of the internal market, which consists of an area without internal frontiers in which the free movement of goods, persons, services and capital is ensured.

4. The sixth recital in the preamble to that directive states, inter alia, that obstacles to the free movement of services are to be avoided and that, therefore, service providers may be either natural or legal persons.

5. Pursuant to the twentieth recital in the preamble to that directive, in order to eliminate practices that restrict competition in general and participation in contracts by other Member States' nationals in particular, it is necessary to improve the access of service providers to procedures for the award of contracts.

6. Article 26 of Directive 92/50 is worded as follows:

1. Tenders may be submitted by groups of service providers. These groups may not be required to assume a specific legal form in order to submit the tender; however, the group selected may be required to do so when it has been awarded the contract.

2. Candidates or tenderers who, under the law of the Member State in which they are established, are entitled to carry out the relevant service activity, shall not be rejected solely on the grounds that, under the law of the Member State in which the contract is awarded, they would have been required to be either natural or legal persons.

3. Legal persons may be required to indicate in the tender or the request for participation the names and relevant professional qualifications of the staff to be responsible for the performance of the service.'

7. Directive 92/50 was repealed, with the exception of Article 41 thereof, with effect from 31 January 2006 and replaced by Directive 2004/18. The wording of Article 26 of Directive 92/50 was essentially reproduced in Article 4 of Directive 2004/18.

National legislation

8. Legislative Decree No 267 laying down the consolidated text of the laws on the organisation of local bodies (testo unico delle leggi sull'ordinamento degli enti locali), of 18 August 2000 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 227 of 28 September 2000), as amended by Decree-Law No 269 laying down urgent measures to promote development and correct the state of public finances (disposizioni urgenti per favorire lo sviluppo e per la correzione dell'andamento dei conti pubblici) of 30 September 2003 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 229 of 2 October 2003) converted into law, after amendment, by Law No 326 of 24 November 2003 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 274 of 25 November 2003) (Legislative Decree No 267/2000'), regulates, inter alia, the procedure for the award of contracts relating to the operation of local public services of economic interest. Article 113(5) of Legislative Decree No 267/2000 provides:

5. The service contract is to be awarded in accordance with the rules of the sector and the legislation of the European Union, with entitlement to provide the service being granted to:

(a) companies with share capital selected by means of public and open tendering procedures;

(b) companies with share capital with mixed public and private ownership in which the private partner is selected by means of public and open tendering procedures that have ensured compliance with domestic and Community legislation on competition in accordance with guidelines issued by the competent authorities in specific regulations or circulars;

(c) companies with share capital belonging entirely to the public sector on condition that the public authority or authorities holding the share capital exercise over the company control comparable to that exercised over their own departments and that the company carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling public authority or authorities'.

9. As regards the specific sector of waste, Article 2(6) of Law No 26 of the Lombardy Region laying down rules for local services of general economic interest - Provisions regarding waste management, energy, use of the subsoil and water resources (disciplina dei servizi locali di interesse economico generale. Norme in materia di gestione dei rifiuti, di energia, di utilizzo del sottosuolo e di risorse idriche) of 12 December 2003 (Ordinary supplement to the Bollettino Ufficiale della Regione Lombardia No 51 of 16 December 2003; Regional Law No 26') provides:

Entitlement to provide services shall be granted to companies with share capital selected by public and open tendering procedures or procedures compatible with national and Community competition rules; ...'

10. Under Article 198(1) of Legislative Decree No 152 on provisions regarding the environment (norme in materia ambiente) of 3 April 2006 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 88 of 14 April 2006):

... the municipalities shall continue to manage urban waste and similar waste for disposal on an exclusive basis on the terms referred to in Article 113(5) of Legislative Decree [No 267/2000].'

The factual background and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

11. By Resolution No 53 of 29 November 2005 (Resolution No 53'), the Municipal Council of the Comune di Triuggio entrusted for a period of five years from 1 July 2006 the operation of environmental hygiene services within the municipality to Azienda Servizi Multisettoriali Lombarda - A.S.M.L. SpA. (ASML').

12. By the same resolution, that Council undertook to acquire a shareholding allowing the municipal administration to become a member for all purposes and also to restructure and regulate, from both the organisational and functional points of view, relations with [ASML] for the purpose of creating for the [Comune di Triuggio] a power of supervision and control of that undertaking comparable to the power it has over its own departments'.

13. Frigerio, which had operated the services in question from 1 January 1996 to 30 June 2006 by way of a temporary joint venture with another partnership under Italian law, brought an action against Resolution No 53 before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia (Lombardy Regional Administrative Court). In that action, it submitted that the Municipal Council of the Comune di Triuggio was not entitled directly to award the contract at issue, but was required to put it out to tender, in accordance with the Community legislation applicable to public procurement and with Article 113(5) of Legislative Decree No 267/2000.

14. The Comune di Triuggio and ASML contended that that action should be dismissed, but also, in the alternative, that it was inadmissible. In this respect, they maintain, inter alia, that the action is inadmissible because of Frigerio's lack of legal interest in bringing proceedings, since that entity, which is constituted in the legal form of a (general) partnership, is not entitled to put itself forward for the award of the contract in question, since Article 113(5) of Legislative Decree No 267/2000 allows only companies with share capital to be awarded local public service contracts, such as the environmental hygiene contract.

15. In those circumstances, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Does Article 4(1) of Directive [2004/18], or the analogous Article 26(2) of Directive [92/50] (in the event that the latter is regarded as the legislative point of reference), according to which candidates or tenderers who, on the basis of the legislation of the Member State in which they are established, are authorised to provide the service at issue may not be rejected solely because, under the provisions in force in the Member State in which the contract is to be awarded, they would be required to be natural persons or legal persons, lay down a fundamental principle of Community law such as to override the formal limitation laid down by Article 113(5) of Legislative Decree No 267/2000 and by Articles 2(6) and 15(1) of Regional Law [No 26], and is it therefore capable of compelling compliance in such a way as to allow persons not having the status of companies with share capital to participate in tendering procedures?

(2) In the event that the Court does not consider the above rules to be the expression of a fundamental principle of Community law, does Article 4(1) of Directive [2004/18] or the analogous Article 26(2) of Directive [92/50] (in the event that the latter is regarded as the legislative point of reference) constitute, rather, an implicit corollary or a derivative principle of the principle of competition, viewed in conjunction with those concerning administrative transparency and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality, and does it therefore, as such, have immediate binding effect and take precedence over any possibly conflicting domestic provisions laid down by Member States to govern public works contracts falling outside the scope of the direct applicability of Community law?

(3) Are Article 113(5) of Legislative Decree No 267/2000 and Articles 2(6) and 15(1) of Regional Law [No 26] compatible with the Community principles set out in Article 39 [EC] (principle of free movement of workers within the Community), Article 43 [EC] (freedom of establishment), Articles 48 [EC] and 81 [EC] (agreements restricting competition)... , and therefore, in the event of a conflict being identified, must the abovementioned national provisions be disapplied as conflicting with Community provisions that have direct binding effect and take precedence over domestic provisions?

(4) Are Article 113(5) of Legislative Decree No 267/2000 and Articles 2(6) and 15(1) of Regional Law [No 26] compatible with Article 9(1) of Directive [75/442] or the analogous Article 7(2) of Directive [2006/12] (in the event that the latter is regarded as the legislative point of reference), which provide, respectively, that... any establishment or undertaking which carries out the operations specified in Annex II A [to Directive 75/442] must obtain a permit from the competent authority referred to in Article 6 [of that directive] and that [t]he plans referred to in paragraph 1 [of Article 7 of Directive 2006/12] may, for example, cover: (a) the natural or legal persons empowered to carry out waste management... ?'

The questions referred

The first and second questions

16. As a preliminary point, it should be observed that it is settled case-law that, in proceedings under Article 234 EC, which is based on a clear separation of functions between the national courts and the Court of Justice, any assessment of the facts in a case is a matter for the national court (see, inter alia, Case C235/95 Dumon and Froment [1998] ECR I4531, paragraph 25; Case C-13/05 Chacon Navas [2006] ECR I6467, paragraph 32, and Case C251/06 ING. AUER [2007] ECR I-0000, paragraph 19).

17. In this connection, it is apparent from the order for reference, and in particular from the first and second questions referred, that the national court is basing its decision on the premise that the contract at issue in the main proceedings falls within the scope of one of the Community directives on public service contracts, that is, either Directive 92/50 or Directive 2004/18. That premise is also supported by the evidence submitted to the Court, such as Resolution No 53, the text of which is attached to Frigerio's observations and which shows that the value of the contract at issue in the main proceedings is greater than the threshold laid down in those directives. In addition, it is apparent from the observations submitted at the hearing that the consideration for that contract is provided by the Comune di Triuggio, with the result that it cannot be deemed to be a concession of a public service.

18. In those circumstances, and having regard to the fact that that resolution dates from 29 November 2005, it must be held that Directive 92/50 applies ratione materiæ and ratione temporis to the facts of the case in the main proceedings.

19. Therefore, the first and second questions, which should be examined together, should be reformulated as meaning that the referring court is asking, primarily, whether Article 26(2) of Directive 92/50 precludes national provisions, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, which restrict the submission of tenders in a procedure for the award of a public service contract to parties having the legal form of a company with share capital. As a subsidiary question, that court is inquiring as to the consequences of an affirmative answer on the interpretation and application of the national law.

20. In accordance with Article 26(2) of Directive 92/50, the adjudicating authorities may not reject candidates or tenderers who, under the law of the Member State in which they are established, are entitled to carry out the relevant service activity solely on the ground that, under the law of the Member State in which the contract is awarded, they would have been required to be either natural or legal persons.

21. It stems from that provision that the adjudicating authorities also cannot exclude candidates or tenderers who are entitled, under the law of the Mem ber State concerned, to carry out the relevant service activity from a tendering procedure solely on the ground that their legal form does not correspond to a specific category of legal persons.

22. It follows that Article 26(2) of Directive 92/50 precludes any national legislation which excludes candidates or tenderers entitled under the law of the Member State concerned to carry out the relevant service activity from the award of public services contracts with a value greater than the threshold for the application of Directive 92/50 solely on the ground that those candidates or tenderers do not have the legal form corresponding to a specific category of legal persons.

23. Consequently, national provisions such as those at issue in the main proceedings, which restrict to companies with share capital the award of local public service contracts of economic interest with a value greater than the threshold for the application of Directive 92/50, are not compatible with Article 26(2) of that directive.

24. As regards the facts at the origin of the dispute in the main proceedings, the file shows that Frigerio brought the action in the main proceedings as the principal entity in a temporary joint venture which had provided environmental hygiene services for the Comune di Triuggio between 1 January 1996 and 30 June 2006.

25. In that regard, it also follows from Article 26(1) of Directive 92/50 that adjudicating authorities cannot require groups of service providers to assume a specific legal form in order to submit a tender.

26. Furthermore, it is not disputed before the Court that, under Italian law, Frigerio was entitled in its legal form, that is to say, as a partnership, to provide the environmental hygiene services. In this respect, the referring court states inter alia that Frigerio is registered as being entitled to operate within the waste sector.

27. As has been pointed out in paragraph 19 of this judgment, the referring court is also inquiring, as a subsidiary question, as to the consequences of a finding that national provisions such as those at issue in the main proceedings are not in conformity with Directive 92/50.

28. Suffice it to note in that regard that, according to established case-law, it is for the national court, to the full extent of its discretion under national law, to interpret and apply national law in conformity with the requirements of Community law. Where such an application is not possible, the national court must apply Community law in its entirety and protect rights which the latter confers on individuals, disapplying, if necessary, any contrary provision of domestic law (see, to that effect, Case 157/86 Murphy and Others [1988] ECR 673, paragraph 11, and Case C208/05 ITC [2007] ECR I181, paragraphs 68 and 69).

29. In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the first and second questions referred is that Article 26(1) and (2) of Directive 92/50 precludes national provisions, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, which exclude candidates or tenderers entitled under the law of the Member State concerned to provide the service in question, including those composed of groups of service providers, from submitting a tender, in a procedure for the award of a public service contract with a value greater than the threshold for application of Directive 92/50, solely on the ground that those candidates or tenderers do not have a legal form corresponding to a specific category of legal persons, namely that of a company with share capital. It is for the national court, to the full extent of its discretion under national law, to interpret and apply national law in accordance with the requirements of Community law and, in so far as such an interpretation is not possible, to disapply any provision of national law which is contrary to those requirements.

The third and fourth questions

30. By its third and fourth questions, the referring court is essentially asking whether national provisions such as those at issue in the main proceedings are in conformity with Articles 39 EC, 43 EC, 48 EC and 81 EC and Directives 75/442 and 2006/12.

31. Since, as is apparent from paragraph 18 above, the facts at issue in the main proceedings fall within the scope of application of Directive 92/50 and the interpretation of that directive provides the information necessary to enable the referring court to resolve the case before it, an examination of the abovementioned Community provisions would be of purely academic interest. Consequently, in accordance with established case-law, there is no need to answer the third and fourth questions referred (see, to that effect, Case C-144/04 Mangold [2005] ECR I-9981, paragraphs 36 and 37, and Case C-212/04 Adeneler and Others [2006] ECR I-6057, paragraphs 42 and 43).

Costs

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

32. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

Comune di Triuggio

(Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia)

(Directive 92/50/EEC – Public service contracts – National legislation restricting the award of local public services of economic interest to companies with share capital – Compatibility)

Summary of the Judgment

1. Approximation of laws – Procedures for the award of public service contracts – Directive 92/50 – Economic operators

(Council Directive 92/50, Art. 26(1) and (2))

2. Community law – Direct effect – Directly applicable provision of the Treaty – Obligations of national courts

1. Article 26(1) and (2) of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by Commission Directive 2001/78, precludes national provisions which exclude candidates or tenderers entitled under the law of the Member State concerned to provide the service in question, including those composed of groups of service providers, from submitting a tender, in a procedure for the award of a public service contract with a value greater than the threshold for application of Directive 92/50, solely on the ground that those candidates or tenderers do not have a legal form corresponding to a specific category of legal persons, namely that of a company with share capital.

2. It is for the national court, to the full extent of its discretion under national law, to interpret and apply national law in accordance with the requirements of Community law and, in so far as such an interpretation is not possible, to disapply any provision of national law which is contrary to those requirements.

Does Article 4(1) of Directive 2004/18/EC, [1] or the analogous Article 26(2) of Directive 92/50/EEC [2] (in the event that the latter is regarded as the legislative point of reference), according to which candidates and tenderers who, on the basis of the legislation of the Member State in which they are established, are authorised to provide the service at issue may not be rejected solely because, under the provisions in force in the Member State in which the contract is to be awarded, they would be required to be natural persons or legal persons, lay down a fundamental principle of Community law such as to override the formal limitation laid down by Article 113(5) of Legislative Decree No 267/2000 and by Articles 2(6) and 15(1) of Regional Lombardy Law No 26 of 12 December 2003, and is it therefore capable of compelling compliance in such a way as to allow persons not having the status of joint stock companies to participate in tendering procedures?

In the event that the Court does not consider the above rules to be the expression of a fundamental principle of Community law, does Article 4(1) of Directive 2004/18/EC or the analogous Article 26(2) of Directive 92/50 (in the event that the latter is regarded as the legislative point of reference) constitute, rather, an implicit corollary or a 'derivative principle' of the principle of competition, viewed in conjunction with those concerning administrative transparency and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality, and does it therefore, as such, have immediate binding effect and take precedence over any possibly conflicting domestic provisions laid down by Member States to govern public works contracts falling outside the scope of the direct applicability of Community law?

Are Article 113(5) of Legislative Decree No 267/2000 and Articles 2(6) and 15(1) of the Regional Lombardy Law of 12 December 2003 compatible with the Community principles set out in Article 39 (free movement of workers within the Community), Article 43 (freedom of establishment), Articles 48 and 81 (agreements restricting competition) of the Treaty establishing the European Community, and therefore, in the event of a conflict being identified, must the abovementioned national provisions be disapplied as conflicting with Community provisions that have direct binding effect and take precedence over domestic provisions?

Are Article 113(5) of Legislative Decree No 267/2000 and Articles 2(6) and 15(1) of the Regional Lombardy Law of 12 December 2003 compatible with Article 9(1) of Directive 75/442/EEC or the analogous Article 7(2) of Directive 2006/12/EC of 5 April 2006 (in the event that the latter is regarded as the legislative point of reference), which provide, respectively, that 'any establishment or undertaking which carries out the operations specified in Annex II A must obtain a permit from the competent authority referred to in Article 6.' and ' SEQ CHAPTER \h \r 1[t]he plans referred to in paragraph 1 may, for example, cover: (a) the natural or legal persons empowered to carry out waste management'?

1 This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 49 EC.

2 The reference has been made in the context of proceedings between Mr Rüffert, acting in his capacity as liquidator of the assets of Objekt und Bauregie GmbH & Co. KG ('Objekt und Bauregie'), and Land Niedersachsen (the Land of Lower Saxony), concerning the termination of a works contract which had been concluded between the Land and Objekt und Bauregie.

Legal context

Community legislation

3 Directive 96/71/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 December 1996 concerning the posting of workers in the framework of the provision of services (OJ 1997 L 18, p. 1), provides in Article 1, entitled 'Scope':

'1. This Directive shall apply to undertakings established in a Member State which, in the framework of the transnational provision of services, post workers, in accordance with paragraph 3, to the territory of a Member State.

3. This Directive shall apply to the extent that the undertakings referred to in paragraph 1 take one of the following transnational measures:

(a) post workers to the territory of a Member State on their account and under their direction, under a contract concluded between the undertaking making the posting and the party for whom the services are intended, operating in that Member State, provided there is an employment relationship between the undertaking making the posting and the worker during the period of posting;

4 Under Article 3 of Directive 96/71, entitled 'Terms and conditions of employment':

'1. Member States shall ensure that, whatever the law applicable to the employment relationship, the undertakings referred to in Article 1(1) guarantee workers posted to their territory the terms and conditions of employment covering the following matters which, in the Member State where the work is carried out, are laid down:

– by law, regulation or administrative provision,

and/or

– by collective agreements or arbitration awards which have been declared universally applicable within the meaning of paragraph 8, in so far as they concern the activities referred to in the Annex:

...

(c) the minimum rates of pay, including overtime rates; this point does not apply to supplementary occupational retirement pension schemes;

...

For the purposes of this Directive, the concept of minimum rates of pay referred to in paragraph 1 (c) is defined by the national law and/or practice of the Member State to whose territory the worker is posted.

...

7. Paragraphs 1 to 6 shall not prevent application of terms and conditions of employment which are more favourable to workers.

8. "Collective agreements or arbitration awards which have been declared universally applicable" means collective agreements or arbitration awards which must be observed by all undertakings in the geographical area and in the profession or industry concerned.

In the absence of a system for declaring collective agreements or arbitration awards to be of universal application within the meaning of the first subparagraph, Member States may, if they so decide, base themselves on:

– collective agreements or arbitration awards which are generally applicable to all similar undertakings in the geographical area and in the profession or industry concerned,

and/or

– collective agreements which have been concluded by the most representative employers' and labour organisations at national level and which are applied throughout national territory, provided that their application to the undertakings referred to in Article 1(1) ensures equality of treatment on matters listed in the first subparagraph of paragraph 1 of this Article between those undertakings and the other undertakings referred to in this subparagraph which are in a similar position.

...'

The national legislation

5 The Law of Land Niedersachsen on the award of public contracts (Landesvergabegesetz Nds., 'the Landesvergabegesetz') contains provisions on the award of public contracts in so far as they have a minimum value of EUR 10 000. The preamble to the Law states:

'The Law counteracts distortions of competition which arise in the field of construction and local public transport services resulting from the use of cheap labour and alleviates burdens on social security schemes. It provides, to that end, that public contracting authorities may award contracts for building works and local public transport services only to undertakings which pay the wage laid down in the collective agreements at the place where the service is provided.

6 Under Paragraph 3(1) of the Landesvergabegesetz, headed 'Declaration that the collective agreements will be complied with':

'Contracts for building services shall be awarded only to undertakings which, when lodging a tender, undertake in writing to pay their employees, when performing those services, at least the remuneration prescribed by the collective agreement at the place where those services are performed and at the time prescribed by the collective agreement. For the purposes of the first sentence, the term "services" means services provided by the principal contractor and by subcontractors. The first sentence shall also apply to the award of transport services in local public transport.'

7 Paragraph 4(1) of the Law, headed 'Use of subcontractors', provides:

'The contractor may assign to subcontractors services for which his establishment is set up only where the contracting authority has given written consent in a given case. The tenderers are required at the stage they lodge their tenders to state which services are to be devolved to subcontractors. In so far as services are assigned to subcontractors, the contractor must also undertake to impose on the subcontractors the obligations laid down in Paragraphs 3, 4 and 7(2) applicable to contractors and to monitor compliance with these obligations by the subcontractors.'

8 Paragraph 6 of the Law, headed 'Proof', provides:

'(1) A tender shall be excluded from assessment where the tenderer fails to produce the following documents:

...

3. a declaration that the collective agreements will be complied with, pursuant to Paragraph 3.

...

(2) Where the performance of part of a contract is to be assigned to a subcontractor, the proof referred to in subparagraph (1) relating to the subcontractor must also be furnished when the contract is awarded.'

9 Paragraph 8 of the Landesvergabegesetz, headed 'Penalties', provides:

'(1) In order to ensure compliance with the obligations under Paragraphs 3, 4 and 7(2), public contracting authorities shall agree with the contractor for each case of culpable non-fulfilment a contractual penalty of 1%, and in the case of several cases of non-fulfilment a contractual penalty of up to 10%, of the contract value. The contractor shall be obliged to pay a contractual penalty under the first sentence also in the event that there is non–fulfilment on the part of a subcontractor used by it or a subcontractor used by that subcontractor, unless the contractor was not aware or could not have been aware of the non-fulfilment. Where the contractual penalty imposed is disproportionately high, the contracting authority may reduce it to the appropriate amount at the request of the contractor.

(2) The public contracting authorities shall agree with the contractor that failure to satisfy the requirements referred to in Paragraph 3 by the contractor or his subcontractors and any non-fulfilment stemming from gross negligence or repeated non-fulfilment of the obligations laid down in Paragraphs 4 and 7(2) will entitle the contracting authority to terminate the contract without notice.

(3) Where an undertaking is proved to have failed to fulfil its obligations under this Law as a result, at least, of gross negligence or on a repeated basis, the public contracting authorities may exclude it from the award of public contracts within their field of competence for a period of up to one year.

The main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

10 According to the order for reference, in autumn 2003, following a public invitation to tender, Land Niedersachsen awarded Objekt und Bauregie a contract for the structural work in the building of Göttingen–Rosdorf prison. The value of the contract was EUR 8 493 331 net of value added tax. The contract contained a declaration regarding compliance with the collective agreements and, more specifically, with that regarding payment to employees employed on the building site of at least the minimum wage in force at the place where those services were to be performed pursuant to the collective agreement mentioned in the list of sample collective agreements under No 1 'Buildings and public works' ('the "Buildings and public works" collective agreement').

11 Objekt und Bauregie used as a subcontractor an undertaking established in Poland. In summer 2004 this undertaking came under suspicion of having employed workers on the building site at a wage below that provided for in the 'Buildings and public works' collective agreement. After investigations had commenced, both Objekt und Bauregie and Land Niedersachsen terminated the contract for work which they had concluded with one another. The latter based the termination inter alia on the fact that Objekt und Bauregie had failed to fulfil its contractual obligation to comply with the collective agreement. A penalty notice was issued against the person primarily responsible at the undertaking established in Poland, accusing him of paying 53 workers engaged on the building site only 46.57% of the minimum wage laid down.

12 At first instance, the Landgericht Hannover (Regional Court, Hanover) held that Objekt und Bauregie's outstanding claim under the contract for work was offset in full by the contractual penalty of EUR 84 934.31 (1% of the amount of the contract), in favour of Land Niedersachsen. It dismissed the remainder of that undertaking's action.

13 The case having come before it on appeal, the Oberlandesgericht Celle (Higher Regional Court, Celle) considers that the resolution of the dispute turns on whether it is precluded from applying the Landesvergabegesetz, in particular Paragraph 8(1), on the ground that it is incompatible with the freedom to provide services laid down in Article 49 EC.

14 In that regard, the national court notes that the obligations to comply with the collective agreements mean that construction undertakings from other Member States must adapt the remuneration they pay to their workers to the normally higher level in force in the place in the Federal Republic of Germany where the contract is to be performed. Such a requirement causes those undertakings to lose the competitive advantage which they enjoy by reason of their lower wage costs. Consequently, the obligation to comply with the collective agreements constitutes an impediment to market access for persons or undertakings from Member States other than the Federal Republic of Germany.

15 In addition, the national court is uncertain as to whether the requirement to comply with the collective agreements is justified by overriding reasons related to the public interest. More specifically, such a requirement goes beyond what is necessary for the protection of workers. What is necessary for the protection of workers is defined by the mandatory minimum wage which results from the application, in Germany, of the Law on the posting of workers (Arbeitnehmer–Entsendegesetz) of 26 February 1996 (BGBl. 1996 I, p. 227, 'the AEntG'). In the case of foreign workers, the obligation to comply with the collective agreements does not enable them to achieve genuine equality of treatment with German workers but rather prevents workers originating in a Member State other than the Federal Republic of Germany from being employed in Germany because their employer is unable to exploit his cost advantage with regard to the competition.

16 As it took the view that the resolution of the dispute before it required the interpretation of Article 49 EC, the Oberlandesgericht Celle decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'Does it amount to an unjustified restriction on the freedom to provide services under the EC Treaty if a public contracting authority is required by statute to award contracts for building services only to undertakings which, when lodging a tender, undertake in writing to pay their employees, when performing those services, at least the remuneration prescribed by the collective agreement in force at the place where those services are performed?'

17 By its question, the national court asks essentially whether, in a situation such as that in the main proceedings, Article 49 EC precludes an authority of a Member State from adopting a measure of a legislative nature requiring the contracting authority to designate as contractors for public works contracts only contractors which, when submitting their tenders, agree in writing to pay their employees, in return for performance of the services concerned, at least the wage provided for in the collective agreement in force at the place where those services are performed.

18 As suggested also by a number of the Governments which have submitted observations to the Court, as well as by the Commission of the European Communities, in order to give a useful answer to the national court, it is necessary to take into consideration the provisions of Directive 96/71 when examining the question referred for a preliminary ruling (see, to that effect, Case C–60/03 Wolff & Müller [2004] ECR I–9553, paragraph 27, and Case C–275/06 Promusicae [2008] ECR I–0000, paragraph 42).

19 As follows from Article 1(3)(a) thereof, Directive 96/71 applies, inter alia, to a situation in which an undertaking established in a Member State posts, in the framework of the transnational provision of services, workers on its account and under its direction to the territory of another Member State, under a contract concluded between the undertaking making the posting and the party for whom the services are intended, operating in the latter Member State, provided that an employment relationship exists between that undertaking and the employee during the period of the posting. Such appears essentially to be the situation in the main proceedings.

20 In addition, as the Advocate General stated at point 64 of his Opinion, the mere fact that the objective of the legislation of a Member State, in this case the Landesvergabegesetz, is not to govern the posting of workers does not have the effect of precluding a situation such as that in the main proceedings from coming within the scope of Directive 96/71.

21 Pursuant to the first and second indents of the first subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71, with regard to the provision of transnational services in the construction sector, posted workers are to be guaranteed terms and conditions of employment concerning the matters referred to under subparagraphs (a) to (g) of that provision, which include, under subparagraph (c), minimum rates of pay. Those terms and conditions of employment are fixed by laws, regulations or administrative provisions and/or by collective agreements or arbitration awards which have been declared universally applicable. According to the first subparagraph of Article 3(8) of that directive, the collective agreements or arbitration awards within the meaning of that provision are those which must be observed by all undertakings in the geographical area and in the profession or industry concerned.

22 The second subparagraph of Article 3(8) of Directive 96/71 gives Member States in addition the possibility, in the absence of a system for declaring collective agreements or arbitration awards to be of universal application, of basing themselves on collective agreements or arbitration awards which are generally applicable to all similar undertakings in the profession or industry concerned or agreements which have been concluded by the most representative employers' and labour organisations at national level and which are applied throughout national territory.

23 It is necessary to examine whether the rate of pay laid down by a measure such as that at issue in the main proceedings – consisting of a legislative measure adopted by Land Niedersachsen concerning public contracts and seeking to make a collective agreement providing for the rate of pay in question binding, in particular on an undertaking such as the subcontractor Objekt und Bauregie – was fixed in accordance with one of the procedures described in paragraphs 21 and 22 of this judgment.

24 First, a legislative measure such as the Landesvergabegesetz, which does not itself fix any minimum rates of pay, cannot be considered to be a law, within the meaning of the first indent of the first subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71, which fixed a minimum rate of pay, as provided in Article 3(1)(c) of that directive.

25 Second, as to whether a collective agreement such as that at issue in the main proceedings constitutes a collective agreement which has been declared universally applicable within the meaning of the second indent of the first subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71, read in conjunction with the first subparagraph of Article 3(8) of that directive, it is apparent from the case-file submitted to the Court that the AEntG, which seeks to transpose Directive 96/71, extends the application of provisions on minimum wages in collective agreements which have been declared universally applicable in Germany to employers established in another Member State which post their workers to Germany.

26 In answer to a written question from the Court, Land Niedersachsen confirmed that the 'Buildings and public works' collective agreement is not a collective agreement which has been declared universally applicable within the meaning of the AEntG. In addition, the case-file submitted to the Court does not contain any evidence to support the conclusion that that agreement is nevertheless capable of being treated as universally applicable within the meaning of the second indent of the first subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71, read in conjunction with the first subparagraph of Article 3(8) of that directive.

27 Third, regarding the second subparagraph of Article 3(8) of Directive 96/71, it is clear from the actual wording of that provision that it is applicable only where there is no system for declaring collective agreements to be of universal application, which is not the case in the Federal Republic of Germany.

28 In addition, a collective agreement such as that at issue in the main proceedings cannot, in any event, be considered to constitute a collective agreement within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 3(8) and, more specifically, to be a collective agreement, as mentioned in the first indent to that provision, 'generally applicable to all similar undertakings in the geographical area and in the profession or industry concerned'.

29 In a context such as that in the main proceedings, the binding effect of a collective agreement such as that at issue here covers only a part of the construction sector falling within the geographical area of that agreement, since, first, the law which gives it such an effect applies only to public contracts and not to private contracts and, second, the collective agreement has not been declared universally applicable.

30 It follows that a measure such as that at issue in the main proceedings does not fix a rate of pay according to one of the procedures laid down in the first and second indents of the first subparagraph of Article 3(1) and in the second subparagraph of Article 3(8) of Directive 96/71.

31 Therefore, such a rate of pay cannot be considered to constitute a minimum rate of pay within the meaning of Article 3(1)(c) of Directive 96/71 which Member States are entitled to impose, pursuant to that directive, on undertakings established in other Member States, in the framework of the transnational provision of services (see, to that effect, Case C-341/05 Laval un Partneri [2007] ECR I-0000, paragraphs 70 and 71).

32 Likewise, such a rate of pay cannot be considered to be a term and condition of employment which is more favourable to workers within the meaning of Article 3(7) of Directive 96/71.

33 More specifically, that provision cannot be interpreted as allowing the host Member State to make the provision of services in its territory conditional on the observance of terms and conditions of employment which go beyond the mandatory rules for minimum protection. As regards the matters referred to in Article 3(1), first subparagraph, (a) to (g), Directive 96/71 expressly lays down the degree of protection for workers of undertakings established in other Member States who are posted to the territory of the host Member State which the latter State is entitled to require those undertakings to observe. Moreover, such an interpretation would amount to depriving the directive of its effectiveness (see Laval un Partneri, paragraph 80).

34 Therefore – without prejudice to the right of undertakings established in other Member States to sign of their own accord a collective labour agreement in the host Member State, in particular in the context of a commitment made to their own posted staff, the terms of which might be more favourable – the level of protection which must be guaranteed to workers posted to the territory of the host Member State is limited, in principle, to that provided for in Article 3(1), first subparagraph, (a) to (g), of Directive 96/71, unless, pursuant to the law or collective agreements in the Member State of origin, those workers already enjoy more favourable terms and conditions of employment as regards the matters referred to in that provision (Laval un Partneri, paragraph 81). However, such does not appear to be the case in the main proceedings.

35 It follows that a Member State is not entitled to impose, pursuant to Directive 96/71, on undertakings established in other Member States, by a measure such as that at issue in the main proceedings, a rate of pay such as that provided for by the 'Buildings and public works' collective agreement.

36 That interpretation of Directive 96/71 is confirmed by reading it in the light of Article 49 EC, since that directive seeks in particular to bring about the freedom to provide services, which is one of the fundamental freedoms guaranteed by the Treaty.

37 As the Advocate General stated at point 103 of his Opinion, by requiring undertakings performing public works contracts and, indirectly, their subcontractors to apply the minimum wage laid down by the 'Buildings and public works' collective agreement, a law such as the Landesvergabegesetz may impose on service providers established in another Member State where minimum rates of pay are lower an additional economic burden that may prohibit, impede or render less attractive the provision of their services in the host Member State. Therefore, a measure such as that at issue in the main proceedings is capable of constituting a restriction within the meaning of Article 49 EC.

38 In addition, contrary to the contentions of Land Niedersachsen and a number of the Governments which submitted observations to the Court, such a measure cannot be considered to be justified by the objective of ensuring the protection of workers.

39 As stated at paragraph 29 of this judgment, since this case concerns the rate of pay fixed by a collective agreement such as that at issue in the main proceedings, that rate is applicable, as a result of a law such as the Landesvergabegesetz, only to a part of the construction sector falling within the geographical area of that agreement, since, first, that legislation applies solely to public contracts and not to private contracts and, second, that collective agreement has not been declared universally applicable.

40 The case-file submitted to the Court contains no evidence to support the conclusion that the protection resulting from such a rate of pay – which, moreover, as the national court also notes, exceeds the minimum rate of pay applicable pursuant to the AEntG – is necessary for a construction sector worker only when he is employed in the context of a public works contract but not when he is employed in the context of a private contract.

41 For the same reasons as those set out at paragraphs 39 and 40 of this judgment, the restriction also cannot be considered to be justified by the objective of ensuring protection for independence in the organisation of working life by trade unions, as the German Government contends.

42 Lastly, with regard to the objective of ensuring the financial balance of the social security systems, also raised by the German Government in support of its contention that the effectiveness of the social security system depends on the level of workers' salaries, it does not appear from the case-file submitted to the Court that a measure such as that at issue in the main proceedings is necessary in order to avoid the risk of seriously undermining the financial balance of the social security system, an objective which the Court has recognised cannot be ruled out as a potential overriding reason in the general interest (see, inter alia, Case C-372/04 Watts [2006] ECR I-4325, paragraph 103 and the case-law cited).

43 Having regard to all of the foregoing, the answer to the question referred must be that Directive 96/71, interpreted in the light of Article 49 EC, precludes an authority of a Member State, in a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, from adopting a measure of a legislative nature requiring the contracting authority to designate as contractors for public works contracts only those undertakings which, when submitting their tenders, agree in writing to pay their employees, in return for performance of the services concerned, at least the remuneration prescribed by the collective agreement in force at the place where those services are performed.

Costs

44 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby rules:

Directive 96/71/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 December 1996 concerning the posting of workers in the framework of the provision of services, interpreted in the light of Article 49 EC, precludes an authority of a Member State, in a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, from adopting a measure of a legislative nature requiring the contracting authority to designate as contractors for public works contracts only those undertakings which, when submitting their tenders, agree in writing to pay their employees, in return for performance of the services concerned, at least the remuneration prescribed by the collective agreement the minimum wage in force at the place where those services are performed.

Case C–346/06

Rechtsanwalt Dr. Dirk Rüffert, in his capacity as liquidator of Objekt und Bauregie GmbH & Co. KG
v
Land Niedersachsen

(Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Oberlandesgericht Celle (Germany))

(Directive 96/71/EC – Posting of workers in the framework of the provision of services – Collective agreements – Minimum wage – Article 49 EC – Restriction on the freedom to provide services – Procedures for the award of public works contracts – Protection of workers and prevention of social dumping)

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling will allow the Court to build on its existing case-law on the posting of workers in the framework of the provision of services.

2. The question raised by the court making the reference once again calls on the Court to strike a balance between the freedom to provide services, on the one hand, and the overriding requirements of the protection of workers and the prevention of social dumping, on the other.

3. More precisely, the Oberlandesgericht (Higher Regional Court), Celle (Germany), essentially asks the Court to rule whether Community law must be interpreted as precluding national legislation on the award of public contracts that requires contractors and, indirectly, their subcontractors to pay workers posted in the framework of the performance of a public contract at least the remuneration prescribed by the collective agreement in force at the place where those services are performed, on pain of penalties that may go as far as the termination of the works contract, where the collective agreement to which the legislation in question refers is not declared to be of universal application.

4. That question has been raised in the course of a dispute between Rechtsanwalt Dr. Dirk Rüffert, in his capacity as liquidator of the company Objekt und Bauregie GmbH & Co. KG, defendant in the main proceedings, and Land Niedersachsen, applicant and respondent ('the applicant') in the main proceedings, regarding the termination of a works contract between the company and Land Niedersachsen in the context of a public works contract.

5. In this Opinion, I shall show why, in my view, neither Directive 96/71/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 December 1996 concerning the posting of workers in the framework of the provision of services (2) nor Article 49 EC must be interpreted as precluding a national measure such as the one at issue in the main proceedings.

I – Legal framework

A – Community law

6. The first paragraph of Article 49 EC lays down that restrictions on the freedom to provide services within the Community are prohibited in respect of nationals of Member States who are established in a State of the Community other than that of the person for whom the services are intended.

7. Directive 96/71 aims to promote the freedom to provide services between Member States while ensuring fair competition between undertakings providing services and guaranteeing respect for the rights of workers. (3)

8. Article 1 of that directive, headed 'Scope', is worded as follows:

'1. This Directive shall apply to undertakings established in a Member State which, in the framework of the transnational provision of services, post workers, in accordance with paragraph 3, to the territory of a Member State.

3. This Directive shall apply to the extent that the undertakings referred to in paragraph 1 take one of the following transnational measures:

(a) post workers to the territory of a Member State on their account and under their direction, under a contract concluded between the undertaking making the posting and the party for whom the services are intended, operating in that Member State, provided there is an employment relationship between the undertaking making the posting and the worker during the period of posting

9. As evidenced by the sixth recital in the preamble to the directive, the Community legislature set out from the finding that, in transnational situations, the employment relationships of posted workers raise problems with regard to the legislation applicable to them.

10. In this regard, the Rome Convention on the law applicable to contractual obligations, opened for signature in Rome on 19 June 1980, (4) lays down general criteria for determining the law applicable to the employment relationship. (5) For example, Article 3 of the Convention provides that, as a general rule, the parties are free to choose the applicable law. In the absence of choice, the contract of employment is governed, under Article 6(2) of the Convention, by the law of the country in which the employee habitually carries out his work, even if he is temporarily employed in another country.

11. In addition, Article 7 of the Rome Convention lays down, subject to certain conditions, that effect may be given, concurrently with the law declared applicable, to the mandatory rules of the law of another country, in particular the law of the Member State within whose territory the worker is temporarily posted. These mandatory rules, which are also known in French as 'lois d'application immédiate' or 'lois de police' that obtain at the place where the work is carried out, are not defined in the Rome Convention.

12. In this context, the contribution of Directive 96/71 is to designate at Community level a number of mandatory rules in transnational posting situations. (6) It is also an expression of the principle of precedence of Community law laid down in Article 20 of the Rome Convention, according to which the Convention does not affect the application of provisions which, in relation to a particular matter, lay down choice-of-law rules relating to contractual obligations and which are contained in Community acts or in national laws harmonised in implementation of such acts. (7)

13. In order to reconcile the different objectives it pursues, Directive 96/71 thus coordinates the laws of the Member States 'in order to lay down a nucleus of mandatory rules for minimum protection to be observed in the host country by employers who post workers to perform temporary work in the territory of a Member State where the services are provided'. (8)

14. According to the 17th recital in the preamble to the directive, 'the mandatory rules for minimum protection in force in the host country must not prevent the application of terms and conditions of employment which are more favourable to workers'.

15. These principles are described in detail in Article 3 of that directive, headed 'Terms and conditions of employment', which is worded as follows:

'1. Member States shall ensure that, whatever the law applicable to the employment relationship, the undertakings referred to in Article 1(1) guarantee workers posted to their territory the terms and conditions of employment covering the following matters which, in the Member State where the work is carried out, are laid down:

– by law, regulation or administrative provision, and/or – by collective agreements or arbitration awards which have been declared universally applicable within the meaning of paragraph 8, in so far as they concern the activities referred to in the Annex: [(9)]

(c) the minimum rates of pay, including overtime rates; this point does not apply to supplementary occupational retirement pension schemes;

...

For the purposes of this Directive, the concept of minimum rates of pay referred to in paragraph 1 (c) is defined by the national law and/or practice of the Member State to whose territory the worker is posted.

...

7. Paragraphs 1 to 6 shall not prevent application of terms and conditions of employment which are more favourable to workers.

...

8. "Collective agreements or arbitration awards which have been declared universally applicable" means collective agreements or arbitration awards which must be observed by all undertakings in the geographical area and in the profession or industry concerned.

In the absence of a system for declaring collective agreements or arbitration awards to be of universal application within the meaning of the first subparagraph, Member States may, if they so decide, base themselves on:

– collective agreements or arbitration awards which are generally applicable to all similar undertakings in the geographical area and in the profession or industry concerned, and/or

– collective agreements which have been concluded by the most representative employers' and labour organisations at national level and which are applied throughout national territory, provided that their application to the undertakings referred to in Article 1(1) ensures equality of treatment on matters listed in the first subparagraph of paragraph 1 of this Article between those undertakings and the other undertakings referred to in this subparagraph which are in a similar position.

Equality of treatment, within the meaning of this Article, shall be deemed to exist where national undertakings in a similar position:

– are subject, in the place in question or in the sector concerned, to the same obligations as posting undertakings as regards the matters listed in the first subparagraph of paragraph 1, and – are required to fulfil such obligations with the same effects.

16. Finally, as regards the Community rules on public works contracts, I would point out that at the time of the events that gave rise to the dispute in the main proceedings Council Directive

93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (10) was applicable. (11)

17. Although the purpose of Directive 93/37 is not to organise the execution of contracts, (12) it is nevertheless appropriate to cite Article 23 of that directive, which relates to the information on the working conditions to be respected during the performance of a public contract. That article reads as follows:

'1. The contracting authority may state in the contract documents, or be obliged by a Member State to do so, the authority or authorities from which a tenderer may obtain the appropriate information on the obligations relating to the employment protection provisions and the working conditions which are in force in the Member State, region or locality in which the works are to be executed and which shall be applicable to the works carried out on site during the performance of the contract.

2. The contracting authority which supplies the information referred to in paragraph 1 shall request the tenderers or those participating in the contract procedure to indicate that they have taken account, when drawing up their tender, of the obligations relating to employment protection provisions and the working conditions which are in force in the place where the work is to be carried out. This shall be without prejudice to the application of the provisions of Article 30(4) concerning the examination of abnormally low tenders.'

B – National law

1. Determination of the minimum wage in the construction industry

18. In Germany, the minimum wage in the construction industry is set by collective bargaining.

19. In this Member State, collective agreements are usually concluded between trade unions and employers' organisations. For a particular industry, they may cover part or all of the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany.

20. The construction industry is governed by a collective agreement of 4 July 2002 laying down a general framework for the construction industry (Bundesrahmentarifvertrag für das Baugewerbe). This collective agreement, which is applicable throughout the Federal Republic of Germany, does not, however, contain rules on minimum rates of pay.

21. These rules are set out in a collective agreement providing for a minimum wage in the construction industry within the Federal Republic of Germany (Tarifvertrag zur Regelung der Mindestlöhne im Baugewerbe im Gebiet der Bundesrepublik Deutschland; the 'TV Mindestlohn') and in specific collective agreements.

a) The TV Mindestlohn

22. At the federal level, the TV Mindestlohn, which applies to undertakings covered by the collective agreement laying down a general framework for the construction industry, sets the level of the minimum wage for two categories according to the employee's level of qualification, and at different levels for 'old' and 'new' Länder. It provides that the minimum wage consists of the hourly pay provided for by that agreement and the bonus for the construction industry, which together make up the total hourly pay under the agreement. It also indicates that the right to higher wages under other collective agreements or special agreements is not affected by the provision laying down the total hourly pay under the agreement for categories 1 and 2.

23. The provisions of the TV Mindestlohn were declared to be of universal application by a regulation on working conditions mandatorily applicable in the construction industry (Verordnung über zwingende Arbeitsbedingungen im Baugewerbe).

24. It should be noted that under German law a declaration of universal application means that the collective agreement in question is applicable to all employers and employees in the industry concerned in a defined territory. It therefore extends the scope of such an agreement to employers and employees not belonging to the contracting trade union organisations. The Federal Ministry of Employment may make such a declaration of universal application either under Paragraph 1(3a) of the German Law on the Posting of Workers (Arbeitnehmer-Entsendegesetz) (13) of 26 February 1996 for sectors governed by that law, or under Article 5 of the Law on Collective Agreements (Tarifvertragsgesetz).

25. The TV Mindestlohn is applicable for a limited period. According to the information at my disposal, it appears that the TV Mindestlohn which was applicable at the time of the facts of the dispute in the main proceedings is that of 29 October 2003, which was in force from 1 November 2003 to 31 August 2005. This collective agreement was declared to be of universal application by a regulation of 13 December 2003. (14)

b) The specific collective agreements

26. Most of these specific collective agreements (Entgelttarifverträge) have limited territorial scope. Moreover, they are not normally declared to be universally applicable, which means that they are not all mandatorily applicable to all employees in the industry concerned.

27. According to the written reply from Land Niedersachsen to a question from the Court, the relevant collective agreement in the present case is the collective agreement on wages and professional training allowances (Tarifvertrag zur Regelung der Löhne und Ausbildungsvergütungen) of 4 July 2003, in the version resulting from the amending collective agreement of 29 October 2003. This collective agreement has not been declared to be universally applicable.

28. It is evident from the file that the wage levels set in these specific collective agreements are, in practice, well above the minimum wages required throughout Germany under the TV Mindestlohn. Moreover, the wage scale set out in those agreements is more detailed than that contained in the TV Mindestlohn and sets different wage levels for different groups of activities.

2. The AEntG

29. In Germany, Directive 96/71 was incorporated into national law by the AEntG. Paragraph 1 (1) of that law provides, inter alia, that the legal rules resulting from a collective agreement governing the construction industry which is declared to be universally applicable, which relate to minimum pay, shall also apply to an employment relationship linking an employer established outside Germany and his employee working within the territory covered by that collective agreement. Hence, such an employer must, as a minimum, grant to his posted employee the working conditions established in that collective agreement.

3. The Law of Land Niedersachsen on the award of public contracts

30. The Law of Land Niedersachsen on the Award of Public Contracts (Niedersächsisches Landesvergabegesetz; the 'Landesvergabegesetz') lays down rules for the award of public contracts with a value of EUR 10 000 or more. Its statement of reasons proclaims:

'The Law counteracts distortions of competition which arise in the field of construction and public transport services resulting from the use of cheap labour and alleviates burdens on social security schemes. It provides, to that end, that public contracting authorities may award contracts for building works and public transport services only to undertakings which pay the wage laid down in the collective agreements at the place where the service is provided.'

31. Under Paragraph 3(1) of the Landesvergabegesetz, contracts for building services are awarded only to undertakings which, when lodging a tender, undertake in writing to pay their employees, when performing those services, at least the remuneration prescribed by the collective agreement in force at the place where those services are performed.

32. Paragraph 4(1) of that law provides, inter alia, that in so far as services are assigned to subcontractors, the contractor must also undertake to impose on the subcontractors the obligations applicable to him under the said Law and to monitor compliance with these obligations by the subcontractors.

33. Under Paragraph 7(1) of the Landesvergabegesetz, the public contracting authority is entitled to carry out checks to verify compliance with the conditions laid down for the award of contracts. To this end, it may view the wage statements of contractors and subcontractors and the documents concerning the payment of taxes and contributions and the contracts for works concluded between contractor and subcontractor.

34. Paragraph 8 of the Law, which relates to sanctions, reads as follows:

‘(1) In order to ensure compliance with the obligations under Paragraphs 3, 4 and 7(2), public contracting authorities shall agree with the contractor for each case of culpable non-fulfilment a contractual penalty of 1%, and in the case of several cases of non-fulfilment a contractual penalty of up to 10%, of the contract value. The contractor shall be obliged to pay a contractual penalty under the first sentence also in the event that there is non-fulfilment on the part of a subcontractor used by it or a subcontractor used by that subcontractor, unless the contractor was not aware or could not have been aware of the non-fulfilment. Where the penalty imposed is disproportionately high, the contracting authority may reduce it to the appropriate amount at the request of the contractor.

(2) The public contracting authorities shall agree with the contractor that failure to satisfy the requirements referred to in Paragraph 3 by the contractor or his subcontractors and any non-fulfilment stemming from gross negligence or repeated non-fulfilment of the obligations laid down in Paragraphs 4 and 7(2) will entitle the contracting authority to terminate the contract without notice.

(3) Where an undertaking is proved to have failed to fulfil its obligations under this law as a result, at least, of gross negligence or on a repeated basis, the public contracting authorities may exclude it from the award of public contracts within their field of competence for a period of up to one year.

II – The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

35. It is apparent from the order for reference that in the autumn of 2003 Land Niedersachsen, following a public invitation to tender, awarded the defendant a contract for the structural work in the building of Göttingen-Rosdorf prison. The amount of the contract was EUR 8 493 331, plus VAT. The contract contained an ‘Agreement on compliance with the provisions of the collective agreement when performing building services’ stipulating in particular the following undertakings made by the defendant:

‘My/our tender is based on the following agreement:

As regards Paragraph 3 of the [Landesvergabegesetz] (Declaration regarding payment of the collectively agreed wage):

In the event that I am awarded a contract, I hereby undertake to pay the workers employed in my undertaking, in managing the work connected with the commissioned services, at least the remuneration prescribed by the collective agreement at the place where these services are performed, as set out in the list of representative collective agreements referred to under No 01 “Construction industry” …

I hereby undertake to impose on the subcontractors the obligations laid down in Paragraphs 3, 4 and 7(2) of the [Landesvergabegesetz] applicable to me and to monitor compliance with these obligations by the subcontractors.

I hereby agree that failure to satisfy the requirements referred to in Paragraph 3 of the [Landesvergabegesetz] by me or my subcontractors and any non-fulfilment stemming from gross negligence or repeated non-fulfilment of the obligations laid down in Paragraphs 4 and 7(2) of the [said Law] shall entitle the contracting authority to terminate the contract without notice.’

36. The defendant used the firm PKZ Pracownie Konserwacji Zabytków sp. zoo (‘PKZ’) from Tarnów (Poland) which has a branch in Wedemark (Germany) as a subcontractor.

37. During the summer of 2004, the firm PKZ came under suspicion of having employed Polish workers on the site at a wage below that stipulated in the applicable collective agreement. After investigations had commenced, both the defendant and Land Niedersachsen terminated the contract for work concluded between them. Land Niedersachsen based the termination inter alia on the fact that the defendant had failed to fulfil its contractual obligation to comply with the collective agreements. A punishment order, which contained the accusation that the 53 employees engaged on the building site had been paid only 46.57% of the statutory minimum wage, was issued to the persons primarily responsible at PKZ.

38. Land Niedersachsen applied for application of the penalty clause, maintaining that the breaches by the subcontractor must have been known to the defendant and that the payment of wages at below the collectively agreed rate constituted a separate infringement for each employee, with the result that a penalty of 10% of the contract value was appropriate.

39. At first instance, the Landgericht Hannover (Regional Court, Hanover) considered that this action was well founded in part. It found that the defendant's claim based on the contract for works had been extinguished by offsetting owing to application of the contractual penalty in the amount of EUR 84 934.31, that is to say 1% of the amount of the contract, and dismissed the remainder of the action.

40. The case went to appeal before the Oberlandesgericht Celle, which explains in its order for reference that resolution of the dispute in the main proceedings turns on whether the Chamber should not apply the Landesvergabegesetz, in particular Paragraph 8(1) thereof, on the ground that it is incompatible with the freedom to provide services laid down in Article 49 EC.

41. The court of reference observes in this regard that the commitment to comply with the collective agreements, which construction companies of other Member States must make under the Landesvergabegesetz, obliges them to adapt the wages they pay to their workers to the normally higher level of remuneration in force at the place where the work is carried out in Germany. As a result, they lose the competitive advantage which they enjoy by reason of their lower wage costs. Consequently, according to the court of reference, the obligation to pay the collectively agreed wage constitutes an impediment to market access for persons or undertakings from other Member States.

42. Furthermore, the court of reference expresses doubt as to whether the obligation to pay the collectively agreed wage is justified by overriding reasons of public interest.

43. It finds in favour of the view that the obligation to pay the collectively agreed wage cannot be considered to meet overriding requirements relating to the public interest. To the extent that it contributes to protecting German building undertakings from competition from other Member States, in the view of the court of reference such an obligation serves an economic purpose, which according to the case-law of the Court cannot constitute an overriding requirement relating to the public interest justifying a restriction on the freedom to provide services.

44. The court of reference further considers that the case-law of the Court of Justice on minimum wages does not apply in the dispute in the main proceedings since the wages and salaries stipulated in the collective agreements, which are required to be paid at the place where the work is carried out, are much higher than the minimum wage applicable on the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany under the AEntG. It deduces that the obligation to comply with these collective agreements exceeds what is necessary to protect workers. It considers that what is necessary to protect workers is defined by the mandatory minimum wage, which must be applied on the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany under the AEntG. Finally, the court of reference adds that, as far as foreign workers are concerned, the obligation to pay the collectively agreed wage does not bring about actual equality with German workers but instead prevents them from being employed in Germany because their employer is unable to exploit his advantage in terms of labour costs.

45. Taking the view that resolution of the dispute in the main proceedings required an interpretation of Article 49 EC by the Court of Justice, the Oberlandesgericht Celle decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'Does it amount to an unjustified restriction on the freedom to provide services under the EC Treaty if a public contracting authority is required by statute to award contracts for building services only to undertakings which, when lodging a tender, undertake in writing to pay their employees, when performing those services, at least the remuneration prescribed by the collective agreement in force at the place where those services are performed?'

III – Analysis

46. By this question, the court of reference essentially asks whether the Treaty rules on the freedom to provide services must be interpreted as precluding national legislation, such as the Landesvergabegesetz, that requires contractors and, indirectly, their subcontractors to pay workers posted in the framework of the performance of a public contract at least the remuneration prescribed by the collective agreement in force at the place where those services are performed, on pain of penalties that may go as far as the termination of the works contract, where the collective agreement to which the legislation in question refers is not declared to be of universal application.

47. Land Niedersachsen, the German and Danish Governments, Ireland and the Cypriot, Austrian, Finnish and Norwegian Governments consider essentially that Article 49 EC does not preclude a measure such as the one at issue in the main proceedings. In so far as the measure constitutes a restriction on the freedom to provide services, it is justified inter alia by the objective of worker protection and proportionate to achievement of that objective.

48. The Belgian Government considers that such a restriction may be justified, first where the workers do not enjoy a comparable level of protection under the law of the Member State where their employer is established, so that the application of the national rules of the host State confers a genuine benefit on them, significantly adding to their social protection, and secondly where the application of those rules is proportionate to the public interest objective pursued. According to that government, it is for the court of reference to make that assessment, taking into account all the circumstances of the dispute before it.

49. Some of these governments also examine the question from the point of view of Directive 96/71 and are of the opinion that the directive does not preclude the measure at issue in the main proceedings.

50. The Polish Government, by contrast, takes the view that Directive 96/71 does not justify making the award of a contract subject to the service provider's paying posted workers wages above the minimum rate mentioned in Article 3(1)(c) of that directive. That government points out that it is evident from the order for reference that the levels of remuneration laid down in the collective agreements in force at the place where the services are performed are significantly higher than the minimum defined in the AEntG.

51. In the alternative, the Polish Government maintains that the measure at issue in the main proceedings infringes Article 49 EC. According to that government, it constitutes an unjustified obstacle to the freedom to provide services. It shares the view of the court of reference that the purpose of the Landesvergabegesetz is to shield German building undertakings from competition from other Member States, thereby de facto achieving an economic purpose which, according to the case-law of the Court, cannot justify a restriction on a fundamental freedom. According to the Polish Government, such provisions go beyond what is necessary to combat unfair competition, that objective being adequately attained by the setting of a minimum rate of pay in the AEntG.

52. The Commission of the European Communities considers that the dispute in the main proceedings falls within the scope of Directive 96/71 and that the question referred for a preliminary ruling should therefore be examined first and foremost in the light of that directive. It states that the aim of that directive is to strike a balance between the freedom to provide services and the protection of posted workers. In order to achieve that objective, the Community legislature established, in Article 3 of Directive 96/71, a detailed framework with which the Member States must comply.

53. Since the Federal Republic of Germany has a system for declaring collective agreements to be of universal application, according to the Commission only the first subparagraph of Article 3(8) of the directive is relevant. Under that provision, read in conjunction with the second indent of Article 3(1) of the directive, minimum wages should be set for workers posted to Germany only under collective agreements that have been declared to be of universal application, in other words agreements that must be complied with by all undertakings in the industry or profession concerned and within the territorial scope of such agreements.

54. For that reason, the Commission considers that, in so far as the Landesvergabegesetz requires compliance with a level of remuneration laid down in a collective agreement that has not been declared to be universally applicable, that law must be considered incompatible with Directive 96/71. It would thus fall outside the scope of the guarantees that Community law provides with regard to the minimum remuneration of posted workers and which are harmonised by that directive.

55. The Commission adds that the Law of a Land which has the purpose of imposing more demanding terms and conditions of employment solely for posted workers employed in the framework of public contracts, in other words in only one area of economic life, cannot in any event serve an overriding public interest within the meaning of Article 49 EC nor be an appropriate way of pursuing such an interest.

56. At the hearing, the French Government essentially endorsed the position held by the Commission by maintaining that Article 49 EC and Directive 96/71 do not prevent a Member State from applying to posted workers the minimum wage laid down in a national or local collective agreement, but on condition that the agreement in question has been declared to be universally applicable to undertakings in the industry or territory concerned.

57. In the light of these observations, it should first be noted that, in order to provide a useful reply to the court which has referred to it a question for a preliminary ruling, the Court may be required to take into consideration rules of Community law to which the national court did not refer in its question. (15)

58. With regard first to Directive 93/37, I have indicated above that that directive does not regulate the performance of public contracts. The undertaking that contractors must make under Paragraphs 3(1) and 4(1) of the Landesvergabegesetz to pay their employees at least the remuneration prescribed by the collective agreement in force at the place where the services in question are performed and to impose the same obligation on their subcontractors constitutes, in my view, a contract performance condition. (16)

59. I note, however, that Article 23 of the directive in question is not without interest in the present case because it expresses the notion that the performance of the work following the award of a public contract must comply with the employment protection provisions and the working conditions in force in the place where the work is to be carried out.

60. I shall not, however, go further in interpreting Directive 93/37, because that directive is of no assistance with regard to the central issue raised by the question from the court of reference, namely determination of the employment conditions which may, in compliance with Community law, be imposed for the performance of a public contract in a situation where workers are posted in the framework of the provision of services.

61. Turning now to Directive 96/71, I am of the opinion that the facts in the dispute in the main proceedings, as described in the order for reference, must be held to fall within the scope of that directive, since they correspond to the situation described in Article 1(3)(a) of that directive.

62. To be more precise, we have here a case in which an undertaking established in a Member State, namely PKZ established in Poland, has posted Polish workers, for its account and under its direction, on the territory of another Member State, in the event the Federal Republic of Germany, in the framework of a subcontracting contract concluded between the undertaking making the posting and the party for whom the services are intended, operating in the latter Member State, that is to say the defendant in the main proceedings.

63. Moreover, it is common ground that the facts in the dispute in the main proceedings occurred after the expiry of the period for Member States to transpose Directive 96/71, that is to say after 16 December 1999.

64. It is true that the purpose of the Landesvergabegesetz is not specifically to govern the posting of workers in the framework of the provision of services but rather, in more general terms, the award of public contracts in Land Niedersachsen. Nevertheless, in so far as the Law lays down conditions for the performance of works contracts – in this instance the payment of a minimum wage – which must be applied to the workers employed by the contractor and/or by any subcontractor, including workers posted in the framework of the provision of services, which is the case in the main proceedings, it is necessary to examine the Law in the light of secondary Community law on the posting of workers in the framework of the provision of services.

65. I shall therefore begin by examining whether Directive 96/71 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation, such as the Landesvergabegesetz, which requires contractors and, indirectly, their subcontractors to pay workers posted in the framework of the performance of a public contract at least the remuneration prescribed by the collective agreement in force at the place where those services are performed, on pain of penalties that may go as far as the termination of the works contract, where the collective agreement to which the legislation in question refers is not declared to be universally applicable within the meaning of the first subparagraph of Article 3(8) of that directive.

A – The interpretation of Directive 96/71

66. In my opinion, Directive 96/71 cannot be interpreted as precluding a measure such as that at issue in the main proceedings. In order to be convinced of this view, it is necessary to describe the system established by this directive. I shall then examine, in the light of the system described in that way, the arrangements under German law for determining minimum rates of pay in the construction industry.

67. As I have already indicated above, Directive 96/71 is designed to coordinate the laws of the Member States in order to lay down a nucleus of mandatory rules for minimum protection to be observed in the host country by employers who post workers to perform temporary work in the territory of a Member State where the services are provided.

68. In adopting that directive, the Community legislature not only appropriated the case-law established over time by the Court on the posting of workers in the framework of the provision of services but also clarified and strengthened it.

69. Since its judgment in Seco and Desquenne & Giral, (17) the Court has taken the view that, as a general rule, Community law does not preclude Member States from applying their legislation, or collective labour agreements entered into by both sides of industry, to any person who is employed, even temporarily, within their territory, no matter in which country the employer is established, just as Community law does not prohibit Member States from enforcing those rules by appropriate means. (18) This case-law of the Court is reiterated in the 12th recital in the preamble to Directive 96/71.

70. The first contribution of this directive is to make mandatory what until then had been only an option for Member States. The directive thus requires the Member States to apply to undertakings established in another Member State which post workers to their territory in the framework of the transnational provision of services a number of national rules setting terms and conditions of employment covering certain matters.

71. Another contribution of Directive 96/71 is to give substance to the 'nucleus' of protective rules, the application of which the Community legislature wished to guarantee for the benefit of posted workers.

72. Hence, Article 3(1) of the directive lays down the national rules establishing terms and conditions of employment which cannot be denied to posted workers in the Member State in which the service is performed.

73. As the Court has recently indicated, the directive establishes 'a list of national rules that a Member State must apply to undertakings established abroad which post workers on that Member State's territory in the framework of the provision of transnational services'. (19) In that sense, they are mandatory protective rules.

74. The listing of these rules by the Community legislature strengthens legal certainty, in that the provider of services established in another Member State is now certain that he will be required to apply a minimum and clearly identifiable basic set of rules on terms and conditions of employment in force in the State where the services are provided. As a corollary, workers posted to a Member State will be able to demand the application of these rules, the mandatory nature of which stems directly from Directive 96/71.

75. These mandatory terms of employment include minimum rates of pay, whether set by law, regulation or administrative provision or, in the case of building work, by collective agreements or arbitration awards which have been declared universally applicable within the meaning of Article 3 (8) of the directive.

76. This category of terms of employment has special features by comparison with the other matters mentioned in Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71, such as maximum work periods and minimum rest periods, health, safety and hygiene at work, and the minimum length of paid annual holidays. Community actions have been developed for the other terms of employment referred to, and in particular it has been possible to harmonise national legislation by means of directives setting minimum requirements. (20) The situation is different with regard to minimum rates of pay, for which no Community measure of this kind yet exists. (21)

77. Although it cannot be said that Community law entirely neglects the question of remuneration, it must therefore be admitted that it does not yet cover the determination of the amount or level of remuneration. (22)

78. The last subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71 testifies to the special nature of minimum rates of pay where it lays down that 'the concept of minimum rates of pay referred to in paragraph 1(c) is defined by the national law and/or practice of the Member State to whose territory the worker is posted'.

79. Moreover, the application of the 'nucleus' of protective rules mentioned in Article 3(1) of that directive must, in my opinion, be understood to constitute a minimum guarantee for posted workers, who are thus assured that they will at the very least enjoy the benefit of these national rules, which have become mandatory.

80. This other characteristic of the system established by the directive in question is expressed in the very concept of 'a nucleus of mandatory rules for minimum protection' referred to in the 13th recital in the preamble to Directive 96/71.

81. In addition, I would remind the Court that the 17th recital in the preamble to that directive provides that 'the mandatory rules for minimum protection in force in the host country must not prevent the application of terms and conditions of employment which are more favourable to workers'. The first subparagraph of Article 3(7) of the directive translates this intention of the Community legislature by stating that '[p]aragraphs 1 to 6 shall not prevent application of terms and conditions of employment which are more favourable to workers'.

82. In my view, there are two aspects to this last provision. First, it means that the mandatory nature of the protective rules in force in the State where the services are performed may be eclipsed by application of the rules in force in the State in which the provider is established if those rules provide for terms and conditions of employment that are more favourable to the posted workers.

83. Secondly, and it is this aspect that is relevant in the present case, Article 3(7) of Directive 96/71 also, in my view, permits the Member State where the services are performed to improve, for the matters referred to in Article 3(1) of the directive, the level of social protection which it wishes to guarantee to workers employed in its territory and which it can therefore apply to workers posted there. Hence, in principle, this provision authorises the implementation of enhanced national protection. (23)

84. It must be pointed out, however, that the implementation of such enhanced national protection must be in accordance with what is permitted under Article 49 EC. (24)

85. If we compare the arrangements under German law for determining minimum rates of pay in the construction industry with the system established by Directive 96/71, as I have just described it, we can draw the following conclusions.

86. I note first that under German law there is a system for declaring collective agreements to be universally applicable. The German arrangements for determining minimum rates of pay in the construction industry must therefore be assessed against the yardstick of Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71, and not in the light of the provisions of the second subparagraph of Article 3(8) of that directive, which caters for the absence of a system for declaring collective agreements to be of universal application.

87. In accordance with Article 3(1) of the directive, Paragraph 1(1) of the AEntG provides inter alia that the legal rules resulting from a collective agreement governing the construction industry which is declared to be universally applicable, which relate to minimum pay, shall also apply to an employment relationship linking an employer established outside Germany and his employee working within the territory covered by that agreement. Hence, such an employer must, as a minimum, grant to his posted employee the working conditions established in that collective agreement.

88. I then wish to remind the Court that the TV Mindestlohn applicable at the time of the facts in the main proceedings, which was declared to be of universal application and covers the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany, sets the level of the minimum wage in the construction industry for two categories according to the employee's level of qualification, and at different levels for 'old' and 'new' Länder.

89. This collective agreement, which has been declared to be universally applicable within the meaning of the first subparagraph of Article 3(8) of Directive 96/71, thus forms part of the 'nucleus' of protective rules as defined in Article 3(1) of that directive.

90. At the same time, it must be pointed out that the said collective agreement also indicates that the right to higher wages under other collective agreements or special agreements is not affected by the agreement's provision laying down the total hourly pay for the two categories mentioned above. As authorised by Article 3(7) of the directive in question, the TV Mindestlohn therefore expressly reserves the possibility of applying terms of employment that are more favourable to workers.

91. To be precise, the arrangements under German law for determining minimum rates of pay in the construction industry are also based, as a complement to the TV Mindestlohn, on specific collective agreements, most of which have limited territorial scope and are not normally declared to be universally applicable, thus placing them outside the 'nucleus' of minimum rules of protection as defined in Article 3(1) of Directive 96/71.

92. Does that mean, as the Commission maintains, that undertakings posting workers in the framework of the transnational provision of services cannot be required to comply with such specific collective agreements that have not been declared to be of universal application within the meaning of the first subparagraph of Article 3(8) of the directive in question?

93. I do not think so.

94. I consider that, since the wage levels set in these specific collective agreements are, in practice, well above the minimum rates of pay required on the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany under the TV Mindestlohn, such agreements constitute the implementation of enhanced national protection. As I have previously demonstrated, such enhanced national protection is authorised under Article 3(7) of Directive 96/71.

95. Hence, a national measure, such as the one at issue in the main proceedings, which makes such collective agreements mandatory for posted workers as well, is, in my view, consistent with this directive in that it implements the option open to the Member States under Article 3(7) of the directive in question.

96. Moreover, the fact that a collective agreement that has been declared to be of universal application, such as the TV Mindestlohn, itself generally refers to other collective agreements or special agreements granting the right to higher wages is, in my opinion, consistent with Directive 96/71.

97. The German arrangements for determining minimum rates of pay in the construction industry therefore appear to me to constitute a coherent system that is compatible with Directive 96/71.

98. I therefore take the view that Directive 96/71 must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation, such as the Landesvergabegesetz, which requires contractors and, indirectly, their subcontractors to pay workers posted in the framework of the performance of a public contract at least the remuneration prescribed by the collective agreement in force at the place where those services are performed, on pain of penalties that may go as far as the termination of the works contract, even where the collective agreement to which the legislation in question refers is not declared to be universally applicable within the meaning of the first subparagraph of Article 3(8) of that directive.

99. We must now ascertain whether Article 49 EC must be interpreted as precluding national legislation of the kind involved in the dispute in the main proceedings.

B – The interpretation of Article 49 EC

100. It is settled case-law that Article 49 EC requires not only the elimination of all discrimination against service providers established in another Member State on the ground of their nationality but also the abolition of any restriction, even if it applies without distinction to national providers of services and to those of other Member States, which is liable to prohibit, impede or render less advantageous the activities of a provider of services established in another Member State where he lawfully provides similar services. (25)

101. It has to be stated in this regard that the Court has already ruled that the application of the host Member State's domestic legislation to service providers is liable to prohibit, impede or render less attractive the provision of services by persons or undertakings established in other Member States to the extent that it involves expenses and additional administrative and economic burdens. (26)

102. In the present case, there is barely any doubt, in my view, that a restriction on the freedom to provide services exists.

103. By requiring undertakings performing public works contracts and, indirectly, their subcontractors to pay workers at least the remuneration prescribed by the collective agreement in force at the place where those services are performed, Paragraphs 3(1) and 4(1) of the Landesvergabegesetz may impose on service providers established in another Member State where minimum rates of pay are lower an additional economic burden that may prohibit, impede or render less attractive the provision of their services in the host State.

104. However, it must be noted that the provisions in question of the Landesvergabegesetz apply without distinction to national providers of services and to those of other Member States. In other words, the obligation to pay the minimum wage laid down in the collective agreement in force in the place where the services are performed applies both to service providers established in Germany and to those established in another Member State.

105. According to equally settled case-law of the Court, such legislation, that is applicable without distinction, may be justified under Article 49 EC where it meets overriding requirements relating to the public interest in so far as that interest is not safeguarded by the rules to which the provider of the service is subject in the Member State in which he is established and in so far as it is appropriate for securing the attainment of the objective which it pursues and does not go beyond what is necessary in order to attain it. (27)

106. Overriding reasons relating to the public interest which have been recognised by the Court include the protection of workers. (28)

107. In the name of that overriding reason, the Court has already held that Community law does not preclude Member States from applying their legislation, or collective labour agreements entered into by both sides of industry, to any person who is employed, even temporarily, within their territory, no matter in which country the employer is established, just as Community law does not prohibit Member States from enforcing those rules by appropriate means when it emerges that the protection conferred thereunder is not guaranteed by identical or essentially similar obligations by which the undertaking is already bound in the Member State where it is established. (29)

108. The Court has also ruled that the objective of preventing unfair competition by undertakings paying their workers less than the minimum wage may also be taken into consideration as an overriding requirement capable of justifying a restriction on the freedom to provide services. (30) It has also indicated that there is not necessarily any contradiction between the objective of upholding fair competition on the one hand and ensuring worker protection, on the other. (31)

109. In developing this reasoning, the Court recently established an explicit link between its settled case-law recognising the Member States' right to extend their legislation or collective agreements relating to minimum wages to any person who is employed, even temporarily, within their territory, and the justification based on the 'prevention of social dumping'. (32)

110. I have indicated above that the court of reference has doubts as to whether the obligation imposed by the Landesvergabegesetz on contractors and, indirectly, on their subcontractors to comply with the collective agreement in force in the place where the services are performed is justified by overriding reasons of public interest.

111. I remind the Court that, according to the court of reference, the main purpose of the legislation at issue is to protect German building undertakings from competition from other Member States. Such an economic objective cannot constitute an overriding requirement relating to the public interest justifying a restriction on the freedom to provide services.

112. Moreover, the court of reference considers that the obligation to comply, at the place where the services are provided, with a collective agreement laying down minimum rates of pay higher than those applicable on the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany under the AEntG exceeds what is necessary to protect workers. It considers that what is necessary to protect workers is defined by the mandatory minimum wage, which must be applied on the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany under the AEntG.

113. I do not agree with this analysis proposed by the court of reference, which in essence is supported by the Polish Government.

114. I consider, by contrast, that the disputed provisions of the Landesvergabegesetz are appropriate for securing the attainment of the objectives of protecting workers and preventing social dumping and do not go beyond what is necessary in order to attain them.

115. It is true that, according to settled case-law, measures restricting the freedom to provide services cannot be justified by economic aims, such as the protection of national businesses. (33) However, the Court considers at the same time that whilst the intention of the legislature, to be gathered from the political debates preceding the adoption of a law or from the statement of the grounds on which it was adopted, may be an indication of the aim of that law, it is not conclusive. (34) It is for the national court, which enquires as to the true objective pursued by the legislature, to determine whether, viewed objectively, the rules in question ensure the protection of posted workers (35) or, more generally, the prevention of social dumping.

116. Hence, in regard to the national court's observation that the main objective of the legislation at issue in the main proceedings is to protect German construction undertakings from competition from other Member States, it is for that court to verify whether, on an objective view, that legislation secures the protection of posted workers. It is necessary to determine whether those rules confer a genuine benefit on the workers concerned, which significantly augments their social protection. (36)

117. In order to determine the existence of such a benefit that confers real additional protection on posted workers, (37) the court of reference must assess whether the wage protection these workers already enjoy under the legislation and/or collective agreements in force in the State in which the provider of services is established is equivalent or essentially comparable. In making that assessment, it is the gross amount of wages that must be taken into account. (38)

118. In this regard, it is evident from the order for reference that PKZ is accused of having paid the 53 employees engaged on the building site only 46.57% of the applicable minimum wage. In those circumstances, it appears to be established that compliance with the Landesvergabegesetz would have given these workers genuine additional protection by ensuring that they received a wage that was significantly higher than the wage they would normally be paid in the State in which their employer is established. This law therefore appears to me to ensure the protection of the posted workers.

119. In my view, the Law in question is also an appropriate means of preventing social dumping, in that one of its main aims is to harmonise the terms on which service providers, whether they are established in Germany or not, must pay their workers in the framework of the performance of a public contract. It thus ensures that local workers and posted workers on the same site will be paid equally.

120. The fact that Land Niedersachsen chose to take a specific collective agreement rather than the TV Mindestlohn as the benchmark in its Law on the Award of Public Contracts, with the result that the minimum wage to be paid by contractors and their subcontractors at the place where the services are performed is higher than that normally applicable in the construction industry on the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany, is not, in my view, of itself open to challenge under Community law.

121. First, it is difficult to deny that the guarantee of higher wages for posted workers is an appropriate means of protecting them. (39) Secondly, and on a more general level, it must not be overlooked that the first paragraph of Article 136 EC lays down that '[t]he Community and the Member States, having in mind fundamental social rights …, shall have as their objectives … improved living and working conditions, so as to make possible their harmonisation while the improvement is being maintained, [and] dialogue between management and labour'.

122. Moreover, the disputed provisions of the Landesvergabegesetz do not, in my opinion, go beyond what is necessary in order to attain the objectives of worker protection and the prevention of social dumping.

123. The purpose of these provisions is to make it mandatory for service providers involved in the performance of a public contract to pay the rates of remuneration applicable under the specific collective agreement in force at the place where the services are performed. To that end, they provide first that contracts for building services are awarded only to undertakings which undertake in writing to pay their employees, when performing those services, the minimum remuneration prescribed by the collective agreement in force at the place where those services are performed and also undertake to impose the same obligation on their subcontractors. Secondly, breach of that obligation gives rise to graduated sanctions, which may range from the application of a contractual penalty to termination of the contract.

124. In my view, the objectives of worker protection and the prevention of social dumping could not be achieved as effectively by means of less binding rules with a less restrictive effect on the freedom to provide services.

125. In addition, as Ireland indicated in its written observations, (40) there is nothing to indicate that, taking account of relevant indicators such as the cost of living index, the minimum rates of pay required under the specific collective agreement to which the Landesvergabegesetz refers are disproportionate by comparison with the rates set by the TV Mindestlohn.

126. The above analysis cannot, in my view, be brought into question by the Commission's argument that the Law of a Land which has the purpose of imposing more demanding terms and conditions of employment solely for posted workers employed in the framework of public contracts, in other words in only one area of economic life, cannot serve an overriding public interest within the meaning of Article 49 EC nor be an appropriate way of pursuing such an interest.

127. As it stated at the hearing, the Commission alleges that the Landesvergabegesetz creates discrimination between workers in the construction industry, depending on whether the prime contractor is public or private. Furthermore, according to the Commission, if the objective of Land Niedersachsen is truly to protect workers, it should extend this type of measure to all workers in the industry.

128. I cannot endorse that line of argument, for the following reasons.

129. First, it was confirmed at the hearing that, unless it is granted delegated powers, Land Niedersachsen does not have competence to declare a collective agreement to be universally applicable. By adopting the disputed provisions of the Landesvergabegesetz, Land Niedersachsen therefore sought to give mandatory force in a field within its competence, namely public procurement, to the collective agreement applicable at the place where the services are performed, regardless of whether it had been declared to be universally applicable.

130. Secondly, the argument that there is therefore discrimination between workers in the construction industry according to whether the prime contractor is public or private is not, in my opinion, relevant from the point of view of Community law.

131. As I have already indicated, the important point is that the Landesvergabegesetz must comply with the principle of non-discrimination on the basis of nationality, and thus make service providers subject to the same obligation to pay the minimum wages applicable at the place where the services are performed, whether they be established in Germany or in another Member State. Put another way, in my view it is crucial that, in the framework of the performance of the same public contract, local workers and posted workers be paid at the same rate. It is here, to my mind, that we must apply the yardstick that will enable us to detect possible discrimination in breach of Community law.

132. Thirdly, while it is true that the aim of public procurement is above all to meet an identified administrative need for works, services or supplies, the award of public contracts also authorises the attainment of other public interest requirements, such as environmental policy or, as in the present case, social objectives. (41)

133. The possibility of integrating social requirements into public procurement contracts has already been recognised by the Court (42) and is now enshrined in Directive 2004/18. Article 26 of that directive, headed 'Conditions for performance of contracts', reads as follows:

‘Contracting authorities may lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract, provided that these are compatible with Community law and are indicated in the contract notice or in the specifications. The conditions governing the performance of a contract may, in particular, concern social and environmental considerations.’ (43)

134. Since the contract performance condition relating to the minimum remuneration of workers laid down in the disputed provisions of the Landesvergabegesetz complies with the principle of non-discrimination on the basis of nationality, and since it complies with the principle of transparency, it must, in my opinion, be considered to be consistent with Community law.

135. As regards the principle of transparency, it is important, in my view, that the collective agreements to be complied with are sufficiently precise and accessible that they do not render it impossible or excessively difficult in practice for the employer to determine the obligations with which he is required to comply. (44) It is for the court of reference to determine whether that criterion is met in the present case. (45)

IV – Conclusion

136. In the light of all the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court should give the following answer to the question referred by the Oberlandesgericht Celle:

Directive 96/71/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 December 1996 concerning the posting of workers in the framework of the provision of services and Article 49 EC must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation, such as the Landesvergabegesetz of Land Niedersachsen, on the award of public contracts which requires contractors and, indirectly, their subcontractors to pay workers posted in the framework of the performance of a public contract at least the remuneration prescribed by the collective agreement in force at the place where those services are performed, on pain of penalties that may go as far as the termination of the works contract, if the collective agreement to which the legislation in question refers is not declared to be universally applicable.

It is for the court of reference to verify whether that legislation confers a genuine benefit on posted workers, which significantly augments their social protection, and whether, in the application of that legislation, the principle of transparency of the conditions for the performance of public contracts is respected.

In order to be compatible with Article 49 EC, such contract conditions must comply with the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and with the principle of transparency, as we shall see below.

22 – Ibid., pp. 55 and 56. The author nevertheless states that this issue is not immune to possible wage negotiations at European level. Moreover, he notes that, leaving aside the strict determination of the amount or level of wages, 'the principle of wage equality between men and women may have a general impact on the mechanisms for remunerating workers' and that 'other Community regulations may have an effect in the wage field, for example with regard to the organisation of working time'.

According to the author, the terms and conditions of employment in the matters referred to in Directive 96/71 are 'minimum domestic rules, with a basis in State or contractual provisions, which under the directive the Member States must ensure are observed as a minimum in the situation of the temporary posting of workers' (p. 95). This idea is also expressed in the 34th recital in the preamble to Directive 2004/18, according to which Directive 96/71 'lays down the minimum conditions which must be observed by the host country in respect of … posted workers'.

24 – I share, in this regard, the analysis put forward by Advocate General Mengozzi in the Opinion he delivered on 23 May 2007 in Case C-341/05 Laval un Partneri (pending before the Court), in which he stated that 'although Directive 96/71 accepts that the Member States may apply to a service provider of a Member State that posts workers temporarily to the territory of another Member State terms and conditions of employment that are more favourable for the workers than those referred to in particular in Article 3(1) of [that directive], the granting of that option must nevertheless respect the freedom to provide services guaranteed by Article 49 EC (point 151). Moreover, in its interpretative communication on the Community law applicable to public procurement and the possibilities for integrating social considerations into such contracts, the Commission accepts that in both national and cross-border situations 'provisions more favourable to workers may … also be applied (and must then also be complied with), provided that they are compatible with Community law' (p. 21, point 3.2).

38 – Case C–341/02 Commission v Germany [2005] ECR I–2733, paragraph 29.

39 – As the German Government indicates in paragraph 63 of its written observations, apart from the fact that specific collective agreements provide for higher minimum rates of pay, it is also interesting to note that the objective of worker protection also lies in the fact that such agreements allow more differentiated and appropriate remuneration according to the work performed. I would remind the Court that the wage scale in such agreements is more detailed than that in the TV Mindestlohn and sets different wage levels for different groups of activities.

40 – Paragraph 26.

41 – See to that effect Martinez, V., ‘Les péripéties du critère social dans l’attribution des marchés publics’, Contrats publics, in Mélanges en l’honneur du professeur Michel Guibal, Volume II, Presses de la faculté de droit de Montpellier, 2006, pp. 251 and 252. In particular, the author expresses the notion that public procurement may be a means of combating unemployment and exclusion, in which case it is used as a ‘buttress for generating employment’.

42 – Case 31/87 Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635 and Case C–225/98 Commission v France [2000] ECR I–7445. With regard to this case-law and its assimilation into French law, see Pongérard-Payet, H., ‘Critères sociaux et écologiques des marchés publics: droits communautaire et interne entre guerre et paix’, Europe, No 10, October 2004, Étude 10.

43 – Let us also quote the 33rd recital in the preamble to that directive, which states that ‘[c]ontract performance conditions are compatible with this Directive provided that they are not directly or indirectly discriminatory and are indicated in the contract notice or in the contract documents’. In Beentjes, the Court had already ruled that in order to meet the directive’s aim of ensuring the development of effective competition in the award of public contracts, ‘the criteria and conditions which govern each contract must be given sufficient publicity by the authorities awarding contracts’ (paragraph 21).

44 – See to that effect, with regard to criminal prosecutions, Arblade and Others, paragraph 43.

45 – I remind the Court in this regard that the undertaking made by the contractor refers to the ‘remuneration prescribed by the collective agreement at the place where these services are performed, as set out in the list of representative collective agreements referred to under No 01 “Construction industry”’.

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. The first condition of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that there is financing, for the most part, by the State when the activities of public broadcasting bodies such as those in the main proceedings are financed for the most part by a fee payable by persons who possess a receiver, which is imposed, calculated and levied according to rules such as those in the main proceedings.

2. The first condition of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as meaning that, that, if the activities of public broadcasting bodies such as those in the main proceedings are financed according to the procedures set out when examining the first question, the condition of financing ... by the State' does not require that there be direct interference by the State or by other public authorities in the awarding, by such bodies, of a contract such as that at issue in the main proceedings.

3. Article 1(a)(iv) of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as meaning that only the public contracts specified in that provision are excluded from the scope of that directive.

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling relates to the interpretation of the first condition of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) and Article 1(a)(iv) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

2. The dispute in the proceedings from which the reference has been made is whether the German public broadcasting bodies (Landesrundfunkanstalten) are contracting authorities for the purposes of application of the Community rules on the award of public contracts.

Legal context

Community legislation

3. Under Article 7(1), Directive 92/50 is to apply to public service contracts the estimated value of which, net of VAT, is not less than ECU 200 000.

4. Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 provides:

[C]ontracting authorities shall mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

Body governed by public law means any body:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

- established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character,

and

- having legal personality

and

- financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law.

The lists of bodies or of categories of such bodies governed by public law which fulfil the criteria referred to in the second subparagraph of this point are set out in Annex I to Directive 71/305/EEC. These lists shall be as exhaustive as possible and may be reviewed in accordance with the procedure laid down in Article 30b of that Directive'.

5. That provision is repeated in almost identical terms in Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114). The purpose of that directive, as set out in Recital (1) of its preamble, was a recasting within a single measure of the separate directives which applied to the procedures for awarding public contracts in the three areas mentioned above and, under Article 80, the date for transposition of that directive into the legal systems of the Member States was to be no later than 31 January 2006.

6. The German public broadcasting bodies are not mentioned in either the Annex referred to in the last subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 or Annex III to Directive 2004/18, which is of similar content.

7. Article 1(a)(iv) of Directive 92/50 provides that the following are excluded from its provisions:

[C]ontracts for the acquisition, development, production or co-production of programme material by broadcasters and contracts for broadcasting time'.

8. That provision was repeated in identical wording in Article 16(b) of Directive 2004/18.

9. The rationale underlying that provision is set out in the eleventh recital of the preamble to Directive 92/50 where it is stated:

Whereas the award of contracts for certain audiovisual services in the broadcasting field is governed by considerations which make the application of procurement rules inappropriate'.

10. That reason is further explained in Recital 25 of the preamble to Directive 2004/18 which provides:

The awarding of public contracts for certain audiovisual services in the field of broadcasting should allow aspects of cultural or social significance to be taken into account which render application of procurement rules inappropriate. For these reasons, an exception must therefore be made for public service contracts for the purchase, development, production or co-production of off-the-shelf programmes and other preparatory services, such as those relating to scripts or artistic performances necessary for the production of the programme and contracts concerning broadcasting times. However, this exclusion should not apply to the supply of technical equipment necessary for the production, co-production and broadcasting of such programmes... '

National legislation

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

11. The abovementioned Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 has been transposed into national law by Article 98(2) of the Law against restrictions on competition (Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen). That provision is identical in content to the Community rules, the sole difference being that, as regards the definition of body governed by public law', the condition that the activities of the body in question be financed for the most part by the public authorities is qualified by the statement that the financing may be undertaken by shareholding in capital or otherwise'.

12. The second subparagraph of Article 5(1) of the German Basic Law is worded as follows:

The freedom of the press and the freedom of reporting by broadcasts and film are guaranteed.'

13. That provision has been consistently interpreted by the highest German courts, in particular by the Bundesverfassungsgericht (Federal Constitutional Court) and the Bundesverwaltungsgericht (Federal Administrative Court), as imposing an absolute prohibition on any interference or any intervention by the public authorities in the management and operation of the public broadcasting bodies and an obligation of strict neutrality in relation to the programme material of those bodies. That provision of the Basic Law is of cardinal importance in the structure of the present German state and aims to ensure that broadcasting does not become a political instrument. It represents a constitutional guarantee of the right to freedom of expression and the right to receive information from a plurality of sources, and also of the existence of public broadcasting bodies and of their financing and development.

14. Those bodies are institutions governed by public law, endowed with legal personality and invested with a remit to serve the public interest. They are independent of the State authorities, self-managed and organised in such a way as to exclude any influence by the public authorities. In accordance with the case-law of the highest German courts, those bodies are not part of the structure of the State.

15. The financing of those bodies is governed by State Treaties (Staatsverträge), that is, treaties entered into by the Federal authority (Bund) and the Länder.

16. Article 11(1) of the State Treaty on broadcasting (Rundfunkstaatsvertrag) provides:

The funds made available for operating costs must enable the public broadcasting bodies to fulfil their constitutional and statutory purposes; and must in particular guarantee the existence of public-law broadcasting and its development.'

17. In accordance with Article 12 of the State Treaty in question, more than half of the needs of the public broadcasting bodies are primarily financed by fees paid by citizens and, for the balance, by advertising and other revenues. In accordance with the caselaw of the Bundesverfassungsgericht, financing by means of a fee is appropriate to the remit of public service broadcasting, satisfies the constitutional guarantee of financing and represents a functional method of financing which ensures that autonomy of programming is protected from any political interference by the State.

18. The detailed procedures for collection of the fee are governed by the State Treaty on the regulation of the broadcasting fee (Staatsvertrag über die Regelung des Rundfunkgebührenwesens) of 31 August 1991, as amended on 11 September 1996 (GVBl. NRW 1996, p. 431, the State Treaty on the broadcasting fee'). Under that State Treaty, it is possession of a broadcasting receiver which gives rise to the obligation to pay the fee. The circumstance that the receiver is not actually used has no bearing on the obligation to pay. Entitlement to the fee lies formally with the regional broadcasting bodies established in the territories of each of the Länder.

19. The regulations on the amount of the fee, calculated by reference to the established financial needs of the public broadcasting bodies, are to be found in the State Treaty on the financing of broadcasting (Rundfunkfinanzierungsstaatsvertrag) of 26 November 1996 (GVBl. NRW 1996, p. 484).

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

The amount of the fee is formally approved by the Parliaments and Governments of the Länder.

20. The public broadcasting bodies have established, by means of an administrative agreement, a central agency for the collection of fees, the Gebühreneinzugszentrale der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten (the GEZ'). The GEZ is an association governed by public law which has in particular the task of invoicing and collecting the fee. The GEZ has no legal personality and has no capacity to bring legal proceedings but it acts for and on behalf of the various regional public broadcasting bodies. However, as regards recovery of the fee from the citizens, the GEZ issues a notice of liability to the charge, which is to say it acts as an official authority. Similarly, if the fee is not paid, Article 7(6) of the State Treaty on the broadcasting fee provides that notices of arrears of the broadcasting fee are subject to enforcement by administrative proceedings. The regional broadcasting organisation entitled to the funds may send the request for assistance in enforcement directly to the authority having jurisdiction over the place of domicile or habitual residence of the persons liable to pay the fee... '.

21. Monitoring and verification of the financial requirements declared by the public broadcasting bodies are entrusted to an independent commission, the Kommission zur Überprüfung und Ermittlung des Finanzbedarfs der Rundfunkanstalten (Commission for the study and assessment of the financial needs of public broadcasting bodies the KEF'). That commission, consisting of 16 independent experts, receives and examines estimated requirements as submitted by the public broadcasting bodies and discusses them with their representatives. The KEF issues a report at least once every two years, and on that report the Parliaments and Governments of the Länder base their formal decisions on the amount of the fee. That procedure, in which the KEF now has a role, was set up following a judgment of the Bundesverfassungsgericht of 22 February 1994, which ruled that a procedure whereby the decision on the amount of the fee was taken by the First Ministers of the Länder without advice from an independent commission did not guarantee the independence required by the Basic Law.

22. The revenues from the fees are allocated, in particular, to the public broadcasting bodies and to the media authority of the Land concerned.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

23. In August 2005, the GEZ sent a written invitation to 11 cleaning businesses to submit binding tenders for the provision of cleaning services in its premises in Cologne. No formal procedure for the awarding of public contracts compatible with the Community rules took place. The stipulated duration of the contract was from 1 March 2006 until 31 December 2008, the contract being tacitly renewable from year to year. The GEZ estimated the total outlays per annum at more than EUR 400 000.

24. The undertaking GEWA Gesellschaft für Gebäudereinigung und Wartung mbH, one of the cleaning businesses to which the invitation to tender was sent, was informed by the GEZ in November 2005 that it had not been awarded the contract. Since GEWA considered that the GEZ as a contracting authority should have submitted the cleaning contract to an invitation to tender which complied with the Community rules, it brought an action before the public contracts division of the Bezirksregierung (District Administration) of Cologne. That body upheld the action, ruling that the contract at issue was alien to the actual activity of broadcasting and was consequently subject to the Community law relating to public contracts.

25. The public broadcasting bodies appealed against that decision to the public contracts division of the Oberlandesgericht (Higher Regional Court) Düsseldorf, claiming that they were not contracting authorities, given that the public broadcasting service is financed for the most part by the fee paid by the television viewers and that there is no public funding nor public control of that service.

26. The referring court finds that the conditions set out in the first and second indents of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, and in indents (a) and (b) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, on the definition of body governed by public law' are satisfied in this case, inasmuch as the public broadcasting bodies were established specifically to satisfy needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character and are endowed with legal personality. The court states moreover that, as regards the three conditions to be found respectively, in the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 and in indent (c) in the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, the last two are not satisfied in this case, inasmuch as the public authorities do not exercise any supervision over the management of those bodies and have no influence on appointments to their governing bodies. The issue still to be determined therefore is whether the activity of the bodies in question is financed for the most part by the State or by other contracting authorities, so that they may be regarded as bodies governed by public law' and, consequently, as contracting authorities'.

27. The referring court states that, according to one school of thought in current German case-law and academic writing, the condition of being financed, for the most part, by the State' requires a direct causal link between that financing and the State. That approach takes as its sole criterion whether the State is the origin or source of the funds, which is to say whether the funds come from the State budget, and takes no account either of the fact that the liability of customers to pay the fee is based on a provision of law or of the fact that collection of that fee is carried out by means of a transfer of public authority powers. According to that first approach, direct State financing must also enable the State or other public authorities to exercise a concrete influence on the various procedures for the awarding of contracts by the body in receipt of the financing.

28. According to another school of thought in the case-law and academic writing, one to which the referring court subscribes, the fact that as a matter of law individuals are obliged to pay the fee is sufficient reason to hold that the condition of financing...by the State' of the activity of the public broadcasting bodies in the main proceedings is satisfied. The Community rules on the awarding of public contracts therefore apply to those bodies, which are financed by the mandatory fee and are not therefore subject to the laws of the market. Moreover, to follow that school of thought further, the fact that the State is obliged by the Basic Law to maintain neutrality in relation to the management of those bodies and their programme material does not mean that public contracts entered into by them which are unconnected to their principal purpose remits should not be subject to the Community rules.

29. Having regard to the foregoing, the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Where it appears in the first condition of indent (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, is the term financed...by the State' to be interpreted as including indirect financing of certain bodies through the payment of fees by persons who possess broadcasting receivers, taking into account the overriding obligation imposed on the State by constitutional law to ensure the independent financing and the existence of those bodies?

(2) If the first question is answered in the affirmative, is the first condition of indent (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 to be interpreted as requiring that financing by the State' must involve a direct public influence on the awarding of contracts by the body financed by the State?

(3) If the second question is answered in the negative, is indent (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, in the light of Article 16(b) [of that directive], to be interpreted as meaning that the only services excluded from its scope are those services specified in the latter provision, and that included within its scope are other services which are ancillary or secondary but which are not specifically related to programming (by argumentum a contrario)?'

Concerning the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

Preliminary observations

30. The questions as formulated by the national court make reference to the relevant provisions of Directive 2004/18. Given however that the facts of the case in the main proceedings fall within the scope ratione temporis of Directive 92/50, the Court's examination and answers will relate to the corresponding provisions of Directive 92/50 in the light of certain clarifications made by Directive 2004/18. In any event, the provisions of the latter directive and their underlying principles are identical in content to the provisions and principles of the preceding directives and Directive 2004/18 represents a recasting of pre-existing provisions. Accordingly there is no reasonable justification for a different approach under the new directive.

31. It must also be stated that even though the German system of financing the public broadcasting bodies excludes as a matter of principle the exercise by the public authorities of any political influence whatsoever on those bodies, that fact alone does not mean that the present case should be examined solely from the point of view that it is impossible, by definition, for the State to exercise such influence. For the purposes of uniform interpretation and application of Community law and of the realisation of the objectives of the EC Treaty the Court must also take into account other considerations such as freedom of movement and the opening of the market.

The first question

32. By this question, the Court is requested to interpret the concept of financed, for the most part, by the State' or by another public body, contained in the first condition of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, in order to answer the question whether that condition is satisfied when the activities of public broadcasting bodies such as those involved in the main proceedings are financed for the most part by a fee charged, assessed and collected in accordance with rules such as those involved in the main proceedings.

33. It must first of all be pointed out that, as regards whether the financing is for the most part', it is common ground that, in accordance with the case-law of the Court, that condition is satisfied in this case, since more than one half of the income of the public broadcasting bodies in question comes from the fee at issue in the main proceedings (see, to that effect, Case C380/98 University of Cambridge [2000] ECR I8035, paragraph 30).

34. It must then be stated that the wording of the first condition of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 contains no details as to the procedures for delivering the financing to which that provision relates. Thus, in particular, there is no requirement that the activity of the bodies in question should be directly financed by the State or by another public body failing which the condition attaching to that point is not satisfied. Examination of the financing procedures must therefore not be restricted to those put forward by the various interested parties in this case.

35. With a view to the interpretation of the concept of financed... by the State' or by other public bodies, it is appropriate to refer to the aim of the Community directives in relation to public contracts, as stated in the case-law of the Court.

36. In accordance with that case-law, the aim of the directives in relation to awarding public contracts is to avoid both the risk of preference being given to national tenderers or applicants whenever a contract is awarded by the contracting authorities and the possibility that a body financed or controlled by the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law may choose to be guided by considerations other than economic ones (University of Cambridge , paragraph 17, and case-law there cited).

37. The Court has restated those objectives, adding that the concept of contracting authority', including a body governed by public law', must be interpreted, in the light of those objectives, in functional terms (Case C237/99 Commission v France [2001] ECR I939, paragraphs 42 and 43, and case-law there cited).

38. The Court has held that the purpose of coordinating at Community level the procedures for awarding public contracts is to eliminate barriers to the freedom to provide services and goods and therefore to protect the interests of traders established in a Member State who wish to offer goods or services to contracting authorities established in another Member State (University of Cambridge , paragraph 16, and Commission v France , paragraph 41).

39. As regards specifically public service contracts, the Court has emphasised that same primary objective, namely the free movement of services and the opening-up to competition in the Member States which is undistorted and as wide as possible (see, to that effect, Case C-26/03 Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau [2005] ECR I1, paragraphs 44 and 47).

40. A method of financing public broadcasting bodies such as that in the main proceedings must be assessed in the light of those objectives and in relation to those criteria, which implies that the concept of financed ... by the State' must also receive a functional interpretation.

41. It must first of all be stated that the fee which provides the greater part of the funding of the activities of the bodies in question has its origin in the State Treaty on broadcasting, in other words in a measure of the State. The fee is provided for and imposed by statute and is not the result of any contractual arrangement entered into by those bodies and the customers. Liability to pay that fee arises out of the mere fact of possession of a receiver and is not in consideration of actual use of the services provided by the bodies in question.

42. It must then be observed that the determination of the amount of the fee is not the product of any contractual relationship between the public broadcasting bodies in the main proceedings and the customers either. Under the State Treaty on the financing of broadcasting, the amount is determined by formal decision of the Parliaments and Governments of the Länder, adopted on the basis of a report drawn up by the KEF in relation to the financial requirements declared by those bodies themselves. The Parliaments and Governments of the Länder are free not to follow the recommendations of the KEF, while respecting the principle of the freedom of broadcasting, but on limited grounds, namely where the amount of the fee represents for the customers a financial burden which is disproportionate with regard to the general economic and social situation, and capable of affecting adversely their access to information (see judgment of the Bundesverfassungsgericht of 11 September 2007 BvR 2270/05, BvR 809/06 and BvR 830/06).

43. Even if the position were that the Parliaments and Governments of the Länder were obliged to follow without qualification the recommendations of the KEF, it would remain the case that this mechanism for fixing the amount of the fee was established by the State, which has thereby transferred public authority powers to a commission of experts.

44. As regards the procedures for the levying of the fee, it is clear from the State Treaty on the broadcasting fee that the latter is recovered by GEZ which, on behalf of the public broadcasting bodies, issues notices of liability to the charge, in other words by act of an official authority. Similarly, if payment is not made on time, notices of arrears are the subject of enforcement by administrative proceedings, and the public broadcasting organisation concerned, as the party entitled to payment, may send the request for enforcement assistance directly to the authority which has jurisdiction. Accordingly, in this respect the bodies in question enjoy the powers of a public authority.

45. The resources thus allocated to those bodies are paid without any specific consideration in return, within the meaning of the case-law of the Court (see, to that effect, University of Cambridge , paragraphs 23 to 25). Indeed, no contractual consideration is linked to those payments, since neither the liability to pay the fee nor its amount is the result of any agreement between the public broadcasting bodies and the customers, the latter being obliged to pay the fee provided only that they possess a receiver, irrespective of whether they use the service offered by those bodies. Accordingly, customers must pay the fee, even if they have never made use of the services of those bodies.

46. The argument of the applicants in the main proceedings that the determining factor cannot be that the fee is provided for in a provision of law, otherwise all the doctors, lawyers and architects established in the Federal Republic of Germany would be financed by the State' because the levels of their fees are fixed by the State, is ineffectual. Even though those levels are regulated by the State, the consumer always enters of his own free will into a contractual relationship with the members of those professions and always receives an actual service. In addition, the financing of the activities of members of those professions is neither ensured nor guaranteed by the State.

47. It must be observed, lastly, that, in the light of the functional approach referred to above, as the Commission of the European Communities rightly points out, the assessment made cannot vary according to whether the financial resources pass through the State budget, the State first collecting the fee and then making the fee income available to the public broadcasting bodies, or whether the State grants to those bodies the right to collect the fee themselves.

48. It must therefore be concluded that financing such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which is brought into being by a measure of the State, is guaranteed by the State and is secured by methods of charging and collection which fall within public authority powers, satisfies the condition of financing... by the State' for the purposes of application of the Community rules on the awarding of public contracts.

49. That method of indirect financing is sufficient for the condition on financing... by the State' laid down in the Community legislation to be satisfied and it is not necessary that the State itself establish or appoint a public or private body to the task of collection of the fee.

50. The answer to be given to the first question referred is therefore that the first condition of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as meaning that there is financing, for the most part, by the State when the activities of public broadcasting bodies such as those in the main proceedings are for the most part financed by a fee payable by persons who possess a receiver, which is imposed, calculated and levied according to rules such as those in the main proceedings.

51. By its second question, the referring court asks whether the first condition of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as meaning that, if a public broadcasting body is financed according to the procedures set out in the first question referred for a preliminary ruling, the condition of financing... by the State' requires the direct interference of the State or other public authorities when a contract such as that in the main proceedings is awarded by such a body.

52. For the purposes of answering that question, it must first be observed that there is no requirement in the wording of the provision under consideration that, when a particular public contract is being awarded, there be direct intervention by the State or by another public body before the condition of financing... by the State' can be satisfied.

53. As regards, secondly, the criterion of the dependence of a body on the public authorities, developed in the case-law of the Court as regards the three conditions to be found in the third indent of the second paragraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 (see, to that effect, Case C44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others [1998] ECR I73, paragraph 20), the referring court refers to the above mentioned approach of one school of thought in German case-law and academic writing, to the effect that dependence implies that the public authorities are able to have actual influence on the awarding of various contracts.

54. It must first be observed that the question whether the public broadcasting bodies in the main proceedings are dependent on the public authorities arises only in relation to the awarding of contracts which have no connection to performance of the defined public service remit of those bodies, as guaranteed by the German Basic Law, namely the creation and production of programme material. The contract at issue in the main proceedings does not fall within that particular function of those bodies.

55. It must then be stated that, in this case, as is clear from the considerations elaborated when examining the first question, the very existence of the public broadcasting bodies in question depends on the State. The criterion of the dependence of those bodies on the State is thereby satisfied, and it is not necessary for the public authorities to have any real influence on the various decisions of the bodies in question on the awarding of contracts.

56. That dependence in the broad sense does not exclude the risk, if the Community rules on the awarding of public contracts are not observed, that the public broadcasting bodies in the main proceedings may allow themselves to be guided by considerations other than economic, inter alia, by giving preference to national tenderers or candidates. Those bodies may take such an approach without breaching the requirements laid down by the German Basic Law, which does not prohibit it. As the referring court judiciously observes, the State's obligation of neutrality in relation to the creation of programme material by the bodies in question, as guaranteed by the German Basic Law and interpreted by the Bundesverfassungsgericht, does not require those bodies to be neutral in relation to awarding contracts. Such a risk is contrary to the objectives of the Community rules on the awarding of public contracts set out in paragraphs 38 and 39 of this judgment.

57. The referring court asks in addition what relevance, for the purposes of answering the second question, is to be attributed to the position adopted by the Court in paragraph 21 of University of Cambridge , to the effect that while the way in which a particular body is financed may reveal whether it is closely dependent on another contracting authority, that criterion is however not an absolute one. Not all payments made by a contracting authority have the effect of creating or reinforcing a specific relationship of subordination or dependency. Only payments which go to finance or support the activities of the body concerned without any specific consideration therefor may be described as public financing'.

58. In that regard it must be observed that, as regards the relationship of the bodies in question and the consumers, it is clear from paragraphs 23 to 25 of University of Cambridge , that it is possible to categorise as public financing' public outlays to which no consideration in return is contractually linked. As has been determined in paragraph 45 of this judgment, in this case no consideration in return is contractually linked to the resources allocated to the public broadcasting bodies in the main proceedings, since neither the liability to pay the fee nor the amount of the fee is the result of an agreement between those bodies and the consumers, whose obligation to pay the fee arises from the mere fact of their possession of a receiver, even if they never make use of the services of those bodies.

59. Equally, in this case the State obtains no specific consideration in return, given that, as the referring court judiciously states, the financing in the main proceedings serves to offset the obligations engendered by performance of the State's publicservice remit, which is to ensure that citizens receive objective information from a number of audiovisual sources. To that extent, the broadcasting bodies in the main proceedings are no different from any other public service which is subsidised by the State for the performance of its tasks in the public interest.

60. The answer to be given therefore to the second question referred is that the first condition of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as meaning that, if the activities of public broadcasting bodies such as those in the main proceedings are financed according to the procedures set out when examining the first question, the condition of financing ... by the State' does not require that there be direct intervention by the State or by other public authorities in the awarding, by such bodies, of a contract such as that at issue in the main proceedings.

The third question

61. By its third question, the referring court asks whether Article 1(a)(iv) of Directive 92/50 must, in the light of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of that directive, be interpreted as meaning that only public contracts relating to the services specified in the former provision are excluded from the scope of that directive.

62. Article 1(a)(iv) of Directive 92/50 provides that that directive does not apply to public contracts for services which fall within the essential function of public broadcasting bodies, namely the creation and production of programme material, for the cultural and social reasons alluded to in the eleventh recital of the preamble to Directive 92/50 and, more explicitly, in recital 25 of the preamble to Directive 2004/18, which render that application inappropriate.

63. That provision, as the Advocate General suggests in point 80 of his Opinion, reflects the same concern as that expressed in the German Basic Law, namely the guarantee that the public broadcasting bodies can accomplish their public service remit with complete independence and impartiality.

64. The provision in question being an exception to the principal objective of the Community rules on the awarding of public contracts, as stated in paragraph 39 of this judgment, namely freedom of movement of services and a market open to competition which is as wide as possible, it must be interpreted strictly. Accordingly, the only public contracts excluded from the scope of Directive 92/50 are those for the services specified in Article 1(a)(iv) of that directive. On the other hand, the Community rules apply in full to public contracts for services which have no connection to the activities which form part of the performance of the publicservice remit, in the proper sense, of the public broadcasting bodies.

65. Support for that approach is found in the above-mentioned recital 25 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 which states, by way of guidance, in the penultimate sentence, that the exclusion from application of that directive should not apply to the supply of technical equipment necessary for the production, co-production and broadcasting of programmes.

66. However, it must be made clear that that those considerations apply only when what is at issue in a particular case is a contract awarded by a body to be regarded as a contracting authority' within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50.

67. The answer to be given therefore to the third question referred is that Article 1(a)(iv) of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as meaning that only those public contracts which relate to the services specified in that provision are excluded from the scope of that directive.

Costs

68. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others

GEWA – Gesellschaft für Gebäudereinigung und Wartung mbH

(Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf)

(Directives 92/50/EEC and 2004/18/EC – Public service contracts – Public broadcasting bodies – Contracting authorities – Bodies governed by public law – Condition that the activity of the institution be 'financed, for the most part, by the State')

Summary of the Judgment

1. Approximation of laws – Procedures for the award of public service contracts – Directive 92/50 – Contracting authorities – Body governed by public law

(Council Directive 92/50, Art. 1(b), second para., third indent)

2. Approximation of laws – Procedures for the award of public service contracts – Directive 92/50 – Scope

(Council Directive 92/50, Art. 1(a)(iv))

1. Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts provides in its first subparagraph that the expression 'contracting authorities' includes 'bodies governed by public law', and, in its second subparagraph, that a 'body governed by public law' means any body established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character (first indent), having legal personality (second indent), and financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law (third indent).

   Concerning the third indent, the expression 'financed, for the most part, by the State' must be interpreted as meaning that there is such financing when the activities of public broadcasting bodies, with legal personality, invested with a remit to serve the public interest, independent of the State authorities, self-managed and organised in such a way as to exclude any influence by the public authorities, and which are not part of the structure of the State, are for the most part financed by a fee payable by persons who possess a receiver, which is imposed, calculated and levied according to the rules of State treaties concluded for those purposes and is not the result of any contractual arrangement entered into by those bodies and the customers.

   Moreover, where the activities of public broadcasting bodies are financed according to such procedures, the condition of 'financing … by the State' does not require the direct interference of the State or other public authorities when such bodies award public contracts which have no connection with the performance of their public service remit in the proper sense. Given that, in view of their method of financing, the very existence of the public broadcasting bodies in question depends on the State, the criterion of the dependence of those bodies on the State is satisfied, without it being necessary for the public authorities to have any real influence on the various decisions of the bodies in question on the awarding of contracts.

2. Article 1(a)(iv) of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, which provides that that directive does not apply to public contracts for services which fall within the essential function of public broadcasting bodies, namely the creation and production of programme material, must be interpreted as meaning that only those public contracts which relate to the services specified in that provision are excluded from the scope of that directive.

Since that provision constitutes an exception to the principal objective of the Community rules on the awarding of public contracts, namely freedom of movement of services and a market open to competition which is as wide as possible, it must be interpreted strictly. Accordingly, the only public contracts excluded from the scope of Directive 92/50 are those for the services specified in Article 1(a)(iv) of that directive, namely contracts for the acquisition, development, production or co-production of programme material by broadcasters and contracts for broadcasting time. On the other hand, the Community rules apply in full to public contracts for services which have no connection to the activities which form part of the performance of the public–service remit, in the proper sense, of the public broadcasting bodies.

Reference for a preliminary ruling - Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf - Interpretation of indent (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) and Article 16(b) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134 of 30.04.2004, p. 114) - Award of cleaning services by an association of broadcasting bodies indirectly financed by the State without compliance with formal European procurement procedure - Concept of 'contracting authority'.

The first condition of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that there is financing, for the most part, by the State when the activities of public broadcasting bodies such as those in the main proceedings are financed for the most part by a fee payable by persons who possess a receiver, which is imposed, calculated and levied according to rules such as those in the main proceedings;

The first condition of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as meaning that, that, if the activities of public broadcasting bodies such as those in the main proceedings are financed according to the procedures set out when examining the first question, the condition of 'financing ... by the State' does not require that there be direct interference by the State or by other public authorities in the awarding, by such bodies, of a contract such as that at issue in the main proceedings;

Article 1(a)(iv) of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as meaning that only the public contracts specified in that provision are excluded from the scope of that directive.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer delivered on 6 September 2007. Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others v GEWA - Gesellschaft für Gebäudereinigung und Wartung mbH. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf - Germany. Directives 92/50/EEC and 2004/18/EC - Public service contracts - Public broadcasting bodies - Contracting authorities - Bodies governed by public law - Condition that the activity of the institution be financed, for the most part, by the State'. Case C-337/06.

I - Introduction

1. To think of radio broadcasting as a medium for conveying information would be to reduce it to the feature which is most characteristic of it, while neglecting other features which have more significance in the light of the social and cultural importance which it has acquired in the course of its history. In western societies the association of communication media with current material well-being brings fresh meaning to the Roman maxim panem et circenses , which the Latin poet Juvenal (2) employed to mock the Roman people's acquiescent idleness and lack of interest in matters of politics. (3) Today, a translation of that aphorism could use comfort instead of bread, and television in place of the games of the Roman Circus.

2. No one now contests the immense power of images, which are capable of penetrating into the most remote corners of private life; consequently, in order to avoid the fulfilment of premonitions such as that of George Orwell in his novel 1984 (4) that audiovisual technology become a means of delivering propaganda, governments strive to forge safeguards to ensure a degree of objectivity and independence, at least in public broadcasting.

3. The three questions which the Oberlandesgericht (Higher Regional Court) of Düsseldorf (Germany) has referred to the Court of Justice are set in the context of the struggle to have a public broadcasting service which is sufficient for and compatible with the requirements of a State governed by the rule of law, in particular that of neutrality and respect for the plurality of political options. In Germany, as is clear from the order of reference, that guarantee is sustained, to a great extent, by requiring public broadcasting institutions to collect and manage their own funds, which derive from the obligatory payment of a certain sum chargeable on the mere fact of possessing a radio or a television.

4. That system of funding, which is the consequence of an uncontested public service obligation, raises the question whether those broadcasting bodies should be regarded as contracting authorities' within the meaning of the Community directives on the subject of public procurement, or whether, on the other hand, they should not be so described, and should be exempt from the procedures for public tendering for contracts.

II - Legal framework

A - Community legislation

5. As a preliminary, the referring court has turned to both Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC, (5) as regards its scope ratione personae, and Article 16(b) as regards its scope ratione materiae. That directive consolidated the rules of public contract tendering at Community level. The court points out that since the prescribed period for adoption of that Directive into national law has expired without the relevant transposition, the case-law of the Bundesgerichtshof (German Supreme Court) leads it to interpret the national rules in the light of any recently adopted Community legislative instrument, though it may not govern the contracting procedure at issue.

6. Even if the reasoning of the Oberlandesgericht is accepted, it is appropriate to consider the wording of Article 1(a) and (b) of Directive 92/50/EC, (6) for two reasons: first, that Article is the basic provision by which the German legislature was guided in adapting its legal order to the Community legal order and, consequently, the national legislation refers to that Article; secondly, because the corresponding rules of the consolidated text of Directive 2004/18 are absolutely identical.

7. In order to define its scope ratione personae, Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, within Title I, on general provisions, considers contracting authorities as:

the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.'

A body governed by public law meaning any body:

established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character,

- having legal personality and

- financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law'.

8. Next, that provision specifies that the lists of bodies or of categories of such bodies governed by public law which fulfil (those) criteria are set out in Annex I to Directive 71/305/EEC (7).... Those lists shall be as exhaustive as possible and may be reviewed in accordance with the procedure laid down in Article 30b of that Directive; ...'.

9. The same Article 1(a) lists the contracts which fall ratione materiae within the scope of the Directive, and expressly excludes:

(iv) contracts for the acquisition, development, production or co-production of programme material by broadcasters and contracts for broadcasting time;

...'

B - National law

1. Regulation of public procurement

10. The procedures for the award of contracts by German public administrative bodies are incorporated in the Law against anti-competitive practices (Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen; (8) the GWB'); Article 1(b) of the Directive, on contracting authorities, has its national counterpart in Paragraph 98(2) of the GWB:

Paragraph 98 Contracting authority

Contracting authorities within the meaning of this chapter are:

1. regional or local authorities and their funds;

2. other legal persons governed by public and private law, established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character if they are financed for the most part by the bodies in sections 1 or 3, whether individually or jointly by shareholding or other means, or if those bodies exercise any control over their management or have appointed more than half the members of one of its administrative or supervisory organs. The foregoing shall also apply when a body falling within section 1 is one which, individually or jointly with others, provides most of the financing or which appoints more than half of the members of the administrative or supervisory organs;

3. associations the members of which are included in subsections 1 and 2;

2. The legislation on the fee for public broadcasting

11. According to the order for reference, the financing of the public broadcasting authorities is regulated in Germany by two State Treaties concluded between the Federal State and the Länder. The characteristics of the broadcasting fee are essentially described in the Staatsvertrag über die Regelung des Rundfunkgebührenwesens (State Treaty concerning broadcasting fees; the State Treaty') of 31 August 1981, amended in 1996.

12. Paragraph 2 provides:

(1) The broadcasting fee shall consist of the basic fee and the television fee. Its amount shall be set by the Treaty on financing of broadcasting institutions.

...'

13. Paragraph 4 of the State Treaty provides:

(1) The obligation to pay the broadcasting fee runs from the first day of the month in which possession is taken of a broadcasting receiver.

(2) ...'

14. In turn, Paragraph 7 of the State Treaty governs the distribution of the revenues obtained from the fee:

(1) The income received from the basic fee shall be allocated to the broadcasting institution of the Land and, in the proportion determined in the State Treaty on financing of broadcasting institutions, to Deutschlandradio and to the Landesmedienanstalt (Communications media authority of the Land), in the territory of which a television and radio signal receiver is operational.

(2) The income received from the television fee shall be allocated to the broadcasting institution of the Land and to the extent provided in the Treaty on financing of broadcasting institutions, to the Landesmedienanstalt in the territory of which a television signal receiver is operational, and also to Zweites Deutsches Fernsehen (the second public television channel; ZDF)....

15. The referring court explains that a second Treaty, the Rundfunkfinanzierungsstaatsvertrag (State Treaty on financing of broadcasting institutions; the State Financing Treaty') of 26 November 1996, determines the actual level of the fees, setting their amounts with the consent of the Länder Parliaments.

16. The assessment and calculation of the budgets of the broadcasters is delegated, in accordance with Paragraphs 2 to 6 of the State Financing Treaty, to the Kommission zur Überprüfung und Ermittlung des Finanzbedarfs der Rundfunkanstalten (Commission for the study and assessment of the financial needs of broadcasting institutions; the KEF'), which is independent and which prepares, at least every two years, a report on which the decision as to fees adopted by Parliaments and Governments of the Länder is based (Paragraph 3(5), together with Paragraph 7(2), of the State Financing Treaty).

17. By means of a Regulation of 18 November 1993, on the procedure for the payment of fees of Westdeutscher Rundfunk Köln, adopted pursuant to Paragraph 4(7) of the State Treaty with the consent of the Land Government, the broadcasters of the respective Länder obtain the money constituted by the fees from the citizens through the intermediary Gebühreneinzugszentrale der öffentlich-rechtlichen Rundfunkanstalten in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland (the Fee Collection Agency of the public broadcasters of the German Federal Republic; the GEZ') by the exercise of sovereign powers.

III - The facts of the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

18. The parties which brought an appeal before the Oberlandesgericht of Düsseldorf are the broadcasters of the Länder (the regional broadcasters), the members of the Arbeitsgemeinschaft der Rundfunkanstalten Deutschlands (the association of German regional public broadcasters; the ARD') and the public television organisation ZDF, created by State Treaty of 6 June 1969, and also Deutschlandradio (together: the broadcasters').

19. In 2002 those institutions established the GEZ as an administrative body governed by public law, responsible for collecting and settling the fees in respect of each of the broadcasters of the Länder. Since it lacks legal personality, the GEZ acts in the name of and on behalf of the respective broadcasting institutions.

20. In August 2005, following market research, the GEZ sent a written invitation to 11 businesses to submit binding tenders for the provision of cleaning services in its buildings, and also in the canteen of Westdeutscher Rundfunk (one of the broadcasters included in the ARD) in Cologne, for the period between 1 March 2006 and 31 December 2008, providing for tacit extension from year to year. The value of the contract was estimated at more than EUR 400 000. No Community procedure for the awarding of public contracts compatible with the national provisions and the relevant Directive took place.

21. The company Gesellschaft für Gebäudereinigung und Wartung mbH (GEWA'), the respondent before the Oberlandesgericht of Düsseldorf, and the intervener, Mr Warnecke, responded to the GEZ's invitation to tender with separate offers. The former's offer had the lowest price. By a decision of 9 November 2005, the GEZ's board of directors decided to enter into negotiations with four of the tenderers, including GEWA and the intervener. The decision was also made that the economic feasibility of the each of the offers would be analysed, using the KepnerTregoe method, which allocates specific values in an assessment featuring technical, commercial and risk criteria. In terms of that assessment GEWA's offer was ranked in third place, and the offer of the intervener came first.

22. The GEZ informed GEWA by telephone that it had not been awarded the contract. In a written complaint of 14 November 2001, GEWA accused the GEZ, as the contracting authority, of failure to comply with the rules relating to public contracts, since it had not invited tenders at Community level for the cleaning contract. The GEZ rejected the complaint.

23. GEWA then brought an action, before the Vergabekammer (the court which has jurisdiction over the awarding of public contracts) of the Bezirksregierung (District administration) of Cologne, against the GEZ. GEWA's claim was that the GEZ be ordered to award the cleaning contracts by means of the formal procedure of Part 4 of the GWB or, as an alternative, that there be a new evaluation, subject to the Vergabekammer's ruling on the law.

24. The Court held that the GEZ, as a broadcaster, was a contracting authority within the meaning of Paragraph 98(2) of the GWB, given that such organisations were financed predominantly by means of fees paid by citizens and given that the basic provision of radio and television services, which was patently a public service, was a need in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character.

25. The Court held, in addition, that Article 1(a)(iv) of Directive 92/50 excluded only contracts for the acquisition, development, production or co-production of programmes by broadcasters and contracts for broadcasting time, manifestly different in nature from the service at issue in the main proceedings.

26. By a decision of 13 February 2006, the Vergabekammer upheld GEWA's action and ordered the GEZ and the broadcasters, if they intended to maintain their invitation to tender, to respect the rules relating to awarding of public contracts and the principles of equal treatment and transparency, and accordingly to make a public invitation to tender at the European level.

27. The regional broadcasters appealed against that decision before the administrative courts and sought its annulment on the ground that the applicant's claim against the GEZ was inadmissible and, in any event, unfounded. In their opinion, since they are public broadcasters, they cannot be regarded as contracting authorities within the meaning of Paragraph 98(2) of the GWB, since the burden of financing public broadcasting is met principally out of the fees paid by the customers.

28. They add that the State control required by Paragraph 98(2) of the GWB is lacking, because the State carries out only limited and secondary legal review. Further, the members of the broadcasters' boards of directors represent various social groups. The lack of any majority in their governing bodies eliminates the possibility of any State influence on the awarding of a public contract.

29. GEWA, on the other hand, defends the decision of the Vergabekammer.

30. Since it considers that the outcome of the proceedings depends on the interpretation of Article 1 of Directive 2004/18, the Vergabesenat of the Oberlandesgericht (the Chamber of the Higher Regional Court of Düsseldorf which has jurisdiction over awarding of public contracts) has decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice of the European Communities pursuant to the first paragraph of Article 234 EC:

(1) Where it appears in the first alternative of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, is the term financed... by the State to be interpreted as including indirect financing of certain bodies through the payment of fees by persons who possess broadcasting receivers, taking into account the overriding obligation imposed on the State by constitutional law to ensure the independent financing and the existence of those bodies?

(2) If the first question is answered in the affirmative, is the first alternative of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 to be interpreted as requiring that financing by the State must involve a direct public influence on the awarding of contracts by the body financed by the State?

(3) If the second question is answered in the negative, is the first alternative of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, in the light of Article 1(a)(iv), to be interpreted to mean that the only services excluded from its scope of application are those services specified in the latter provision, and that included within its scope are other services which are ancillary or secondary but which are not specifically related to programming (by argumentum a contrario)?'

IV - The procedure before the Court of Justice

31. The reference for a preliminary ruling was lodged at the Registry of the Court of Justice on 7 August 2006.

32. Written observations have been submitted by GEWA, the broadcasters, the German, Polish and Austrian Governments, the European Free Trade Association (EFTA') Surveillance Authority and the European Commission.

33. At the hearing on 14 June 2007 oral argument was presented by the legal representatives of the broadcasters and of GEWA, and also by agents of the German Government, of the EFTA Surveillance Authority and of the European Commission.

V - Analysis of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

A - Defining the issues

34. Although the referring court has submitted three questions, it appears appropriate to take the first two together, (9) since they both refer to the scope of ratione personae and to the first alternative of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50. (10)

35. The German broadcasters consider that they are not financed from public funds and claim that an analogy can be drawn between the legislation on the public procurement at issue in these proceedings and Articles 87 EC and 88 EC, on State aid, which require funding through State resources'.

36. However, and on this an observation of the Commission is very apt, I do not consider that the distinct character of the two sets of provisions and the objectives pursued by them permit such an audacious comparison, since, while on the matter of subsidies the EC Treaty aims to avoid any unjustified distortion of competition in a specific market caused by the use of public money, on the matter of public tendering for contracts what is at issue is the inclusion of an authority within the concept of contracting authority' for the purpose of determining whether that body must comply with the public tendering procedures.

37. It may therefore be remarked that those two spheres of law are not based on similar reasoning, and accordingly their comparison by analogy is inappropriate.

38. Lastly, although the third question has no relevance to the classification of the German broadcasters as contracting authorities, as they themselves say in their written observations, its analysis is to some extent useful if the answer to the first question is in the affirmative and the answer to the second question in the negative, since, in requesting interpretation of Article 1(a)(iv) of Directive 92/50, the Oberlandesgericht seeks to discover the scope of ratione materiae, which is logical, although it appears obvious.

B - The first and second questions referred for a preliminary ruling

39. The dispute relates to the German system of providing financial resources to broadcasting institutions. It is accordingly necessary to examine the essential characteristics of the system, to clarify whether the revenues of those bodies are State funded' for the purposes of Directive 92/50 and the case-law of the Court of Justice.

1. An obligation to pay governed by rules of public law

40. The broadcasters maintain that payment of the fee is left entirely to the free will of the consumer, who can avoid payment by doing without a receiver. The German Government expands on this idea, its opinion being that there exists an obligation which directly links the consumer and the broadcasters, and which does not affect the State budgets, since the GEZ collects the fee, and the money ingathered does not enter into the Treasury funds. Both therefore reject, in this case, funding by the State'.

41. However, the alternatives of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 are conceived as a supposition dependent on funding the greater part of which is public. If that premiss is admitted, dependency can be inferred, and it is then unnecessary to require other conditions for application such as, for example, that the financing should cause direct State influence on the awarding of public contracts. The context for assessment of that condition is the second alternative, that referring to control, since the degree of control can be measured. (11)

42. Further, that reflection finds support in the distinction applied in University of Cambridge between sums which are disbursed in exchange for a consideration and those which are not, (12) since the intention was to provide guidance to the court which made a reference in that case so that it might determine whether that premiss for the suppositions, namely financing provided for the most part by the State, was satisfied.

43. It follows from the above two points that the second question as it has been presented by the Oberlandesgericht is inappropriate and that it is advantageous to deal with it and the first question together.

44. Returning to the substance of the matter, it is common ground in these proceedings that the fee was established by means of agreements governed by public law (Staatsverträge'), the State Treaty and the State Financing Treaty. (13)

45. It is equally common ground that a Staatsverträge' is a measure governed by the public law of the German legal system. (14)

46. Consequently, the legal relationship which connects the possessor of a radio or television to the broadcasters is governed by public law, taking the form almost of a tax, since the obligation to pay is engendered by the mere possession of a radio or television receiver, a genuine taxable act', characteristic in the charging of any tax, where the television viewer is the inactive subject. It little matters, beyond that, what name the obligation to pay bears under national law. (15)

47. Thus, since both the operation and existence of the broadcasters are bound up with measures of the legislature, the highest form of State control, the reference, in the provision under examination, to financing for the most part by the State as the first alternative is not merely fortuitous but the logical consequence of the fact that economic subordination represents par excellence that close dependency of a body on the State' to which the Court of Justice has referred. (16) Pertinent here is the celebrated phrase of the German jurist von Kirchmann, pointing out that law is not a science, since it requires no more than three words of correction by the legislature' for entire libraries to become waste paper', (17) which highlights moreover the strength of the legislative power.

48. In light of the foregoing, the resources of the broadcasters collected by the GEZ can be categorised as public; additionally, there are those who assign to that collection agency the status of a State institution, notwithstanding its lack of legal personality, adducing its capacity to charge the fee and to collect it by distraint proceedings, (18) powers characteristic of the exercise of functions linked to national sovereignty, which accentuate its public character.

49. However, that character, although it is significant evidence of economic support by the State, is not reliable proof of it, as the broadcasters point out, and it is accordingly appropriate to examine other special features of the German system of subsidy to State broadcasting.

2. Indirect financing

50. The broadcasters and the German Government are at one in the view that Directive 92/50 refers only to payments which are borne directly by the State budget (19) and not to indirect transfers of financial resources from any public institution or another contracting authority. They assert further that in the present case the amount paid by the fee circulates solely between the consumer and the broadcasters, and that there is no intervention by the State, which is not a party to that flow of money.

51. I strongly disagree with such an interpretation.

52. First, the German Government puts emphasis on a simplistic definition of financing as involving delivery', which would comprise only Bank transfers, cheques, bank giros or the physical conveyance of bags of money in an armoured vehicle from the Treasury to the offices of the body in receipt of the subsidy.

53. Leaving aside the fact that there is no substantial difference between the situation in which the State ingathers the fee in order to pass it on to the funded institutions and the situation in which the State assigns the power of collection to them, (20) it must not be forgotten that the State itself establishes the structure for the levying of the fee, since it determines the obligation to pay and fixes the amount to be paid by means of an independent commission, the KEF, subject to ratification and possible amendment by the Länder, who have the last word. (21)

54. Secondly, the first alternative of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 is not restricted to methods of direct financing, since the only qualification of the verb finance' is to be found in the phrase for the most part' (überwiegend', in German; majoritairement' in French; mayoritariamente' in Spanish), and there is no reference to the form, direct or indirect, of implementing the financial contribution to the supported institutions.

55. In conclusion, some support can be inferred from the case-law for the possibility that a State may provide economic support indirectly, since the Court of Justice, in the matter of the second alternative of the third indent of the provision, has recognised indirect control by the State, (22) and that could also be extended to the first alternative, particularly when the three options are equivalent, (23) as the German Government has correctly stated.

3. Financing without consideration

56. In University of Cambridge , referred to above, the Court defined public financing, and introduced a fundamental distinction, namely, whether the institution in receipt of the aid was under an obligation to provide specific consideration, since the criterion for the definition of public financing would be met only if such consideration was lacking. (24)

57. Against that background, and in support of their argument that the consumers pay the broadcasters directly, the broadcasters and the German Government contend that in exchange for that income the customer obtains as specific consideration' the right to receive the images and transmissions broadcast by German public television and radio; they rely on that argument in order to deny that the financing at issue is of a public nature. (25)

58. To rebut that contention, it would be sufficient to make the point that, having regard to their legislative origin, the resources generated by the television fee are not private. The broadcasters and the German Government may respond that, if statutory regulation of the sums paid by the consumer were to determine whether the funds collected were public, the fees of architects, lawyers and doctors would be considered as indirect public expenditure within the meaning of the Directives on public tendering. But, applying their logic, if the assessment of the condition [the first alternative] of public financing were to be concerned only with the private origin of the money, neither the office of trademarks and patents, nor the land ownership records and registers, to mention only some of the institutions where the person affected pays directly for the service which is provided to him by the public authority, nor in brief any tax, would warrant classification as public funds for the purposes of Directive 92/50.

59. Even if one were to maintain that the public funds also were handed over in exchange for the programming broadcast on the State radio and television channels, the argument would have no more weight. The (public) funds paid to the broadcasters neither create nor enhance any dependency similar to that found in normal commercial relationships, since they represent a constitutive measure (26) which permits those institutions to operate, but the State does not expect or receive value in return in the form of specific consideration.

60. In summary, I reject not only the theory that payment of the fee is an obligation borne by the customer in exchange for access to public programming, but also the idea that the State receives back consideration for its economic support in the form of the public broadcasting service.

4. An activity free from competition

61. Although it is irrelevant to define what is meant by body governed by public law... established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character', (27) the Austrian Government and the EFTA Surveillance Authority are correct to incorporate an examination of the competitive position of the broadcasters in the context of that question referred for a preliminary ruling.

62. Taking account of the system for collection of the broadcasting fee, established by a specific piece of legislation with the rights and powers of public law referred to above (collection of monies and possible compulsory enforcement), it cannot validly be sustained that the generation of financial resources designed to satisfy a need of general interest for public programming, which the broadcasters indisputably provide, is independent of market conditions. The monies which the broadcasters receive from the fee do not come from their running a business in rivalry with their competitors, but are paid by the community, (28) and they are not concerned by the use actually made by the consumers of the audiovisual programmes offered to them.

63. That form of sheltered activity in the market frees the broadcasters of any uncertainty as to their income, since they have the State's guarantee, manifested in the budgets drawn up by the KEF. Accordingly, even if the argument that the origin of the funds is private were accepted, the confident assurance which the broadcasters can have in the arrival of their pecuniary resources does not differ from that which they may have when capital is placed directly at their disposal by the State.

64. In response to my question at the hearing whether that guarantee of funding of the broadcasters which the German Government is constitutionally obliged to provide extends to debts contracted by them, (29) the German Government categorically rejected such a possibility. However, as the Commission pointed out, that question never arises, since the KEF regularly checks the broadcasters' pecuniary needs, and comfortably meets them; indeed, the broadcasters are freed from resorting to private credit in the critical situation of insolvency, which reinforces the public character of the subsidy.

5. Other matters for consideration

65. From all of the foregoing it can be concluded that the economic resources which support the work of the broadcasters are public. None the less, some further reflections may be added.

66. Thus, first, it is established case-law that the autonomous concept of Community law of contracting authority' must be given an interpretation which is both functional (30) and broad, (31) taking account of the fact that the aim is to avoid the risk of preference being given to national tenderers or applicants whenever a contract is awarded by contracting authorities, and the possibility that bodies financed or controlled by the State may be guided by considerations other than economic ones. (32)

67. In that context, in response to a question I put to them at the hearing, the broadcasters stated that none of the 11 businesses contacted by the GEZ to submit binding tenders was based in another Member State. That fact alone reveals that the fears of the Community legislature were not unfounded.

68. Secondly, the broadcasters, relying in part on German academic writing, (33) stress the constitutional imperative of impartiality which protects them from any intervention by the public authorities in their management.

69. The excellence of Article 5(1) of the German Constitution, which has succeeded in creating a public broadcasting service of quality, needs no comment, but there is no incompatibility between that imperative and the broadcasters' obligation at issue to respect and comply with the procedures for public tendering laid down by the Community directives.

70. Within the observations submitted on this reference for a preliminary ruling, no argument has been adduced to demonstrate that making the broadcasters subject to the procedures of the Directives might endanger their neutrality. Moreover, the freedom of the press enjoyed by broadcasting and its impartiality have never been criteria by which to judge whether bodies governed by public law are contracting authorities. (34)

71. Lastly, it is common ground that the broadcasters receive the vastly predominant part of their financing from the fee as opposed to other sources of income, in particular advertising, which leads to the conclusion that, taking due notice of the explanations offered, the manner in which the broadcasters meet their costs satisfies the requirement, that they should be financed for the most part by the State, of the first alternative of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50.

6. Response to the first and second questions referred for a preliminary ruling

72. In the light of the foregoing reflections, I invite the Court of Justice to answer the first and second questions of the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf as follows: the indirect financing of bodies through the payment of fees by the possessors of radio or television receivers constitutes funding within the meaning of the provision at issue, analysis of which excludes the addition of other criteria, such as, for example, direct State influence on the awarding of public contracts by the body which the State is financing.

C - The third question referred for a preliminary ruling

73. By this question the referring court seeks to know whether Article 1(a)(iv) of Directive 92/50 includes within its scope services which are ancillary and secondary, and are not specifically related to programming.

74. I have already referred to the usefulness of answering this, if the broadcasters are to be categorised as a contracting authority'. In requesting an interpretation of that provision, the Oberlandesgericht seeks to clarify its scope ratione materiae in order to decide whether services for cleaning the premises of such authorities are excluded.

75. The wording of the provision is so clear that it is sufficient to turn to the adage in claris non fit interpretatio. The provision exempts from the requirement of compliance with public tendering procedures contracts closely bound up with the content of radio and television programmes (acquisition, development, production, coproduction and those related to obtaining broadcasting time).

76. Since the above is an exception to the general rule, a strict interpretation is required, to the effect that any other activity ancillary to those expressly listed must be carried out within a contract governed by law, after a public invitation of tenders.

77. That conclusion appears to be supported by the history of the Community legislation, as emerges from comparison of the respective recitals of the grounds of Directives 92/50 and 2004/18. Thus, the 25th recital in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 has added detail to the succinct 11th recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50, including other preparatory services, such as those relating to scripts or artistic performances necessary for the production of the programme'. On the other hand, it does not extend to supply of technical equipment necessary' to the production of those programmes.

78. Consequently, if specialised technical support cannot find refuge in the exception, nor can cleaning services for the broadcasters' buildings.

79. In brief, both grammatical and textual analysis militate in favour of using the argumentum a contrario when dealing with the scope ratione materiae of Directive 92/50 in relation to the contracts concluded with the German broadcasters.

80. I will allow myself a final comment, since it is within that provision that the constitutional guarantee of the impartiality of the German broadcasters is found to be respected, rather than in the way in which they are financed; (35) accordingly the Community legislature has provided for the programming exception in order to take account of social and cultural considerations, as is stated in the said 25th recital in the preamble to Directive 2004/18.

VI - Conclusion

81. In accordance with the foregoing, I propose that the Court of Justice answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Oberlandesgericht of Düsseldorf in the following terms:

(1) On a proper construction of the first alternative of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, the requirement of financing by the State' extends to indirect financing of certain organisations through the payment of fees by those persons who possess broadcasting receivers, and it may not be made subject to other conditions, such as, for example, that the State have a direct influence on the awarding of public contracts by the organisation which it finances.

(2) Article 1(a)(iv) of Directive 92/50 excludes from its scope of application only those services which it specifies, and includes all others which are ancillary and secondary, which are not specific to programming.

Lämmerzahl GmbH v Freie Hansestadt Bremen. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht in Bremen - Germany. Public contracts - Directive 89/665/EEC - Review procedures concerning the award of public contracts - Limitation period - Principle of effectiveness. Case C-241/06.

In Case C241/06,

REFERENCE to the Court under Article 234 EC by the Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht in Bremen (Germany), made by decision of 18 May 2006, received at the Court on 30 May 2006, in the proceedings

Lämmerzahl GmbH

v

Freie Hansestadt Bremen,

THE COURT (Third Chamber),

composed of A. Rosas, President of the Chamber, J.N. Cunha Rodrigues (Rapporteur), J. Kluka, P. Lindh and A. Arabadjiev, Judges,

Advocate General: E. Sharpston,

Registrar: J. Swedenborg, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 28 March 2007,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

- Lämmerzahl GmbH, by A. Kus, Rechtsanwalt,

- the Freie Hansestadt Bremen, by W. Dierks and J. van Dyk, Rechtsanwälte,

- the Republic of Lithuania, by D. Kriauinas, acting as Agent,

- the Republic of Austria, by M. Fruhmann, acting as Agent,

- the Commission of the European Communities, by X. Lewis and B. Schima, acting as Agents, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 7 June 2007,

gives the following

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby rules:

1. In accordance with Article 9(4) of and Annex IV to Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001, the contract notice concerning a contract within the scope of that directive must state the total quantity or scope of that contract. The absence of such an indication must be capable of being reviewed under Article 1(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts.

2. Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 92/50, particularly Article 1(1) and (3), precludes a limitation period laid down by national law from being applied in such a way that a tenderer is refused access to a review concerning the choice of procedure for awarding a public contract or the estimate of the value of that contract, where the contracting authority has not clearly stated the total quantity or scope of the contract to the person concerned. Those provisions of the directive also preclude such a rule from being extended generally to cover the review of decisions of the contracting authority, including those occurring in stages of an award procedure after the end of that limitation period.

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) (Directive 89/665').

2. The reference was made in the context of proceedings between Lämmerzahl GmbH (Lämmerzahl') and the Freie Hansestadt Bremen (Free Hanseatic City of Bremen, Germany) (Bremen') concerning a procedure for the award of a public contract.

Legal context

Community law

3. Article 1 of Directive 89/665 provides:

1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

4. Under Article 5(1) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), as amended by Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001 (OJ 2001 L 285, p. 1) (Directive 93/36'):

1. (a) Titles II, III and IV and Articles 6 and 7 shall apply to public supply contracts awarded by:

(i) the contracting authorities referred to in Article 1(b),... where the estimated value net of value-added tax (VAT) is not less than the equivalent in [euros] of 200 000 special drawing rights (SDRs);

(b) This Directive shall apply to public supply contracts whose estimated value equals or exceeds the threshold concerned at the time of publication of the notice in accordance with Article 9(2).

...'

5. According to the first sentence of Article 9(4) under Title III of Directive 93/36:

The notices shall be drawn up in accordance with the models given in Annex IV and shall specify the information requested in those models.'

6. The model contract notice in Annex IV to Directive 93/36 includes the following references:

II.2) Quantity or scope of the contract

II.2.1) Total quantity or scope (including all lots and options, if applicable)

...

II.2.2) Options (if applicable). Description and time when they may be exercised (if possible)

...

II.3) Duration of the contract or time-limit for completion

Either : Period in month/s... and/or days... (from the date of award of the contract)

Or: Starting... and/or ending... (dd/mm/yyyy).'

7. Article 10(1) and (1a) of Directive 93/36 provides:

1. In open procedures the time-limit for the receipt of tenders, fixed by the contracting authorities, shall not be less than 52 days from the date of dispatch of the notice.

1a. The time-limit for receipt of tenders laid down in paragraph 1 may be replaced by a period sufficiently long to permit responsive tendering, which, as a general rule, shall be not less than 36 days and in any case not less than 22 days, from the date on which the contract notice was dispatched, if the contracting authorities have sent the indicative notice provided for in Article 9(1), drafted in accordance with the model in Annex IV A (Prior information), to the Official Journal of the European Communities within a minimum of 52 days and a maximum of 12 months before the date on which the contract notice provided for in Article 9(2) was dispatched to the Official Journal of the European Communities , provided that the indicative notice contained, in addition, at least as much of the information referred to in the model notice in Annex IV B (Open procedure) as was available at the time of publication of the notice.'

National law

8. Paragraph 100(1) of the Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen (Law against restrictions on competition, the GWB') provides:

This part [of the GWB] applies only to contracts which reach or exceed the values set out in the regulations provided for by Paragraph 127 (threshold values).'

9. Paragraph 107(3) of the GWB provides:

The application is inadmissible where the applicant was already aware during the award procedure of the alleged infringement of the procurement rules and did not immediately complain to the awarding authority. The application is also inadmissible where no complaint is raised about infringements of the procurement rules that are identifiable on the basis of the contract notice with the awarding authority by, at the latest, the end of the period stipulated in the contract notice for bidding or for applications to participate in the award procedure.'

10. Paragraph 127(1) of the GWB provides:

The Federal Government, with the agreement of the Bundesrat, may adopt rules ... for transposing into German law the threshold values of European Community directives relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts.'

11. Paragraph 2(3) of the Vergabeverordnung (Public procurement regulation), in the version in force at the date of award of the public contract at issue in the main proceedings, provided:

The threshold amount is:

for all other supply contracts or service contracts: EUR 200 000.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the order for reference

12. In March 2005 Bremen issued a national call for tenders regarding standard software for the computerised handling of cases in the adult social service and economic aid field.

13. The time-limit for submission of tenders stated in the contract notice expired on 12 April 2005 at 3p.m.

14. The contract notice relating to that call for tenders did not contain any indication of the estimated value of the contract or of its quantity or scope.

15. The contract notice stated that the contract documents concerning the contract at issue in the main proceedings could be downloaded from Bremen's internet site, the address of which it provided. Those contract documents included the following statement, under the heading Quantities':

Approximately 200 employees in the economic aid area and approximately 45 employees in adult social services, distributed in a decentralised way in 6 social centres, and approximately 65 employees in the central units will work with the system.'

16. However, the application form provided by Bremen for tenderers to submit their prices did not include the total number of licences sought and merely required the unit price of each licence to be given.

17. In response to Lämmerzahl's initial request, Bremen, by letter of 24 March 2005, gave Lämmerzahl certain information, without however indicating the number of licences to be acquired.

18. By a further enquiry Lämmerzahl asked Bremen to indicate to it whether the contracting authority sought to acquire 310 licences, a number arrived at by adding up the numbers stated in the contract documents, namely 200, 45 and 65, and whether a tender in figures should be drawn up relating to the total number of licences. By letter of 6 April 2005, Bremen replied to Lämmerzahl that it should enter the overall price (total price of the costs of supply, costs of maintenance and services)'.

19. On 8 April 2005, Lämmerzahl submitted a tender in the sum of EUR 691 940 gross or EUR 603 500 net.

20. By letter of 6 July 2005, Bremen informed Lämmerzahl that its tender had not been successful because comparison of the tenders submitted had shown that it was not the most economically advantageous.

21. On 14 July 2005, Lämmerzahl sent a letter to the contracting authority in which it claimed, first, that no European call for tenders had been organised and, secondly, that the software tests which it had proposed had not been carried out correctly.

22. On 21 July 2005, Lämmerzahl applied to the Vergabekammer der Freien Hansestadt Bremen (Public Procurement Board of the Free Hanseatic City of Bremen) for a review procedure, claiming that a European tender should have been organised since the threshold of EUR 200 000 had been exceeded. It maintained that it had come to that conclusion only after obtaining legal advice on 14 July 2005 and that, for that reason, its application should be treated as having been brought within the time-limit. As regards the substance, it alleged that the testing procedure had not been properly carried out by the contracting authority.

23. By decision of 2 August 2005, the Vergabekammer der Freien Hansestadt Bremen dismissed the application for review as inadmissible. It stated that, even if the threshold figure had been exceeded, the application was inadmissible under the second sentence of Paragraph 107(3) of the GWB, as Lämmerzahl had been in a position to identify the breach complained of in its application from the contract notice. The Vergabekammer also held that, since the application was out of time, Lämmerzahl was also precluded from seeking a remedy from the review bodies with jurisdiction for public procurement.

24. Lämmerzahl complained to the Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht in Bremen (Hanseatic Higher Regional Court, Bremen). In support of its appeal, it submitted that, contrary to the position adopted by the Vergabekammer der Freien Hansestadt Bremen, it could not be ascertained from the contract notice that the procedure chosen was contrary to the law on the award of public contracts. Bremen replied that, in view of its experience, Lämmerzahl should have noticed that the threshold had been exceeded. Lämmerzahl also repeated its allegation that the testing procedure had been inadequate and submitted that the tender accepted contained an unlawful combined costing arrangement, which should have led to the exclusion of that tender. Bremen disputed those two allegations.

25. Lämmerzahl applied for the suspensory effect of the appeal to be extended pending delivery of judgment on the substance. By decision of 7 November 2005, the Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht in Bremen rejected that application as unfounded. In that decision, it concurred with the position of the Vergabekammer der Freien Hansestadt Bremen, according to which, in applying the time-bar rule provided for in the second sentence of Article 107(3) of the GWB, Lämmerzahl was to be treated as if the value of the contract at issue was less than the threshold figure of EUR 200 000, which deprived Lämmerzahl of the right to seek a review.

26. Bremen then awarded the contract to Prosoz Herten GmbH, with which it concluded a contract on 6 and 9 March 2006.

27. In the order for reference, the Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht in Bremen does not state the value of the contract concluded between Bremen and Prosoz Herten GmbH, but indicates that all the tenderers' bids for the first contract option were over EUR 200 000 (between EUR 232 452.80 and EUR 887 300, or EUR 3 218 000) and for the second option only one of the four was under the threshold figure with a tender of EUR 134 050 (excluding licence costs), while the other tenders varied between EUR 210 252.80 and EUR 907 300, or EUR 2 774 800 ...'.

28. Before the Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht in Bremen, Lämmerzahl maintained that the position adopted by that court in its decision of 7 November 2005 made access to legal remedies excessively difficult, contrary to Directive 89/665.

29. That court states in its order for reference that the specific problem in the case in the main proceedings is the fact that, in the case of breaches of public procurement law which directly affect the value of the contract and, accordingly, the threshold figure, the time-limit applied under the second sentence of Article 107(3) of the GWB leads, according to the case-law of the Kammergericht (Berlin Court of Appeal) which it approved and expanded in its decision of 7 November 2005, to a general curtailment of legal protection.

30. According to the Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht in Bremen, it follows that, if the estimated contract price is, from the outset, determined unlawfully at too low a level, the person against whom the time-bar is applied loses not only the right to challenge the choice of procedure or the estimate of the contract price, but also the right to be heard with regard to all other infringements which, if considered in isolation, would not be subject to the effects of being out of time and could be reviewed if the contracting authority had proceeded in accordance with the rules.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

31. The Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht in Bremen is uncertain whether such an application of the national time-bar rules undermines the practical effectiveness of Directive 89/665, and in particular whether it is compatible with Article 1 of that directive.

32. In those circumstances, the Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht in Bremen decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Is it compatible with Directive 89/665, in particular Article 1(1) and (3), for a tenderer to be generally barred from gaining access to a review of a contracting authority's decision to award public contracts because the tenderer through its own fault did not raise an irregularity in the award procedure within the time-limit laid down for that purpose in national law, where the irregularity relates

(a) to the form of invitation to tender selected

or

(b) to the correctness of the determination of the contract price (the estimate is obviously wrong or the method of determination is not sufficiently transparent) and, on the basis of the contract price as correctly determined or to be determined, it would be possible to review other irregularities in the award procedure that - considered in isolation - would not be time-barred?

(2) Should the details in a tender notice relevant to determination of the contract price be subject to any special requirements so as to enable the conclusion to be drawn from irregularities relating to the estimated contract price that legal protection is generally excluded even if the contract price correctly estimated or to be estimated exceeds the relevant threshold value?'

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

The second question

33. By its second question, which it is appropriate to examine first, the national court asks, essentially, what requirements are imposed by Community law regarding, first, the information as to the estimated value of a public contract which must appear in the contract notice and, second, the remedies provided for should that information not be provided.

Arguments of the parties

34. Lämmerzahl does not specifically indicate precisely what information as to the value of the contract must appear in the contract notice, but it does insist that, for the purpose of applying a time-limit for seeking review, information cannot be relied on against the person concerned which the contracting authority did not included in the contract notice.

35. The Lithuanian Government is of the view that the contracting authority is required to provide in the contract notice all information concerning the amount of the contract, enabling tenderers objectively to determine whether the value of the contract is above or below the threshold provided for by the Community directives on public procurement.

36. Following similar reasoning, the Commission of the European Communities submits that the conditions for a limitation period to begin to run, to which the contract notice is subject under national legislation, must be applied by the national court in such as way that it is not rendered impossible or excessively difficult for the person concerned to exercise the rights conferred on him by Directive 89/665.

37. Contrary to this reasoning, Bremen and the Austrian Government consider that the Community directives do not require the estimated value of the contract to be stated in the contract notice, such a reference not being desirable from the point of view of the proper working of competition.

Findings of the Court

38. According to the material in the case-file, it appears that the contract at issue in the main proceedings is, if not a supply contract, certainly a mixed supply contract and service contract in which the value of the supply predominates. In that event, the relevant provisions are those of the Community directives on public supply contracts, not those on public service contracts.

39. For public supply contracts within the scope of Directive 93/36, the content of the contract notice was governed at the material time by the first sentence of Article 9(4) of and Annex IV to Directive 93/36, those provisions having been replaced subsequently by Article 36(1) of and Annex VII A to Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114) and by Annex II to Commission Regulation (EC) No 1564/2005 of 7 September 2005 establishing standard forms for the publication of notices in the framework of public procurement procedures pursuant to Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council (OJ 2005 L 257, p. 1).

40. The first sentence of Article 9(4) of Directive 93/36 requires that the notices be drawn up in accordance with the models given in Annex IV to that directive and specify the information requested in those models.

41. The model contract notice in Annex IV provides for reference to the total quantity or scope of the contract (including all lots and options, if applicable).

42. Consequently, a contract notice concerning a public supply contract within the scope of Directive 93/36 must, in accordance with that directive, state the total quantity or scope of the contract to which it relates.

43. If, in a specific case, that requirement is not fulfilled, there is an infringement of Community law in the field of public procurement within the meaning of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, such as to give rise to a right of review in accordance with that provision.

44. Consequently, the answer to the second question must be that, in accordance with Article 9(4) of and Annex IV to Directive 93/36, the contract notice concerning a contract within the scope of that directive must state the total quantity or scope of that contract. The absence of such an indication must be capable of being reviewed under Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665.

The first question

45. By its first question, the national court seeks essentially to resolve two problems. First, it asks under what conditions does Community law permit national law to impose a time-limit for applications for review concerning the choice of procedure for awarding a public contract or the estimate of the value of the contract, in other words, acts which occur in the first stages of an award procedure. Second, in the event that such a time-bar rule is permitted, that court wishes to ascertain whether Community law permits it to be extended generally to cover remedies against decisions of the contracting authority, including those occurring in later stages of an award procedure.

Arguments of the parties

46. Lämmerzahl submits that Article 107(3) of the GWB imposes time-limits only for infringements which are identifiable on the basis of the contract notice', a concept which, according to it, should be interpreted strictly. It submits that, in the case in the main proceedings, it was impossible to ascertain from the information in the contract notice that the estimated value of the contract exceeded the threshold in the Community directives and, accordingly, that the national award procedure had been chosen wrongly. That its claim was held to be time-barred, even though it could not have ascertained the existence of an infringement of the Community rules on the information provided by the contracting authority, deprived it of an effective remedy and was contrary to Directive 89/665.

47. The Lithuanian Government states likewise that, in accordance with that directive, the persons concerned must be guaranteed an effective remedy. Consequently, where those persons have not received objective and complete information concerning the volume of the public contract at issue, the limitation period can only start to run from the time when they knew or could have known that the procedure chosen was inappropriate. If there is any doubt as to whether the threshold for the application of the Community directives has been reached, Directive 89/665 should be applied.

48. The Austrian Government and the Commission consider that national rules such as those at issue in the main proceedings comply with Directive 89/665, subject to certain conditions. The Austrian Government is of the view that those rules are compatible with that directive only in so far as the limitation period they determine is reasonable and the contracting authority has not, by its conduct, rendered impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of the right to a remedy. For its part, the Commission contends that such national rules are compatible with Community law provided that the tenderer has an effective remedy which allows him to bring a legal action against any infringement of the fundamental rules flowing from the EC Treaty.

49. Bremen is of the view that Directive 89/665, as interpreted by the Court of Justice, permits Member States to determine limitation periods which apply to disputes concerning procedures for the award of public contracts. Article 107(3) of the GWB complies with that directive, even where the contracting authority has given incorrect indications for the purpose of determining the value of the contract. According to Bremen, if it is possible for the tenderer to arrive at a higher estimate of the contract, on the basis of information appearing in the contract notice or even owing to the absence of relevant information, and he does not make a complaint, that does not mean that his right to seek a remedy is excluded in principle.

Findings of the Court

50. As regards the first aspect of that question, it should be pointed out that Directive 89/665 does not preclude national legislation which provides that any application for review of a contracting authority's decision must be commenced within a time-limit laid down to that effect and that any irregularity in the award procedure relied upon in support of such application must be raised within the same period, if it is not to be out of time, with the result that, when that period has passed, it is no longer possible to challenge such a decision or to raise such an irregularity, provided that the time-limit in question is reasonable (Case C470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I11617, paragraph 79, and Case C327/00 Santex [2003] ECR I1877, paragraph 50).

51. That position is based on the consideration that the full implementation of the objective sought by Directive 89/665 would be undermined if candidates and tenderers were allowed to invoke, at any stage of the award procedure, infringements of the rules of public procurement, thus obliging the contracting authority to restart the entire procedure in order to correct such infringements (Universale-Bau , paragraph 75).

52. On the other hand, the national time-limits for bringing an action, including the detailed rules for their application, should not in themselves be such as to render virtually impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of any rights which the person concerned derives from Community law (Santex , paragraph 55; see also, to that effect, Universale-Bau , paragraph 73).

53. It is therefore necessary to examine whether the application of a time-bar rule such as that at issue in the main proceedings may be considered as being reasonable or, on the contrary, as rendering virtually impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of the rights which the person concerned derives from Community law.

54. It is clear from the case-file that, by repeated questions and its own initiatives, Lämmerzahl sought to confirm its conclusion, made on the basis of the tender documentation and with a degree of uncertainty, that the contract concerned 310 licences and training events. However, even the last response from the contracting authority, namely its letter of 6 April 2005, was not very clear, ambiguous and evasive in that regard.

55. A contract notice lacking any information as to the estimated value of the contract, followed by evasive conduct by the contracting authority in response to the questions of a potential tenderer such as that at issue in the main proceedings, must be considered, in view of the existence of a limitation period, as rendering excessively difficult the exercise by the tenderer concerned of the rights conferred on him by Community law (see, to that effect, Santex , paragraph 61).

56. It follows that, even if a national time-bar rule, such as that in the second sentence of Article 107(3) of the GWB, may in principle be considered to comply with Community law, its application to a tenderer in circumstances such as those at issue in the main proceedings does not satisfy the requirement of effectiveness under Directive 89/665.

57. It must be concluded that Directive 89/665, particularly Article 1(1) and (3), precludes a time-bar rule laid down by national law being applied in such as way that a tenderer is refused access to review concerning the choice of procedure for awarding a public contract or the estimate of the value of the contract, where the contracting authority has not clearly stated the total quantity or scope of the contract to the person concerned.

58. With regard to the second aspect of the first question, it must be noted that the second sentence of Article 107(3) of the GWB fixes as the end of the limitation period the expiry of the period for bidding or for applying to participate in the award procedure. Accordingly, it appears that that provision should be applied only to those irregularities capable of being identified before the expiry of those time-limits. Such irregularities may include an incorrect estimate of the value of the contract or a wrong choice of the procedure for the award of the contract. Conversely, they cannot relate to situations which by definition can only arise at later stages of the procedure for the award of the contract.

59. In the case at issue in the main proceedings, the applicant, in addition to lack of information concerning the value of the contract and wrong choice of the award procedure, relies on irregularities affecting the financial presentation of the successful tender and the tests carried out on the software proposed. However, an irregularity in the financial presentation of a tender can be discovered only after the opening of the envelopes containing the tenders. The same consideration applies to the tests of the software proposed. Irregularities of that type can therefore occur only after the limitation period fixed by a rule such as that at issue in the main proceedings has expired.

60. It is clear from the order for reference that, in its decision of 7 November 2005, the Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht in Bremen applied the time-bar rule at issue in the main proceedings in such a way as to extend it to all decisions capable of being taken by the contracting authority throughout the procedure for the award of a public contract.

61. Such an application of that time-bar rule makes it virtually impossible for the person concerned to exercise the rights accorded him by Community law in respect of the irregularities which can occur only after the expiry of the time-limit for submitting tenders. Accordingly, it is contrary to Directive 89/665, in particular Article 1(1) and (3).

62. When applying domestic law the national court must, as far as is at all possible, interpret it in a way which accords with the objective of Directive 89/665 (see, to that effect, Santex , paragraphs 62 and 63).

63. Where an interpretation in accordance with the objective of Directive 89/665 is not possible, the national court must refrain from applying provisions of national law which are at variance with that directive (Case 106/77 Simmenthal [1978] ECR 629, paragraph 24, and Santex , paragraph 64). Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 is unconditional and sufficiently precise to be relied on against a contracting authority (see, to that effect, Case C15/04 Koppensteiner [2005] ECR I4855, paragraph 38).

64. In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the first question must be that Directive 89/665, particularly Article 1(1) and (3), precludes a limitation period laid down by national law from being applied in such a way that a tenderer is refused access to a review concerning the choice of procedure for awarding a public contract or the estimate of the value of that contract, where the contracting authority has not clearly stated the total quantity or scope of the contract to the person concerned. Those provisions of the directive also preclude such a rule from being extended generally to cover the review of decisions of the contracting authority, including those occurring in stages of an award procedure after the end of that limitation period.

Costs

65. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the deci sion on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

Case C-241/06

v

Freie Hansestadt Bremen

(Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht in Bremen)

(Public contracts – Directive 89/665/EEC – Review procedures concerning the award of public contracts – Limitation period – Principle of effectiveness)

Summary of the Judgment

1. Approximation of laws – Procedures for the award of public supply contracts – Directive 93/36 – Information to be contained in the contract notice

(Council Directives 89/665, Art. 1(1), and 93/36, Art. 9(4) and Annex IV)

2. Approximation of laws – Review procedures in respect of the award of public supply and public works contracts – Directive 89/665 – Time-limit for challenging decisions by the contracting authorities and for complaining of irregularities

(Council Directive 89/665, Art. 1(1) and (3))

3. Approximation of laws – Review procedures in respect of the award of public supply and public works contracts – Directive 89/665 – Time-limit for challenging decisions by the contracting authorities and for complaining of irregularities

(Council Directive 89/665, Art. 1(1) and (3))

1. In accordance with Article 9(4) of and Annex IV to Directive 93/36 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by Directive 2001/78, the contract notice concerning a contract within the scope of that directive must state the total quantity or scope of that contract. The absence of such an indication must be capable of being reviewed under Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts.

(see para. 44, operative part 1)

2. Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 92/50, particularly Article 1(1) and (3) thereof, precludes a limitation period laid down by national law from being applied in such a way that a tenderer is refused access to a review concerning the choice of procedure for awarding a public contract or the estimate of the value of that contract, where the contracting authority has not clearly stated the total quantity or scope of the contract to the person concerned.

A contract notice lacking any information as to the estimated value of the contract, followed by evasive conduct by the contracting authority in response to the questions of a potential tenderer must be considered, in view of the existence of a limitation period, as rendering excessively difficult the exercise by the tenderer concerned of the rights conferred on him by Community law. Even if a national limitation rule may in principle be considered to comply with Community law, its application to a tenderer in such circumstances does not satisfy the requirement of effectiveness under Directive 89/665.

3. Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 92/50, particularly Article 1(1) and (3) thereof, precludes a limitation period laid down by national law for actions concerning the choice of procedure for awarding a public contract or the estimate of the value of that contract from being extended generally to cover the review of decisions of the contracting authority, including those occurring in stages of an award procedure after the end of that limitation period.

To apply a rule fixing as the end of the limitation period the expiry of the period for bidding or for applying to participate, in such a way as to extend it to all decisions capable of being taken by the contracting authority throughout the procedure for the award of a public contract, makes it virtually impossible for the person concerned to exercise the rights accorded him by Community law in respect of the irregularities which can occur only after the expiry of the time-limit for submitting tenders, and is accordingly contrary to Directive 89/665.

(see paras 45, 58, 60-61, 64, operative part 2)

Reference for a preliminary ruling - Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht - Interpretation of Article 1(1) and (3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) - No right to review of a decision of the contracting authority awarding a contract the estimated value of which does not exceed EUR 200 000 - All objections time-barred as a result of a wrong estimate of the contract price at the time of publication of the notice of invitation to tender.

Operative part of the judgment

In accordance with Article 9(4) of and Annex IV to Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001, the contract notice concerning a contract within the scope of that directive must state the total quantity or scope of that contract. The absence of such an indication must be capable of being reviewed under Article 1(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts;

Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 92/50, particularly Article 1(1) and (3), precludes a limitation period laid down by national law from being applied in such a way that a tenderer is refused access to a review concerning the choice of procedure for awarding a public contract or the estimate of the value of that contract, where the contracting authority has not clearly stated the total quantity or scope of the contract to the person concerned. Those provisions of the directive also preclude such a rule from being extended generally to cover the review of decisions of the contracting authority, including those occurring in stages of an award procedure after the end of that limitation period.

[1] - OJ C 212, 2.9.2006.

Opinion of Advocate General Sharpston delivered on 7 June 2007. Lämmerzahl GmbH v Freie Hansestadt Bremen. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht in Bremen - Germany. Public contracts - Directive 89/665/EEC - Review procedures concerning the award of public contracts - Limitation period - Principle of effectiveness. Case C-241/06.

1. The present reference from the Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht (Hanseatic Higher Regional Court) in Bremen, Germany, essentially asks the Court whether Community law precludes a tenderer from being generally excluded from the right under Directive 89/665 (2) to apply for a review of tender decisions on the ground that it has not challenged, within the time-limit set by national law, a decision which has incorrectly placed the tendering procedure outside the scope of that directive.

2. The claimant in the main proceedings tendered unsuccessfully for a software contract which had been put out to tender under the national procedure. It then complained, first, that there should have been a Community-wide tendering procedure because the relevant threshold value had been exceeded and, second, that the subsequent award decision was unlawful. The complaints were declared inadmissible on the ground that the time-limit for challenging the choice of procedure had expired, so that the review procedure for public contracts falling within the scope of Community law was not available.

3. The reference invites the Court to examine further the circumstances in which the imposition of time-limits for challenging decisions in public tendering procedures may compromise the principle of effectiveness which underlies Directive 89/665.

Relevant legislation

Directive 89/665

4. Directive 89/665 seeks to ensure that the procedures for the award of public works, supply and service contracts laid down in the relevant Community directives are applied effectively. It does this by providing for a system of review procedures and remedies for infringements.

5. The following recitals in the preamble to Directive 89/665 are relevant:

[1] ... Community Directives on public procurement, in particular ... Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, [(3)]... do not contain any specific provisions ensuring their effective application;

[2] ... [T]he existing arrangements at both national and Community levels for ensuring their application are not always adequate to ensure compliance with the relevant Community provisions particularly at a stage when infringements can be corrected;

[3] ... [T]he opening-up of public procurement to Community competition necessitates a substantial increase in the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination; ... for it to have tangible effects, effective and rapid remedies must be available in the case of infringements of Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law;

[4] ...

[5] ... [T]he short duration of the procedures means that the aforementioned infringements need to be dealt with urgently;

...'

6. Article 1 of Directive 89/665 provides:

1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives ... 77/62/EEC, and 92/50/EEC, (4) decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles, and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or nation[al] rules implementing that law.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

2. ...

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply... contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

7. Article 2 of Directive 89/665 deals with the remedies that should be available in respect of the reviews. Article 2(7) states that [t]he Member States shall ensure that decisions taken by bodies responsible for review procedures can be effectively enforced'.

Directive 93/36 (5)

8. Article 10 of Directive 93/36 lays down, inter alia, the minimum time-limits in open procedures for the receipt of tenders valued above the threshold for applying Community rules. Article 10(1) states that such procedures must remain open for at least 52 days from the sending of the tender notice. That period may be reduced, as a general rule, to a minimum of 36 days, but under no circumstances to less than 22 days, if a prior information notice was published under conditions set out in Article 10(1a).

German legislation (6)

9. Part four of the German Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen (Law Against Restrictions on Competition) (GWB') covers the award of public contracts. (7) Paragraph 100(1) states that [t]his part applies only to contracts which reach or exceed the values set out in the regulations provided for by paragraph 127 (threshold values).' (8)

10. Paragraph 107 of the GWB covers applications for review to the procurement board. Paragraph 107(3) of the GWB sets out the time-limits for applying to the procurement board for review of alleged infringements of the procurement rules and states:

The application is inadmissible where the applicant was already aware during the award procedure of the alleged infringement of the procurement rules and did not immediately complain to the awarding authority. The application is also inadmissible where no complaint is raised about infringements of the procurement rules that are identifiable (9) on the basis of the tender notice with the awarding authority by, at the latest, the end of the period stipulated in the tender notice for bidding or for applications to participate in the award procedure.'

11. The Vergabeverordnung (Public Procurement Regulation) (VgV') (10) contains inter alia the threshold values referred to in Paragraph 127(1) of the GWB. (11) At the material time Paragraph 2 of the VgV provided:

The threshold amount is:

3. for all other supply or service contracts: EUR 200 000.'

12. Part A of the Verdingungsordnung für Leistungen (Rules for the Placing of Public Supply and Service Contracts by Tender) (VOL/A') (12) contains detailed rules for awarding supply and service contracts by tender. Paragraph 17 relates inter alia to the contents of the tender notice.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Paragraph 17(1)(2) provides:

The tender notice should at least contain the following details:

...

(c) Nature and scope of the goods or services to be supplied...' (13)

The main proceedings and the reference made

13. On or before 21 March 2005 the defendant in the main proceedings, the Free Hanseatic City of Bremen (Bremen'), issued a national invitation to tender under the VOL/A' for a software contract. (14) The closing date was 12 April 2005. The tender notice contained no quantification of the scope or value of the contract. Under the heading Menge und Umfang' (volume and scope) it stated:

On behalf of the Senator for Employment, Women, Health, Youth and Social Affairs in Bremen, standard software is sought for SGB XII (social service - Adult and Economic Aid) for PC-based case handling to meet the requirements laid down in the tender documents. The tender documents can be downloaded free of charge from www.vergabe.bremen.de. ...'

14. Lämmerzahl GmbH (Lämmerzahl'), the claimant in the main proceedings, is a limited company specialising in software for public authorities. It duly obtained the tender documents, which included the following three documents:

15. First, the document entitled price sheet/price breakdown 1' (the price document') asked tenderers to provide, under the section headed licence contract', unit prices for full licences according to various possible ranges of quantities to be supplied (11-50, 51-100, 101-200, 201-500 licences). There was an alternative request for unit-pricing for read-only licences (1-5, 6-10, 11-50, 51-100 licences). As a further alternative, a price was requested for a Landeslizenz' (State licence). (15) The section headed service contract' asked tenderers to quote for training approximately 300 employees and 10 administrators. Nowhere did the document state the actual number of licences required.

16. Second, the document setting out the object of the tender invitation (the object document') stated that approximately 200 employees in the economic aid area, 45 in social services and 65 in the central units would work with the software system.

17. Third, the table of goods and services' indicated a minimum or estimated volume' of one unit. Again, it failed to indicate the total number of licences required.

18. Lämmerzahl raised four questions relating to the tender documents, to which Bremen replied by letter on 24 March 2005. At that stage, Lämmerzahl did not ask about the number of licences, or the volume or value of the contract.

19. Lämmerzahl then sent Bremen an e-mail on 4 April 2005 requesting further clarification of the tender documents. Its first question asked whether the total prices requested in the offer document and the table of goods and services related to the sum of the prices in the price sheet for the licence contract based on 310 licences (the 310 employees specified in the [object document])' or whether other prices (e.g. maintenance and service costs) should be included. Three of the other questions in Lämmerzahl's e-mail referred to the above-mentioned 310 licences'.

20. Bremen replied by letter on 6 April 2005. In answer to the first question it said that the overall tender price (total price of licence costs, maintenance costs and services) should be entered in the offer document. None of Bremen's answers mentioned or expressly commented on the figure of 310 licences which Lämmerzahl had included in its questions.

21. Lämmerzahl then submitted a tender based on 310 licences, together with training and maintenance,

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

for EUR 603 500 net. It was selected for the testing stage along with a rival tenderer, PROSOZ Herten GmbH (PROSOZ').

22. On 6 July 2005 Bremen wrote to Lämmerzahl informing it that it had been unsuccessful because its offer had not been the most economically advantageous.

23. On 14 July 2005 Lämmerzahl sent a written complaint to Bremen and on 21 July 2005 submitted an application for a procurement review. It stated that it had discovered from taking legal advice on 14 July 2005 that Bremen should have issued a Community-wide, rather than a national, invitation to tender because the value of the contract exceeded the EUR 200 000 threshold. It also alleged that its software had not been properly tested.

24. On 2 August 2005 the Third Procurement Board of the City of Bremen (the Board') dismissed the application. It stated that, even if the threshold figure had been exceeded and the wrong tendering procedure had thus been used, such an irregularity was identifiable from the tender invitation. Accordingly, Lämmerzahl's complaints were out of time under Paragraph 107(3), second sentence, of the GWB.

25. Lämmerzahl appealed to the referring court. First, it claimed the irregularity in the choice of procedure had not been identifiable from the tender notice. Second, it repeated its objection to the testing and selection procedure, claiming that the PROSOZ tender was manifestly incomplete and contained an unlawful costing arrangement which should have led to its exclusion (the substantive complaints').

26. By an interim decision of 7 November 2005, the referring court refused to extend the suspensory effect of the appeal because it considered that it did not have any prospect of success. It agreed with the Board that by virtue of the limitation period in Paragraph 107(3), second sentence, of the GWB, Lämmerzahl was out of time in challenging the choice of the national procedure and Bremen's estimate of the contract value. Consequently, the company was precluded from recourse to the GWB review procedure, which was only available for tendering procedures exceeding the threshold value.

27. Bremen then awarded the contract to PROSOZ.

28. In the order for reference, the national court appears to accept that the contract value exceeded the EUR 200 000 threshold. (16) However, it considers that Lämmerzahl is time-barred from access to the GWB review procedure by virtue of Paragraph 107(3), second sentence, of the GWB.

29. In reaching that conclusion, the national court does not rule definitively on the question whether, under national law, identifiable on the basis of the tender notice' means that an irregularity has to be identifiable from the tender notice alone. It considers that, if that phrase can encompass other documents, Lämmerzahl should have realised from the details in the tender documents that the threshold would be exceeded. It should in any event have realised this from its own calculations. If, on the other hand, an irregularity has to be identifiable from the tender notice alone, the very absence of any indication of the contract's scope would in itself constitute an identifiable irregularity, since such an omission would be contrary to Paragraph 17(1)(2)(c) of the VOL/A. (17) It would further prevent a tenderer from verifying the choice of procedure and challenging it if necessary.

30. The national court nonetheless has reservations as to whether its decision of 7 November 2005 might deprive tenderers of their right to an effective review of alleged infringements of Community law, in breach of Article 1 of Directive 89/665. It considers that the limitation set out in Paragraph 107(3), second sentence, of the GWB conforms in principle with the directive in the light of the Court's case-law. (18) However, when the contract value has wrongly been estimated to be below the threshold, failure to complain within the time-limit deprives a tenderer of a review not only of that irregularity, but also of its substantive complaints. If a contracting authority is able to deprive an unwary tenderer of substantive protection by committing an identifiable irregularity, there is potential for abuse.

31. The national court also wonders whether the draconian consequences of limitation should only be triggered if the tenderer is able to ascertain unequivocally from the tender notice that the contracting authority is assuming that the contract will fall below the threshold value.

32. In the light of these considerations, the referring court has stayed the main proceedings and referred two questions to the Court:

1. Is it compatible with Directive 89/665/EEC, in particular Article 1(1) and (3), for a tenderer to be generally barred from gaining access to a review of a contracting authority's decision to award public contracts because the tenderer through its own fault did not raise an irregularity in the award procedure within the time-limit laid down for that purpose in national law, where the irregularity relates

(a) to the form of invitation to tender selected

or

(b) to the correctness of the determination of the contract price (the estimate is obviously wrong or the method of determination is not sufficiently transparent)

and where, on the basis of the contract value as correctly determined or to be determined, it would be possible to review other irregularities in the award procedure which, considered in isolation, would not be time-barred?

2. Should the details in a tender notice relevant to determination of the contract price be subject to any special requirements so as to enable the conclusion to be drawn from irregularities relating to the estimated contract price that the protection of primary law is generally precluded even if the correctly estimated contract price exceeds the relevant threshold amount?'

33. Written observations have been submitted by Lämmerzahl, Bremen, Austria, Lithuania and the Commission. Lämmerzahl, Bremen and the Commission also made further observations at the hearing on 28 March 2007.

Admissibility

34. Bremen submits that the conditions for an Article 234 EC reference are not met. What is at issue is the particular application of a national provision whose conformity with Community law is not in doubt.

35. I do not accept that argument. What lies behind the referring court's first question is whether Article 1 of Directive 89/665 precludes the possibility of a general exclusion from the right to review in circumstances such as those in the main proceedings.

36. As to the referring court's second question, it is quite true that the Court cannot provide a list of precisely what should appear in tender notices. (19) However, it is competent to interpret the relevant principles and provisions of Community law in order to help the national court to determine whether these have been infringed in a particular case.

37. The reference is therefore admissible.

The questions

Preliminary

38. The two questions which the referring court asks may be reformulated as follows:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

1. If a tenderer has failed within the time-limit set by national law to challenge a decision incorrectly placing a public tender outside the scope of Community protection, does Directive 89/665 prevent the tenderer from being denied the right conferred by that directive to a review of any further decisions in the tender process?

2. What details should appear on the tender notice so as to enable the conclusion to be drawn that the contract value has been wrongly estimated to fall below the threshold for the protection granted by Directive 89/665?

39. The referring court's second question relates to whether the irregularity in issue can be detected. That question is central to determining whether a limitation period for challenging that irregularity is compatible with Community law. I shall therefore examine the two questions referred together. Most of the parties submitting observations have indeed broadly adopted this approach.

Observations

40. Lämmerzahl submits that while a time-limit such as that contained in Paragraph 107(3), second sentence, of the GWB is in principle compatible with Directive 89/665, it acts as a derogation from the right to review. Accordingly, the phrase identifiable on the basis of the tender notice' must be interpreted narrowly. It cannot extend to the identification of an omission, the challenging of which might lead in turn to the identification of Bremen's error in estimating the contract value. That error - and hence the erroneous choice of procedure - could not be identified from the tender notice. It was thus impossible or excessively difficult for Lämmerzahl to exercise its Community rights.

41. Lithuania considers that where a time-limit starts to run on publication of the tender notice, the rights of tenderers under Community law are protected effectively only if they are provided with full and objective information about the volume of the tender at that point. If they are not, the time-limit should start to run only once they know of, or are in a position to ascertain, the procedural error in question.

42. Bremen considers that Paragraph 107(3), second sentence, of the GWB is compatible with Directive 89/665. The criterion of identifiability ensures that the exercise of a tenderer's Community rights is not made impossible or excessively difficult. Putting the estimated value on the tender notice could distort competition. It is sufficient that the averagely experienced market participant should be able to calculate the contract value from the information provided. At the hearing Bremen pointed out that, even without the right to review under Directive 89/665, general remedies were available under national law. However, it conceded that these were less effective than the procedure under the GWB.

43. Austria considers that a general exclusion from the Community review procedure as a result of failing to challenge the irregularity in question within the time-limit is compatible with Directive 89/665, provided that the particular application of the time-limit does not infringe the principle of effective protection.

44. The Commission adopts a similar position. It notes that the sanction of foreclosure ensures that irregularities are challenged as soon as possible. That is desirable in view of the potential consequences of having to restart the tender procedure. At the hearing, the Commission stated that the failure to challenge an irregularity in time should lead to foreclosure only if the tenderer could identify the irregularity or should have done so had it acted with the care to be expected of an experienced and diligent trader.

45. The Commission also considers that fundamental principles of the EC Treaty such as equality and transparency are applicable even to tenders falling below the Community threshold. (20)

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Assessment

46. The Community principle of effectiveness lies at the core of the protection which Directive 89/665 provides. As the Court has long held, this principle requires that the exercise of rights conferred by Community law must not be rendered virtually impossible or excessively difficult. (21)

47. The first three recitals to Directive 89/665 thus emphasise that the purpose of the directive is to ensure the effective application of the harmonising Community directives on public procurement, by providing a system of remedies for infringements of Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law'. Article 1(1) spells out the requirement for effective review of decisions taken by contracting authorities. Article 2(7) provides for decisions taken by the appropriate review bodies to be enforced effectively.

48. The second and fifth recitals stress, however, that public procurement procedures are characterised by their short duration. Any infringements therefore need to be dealt with urgently, at a stage when they can be corrected. Rapidity of review is thus considered to be an aspect of effectiveness and is expressly identified in the third recital and in Article 1(1).

49. Directive 89/665 therefore provides for the possibility of reviewing a decision even before it has caused actual harm. Under Article 1(3), standing is given to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply... contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement' (emphasis added). In the same vein, Article 1(3) permits Member States to require an interested party to give prior notice to the contracting authority of its intention to seek judicial review, underlining the need to try to resolve issues as rapidly as possible.

50. The directive does not expressly authorise the use of limitation periods for applying for review of contracting authorities' decisions. The imposition of time-limits under national implementing legislation is, however, in principle compatible with the requirement for rapid review, since it quickly becomes impractical to reverse such decisions. Moreover, the Court has long recognised that reasonable time-limits constitute an application of the fundamental principle of legal certainty. (22)

51. In Universale-Bau (23) the Court held that Directive 89/665 does not preclude national legislation from setting a reasonable time-limit for bringing an application to review a contracting authority's decision. A time-limit is reasonable if it satisfies both the principle of effectiveness, as laid down by the directive, and the principle of legal certainty. (24)

52. The need to balance these two principles distinguishes limitation periods from derogating provisions, with which Lämmerzahl seeks to equate them. There are many kinds of derogation in Community law, justified for various reasons. Often, such derogations are exceptions to EC Treaty rights or other general principles. As a rule, they are permitted when necessary to protect specific interests. In order to give effect to overriding principles, derogations are typically interpreted restrictively. Limitation periods, on the other hand, strike a balance between the individual's rights and the wider public interest. Since they nevertheless limit rights, they must be examined carefully to determine whether their application in fact undermines the principle of effective protection.

53. The Court undertook such an examination in Santex. (25) There, it elaborated on Universale-Bau and applied criteria established in previous case-law (26) to the question of the reasonableness of time-limits in the context of Directive 89/665. It held that a limitation provision must be examined by reference, in particular, to the role of that provision in the procedure, its progress and its special features, viewed as a whole'. Thus, even if a time-limit per se is not contrary to the principle of effectiveness, its application in the circumstances of a particular case may render it so. (27)

54. In Grossmann Air Service , the Court indicated that the objectives of speed and effectiveness in Directive 89/665 require an interested party who is aware of an irregularity to challenge it (28) and had scant sympathy for the applicant, who had waited until the award decision before challenging an alleged illegality in the invitation to tender. (29)

55. The criterion of knowledge or awareness of an irregularity on the part of a tenderer underlies not only Grossmann , but also other cases. If a time-limit for challenging an irregularity starts to run before the tenderer has knowledge, or if a tenderer is otherwise penalised for not raising a challenge in a situation where it did not know and could not have known of an irregularity, the principle of effectiveness is undermined. In Santex , the tenderer was not aware of the contracting authority's interpretation of the disputed clause until the relevant time-limit had expired (30) and could not therefore be excluded by the time-limit from seeking review. In GAT , a case not concerned with a time-limit, the Court held that an applicant cannot be denied the right to claim damages for the harm caused by a decision because a previous decision was unlawful. There, the previous decision had not been challenged and the applicant was therefore not necessarily aware of its irregularity. (31)

56. It follows from the Court's case-law set out above that the placing of a time-limit under national law on the exercise of the right to review provided for by Directive 89/665 is compatible with Community law provided that such a time-limit does not render the exercise of that right virtually impossible or excessively difficult. In determining whether that is the case, not only the length of the limitation period but also factors in the review procedure in which the time-limit operates must be examined. Awareness is a key factor. Whilst the objectives of speed and effectiveness in the directive require an interested party that is aware of an irregularity to challenge it, such a party cannot be shut out of its right to review by a time-limit triggered by something of which it could not reasonably have been aware.

57. Can a time-limit still be compatible with Community law if the failure to challenge an irregularity in time also deprives a tenderer of the possibility of challenging any further, subsequent irregularities in the tender process? That is certainly a drastic sanction. Is it a permissible one?

58. It is common ground that the consequence of not challenging the choice of national procedure within the time-limit is that, as a matter of general legal principle, that procedure prevails and the tender procedure falls thereafter outside the scope of the directive. This is to be distinguished from the situation in GAT , where the Court held that, since every decision taken by a contracting authority in a public tender is reviewable under Directive 89/665, a tenderer cannot be denied the right to claim damages for an allegedly illegal award decision on the ground that a previous decision rendered the procedure defective (without, however, taking it outside the scope of the directive). (32)

59. One possibility would be to create an exception to the rule in Universale-Bau and hold that the possibility of challenging a decision which appears wrongly to take the particular tender procedure outside the scope of Community protection cannot be subject to a limitation period. That does not seem to me to be a sensible solution. First, it would upset the balance between effectiveness and legal certainty which Directive 89/665 seeks to achieve. Second, a tenderer might be tempted not to challenge the procedure (which after all could appear to work in its favour by limiting competition), unless or until it discovered, through the award decision, that the right to a review under Directive 89/665 actually mattered to it.

60. Suggesting that a longer time-limit should be required where the consequences of being out of time are draconian seems to me to beg as many questions as it answers.

61. I therefore conclude that a time-limit for challenging decisions in a tender procedure is still compatible with the principle of effectiveness, combined with the need for rapidity and legal certainty, even when the consequence of failing to challenge an irregularity within the time-limit removes a tenderer from the protection of the review procedure conferred by Directive 89/665.

62. I turn now to an examination of the time-limit, including its particular features, in the present case.

63. The limitation period fixed in Paragraph 107(3), second sentence, of the GWB runs from the publication of the tender notice until the deadline for submitting offers. In the present case, that period seems to have been at least 23 days. (33) In view of the fact that the Community legislator considers a minimum period of 22 days to be sufficient for preparing and submitting a tender, (34) it would be difficult to argue that 23 days were insufficient for challenging an alleged irregularity. Such a time-limit for bringing a challenge thus does not in principle appear to infringe the principle of effectiveness underlying Directive 89/665, especially in view of the need, underlined in that directive, for a rapid review procedure. (35)

64. However, the particularity of the time-limit specified in Paragraph 107(3), second sentence, of the GWB is that it starts to run if the alleged regularity in question is identifiable on the basis of the tender notice.

65. What, therefore, is the degree or nature of knowledge of an irregularity which may be attributed to a tenderer without breaching the effectiveness principle underlying Directive 89/665?

66. It seems to me that a requirement of actual, or subjective, knowledge on the part of the tenderer would run counter to legal certainty. Furthermore, in circumstances such as those of the present case, it could be difficult to prove that a tenderer had actual knowledge of an irregularity, and a requirement of such proof would hardly be consistent with the need for a rapid review process.

67. It therefore seems preferable to formulate the test in terms of a standard of deemed, or objective, knowledge. The Court already applies an objective standard in respect of tenderers' ability to interpret award criteria against the yardstick of equality of treatment in public procurement, namely the ability of a reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderer'. (36) The same formula seems appropriate in the context of what knowledge of an irregularity in the tender procedure it is reasonable to deem a tenderer to possess.

68. A reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderer' can be deemed to be experienced in submitting tenders in its particular field. It can also be expected to have a general knowledge and understanding of key legal considerations affecting the markets in which it operates. In the context of the present case, this would entail a general knowledge of national and Community tender procedures and relevant thresholds, including the possibilities for challenging decisions under both procedures and the time-limits for bringing such challenges.

69. What information needs to be available to enable such a tenderer, in circumstances such as those in the present case, to ascertain that the wrong choice of procedure has been used?

70. I do not agree with Bremen that publishing the estimated value of the contract would distort competition. After all, Community public procurement legislation, an important aim of which is to promote competition, requires estimated contract values to be published in some cases. (37)

71. Since the choice of procedure is a function of the estimated total contract value, the information must enable the tenderer to work out that value. This would include not only goods to be supplied, but also the cost of any support, training or maintenance included in the contract scope. I accept Lithuania's submission on this point, namely that nothing less than a clear and full disclosure of the scope or volume of the project will allow a tenderer, on the basis of its own experience and knowledge of market rates, to calculate the estimated total value.

72. The existence of such an information requirement, combined with the application of the criterion of the knowledge and experience attributable to a reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderer, should resolve the referring court's concerns about potential abuse in respect of the ability of a contracting authority to take advantage of an unwary tenderer. (38)

73. I do not think that this information must necessarily appear in the tender notice itself. A tenderer can reasonably be expected to act on references in the notice to other documents, provided it is clearly indicated where these are to be obtained. In this respect, the Court has already ruled that award criteria are compatible with the principle of equal treatment if they are mentioned in the contract documents or contract notice. (39) If the necessary information delineating the scope of the contract is contained in the documents, then the time-limit for challenging an irregularity starts to run only once the tenderer has been able to obtain them, or would have been able to obtain them had it acted promptly.

74. However, I do not think that the mere absence of a stated scope or estimated contract volume from the original tender notice would be sufficient to put a reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderer on notice that the contracting authority had wrongly estimated the tender value. Even if that absence constitutes an irregularity in itself, requiring the tenderer to challenge it in order to discover whether it concealed a further irregularity that could affect the tenderer's rights seems to me to render the exercise of those rights excessively difficult, particularly in view of the time-limit. This is a fortiori the case if it is at least open to argument whether the stipulation under Paragraph 17(1)(2)(c) of the VOL/A to publish the scope of the contract is mandatory. (40)

75. It is ultimately for the national court, as sole judge of fact, to decide at what point (if at all) a reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderer should have discovered that the wrong procedure had been used. The following observations may nevertheless be of assistance.

76. In the present case, the tender documents could readily be downloaded from the Bremen website. However, it appears that neither the notice itself nor the tender documents stated the scope or volume of the project.

77. It is true that the service contract' part of the price document specified training for about 300 employees and 10 administrators, and that the object document indicated that about 310 employees would work with the system. However, the request to indicate unit prices for different possible ranges of numbers of licences in the licence contract' part of the price document could reasonably have been read as implying that a lower number of licences might be considered or that the final number of licences had not yet been decided (let alone how many licences would be full versus read-only). (41)

78. Lämmerzahl contacted Bremen on at least two occasions to find out more details about the tender invitation. In its second set of questions it made it clear that it was assuming that 310 licences would be required. But this was never expressly confirmed by Bremen. The most that can be said is that Bremen, by not contradicting this figure in its reply of 6 April 2005, tacitly endorsed Lämmerzahl's assumption that around 310 licences were required.

79. In short, it appears that neither the tender notice and documents nor the information which Bremen subsequently provided explicitly indicated how many licences were required. Nevertheless, it is clear that Lämmerzahl went on to submit a tender whose value was three times the threshold for Community-wide tenders.

80. Against that background, it is for the national court to decide whether, in all the circumstances, the application of Paragraph 107(3), second sentence, of the GWB afforded effective protection. This would be the case if the information on the tender notice or documents enabled a reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderer to discover that the wrong procedure had been used. If it is not possible to interpret this provision in such a way that it is compatible with Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, the former should be disapplied (42) and the latter, which has direct effect, (43) applied.

Conclusion

81. I accordingly suggest that the Court should combine the two questions referred and answer them as follows:

If a tenderer has failed within the time-limit set by national law to challenge a choice of procedure incorrectly placing a public tender invitation outside the scope of Community protection, Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts does not preclude the tenderer from being excluded from the right provided by that directive to review further decisions in the tender process, provided that the application of the time-limit does not in fact make it virtually impossible or excessively difficult to challenge the choice of procedure in the circumstances. This would be the case if the information available on the tender notice or tender documents were insufficient to enable a reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderer to discover that the wrong procedure had been used. It is for the national court to verify this in a given case.

(2) - Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

(3) - (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1.) This directive was repealed and replaced by Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1) and Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001 (OJ 2001 L 285, p. 1). Directive 93/36 was in turn one of the directives repealed and replaced by European Parliament and Council Directive 2004/18/EC of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

(4) - See footnote 2. Directive 92/50 was amended by Directives 93/36, 97/52 and 2001/78 and repealed, save for Article 41 (which amended Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665), by Directive 2004/18 (see footnote 3 above). Under Article 2 of Directive 92/50 (and, subsequently, paragraph 2 of Article 1(2)(d) of Directive 2004/18), a contract which includes both supplies and services is considered to be a service contract if the value of services exceeds that of the products supplied. The contract at issue in the present case includes both supplies (software licences) and services (training and maintenance), whose relative values are not clear from the documents in the case file. It is thus uncertain whether it would qualify as a supply or as a service contract. However, the threshold value bringing a contract within the scope of Directive 89/665 is the same in both cases.

(5) - See footnote 3. Similar provisions to Article 10(1) and (1a) of Directive 93/36 are to be found, for public service contracts, in Article 18(1) and (2) of Directive 92/50. Both sets of provisions were subsequently replaced by Article 38(2) and (4) of Directive 2004/18.

(7) - Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen of 26 August 1998, BGBl. I 1998, p. 2521. Part four comprises Paragraphs 97 to 129. It is divided into three sections, the second of which (Paragraphs 102 to 124) covers review procedures.

(8) - Paragraph 127(1) of the GWB empowers the federal government, with the agreement of the Bundesra t (the upper house of the federal parliament), to transpose into German law by means of a regulation the threshold values in Community directives on the coordination of procedures for awarding public contracts.

(14) - The translations of the parts of the tender notice and tender documents cited are my own.

(15) - In its letter of 6 April 2005 (see point 20 below), Bremen said that a State licence would be for an unlimited number of licences for use in Bremen and Bremerhaven.

(16) - It seems that Bremen had used the national tendering procedure as a result of a valuation of EUR 150 000 (made in 2004) on the basis of 150 rather than 310 licences.

(17) - Lämmerzahl refers to this provision in the VOL/A as non-mandatory'. The referring court states, however, that the word soll' (should') generally indicates an obligation to comply, absent compelling reasons to the contrary. See point 12 above and the footnote thereto. The referring court derives its interpretation of soll' from the General Comments' section at the end of the VOL/A.

(18) - The Court has ruled that the setting of reasonable time-limits for bringing proceedings is compatible with Article 1 of Directive 89/665: Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraphs 75 to 79.

(19) - The Community legislator has imposed certain harmonised requirements in respect of contracts whose value exceeds the relevant threshold: see footnote 3 above.

(20) - In my Opinion in Case C-195/04 Commission v Finland [2007] ECR I-0000, I have dealt at length with this argument.

(21) - See for example Case C-312/93 Peterbroeck [1995] ECR I-4599, paragraph 12 and the case-law cited, and Case C-432/05 Unibet [2007] ECR I-0000, paragraph 43 and the case-law cited.

(28) - Case C-230/02 Grossmann Air Service [2004] ECR I-1829, paragraph 37.

(29) - The applicant in that case believed that the specifications of the tender invitation discriminated against him. Before the award decision he neither challenged those specifications, nor did he submit a tender. The Court held that a refusal to acknowledge an applicant's interest in obtaining the particular contract in the circumstances of the case did not impair the effectiveness of Directive 89/665.

(30) - Santex , paragraph 60.

(33) - See point 13 above.

(34) - See point 8 above.

(35) - Research carried out by the relevant departments of the Court indicates that such time-limits for challenging tender invitations are within the range of limitation periods adopted by other Member States. The following time-limits apply in the countries surveyed which consider a public invitation to tender to be a justiciable act and provide for a review of such an invitation either expressly or as part of a general review system: 7 or 14 days depending on the procedure (Austria, Poland), 14 days (Finland), 15 days (Hungary), one month (Portugal), the deadline for submitting offers (Slovenia), two months (Greece, Spain), three months (Ireland, UK). No time-limit is specified in France and Luxembourg. In Denmark, the Netherlands and Sweden, the tender invitation can be challenged even after the contract is signed.

(36) - Case C-19/00 SIAC [2001] ECR I-7725, paragraph 42. An alternative formulation, from the area of protection of legitimate expectations, is that of a prudent and alert economic operator': see for example Joined Cases C-182/03 and C-217/03 Belgium and Forum 187 v Commission [2006] ECR I-5479. Bremen and the Commission have suggested further possible formulations (points 42 and 44 above).

(37) - See Annex VII A to Directive 2004/18 (footnote 3 above), which came into force after the material events in the present case. In contract notices, the estimated total value of works, supplies or services in framework agreements must be disclosed. In prior information notices for public supply contracts, either the quantity or the value of the products to be supplied must be given.

(38) - See point 30 above.

(39) - SIAC (cited in footnote 36 above), paragraphs 40 and 42.

(40) - See point 29 above in fine.

(41) - The inconsistency between the different ranges of numbers of licences and the figure of 310 employees cannot be fully explained by the permutation possibilities between full and read-only licences. The maximum number of read-only licences for which pricing was requested is 100; and the first three ranges for which full licence pricing is requested fall below the balance (210) which would be required to bring the total to 310.

(42) - See Santex (cited in footnote 25 above), paragraphs 63 to 65 and the case-law cited.

Opinion of Advocate General Sharpston delivered on 7 June 2007. Lämmerzahl GmbH v Freie Hansestadt Bremen. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht in Bremen - Germany. Public contracts - Directive 89/665/EEC - Review procedures concerning the award of public contracts - Limitation period - Principle of effectiveness. Case C-241/06.

1. The present reference from the Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht (Hanseatic Higher Regional Court) in Bremen, Germany, essentially asks the Court whether Community law precludes a tenderer from being generally excluded from the right under Directive 89/665 (2) to apply for a review of tender decisions on the ground that it has not challenged, within the time-limit set by national law, a decision which has incorrectly placed the tendering procedure outside the scope of that directive.

2. The claimant in the main proceedings tendered unsuccessfully for a software contract which had been put out to tender under the national procedure. It then complained, first, that there should have been a Community-wide tendering procedure because the relevant threshold value had been exceeded and, second, that the subsequent award decision was unlawful. The complaints were declared inadmissible on the ground that the time-limit for challenging the choice of procedure had expired, so that the review procedure for public contracts falling within the scope of Community law was not available.

3. The reference invites the Court to examine further the circumstances in which the imposition of time-limits for challenging decisions in public tendering procedures may compromise the principle of effectiveness which underlies Directive 89/665.

Relevant legislation

Directive 89/665

4. Directive 89/665 seeks to ensure that the procedures for the award of public works, supply and service contracts laid down in the relevant Community directives are applied effectively. It does this by providing for a system of review procedures and remedies for infringements.

5. The following recitals in the preamble to Directive 89/665 are relevant:

[1] ... Community Directives on public procurement, in particular ... Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, [(3)]... do not contain any specific provisions ensuring their effective application;

[2] ... [T]he existing arrangements at both national and Community levels for ensuring their application are not always adequate to ensure compliance with the relevant Community provisions particularly at a stage when infringements can be corrected;

[3] ... [T]he opening-up of public procurement to Community competition necessitates a substantial increase in the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination; ... for it to have tangible effects, effective and rapid remedies must be available in the case of infringements of Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law;

[4] ...

[5] ... [T]he short duration of the procedures means that the aforementioned infringements need to be dealt with urgently;

...'

6. Article 1 of Directive 89/665 provides:

1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives ... 77/62/EEC, and 92/50/EEC, (4) decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles, and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or nation[al] rules implementing that law.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

2. ...

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply... contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

7. Article 2 of Directive 89/665 deals with the remedies that should be available in respect of the reviews. Article 2(7) states that [t]he Member States shall ensure that decisions taken by bodies responsible for review procedures can be effectively enforced'.

Directive 93/36 (5)

8. Article 10 of Directive 93/36 lays down, inter alia, the minimum time-limits in open procedures for the receipt of tenders valued above the threshold for applying Community rules. Article 10(1) states that such procedures must remain open for at least 52 days from the sending of the tender notice. That period may be reduced, as a general rule, to a minimum of 36 days, but under no circumstances to less than 22 days, if a prior information notice was published under conditions set out in Article 10(1a).

German legislation (6)

9. Part four of the German Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen (Law Against Restrictions on Competition) (GWB') covers the award of public contracts. (7) Paragraph 100(1) states that [t]his part applies only to contracts which reach or exceed the values set out in the regulations provided for by paragraph 127 (threshold values).' (8)

10. Paragraph 107 of the GWB covers applications for review to the procurement board. Paragraph 107(3) of the GWB sets out the time-limits for applying to the procurement board for review of alleged infringements of the procurement rules and states:

The application is inadmissible where the applicant was already aware during the award procedure of the alleged infringement of the procurement rules and did not immediately complain to the awarding authority. The application is also inadmissible where no complaint is raised about infringements of the procurement rules that are identifiable (9) on the basis of the tender notice with the awarding authority by, at the latest, the end of the period stipulated in the tender notice for bidding or for applications to participate in the award procedure.'

11. The Vergabeverordnung (Public Procurement Regulation) (VgV') (10) contains inter alia the threshold values referred to in Paragraph 127(1) of the GWB. (11) At the material time Paragraph 2 of the VgV provided:

The threshold amount is:

3. for all other supply or service contracts: EUR 200 000.'

12. Part A of the Verdingungsordnung für Leistungen (Rules for the Placing of Public Supply and Service Contracts by Tender) (VOL/A') (12) contains detailed rules for awarding supply and service contracts by tender. Paragraph 17 relates inter alia to the contents of the tender notice.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Paragraph 17(1)(2) provides:

The tender notice should at least contain the following details:

...

(c) Nature and scope of the goods or services to be supplied...' (13)

The main proceedings and the reference made

13. On or before 21 March 2005 the defendant in the main proceedings, the Free Hanseatic City of Bremen (Bremen'), issued a national invitation to tender under the VOL/A' for a software contract. (14) The closing date was 12 April 2005. The tender notice contained no quantification of the scope or value of the contract. Under the heading Menge und Umfang' (volume and scope) it stated:

On behalf of the Senator for Employment, Women, Health, Youth and Social Affairs in Bremen, standard software is sought for SGB XII (social service - Adult and Economic Aid) for PC-based case handling to meet the requirements laid down in the tender documents. The tender documents can be downloaded free of charge from www.vergabe.bremen.de. ...'

14. Lämmerzahl GmbH (Lämmerzahl'), the claimant in the main proceedings, is a limited company specialising in software for public authorities. It duly obtained the tender documents, which included the following three documents:

15. First, the document entitled price sheet/price breakdown 1' (the price document') asked tenderers to provide, under the section headed licence contract', unit prices for full licences according to various possible ranges of quantities to be supplied (11-50, 51-100, 101-200, 201-500 licences). There was an alternative request for unit-pricing for read-only licences (1-5, 6-10, 11-50, 51-100 licences). As a further alternative, a price was requested for a Landeslizenz' (State licence). (15) The section headed service contract' asked tenderers to quote for training approximately 300 employees and 10 administrators. Nowhere did the document state the actual number of licences required.

16. Second, the document setting out the object of the tender invitation (the object document') stated that approximately 200 employees in the economic aid area, 45 in social services and 65 in the central units would work with the software system.

17. Third, the table of goods and services' indicated a minimum or estimated volume' of one unit. Again, it failed to indicate the total number of licences required.

18. Lämmerzahl raised four questions relating to the tender documents, to which Bremen replied by letter on 24 March 2005. At that stage, Lämmerzahl did not ask about the number of licences, or the volume or value of the contract.

19. Lämmerzahl then sent Bremen an e-mail on 4 April 2005 requesting further clarification of the tender documents. Its first question asked whether the total prices requested in the offer document and the table of goods and services related to the sum of the prices in the price sheet for the licence contract based on 310 licences (the 310 employees specified in the [object document])' or whether other prices (e.g. maintenance and service costs) should be included. Three of the other questions in Lämmerzahl's e-mail referred to the above-mentioned 310 licences'.

20. Bremen replied by letter on 6 April 2005. In answer to the first question it said that the overall tender price (total price of licence costs, maintenance costs and services) should be entered in the offer document. None of Bremen's answers mentioned or expressly commented on the figure of 310 licences which Lämmerzahl had included in its questions.

21. Lämmerzahl then submitted a tender based on 310 licences, together with training and maintenance, for EUR 603 500 net. It was selected for the testing stage along with a rival tenderer, PROSOZ Herten GmbH (PROSOZ').

22. On 6 July 2005 Bremen wrote to Lämmerzahl informing it that it had been unsuccessful because its offer had not been the most economically advantageous.

23. On 14 July 2005 Lämmerzahl sent a written complaint to Bremen and on 21 July 2005 submitted an application for a procurement review. It stated that it had discovered from taking legal advice on 14 July 2005 that Bremen should have issued a Community-wide, rather than a national, invitation to tender because the value of the contract exceeded the EUR 200 000 threshold. It also alleged that its software had not been properly tested.

24. On 2 August 2005 the Third Procurement Board of the City of Bremen (the Board') dismissed the application. It stated that, even if the threshold figure had been exceeded and the wrong tendering procedure had thus been used, such an irregularity was identifiable from the tender invitation. Accordingly, Lämmerzahl's complaints were out of time under Paragraph 107(3), second sentence, of the GWB.

25. Lämmerzahl appealed to the referring court. First, it claimed the irregularity in the choice of procedure had not been identifiable from the tender notice. Second, it repeated its objection to the testing and selection procedure, claiming that the PROSOZ tender was manifestly incomplete and contained an unlawful costing arrangement which should have led to its exclusion (the substantive complaints').

26. By an interim decision of 7 November 2005, the referring court refused to extend the suspensory effect of the appeal because it considered that it did not have any prospect of success. It agreed with the Board that by virtue of the limitation period in Paragraph 107(3), second sentence, of the GWB, Lämmerzahl was out of time in challenging the choice of the national procedure and Bremen's estimate of the contract value. Consequently, the company was precluded from recourse to the GWB review procedure, which was only available for tendering procedures exceeding the threshold value.

27. Bremen then awarded the contract to PROSOZ.

28. In the order for reference, the national court appears to accept that the contract value exceeded the EUR 200 000 threshold. (16) However, it considers that Lämmerzahl is time-barred from access to the GWB review procedure by virtue of Paragraph 107(3), second sentence, of the GWB.

29. In reaching that conclusion, the national court does not rule definitively on the question whether, under national law, identifiable on the basis of the tender notice' means that an irregularity has to be identifiable from the tender notice alone. It considers that, if that phrase can encompass other documents, Lämmerzahl should have realised from the details in the tender documents that the threshold would be exceeded. It should in any event have realised this from its own calculations. If, on the other hand, an irregularity has to be identifiable from the tender notice alone, the very absence of any indication of the contract's scope would in itself constitute an identifiable irregularity, since such an omission would be contrary to Paragraph 17(1)(2)(c) of the VOL/A. (17) It would further prevent a tenderer from verifying the choice of procedure and challenging it if necessary.

30. The national court nonetheless has reservations as to whether its decision of 7 November 2005 might deprive tenderers of their right to an effective review of alleged infringements of Community law, in breach of Article 1 of Directive 89/665. It considers that the limitation set out in Paragraph 107(3), second sentence, of the GWB conforms in principle with the directive in the light of the Court's case-law. (18) However, when the contract value has wrongly been estimated to be below the threshold, failure to complain within the time-limit deprives a tenderer of a review not only of that irregularity, but also of its substantive complaints. If a contracting authority is able to deprive an unwary tenderer of substantive protection by committing an identifiable irregularity, there is potential for abuse.

31. The national court also wonders whether the draconian consequences of limitation should only be triggered if the tenderer is able to ascertain unequivocally from the tender notice that the contracting authority is assuming that the contract will fall below the threshold value.

32. In the light of these considerations, the referring court has stayed the main proceedings and referred two questions to the Court:

1. Is it compatible with Directive 89/665/EEC, in particular Article 1(1) and (3), for a tenderer to be generally barred from gaining access to a review of a contracting authority's decision to award public contracts because the tenderer through its own fault did not raise an irregularity in the award procedure within the time-limit laid down for that purpose in national law, where the irregularity relates

(a) to the form of invitation to tender selected

or

(b) to the correctness of the determination of the contract price (the estimate is obviously wrong or the method of determination is not sufficiently transparent)

and where, on the basis of the contract value as correctly determined or to be determined, it would be possible to review other irregularities in the award procedure which, considered in isolation, would not be time-barred?

2. Should the details in a tender notice relevant to determination of the contract price be subject to any special requirements so as to enable the conclusion to be drawn from irregularities relating to the estimated contract price that the protection of primary law is generally precluded even if the correctly estimated contract price exceeds the relevant threshold amount?'

33. Written observations have been submitted by Lämmerzahl, Bremen, Austria, Lithuania and the Commission. Lämmerzahl, Bremen and the Commission also made further observations at the hearing on 28 March 2007.

Admissibility

34. Bremen submits that the conditions for an Article 234 EC reference are not met. What is at issue is the particular application of a national provision whose conformity with Community law is not in doubt.

35. I do not accept that argument. What lies behind the referring court's first question is whether Article 1 of Directive 89/665 precludes the possibility of a general exclusion from the right to review in circumstances such as those in the main proceedings.

36. As to the referring court's second question, it is quite true that the Court cannot provide a list of precisely what should appear in tender notices. (19) However, it is competent to interpret the relevant principles and provisions of Community law in order to help the national court to determine whether these have been infringed in a particular case.

37. The reference is therefore admissible.

The questions

Preliminary

38. The two questions which the referring court asks may be reformulated as follows:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

1. If a tenderer has failed within the time-limit set by national law to challenge a decision incorrectly placing a public tender outside the scope of Community protection, does Directive 89/665 prevent the tenderer from being denied the right conferred by that directive to a review of any further decisions in the tender process?

2. What details should appear on the tender notice so as to enable the conclusion to be drawn that the contract value has been wrongly estimated to fall below the threshold for the protection granted by Directive 89/665?

39. The referring court's second question relates to whether the irregularity in issue can be detected. That question is central to determining whether a limitation period for challenging that irregularity is compatible with Community law. I shall therefore examine the two questions referred together. Most of the parties submitting observations have indeed broadly adopted this approach.

Observations

40. Lämmerzahl submits that while a time-limit such as that contained in Paragraph 107(3), second sentence, of the GWB is in principle compatible with Directive 89/665, it acts as a derogation from the right to review. Accordingly, the phrase identifiable on the basis of the tender notice' must be interpreted narrowly. It cannot extend to the identification of an omission, the challenging of which might lead in turn to the identification of Bremen's error in estimating the contract value. That error - and hence the erroneous choice of procedure - could not be identified from the tender notice. It was thus impossible or excessively difficult for Lämmerzahl to exercise its Community rights.

41. Lithuania considers that where a time-limit starts to run on publication of the tender notice, the rights of tenderers under Community law are protected effectively only if they are provided with full and objective information about the volume of the tender at that point. If they are not, the time-limit should start to run only once they know of, or are in a position to ascertain, the procedural error in question.

42. Bremen considers that Paragraph 107(3), second sentence, of the GWB is compatible with Directive 89/665. The criterion of identifiability ensures that the exercise of a tenderer's Community rights is not made impossible or excessively difficult. Putting the estimated value on the tender notice could distort competition. It is sufficient that the averagely experienced market participant should be able to calculate the contract value from the information provided. At the hearing Bremen pointed out that, even without the right to review under Directive 89/665, general remedies were available under national law. However, it conceded that these were less effective than the procedure under the GWB.

43. Austria considers that a general exclusion from the Community review procedure as a result of failing to challenge the irregularity in question within the time-limit is compatible with Directive 89/665, provided that the particular application of the time-limit does not infringe the principle of effective protection.

44. The Commission adopts a similar position. It notes that the sanction of foreclosure ensures that irregularities are challenged as soon as possible. That is desirable in view of the potential consequences of having to restart the tender procedure. At the hearing, the Commission stated that the failure to challenge an irregularity in time should lead to foreclosure only if the tenderer could identify the irregularity or should have done so had it acted with the care to be expected of an experienced and diligent trader.

45. The Commission also considers that fundamental principles of the EC Treaty such as equality and transparency are applicable even to tenders falling below the Community threshold. (20)

Assessment

46. The Community principle of effectiveness lies at the core of the protection which Directive 89/665 provides. As the Court has long held, this principle requires that the exercise of rights conferred by Community law must not be rendered virtually impossible or excessively difficult. (21)

47. The first three recitals to Directive 89/665 thus emphasise that the purpose of the directive is to ensure the effective application of the harmonising Community directives on public procurement, by providing a system of remedies for infringements of Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law'. Article 1(1) spells out the requirement for effective review of decisions taken by contracting authorities. Article 2(7) provides for decisions taken by the appropriate review bodies to be enforced effectively.

48. The second and fifth recitals stress, however, that public procurement procedures are characterised by their short duration. Any infringements therefore need to be dealt with urgently, at a stage when they can be corrected. Rapidity of review is thus considered to be an aspect of effectiveness and is expressly identified in the third recital and in Article 1(1).

49. Directive 89/665 therefore provides for the possibility of reviewing a decision even before it has caused actual harm. Under Article 1(3), standing is given to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply... contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement' (emphasis added). In the same vein, Article 1(3) permits Member States to require an interested party to give prior notice to the contracting authority of its intention to seek judicial review, underlining the need to try to resolve issues as rapidly as possible.

50. The directive does not expressly authorise the use of limitation periods for applying for review of contracting authorities' decisions. The imposition of time-limits under national implementing legislation is, however, in principle compatible with the requirement for rapid review, since it quickly becomes impractical to reverse such decisions. Moreover, the Court has long recognised that reasonable time-limits constitute an application of the fundamental principle of legal certainty. (22)

51. In Universale-Bau (23) the Court held that Directive 89/665 does not preclude national legislation from setting a reasonable time-limit for bringing an application to review a contracting authority's decision. A time-limit is reasonable if it satisfies both the principle of effectiveness, as laid down by the directive, and the principle of legal certainty. (24)

52. The need to balance these two principles distinguishes limitation periods from derogating provisions, with which Lämmerzahl seeks to equate them. There are many kinds of derogation in Community law, justified for various reasons. Often, such derogations are exceptions to EC Treaty rights or other general principles. As a rule, they are permitted when necessary to protect specific interests. In order to give effect to overriding principles, derogations are typically interpreted restrictively. Limitation periods, on the other hand, strike a balance between the individual's rights and the wider public interest. Since they nevertheless limit rights, they must be examined carefully to determine whether their application in fact undermines the principle of effective protection.

53. The Court undertook such an examination in Santex. (25) There, it elaborated on Universale-Bau and applied criteria established in previous case-law (26) to the question of the reasonableness of time-limits in the context of Directive 89/665. It held that a limitation provision must be examined by reference, in particular, to the role of that provision in the procedure, its progress and its special features, viewed as a whole'. Thus, even if a time-limit per se is not contrary to the principle of effectiveness, its application in the circumstances of a particular case may render it so. (27)

54. In Grossmann Air Service , the Court indicated that the objectives of speed and effectiveness in Directive 89/665 require an interested party who is aware of an irregularity to challenge it (28) and had scant sympathy for the applicant, who had waited until the award decision before challenging an alleged illegality in the invitation to tender. (29)

55. The criterion of knowledge or awareness of an irregularity on the part of a tenderer underlies not only Grossmann , but also other cases. If a time-limit for challenging an irregularity starts to run before the tenderer has knowledge, or if a tenderer is otherwise penalised for not raising a challenge in a situation where it did not know and could not have known of an irregularity, the principle of effectiveness is undermined. In Santex , the tenderer was not aware of the contracting authority's interpretation of the disputed clause until the relevant time-limit had expired (30) and could not therefore be excluded by the time-limit from seeking review. In GAT , a case not concerned with a time-limit, the Court held that an applicant cannot be denied the right to claim damages for the harm caused by a decision because a previous decision was unlawful. There, the previous decision had not been challenged and the applicant was therefore not necessarily aware of its irregularity. (31)

56. It follows from the Court's case-law set out above that the placing of a time-limit under national law on the exercise of the right to review provided for by Directive 89/665 is compatible with Community law provided that such a time-limit does not render the exercise of that right virtually impossible or excessively difficult. In determining whether that is the case, not only the length of the limitation period but also factors in the review procedure in which the time-limit operates must be examined. Awareness is a key factor. Whilst the objectives of speed and effectiveness in the directive require an interested party that is aware of an irregularity to challenge it, such a party cannot be shut out of its right to review by a time-limit triggered by something of which it could not reasonably have been aware.

57. Can a time-limit still be compatible with Community law if the failure to challenge an irregularity in time also deprives a tenderer of the possibility of challenging any further, subsequent irregularities in the tender process? That is certainly a drastic sanction. Is it a permissible one?

58. It is common ground that the consequence of not challenging the choice of national procedure within the time-limit is that, as a matter of general legal principle, that procedure prevails and the tender procedure falls thereafter outside the scope of the directive. This is to be distinguished from the situation in GAT , where the Court held that, since every decision taken by a contracting authority in a public tender is reviewable under Directive 89/665, a tenderer cannot be denied the right to claim damages for an allegedly illegal award decision on the ground that a previous decision rendered the procedure defective (without, however, taking it outside the scope of the directive). (32)

59. One possibility would be to create an exception to the rule in Universale-Bau and hold that the possibility of challenging a decision which appears wrongly to take the particular tender procedure outside the scope of Community protection cannot be subject to a limitation period. That does not seem to me to be a sensible solution. First, it would upset the balance between effectiveness and legal certainty which Directive 89/665 seeks to achieve. Second, a tenderer might be tempted not to challenge the procedure (which after all could appear to work in its favour by limiting competition), unless or until it discovered, through the award decision, that the right to a review under Directive 89/665 actually mattered to it.

60. Suggesting that a longer time-limit should be required where the consequences of being out of time are draconian seems to me to beg as many questions as it answers.

61. I therefore conclude that a time-limit for challenging decisions in a tender procedure is still compatible with the principle of effectiveness, combined with the need for rapidity and legal certainty, even when the consequence of failing to challenge an irregularity within the time-limit removes a tenderer from the protection of the review procedure conferred by Directive 89/665.

62. I turn now to an examination of the time-limit, including its particular features, in the present case.

63. The limitation period fixed in Paragraph 107(3), second sentence, of the GWB runs from the publication of the tender notice until the deadline for submitting offers. In the present case, that period seems to have been at least 23 days. (33) In view of the fact that the Community legislator considers a minimum period of 22 days to be sufficient for preparing and submitting a tender, (34) it would be difficult to argue that 23 days were insufficient for challenging an alleged irregularity. Such a time-limit for bringing a challenge thus does not in principle appear to infringe the principle of effectiveness underlying Directive 89/665, especially in view of the need, underlined in that directive, for a rapid review procedure. (35)

64. However, the particularity of the time-limit specified in Paragraph 107(3), second sentence, of the GWB is that it starts to run if the alleged regularity in question is identifiable on the basis of the tender notice.

65. What, therefore, is the degree or nature of knowledge of an irregularity which may be attributed to a tenderer without breaching the effectiveness principle underlying Directive 89/665?

66. It seems to me that a requirement of actual, or subjective, knowledge on the part of the tenderer would run counter to legal certainty. Furthermore, in circumstances such as those of the present case, it could be difficult to prove that a tenderer had actual knowledge of an irregularity, and a requirement of such proof would hardly be consistent with the need for a rapid review process.

67. It therefore seems preferable to formulate the test in terms of a standard of deemed, or objective, knowledge. The Court already applies an objective standard in respect of tenderers' ability to interpret award criteria against the yardstick of equality of treatment in public procurement, namely the ability of a reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderer'. (36) The same formula seems appropriate in the context of what knowledge of an irregularity in the tender procedure it is reasonable to deem a tenderer to possess.

68. A reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderer' can be deemed to be experienced in submitting tenders in its particular field. It can also be expected to have a general knowledge and understanding of key legal considerations affecting the markets in which it operates. In the context of the present case, this would entail a general knowledge of national and Community tender procedures and relevant thresholds, including the possibilities for challenging decisions under both procedures and the time-limits for bringing such challenges.

69. What information needs to be available to enable such a tenderer, in circumstances such as those in the present case, to ascertain that the wrong choice of procedure has been used?

70. I do not agree with Bremen that publishing the estimated value of the contract would distort competition. After all, Community public procurement legislation, an important aim of which is to promote competition, requires estimated contract values to be published in some cases. (37)

71. Since the choice of procedure is a function of the estimated total contract value, the information must enable the tenderer to work out that value. This would include not only goods to be supplied, but also the cost of any support, training or maintenance included in the contract scope. I accept Lithuania's submission on this point, namely that nothing less than a clear and full disclosure of the scope or volume of the project will allow a tenderer, on the basis of its own experience and knowledge of market rates, to calculate the estimated total value.

72. The existence of such an information requirement, combined with the application of the criterion of the knowledge and experience attributable to a reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderer, should resolve the referring court's concerns about potential abuse in respect of the ability of a contracting authority to take advantage of an unwary tenderer. (38)

73. I do not think that this information must necessarily appear in the tender notice itself. A tenderer can reasonably be expected to act on references in the notice to other documents, provided it is clearly indicated where these are to be obtained. In this respect, the Court has already ruled that award criteria are compatible with the principle of equal treatment if they are mentioned in the contract documents or contract notice. (39) If the necessary information delineating the scope of the contract is contained in the documents, then the time-limit for challenging an irregularity starts to run only once the tenderer has been able to obtain them, or would have been able to obtain them had it acted promptly.

74. However, I do not think that the mere absence of a stated scope or estimated contract volume from the original tender notice would be sufficient to put a reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderer on notice that the contracting authority had wrongly estimated the tender value. Even if that absence constitutes an irregularity in itself, requiring the tenderer to challenge it in order to discover whether it concealed a further irregularity that could affect the tenderer's rights seems to me to render the exercise of those rights excessively difficult, particularly in view of the time-limit. This is a fortiori the case if it is at least open to argument whether the stipulation under Paragraph 17(1)(2)(c) of the VOL/A to publish the scope of the contract is mandatory. (40)

75. It is ultimately for the national court, as sole judge of fact, to decide at what point (if at all) a reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderer should have discovered that the wrong procedure had been used. The following observations may nevertheless be of assistance.

76. In the present case, the tender documents could readily be downloaded from the Bremen website. However, it appears that neither the notice itself nor the tender documents stated the scope or volume of the project.

77. It is true that the service contract' part of the price document specified training for about 300 employees and 10 administrators, and that the object document indicated that about 310 employees would work with the system. However, the request to indicate unit prices for different possible ranges of numbers of licences in the licence contract' part of the price document could reasonably have been read as implying that a lower number of licences might be considered or that the final number of licences had not yet been decided (let alone how many licences would be full versus read-only). (41)

78. Lämmerzahl contacted Bremen on at least two occasions to find out more details about the tender invitation. In its second set of questions it made it clear that it was assuming that 310 licences would be required. But this was never expressly confirmed by Bremen. The most that can be said is that Bremen, by not contradicting this figure in its reply of 6 April 2005, tacitly endorsed Lämmerzahl's assumption that around 310 licences were required.

79. In short, it appears that neither the tender notice and documents nor the information which Bremen subsequently provided explicitly indicated how many licences were required. Nevertheless, it is clear that Lämmerzahl went on to submit a tender whose value was three times the threshold for Community-wide tenders.

80. Against that background, it is for the national court to decide whether, in all the circumstances, the application of Paragraph 107(3), second sentence, of the GWB afforded effective protection. This would be the case if the information on the tender notice or documents enabled a reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderer to discover that the wrong procedure had been used. If it is not possible to interpret this provision in such a way that it is compatible with Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, the former should be disapplied (42) and the latter, which has direct effect, (43) applied.

Conclusion

81. I accordingly suggest that the Court should combine the two questions referred and answer them as follows:

If a tenderer has failed within the time-limit set by national law to challenge a choice of procedure incorrectly placing a public tender invitation outside the scope of Community protection, Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts does not preclude the tenderer from being excluded from the right provided by that directive to review further decisions in the tender process, provided that the application of the time-limit does not in fact make it virtually impossible or excessively difficult to challenge the choice of procedure in the circumstances. This would be the case if the information available on the tender notice or tender documents were insufficient to enable a reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderer to discover that the wrong procedure had been used. It is for the national court to verify this in a given case.

(3) - (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1.) This directive was repealed and replaced by Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1) and Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001 (OJ 2001 L 285, p. 1). Directive 93/36 was in turn one of the directives repealed and replaced by European Parliament and Council Directive 2004/18/EC of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

(4) - See footnote 2. Directive 92/50 was amended by Directives 93/36, 97/52 and 2001/78 and repealed, save for Article 41 (which amended Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665), by Directive 2004/18 (see footnote 3 above). Under Article 2 of Directive 92/50 (and, subsequently, paragraph 2 of Article 1(2)(d) of Directive 2004/18), a contract which includes both supplies and services is considered to be a service contract if the value of services exceeds that of the products supplied. The contract at issue in the present case includes both supplies (software licences) and services (training and maintenance), whose relative values are not clear from the documents in the case file. It is thus uncertain whether it would qualify as a supply or as a service contract. However, the threshold value bringing a contract within the scope of Directive 89/665 is the same in both cases.

(5) - See footnote 3. Similar provisions to Article 10(1) and (1a) of Directive 93/36 are to be found, for public service contracts, in Article 18(1) and (2) of Directive 92/50. Both sets of provisions were subsequently replaced by Article 38(2) and (4) of Directive 2004/18.

(11) - See footnote 8 above.

(12) - 2002 version of 17 September 2002, Bundesanzeiger No 216a. Sections 1 and 2 cover awards respectively below and above the Community threshold. Corresponding paragraphs in each section bear the same number. In each section the wording of Paragraph 17(1)(2)(c) is identical.

(13) - Diese Bekanntmachung soll mindestens folgende Angaben enthalten: ... Art und Umfang der Leistung' in the German original.

(14) - The translations of the parts of the tender notice and tender documents cited are my own.

(15) - In its letter of 6 April 2005 (see point 20 below), Bremen said that a State licence would be for an unlimited number of licences for use in Bremen and Bremerhaven.

(16) - It seems that Bremen had used the national tendering procedure as a result of a valuation of EUR 150 000 (made in 2004) on the basis of 150 rather than 310 licences.

(17) - Lämmerzahl refers to this provision in the VOL/A as non-mandatory'. The referring court states, however, that the word soll' (should') generally indicates an obligation to comply, absent compelling reasons to the contrary. See point 12 above and the footnote thereto. The referring court derives its interpretation of soll' from the General Comments' section at the end of the VOL/A.

(18) - The Court has ruled that the setting of reasonable time-limits for bringing proceedings is compatible with Article 1 of Directive 89/665: Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraphs 75 to 79.

(19) - The Community legislator has imposed certain harmonised requirements in respect of contracts whose value exceeds the relevant threshold: see footnote 3 above.

(20) - In my Opinion in Case C-195/04 Commission v Finland [2007] ECR I-0000, I have dealt at length with this argument.

(21) - See for example Case C-312/93 Peterbroeck [1995] ECR I-4599, paragraph 12 and the case-law cited, and Case C-432/05 Unibet [2007] ECR I-0000, paragraph 43 and the case-law cited.

(27) - Idem , paragraphs 56 and 57.

(28) - Case C-230/02 Grossmann Air Service [2004] ECR I-1829, paragraph 37.

(29) - The applicant in that case believed that the specifications of the tender invitation discriminated against him. Before the award decision he neither challenged those specifications, nor did he submit a tender. The Court held that a refusal to acknowledge an applicant's interest in obtaining the particular contract in the circumstances of the case did not impair the effectiveness of Directive 89/665.

(30) - Santex , paragraph 60.

(31) - Case C-315/01 [2003] ECR I-6351, paragraphs 53 and 54, and see also point 46 of the Opinion of Advocate General Geelhoed.

(32) - GAT (cited in footnote 31 above), paragraphs 51 to 54.

(33) - See point 13 above.

(34) - See point 8 above.

(35) - Research carried out by the relevant departments of the Court indicates that such time-limits for challenging tender invitations are within the range of limitation periods adopted by other Member States. The following time-limits apply in the countries surveyed which consider a public invitation to tender to be a justiciable act and provide for a review of such an invitation either expressly or as part of a general review system: 7 or 14 days depending on the procedure (Austria, Poland), 14 days (Finland), 15 days (Hungary), one month (Portugal), the deadline for submitting offers (Slovenia), two months (Greece, Spain), three months (Ireland, UK). No time-limit is specified in France and Luxembourg. In Denmark, the Netherlands and Sweden, the tender invitation can be challenged even after the contract is signed.

(36) - Case C-19/00 SIAC [2001] ECR I-7725, paragraph 42. An alternative formulation, from the area of protection of legitimate expectations, is that of a prudent and alert economic operator': see for example Joined Cases C-182/03 and C-217/03 Belgium and Forum 187 v Commission [2006] ECR I-5479. Bremen and the Commission have suggested further possible formulations (points 42 and 44 above).

(37) - See Annex VII A to Directive 2004/18 (footnote 3 above), which came into force after the material events in the present case. In contract notices, the estimated total value of works, supplies or services in framework agreements must be disclosed. In prior information notices for public supply contracts, either the quantity or the value of the products to be supplied must be given.

(38) - See point 30 above.

(39) - SIAC (cited in footnote 36 above), paragraphs 40 and 42.

(40) - See point 29 above in fine.

(41) - The inconsistency between the different ranges of numbers of licences and the figure of 310 employees cannot be fully explained by the permutation possibilities between full and read-only licences. The maximum number of read-only licences for which pricing was requested is 100; and the first three ranges for which full licence pricing is requested fall below the balance (210) which would be required to bring the total to 310.

(42) - See Santex (cited in footnote 25 above), paragraphs 63 to 65 and the case-law cited.

Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht (Germany) lodged on 30 May 2006 - Lämmerzahl GmbH v Freie Hansestadt Bremen

(Case C- 241/06)

Language of the case: German

Referring court

Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht

Parties to the main proceedings

Applicant: Lämmerzahl GmbH

Defendant: Freie Hansestadt Bremen

Question(s) referred

1. Is it compatible with Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, [1] in particular Article 1(1) and (3), for a tenderer to be generally barred from gaining access to a review of a contracting authority's decision to award public contracts because the tenderer wrongfully failed to raise an irregularity in the award procedure within the time-limit laid down for that purpose in national law, where the irregularity relates

(a) to the form of invitation to tender selected

or

(b) to the correctness of the determination of the contract price (the estimate is obviously wrong or the method of determination is not sufficiently transparent)

and a review of other irregularities in the award procedure that - considered in isolation - would not be time-barred would be permissible on the basis of the contract price correctly determined or to be determined?

2. Should the details in a tender notice relevant to determination of the contract price be subject to any special requirements so as to enable the conclusion to be drawn from irregularities relating to the estimated contract price that the protection of primary law is generally precluded even if the correctly estimated contract price exceeds the relevant threshold amount?

Judgment of the Court (First Chamber) of 18 December 2007
Asociacion Profesional de Empresas de Reparto y Manipulado de Correspondencia v Administracion General del Estado. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Audiencia Nacional - Spain. Public procurement - Liberalisation of postal services - Directives 92/50/EEC and 97/67/EC - Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC - National legislation allowing public authorities to conclude agreements for the provision of both reserved and non-reserved postal services with a publicly owned company, namely the provider of universal postal service in the Member State concerned, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts. Case C-220/06.

In Case C220/06,

REFERENCE for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC, from the Audiencia Nacional (Spain), made by decision of 15 March 2006, received at the Court on 15 May 2006, in the proceedings

v

Administracion General del Estado,

THE COURT (First Chamber), composed of P. Jann (Rapporteur), President of the Chamber, R. Schintgen, A. Borg Barthet, M. Ilei and E. Levits, Judges,

Advocate General: Y. Bot,

Registrar: M. Ferreira, Principal Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 14 June 2007,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

- the Asociacion Profesional de Empresas de Reparto y Manipulado de Correspondencia, by J. M. Piqueras Ruíz, abogado,

- the Spanish Government, by F. Díez Moreno, acting as Agent,

- the Belgian Government, by A. Hubert, acting as Agent,

- the Austrian Government, by M. Fruhmann, acting as Agent,

- the Commission of the European Communities, by X. Lewis and K. Simonsson, acting as Agents, assisted by C. Fernandez and I. Moreno-Tapia Rivas, abogadas, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 20 September 2007,

gives the following

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Community law must be interpreted as not precluding legislation of a Member State that allows public authorities to entrust, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts, the provision of postal services reserved, in a manner consistent with Directive 97/67/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 15 December 1997 on common rules for the development of the internal market of Community postal services and the improvement of quality of service, to a public limited company whose capital is wholly state-owned and which, in that State, is the provider of the universal postal service.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

2. Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001, must be interpreted as precluding legislation of a Member State that allows public authorities to entrust, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts, the provision of non-reserved postal services within the meaning of Directive 97/67 to a public limited company whose capital is wholly state-owned and which, in that State, is the provider of the universal postal service, in so far as the contracts to which that legislation applies

- reach the relevant threshold as provided for in Article 7(1) of Directive 92/50, as amended by Directive 2001/78, and

- constitute contracts within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50, as amended by Directive 2001/78, concluded in writing for pecuniary interest, which are matters for the national court to establish.

3. Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC, as well as the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination by reason of nationality and transparency, must be interpreted as precluding legislation of a Member State that allows public authorities to entrust, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts, the provision of non-reserved postal services within the meaning of Directive 97/67 to a public limited company whose capital is wholly state-owned and which, in that State, is the provider of universal postal services, in so far as the contracts to which that legislation applies

- do not reach the relevant threshold as provided for in Article 7(1) of Directive 92/50, as amended by Directive 2001/78, and

- do not in actual fact constitute a unilateral administrative measure creating obligations solely for the provider of the universal postal service and departing significantly from the normal conditions of a commercial offer made by that company,

which are matters for the national court to establish.

1. The reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, read in conjunction with Article 86 EC, in the context of the liberalisation of postal services and in light of Community rules governing public service contracts.

2. This reference has been made in the course of proceedings between the Asociacion Profesional de Empresas de Reparto y Manipulado de Correspondencia (Trade Association of Mail Delivery and Handling Companies, the Asociacion Profesional') and the Administracion General del Estado, Ministerio de Educacion, Cultura y Deporte (State administration, Ministry of Education, Culture and Sport, the Ministerio'), concerning the latter's decision to award, without a public call for tenders, postal services to the Sociedad Estatal Correos y Telégrafos SA (Public corporation for postal and telegraphical services, Correos'), which is the provider of the universal postal service in Spain.

Legal context

Community legislation

Directive 97/67/EC

3. Directive 97/67/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 15 December 1997 on common rules for the development of the internal market of Community postal services and the improvement of quality of service (OJ 1998 L 15, p. 14) establishes, pursuant to its Article 1, common rules concerning, inter alia, the provision of a universal postal service within the Community and the criteria defining the services which may be reserved for universal service providers.

4. Pursuant to Article 3(1) of Directive 97/67, Member States are to ensure that users enjoy the right to a universal service involving the permanent provision of a postal service of specified quality at all points in their territory at affordable prices for all users.

5. In accordance with Article 3(4) of Directive 97/67:

Each Member State shall adopt the measures necessary to ensure that the universal service includes the following minimum facilities:

- the clearance, sorting, transport and distribution of postal items up to two kilograms,

- the clearance, sorting, transport and distribution of postal packages up to 10 kilograms,

- services for registered items and insured items.'

6. Article 7 of Directive 97/67, which falls under Chapter 3 of the Directive, entitled Harmonisation of the services which may be reserved', provides in paragraphs 1 and 2:

1. To the extent necessary to ensure the maintenance of universal service, the services which may be reserved by each Member State for the universal service provider(s) shall be the clearance, sorting, transport and delivery of items of domestic correspondence, whether by accelerated delivery or not, the price of which is less than five times the public tariff for an item of correspondence in the first weight step of the fastest standard category where such category exists, provided that they weigh less than 350 grams....

2. To the extent necessary to ensure the maintenance of universal service, cross-border mail and direct mail may continue to be reserved within the price and weight limits laid down in paragraph 1.'

Directive 92/50/EEC

7. According to Article 1(a) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p.1), as amended by Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001 (OJ 2001 L 285, p. 1, Directive 92/50'), public service contracts' means contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority, to the exclusion of contracts listed in subparagraphs (i) to (ix) of that provision.

8. In accordance with Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, contracting authorities' means the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.' Subparagraph (c) of Article (1) defines service provider' as any natural or legal person, including a public body, which offers services'.

9. Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50 specifies that contracting authorities are to ensure that there is no discrimination between different service providers.

10. Article 6 of Directive 92/50 reads as follows:

This Directive shall not apply to public service contracts awarded to an entity which is itself a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) on the basis of an exclusive right which it enjoys pursuant to a published law, regulation or administrative provision which is compatible with the [EC] Treaty.'

11. Subparagraph (ii) of the second indent of Article 7(1)(a) of Directive 92/50, read in combination with category 4 in Annex I A to the same Directive, provides that it applies to public service contracts covering transport of mail by land and by air which are awarded by the contracting authorities listed in Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, other than those referred to in Annex I to Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p.1), and where the estimated value net of VAT is not less than the equivalent in Euros of 200 000 SDR [special drawing rights].

12. Article 7(5) of Directive 92/50 provides:

In the case of contracts which do not specify a total price, the basis for calculating the estimated contract value shall be:

- in the case of fixed-term contracts, where their term is 48 months or less, the total contract value for its duration;

- in the case of contracts of indefinite duration or with a term of more than 48 months, the monthly instalment multiplied by 48.'

13. In accordance with Article 8 of Directive 92/50, contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A to the Directive shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI of the Directive, which means, in particular, that they must be awarded by a call for tenders and made the subject of appropriate publicity.

National legislation

14. According to Law 24/1998 on the universal postal service and the liberalisation of postal services (Ley 24/1998 del Servicio Postal Universal y de Liberalizacion de los Servicios Postales) of 13 July 1998, which transposes Directive 97/67 into Spanish national law, postal services are considered to be services of general interest provided under conditions of free competition. Only the universal postal service is considered to be a public service or is subject to public-service obligations. Article 18 of Law 24/1998 exclusively reserves some services to the provider of universal postal service.

15. The provider of that universal postal service in Spain, namely Correos, is a public limited company whose capital is wholly state-owned.

16. According to Article 11 of the Law on public procurement (Ley de Contratos de las Administraciones Publicas), the consolidated text of which was approved by Royal Legislative Decree 2/2000 (Real Decreto Legislativo 2/2000 por el que se aprueba el texto refundido de la Ley de Contratos de las Administraciones Publicas) of 16 June 2000 (Law on public procurement'), contracts awarded by public authorities shall comply, subject to the exceptions provided for by that Law, with the principles of advertising and competition and, in any event, shall always observe the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination.

17. It is apparent from Article 206(4) of the Law on public procurement that, as a rule, the award of contracts for the provision of postal services comes, from a contractual point of view, within the scope of public procurement governed by that Law.

18. However, Article 3(1)(d) of the Law on public procurement excludes from its scope of application cooperation agreements which, in accordance with the specific provisions governing them, are concluded by the administration with natural or legal persons governed by private law, in so far as the subject-matter of such agreements does not fall within the scope of public procurement governed by the said Law or by administrative rules.

19. According to the Audiencia Nacional's analysis of the legal context in which the case before it is to be placed, such a cooperation agreement is a legal transaction which is not subject to the statutory rules governing public procurement and, therefore, the principles of competitiveness, advertising and free competition which are a feature of the sphere of public procurement do not apply to such a transaction.

20. Article 58 of Law 14/2000 concerning Tax, Administrative and Public Order Measure (Ley 14/2000 de medidas Fiscales, Administrativas y de Orden Social) of 29 December 2000 (Law 14/2000') provides that public authorities may conclude cooperation agreements with Correos such as those referred to in Article 3 of the Law on public procurement, in order to provide services connected with the objects of that company.

21. According to the findings of the Audiencia Nacional, having regard to the objects of Correos as defined in Article 58 of Law 14/2000, the possibility of concluding such cooperation agreements is not limited to non-liberalised or reserved postal services, but covers the management and operation of any postal service. Therefore, the possibility of concluding cooperation agreements is not restricted to the universal postal service and does not, within that universal postal service, distinguish services that are reserved from those that are not.

22. In addition, the Audiencia Nacional states that, in accordance with Article 58 of Law 14/2000, Correos is under an obligation to provide certain postal services. Among Correos' duties is that of providing any services connected with its company objects that may be entrusted to it by the public authorities. Therefore, one of the parties lacks the intention to conclude a contract.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

23. At the end of a negotiated procedure without a public call for tenders, the Ministerio and Correos signed a cooperation agreement on 6 June 2002 for the provision of postal and telegraphical services (Convenio de colaboracion para la prestacion de servicios postales y telegraficos, the Cooperation Agreement').

24. In accordance with the Cooperation Agreement, Correos is to provide postal and telegraphical services for the Ministerio covering the following items:

- letters (ordinary, registered and express), local, inter-city and international, with no weight or size limit;

- packages (postal, blue and international) with no weight or size limit;

- the express national postal service and international EMS (Express Mail Service'), with no weight or size limit, and

- delivery of books, library material, magazines and the Ministry's Official Gazette nationally (local and inter-city) and internationally (by land and air), with no weight or size limit.

25. Since it depends on turnover, the financial value of the services provided is not specified. The estimate given before the Audiencia Nacional, which is not disputed, is that of a sum of more than EUR 12 020.42 per annum.

26. The Cooperation Agreement was concluded for an indefinite term and was still in force at the date of the order for reference.

27. The Asociacion Profesional brought an appeal before the Ministerio in which it challenged the administrative decision awarding, by means of the Cooperation Agreement, liberalised postal services without a public call for tenders.

28. By decision of 20 March 2003, the Ministerio rejected that appeal on the grounds that the procedure it had adopted to award the postal services was based on the existence of a cooperation agreement, which fell outside the rules governing public procurement and was therefore not subject to the rules relating to advertising and free competition.

29. In this regard, the Ministerio took the view that it had not concluded a contract with Correos at all, but that the latter provided its services on the basis of a cooperation agreement concluded pursuant to Article 3(1)(d) of the Law on public procurement and Article 58(2)(5) of Law 14/2000.

30. It is the Ministerio's rejection decision of 20 March 2003 which is the subject of the Asociacion Profesional's action before the Audiencia Nacional.

31. According to the Audiencia Nacional, the outcome of the case before it depends on the interpretation of Community law. The Court may hold that the use of cooperation agreements is incompatible with the rules on advertising and free competition that apply to the award of public contracts, by taking the view that such agreements can only be used in the sphere of postal services reserved by law to the universal service provider, or that they are incompatible with the abovementioned rules, also in that sphere. Should the Court find accordingly, it would have to be concluded that a cooperation agreement like that in issue in this case is contrary to law, and its content would be null and void, either in its entirety or only in so far as it extends beyond those postal services for which the Court considers it could lawfully be used.

32. In those circumstances, the Audiencia Nacional decided to stay proceedings and refer to the Court the following question for a preliminary ruling:

Are Articles 43 [EC] and 49 [...] EC, in conjunction with Article 86 thereof, as applied within the framework of the liberalisation of the postal services established by Directives 1997/67/EC and 2002/39/EC and within the framework of the rules governing public procurement introduced by the ad hoc directives, to be interpreted as precluding an agreement whose subject-matter includes the provision of postal services, both reserved and non-reserved and, therefore, liberalised, concluded between a department of the State Administration and a state company whose capital is wholly state-owned and which is furthermore, the universal postal service provider?'

On the question for a preliminary ruling

33. As a preliminary point, it must be held that, even though the Audiencia Nacional refers in its question to Directive 2002/39/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 10 June 2002 amending Directive 97/67 with regard to the further opening to competition of Community postal services (OJ 2002 L 176, p. 21), that directive cannot be applied in the main proceedings. Pursuant to Article 2(1) of that directive, Member States were given until 31 December 2002 to transpose the directive into national law.

Admissibility

34. The Spanish Government considers that the question for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible in as far as, in actual fact, the Court is being asked whether the Cooperation Agreement complies with the directives on the award of public service contracts and the liberalisation of postal services, which is a question that falls under the jurisdiction of the national court.

35. It must be held at the outset that neither the wording of the question referred nor the necessary grounds supporting it, as set out in the order for reference, indicate that the Audiencia Nacional asks the Court to decide whether the Cooperation Agreement complies with Community law.

36. In addition, it must be observed that whilst the Court does not have jurisdiction under Article 234 EC to apply the rules of Community law to a particular case or to judge the compatibility of provisions of national law with those rules, it may provide a national court with all the elements relating to the interpretation of Community law which may be useful to it in assessing the effects of the provisions of that law (see Case C181/00 Flightline [2002] ECR I6139, paragraph 20).

37. Therefore, the reference for a preliminary ruling must be considered to be admissible.

Substance

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

38. By its question, the Audiencia Nacional asks, essentially, whether Community law must be interpreted as precluding legislation of a Member State that allows public authorities to entrust, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts, the provision of both reserved and non-reserved postal services to a public limited company whose capital is wholly state-owned and which is, in that State, the provider of the universal postal service.

Reserved postal services within the meaning of Directive 97/67

39. As a preliminary point, it must be recalled that Article 7 of Directive 97/67 permits Member States to reserve some postal services for the provider(s) of the universal postal service to the extent necessary to ensure the maintenance of that service. Consequently, in so far as postal services are, in a manner consistent with that directive, reserved for a single universal service provider, such services are by necessity not subject to competition, given that no other economic operator is authorised to offer those services.

40. The fact remains that, as regards such reserved services, Community rules in the field of public procurement, which have as their principal objective the free movement of services and the opening-up to undistorted competition in all the Member States, cannot be applied (Case C26/03 Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau [2005] ECR I1, paragraph 44, and Case C340/04 Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei [2006] ECR I4137, paragraph 58).

41. Therefore, the answer to the question referred must be that Community law must be interpreted as not precluding legislation of a Member State that allows public authorities to entrust, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts, the provision of postal services reserved, in a manner consistent with Directive 97/67, to a public limited company whose capital is wholly state-owned and which, in that State, is the provider of the universal postal service.

Non-reserved postal services within the meaning of Directive 97/67

42. It is only in regard to postal services that are non-reserved within the meaning of Directive 97/67 that it must be examined whether, in concluding a cooperation agreement like the one in issue in the main proceedings, Community rules on public procurement must be observed.

- Directive 92/50

43. In the first place, it must be examined whether an agreement like the one in issue in the main proceedings came within the scope of the directive that is relevant to the public procurement of postal services in the period relevant to the case before the Audiencia Nacional, namely Directive 92/50.

44. Directive 92/50 requires that the award of the public service contracts to which it applies must comply with certain requirements concerning procedure and advertising.

45. According to the actual wording of Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50, a public service contract presupposes the existence of a contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b).

46. As the Advocate General observed in Point 63 of his Opinion, the Ministerio is indeed a contracting authority and Correos a service provider within the meaning of the provisions referred to in the preceding paragraph. In addition, it is not contested that the Cooperation Agreement was concluded in writing and for pecuniary interest.

47. However, given that the Audiencia Nacional only states that the value of the services provided under the said contract exceeds EUR 12 020.42 per annum, this raises the question whether that figure reaches the threshold of 200 000 SDR laid down in subparagraph (ii) of the second indent of Article 7(1)(a) of Directive 92/50, which, in the period relevant to the main proceedings, amounted to EUR 249 681.

48. It is for the Audiencia Nacional to determine whether, in the light of the national provisions that transpose the second indent of Article 7(5) of Directive 92/50, the threshold of EUR 249 681 is reached.

49. Assuming that that threshold is reached, this raises the question whether the Cooperation Agreement is in fact a contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50. The Spanish Government submits that the agreement is not contractual but instrumental, given that Correos is unable to refuse to enter into such an agreement, but is under an obligation to accept.

50. In this respect, it must be noted that the definition of a public service contract is a matter of Community law, with the result that the classification of the Cooperation Agreement under Spanish law is irrelevant for the purposes of determining whether it falls within the scope of Directive 92/50 (see, to that effect, Case C-264/03 Commission v France [2005] ECR I-8831, paragraph 36, and Case C-382/05 Commission v Italie [2007] ECR I-0000, paragraph 30).

51. Admittedly, in paragraph 54 of its judgment in Case C-295/05 Asemfo [2007] ECR I-0000, the Court held that the requirement for the application of the directives governing the award of public service contracts relating to the existence of a contract was not met where the State company in issue in the case that gave rise to the judgment had no choice as to the acceptance of a demand made by the competent authorities in question or as to the tariff for its services, a matter which was for the referring court to establish.

52. However, that reasoning must be read in its specific context. It follows on from the finding that, under Spanish legislation, that State company is an instrument and a technical service of the General State Administration and of the administration of each of the Autonomous Communities concerned, the Court having already held, in a context different from that in the case that gave rise to the judgment in Asemfo , that being an instrument and technical service of the Spanish Administration, the company in issue is required to implement only work entrusted to it by the General Administration of that State, the Autonomous Communities or the public bodies subject to them (Asemfo , paragraphs 49 and 53).

53. Correos, as the provider of the universal postal service, carries out an entirely different task, which means in particular that its customers consist of any person wishing to use the universal postal service. The mere fact that that company has no choice as to the acceptance of a demand made by the Ministerio or as to the tariff for its services cannot automatically entail that no contract was concluded between the two entities.

54. In fact, such a situation is not necessarily different from that which arises where a private customer wishes to use services provided by Correos coming within the scope of the universal postal service, since it is in the very nature of the task of a provider of that service that, in such a situation, he is also required to provide the services requested and must do so, if necessary, for a fixed tariff or, in any event, for a price that is transparent and non-discriminatory. There is no question that such a relationship must be called contractual. It is only if the agreement between Correos and the Ministerio were in actual fact a unilateral administrative measure solely creating obligations for Correos ¡- and as such a measure departing significantly from the normal conditions of a commercial offer made by that company, a matter which is for the Audiencia Nacional to establish - that it would have to be held that there is no contract and that, consequently, Directive 92/50 could not apply.

55. In the course of that examination, the Audiencia Nacional will have to consider, in particular, whether Correos is able to negotiate with the Ministerio the actual content of the services it has to provide and the tariffs to be applied to those services and whether, as regards non-reserved services, the company can free itself from obligations arising under the Cooperation Agreement, by giving notice as provided for in that agreement.

56. The other arguments submitted by the Spanish Government to show that a cooperation agreement like the one in issue in the main proceedings falls outside the rules on public procurement must also be rejected.

57. The Spanish Government submits, in particular, that the Cooperation Agreement cannot, in any event, be subject to the rules on public procurement because the in-house' criteria laid down in the case-law of the Court are fulfilled.

58. In this regard, it is important to recall that, according to the Court's settled case-law, a call for tenders, under the directives relating to public procurement, is not compulsory, even if the contracting party is an entity legally distinct from the contracting authority, where two conditions are met. First, the public authority which is a contracting authority must exercise over the distinct entity in question a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, second, that entity must carry out the essential part of its activities with the local authority or authorities which control it (see Case C-107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I8121, paragraph 50; Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau , paragraph 49; Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei , paragraph 33; and Asemfo , paragraph 55).

59. It is not necessary to analyse in greater detail whether the first of the two conditions referred to in the preceding paragraph is fulfilled, given that it is enough to hold that, in the case in the main proceedings, the second condition is not fulfilled. It is not contested that Correos, as provider of the universal postal service in Spain, does not carry out the essential part of its activities with the Ministerio or with public authorities in general, but that that company provides postal services to an unspecified number of customers of that postal service.

60. The Spanish Government submits however that the relationship between the public authority and a company with exclusive rights is, by its very nature, exclusive, which implies a degree of exclusivity that is higher than in the case of essential activity'. Correos has an exclusive right because the company is required, pursuant to Article 58 of Law 14/2000, to provide public authorities with services connected with its company objects, which includes reserved and non-reserved services.

61. In this respect, it must be held that, assuming that that obligation could effectively be called an exclusive right, a matter which is for the Audiencia Nacional to determine, such a right cannot satisfy, in the context of the analysis that must be carried out in relation to the two conditions recalled in paragraph 58 of the present judgment, the requirement that the relevant service provider must carry out the essential part of its activities with the entity or the entities that control it.

62. That last requirement is aimed particularly at ensuring that Directive 92/50 remains applicable in the event that an undertaking controlled by one or more entities is active in the market and therefore likely to be in competition with other undertakings (see, by analogy, Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei , paragraph 60). It is not contested that Correos is active on the Spanish postal market, where it is, except as regards reserved services within the meaning of Directive 97/67, in competition with other businesses active in the postal sector, of which, according to the submissions of the Spanish Government, there are approximately 2000.

63. Therefore, it must be held that a cooperation agreement like the one in issue in the main proceedings does not fulfil the conditions noted in paragraph 58 of the present judgment and cannot on that basis fall outside the scope of Directive 92/50.

64. However, the existence of an exclusive right may justify non-application of Directive 92/50

given that, pursuant to Article 6 of that directive, the Directive shall not apply to public service contracts awarded to an entity which is itself a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1 (b) on the basis of an exclusive right which it enjoys pursuant to a published law, regulation or administrative provision which is compatible with the Treaty'.

65. Without there being any need to examine whether Correos fulfils the first of those three conditions set out in Article 6 - concerning the status of Correos as a contracting authority -, and assuming that Correos enjoys, pursuant to Article 58 of Law 14/2000, an exclusive right to provide public authorities with postal services connected with its company objects, it is enough to hold that, in any event, the third of those conditions is not met, namely that the provision granting the exclusive right must be compatible with the Treaty.

66. That national provision - assuming that it does confer on the national provider of the universal postal service the exclusive right to provide to public authorities the postal services that, pursuant to Article 7 of Directive 97/67, are not reserved, and to which this analysis is limited - is incompatible with the purpose of that directive.

67. As is apparent from the case-law of the Court, Member States do not have the option of extending the services reserved for the universal postal service provider pursuant to Article 7 of Directive 97/67, as such extension goes against the purpose of the Directive, which, according to recital 8, aims to establish gradual and controlled liberalisation in the postal sector (Case C240/02 Asempre and Asociacion Nacional de Empresas de Externalizacion y Gestion de Envíos y Pequeña Paquetería [2004] ECR I2461, paragraph 24).

68. This finding applies not only to reserving a service that is horizontal, in other words reserving a certain type of postal service as such, but, in order to ensure the effectiveness of Article 7 of Directive 97/67, also applies to reserving a service which is vertical and which concerns, as is the case in the main proceedings, the exclusive provision of postal services to certain customers. As the Commission of the European Communities observed, applying the Spanish rules in issue in the main proceedings would mean that, in practice, all postal services needed by a Spanish public body could potentially be supplied by Correos, to the exclusion of all other postal operators, which would clearly be contrary to the purpose of Directive 97/67.

69. Therefore, the answer to the question referred must be that Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as precluding legislation of a Member State that allows public authorities to entrust, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts, the provision of non-reserved postal services within the meaning of Directive 97/67 to a public limited company whose capital is wholly state-owned and which, in that State, is the provider of the universal postal service, in so far as the contracts to which that legislation applies:

- reach the relevant threshold as provided for in Article 7(1) of Directive 92/50 and

- constitute contracts within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50 concluded in writing for pecuniary interest, which are matters for the national court to establish.

- Requirements under the Treaty for the award of public service contracts

70. In so far as the national legislation in issue in the main proceedings applies to contracts that do not reach the relevant threshold as provided for in Article 7(1) of Directive 92/50, it must, in the second place, be examined whether such legislation meets the requirements under the Treaty for the award of public service contracts.

71. Although certain contracts are excluded from the scope of Community directives in the field of public procurement, the contracting authorities which conclude them are nevertheless bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the Treaty and the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality in particular (Case C264/03 Commission v France [2005] ECR I8831, paragraph 32 and the case-law cited there).

72. That is particularly the case in relation to public service contracts whose value does not reach the thresholds fixed by Directive 92/50. The mere fact that the Community legislature considered that the strict special procedures laid down in the directives on public procurement are not appropriate in the case of public contracts of small value does not mean that those contracts are excluded from the scope of Community law (Order in Case C-59/00 Vestergaard [2001] ECR I-9505, paragraph 19, and Commission v France , paragraph 33).

73. Treaty provisions that specifically apply to public service contracts whose value does not reach the thresholds established by Directive 92/50 include, in particular, Articles 43 EC and 49 EC.

74. Besides the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality, the principle of equal treatment of tenderers is also to be applied to such public service contracts even in the absence of discrimination on grounds of nationality (see, by analogy, Case C458/03 Parking Brixen [2005] ECR I8585, paragraph 48, and Case C410/04 ANAV [2006] ECR I3303, paragraph 20).

75. The principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality imply, in particular, a duty of transparency which enables the contracting public authority to verify that those principles are complied with. That obligation of transparency which is imposed on the public authority consists in ensuring, for the benefit of any potential tenderer, a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the public service contract to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed (see, by analogy, Parking Brixen , paragraph 49, and ANAV , paragraph 21).

76. As a rule, a complete lack of any call for competition in the case of the award of a public service contract like that at issue in the main proceedings does not comply with the requirements of Articles 43 EC and 49 EC any more than with the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency (see, by analogy, Parking Brixen , paragraph 50, and ANAV , paragraph 22).

77. Furthermore, it follows from Article 86(1) EC that the Member States must not maintain in force national legislation which permits the award of public service contracts without a call for tenders since such an award infringes Article 43 EC or 49 EC or the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency (see, by analogy, Parking Brixen , paragraph 52, and ANAV , paragraph 23).

78. Admittedly, the combined effect of paragraphs (1) and (2) of Article 86 EC is that paragraph (2) of the Article may be relied upon to justify the grant by a Member State to an undertaking entrusted with the operation of services of general economic interest of special or exclusive rights which are contrary to, inter alia, the provisions of the Treaty, to the extent to which performance of the particular task assigned to that undertaking can be assured only through the grant of such rights and provided that the development of trade is not affected to such an extent as would be contrary to the interests of the Community (Case C340/99 TNT Traco [2001] ECR I4109, paragraph 52).

79. It is also necessary to point out that an undertaking like Correos, responsible by virtue of the legislation of a Member State for securing the universal postal service, constitutes an undertaking entrusted with the operation of services of general economic interest for the purposes of Article 86(2) EC (see, to that effect, TNT Traco , paragraph 53).

80. However, even on the assumption that the duty imposed on Correos, pursuant to Article 58 of Law 14/2000, to provide public authorities with services connected with its company objects could be considered to be an exclusive right for the benefit of Correos, the fact remains that Article 86(2) EC cannot be used to justify national legislation like that in issue in the main proceedings in so far as it concerns non-reserved postal services within the meaning of Directive 97/67.

81. As the Advocate General observed in paragraph 99 of his Opinion, Directive 97/67 implements Article 86(2) EC with regard to the possibility of reserving certain postal services to the provider of the universal postal service. As recalled in paragraph 67 of this judgment, the Court has already held that Member States do not have the option of extending the services reserved for the universal postal service provider pursuant to Article 7 of Directive 97/67, as such extension goes against the purpose of the Directive, which aims to establish gradual and controlled liberalisation in the postal sector.

82. In this context, it must be recalled that, within the framework of Directive 97/67, account is taken of whether, in order to enable the universal postal service to be carried out under economically acceptable conditions, it is necessary to reserve some postal services to the provider of that universal postal service (Case C162/06 International Mail Spain [2007] ECR I-0000, paragraph 50).

83. Therefore, as regards non-reserved postal services within the meaning of Directive 97/67, to which this analysis is limited, Article 86(2) EC cannot provide the basis for justifying an exclusive right for the provider of the universal postal service to provide such services to public authorities.

84. The Spanish Government submits, however, that the Cooperation Agreement cannot be subject to the rules governing the award of public service contracts because of its nature, which is instrumental rather than contractual. Correos is unable to refuse to enter into a cooperation agreement like the one in issue in the main proceedings, but is under an obligation to accept it.

85. In this respect, it must be noted that, as observed in paragraph 54 of this judgment, only if the Cooperation Agreement is in actual fact a unilateral administrative measure creating obligations solely for Correos and departing significantly from the normal conditions of a commercial offer made by that company - which it is for the Audiencia Nacional to establish - would it have to be held that such a contract falls outside the Community rules on the award of public service contract.

86. As regards the argument of the Spanish Government according to which the Cooperation Agreement cannot be subject to the rules governing public procurement because it concerns an in-house' situation, it is admittedly the case that, in the sphere of public service contracts, the application of the rules set out in Articles 12 EC, 43 EC and 49 EC, as well as the general principles of which they are the specific expression, is precluded if the control exercised by the contracting public authority over the entity to which the contract was awarded is similar to that which the authority exercises over its own departments and if that entity carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority (see, by analogy, Parking Brixen , paragraph 62, and ANAV , paragraph 24).

87. However, as held in paragraph 63 of the present judgment, a cooperation agreement like the one in issue in the main proceedings does not fulfil the second of the conditions referred to in the preceding paragraph and therefore cannot, on that basis, fall outside the application of the rules set out in Articles 12 EC, 43 EC and 49 EC, as well as the general principles of which they are the specific expression.

88. Therefore, the answer to the question referred must also be that Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC, as well as the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and transparency, must be interpreted as precluding legislation of a Member State that allows public authorities to entrust, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts, the provision of non-reserved postal services within the meaning of Directive 97/67 to a public limited company whose capital is wholly state-owned and which, in that State, is the provider of universal postal service, in so far as the contracts to which that legislation applies

- do not reach the relevant threshold as provided for in Article 7(1) of Directive 92/50, and

- do not in actual fact constitute a unilateral administrative measure creating obligations solely for the provider of the universal postal service and departing significantly from the normal conditions of a commercial offer made by that company, which are matters for the national court to establish.

Costs

89. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

Asociación Profesional de Empresas de Reparto y Manipulado de Correspondencia

v

Administración General del Estado

(Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Audiencia Nacional)

(Public procurement – Liberalisation of postal services – Directives 92/50/EEC and 97/67/EC – Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC – National legislation allowing public authorities to conclude agreements for the provision of both reserved and non-reserved postal services with a publicly owned company, namely the provider of universal postal service in the Member State concerned, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts)

Summary of the Judgment

1. Freedom of movement for persons – Freedom of establishment – Freedom to provide services – Provision of postal services reserved in conformity with Directive 97/67 – Award, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts, to a wholly State-owned public limited company, which is the provider of the universal postal service

   (Arts 43 EC and 49 EC; European Parliament and Council Directive 97/67)

2. Approximation of laws – Procedures for the award of public service contracts – Directive 92/50 – Provision of postal services not reserved within the meaning of Directive 97/67 – Award, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts, to a wholly State-owned public limited company, which is the provider of the universal postal service

   (Council Directive 92/50; European Parliament and Council Directive 97/67)

3. Freedom of movement for persons – Freedom of establishment – Freedom to provide services – Provision of postal services not reserved within the meaning of Directive 97/67 – Award, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts, to a wholly State-owned public limited company, which is the provider of the universal postal service

   (Arts 12 EC, 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC; European Parliament and Council Directive 97/67)

1. Community law must be interpreted as not precluding legislation of a Member State that allows public authorities to entrust, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts, the provision of postal services reserved, in a manner consistent with Directive 97/67 on common rules for the development of the internal market of Community postal services and the improvement of quality of service, to a public limited company whose capital is wholly state-owned and which, in that State, is the provider of the universal postal service.

   Article 7 of that directive permits Member States to reserve some postal services for the provider(s) of the universal postal service to the extent necessary to ensure the maintenance of that service. Consequently, in so far as postal services are, in a manner consistent with that directive, reserved for a single universal service provider, such services are by necessity not subject to competition, given that no other economic operator is authorised to offer those services. Therefore, Community rules in the field of public procurement, which have as their principal objective the free movement of services and the opening-up to undistorted competition in all the Member States, cannot be applied.

2. Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by Directive 2001/78, must be interpreted as precluding legislation of a Member State that allows public authorities to entrust, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts, the provision of non-reserved postal services within the meaning of Directive 97/67 on common rules for the development of the internal market of Community postal services and the improvement of quality of service to a public limited company whose capital is wholly state-owned and which, in that State, is the provider of the universal postal service, in so far as the contracts to which that legislation applies reach the relevant threshold as provided for in Article 7(1) of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by Directive 2001/78, and constitute contracts within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50, as amended by Directive 2001/78, concluded in writing and for a price, rather than a unilateral administrative measure creating obligations solely for the provider, and which depart significantly from the normal conditions of a commercial offer made by the provider, which is a matter for the national court to establish.

(see paras 54, 69, operative part 2)

3. Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC, as well as the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination by reason of nationality and transparency, must be interpreted as precluding legislation of a Member State that allows public authorities to entrust, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts, the provision of non-reserved postal services within the meaning of Directive 97/67 on common rules for the development of the internal market of Community postal services and the improvement of quality of service to a public limited company whose capital is wholly state-owned and which, in that State, is the provider of universal postal services, in so far as the contracts to which that legislation applies do not reach the relevant threshold as provided for in Article 7(1) of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by Directive 2001/78, and do not in actual fact constitute a unilateral administrative measure creating obligations solely for the provider of the universal postal service and departing significantly from the normal conditions of a commercial offer made by the latter, which are matters for the national court to establish.

Moreover, Article 86(2) EC cannot be used to justify such national legislation in so far as it concerns non-reserved postal services within the meaning of Directive 97/67.

Directive 97/67 implements Article 86(2) EC with regard to the possibility of reserving certain postal services to the provider of the universal postal service. Member States do not have the option of extending the services reserved for the universal postal service provider pursuant to Article 7 of Directive 97/67, as such extension goes against the purpose of the Directive, which aims to establish gradual and controlled liberalisation in the postal sector, when, within the framework of Directive 97/67, account is taken of whether, in order to enable the universal postal service to be carried out under economically acceptable conditions, it is necessary to reserve some postal services to the provider of that universal postal service.

Reference for a preliminary ruling - Audiencia Nacional, Sala de lo Contencioso-Administrativo - Interpretation of Directive 97/67/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 15 December 1997 on common rules for the development of the internal market of Community postal services and the improvement of quality of service (OJ 1998 L 15, p. 14), as amended by Directive 2002/39/EC (OJ 2002 L 176, p. 21) - Agreement concluded without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts between a department of the State administration and a publicly owned company covering, in particular, the provision of postal services, including those not reserved to the universal service providers

Community law must be interpreted as not precluding legislation of a Member State that allows public authorities to entrust, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts, the provision of postal services reserved, in a manner consistent with Directive 97/67/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 15 December 1997 on common rules for the development of the internal market of Community postal services and the improvement of quality of service, to a public limited company whose capital is wholly state-owned and which, in that State, is the provider of the universal postal service.

Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001, must be interpreted as precluding legislation of a Member State that allows public authorities to entrust, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts, the provision of non-reserved postal services within the meaning of Directive 97/67 to a public limited company whose capital is wholly state-owned and which, in that State, is the provider of the universal postal service, in so far as the contracts to which that legislation applies

- reach the relevant threshold as provided for in Article 7(1) of Directive 92/50, as amended by Directive 2001/78, and

- constitute contracts within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50, as amended by Directive 2001/78, concluded in writing for pecuniary interest, which are matters for the national court to establish.

Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC, as well as the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination by reason of nationality and transparency, must be interpreted as precluding legislation of a Member State that allows public authorities to entrust, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts, the provision of non-reserved postal services within the meaning of Directive 97/67 to a public limited company whose capital is wholly state-owned and which, in that State, is the provider of universal postal services, in so far as the contracts to which that legislation applies

- do not reach the relevant threshold as provided for in Article 7(1) of Directive 92/50, as amended by Directive 2001/78, and

- do not in actual fact constitute a unilateral administrative measure creating obligations solely for the provider of the universal postal service and departing significantly from the normal conditions of a commercial offer made by that company, which are matters for the national court to establish.

[1] - OJ C 178, 29.7.2006.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Bot delivered on 20 September 2007. Asociacion Profesional de Empresas de Reparto y Manipulado de Correspondencia v Administracion General del Estado. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Audiencia Nacional - Spain. Public procurement - Liberalisation of postal services - Directives 92/50/EEC and 97/67/EC - Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC - National legislation allowing public authorities to conclude agreements for the provision of both reserved and non-reserved postal services with a publicly owned company, namely the provider of universal postal service in the Member State concerned, without regard to the rules governing the award of public service contracts. Case C-220/06.

1. May a limited liability company whose capital is wholly state-owned be directly entrusted with the provision of reserved and non-reserved postal services without infringing Community rules governing the award of public service contracts and Article 86(1) EC, read in conjunction with Articles 43 and 49 EC? This, in substance, is the question which the Audiencia Nacional (National High Court, Spain) has referred to the Court of Justice.

2. In this opinion, I will propose to the Court of Justice that it be declared that the rules governing the award of public service contracts, and Article 86(1) EC read in conjunction with Articles 43 and 49 EC, preclude national legislation that directly entrusts a universal service provider with the provision of reserved and non-reserved postal services.

I - Legal framework

A - Community law

1. Primary law

3. Article 43 EC prohibits restrictions on the freedom of establishment of nationals of a Member State in the territory of another Member State. Article 49 EC prohibits restrictions on freedom to provide services within the Community in respect of nationals of Member States who are established in a State of the Community other than that of the person for whom the services are intended.

4. Article 86(1) EC stipulates that [i]n the case of public undertakings and undertakings to which Member States grant special or exclusive rights, Member States shall neither enact nor maintain in force any measure contrary to the rules contained in this Treaty, in particular to those rules provided for in Article 12 and Articles 81 to 89'.

5. Article 86(2) EC provides for a derogation from the prohibition to enact or maintain in force special or exclusive rights for certain undertakings in cases where the application of the rules of the Treaty obstruct the performance, in law or in fact, of the particular tasks assigned to a public undertaking entrusted with a task of general interest.

2. Directive 97/67/EC

6. For the purpose of the completion of the internal market within which, in particular, the free movement of services must be ensured, and taking account of the need to guarantee the economic and social cohesion of the Community, (2) the Community - by adopting Directive 97/67 - has established a framework for the operation of a minimum general postal service.

7. Directive 97/67 guarantees the existence of a minimum universal postal service and lays down its extent, by giving Member States the opportunity to reserve the provision of some services to a single provider; therefore, those services can be provided under a monopoly.

8. Thus, Directive 97/67 aims to open up the postal sector to competition - gradually and in a controlled manner. (3)

9. According to Article 2(1) of Directive 97/67, postal services are services involving the clearance, sorting, transport and delivery of postal items.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

10. Pursuant to Article 3(1) of Directive 97/67, universal service' means the right to the permanent provision of a postal service of specified quality at all points in their territory at affordable prices for all users'.

11. Article 3(4) of Directive 97/67 stipulates that:

Each Member State shall adopt the measures necessary to ensure that the universal service includes the following minimum facilities:

- the clearance, sorting, transport and distribution of postal items up to two kilograms,

- the clearance, sorting, transport and distribution of postal packages up to 10 kilograms,

- services for registered items and insured items'.

12. Directive 97/67 provides a list of services which may be reserved for the universal service provider(s) of each Member State. These include the clearance, sorting, transport and delivery of items of domestic correspondence and incoming cross-border correspondence, whether by accelerated delivery or not, within the weight and price restrictions laid down in that Directive. (4)

13. The derogation from the liberalisation of postal services only applies to mail items weighing less than 350 grams, the price of which is less than five times the public tariff for an item of correspondence in the first weight step of the fastest standard category. (5)

14. Pursuant to Article 7(2) of Directive 97/67, to the extent necessary to ensure the maintenance of universal service, Member States may continue to reserve incoming cross-border mail and direct mail, (6) within the same price and weight limits as those set out for services that may be reserved.

15. Directive 97/67 has since been amended by Directive 2002/39/EC. (7)

16. However, Directive 2002/39 entered into force on the day of its publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities , that is to say on 5 July 2002. In the case at issue in the main proceedings, the relevant facts predate that date. Therefore, Directive 2002/39 does not apply in the present case.

3. Directive 92/50/EEC

17. As failure to open up public procurement to competition represents an obstacle to the completion of the internal market and imposes restrictions on the development of competitive European undertakings on world markets, the Community decided to make public service contracts subject to the rules on competition.

18. Article 1(a) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (8) defines public service contracts as contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority.

19. According to Article 6 of Directive 92/50, the Directive shall not apply to public service contracts awarded to an entity which is itself a contracting authority... on the basis of an exclusive right which it enjoys pursuant to a published law, regulation or administrative provision which is compatible with the Treaty.'

20. Pursuant to subparagraph (ii) of the second indent of Article 7(1)(a) of Directive 92/50, the Directive applies to public service contracts covering, in particular, transport of mail by land and by air which are awarded by the contracting authorities and where the estimated value net of value-added tax is not less than 200 000 special drawing rights (SDRs'). (9)

B - National legislation

1. Postal services

21. Directive 97/67 was transposed into the Spanish legal system by Law 24/1998 on the universal postal service and the liberalisation of postal services (Ley 24/1998 del Servicio Postal Universal y de Liberalizacion de los Servicios Postales) of 13 July 1998. (10)

22. Pursuant to Article 1 and 2 of that Law, postal services are considered to be services of general interest and the universal postal service is subject to publicservice obligations.

23. Article 18 of that Law reserves some services to the universal postal service provider. The reserved services include:

- the money orders service;

- the clearance, acceptance, sorting, delivery, handling, routing, transport and distribution of inter city items, whether registered or not, of letters and postcards, provided that they weigh 100 grams or less. From 1 January 2006, the weight limit will be 50 grams.

If any other operators are to carry out this kind of activity, in respect of inter city items they must charge users at least three times the amount of the corresponding tariff for an item of correspondence in the first weight step of the fastest standard category, fixed by the universal postal service operator. From 1 January 2006, the price will be at least two and a half times as much.

Domestic or cross border items of direct mail, books, catalogues and periodicals shall not form part of the reserved services.

Document exchange may not be reserved;

- the incoming and outgoing cross border postal service for letters and postcards, with the price and weight conditions established in the second indent; and

- the receipt, as a postal service, of applications, letters and communications which citizens may address to Public Authorities.

2. Public procurement

24. According to Article 11 of the Law on public procurement (Ley de Contratos de las Administraciones Publicas), the consolidated text of which was approved by Royal Legislative Decree 2/2000 (Real Decreto Legislativo 2/2000) of 16 June 2000, (11) contracts awarded by public authorities shall comply with the principles of advertising and competition, subject to the exceptions provided for by that Law, and shall always observe the principles of equal treatment and nondiscrimination.

25. Pursuant to Article 206(4) of the Law on public procurement, transport of mail by land and air is considered to be the subject-matter of a public contract within the meaning of Article 11 of the Law, and is therefore subject to competition rules.

26. Article 3(1)(d) of the Law on public procurement excludes from its scope of application cooperation agreements concluded by the administration with natural or legal persons governed by private law, in so far as the subject-matter of such agreements does not concern public procurement governed by the said Law or by administrative rules.

3. Law 14/2000

27. Article 58 of Law 14/2000 concerning tax, administrative and public order measures (Ley 14/2000 de Medidas Fiscales, Administrativas y del Orden Social) of 29 December 2000 (12) created the Sociedad Estatal Correos y Telégrafos, S.A.' (Correos'). That provision makes it clear that the capital of Correos is held by the State administration. In addition, pursuant to the same provision, any disposal of the share capital or any acquisition, either direct or indirect, of shareholdings in that company by persons or entities unconnected with the State administration requires authorisation by legislative decree.

28. Further, according to Article 58, public authorities may conclude cooperation agreements - as referred to in Article 3 of Royal Legislative Decree 2/2000 - with Correos, in order to carry on activity connected with its company objects, that is, in particular, postal services.

II - Facts and main proceedings

29. By a cooperation agreement concluded between the Spanish Ministry of Education, Culture and Sport (the Ministry') and Correos, signed on 6 June 2002 (the Cooperation Agreement') Correos was entrusted with the provision of postal and telegraphical services.

30. Pursuant to Article 1 of the Cooperation Agreement, Correos undertakes to provide the following postal services:

- letters (ordinary, registered and express), local, inter-city and international, with no weight or size limit;

- packages (postal, blue and international) with no weight or size limit;

- national express mail and international express mail service (Express Mail Service' (EMS)), with no weight or size limit; and

- delivery of books, library material, magazines and the Ministry's Official Gazette nationally (local and inter-city) and internationally (by land and air), with no weight or size limit.

31. The Cooperation Agreement specifies that the financial value of the services provided depends on turnover achieved. In any event, the Audiencia Nacional calculates that the value is a sum of more than EUR 12 020.42 per annum.

32. The Cooperation Agreement was awarded without a public call for tenders.

33. For that reason, the Asociacion Profesional de Empresas de Reparto y Manipulado de Correspondencia (Trade Association of Mail Delivery and Handling Companies, Asociacion Profesional') challenged the administrative decision entrusting the contract to Correos before the Technical General Secretary of the Ministry.

34. By decision of 20 March 2003, the Technical General Secretary of the Ministry dismissed the challenge. Asociacion Profesional appealed against that decision to the Audiencia Nacional.

III - Question referred for a preliminary ruling

35. The Audiencia Nacional decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

Are Articles 43 and 49 of the EC Treaty in conjunction with Article 86 thereof, as applied within the framework of the liberalisation of the postal services established by Directives 97/67 and 2002/39 and within the framework of the rules governing public procurement introduced by the ad hoc Directives, to be interpreted as precluding an agreement whose subject-matter includes the provision of postal services, both reserved and non-reserved and, therefore, liberalised, concluded between a department of the State administration and a State company whose capital is wholly state-owned and which is furthermore, the universal postal service provider?'

IV - Assessment

A - Admissibility

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

36. The Spanish Government challenges the admissibility of the question. It contends that, in actual fact, the question seeks an interpretation of the legality of an agreement, which has to be addressed under national law.

37. In its submission, the Spanish Government contends that the question actually put to the Court is apparent from the order for reference. As a matter of fact, the Audiencia Nacional has not asked the Court to interpret Directives 97/67 and 92/50, but rather to state whether the Cooperation Agreement is in conformity with that Community legislation.

38. According to settled case-law, even though it is not for the Court to rule on the compatibility of national rules with the provisions of Community law in proceedings brought under Article 234 EC, since the interpretation of such rules is a matter for the national courts, the Court does have jurisdiction to supply the national courts with all the guidance as to the interpretation of Community law necessary to enable them to rule on the compatibility of such rules with the provisions of Community law. (13)

39. With regard to the main proceedings, the Court may not rule on the compatibility of Law 14/2000 with Community law, but it can provide all the guidance as to the interpretation of Community law necessary to enable the Audiencia Nacional to rule on that compatibility.

40. Therefore, I take the view that the question is admissible.

B - Question referred for a preliminary ruling

41. By its question, the national court is essentially asking whether Directives 97/67 and 92/50, and Article 86 EC, read in conjunction with Articles 43 and 49 EC, have to be interpreted as precluding national legislation that allows public authorities to entrust the provision of reserved and non-reserved postal services to a company whose capital is wholly state-owned, without making that allocation subject to the rules governing the award of public service contracts.

42. Effectively, the question here is to establish whether Community law has to be interpreted as precluding a law that prevents would-be service providers from submitting a tender for a contract for reserved and non-reserved postal services and, by the same token, deprives them of the opportunity to be entrusted with that contract.

43. For the purposes of my assessment, I will begin by examining whether Article 7 of Directive 97/67 must be interpreted as meaning that the services provided by Correos are reserved services.

44. Further, on the assumption that the services at issue in the main proceedings are non-reserved services, and therefore subject to the competition rules, I will establish whether Directive 92/50 applies to the public service contract entrusted to Correos. The Court has ruled that the provisions of the EC Treaty relating to freedom of movement are intended to apply to public contracts which are outside the scope of Directive 92/50. (14) Therefore, I must first determine whether that Directive is applicable to the situation at issue in the main proceedings. If that is not the case, the situation must be considered in the light of primary law.

45. Finally, if Directive 92/50 does not apply, I will consider the situation at issue in the main proceedings in the light of primary law, and more specifically the fundamental principles of the Treaty.

1. Interpretation of Article 7 of Directive 97/67

46. The Court has previously been called upon to rule on the interpretation of Article 7 of Directive 97/67. In its judgment in Asempre and Asociacion Nacional de Empresas de Externalizacion y Gestion de Envíos y Pequeña Paquetería (15) the Court already adopted a strict interpretation of that provision. The Court held that, in the light of the purpose of Directive 97/67, namely the liberalisation

of postal services, Member States are not free to impose additional conditions on the provision of postal services by extending the range of services reserved for the universal service provider. (16)

47. Therefore, the list of reserved services must be regarded as exhaustive. The following can thus be considered to be reserved services: the clearance, sorting, transport and distribution of items of domestic correspondence, as well as direct mail and outgoing cross-border correspondence, to the extent necessary to ensure the maintenance of universal service for the latter.

48. However, as stated, the reserved services only affect items of correspondence weighing less than 350 grams, the price of which is less than five times the public tariff.

49. In the present case, according to the Audiencia Nacional, the Cooperation Agreement encompasses the provision of postal services that go beyond the services regarded as reserved.

50. The documents before the Court show that, pursuant to Article 58(2) of Law 14/2000, the company objects of Correos cover the management and operation of any postal service. Thus, no distinction is made between reserved and non-reserved services. Moreover, on the basis of that law, pursuant to Article 1 of the Cooperation Agreement, the provision of postal services reserved for Correos concerns all letters, and all packages and parcels, without any restrictions on weight or volume.

51. As previously stated, according to Article 7 of Directive 97/67, only the clearance, sorting, transport and distribution of items of domestic correspondence, within the price and weight conditions defined by the Directive, can be reserved for a single provider. Only the provision of those services can be directly entrusted to a single provider without a call for tenders. Other postal services, within the meaning of Article 2 of Directive 97/67, must be made subject to competition rules.

52. Therefore, Article 7(1) of Directive 97/67 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which reserves the provision of postal services to a single provider without making a distinction between reserved and non-reserved services.

53. The question that arises at this point is whether entrusting the provision of non-reserved postal services, which Article 58 of Law 14/2000 aims to do, without a prior call for tenders and a call for competition infringes Directive 92/50.

2. Applicability of Directive 92/50

54. As regards Directive 92/50, it is common ground that it applies to public service contracts whose value, net of value added tax, is not less than 200 000 SDRs. (17)

55. According to the Audiencia Nacional, the value of the Cooperation Agreement exceeds EUR 12 020.42. During the oral hearing, neither party was in a position to specify the exact value of the contract. It will be a matter for the national court to establish that value in order to determine whether Directive 92/50 applies in the situation at issue in the main proceedings.

56. Suppose, first of all, that the value of the Cooperation Agreement is not less than 200 000 SDRs.

57. In that situation, it will be seen that Directive 92/50 has to be interpreted as precluding national legislation that allows Public Authorities to entrust the provision of non-reserved postal services to a company whose capital is wholly state-owned, for the following reasons.

58. Pursuant to Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50, public service contracts shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority'.

59. According to the case-law, the categorisation of a contract is not to be sought in the law of the Member States. (18) Therefore, the notion of public contracts has to be regarded as a Community concept. In order to determine whether one is dealing with a public contract, it has to be examined whether the criteria set out in Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50 are fulfilled.

60. For Directive 92/50 to apply, two conditions must be fulfilled. The contract must be for pecuniary interest and must have been concluded between two distinct entities, namely a contracting authority and a service provider.

61. As regards the first condition, it seems to me to be fulfilled, since, in the present case, Law 14/2000 provides that public authorities may conclude cooperation agreements with Correos for the provision of postal services. In addition, on the basis of that law, the Cooperation Agreement was concluded between the Ministry and Correos in return for a financial value whose amount depends on turnover. The contract in issue is thus clearly a contract for pecuniary interest.

62. As regards the second condition, namely the existence of a contracting authority and a service provider, Directive 92/50 provides a definition for both. Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 states that contracting authorities shall mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law'. Article 1(c) of Directive 92/50 defines the service provider as any natural or legal person, including a public body, which offers services'.

63. It would appear in the present case that the Ministry is indeed a contracting authority and Correos a service provider.

64. However, given that Correos' capital is wholly state-owned, the question arises here whether the derogation provided for under Article 6 of Directive 92/50 falls to be applied. Pursuant to that provision, Directive 92/50 shall not be applicable to public service contracts entrusted to an entity which is itself a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of the Directive, on the basis of an exclusive right which it enjoys pursuant to a law, regulation or administrative provision.

65. In the present case, it is common ground that Correos enjoys exclusive rights conferred on it by Law 14/2000.

66. Therefore, in my view, it must be examined whether the two entities concerned - namely the contracting authority and the service provider - actually form one single entity. If the answer is in the affirmative, there cannot be a contract for pecuniary interest concluded with an entity that is legally distinct from the contracting authority, and the conditions set out in Article 1 of Directive 92/50 would not be fulfilled. Therefore the Community rules on public contracts would not apply.

67. It would seem to me that the answer may be found in the Court's case-law.

68. In its judgment in Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau , (19) the Court - within the context of Directive 92/50 - applied conditions formulated in its judgment in Teckal (20) in relation to Council Directive 93/36/EEC. (21) Given that Directive 93/36 does not contain any exception comparable to that provided for under Article 6 of Directive 92/50, the Court held that - as regards whether there is a contract - the national court must determine whether there has been an agreement between two separate persons.

69. According to the Court, this is not the case when the contracting authority exercises over the service provider a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments' and that [service provider] carries out the essential part of its activities [with the controlling contracting authority or authorities]'. (22)

70. Those two conditions, which are found in a relationship referred to as in house', constitute cumulative conditions which, if fulfilled, mean that public authorities may award a public contract to a single provider without making the contract subject to competition rules. None the less, given that those conditions constitute derogations from the general rules of Community law, they must be interpreted strictly. (23)

71. As regards the condition relating to control which is similar to that which the contracting authority exercises over its own departments, the Court explained its meaning in its judgment in Parking Brixen. (24) In order to determine whether the contracting authority exercises such control over the service provider, it is necessary to establish whether it can be inferred from an examination of the legislative provisions and the relevant circumstances that the service provider in question is subject to control which allows the contracting authority to influence the service provider's decisions. The Court adds that it must be a case of a power of decisive influence over both strategic objectives and significant decisions. (25)

72. Moreover, according to the Court, the fact that the capital of the company providing the services is wholly owned by the contracting authority is not decisive. (26)

73. By contrast, the Court considers that the fact that a particular undertaking changes its status to a limited liability company tends to show that that company has become market-oriented, which renders the public authority's control tenuous. (27)

74. In addition, the Court also took into consideration the fact that the administrative board of the company providing the services had considerable powers, with the public authority exercising no control, and that the objects of the company could be broadened. (28) These two elements militate in the direction that the contracting authority does not exercise similar control' over the company providing the services.

75. Given that the condition of similar control' must be interpreted strictly, I consider that that condition implies that the company providing the services has no discretion whatsoever and that, in the end, the public authority is the only one to take decisions concerning that company. Moreover, use of the expression in house' indeed reveals the intention to make a distinction between activities which the authority carries out directly - by means of internal structures belonging to the house' - and those that it will entrust to a third-party operator.

76. In the present case, several elements combine to show that Correos, the capital of which is indeed state-owned, retains some discretion as regards decisions it has to take.

77. Whilst it is true that pursuant to Article 58(2)(g) of Law 14/2000, Correos, the universal service provider, is under an obligation to accept the Cooperation Agreement, it is apparent from the documents before the Court that Correos can put an end to the contract with the contracting authority, by giving one month's written notice.

78. In addition, pursuant to Law 14/2000, Correos, which used to be a public undertaking, changed its status to a limited liability company which offers services in exchange for remuneration. It is also common ground that Correos can be asked to carry out any other activities or services in addition to the above or necessary to the achievement of the objects of the company. (29) This also seems to be apparent from its 2005 annual report, which mentions that growing competition in that sector has made it inevitable to broaden the services on offer and to enter other markets. (30)

79. By changing its status to a limited liability company, and by having the possibility to broaden its company objects and to terminate the contract which binds it to the State administration, I consider that Correos became market-oriented, which renders the State administration's control tenuous.

80. In light of those elements, I consider that the contracting public authority does not exercise similar control' over Correos, within the meaning of the case-law mentioned above. However, it is for the national court to examine whether that condition is indeed fulfilled in the present case.

81. As far as the second condition is concerned, namely that the service provider must carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling contracting authority or authorities, the Court had the opportunity to clarify its meaning in its judgment in Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei , (31) concerning the interpretation of Directive 93/36.

82. According to the Court, that second condition will only be fulfilled if the activities carried out by the company providing the services are devoted principally to the controlling contracting authority and any other activities are only of marginal significance. (32) In other words, Correos' activities must be almost exclusively devoted to the controlling State administration.

83. In order to determine if that is so, the national court must take into account all the facts of the case, both qualitative and quantitative.

84. In the present case, pursuant to Law 14/2000, Correos can conclude cooperation agreements with any public authority. The Audiencia Nacional even states in its order for reference that Correos has in fact concluded several cooperation agreements with various public bodies.

85. Moreover, in its submissions to the Court, the Spanish Government acknowledges that Correos operates the universal postal service, whose main recipients are third parties, across the whole of Spain.

86. Therefore, public authorities are neither the main nor the only recipients of the services provided by Correos.

87. Therefore, subject to review by the national court, it appears that the second condition is not fulfilled either.

88. Consequently, on the assumption that the value of the contract at issue in the main proceedings is not less than 200 000 SDRs, I am of the opinion that Directive 92/50 applies in this case.

89. Accordingly, I consider that, under Article 8 of Directive 92/50, the public contract for postal services entrusted to Correos should have been awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI of the Directive, and in particular the provisions of Article 11(1) of the Directive. Consequently, I consider that the contract should have been awarded by a call for tenders and made the subject of appropriate publicity.

90. In its submissions, the Spanish Government takes the view that making non-reserved services subject to competition rules would cause financial imbalance, with the result that Correos would no longer be able to ensure the provision of the minimum universal service with which it has been entrusted.

91. As a matter of fact, by arguing in that way, the Spanish Government invokes the derogation in Article 86(2) EC.

92. However, that argument cannot be upheld in the present case, for the following reasons.

93. According to Article 86(2) EC, undertakings entrusted with the operation of services of general economic interest are subject to the rules contained in the Treaty, in particular to those relating to competition, in so far as the application of such rules does not obstruct the performance of the particular tasks entrusted to them.

94. In the present case, Correos' company objects consist of the provision of postal services that are not restricted to the universal service, but cover the management and operation of any postal service.

95. I consider that the Community legislature's intention to liberalise the postal sector by making a distinction between reserved and non-reserved services shows that the performance of the particular tasks entrusted to providers like Correos is not defeated by putting non-reserved services up for competition.

96. Directive 97/67 has established a regulatory framework for the postal sector. In particular, the Directive makes provisions for securing a universal service in this sector by giving Member States the opportunity to reserve certain postal services. The provision of all other services which cannot be reserved must be open to competition.

97. If Member States were able to grant a public contract for non-reserved postal services to a single provider without a prior call for tenders, this would actually go against the purpose of Directive 97/67, which is to liberalise the postal sector.

98. Moreover, I should add that the Commission has made it clear that reserved services enjoy a presumption that they are justified by reason of Article 86(2) EC. (33)

99. It would seem to me that, by distinguishing between reserved and non-reserved services and by making it possible for Member States to entrust reserved services to a single universal service provider, Directive 97/67 applies Article 86(2) EC.

100. In light of all of these considerations, I am of the opinion that, in a situation in which the value of the public service contract is not less than the threshold of 200 000 SDRs, Directive 92/50 has to be interpreted as precluding national legislation that reserves the provision of non-reserved postal services to a limited liability company which is wholly state-owned, to the extent that the contracting authority does not exercise over the service provider a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and the service provider does not carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority or authorities.

101. However, on the assumption that the threshold of 200 000 SDRs is not reached, the allocation of public contracts not falling within the scope of Community directives remains none the less subject to the fundamental principles of the Treaty. Therefore, the situation at issue in the main proceedings must also be considered in the light of those principles.

3. Interpretation of Articles 43 EC, 49 EC et 86 EC

102. As stated in paragraph 44 of this opinion, the Court has held that when the value of a public service contract does not reach the threshold set by Directive 92/50, the contracting authorities are nevertheless bound to comply with the fundamental principles of the Treaty.

103. Therefore, the Audiencia Nacional asks whether Article 86(1) EC, read in conjunction with Articles 43 and 49 EC, precludes national legislation that permits the provision of non-reserved postal services to be entrusted directly to a limited liability company whose capital is state-owned.

104. Pursuant to Article 86(1) EC, the Member States shall neither enact nor maintain in force any measure contrary to the rules contained in the Treaty in the case of public undertakings to which they grant special or exclusive rights.

105. In the present case, Article 86(1) EC indeed applies to the situation at issue in the main proceedings, seeing that Correos - whose capital is state-owned - is a public undertaking within the meaning of that provision. Moreover, it is apparent from the documents before the Court that Correos has been allocated the exclusive right to ensure the provision of postal services that, as stated, go beyond the services regarded as reserved.

106. Since Article 86(1) EC has no independent effect and must be read in conjunction with the relevant rules of the Treaty, (34) I consider that in the present case, the relevant rules are Articles 43 and 49 EC.

107. To the extent that the public contract for postal services at issue could be of interest to undertakings established in another Member State, its direct allocation, without a call for tenders, deprives those undertakings of any possibility to tender. Further, undertakings offering services similar to those offered by Correos are discouraged from establishing themselves in the Member State concerned, since they will not be given the opportunity to tender.

108. The first paragraph of Article 43 EC states that restrictions on the freedom of establishment of nationals of a Member State in the territory of another Member State are prohibited. The first paragraph of Article 49 EC prohibits restrictions on freedom to provide services within the Community in respect of nationals of Member States who are established in a State of the Community other than that of the person for whom the services are intended.

109. Article 43 and 49 EC are specific expressions of the principle of equal treatment, which in itself implies the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality, as set out in Article 12 EC. (35)

110. In its case-law relating to public contracts, the Court has already held that the principle of equal treatment of tenderers is intended to afford equality of opportunity to all tenderers when formulating their tenders, regardless of their nationality. (36)

111. Consequently, the Court has held that respect for the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination require, with respect to public contracts, that the contracting authority observes the principle of transparency by making the public contract subject to some degree of advertising. In that way, all potential bidders can acquire knowledge of the existence of such a contract and can thus respond to the call for tenders. (37)

112. In other words, with respect to public contracts, the discrimination consists in not making the contract subject to the rules on advertising and therefore depriving undertakings established in another Member State of the possibility to tender.

113. As stated, the public contract entrusted to Correos concerns, on the one hand, the provision of reserved services, which can thus be directly entrusted to a single provider, and, on the other hand, the provision of non-reserved services, which have to be made subject to the competition rules.

114. The Audiencia Nacional has admitted that the public contract for postal services was neither covered by publicity nor by a call inviting other providers active on the national market or on foreign markets to participate, but was directly entrusted to Correos.

115. By acting in that manner, the contracting authority not only deprived undertakings established in another Member State of the right to tender and to offer their services in the Member State concerned, but also discouraged other undertakings with the same company objects as Correos from establishing themselves in that Member State, which constitutes an obstacle to the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services, contrary to Articles 43 and 49 EC.

116. None the less, two objections may be raised.

117. In the first place, while it is true that under Article 86(1) EC, public undertakings cannot receive more favourable treatment than private undertakings, the situation is different if the contracting authority entrusts the public service contract to an undertaking which it controls. (38)

118. However, in the present case, as stated in paragraphs 69 to 88 of this opinion, the relationship between the contracting authority and Correos cannot be described as in house'. Therefore, this objection has to be rejected.

119. In the second place, pursuant to Article 86(2) EC, there is a derogation from the prohibition in paragraph (1) of that Article.

120. However, as stated above, the Spanish Government cannot invoke Article 86(2) within the context of Directive 97/67.

121. Therefore, that second objection must also be rejected.

122. Consequently, I am of the opinion that Article 86(1) EC, read in conjunction with Articles 43 and 49 EC, has to be interpreted as precluding national legislation that allows public authorities to allocate the provision of nonreserved postal services to a company whose capital is wholly state-owned, without making that allocation subject to the fundamental principles governing the award of public service contracts.

V - Conclusion

123. In view of the foregoing, I propose that the Court answer the question referred to it for a preliminary ruling by the Audiencia Nacional as follows:

In so far as the value of the public service contract is not less than 200 000 SDRs, Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation that allows public authorities to allocate the provision of non-reserved postal services to a company whose capital is wholly state-owned, without making that allocation subject to the rules governing the award of public service contracts, to the extent that the contracting authority does not exercise over the service provider a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and the service provider does not carry out the essential part of its activities with the contracting authority or authorities.

In a situation in which the value of the service contract is less than 200 000 SDRs, Article 86(1) EC, read in conjunction with Articles 43 and 49 EC, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation that allows public authorities to allocate the provision of non-reserved postal services to a company whose capital is wholly state-owned, without making that allocation subject to the fundamental principles governing the award of public service contracts, to the extent that the contracting authority does not exercise over the service provider a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and the service provider does not carry out the essential part of its activities with the contracting authority or authorities.'

(3) - On 11 July 2007, the Members of the European Parliament at first reading adopted a report which supports the European Commission's proposal relating to the Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council amending Directive 97/67/EC concerning the full accomplishment of the internal market of Community postal services [COM(2006) 594 final] (see report of the European Parliament A60246/2007). However, a compromise must be found concerning the date on which the market for postal services is to be fully liberalised. The European Parliament proposes that the sector be fully liberalised from 31 December 2010, while the Commission proposes to keep the date of 31 December 2008.

Arrêt

1 Par sa requête, la Commission des Communautés européennes demande à la Cour de constater que, la commune de Stintino ayant attribué directement à Maresar Soc. Cons. arl (ci-après «Maresar»), par la convention n° 7/91, du 2 octobre 1991 (ci-après la «convention»), et par les actes additionnels liés à cette convention, le marché public de travaux ayant pour objet la réalisation des ouvrages mentionnés dans la décision n° 48 du conseil communal de Stintino, du 14 décembre 1989, notamment «l'élaboration du projet et la construction des ouvrages pour l'adaptation technologique et structurelle, le réaménagement et l'achèvement des réseaux de distribution d'eau et d'égouttage, du réseau routier, des structures et de l'équipement dans le secteur du logement, des pôles touristiques situés à l'extérieur et sur le territoire de la commune de Stintino, y compris l'assainissement et la dépollution de la côte et de ses centres touristiques», sans avoir recours à la procédure d'adjudication prévue par la directive 71/305/CEE du Conseil, du 26 juillet 1971, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux (JO L 185, p. 5), et, en particulier, sans publier aucun avis au Journal officiel des Communautés européennes, la République italienne a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de cette directive, et en particulier des articles 3 et 12 de celle-ci.

Le cadre juridique

2 La législation applicable à l'adjudication en cause est la directive 71/305 dans sa version antérieure aux modifications apportées par la directive 89/440/CEE du Conseil, du 18 juillet 1989 (JO L 210, p. 1).

3 Aux termes de l'article 1er, sous a), de la directive 71/305:

«les 'marchés publics de travaux' sont des contrats à titre onéreux, conclus par écrit entre un entrepreneur – personne physique ou morale – d'une part et, d'autre part, un pouvoir adjudicateur défini sous b) et qui ont pour objet une des activités visées à l'article 2 de la directive du Conseil du 26 juillet 1971, concernant la suppression des restrictions à la libre prestation de services dans le domaine des marchés publics de travaux et à l'attribution de marchés publics de travaux par l'intermédiaire d'agences ou de succursales».

4 L'article 3, paragraphe 1, de cette directive définit le contrat de concession comme «un contrat présentant les mêmes caractères que ceux visés à l'article 1er sous a), à l'exception du fait que la contrepartie des travaux à effectuer consiste, soit uniquement dans le droit d'exploiter l'ouvrage, soit dans ce droit assorti d'un prix».

5 Ce même article 3, paragraphe 1, précise, en outre, que les dispositions de la directive 71/305 ne sont pas applicables aux contrats de concession.

6 Aux termes de l'article 12 de la directive 71/305:

«Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs, désireux de passer un marché public de travaux [...] font connaître leur intention au moyen d'un avis.

Cet avis est envoyé à l'Office des publications officielles des Communautés européennes et il est publié in extenso au Journal officiel des Communautés européennes [...]»

7 L'article 7, paragraphe 1, de cette directive énonce:

«Les dispositions des titres II, III et IV ainsi que celles de l'article 9 sont appliquées, dans les conditions prévues à l'article 5, aux marchés publics de travaux dont le montant estimé égale ou dépasse 1 000 000 d'unités de compte.»

La procédure précontentieuse

8 La convention, conclue entre la commune de Stintino et Maresar sans publicité ni mise en concurrence, a été suivie, durant la période 1992–2001, de la passation, entre les mêmes parties, de onze actes additionnels qui confient à Maresar la réalisation d'ouvrages déterminés relevant de la convention, ainsi que celle de toutes les activités technico–administratives nécessaires jusqu'à la réception des travaux. Le prix de chacune de ces interventions est fixé dans ces actes.

9 Après avoir reçu une plainte, la Commission, estimant que la convention constituait un marché public de travaux dont l'attribution directe en dehors de toute procédure de mise en concurrence enfreint la réglementation communautaire relative aux marchés publics, a transmis à la République italienne une lettre de mise en demeure le 30 mars 2004 à laquelle celle-ci a répondu par lettre du 30 juin 2004.

10 Les explications fournies dans cette réponse n'ayant pas été considérées comme satisfaisantes par la Commission, celle–ci a, le 13 octobre 2004, adressé à la République italienne un avis motivé invitant cet État membre à prendre les mesures requises pour se conformer à cet avis dans un délai de deux mois à compter de la notification de celui-ci. La République italienne a répondu à cet avis motivé par lettre du 3 janvier 2005.

11 Considérant que les mesures nécessaires n'avaient pas été prises par les autorités italiennes, la Commission a introduit le présent recours.

Sur le recours

12 La Commission constate que, dans leur réponse à l'avis motivé, les autorités italiennes ne contestent plus le fait que la convention doit être considérée comme un marché public.

13 Elle considère que les autorités italiennes ont reconnu l'infraction commise en ce qui concerne les ouvrages déjà pratiquement achevés et un bassin de régulation hydraulique qui, à la date à laquelle elles ont envoyé leur réponse, était réalisé à 30 %.

14 La Commission fait toutefois valoir que le bassin de régulation hydraulique fait l'objet d'un seul des onze actes additionnels et considère que les autorités italiennes ne fournissent aucune information au sujet de l'état d'avancement des travaux faisant l'objet des autres actes additionnels portant sur des travaux qui, au total, représentent, pour la période 1992–2001, environ 16 millions d'euros. Elle estime, en outre, que ces travaux ne concernent qu'une partie des interventions susceptibles de s'inscrire dans le cadre de la convention qui semble avoir été conclue pour une durée indéterminée.

15 La Commission en déduit que, même si il a été mis un terme aux relations avec Maresar «en ce qui concerne la réalisation des infrastructures qui s'inscrivent dans le cadre de la convention, principal objet de contestation, et que les autorités italiennes ont procédé à la publication d'appels d'offres pour la sélection d'adjudicataires», aucun élément ne lui a été transmis et, notamment, aucune décision officielle de la commune de Stintino de nature à confirmer que la convention a cessé de produire des effets juridiques.

17 Ainsi, c'est à bon droit que la Commission a estimé que ledit marché qui dépassait le seuil fixé par la directive 71/305 aurait dû faire l'objet de la publication d'un avis au Journal officiel des Communautés européennes prescrit par l'article 12 de cette directive et a, en conséquence, émis un avis motivé à l'encontre de la République italienne à l'effet de faire cesser le manquement constitué par l'attribution dudit marché à Maresar, par la commune de Stintino, sans procédure de mise en concurrence.

18 Il revient donc à la Cour de déterminer si, à la date pertinente pour apprécier le manquement, c'est–à–dire à l'issue du délai fixé dans l'avis motivé (voir en ce sens, arrêts du 14 septembre 2004, Commission/Espagne, C-168/03, Rec. p. I–8227, point 24, et du 27 octobre 2005, Commission/Luxembourg, C-23/05, Rec. p. I–9535, point 9), les mesures nécessaires pour faire cesser ce manquement avaient été prises par le gouvernement italien.

19 En l'espèce, compte tenu des éléments apportés par le gouvernement italien, au moment de l'expiration du délai fixé dans l'avis motivé, l'exécution de la convention irrégulière ne se poursuivait plus que pour la réalisation finale d'un ouvrage, le bassin de régulation hydraulique, prévu par l'acte additionnel n° 10. D'autres ouvrages étaient terminés. Par ailleurs, la Commission ne démontre pas que les affirmations du gouvernement italien selon lesquelles la commune de Stintino avait retiré à Maresar les autres prestations qui avaient été confiées à cette société par la convention seraient erronées.

20 Le gouvernement italien ne conteste plus que la commune de Stintino a manqué à ses obligations en passant la convention sans mise en concurrence. Il soutient toutefois, en premier lieu, que le recours est dépourvu d'objet dans la mesure où le marché litigieux avait, à la date d'expiration du délai fixé dans l'avis motivé, épuisé presque tous ses effets. À cette date, en tenant compte de la fin de la réalisation du bassin de régulation hydraulique, les travaux en cause auraient été achevés à hauteur de 82 %. Ainsi, il n'aurait plus été possible, matériellement, de se conformer à l'avis motivé.

21 Toutefois, s'il est vrai que, en matière de passation des marchés publics, la Cour a jugé qu'un recours en manquement est irrecevable si, à la date d'expiration du délai fixé dans l'avis motivé, le contrat en question avait déjà épuisé tous ses effets (voir, en ce sens, arrêts du 31 mars 1992, Commission/Italie, C–362/90, Rec. p. I–2353, points 11 et 13, et du 2 juin 2005, Commission/Grèce, C–394/02, Rec. p. I–4713, point 18), en l'espèce, la Cour ne peut que constater que la convention était, à cette date, en cours d'exécution, les travaux n'étant pas complètement achevés. Le marché n'avait donc pas épuisé tous ses effets.

23 Toutefois, le comportement d'une autorité nationale chargée d'appliquer le droit communautaire, qui est en contradiction avec ce dernier, ne saurait fonder, dans le chef d'un opérateur économique, une confiance légitime à bénéficier d'un traitement contraire au droit communautaire (voir arrêts du 26 avril 1988, Krücken, C–316/86, Rec. p. 2213, point 24, et du 1er avril 1993, Lageder e.a., C–31/91 à C–44/91, Rec. p. I–1761, point 38).

24 La circonstance que la convention litigieuse a été signée il y a plus de dix ans est sans incidence sur son caractère irrégulier au regard du droit communautaire et, par suite, sur l'impossibilité pour elle de faire naître une confiance légitime dans le chef de Maresar (voir en ce sens arrêt du 24 septembre 1998, Commission/France, C–35/97, Rec. p. I–5325, point 45).

25 Il résulte de ce qui précède que, en ayant laissé se poursuivre l'exécution d'au moins une des opérations confiées par la commune de Stintino à Maresar aux termes de la convention et des actes additionnels conclus postérieurement par ces mêmes parties, la République italienne a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de la directive 71/305, et en particulier des articles 3 et 12 de celle-ci.

Sur les dépens

26 En vertu de l'article 69, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure, toute partie qui succombe est condamnée aux dépens, s'il est conclu en ce sens. La Commission ayant conclu à la condamnation de la République italienne et celle-ci ayant succombé en ses moyens, il y a lieu de la condamner aux dépens.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (deuxième chambre) déclare et arrête:

1) En ayant laissé se poursuivre l'exécution d'au moins une des opérations confiées par la commune de Stintino à la société Maresar Soc. Cons. arl aux termes de la convention n° 7/91 signée le 2 octobre 1991 et des actes additionnels conclus postérieurement par ces mêmes parties, la République italienne a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de la directive 71/305/CEE du Conseil, du 26 juillet 1971, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, et en particulier des articles 3 et 12 de celle-ci.

2) La République italienne est condamnée aux dépens.

Action brought on 12 May 2006 - Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic

(Case C-217/06)

Language of the case: Italian

Parties

Applicant: Commission of the European Communities (represented by: X. Lewis, agent, M. Mollica, lawyer)

Defendant: Italian Republic

Form of order sought

Declare that, as the commune of Stintino awarded directly to Maresar, through Agreement No 7/91 of 2 October 1991 and connected measures, a public works contract concerning the execution of the works mentioned in Resolution No 48 of the municipal council of Stintino of 14 December 1989, particularly the 'detailed design and construction of the works for the technological and structural adaptation, rehauling and completion of the water supply and drainage networks, the road network, the buildings and service facilities in the town centre, the tourist areas in and outside the territory of the commune of Stintino, including the clean-up and depollution of the coast and the tourist centres situated in that commune', without following the procedures laid down by Council Directive 71/305/EEC[1] and, in particular, without publishing a notice of invitation to tender in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Commission of the European Communities considers that the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 71/305/EEC, which co-ordinates the procedures for the award of public works contracts, in particular under Articles 3 and 12 thereof.

Order the Italian Republic to pay the costs of the proceedings.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The Commission considers that the Agreement of 2 October 1991 between the commune of Stintino and Maresar is a public works contract under Community law. The said contract, the subject of which is works with a value (around EUR 16 million) clearly greater than the threshold for the application of the Directive, which was in force at that time, should have been awarded in accordance with the rules laid down by that Directive.

As regards the Italian authority's arguments put forward to justify their non-fulfilment, the Commission recalls that, in accordance with settled case-law, a Member State cannot rely on internal difficulties to justify failure to fulfil obligations derived from Community law.

Question(s) referred

Does the rule laid down in Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37/EEC [1] or the similar rule contained in Article 55 (1) and (2) of Directive 2004/18/EC [2] (where that is regarded as the relevant provision), that, where tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request, in writing, details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received, constitute a fundamental principle of Community law, such as to transcend the formal bounds set by the value of the contracts mentioned in Article 6 of Directive 93/37/EC and is it, therefore, capable of applying also to contracts when their value does not cross that threshold?

Is the rule established by Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37/EEC or the similar rule contained in Article 55(1) and (2) of Directive 2004/18/EC (where that is regarded as the relevant provision), according to which, if tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request, in writing, details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received, while not presenting the characteristics of a fundamental principle of Community law, nevertheless an implied consequence of or a "principle deriving from" the principle of competition, considered in conjunction with the principles of administrative transparency and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and is it therefore, as such, directly binding, taking precedence over possibly incompatible national provisions adopted by the Member States to regulate public works contracts to which Community law is not directly applicable?

Ordonnance

1 Par leur pourvoi, TEA-CEGOS SA (ci-après «TEA-CEGOS») et Services techniques globaux (STG) SA (ci-après «STG») demandent l'annulation de l'arrêt du Tribunal de première instance des Communautés européennes du 14 février 2006, TEA-CEGOS e.a./Commission (T-376/05 et T-383/05, Rec. p. II-205, ci-après l'«arrêt attaqué»), par lequel celui-ci a rejeté leur recours tendant à l'annulation, d'une part, des décisions de la Commission des Communautés européennes du 12 octobre 2005, rejetant les offres qu'elles avaient soumises dans le cadre de l'appel d'offres, portant la référence «EuropeAid/119860/C/SV/multi-Lot 7», relatif à un contrat-cadre multiple pour le recrutement d'experts à court terme chargés de fournir une assistance technique en faveur de pays tiers bénéficiaires de l'aide extérieure (ci-après l'«appel d'offres») et, d'autre part, de toute autre décision prise par la Commission dans le cadre de ce même appel d'offres à la suite des décisions du 12 octobre 2005.

Le cadre juridique

2 La passation des marchés de services de la Commission dans le cadre des actions extérieures de cette dernière est assujettie aux dispositions de la deuxième partie, titre IV, du règlement (CE, Euratom) n° 1605/2002 du Conseil, du 25 juin 2002, portant règlement financier applicable au budget général des Communautés européennes (JO L 248, p. 1, ci-après le «règlement financier»), ainsi qu'aux dispositions de la deuxième partie, titre III, du règlement (CE, Euratom) n° 2342/2002 de la Commission, du 23 décembre 2002, établissant les modalités d'exécution du règlement n° 1605/2002 (JO L 357, p. 1, ci-après les «modalités d'exécution»).

3 Selon l'article 94 du règlement financier, repris au point 2.3.3 du guide pratique des procédures contractuelles financées par le budget général des Communautés européennes dans le cadre des actions extérieures (ci–après le «guide pratique»):

«Sont exclus de l'attribution d'un marché les candidats ou les soumissionnaires qui, à l'occasion de la procédure de marché:

a) se trouvent en situation de conflit d'intérêts,

b) se sont rendus coupables de fausses déclarations en fournissant les renseignements exigés par le pouvoir adjudicateur pour leur participation au marché ou n'ont pas fourni ces renseignements.»

4 Aux termes de l'article 146, paragraphe 3, des modalités d'exécution:

«Les demandes de participation et les offres qui ne contiennent pas tous les éléments essentiels exigés dans les documents d'appels d'offres ou qui ne correspondent pas aux exigences spécifiques qui y sont fixées sont éliminées.

Toutefois, le comité d'évaluation peut inviter le candidat ou le soumissionnaire à compléter ou à expliciter les pièces justificatives présentées relatives aux critères d'exclusion et de sélection, dans le délai qu'il fixe.»

5 Le point 13 de l'avis de marché, du 9 juillet 2004, publié dans le cadre de la procédure relative à l'appel d'offres (JO S 132, ci-après l'«avis de marché») énonçait que les personnes physiques ou morales (y compris les personnes morales participant au même groupement juridique) ne pourront présenter qu'une seule candidature, quelle que soit leur forme de participation (en tant qu'entité juridique individuelle ou chef de file ou partenaire d'un groupement candidat). Dans l'hypothèse où une personne physique ou morale (y compris les personnes morales participant au même groupement juridique) présenterait plus d'une candidature, toutes les candidatures auxquelles cette personne (et les personnes morales participant au même groupement juridique) aura participé seront exclues.

6 Dans le formulaire de déclaration que devaient remplir les candidats et soumissionnaires était notamment mentionnée l'obligation pour ceux-ci d'indiquer s'ils appartenaient ou non à un «groupe ou à un réseau».

7 Le point 14 des instructions aux soumissionnaires précisait que chaque attributaire serait informé par écrit que son offre avait été retenue. Il prévoyait en outre que, avant que l'autorité contractante ne signe le contrat-cadre avec le soumissionnaire retenu, ce dernier devait produire des documents supplémentaires aux fins de prouver la véracité de ses déclarations. Si un soumissionnaire n'était pas en mesure de produire les documents requis dans un délai de quinze jours calendaires suivant la notification de l'attribution ou s'il s'avérait qu'il avait fourni de fausses informations, il était prévu que l'attribution serait considérée comme nulle et non avenue. Dans une telle hypothèse, l'autorité contractante pouvait accorder le contrat-cadre à un autre soumissionnaire ou annuler la procédure d'appel d'offres.

8 Le point 16 desdites instructions prévoyait que les soumissionnaires qui s'estimeraient lésés par une erreur ou une irrégularité commise dans le cadre de la procédure d'appel d'offres pouvaient introduire une réclamation, l'autorité compétente devant répondre à cette dernière dans les 90 jours.

Les antécédents du litige

9 Les faits à l'origine du litige ont été exposés par le Tribunal aux points 8 à 26 de l'arrêt attaqué de la manière suivante:

«8 Par [l']avis de marché [...], la Commission a lancé l'appel d'offres.

9 Le consortium TEA-CEGOS (ci-après 'TEA-CEGOS Consortium') a manifesté son souhait de participer à l'appel d'offres. TEA-CEGOS [...] a été choisie pour être le chef de file dudit consortium aux fins de la participation de ce dernier à la procédure d'appel d'offres. [STG] est également membre de TEA-CEGOS Consortium et lui fournit des services en matière de gestion technique et financière.

10 Au cours de la phase de proposition des candidatures et conformément aux exigences de l'avis de marché, les différents membres de TEA-CEGOS Consortium ont effectué une déclaration selon laquelle ils ne se trouvaient dans aucune des situations correspondant aux causes d'exclusion mentionnées au point 2.3.3 du guide pratique. Le 18 août 2004, le Danish Institute for Human Rights (ci-après le 'DIHR'), membre de TEA-CEGOS Consortium, a adressé à la Commission un document dans lequel était indiqué que le DIHR avait son propre conseil d'administration mais faisait partie d'une structure plus large, le Danish Centre for International Studies and Human Rights (ci–après le 'Centre') et avait pour partenaire le Danish Institute for International Studies (ci-après le 'DIIS'), un institut créé par une loi danoise du 6 juin 2002 qui a également créé le Centre et le DIHR.

11 GHK Consulting Ltd [(ci-après 'GHK Consulting')], société de droit anglais, fait partie d'un consortium qui regroupe diverses entités (ci-après 'GHK Consortium'), dont le DIIS. GHK Consulting, au travers de sa division GHK International Ltd [(ci-après 'GHK International')], a été choisie pour être le chef de file de GHK Consortium aux fins de la procédure d'appel d'offres. Le 29 septembre 2004, lors de la proposition de candidatures, le DIIS a déclaré qu'il n'appartenait pas à un groupement ou à un réseau.

12 Par courriel du 17 décembre 2004 et par lettre du 31 décembre 2004, TEA CEGOS Consortium a été invité à participer à l'appel d'offres pour le lot n° 7. Le DIHR, durant cette étape de la procédure d'appel d'offres, a de nouveau indiqué qu'il faisait partie d'une structure plus large, le Centre, comportant un autre institut, le DIIS. GHK Consortium a également été admis à soumissionner une offre pour le lot n° 7.

13 Par courriers du 20 mai 2005, TEA-CEGOS et GHK International ont appris que les offres des consortiums auxquels elles appartenaient respectivement avaient été retenues pour le lot n° 7. Lesdits courriers précisaient que les contrats seraient envoyés aux consortiums pour signature sous réserve de la preuve qu'ils ne se trouvaient pas dans l'une des situations correspondant aux causes d'exclusion prévues au point 2.3.3 du guide pratique. Les requérantes ont communiqué à la Commission les documents qu'elles jugeaient pertinents à cet égard.

14 Par télécopie du 22 juin 2005, la Commission a demandé à TEA-CEGOS d'expliquer le lien qui unissait le DIHR au Centre ainsi que son éventuelle autonomie vis-à-vis de ce dernier et a également prié GHK International de lui fournir des éclaircissements quant au statut juridique du DIIS.

15 Le 23 juin 2005, TEA-CEGOS Consortium a adressé à la Commission une lettre du DIHR expliquant son fonctionnement. Le 24 juin 2005, GHK International a transmis par télécopie à la Commission des éclaircissements relatifs au DIIS.

16 Répondant à une nouvelle demande de la Commission formulée par voie téléphonique le 27 juin 2005 et visant à recueillir des précisions supplémentaires, TEA-CEGOS Consortium a fait parvenir à celle-ci le même jour une copie de la loi danoise du 6 juin 2002 créant le Centre, accompagnée d'un mémorandum indiquant les éléments pertinents de ladite loi et le lien entre le Centre et le DIHR, ainsi qu'une lettre du chef d'administration du Centre.

17 Le 14 juillet 2005, TEA-CEGOS Consortium a également adressé à la Commission une déclaration du ministère des Affaires étrangères danois, dans laquelle ce dernier affirmait que le DIHR et le DIIS étaient des entités autonomes au sein du Centre.

18 Par courriers du 18 juillet 2005 (ci-après les 'décisions du 18 juillet 2005'), la Commission a informé TEA-CEGOS Consortium et GHK Consortium que ses décisions de retenir leurs offres étaient fondées sur des informations incorrectes qui lui avaient été données durant la procédure d'appel d'offres et que, à la lumière d'éléments nouveaux, leur candidature et leur offre devaient être rejetées.

19 Les 22 et 25 juillet 2005, TEA-CEGOS Consortium a fait valoir auprès de la Commission que le DIHR et le DIIS ne pouvaient pas être considérés comme faisant partie d'un même groupement juridique au sens [du point] 13 de l'avis de marché, rappelant qu'il avait indiqué, dès le début de la procédure d'appel d'offres, l'appartenance du DIHR au Centre. Le 27 juillet 2005, la Commission a accusé réception du courrier du 22 juillet, en précisant que son contenu serait examiné de manière approfondie.

20 Le 25 juillet 2005, la liste des soumissionnaires retenus pour le lot n° 7, publiée sur le site d'EuropeAid, a été modifiée de manière à ne plus y faire figurer les deux consortiums.

21 Le 8 septembre 2005, TEA-CEGOS et STG se sont adressées à la Commission pour dénoncer les illégalités qui, selon elles, entachaient les décisions du 18 juillet 2005, l'invitant par conséquent à revenir sur celles-ci dans les plus brefs délais. Par courrier du 13 septembre 2005, la Commission leur a indiqué qu'un réexamen était en cours et qu'elle avait adressé au Centre une série de questions et lui avait demandé de produire des documents susceptibles d'étayer les réponses qu'il apporterait.

22 Le 14 septembre 2005, TEA-CEGOS et STG ont réitéré leur souhait d'obtenir une réponse rapide quant à la position finale que la Commission adopterait. Le 21 septembre 2005, la Commission leur a indiqué qu'elle attendait du Centre certains renseignements nécessaires pour se prononcer sur l'issue à donner à la procédure, s'engageant à leur faire part dans les plus brefs délais de la décision qu'elle adopterait.

23 Par courriel du 23 septembre 2005 et par télécopie du 26 septembre 2005, le Centre a répondu aux questions de la Commission, lui adressant également une série de documents visant à étayer ses réponses. Le 26 septembre 2005, GHK International a fait parvenir à la Commission un courrier venant au soutien des réponses apportées par le Centre.

24 Le 27 septembre 2005 et le 5 octobre 2005, TEA-CEGOS et STG ont adressé à la Commission deux courriers dans lesquels était, notamment, mis en exergue le caractère indépendant des deux instituts. Elles y soulignaient le fait que les seuls motifs pour lesquels les décisions d'attribution pouvaient être retirées étaient ceux visés par [le point] 14 des instructions aux soumissionnaires, qui renvoyaient au point 2.3.3 du guide pratique. Elles ajoutaient que TEA-CEGOS Consortium n'était responsable d'aucune omission d'information et n'avait fourni aucune information erronée.

25 Le 11 octobre 2005, TEA-CEGOS et STG ont sollicité la Commission afin de savoir si cette dernière avait adopté une position définitive quant à la procédure d'appel d'offres, tout en l'invitant à ne pas conclure de contrats concomitamment aux décisions d'attribution qu'elle adopterait. La Commission leur a indiqué qu'elle était sur le point d'adopter une décision.

26 Par deux décisions adressées le 12 octobre 2005, d'une part, à TEA-CEGOS Consortium et, d'autre part, à GHK Consortium, la Commission a confirmé les décisions du 18 juillet 2005 et a rejeté les offres desdits Consortiums (ci-après les 'décisions attaquées').»

La procédure devant le Tribunal

10 Par requête déposée au greffe du Tribunal le 13 octobre 2005, TEA–CEGOS et STG ont introduit le recours dans l'affaire T-376/05.

11 Par requête déposée au greffe du Tribunal le 20 octobre 2005, GHK Consulting a introduit le recours dans l'affaire T-383/05.

12 Par ordonnance du président de la deuxième chambre du Tribunal du 10 novembre 2005, les affaires T-376/05 et T-383/05 ont été jointes aux fins de la procédure écrite, de la procédure orale et de l'arrêt.

13 Les requérantes dans l'affaire T-376/05 ont invoqué quatre moyens à l'appui de leur recours. Par le premier, elles ont fait valoir que la Commission avait violé, d'une part, le point 13 de l'avis de marché et, d'autre part, le point 14 des instructions aux soumissionnaires. Par leur deuxième moyen, les requérantes ont soutenu que la Commission avait manqué à son obligation de motivation ainsi qu'au principe de sécurité juridique, celle-ci ayant par ailleurs commis, selon elles, une erreur manifeste d'appréciation dans l'application du point 13 de l'avis de marché. Par leur troisième moyen, les requérantes ont fait grief à la Commission d'avoir violé le principe de bonne administration et d'avoir manqué à son devoir de diligence. Enfin, par leur quatrième moyen, elles ont fait valoir que la Commission avait violé le principe de confiance légitime.

L'arrêt attaqué

14 Dans le cadre de son appréciation du deuxième moyen invoqué dans l'affaire T-376/05, le Tribunal a notamment précisé ce qui suit:

«50 En ce qui concerne, en deuxième lieu, le grief tiré de l'erreur manifeste d'appréciation dont seraient entachées les décisions attaquées, il convient de rappeler que la Commission dispose d'un large pouvoir d'appréciation quant aux éléments à prendre en considération en vue de la prise d'une décision de passer un marché sur appel d'offres et que le contrôle du Tribunal doit se limiter à la vérification du respect des règles de procédure et de motivation, ainsi que de l'exactitude matérielle des faits, de l'absence d'erreur manifeste d'appréciation et de détournement de pouvoir (arrêts du Tribunal du 24 février 2000, ADT Projekt/Commission, T-145/98, Rec. p. II-387, point 147, et du 26 février 2002, Esedra/Commission, T-169/00, Rec. p. II-609, point 95).

51 Le Tribunal relève que [le point] 13 de l'avis de marché prohibait que des entités d'un même groupement juridique participent aux mêmes appels d'offres, par exemple en tant que membres de consortiums, afin d'éviter un risque de conflit d'intérêts ou de concurrence faussée entre les soumissionnaires. De cette interdiction, il résulte que le respect [du point] 13 de l'avis de marché conditionnait la validité d'une offre, étant entendu que la Commission jouit d'un large pouvoir d'appréciation pour déterminer tant le contenu que la mise en œuvre des règles applicables à la passation d'un marché sur appel d'offres. Ainsi, même dans l'hypothèse où une violation dudit [point] n'est décelée qu'à un stade avancé de la procédure d'appel d'offres, [ce point] trouve à s'appliquer.

52 Compte tenu de ces considérations, il importe, en l'espèce, de déterminer si la Commission a commis une erreur manifeste d'appréciation en considérant que le DIIS et le DIHR appartenaient au même groupement juridique. À cette fin, il convient de rappeler que, en l'absence d'une définition textuelle ou jurisprudentielle de la notion de groupement juridique qui fixerait les critères d'un tel groupement, la Commission était obligée, aux fins de se prononcer quant à la réunion des conditions d'application [du point] 13 de l'avis de marché, de procéder à un examen au cas par cas en tenant compte de tous les éléments pertinents.

53 Dès lors, aux fins de reconnaître dans le présent litige l'existence d'un groupement juridique, la Commission a eu à déterminer si les entités en cause étaient structurellement liées au Centre, cet élément étant susceptible de créer un risque de conflit d'intérêts ou de concurrence faussée entre les soumissionnaires, étant entendu néanmoins que d'autres facteurs pouvaient venir au soutien de l'analyse des liens structurels, tels que ceux ayant trait au degré d'indépendance des entités concernées et qualifiés par les parties de 'critère fonctionnel'.

54 En l'espèce, il ressort des décisions attaquées que la Commission a constaté que le DIIS et le DIHR faisaient juridiquement partie du Centre et appartenaient ainsi à une même structure. Elle a déduit de la loi danoise du 6 juin 2002 ainsi que des statuts du Centre et de ceux des instituts que le DIIS et le DIHR ne constituaient pas des entités juridiques distinctes du Centre et a relevé que ce dernier assurait notamment l'administration commune des deux instituts, qui étaient par ailleurs représentés au conseil d'administration du Centre.

55 S'agissant, premièrement, de l'appartenance structurelle des instituts au Centre, il ressort effectivement du dossier, et plus spécifiquement de la section 1, sous-section 2, des statuts du Centre, que ce dernier se compose de deux entités autonomes: le DIIS et le DIHR, les deux instituts et le Centre partageant les mêmes locaux.

56 Concernant l'administration des deux instituts, comme l'a relevé la Commission dans les décisions attaquées, l'article 2 des statuts du Centre énonce que ce dernier 'assure une administration conjointe pour les finances, les ressources humaines, l'administration, les services communs ainsi que la bibliothèque commune aux deux instituts'. Ainsi, les services administratifs, tels que le paiement des salaires et la gestion des facturations, sont assurés par le Centre, qui reçoit des deux instituts une rémunération spécifique en contrepartie des prestations offertes, ce dernier étant également chargé de la réception des paiements versés au profit des instituts.

57 Par ailleurs, ainsi que la Commission l'a également relevé dans les décisions attaquées, il existe un lien entre les instituts et le conseil d'administration du Centre, étant donné que certains membres de ce dernier sont désignés par le DIIS et le DIHR (section 5, sous–section 3, de la loi danoise du 6 juin 2002). Un échange de vues concernant les stratégies commerciales à mener par les deux instituts peut donc avoir lieu à ce niveau élevé de la structure. Ce lien est renforcé par le fait, qui ressort également du dossier, que le conseil d'administration du Centre discute des prévisions opérationnelles des deux instituts.

58 Il résulte de ce qui précède que les deux instituts doivent être considérés comme faisant structurellement partie du même groupement juridique. Dès lors, la Commission n'a pas commis d'erreur manifeste d'appréciation en faisant application [du point] 13 de l'avis de marché, cette appartenance structurelle constituant un indice suffisant d'un risque de concurrence faussée entre les soumissionnaires, voire de conflit d'intérêts. En outre, force est de constater que la prise en compte d'éléments relevant du critère fonctionnel ne remet pas en cause l'appréciation de la Commission à cet égard.

59 S'agissant en effet, deuxièmement, du critère fonctionnel, à savoir de l'indépendance des instituts à l'égard du Centre, le Tribunal relève que l'autonomie financière des instituts est relativement limitée par l'influence du Centre. En effet, comme cela ressort du dossier, le DIIS et le DIHR sont financés en partie par des fonds publics octroyés au Centre qui doit les répartir à hauteur de 80 % pour le DIIS et à hauteur de 20 % pour le DIHR. De plus, les articles 4 et 15 des statuts du DIIS énoncent que ce dernier est 'placé sous les auspices du [Centre]' et que "[l]es comptes de l'institut son contrôlés en tant qu'entité du [Centre] par le 'Rigsrevisor'". De même, les comptes du DIHR doivent être approuvés par le conseil d'administration du Centre.

60 En ce qui concerne l'autonomie décisionnelle des instituts, les requérantes mettent en exergue le fait que les conseils d'administration des instituts sont autonomes à l'égard du Centre. Cette allégation ne suffit cependant pas à infirmer la constatation selon laquelle le DIIS et le DIHR appartiennent à un même groupement juridique, puisque cette appartenance n'exclut pas nécessairement une autonomie décisionnelle des différentes entités juridiques qui coexistent au sein d'un même groupement.

61 Quant à l'argument des requérantes, selon lequel la Commission aurait omis de prendre en considération le fait que les instituts possédaient des patrimoines distincts, le Tribunal constate que les requérantes n'ont pas été en mesure d'apporter des éléments probants susceptibles de démontrer que la Commission aurait, à tort, relevé dans les décisions attaquées que les actifs des instituts appartenaient au Centre. Par ailleurs, le fait que la Commission ait estimé que les instituts étaient dépourvus de personnalité juridique n'est pas constitutif d'une erreur manifeste d'appréciation conduisant à une application erronée [du point] 13 de l'avis de marché. En effet, d'une part, il convient de relever que les décisions attaquées ne sont nullement fondées sur l'absence de personnalité juridique, cet élément n'étant à aucun moment mentionné dans ces dernières. D'autre part, et comme le démontre à suffisance de droit la Commission dans ses écritures, à supposer que les instituts aient une personnalité juridique propre, l'appartenance du DIIS et du DIHR au Centre justifiait l'application [du point] 13 de l'avis de marché.

62 Partant, la Commission n'a pas commis d'erreur manifeste d'appréciation en se fondant principalement sur un critère structurel. Le fait qu'elle ait pu demander, dans un premier temps, des informations se rattachant au critère fonctionnel pour ensuite retenir le critère structurel ne saurait modifier ce constat, la Commission ayant effectué une analyse approfondie des circonstances du cas d'espèce avant de faire application [du point] 13 de l'avis de marché.

63 Dès lors, le grief selon lequel la Commission a violé le principe de sécurité juridique en décidant d'opter pour un critère structurel est non fondé. […]

64 Quant au caractère prétendument disproportionné et inadéquat [du point] 13 de l'avis de marché, les requérantes ont indiqué, lors de l'audience, que le champ d'application [du point] 13 de l'avis de marché était trop étendu, pouvant couvrir des situations dans lesquelles aucun conflit d'intérêts ne saurait résulter d'une appartenance structurelle. À cet égard, il convient de considérer que, compte tenu du large pouvoir d'appréciation dont jouit la Commission et de la nécessité de fixer à l'avance des règles claires et compréhensibles dans l'avis de marché, la Commission n'a pas manifestement excédé son pouvoir en décidant du contenu [du point] 13 de l'avis de marché et en l'appliquant aux offres des requérantes. En particulier, elle n'a pas dépassé les limites de ce pouvoir en stipulant audit [point] 13 que l'appartenance de personnes morales à un même groupement juridique entraînerait leur exclusion de l'adjudication.

15 Dans le cadre de son examen du troisième moyen invoqué dans l'affaire T-376/05, le Tribunal a notamment jugé ce qui suit:

«77 En l'espèce, la Commission a indiqué aux requérantes, le 20 mai 2005, que leurs offres avaient été retenues pour le lot n° 7 à condition que ces dernières fournissent les documents prouvant qu'elles ne se trouvaient dans aucune des situations correspondant aux causes d'exclusion prévues au point 2.3.3 du guide pratique.

78 Il convient de constater que le DIHR a indiqué son appartenance au Centre dès la proposition de candidature de TEA-CEGOS Consortium, en mentionnant également que l'un de ses partenaires était le DIIS. Le DIIS a déclaré quant à lui n'appartenir à aucun groupement ou réseau. Or, si le DIIS considérait réellement ne pas appartenir à un groupement juridique, il aurait dû à tout le moins signaler à la Commission, au vu des informations requises dans le formulaire de déclaration, qu'il entretenait des liens avec le Centre et faisait ainsi partie d'un réseau, les statuts du Centre stipulant expressément que le DIIS constitue l'une de ses entités.

79 Bien que la déclaration du DIIS soit erronée, il convient de relever que l'offre technique soumise par GHK Consortium indiquait le nom des différents membres du Consortium et que le DIIS y était mentionné en troisième position. Par conséquent, la Commission aurait pu s'apercevoir que la déclaration du DIIS n'était pas exacte. Toutefois, le fait que la Commission ne se soit rendu compte de l'appartenance des instituts au Centre qu'à un stade avancé de la procédure est sans incidence sur la solution du présent litige, dès lors que, même à ce stade, l'offre de GHK Consortium devait être exclue conformément [au point] 13 de l'avis de marché.

80 En tout état de cause, la complexité inhérente à la diversité des informations soumises lors des procédures d'appel d'offres peut expliquer que la Commission ne se soit rendu compte de l'existence de l'appartenance au Centre qu'une fois les deux offres retenues sous conditions. En effet, ce n'est qu'à ce stade de la procédure que les requérantes se trouvaient dans l'obligation de fournir les documents qui justifiaient la véracité de leurs déclarations initiales. Il s'ensuit que la Commission n'a pas violé le principe de bonne administration en ne soulevant la question de l'appartenance des instituts au Centre qu'après l'acceptation conditionnelle de l'offre de GHK Consortium.

81 S'agissant de la conduite de la procédure d'appel d'offres par la Commission, force est de relever que, dès le 22 juin 2005, cette dernière a demandé à TEA-CEGOS d'expliquer le lien qui unissait le DIHR au Centre et a prié GHK International de lui apporter des éclaircissements quant au statut juridique du DIIS. Faisant suite aux informations apportées par TEA-CEGOS, la Commission lui a demandé le 27 juin 2005, avant d'adopter la décision du 18 juillet 2005, de fournir des renseignements supplémentaires. De plus, il ressort des faits que, entre le 18 juillet et le 12 octobre 2005, la Commission a été en contact constant avec les requérantes et leur a notamment indiqué qu'elle procédait à un réexamen des éléments soumis et leur ferait connaître dans les meilleurs délais la position finale qu'elle adopterait. En outre, la Commission s'est attachée à répondre promptement aux sollicitations des requérantes, notamment en informant les avocats de TEA-CEGOS de l'état de la procédure dès le 13 septembre 2005, ces derniers ayant manifesté leur souhait de le connaître le 8 septembre

82 En ce qui concerne les informations contradictoires qui auraient été diffusées sur le site Internet d'EuropeAid, il convient de constater que les noms des soumissionnaires retenus et mentionnés sur ledit site étaient ceux qui avaient été retenus sous conditions par la Commission. Il était donc logique que les noms des requérantes y aient figuré, puisque ce n'est qu'au moment où ces dernières ont eu à prouver la véracité de leurs déclarations, en l'espèce à la suite des décisions du 20 mai 2005, que l'appartenance du DIIS et du DIHR au Centre est apparue de manière claire et non équivoque. Une fois les décisions du 18 juillet 2005 adoptées, les noms des requérantes ont été retirés dudit site, et ce dès le 25 juillet 2005.

83 Il résulte de ce qui précède que les requérantes n'ont pas démontré que la Commission avait violé le principe de bonne administration et avait manqué à son devoir de diligence de sorte que leurs griefs sont, en tout état de cause, non fondés. Partant, le troisième moyen doit être rejeté.»

16 Sur la base notamment de ces considérations, le Tribunal a décidé de rejeter les recours.

Les conclusions des parties devant la Cour

17 Le présent pourvoi n'a été formé que par TEA-CEGOS et STG, GHK Consulting s'étant abstenue d'engager une action devant la Cour.

18 En substance, TEA-CEGOS et STG concluent à ce que la Cour:

– annule l'arrêt attaqué,

– tranche le litige en faisant droit aux demandes introduites devant le Tribunal, et – condamne la Commission aux dépens.

19 La Commission conclut au rejet du pourvoi et à la condamnation des requérantes aux dépens.

20 GHK Consulting n'a pas soumis d'observations à la Cour dans le cadre du présent pourvoi.

Sur le pourvoi

21 En vertu de l'article 119 du règlement de procédure, lorsque le pourvoi est manifestement irrecevable ou manifestement non fondé, la Cour peut, à tout moment, sur rapport du juge rapporteur, l'avocat général entendu, le rejeter par voie d'ordonnance motivée.

22 À l'appui de leurs conclusions, les requérantes invoquent trois moyens. Outre que, dans le cadre de chacun de ces moyens les requérantes invoquent la méconnaissance, par le Tribunal, de l'obligation de motivation, elles fondent le premier de ceux-ci sur une violation du principe de sécurité juridique, le deuxième et le troisième sur une dénaturation des éléments de preuve, ce dernier moyen étant également tiré d'une violation du principe de bonne administration.

Sur le premier moyen

23 Par la première branche du premier moyen, les requérantes critiquent l'interprétation que le Tribunal a retenue de la notion de groupement juridique et, par la seconde branche de ce moyen, elles reprochent à celui-ci d'avoir adopté une motivation incohérente sur ce point.

Sur la première branche du premier moyen

24 Par la première branche de ce moyen, les requérantes font valoir que l'avis de marché et les instructions aux soumissionnaires ne contiennent aucune définition de la notion de groupement juridique figurant au point 13 de l'avis de marché. La Commission aurait d'abord retenu un critère fonctionnel pour ensuite lui préférer un critère structurel. Le principe de sécurité juridique

s'opposerait à ce que la Commission agisse ainsi, au cas par cas, sans cadre préalablement défini. Les requérantes n'auraient donc pas pu connaître sans ambiguïté leurs droits et obligations au titre de la procédure d'appel d'offres en question et n'auraient pas pu prendre leurs dispositions en conséquence. En considérant, notamment au point 63 de l'arrêt attaqué, que la Commission n'avait pas violé le principe de sécurité juridique, le Tribunal aurait méconnu ce principe même.

25 La Commission fait valoir, à titre principal, que la première branche du présent moyen est irrecevable au motif que, étant tirée de l'absence de définition préalable de la notion de groupement juridique, elle constitue un moyen nouveau qui n'a pas été soulevé en première instance.

26 Cet argument ne saurait toutefois être retenu. En effet, il ressort notamment du point 42 de l'arrêt attaqué que l'argument tiré de l'absence de définition préalable de la notion de groupement juridique a bien été débattu devant le Tribunal, dans le cadre de la procédure de première instance. Par conséquent, les requérantes sont recevables à contester l'appréciation portée par le Tribunal sur cette question.

27 La Commission fait valoir, à titre subsidiaire, que la présente branche du moyen est non fondée.

28 Il convient de considérer que l'exclusion automatique des soumissionnaires appartenant au même groupement juridique, prévue au point 13 de l'avis de marché, visait à éviter que la concurrence soit faussée et à concrétiser la notion de situation de conflit d'intérêts au sens de l'article 94 du règlement financier.

29 Dans le cadre d'un appel d'offres, la simple mention des termes «groupement juridique» présente un degré de précision suffisante, sans que la Commission soit tenue d'apporter plus d'informations.

30 En effet, si un pouvoir adjudicateur est tenu de rédiger les conditions d'un appel d'offres avec précision et clarté, il n'est pas obligé de prévoir à l'avance tous les cas de figure, aussi rares qu'ils puissent être, susceptibles de se présenter dans la pratique.

31 Il est loisible audit pouvoir d'évaluer l'applicabilité d'une condition telle que celle posée au point 13 de l'avis de marché en procédant à un examen au cas par cas en tenant compte de tous les éléments pertinents, ainsi que le Tribunal l'a jugé au point 52 de l'arrêt attaqué.

32 Il s'ensuit que le Tribunal n'a pas méconnu le principe de sécurité juridique et que la première branche du moyen n'est pas fondée.

Sur la seconde branche du premier moyen

33 Par la seconde branche de ce moyen, les requérantes font valoir, premièrement, que le Tribunal s'est contredit en reconnaissant que, en omettant de définir la notion de groupement juridique, la Commission ne s'était pas dotée à l'avance de règles claires et compréhensibles, alors qu'il aurait, dans le même temps, souligné que de telles règles sont nécessaires lorsque la partie défenderesse jouit d'un large pouvoir d'appréciation. Deuxièmement, la considération, exposée au point 62 de l'arrêt attaqué, selon laquelle la Commission n'avait pas commis d'erreur manifeste d'appréciation ne suffirait pas pour que le Tribunal puisse conclure, au point 63 de cet arrêt, que celle-ci n'avait pas violé le principe de sécurité juridique. Troisièmement, le Tribunal n'aurait pas suffisamment motivé son appréciation selon laquelle la Commission avait effectué une analyse approfondie des circonstances de l'espèce.

34 S'agissant du premier de ces arguments, il convient de rappeler que, au point 52 de l'arrêt attaqué, le Tribunal a constaté «l'absence d'une définition textuelle ou jurisprudentielle de la notion de groupement juridique» pour en déduire que la Commission était obligée de procéder à un examen au cas par cas.

35 Au point 64 de cet arrêt, le Tribunal a constaté la nécessité pour le pouvoir adjudicateur de fixer à l'avance des règles claires et compréhensibles. En appliquant ce critère, le Tribunal a considéré que, en décidant du contenu du point 13 de l'avis de marché, la Commission n'avait pas dépassé les limites de son pouvoir d'appréciation.

36 Aucune incohérence ne peut être relevée entre ces deux éléments de la motivation de l'arrêt attaqué. En effet, il est cohérent de considérer que le point 13 de l'avis de marché suffisait à établir des règles claires et compréhensibles applicables à l'appel d'offres, sans qu'il soit nécessaire d'accompagner ce point de définitions plus détaillées. Il ne découle pas nécessairement de l'absence d'une définition préalable de la notion de groupement juridique que la Commission ne s'était pas dotée de règles claires et compréhensibles. L'argument tiré d'une contradiction entachant le raisonnement du Tribunal n'est donc pas fondé.

37 En ce qui concerne le deuxième argument, il est vrai que le point 63 de l'arrêt attaqué commence par l'expression «Dès lors». Cependant il ressort à l'évidence d'une lecture d'ensemble de cet arrêt que cette expression renvoie non pas au seul point 62, mais à l'ensemble des développements figurant aux points 52 à 62 dudit arrêt. La conclusion relative au principe de sécurité juridique qui figure au point 63 du même arrêt découle de manière cohérente de ces développements. Par conséquent l'argument tiré de ce que cette conclusion n'est pas assortie d'une motivation suffisante n'est pas fondé.

38 Quant au troisième argument, il convient de considérer que l'arrêt attaqué, et notamment ses points 49 ainsi que 81, exposent de façon claire et suffisante les motifs ayant conduit le Tribunal à la conclusion que les décisions attaquées avaient été adoptées à la suite d'un réexamen approfondi mené par la Commission. L'argument soulevé à cet égard n'est pas fondé.

39 Il en résulte que la seconde branche du moyen n'est pas fondée.

40 Par conséquent, le premier moyen doit être rejeté dans son intégralité.

Sur le deuxième moyen

41 Par la première branche du deuxième moyen, les requérantes reprochent au Tribunal d'avoir adopté une motivation erronée ou insuffisante. Par les deux autres branches de ce moyen, il est allégué, respectivement, que le Tribunal aurait dénaturé la décision litigieuse ainsi que d'autres éléments de preuve.

Sur la première branche du deuxième moyen

42 Par la présente branche de ce moyen, les requérantes font valoir que, aux points 52 à 61 de l'arrêt attaqué, le Tribunal a violé l'obligation de motivation, d'abord en admettant que les instituts en cause pouvaient être en situation de conflit d'intérêts alors qu'ils étaient autonomes, ensuite, en privilégiant le critère structurel au détriment du critère fonctionnel et, enfin, en examinant les éléments relevant du critère fonctionnel alors qu'il aurait écarté la pertinence de ce dernier.

43 S'agissant du premier de ces arguments, il est vrai que, au point 55 de l'arrêt attaqué, le Tribunal a constaté que le Centre «se compose de deux entités autonomes: le DIIS et le DIHR, les deux instituts et le Centre partageant les mêmes locaux».

44 Si dans ce passage dudit point, le Tribunal admet que ces deux entités apparaissent, dans une certaine mesure, comme distinctes l'une de l'autre, dans les points suivants de l'arrêt attaqué il énumère de façon détaillée les éléments de connexité qui les unissent. Ainsi, au point 56 de cet arrêt, il précise que les finances, les ressources humaines, l'administration et la bibliothèque commune des deux instituts sont gérées en commun par le Centre. Au point 57 dudit arrêt, il rappelle que certains membres du conseil d'administration du Centre sont désignés par le DIIS et le DIHR. Au point 59 de ce même arrêt, il explique de quelle manière la relative autonomie financière de ces instituts est limitée par l'influence du Centre. Enfin, au point 60 de l'arrêt attaqué, le Tribunal considère que l'appartenance à un même groupement juridique n'exclut pas nécessairement une autonomie décisionnelle des différentes entités qui coexistent au sein de celui-ci.

45 Il convient d'estimer que, de cette manière, le Tribunal a motivé de façon complète et pertinente sa conclusion selon laquelle, malgré un certain degré d'autonomie, les deux instituts en question étaient suffisamment connexes pour pouvoir se trouver en situation de conflit d'intérêts.

46 En ce qui concerne le deuxième argument, il convient de relever que le Tribunal était appelé à trancher la question de savoir si les deux instituts en cause appartenaient au même groupement juridique au sens du point 13 de l'avis de marché. À cette fin, le Tribunal devait interpréter cette disposition en fonction de l'objet, du système et du libellé de celle-ci. À cet égard, il apparaît que cette disposition vise à éviter que la concurrence soit faussée ou que se présentent des conflits d'intérêts dans le cadre de l'appel d'offres. Il est conforme à cette interprétation de retenir le critère de l'appartenance structurelle à un groupe pour décider du point de savoir si certaines entités font partie d'un groupement juridique au sens de ladite disposition. Partant, il était loisible au Tribunal de privilégier le critère structurel par rapport au critère fonctionnel.

47 Sur ce point, il ressort de l'arrêt attaqué, et notamment de son point 58, que la motivation retenue, à cet égard, par le Tribunal est cohérente et claire, et n'est pas erronée.

48 Quant au troisième argument invoqué, il convient de relever, d'une part, que, contrairement à ce qu'allèguent les requérantes, le Tribunal n'a pas écarté la pertinence des éléments relevant du critère fonctionnel. Au contraire, il ressort du point 53 de l'arrêt attaqué que, si le Tribunal attribue davantage d'importance au critère structurel, il n'exclut pas pour autant que le critère fonctionnel puisse revêtir une certaine importance. D'autre part, étant donné que les requérantes avaient fait état d'une prétendue autonomie fonctionnelle des instituts pour dénier l'existence d'un groupement juridique, il était légitime que le Tribunal réponde à cet argument.

49 Il s'ensuit que la motivation de l'arrêt attaqué n'est pas entachée d'une contradiction en raison du fait qu'elle comporte un examen des éléments relevant du critère fonctionnel.

50 Par conséquent, la première branche du deuxième moyen doit être écartée comme non fondée.

Sur la deuxième branche du deuxième moyen

51 Par la deuxième branche de ce moyen, les requérantes font valoir que le Tribunal a dénaturé la décision de la Commission du 12 octobre 2005 adressée à TEA-CEGOS Consortium. D'une part, elles reprochent au Tribunal d'avoir considéré, au point 58 de l'arrêt attaqué, que l'appartenance structurelle constituait un indice du «risque de concurrence faussée entre les soumissionnaires, voire de conflit d'intérêts» alors que le critère figurant dans le règlement financier est celui de «la situation de conflit d'intérêts» (par opposition au simple risque d'une telle situation). D'autre part, les requérantes font valoir que le Tribunal a dénaturé ladite décision en retenant que la Commission s'était fondée principalement sur un critère structurel alors que, en fait, cette institution s'était fondée exclusivement sur le critère structurel.

52 S'agissant du premier de ces arguments, il convient de considérer que, dans le présent contexte, les notions de situation de conflit d'intérêts et de risque de conflit d'intérêts, contrairement à ce que laissent entendre les requérantes, ne s'excluent pas mutuellement. En effet, les deux notions sont intimement liées à la prévention du risque que le pouvoir adjudicateur prenne des décisions faussées. Par conséquent, le Tribunal, en se fondant sur le critère du risque de conflit d'intérêts, n'a pas dénaturé la décision litigieuse.

53 Quant au second argument, il ressort du dossier que la Commission a demandé, dans un premier temps, des informations se rattachant au critère fonctionnel pour ensuite retenir le critère structurel comme base de sa décision du 12 octobre 2005. Lorsque le Tribunal a considéré, à la première phrase du point 62 de l'arrêt attaqué, que la Commission s'était fondée principalement sur un critère structurel, c'est manifestement en se référant à l'ensemble de ce processus décisionnel et non pas exclusivement aux termes de la décision du 12 octobre 2005. Lue en ce sens, la constatation du Tribunal selon laquelle la Commission s'était fondée principalement sur un critère structurel n'est pas inexacte. Il en résulte que le présent argument est fondé sur une lecture erronée de l'arrêt attaqué.

54 Par conséquent, il convient de considérer la deuxième branche du présent moyen comme non fondée.

Sur la troisième branche du deuxième moyen

55 Par la troisième branche de ce moyen, les requérantes font valoir que le DIIS et le DIHR sont des entités autonomes qui ne disposent l'une à l'égard de l'autre d'aucun moyen de contrôle et qui ne sont soumises à aucun contrôle de la part du Centre. En concluant qu'il n'en est pas ainsi, le Tribunal aurait dénaturé certains éléments de preuve. D'une part, elles font valoir que le Tribunal n'identifie pas les pièces du dossier sur lesquelles il se fonde pour conclure, au point 57 de l'arrêt attaqué, qu'un échange de vues concernant les stratégies commerciales à conduire peut avoir lieu au niveau du conseil d'administration du Centre et que les éléments du dossier ne permettent pas d'arriver à cette conclusion. D'autre part, les requérantes prétendent que le Tribunal a dénaturé les éléments de preuve en retenant, au point 59 de cet arrêt, que l'autonomie financière des instituts est relativement limitée par l'influence du Centre.

56 S'agissant de l'argument relatif à la possibilité d'un échange de vues au sein du conseil

d'administration du Centre, il convient de constater, d'une part, qu'il ressort clairement du point 57 de l'arrêt attaqué que le Tribunal se réfère pour l'essentiel à la loi danoise du 6 juin 2002. Il résulte, d'autre part, de ce point que le Tribunal n'a pas affirmé qu'un tel échange de vues avait effectivement eu lieu. Il a simplement considéré, et cela constitue une évidence, que la présence des membres des instituts au sein du conseil d'administration du Centre permettait un tel échange. Il s'ensuit que cet argument n'est pas fondé.

57 En ce qui concerne l'argument relatif à l'autonomie financière des instituts en cause, il convient de relever, d'une part, que le Tribunal a retenu de façon exacte que ces derniers sont financés par des fonds publics, lesquels leur sont attribués selon une formule sur laquelle le Centre n'a aucune emprise. D'autre part, s'agissant de la question du contrôle des comptes de ces instituts, le Tribunal s'est fondé sur des éléments contenus dans le dossier. Il en découle que le Tribunal n'a pas dénaturé les éléments de preuve relatifs à ce point.

58 Par conséquent, la troisième branche du moyen n'est pas fondée.

59 Il résulte de ce qui précède que le deuxième moyen doit être rejeté dans son ensemble.

Sur le troisième moyen

60 Par leur troisième moyen, les requérantes reprochent au Tribunal d'avoir considéré, aux points 79 à 81 de l'arrêt attaqué, en se référant à la complexité inhérente à la diversité des informations soumises lors des procédures d'appel d'offres, que la Commission n'a pas violé le principe de bonne administration en ne soulevant la question de l'appartenance des instituts au Centre qu'à un stade tardif de la procédure.

61 À cet égard, les requérantes invoquent quatre arguments. Premièrement, l'appartenance au Centre des instituts en cause aurait été révélée non pas par l'examen des documents fournis par les requérantes, mais par des informations fournies par un tiers.

62 Deuxièmement, les documents et déclarations fournis à la suite du courrier de la Commission du 20 mai 2005 ne viseraient pas à justifier la véracité des déclarations initiales, mais constitueraient une confirmation de la validité des premières déclarations.

63 Troisièmement, la Commission ne se serait pas donné les moyens informatiques nécessaires pour atteindre l'objectif à poursuivre, à savoir l'exclusion des candidats non qualifiés.

64 Quatrièmement, la Commission n'aurait pas fait preuve de diligence dans ses contacts avec les requérantes pendant la période de réexamen du dossier.

65 Force est de constater que ces quatre arguments sont inopérants. En effet, à supposer même que les affirmations contenues dans ces arguments soient exactes, aucune d'entre elles ne pourrait entraîner l'annulation de l'arrêt attaqué, car en aucun cas elles n'infirmeraient la conclusion, décisive pour l'arrêt attaqué, selon laquelle le DIIS et le DIHR faisaient partie du même groupement juridique, de sorte que le point 13 de l'avis de marché était applicable.

66 Par conséquent, il convient de rejeter le troisième moyen.

67 Il résulte de tout ce qui précède que le pourvoi doit, en application de l'article 119 du règlement de procédure, être rejeté dans son intégralité.

Sur les dépens

68 Aux termes de l'article 69, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure, applicable à la procédure de pourvoi en vertu de l'article 118 du même règlement, toute partie qui succombe est condamnée aux dépens, s'il est conclu en ce sens. La Commission ayant conclu à la condamnation des requérantes et ces dernières ayant succombé en leurs moyens, il y a lieu de les condamner aux dépens.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (septième chambre) ordonne:

1) Le pourvoi est rejeté.

2) TEA-CEGOS SA et Services techniques globaux (STG) SA sont condamnées aux dépens.

Appellants: TEA-CEGOS, SA, Services techniques globaux (STG) SA (represented by: G. Vandersanden and L. Levi, lawyers)

Other parties to the proceedings: GHK Consulting Ltd, Commission of the European Communities

Form of order sought

The appellants claim that the Court should:

set aside the judgment of 14 February 2006 of the Court of First Instance in Joined Cases T-376/05 and T-383/05;

consequently, grant the appellants the relief they claimed at first instance and, therefore, annul the decision of 12 October 2005 rejecting the candidature and bid of the TEA-CEGOS consortium and withdrawing the decision awarding the framework contract to the TEA-CEGOS consortium under the call for tenders EuropeAid - 2/119860/C-LOT No 7;

annul all the other decisions taken by the defendant under that call for tenders following the decision of 12 October 2005 and, in particular, the award decisions and the contracts concluded by the Commission implementing those decisions; order the defendant to pay all the costs at first instance and on appeal.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The appellants base their appeal on breach of Community law by, and on procedural irregularities before, the Court of First Instance. The appellants submit that the Court of First Instance disregarded the principle of legal certainty, its obligation to state reasons and the principle of sound administration and distorted the evidence.

having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 By its action, the Commission of the European Communities seeks a declaration from the Court that by adopting Decree No 558/A/04/03/RR of the Minister for the Interior of 11 July 2003 ('the Ministerial Decree') authorising the derogation from the Community rules on public supply contracts in respect of the purchase of light helicopters for the use of police forces and the national fire service, without any of the conditions capable of justifying that derogation having been satisfied, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and in particular under Articles 2(1)(b), 6 and 9 thereof.

Legal context

Community legislation

2 Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/36 reads as follows:

‘1. This Directive shall not apply to:

(b) supply contracts which are declared secret or the execution of which must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions in force in the Member States concerned or when the protection of the basic interests of the Member State’s security so requires.’

3 Article 3 of Directive 93/36 provides:

‘Without prejudice to Articles 2, 4 and 5(1), this Directive shall apply to all products to which Article 1(a) relates, including those covered by contracts awarded by contracting authorities in the field of defence, except for the products to which Article 296(b) [EC] applies.’

4 Article 6 of Directive 93/36 provides:

‘1. In awarding public supply contracts the contracting authorities shall apply the procedures defined in Article 1(d), (e) and (f), in the cases set out below.

2. The contracting authorities may award their supply contracts by negotiated procedure in the case of irregular tenders in response to an open or restricted procedure or in the case of tenders which are unacceptable under national provisions that are in accordance with provisions of Title IV, in so far as the original terms for the contract are not substantially altered. The contracting authorities shall in these cases publish a tender notice unless they include in such negotiated procedures all the enterprises satisfying the criteria of Articles 20 to 24 which, during the prior open or restricted procedure, have submitted tenders in accordance with the formal requirements of the tendering procedure.

3. The contracting authorities may award their supply contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice, in the following cases:

(a) in the absence of tenders or appropriate tenders in response to an open or restricted procedure insofar as the original terms of the contract are not substantially altered and provided that a report is communicated to the Commission;

(b) when the products involved are manufactured purely for the purpose of research, experiment, study or development, this provision does not extend to quantity production to establish commercial viability or to recover research and development costs;

(c) when, for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with protection of exclusive rights, the products supplied may be manufactured or delivered only by a particular supplier;

(d) in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseeable by the contracting authorities in question, the time limit laid down for the open, restricted or negotiated procedures referred to in paragraph 2 cannot be kept. The circumstances invoked to justify extreme urgency must not in any event be attributable to the contracting authorities;

(e) for additional deliveries by the original supplier which are intended either as a partial replacement of normal supplies or installations or as the extension of existing supplies or installations where a change of supplier would oblige the contracting authority to acquire material having different technical characteristics which would result in incompatibility or disproportionate technical difficulties in operation and maintenance. The length of such contracts as well as that of recurrent contracts may, as a general rule, not exceed three years.

4. In all other cases, the contracting authorities shall award their supply contracts by the open procedure or by the restricted procedure.’

5 Article 9 of Directive 93/36 reads as follows:

‘1. The contracting authorities shall make known, as soon as possible after the beginning of their budgetary year, by means of an indicative notice, the total procurement by product area which they envisage awarding during the subsequent 12 months where the total estimated value, taking into account the provisions of Article 5, is equal to or greater than [EUR] 750 000.

The product area shall be established by the contracting authorities by means of reference to the nomenclature “Classification of Products According to Activities (CPA)”. The Commission shall determine the conditions of reference in the notice to particular positions of the nomenclature in accordance with the procedure laid down in Article 32(2).

2. Contracting authorities who wish to award a public supply contract by open, restricted or negotiated procedure in the cases referred to in Article 6(2), shall make known their intention by means of a notice.

3. Contracting authorities who have awarded a contract shall make known the result by means of a notice. However, certain information on the contract award may, in certain cases, not be published where release of such information would impede law enforcement or otherwise be contrary to the public interest, would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of particular enterprises, public or private, or might prejudice fair competition between suppliers.

4. The notices shall be drawn up in accordance with the models given in Annex IV and shall specify the information requested in those models. The contracting authorities may not require any conditions other than those specified in Article 22 and 23 when requesting information concerning the economic and technical standards which they require of suppliers for their selection (Section 11 of Annex IV B, Section 9 of Annex IV C and Section 8 of Annex IV D).

5. The contracting authorities shall send the notices as rapidly as possible and by the most appropriate channels to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities. In the case of the accelerated procedure referred to in Article 12, the notice shall be sent by telex, telegram or telefax.

The notice referred to in paragraph 1 shall be sent as soon as possible after the beginning of each budgetary year.

The notice referred to in paragraph 3 shall be sent at the latest 48 days after the award of the contract in question.

6. The notices referred to in paragraphs 1 and 3 shall be published in full in the Official Journal of the European Communities and in the TED data bank in the official languages of the Communities, the text in the original language alone being authentic.

7. The notice referred to in paragraph 2 shall be published in full in the Official Journal of the European Communities and in the TED data bank in their original language. A summary of the important elements of each notice shall be published in the official languages of the Communities, the text in the original language alone being authentic.

8. The Office for Official Publications of the European Communities shall publish the notices not later than 12 days after their dispatch. In the case of the accelerated procedure referred to in Article 12, this period shall be reduced to five days.

9. The notices shall not be published in the Official Journals or in the press of the country of the contracting authority before the date of dispatch to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities; they shall mention that date. They shall not contain information other than that published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

10. The contracting authorities must be able to supply proof of the date of dispatch.

11. The cost of publication of the notices in the Official Journal of the European Communities shall be borne by the Communities. The length of the notice shall not be greater than one page of the Journal, or approximately 650 words. Each edition of the Journal containing one or more notices shall reproduce the model notice or notices on which the published notice or notices are based.’

National legislation

6 The Ministerial Decree provides:

'1. Supplies of light helicopters for the use of police forces and the national fire service must be accompanied by special security measures which also apply to documents of the technical evaluation group and the Interministerial Commission referred to in this decree.

2. With regard to the award of those supplies, derogation may be made from the provisions of Legislative Decree No 358 of [24 July 1992], as amended by Legislative Decree No 402 of [20 October 1998 ('Legislative Decree No 358/1992')], as the conditions referred to in Article 4 [point] (c) of that decree have been met in this instance.'

7 Legislative Decree No 358/1992, which is referred to by the Ministerial Decree, constitutes the legislation which transposes the Community legislation on public supply contracts.

8 Article 4 point (c) of Legislative Decree No 358/1992 repeats the provisions of Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/36.

The pre-litigation procedure

9 The Commission, having become aware of the existence of the Ministerial Decree and being of the opinion that it was not in compliance with Article 2(1)(b), 6 and 9 of Directive 93/36, sent a letter of formal notice to which the Italian Republic replied on 30 July 2004.

10 As the Commission was not satisfied with that answer, it sent the Italian Republic a reasoned opinion on 14 December 2004 calling on it to take the measures necessary to comply with that opinion within a period of two months from receipt thereof.

11 By letter of 22 March 2005, the Italian Republic informed the Commission that it had not yet replied in detail to that reasoned opinion but that it 'had initiated a process of in-depth reflection in that regard' the initial outcomes of which 'suggested that a reading of that decree could give rise to some perplexity as regards its correspondence with the legislative framework in force at Community level in respect of procedures for the award of public supply contracts'. That letter continued by expressing a wish to engage in technical dialogue with the Commission's staff which could 'accompany the process of reflection in question and lead to a re-examination of the abovementioned legislation which duly takes account of the various relevant requirements'.

12 Despite two letters from the Commission of 14 April and 26 May 2005 informing the Italian Republic that it was prepared to engage in dialogue with officials of the Ministry concerned, that technical dialogue never took place. In those circumstances, the Commission decided to bring the present action.

The action

Arguments of the parties

13 The Commission alleges that, by the Ministerial Decree, the Italian Republic improperly excluded supplies of light helicopters for the use of police forces and the national fire service from the scope of Directive 93/36, because none of the conditions laid down in Article 2(1)(b) had been complied with.

14 In that regard, the Commission points out that those helicopters are intended for police forces and the national fire service, that is to say for civilian departments, which should not normally take part in military operations. Furthermore, the fact that the installation of light arms is envisaged as a mere possibility confirms that the helicopters in question are intended for a use which is essentially civilian. Lastly, the fact that those helicopters have to have certain characteristics similar to those of military helicopters is not sufficient for them to be equated with military supplies. For the Commission, they are at the very most aircraft intended for a possible dual use.

15 In addition, the Commission takes the view that, even if military supplies were involved, Directive 93/36 should still be applied and the circumstances warranting the derogation provided for in Article 2(1)(b) of that directive should be established by the Member State which is relying on that derogation. The Commission considers that, in the present case, the Italian Republic has not established that it was legitimate to have recourse to the derogation set out in that provision.

16 The Italian Republic maintains that, in the current international context, the concepts of war and war material have departed significantly from their original meanings, as has the concept of protection of the essential interests of national security. The military nature of the helicopters constituting the subject-matter of the supplies provided for by the Ministerial Decree cannot be disputed as those helicopters may be used to carry out national security missions. In accordance with the requirements of an Interministerial Commission created for that purpose, those helicopters must possess certain technical characteristics making it possible for them to potentially be used as arms and defence systems, with the result that they require an approval from the Ministry of Defence.

17 The Italian Republic claims that the conditions set out in Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/36 have been satisfied. It bases its claim in particular on the argument that the greatest discretion must be maintained with regard to the supplies in question given their use as arms systems and their interoperability with other military material. That is why confidentiality cannot be guaranteed in an open invitation to tender procedure.

18 Furthermore, the Italian Republic takes the view that since the aircraft in question may be classified without restriction as military material, even if it were to be found that the conditions set out in Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/96 could not apply in the present case, the disputed supplies would nevertheless be covered by the derogation referred to in Article 296 EC and would therefore fall outside the scope of the Community rules on public procurement.

19 Lastly, the Italian Republic regards this action as inadmissible in so far as it is contrary to the principle of ne bis in idem. It submits that the issue forming the subject-matter of the proceedings has already been examined and assessed by the Court in Case C-337/05 Commission v Italy [2008] ECR I-0000.

Findings of the Court

Admissibility

20 In that regard, it is sufficient to point out an essential difference between this case and that which gave rise to the judgment in Commission v Italy. In this case, the Italian Republic acted pursuant to a decree of the Minister for the Interior while the case which gave rise to the judgment in Commission v Italy related to the lawfulness of a practice of the Italian authorities. That point is sufficient to establish that, in the present case, the principle of ne bis in idem cannot, on any basis, be effectively relied on.

21 Consequently, the plea of inadmissibility raised by the Italian Republic must be rejected.

Substance

22 It should be noted at the outset that it is common ground between the parties that the value of the contracts covered by the Ministerial Decree exceed the threshold, fixed in Article 5(1)(a) of Directive 93/36, capable of bringing them within the scope of that directive.

23 It must also be borne in mind that it is settled case-law that any derogations from the rules intended to ensure the effectiveness of the rights conferred by the EC Treaty in connection with public procurement must be strictly interpreted (see, to that effect, Case C–71/92 Commission v Spain [1993] ECR I-5923, paragraph 36) and that the burden of proving the actual existence of exceptional circumstances justifying a derogation lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances (see, to that effect, Case C-328/92 Commission v Spain [1994] ECR I-1569, paragraphs 15 and 16, and Commission v Italy, paragraphs 57 and 58).

24 In the present case, the Italian Republic maintains that the Ministerial Decree fulfils the conditions set out in Article 296 EC and Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/36 on the ground, inter alia, that the helicopters covered by that decree are dual-use items, that is to say, they may serve both military and civilian purposes.

25 In that regard, it is important to point out that, under Article 296(1)(b) EC, any Member State may take such measures as it considers necessary for the protection of the essential interests of its security and which are connected with the production of or trade in arms, munitions and war materials, provided, however, that such measures do not alter the conditions of competition in the common market regarding products which are not intended for specifically military purposes (see Commission v Italy, paragraph 46).

26 It is clear from the wording of that provision that the products in question must be intended for specifically military purposes. It follows that the purchase of equipment, the use of which for military purposes is hardly certain, must necessarily comply with the rules governing the award of public contracts (see Italy v Commission, paragraph 47).

27 It is not disputed that the Ministerial Decree applies, as the Italian Republic admits, to helicopters which are clearly for civilian use whereas their military use is only potential.

28 Consequently, Article 296(1)(b) EC, to which Article 3 of Directive 93/36 refers, cannot properly be invoked by the Italian Republic to justify national legislation authorising recourse to the negotiated procedure for the purchase of those helicopters.

29 The Italian Republic relies, in addition, on Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/36.

30 At the outset, it must be pointed out that the requirement to impose an obligation of confidentiality in no way prevents the use of a competitive tendering procedure for the award of a contract (Commission v Italy, paragraph 52).

31 Therefore, resort to Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/36 to justify national legislation authorising the purchase of the helicopters in question by the negotiated procedure appears disproportionate as regards the objective of preventing the disclosure of sensitive information relating to their production. The Italian Republic has not shown that such an objective was unattainable within a competitive tendering procedure such as that specified by the same directive (see Commission v Italy, paragraph 53).

32 It follows that, in the present case, the mere fact of stating that the supplies at issue are declared secret, that they are accompanied by special security measures or that it is necessary to exclude them from the Community rules in order to protect the essential interests of State security cannot suffice to prove that the exceptional circumstances justifying the derogations provided for in Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/36 actually exist.

33 Consequently, Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/36 cannot properly be invoked by the Italian Republic to justify national legislation authorising recourse to the negotiated procedure for the purchase of those helicopters.

34 Having regard to all of the foregoing, it must be held that by adopting the Ministerial Decree authorising the derogation from the Community rules on public supply contracts in respect of the purchase of light helicopters for the use of police forces and the national fire service, without any of the conditions capable of justifying that derogation having been satisfied, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 93/36, and in particular under Articles 2(1)(b), 6 and 9 thereof.

Costs

35 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. As the Commission applied for costs against the Italian Republic and as the Italian Republic has been unsuccessful, the latter must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that by adopting Decree No 558/A/04/03/RR of the Minister for the Interior of 11 July 2003, authorising the derogation from the Community rules on public supply contracts in respect of the purchase of light helicopters for the use of police forces and the national fire service, without any of the conditions capable of justifying that derogation having been satisfied, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, and in particular under Articles 2(1)(b), 6 and 9 thereof;

2. Orders the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

Commission des Communautés européennes

contre

République italienne

«Manquement d'État — Marchés publics de fournitures — Directive 93/36/CEE — Attribution de marchés publics sans publication d'un avis préalable — Hélicoptères légers pour la police et le corps national des pompiers»

Sommaire de l'arrêt

Rapprochement des législations — Procédures de passation des marchés publics de fournitures — Directive 93/36 — Dérogations aux règles communes — Interprétation stricte — Protection des intérêts essentiels de la sécurité d'un État membre
(Art. 296, § 1, b), CE; directive du Conseil 93/36, art. 2, § 1, b), 3, 6 et 9) Manque aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de la directive 93/36, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de fournitures, et notamment des articles 2, paragraphe 1, sous b), 6 et 9 de celle-ci, un État membre qui a adopté une réglementation nationale autorisant une dérogation à la réglementation communautaire en matière de marchés publics de fournitures pour l'achat d'hélicoptères légers destinés aux besoins des forces de police et du corps national des pompiers, sans qu'aucune des conditions susceptibles de justifier une telle dérogation soit remplie.

En effet, en ce qui concerne les exigences légitimes d'intérêt national prévues par l'article 296, paragraphe 1, sous b), CE, tout État membre peut prendre les mesures qu'il estime nécessaires à la protection des intérêts essentiels de sa sécurité et qui se rapportent à la production ou au commerce d'armes, de munitions et de matériel de guerre, à la condition toutefois que ces mesures n'altèrent pas les conditions de la concurrence dans le marché commun en ce qui concerne les produits non destinés à des fins spécifiquement militaires.

Il ressort du libellé de ladite disposition que les produits en cause doivent être destinés à des fins spécifiquement militaires. Il en résulte que l'achat d'équipements, dont l'utilisation à des fins militaires est peu certaine, doit nécessairement respecter les règles de passation des marchés publics. Or, lorsqu'il est constant que la réglementation nationale vise des hélicoptères dont la vocation civile est certaine alors que leur finalité militaire n'est qu'éventuelle, l'article 296, paragraphe 1, sous b), CE, auquel renvoie l'article 3 de la directive 93/36, ne saurait utilement être invoqué par l'État membre concerné pour justifier une réglementation nationale autorisant le recours à la procédure négociée pour l'achat desdits hélicoptères.

En outre, le recours à l'article 2, paragraphe 1, sous b), de la directive 93/36 pour l'achat des hélicoptères en question apparaît disproportionné au regard de l'objectif consistant à empêcher la divulgation d'informations sensibles relatives à la production de ceux-ci dans la mesure où l'État membre concerné n'a pas démontré qu'un tel objectif n'aurait pas pu être atteint dans le cadre d'une mise en concurrence telle que prévue par la même directive. Il s'ensuit que le simple fait d'affirmer que les fournitures en cause sont déclarées secrètes, qu'elles sont accompagnées de mesures spéciales de sécurité ou qu'il est nécessaire de les soustraire aux règles communautaires pour protéger les intérêts essentiels de sécurité de l'État ne saurait suffire à établir que les circonstances exceptionnelles justifiant les dérogations prévues à l'article 2, paragraphe 1, sous b), de la directive 93/36 existent effectivement.

Re:

Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) - Failure to establish the existence of grounds capable of allowing a contracting authority to have recourse to the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice - Light helicopters acquired for the use of the police and fire service

Operative part of the judgment

The Court:

1. Declares that by adopting Decree No 558/A/04/03/RR of the Minister for the Interior of 11 July 2003, authorising the derogation from the Community rules on public supply contracts in respect of the purchase of light helicopters for the use of police forces and the national fire service, without any of the conditions capable of justifying that derogation having been satisfied, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, and in particular under Articles 2(1)(b), 6 and 9 thereof;

Action brought on 23 March 2006 - Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic

(Case C-157/06)

Language of the case: Italian

Parties

Applicant: Commission of the European Communities (represented by: X. Lewis and D. Recchia, Agents)

Defendant: Italian Republic

Form of order sought

Declaration that, by adopting Decree No 558/A/04/03/RR of the Minister for the Interior of 11 July 2003, authorising the derogation from Community rules on public supply contracts in respect of the procurement of light helicopters for the use of police forces and the national fire service, without any of the conditions capable of justifying that derogation having been satisfied, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the combined provisions of Articles 2(1)(b), 6 and 9 of Directive 93/36/EEC; [1]

Order requiring the Italian Republic to pay the costs of the proceedings.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The Commission of the European Communities brought an action on 23 March 2006 in which it seeks a declaration that, by adopting the Decree of the Minister for the Interior of 11 July 2003 authorising the derogation from Community rules on public supply contracts in respect of the procurement of light helicopters for the use of police forces and the national fire service, without any of the conditions capable of justifying such a derogation having been satisfied, the Italian Republic has failed in its obligations under Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, and in particular under Article 2(1)(b), in conjunction with Articles 6 and 9, thereof.

The Commission became aware of the existence of the aforementioned decree of the Minister for the Interior while preparing other infringement proceedings. The Commission submits that this decree is at variance with the above directive on public supply contracts in so far as none of the conditions set out in Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/36/EEC which, if met, may allow that directive not to be applied - that is to say, in the case of contracts which are declared secret or the execution of which must be accompanied by special security measures, or where the protection of the basic interests of the State's security so requires - has been satisfied.

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

The fundamental rules of the EC Treaty on freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services and the general principle of non-discrimination preclude national legislation which, with regard to contracts with a value below the threshold set by Article 6(1)(a) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997, which are of certain cross-border interest, imposes an absolute duty on the contracting authorities, where the number of valid tenders is greater than five, automatically to exclude tenders considered to be abnormally low in relation to the goods, works or services according to a mathematical criterion laid down by that legislation without allowing those contracting authorities any possibility of verifying the constituent elements of those tenders by requesting the tenderers concerned to provide details of those elements. That would not be the case if national or local legislation or even the contracting authorities concerned were to set a reasonable threshold above which abnormally low tenders were automatically excluded on account of there being an unduly large number of tenders, which might oblige the contracting authorities to examine on an inter partes basis such a high number of bids that it would exceed their administrative capacity or might, due to the delay which such an examination would entail, jeopardise the implementation of the project.

1. These references for a preliminary ruling concern the interpretation of Article 30(4) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1) (Directive 93/97'), and fundamental principles of Community law concerning the award of public contracts.

2. The references were made in proceedings between, first, SECAP SpA (SECAP') and, secondly, Santorso Soc. coop arl (Santorso') and the Comune di Torino concerning the compatibility with Community law of a requirement laid down in Italian legislation concerning public works contracts having a value lower than the threshold laid down in Directive 93/37 that tenders considered to be abnormally low are to be automatically excluded.

Legal context

Community legislation

3. Pursuant to Article 6(1)(a) thereof, Directive 93/37 applies to ... public works contracts whose estimated value net of value added tax (VAT) is not less than the equivalent in [euros] of 5 000 000 special drawing rights (SDRs)'.

4. Article 30 of Directive 93/37, which forms part of Title IV of the directive entitled Common Rules on Participation', Chapter 3 of which is concerned with the criteria for the award of contracts, provides as follows:

1. The criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) either the lowest price only;

(b) or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract: e.g. price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit.

...

4. If, for a given contract, tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request, in writing, details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received.

The contracting authority may take into consideration explanations which are justified on objective grounds including the economy of the construction method, or the technical solution chosen, or the exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer for the execution of the work, or the originality of the work proposed by the tenderer.

If the documents relating to the contract provide for its award at the lowest price tendered, the contracting authority must communicate to the Commission the rejection of tenders which it considers to be too low.

5. The content of Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 is reiterated and developed in Article 55, entitled Abnormally low tenders', of Directive 2004/18EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114). The purpose of that directive, as set out in recital 1 of its preamble, was a recasting within a single measure of the directives which applied to the procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts and, under Article 80(1), the date for transposition of that directive into the legal systems of the Member States was to be no later than 31 January 2006.

6. The reason for which tenders which appear to be abnormally low in relation to the goods, works or services are not automatically excluded is apparent from the first paragraph of recital 46 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18, which states that [c]ontracts should be awarded on the basis of objective criteria... which guarantee that tenders are assessed in conditions of effective competition. As a result, it is appropriate to allow the application of two award criteria only: the lowest price and the most economically advantageous tender. Those two award criteria are referred to in Article 30(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 93/37 and Article 53(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 2004/18.

National legislation

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

7. Directive 93/37 was transposed into Italian law by Law No 109, Framework Law on public works (Legge Quadro in materia di lavori pubblici) of 11 February 1994 (GURI No 41 of 19 February 1994, ordinary supplement).

8. Article 21(1)(a) of that law, in the version applicable to the disputes in the main proceedings (Law No 109/94'), is worded as follows:

In cases of awards of contracts for works to a value equivalent in euros to 5 000 000 SDRs or above on the basis of the lowest-bid criterion mentioned in paragraph 1, the authority concerned must assess the irregular nature of the tenders referred to in Article 30 of ... Directive 93/37... in relation to all tenders undercutting the indicative price to an extent equal to or greater than the arithmetical mean of the percentage discounts of all the tenders admitted, excluding 10%, rounded up to the nearest digit, of those offering the highest and lowest discounts respectively, increased by the arithmetical mean of the difference in the percentage discounts which are in excess of the said mean.

Tenders must be accompanied, when submitted, by explanations concerning the most significant price components, indicated in the tender notices or the letters of invitation, which together add up to not less than 75% of the basic contract value. The tender notice or letter of invitation must specify the manner in which explanations are to be submitted but must also state which explanations may be necessary in order for tenders to be admitted. Explanations are not required for elements for which minimum values may be ascertained from official data. If, upon examination, the explanations requested and provided are insufficient for the possibility that the tender contains inconsistencies to be excluded, the tenderer shall be requested to supplement the supporting documentation and the decision whether to exclude the tender may be taken only after further verification, it being possible for arguments to be exchanged.

For public works contracts with a value below the Community threshold only, the authority concerned shall automatically exclude tenders having a percentage discount equal to or greater than the percentage referred to in the first subparagraph. The automatic exclusion procedure shall not apply if the number of valid tenders is lower than five.'

The actions in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

9. SECAP took part in a competitive tender procedure announced by the Comune di Torino in December 2002 for a public works contract with an estimated value of EUR 4 699 999. At the time of that call for tenders, the threshold for the application of Directive 93/37 was set, in accordance with Article 6(1)(a) thereof, at EUR 6 242 028. Santorso took part in a similar tender procedure, announced in September 2004, for a contract with an estimated value of EUR 5 172 579. At that time, the threshold for the application of Directive 93/37 was EUR 5 923 624. Consequently, in both cases the estimated value of the contracts in question was below the relevant thresholds for the application of Directive 93/37.

10. The notices by which the Comune di Torino announced those tendering procedures stated that the contract was to be awarded on the basis of the lowest price criterion and abnormally low tenders were to be verified and not automatically excluded. Those notices were based on a decision of the Giunta Comunale (the Municipal Council) that the criterion of awarding the contracts at the lowest price entailed verification of anomalous' tenders in accordance with Directive 93/37, even in the case of tenders for contracts with a value below the Community threshold, and Article 21(1)(a) of Law No 109/94 was not to apply in so far as it provided for the automatic exclusion of abnormally low tenders.

11. At the end of the evaluation process, the bids of SECAP and Santorso emerged as the first of the tenders that were not considered to be anomalous'. After verifying abnormally low tenders, the Comune di Torino finally rejected SECAP's and Santorso's bids in favour of tenders submitted by other companies.

12. SECAP and Santorso challenged that decision before the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale di Piemonte (Regional Administrative Court, Piedmont), arguing that Law No 109/94 obliges the contracting authority automatically to exclude abnormally low tenders, allowing no discretion for the application of an inter partes verification procedure.

13. By decisions of 11 October 2004 and 30 April 2005, that court rejected the actions brought by SECAP and Santorso respectively on the ground that the contracting authorities are not under any obligation automatically to exclude abnormally low tenders but have the option to call for the verification of any anomalies arising from the fact that such tenders are low, which extends to contracts below the Community threshold.

14. SECAP and Santorso appealed against those judgments before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State). The latter concurred with the view of those companies that the rule requiring the automatic exclusion of abnormally low tenders is mandatory but, nevertheless, did not totally dismiss the arguments put forward by the Comune di Torino, which, relying on statistical data, stated that, due to its extreme inflexibility, that rule encouraged undertakings to collude in agreeing on prices in order to influence the outcome of the tendering procedure, thus adversely affecting both the contracting authority and the other tenderers, the vast majority of whom are undertakings established in another Member State.

15. The Consiglio di Stato refers to the case-law of the Court according to which, with regard to contracts falling outside the scope of directives on public contracts on account of their subject-matter, the contracting authorities are bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the EC Treaty, in particular the principle of non-discrimination on the ground of nationality (see, in particular, Case C324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress [2000] ECR I10745, paragraph 60), and to the case-law which prohibits Member States from introducing provisions which require the automatic exclusion from procedures for the award of public works contracts above the Community threshold of certain tenders determined according to a mathematical criterion, instead of obliging the awarding authority to apply the examination procedure laid down in Community rules (see, in particular, Case 103/88 Costanzo [1989] ECR 1839, paragraph 19).

16. Having regard to those considerations and since it has doubts concerning the answer to be given to the question whether the rule on the verification of abnormally low tenders may be classified as a fundamental principle of Community law capable of setting aside any conflicting provisions of national law, the Consiglio di Stato decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following questions, which are worded in exactly the same manner in both Case C147/06 and Case C148/06, to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Does the rule laid down in Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37... or the similar rule contained in Article 55(1) and (2) of Directive 2004/18 ... (in cases where that is the relevant provision), that, where tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request, in writing, details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received, constitute a fundamental principle of Community law?

(2) If the answer to the preceding question is in the negative: Is the rule established by Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37... or the similar rule contained in Article 55(1) and (2) of Directive 2004/18 ... (in cases where that is the relevant provision), according to which, if tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request, in writing, details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received, while not presenting the characteristics of a fundamental principle of Community law, nevertheless an implied consequence of or a principle deriving from the principle of competition, considered in conjunction with the principles of administrative tra nsparency and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and is it therefore, as such, directly binding, taking precedence over possibly incompatible national provisions adopted by the Member States to regulate public works contracts to which Community law is not directly applicable?'

17. By order of the President of the Court of 10 May 2006, Cases C-147/06 and C-148/06 were joined for the purposes of the written and oral procedure and of the judgment.

The questions

18. By its questions, which it is appropriate to consider together, the Consiglio di Stato asks, in essence, whether the fundamental principles of Community law governing the award of public contracts, to which Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 gives specific expression, preclude national legislation which, with regard to contracts with a value below the threshold set in Article 6(1)(a) of that directive, obliges contracting authorities, where the number of valid tenders is greater than five, automatically to exclude tenders considered to be abnormally low in relation to the goods, works or services according to a mathematical criterion laid down by that legislation, without allowing those contracting authorities any possibility of verifying the constituent elements of those tenders by requesting the tenderers concerned to provide details of those elements.

19. The strict special procedures prescribed by the Community directives coordinating public procurement procedures apply only to contracts whose value exceeds a threshold expressly laid down in each of those directives (order in Case C59/00 Vestergaard [2001] ECR I9505, paragraph 19). Accordingly, the rules in those directives do not apply to contracts with a value below the threshold set by those directives (see, to that effect, Case C412/04 Commission v Italy [2008] ECR I0000, paragraph 65).

20. That does not mean, however, that contracts below the threshold are excluded from the scope of Community law (order in Vestergaard , paragraph 19). According to the established case-law of the Court concerning the award of contracts which, on account of their value, are not subject to the procedures laid down by Community rules, the contracting authorities are nonetheless bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the Treaty and the principle of non-discrimination on the ground of nationality in particular (Telaustria and Telefonadress , paragraph 60; the order in Vestergaard , paragraphs 20 and 21; Case C264/03 Commission v France [2005] ECR I8831, paragraph 32; and Case C6/05 Medipac-Kazantzidis [2007] ECR I4557, paragraph 33).

21. However, according to the case-law of the Court, the application of the fundamental rules and general principles of the Treaty to procedures for the award of contracts below the threshold for the application of Community directives is based on the premiss that the contracts in question are of certain cross-border interest (see, to that effect, Case C507/03 Commission v Ireland [2007] ECR I0000, paragraph 29, and Commission v Italy , paragraphs 66 and 67).

22. It is in the light of those considerations that national legislation such as that at issue in the main proceedings must be examined.

23. It is apparent from the documents submitted to the Court that that legislation obliges the contracting authority concerned, when awarding contracts with a value below the threshold laid down in Article 6(1)(a) of Directive 93/37, automatically to exclude tenders which, according to a mathematical criterion laid down by that legislation, are considered to be abnormally low in relation to the goods, works or services, the only exception to that rule of automatic exclusion being that it does not apply if the number of valid tenders is lower than five.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

24. Consequently, that rule, which is formulated in clear, imperative and absolute terms, deprives tenderers who have submitted abnormally low bids of the opportunity to demonstrate that those bids are viable and genuine. That aspect of the legislation at issue in the main proceedings could have consequences incompatible with Community law if, in view of its particular characteristics, a given contract is likely to be of certain cross-border interest and therefore attract operators from other Member States. A works contract could, for example, be of such cross-border interest because of its estimated value in conjunction with its technical complexity or the fact that the works are to be located in a place which is likely to attract the interest of foreign operators.

25. As the Advocate General pointed out at points 45 and 46 of his Opinion, although objective and not in itself discriminatory, such legislation could undermine the general principle of non-discrimination in procurement procedures which are of cross-border interest.

26. Indeed, the application of the rule requiring the automatic exclusion of tenders considered to be abnormally low to contracts of certain cross-border interest may constitute indirect discrimination since, in practice, it places at a disadvantage operators from other Member States which, as they have different cost structures, may benefit from significant economies of scale or, intending to cut their profit margins in order to enter the market in question more effectively, would be in a position to make a bid that was competitive and at the same time genuine and viable but which the contracting authority would not be able to consider as a result of that legislation.

27. In addition, as stated by the Comune di Torino and the Advocate General at points 43, 46 and 47 of his Opinion, such legislation could give rise to anti-competitive conduct and agreements, namely collusion between national or local undertakings intended to secure public works contracts for themselves.

28. Accordingly, the application of the rule requiring the automatic exclusion of abnormally low tenders to contracts of certain cross-border interest could deprive economic operators from other Member States of the opportunity of competing more effectively with operators located in the Member State in question and thereby affect their access to the market in that State, thus impeding the exercise of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services, which constitutes a restriction on those freedoms (see, to that effect, Case C-79/01 Payroll and Others [2002] ECR I8923, paragraph 26; Case C442/02 CaixaBank France [2004] ECR I8961, paragraphs 12 and 13; and Case C452/04 Fidium Finanz [2006] ECR I9521, paragraph 46).

29. By applying such legislation to contracts of certain cross-border interest, the contracting authorities, lacking any power to assess the soundness and viability of abnormally low tenders, cannot comply with their obligation to observe the fundamental rules of the Treaty on freedom of movement or the general principle of non-discrimination, as required by the case-law of the Court cited at paragraph 20 above. It is also contrary to the contracting authorities' own interests for them to be deprived of such power, since they are not able to assess tenders which are submitted to them under conditions of effective competition and therefore to award the contract by applying the criteria, which are also laid down in the public interest, of the lowest price or the most economically advantageous tender.

30. It is in principle for the contracting authority concerned to assess whether there may be cross-border interest in a contract whose estimated value is below the threshold laid down by the Community rules, it being understood that that assessment may be subject to judicial review.

31. It is permissible, however, for legislation to lay down objective criteria, at national or local level, indicating that there is certain cross-border interest. Such criteria could be, inter alia, the fact that the contract in question is for a significant amount, in conjunction with the place where the work is to be carried out. The possibility of such an interest may also be excluded in a case, for example, where the economic interest at stake in the contract in question is very modest (see, to that effect, Case C231/03 Coname [2005] ECR I7287, paragraph 20). However, in certain cases, account must be taken of the fact that the borders straddle conurbations which are situated in the territory of different Member States and that, in those circumstances, even low-value contracts may be of certain cross-border interest.

32. Even where there is certain cross-border interest, it may be acceptable automatically to exclude some tenders on account of their being abnormally low if recourse to that rule is justified by the unduly large number of tenders, a fact which might oblige the contracting authority concerned to examine on an inter partes basis such a high number of bids that it would exceed the administrative capacity of those authorities or might, due to the delay which such an examination would entail, jeopardise the implementation of the project.

33. In such circumstances, national or local legislation or even the contracting authorities themselves would be entitled to set a reasonable threshold for the automatic exclusion of abnormally low tenders. However, the threshold of five valid tenders set by the third paragraph of Article 21(1)(a) of Law No 109/94 cannot be regarded as reasonable.

34. As regards the actions in the main proceedings, it is for the referring court to carry out a detailed assessment of all the relevant facts concerning both the contracts in question in order to determine whether, in each case, there is certain cross-border interest.

35. The answer to the questions referred must therefore be that the fundamental rules of the Treaty on freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services and the general principle of non-discrimination preclude national legislation which, with regard to contracts with a value below the threshold set by Article 6(1)(a) of Directive 93/97 which are of certain cross-border interest, imposes an absolute duty on the contracting authorities, where the number of valid tenders is greater than five, automatically to exclude tenders considered to be abnormally low in relation to the goods, works or services according to a mathematical criterion laid down by that legislation without allowing those contracting authorities any possibility of verifying the constituent elements of those tenders by requesting the tenderers concerned to provide details of those elements. That would not be the case if national or local legislation or even the contracting authorities concerned were to set a reasonable threshold above which abnormally low tenders were automatically excluded on account of there being an unduly large number of tenders, which might oblige those contracting authorities to examine on an inter partes basis such a high number of bids that it would exceed their administrative capacity or might, due to the delay which such an examination would entail, jeopardise the implementation of the project.

Costs

36. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer delivered on 27 November 2007. SECAP SpA (C-147/06) and Santorso Soc. coop. arl (C-148/06) v Comune di Torino. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Consiglio di Stato - Italy. Public works contracts - Award of contracts - Abnormally low tenders - Exclusion rules - Works contracts not reaching the thresholds laid down in Directives 93/37/EEC and 2004/18/EC - Obligations upon the contracting authorities deriving from the fundamental principles of Community law. Joined cases C-147/06 and C-148/06.

I - Introduction

1. The Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) of the Italian Republic seeks a ruling from the Court of Justice, pursuant to Article 234 EC, on whether Article 30(4) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (2) transcends that directive and also governs the award of contracts excluded from its scope.

2. The Court interpreted that provision in the judgment in Lombardini and Mantovani , (3) stating that it was essential' that each tenderer suspected of submitting an abnormally low tender should have the opportunity effectively to state his point of view and to supply all relevant explanations (paragraph 53).

3. The object of the present reference is to determine whether that positive right constitutes a general principle of the Community legal system which applies to the award of public contracts regardless of whether those contracts come under the sectoral directives. (4)

4. The Consiglio di Stato has raised that issue in a very specific context, namely that of a national measure which requires the automatic exclusion of abnormally low tenders in procedures for the award of contracts with a value lower than that stated in the directives. In addition to that measure is a practice whereby, in the case of such contracts, certain tenderers may influence the outcome of the tendering procedure by the ruse (5) of colluding to submit similar bids with the aim of creating a particular anomalous threshold and excluding other tenderers.

5. The present reference for a preliminary ruling is, therefore, highly significant since it concerns general principles of Community law while also recognising that the solution may be founded only on Community legal provisions. The Court must have regard to both spheres in order to provide the Italian court with an effective response to enable it to resolve the dispute.

II - The legal framework

A - Community law

6. The freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services are enshrined in Articles 43 EC and 49 EC respectively. Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971, (6) which set in motion the coordination of the laws of the Member States on public procurement, had as its main purpose the simultaneous attainment of those two freedoms, as stated in the first recital. That directive, which applied only to contracts with a value of 1 000 000 units of account or above (eighth recital), provided that the criteria for the award of contracts should be the lowest price or the most economically advantageous tender (Article 29(1)) and, envisaging that there might be abnormally low tenders, provided for the exclusion of such tenders after hearing explanations from the tenderers concerned (Article 29(5)).

7. The Court, interpreting the latter provision, ruled that a tender may be rejected only after the tenderer has been given the opportunity to explain his bid, in other words after an inter-partes examination procedure; automatic rejections are therefore prohibited. (7)

8. Directive 71/305 was amended substantially on a number of occasions; (8) it was therefore appropriate to consolidate that directive and this was effected by Directive 93/37, which was also intended to safeguard freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services (second recital). Applicable to contracts with a value of not less than ECU 5 000 000 (Article 6(1)) and retaining the previous award criteria (Article 30(1)), Directive 93/37 reproduced, with minor amendments, the wording of the former Article 29(5) in Article 30(4):

If, for a given contract, tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request, in writing, details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received.

The contracting authority may take into consideration explanations which are justified on objective grounds including the economy of the construction method, or the technical solution chosen, or the exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer for the execution of the work, or the originality of the work proposed by the tenderer.

If the documents relating to the contract provide for its award at the lowest price tendered, the contracting authority must communicate to the Commission the rejection of tenders which it considers to be too low.

9. Directive 2004/18, which the Member States were required to transpose by 31 January 2006 (Article 80(1)), repealed Directive 93/37 with effect from 31 March 2004 (Articles 82 and 83). When awarding works contracts whose value is at least EUR 5 278 000 (Article 7(c)), (9) a contracting authority has the right to exclude abnormally low tenders following an inter partes verification procedure (Article 55(1) and (2)).

B - The Italian legislation

10. Article 30(4) of Directive 97/37 was transposed into Italian law by Article 21(1)(a) of Law No 109/1994 of 11 February 1994, the framework law on public works, (10) appended to the original text by Article 7 of Law No 216/1995 of 2 June 1995. (11) In accordance with that provision:

In cases of awards of contracts for works to the value of ECU 5 000 000 or above on the basis of the lowest-bid criterion mentioned in paragraph 1, the authority concerned must assess the irregular nature of the tenders referred to in Article 30 of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 in relation to all tenders undercutting the indicative price to an extent equal to or greater than the arithmetical mean of the percentage discounts of all the tenders admitted, excluding 10%, rounded up to the nearest digit, of those offering the highest and lowest discounts respectively, increased by the arithmetical mean of the difference in the percentage discounts which are in excess of the said mean.

For that purpose, the public administration may take account, within 60 days from the submission of tenders, only of explanations based on the economy of the construction method, the technical solutions chosen, or the exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer in question, excluding, in any event, explanations relating to those elements for which minimum values have been set by laws, regulations or administrative provisions, or for which values may be ascertained from official data.

Tenders must be accompanied, when submitted, by explanations concerning the most significant price components, indicated in the tender notice or in the letter of invitation, the total amount of which must not be less than 75% of the basic value of the bid.

For public works contracts with a value below the Community threshold only, the authority concerned shall automatically exclude tenders with a percentage discount equal to or greater than the percentage referred to in the first subparagraph. The automatic exclusion procedure shall not apply if the number of valid tenders is lower than five.' (12)

11. Legislative Decree No 163 of 12 April 2006 (13) transposes Directive 2004/18 into national law. The final subparagraph of Article 21(1)(a) of Law No 109/94 has been removed from the provisions governing abnormally low tenders (Articles 86 to 88).

III - The main proceedings

12. By decision of 28 January 2003, Turin Municipal Council resolved to deprive of all effectiveness pro futuro Article 21(1)(a) of Law No 109/94 in order to prevent the automatic exclusion of abnormally low tenders so that, when awarding municipal contracts, including those below the Community threshold, such tenders would be verified in accordance with the inter partes procedure laid down in Directive 93/37.

13. The Italian undertakings SECAP SpA (Case C147/06) and Santorso Soc. Coop. arl. (Case C148/06) participated in two procurement procedures announced by the Council for the execution of certain works, (14) the value of which did not exceed the Community threshold. The tender notices stipulated the criterion of the lowest price, subject to the verification of anomalous tenders, and stated that there would be no automatic rejection of abnormally low tenders, in accordance with the decision of 28 January 2003. The tenders submitted by the two undertakings emerged as the first of the regular' tenders but, before making a decision, the municipal authorities declared that the tenders which appeared to be anomalous were in fact valid and awarded the contracts to other tenderers.

14. Both undertakings brought actions before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale del Piemonte (Regional Administrative Court, Piedmont), arguing that Article 21(1)(a) of Law No 109/94 requires the automatic exclusion of abnormally low tenders and prohibits public-sector entities from hearing explanations from the tenderers concerned and from examining such tenders before rejecting them. The Tribunale amministrativo regionale del Piemonte did not accept that reasoning and dismissed the actions on the grounds that, in its opinion, Article 21(1)(a) authorises the automatic exclusion of abnormally low tenders but does not make it mandatory, from which it follows that there is nothing to preclude a contracting authority from hearing explanations from tenderers and examining their tenders.

15. The Consiglio di Stato, which is seised of the appeals lodged by the appellants, accepts their arguments and rejects the interpretation of the regional court. However, the Consiglio di Stato is also mindful of the requirements of Community law, which have been invoked by Turin Municipal Council, and has therefore referred the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC:

1) Does the rule laid down in Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37/EEC or the similar rule contained in Article 55(1) and (2) of Directive 2004/18/EC (in cases where that is the relevant provision), that, where tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request, in writing, details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received, constitute a fundamental principle of Community law?

2) If the answer to the preceding question is in the negative: Is the rule established by Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37/CEE or the similar rule contained in Article 55(1) and (2) of Directive 2004/18/EC (in cases where that is the relevant provision), according to which, if tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request, in writing, details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received, while not presenting the characteristics of a fundamental principle of Community law, nevertheless an implied consequence of or a principle deriving from the principle of competition, considered in conjunction with the principles of administrative transparency and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and is it therefore, as such, directly binding, taking precedence over possibly incompatible national provisions adopted by the Member States to regulate public works contracts to which Community law is not directly applicable?'

IV - The procedure before the Court of Justice

16. By order of 10 May 2006, the President of the Court joined the two proceedings, since they share the same subject-matter.

17. The appellant undertakings in the main proceedings, Turin Municipal Council, the Austrian, French, German, Italian, Lithuanian, Netherlands and Slovak Governments and the Commission have submitted written observations which are varied in approach but may be grouped into two categories. The first category supports the position of Turin Municipal Council and includes the observations of Lithuania, Slovakia (15) and the Commission, while the second category comprises the observations of all the other participants in these proceedings, who propose that the questions referred should be answered in the negative. At the hearing on 25 October 2007, oral argument was presented by the representatives of Santorso Soc. coop. arl, the Comune di Torino, the German, Italian and Lithuanian Governments and the Commission.

V - Analysis of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

18. In point of fact, the two questions referred by the Consiglio di Stato may be reduced to a single question, aimed at establishing whether Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37, which requires abnormally low tenders to undergo an inter partes procedure before a decision whether to reject them is taken, applies to contracts falling outside the scope of the directive. In other words, the referring court asks whether, in the case of such contracts, Article 30(4) precludes Member States from providing for the automatic exclusion of that type of tender.

19. It is therefore appropriate to examine the nature of that rule in order to determine whether it is part of primary Community law and thus transcends Directive 93/37.

A - The starting point

20. The analysis may be based on solid foundations, firmly anchored in case-law which I have already examined. (16) Public procurement procedures which, for different reasons (quantitative or conceptual), fall outside the scope of the relevant directives still come within the sphere of the Community legal system, so that its fundamental principles, in particular, the fundamental freedoms of movement, become insurmountable barriers.

21. That view, which is encapsulated in recital 2 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18, (17) is well-established in the annals of the Court. (18) In the judgment in Telaustria and Telefonadress , (19) the Court held that contracting entities are bound to comply with the rules of the Treaty when awarding contracts which are excluded from the scope of the sectoral directives (paragraph 60). (20) That case-law was reiterated in the judgment in HI (paragraph 47) (21) and followed more recently, quite naturally and without reference to the previous cases, in the Coname judgment. (22)

22. Next, in the order in Vestergaard , (23) the Court pointed out that the mere fact that the strict special procedures laid down in those directives are not appropriate in the case of public contracts of small value does not mean that those contracts are not subject to Community law, since they must also comply with the Treaty (paragraphs 19 to 21) (24) if they are of interest to operators established in other Member States. (25) In Case C264/03 Commission v France , (26) the Court took the same view (paragraph 33).

23. The setting of a financial threshold above which contracts are subject to public procurement directives is based on a single premiss, namely that contracts of small value do not attract operators established outside national borders; such contracts are thus devoid of Community implications. However, that rebuttable presumption is open to evidence to the contrary and therefore, as the Commission argues in its written observations, it must be borne in mind that a contract of small value may be of interest to operators in other Member States by reason, for example, of the fact that the place where the contract is to be performed may be close to their own country or because it would be beneficial to their commercial strategy.

24. Accordingly, that quantitative limit clearly serves only as a guideline and it therefore follows that there is nothing to prevent a contract of small value from being of interest in other Member States, giving rise to the factor which triggers the application of Community law and its objectives. Consequently, the procedures for the award of those contracts which, despite their limited interest, have a European dimension, must comply with the principles laid down in the Treaty, subject always to the fact that contracts for values higher than the amounts indicated in the directives must comply with stricter coordinating provisions. (27)

25. One such provision, Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37, which is applicable ratione temporis to the disputes in the main proceedings and is reproduced in Article 55(1) and (2) of Directive 2004/18, prohibits the automatic exclusion of abnormally low tenders. The Consiglio di Stato asks whether that prohibition constitutes a fundamental rule of Community law or whether it is, at the very least, a consequence of the principle of competition, considered in conjunction with the principles of administrative transparency and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality, which must also be complied with when awarding contracts which do not fall within the scope of those directives.

B - Less than a fundamental principle...

26. The concepts of fundamental principle' or fundamental rule', as used in the case-law I have cited, have a very specific meaning. They do not refer to the axiological elements latent in the Treaty, or to any kind of measure adopted to attain its objectives; instead, they fall between those two extremes, in the letter of the primary law where the constituent members' of the Community laid down the objectives they intended to achieve together with the essential means of attaining them. A cursory examination of Articles 2 EC and 3 EC reveals that they relate to the unrestricted movement of persons, goods, services and capital, guaranteed by the corresponding freedoms of movement (Articles 23 EC, 43 EC and 49 EC), as well as to the abolition of all discrimination on grounds of nationality (Article 12 EC), which is a horizontal principle integral to any project to integrate a number of countries.

27. That view, which is similar to the one contained in recital 2 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18, is also discernible in the judgments I have cited. In Telaustria and Telefonadress , the Court invoked the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality (paragraph 60); in HI , the Court referred to the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services (paragraphs 42 and 47); in the order in Vestergaard , the Court relied on the free movement of goods as the ratio decidendi (paragraph 21); while, in Coname , the Court again invoked Articles 43 EC and 49 EC to prohibit indirect discrimination on grounds of nationality.

28. Clearly, the fundamental principles of the Treaty, which are capable of limiting the powers of the Member States in procedures for the award of contracts excluded from the coordinating provisions laid down in the sectoral directives, are the same as the principles referred to in the preambles of those directives, to which the Court has drawn particular attention.

29. Moreover, that should surprise no one since, as recital 2 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 makes clear, the provisions of that directive are founded on those fundamental principles. Indeed,

those directives pursue a limited direct aim, namely the coordination of procedures governed by the sectoral directives with a view to encouraging the development of effective competition in the field of public contracts (28) for the purposes of securing the fundamental freedoms of European integration. More particularly, the aim is to eliminate barriers to freedom of movement and to protect the interests of economic operators in one Member State who wish to sell their goods or services to contracting entities in other Member States. (29)

30. Reversing that perspective, it becomes clear that the aim is twofold: to avoid the risk of preference being given to national tenderers (buy national) and to ensure that the body responsible for awarding the contract is guided by considerations other than economic ones (30) (thus, the essential award criterion is always that of the lowest or most economically advantageous tender).

31. In those circumstances, the first question can only be answered in the negative, since, in a procedure for the award of a public works contract, the automatic exclusion of abnormally low tenders does not run counter to any fundamental principle of the Treaty. Neither the fundamental freedoms nor the prohibition of discrimination require that, in all circumstances and as an absolute rule, a tenderer who submits such a bid must have the opportunity to be heard before a decision is taken on whether to admit his tender.

32. In particular, that is because logic dictates that the principle of effectiveness, which also applies in the field of Community public-procurement law, must operate in this sphere. Finally, the management of public interests necessitates such effectiveness, which, on occasions, is in conflict with the pace of a selection procedure complete with guarantees. (31)

C - ...but more than a mere rule of positive law

1. The implied principles

33. Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 is not a discretionary - perhaps even capricious - provision of the legislature, which has no connection to the real world and might just as well never have existed.

34. I have already pointed out that, in Lombardini and Mantovani , the Court described as essential' the examination procedure for which that measure makes provision. (32) Underlying the use of that adjective is the belief that the inter partes procedure for the verification of abnormally low tenders is vital in order to achieve effective competition in the field of public procurement and to safeguard freedom of movement, which, as I stated in my Opinion in those joined cases, presupposes that tenderers must be able to participate on an equal basis, without any discrimination whatsoever (paragraph 24).

35. The prohibition of discrimination, particularly where it is based on nationality, entails a duty of transparency to ensure that, for the benefit of any potential tenderer, there is a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the market to be opened up to competition and that the impartiality of procurement procedures can be monitored, as the Court declared in Unitron Scandinavia and 3S (paragraphs 31 and 32). (33)

36. In that context, it is reasonable to ask, as does the Consiglio di Stato, whether, since it does not state a fundamental principle of Community law, Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 comprises one of logical consequences of Community law, which have a binding effect on public contracts, regardless of whether they fall within the scope of the directives, if they are of Community interest.

37. In other words, if the automatic exclusion of anomalous tenders is contrary to those consequences, is it appropriate to apply the contested rule to contracts which do not fall within the scope of Directive 93/37?

2. Tenderers and the concept of an abnormally low tender

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

38. The concept of an abnormally low tender is not made up of abstract features; on the contrary, it is defined by reference to the contract to be awarded and to the work involved. (34) It therefore has the characteristics of an indeterminate concept, which at first sight is imprecise but which may clarified by reference to the specific nature of the contract.

39. That aspect is more marked in the Italian system, which defines the concept, having regard to the subject-matter of the contract and to the value of the different bids, by means of a mathematical formula for setting the anomaly threshold.

40. The tenderers who, as a result of advertising, are aware of the contract and its nature, draw up their bids in secret, so that each of them knows only the details of his own bid. In general, in view of the fact that the system gives preference to the lowest tender or the most economically advantageous one, very low bids are submitted with the aim of offering the lowest price, even at the risk of reducing the profits of the undertaking concerned.

41. Accordingly, all parties take the same risk that, once the sealed envelopes are opened, their tender will be treated as anomalous.

42. However, that balance is disrupted where one or more of the tenderers have at their disposal information which is capable of influencing the fixing of the anomaly threshold, thereby removing the essential equality.

3. Concerted practices in the submission of tenders

43. In the light of the facts alleged by Turin Municipal Council, the Consiglio di Stato outlines a scenario, which the Court must bear in mind, whereby the automatic exclusion of excessive discounts, required by Article 21(1)(a) of Law 109/1994, encourages collusive agreements between undertakings in order to influence ex ante the outcome of the selection process.

44. Community law does not remain on t he sidelines when faced with such a situation.

45. It is clear that the automatic exclusion of abnormally low tenders in accordance with the first subparagraph of Article 21(1)(a) is not in itself discriminatory, in view of the objective nature of that provision. In the Opinion in Lombardini and Mantovani , I stated that Italian law implements a mathematical, automatic system for setting the irregularity threshold, which is perfectly in line with the aims of Directive 93/37, allowing the market to establish the threshold, above which a tender may be considered irregular, for each contract. All applicants are on an equal footing and no party has any advantage in submitting its bid (points 33 and 35). Thus, the automatic rejection of anomalous tenders, without giving the parties concerned the opportunity to provide explanations, does not discriminate against anyone.

46. However, the situation is different if, as a result of collusive agreements, a group of undertakings, usually ones operating in the territorial market of the contract, collude with one another to draw up almost identical bids, with only minimal differences between them, so that the bids submitted by competitors who are not party to those agreements are classified as abnormally low and those tenderers have no opportunity to submit explanations or provide evidence of the viability of their bids.

47. Such practices therefore undermine the Community law principles of transparency and fair competition, which are applicable to public contracts, since, where the disadvantaged tenderers are established in other Member States, they must have the opportunity to explain their position if the discrimination prohibited by the Treaty is to be avoided. Turin Municipal Council stated at the hearing in these preliminary-ruling proceedings that, following the decision not to apply the national provision, there was a significant reduction in the number of tenders submitted with the aim of distorting free competition.

48. In short, the principles referred to above require that, in public procurement procedures of Community interest, the contracting authority must take into account, as part of an exchange of views, the contentions of undertakings whose tenders have been classified as abnormally low. Those principles therefore preclude a national provision which, in the case of contracts whose value is below the threshold laid down in the sectoral directives, requires the automatic exclusion of such tenders without allowing the parties to be heard.

4. The right to good administration

49. To the foregoing objective, abstract view, which transcends the individual interests of the undertakings participating in a selection process, another, subjective, view must be added, according to which the rights of those undertakings, in particular, the right not to be deprived of the opportunity to be heard in administrative procedures, are highly important.

50. The right not to be deprived of the opportunity to be heard is expressly provided for in the legal systems of all the Member States and forms part of the right to good administration enshrined in Article 41, under Chapter V on Citizens' Rights, of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. (35) Article 41(2) recognises the right of every person to be heard before any individual measure which would affect him or her adversely is taken.

51. The Charter, whose importance the Court has recently made clear, in particular in the judgments in Parliament v Council (36) and Advocaten voor de Wereld , (37) requires that, before a tenderer is excluded, he must have the opportunity to state his views in order to persuade the contracting authority that his bid is genuine.

52. I agree with the Commission that that right, interpreted in isolation, does not mean that an undertaking which appears to have submitted an irregular bid must always be able to submit explanations, since, in principle, such an undertaking is already protected by the impartial examination of tenders in accordance with predetermined, objective, non-discriminatory criteria. However, a tenderer at risk of being excluded as a result of a collusive agreement between other parties is at a disadvantage, and all the more so if, in addition, he is not permitted to provide explanations.

53. Thus, the right to be heard by the administrative authorities is the basis for arguing against the automatic exclusion of abnormally low tenders, since, as I have indicated, the notion of abnormality' is an indeterminate legal concept which must be substantiated in each case by reference to the particular circumstances of the candidates.

54. Accordingly, the right to good administration militates against the abolition of the inter partes procedure for the verification of tenders before a decision is taken on their merits and this extends to contracts excluded from the scope of the sectoral directives, because it would entail a weakening of the guarantees laid down in what are known as the Remedies Directives. (38)

5. The discretion of the Member States

55. It follows from the foregoing that Community law precludes national legislation under which contracting authorities are bound automatically to reject abnormally low tenders for public contracts excluded from the scope of the directives on the coordination of award procedures. On the contrary, under Community law, such authorities must have the opportunity to decide, depending on the circumstances in each case, whether it is appropriate to allow the candidates to be heard in order to verify, in an inter partes procedure, the composition of their tenders. (39)

56. However, the freedom of action accorded to the Member States means that they are not obliged to take the route provided for in Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 and permits them to establish the manner in which the rights conferred by the Community legal system on individuals are to be protected, subject only to the limitations imposed by the principles of equivalence and effectiveness, namely that the procedures may not be less favourable than those designed for the protection of rights under national law and must be organised in such a way that, in practice, they do not make it difficult or virtually impossible to achieve the aim pursued. (40)

VI - Conclusion

57. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court replies to the Consiglio di Stato of the Italian Republic, in the following manner:

The principles of free competition, administrative transparency and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality, which govern Community public-procurement law, together with the right to good administration preclude national legislation which, with regard to the procedure for the award of public contracts excluded from the directives governing that field, obliges the contracting authority automatically to reject abnormally low tenders without providing for any inter partes verification procedure.'

(3) - Joined Cases C285/99 and C286/99 [2001] ECR I9233.

(4) - In addition to Directive 93/37 on the award of public works contracts, Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1), as subsequently amended by Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), governed the award of public supply contracts. The coordination of the procedures for the award of public service contracts was provided for in Council Directive 92/50/CEE of 18 June 1992 (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1). Those measures (amended by Directive 97/52/EC (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1)) were consolidated and merged in a single provision: Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

(5) - This type of ruse has always existed and, in The Odyssey , translated by E.V. Rieu, revised translation by D.C.H. Rieu, Penguin, London, 1991, Homer recounts numerous examples of the legendary guile of Ulysses, such as the adventure in Book 9 where the hero gets Polyphemus, who is holding him prisoner, drunk and tells him that his name is Nobody. Taking advantage of the drowsiness caused by the wine, Ulysses plunges a red-hot stake made of olive wood into Polyphemus' one eye. Hearing the Cyclops' cries for help, his fellow Cyclopes ask what is happening to him, who is attacking him, to which Polyphemus replies ...it's Nobody's treachery, not violence, that is doing me to death, thus ensuring that they do not come to his aid (p. 120).

(6) - Directive concerning the co-ordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ English special edition: Series I Chapter 1971(II), p. 682).

(7) - That was the finding of the Court in the judgment in Case 103/88 Fratelli Costanzo [1989] ECR 1839, paragraphs 16, 18 and 19, which prohibited the automatic exclusion of tenders determined in accordance with mathematical criteria (point 1 of the operative part). That case-law was reiterated in the judgment in Case C295/89 Donà Alfonso [1991] ECR I2967. Prior to this was the judgment in Case 76/81 Transporoute [1982] ECR 417, paragraph 18.

(15) - Albeit with certain nuances vis-à-vis the stance of Lithuania and Turin Municipal Council in that, when contending that the first question should receive a negative reply, the Slovak Government refuses to dissociate the rule in Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 from the principles laid down in the Treaty, thereby concurring with the decision of the municipal council.

(16) - Opinion in Case C412/04 Commission v Italy (points 44 to 47).

(17) - The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency ...'

(18) - And in those of the Commission, specifically in the Commission interpretative communication on the Community law applicable to contract awards not or not fully subject to the provisions of the Public Procurement Directives (OJ 2006 C 179, p. 2, in particular pp. 5 and 6).

(20) - In that case, Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84), which was replaced by Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1).

(21) - Case C92/00 [2002] ECR I5553. In fact, rather than a contract excluded from one of the directives, that judgment concerned a procedure not provided for in the provision concerned. Under the Treaty, a decision to withdraw an invitation to tender must be subject to a review procedure but that requirement was not reflected in Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 92/50.

(22) - Case C231/03 [2005] ECR I7287. In paragraph 16 of that judgment, the Court recalled that the award of such a concession (for the management of a public gas-distribution service to a company in which there is a majority public holding) is not governed by any of the directives regulating the field of public contracts. In the absence of any such legislation, the consequences in Community law of the award of such concessions must be examined in the light of primary law and, in particular, of the fundamental freedoms provided for by the Treaty. The Court took the same view in its judgments in Case C458/03 Parkíng Brixen [2005] ECR I8585, paragraph 46, and Case C410/04 ANAV [2006] ECR I3303, paragraph 18.

(31) - Point 30 of my Opinion of 5 June 2001 in Lombardini and Mantovani .

(32) - The Court observed in that judgment that it is apparent from the very wording of that provision that the contracting authority is under a duty to identify suspect tenders, to allow the undertakings concerned to demonstrate their genuineness, to assess the merits of the explanations provided, and to take a decision as to whether to admit or reject those tenders (paragraph 55).

(33) - Case C275/98 [1999] ECR I8291. The Court put forward the same view in the judgments in Telaustria and Telefonadress (paragraphs 61 and 62) and Parking Brixen (paragraph 49).

(39) - In Case C247/02 Sintesi [2004] ECR I9215, the Court declared void a national provision which restricted contracting authorities to taking account of a single criterion for the award of public works contracts, thereby depriving them of the possibility of taking into consideration the nature and specific characteristics of such contracts, and of choosing the criterion most likely to ensure free competition and thus the best tender (paragraph 40).

Question(s) referred

Does the rule laid down in Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37/EEC [1] or the similar rule contained in Art. 55 (1) and (2) of Directive 2004/18/EC [2] (in cases where that is the relevant provision), that, where tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request, in writing, details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received, constitute a fundamental principle of Community law?

If the answer to the preceding question is in the negative, is the rule established by Art. 30 (4) of Directive 93/37/EEC or the similar rule contained in Art. 55 (1) and (2) of Directive 2004/18/EC (in cases where that is the relevant provision), according to which, if tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request, in writing, details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received, while not presenting the characteristics of a fundamental principle of Community law, nevertheless an implied consequence of or a principle deriving from the principle of competition, considered in conjunction with the principles of administrative transparency and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and is it therefore, as such, directly binding, taking precedence over possibly incompatible national provisions adopted by the Member States to regulate public works contracts to which Community law is not directly applicable?

Arrêt

1 Par sa requête, la Commission des Communautés européennes demande à la Cour de constater que, la Région de Toscane et les agences sanitaires de cette même région:

– ayant tout d'abord conclu avec la Confederazione delle Misericordie d'Italia, l'Associazione Nazionale Pubbliche Assistenze (comité régional toscan) et la Croce Rossa Italiana (section toscane) l'accord-cadre régional pour la réalisation d'activités de transport sanitaire du 11 octobre 1999, – ayant ensuite prorogé ledit accord-cadre par le protocole d'accord du 28 mars 2003 et, enfin, – ayant conclu le 26 avril 2004, en vertu de la décision n° 379 de l'exécutif régional du 19 avril 2004, un nouvel accord-cadre régional qui, poursuivant les rapports avec les associations susmentionnées, leur confie la gestion des services en cause pour la période allant du 1er janvier 2004 au 31 décembre 2008 (ci-après l'«accord-cadre de 2004»), la République italienne a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de la directive 92/50/CEE du Conseil, du 18 juin 1992, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de services (JO L 209, p. 1), telle que modifiée par l'acte relatif aux conditions d'adhésion à l'Union européenne de la République tchèque, de la République d'Estonie, de la République de Chypre, de la République de Lettonie, de la République de Lituanie, de la République de Hongrie, de la République de Malte, de la République de Pologne, de la République de Slovénie et de la République slovaque, et aux adaptations des traités sur lesquels est fondée l'Union européenne (JO 2003, L 236, p. 33, ci-après la «directive 92/50»), notamment de ses articles 11, 15 et 17.

2 La Commission soutient également que, si la valeur des services attribués à travers les actes en question figurant à l'annexe I B de la directive 92/50 devait s'avérer supérieure à celle des services figurant à l'annexe I A de cette même directive, la conclusion de ces actes par les organismes susmentionnés serait tout de même contraire à l'article 3, paragraphe 2, de ladite directive et à l'article 49 CE relatif à la libre prestation des services.

Le cadre juridique

3 L'article 1er, sous a), de la directive 92/50 prévoit notamment que «les 'marchéspublicsdeservices' sont des contrats à titre onéreux, conclus par écrit entre un prestataire de services et un pouvoir adjudicateur».

4 L'article 3, paragraphes 1 et 2, de cette directive établit:

«1. Pour passer leurs marchés publics de services […], les pouvoirs adjudicateurs appliquent des procédures adaptées aux dispositions de la présente directive.

2. Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs veillent à ce qu'il n'y ait pas de discrimination entre les différents prestataires de services.»

5 Aux termes de l'article 6 de ladite directive:

6 Selon l'article 7, paragraphes 1 et 2, de la directive 92/50:

«1. a) La présente directive s'applique:

– aux marchés publics des services visés à l'article 3 paragraphe 3, aux marchés publics de services ayant pour objet des services figurant à l'annexe I B, des services de la catégorie 8 de l'annexe I A et des services de télécommunications de la catégorie 5 de l'annexe I A, dont les numéros de référence CPC sont 7524, 7525 et 7526, passés par les pouvoirs adjudicateurs visés à l'article 1er [sous] b), lorsque la valeur estimée hors taxe sur la valeur ajoutée (TVA) égale ou dépasse 200 000 [euros],

– aux marchés publics de services ayant pour objet des services figurant à l'annexe I A, à l'exception des services de la catégorie 8 et des services de télécommunications de la catégorie 5, dont les numéros de référence CPC sont 7524, 7525 et 7526:

i) passés par les pouvoirs adjudicateurs désignés à l'annexe I de la directive 93/36/CEE [du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de fournitures (JO L 199, p.1)], lorsque la valeur estimée hors TVA égale ou dépasse l'équivalent en [euros] de 130 000 droits de tirage spéciaux (DTS);

ii) passés par les pouvoirs adjudicateurs désignés à l'article 1er [sous] b) autres que ceux mentionnés à l'annexe I de la directive 93/36[…] et dont la valeur estimée hors TVA égale ou dépasse l'équivalent en [euros] de 200 000 DTS.

[…]

2. Aux fins du calcul du montant estimé d'un marché, le pouvoir adjudicateur inclut la rémunération totale estimée du prestataire de services, compte tenu des dispositions des paragraphes 3 à 7.»

7 L'article 8 de la directive 92/50 dispose:

«Les marchés qui ont pour objet des services figurant à l'annexe I A sont passés conformément aux dispositions des titres III à VI.»

Lesdits titres III à VI comportent les articles 11 à 37 de cette directive.

8 L'article 9 de la directive 92/50 prévoit:

«Les marchés qui ont pour objet des services figurant à l'annexe I B sont passés conformément aux articles 14 et 16.»

9 L'article 10 de cette directive précise:

«Les marchés qui ont pour objet à la fois des services figurant à l'annexe I A et des services figurant à l'annexe I B sont passés conformément aux dispositions des titres III à VI lorsque la valeur des services figurant à l'annexe I A dépasse celle des services figurant à l'annexe I B. Dans les autres cas, le marché est passé conformément aux articles 14 et 16.»

10 L'article 11 de ladite directive énonce:

2. Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent passer leurs marchés publics de services en recourant à une procédure négociée après avoir publié un avis de marché dans les cas suivants:

[…]

3. Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent passer leurs marchés publics de services en recourant à une procédure négociée sans publication préalable d'un avis de marché dans les cas suivants:

[…]

4. Dans tous les autres cas, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs passent leurs marchés de services en recourant à la procédure ouverte ou à la procédure restreinte.»

11 Aux termes de l'article 15, paragraphe 2, de la directive 92/50:

«Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs désireux de passer un marché public de services en recourant à une procédure ouverte, restreinte ou, dans les conditions prévues à l'article 11, à une procédure négociée font connaître leur intention au moyen d'un avis.»

12 L'article 17 de cette directive 92/50 précise:

«1. Les avis sont établis conformément aux modèles qui figurent aux annexes III et IV et précisent les renseignements qui y sont demandés. […]

2. Les avis sont envoyés par le pouvoir adjudicateur dans les meilleurs délais et par les voies les plus appropriées à l'Office des publications officielles des Communautés européennes. […]

4. Les avis visés à l'article 15 paragraphes 2 et 3 sont publiés in extenso au Journal officiel des Communautés européennes et à la banque de données TED, dans la langue originale. Un résumé des éléments importants de chaque avis est publié dans les autres langues officielles des Communautés, seul le texte de la langue originale faisant foi.

[…]»

13 L'annexe I A de la directive 92/50, intitulée «Services au sens de l'article 8», comporte la mention suivante:

«Catégorie	Désignation des services	Numéro de référence CPC
2	Services de transports terrestres […], y compris les services de véhicules blindés et les services de courrier, à l'exclusion des transports de courrier	712 (sauf 71235), 7512, 87304»

14 L'annexe I B de ladite directive, intitulée «Services au sens de l'article 9», comprend la mention suivante:

«Catégorie	Désignation des services	Numéro de référence CPC
25	Services sociaux et sanitaires	93»

15 L'article 1er, paragraphe 5, de la directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services (JO L 134, p. 114), prévoit:

«Un 'accord-cadre' est un accord conclu entre un ou plusieurs pouvoirs adjudicateurs et un ou plusieurs opérateurs économiques ayant pour objet d'établir les termes régissant les marchés à passer au cours d'une période donnée, notamment en ce qui concerne les prix et, le cas échéant, les quantités envisagées.»

16 L'article 32, paragraphes 1 et 2, de cette directive établit:

«1. Les États membres peuvent prévoir la possibilité pour les pouvoirs adjudicateurs de conclure des accords-cadres.

2. Aux fins de la conclusion d'un accord-cadre, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs suivent les règles de procédure visées par la présente directive dans toutes les phases jusqu'à l'attribution des marchés fondés sur cet accord-cadre. Le choix des parties à l'accord-cadre se fait par application des critères d'attribution établis conformément à l'article 53.

Les marchés fondés sur un accord-cadre sont passés selon les procédures prévues aux paragraphes 3 et 4. […]

17 Selon l'article 80, paragraphe 1, de la directive 2004/18:

«Les États membres mettent en vigueur les dispositions législatives, réglementaires et administratives nécessaires pour se conformer à la présente directive au plus tard le 31 janvier 2006. Ils en informent immédiatement la Commission.

[…]»

18 Aux termes de l'article 82 de ladite directive:

«La directive [92/50], à l'exception de son article 41, et les directives 93/36[…] et 93/37/CEE [du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux (JO L 199, p. 54),] sont abrogées, avec effet à partir de la date prévue à l'article 80, sans préjudice des obligations des États membres en ce qui concerne les délais de transposition et d'application figurant à l'annexe XI.

Les faits et la procédure précontentieuse

20 Pendant la période du 1er juillet 1999 au 31 décembre 2002, l'attribution des services de transport sanitaire aux associations concernées a été régie par un accord-cadre régional conclu le 11 octobre 1999. Ce dernier a été prorogé jusqu'à la fin de l'année 2003 par un protocole d'accord daté du 28 mars 2003. Par la décision n° 379, le gouvernement régional de Toscane a approuvé l'accord-cadre de 2004.

21 À la suite d'une plainte, la Commission a adressé à la République italienne, le 9 juillet 2004, une lettre de mise en demeure au sujet de l'attribution des services de transport sanitaire aux associations concernées en vertu des accords susmentionnés. Les autorités italiennes n'ont pas répondu à cette lettre.

22 La Commission a adressé un avis motivé à la République italienne le 22 décembre 2004. Cet État membre a répondu à cet avis par une communication du 16 mars 2005. N'étant pas satisfaite de cette réponse, la Commission a introduit le présent recours.

Sur le recours

Argumentation des parties

23 La Commission estime que les services de transport sanitaire en question constituent des services relevant de la directive 92/50, que la Région de Toscane et les agences sont des pouvoirs adjudicateurs au sens de cette directive, que les accords en question ont été établis par écrit et que lesdits services de transport sanitaire sont rendus à titre onéreux, de sorte que les opérations en cause constituent des marchés publics de services au sens de l'article 1er, sous a), de la directive 92/50.

24 Selon la Commission, les activités de transport sanitaire en question relèveraient à la fois de l'annexe I A, catégorie 2 («Services de transports terrestres […], y compris les services de véhicules blindés et les services de courrier, à l'exclusion des transports de courrier»), et de l'annexe I B, catégorie 25 («Services sociaux et sanitaires»), de la directive 92/50. Conformément à l'article 10 de cette directive, si la valeur des services relevant de ladite annexe I A dépasse celle des services visés à ladite annexe I B, les accords en cause auraient dû être passés conformément aux dispositions des titres III à VI de la directive 92/50. Dans le cas inverse, ces accords auraient dû être conclus conformément aux articles 3, paragraphe 2, 14 et 16 de cette même directive.

25 À titre principal, la Commission estime que la valeur des services de transports terrestres, au sens de l'annexe I A de la directive 92/50, visés par les accords en question, dépasse la valeur des services sociaux et sanitaires, au sens de l'annexe I B de cette directive, visés par ces mêmes accords, et que, par conséquent, ces derniers auraient dû être passés conformément aux dispositions des titres III à VI de ladite directive. Ces dispositions imposeraient notamment la publication d'un avis de marché au Journal officiel de l'Union européenne et, en principe, la passation du marché par voie de procédure ouverte ou restreinte.

26 À titre subsidiaire, dans le cas où la valeur des services sociaux et sanitaires, au sens de l'annexe I B de la directive 92/50, visés par les accords en question, dépasserait la valeur des services de transports terrestres, au sens de l'annexe I A de cette directive, visés par ces accords, la Commission estime que l'article 3, paragraphe 2, de la directive 92/50 ainsi que l'article 49 CE s'appliqueraient, afin que soit imposée au pouvoir adjudicateur l'obligation d'éviter toute discrimination, notamment fondée sur la nationalité, entre les prestataires susceptibles d'être intéressés par l'opération en cause. D'après la jurisprudence de la Cour, le principe de non-discrimination impliquerait une obligation de transparence en vertu de laquelle le pouvoir adjudicateur serait tenu de garantir un degré de publicité adéquat permettant l'ouverture du marché à la concurrence ainsi que le contrôle de l'impartialité des procédures de passation.

27 La République italienne souligne que les associations concernées, chargées des opérations de transport sanitaire, sont des organismes bénévoles qui jouent un rôle important en matière de solidarité et de cohésion dans la société italienne. Tant en raison de leur nature qu'en vertu de la législation nationale applicable, ces associations ne pourraient réaliser de bénéfices au titre des prestations qu'elles effectuent. Les éventuels paiements que lesdites associations recevraient pour les services qu'elles rendent seraient limités aux remboursements des dépenses effectivement engagées pour réaliser l'activité visée. Les accords en cause seraient destinés notamment à encadrer de tels remboursements, sans prévoir une rémunération des associations concernées. Ces dernières, qui ne seraient pas des opérateurs commerciaux, déploieraient leur activité en-dehors du marché et de la sphère de la concurrence. Les arrangements mis en cause par la Commission ne seraient pas réalisés à titre onéreux, au sens de l'article 1er, sous a), de la directive 92/50. Par conséquent, ils ne constitueraient pas des marchés publics de services relevant du champ d'application de cette directive.

28 En outre, les accords en cause ne prévoiraient pas eux-mêmes de prestations ni de remboursements, effets qui ne découleraient que des marchés spécifiques conclus dans le cadre de ces accords. Par conséquent, lesdits accords ne constitueraient pas des marchés publics de services relevant du champ d'application de la directive 92/50.

29 À titre subsidiaire, le gouvernement italien fait valoir que, à supposer même que les accords en question constituent de tels marchés, ils seraient néanmoins exclus du champ d'application de ladite directive en vertu de l'article 6 de celle-ci, en tant que marchés attribués sur la base d'un droit exclusif.

Appréciation de la Cour

30 Il résulte d'une jurisprudence constante que l'existence d'un manquement doit être appréciée en fonction de la situation de l'État membre, telle qu'elle se présentait au terme du délai fixé dans l'avis motivé (arrêt du 27 novembre 2003, Commission/France, C-429/01, Rec. p. I-14355, point 56).

31 En matière de passation des marchés publics, la Cour a jugé qu'un recours en manquement est irrecevable si, à la date d'expiration du délai fixé dans l'avis motivé, le contrat en question avait déjà épuisé tous ses effets (voir arrêt du 2 juin 2005, Commission/Grèce, C-394/02, Rec. p. I-4713, point 18).

32 En l'espèce, le délai fixé dans l'avis motivé est venu à expiration le 22 février 2005. L'accord-cadre régional du 11 octobre 1999 et le protocole d'accord du 28 mars 2003 ayant épuisé leurs effets avant cette date, le présent recours est irrecevable en tant qu'il les concerne. Par conséquent, il y a lieu de prendre en compte, aux fins du présent recours, le seul accord-cadre de 2004.

33 En vertu de ses articles 80 et 82, la directive 2004/18 a abrogé la directive 92/50 avec effet au 31 janvier 2006. La directive 92/50 était donc encore en vigueur au terme du délai fixé en l'espèce dans l'avis motivé. Par conséquent, c'est à la lumière de cette directive qu'il convient d'apprécier l'accord-cadre de 2004.

34 À titre liminaire, se pose la question de savoir si cet accord-cadre présente les caractéristiques d'un marché public au sens de l'article 1er, sous a), de la directive 92/50, à savoir être un contrat à titre onéreux, conclu par écrit entre un prestataire de services et un pouvoir adjudicateur.

35 Le caractère écrit de l'accord-cadre de 2004 n'est pas contesté, non plus que le fait que la Région de Toscane et les agences constituent des pouvoirs adjudicateurs.

36 Tout d'abord, la République italienne conteste que ledit accord-cadre constitue un marché public de services au sens de l'article 1er, sous a), de ladite directive, au motif que les associations concernées ne sont pas des opérateurs commerciaux et qu'elles déploient leur activité en-dehors du marché et de la sphère de la concurrence. Cet argument est fondé sur le fait que ces associations ne poursuivent pas un but lucratif et qu'elles regroupent des personnes motivées par des considérations de solidarité sociale.

37 Sans dénier l'importance sociale des activités bénévoles, force est de constater que cet argument ne peut pas être retenu. En effet, l'absence de but lucratif n'exclut pas que de telles associations exercent une activité économique et constituent des entreprises au sens des dispositions du traité relatives à la concurrence (voir, en ce sens, arrêts du 16 novembre 1995, Fédération française des sociétés d'assurance e.a., C–244/94, Rec. p. I–4013, point 21; du 12 septembre 2000, Pavlov e.a., C–180/98 à C–184/98, Rec. p. I–6451, point 117, et du 16 mars 2004, AOK Bundesverband e.a., C-264/01, C-306/01, C–354/01 et C-355/01, Rec. p. I-2493, point 49).

38 Il convient de rappeler que, selon la jurisprudence de la Cour, des entités telles que des organisations sanitaires assurant la fourniture de services de transport d'urgence et de transport de malades doivent être qualifiées d'entreprises au sens des règles de concurrence prévues par le traité (arrêt du 25 octobre 2001, Ambulanz Glöckner, C–475/99, Rec. p. I–8089, points 21 et 22).

39 Il en résulte que les associations concernées peuvent exercer une activité économique en concurrence avec d'autres opérateurs.

40 La circonstance que, en raison du fait que leurs collaborateurs agissent à titre bénévole, de telles associations sont susceptibles de faire des offres à des prix sensiblement inférieurs à ceux d'autres soumissionnaires ne les empêche pas de participer aux procédures de passation de marchés publics visées par la directive 92/50 (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 7 décembre 2000, ARGE, C–94/99, Rec. p. I–11037, points 32 et 38).

41 Il en résulte que l'accord-cadre de 2004 n'est pas exclu de la notion de «marchés publics de services» au sens de l'article 1er, sous a), de la directive 92/50, en raison du fait que les associations concernées ne poursuivent pas un but lucratif.

42 Ensuite, la République italienne fait valoir que l'accord-cadre de 2004 ne fournit que le cadre des prestations et des remboursements qui sont concrètement prévus par de nombreux marchés spécifiques. Selon cet État membre, aucune opération de transport sanitaire ni aucun remboursement ne serait effectué en vertu de l'accord-cadre de 2004 lui-même. Cette argumentation revient, en substance, à alléguer que cet accord-cadre ne constitue pas un contrat au sens dudit article 1er, sous a).

43 À cet égard, il convient de rappeler que, aux fins de définir le champ d'application des directives en matière de marchés publics, la Cour a consacré une interprétation extensive de la notion de marché public qui englobe les accords-cadres. Selon la Cour, un accord-cadre doit être considéré comme un «marché public» au sens de la directive concernée, dans la mesure où il confère une unité aux divers marchés spécifiques qu'il régit (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 4 mai 1995, Commission/Grèce, C-79/94, Rec. p. I-1071, point 15).

44 Ainsi qu'il ressort de ce dernier arrêt, cette interprétation extensive de la notion de marché public, englobant les accords-cadres, s'impose pour éviter que les opérateurs contournent les obligations établies par les directives en matière de marchés publics. Elle est, d'ailleurs, confirmée, en ce qui concerne les marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services, par les dispositions de la directive 2004/18. Les articles 1er, paragraphe 5, et 32 de cette directive comportent des dispositions spécifiques concernant les accords-cadres qui reposent sur le principe que ces derniers relèvent du champ d'application de la réglementation communautaire en matière de marchés publics.

45 Il en résulte que l'accord-cadre de 2004 doit être considéré comme un contrat au sens de l'article 1er, sous a), de la directive 92/50.

46 Le gouvernement italien conteste enfin que cet accord-cadre ait été conclu à titre onéreux, au motif que les opérations de transport sanitaire en question sont effectuées par des associations bénévoles qui ne perçoivent que les remboursements de leurs frais.

47 Cet argument ne peut non plus être retenu. Il convient de relever que le caractère onéreux d'un contrat se réfère à la contre-prestation à laquelle procède l'autorité publique concernée en raison de l'exécution des prestations de services qui font l'objet du contrat et dont cette autorité aura le bénéfice (voir en ce sens, concernant la directive 93/37, arrêt du 12 juillet 2001, Ordine degli Architetti e.a., C–399/98, Rec. p. I–5409, point 77).

48 Dans le cas d'espèce, s'il est vrai que le travail des personnes qui effectuent les transports sanitaires en question n'est pas rémunéré, il ressort néanmoins des éléments soumis à la Cour que les paiements prévus par les autorités publiques concernées dépassent le simple remboursement des frais encourus pour fournir les services de transport sanitaire en cause. Ces montants sont établis au préalable et de manière forfaitaire, sur la base de tableaux annexés à l'accord-cadre de 2004. Le système décrit dans ces tableaux prévoit le paiement d'une somme fixe pour la mise à disposition (dite «stand-by») d'un véhicule destiné aux interventions, de sommes calculées en fonction des temps d'arrêt marqués au cours des activités de transport, d'une somme fixe pour les transports ne dépassant pas 25 km et de montants additionnels par kilomètre supplémentaire.

50 Dans les circonstances précises de l'espèce, la méthode de paiement prévue par l'accord-cadre de 2004 dépasse donc le simple remboursement des frais encourus. Dans cette mesure, il convient de considérer que cet accord-cadre prévoit une contrepartie des services de transport sanitaire qu'il vise.

51 Par conséquent, l'accord-cadre de 2004 doit être considéré comme ayant été conclu à titre onéreux au sens de l'article 1er, sous a), de la directive 92/50.

52 Il découle de ce qui précède que ledit accord-cadre constitue un marché public de services au sens de cette même disposition.

53 En vertu de son article 7, paragraphe 1, la directive 92/50 ne s'applique qu'aux marchés publics de services dont la valeur estimée hors TVA égale ou dépasse certains montants précisés à cette disposition.

54 Les termes de l'accord-cadre de 2004 ne permettent pas de connaître la valeur, même estimative, de celui-ci. Cet accord-cadre ne fournit qu'un barème de prix unitaires à partir duquel il n'est pas possible d'établir la valeur du marché en cause.

55 À la lumière de l'article 7, paragraphe 2, de la directive 92/50, il convient de considérer que la valeur de l'accord-cadre de 2004 est constituée par la valeur totale des marchés spécifiques qui sont ou seront passés en vertu de celui-ci (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 4 mai 1995, Commission/Grèce, précité, point 15).

56 La Commission soutient que, compte tenu, d'une part, du fait que l'accord-cadre de 2004 couvre, sur le territoire de la Région de Toscane, tous les services de transport sanitaire qui ne sont pas effectués par les agences elles-mêmes et, d'autre part, de la durée pluriannuelle de cet accord-cadre, il est présumé que le seuil d'application de la directive 92/50 de 200 000 euros est atteint.

57 Cependant, il est de jurisprudence constante que, dans le cadre d'une procédure en manquement en vertu de l'article 226 CE, il incombe à la Commission d'établir l'existence du manquement allégué. C'est elle qui doit apporter à la Cour les éléments nécessaires à la vérification par celle-ci de l'existence de ce manquement, sans pouvoir se fonder sur une présomption quelconque (arrêt du 26 avril 2005, Commission/Irlande, C–494/01, Rec. p. I–3331, point 41).

58 La Commission n'a produit aucune preuve relative à la valeur des marchés spécifiques conclus en vertu de l'accord-cadre de 2004.

59 Dans ces conditions, il n'est pas établi que le seuil d'application de la directive 92/50 a été atteint en l'espèce.

60 Il en résulte que le recours n'est pas fondé en ce qu'il est tiré d'une violation de la directive 92/50.

61 À titre subsidiaire, la Commission demande à la Cour de constater que la conclusion de l'accord-cadre de 2004 serait contraire à l'article 49 CE si la valeur des services attribués à travers cet accord-cadre et figurant à l'annexe I B de la directive 92/50 devait s'avérer supérieure à celle des services figurant à l'annexe I A de cette directive.

62 Or, comme cela a été relevé au point 58 du présent arrêt, la Commission n'a fourni aucun élément de preuve quant à la valeur du marché en cause. Il est donc impossible de déterminer la valeur relative des services en cause qui relèvent de l'annexe I A ou de l'annexe I B de la directive 92/50.

63 À supposer que lesdits services relèvent, pour la partie prépondérante de leur valeur, de l'annexe I B de la directive 92/50, il conviendrait, toutefois, de rappeler que, dans la mesure où un marché relatif à un service relevant de cette annexe présente un intérêt transfrontalier certain, l'attribution, en l'absence de toute transparence, de ce marché à une entreprise située dans l'État membre du pouvoir adjudicateur de ce marché est constitutive d'une différence de traitement au détriment des entreprises susceptibles d'être intéressées par ce marché, qui sont situées dans un autre État membre (voir arrêt du 13 novembre 2007, Commission/Irlande, C–507/03, non encore publié au Recueil, point 30 et jurisprudence citée).

64 À moins qu'elle ne se justifie par des circonstances objectives, une telle différence de traitement, qui, en excluant toutes les entreprises situées dans un autre État membre, jouerait principalement au détriment de celles-ci, serait constitutive d'une discrimination indirecte selon la nationalité, interdite en application de l'article 49 CE (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 13 novembre 2007, Commission/Irlande, précité, point 31 et jurisprudence citée).

65 Dans ces conditions, il appartiendrait à la Commission d'établir que, nonobstant le rattachement du marché en cause aux services relevant de l'annexe I B de la directive 92/50, ledit marché présentait, pour une entreprise située dans un État membre autre que celui dont relève le pouvoir adjudicateur concerné, un intérêt certain et que cette dernière, n'ayant pas eu accès aux informations adéquates avant que ce marché ne soit attribué, n'a pu être en mesure de manifester son intérêt pour celui–ci (voir arrêt du 13 novembre 2007, Commission/Irlande, précité, point 32).

66 En l'espèce, ces éléments n'ont pas été rapportés par la Commission. En effet, la simple indication, par celle-ci, de l'existence d'une plainte qui lui a été adressée en relation avec le marché en cause ne saurait suffire à démontrer que ledit marché présentait un intérêt transfrontalier certain et, par conséquent, à constater l'existence d'un manquement (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 13 novembre 2007, Commission/Irlande, précité, point 34).

67 Dès lors, il convient de constater que le recours n'est pas fondé en ce qu'il est tiré d'une violation de l'article 49 CE.

68 En conséquence, le recours de la Commission doit être rejeté.

Sur les dépens

69 Aux termes de l'article 69, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure, toute partie qui succombe est condamnée aux dépens, s'il est conclu en ce sens. La République italienne ayant conclu à la condamnation de la Commission et cette dernière ayant succombé en ses moyens, il y a lieu de la condamner aux dépens.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (troisième chambre) déclare et arrête:

1) Le recours est rejeté.

2) La Commission des Communautés européennes est condamnée aux dépens.

Action brought on 28 February 2006 - Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic

(Case C-119/06)

Language of the case: Italian

Parties

Applicant: Commission of the European Communities (represented by: X. Lewis, acting as Agent, and M. Mollica, Avvocato)

Defendant: Italian Republic

Form of order sought

A Declaration that, as the region of Tuscany and the Tuscan Aziende Sanitarie (public health authorities) concluded the regional framework agreement for the supply of healthcare transport services on 11 October 1999 with the Confederazione delle Misericordie d'Italia, ANPAS - the Tuscan regional committee and the Croce Rossa Italiana - Tuscan division, and subsequently extended that framework agreement by means of a memorandum of understanding on 28 March 2003 and, finally, in April 2004, on the basis of Regional Decision No 379 of 19 April 2004, concluded a new regional framework agreement maintaining the relationship with the above-mentioned organisations and entrusting the administration of the services in question to them for the period from January 2004 to December 2008, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC[1] of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts and, in particular, Articles 11, 15 and 17 thereof.

An order that the Italian Republic should pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The Commission maintains that the above-mentioned agreements delegating the supply of services in question constitute public service contracts which were awarded directly, without recourse to any form of tendering procedure, and thus in breach of Community law on public contracts.

Question(s) referred

Does the rule laid down in Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37/EEC [1] or the similar rule contained in Art. 55 (1) and (2) of Directive 2004/18/EC [2] (in cases where that is the relevant provision), that, where tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request, in writing, details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received, constitute a fundamental principle of Community law?

If the answer to the preceding question is in the negative, is the rule established by Art. 30 (4) of Directive 93/37/EEC or the similar rule contained in Art. 55 (1) and (2) of Directive 2004/18/EC (in cases where that is the relevant provision), according to which, if tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request, in writing, details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received, while not presenting the characteristics of a fundamental principle of Community law, nevertheless an implied consequence of or a principle deriving from the principle of competition, considered in conjunction with the principles of administrative transparency and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and is it therefore, as such, directly binding, taking precedence over possibly incompatible national provisions adopted by the Member States to regulate public works contracts to which Community law is not directly applicable?

THE COURT (First Chamber), composed of P. Jann, President of the Chamber, A. Tizzano (Rapporteur), R. Schintgen, A. Borg Barthet and E. Levits, Judges, Advocate General: J. Mazak,

Registrar: M. Ferreira, Principal Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 5 July 2007, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 9 October 2007,

gives the following

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that, by failing to repeal Decree-Law No 48 051 of 21 November 1967, making the award of damages to persons injured by a breach of Community law relating to public contracts, or the national laws implementing it, conditional on proof of fault or fraud, the Portuguese Republic has failed to adopt the measures necessary to comply with the judgment of 14 October 2004 in Case C275/03 Commission v Portugal and has thereby failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 228(1) EC;

2. Orders the Portuguese Republic to pay to the Commission of the European Communities, into the account European Community own resources', a penalty payment of EUR 19 392 for every day of delay in implementing the measures necessary to comply with the judgment in Case C275/03 Commission v Portugal , from the day on which the Court of Justice delivers judgment in the present case until the day on which the judgment in Case C275/03 Commission v Portugal is complied with;

3. Orders the Portuguese Republic to pay the costs.

1. By its application the Commission of the European Communities claims that the Court should:

- declare that, by having failed to take the measures necessary to comply with the judgment of 14 October 2004 in Case C-275/03 Commission v Portugal , not published in the ECR, the Portuguese Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 228(1) EC;

- order the Portuguese Republic to pay to the Commission, into the account European Community own resources', a penalty payment of EUR 21 450 for every day of delay in complying with the judgment in Commission v Portugal , from the day on which the Court of Justice delivers judgment in the present case until the day on which the judgment in Commission v Portugal is complied with;

- order the Portuguese Republic to pay the costs.

Legal framework

2. The third, fourth and sixth recitals in the preamble to Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33) state the following:

Whereas the opening-up of public procurement to Community competition necessitates a substantial increase in the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination; whereas, for it to have tangible effects, effective and rapid remedies must be available in the case of infringements of Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law;

Whereas in certain Member States the absence of effective remedies or inadequacy of existing remedies deter Community undertakings from submitting tenders in the Member State in which the contracting authority is established; whereas, therefore, the Member States concerned must remedy this situation;

Whereas it is necessary to ensure that adequate procedures exist in all the Member States to permit the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully and compensation of persons harmed by an infringement.'

3. Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 states:

The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC and 77/62/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible... on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.'

4. Pursuant to Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665:

The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement'.

Background to the dispute

The judgment in Commission v Portugal

5. In point 1 of the operative part of the judgment in Commission v Portugal the Court declared that:

By failing to repeal... Decree-Law No 48 051 of 21 November 1967, making the award of damages to persons harmed by a breach of Community law relating to public contracts, or the national laws implementing it, conditional on proof of fault or fraud, the Portuguese Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 1(1) and Article 2(1)(c) of ... Directive 89/665...'

Prelitigation procedure

6. By letter of 4 November 2004 the Commission requested the Portuguese Republic to inform it of the measures which it had adopted or which it intended to adopt in order to amend its domestic law and, thus, to comply with the judgment in Commission v Portugal.

7. In its reply of 19 November 2004 the Portuguese Republic claimed, in essence, that a recent change of government had led to a delay in the adoption of the measures necessary to comply with the judgment in Commission v Portugal. That Member State also sent the Commission a draft law repealing DecreeLaw No 48 051 and laying down new legal rules governing the non-contractual liability of the Portuguese State and the other public bodies concerned, while requesting the Commission to indicate whether it considered that the draft law would ensure the correct and complete transposition of Directive 89/665.

8. On 21 March 2005, the Commission sent a formal letter of notice to the Portuguese authorities in which it informed them, first, that the changes in government which had taken place did not, in accordance with the case-law of the Court, justify the failure to comply with the obligations and the time-limits laid down in Directive 89/665. Second, the Commission stated in that letter that the draft law - which had not, moreover, yet been approved by the Assembleia da Republica (Parliament) - did not, in any event, comply with Directive 89/665.

9. Dissatisfied with the response provided on 25 May 2005 by the Portuguese Republic, the Commission sent the latter a reasoned opinion on 13 July 2005 in which it stated that, having still failed to take the measures necessary to comply with the judgment in Commission v Portugal , that Member State had failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 228(1) EC. The Commission requested the Portuguese Republic to comply with that reasoned opinion within a time-limit of two months from receipt thereof.

10. In its response of 12 December 2005 to the reasoned opinion, the Portuguese Republic explained that draft law No 56/X of 7 December 2005 on the non-contractual liability of the State and other public bodies (draft law No 56/X'), repealing Decree-Law No 48 051, had already been submitted to Parliament for final approval and that it had been requested that it be given priority and dealt with urgently on the agenda of that assembly.

11. Considering that the Portuguese Republic had still not complied with the judgment in Commission v Portugal , on 7 February 2006 the Commission brought the present action.

The alleged failure to fulfil obligations

Arguments of the parties

12. The Commission considers that, since it has not repealed Decree-Law No 48 051, the Portuguese Republic has not taken the measures necessary to ensure compliance with the judgment in Commission v Portugal. In order to comply with that judgment the Portuguese Government has merely adopted draft law No 56/X. However, the latter has not yet been approved by the parliament and its content does not, in any event, ensure the correct and complete transposition of Directive 89/665.

13. The Portuguese Republic submits, by contrast, that the action is unfounded in so far as the body of rules set out in draft law No 56/X, although not yet definitely approved by the parliament, constitutes adequate transposition of the provisions of Directive 89/665 and ensures full compliance with the obligations under the judgment in Commission v Portugal.

14. That Member State submits, in addition, that it has always fully intended' to introduce a body of rules governing the non-contractual liability of public law entities in accordance with the requirements of Directive 89/665, but that the constitutional difficulties involved, the nature and importance of which should, at the very least, mitigate its liability, prevented it from attaining that result.

15. Finally, the Portuguese Republic submits that, in any case, Articles 22 and 271 of its Constitution and the new code of procedure of administrative courts sufficiently ensure compliance with the judgment in Commission v Portugal in so far as they already provide for State liability as a result of damage caused by acts committed by its officials and agents.

Findings of the Court

16. In point 1 of the operative part of the judgment in Commission v Portugal , the Court held that, by failing to repeal Decree-Law No 48 051, the Portuguese Republic had failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 1(1) and Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665.

17. In the context of the present proceedings for failure to comply with obligations, in order to check whether the Portuguese Republic has adopted the measures necessary to comply with the judgment at issue, it needs to be determined whether Decree-Law No 48 051 has been repealed.

18. In that regard, according to settled caselaw, the reference date for assessing whether there has been a failure to fulfil obligations under Article 228 EC is the date of expiry of the period prescribed in the reasoned opinion issued under that provision (see Case C304/02 Commission v France [2005] ECR I6263, paragraph 30; Case C119/04 Commission v Italy [2006] ECR I6885, paragraph 27; and Case C503/04 Commission v Germany [2007] ECR I0000, paragraph 19).

19. In the present case, it is common ground that, on the date of expiry of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion addressed to it on 13 July 2005, the Portuguese Republic had not yet repealed Decree-Law No 48 051.

20. In the light of the above, it must be found that, by failing to adopt the measures necessary to ensure compliance with the judgment in Commission v Portugal , the Portuguese Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 228(1) EC.

21. That finding cannot be called into question by the argument raised by the Portuguese Republic that constitutional difficulties have prevented it from passing a definitive text repealing Decree-Law No 48 051 and, thus, from complying with the judgment in Commission v Portugal .

22. According to settled caselaw, a Member State cannot plead provisions, practices or situations prevailing in its domestic legal order to justify the failure to observe obligations arising under Community law (see Commission v Germany , paragraph 38 and the caselaw cited).

23. Similarly, the argument of the Portuguese Republic that State liability for damage caused by acts committed by its officials and agents is already laid down in other provisions of national law cannot be accepted. As the Court held in paragraph 33 of its judgment in Commission v Portugal , that fact has no bearing on the failure to fulfil obligations constituted by maintaining Decree-Law No 48 051 in force in the national legal system. The existence of such provisions cannot, therefore, ensure compliance with that judgment.

24. Consequently, it must be found that, by failing to repeal Decree-Law No 48 051 making the award of damages to persons harmed by a breach of Community law relating to public contracts, or the national laws implementing it, conditional on proof of fault or fraud, the Portuguese Republic has failed to adopt the measures necessary to comply with the judgment in Commission v Portugal and has thereby failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 228(1) EC.

The financial penalty

Arguments of the parties

25. On the basis of the method of calculation set out in Communication 96/C 242/07 of 21 August 1996 on applying Article [228] of the EC Treaty (OJ 1996 C 242, p. 6; the Communication of 1996'), and Communication 97/C 63/02 of 28 February 1997 concerning the method of calculating the penalty payments provided for pursuant to Article [228] of the EC Treaty (OJ 1997 C 63, p. 2; the Communication of 1997'), the Commission proposes that the Court impose a penalty payment on the Portuguese Republic of EUR 21 450 per day of delay in complying with the judgment in Commission v Portugal , from the day on which the Court of Justice delivers judgment in the present case until the day on which the breach of obligations is brought to an end.

26. The Commission considers that the imposing of a penalty payment constitutes the most appropriate sanction for bringing the breach of obligations to an end as quickly as possible. The amount of that penalty payment is calculated by multiplying a uniform base of EUR 500 by a coefficient of 11 (on a scale of 1 to 20) for the seriousness of the infringement, a coefficient of 1 (on a scale of 1 to 3) for the duration of the infringement and a coefficient of 3.9 calculated on the basis of the Portuguese Republic's gross domestic product and the weighting of the votes which that Member State has in the Council of the European Union, which reflects that Member State's ability to pay.

27. The Portuguese Republic considers that the amount of the penalty payment suggested by the Commission is manifestly disproportionate in the light of the circumstances of the present case and is not consistent with the Court's wellestablished caselaw in the field.

28. The objections raised by that Member State concern two aspects of the methods of calculation of the penalty pay ment in particular. First, the coefficient of 11 for seriousness applied by the Commission is excessive to sanction an alleged partial failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations in the area of public procurement since, in respect of actions for failure to act concerning areas which are more sensitive than the present one, such as public health (Case C387/97 Commission v Greece [2000] ECR I5047) or the environment (Case C278/01 Commission v Spain [2003] ECR I14141), the Commission suggested coefficients for seriousness of 6 and 4 respectively. Consequently, the coefficient for seriousness fixed by the Court in the present case should not exceed 4. Second, in accordance with point 13.3 of the Commission's Communication implementing Article 228 of the EC Treaty (SEC(2005) 1658; the Communication of 2005'), the reference period to be used in these circumstances to assess whether the national legislation at issue is compatible with Directive 89/665 must be calculated on an annual basis and not, as proposed by the Commission, on a daily basis.

29. In addition, the Portuguese Republic submits that, irrespective of the reduction of the amount of that penalty payment and the setting of the frequency of that penalty on an annual basis, the Court should order the suspension of the application of that sanction until the entry into force of draft law No 56/X. That possibility is in fact provided for in point 13.4 of the Communication of 2005, in consideration of which the Court may, in exceptional cases, order the suspension of the penalty payment when a Member State has already adopted the measures necessary to comply with a judgment finding there to be a failure to comply with obligations, but a certain amount of time must inevitably pass before the desired result is achieved. The Portuguese Republic considers that to be the case here.

Findings of the Court

30. Having recognised that the Portuguese Republic has not complied with its judgment in Commission v Portugal , the Court may, pursuant to the third subparagraph of Article 228(2) EC, impose a lump sum or penalty payment on it.

31. In that regard, it should be pointed out that it is for the Court to assess in each case, in the light of the circumstances of the case, the financial penalties to be imposed (Case C304/02 Commission v France , paragraph 86, and Case C177/04 Commission v France [2006] ECR I2461, paragraph 58)

32. In the present case, as pointed out in paragraph 25 of this judgment, the Commission suggests that the Court should impose a penalty payment on the Portuguese Republic.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

33. That suggestion is based on the method of calculation which the Commission defined in its Communications of 1996 and 1997. It should also be made clear that those two communications were replaced by the Communication of 2005 which, pursuant to point 25 thereof, applies to decisions taken by the Commission from 1 January 2006 to refer a matter to the Court of Justice under Article 228 EC.

34. In that regard, it must, first, be pointed out that the Commission's suggestions cannot bind the Court and merely constitute a useful point of reference (see Commission v Greece , paragraph 80, and Commission v Spain , paragraph 41). Similarly, guidelines such as those contained in the communications of the Commission are not binding on the Court but contribute to ensuring that the action brought by that institution is transparent, foreseeable and consistent with legal certainty (see, to that effect, Case C304/02 Commission v France , paragraph 85, and Case C177/04 Commission v France , paragraph 70).

35. The Court has also stated that the order imposing a penalty payment and/or a lump sum is intended to place a defaulting Member State under economic pressure which induces it to put an end to the breach established. The financial penalties imposed must therefore be decided upon according to the degree of persuasion needed in order for the Member State in question to alter its conduct (see, to that effect, Case C304/02 Commission v France , paragraph 91, and Case C177/04 Commission v France , paragraphs 59 and 60).

36. It must be found, in the present case, that, during the hearing at the Court on 5 July 2007, the agent of the Portuguese Republic confirmed that DecreeLaw No 48 051 was still in force on that date.

37. Given that it must be considered that the failure to fulfil obligations at issue was still apparent when the Court examined the facts, it must be found that, as suggested by the Commission, the order imposing a penalty payment on the Portuguese Republic constitutes a means adapted in order to induce that Member State to take the measures necessary to ensure compliance with the judgment in Commission v Portugal (see, to that effect, Case C304/02 Commission v France , paragraph 31; Case C177/04 Commission v France , paragraph 21; and Commission v Italy , paragraph 33).

38. Next, as regards the method of calculation of the amount of such a penalty payment, it is for the Court, in exercising its discretion, to set the penalty payment so that it is appropriate to the circumstances and proportionate both to the breach that has been established and to the ability to pay of the Member State concerned (see, inter alia, Case C304/02 Commission v France , paragraph 103, and Case C177/04 Commission v France , paragraph 61).

39. In that light, the basic criteria which must be taken into account in order to ensure that penalty payments have coercive force and Community law is applied uniformly and effectively are, in principle, the duration of the infringement, its degree of seriousness and the ability of the Member State to pay. In applying those criteria, regard should be had in particular to the effects of failure to comply on private and public interests and to the urgency of inducing the Member State concerned to fulfil its obligations (see, inter alia, Case C304/02 Commission v France , paragraph 104, and Case C177/04 Commission v France , paragraph 62).

40. As regards, first, the seriousness of the infringement and, in particular, the consequences of the failure to comply with the judgment in Commission v Portugal on private and public interests, it should be pointed out that, pursuant to the third recital in the preamble to Directive 89/665, the opening-up of public procurement to Community competition necessitates a substantial increase in the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination. In order for that opening-up to have tangible effects, effective and rapid remedies must be available in the case of infringements of Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

41. To that end, Article 1(1) of that directive requires the Member States to ensure that unlawful decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible, whereas Article 2(1)(c) thereof emphasis the fact that it is important that national procedures be laid down for awarding damages to persons harmed by such an infringement.

42. The failure by the Portuguese Republic to repeal Decree-Law No 48 051, which makes the award of damages to individuals subject to the furnishing of proof of fault or fraud on the part of the Portuguese State or public entities concerned, must be regarded as serious since, although it does not render it impossible for individuals to bring judicial actions, it would appear, none the less, as also pointed out by the Advocate General in paragraph 51 of his Opinion, to render those actions more difficult and costly, so impairing the full effectiveness of the Community's public procurement policy.

43. It must none the less be found that the coefficient of 11 (on a scale of 1 to 20) suggested by the Commission appears, in the present case, to be too severe; a coefficient of 4 would be more suited, by contrast, to the seriousness of the infringement at issue.

44. As regards, second, the coefficient relating to the duration of the infringement, the Commission's suggestion that it be set at 1 cannot be upheld. It is apparent from the documents before the Court that that coefficient was calculated on the basis of the time which elapsed between the date of delivery of the judgment in Commission v Portugal and the date on which the present action was brought.

45. It should be recalled that the duration of the infringement must be assessed by reference to the time when the Court assesses the facts, not the time at which the case is brought before it by the Commission (see, to that effect, Case C177/04 Commission v France , paragraph 71).

46. In the present case, the failure of the Portuguese Republic to comply with the judgment in Commission v Portugal has persisted for more than three years in the light of the considerable period of time which has elapsed since the date of delivery of that judgment, namely 14 October 2004.

47. In those circumstances, a coefficient of 2 (on a scale of 1 to 3) would appear to be more appropriate to take account of the duration of the infringement.

48. As regards, third, the Commission's suggestion of multiplying a basic amount by a coefficient based on the gross domestic product of the Member State concerned and on the number of votes which it has in the Council, that suggestion is an appropriate way, in principle, of reflecting that Member State's ability to pay, while keeping the variation between Member States within a reasonable range (see, to that effect, Commission v Greece , paragraph 88; Commission v Spain , paragraph 59; and Case C304/02 Commission v France , paragraph 109).

49. However, in the present case, the coefficient of 3.9 suggested by the Commission does not adequately reflect the evolution of the factors which are at the basis of the evaluation of the Portuguese Republic's ability to pay, in particular, as regards the growth of its gross domestic product. Therefore, as is apparent from point 18.1 of the Communication of 2005, that coefficient must be raised from 3.9 to 4.04.

50. Similarly, the basic amount to which the multiplier coefficients are applied must be fixed at EUR 600, in accordance with the indexing of the amount of EUR 500 set by the Commission in point 15 of that communication, in order to take account of movements in inflation since the publication of the Communication of 1997.

51. In the light of all the above, the multiplication of the basic amount of EUR 600 by coefficients, set at 4 for the seriousness of the infringement, by 2 for the duration of that infringement, and at 4.04 for the ability to pay of the Member State concerned, amounts, in the present case, to a total of EUR 19 392 per day of delay. That amount must be regarded as adequate in the light of the purposes of the penalty payment as referred to in paragraph 35 above.

52. As regards the frequency of the penalty payment, in a case such as the present one concerning compliance with a judgment of the Court which involves the adoption of a legislative amendment, a penalty imposed on a daily basis should be chosen (see, to that effect, Case C177/04 Commission v France , paragraph 77).

53. Finally, the Portuguese Republic's arguments claiming that it is possible for the Court to order, in the present case, the suspension of the penalty payment within the meaning of point 13.4 of the Communication of 2005 cannot be upheld. Irrespective of the fact that, as was pointed out in paragraph 34 of the present judgment, that communication is not binding on the Court, it is sufficient to point out that, in any event, contrary to what is required in point 13.4 of that communication for such a suspension to be granted, the measures necessary to comply with the judgment in Commission v Portugal have not been adopted.

54. In the light of all of the foregoing, it is necessary to order the Portuguese Republic to pay to the Commission, into the account European Community own resources', a penalty payment of EUR 19 392 for every day of delay in implementing the measures necessary to comply with the judgment in Commission v Portugal , from the day of delivery of judgment in the present case until the day on which the judgment in Commission v Portugal is complied with.

Costs

55. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission has applied for costs and the Portuguese Republic has been unsuccessful in its submissions, the latter must be ordered to pay the costs.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Mazak delivered on 9 October 2007. Commission of the European Communities v Portuguese Republic. Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Judgment of the Court establishing the failure of a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Non-compliance - Financial penalty. Case C-70/06.

I - Introduction

1. The present proceedings were brought by the Commission pursuant to Article 228 EC on 7 February 2006. The Commission claims that the Portuguese Republic has failed to take the necessary measures to comply with the judgment of the Court of 14 October 2004 in Case C275/03 Commission v Portugal (2) and requests that a penalty payment be imposed on Portugal. In that judgment, the Court declared that, by failing to repeal Decree-Law No 48051 of 21 November 1967, making the award of damages to persons injured by a breach of Community law relating to public contracts, or the national laws implementing it, conditional on proof of fault or wilful misconduct, the Portuguese Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 1(1) and Article 2(1)(c) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts. (3)

II - Legal framework

2. Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, as amended, provides that [t]he Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC, and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible...'

3. Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665 provides that [t]he Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.'

4. Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (4) was repealed by Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, (5) which was in turn repealed by Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, with effect from 31 January 2006. (6)

5. Article 81 of Directive 2004/18 provides that [i]n conformity with ... Directive 89/665..., Member States shall ensure implementation of this Directive by effective, available and transparent mechanisms'.

6. The reference in Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 to Directive 71/305 should be read as a reference to Directive 2004/18. (7)

III - Pre-litigation procedure and forms of order sought

7. By letter dated 4 November 2004, the Commission drew the Portuguese authorities' attention to the terms of the judgment in Case C275/03 and the fact that Article 228 EC requires Portugal to take the necessary measures to comply with that judgment. The Commission requested the Portuguese authorities to inform it of the measures taken by 15 January 2005.

8. On 19 November 2004, the Portuguese authorities forwarded to the Commission a copy of a proposed new law on the non-contractual civil liability of the State and other public entities. The Portuguese authorities requested the Commission to indicate whether it considered that the proposed law would ensure the correct and complete transposition of Directive 89/665. In addition, by letter dated 12 January 2005, the Portuguese authorities requested the Commission not to take any action pursuant to Article 228 EC until after the new legislator commences, following the elections of 20 February 2005, in order that the procedure for the adoption of the law on non-contractual liability of the State could be undertaken during the first semester of 2005.

9. On 21 March 2005, the Commission sent a formal letter of notice to the Portuguese authorities in which it informed them that the dissolution of the Portuguese Parliament (Assembleia da Republica Portuguesa) and the holding of elections did not justify the failure by Portugal to comply with its obligations pursuant to Directive 89/665 and the time-limits established by that directive. The Commission also indicated that the proposed law did not, in any event, comply with Directive 89/665. The Commission informed the Portuguese authorities, that given that it had not received any information on the measures taken to comply with the judgment of the Court in Case C275/03, it considered that Portugal had failed to fulfil its obligations pursuant to Article 228(1) EC. The Commission called on Portugal to submit its observations on the matter within two months. It also drew the Portuguese authorities' attention to the fact that the Court can impose monetary sanctions pursuant to Article 228(2) EC. The Commission indicated that it would specify to the Court the amount of the lump sum or penalty payment that the Commission considers should be paid by Portugal in the circumstances.

10. By letter dated 25 May 2005, the Portuguese authorities replied to the Commission's formal letter of notice. Dissatisfied with that response, the Commission issued a reasoned opinion on 13 July 2005 in which it stated that Portugal had failed to take the necessary measures to comply with the judgment of the Court in Case C275/03 and had failed to fulfil its obligations pursuant to Article 228(1) EC. It set a time-limit of two months for the Portuguese Republic to adopt the measures necessary to comply with the judgment in Case C275/03. The Commission also drew Portugal's attention to the fact that if the case were brought before the Court, that the Court could impose monetary sanctions and that the Commission itself would suggest that a lump sum or penalty payment be imposed.

11. In its response to the reasoned opinion dated 12 December 2005, the Portuguese authorities indicated that the proposed law on the non-contractual liability of the State, which inter alia repeals Decree-Law No 48051, had already been submitted to the Portuguese Parliament for final approval. Taking the view that Portuguese Republic had not complied with the judgment of the Court in Case C275/03, the Commission decided to bring the present action.

12. By its application, the Commission requests the Court to:

- declare that, by having failed to take the measures necessary to comply with the judgment of the Court... in Case C275/03..., the Portuguese Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 228(1) of the EC Treaty;

- order the Portuguese Republic to pay to the Commission, into the account European Community own resources, mentioned in Article 9 of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1150/2000, a penalty payment of EUR 21 450 for every day of delay in complying with the judgment in Case C275/03 from the day on which the Court... delivers judgment in the present case until the day on which the judgment in Case C275/03 is complied with;

- order the Portuguese Republic to pay the costs.'

13. The Portuguese Republic contends that the Court should:

1. Dismiss as unfounded all the claims of the Commission, and:

a) consider that the Portuguese Republic has taken all the necessary measures to comply with the judgment of the Court... in Case C275/03, ... and thus, consider as unfounded the first claim of the Commission;

b) dispense the Portuguese Republic of the obligation to pay... a penalty payment of EUR 21 450 for every day of delay in complying with the judgment in Case C275/03 from the day on which the Court delivers judgment in the present case until the day on which the judgment in Case C275/03 is complied with, and thus consider as unfounded the second claim of the Commission.

2. In the alternative, in the event that our position is not accepted - [quod non] - reduce the amount of the penalty payment specified, as that amount is manifestly excessive, and fix the applicable coefficient for seriousness at a level not exceeding 4 (four), fix the payment of the penalty payment on an annual basis and suspend the payment of the penalty payment until the entry into force of the measures adopted in the meantime by the Portuguese State.'

IV - Compliance with the obligation imposed by Article 228(1) EC

A - Arguments of the parties

14. The Commission claims that Portugal has not adopted the necessary measures to comply with the judgment of the Court in Case C275/03 as that Member State has not repealed Decree-Law No 48051. The Commission submits that the proposed law on the non-contractual civil liability of the State and other public bodies, which was placed before the Portuguese Parliament by the Portuguese Government, does not comply with that judgment. Moreover, as no other measures have been communicated to the Commission, it considers that the Portuguese Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 228(1) EC.

15. Portugal considers that proposed Law No 56/X on the non-contractual civil liability of the State and other public entities, which was unanimously adopted by the Portuguese Parliament on 6 April 2006 and which will shortly enter into force correctly transposes Directive 89/665. Portugal also considers that the legal regime adopted by it in the meantime adequately transposes Directive 89/665 and that it thereby wholly complies with the judgment in Case C275/03. In that regard, Portugal submits that Articles 22 and 271 of the Constitution of the Portuguese Republic (CRP) and the new Procedural Code of the Administrative Courts (CPTA) ensure sufficient compliance with the judgment in Case C275/03. Moreover, it claims that the Portuguese courts, in their settled case-law, have recognised that there exists a presumption of fault in relation to the illegal acts of the Administration.

B - Assessment

16. It is for the Commission to provide the Court, in the course of Article 228 EC proceedings, with the information necessary to determine the extent to which a Member State has complied with a judgment declaring it to be in breach of its obligations. Moreover, where the Commission has adduced sufficient evidence to show that the breach of obligations has persisted, it is for the Member State concerned to challenge in substance and in detail the information produced and its consequences. (8)

17. In the operative part of the judgment in Case C275/03, the Court declared that, by failing to repeal Decree-Law No 48051, making the award of damages to persons injured by a breach of Community law relating to public contracts, or the national laws implementing it, conditional on proof of fault or wilful misconduct, the Portuguese Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 1(1) and Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665.

18. Given the terms of the operative part of the judgment in Case C275/03, it is necessary in my view to ascertain, in the context of the present case which concerns a failure to fulfil obligations pursuant to Article 228(1) EC, whether the Portuguese Republic has complied with that judgment and, in particular, whether it has repealed Decree-Law No 48051.

19. The reference date for assessing whether there has been a failure to fulfil obligations under Article 228(1) EC is the date of expiry of the period prescribed in the reasoned opinion issued under that provision. Moreover, since the Commission seeks the imposition of a penalty payment on the Portuguese Republic, it must also be ascertained whether the alleged failure to fulfil obligations continued up to the Court's hearing in the present case.

20. In the present case, it would appear from the written pleadings submitted by the Commission, and indeed Portugal, that while a proposed law for the repeal of Decree-Law No 48051 is currently before the Portuguese Parliament, that law has not been definitely adopted. The Portuguese Government itself admitted in its written pleadings that in order for proposed Law No 56/X to enter into force it would require, inter alia, the signature of the Presidente da Republica (President of the Republic) and publication in the Diario da Republica (Portuguese Official Journal). On the date of expiry of the period prescribed in the reasoned opinion of 13 July 2005, those necessary steps in the legislative procedure had not yet been taken by the Portuguese Republic.

21. Moreover, at the oral hearing, which took place on 5 July 2007, when it was directly put to the agent of the Portuguese Republic that Decree-Law No 48051 was still in force on the date of the hearing, the agent replied that it was the intention of the Portuguese Republic to alter the current regime by the adoption of proposed Law No 56/X. It is clear therefore that on 5 July 2007 the Portuguese Republic had failed to repeal Decree-Law No 48051. Moreover, on that date, the obligations owed by Portugal to transpose Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 continued to exist. (9)

22. As regards, the submissions of the Portuguese Government based on Articles 22 and 271 of the CRP, the CPTA and the case-law of the Portuguese courts (10) on the presumption of fault, those submissions are, in my view, legally irrelevant and inappropriate in the context of the present proceedings. In my opinion, the submissions in question represent an attempt by Portugal to re-open the procedure in Case C275/03 and to seek a re-examination of matters which were already debated by the parties and thus considered by the Court in reaching its final judgment in that case.

23. In the light of all the foregoing, the conclusion must be that the Portuguese Republic has failed to take the necessary measures to comply with the judgment in Case C275/03 as regards the transposition of Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665, and has thereby failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 228(1) EC.

24. Since the failure to fulfil obligations on the part of the Portuguese Republic has thus been shown still to subsist on the date of the Court's hearing in the present case, the Commission's proposal of a penalty payment must now be examined.

V - The appropriate financial penalty

A - Arguments of the parties

25. On the basis of the calculation method defined in its Communication 96/C 242/07 of 21 August 1996 on applying Article [228] EC (11) and Communication 97/C 63/02 of 28 February 1997 on the method of calculating the penalty payments provided for pursuant to Article [228] EC, (12) the Commission proposes that the Court impose on the Portuguese Republic a penalty payment of EUR 21 450 for each day of delay as a sanction for non-compliance with the judgment in Case C275/03. The penalty should be imposed from the date of delivery of the judgment in the present case until the date the judgment in Case C275/03 is complied with.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

26. The Commission considers that a penalty payment is the most appropriate means of bringing to an end as soon as possible the established infringement. A penalty payment of EUR 21 450 for each day of delay is commensurate with the seriousness and length of the infringement, due regard being had to the need to ensure that the sanction is effective. According to the Commission, that sum should to be calculated by multiplying a uniform base of EUR 500 by a coefficient of 11 (on a scale of 1 to 20) for the seriousness of the infringement, a coefficient of 1 for the duration of the infringement and a coefficient of 3.9 (based on Portugal's Gross Domestic Product (GDP) and the weighting of its votes in the Council), which reflects Portugal's ability to pay.

27. In relation to the duration of the infringement, the Commission submits that on 12 October 2005, the date it decided to bring the present action, 11 months had elapsed since the judgment in Case C275/03 was handed down. In conformity with its orientations adopted in March 2001, the Commission starts counting the duration of an infringement pursuant to Article 228 EC from the seventh month following the date of the judgment finding an infringement of Community law. In the present case, the multiplication of the coefficient 0.1 by 5 months (November 2004 to May 2005) leads to the result 0.5'. The duration coefficient should therefore be 1, or the minimum coefficient.

28. As regards the seriousness of the infringement, the Commission considers that two factors should be taken into account when fixing the amount of the financial penalty, namely the importance of the Community rules breached and the impact of the infringement on general and particular interests. Pursuant to the third recital of Directive 89/665, the opening-up of public procurement to Community competition necessitates a substantial increase in the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination'. In order for that opening-up to have tangible effects, effective and rapid remedies must be available in the case of infringements of Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law'. The Commission considers that the rules which were infringed are of great importance and that the impact of that infringement on general and individual interests could be considerable. In that regard, in 2002 the public procurement sector represented 13.2% of Portugal's GDP. (13) Without prejudice to the above and in the light, firstly, of the fact that the Court, for the first time in Case C275/03, ruled on whether national rules which condition the grant of damages to persons injured by a breach of the Community rules on public procurement, or national rules transposing those rules, on the proof of fault or wilful misconduct are compatible with Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 and secondly, the infringement which led to the judgment in Case C275/03 is, in the case of Portugal, an isolated case of incorrect transposition of a Community directive in the public procurement field, the Commission considers that the coefficient for seriousness to be applied in this case should be 11.

29. The Commission indicated in its reply that, contrary to Portugal's arguments, (14) paragraph 13.3 of the 2005 Communication from the Commission - Application of Article 228 of the EC Treaty (15) (hereinafter the 2005 Communication'), which provides for the possibility of adapting the reference time-frame for assessing continuing non-compliance by a Member State after the judgment pursuant to Article 228 EC has been handed down, should not be applied in the present case. The Commission also considers that the circumstances in Case C278/01 Commission v Spain , (16) where the Court held that the termination of the infringement in that case could only be ascertained annually, are materially different to those in the present case, which concerns the adoption of measures to transpose correctly into national law a provision of Directive 89/665.

30. Moreover, the Commission considers, again contrary to the submissions of Portugal, (17) that there is no need to suspend the imposition of a penalty in the present case in accordance with paragraph 13.4 of the 2005 Communication. Paragraph 13.4 of the 2005 Communication provides for the suspension of a penalty where, for example, a period of time is necessary in order to verify whether all the necessary measures have been taken to comply with a judgment. As the present case concerns the transposition of a directive, the Commission can immediately, upon notification of the national transposition measures, take note of such measures.

31. Portugal considers that the amount of the penalty payment proposed by the Commission, and in particular the coefficient of 11 for seriousness, is manifestly disproportionate and excessive in the light of the circumstances of the present case. According to the Portuguese Government, the imposition of civil liability on the Administration would appear, within the framework of Directive 89/665, to be an instrument of public procurement policy. However, that instrument should not be considered to be of over-riding importance with regard to that policy. The objective of public procurement policy is primarily to guarantee the legality of the procedures for the award of public tenders. The possibility to impose liability on the Administration should be considered as a secondary instrument to safeguard the interests of victims. Moreover, Portugal considers that it is doubtful whether the infringement has had any impact on general and individual interests as the Portuguese courts have recognised, in their settled case-law, that there is a presumption of fault in relation to the illegal acts of the Administration, thereby facilitating the grant of damages to injured individuals in perfect conformity with the requirements of Directive 89/665.

32. Portugal claims that the present case is not similar to other cases which were decided by the Court pursuant to Article 228 EC as the present case does not concern the incorrect application of Community law but rather the alleged incorrect transposition of a directive. Portugal claims that this should be considered as a mitigating circumstance. In addition, the present case, contrary to other cases decided by the Court where lower coefficients for seriousness were proposed by the Commission, does not concern fundamental interests such as public health or the bodily integrity of individuals. Furthermore, the present case does not concern a sensitive matter which is the exclusive competence of the Community and which has been extensively legislated and examined in Community case-law. Portugal considers that it is therefore surprising that the Commission proposes a coefficient of 11 for seriousness in a case relating to partial failure to transpose Directive 89/665. Portugal therefore considers that the coefficient for seriousness in this case should not exceed 4.

33. Moreover, Portugal considers, in accordance with paragraph 13.3 of the 2005 Communication which replaced Communications 96/C 242/07 and 97/C 63/02, that the appropriate reference time-frame in the present case for assessing compliance with Directive 89/665 should be annual and not daily as proposed by the Commission.

34. In addition, Portugal considers that in accordance with paragraph 13.4 of the 2005 Communication, the penalty in the present case should be suspended. By its adoption of proposed Law No 56/X, Portugal has ensured that all the necessary steps to comply with the judgment of the Court in Case C275/03 have been taken. It is merely necessary that a certain time period elapses for the text of the law to be adopted.

B - Assessment

35. In the event that the Court should find that the Portuguese Republic has not complied with its judgment in Case C275/03, the Court may, under the third subparagraph of Article 228(2) EC, impose on that Member State a lump sum and/or penalty payment. (18)

36. According to its settled case-law, it is for the Court to assess in each case, in the light of the circumstances of the case, the financial penalties to be imposed. (19) The fixing of a sanction pursuant to Article 228 EC thus lies within the exclusive remit of the Court. In exercising its discretion, it is for the Court to fix the lump sum and/or penalty payment that is appropriate to the circumstances and proportionate both to the breach that has been found and to the ability to pay of the Member State concerned. In that regard, the Commission's proposals with regard to financial penalties do not bind the Court and merely constitute a useful point of reference. (20)

Moreover, the Commission's communications in relation to Article 228 EC are not binding on the Court but serve to ensure the transparency, predictability and legal certainty of that institution's actions. (21)

37. In the present case, the Commission in its application based its proposal on the financial penalties to be imposed on Portugal, inter alia, on its Communications 96/C 242/07 and 97/C 63/02. It should be noted that on 7 February 2006, the date when the application in the current proceedings was lodged before the Court, those communications were no longer in force and had been replaced by the 2005 Communication with effect from 1 January 2006. (22)

38. I consider that in the context of the present proceedings it would be appropriate for the Court to use, inter alia, the more recent 2005 Communication, together with the submissions of the parties, as a useful point of reference for establishing whether a financial sanction should be imposed in the present case, and if so, the amount of that sanction. In reaching this finding, I consider that the reference by the Commission to its earlier communications did not hinder Portugal in defending its interests in the course of the current proceedings and that the principles of transparency, predictability and legal certainty have been observed. Portugal itself, in its written pleadings, highlighted the fact that the 2005 Communication had replaced the Commission's earlier communications and indeed, as can be seen from Portugal's pleadings, that Member State specifically relied on paragraphs 13.3 and 13.4 of the 2005 Communication. In my opinion, Portugal was fully aware of the contents of the 2005 Communication and that it could be used as a point of reference in relation to the imposition of financial sanctions by the Court.

39. In my view, in order to apply the enforcement procedure provided by Article 228 EC in a consequent manner, that procedure must be understood as a tool for fully realising the objective of Article 226 EC proceedings, which is to bring infringements of Community law to an end, and at the same time as a means of dissuading Member States from failing to comply with the judgments of the Court establishing a breach of Community law pursuant to Article 226 EC.

40. In concrete terms, the procedure laid down in Article 228(2) EC is aimed at inducing a defaulting Member State to comply with a judgment establishing a failure to fulfil obligations, thereby ensuring that Community law is in fact applied by that State. The sanctions provided for by that provision, namely a lump sum and a penalty payment, are both intended to achieve this objective. The purpose of imposing a penalty payment and/or a lump sum is to place a Member State under economic pressure which induces it to put an end to the infringement that has been established. The financial penalties imposed must therefore be decided on according to the degree of persuasion needed for the Member State in question to alter its conduct. (23)

41. In Case C304/02 Commission v France , the Court stated that while the imposition of a penalty payment seems particularly suited to inducing a Member State to put an end as soon as possible to a breach of obligations which, in the absence of such a measure, would tend to persist, the imposition of a lump sum is based more on assessment of the effects on public and private interests of the failure of the Member State concerned to comply with its obligations, in particular where the breach has persisted for a long period since the judgment which initially established it. (24)

42. I consider in the light of the circumstances of the case that the imposition of a penalty payment is a suitable means to induce or persuade Portugal to alter its conduct and to comply with its obligations pursuant to Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665. In my view, there is sufficient evidence in the present proceedings to suggest that there is a real danger that the infringement in question will persist unless a penalty payment is imposed on Portugal. In that regard, at the oral hearing on 5 July 2007 it was evident that the Portuguese Republic had not taken the necessary action to comply with the judgment in Case C275/03, despite its repeated earlier statements that such action was imminent.

43. As regards the amount of the penalty payment, the basic criteria which must be taken into account in order to ensure that such payments have coercive force and Community law is applied uniformly and effectively are, in principle, the duration of the infringement, its degree of seriousness and the ability of the Member State to pay. In applying those criteria, regard should be had in particular to the effects of failure to comply on private and public interests and to the urgency of getting the Member State concerned to fulfil its obligations. (25)

44. The Commission submits that the coefficient for duration of the infringement should be fixed at 1 in the present proceedings. As can be seen from the Commission's pleadings, that coefficient was calculated by reference, inter alia, to the date when the Commission decided to initiate the present proceedings, that is 12 October 2005. In my view, the proposal of the Commission in relation to duration is flawed. Aside from the fact that the Commission did not actually bring the present proceedings until 7 February 2006, the Court in Case C177/04 Commission v France stated that the duration of an infringement pursuant to Article 228 EC must be assessed by reference to the time when the Court assesses the facts, not the time at which the case is brought before it by the Commission. (26)

45. In the present case, compliance with the judgment in Case C275/03 only required the adoption by Portugal of measures of transposition into national law of Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 and, in particular, the repeal of Decree-Law No 48051. It is clear that the failure by Portugal to definitely adopt the necessary legislative measures to comply with the judgment in Case C275/03, which was handed down on 14 October 2004, has persisted for a substantial period of time. On the date of the oral hearing in the present case nearly three years had elapsed since the judgment in Case C275/03 was delivered. (27)

46. In those circumstances, I consider that a coefficient of 2 appears appropriate to take account of the duration of the infringement.

47. As regards the seriousness of the infringement, I do not consider that the Commission's proposal of a coefficient of 11, on a scale of 1 to 20, for seriousness is correct. In my view, that coefficient is clearly excessive in the light of the circumstances of the present case and the previous case-law of the Court.

48. With regard to that case-law, the Portuguese Government in my view correctly pointed out that a lower coefficient for seriousness in cases involving for example a threat to public health, damage to the environment and the depletion of fishing stocks was applied by the Court. (28) I consider that the coefficient of 4 suggested by the Portuguese Government is thus more appropriate in the present case.

49. While the infringement of Directive 89/665 would appear to be partial, in that the present proceedings and the proceedings in Case C275/03 relate to Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(c) of that directive rather than the directive in its entirety, the coefficient of 4 for seriousness is warranted given, in my view, the importance of the provisions in question which provide for the establishment of measures for the award of damages to persons injured by an infringement of the public procurement rules. (29)

50. In coming to this conclusion I would stress that I do not agree with the submissions of Portugal which would tend to suggest that the European Community's policy on public procurement is not of any great importance. Public procurement policy is, in my view, pivotal in ensuring that competition in the internal market is not distorted. (30) Moreover, contrary to Portugal's arguments, (31) I consider that the possibility for private actors to seek review of the decisions of contracting authorities and, where they have been injured by an infringement of the rules on public procurement, to obtain damages, is crucial to the proper functioning of those rules. The availability of such procedures not only safeguards the interests of the parties in question, but also guarantees the full effectiveness of the Community's public procurement policy.

51. The failure by Portugal to repeal Decree-Law No 48051 (32) would appear to render judicial actions in this field by private parties more difficult and indeed costly. This situation could, in my opinion, undermine the incentives of private parties to bring such actions and thus impair the full effectiveness of the Community's public procurement policy.

52. In the light of the foregoing, I consider that the penalty payment to be imposed in the present case should be derived by multiplication of the base amount of EUR 600 by the coefficients of 4.04 (ability to pay), (33) 4 (seriousness of the infringement) and 2 (duration of the infringement) which leads to an amount of EUR 19 392 for each day of delay.

53. As regards, the frequency of the penalty payment, in a case such as the present one concerning compliance with a judgment of the Court which involves the simple adoption of a legislative amendment in order to transpose a part of a directive, a penalty payment imposed on a daily basis should be chosen. (34) The arguments of the Portuguese Government based on paragraph 13.3 of the 2005 Communication should thus be rejected.

54. Moreover, I consider that there is no need to suspend the imposition of the penalty payment in the present case. The adoption of the necessary legislative amendment and thus compliance with the judgment in Case C275/03 can be assessed immediately by the Commission upon notification of that amendment. The arguments of the Portuguese Government based on paragraph 13.4 of the 2005 Communication should therefore also be rejected.

55. As regards the possibility for the Court to impose a lump sum, I do not consider that such a sanction is warranted in the present proceedings despite the fact that the failure to transpose Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 has persisted for almost three years since the judgment in Case C275/03 was handed down and the public and private interests affected due to that failure are of some importance.

56. That reflexion is underpinned by the case-law of the Court, particularly by the judgment of the Court in Case C304/02 and the very specific circumstances of that case which led the Court to impose a lump sum in addition to a penalty payment. (35) Indeed, the wording of Article 228(2) EC itself contemplates the imposition of only one of the two potential sanctions mentioned. Moreover, the Court has considered that both sanctions have their own autonomous function. (36)

VI - Conclusion

57. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I suggest that the Court should:

- declare that, by failing to repeal Decree-Law No 48051 of 21 November 1967, making the award of damages to persons injured by a breach of Community law relating to public contracts, or the national laws implementing it, conditional on proof of fault or wilful misconduct, the Portuguese Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 1(1) and Article 2(1)(c) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts and has accordingly failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 228 EC;

- order the Portuguese Republic to pay to the Commission of the European Communities, into the account EC own resources', a penalty payment of EUR 19 392 for each day of delay in implementing the measures necessary to comply with the judgment in Case C275/03 Commission v Portugal , from delivery of the present judgment until the judgment in Case C275/03 has been complied with in full;

- order the Portuguese Republic to pay the costs.

(26) - See paragraph 71. In my view, the date of the Court's assessment of the facts is an unidentifiable date which is not known by the parties. I consider therefore that for the purposes of imposing a penalty payment pursuant to Article 228 EC, the duration of the infringement must be assessed by reference to the date of the hearing in a case, or in the event that a hearing is not held, the date of the close of the written procedure.

(27) - See by analogy Case C177/04 Commission v France , cited in footnote 23, paragraphs 73 and 74. In that case the Court considered that a coefficient of 3 for duration should be applied where a failure to adopt measures of transposition into national law had persisted for nearly four years.

(28) - In that regard, Portugal noted that in Commission v Greece (cited in footnote 20), the Commission proposed a coefficient of 6 for seriousness concerning a failure to fulfil obligations which threatened public health and where no action had been taken to execute the previous judgment. While in Commission v Spain (cited in footnote 16), a coefficient of 4 for seriousness was proposed by the Commission in relation to a failure to transpose a directive on the quality of bathing waters and thus concerned the protection of the environment and public health. In addition, in Case C304/02 Commission v France (cited in footnote 18), which concerned the common fisheries policy, a coefficient of 10 for seriousness was proposed.

(29) - See by contrast Case C177/04 Commission v France (cited in footnote 23) where the Court considered that the infringement of Community law due to the partial non-transposition of a directive was not particularly serious and thus applied a coefficient for seriousness of 1. In that case, the Court found that France had failed to comply with the judgment in Case C52/00 Commission v France ([2002] ECR I3827) as regards the transposition of Article 3(3) of Council Directive 85/374/EEC of 25 July 1985 on the approx imation of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions of the Member States concerning liability for defective products (OJ 1985 L 210, p. 29), and had thus failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 228 EC as it continued to regard the supplier of a defective product as liable on the same basis as the producer where the producer cannot be identified, even though the supplier had informed the injured person within a reasonable time of the identity of the person who supplied him with the product.

(30) - Indeed the sheer size of the public procurement sector, which would appear to represent 16% of the Community's GDP and 13.2% of Portugal's GDP, can not be overlooked.

(32) - Thereby making the award of damages to persons injured by a breach of Community law relating to public contracts, or the national laws implementing it, conditional on proof of fault or wilful misconduct on the part of the State or public entities.

(33) - It should be noted that the base amount and the coefficient in relation to Portugal's ability to pay have been drawn from the 2005 Communication. See point 37 above.

Registrar: J. Palacio González, Principal Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 18 June 2008,

gives the following

Judgment

Legal context

1 The European Agency for Reconstruction (EAR) was established by Council Regulation (EC) No 2454/1999 of 15 November 1999 amending Regulation (EC) No 1628/96 relating to aid for Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, in particular by the setting up of a European Agency for Reconstruction (OJ 1999 L 299, p. 1).

2 Council Regulation (EC) No 1628/96 of 25 July 1996 (OJ 1996 L 204, p. 1), was repealed by Article 14(1) of Council Regulation (EC) No 2666/2000 of 5 December 2000 on assistance for Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, repealing Regulation (EC) No 1628/96 and amending Regulations (EEC) No 3906/89 and (EEC) No 1360/90 and Decisions 97/256/EC and 1999/311/EC (OJ 2000 L 306, p. 1). The provisions of Regulation (EC) No 1628/96, as amended by Regulation No 2454/1999, governing the establishment and operation of the EAR were amended by and incorporated in Council Regulation (EC) No 2667/2000 of 5 December 2000 on the European Agency for Reconstruction (OJ 2000 L 306, p. 7).

3 Under Article 1 of Regulation No 2667/2000, the Commission may delegate to the EAR implementation of the Community assistance provided for in Article 1 of Regulation No 2666/2000 to Serbia and Montenegro. Under Article 2(1)(c) of Regulation No 2667/2000, the Commission may make the EAR responsible for all operations required to implement programmes for the reconstruction of Serbia and Montenegro, including preparing and evaluating invitations to tender and awarding contracts. In addition, under Article 3 of that regulation, the EAR is to have legal personality.

Background to the dispute

4 On 7 September 2005 the EAR published in the Supplement to the OfficialJournal of the European Union (OJ 2005 S 172) an open procedure procurement notice, reference EuropeAid/120694/D/W/YU, relating to the award of the public works contract 'Restoring of Unhindered Navigation (removal of unexploded ordnance) in the Inland Waterway Transport system, Republic of Serbia, Serbia and Montenegro' ('the Procurement Notice').

5 The Procurement Notice and point 2 of the instructions to tenderers to be found in the tender dossier [the 'Instructions to tenderers'] stated that the project concerned was to be financed by the EAR, and that the contracting authority for it was to be the Serbian Ministry of Capital Investments.

6 Point 16(x) of the Procurement Notice and point 4.2(x) of the Instructions to tenderers specified, among the 'minimum selection criteria' to be met by the successful candidate, that all the key personnel had to have at least 10 years appropriate professional experience.

7 Point 37 of the Instructions to tenderers reads as follows:

'Appeals

(1) Tenderers believing that they have been harmed by an error or irregularity during the award process may petition the [EAR] directly and inform the Commission. The [EAR] must reply within 90 days of receipt of the complaint.

(2) Where informed of such a complaint, the Commission must communicate its opinion to the [EAR] and do all it can to facilitate an amicable solution between the complainant (tenderer) and the [EAR].

(3) If the above procedure fails, the tenderer may have recourse to procedures established by the European Commission.'

8 Before the deadline for the submission of tenders, the EAR received three tenders, submitted respectively by a consortium formed by the applicant, Sogelma – Societá generale lavori manutenzioni appalti Srl, and the Croatian company DOK ING RAZMINIRANJE d.o.o. ('DOK ING'), and by two other consortia.

9 On 10 March 2006 the EAR publicly opened the tender envelopes. The price in the applicant's tender was lower than that proposed by its competitors.

10 On 14 and 22 March 2006 the EAR sent requests for clarification to the tenderers. The second request concerned in particular the CVs of the proposed key personnel. All the tenderers replied to the requests for clarification within the periods set by the EAR.

11 By letter dated 9 October 2006 the EAR informed the applicant that the tender procedure in question had been cancelled due to the fact that none of the offers received was technically compliant. As regards the applicant's offer, the EAR stated that one of the key personnel proposed, the 'Superintendent Survey Team' did not satisfy the requirements laid down in point 16(x) of the Procurement Notice and in point 4.2(x) of the Instructions to tenderers.

12 By letter of 19 October 2006 (mistakenly dated 19 September 2006) the applicant asked for a copy of the decision to cancel the tender procedure and the respective minutes. In addition, it refers in that letter to the possibility of using the negotiated procedure under Article 30 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

13 By letter of 13 November 2006 the applicant repeated that request and asked the EAR to take a reasoned decision on whether or not to proceed with a negotiated procedure.

14 By letter of 1 December 2006 the applicant asked the EAR to provide it with copies of all the minutes of the evaluation committee which examined the tenders submitted in response to the Procurement Notice, of the minutes of the public opening of the tender envelopes, and of the decision to cancel the tender procedure and the related minutes, on the basis of Article 6 of Regulation (EC) No 1049/2001 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 30 May 2001 regarding public access to European Parliament, Council and Commission documents (OJ 2001 L 145, p. 43).

15 By letter of 14 December 2006 the EAR advised the applicant that it had exercised its right to cancel the tender procedure and to initiate a new invitation to tender due to the fact that the technical requirements 'ha[d] been considerably changed'. Furthermore, the EAR stated that, apart from the finding that no technically compliant tenders had been received, the evaluation committee made no other remarks. Annexed to that letter, the EAR sent the minutes relating to the public opening of tender envelopes.

Procedure and forms of order sought

16 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 22 December 2006 the applicant brought this action and stated that it was bringing proceedings on its own behalf and as the agent of the company DOK ING.

17 By order of the President of the Second Chamber of 4 June 2007 the Commission was given leave to intervene in support of the forms of order sought by the EAR.

18 The Commission lodged a statement in intervention. The applicant submitted observations on that statement within the period allowed.

19 After a partial renewal of the membership of the Court of First Instance, the case was allocated to a new Judge Rapporteur. That judge was then assigned to the Eighth Chamber, and this case was consequently allocated to that chamber.

20 After hearing the report of the Judge Rapporteur the Court (Eighth Chamber) decided to open the oral procedure and, by way of measures of organisation of procedure provided for in Article 64 of the Court's Rules of Procedure, asked the parties to reply in writing to a number of questions. The parties complied with that request within the period allowed.

21 The parties presented oral argument and replied to the questions put by the Court at the hearing of 18 June 2008.

22 The applicant claims that the Court should:

– annul the decisions of the EAR relating to:

– cancellation of the tender procedure;

– organisation of a fresh tender procedure;

– order the EAR to pay it compensation for the loss suffered, as stated in the application;

– order the EAR to pay the costs.

23 The EAR contends that the Court should:

– declare the action to be inadmissible, or, alternatively, dismiss the action as unfounded;

– order the applicant to pay the costs.

24 The Commission contends that the Court should:

– declare the action for annulment to be inadmissible, or, alternatively, dismiss the action as unfounded;

– dismiss the action for compensation for damage as unfounded;

– order the applicant to pay the costs.

25 Further, the applicant requests that, pursuant to Article 65(b) of the Rules of Procedure, the Court order the EAR to produce all the documents relating to the award procedure in question. The EAR and the Commission oppose that request.

26 In the application, the applicant also claimed that the Court should annul 'all other preliminary, connected or associated measures, including the decision to exclude the applicant'. At the hearing, the applicant stated that this claim should no longer be considered by Court of First Instance, which has been duly recorded.

Admissibility

27 The EAR relies on several pleas of inadmissibility. It is necessary to examine, first, the plea that the Court of First Instance has no jurisdiction to rule on an action for annulment brought on the basis of the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC against an act of the EAR and, secondly, the plea that the applicant did not lodge an administrative complaint prior to bringing the present action. The Court must examine, thirdly, in relation to the application for annulment of the decision to cancel the tender procedure, whether the time-limit for bringing proceedings laid down in the fifth paragraph of Article 230 EC was respected. Fourthly, it is necessary to examine the admissibility of the action in so far as it seeks annulment of the EAR's decision to organise a new tender procedure. Lastly, it is necessary to examine the admissibility of the action in so far as the applicant asserts the rights of DOK ING.

A – The jurisdiction of the Court of First Instance to rule on an action for annulment brought on the basis of the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC against an act of the EAR

1. Arguments of the parties

28 The EAR claims that the decision to cancel the tender procedure is not an act the legality of which can be reviewed by the Court under Article 230 EC. It submits that, in terms of that article, review by the Community judicature is limited to acts adopted jointly by the European Parliament and the Council, acts of the Council, of the Commission and of the European Central Bank, other than recommendations and opinions, and to acts of the European Parliament intended to produce legal effects vis-à-vis third parties.

29 Article 13a of Regulation No 2667/2000, as amended by Council Regulation (EC) No 1646/2003 of 18 June 2003 (OJ 2003 L 245, p. 16), is irrelevant in that regard, since it refers only to actions against decisions of the EAR taken pursuant to Article 8 of Regulation No 1049/2001.

30 Equally, Article 13(2) of Regulation No 2667/2000 does no more than provide that the Community judicature has jurisdiction to hear disputes relating to compensation in the case of the EAR's non-contractual liability.

31 Tenderers are not, according to the EAR, without any protection. Their rights are protected by the procedure laid down in point 37 of the Instructions to tenderers (quoted in paragraph 7 above). The EAR submits that, in terms of that point, a tenderer may, if the procedure provided for in that point fails, have recourse to procedures established by the Commission, whose acts are actionable under Article 230 EC. The EAR also raises the possibility of bringing an action before the domestic courts.

32 The applicant and the Commission do not accept that plea of inadmissibility.

2. Findings of the Court

33 First, it is clear that agencies such as the EAR established on the basis of secondary legislation are not among the Community institutions listed in the first paragraph of Article 230 EC.

34 Furthermore, Regulation No 2667/2000, as amended, which states only, in Articles 13 and 13a, that the Court has jurisdiction in disputes relating to compensation in the case of the EAR's non-contractual liability and to EAR decisions relating to access to documents taken pursuant to Article 8 of Regulation No 1049/2001, does not provide that the Court has jurisdiction to hear actions for annulment against other decisions taken by the EAR.

35 None the less, those considerations do not preclude review by the Court of First Instance, under Article 230 EC, of the legality of EAR acts which are not referred to in Articles 13 and 13a of Regulation No 2667/2000.

36 The Court of Justice has held, in paragraph 23 of the Les Verts case (Case 294/83 'Les Verts' v Parliament [1986] ECR 1339), that the European Community is a community based on the rule of law, and that the Treaty has established a complete system of legal remedies and procedures designed to permit the Court of Justice to review the legality of measures adopted by the institutions. The general scheme of the Treaty is to make a direct action available against all measures adopted by the institutions which are intended to have legal effects (see Les Verts, paragraph 24, and case-law cited). The Court of Justice concluded in that case that an action for annulment could be brought against measures of the European Parliament intended to have legal effects vis-à-vis third parties, even though Article 173 of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 230 EC), in the version applicable at the material time, referred only to acts of the Council and the Commission. The Court stated that an interpretation of that article which excluded measures adopted by the European Parliament from those which could be contested would lead to a result contrary both to the spirit of the Treaty as expressed in Article 164 of the EC Treaty (now Article 220 EC) and to its system (Les Verts, paragraph 25).

37 The general principle to be elicited from that judgment is that any act of a Community body intended to produce legal effects vis-à-vis third parties must be open to judicial review. It is true that Les Verts, paragraph 24, refers only to Community institutions and the EAR is not one of the institutions listed in Article 7 EC. None the less, the situation of Community bodies endowed with the power to take measures intended to produce legal effects vis-à-vis third parties is identical to the situation which led to the Les Verts judgment: it cannot be acceptable, in a community based on the rule of law, that such acts escape judicial review.

38 It must be noted that the cancellation of a tender procedure is an act which, as a general rule, may be the subject of an action under Article 230 EC (see, to that effect, order of the Court of 19 October 2007 in Case T–69/05 Evropaïki Dinamiki v EFSA, not published in the ECR, paragraph 53). It is an act which adversely affects the applicant and brings about a distinct change in his legal position, since the result is that the applicant can no longer expect to be awarded the contract for which he has submitted a tender.

39 It must also be borne in mind that, under Articles 1 and 2 of Regulation No 2667/2000, as amended, the Commission may delegate to the EAR implementation of the Community assistance provided for in Article 1 of Regulation No 2666/2000 to Serbia and Montenegro, and, in particular, make the EAR responsible for preparing and evaluating invitations to tender and awarding contracts. As is stated by the Commission, the EAR therefore takes decisions which the Commission itself would have taken if it had not delegated those powers to the EAR.

40 Decisions which the Commission would have taken cannot cease to be acts open to challenge solely because the Commission has delegated powers to the EAR, otherwise there would be a legal vacuum.

41 The Court must reject the EAR's argument that the rights of tenderers are protected by the procedure laid down in point 37 of the Instructions to tenderers on the ground that they could have recourse to procedures established by the Commission, whose acts are open to challenge under Article 230 EC. It is clear that point 37 of the Instructions to tenderers does not provide for the Commission to adopt, in the course of the procedure, a decision which is open to judicial review. It must further be observed that the Commission stated, in reply to a written question put by the Court, that it had not set up any specific procedure to deal with any complaints which did not reach an amicable settlement under point 37 of the Instructions to tenderers.

42 Lastly, the Court must reject the EAR's argument that an action against its acts could be brought before a domestic court. While it is true, in the present case, that, according to the Procurement Notice and point 2 of the Instructions to tenderers, the contracting authority is the Serbian Ministry of Capital Investments, it remains the case that it is the EAR, and not a domestic authority, which took the decision to cancel the tender procedure. It is clear that no domestic court has jurisdiction to assess the legality of that decision.

43 It follows that decisions taken by the EAR in the context of public procurement procedures and intended to produce legal effects vis-à-vis third parties are acts open to challenge before the Community judicature.

44 No doubt is cast on that conclusion by the case-law referred to by the EAR in support of its defence.

45 As regards Case C-160/03 Spain v Eurojust [2005] ECR I-2077, it is true that the Court of Justice there held that the acts contested were not included in the list of acts the legality of which the Court may review under Article 230 EC (paragraph 37). However, in the following paragraph of that judgment, the Court of Justice also held that Article 41 EU did not provide for the application of Article 230 EC to the provisions on police and judicial cooperation in criminal matters in Title VI of the Treaty on European Union, the jurisdiction of the Court in such matters being defined in Article 35 EU, to which Article 46(b) EU refers. The Court of Justice also held, in paragraphs 41 and 42 of that judgment, that the acts contested in that case were not exempt from judicial review.

46 Similarly, in the order in Case T-148/97 Keeling v OHIM [1998] ECR II-2217, the Court of First Instance did not confine itself to stating, in paragraph 32, that the Office for Harmonisation in the Internal Market (Trade Marks and Designs) (OHIM) was not one of the institutions of the Community listed in Article 4 of the EC Treaty (now Article 7 EC) and was not mentioned in the first paragraph of Article 173 of the EC Treaty, but also observed, in paragraph 33, that other remedies were potentially available against the contested decision of the President of OHIM, mentioning, inter alia, Article 179 of the EC Treaty (now Article 236 EC). That order therefore does not preclude an action lying under Article 230 EC against a decision of a Community body not mentioned in that article.

47 As regards the order of 1 March 2007 in Joined Cases T-311/06 R I, T-311/06 R II, T-312/06 R and T-313/06 R FMC Chemical and Others v EFSA, not published in the ECR, it must be pointed out that that order relates to an action brought against an opinion of the European Food Safety Authority which did not produce binding legal effects. It cannot be concluded from that order that an action brought against an act of a Community body not mentioned by Article 230 EC is inadmissible.

48 Consequently, the case-law relied on by the EAR does not affect the finding that an act emanating from a Community body intended to produce legal effects vis-à-vis third parties cannot escape judicial review by the Community judicature.

49 It must moreover be observed that, as a general rule, actions must be directed against the body which enacted the contested measure, in other words, the Community institution or body from which the decision emanated.

50 In that context, it must be pointed out that the EAR is a Community body endowed with legal personality and established by a regulation with the aim of implementing Community assistance inter alia to Serbia and Montenegro (see Articles 1 and 3 of Regulation No 2667/2000). For that purpose, Articles 1 and 2 of Regulation No 2667/2000 expressly permit the Commission to delegate to the EAR the implementation of that assistance, including preparing and evaluating invitations to tender and awarding contracts. The EAR therefore itself has the power, conferred on it by the Commission, to implement programmes of Community assistance.

51 In the present case, it is the EAR which took the decision to cancel the tender procedure, by virtue of the powers delegated by the Commission in accordance with Regulation No 2667/2000. The Commission played no part in the decision-making process. Accordingly, it is clear that the EAR is the body which enacted the contested measure. Consequently, the applicant may institute proceedings before the Court of First Instance against the EAR in that capacity.

52 Furthermore, it must be pointed out that it is clear from Article 13(2) and from Article 13a(3) of Regulation No 2667/2000 that it is for the EAR to defend itself in a court of law in disputes relating to whether it has incurred non-contractual liability and in disputes relating to decisions which it has taken pursuant to Article 8 of Regulation No 1049/2001.

53 In those circumstances, it cannot be considered that other decisions taken by the EAR ought not also to be defended in a court of law by the EAR.

54 It is true that, in certain cases, the Community judicature has held that acts adopted pursuant to delegated powers were to be imputed to the delegating institution, which was obliged to defend in a court of law the act in question. However, in those cases, the circumstances were not comparable to those of the present case.

55 As regards the order of 5 December 2007 in Case T-133/03 Schering-Plough v CommissionandEMEA (not published in ECR), relating to an action for annulment directed against an act of the European Agency for the Evaluation of Medicinal Products (EMEA), the Court there stated that Council Regulation (EEC) No 2309/93 of 22 July 1993 laying down Community procedures for the authorisation and supervision of medicinal products for human and veterinary use and establishing a European Agency for the Evaluation of Medicinal Products (OJ 1993 L 214, p. 1) provided for only advisory powers for the EMEA. The Court thereby concluded that the refusal by the EMEA of an application for variation of a marketing authorisation had to be deemed to emanate from the Commission itself and therefore that any action had to be directed against the Commission (order in Schering-Plough v Commission and EMEA, paragraphs 22 and 23). In the present case, it is clear that the powers of the EAR are not advisory, since it has the responsibility, delegated to it by the Commission, of preparing and evaluating invitations to tender and awarding contracts.

56 As regards Joined Cases T-369/94 and T-85/95 DIR International Film and Others v Commission [1998] ECR II-357, relating to an action for annulment directed against acts of the European Film Distribution Office (EFDO), it must be noted that the Court stated that, under Article 7(1) of Decision 90/685/EEC concerning the implementation of an action programme to promote the development of the European audiovisual industry (MEDIA) (1991 to 1995) (OJ 1990 L 380, p. 37), the Commission was responsible for the implementation of the MEDIA programme. The Court then pointed out that the relevant agreement between the Commission and the EFDO on the financial implementation of the MEDIA programme made any decision in that area subject in practice to the prior agreement of the Commission's representatives, and that decisions taken by the EFDO on funding applications made under the MEDIA programme were accordingly imputable to the Commission, which was therefore responsible for their content and could be called upon to defend them in court (paragraphs 52 and 53 of that judgment). In the present case, it is clear that decisions taken by the EAR in relation to procurement are not subject to the prior approval of the Commission.

57 It follows from all of the foregoing that the Court of First Instance has jurisdiction to hear the present action and that the applicant has properly directed that action against the EAR.

B – The necessity of a prior administrative complaint

1. Arguments of the parties

58 The EAR contends that point 37 of the Instructions to tenderers (quoted in paragraph 7 above) establishes a system for preliminary monitoring of the legality of its acts. The action brought before the Court of First Instance is claimed to be inadmissible because the applicant did not comply with the procedure laid down in that article.

59 The applicant and the Commission do not accept that plea of inadmissibility.

2. Findings of the Court

60 It is clear, first, that the wording of point 37.1 of the Instructions to tenderers does not specify that an administrative complaint is obligatory. It must further be observed that the fact that point 37 of the Instructions to tenderers does not lay down any time-limit for bringing an administrative complaint militates against an interpretation of that point as being designed to introduce the requirement of a prior administrative complaint.

61 Moreover, point 37.2 of the Instructions to tenderers provides only that the Commission is to facilitate an amicable solution between the complainant (tenderer) and the EAR, not that it must in that context adopt a decision which may be open to judicial review.

62 It must further be pointed out that Article 37.3 also does not provide that completion of the procedure concerned is a prerequisite of bringing an action before the Community judicature. That point states that '[i]f the above procedure fails, the tenderer may have recourse to procedures established by the European Commission'. In that context, it must be borne in mind that the Commission has not established any specific procedure for dealing with any complaints which have not given rise to an amicable settlement under point 37 of the Instructions to tenderers (see paragraph 41 above). There is therefore no 'procedure established by the Commission' completion of which could be considered a prerequisite of bringing an action before the Community judicature.

63 The EAR claims that use of the word 'may' in point 37.1 of the Instructions to tenderers cannot be interpreted to mean that that procedure is optional. In that regard, it is true that that word is also used in regulations which provide that a prior administrative procedure is a prerequisite of bringing an action before the Community judicature. That applies, for example, to Article 68 of Council Regulation (EC) No 2100/94 of 27 July 1994 on Community plant variety rights (OJ 1994 L 227, p. 1), to which the EAR refers, and which states '[a]ny natural or legal person may appeal' against relevant decisions of the Community Plant Variety Office. It must, however, be noted that that regulation expressly lays down, in Article 69, a time-limit for filing a notice of appeal against a decision of the Community Plant Variety Office. In addition, it expressly provides, in Article 73(1) that an appeal lies from decisions of the Board of Appeal of that Office to the Community judicature and lays down a time-limit for lodging such an appeal. Similarly, while Article 90(2) of the Staff Regulations of Officials of the European Economic Community provides that any person to whom those Regulations apply 'may' submit to the appointing authority a complaint against an act adversely affecting him, it also establishes a time-limit for doing so. Furthermore, Article 91(2) of those Regulations expressly provides that an appeal to the Community judicature is to lie only if the appointing authority has previously had a complaint submitted to it.

64 By contrast, point 37 of the Instructions to tenderers cannot subject the admissibility of an action to an obligatory prior administrative complaint, since the wording is not sufficiently clear.

65 For the sake of completeness, it must be stated that the EAR cannot, without any basis in law, introduce a condition governing admissibility which goes beyond those laid down in Article 230 EC.

66 In this context, the Court must reject the EAR's argument that point 2.4.16 of the 'Practical Guide to contract procedures for EC external actions' represents such a legal basis. It need merely be pointed out that such a Practical Guide is a working tool which explains the procedures applying in a particular area and which cannot, as such, constitute a basis in law for the introduction of an obligatory prior administrative complaint.

67 The Court must also reject the EAR's argument that such a legal basis is provided by Article 56(1)(b) of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1, the 'Financial Regulation'), under which decisions entrusting executive tasks to the agencies referred to in Article 54(2) of that regulation, must comprise an effective internal control system for management operations. On that point, it must be observed that that provision relates to budgetary matters and manifestly does not apply to the legal remedies available to tenderers. It cannot therefore constitute a basis in law for the introduction of a condition governing the admissibility of appeals by tenderers, namely an obligatory prior administrative complaint.

68 It follows from the foregoing that the plea of inadmissibility on the ground that no prior administrative complaint was submitted by the applicant must be rejected.

C – Compliance with the time-limit for bringing proceedings

1. Arguments of the parties

69 The EAR considers that the action is inadmissible in so far as it relates to the annulment of the decision to cancel the tender procedure, because the time-limit for bringing proceedings laid down by the fifth paragraph of Article 230 EC was not complied with.

70 In that regard, it contends that it sent the letter of 9 October 2006, informing the applicant of the cancellation of the tender procedure in question as an annex to an e-mail of the same day. Since it did not receive any 'not received' message from the electronic messaging system of the applicant, the EAR considers that it can reasonably take the view that the e-mail sent on 9 October 2006 actually reached the applicant on the same day. The period for bringing an action against that decision therefore expired on 19 December 2006.

71 In its rejoinder the EAR states that, following enquiry, it established that the original version of the letter in question was never sent to the applicant. Contrary to what was stated in its statement in defence, the letter was not sent to the applicant by e-mail and by post, but solely by e-mail. The applicant therefore obtained the information that the tender procedure had been cancelled from the document sent as an annex to the e-mail of 9 October 2006.

72 The applicant claims that it never received the e-mail of 9 October 2006. The letter of 9 October 2006 reached it by post on 12 October 2006.

2. Findings of the Court

73 First, it should be noted that the decision to cancel the tender procedure is not a decision which had to be formally notified to the applicant in accordance with Article 254(3) EC. The applicant is not an addressee of the decision to cancel the tender procedure (see, to that effect, order of 14 May 2008 in Case T-383/06 Icuna.Com v Parliament [2008] ECR II-0000, paragraph 43). The decision to cancel related to the entire tender procedure, and the fact that it was subsequently communicated to the applicant does not mean that it was addressed to the applicant.

74 The period for instituting proceedings laid down in the fifth paragraph of Article 230 EC therefore started to run from the time when the applicant had knowledge of the decision.

75 According to the Court's case-law, if the date of notification of a decision cannot be established with certainty, the applicant is accorded the benefit of the doubt which results and his application is regarded as having been lodged within the prescribed period if, in the light of the facts, it does not appear absolutely impossible that the letter notifying the decision arrived so late that the time-limit was complied with (Joined Cases 32/58 and 33/58 SNUPAT. v High Authority [1959] ECR, p. 127, at p. 136).

76 Similarly, the applicant is accorded the benefit of the doubt if it is not a matter of determining the date of notification, but the date on which the applicant became aware of the act. It is for the party pleading that the action is out of time to provide evidence of the date on which the event causing time to begin to run occurred (see Case T-347/03 Branco v Commission [2005] ECR II-2555, paragraph 54, and case-law cited).

77 It is clear that sending an e-mail does not guarantee that it is actually received by the person to whom it is addressed. An e-mail may not reach him for technical reasons. Even if, in the present case, the EAR did not receive a 'not received' message, that does not necessarily mean that the e-mail did actually reach the person to whom it was addressed. Furthermore, even where an e-mail actually reaches the person to whom it is addressed, it may not be received on the day on which it was sent.

78 In that context, it must be observed that the EAR could have chosen a means of communication which enabled it to establish accurately the date on which the letter reached the tenderer. It is true that the EAR asked the applicant, in its e-mail of 9 October 2006, to confirm by e-mail receipt of the message. However, it did not receive such confirmation. It is clear that, if the sender of an e-mail who does not receive any confirmation of receipt takes no further action, he is normally not able to prove that that e-mail was received and, when necessary, on which date.

79 As regards the EAR's argument, put forward in the rejoinder, that the letter in question was not sent to the applicant by e-mail and by post, but solely by e-mail, contrary to what was stated in the statement in defence, the EAR offers no evidence in that connection. The 'fiche détail' [record sheet] produced as an annex to the rejoinder which refers to the sending of the letter in question on 9 October 2006 certainly cannot exclude the possibility that the letter was also sent by post. It should be noted that the EAR conceded, moreover, at the hearing, that that document did not demonstrate that the communication was not sent by post.

80 The EAR has therefore not demonstrated that the applicant had knowledge of the decision to cancel the tender procedure before 12 October 2006, the date on which the applicant acknowledges having received the letter of 9 October 2006. The period of two months laid down in the fifth paragraph of Article 230 EC, extended, under Article 102(2) of the Court's Rules of Procedure, by a period of 10 days on account of distance, therefore expired on 22 December 2006, the date on which the application was lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance.

81 It follows from the foregoing that the present action cannot be regarded as out of time in so far as it relates to annulment of the decision to cancel the tender procedure.

D – Admissibility of the action in so far as it relates to annulment of the decision to organise a new tender procedure

1. Arguments of the parties

82 The EAR and the Commission contend that the application for the annulment of the EAR's decision to organise a new tender procedure is inadmissible. As regards this head of claim the application does not comply with the essential procedural requirements laid down in Article 21 of the Statute of the Court of Justice and Article 44(1)(c) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, since the pleas put forward in the application relate only to the decision to cancel the tender procedure.

83 Furthermore, the decision to organise a tender procedure, whether it is a new invitation to tender or follows cancellation of another invitation to tender, is not of direct and individual concern to economic operators, even if they have submitted a tender in a previous procedure, which was then cancelled.

84 The applicant claims that the decision to publish a new invitation to tender resulted from the fact that – according to the EAR – the first tender procedure had no positive outcome. Were the decision to cancel the first tender procedure to be held unlawful, the subsequent decision to organise a new tender procedure would be the direct consequence of the EAR's unlawful conduct. The applicant claims that, should its action be upheld, that would reopen the first procedure and render the second devoid of purpose.

2. Findings of the Court

85 The Court has consistently held that only a measure whose legal effects are binding on the applicant and are capable of affecting his interests by bringing about a distinct change in his legal position is an act or decision which may be the subject of an action for annulment under Article 230 EC (see order in Case C-164/02 Netherlands v Commission [2004] ECR I-1177, paragraph 18, and case-law cited).

86 As a general rule, a decision to organise a tender procedure has no adverse effects, since it does no more than give to interested parties the possibility of taking part in the procedure and submitting a tender. The applicant has not put forward any arguments capable of showing that, in the present case, the decision to organise a new invitation to tender could none the less be regarded as adversely affecting it.

87 Accordingly, the applicant's argument that, should its action be upheld, that would reopen the first procedure and render the second devoid of purpose, is not capable of establishing that the decision to organise a new tender procedure adversely affects it. Equally, its argument that, were the decision to cancel the first tender procedure to be held unlawful, the subsequent decision to organise a new tender procedure would be the direct consequence of the EAR's unlawful conduct, is not capable of demonstrating that the latter decision adversely affects it. The mere fact that there is a link between one decision which adversely affects the applicant, namely the cancellation of the first tender procedure, and a second decision, namely the decision to organise a new tender procedure, does not mean that the second decision also adversely affects it.

88 Furthermore, it is clear that the decision to organise a new tender procedure for the same work as that covered by a procurement procedure which has been previously cancelled does not in itself mean that, if the Court annuls the decision to cancel the first procurement procedure, the contracting authority is no longer in a position to continue the first procedure. The decision to organise a new tender procedure does not necessarily involve the award of a contract covering the same work to another tenderer.

89 In light of the foregoing, it must be held that the applicant has not brought forward evidence to establish that the decision to organise a new tender procedure has legal effects which are binding on it and are capable of affecting its interests by bringing about a distinct change in its legal position.

90 It follows that the action must be dismissed as inadmissible in so far as the applicant seeks annulment of the decision to organise a new tender procedure, and it is unnecessary to examine whether the application meets the requirements of Article 44(1)(c) of the Rules of Procedure.

E – Admissibility of the action to the extent that the applicant asserts the rights of DOK ING

1. Preliminary observations

91 It must be borne in mind that the applicant states, in the application, that it is bringing the action on its own behalf and as agent of the company DOK ING. That relates, first, to the requests for annulment. Secondly, the applicant quantifies, in the application, both the damage which it claims to have suffered and the damage allegedly suffered by DOK ING, and asks the Court to order the EAR to pay to it the full amount of the sum in question.

92 The Court asked the applicant, by way of measures of organisation of procedure provided for in Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure, to supply details of the 'instructions' which it received from the company DOK ING, to lodge in the Court file any relevant documentation and to express a view on the admissibility of the manner in which it had chosen to proceed in order to defend the rights of the company DOK ING.

2. Arguments of the parties

93 The applicant claims, in reply to the question put by the Court, that it brought the present action in order to obtain suitable protection of its own rights and those of DOK ING, on the basis of existing agreements, as undertakings which had taken part in the tender procedure. It submits that the three documents which it has produced, at the request of the Court, show that it has authority to do so.

94 The EAR and the Commission consider that the present action is not admissible to the extent that the applicant asserts the rights of the company DOK ING.

3. Findings of the Court

95 It is, first of all, clear that Sogelma is the only applicant in the present case. In particular, neither DOK ING nor the consortium formed by the applicant and DOK ING are parties to these proceedings. Moreover, it must be noted that the applicant does not claim that DOK ING has assigned its rights to the applicant.

96 It is necessary therefore to examine whether the three documents which the applicant has produced, at the request of the Court, enable it to assert the rights of DOK ING in the context of the present proceedings.

97 As regards the document titled 'Joint Venture Agreement', dated 27 September 2005, Article 4 thereof provides that the applicant, as Group Leader, has authority in particular to assume obligations on behalf of DOK ING and that it may sign, on behalf of the joint venture, all documentation required for the performance of works covered by the contract. It must be pointed out that this agreement makes no reference to the possibility of the applicant bringing legal proceedings to assert the rights of DOK ING.

98 As regards the document titled 'Power of attorney', signed on 6 December 2005 by a representative of DOK ING, it must be observed that this also makes no reference to the possibility of the applicant bringing legal proceedings to assert the rights of DOK ING.

99 Only the third document submitted by the applicant, a letter from DOK ING dated 1 December 2006 and addressed to the applicant, relates to legal proceedings. That letter reads as follows:

'With reference to the above tender and the subsequent cancellation by the Contracting Authority, we her[e]by authorize you as the Joint Venture Leader, to instruct your lawyer to take legal action against the [EAR], for damages caused by the tender cancellation, also on our behalf.'

100 Accordingly, that document serves only to authorise the applicant to instruct its lawyer to take legal proceedings on behalf of DOK ING also. The document does not however deal with the form and content of the legal proceedings referred to and, consequently, provides no detail of those matters. In particular it does not provide that the applicant is entitled to bring legal proceedings in its name alone and to thereby assert the rights of DOK ING. It is clear that the fact that a company instructs a lawyer for the purpose of bringing legal proceedings also on behalf of a second company normally means that the lawyer will bring the action in the name of two applicants, or by means of two separate actions.

101 It is not acceptable for a company to assert in legal proceedings the rights of another company if it has not been unequivocally instructed to do so. There is an interest in having the status of applicant in order to be able to determine the scope of the case and, if necessary, to bring an appeal against the judgment to which an action gives rise. Moreover, a company which wishes to obtain payment of a certain sum as compensation for alleged damage normally wants the court to order the defendant to pay that sum to it and not to another company.

102 It follows from the foregoing that the documents provided by the applicant are not such as to establish that it was instructed by DOK ING to assert, as the sole applicant, the rights of the DOK ING before the Community judicature.

103 It follows that the action is inadmissible to the extent that the applicant asserts the rights of DOK ING.

F – Conclusion on the admissibility of the action

104 It follows from all of the foregoing that the action is admissible to the extent that the applicant seeks, on its own behalf, annulment of the decision to cancel the tender procedure and to the extent that it seeks damages in respect of the loss which it itself has suffered.

105 On the other hand, the action must be dismissed as inadmissible to the extent that the applicant seeks annulment of the EAR's decision to organise a new tender procedure and to the extent that it asserts the rights of DOK ING.

Substance

A – The claim for annulment of the decision to cancel the tender procedure 106 In support of its claim for annulment of the decision to cancel the tender procedure, the applicant relies on a single plea in law alleging infringement of essential procedural requirements. That plea has two parts, the first relating to an inadequate statement of reasons and the second to the claim that the statement of reasons is illogical and contradictory.

1. Arguments of the parties

(a) The first part of the single plea in law, alleging that the statement of reasons was inadequate

107 The applicant claims that the EAR did not, in relation to the decision to cancel the tender procedure, comply with the obligation to state reasons laid down in Article 41 of Directive 2004/18 which, in its opinion, is applicable to the EAR. The EAR was obliged to inform the tenderers, in good time and comprehensively, of all the grounds for the cancellation of the tender procedure, given the public interest and the urgency which should, in the applicant's opinion, have ensured that the contract was awarded quickly and satisfactorily, in light of the fact that the contract covered services in an area as sensitive as that in this case.

108 Taking account of the process which led to the taking of the contested decisions, there cannot, according to the applicant, be any doubt but that the cancellation of the procedure is the result of an ill-considered judgment, made without a thorough assessment of the public interest to be protected.

109 The EAR's conduct is even more serious in that almost seven months were needed in order to adopt and give notice of the decision to cancel the tender procedure.

110 The EAR and the Commission do not accept those arguments.

(b) The second part of the single plea in law, alleging that the statement of reasons was illogical and contradictory

111 The applicant considers that comparison of the EAR's letters of 9 October 2006 and 14 December 2006 could lead to the conclusion that the real reason for the decision to cancel the old procedure in order to initiate a new procedure is not to be found in the technical inadequacy of the tenders submitted but rather in a significant alteration of the technical requirements. The applicant considers that reference should be made to the later communication, namely the letter of 14 December 2006, in order to assess the EAR's conduct.

112 Furthermore, the statement of reasons provided in the letter of 9 October 2006, referring to the fact that the professional experience of one of the key experts proposed by the applicant was less than that specified in the Procurement Notice, is contradicted by the conduct of those in charge of evaluation of the tenders, who authorised calling on the applicant for underwater mine-clearing operations identical to those covered by the Procurement Notice, precisely because of the technical qualities of the applicant's experts and the technology used by the applicant.

113 The EAR and the Commission do not accept those arguments.

2. Findings of the Court

(a) Preliminary observations

114 It must first be decided which provisions and principles govern the obligation to state the reasons for the decision to cancel the tender procedure.

115 In that context, the Court must reject the applicant's argument that Directive 2004/18 applies to the procurement procedure at issue. The purpose of that directive which, according to Article 84 thereof, is addressed to Member States, is to coordinate national laws, regulations and administrative provisions applicable to the procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts. However, public contracts awarded by the EAR are not subject to the legislation of Member States.

116 It must be noted that public procurement by the Community institutions is subject to the provisions of the Financial Regulation and Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002, laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1, 'the Implementing Rules'). Under Article 162(1) of the Financial Regulation, external actions financed from the general budget of the European Communities are governed by Parts One (Common Provisions) and Three (Transitional and Final Provisions) of that regulation save as otherwise provided in Title IV (External Actions) of Part Two (Special Provisions). Article 7 of Regulation No 2666/2000 moreover expressly provides that the Commission is to implement the Community assistance covered by that regulation in accordance with the Financial Regulation.

117 The provisions which the Commission must respect as regards public procurement also apply to the EAR. Under Article 185(1) of the Financial Regulation, the Commission is to adopt a framework financial regulation for the bodies set up by the Communities and having legal personality which actually receive grants charged to the budget. Under Article 74 of Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2343/2002 of 23 December 2002 on the framework Financial Regulation for the bodies referred to in Article 185 of Regulation No 1605/2002 (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 72), the relevant provisions of the Financial Regulation and the Implementing Rules are to apply as regards procurement by those bodies.

118 Under Article 101 of the Financial Regulation, the decision to cancel a procurement procedure must be substantiated and brought to the attention of the candidates or tenderers.

119 Furthermore, it is settled case-law that the statement of reasons for a decision must show clearly and unequivocally the reasoning of the institution which enacted the measure so as to inform the persons concerned of the justification for the contested measure and to enable the Community judicature to exercise its powers of review (see Case C–22/94 Irish Farmers Association and Others [1997] ECR I–1809, paragraph 39, and case-law cited).

120 However it is not necessary for the decision to give all the relevant factual and legal details. The adequacy of the statement of the reasons on which a decision is based may be assessed with regard not only to its wording but also to the context in which it was adopted and to all the legal rules governing the matter in question (Case T–471/93 Tiercé Ladbroke v Commission [1995] ECR II–2537, paragraph 33). It is sufficient for the decision to set out, in a concise but clear and relevant manner, the principal issues of law and of fact (Case 24/62 Germany v Commission [1963] ECR, p. 63, at p. 69).

121 It is in regard to those considerations that the Court must examine whether the EAR has given a sufficient statement of the reasons for the decision to cancel the tender procedure.

(b) The first part of the single plea in law, alleging that the statement of reasons was insufficient

122 It must be recalled that the EAR stated, in the letter of 9 October 2006, that the contract award procedure had been cancelled due to the fact that none of the tenders received was technically compliant, and that the EAR added, in relation to the applicant's tender, that it had been decided that the 'Superintendent Survey Team' did not satisfy the requirements in point 16(x) of the Procurement Notice and point 4.2(x) of the Instructions to tenderers.

123 The statement of reasons provided for the cancellation of the tender procedure, namely the fact that none of the tenders received was technically compliant, although succinct, is clear and unambiguous. The statement of reasons given to explain, more particularly, why the applicant's offer did not comply, is also succinct, but again clear and unambiguous. The EAR referred to the points in the Procurement Notice and in the Instructions to tenderers which specify that the key personnel must have at least 10 years appropriate professional experience, and stated which member of the team proposed by the applicant did not satisfy that requirement.

124 In that regard, it must be noted that the applicant itself had stated, in the curriculum vitae of the person proposed for the post of 'Superintendent Survey Team' that that person had only five years professional experience. Consequently, it was unnecessary for the EAR to give further reasons for the conclusion that the applicant's tender did not satisfy the technical requirements of the tender procedure.

125 As regards the applicant's argument that cancellation of the procedure is the result of an ill–considered judgment, made without a thorough assessment of the public interest to be protected, it is clear that this does not in fact relate to an infringement of essential procedural requirements, but concerns the substance, since it amounts to an allegation of an error of assessment on the part of the EAR.

126 In any event, the facts put forward by the applicant are not such as to establish that the EAR committed a manifest error of assessment. True, there was a public interest in ensuring that unexploded ordnance in the inland waterway transport system of Serbia and Montenegro was removed as soon as possible in order to permit the re–opening of those waters to navigation. None the less, the mere fact that there is a public interest in a contract being awarded quickly does not allow the contracting authority to dispense with the obligatory technical requirements set out in the call for tenders. Under Article 100(1) of the Financial Regulation, the selection of the tenderer to whom the contract is to be awarded must be made in compliance with the selection and award criteria laid down in advance in the documents relating to the call for tenders. As is stated by the Commission, if a contracting authority could set aside the conditions of the contract, as originally prescribed, that would give an advantage to those who submitted tenders over those undertakings which had decided not to take part in the tender procedure owing to the fact that they – just like the tenderers – could not satisfy the requirements laid down in advance.

127 As regards the argument that the EAR was slow to take and give notice of the decision to cancel the procedure, it must be observed that the applicant does not explain what effect that fact could have on the legality of that decision.

(c) The second part of the single plea, that the statement of reasons was illogical and contradictory

128 The applicant claims, in essence, that there is a contradiction between the statement of reasons for the decision to cancel the tender procedure provided in the letter of 9 October 2006 and that given in the letter of 14 December 2006, in so far as in the former the explanation for that decision was that no tender was technically compliant, whereas the explanation in the latter was that the technical requirements had been changed.

129 First, the Court must reject the applicant's argument that reference should be made to the communication which is later in date, namely the letter of 14 December 2006, in order to assess the EAR's conduct. The letter informing the applicant of the cancellation of the tender procedure is that of 9 October 2006, and accordingly that is the letter which should be referred to in order to assess whether the statement of reasons for the decision to cancel the tender procedure is illogical and contradictory.

130 The letter of 9 October 2006 is not, in itself, contradictory. Even though the EAR provided another explanation in the letter of 14 December 2006, that cannot alter the statement of reasons for the decision which was sent two months earlier. Any difference between those two letters cannot therefore entail a contradiction in the statement of reasons provided for the decision to cancel the tender procedure.

131 In any event, there is no contradiction between the reasons given for the decision to cancel the tender procedure in the letter of 9 October 2006 and those given in the letter of 14 December 2006.

132 It must be noted that the letter of 14 December 2006 refers expressly to the fact that the EAR evaluation committee found that none of the tenders received was technically compliant and states that that committee made no other remarks. That letter therefore confirms that the sole reason for the decision to cancel the tender procedure was that no tender was technically adequate.

133 While that letter also states that the EAR was exercising its right to cancel the tender procedure and to initiate a new procedure due to the fact that the technical conditions had been considerably changed, that sentence must be understood in context. It is in fact expressly stated in the heading to the letter of 14 December 2006 that it is a reply to the applicant's letter of 13 November 2006. In that letter, the applicant had asked EAR to send to it a copy of the decision to cancel the tender procedure and the relevant minutes and also to take a reasoned decision on whether or not it would commence a negotiated procedure.

134 In that context, the sentence to the effect that the EAR was exercising its right to cancel the tender procedure and to initiate a new procedure due to the fact that the technical conditions had been considerably changed must be understood to mean that the EAR was explaining why it had decided to initiate a new procedure instead of commencing a negotiated procedure.

135 Furthermore, the applicant itself states, in its reply, that the new justification appears to have been put forward solely in order to respond to its request for recourse to a negotiated procedure. In that regard, it must be observed that a decision to cancel a tender procedure is distinct from a decision relating to the subsequent action to be taken, namely a decision not to award the contract, to have recourse to a negotiated procedure, or to organise a new tender procedure. It cannot be inferred from the fact that the EAR mentioned, in response to the request for recourse to a negotiated procedure, reasons other than those given to explain the cancellation of the tender procedure, that there is any contradiction in the statement of reasons.

136 Moreover, it must be noted that, once a tender procedure is cancelled, that procedure is at an end and the contracting authority is entirely at liberty to decide on what subsequent action to take. There is no provision which confers on an economic operator the right to have a negotiated procedure set in motion. The EAR was therefore not obliged to take a formal decision in relation to the applicant's proposal that such a procedure should commence. The letter of 14 December 2006 is quite simply a reply to the applicant's letter of 13 November 2006, in which it asked the EAR, inter alia, to take a reasoned decision on whether or not to initiate a negotiated procedure, which led the EAR to inform the applicant, in the interests of sound administration, why the EAR had decided to initiate a new tender procedure instead of a negotiated procedure.

137 The Court must also reject the applicant's argument that the statement of reasons provided in the letter of 9 October 2006 is at variance with the fact that the applicant was subsequently awarded a public contract similar to that at issue in the present case. The statement of reasons provided in the letter of 9 October 2006 relates to the fact that the technical requirements of the tender procedure had not been complied with, a fact which the applicant moreover does not dispute, since it acknowledges that the 'Superintendent Survey Team' included in its tender did not possess the requisite professional experience. That reasoning does not imply that the applicant is incapable of carrying out such work.

138 As regards the applicant's argument that the letter of 14 December 2006 shows that the real reason for the cancellation of the tender procedure was not the technical inadequacy of the tenders received but the alteration of the technical requirements, it is clear that this, in fact, does not relate to an error in the statement of reasons for the decision to cancel the tender procedure but rather challenges the truthfulness of that statement of reasons, which amounts in essence to contesting that decision as to its substance, alleging misuse of powers.

139 According to settled case-law, misuse of powers is defined as the adoption by a Community institution of a measure with the exclusive or main purpose of achieving an end other than that stated or evading a procedure specifically prescribed by the Treaty for dealing with the circumstances of the case (see Case C–84/94 United Kingdom v Council [1996] ECR I–5755, paragraph 69, and case–law cited).

140 In the present case, it has already been determined that there is no contradiction between the statement of reasons provided in the letter of 9 October 2006 and that provided in the letter of 14 December 2006.

141 In addition, the Commission correctly states that notice of the cancellation decision was given to the public in the Official Journal with the same statement of reasons as that provided in the letter of 9 October 2006 (OJ 2006, S 198). That statement of reasons reads as follows: 'The tender process has been cancelled since none of the offers received was technically compliant'.

142 In those circumstances, it is impossible to infer from the subsequent conduct of the EAR that the real reason for the cancellation of the procedure was other than that set out in the letter of 9 October 2006.

143 It follows from the foregoing that the applicant's claim for annulment of the decision to cancel the tender procedure must be dismissed as unfounded.

B – The request for compensation for damage allegedly suffered

1. Arguments of the parties

144 The applicant considers that the fact that the contract at issue was not awarded is due to the unlawful conduct of the EAR and that has caused it to suffer damage. That damage comprises the expenses needlessly incurred in the framing of the tender and the making available of some of the equipment required over a period of 60 days, and amounts to a total of EUR 118 604.58.

145 The EAR does not accept the applicant's arguments.

2. Findings of the Court

146 It is settled case-law that, for the Community to incur non-contractual liability within the meaning of the second paragraph of Article 288 EC, a series of conditions must be met, namely the conduct of which the institutions are accused must have been unlawful, the damage must be real and a causal connection must exist between that conduct and the damage in question (Case 153/73 Holtz & Willemsen v Council and Commission [1974] ECR 675, paragraph 7, and Case T–19/01 Chiquita Brands and Others v Commission [2005] ECR II–315, paragraph 76).

147 In so far as those three conditions governing liability must be satisfied cumulatively, the fact that one of them has not been satisfied is a sufficient basis on which to dismiss an action for damages (Case C–257/98 P Lucaccioni v Commission [1999] ECR I–5251, paragraph 14).

148 In the present case, all the arguments which the applicant has presented in order to establish that the decision to cancel the tender procedure was unlawful have been examined and rejected (see paragraphs 122 to 143 above). The applicant therefore cannot claim damages on the basis of the alleged unlawfulness of the decision.

149 As regards the applicant's argument that the EAR took an unreasonably long time to take the decision to cancel the tender procedure and to inform the applicant, it is clear that the mere fact that more than six months elapsed between the sending of the last request for clarification to the tenderers and the notification of the decision to cancel the tender procedure cannot be characterised as unlawful conduct on the part of the EAR.

150 It is moreover clear that there can be no causal link between the time taken by the EAR to take and give notice of the decision to cancel the tender procedure and the expenses incurred by the applicant in order to frame its tender.

151 It follows from the foregoing that the application for compensation for damage allegedly suffered must be rejected.

C – The request for production of documents

152 As regards the applicant's request that the Court order the EAR to produce all the documents relating to the award procedure at issue, it must be noted that, according to the case-law, to enable the Court to determine whether it is conducive to the proper conduct of the procedure to order the production of certain documents, the party requesting production must identify the documents requested and provide the Court with at least minimum information indicating the utility of those documents for the purposes of the proceedings (Case C–185/95 P Baustahlgewebe v Commission [1998] ECR I–8417, paragraph 93).

153 In support of that request, the applicant claims that the EAR has provided explanations that are general and succinct in support of its decisions and that it had asked the EAR to produce those documents, but had no response. Furthermore, the applicant argues that it has the right to know the reasons which led to cancellation of the tender procedure so as to be assured that the contracting authority's acts are lawful.

154 As regards, first, the fact that the applicant requested from the EAR production of documents relating to the award procedure and that that request met with no response, it must be observed that that fact is not in itself capable of demonstrating the utility of those documents for the purposes of the proceedings.

155 In relation, secondly, to the applicant's argument that the EAR provided explanations which were general and succinct in support of its decisions, it has been determined, in paragraphs 123 and 124 above, that the EAR communicated to the applicant an adequate statement of reasons for its decision to cancel the tender procedure. In that regard, the Court has sufficient information in the documents on the court file and it does not, moreover, appear that the documents relating to the award procedure could serve any purpose in the assessment of the adequacy of the statement of reasons provided.

156 As regards, third and last, the applicant's argument that it has the right to know the reasons which led to cancellation of the tender procedure so as to be assured of the legality of the contracting authority's acts, it must be held that the applicant has presented no objective evidence to suggest that the real reason for the cancellation of the procedure differs from that set out in the letter of 9 October 2006 (see paragraphs 140 to 142 above).

157 In that context, it must be observed that an application for the production of all the documents relating to the award procedure at issue, as sought by the applicant, is equivalent to a request for the production of the EAR's internal file. It is clear that examination by the Community judicature of the internal file of a Community body with a view to verifying whether that body's decision was influenced by factors other than those indicated in the statement of the reasons is an exceptional measure of inquiry. Such a measure presupposes that the circumstances surrounding the decision in question give rise to serious doubts as to the real reasons and in particular, to suspicions that those reasons were extraneous to the objectives of Community law and hence amounted to a misuse of powers (see, to that effect, as regards decisions of the Commission, order in Joined Cases 142/84 and 156/84 BAT and Reynolds v Commission [1986] ECR 1899, paragraph 11). However, it is clear that in the present case there are no such circumstances.

158 It follows from the foregoing that the applicant has not presented evidence to demonstrate the utility of all the documents relating to the award procedure being produced for the purposes of these proceedings. The request for production of those documents must therefore be rejected.

Costs

159 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings.

160 Since the applicant has been unsuccessful, the applicant must be ordered to pay the costs, as applied for by the EAR.

161 Furthermore, the first paragraph of Article 87(4) of the Rules of Procedure states that institutions which intervened in the proceedings are to bear their costs. It follows that the Commission must bear its own costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Eighth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Dismisses the action;

2. Orders Sogelma – Societá generale lavori manutenzioni appalti Srl to bear its own costs and to pay those incurred by the European Agency for Reconstruction;

3. Orders the Commission to bear its own costs.

Action brought on 22 December 2006 - SO.GE.L.M.A. v EAR

(Case T-411/06)

Language of the case: Italian

Parties

Applicant: SO.GE.L.M.A. (Scandicci, Italy) (represented by: E. Cappelli, P. De Caterini, A. Bandini and A. Gironi, avvocati)

Defendant: European Agency for Reconstruction

Form of order sought

The applicant claims that the Court should:

annul the decisions of the EAR cancelling the works tender procedure "Restoring of Unhindered Navigation (removal of unexploded ordnance) in the Inland Waterway Transport System, Republic of Serbia, Serbia and Montenegro" (Publication Reference No: EuropeAid/120694/D/W/YU, Project No 05SER01 04 01) and launching a new tender procedure, communicated by AER letter of 9 October 2006, Prot. D (06)DG/MIL/EP 2715 and AER letter of 14 December 2006, Prot. DG/mie/3313, together with all other prior or connected acts, including the decision excluding the applicant, and, in any case, order the European Agency for Reconstruction to pay damages to the applicant in the amount specified in the application; order the European Agency for Reconstruction to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The object of the tender procedure at issue in the present case was the award of a public works contract for works consisting in the identification and clearance of unexploded military ordnance left over from the aerial bombardment carried out by NATO in 1999, with a view to re-opening the waterways of the Danube and the Sava for inland navigation.

After its tender had been found to be the most suitable, the applicant received a first request for clarifications, which were provided without delay. In particular, precise reasons were given for the presence, as leader of the aquatic survey team, of a person who had high qualifications but whose work experience fell short of that specified in the call for tenders.

Following professional contacts with a consultancy which had provided the European Agency for Reconstruction with advice in respect of the tender procedure in question, on the basis of which the applicant was led to expect a positive outcome, the applicant was informed that the tender procedure had been cancelled for lack of tenders which were technically suitable, and it became clear that there was an intention to issue a new call for tenders.

In support of its claims, the applicant alleges infringement of Article 41 of Directive 2004/18 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts[1] and, more generally, breach of the principles that govern Community legislation on public procurement procedures, in so far as the annulment of the tendering procedure in question was the result of a choice made without careful reflection and without an in-depth assessment of the public interest to be safeguarded. Secondly, the applicant alleges failure to comply with the obligation to state reasons.

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 30 January 2008,

gives the following

Judgment

Legal context

1 The Commission's procedure for the award of contracts for services is governed by the provisions of Title V of Part One of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1; 'the Financial Regulation') and the provisions of Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1; 'the Implementing Regulation'), in the version applicable to the facts of the present case.

2 According to Article 89(1) of the Financial Regulation:

‘All public contracts financed in whole or in part by the budget shall comply with the principles of transparency, proportionality, equal treatment and non-discrimination.’

3 Article 92 of the Financial Regulation provides that ‘a full, clear and precise description of the subject of the contract must be given in the documents relating to the call for tenders’.

4 Article 93(1) of the Financial Regulation specifies the cases in which candidates or tenderers are to be excluded from participation in a procurement procedure and Article 94 of the Financial Regulation specifies the cases in which contracts may not be awarded to candidates or tenderers.

5 Article 97 of the Financial Regulation provides:

‘1. The selection criteria for evaluating the capability of candidates or tenderers and the award criteria for evaluating the content of the tenders shall be defined in advance and set out in the call for tender.

2. Contracts may be awarded by the automatic award procedure or by the best-value-for-money procedure.’

6 Article 100 of the Financial Regulation provides as follows:

‘1. The authorising officer shall decide to whom the contract is to be awarded, in compliance with the selection and award criteria laid down in advance in the documents relating to the call for tenders and the procurement rules.

2. The contracting authority shall notify all candidates or tenderers whose applications or tenders are rejected of the grounds on which the decision was taken, and all tenderers whose tenders are admissible and who make a request in writing of the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the tenderer to whom the contract is awarded.

However, certain details need not be disclosed where disclosure would hinder application of the law, would be contrary to the public interest or would harm the legitimate business interests of public or private undertakings or could distort fair competition between those undertakings.’

7 Article 135(1) of the Implementing Regulation provides:

‘The contracting authorities shall draw up clear and non-discriminatory selection criteria.’

8 Finally, Article 149 of the Implementing Regulation provides as follows:

‘1. The contracting authorities shall as soon as possible inform candidates and tenderers of decisions reached concerning the award of the contract or framework contract or admission to a dynamic purchasing system, including the grounds for any decision not to award a contract or framework contract, or set up a dynamic purchasing system, for which there has been competitive tendering or to recommence the procedure.

2. The contracting authority shall, within not more than 15 calendar days from the date on which a written request is received, communicate the information provided for in Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation.

3. In the case of contracts awarded by the Community institutions on their own account, under Article 105 of the Financial Regulation, the contracting authority shall inform all unsuccessful tenderers or candidates, simultaneously and individually, as soon as possible after the award decision and within the following week at the latest, by mail and fax or email, that their application or tender has not been accepted; specifying in each case the reasons why the tender or application has not been accepted.

The contracting authority shall, at the same time as the unsuccessful candidates or tenderers are informed that their tenders or applications have not been accepted, inform the successful tenderer of the award decision, specifying that the decision notified does not constitute a commitment on the part of the contracting authority.

Unsuccessful tenderers or candidates may request additional information about the reasons for their rejection in writing by mail, fax or email, and all tenderers who have put in an admissible tender may obtain information about the characteristics and relative merits of the tender accepted and the name of the successful tenderer, without prejudice to the second subparagraph of Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation. The contracting authority shall reply within no more than 15 calendar days from receipt of the request.

The contracting authority may not sign the contract or framework contract with the successful tenderer until two calendar weeks have elapsed from the day after the simultaneous dispatch of the rejection and award decisions. If necessary it may suspend signing of the contract for additional examination if justified by the requests or comments made by unsuccessful tenderers or candidates during the two calendar weeks following the rejection or award decisions or any other relevant information received during that period. In that event all the candidates or tenderers shall be informed within three working days following the suspension decision.'

9 Article 149(3) of the Implementing Regulation stems from Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1261/2005 of 20 July 2005, amending Regulation No 2342/2002 which laid down the Implementing Regulation (OJ 2005 L 201, p. 3), recital 5 in the preamble to which states:

'It is also appropriate to lay down a procedure for informing unsuccessful candidates and tenderers in procurement procedures conducted by the institutions on their own account. Such information should be provided before the contract is signed and should give the unsuccessful candidates and tenderers the reasons why their application or tender has been rejected. The introduction of such an information procedure is designed to make the institutions subject to an obligation imposed on the Member States by the Court of Justice of the European Communities.'

The factual background to the proceedings

10 The applicant, Evropaïki Dynamiki – Proigmena Systimata Tilepikoinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE, is a company incorporated under Greek law operating in the sector of information and communications technology.

11 By a contract notice of 31 May 2006, published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2006 S 102), the Commission issued an invitation to tender for services to support the system of registries established under Directive 2003/87/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 October 2003 establishing a scheme for greenhouse gas emission allowance trading within the Community and amending Council Directive 96/61/EC (OJ 2003 L 275, p. 32), the Community independent transaction log ('CITL'), together with technical maintenance and user support.

12 Under Directive 2003/87 and Commission Regulation (EC) No 2216/2004 of 21 December 2004 for a standardised and secured system of registries pursuant to Directive 2003/87 and Decision No 280/2004/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council (OJ 2004 L 386, p. 1), adopted in order to implement it, the Commission is required to establish, operate and maintain the CITL, which records the greenhouse gas emission allowances issued, transferred and cancelled. As this scheme necessitates the services of professional information technology specialists, who were previously provided by the CITL's developer, the Commission launched the invitation to tender in issue in the present case.

13 The invitation to tender comprised a section headed 'technical description' a section relating to administrative details and a section setting out the selection and award criteria.

14 The section of the invitation to tender headed 'technical description' recorded the general background to the contract and described its objectives. It stated that the tasks can be divided into two main groups, called respectively 'user support profile' and 'technical profile'. The nature of the tasks was explained for each of the two groups in eight points. With regard to the second group, 'technical profile', it is also stated that:

'the CITL is a webservices based system … The system will not need major improvements. We only anticipate that it will need minor updates and enhancements to follow the developments of the market. Global corrective maintenance is to be expected.'

15 The 'technical description' part of the invitation to tender included a point 4 entitled 'Experience required of the Contractor', which stated in particular as follows:

'In carrying out the assignment the Contractor should preferably possess the following specific skills and expertise:

(a) Deep understanding of the business area

...

(d) For the staff undertaking the technical services: deep understanding of the architecture of the registries system and of the technologies employed in programming the Community Registry and CITL applications and deployed in the hosting environment, and of the functional and technical specifications of the Community Registry and the CITL.'

16 The administrative part of the invitation to tender showed the budget allocated to the contract (a maximum of EUR 265 000), specified the requirements relating to the technical proposal and indicated the maximum number of pages of the tender, namely 20 in the present case, excluding the annexes.

17 Finally, the third part of the invitation to tender set out the three stages in the examination of tenders. It stated as follows:

'The procedure of the award of the contract, which will concern only admissible bids, will be carried out in three successive stages. Only bids meeting the requirements of stage one will be examined in the following stages.

The aim of each of these stages is:

Stage 1: to check, in the first stage (exclusion criteria) whether tenderers can take part in the tendering procedure and, where applicable, be awarded the contract (see annex 3).

Stage 2: to check, in the second stage (selection criteria), the technical and professional capacity as well as the economic and financial capacity of each tenderer who has passed the exclusion stage (see Part 3, point 2 – selection criteria).

Stage 3: to assess on the basis of the award criteria each bid which has passed the exclusion and selection stages (see Part 3, point 3 – Award criteria).'

18 After giving details of the criteria for exclusion and selection, the invitation to tender listed the three criteria for award of the contract as follows:

'Award criteria 1 – Understanding (max points 40)

This criterion is used to assess the degree to which the tender shows a clear understanding of the objectives and tasks of the study/service to be provided.

Award criteria 2 – Project management and availability (max points 35)

This criterion relates to the quality of project planning, the organisation of the team with a view to managing a project of this nature and the availability of the resources for the completion of the contractual tasks.

Award criteria 3 – Methodology (max points 25)

This criterion assesses the suitability and strength of the proposal as measured against the requirements of the specification in terms of the technical content, completeness, originality of ideas (where appropriate) and proposed effort.'

19 A points system was laid down for assessment of the tenders by reference to each of the three award criteria. First, a minimum points threshold was specified for each criterion. The threshold was 24 points for the 'Understanding' criterion, 22 points for 'Project management and availability' and 16 points for 'Methodology'. Secondly, an overall minimum of 65 points was required. Tenders obtaining the minimum points required were deemed to be technically sufficient for the purposes of the criteria and were then examined to determine the best-value-for-money tender by dividing the price by the total number of points.

20 Annex 2 to the invitation to tender consisted of a model table relating to the financial part of the tender, entitled:

'Annex 2 – Financial offer template

(For Guidance Purposes only)

Price and estimated Budget breakdown'.

21 By two faxes of 6 July 2006, the applicant asked the Commission for clarification concerning the invitation to tender (15 questions in all) relating in particular to the meaning of a 'deep understanding' of the business area, which the invitation to tender required from bidders, and how that could be demonstrated in the tender. The applicant also asked the Commission for an estimate of the effort required per year and per task and for details of the description of tasks, in particular the operational hours of the user support service.

22 The Commission replied to the 15 questions from the applicant by fax of 10 July 2006. With regard to a 'deep understanding', it referred to the passage in the invitation to tender concerning the experience which the contractor was required to have and explained what was envisaged by the term. With regard to the estimate of the effort required, the Commission replied that it could not be estimated with reasonable certainty. The Commission stated that the user support service operated from 08.00 to 18.00 on weekdays.

23 Also on 10 July 2006, the applicant sent a further request for clarification to the Commission in which it stressed that the term 'deep understanding' was subjective and not quantifiable and asked how it could demonstrate that it was able to meet that requirement.

24 The Commission replied by fax of 11 July 2006, referring to its previous reply.

25 On 12 July 2006, the applicant submitted its tender to the Commission, which states that it received a total of four tenders.

26 By letter and fax of 19 October 2006 the Commission informed the applicant that its tender had been rejected at the award stage in the following terms:

'Your organisation failed to represent the best case of value for money in accordance with the award criteria set out in the call for tender. Even though your offer passed the selection and exclusion criteria, we regret to inform you that it had not been retained after detailed examination by the evaluation committee of all the offers submitted to [the Directorate General] Environment. Specifically, the evaluation committee concluded:

1. Understanding: The authors have a good understanding of the project. They do however provide sufficient material to show their understanding of the technical aspect of this contract. There is, nevertheless, a concern that there is much repetition in their offer.

2. Methodology: European Dynamics has underestimated the amount of man-days necessary to cover the user support and only offers 30 man-days for this task. This is unfortunate as they could have offered the necessary days and still be under the Commission's estimated budget. The offer is not balanced between the two parts of the contract but is concentrated on the technical part. The committee does not feel that the proposed team and the distribution of the workload would be sufficient to cover the needs for this contract.

3. Project management and availability: The presentation of the methodology is very detailed and long but this has [the] effect that it is not focused. Nevertheless European Dynamics presents a methodology that could do the job. There are no interesting new ideas on how to approach the tasks.'

27 The Commission also stated that the contract would not be signed for two calendar weeks from the day following the date on which its letter was sent. The Commission added that any request from the applicant for information and any reply from the Commission could not be regarded as suspending the two-month deadline for lodging an appeal against the contract award decision.

28 By letter and fax of the same date, namely 19 October 2006, the applicant asked the Commission to inform it of the name of the successful tenderer and the scores awarded to its own technical offer and to that of the successful tenderer, and to send the applicant a copy of the evaluation committee's report and a comparison of its own financial offer with that of the successful tenderer. The applicant added that it would like a reply by fax or email, and set out its contact details.

29 By letter of 26 October 2006, which the applicant states that it received only on 14 November 2006, the Commission informed the applicant that it had been eliminated because the minimum points required for the 'Project management and availability' criterion had not been obtained. The Commission referred to the evaluation committee's findings, giving the number of points obtained by the applicant for each award criterion, together with the name of the successful tenderer and the number of points it obtained.

30 By letter and fax of 13 November 2006, the applicant sent the Commission a letter reminding it of the applicant's request of 19 October 2006 and adding a request for clarification concerning the evaluation committee's assessment with regard to the fact that the applicant's offer had underestimated the number of man-days necessary in offering only 30 man-days.

31 The Commission signed the contract with the successful tenderer on 14 November 2006. It is apparent from the arguments put forward before the Court at the hearing of 30 January 2008 that that signature renders formal the decision to award the tender, which therefore dates from 14 November 2006.

32 By fax of 16 November 2006, the applicant drew attention to the delay in the delivery of the Commission's response dated 26 October 2006, which it stated it received only on 14 November 2006, and repeated its request for a full copy of the evaluation committee's report, adding that the Commission could keep confidential those parts of the report which did not concern the applicant or the successful tenderer.

33 The applicant also disputed the evaluation of its tender in relation to the three award criteria. With regard to the 'Understanding' criterion, it submitted that its tender was clear and concise. With regard to 'Project management and availability', it described the Commission's letters of 19 and 26 October 2006 as 'confusing' in that the evaluation under the heading 'Methodology' in the letter of 19 October 2006 was the same as that under the heading 'Project management and availability' in the letter of 26 October 2006 and vice versa. The applicant also provided a table showing the profiles of the proposed experts and the number of man-days allocated to each of them, as well as the total man-days (410 man-days a year). The applicant stated that the number of 30 man-days mentioned for covering the user support part was mistaken. It added that it was obvious from the curriculum vitae of the persons proposed that they were capable of covering more than one function if necessary. The applicant also denied that its offer was unbalanced, as the technical part consisted of six pages and the user support part of four pages.

34 In addition, the applicant asked for detailed information on the successful tenderer's offer. Regarding the proposed budget, the applicant stated that its offer was lower than that chosen. Finally, the applicant disputed the decision to award it a number of points which disqualified it on the second criterion and, having regard to its observations, invited the Commission to suspend the procedure for signature of the contract with the successful tenderer.

35 On 24 November 2006, the Commission replied to the applicant that the contract had been signed with the successful tenderer on 14 November 2006 and that the applicant's comments and request for re-examination, received by fax on 16 November 2006, were too late in view of the period laid down by Article 149(3) of the Implementing Regulation, which had expired on 3 November 2006.

36 On 28 November 2006, the applicant sent its comments to the Commission.

37 By fax of 30 November 2006, the Commission sent the applicant an extract from the evaluation report in a non-confidential version pursuant to Article 100 of the Financial Regulation. The Commission stated that it could not disclose details concerning the other tenderers which would harm their business interests. The document in question, dated 29 August 2006, contained, first, a note of the exclusion, selection and award criteria and, secondly, a table showing the number of points awarded for each award criterion to the applicant, its total points and the price it had proposed. The name of the successful tenderer appeared in the table, together with its total points and the price it offered. With regard to the other two unsuccessful tenderers, only their names were given. Finally, the report contained, for each tenderer, the evaluation committee's analysis of their respective offers and the committee's conclusions, which proposed that the contract be awarded to the successful tenderer finally chosen by the Commission. Only the part of the analysis relating to the applicant was shown. It was worded as follows:

'1. The authors have a good understanding of the project. They do however provide sufficient material to show their understanding of the technical aspect of this contract. There is, nevertheless, a concern that there is much repetition in their offer.

2. European Dynamics has underestimated the amount of man-days necessary to cover the user support and only offers 30 man-days for this task. This is unfortunate as they could have offered the necessary days and still be under the Commission's estimated budget. The offer is not balanced between the two parts of the contract but is concentrated on the technical part. The committee does not feel that the proposed team and the distribution of the workload would be sufficient to cover the needs for this contract.

3. The presentation of the methodology is very detailed and long but this has the effect that it is not focused. Nevertheless European Dynamics presents a methodology that could do the job. There are no interesting new ideas on how to approach the tasks.

Evaluation committee's comment on sub-contracting: there is no sub-contracting.

This offer failed to obtain technical sufficiency for award criteria 2. It is therefore not selected.'

Procedure and forms of order sought

38 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 28 December 2006, the applicant brought the present action.

39 On hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court of First Instance (First Chamber) decided to open the oral procedure. The parties presented oral argument and answered the questions put to them by the Court at the hearing on 30 January 2008.

40 The applicant claims that the Court should:

– annul the decisions to reject its tender and to award the contract to the successful tenderer;

– order the Commission to compensate it for the loss suffered as a result of the procurement procedure in question, which it assesses at EUR 86 300;

– order the Commission to pay the costs, even if the present action is dismissed.

41 The Commission contends that the Court should:

– dismiss the action;

– order the applicant to pay the costs.

Law

1. The application for annulment

42 The Court observes, as a preliminary point, that the applicant is seeking the annulment of the decision of 19 October 2006 to reject its tender and of the decision of 14 November 2006 to award the contract to another tenderer.

43 Having regard to the close connection between those two decisions and inasmuch as the applicant's arguments concern the decision to reject its tender, the Court is of the opinion that it is appropriate to examine first the lawfulness of the second of those decisions ('the contested decision').

44 The applicant raises two pleas in law. The first alleges multiple and manifest errors of assessment which the evaluation committee is alleged to have made in assessing the applicant's offer and the infringement of the principles of equal treatment and transparency. In the second plea, the applicant alleges that the merits of the successful tenderer were not disclosed and that the contested decision lacks a proper statement of reasons.

45 The Court will consider, first of all, the second complaint set out in the second plea, relating to the lack of a proper statement of reasons, then the first plea, alleging manifest errors of assessment, and, lastly, the first complaint set out in the second plea, concerning the failure to disclose the merits of the successful tenderer.

Lack of a proper statement of reasons

46 The applicant claims, on several occasions, that the contested decision must be regarded as failing to state adequate reasons. It claims, in the plea alleging that the relative merits of the successful tender were not disclosed, that the Commission informed it on 26 October 2006 merely of the successful tenderer's identity and of the number of points it had received (88 out of 100), without stating the relative merits of the successful tender compared with the applicant's tender, contrary to Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation. In addition, in the course of its arguments alleging manifest errors of assessment, it claims that the Commission is attempting to justify the contested decision retrospectively, which leads to discrepancies, demonstrating, in the applicant's view, the lack of reasoning behind the contested decision.

47 It must be borne in mind, first of all, that the obligation to state reasons is an essential procedural requirement, as distinct from the question whether the reasons given are correct, which goes to the substantive legality of the contested measure (Case C-17/99 France v Commission [2001] ECR I-2481, paragraph 35).

48 In addition, pursuant to Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation and Article 149(2) of the Implementing Regulation, the Commission was under a duty to notify the applicant of the grounds on which its offer was rejected and, the applicant having submitted an admissible tender, of the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the tenderer to whom the contract was awarded, within not more than 15 calendar days from the date on which a written request was received.

49 Such a course of action is consistent with the duty to state reasons laid down in Article 253 EC, according to which the reasoning followed by the authority which adopted the measure must be disclosed in a clear and unequivocal fashion so as, on the one hand, to make the persons concerned aware of the reasons for the measure and thereby enable them to defend their rights and, on the other, to enable the Court to exercise its power of review (Case T–19/95 Adia interim v Commission [1996] ECR II-321, paragraph 32, and judgment of 12 July 2007 in Case T-250/05 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, not published in the ECR, paragraphs 68 and 69).

50 Moreover, the observance of the duty to state reasons must be assessed in the light of the information available to the applicant at the time the application was brought (see Case T-183/00 Strabag Benelux v Council [2003] ECR II-135, paragraph 58, and Case T–4/01 Renco v Council [2003] ECR II–171, paragraph 96).

51 In the present case, it is accepted that the contested decision sets out the grounds on which the offer was rejected. Accordingly, by letter and fax of 19 October 2006, the Commission informed the applicant that its tender had been rejected at the award stage and reproduced the evaluation committee's findings on each of the award criteria.

52 In addition, in response to a written request from the applicant, also dated 19 October 2006, the Commission, by letter of 26 October 2006, informed the applicant that it had been eliminated because the minimum points required for the 'Project management and availability' criterion had not been obtained. The Commission referred to the evaluation committee's findings, giving the number of points obtained by the applicant for each award criterion. It also stated the name of the successful tenderer, the price that tenderer had offered for the contract and the number of points it had obtained.

53 Although it appears that the letter of 19 October 2006 notifying the applicant of the rejection of its tender reversed the titles of two of the award criteria, that reversal cannot, however, be regarded as a failure in the contested decision to give adequate reasons. In the light of the content of each of the assessments, the wording of the invitation to tender, the content of the letter of 26 October 2006 and the extract from the minutes of the evaluation committee sent to the applicant on 30

November 2006, the applicant was able to identify the specific reasons for the decision to reject its offer, so that that reversal is of no relevance in the present case.

54 Consequently, the argument alleging a failure to give a proper statement of reasons must be rejected.

The first plea, alleging manifest errors of assessment and infringement of the principles of equal treatment and transparency

55 The Court will consider first the arguments raised in respect of the manifest errors of assessment allegedly committed by the evaluation committee, and then the arguments raised in respect of infringement of the principles of equal treatment and transparency.

The existence of manifest errors of assessment

– Arguments of the parties

56 First, the applicant disputes the evaluation committee's assessment concerning the 'Project management and availability' criterion, for which it obtained only 20 out of 35 points, whereas the minimum required was 22 points. Specifically, it denies that there was a 'lack of balance' in its offer. It submits, on the contrary, that the part concerning technical services, dealt with in pages 23 to 29 of its offer, and that relating to user support services, analysed in pages 20 to 23 of its offer, addressed the needs of the contracting authority precisely as they were described in the invitation to tender and complied with the limitations imposed on tender volume.

57 It adds that, if the user support element were so important, the specifications should have mentioned that fact. The Commission itself was unable to provide an estimate of the effort required in this respect when the applicant requested one from it on 10 July 2006.

58 The applicant also challenges the evaluation committee's finding that it underestimated the resources necessary for user support. That committee wrongly assumed that the 30 days allocated for the quality manager was the total number of man–days provided for user support. The applicant claims that, on the contrary, it is evident from its technical offer that the senior analyst, the software and database architect and the senior software engineer were to be involved with user support, that activity also calling for information technology skills. The man-days estimate for the user support activity would therefore amount to approximately 190 man-days, the allocation being 40 man-days for the senior analyst, 40 man-days for the software and database architect and 40 man-days for senior software engineer. It adds that, in the light of the skills, experience and seniority of the proposed personnel and the distribution of the workload, the proposed team was more than adequate to carry out the services envisaged in the contract. It states that it followed the template in the tendering documents and that the breakdown of the number of man-days could not be presented in more detail having regard to the standard reply form in the tender specification.

59 The applicant submits, moreover, that user support is not very different to the technical profile, that the nature of the work to be carried out requires essentially the same type of expertise and that the persons carrying out those functions have to be primarily information technology experts. It claims that it provided a balanced team of multi-disciplinary experts able to carry out all aspects of the work required.

60 In addition, in the reply it disputes the low technical marks awarded to the two proposed experts and states that their rate of pay was found to be entirely satisfactory by the Commission in other contracts.

61 Secondly, as regards the 'Understanding' criterion, the applicant disputes the evaluation committee's assessment that its offer was repetitive. It claims that the evaluation committee, which awarded it 30 points out of 40, failed to give sufficient justification for its decision. It adds, in its reply, that its offer merely addressed all the aspects of the project in order to explain how it would tackle them, following the requested structure and without any superfluous repetition, in particular as regards the software at issue in the present case and its various uses.

62 Thirdly, as regards the 'Methodology' criterion, in respect of which the applicant obtained 18 points out of 25, the minimum required being 16 points, it observes that the evaluation committee claimed that its offer was not focused enough and did not contain any interesting new ideas. The applicant submits that this evaluation is arbitrary and unjustified.

63 The Commission disputes the applicant's arguments.

– Findings of the Court

64 As a preliminary point, it must be noted that it is settled case-law that the Commission has broad discretion with regard to the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender, and that review by the Court must be limited to checking that the rules governing the procedure and statement of reasons are complied with, the facts are correct and there is no manifest error of assessment or misuse of powers (Case 56/77 Agence européenne d'intérims v Commission [1978] ECR 2215, paragraph 20; see Evropïki Dynamiki v Commission, cited in paragraph 49 above, paragraph 89 and the case-law cited).

65 In the present case, the applicant claims the Commission committed several manifest errors of assessment in the evaluation of its offer.

66 As regards the 'Project management and availability' criterion, the applicant disputes the evaluation committee's finding that its offer lacked balance and gave undue weight to the technical part of the contract. It submits that the evaluation committee was wrong to consider that the applicant was offering only 30 man-days for the support services and that it had, in doing so, underestimated the number of days and resources necessary for user support.

67 The Court notes in this connection that the invitation to tender, in the description of the tasks, specified, as regards the technical profile:

'The system will not need major improvements. We only anticipate that it will need minor updates and enhancements to follow the developments of the market.'

68 Consequently, the wording of the invitation to tender indicates that the technical part was ancillary and the part dealing with user support therefore indeed seems to be the more important.

69 It must be stated that, as regards the evaluation of the number of man-days, the table in the financial proposal in the applicant's tender provides for four posts, each of which is assessed in man-days and the total of which amounts to 410 man-days. Thus, 30 man-days are allocated to the post of contract/quality manager, 80 man-days are allocated to the post of senior analyst, 80 man-days are allocated to the post of software and database architect and 220 days are allocated to the post of senior software engineer.

70 It is apparent from the description of those four posts by the applicant in its tender that the contract/quality Manager is described as being responsible for the coordination and planning of the activities linked to the project and responsible 'for the overall contract implementation management, quality assurance, European Commission Security Convention terms follow up and interfacing with the Commission'. His duties can therefore be regarded as covering, at least in part, user support services.

71 By contrast, the duties of the senior analyst, the software and database architect and the senior software engineer are all described as relating to the technical support services of the CITL. They must thus be regarded as meeting the requirements of the technical profile in the invitation to tender.

72 Therefore, it must be stated that the applicant's tender could be interpreted as meaning that only the post of contract/quality manager clearly fell within the 'user support' part. Furthermore, it might also be regarded as only partially falling within that part, since that post was allocated other duties.

73 In addition, the figure of 190 man-days put forward by the applicant is not, in its tender, specifically allocated to the user support service. The evaluation committee is not required to take into account evidence and information not communicated with the tender submitted. Moreover, in contrast to what the applicant asserts, the template adopted in its financial proposal was not obligatory, since the invitation to tender specified that the financial tender template was provided only for purposes of information. The presentation of the applicant's tender could therefore have been adapted so as to show clearly the figure of 190 man-days, allegedly allocated to the user support service but which does not appear as such in its offer.

74 Therefore the evaluation committee was entitled, without committing any manifest error of assessment, to consider that only 30 man-days, corresponding to the post of contract/quality manager, were allocated to user support and that, as a result, the tender lacked balance having regard to the importance of that task in the invitation to tender.

75 Furthermore, in the light of the division of the posts and methodology proposed by the applicant on the one hand and, on the other, the number of pages devoted to the user support services (three pages) in comparison to the number of pages devoted to the technical services (seven pages), the applicant's offer could, without a manifest error of assessment, be regarded as weighted towards the technical profile and not towards user support.

76 Lastly, nothing turns on the fact that the Commission had found the rate of the proposed experts' pay satisfactory in other contracts, since the assessment here concerns only the presentation of the applicant's team in the contract at issue.

77 In conclusion, the Commission did not commit any manifest error of assessment as regards the 'Project management and availability' award criterion.

78 Otherwise, as regards the applicant's arguments seeking to dispute the evaluation committee's assessment in respect of the 'Understanding' and 'Methodolody' criteria, the committee's assessment on those criteria is not the reason for the Commission's rejection of the applicant's tender. Those arguments are therefore irrelevant.

79 It follows from all of the foregoing that the applicant has not proved any manifest error of assessment by the Commission in the present case.

The argument alleging infringement of the principles of equal treatment and transparency

– Arguments of the parties

80 The applicant asserts that, by failing to properly examine its tender and rejecting it on the basis of misinterpretations, the Commission infringed the principles of equal treatment and transparency. In this respect, it points out that the selection criteria must be stated clearly and unambiguously in the specifications. However, the invitation to tender requested that tenderers show a 'deep understanding' of the relevant field of activity which, it submits, cannot be quantified by persons other than the Commission's incumbent contractor, and rendered that invitation to tender unduly subjective.

81 The Commission disputes the applicant's arguments.

– Findings of the Court

82 Under Article 89(1) of the Financial Regulation, all public contracts financed in whole or in part by the budget are to comply with the principles of transparency, proportionality, equal treatment and non-discrimination.

83 Thus, according to settled case-law, the Commission is required to ensure at each stage of a tendering procedure equal treatment and, thereby, equality of opportunity for all the tenderers (Case C-496/99 P Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta [2004] ECR I-3801, paragraph 108; see Evropaïki Dynamiki, cited in paragraph 49 above, paragraph 45, and the case-law cited).

84 A system of undistorted competition, as laid down in the Treaty, can be guaranteed only if equality of opportunity is secured as between the various economic operators (Case C-202/88 France v Commission [1991] ECR I-1223, paragraph 51; see Evropaïki Dynamiki, cited in paragraph 49 above, paragraph 46 and the case-law cited).

85 Furthermore, the principle of equal treatment entails an obligation of transparency for the purpose of ensuring it is complied with (see, by way of analogy, Case C-532/06 Lianakis and Others [2008] ECR I-0000, paragraph 34 and the case-law cited). Thus, in order to guarantee that the principles of equal treatment and transparency are observed, potential tenderers should be aware of all the elements to be taken into account by the contracting authority in identifying the offer providing best value for money, and of their relative importance, when they prepare their tenders (see, to that effect, Case C-87/94 Commission v Belgium [1996] ECR I–2043, paragraph 88; and Lianakis and Others, paragraph 36 and the case-law cited).

86 This obligation of transparency also means that the contracting authority must interpret the award criteria in the same way throughout the entire procedure (see, to that effect, Commission v Belgium, cited in paragraph 85 above, paragraphs 88 and 89, and Case C-19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I-7725, paragraph 43).

87 The applicant claims that the requirement for a 'deep understanding' of the relevant field was too subjective a criterion.

88 In the present case, the requirement of a 'deep understanding' of the relevant field is set out in point 4 of the 'technical description' part of the invitation to tender (see paragraph 15 above) and is therefore not included in the part relating to the criteria for the exclusion, selection and the award of the tender.

89 In addition, even if that requirement of a 'deep understanding' of the relevant field could have been regarded as a selection criterion in the present case, the Court notes that the applicant's offer successfully passed the second stage relating to the examination of the selection criteria. 'Deep understanding' was therefore, in any event, an evaluation criterion which was not a ground for the rejection of the applicant's tender by the Commission, the rejection being on the basis of the fact that the applicant had not attained the minimum number of points required in respect of the 'Project management and availability' award criterion.

90 It must be stated in this connection that the contested decision does not refer at all to the requirement of a 'deep understanding', nor, a fortiori, to the fact that the applicant's tender failed to satisfy it.

91 Therefore, that argument must be rejected as irrelevant.

92 It follows from the foregoing that the applicant has failed to establish that the principle of transparency was infringed in the present case. Moreover, the applicant does not claim any discrimination with respect to it.

93 As a result, the argument alleging infringement of the principles of equal treatment and transparency must be rejected.

94 It follows from the foregoing that the first plea must be rejected.

The second plea, alleging that the merits of the successful tenderer were not disclosed

Arguments of the parties

95 The applicant states that the Commission merely informed it, on 26 October 2006, of the identity of the successful tenderer and of the number of points it had obtained (88 out of 100), without specifying the relative advantages of the successful tender in relation to its own, in breach of Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation. It refers to the judgment in Case T-169/00 Esedra v Commission [2002] ECR II-609, in which the statement of reasons communicated to the rejected tenderer was more detailed.

96 It adds, in the reply, that the statement of reasons must be appropriate to the act at issue, which in the present case relates to a tendering procedure for a complex information technology contract which cannot be compared to a procedure for the mere provision of agency staff, which was at issue in the case which gave rise to the judgment in Adia interim v Commission, cited in paragraph 49 above, to which the Commission refers in the defence. The requirement of transparency implies, according to the applicant, that the Commission must be able to justify its decision and explain the evaluation procedure that led to the decision, unless that decision is to be held to be arbitrary.

97 The applicant also claims that the Commission's letter of 26 October 2006 was the only letter sent to it by post, notwithstanding the fact that it had requested the Commission to reply to it by fax or email. It considers that, in so far as it did not receive that letter until 14 November 2006, the Commission should have refrained from signing the contract with the successful tenderer until the legal deadline for opposition had expired.

98 The Commission disputes the applicant's arguments.

Findings of the Court

99 Pursuant to Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation and Article 149(3) of the Implementing Regulation, the Commission had to notify the applicant of the grounds on which its offer was rejected and, the applicant having submitted an admissible tender, of the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the successful tenderer within not more than 15 calendar days from the date on which a written request was received.

100 In this connection, the contracting authority fulfils its obligation to state reasons if it first informs eliminated tenderers immediately of the fact that their tender has been rejected by a simple unreasoned communication and then subsequently, if expressly requested to do so, informs tenderers of the relative characteristics and advantages of the successful tender and the name of the successful tenderer within 15 days of receipt of a written request (Strabag Benelux v Council, cited in paragraph 50 above, paragraph 54 et seq.).

101 In the present case, three award criteria were set out in the third part of the invitation to tender, entitled 'Understanding', 'Project management and availability' and 'Methodology', in addition to the exclusion and selection criteria. A points system was established for the evaluation of tenders in the light of each of those three award criteria. First, a minimum threshold was laid down for each criterion. Secondly, an overall minimum of 65 points was required. The tenders having obtained the minimum points required, considered to be technically satisfactory in the light of those criteria, were then examined in order to ascertain which tender provided the best value for money, by dividing the price by the total number of points.

102 By letter and fax of 19 October 2006, the Commission notified the applicant that its tender had been rejected at the award stage and informed the applicant of the evaluation committee's findings for each of the award criteria.

103 In response to a written request from the applicant, also dated 19 October 2006, the Commission – by letter of 26 October 2006 received, according to the applicant, on 14 November 2006 – informed the applicant that it had been eliminated on the ground that it had not attained the minimum number of points required for the 'Project management and availability' criterion. The Commission reiterated the evaluation committee's findings, stating the number of points obtained by the applicant in respect of each award criterion. It also stated the name of the successful tenderer, the price of its tender and the number of points it had obtained.

104 The applicant was therefore able not only to pinpoint the specific reasons for the rejection of its offer, namely that it had not attained the quality score required for the second award criterion ('Project management and availability'), but also to compare its result (68 points out of 100) with that of the successful tenderer (88 points out of 100). Likewise, it was able to compare the price of the tender it had submitted with that offered by the successful tenderer. Furthermore, the general comments gave details on the aspects of its offer which were considered to be unsatisfactory by the Commission (see, to that effect, Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, cited in paragraph 49 above, paragraph 75).

105 The applicant objects that it was not able to compare its results with those of the other tenders and, in particular, with those of the successful tenderer, since it was not notified of the evaluation committee's findings in its regard and of the details of the points obtained by the successful tenderer for each award criterion.

106 In the present case, the Court observes that the contested decision was not based on a comparison of the services of the various tenderers, but on the fact that the applicant's tender did not obtain the minimum number of points required with regard to the second award criterion.

107 As provided in the invitation to tender, only the tenders which had obtained the minimum threshold of points were considered to be technically satisfactory in the light of those criteria, those tenders then being examined in order to ascertain which provided the best value for money.

108 As a result, the information communicated by the Commission was, in the present case, sufficient in the light of the relevant requirements.

109 The argument alleging that the statement of reasons communicated to the unsuccessful tenderer was more detailed in Esedra v Commission, cited in paragraph 95 above, does not affect that finding, since the circumstances were different to those at issue in this case. In that case, the tender specifications did not set out, as regards the evaluation of the award criteria, either a minimum threshold or an elimination criterion (paragraphs 128 and 154) and the applicant's excluded tender had therefore been compared to that of the successful tenderer (paragraph 191).

110 That is not the case in this instance, since the applicant's tender was not eliminated following a comparison with the other tenders, in particular with that of the successful tenderer, but on the ground that it had not attained the threshold required in respect of one of the criteria.

111 Consequently, the Court takes the view that, in these particular circumstances, the obligation to communicate the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful offer, laid down in Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation, was satisfied in this case.

112 Furthermore, as regards the applicant's arguments alleging that it did not receive the Commission's letter of 26 October 2006 until 14 November 2006 and that the Commission should have delayed signing the contract, it must be stated that that argument also cannot be accepted.

113 The fourth subparagraph of Article 149(3) of the Implementing Rules provides:

'The contracting authority may not sign the contract or framework contract with the successful tenderer until two calendar weeks have elapsed from the day after the simultaneous dispatch of the rejection and award decisions. If necessary it may suspend signing of the contract for additional examination if justified by the requests or comments made by unsuccessful tenderers or candidates during the two calendar weeks following the rejection or award decisions or any other relevant information received during that period. In that event all the candidates or tenderers shall be informed within three working days following the suspension decision.'

114 It is common ground that in the present case the applicant received notification of the rejection of its offer on 19 October 2006. That notification states that the contract would not be signed during the two calendar weeks following the day after the date on which that letter was posted.

115 The period of two calendar weeks, laid down by the fourth subparagraph of Article 149(3) of the Implementing Rules and which was drawn to the applicant's attention by the Commission in its notification letter of 19 October 2006, therefore expired on 3 November 2006.

116 In this instance, since the contract was signed on 14 November 2006, that is, after the expiry of the period laid down by Article 149, the Commission complied with the applicable provisions.

117 In addition, it also follows from the fourth subparagraph of Article 149(3) of the Implementing Rules, that the option to suspend signing of the contract for additional examination is provided for only if the requests or comments of the rejected tenderers or candidates are made 'during the two calendar weeks following the rejection or award decisions' or if justified by any other relevant information received 'during that period'.

118 That was not the case here, since the applicant did not make any requests or comments during that period, even though the time-limit of two calendar weeks was drawn to its attention by the Commission in its notification letter of 19 October 2006. The fact that the letter of 26 October 2006 was not sent to it by fax, but by post, and did not reach it until 14 November 2006 is irrelevant in this respect.

119 It follows from the foregoing that the second plea must be rejected.

120 As regards the application for annulment of the decision awarding the contract to a third party, it must be rejected as a consequence of the rejection of the application for annulment of the preceding decision with which it is closely connected (Case T-195/05 Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission [2007] ECR II-0000, paragraph 113).

2. The application for disclosure of a full copy of the evaluation report

Arguments of the parties

121 Under its plea alleging infringement of the obligation to provide a statement of reasons and the lack of transparency, put forward in its reply, the applicant requests a full copy of the evaluation committee's report. It states that Regulation (EC) No 1049/2001 of the European Parliament and the Council of 30 May 2001 regarding public access to European Parliament, Council and Commission documents (OJ 2001 L 145, p. 43) constitutes the general rule and the rule in Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation and Article 149 of the Implementing Rules is the particular rule. It submits that the exception to that rule, on grounds of confidentiality, is to be interpreted strictly and restricted to the protection of business secrets and that, in the present case, the Commission has not proved that there are business interests whose protection prohibits disclosing the evaluation report to rejected tenderers who have requested its disclosure.

122 The Commission disputes these arguments.

Findings of the Court

123 It must be pointed out, first, that the Commission was not required to disclose the evaluation committee's report to the applicant, as part of the statement of reasons for the contested decision. Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation provides only that, following a request in writing, the contracting authority is to notify those concerned of the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the tenderer to whom the contract is awarded (Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, cited in paragraph 49 above, paragraph 113).

124 Next, even if the applicant's request were to be understood as a request for access to documents, it must be held that the applicant did not comply with the procedure, laid down in Article 6 et seq. of Regulation No 1049/2001, for applying for access to the evaluation committee report before bringing an action before the Court to challenge the refusal to produce it, which renders such a request inadmissible (Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, cited in paragraph 49 above, paragraph 114).

125 Lastly, the Commission sent the applicant, by fax of 30 November 2006, a non-confidential version of an extract from the evaluation report. The Commission stated that it could not disclose the details concerning the other tenderers, which would harm their commercial interests.

126 Accordingly, having regard to the fact that the information in the file does not show any manifest error of assessment or infringement of the duty to provide a proper statement of reasons, the Court considers that, regardless of the legal basis relied upon by the applicant, it is not appropriate to order the Commission to produce the evaluation committee's report in its entirety.

127 In the light of the foregoing, the application for annulment must be dismissed in its entirety.

3. The application for damages

Arguments of the parties

128 The applicant states, in the part of its application dealing with the costs, that the Court is likely to rule after the completion of the contract. It requests, in the alternative, that the Court order the Commission to pay it damages of EUR 86 300, corresponding to the net profit which, it estimates, it would have gained from the contract, and relies in this connection on Articles 235 EC and 288 EC.

129 It states in its reply that the contested decision is unlawful and has caused it actual damage, which it assesses at approximately EUR 86 300, calculated on the basis of a gross profit margin of 50% and also taking into account all extensions of the contract. At the hearing, the applicant stated that, of the total price chargeable in respect of a contract, one half will consist of production costs, 40% of general costs and 10% will represent its net profit.

130 The Commission contends that this application for damages is wholly unsubstantiated, that it does not comply with Article 44(1)(c) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance and, consequently, that it is inadmissible. It requests in the alternative that the application should be rejected as manifestly lacking any legal basis.

Findings of the Court

131 Article 44(1)(c) of the Rules of Procedure provides that the application must state the subject–matter of the proceedings and a summary of the pleas in law on which it is based. It is settled case-law that the information given must be sufficiently clear and precise to enable the defendant to prepare its defence and the Court to give a ruling, if necessary without other supporting information. In order to ensure legal certainty and the sound administration of justice, if an action is to be admissible, the essential facts and law on which it is based must be apparent from the text of the application itself, at the very least summarily, provided that the statement is coherent and comprehensible (Case T-387/94 Asia Motor Finance and Others v Commission [1996] ECR II-961, paragraph 106).

132 The Court considers however that, in the circumstances in the present case, there is no need to rule on the Commission's argument founded on the inadmissibility of the application for damages, since the forms of order sought by the applicant must, in any event, be rejected on their merits (see, to that effect, Case C–23/00 P Council v Boehringer [2002] ECR I–1873, paragraph 52; Case C-233/02 France v Commission [2004] ECR I-2759, paragraph 26; and Case T-415/03 Cofradía de pescadores 'San Pedro' de Bermeo and Others v Council [2005] ECR II-4355, paragraph 32, confirmed on appeal by judgment of 22 November 2007 in Case C–6/06 P Cofradía de pescadores 'San Pedro' de Bermeo and Others v Council, not published in the ECR, paragraph 21).

133 In accordance with settled case-law, for the Community to incur liability, the applicant must prove the unlawfulness of the conduct alleged against the institution concerned, the fact of damage and the existence of a causal link between that conduct and the damage complained of (Case T-175/94 International Procurement Services v Commission [1996] ECR II-729, paragraph 44; see also to that effect Case T-336/94 Efisol v Commission [1996] ECR II-1343, paragraph 30; and Case T-267/94 Oleifici Italiani v Commission [1997] ECR II–1239, paragraph 20). Where one of those conditions is not fulfilled, the action must therefore be dismissed in its entirety and it is not necessary to examine the other conditions for that liability (Case C–146/91 KYDEP v Council and Commission [1994] ECR I-4199, paragraph 19, and Strabag Benelux v Commission, cited in paragraph 50 above, paragraph 83).

134 It is apparent from the Court's findings on the application for annulment that the applicant has not proved unlawful conduct on the part of the Commission.

135 Accordingly, the application for damages must be dismissed.

Costs

136 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings.

137 Since the applicant has been unsuccessful in all the forms of order it sought, and the Commission has applied for costs, the applicant must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (First Chamber)

hereby:

1. Dismisses the action;

2. Orders Evropaïki Dynamiki – Proigmena Systimata Tilepikoinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE to pay its own costs and those incurred by the Commission.

(Case T-406/06)

Language of the case: English

Parties

Applicant: Evropaïki Dynamiki - Proigmena Systimata Tilepikoinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE (Athens, Greece) (represented by: N. Korogiannakis and N. Keramidas, lawyers)

Defendant: Commission of the European Communities

Form of order sought

Annul the Commission's decision (DG ENV) to reject the applicant's bid and to award the contract to the successful contractor; order the Commission (DG ENV) to pay the applicant's legal and other costs and expenses incurred in connection with this application, even if the current application is rejected; order the Commission (DG ENV) to pay the applicant's damages suffered on account of the tendering procedure in question for an amount of EUR 86 300.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicant submitted a bid in response to the defendant's call for an open tender for the provision of services to support Registries Systems established under Directive 2003/87[1] with technical maintenance and user support (OJ 2006/S 102-108793). The applicant contests the decision to reject its bid and to award the contract to another bidder.

In support of its application, the applicant submits that the defendant committed several errors of assessment and violated the principles of equal treatment and transparency. Furthermore, the applicant claims that the defendant did not state reasons for its decision by not informing the applicant of the merits of the successful tender compared to the applicant's tender.

Applicant: Evropaïki Dynamiki - Proigmena Systimata Tilepikoinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE (Athens, Greece) (represented by: N. Korogiannakis and N. Keramidas, lawyers)

Defendant: European Environment Agency

Form of order sought

- Annul the decision of the EEA to evaluate the applicant's bid as not successful and award the contract to the successful contractor;

order the EEA to pay the applicant's legal and other costs and expenses incurred in connection with this application, even if the current application is rejected.

Pleas in law and main arguments

In support of its claims the applicant argues that in the decision taken in the framework of the tendering procedure EEA/IDS/06/002 for the 'Provision of IT consultancy services' (OJ 2006 S 118-125101) communicated to the applicant by letter dated 14 September 2006 the European Environmental Agency ('EEA') failed to comply with its obligations foreseen in the Implementing rules and Directive 2004/18/EC as well as the principle of transparency by not disclosing to the participants in advance the weighting of the sub-criteria which were subsequently applied during the selection procedure.

Furthermore, the applicant claims that the EEA committed several manifest errors of assessment which resulted in the rejection of its bid.

The applicant requests that the decision of the EEA to reject its bid and award the contract to three other participants be annulled and that the defendant is ordered by the Court to pay all legal expenses related to the present proceedings even if the application is rejected.

ORDER OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Fourth Chamber)

2 July 2009 (*)

(Public service contracts – Community public procurement procedure – Supply of consultancy and IT development services for the ECB – Rejection of a tender and decision to award the contract to other tenderers – Action for annulment – Interest in bringing proceedings – Ground for exclusion – Permit to be issued by a national authority – Action in part manifestly unfounded in law and in part manifestly inadmissible)

In Case T–279/06,

defendant,

ACTION for annulment of the decision of the European Central Bank (ECB) of 31 July 2006 rejecting the tender submitted by the applicant in the negotiated procedure for the provision of IT consultancy and IT development services to the ECB, and of the decision to award the contract to other tenderers,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES (Fourth Chamber), composed of O. Czúcz (Rapporteur), President, I. Labucka and K. O'Higgins, Judges, Registrar: E. Coulon,

makes the following

Order

Background to the dispute

1 The applicant, Evropaïki Dynamiki – Proigmena Systimata Tilepikoinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE, is a company incorporated under Greek law, active in the field of information technology and communications.

2 On 19 July 2005, the ECB published a contract award notice in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2005 S 137) concerning a negotiated procedure for the provision of IT consultancy and IT development services with pre-selection of appropriate candidates ('the negotiated procedure'). The purpose of the negotiated procedure was to select two contractors with a view to supplying services to the ECB in the performance of framework contracts.

3 The entire negotiated procedure was carried out under the responsibility of an ECB procurement committee ('the PRC') established for the purposes of the negotiated procedure.

4 On 29 August 2005 the Applicant submitted a tender on behalf of and as leader of the E2Bank consortium.

5 The ECB received in total 23 applications, of which 3 were from consortia. The PRC evaluated the applications on the basis of the selection criteria published in the contract notice and selected 7 candidates, including E2Bank.

6 On 22 December 2005, the ECB notified the specifications to the candidates selected and invited them to submit their tenders. The specifications included the call for tenders and five annexes, including the draft framework contract.

7 Point 2.4 of Annex 3 to the invitation to tender laid down an obligation to obtain authorisation under the Arbeitnehmerüberlassungsgesetz (German law governing the supply of temporary staff; 'the AÜG'). Under that point, tenderers were required to give a firm commitment that the Arbeitnehmerüberlassungsgenehmigung [permit to supply temporary staff] would be available when the contract was signed.

8 Under point 2.10 of Annex 3 to the invitation to tender, tenderers must provide the Arbeitnehmerüberlassungsgenehmigung ('the permit') within the meaning of the AÜG. That point states:

'This document proves that the tenderer is allowed to supply staff for the time and material activities. The tenderer will supply evidence that this document is available or will be available at company level'.

9 In addition, under point 4.1.4 of the draft framework contract (Annex 1 to the invitation to tender):

> 'The Contractor shall be obliged to hold a permit to supply employees as temporary staff as part of its business in accordance with Article 1(1) of the [AÜG]. The permit has been issued by the locally competent office … The Contractor shall be obliged to inform in writing on any changes mentioned in Article 12(2) [of the] AÜG, in particular discontinuation, non-extension, withdrawal/redemption or revocation of the permit.'

10 The ECB received five tenders within the time-limit which it had fixed. An evaluation panel, designated by the PRC, verified that the tenders were complete. E2Bank's tender was found to be complete. In particular, it included the firm commitment of two members of the consortium to obtain the permit before the contract was signed. As evidence of the commitment of members of the E2Bank consortium, the applicant supplied copies of two permit applications made on 3 and 6 February 2006 to the competent German authorities.

11 Subsequently, the evaluation panel reviewed the five tenders and assessed them against the criteria laid down in the evaluation grid. The assessment of the written tenders and the tenderers' presentations were summarised in a preliminary evaluation report.

12 On 3 April 2006, the PRC considered and approved the preliminary evaluation report. According to that report, the E2Bank consortium was ranked in fourth position.

13 On the basis of the preliminary evaluation report, the PRC decided to invite the three best-ranked tenderers for further negotiations. The applicant and the fifth-ranked tenderer were not invited for negotiations.

14 In the course of April 2006 the ECB conducted negotiations with the three best-ranked tenderers. Subsequently, the PRC decided to continue negotiations only with two tenderers, since the third tenderer, established in India, was not able to resolve the ECB's concerns with regard to the permit. The contract negotiations with those two tenderers were finalised in the course of June 2006.

15 In its letter of 11 July 2006, the applicant stated that it was concerned about the legality of the public procurement procedure. Inter alia, it claimed that the obligation to hold the permit constituted discrimination against tenderers established outside Germany.

16 By letter of 31 July 2006, the PRC informed the applicant of its decision to award the two framework contracts to the two tenderers with which it had carried on negotiations.

17 By letter of 1 August 2006, the applicant requested additional information regarding the evaluation, asked the ECB to reconsider its decision and stated its intention to bring the matter before the Court of First Instance if its appeal were dismissed.

18 The PRC took the view that that letter lodged a formal appeal and submitted that appeal to the appeal body of the ECB. By letter dated 18 August 2006, the appeal body informed the applicant that it had dismissed the appeal.

Procedure and forms of order sought by the parties

19 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 9 October 2006, the applicant brought the present action.

20 The applicant claims that the Court should:

– annul the decision of the ECB not to accept its tender and to award the contract to the successful tenderers;

– order the ECB to pay the costs, including in the case of dismissal of the action.

21 The ECB contends that the Court should:

– declare the action inadmissible;

– in the alternative, dismiss the action as unfounded;

– order the applicant to pay the costs.

Law

22 It should be borne in mind that, in accordance with Article 113 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, the Court may at any time, of its own motion, decide whether there exists any absolute bar to proceeding with an action.

23 Furthermore, pursuant to Article 111 of the Rules of Procedure, where it is clear that the Court of First Instance has no jurisdiction to take cognisance of an action or where the action is manifestly inadmissible or manifestly lacking any foundation in law, the Court may, by reasoned order and without taking further steps in the proceedings, give a decision on the action.

24 In the present case, the Court considers that it has sufficient information at its disposal in the file before it to rule on the present proceedings without opening the oral procedure.

Admissibility

Arguments of the parties

25 The ECB submits that, in accordance with case-law, an action based on the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC is admissible only if the applicant can show a legal interest in bringing proceedings. The applicant has no legal interest in bringing proceedings against the decisions to reject its tender and to award the contract to the successful tenderers. The applicant does not meet the mandatory requirement to hold the permit and, as the applicant has accepted in its written submissions, cannot obtain such a permit in the future. Accordingly, even if the applicant's tender had been the most economically advantageous, the ECB could not award it one of the contracts.

26 The ECB also states that the applicant had declared in its tender of 10 February 2006 that both partners of the consortium would hold the required permit when the contract was signed and that the applicant subsequently declared that it expected the permits to be issued by the end of March 2006. The ECB learned only when analysing the application that the Greek and German authorities had rejected the applicant's application for the permit. The ECB adds that, if the PRC had known that the applicant was not eligible for the permit, it would have been obliged to exclude the applicant's tender right from the start.

27 With regard to Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), which provides that review procedures must be available 'to any person ... who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement', the ECB takes the view that a tenderer which cannot be awarded the contract because it does not meet a mandatory requirement cannot be harmed by a possible infringement.

28 The ECB submits that the factual and legal context of the present case differs appreciably from that of Case C-249/01 Hackermüller [2003] ECR I-6319 and of Case T-139/99 AICS v Parliament [2000] ECR II-2849, so that the present action cannot be declared admissible on the basis of that case-law.

29 It points out that the legal question at issue in AICS v Parliament, paragraph 28 above, was whether a requirement laid down by the contracting authority was compatible with national law. However, in the present case, the obligation to hold the permit is not set up by the ECB but results from mandatory German law. Furthermore, contrary to the situation in AICS v Parliament, paragraph 28 above, in the present case it is possible for tenderers to meet this mandatory requirement without breaching the applicable law.

30 With regard to Hackermüller, paragraph 28 above, the ECB points out that, in the case giving rise to that judgment, it was due to an error on the part of the contracting authority that the ground for exclusion had not been found during the selection procedure. However, in the present case, the ECB learned only in the course of the proceedings before the Court that the applicant did not fulfil the mandatory statutory requirement to hold the permit. The ECB was in no way negligent in that regard. On the contrary, it was the applicant who failed to inform the ECB that its application for the required permit had been rejected although it was obliged to keep the ECB informed of all circumstances affecting its tender. The applicant may not now invoke its own failure and argue that the action must be declared admissible because it had no opportunity to challenge the ECB's decision to exclude it from the negotiated procedure.

31 In any event, the ECB submits that, even if the Court of First Instance were to consider that the applicant's plea concerning the requirement to hold the permit is admissible, the other pleas raised by the applicant remain inadmissible. It points out that in paragraph 29 of the judgment in AICS v Parliament, paragraph 28 above, the Court of Justice clearly stated that '[i]n the review procedure thus open to the tenderer, he must be allowed to challenge the ground of exclusion'. The right to challenge the specific ground for exclusion does not include the right to challenge the award decision in its entirety.

32 Referring, inter alia, to paragraph 29 of the judgment in Case AICS v Parliament, paragraph 28 above, the applicant takes the view that it follows from that case-law that, even if its tender had been found unacceptable on account of the lack of the permit, this could not deprive the applicant of its right to seek annulment of the decision to award the contract.

Findings of the Court

33 Without formally raising an objection of inadmissibility, the ECB submits that the action is inadmissible because the applicant lacks an interest in bringing proceedings, given that it does not meet the mandatory criterion of holding the permit, which means that, even if the contested decision were to be annulled, it could not be accepted as a contractor to the ECB after a fresh examination of the tenders.

34 In accordance with settled case-law, a claim for annulment brought by a natural or legal person is not admissible unless the applicant has an interest in seeing the contested measure annulled (Joined Cases T-480/93 and T-483/93 Antillean Rice Mills and Others v Commission [1995] ECR II-2305, paragraph 59; Case T-102/96 Gencor v Commission [1999] ECR II-753, paragraph 40; and Case T-141/03 Sniace v Commission [2005] ECR II-1197, paragraph 25). That interest must be vested and present (Case T-138/89 NBV and NVB v Commission [1992] ECR II-2181, paragraph 33) and is evaluated as at the date on which the action is brought (Case 14/63 Forges de Clabecq v High Authority [1963] ECR 357 and Sniace v Commission, paragraph 25).

35 In the present case, it is established that the applicant did not hold the permit either during the negotiated procedure or when the present action was brought. Moreover, the applicant has expressly admitted that 'it could not obtain [the permit] under any circumstances in Germany'. It is also clear from the documents relating to the negotiated procedure that the contracting authority had, before the procedure, laid down the requirement to hold the permit as a mandatory criterion to be met by the time when the framework contracts were signed at the latest, so that neither of the framework contracts could have been awarded to a tenderer which did not hold the permit.

36 The applicant takes the view nevertheless that, on the basis of the decisions in Hackermüller, paragraph 28 above, and AICS v Parliament, paragraph 28 above, it can bring an action seeking annulment of the decision to reject its tender and that to award the framework contracts to other tenderers.

37 In its judgment in AICS v Parliament, paragraph 28 above, paragraphs 32 and 33, the Court held that the applicant, excluded during the tender procedure on the ground that it had not fulfilled a mandatory criterion set out in the tender documents, had an interest in bringing proceedings since the finding that that criterion was unlawful entailed the reopening of the tender procedure, so that the applicant could submit a fresh tender. Thus, the Court declared that the two pleas raised by the applicant, regarding whether the ground for exclusion was well founded, were admissible.

38 The case which gave rise to the judgment in Hackermüller, paragraph 28 above, concerned a reference for a preliminary ruling on the interpretation of Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, in accordance with which '[t]he Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement'.

39 In the case which gave rise to the judgment in Hackermüller, paragraph 28 above, paragraph 11, the applicant had brought an action against the decision to accept the tender of another tenderer as being the best tender. The authority competent to hear the action dismissed it on the grounds that the applicant did not have locus standi because his bid should have been eliminated at the first stage of the procedure, pursuant to a provision of national law.

40 It was in that context that the Court held that the refusal of access to legal review referred to in Directive 89/665 (see paragraph 38 above) to a tenderer which is in a situation like that of the applicant has the effect of depriving it not only of its right to bring an action against a decision which it alleges is unlawful, but also of the right to dispute whether there is foundation for the ground for exclusion raised by that authority to deny it the quality of a person which has been or is likely to be harmed by the alleged infringement.

41 In the light of those considerations, the Court held that, in the context of the review procedures laid down in Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, the applicant had to be allowed to challenge the justification for its exclusion on the basis of which the authority responsible for review procedures proposed to find that the applicant had not been or was not likely to be harmed by the decision which it alleged was unlawful.

42 Firstly, it should be observed that it is apparent from the judgments in AICS v Parliament, paragraph 28 above, and Hackermüller, paragraph 28 above, that, in principle, the tenderer has an interest in bringing proceedings to contest the justification for its exclusion, irrespective of the fact that that should have been raised during the procedure before the contracting authority or at the appeal stage.

43 Secondly, with regard to the factual differences referred to by the ECB between the present case and Hackermüller, paragraph 28 above, it must be observed that, in its reasoning, the Court did not attach any importance to the fact that the ground for exclusion had not been noted during the procedure before the contracting authority because of an error by that body. The Court based its judgment on the need to ensure the excluded tenderer had a review procedure so that it could contest the justification for that ground for exclusion.

44 Thirdly, irrespective of whether Directive 89/665 applies to the ECB, it should be pointed out that Article 1(3) of that directive enshrines the principle of access to justice in the specific field of procedures for the award of public contracts.

45 It should be borne in mind that access to justice is one of the constitutive elements of a Community based on the rule of law and is guaranteed in the legal order based on the EC Treaty in that the Treaty has established a complete system of legal remedies and procedures designed to permit the Court of Justice to review the legality of measures adopted by the institutions (Case 294/83 Les Verts v Parliament [1986] ECR 1339, paragraph 23, and Joined Cases T–377/00, T–379/00, T–380/00, T–260/01 and T–272/01 Philip Morris International v Commission [2003] ECR II–1, paragraph 121). The fact that the ECB is not an institution does not prevent application of that case-law by analogy, since it is the Court of Justice which has jurisdiction, by virtue of Article 230(1) EC, to rule on the legality of the acts of the ECB and, by virtue of Article 288 EC, to rule on actions concerning the non-contractual liability of the ECB.

46 In the same way, in accordance with well-established case-law, the Court of Justice takes the constitutional traditions common to the Member States and Articles 6 and 13 of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (ECHR), signed in Rome on 4 November 1950, as a basis for the right to obtain an effective remedy before a competent court (Case 222/84 Johnston [1986] ECR 1651, paragraph 18, and Philip Morris International v Commission, paragraph 121).

47 In the present case, the Court of First Instance is the only Court before which the applicant may contest the legality of the ground for exclusion, since German courts are not competent to rule either on a decision of the ECB rejecting the applicant's tender, or on an action for compensation on the basis of the non-contractual liability of the ECB.

48 Accordingly, it must be concluded that the principle laid down by the Court of Justice in Hackermüller, paragraph 28 above, that the applicant must be allowed to contest the justification of the ground for exclusion found for the first time during an appeal procedure is applicable to the present case.

49 That conclusion cannot be called into question by the ECB's argument that the applicant, in breach of its obligations laid down in the negotiated procedure documents, failed to inform the ECB of the fact that it was impossible for the applicant to obtain the permit, so that the applicant relies on its own negligence in order to obtain a legal advantage. Even if such an obligation to provide that information existed, it must be noted that, if the applicant had actually informed the ECB of that fact and had then been excluded for that reason, it would still have been able to dispute the ground for exclusion and the ECB's decision in that regard would also have been subject to appeal before the Court. Accordingly, the view must be taken that the applicant's conduct complained of by the ECB gave the applicant no advantage with regard to its contesting the ground for exclusion.

50 Having regard to the fact that the eighth plea in law raised by the applicant relates to the justification for that ground for exclusion, the action is accordingly admissible.

The application for annulment

51 The Court considers it appropriate to begin its examination with an analysis of the eighth plea.

The eighth plea, alleging that the requirement to hold the permit is unlawful

– Arguments of the parties

52 In the first place, the applicant takes the view that the ECB does not fall within the material scope of the AÜG, given its nature as a European institution. That requirement was introduced by the ECB only in order to favour participating companies established in Germany, by excluding foreign companies.

53 According to Greek and German law, the applicant can offer the services requested by the ECB and does not need the permit. In that regard, it adds that it signed a contract with the ECB in May 2006 for the provision of an expert who offered his services at the premises of the ECB, without the ECB having asked for the permit.

54 In the second place, the applicant states that, in accordance with the AÜG, the permit is provided to foreign companies only if they hold a permit in their country of establishment relating to the supply of temporary staff. Pursuant, in particular, to Article 20(4) of Greek Law No 2956/2001, the provisions of which are consistent with Directive 96/71/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 December 1996 concerning the posting of workers in the framework of the provision of services (OJ 1997 L 18, p. 1), such a permit can be issued only to undertakings which exclusively carry out that activity, namely the 'loan' of staff or temporary staff. However, those undertakings are not allowed to exercise any other activities. The applicant is not a supplier of interim staff but an

IT company, so that it is impossible for it to obtain the permit under Greek law and, consequently, the German authorities will not issue it with the permit.

55 Thirdly, the applicant takes the view that, pursuant to Article 1(1) and (3)(a) of Directive 96/71, no permit to supply temporary staff can be required of undertakings which provide support personnel to a customer in the framework of the performance of a contract. That is clearly the case of the ECB project which is the object of the contract notice at issue.

56 Next, it follows from Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114) that the AÜG does not apply to the framework contract referred to in the negotiated procedure, since posting of employees is governed by Directive 96/71. In that regard, the applicant relies on paragraph 46 of Case C–290/04 FKP Scorpio Konzertproduktionen [2006] ECR I–9461. The requirement imposed by the ECB to hold the permit is, consequently, contrary to the Community rules on public contracts and accordingly constitutes a breach of the freedom to provide services, provided for by Article 49 EC, since that requirement makes the supply of services 'less attractive'. The applicant also refers to paragraph 30 of Case 31/87 Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635.

57 The applicant also submits that the ECB's arguments regarding the judicial penalties laid down by German law in the event of non-compliance with the requirement to hold the permit are irrelevant. It follows from the principle of primacy of EC law over national law that national authorities and, a fortiori, European institutions are obliged not to apply national law when it contravenes Community law.

58 Fourthly, the eligibility of candidates or tenderers to take part in a procedure must be carried out on the basis of clear and non-discriminatory selection criteria. The ECB arbitrarily or erroneously introduced a 'mandatory' requirement in the tender documents which led to discrimination against all non-German companies participating in the negotiated procedure.

59 The requirement in question also runs counter to the settled case-law of the Court on 'exclusion criteria' deriving directly from the principles of transparency and non-discrimination of participants. In that regard, the applicant refers to Case C–470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I–11617, paragraphs 91 and 92, and Case C–421/01 Traunfellner [2003] ECR I–11941, paragraph 29, and Joined Cases C–226/04 and C–228/04 La Cascina and Others [2006] ECR I–1347, paragraph 22.

60 The ECB disputes the applicant's arguments.

61 The ECB emphasises that the mandatory requirements laid down in the AÜG cannot be waived by the parties. It is also impossible to avoid application of the AÜG by choosing another national law as the basis for the contractual relationship, since, under German private international law, labour law regulations adopted in the public interest (such as the AÜG) apply to all contracts performed on German territory even if the contract is governed by a different law. The legal consequences of non-compliance with the relevant provisions of the AÜG are, by virtue of Articles 9 and 16 thereof, the nullity of the framework contract and the fact that the ECB would commit an administrative offence.

62 The ECB maintains that the scope of the AÜG is not limited to interim agencies, the exclusive purpose of which is the provision of staff to other companies. The AÜG applies to all companies, including those active in the IT sector who post their professional employees to other companies to provide services.

63 According to the ECB, the fact that the applicant concluded, in May 2006, another contract with the ECB without holding the permit is not relevant. The contract in question is not a contract for the supply of staff but a service contract (Dienstvertrag), which does not necessitate authorisation under the AÜG. There are differences between the two types of contract. First, while the supplier of staff is responsible for the proper selection of appropriate staff, and not for services provided by its staff, the service provider is fully responsible for the performance of the services in the prescribed manner by its staff. Second, unlike the framework contracts, the contract for the provision of services does not provide for the transfer of the right to supervise the staff concerned and the right to give instructions to them. The staff that the service provider deploys to perform the services remain subject to its instructions and supervision.

– Findings of the Court

64 As a preliminary point, it should be noted that the ECB, like the institutions, has a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender and the Court's review should be limited to checking that there has been no serious and manifest error (see, by analogy with the public procurement procedures before the Community institutions, Case 56/77 Agence Européenne d'Intérims v Commission [1978] ECR 2215, paragraph 20; Case T–203/96 Embassy Limousines & Services v Parliament [1998] ECR II–4239, paragraph 56; and AICS v Parliament, paragraph 28 above, paragraph 39).

65 By its first complaint, the applicant submits that the ground for exclusion is not justified since, under German and Greek law, it is not necessary for it to hold the permit in order to offer services to the ECB. The ECB erroneously and arbitrarily introduced that criterion in order to exclude all non-German tenderers.

66 In that regard, it should be borne in mind, firstly, that the place of the supply of services concerned in the negotiated procedure is Frankfurt-am-Main (Germany), secondly, that, in accordance with point 3.16.1 of the draft framework contract, that contract is governed by German law and must be interpreted in the light thereof and, thirdly, that the ECB gave the provisions of the AÜG as the reason for the requirement to hold the permit. Accordingly, Greek law is irrelevant from the point of view of assessment of whether, in order to conclude a framework contract with the ECB, the applicant was subject to the obligation, under national law, to hold the permit.

67 It remains, therefore, to be determined whether the ECB erroneously interpreted and applied German law when it took the view that that law required the successful tenderer to hold the permit.

68 Firstly, in that regard, it must be pointed out that the applicant does not contest the lawfulness of point 3.16.1 of the framework contract, which provides that that contract is governed by German law and must be interpreted in the light thereof. Nor does it contest the arbitration clause in point 3.16.2 of the framework contract which provides that any dispute arising out of the ECB's contractual relationship with the successful tenderer is to be subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Amtsgericht/Landesgericht Frankfurt am Main (Local Court/Regional Court, Frankfurt-am-Main).

69 Secondly, it should be borne in mind that, under Article 1 of the AÜG, 'employers wishing to provide workers (temporary staff) to third parties (users) on a professional basis must hold a permit'. Clearly, the supply of services in performance of a framework contract requires the provision to a third party, in this case the ECB, of staff, which is, moreover, not disputed by the applicant.

70 With regard to the criterion that the supply must be on a professional basis, it is apparent from the case-law of the Bundesarbeitsgericht (Federal Labour Court) (judgment of 9 November 1994, AZR 217/94) that the scope of the requirement under the AÜG is not limited to interim agencies whose only purpose is the supply of staff to other companies, but also applies to companies in the IT sector which post their employees to other companies. In the same way, in that judgment, the view was taken that the requirement at issue applied to a contract for remunerated services the scope of which had been limited to 85 man-days and to a period of four months. Accordingly, it is manifest that the contract in question in the present case, which concerns a period of three years and is intended to provide the ECB with 10 000 man-hours per year, implies that that provision is on a professional basis.

71 Thirdly, the applicant cannot validly rely on the fact that, at the time the contract for supply of an expert to the ECB in May 2006 was concluded, no permit was required. Having regard to the findings in paragraphs 68 to 70 above, even if the arguments of the ECB distinguishing between the two types of contract from the point of view of application of the AÜG (see paragraph 63 above) were without foundation, that would mean at the very most that the ECB had infringed the provisions of the AÜG in respect of the May 2006 contract. Such an infringement of the AÜG in the past does not exempt the ECB from correctly applying the AÜG during the negotiated procedure and, subsequently, on conclusion of the framework contracts.

72 Accordingly, the conclusion must be reached that the ECB did not err in either its interpretation or its application of the AÜG when it took the view that the supply of services in question was subject to the obligation laid down in Article 1 of the AÜG. It also follows that the imposition of the requirement to hold the permit cannot be classified as arbitrary or a method of intentionally favouring tenderers established in Germany.

73 It follows that the applicant's first complaint is manifestly devoid of any foundation in law.

74 By its second complaint, the applicant submits that it is impossible for it to obtain the permit from the competent German authorities because of specific features of Greek law, which permits the grant of a similar permit only to undertakings the sole activity of which is the supply of temporary staff, and of German law, which provides that, in the case of an undertaking established in another Member State, the permit can be issued only if that undertaking holds a corresponding permit in the Member State where it is established.

75 In that regard, it should be noted that the Court, in the context of an action for annulment brought pursuant to Article 230 EC, is not competent to assess whether the interaction between two national laws effectively constitutes an obstacle to the freedom to provide services, which is prohibited by Article 49 EC. In order to contest the compatibility with Community law of a decision to grant the permit, the applicant must bring an action for annulment before the national court against the decisions of the national authorities.

76 It follows that the applicant's second complaint is manifestly inadmissible.

77 By its third complaint, the applicant submits that it follows from the principle of the primacy of Community law that the ECB should have excluded the application of German law in so far as it imposes the obligation to hold the permit, since the application of that requirement by the ECB limits access to the public procurement procedure by undertakings established outside Germany and is contrary to Article 49 EC and to Directives 96/71 and 2004/18. In that regard, the applicant relies on paragraph 30 of the judgment in Beentjes, paragraph 56 above, and paragraph 46 of the judgment in FKP Scorpio Konzertproduktionen.

78 Firstly, it is clear that the applicant does not rely on any rule of law which, having regard to the particular status of the ECB, would permit the ECB to avoid the territorial scope of German law with regard to services supplied by a successful tenderer in Germany. It should also be borne in mind that the applicant does not contest the lawfulness of the choice of German law as the law applicable to the framework contract or that of the arbitration clause (see paragraph 68 above).

79 Furthermore, it has previously been held that, in accordance with the principles of sound administration and cooperation in good faith as between the Community institutions and the Member States, the institutions are required to ensure that the conditions laid down in an invitation to tender do not induce potential tenderers to infringe the national legislation applicable to their business (AICS v Parliament, paragraph 28 above, paragraph 41).

80 It follows that the applicant cannot validly complain of the fact that the ECB applied the provisions of German law.

81 Secondly, as is apparent from paragraphs 69, 70 and 72 above, the ECB rigorously complied with the provisions of the AÜG, which gave it no discretion as to imposition of the requirement to hold the permit. Consequently, the applicant's argument that the ECB's imposition of that requirement is contrary to Article 49 EC and to the abovementioned directives in truth seeks to dispute the compatibility of the AÜG with those provisions of Community law.

82 As stated in paragraph 75 above, when considering an action brought under Article 230 EC, the Court is not competent to review the lawfulness of national legislation in the light of Community law. In order to do so, the applicant should have brought an action against the Federal Republic of Germany before the national court, which would have been able to refer a question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling.

83 Nor, thirdly, can the applicant validly base its arguments on the case-law on which it relies.

84 With regard to the judgment in Beentjes, paragraph 56 above, in the case which gave rise to that judgment, the contracting authority took an additional criterion into account, namely, the requirement to employ the long-term unemployed, which was not imposed by national legislation. However, in the present case, the criterion of holding the permit is derived directly from German law, without the ECB having any discretion at all as to its application. Accordingly, unlike the judgment in Beentjes, paragraph 56 above, in the present case examination of whether the ground for exclusion is compatible with the principle of non-discrimination does not concern a decision of the contracting authority to add a criterion to those laid down by national law, but whether the AÜG infringes the principle of non-discrimination by requiring all undertakings supplying staff to third parties in Germany to hold the permit.

85 The judgment in FKP Scorpio Konzertproduktionen, paragraph 56 above, concerns questions referred for a preliminary ruling relating to the compatibility of provisions of national law with Community law.

86 As has already been noted in paragraph 82 above, when considering an action brought under Article 230 EC, the Court is not competent to review the lawfulness of national legislation in the light of Community law, with the result that the applicant cannot successfully rely on the case-law created by the judgments in Beentjes and FKP Scorpio Konzertproduktionen, paragraph 56 above, in support of its position.

87 It follows that the applicant's third complaint must be rejected in part as manifestly unfounded and in part as manifestly inadmissible.

88 In its fourth complaint, the applicant submits that the imposition by the ECB of the requirement to hold the permit is discriminatory and infringes the principle of transparency. In that regard it relies on paragraphs 91 and 92 of the judgment in Universale-Bau and Others, paragraph 59 above, paragraph 29 of the judgment in Traunfellner, paragraph 59 above, and paragraph 22 of the judgment in La Cascina and Others, paragraph 59 above.

89 In the judgment in Traunfellner, paragraph 59 above, the Court of Justice was asked to give a preliminary ruling concerning the interpretation of Article 19 of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), pursuant to which, where the awarding authority has not excluded the submission of variants (alternative tenders), it is required to state the minimum specifications to be respected by those variants. The Court held that, having regard to the principle of transparency, reference in the contract documents to a provision of national legislation cannot satisfy the obligation laid down in Article 19 of Directive 93/37 and that only a statement in the contract documents enables tenderers to be kept informed in the same way of the minimum specifications which their variants must respect.

90 In that regard, it suffices to note that, in the present case, the requirement to hold the permit was clearly set out in a number of places in the negotiated procedure documents and that the applicant had no difficulty in interpreting the disputed requirement, which, moreover, enabled it to apply to the competent national authorities for the permit in good time. It follows that the judgment in Traunfellner, paragraph 59 above, is entirely irrelevant to the resolution of the present dispute.

91 The judgment in La Cascina and Others, paragraph 59 above, concerns questions referred for a preliminary ruling relating to the compatibility of provisions of national law with Community law in the light, in particular, of the principles of non-discrimination and transparency. According to paragraph 93 of the judgment in Universale-Bau and Others, paragraph 59 above, the procedure for awarding a public contract must comply, at every stage, particularly that of selecting the candidates in a restricted procedure, both with the principle of the equal treatment of the potential tenderers and the principle of transparency, so as to afford to all equality of opportunity in formulating the terms of their applications to take part and their tenders.

92 As has been noted in paragraph 90 above, the applicant cannot validly allege that it was not sufficiently informed of the disputed requirement and so cannot successfully rely on the principle of transparency. With regard to breach of the principle of non-discrimination, it must be pointed out that the disputed requirement applied to all tenderers. As regards the applicant's allegation that only tenderers established in Germany could meet that requirement, even if the applicant's assertion were correct, that situation would be the direct result of the provisions of the AÜG and other national laws, the compatibility of which with the principle of non-discrimination cannot be examined in the context of the present dispute (see paragraph 82 above).

93 Accordingly the applicant's fourth complaint must also be rejected in part as manifested unfounded and in part as manifestly inadmissible.

94 Having regard to all the foregoing considerations, the eighth plea, alleging that the ground for exclusion is unlawful, must be rejected in part as manifestly inadmissible and in part as manifestly unfounded.

The applicant's first seven pleas

95 The first plea alleges that the lack of separation between the selection criteria and award criteria is unlawful. The second plea alleges breach of the implementing rules, of Directive 2004/18 and the lack of transparent and objective assessment of the applicant's technical and professional capabilities. The third plea alleges discrimination arising from the lack of experience of the applicant and E2Bank as a consortium. The fourth plea alleges a failure to indicate the weighting given to the criteria in the negotiated procedure documents. The fifth plea alleges breach of the principles of transparency and sound administration and of the duty to state reasons. The sixth plea alleges errors in assessment when examining the applicant's tender. The seventh plea alleges breach of confidentiality as evidenced by an anonymous letter received by the applicant.

96 On the one hand, the applicant has not succeeded in demonstrating that the mandatory criterion, laid down in the negotiated procedure documents, requiring the permit to be held was unlawful and, on the other, the applicant has expressly accepted in its pleadings that it 'could not obtain [the permit] under any circumstances in Germany'.

97 It follows that, even if one or more of the first seven pleas were well founded, that cannot profit the applicant. Even if the decisions rejecting its tender and awarding the contract to other tenderers were annulled on the basis of those pleas, the fact remains that the applicant has not succeeded in demonstrating the unlawfulness of the ground for exclusion, with the result that the ECB could replace the contested decisions in respect of the applicant only with a fresh decision rejecting its tender on the basis of the ground for exclusion.

98 In accordance with settled case-law, an applicant cannot have a legitimate interest in the annulment of a decision where it is already certain that that decision which concerns it cannot be other than reconfirmed (see, to that effect, Case 432/85 Souna v Commission [1987] ECR 2229, paragraph 20; Joined Cases T–357/00, T–361/00, T–363/00 and T–364/00 Martínez Alarcón and Others v Commission [2002] ECR-SC I–A–37 and II–161, paragraph 93; and Case T–16/02 Audi v OHIM (TDI) [2003] ECR II–5167, paragraph 97). Accordingly, it must be held that the applicant, following the rejection of its plea alleging that the ground for exclusion is unlawful, no longer has a legitimate interest in putting forward other pleas in order to obtain the annulment of the decisions rejecting its tender and awarding the contract to other tenderers (see, to that effect, Martínez Alarcón and Others v Commission, cited above, paragraph 93).

99 In the same way, in accordance with case-law, a plea for annulment is inadmissible on the ground of lack of interest in bringing proceedings where, even if it were well founded, annulment of the contested act on the basis of that plea would not give the applicant satisfaction (see, to that effect, Case 37/72 Marcato v Commission [1973] ECR 361, paragraphs 2 to 8, and the Opinion of Advocate General Mayras in the same case, ECR 371, 374).

100 Consequently, the applicant's first seven pleas must be rejected as manifestly inadmissible.

101 It follows from all the foregoing considerations that the action must be dismissed in part as manifestly inadmissible and in part as manifestly unfounded.

Costs

102 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs, if they have been asked for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the applicant has been unsuccessful, it must, having regard to the form of order sought by the ECB, be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Fourth Chamber)

hereby orders:

1. The action is dismissed.

2. Evropaïki Dynamiki – Proigmena Systimata Tilepikoinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE is ordered to pay the costs.

Action brought on 9 October 2006 - Evropaïki Dynamiki v ECB

(Case T-279/06)

Language of the case: English

Parties

Applicant: Evropaïki Dynamiki - Proigmena Systimata Tilepikoinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE (Athens, Greece) (represented by: N. Korogiannakis and N. Keramidas, lawyers)

Defendant: European Central Bank

Form of order sought

Annul the decision of the ECB to evaluate the applicant's bid as not successful and award the contract to the successful contractor; order ECB to pay the applicant's legal and other costs and expenses incurred in connection with this application, even if the current application is rejected.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicant submitted a bid in response to a call by the defendant for a negotiated tender for the provision of IT consultancy and IT development services to the European Central Bank (ECB) (OJ 2005/S 137-135354). The applicant contests the decision to reject its bid and to commence contractual negotiations with other bidders.

In support of its application, the applicant submits that the ECB unlawfully did not disclose the weighting of criteria and sub-criteria in the tender notice and that the ECB used vague terms to evaluate negatively the applicant's bid and thereby violated the principles of transparency and sound administration and failed to state reasons. Furthermore, the applicant claims that the ECB made several errors of appreciation under the evaluation of the applicant's offer. Finally the applicant alleges that the ECB introduced a specific term in the call for tender, which favoured German established companies, and thereby violated among others Articles 12 EC and 49 EC.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Fourth Chamber)

10 September 2008 (*)

(Public service contracts – Community tendering procedure – Rejection of bid – Selection and award criteria – Obligation to state reasons)

In Case T–272/06,

Evropaïki Dinamiki – Proigmena Sistimata Tilepikinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE, established in Athens (Greece), represented by N. Korogiannakis and N. Keramidas, lawyers, applicant,

v

Court of Justice of the European Communities, represented initially by M. Schauss and then by D. Guild, acting as Agents,

defendant,

APPLICATION for the annulment of the decision of the Court of Justice of 20 July 2006 not to accept the tender submitted by the applicant in response to the call for tenders of 5 July 2005 for services to maintain, develop and support computer applications, and to award the contract to the successful tenderer,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES (Fourth Chamber), composed of O. Czúcz (Judge Rapporteur), President, J.D. Cooke and I. Labucka, Judges,

Registrar: C. Kantza, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 19 February 2008,

gives the following

Judgment

Background to the litigation

1 The award of service contracts by the Court of Justice is subject to the provisions of Title V of Part One of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1) ('the Financial Regulation') and to the provisions of Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1) ('the implementing rules'). Those provisions are based on the relevant Community directives and, in particular, as regards service contracts, on Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended by Directive 97/52/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1) and replaced by Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The applicant is a company governed by Greek law, active in the area of information technology and communications.

3 By a contract notice of 5 July 2005, published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2005 S 127) under reference 2005/S 127–125162, the Court of Justice issued a call for tenders for the provision of services to maintain, develop and support current or future computer applications.

4 Section III.2.1.3 of the contract notice reads as follows:

'Technical capacity – means of proof required:

Brief description of the professional activities undertaken by the company which are relevant to this invitation to tender.

Summaries containing [three] references for work carried out by the company, or by the partner companies in a consortium, during the past [three] years, involving research, development, maintenance or support of IT applications in both of the following functional fields: computerisation of judicial and/or administrative procedures in the civil service; documentation and collaborative work in document preparation.

Summaries containing [three] references for work carried out by the company or by the partner companies in a consortium, during the past [three] years, involving quality assurance plans in both of the following functional fields: computerisation of judicial and/or administrative procedures in the civil service; documentation and collaborative work in document preparation.

Description of how the technical division(s) is/are structured within the company or consortium.

Description of IT skills centres within the company, citing in each case the particular field covered, the number of IT staff working there, and the centre's geographic location.'

5 The tender specifications define the assessment criteria as follows:

'5.1 Assessment of tenders

Tenders will be assessed in three stages:

– checking of the exclusion criteria;

– shortlisting of no more than five tenderers;

– comparison of tenders on the basis of the award criteria … and award of the contract to two firms.

...

5.3 Selection criteria

...

Tendering firms will be assessed on the basis of the profile that emerges from analysis of the following factors:

– the experience and references of the firm and associated firms in equivalent projects in the following functional domains (35 points):

(1) computerisation of judicial and/or administrative procedures in the public service;

(2) documentation and collaboration in the preparation of documents;

in each of these two domains 15 man/years' experience in each of the last three years is required.

...

– capacity for intervention in situ and speed of intervention, expressed as a number of hours worked (15 points);

– availability of computer skill centres (10 points) …

Tendering firms scoring a minimum of 70 points will go forward to the award procedure.

5.4 Award criteria

Tenders will be classified in order to identify the most economically advantageous tender, i.e. the bid with the best quality/price ratio [with the quality and price criteria counting for 60 and 40 points respectively].'

6 On 9 January 2006, the applicant submitted a bid in response to the call for tenders.

7 By letter of 20 July 2006, the Court of Justice informed the applicant that its tender had not been selected as the applicant did not fulfil the criteria to go forward to the award stage and that it had the possibility to obtain additional information on the grounds for rejection of its bid.

8 By letter of 24 July 2006, the applicant requested the Court of Justice to provide it with the following information: the name of the successful tenderers; the reasons for the decision and the criteria which the applicant's tender had not satisfied; the scores obtained in respect of each award criterion for the applicant's technical offer and that of the successful tenderers; a comparison of the applicant's financial offer and that of the successful tenderers. The applicant also requested a copy of the evaluation committee's report.

9 By letter of 3 August 2006, the Court of Justice gave details of the names of the successful tenderers and provided a table comparing the results obtained by them and by the applicant. It also informed the applicant that since its tender had not satisfied the selection criteria no financial evaluation had been carried out.

10 By letter of 7 August 2006, the applicant stated that the information provided by the Court of Justice did not allow it to understand how the applicant's tender had been compared with those of the successful tenderers, particularly as regards its experience and references, its capacity for intervention in situ and its capacity to assume the responsibilities of the contract. It also asked the Court of Justice to disclose the financial offers of the successful tenderers.

11 By letter of 23 August 2006, the Court of Justice informed the applicant that at the end of the selection procedure it had received a score of more than 70 points, but that it had finished in sixth place. Consequently, its tender was not considered in the award phase, as the number of candidates which could participate in that procedure had been limited to five.

12 The Court of Justice went on to provide the following additional explanations:

– for the criterion concerning experience and references, the applicant had obtained a score of 17.25 points out of 35, because some of the applicant's references concerned activities which had been carried out more than three years previously, other references did not contain the relevant certificates or reference letters for 'work carried out' and no reference was dedicated to a quality assurance project;

– for the criterion concerning the capacity of intervention in situ and speed of intervention, expressed as a number of hours worked, since the time given in the applicant's tender (48 hours) was longer than that given in other tenders, the applicant had obtained 10.5 points out of 15;

– as regards the criterion relating to the availability of computer skill centres, the applicant's tender did not indicate either the specialisations of each of those centres or the number of persons employed there and had obtained 6.67 points out of 10.

13 In the same letter, in reply to the applicant's request that the financial offers of the successful tenderers be disclosed, the Court of Justice pointed out that the choice of tenderers was based not only on a price ratio, but also on a quality ratio. Even if the applicant had been among the five successful candidates in the selection phase, it would not have succeeded in the award phase, since its total score, taking into account its hypothetical result in respect of the pricing criteria, would have been 77.91 points, whereas those of the successful tenderers were 81.62 points and 83.71 points respectively.

Procedure and forms of order sought

14 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 29 September 2006, the applicant brought the present action.

15 Upon hearing the report of the Judge Rapporteur the Court (Fourth Chamber) decided to open the oral procedure. By way of measure of organisation of procedure it put certain written questions to the parties and invited the Court of Justice to furnish certain documents including, in particular, a copy of the report of the evaluation committee. The parties complied with these requests within the time fixed.

16 At the hearing on 19 February 2008 the Court, by way of measure of organisation of procedure pursuant to Article 64(3) of its Rules of Procedure and without prejudice to the possible application of Article 67(3) of those Rules, ordered the production by the Court of Justice within 10 days of a full version of the evaluation committee report, including its annexes, and for this purpose did not close the oral procedure at the end of the hearing.

17 The Court of Justice complied with this request by the Court within the time fixed.

18 By decision of 9 July 2008 the Court decided to close the oral procedure, having decided that it was not necessary to include the document thus produced in the case-file.

19 The applicant claims that the Court should:

– annul the decision of the Court of Justice not to accept its bid and the decision to award the contract to the successful tenderers;

– order the Court of Justice to pay the costs, even if the application is unsuccessful.

20 The Court of Justice contends that the Court should:

– dismiss the action;

– order the applicant to pay the costs.

Substance

21 In support of its application for annulment, the applicant relies on two pleas in law. The first plea alleges infringement of the Financial Regulation, of the implementing rules and of Directive 2004/18/EC, together with infringement of the principles of equal treatment and transparency. The second plea alleges manifest errors of assessment.

Arguments of the parties

22 In its first plea, the applicant argues that the evaluation committee incorrectly interpreted the provisions of the contract notice regarding the references to be provided by candidates for the purposes of assessing their technical capacity.

23 It claims that all project references submitted in its tender concerned projects carried out during the previous three years, as section III.2.1.3 of the contract notice required. However, the evaluation committee took into account only the references relating to projects which were initiated and completed during the previous three years, including that in which the contract notice was published (2003, 2004 and 2005) ('the relevant period').

24 In its second plea, the applicant submits, firstly, that the contracting authority committed a manifest error of assessment by not taking into account the applicant's references relating to the projects which were partially completed during the relevant period, including those concerning the 'EUR-Lex', 'ESP5', 'Circa', 'SEI-JOS', 'IDA Tools', 'Stadium' and 'Chopin' projects.

25 Secondly, it submits that the contracting authority committed a manifest error of assessment by disregarding certain of the applicant's references because they did not contain certificates or reference letters.

26 The Court of Justice rejects the arguments put forward by the applicant. It denies that the evaluation committee had mistakenly interpreted the conditions of the contract notice relating to references furnished by tenderers and also denies the alleged errors of assessment concerning the references which the applicant furnished.

Findings of the Court

27 It must be recalled at the outset that, in accordance with settled case-law, the statement of the reasons on which a decision adversely affecting a person is based must allow the Community Court to exercise its power of review as to its legality and must provide the person concerned with the information necessary to enable him to decide whether or not the decision is well founded (Case 195/80 Michel v Parliament [1981] ECR 2861, paragraph 22, and Case C-166/95 P Commission v Daffix [1997] ECR I-983, paragraph 23).

28 Accordingly, the fact that a statement of reasons is lacking or inadequate, hindering that review of legality, constitutes a matter of public interest which may, and even must, be raised by the Community Court of its own motion (Case 18/57 Nold v High Authority [1959] ECR 41, at p. 52, and Case C-166/95 P Commission v Daffix, cited above, paragraph 24).

29 Although the applicant has not in the present case raised a failure to state reasons, the Court considers that, in the circumstances set out below, it must examine the question as to whether the Court of Justice has discharged the obligation upon it to state reasons.

30 It follows from the above summary of the pleas in law and arguments put forward by the applicant that the present action was formulated on the basis of information furnished by the Court of Justice in its letters of 3 and 23 August 2006, in response to the applicant's request for the reasons upon which the decision was based in accordance with Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation.

31 Thus, the pleas in law advanced against the contested decision are confined to putting in issue the way in which the references supplied by the applicant in accordance with the contract conditions were evaluated, these references being relevant only at the selection stage of the procedure. In other words, the present case has been brought upon a basis induced by the reasons given by the Court of Justice, to the effect that the applicant's bid had been excluded at the end of the selection stage upon the ground that the bid had been placed in sixth position in accordance with the evaluation criteria for that phase of the procedure and that only five tenderers had been retained for consideration at the award phase.

32 However, the documents produced by the Court of Justice on foot of the measure of organisation of the procedure (see paragraph 15 above) show that the information given to the applicant in the letters of 20 July, 3 and 23 August 2006 was wrong and did not reflect the true basis upon which the decision to award the contract to the two successful tenderers had in fact been taken by the Court of Justice.

33 On the basis of the proofs which have been furnished to it, the Court finds that what happened during the course of the evaluation procedure was as follows:

– on 21 June the Informatics and New Technologies Division of the Court of Justice ('the Informatics Division') presented to the evaluation committee its report No 16/2006 on the call for tenders Ref. CJ AM 13/2004, containing an evaluation by reference to both the selection and the award criteria;

– the Informatics Division informed the evaluation committee that on the basis of this evaluation six tenderers including the applicant had received the minimum 70 points in the evaluation of the selection criteria stage. However, the applicant, with 70.1 points, was placed in sixth position. Accordingly, only the bids of the other five tenderers had been evaluated at the phase of the award criteria;

– in the evaluation of the bids by reference to the award criteria, the Informatics Division had placed the two tenderers who were subsequently successful in first and second position and recommended that the committee should award them the contract;

– at its meeting on 12 July 2006 the evaluation committee had considered the Informatics Division report but decided to postpone its decision on the award of the contract and to await additional information which it requested from the Informatics Division;

– on 18 July 2006, the Informatics Division furnished a supplementary report entitled 'Addendum to Report No 16/2006'; this report, together with its annexes, clearly shows that the Informatics Division had carried out a new evaluation of the award criteria in order to take into account the applicant's bid as well as the five bids which had previously been assessed; – for the two categories of award criteria, the Informatics Division had placed the applicant's bid in fourth position for quality (38.13 points out of 60) and in second place on price (39.18 points out of 40). On the combined quality/price criteria the applicant's bid had been placed in fourth position with a total of 77.91 points out of 100;

– on 20 July 2006, the Court of Justice informed the two successful tenderers of the award of the contract and informed the applicant that its bid had been rejected.

34 The description of the conduct of the evaluation procedure as set out in the preceding paragraph does not establish that, on the one hand, the applicant's bid had been rejected on the grounds that it had been placed in sixth position at the end of the selection stage or, on the other hand, that no technical and financial evaluation of the bid had been made.

35 The formal decision to award the contract to the two successful tenderers was in reality taken on the basis of the supplementary report of 18 July 2006, which includes an evaluation of all six bids which had attained 70 points at the selection stage, including that of the applicant. The applicant's bid was not therefore rejected at the end of the selection stage but upon the basis that it had been placed in fourth position at the end of the award stage. Moreover, this fact was known to the Court of Justice when it sent its letter of 20 July 2006 to the applicant.

36 At the hearing the Court of Justice argued that the evaluation of the applicant's bid by reference to the award criteria was merely an informal exercise designed to confirm the earlier decision to reject the bid at the selection phase. That argument cannot be accepted. The supplementary report of 18 July 2006 clearly shows that the bid had been fully evaluated at the award stage and had even been placed in second position on price. It was on the basis of that evaluation, which took into account the applicant's bid, that the Court of Justice adopted its formal and definitive decision to award the contract to the two successful tenderers.

37 It is also apparent that, in formulating its present case, the applicant was induced into error by the description given of the evaluation of the references in the letters of 20 July and 3 and 23 August 2006. In particular this last letter suggests that the mark of 17.5 out of 35 points was attributable to the three factors cited at paragraph 10 above, including the fact that some of its references concerned activities which were carried out more than three years previously. The applicant, as is shown clearly in the application, interpreted this explanation to the effect that the references in question had not been taken into account in the evaluation of the selection criteria upon the ground that they covered work which had been commenced or finished on dates outside the relevant period, running from 1 January 2003 to 31 December 2005, even though the work was being performed during those years.

38 That interpretation was, in effect, further confirmed by the defence which, at paragraph 29, reads as follows:

'First the applicant's contention is misconceived in fact. Even though all the aforementioned references cover work carried out by the applicant or by the partner companies in a consortium during the past three years, it would have been contrary to the principles of transparency and equal treatment to take into account the work and activities which were carried out more than three years ago by the applicant. The [Court of Justice] indeed took into account the work carried out by the applicant or by the partner companies in a consortium during the past three years, excluding however the activities [relating to the projects “EUR-Lex”, “ESP5”, “Circa”, “SEI-JOS”, “IDA Tools”, “Stadium” and “Chopin”] which were anterior to this period.’

39 Although paragraph 29 of the defence is open to an interpretation to the effect that the references in question had been excluded from consideration only to the extent that they covered work performed outside the relevant period, the defence pleading did not correct the impression created by the letter of 23 August 2006. It was not until the Court of Justice, in its rejoinder, declared unequivocally that all of the references had been taken into account in respect of work performed during the relevant period that the applicant and the Court were able to understand that the meaning first given to the letter of 23 August 2006 was mistaken.

40 Moreover, it follows from the foregoing that the debate between the parties in the present case as to the validity of the evaluation of the references is in effect redundant in these circumstances, because the evaluation of the selection criteria is no longer relevant once the bid is admitted to the award stage. If the Court of Justice had informed the applicant of the fact that the limit of five tenderers at the outcome of the selection phase had not been applied and that its bid had been placed in fourth position at the end of the award stage, the present case might not have been brought, or, at the very least, would have been founded on a totally different basis.

41 As the applicant points out, Article 89(1) of the Financial Regulation requires that ‘all public contracts … comply with the principles of transparency, proportionality, equal treatment and non-discrimination’. Moreover Article 100(2) of the regulation provides that ‘[t]he contracting authority shall notify all candidates or tenderers whose applications or tenders are rejected of the grounds on which the decision was taken.’

42 It is undeniable that this last provision requires every contracting authority to give a tenderer the true reasons for the rejection of its bid. Moreover, the reasons given must reflect the actual conduct of the evaluation procedure. In that connection it must be recalled that the reasons given for a decision which has adverse effect must be logically compatible with the decision as adopted (see, to that effect, Case 2/56 Geitling v High Authority [1957] ECR 3, at p. 16).

43 A statement of reasons which does not identify the true basis upon which a decision rejecting a bid has been taken and does not reflect faithfully the manner in which the rejected bid has been evaluated is not transparent and does not fulfil the obligation to state reasons in Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation.

44 It follows from the above findings that the decision rejecting the applicant’s bid disregarded the obligation to state reasons and that in consequence it is necessary to annul that decision, as communicated to the applicant by the letter of 20 July 2006.

45 As regards the applicant’s claim for annulment of the decision awarding the contract to the two successful tenderers, the Court finds it impossible to judge whether it is well founded because, as the obligation to state reasons was disregarded, no examination of the evaluation of the award criteria could take place in the present action.

Costs

46 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party’s pleadings. Since the Court of Justice has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay costs as applied for by the applicant.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Fourth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Annuls the decision of the Court of Justice to reject the tender submitted by Evropaïki Dinamiki – Proigmena Sistimata Tilepikinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE, as communicated to the latter by letter of 20 July 2006;

2. Orders the Court of Justice to pay the costs.

Parties

Applicant: Evropaïki Dynamiki - Proigmena Systimata Tilepikoinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE (Athens, Greece) (represented by: N. Korogiannakis and N. Keramidas, lawyers)

Defendant: Court of Justice of the European Communities

Form of order sought

Annulment of the decision of the Court of Justice to evaluate the applicant's bid as not successful and award the contract to the successful contractor; order the Court of Justice to pay the applicant's legal and other costs and expenses incurred in connection with this application, even if the current application is rejected.

Pleas in law and main arguments

By means of its application, the applicant seeks annulment of the decision of the Court of Justice of 20 July 2006, rejecting its bid filed in response to the open Call for Tenders AM CJ 13/04 for the maintenance, development and support of computer applications (OJ 2005/S 127-125162 & 2005/S 171-169521) and awarding the same Call for Tender to another bidder.

The applicant claims that the contested decision was taken in violation of the Financial Regulation (EC) No 1605/2002 (OJ L 248, 16/09/02, p. 1), its Implementing Rules and Directive 2004/18/EC, through an alleged misinterpretation of the selection criteria, violation of the principles of transparency and equal treatment of the participants.

Moreover, the applicant submits that the contracting authority's decision contains evident errors of assessment in the framework of the evaluation of its offer, exceeding, thus, the discretion that European Institutions dispose in procurement procedures.

contre

Commission des Communautés européennes, représentée initialement par M^me^ E. Cujo et M. P. Kuijper, puis par M. M. Wilderspin et M^me^ Cujo, en qualité d'agents,

partie défenderesse, ayant pour objet une demande d'annulation de la décision de la Commission du 14 juillet 2006, portant annulation de la procédure d'appel d'offres EuropeAid/122742/C/SUP/RU relatif à la fourniture d'équipement informatique et de bureau pour le réseau d'information ainsi que d'équipement d'intégration sociale et de rééducation pour les personnes handicapées dans le district fédéral de la Volga (Fédération de Russie),

LE TRIBUNAL DE PREMIÈRE INSTANCE
DES COMMUNAUTÉS EUROPÉENNES (septième chambre), composé de MM. N. J. Forwood, président, D. Šváby et L. Truchot (rapporteur), juges, greffier : M^me^ K. Pocheć, administrateur, vu la procédure écrite et à la suite de l'audience du 22 mai 2008, rend le présent

Arrêt

Faits à l'origine du litige

1 Le 1^er^ avril 2006, la Commission, agissant par l'intermédiaire de sa délégation à Moscou (Fédération de Russie), a publié au Supplément au Journal officiel de l'Union européenne (JO S 70) un appel d'offres ouvert international pour un marché de fournitures intitulé « Social Integration of the Disabled in Privolzhsky Federal Okrug, Russian Federation – supply of social integration and rehabilitation-related equipment for the disabled and IT and office equipment for the information network » (EuropeAid/122742/C/SUP/RU). Cette procédure faisait l'objet d'une gestion centralisée déconcentrée et, à ce titre, la Commission avait la qualité de pouvoir adjudicateur agissant au nom et pour le compte de la Fédération de Russie, pays bénéficiaire. Le service déconcentré, la délégation de la Commission à Moscou (ci-après « la délégation »), était le service en charge de la gestion des contrats.

2 La requérante, DC-Hadler Networks SA, est la seule entreprise ayant présenté une offre à la suite de cet appel. À l'issue de l'évaluation technique et financière réalisée par la délégation les 13, 14 et 15 juin 2006, son offre a été déclarée recevable.

3 Le 19 juin 2006, la section « Finances et contrats » de la délégation a présenté au chef de délégation une demande de dérogation à la règle d'origine, selon laquelle les fournitures et les matériaux acquis dans le cadre d'un marché financé au titre d'un instrument communautaire doivent tous être originaires d'un pays communautaire ou d'un pays éligible, au motif que l'offre de la requérante spécifiait que certaines des fournitures n'étaient pas produites dans la zone éligible. Le même jour, le chef de délégation faisant fonction a accordé cette dérogation.

4 Le 20 juin 2006, la délégation a informé la requérante que le marché lui était attribué.

5 Par lettre du 14 juillet 2006, la Commission a notifié à la requérante sa décision d'annuler la procédure de passation du marché (ci-après la « décision attaquée »).

6 Le 17 juillet 2006, la requérante a demandé à la Commission de lui indiquer la base juridique de la décision attaquée.

7 Le 27 juillet 2006, la Commission lui a répondu que la décision attaquée était fondée sur l'article 101 du règlement (CE, Euratom) n° 1605/2002 du Conseil, du 25 juin 2002, portant règlement financier applicable au budget général des Communautés européennes (JO L 248, p. 1, rectificatif publié au JO L 25, du 30 janvier 2003, p. 43, ci-après le « règlement financier »).

8 Le 5 septembre 2006, la Commission a signé avec l'Unicef (Fonds des Nations unies pour l'enfance) une convention de contribution dont l'objet était identique à celui de l'appel d'offres du 1er avril 2006.

Procédure et conclusions des parties

9 Par requête déposée au greffe du Tribunal le 22 septembre 2006, la requérante a introduit le présent recours.

10 À la suite de l'empêchement du juge rapporteur initialement désigné, le président du Tribunal a, par décision du 18 décembre 2007, nommé un nouveau juge rapporteur.

11 Sur rapport du juge rapporteur, le Tribunal (septième chambre) a décidé d'ouvrir la procédure orale.

12 Dans le cadre des mesures d'organisation de la procédure prévues à l'article 64 du règlement de procédure du Tribunal, celui-ci a, par lettre du 7 avril 2008, invité la Commission à communiquer la décision d'attribution de l'appel d'offres à la requérante dans la mesure où elle diffère de la décision du 20 juin 2006. La Commission a confirmé, dans le délai imparti, que cette dernière décision constituait le seul document pertinent.

13 Les parties ont été entendues en leurs plaidoiries et en leurs réponses aux questions du Tribunal à l'audience du 22 mai 2008.

14 La requérante conclut à ce qu'il plaise au Tribunal d'annuler la décision attaquée.

15 La Commission conclut à ce qu'il plaise au Tribunal :

– à titre principal, prononcer le non-lieu à statuer ;

– à titre subsidiaire, rejeter le recours comme non fondé ;

– condamner la requérante aux dépens.

Sur l'intérêt à agir

Arguments des parties

16 La Commission allègue que le recours est sans objet, dans la mesure où l'exécution des lots faisant l'objet de l'appel d'offres a déjà été confiée à une organisation internationale.

17 La requérante répond que, à défaut de lui donner la possibilité de soumissionner une nouvelle fois pour le marché en question, l'annulation de la décision attaquée lui permettrait de réclamer la réparation du préjudice subi en se fondant sur la responsabilité extracontractuelle de la Commission.

Appréciation du Tribunal

18 Aux termes d'une jurisprudence constante, un recours en annulation contre un acte devenu sans objet est recevable s'il permet de redresser les éventuelles conséquences préjudiciables résultant de cet acte ou d'éviter que l'illégalité alléguée ne se reproduise à l'avenir (arrêt de la Cour du 26 avril 1988, Apesco/Commission, 207/86, Rec. p. 2151, point 16 ; arrêt du Tribunal du 25 mars 1999, Gencor/Commission, T–102/96, Rec. p. II–753, point 41 ; ordonnance du Tribunal du 5 décembre 2007, Schering-Plough/Commission et EMEA, T–133/03, non publiée au Recueil, point 31).

19 Il résulte également de la jurisprudence que, même dans une situation où la décision attaquée a déjà été pleinement exécutée en faveur d'autres concurrents dans le cadre d'une même adjudication, le requérant conserve un intérêt à voir annuler cette décision soit pour obtenir, de la part de la Commission, une remise en état adéquate de sa situation, soit pour amener la Commission à apporter, à l'avenir, les modifications appropriées au régime des adjudications, au cas où celui-ci serait reconnu contraire à certaines exigences juridiques (arrêt de la Cour du 6 mars 1979, Simmenthal/Commission, 92/78, Rec. p. 777, point 32).

20 La requérante conserve par conséquent un intérêt à agir même si l'achat et la livraison des fournitures visées dans l'appel d'offres EuropeAid/122742/C/SUP/RU, qui fait l'objet de la décision attaquée, ont été confiés à un tiers.

21 Dès lors, l'objection de la Commission relative à la disparition de l'objet du litige doit être écartée.

Sur le fond

Arguments des parties

22 La requérante soulève deux moyens à l'appui de son recours. Selon le premier moyen, tiré de la violation des formes substantielles, le manque de précision de la décision attaquée ou, à tout le moins, sa motivation incomplète aurait pour effet de priver la requérante de la possibilité d'en contrôler la légalité. Selon le second moyen, la motivation de la décision attaquée serait inexacte, car cette décision trouverait son origine dans les premières conclusions d'une procédure de vérification financière visant la requérante, qui a révélé l'existence d'anomalies affectant les certificats d'origine de fournitures informatiques livrées par elle dans le cadre d'autres contrats.

23 La Commission affirme que les deux moyens invoqués par la requérante se confondent et concernent le défaut de motivation de la décision attaquée.

24 Elle considère que, même si la motivation de la décision attaquée n'est pas longue, elle est, selon la jurisprudence, suffisante.
