26 The Italian Government argues secondly that the contracting authority, the Autonomous State Monopolies Administration ("AAMS") is not included in the list of contracting authorities in Annex I to Council Directive 80/767/EEC of 22 July 1980 adapting and supplementing in respect of certain contracting authorities Directive 77/62/EEC (Official Journal 1980 L 215, p. 1). Consequently, Article 9 of Directive 77/62 as amended, which lays down advertising rules applying to contracting authorities referred to in that annex, is not applicable in this instance. The Italian Government believes that its view is borne out by footnote 2 to the part of the list relating to Italy which, as regards the Finance Ministry, makes the following reservation: "Not including purchases made by the tobacco and salt monopolies". The Italian Government maintains that that reservation relates not only to contracts concluded by the tobacco and salt monopolies which were under the authority of the AAMS at the time when the Directive was adopted, but also all the other activities which are now under the authority of that administration.

27 That argument is ill-founded.

28 As the Commission rightly pointed out, it is clear from Article 4(4) of Italian Law No 528 of 2 August 1982 (GURI No 222 of 13 August 1982), as amended by Article 2 of Law No 85 of 19 April 1990 (GURI No 97 of 27 April 1990), that the Italian Finance Ministry is the sole real contracting authority for the contract at issue. In any event the AAMS, which conducts the lottery, is a mere administrative department - without separate legal personality - of the Finance Ministry so that even acts which may formally be ascribed to the AAMS are in substance subject to the decision-making power of that Ministry.

29 As regards footnote 2 to Annex I to Directive 80/767, its actual wording shows that it relates only to contracts awarded by the tobacco and salt monopolies.

30 The Italian Government contends finally that in any event since what is in question here is the grant to the concessionaire of the special and exclusive right to engage in a public service activity, namely, at least in part, the conduct of the lottery, the only rule to be complied with is that laid down in Article 2(3) of the Directive. It provides: "When the State, a regional or local authority or one of the legal persons governed by public law or corresponding bodies specified in Annex I grants to a body other than the contracting authority - regardless of its legal status

- special or exclusive rights to engage in a public service activity, the instrument granting this right shall stipulate that the body in question must observe the principle of non-discrimination by nationality when awarding public supply contracts to third parties".

31 That argument must also be rejected.

32 As shown in paragraphs 7 to 11 of this judgment, the conduct of the lottery is not transferred to the concessionaire whose task is confined to technical activities relating to the setting up and operation of the computerized system. Those activities comprise the supply of services to the public administration and also the supply of certain goods to it.

33 It must therefore be concluded that the provisions of the Directive relied on by the Commission are applicable in this case and the complaints relating to the infringement thereof must be examined.

34 As regards the complaint of the infringement of Article 9 of the Directive, the Italian Government does not deny that the notices in question were not sent.

35 As regards the complaint of infringement of Articles 17 to 25 of the Directive, it should be noted that those provisions contain a binding and exhaustive list of the criteria for qualitative selection and for the award of the contract and do not envisage the possibility of restricting participation in that contract to bodies, companies, consortia or groupings the majority of whose capital, considered individually or in aggregate, is publicly owned.

36 It follows that the complaints of infringement of Directive 77/62, as amended by Directive 88/295, must also be upheld.

In Case C-272/91 R,

Commission of the European Communities, represented by A. Aresu and R. Pellicer, Members of its Legal Service, acting as Agents, with an address for service in Luxembourg at the office of Roberto Hayder, a representative of its Legal Service, Wagner Centre, Kirchberg, Italian Republic, represented by Professor Luigi Ferrari Bravo, head of the Department for Legal Affairs at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, acting as Agent, assisted by Ivo M. Braguglia, Avvocato dello Stato, with an address for service in Luxembourg at the Italian Embassy, 5 Rue Marie-Adelaïde, defendant,

APPLICATION for the adoption of interim measures requiring the Italian Republic to take the measures necessary to suspend the award of the concession for the lottery computerization system,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT

makes the following

Order

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 18 October 1991, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EEC Treaty for a declaration that, by failing to make known, for the purposes of publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities, first, at the beginning of 1990, an indicative notice setting out the total procurement which the Italian Ministry of Finance was envisaging awarding during that year and secondly, in November 1990, a notice concerning the invitation to tender for the concession of the lottery computerization system, and by restricting participation in that tender exclusively to bodies, companies, consortia and groupings a majority of whose capital, considered individually or in aggregate, was publicly owned, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 30, 52 and 59 of the EEC Treaty and Articles 9 and 17 to 25 of Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (Official Journal 1977 L 13, p. 1), as amended by Council Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988 (Official Journal 1988 L 127, p. 1).

2 By a separate document lodged at the Court Registry on the same day, the Commission also applied for interim relief under Article 186 of the EEC Treaty and Article 83 of the Rules of Procedure, seeking an order requiring the Italian Republic to take the necessary measures to suspend the legal effect of the decree of the Minister for Finance of 14 June 1991 awarding the contract in question or the legal effect of any contract subsequently concluded.

3 The defendant submitted written observations on the application for interim measures on 31 October 1991 and the parties presented oral argument on 2 December 1991.

4 At the hearing, the defendant filed two documents and the parties were invited to submit additional observations arising therefrom. The Commission submitted observations on 9 December and the defendant on 16 December 1991.

5 Before considering the merits of the application for interim measures, it is appropriate to summarize the background to the dispute.

6 On 13 November 1990, the Italian Ministry of Finance published a contract notice in the Italian press concerning an invitation to tender for the concession of the computerization system for the "lotto", the State lottery.

7 It is apparent from the documents before the Court that the lottery is a game of chance operated by the Autonomous State Monopolies Administration ("the Administration"), an administrative body attached to the Ministry of Finance. The system involves players betting on one or more numbers with a view to weekly draws. The stakes are taken at authorized collection points (in particular, tobacconists) and there is a draw every Saturday in each of the ten lottery areas (ruote) into which Italy is subdivided. A bet may be entered either in the draw for the area in which the relevant collection point is situated or in the draw for all the areas. The amount of the winnings is determined, by reference in particular to the stake, in accordance with a formula laid down by Italian legislation, and winnings are payable at the collection point or, if they exceed a certain sum, at the local offices of the Ministry of Finance.

8 The lottery computerization system which was the subject of the contract comprised, according to the invitation to tender, premises, supplies, equipment, maintenance, operation, transmission of data and everything else necessary for running the lottery.

9 The invitation to tender provided that the concession was for nine years only and that when it expired the entire computerized system, including premises, apparatus, terminals at collection points, equipment, structures, programs, records and everything else necessary for operating and managing the system was to be handed over without charge for the exclusive use of the Administration.

10 It specified that the concession comprised three phases: in the first phase the equipment was to be supplied, installed and tested in parallel with the manual system, at the end of which the computerized system was to become operational in one lottery area; in the second phase the system was to be extended to all the lottery areas; and finally in the third, fully operational, phase the number of collection points was to be progressively increased. Tenders had to indicate the time within which each phase would be completed.

11 The computerization system concessionaire would receive no remuneration during the first phase, but during the second and third phases would receive a percentage of the gross receipts from automatically recorded bets. That percentage was to be indicated in the tender.

12 The invitation to tender also specified economic and technical criteria for the selection of bodies or undertakings wishing to submit tenders.

13 The invitation reserved the right to tender to bodies, companies or consortia and groups the majority of whose capital, considered individually or in aggregate, was held by the public sector. The Ministry of Finance was to take into account the particular nature and importance of the computerized operation of the lottery which, as a State monopoly operated for maximum returns, required special guarantees and absolute reliability and security for the setting-up and operation of the system.

14 Three bodies or undertakings were invited to submit tenders. By a decree of the Ministry of Finance of 14 June 1991, the concession was awarded to the consortium Lottomatica.

15 The Commission sent the Italian authorities a formal notice on 8 April 1991 followed by a reasoned opinion on 2 September 1991, in which it stated in particular that the restriction of the tendering procedure in issue exclusively to companies or bodies the majority of whose capital was held by the public sector, in so far as it favoured Italian undertakings, constituted an infringement of Articles 52 and 59 of the EEC Treaty and a measure having equivalent effect prohibited by Article 30 of the Treaty. The Commission pointed out to the Italian authorities that in its judgment in Case C-3/88 Commission v Italy [1989] ECR 4035, the Court had held that Italian legislation providing that only companies held as to a majority by the public sector could conclude agreements for the development of data-processing systems for the public authorities infringed in particular Articles 52 and 59 of the EEC Treaty, and ruled that Italy had failed to fulfil its obligations. The Commission stated that the Italian authorities had not yet taken the necessary measures to comply with that judgment and that it had for that reason brought proceedings under Article 171 of the EEC Treaty.

16 In their reply to the reasoned opinion, the Italian authorities claimed in particular that the contract in question was not one of those envisaged by the abovementioned judgment, which concerned contracts for the procurement of data-processing systems under which the suppliers were also responsible for operating the systems but as a service provided to the authorities; the contract in issue, on the other hand, concerned a concession by which the administration entrusted a third party with carrying out an activity relating to official authority, namely the processing of lottery bets. Article 55 of the EEC Treaty provided that Articles 52 and 55 did not apply to activities which in Member States were connected with the exercise of official authority.

17 It should be noted that under Article 186 of the EEC Treaty, the Court may in any cases before it prescribe any necessary interim measures.

18 Article 83(2) of the Rules of Procedure provides that an order for interim measures such as those sought in these proceedings will only be granted if the circumstances give rise to urgency and the factual and legal grounds establish a prima facie case for the order. The Court has consistently held that the urgency of an application for interim measures must be assessed in relation to the necessity for an order granting interim relief in order to prevent serious and irreparable harm to the party requesting such measures.

19 It is appropriate to consider whether those conditions are satisfied in this case.

20 As far as concerns, first, the requirement for a prima facie case, the Commission states that the infringement of Articles 52 and 59 of the EEC Treaty is manifest and that the situation here is wholly analogous to that underlying the abovementioned judgment in Case C-3/88. In particular, the concession of the computerization system in issue cannot be considered to involve the exercise of official authority within the meaning of the first paragraph of Article 55 of the Treaty. The Italian Government used the same argument concerning the contracts to develop data-processing systems for the public authorities which were in issue in Case C-3/88. The Court pointed out that the exception in Article 55 of the EEC Treaty from the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services must be restricted to activities which in themselves involve a direct and specific connection with the exercise of official authority, and declared that that was not the case for activities concerning the design, programming and operation of data-processing systems, which are activities of a technical nature.

21 The defendant claims that the concession of the lottery computerization system involves a real transfer of official powers to the concessionaire and cannot be treated in the same way as a contract to provide goods or services. That would be irreconcilable with the remuneration of the concessionaire by a percentage of the receipts. Gaming in the form of the lottery is under Italian legislation strictly reserved to the State and any activity relating to the lottery accordingly falls within the exercise of official powers, which for the purposes of the first paragraph of Article 55 of the EEC Treaty include not only powers to take decisions but also powers to organize, inspect or certify. The technical specification for the invitation to tender, filed by the defendant at the hearing, sets out the powers which the concession transfers to the concessionaire. They include in particular the taking of bets, since in order to be valid the lottery tickets must be issued by the concessionaire' s terminals installed at the collection points, and the determining of the winning tickets, to be done by the concessionaire' s record centres in each lottery area.

22 It should be noted first that the introduction of the computerized system in issue does not appear at first sight to change the various operations inherent in the lottery, as currently implemented according to the description in the specification filed by the defendant. On the face of it, no responsibility for any of these processes is transferred to the concessionaire. The collection points remain responsible for taking the bets, while the function of the concessionaire' s terminal is simply to record, to check automatically, and to transmit the data entered by the person in charge of the collection point who, according to the specification, must be able to correct the entry if there is an error and even cancel a ticket issued by the terminal. Similarly for the determination of the winning tickets, the Area Commission, an administrative body, retains responsibility for checking and validating the tickets.

23 Secondly, the services to be provided by the concessionaire of the lottery computerization system do not appear at first sight to differ from those entailed by the contracts for the development of data-processing systems for the public authorities at issue in Case C-3/88. Both cases involve developing computerized systems, providing the necessary hardware and software and operating the system. Although the lottery computerization system does not become State property until the term of the concession has expired, and the concessionaire' s remuneration consists of a share of the returns from operating the system, those factors are, on the face of it, irrelevant to the rules of Community law in issue.

24 It must therefore be held, taking account of the abovementioned judgment in Case C-3/88, that the Commission' s application does not appear at this stage to be without substance and that the requirement for a prima facie case is satisfied.

25 As far as concerns the requirement for urgency, the Commission claims that it cannot wait until the decision on the substance without suffering serious and irreparable damage in its capacity as the institution responsible for ensuring the application of the Treaty. By the time the Court decided on the substance, the lottery computerization would have been in place for some time, and the Commission would have to accept the fait accompli, notwithstanding the flagrant violation of Community law. In order for the forthcoming judgment of the Court to be effective, the Commission claims that it is necessary for interim relief to be ordered.

26 The defendant, for its part, observes that the concession with the consortium Lottomatica was signed on 22 November 1991; the first phase of the concession should be completed by 1 April 1992 and the second phase by 31 December 1992. Implementing the computerization system will considerably improve the lottery, which is the only way of eradicating clandestine gambling which is currently widespread. The loss of revenue for the State if the computerization system is not implemented can be estimated at LIT 500 000 million a year. Elimination of clandestine gambling and the very significant fiscal revenue resulting from the lottery computerization should accordingly be weighed against the Commission' s interest in ensuring compliance with specific Treaty rules.

27 It should be held that, as the Commission has stated, if it succeeds in the main proceedings, the judgment would have no practical effect in the absence of interim measures.

28 As to the balance of interests, the defendant' s interest in rapidly completing the lottery computerization must be set against the Commission' s interest, as guardian of the Treaties, in preventing any breach of fundamental rules in the Treaties. In the light in particular of the judgment of the Court in Case C-3/88, the interest of the Commission must prevail over that of the Member State in issue.

29 Since the condition as to urgency is thus also satisfied, the interim measures sought should be ordered.

On those grounds,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT

hereby orders:

1. The Italian Republic shall take the measures necessary to suspend the legal effect of the decree of the Minister for Finance of 14 June 1991 awarding the concession for the lottery computerization system and performance of the contract concluded for that purpose with the consortium Lottomatica;

2. The costs are reserved.

Judgment of the Court
of 18 March 1992
Commission of the European Communities v Kingdom of Spain.
Directive 71/305/CEE - Awarding of public contracts - Advertising of contracts - Derogation in urgent cases.
Case C-24/91.

Approximation of laws - Award procedures for public works contracts - Directive 71/305/EEC - Derogation from the common rules - Conditions - Existence of exceptional circumstances

(Council Directive 71/305, Art. 9(d))

Article 9(d) of Directive 71/305 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts permits, in exceptional circumstances, derogations from the common rules, in particular those on advertising. That provision does not, however, apply if sufficient time is available to the authorities awarding contracts to organize an accelerated award procedure such as that provided for in Article 15 of the directive.

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 6 February 1992,

Judgment

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 23 January 1991, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EEC Treaty for a declaration that, inasmuch as the governing council of the Universidad Complutense, Madrid, decided to award by private treaty contracts for works connected with the extension and renovation of the university' s Faculty of Political Science and Sociology and the School of Social Work, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (Official Journal, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682).

2 Title III of the directive lays down, inter alia, rules relating to the adequate advertising of invitations to tenders, so that all interested contractors in the Community may be given the possibility of being informed of an award procedure and of participating in it.

3 In accordance with Article 12 of the directive, notices of tender must be sent to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities which is to publish them in the Official Journal of the European Communities not later than nine days after the date of dispatch. The fourth paragraph of that Article provides, however, that, in the case of accelerated procedure provided for in Article 15, publication is to be not later than five days after the date of dispatch.

4 In accordance with Article 14 of the directive concerning restricted procedures, the time-limit for receipt of requests to participate and for the receipt of tenders which the selected candidates are invited to submit are in each case to be fixed at not less than 21 days from the date of sending the notice and the date of sending the written invitation to the candidates respectively. However, Article 15 provides that, in cases where urgency renders impracticable the time-limits laid down in Article 14, the authorities awarding contracts may apply shorter time-limits, namely 12 days from the date of sending the notice for requests to participate and 10 days from the invitation to tender for the receipt of tenders.

5 Article 9 of the directive provides for a number of exemptions from the application of the provisions on advertising. In particular, Article 9(d) provides for a derogation "in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought [about] by events unforeseen by he authorities awarding contracts, the time-limit laid down in other procedures cannot be kept."

6 On 9 February 1989 the governing council of the Universidad Complutense, Madrid, declared that it was urgent for works to be carried out for the extension and renovation of the Faculty of Political Science and Sociology and the School of Social Work for a total budgeted amount of PTA 430 256 250. That amount was made available to it by the Ministry of Education in January 1989.

7 On 27 February 1989 the governing council of the university opened a competitive tender for those works in the form of a notice of tender published in four Spanish newspapers.

8 It is apparent from the documents before the Court that the completion of the works contemplated would, according to the architect in charge, take seven and a half months and would be completed before the beginning of the 1989 academic year.

9 Reference is made to the Report for the Hearing for a fuller account of the facts of the case, the procedure and the pleas and arguments of the parties, which are mentioned or discussed hereinafter only in so far as is necessary for the reasoning of the Court.

10 The Commission considers that in the present case there was no warrant for having recourse to the award of contracts on a private-treaty basis, since the conditions for the application of Article 9(d) of the directive were not met. In that connection, it explains that the growing number of students is a problem which has existed for years, with the result that the intake of new students in October 1989 could not be deemed to be an unforeseen circumstance of extreme urgency for the purposes of that provision.

11 The Commission argues, moreover, that the governing council of the university could have published the notice of the invitation to tender in the Official Journal of the European Communities in accordance with the accelerated procedure provided for in Article 15 of the directive, the shorter time-limits under that procedure enabling the authorities awarding contracts to comply with the advertising obligations in less than one month. It considers that time-limit to have been entirely consistent with the timetable of works drawn up by the governing council.

12 On the other hand, the Spanish government considers that recourse to Article 9(d) of the directive was justified. It insists that it was necessary to complete the works before 1 October 1989 and stresses the delay which the Community publication procedures would have caused. It states in that connection that the faculty and school premises concerned were entirely inappropriate for receiving the large number of new students expected at the beginning of the 1989 academic year.

13 It should first be observed that the conditions for the application of Article 9(d) are concurrent. Consequently, if one of those conditions is not satisfied, the authorities awarding contracts may not derogate from the provisions of the directive, in particular those relating to advertising.

14 In the present case the extreme urgency relied on by the Spanish Government was not incompatible with the time-limits provided for in the context of the accelerated procedure under Article 15 of the directive.

15 The requisite budgetary appropriations had been granted to the university in January 1989 and the extension and renovation works, which were expected to last for seven-and-a-half months, were due to be completed before the academic year beginning in October 1989. Sufficient time was thus available to it to organize the invitation to tender under the accelerated procedure which is laid down in Article 15 of the directive and under which the time-limits may, as pointed out at paragraph 4 above, be restricted to 22 days, namely 12 days for requests to participate and 10 days for the receipt of tenders.

16 Accordingly, as a result of the decision of the governing council of the Universidad Complutense, Madrid, to award by private treaty contracts for works connected with the extension and renovation of the Faculty of Political Science and Sociology and the School of Social Work, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under the directive, in particular Articles 9 and 12 to 15.

Costs

17 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the Kingdom of Spain has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

hereby:

1. Declares that, as a result of the decision of the governing council of the Universidad Complutense, Madrid, to award by private treaty contracts for the extension and renovation of the Faculty of Political Science and Sociology and the School of Social Work, the Kingdom of Spain has failed

Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic.
Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Public supply contracts - Admissibility.
Case C-362/90.

Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Infringement terminated before the expiry of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion - Inadmissibility

(EEC Treaty, second para. of Art. 169)

Under the second paragraph of Article 169 of the Treaty, an action for failure to fulfil an obligation may only be brought before the Court if the Member State in question has not complied with the reasoned opinion within the period laid down by the Commission. An action for failure to fulfil obligations is therefore inadmissible if, upon the expiry of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion, the infringement complained of, which had produced its effects without the Commission' s having employed all the means available to it to prevent it, no longer existed.

In Case C-362/90,

Judgment

1 By application received at the Court on 1 December 1990, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action pursuant to Article 169 of the EEC Treaty for a declaration that, since the Unità Sanitaria Locale XI (Local Health Authority, hereinafter referred to as the "USL"), Genoa 2, imposed the requirement that 50% of the minimum amount of supplies required to have been made over the preceding three years in order to enable tenderers to participate in a public supply contract should have been supplied to public administrative authorities, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (Official Journal 1977 L 13, p. 1).

2 USL published in the Gazzetta Ufficiale della Reppublica Italiana, Part II, No 238, of 10 October 1988, a contract notice for the supply of several products, including in particular fresh beef valued at LIT 5 800 000 000. That notice laid down as a condition for admittance to participate in the contract that, during the three previous years (1985/1986/1987), the potential tenderer should have supplied identical products to the value of at least six times the value of each supply for which they proposed to tender, 50% of that amount to be made up of supplies to public administrative authorities.

3 The Commission considered that that condition, in so far as it concerned supplies of 50% of the products in question to public administrative authorities, was contrary to Article 23 of Directive 77/62, which had to be regarded as listing exhaustively the means of proof of the suppliers' technical capacity which the contracting authorities could demand and that, by virtue of Article 14(d), this condition should not have been inserted in the contract notice published by the USL.

4 In accordance with Article 169 of the Treaty, the Commission, by letter of 10 February 1989, formally requested the Italian Government to submit within 15 days its observations on the breach of obligations with which it was charged. Since the Commission considered that the explanations which the Italian Government had sent to it by letter of 30 June 1989 were not satisfactory, it called upon the Italian Republic, by reasoned opinion of 27 March 1990, to adopt the measures required to comply with that opinion within 15 days from the notification thereof.

5 Reference is made to the Report for the Hearing for a fuller account of the facts of the case, the procedure and the submissions and arguments of the parties, which are mentioned or discussed hereinafter only in so far as is necessary for the reasoning of the Court.

6 In its defence the Italian Government contended that the action brought by the Commission had become devoid of purpose, since the effects of the supply contract which followed the contract notices in question became exhausted in their entirety on 31 December 1989 and the contract notices for 1990 and 1991, published in Official Journal S 213 and 216, did not contain the condition at issue. Consequently, it asked the Commission to discontinue its action and, should the Commission not do so, requested the Court to dismiss it. In its rejoinder it added that the infringement complained of had ceased to exist even before the expiry of the 15-day period which the Commission had allowed to it in the reasoned opinion of 27 March 1990 and, in the face of the Commission' s refusal to discontinue the proceedings, contended that the action should be dismissed as inadmissible.

7 In its reply, the Commission denied that its action was devoid of purpose, since, taking into account the arguments put forward by the Italian Government as to the substance of the case, it was not at all established that the conditions at issue would not be included in another contract notice in the future. At the hearing the Commission again pointed out that it had issued the first reasoned opinion on 17 August 1989 and that it had only issued the reasoned opinion of 27 March 1990 in order to take account of the response of the Italian Government to its letter of formal notice, which it received on 6 July 1989.

8 As a preliminary point, it should be noted that the fact that the Italian Government formally pleaded the inadmissibility of the action only in its rejoinder cannot prevent the Court from examining this issue. The arguments relied upon in that respect by the Italian Government had already been submitted in its defence, in which it had formally contended that the action be dismissed. The Commission therefore had the opportunity to answer those arguments in its reply. Furthermore, and in any event, the Court may of its own motion examine the question whether the conditions laid down in Article 169 of the Treaty for the bringing of an action for failure to fulfil an obligation are satisfied.

9 In that respect it should first be noted that it follows from the very terms of the second paragraph of Article 169 of the Treaty that the Commission may bring an action for failure to fulfil obligations before the Court only if the Member State concerned does not comply with the opinion within the period laid down by the Commission for that purpose.

10 Secondly, the Court has consistently held that the action brought under the second paragraph of Article 169 is for a declaration that the State concerned has failed to fulfil an obligation under the Treaty and that it has not put an end to that infringement within the time laid down to that effect by the Commission in its reasoned opinion (judgment in Case C-347/88 Commission v Greece [1990] ECR I-4747, paragraph 40). The Court has consistently held that the question whether there has been a failure to fulfil obligations must be examined on the basis of the position in which the Member State found itself at the end of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion (judgment in Case C-200/88 Commission v Greece [1990] ECR I-4299, paragraph 13).

11 In the present case it is common ground that, first of all, the effects of the contract notice at issue had been exhausted on 31 December 1989, that is to say, before the issue of the reasoned opinion of 27 March 1990. Secondly, the contract notices for 1990 and 1991, published, respectively, on 4 November 1989, that is to say before the issue of the reasoned opinion, and on 3 November 1990, that is to say before the present action was brought, no longer contained the condition at issue.

12 It should be stated, moreover, that the Commission did not act in good time in order to prevent, by means of procedures available to it, the infringement complained of from producing effects and did not even invoke the existence of circumstances preventing it from concluding the pre-litigation procedure laid down in Article 169 of the Treaty before the infringement ceased to exist. The fact, alleged at the hearing, that the Commission had already issued a first reasoned opinion on 17 August 1989 is irrelevant in that respect, since it was not referred to in the course of the proceedings and that the application is not based on it. Furthermore, that circumstance cannot constitute a matter of law or fact which has come to light in the course of the procedure, for the purposes of Article 42(2) of the Rules of Procedure, so that any plea based on it must be regarded as out of time and, consequently, be dismissed as inadmissible.

13 It follows from the foregoing considerations that, at the date of expiry of the period laid down in the Commission' s reasoned opinion of 27 March 1990, the infringement complained of no longer existed. Consequently, the action brought by the Commission must be dismissed as inadmissible.

Costs

14 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the Commission has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

having regard to the Report for the Hearing, after hearing oral argument from the parties at the hearing on 16 January 1992, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 26 February 1992,

Judgment

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 28 November 1989, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EEC Treaty for a declaration that, by enacting Law No 80/87 (special provisions for accelerating the completion of public works), which contains provisions incompatible with Community rules on public works contracts, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 59 of the EEC Treaty and Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682).

2 Under Article 2(1) of Law No 80/87, written invitations to tender from the authority awarding contracts must stipulate that the successful tenderer is to entrust a minimum proportion of between 15 and 30% of the works to undertakings which have their registered offices in the region in which the works are to be carried out.

3 Article 3(3) of the same Law provides that where more than 15 undertakings are interested the authority or agency awarding contracts must invite at least 15 undertakings to tender and that, in the selection of the undertakings to be invited to tender, preference is to be given to temporary associations and consortia made up of undertakings which carry on their main activity in the region in which the works are to be carried out.

4 Reference is made to the Report for the Hearing for a fuller account of the facts, the procedure and the submissions and arguments of the parties, which are mentioned or discussed hereinafter only in so far as is necessary for the reasoning of the Court.

5 In the course of the procedure, the Commission withdrew its complaints other than those concerning Articles 2(1) and 3(3) of Law No 80/87.

The alleged infringement of Article 59 of the Treaty

6 According to the Commission, Article 2(1) of Law No 80/87 infringes Article 59 of the Treaty in that it favours undertakings which have their registered offices in the region in question, to the detriment of undertakings established in other Member States.

7 It must be observed that Article 59 of the Treaty requires the abolition of all discrimination against providers of services established in a Member State other than that in which the service is to be provided.

8 The fact that Article 2(1) of Law No 80/87 reserves part of the works to sub-contractors having their registered offices in the region where the works are to be carried out constitutes discrimination against undertakings established in other Member States.

9 Whilst it is true, as the Italian Government contends, that that provision also excludes undertakings established in Italy which have their registered offices outside the region in question from that part of the works, the fact remains that all the sub-contractors which it favours are Italian undertakings.

10 As regards Article 3(3) of Law No 80/87, the Commission considers that the preference which it affords to temporary associations and consortia that include local undertakings constitutes a restriction on the freedom to provide services which is prohibited by Article 59 of the Treaty.

11 The Court has consistently held that Article 59 prohibits not only overt discrimination by reason of nationality but also all covert forms of discrimination which, by the application of other criteria of differentiation, lead in fact to the same result (see, in particular, Case C-3/88 Commission v Italy [1989] ECR 4035, paragraph 8).

12 Although Article 3(3) of Law No 80/87 applies, as the Italian Government contends, to all Italian and foreign companies without distinction, it essentially favours those established in Italy. As the Commission has rightly observed, such undertakings are much more likely to carry on their main activity in the region of Italy where the works are to be carried out than undertakings established in the other Member States.

13 The Italian Government also observes that the abovementioned provisions of Law No 80/87 are intended to offset the disadvantages encountered by small and medium-sized undertakings as a result of the system of overall awards of contract provided for in that Law, by virtue of which various works are awarded under a single contract. The grouping in a single contract of services which, if separated, would be of interest only to regional undertakings, has the effect of excluding the latter from a number of contracts of lesser importance.

14 It need merely be observed, in that connection, that such considerations are matters neither of public policy, public security or public health referred to in Articles 66 and 56 of the Treaty, taken together, nor reasons of overriding public interest which might justify the obstacles in question (Case C-353/89 Commission v Netherlands [1991] ECR I-4069, paragraphs 17 and 18, and Case C-288/89 Collectieve Antennevoorziening Gouda v Commissariaat voor de Media [1991] ECR I-4007).

15 It follows from the foregoing considerations that the complaint of infringement of Article 59 of the Treaty must be upheld.

The alleged infringement of Directive 71/305

16 The Commission considers that Article 3(3) of Law No 80/87 infringes the first paragraph of Article 22 of Directive 71/305 by adopting a selection criterion different from those provided for in Articles 23 to 26 of that directive.

17 It must be observed that, according to the first paragraph of Article 22 of Directive 71/305, in restricted procedures within the meaning of Article 5(2) ° the kind at issue in this case ° the authorities awarding contracts must select the candidates they are to invite to tender on the basis of the information given in accordance with Article 17(d) of the directive.

18 Article 17(d) refers to information relating to the personal position of the contractor and the minimum economic and technical standards which the authorities awarding contracts require of contractors for their selection; those requirements may not be other than those specified in Articles 25 and 26.

19 According to Article 3(3) of Law No 80/87 in selecting undertakings to be invited to tender, preference is to be accorded to temporary associations or consortia which include undertakings carrying on their main activity in the region where the works are to be carried out.

20 Such preference constitutes a criterion of selection which is not mentioned in Articles 23 to 26 and, in particular, does not relate to any of the economic and technical standards provided for in Articles 25 and 26.

21 Consequently, Article 3(3) of Law No 80/87 infringes the first paragraph of Article 22 of Directive 71/305 in so far as the selection criterion laid down therein relates to matters of fact which cannot form part of the information on the basis of which the authorities awarding contracts are to select, on the basis of the latter provision, the candidates that they will invite to tender.

22 It follows that the complaint of infringement of Directive 71/305 must also be upheld.

23 It must therefore be held that, by enacting Law No 80/87 of 17 February 1987 (Special provisions for accelerating the completion of public works, published in Gazzetta Ufficiale della Repubblica Italiana No 61 of 14 March 1987), the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 59 of the EEC Treaty and Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts.

Costs

24 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the Italian Republic has failed in its submissions, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

hereby:

1. Declares that, by enacting Law No 80/87 of 17 February 1987, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 59 of the EEC Treaty and Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts;

2. Orders the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 71/305 - Award of contracts - Abnormally low tenders - Automatic disqualification - Not permissible - Obligation to conduct an examination procedure - Tenders subject to examination

(Council Directive 71/305, Art. 29(5))

Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305, from which the Member States may not depart to any material extent when implementing it, prohibits Member States from introducing provisions which require the automatic disqualification from the award of public works contracts of certain tenders determined according to a mathematical criterion, instead of obliging the awarding authority to apply the examination procedure laid down in the directive, giving the tenderer an opportunity to furnish explanations.

The Member States may require that tenders be examined when those tenders appear to be abnormally low, and not only when they are obviously abnormally low.

(In this judgment the Court' s ruling is in the same terms as those of the judgment in Case 103/88 Fratelli Costanzo v Comune di Milano [1989] ECR

Judgment

Costs

44 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the Commission has failed in its submissions, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

hereby:

1. Dismisses the application;

2. Orders the Commission to pay the costs.

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 4 August 1989, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EEC Treaty for a declaration that, by not sending to the Official Publications Office of the European Communities, for the purposes of publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities, a notice of invitation to tender issued by the undertaking Aeroportos e Navegaçao Aérea with respect to the supply and assembly of a telephone exchange at Lisbon Airport, the Portuguese Government had failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 77/62 of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, in particular Article 9 thereof (Official Journal 1977 L 13, p. 1).

2 Article 1(a) of Directive 77/62 defines public supply contracts as contracts for pecuniary consideration concluded in writing between a supplier (a natural or legal person) and a contracting authority for delivery of products. Article 1(b) defines contracting authorities as the State, regional or local authorities and the legal persons governed by public law or, in Member States where the latter are unknown, bodies corresponding thereto as specified in Annex I to the directive.

3 Article 26 of the Act concerning the conditions of accession of the Kingdom of Spain and the Portuguese Republic and the adjustments to the Treaties (hereinafter "the Act of Accession"), in conjunction with Section IX(D) of Annex I thereto (Official Journal 1985 L 302, pp. 21 and 139), made the following addition to the list, contained in Annex I to the directive, of legal persons governed by public law and corresponding bodies referred to in Article 1(b):

XIII In Portugal:

other corporate bodies governed by public law subject to a procedure for the award of contracts".

4 Article 9 of Directive 77/62 stipulates that contracting authorities who wish to award a public supply contract must send the notice by which they make known their intention as soon as possible by the most appropriate channels to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities for publication in the Official Journal.

5 Article 2(2)(a) of the directive excludes supply contracts awarded by bodies which administer transport services from the scope of the directive.

6 Pursuant to Articles 392 and 395 of the Act of Accession, the Portuguese State should have transposed the directive into national law by 1 January 1986.

7 The public undertaking Aeroportos e Navegaçao Aérea ("ANA-EP") is a legal person governed by public law established by Decree-Law No 246/79 of 25 July 1979 (Diario da Républica No 170, series I). Pursuant to the Decree-Law and the constitution of ANA-EP annexed thereto, the undertaking is responsible for operating and developing support activities in the field of civil aviation in order to guide, direct and control air traffic, and to enable aircraft to take off and land safely; it is also responsible for freight, embarcation and disembarcation, and the movement of passengers and mail. ANA-EP also performs the tasks and provides the services that form an integral part of the airport and air-navigation infrastructure at Lisbon Airport and elsewhere. Lastly it is responsible for the analysis, planning, construction and development of new civil-airport and air-navigation infrastructure.

8 In 1987 ANA-EP invited tenders for the supply and assembly of a telephone exchange at Lisbon Airport. Accordingly, it published an announcement in the Portuguese weekly "O Expresso" on 29 August 1987.

9 The announcement came to the notice of the Commission, which found that all the conditions for the application of Directive 77/62 were fulfilled and that none of the exceptions relating to the scope of the directive was applicable.

10 Having found that ANA-EP, being the contracting authority, had failed to comply with the requirement to send notice of the tendering procedure to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities, as provided for in Article 9 of Directive 77/62, the Commission sent the Portuguese Government a letter of formal notice on 28 September 1987.

11 In its reply of 20 October 1987 the Portuguese Government denied that Directive 77/62 was applicable.

12 The Commission considered that the arguments adduced by the Portuguese Government were not capable of justifying the failure to publish notice of the tendering procedure in the Official Journal of the European Communities and, on 21 November 1988, issued the reasoned opinion provided for in the first paragraph of Article 169 of the Treaty, requesting the Portuguese Government to take the necessary steps to comply with the opinion within one month from the date of service.

13 In its reply to the reasoned opinion the Portuguese Government stated that it intended to amend Portuguese legislation. The Commission did not consider that an adequate response, and accordingly decided to institute these proceedings.

14 Reference is made to the Report for the Hearing for a fuller account of the facts of the case, the procedure and the submissions and arguments of the parties, which are mentioned or discussed hereinafter only in so far as is necessary for the reasoning of the Court.

Admissibility

15 The Portuguese Government maintains that the action is inadmissible. It adduces a number of arguments, some founded on the contention that the alleged infringement could not be attributed to the Portuguese State; others, on the contradiction between the grounds of the reasoned opinion and those put forward in the application; the ambiguous nature of the Commission' s position; and the insufficiency of the period allowed in the reasoned opinion.

16 In regard to the contention that the alleged infringement could not be attributed to the Portuguese State, the Portuguese Government maintains that Article 9 of Directive 77/62 only requires a State to publish notices of tendering procedures in the Official Journal when the State itself is the contracting authority. ANA-EP being a legal person distinct from the State, a failure to publish notices of its tendering procedures could not be attributed to the State. The Portuguese Government adds that, since the directive has not been transposed into the national legal order, ANA-EP was under no obligation to publish notices of its public supply contracts.

17 The Commission asserts that, in view of the degree of control which the Portuguese State exerts over ANA-EP' s award of public contracts, the latter is a contracting authority within the meaning of Directive 77/62. Accordingly the Portuguese State is answerable for ANA-EP' s failure to publish its tendering procedures in the Official Journal; the fact that the Directive has still not been transposed into national legislation does not negate that interpretation.

18 On that point it is sufficient to note that determining whether ANA-EP' s conduct may properly be attributed to the Portuguese Republic involves a factual appraisal forming part of the examination of the merits of the application rather than its admissibility.

19 The question should therefore be considered in connection with the examination of the merits of the application.

20 In regard to the contradiction between the reasons set out in the reasoned opinion and those advanced in the application, the Portuguese Government claims that in the reasoned opinion the Commission had described ANA-EP as a contracting authority within the meaning of Directive 77/62, because the award by it of public contracts was subject to approval or authorization by the Portuguese Government; however, in the application, the Commission had stated that abolishing the approval or authorization procedure for public contracts would have no effect on ANA-EP' s status as a contracting authority within the meaning of the directive. The Government further maintains that the Commission' s position was ambiguous inasmuch as it had never specified what sort of measures would need to be taken to terminate the infringement. It emphasizes that the Commission had not opposed its stated intention to repeal the requirement for State authorization or approval for some public contracts. Finally, the time allowed in the reasoned opinion was not sufficient for it to amend the legislation concerned.

21 The Commission argues that none of these arguments is well founded. It states there had not been any change in the description of the impugned conduct on the part of the Portuguese State: both the reasoned opinion and the application stated that the charge concerned the tendering procedure launched by ANA-EP. The Commission maintains that it never asked for the Portuguese legislation to be amended. It also denies that there was a duty to state, in the reasoned opinion, what steps should be taken to eliminate the impugned conduct. Finally it affirms that the period prescribed in the reasoned opinion was reasonable and sufficient, since the Commission' s first communication to the Portuguese State, the letter of formal notice, was dated 28 September 1987.

22 In that connection, it should be noted that, according to the Court' s case-law, the reasoned opinion must contain a coherent and detailed statement of the reasons which persuaded the Commission that the State concerned had failed to fulfil one of its obligations under the Treaty (judgment in Case 274/83 Commission v Italy [1985] ECR 1077). However, the Commission cannot be required to indicate in the reasoned opinion what steps should be taken to eliminate the impugned conduct.

23 It appears from the text of the reasoned opinion in the file that it fulfils the requirements laid down in the case-law: the Commission set out therein a sufficiently detailed statement of the context, facts and legal background, and of the arguments which had persuaded it that the Portuguese Republic had failed to fulfil the obligation imposed by Article 9 of Directive 77/62. At no stage - neither in the pre-litigation procedure, nor during the litigation itself - did the Commission alter that line of argument, which consequently cannot be deemed ambiguous.

24 Moreover, the reasoning in the reasoned opinion is essentially the same as that in the application. In both the charge is the same: infringement of Article 9 of Directive 77/62.

25 As for the period prescribed in the reasoned opinion, it should be emphasized that the charge against the Portuguese Government was brought to the latter' s attention by the letter of formal notice of 28 September 1987, hence more than a year before the reasoned opinion of 21 November 1988. It should also be pointed out that, from the start of the pre-litigation procedure, the Portuguese Government disputed the charge against it, arguing both that Directive 77/62 was inapplicable to the facts of the case, and that the infringement could not properly be attributed to the Portuguese State. In those circumstances, the period of one month prescribed in the reasoned opinion for the Portuguese Government to comply with its obligations must be deemed to be both reasonable and sufficient.

26 It follows from the foregoing that the pleas concerning the inadmissibility of the application must be rejected.

The substance

27 The Commission maintains that, under Article 9 of Directive 77/62, ANA-EP was bound to send a notice of the tendering procedure in question to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities for publication in the Official Journal, since all the requirements necessary for Article 9 to apply were fulfilled, and the situation was not covered by any of the exceptions listed in the Directive.

28 The Portuguese Government takes the view that the provisions of Directive 77/62 did not apply to the award of the contract in question.

29 It supports that plea first by stating that ANA-EP' s activities (defined by the aforementioned Decree-Law No 246/79 and by ANA-EP' s constitution) and air-transport services complemented each other and were indissolubly linked: ANA-EP should therefore be deemed to be a body which administers transport services within the meaning of Article 2(2)(a) of Directive 77/62, and whose awards of public supply contracts fall outside the scope of the directive.

30 The Portuguese Government then refers to Council Directive 90/531/EEC of 17 September 1990, on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (Official Journal 1990 L 297, p. 1). That directive, it contends, covers inter alia public contracts in sectors excluded from the scope of Directive 77/62, as last amended by Council Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988 (Official Journal 1988 L 127, p. 1); it concludes that the fact of ANA-EP' s being included among the bodies subject to the rules laid down in Directive 90/531 proves that ANA-EP is not covered by Directive 77/62.

31 The Portuguese Government also emphasizes that the meaning of Article 2(2)(a) of Directive 77/62, which excludes from the scope of the Directive "bodies which administer transport services", is broader than that of the new text as amended by Article 3 of Directive 88/295: the new text only excludes "carriers by land, air, sea and inland waterway". The difference demonstrates that Article 2(2)(a) of Directive 77/62, in the version in force at the time of the tendering procedure, covered bodies which, like ANA-EP, administered ground services.

32 The Commission' s view is that ANA-EP is not a body which administers transport services within the meaning of Directive 77/62. Citing the Guide to Public Contracts in the Community

(Official Journal 1987 C 358, p. 1) the Commission maintains that Article 2(2)(a) of the directive should be interpreted restrictively: it only covered organizations carrying passengers or goods between two points. The Commission adds that the new text of Article 2(2)(a) resulting from Directive 88/295 is intended to clarify, not amend, the scope of the provision concerned. Finally, the Commission states that the reference to ANA-EP in the text of Directive 90/531 is an expression of the aim of the directive, which is to place on an equal footing public bodies which administer airports, and their private sector counterparts.

33 It should be pointed out first of all that, according to Article 2(2)(a) of Directive 77/62, in the version in force at the time the notice of invitation to tender was issued, the directive does not apply to public supply contracts awarded by bodies which administer transport services.

34 The reasons for that exclusion are set out in the sixth and seventh recitals in the preamble to Directive 77/62, which state:

> "... the bodies currently administering transport services in the Member States are governed in some cases by public law, in others by private law;... in accordance with the objectives of the common transport policy equality of treatment should be ensured not only between separate undertakings concerned with the same mode of transport but also between such undertakings and undertakings concerned with other modes of transport;
> ... pending the drafting of measures for the coordination of procedures applicable to transport bodies and in view of the said special circumstances, those authorities referred to above, which by reason of their status would fall within it, should be excluded from the scope of the Directive".

35 It should be noted further that the concept of bodies which administer transport services, mentioned in Article 2(2)(a) of Directive 77/62, in the version in force at the material time, refers to the transport-services sector in general.

36 ANA-EP' s activities pursuant to Decree-Law No 246/79 and to its own constitution are associated closely with the carriage by air of passengers and freight, which is impossible without the requisite infrastructure and airport services.

37 It should also be emphasized that the common transport policy referred to in the recitals quoted at paragraph 34 above includes activities associated with the operation of the requisite infrastructure, and that the need for equality of treatment referred to there also relates to bodies which carry out the functions and provide the services which are intrinsically associated with airport and air navigation infrastructure in Member States, some being governed by public, others by private law.

38 It follows from the foregoing that a body which, like ANA-EP, carries out the activities and provides the services described above must be deemed to be a body which administers transport services within the meaning of Article 2(2)(a) of Directive 77/62, in the version in force at the time of the tendering procedure concerned.

39 The above conclusion is borne out by the provisions and scope of Directive 90/531 on the procurement procedures in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, adopted by the Council on 17 September 1990.

40 By virtue of Article 2(2)(b)(ii) of Directive 90/531, whose purpose is, inter alia, to establish rules governing procedures for the award of contracts in the transport sector, the directive applies to the exploitation of a geographical area for the purpose of the provision of airports to carriers by air. ANA-EP is listed in Annex VIII to that directive as a contracting entity which fulfils the criteria set out in Article 2(6) of the Directive.

41 It appears clearly from the sixth and seventh recitals in the preamble to Directive 90/531 that the transport sector is one of the sectors excluded from the scope of Directive 77/62, as last amended by Directive 88/295.

42 It is therefore not possible to accept the Commission' s argument, based on Article 2(2)(a) of Directive 77/62, that the concept of body which administers transport services should be interpreted restrictively.

43 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, and without its being necessary to rule on the other pleas in law advanced by the Portuguese Government in its defence, it must be held that ANA-EP, being a body which administers transport services within the meaning of Article 2(2)(a) of Directive 77/62, did not, at the time of the tendering procedure in issue, come within the scope of the directive and that accordingly the action for a declaration that Portugal has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty is unfounded.

of 22 June 1993
Commission of the European Communities v Kingdom of Denmark.
Award of a works contract - Bridge over the "Storebaelt".

1. Actions against Member States for failure to fulfil obligations ° Subject-matter of the proceedings ° Determination during the pre-litigation procedure ° Subject-matter subsequently widened ° Not permissible

(EEC Treaty, Art. 169)

2. Actions against Member States for failure to fulfil obligations ° Examination by the Court as to whether an action is well founded ° Acknowledgement by the Member State concerned of its failure to fulfil its obligations and of its liability with regard to individuals ° Not material

(EEC Treaty, Art. 169)

3. Approximation of laws ° Procedures for the award of public works contracts ° Directive 71/305 ° Award of contracts ° Condition requiring the use to the greatest possible extent of national products and labour ° Negotiations with a tenderer on the basis of a tender not complying with the tender conditions ° Free movement of goods ° Freedom of movement for persons ° Freedom to provide services ° Not permissible

(EEC Treaty, Arts 30, 48 and 59; Council Directive 71/305)

1. In actions brought under Article 169, the pre-litigation stage defines the subject-matter of the proceedings and this cannot subsequently be widened. The possibility for the Member State concerned to submit its observations constitutes an indispensable guarantee required by the Treaty and observance of that guarantee is an essential formal requirement of the procedure for establishing that a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations.

2. In an action for failure to fulfil obligations, brought by the Commission under Article 169 of the Treaty, whose expediency only the Commission decides, it is for the Court to determine whether or not the alleged breach of obligations exists, even if the State concerned no longer denies the breach and recognizes that any individuals who have suffered damage because of it have a right to compensation. Otherwise, by admitting their breach of obligations and accepting any ensuing liability, Member States would be at liberty at any time during Article 169 proceedings before the Court to have them brought to an end without any judicial determination of the breach of obligations and of the basis of their liability.

3. By letting tenders be invited, in a procedure for the award of public works contracts, on the basis of a condition requiring the use to the greatest possible extent of national materials, consumer goods, labour and equipment and by letting negotiations be conducted with the selected tenderer on the basis of a tender not complying with the tender conditions, a Member State fails to fulfil its obligations under Articles 30, 48 and 59 of the Treaty and under Directive 71/305.

Judgment

Costs

46 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the Kingdom of Denmark has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

hereby:

1. Declares that, by reason of the fact that Aktieselskabet Storebaeltsforbindelsen invited tenders on the basis of a condition requiring the use to the greatest possible extent of Danish materials, consumer goods, labour and equipment and the fact that negotiations with the selected consortium took place on the basis of a tender which did not comply with the tender conditions, the Kingdom of Denmark failed to fulfil its obligations under Community law and in particular infringed Articles 30, 48 and 59 of the Treaty as well as Council Directive 71/305/EEC;

2. Orders the Kingdom of Denmark to pay the costs.

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 2 August 1989, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EEC Treaty for a declaration that, since

° Aktieselskabet Storebaeltsforbindelsen invited tenders on the basis of a condition requiring the use to the greatest possible extent of Danish materials, consumer goods, labour and equipment, and

° negotiations with the selected consortium were conducted on the basis of a tender which did not comply with the tender conditions, the Kingdom of Denmark had failed to fulfil its obligations under Community law and in particular infringed Articles 30, 48 and 59 of the EEC Treaty as well as Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682, hereinafter "the directive").

2 Aktieselskabet Storebaeltsforbindelsen (hereinafter "Storebaelt") is a company wholly controlled by the Danish State. It is responsible for drawing up the project and, as the contracting authority, for the construction of a road and rail link across the Great Belt. Part of the project involves the construction of a bridge across the Western Channel of the Great Belt. The value of the contract for the construction of the Western Bridge is estimated at DKR 3 billion.

3 On 9 October 1987, Storebaelt published in the supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities (1987 S 196, p. 16) a restricted invitation to tender for the construction of a bridge over the Western Channel. On 28 April 1988 it invited five groups of companies to submit tenders.

4 Condition 6, Clause 2, of the general conditions which form part of the contract documents (hereinafter "the general conditions") provides as follows:

> "The contractor is obliged to use to the greatest possible extent Danish materials, consumer goods, labour and equipment" (hereinafter "the Danish content clause").

5 Condition 3, Clause 3, of the general conditions sets out the conditions governing alternative tenders for alternative projects instead of the three different projects for the bridge which Storebaelt itself had designed and which serve as a basis for assessment of those tenders. Condition 3, Clause 3, provides that the tender price for an alternative project is to be based on the assumption that the contractor will undertake the detailed design of the project which it will submit to the contracting authority for approval and that it will assume full responsibility for the project and for its execution. That condition also specifies that the contractor is to accept the risk of variations in the quantities on which the alternative tender is based. Lastly, according to that condition,

> "if the contractor submits a tender for an alternative project for which he assumes responsibility, he must state a price allowing for a reduction in the event that the contracting authority decides to take over the detailed planning of the project".

6 Five international consortia, comprising a total of 28 undertakings, were invited to submit tenders. One of those five consortia was the European Storebaelt Group (hereinafter "ESG"), whose members were Ballast Nedam from the Netherlands, Losinger Ltd from Switzerland, Taylor Woodrow Construction Ltd from the United Kingdom and three Danish contracting firms. ESG submitted an alternative tender to Storebaelt for the construction of a concrete bridge.

7 Storebaelt then entered into discussions with the various tenderers in order to compare and assess their respective tenders and to quantify the cost of the numerous reservations which they contained. After cutting down the number of tenders, Storebaelt continued negotiations with ESG regarding its alternative tender. Those negotiations culminated in the signature, on 26 June 1989, of a contract between ESG and Storebaelt.

Admissibility

9 Having reserved the right, at the end of its application, to supplement and develop if necessary the two grounds of its application, the Commission, in its reply, elaborated its arguments on the basis of information provided by the Danish Government in its statement of defence. The Commission also made two amendments to the forms of order sought in its application.

10 In the first place it seeks a declaration from the Court, in relation to its second ground of application, set out above (paragraph 1), that Denmark had failed to fulfil its obligations since Storebaelt had, on the basis of a tender which did not comply with the tender conditions, conducted with ESG negotiations resulting in a final contract which contained amendments to the conditions of tender favouring that tenderer alone and relating in particular to price-related factors.

11 Secondly, on the question of the legal rules allegedly infringed by the defendant, the Commission claims that the Kingdom of Denmark infringed Directive 71/305, "including the principle of equal treatment which underlies that directive".

12 The Danish Government seeks from the Court a declaration that the application is inadmissible in so far as the Commission extended the subject-matter of the action beyond that of the pre-litigation procedure.

13 Before considering that claim, it should be recalled that, according to the case-law of the Court (see the judgment in Case C-306/91 Commission v Italy [1993] ECR I-2151, paragraph 22), in actions brought under Article 169 the pre-litigation stage defines the subject-matter of the proceedings and this cannot subsequently be widened. The possibility for the Member State concerned to submit its observations constitutes an indispensable guarantee required by the Treaty and observance of that guarantee is an essential formal requirement of the procedure for establishing that a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations.

14 The Danish Government contends, first, that the Commission may not widen the subject-matter of the proceedings, either in its application or, in particular, in its reply, beyond the matters of fact and law mentioned in the letter of formal notice and the reasoned opinion.

15 On this issue the Court must find that the only matters at issue at the pre-litigation stage were Condition 6, Clause 2, of the general conditions, that is to say, the Danish content clause, and the commencement of negotiations on the basis of a tender which did not comply with Condition 3, Clause 3, of those conditions, concerning the tenderer' s responsibilities where an alternative project was tendered for.

16 It follows that the action is admissible only in so far as the two grounds of application relate to those two provisions of the general conditions.

17 As regards the ground of application relating to the Danish content clause, the Commission is not, however, barred from supporting its arguments in that regard by referring to other provisions of the contract documents which amplify that clause on specific points.

18 The Danish Government further contends that, by altering in the course of the proceedings the terms of the form of order sought, the Commission changed the subject-matter of the proceedings and infringed the rights of the defence in so far as it had no opportunity, as the defendant State, to submit its observations on the new points in good time and in the prescribed manner. Consequently, according to the Danish Government, the question whether the action is well founded must be considered only in relation to the form of order sought in the application initiating the proceedings.

19 That plea in law raises the question whether the re-wording of the second part of the form of order sought widens its scope and, secondly, the question whether the reference, in the reply, to the "principle of equal treatment underlying that directive" introduces a new element into the legal basis of the alleged failure to fulfil obligations.

20 With respect to the first point, it need only be observed that the Commission was entitled to clarify the form of order sought in order to take into account the information, furnished by the Danish Government in its defence, concerning the conduct of the tendering procedure and the negotiations between Storebaelt and ESG.

21 With regard to the second point, first of all, as the Advocate General points out in point 13 of his Opinion, the Commission had already complained in the course of the pre-litigation procedure that the Danish Government had acted in breach of that principle and both the reasoned opinion and the application make express mention of this. It follows that the Danish Government had the opportunity to submit observations in that connection, as is evident from its reply to the reasoned opinion and from the terms of its defence.

22 Secondly, the Danish Government' s argument that the principle of equal treatment constitutes a new legal basis for the charge of failure to fulfil obligations raises a question concerning the interpretation of the directive which will be examined together with the issues of substance.

Substance

The first ground of application, concerning the Danish content clause

23 The Danish content clause, as set out in Condition 6, Clause 2, of the general conditions, is incompatible with Articles 30, 48 and 59 of the Treaty, a fact which is moreover undisputed by the Danish Government.

24 However, the Danish Government contends, first, that it deleted the clause in question before the signature of the contract with ESG on 26 June 1989 and that it thereby complied with the reasoned opinion even before it was notified on 14 July 1989. At the hearing, the Danish Government, relying on the judgment in Case C-362/90 Commission v Italy [1992] ECR I-2353 also argued that the Commission had failed to act in good time to prevent, by the procedures available to it, the infringement complained of from producing legal effects.

25 That argument cannot be accepted.

26 In the first place, even though the clause in question was deleted shortly before signature of the contract with ESG and consequently before notification of the reasoned opinion, the fact remains that the tendering procedure was conducted on the basis of a clause which was not in conformity with Community law and which, by its nature, was likely to affect both the composition of the various consortia and the terms of the tenders submitted by the five preselected consortia. It follows that the mere deletion of that clause at the final stage of the procedure cannot be regarded as sufficient to make good the breach of obligations alleged by the Commission.

27 It should also be noted that, in its letter of formal notice of 21 June 1989, the Commission requested the Danish Government to arrange for signature of the contract in dispute to be postponed and that if the Danish Government had acceded to that request the breach of obligations complained of would not have produced any legal effects.

28 The Danish Government contends, secondly, that in its statement of 22 September 1989, delivered to the Court at the hearing of the application for interim measures, it not only recognized that the Danish content clause constituted an infringement of Community law but also accepted liability towards the tenderers, so that the action on this point is devoid of purpose.

29 That argument must also be rejected.

30 In an action for failure to fulfil obligations, brought by the Commission under Article 169 of the Treaty, whose expediency only the Commission decides, it is for the Court to determine whether or not the alleged breach of obligations exists, even if the State concerned no longer denies the breach and recognizes that any individuals who have suffered damage because of it have a right to compensation. Otherwise, by admitting their breach of obligations and accepting any ensuing liability, Member States would be at liberty at any time during Article 169 proceedings before the Court to have them brought to an end without any judicial determination of the breach of obligations and of the basis of their liability.

31 It follows from those considerations that the Commission' s application is well founded in relation to the first ground of application, concerning the Danish content clause.

The second ground of application, concerning negotiations on the basis of a tender which did not comply with the tender conditions

32 Since the Commission claims in its pleadings, which were re-worded in its reply, that Storebaelt acted in breach of the principle that all tenderers should be treated alike, the Danish Government' s argument that that principle is not mentioned in the directive and therefore constitutes a new legal basis for the complaint of breach of State obligations must be considered first.

33 On this issue, it need only be observed that, although the directive makes no express mention of the principle of equal treatment of tenderers, the duty to observe that principle lies at the very heart of the directive whose purpose is, according to the ninth recital in its preamble, to ensure in particular the development of effective competition in the field of public contracts and which, in Title IV, lays down criteria for selection and for award of the contracts, by means of which such competition is to be ensured.

34 In its reply the Commission based its claims on a series of provisions in the final version of the contract which, in its view, constituted amendments to the tender conditions and had some effect on prices. However, as was explained above (paragraphs 14 and 15), only the amendments relating to Condition 3, Clause 3, of the general conditions may be taken into consideration by the Court.

35 The Commission' s second ground of application, so defined, is essentially that the Kingdom of Denmark infringed the principle of equal treatment of tenderers by reason of the fact that Storebaelt, on the basis of a tender which did not comply with the tender conditions, conducted negotiations with ESG, which, in the final version of the contract, led to amendments to Condition 3, Clause 3, concerning price-related factors which favoured that tenderer alone.

36 In order to assess the compatibility of the negotiations so conducted by Storebaelt with the principle of equal treatment of tenderers, it must first be considered whether that principle precluded Storebaelt from taking ESG' s tender into consideration.

37 In this regard, it must be stated first of all that observance of the principle of equal treatment of tenderers requires that all the tenders comply with the tender conditions so as to ensure an objective comparison of the tenders submitted by the various tenderers.

38 This is confirmed by Article 11 of the directive, which, whilst allowing a tenderer, where there is the option of submitting variations on a project of the administration, to use a method for pricing the works which differs from that used in the country where the contract is being awarded, nevertheless requires that the tender accord with the tender conditions.

39 With regard to the Danish Government' s argument that Danish legislation governing the award of public contracts allows reservations to be accepted, it should be observed that when that legislation is applied, the principle of equal treatment of tenderers, which lies at the heart of the directive and which requires that tenders accord with the tender conditions, must be fully respected.

40 That requirement would not be satisfied if tenderers were allowed to depart from the basic terms of the tender conditions by means of reservations, except where those terms expressly allow them to do so.

41 The tender submitted by ESG, concerning an alternative project for the construction of a concrete bridge, did not comply with Condition 3, Clause 3, of the general conditions in so far as it failed to satisfy the requirements stipulated therein, that is to say that the proposed price was not based on the fact that, as tenderer, it had to undertake the detailed design of a project and assume full responsibility for it, as regards both its planning and its execution, as well as accept the risk of variation in quantities in relation to those envisaged.

42 Lastly, it should be noted that Condition 3, Clause 3, of the general conditions constitutes a fundamental requirement of the tender conditions, since it specifies the conditions governing the calculation of prices, taking into account the tenderer' s responsibility for the detailed design and execution of the project and for accepting the risks.

43 In those circumstances, and since the condition in question did not give tenderers the option of incorporating reservations into their tenders, the principle of equal treatment precluded Storebaelt from taking into consideration the tender submitted by ESG.

44 Consequently, the second ground of application concerning the conduct of negotiations on the basis of a tender which did not comply with the tender conditions is well founded.

45 It follows from all the foregoing considerations that, by reason of the fact that Aktieselskabet Storebaeltsforbindelsen invited tenders on the basis of a condition requiring the use to the greatest possible extent of Danish materials, consumer goods, labour and equipment and the fact that negotiations with the selected consortium took place on the basis of a tender which did not comply with the tender conditions, the Kingdom of Denmark failed to fulfil its obligations under Community law and in particular infringed Articles 30, 48 and 59 of the Treaty as well as Council Directive 71/305/EEC.

Order of the Court
of 26 January 1990
Falciola Angelo SpA v Comune di Pavia.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Tribunale amministrativo régionale della Lombardia - Italy.
Compatibility with Community law of a national law.
Case C-286/88.

(EEC Treaty, Art. 177)

The procedure provided for in Article 177 of the Treaty is an instrument of cooperation between the Court of Justice and the national courts, whereby the former supplies the latter with the information on the interpretation of Community law which is necessary in order to enable them to settle disputes which are brought before them . A request from a national court may be rejected only if it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law or the examination of the validity of a rule of Community law sought by that court bears no relation to the actual nature of the case or to the subject-matter of the main action.

In Case C-286/88

REFERENCE to the Court under Article 177 of the EEC Treaty by the tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court for Lombardy) for a preliminary ruling in the action pending before that court between

and

Comune di Pavia (Municipality of Pavia)

on the interpretation of Articles 5 and 177 and the third paragraph of Article 189 of the EEC Treaty, composed of : O. Due, President, Sir Gordon Slynn, C. N. Kakouris, F . A. Schockweiler and M. Zuleeg (Presidents of Chambers), T . Koopmans, G. F. Mancini, R. Joliet, T. F. O' Higgins, J. C . Moitinho de Almeida, G. C. Rodríguez Iglesias, F. Grévisse and M . Diez de Velasco, Judges, Advocate General : F. G. Jacobs

THE COURT

Registrar : J.-G. Giraud

after hearing the views of the Advocate General, makes the following

Order

1 By order dated 24 September 1988 which was received at the Court on 29 September 1988, the First Chamber of the tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EEC Treaty a number of questions on the interpretation of Community law, in particular Articles 5 and 177 and the third paragraph of Article 189 of the EEC Treaty .

2 Those questions arose during the course of proceedings originating out of an application to that court by Impresa Falciola Angelo for the annulment, together with that of all decisions related thereto, of the deliberation of 29 July 1987 by which the Municipal Council of Pavia approved the decision of the Awards Committee on a restricted invitation to tender, awarding a road works contract to the Consorzio cooperative costruzioni di Bologna.

3 According to the order for reference, the contract is governed, by reason of the value of the contract, by Council Directive 71/304/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the abolition of restrictions on freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts and on the award of public works contracts to contractors acting through agencies or branches and Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (Official Journal 1971, English Special Edition 1971 II, pp. 678 and 682).

4 Those are the circumstances in which the tribunale asked the Court for a preliminary ruling on the following questions :

"(1) The Court of Justice is requested to state whether, apart from the Community and Italian legal orders, there is today also a third legal order (Community-cum-Italian) which is accompanied by the Community-cum-English, Community-cum-German legal orders, and so forth, and which is characterized :

(a) by the fact that the rules governing it are to be found primarily in the provisions of Community law and sub-primarily in the provisions of Italian law (the two categories of provisions - primary and sub-primary - merge to form a unitary legislative framework);

(b)by the fact that it concerns substantial Community interests which are realized also through Italian instruments.

(2) The Court of Justice is requested to state whether the third paragraph of Article 189, and Articles 177 and 5 of the EEC Treaty must be interpreted as meaning that the Member States, when they give effect to the Community directives, must also provide for the relevant procedural instruments regarded as necessary for ensuring adequate judicial protection, which entails the obligation to alter for the better the judicial instruments already in existence and, in any event, the duty not to alter those instruments for the worse.

(3) The Court of Justice is requested to state whether it necessarily follows from Articles 5 and 177 and the third paragraph of Article 189 of the EEC Treaty, read together, that there is a duty - on the part of the Member States - to provide that disputes relating to matters governed by 'Community-cum-Italian' law (and thus governed primarily by Community provisions and sub-primarily by Italian provisions) must be decided by national judges who, as regards the essence of the judicial function, are on the same footing as the Court of Justice (and accordingly are not 'less judicial' than the Court).

(4) (In the alternative) The Court of Justice is requested to state whether it necessarily follows from Articles 5 and 177 and the third paragraph of Article 189 of the EEC Treaty, read together, that there is an obligation on the part of the Member States to provide, as regards the 'implementation of the Community directives' , that disputes relating to matters governed by 'Community-cum-Italian' law shall be decided by institutions vested with 'real' , and not 'apparent' , judicial power (' utilis, non inutilis jurisdictio')."

5 It is clear from the grounds of the order for reference that the aim actually sought by the tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia in its four questions is that the Court should state whether the Italian courts can still offer whatever guarantees Community law may require to ensure that national judges are able to carry out their duties as Community judges in a satisfactory, wholly independent and completely impartial manner notwithstanding the enactment of Italian Law No 117/88 of 13 April 1988 on compensation for damage caused in the exercise of judicial functions and the civil liability of the judiciary (Gazzetta ufficiale della Repubblica italiana No 88, 15.4.1988, p. 3).

6 The tribunale doubts whether the law in question "ensures the impartiality of the judge, in view of the fact that it does not appear to guarantee that he need harbour no fear of suffering any damage ". As a result, "precisely because he may be called upon to meet a personal liability", an Italian judge may be "a judge in appearance only" and "in reality an institution which may be led to give judgment in a manner other than that dictated by knowledge and conscience, in flagrant infringement of the Community rules on the 'essence' of the judicial function ".

7 As the Commission pointed out in its written observations submitted to the Court in accordance with Article 20 of the Protocol on the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Communities, the procedure provided for in Article 177 of the Treaty is an instrument of cooperation between the Court of Justice and the national courts, whereby the former supplies the latter with the information on the interpretation of Community law which is necessary in order to enable them to settle disputes which are brought before them .

8 The Court has held (see the judgment of 16 June 1981 in Case 126/80 Salonia v Poidomani and Giglio ((1981)) ECR 1563, paragraph 6) that a request from a national court may be rejected only if it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law or the examination of the validity of a rule of Community law sought by that court bears no relation to the actual nature of the case or to the subject-matter of the main action.

9 That is the situation in the present case, in which the questions raised bear no relation to the subject-matter of the action, since the request from the tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia does not concern the interpretation of Council Directives 71/304 and 71/305, and the tribunale merely informs the Court that it will have to apply those directives in the dispute which has been brought before it . It is clear from the actual wording of the order for reference that the tribunal is in doubt only as to the possible psychological reactions of certain Italian judges as a result of the enactment of the Italian Law of 13 April 1988, cited above. Consequently, the preliminary questions submitted to the Court do not involve an interpretation of Community law objectively required in order to settle the dispute in the main action.

10 In those circumstances, the Court of Justice clearly has no jurisdiction to rule on the questions submitted to it by the tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia.

11 Article 92 of the Rules of Procedure must therefore be applied, and it must be found that the Court has no jurisdiction in this case.

On those grounds,

hereby orders :

The Court has no jurisdiction to answer the questions put by the tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia.

APPLICATION for interim measures for the suspension of the award by the Consorzio per la costruzione e la gestione di un impianto per l' incenerimento e trasformazione dei rifiuti solidi urbani (Consortium for the construction and management of the incinerator and processing plant for solid urban refuse), whose headquarters are at the offices of the City of La Spezia, of a public-works contract in connection with the consortium' s incinerator,

Judge Koopmans, acting for the President of the Court in accordance with the second paragraph of Article 85 and Article 11 of the Rules of Procedure,

makes the following

Order

1 By an application lodged at the Court Registry on 18 July 1988, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action before the Court under Article 169 of the EEC Treaty for a declaration that as a result of the failure of the Consorzio per la costruzione e la gestione di un impianto per l' incenerimento e trasformazione dei rifiuti solidi urbani (hereinafter referred to as "the Consortium "), whose headquarters are at the Town Hall of La Spezia, to publish in the Official Journal of the European Communities a notice concerning the award of a contract for works connected with the Consortium' s incinerator, the Italian Republic had failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (Official Journal, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682).

2 By an application lodged at the Court Registry on the same date, the Commission also applied, under Article 186 of the EEC Treaty and Article 83 of the Rules of Procedure, for an interim order requiring the Italian Republic to adopt all the necessary measures to suspend the award of the contract in question in this case until the Court has given judgment in the main action. In the alternative, should the contract already have been awarded, the Court is requested to order the Italian Republic to adopt all the measures which are appropriate in order to cancel the award of the contract or, at the very least, to preserve the status quo until final judgment is given.

3 By an order of 20 July 1988, the President of the Court, by way of an interlocutory decision, provisionally ordered that the Italian Republic should adopt all the necessary measures to suspend the award of the public works contract in question until 15 September 1988 or such other date as might be fixed by a subsequent order of the Court. By an order of 13 September 1988, the President of the Court, by way of an interlocutory decision, extended those protective measures until the date of the final order in these interlocutory proceedings.

4 The Italian Republic submitted its written observations on 2 September 1988. The parties' oral submissions were heard on 23 September 1983.

5 The Consortium is an association of municipalities situated in the province of La Spezia, in Liguria, which is responsible for the disposal of solid urban waste. For that purpose, it operates an incinerator in Boscalino di Arcola. On 31 December 1986, the Pretore (Magistrate) of La Spezia ordered the incinerator to be closed down and made its reopening subject to its renovation. The disputed contract relates to the carrying out of that renovation work.

6 The burden of the Commission' s charge against the Italian Republic is that in the course of awarding the contract the Consortium infringed the advertising rules laid down in Directive 71/305/EEC by failing to publish a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities, without providing evidence of circumstances of such a nature as to justify a derogation under the provisions of the directive, in particular Article 9 thereof. It requests that the award of the contract be suspended immediately in order to prevent it causing immediate and serious damage to the Commission, as protector of the Community' s interests, and to the undertakings which would have been able to take part in the tendering procedure had a contract notice been published in accordance with the directive.

7 It is an established and undisputed fact that no notice of the contract in question was published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

8 Article 186 of the Treaty provides that the Court may prescribe any interim measures requested in cases before it. In order for such a measure to be granted, an application for interim measures must, according to Article 83 (2) of the Rules of Procedure, state the circumstances giving rise to urgency and the factual and legal grounds establishing a prima-facie case for the interim measure applied for.

9 First of all, the Italian Government takes the view that there is no prima-facie case for granting the interim measure sought, since Directive No 71/305/EEC does not apply to the contract in question. In the first place, the contract is only exploratory and does not come within the definition of public works contracts laid down in Article 1 of the directive. Secondly, should that not be the case, the directive itself states in Article 9 (d) that the provisions relating to advertising do not apply when extreme urgency prevents the time-limit from being adhered to. The Italian Government goes on to dispute the urgency of the interim measure applied for, since in its view the start of renovation work on the incinerator is much more urgent that any compliance with the formal requirements laid down by the directive. Finally, the balance of interests tilts in favour of having a rapid start made on the works, given the public health interests at stake when solid refuse can no longer be satisfactorily disposed of .

10 The argument that the contested invitation to tender was exploratory must be rejected straight away. The Italian Government explained in this respect that, under Italian legislation, works contracts may be awarded on the basis of exploratory invitations to tender intended to identify the economically and technically most advantageous tender, in accordance with predetermined conditions; in such a case, the public authorities are not in fact required to award the contracts so that the invitation to tender cannot be regarded as relating to a "public works contract" within the meaning of the directive . This argument must be rejected since, as the Commission has rightly stated, the directive governs the procedure for awarding contracts for certain works whenever such contracts are awarded by public authorities; the scope of the directive does not, and cannot, depend on the particular rules laid down by national legislation as regards the duties of the awarding authorities.

11 Consequently, the Italian Government' s other arguments should be examined together; they are all based on the urgency of the renovation works on the incinerator in question and on the emergency situation which the Consortium was in at the time when the invitation to tender was issued . In order to weigh the importance of these arguments for the purposes of these interlocutory proceedings, they must be considered with reference to the chronological order of the facts underlying the dispute in the main proceedings.

12 The documents and oral explanations provided by both parties enable the Court to regard the following facts as agreed for the purpose of the interlocutory proceedings :

(a) on 15 December 1982, a presidential decree was brought into force relating to waste disposal; the Consortium was aware of the fact that the incinerator at Boscalino di Arcola did not comply with the technical specifications laid down in that decree;

(b) in May and June 1986, the Consortium approved plans for renovating the incinerator;

(c) meanwhile, the Regional Council of Liguria gave its authorization, on 26 April 1984, for the opening of a dump at Vallescura, in the municipality of Ricco del Golfo, for the disposal of solid urban refuse from a number of municipalities in the province of La Spezia;

(d) in December 1986, the Pretore of La Spezia ordered the incinerator at Boscalino di Arcola to be closed down, making its reopening subject to renovation; in July 1987, the Pretore stated that the technical requirements had to be met in full;

(e) during the first few months of 1987, the Ligurian regional authorities found that the dumping of waste in Vallescura had led to seepage into a stream situated below the tip; in July, the Vallescura dump was closed; an old dump in Saturnia was temporarily used, but with great hygiene problems and dangers to public health; a second tip in Vallescura was brought into use, at first for a few months;

(f) on 27 November 1987, the Consortium applied for a loan from theCassa Depositi e Prestiti in order to finance the works for renovating the incinerator;

(g) in December 1987, the Consortium decided to issue an exploratory invitation to tender for the award of a contract for the renovating work; the award was subject to the grant of a loan by the Cassa; the Consortium expressly stated that shortness of time did not allow another system of awarding contracts to be used, which would necessarily have taken longer; the Consortium sent a letter to seven Italian undertakings, appearing on national lists of specialized construction companies, and invited them to submit tenders;

(h) in February 1988, work was started on a third dump at Vallescura;

(i) on 2 June 1988, a ministerial decree was adopted which included the renovation of the incinerator in Boscalino di Arcola among the 17 priority projects for which the Cassa Depositi e Prestiti was authorized to grant loans;

(j) on 15 July 1988, an order made by the Ligurian regional authorities laid down the conditions for the tipping of refuse on the second and third dumps at Vallescura; the limits set for the use of the second dump were almost reached.

13 To complete this summary of the facts, it should be added that, on the day of the hearing, the loan for the financing of the renovation work on the incinerator had still not been granted by the Cassa Depositi e Prestiti.

14 The chronology of the facts shows first that, however urgent the works to be undertaken may be, that urgency is not due to unforeseeable events, since the Consortium has known since 1982 that the renovation of the incinerator was necessary. In order that the exception provided for in Article 9 (d) of Directive 71/305/EEC may be relied on, the "extreme urgency" brought about by events unforeseen by the authorities awarding contracts must prevent the time-limit laid down for the application of the directive from being kept. There are, therefore, sufficient factual and legal elements for assuming that, prima facie, the directive applies.

15 At the interlocutory hearing, the argument between the parties in fact concentrated mainly on the urgency relied on by the Commission, on the one hand, and the urgent need to complete the renovation of the incinerator quickly, on the other. The Commission argued that the length of time needed in order to comply with the advertising requirements of the directive was quite relative, since compliance with the advertising rules laid down in Article 12 et seq. of the directive requires a period of only about 40 days, and in urgent cases 25 days, whereas the invitation to tender itself dated from December 1987 . The Italian Government emphasized the serious risks to public health which additional delays would entail, particularly in view of the uncertainty about the future possibility of using the tip at Vallescura .

16 Given those arguments, it must be recognized that the observance of further time-limits in the completion of the renovation works on the incinerator might entail serious risks for public health and the environment . However, it should also be borne in mind that the Consortium, which is responsible for the work, brought about this situation itself by its slowness in meeting the new technical requirements. Furthermore, the Commission' s argument that a failure to comply with the directive constitutes a serious breach of Community law, particularly since a declaration of illegality by the Court obtained under Article 169 of the Treaty cannot make good the damage suffered by undertakings established in other Member States whch were excluded from the tendering procedure, must be accepted.

17 Whilst being aware of the difficulties in which the Consortium now finds itself, the Court considers that the Commission has established the urgency of the interim measure applied for and that in the final analysis the balance of interests tilts in its favour. In this regard, the Court has taken into account in particular the fact that the dumping of refuse at Vallescura must continue for quite a considerable period in any case. In fact, the Italian legislation laying down urgent provisions governing the disposal of waste, which is applicable in this case, allows a period of 120 days between the grant of the loan and the beginning of the works, which must be completed within the ensuing 18 months. In comparison with those periods, those entailed in complying with the directive appear to be negligible .

18 Consequently, the suspension already ordered must be extended until the date of delivery of the judgment in the main action.

On those grounds,

Judge Koopmans, replacing the President of the Court in accordance with the second paragraph of Article 85 (2) and Article 11 of the Rules of Procedure, by way of interlocutory decision,

hereby orders :

Judgment of the Court
of 22 June 1989
Fratelli Costanzo SpA v Comune di Milano.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Lombardia - Italy.
Public works contracts - Abnormally low tenders - Direct effect of directives in relation to administrative authorities.

1 . Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 71/305 - Award of contracts - Abnormally low tenders - Automatic disqualification - Not permissible - Obligation to conduct an examination procedure - Tenders subject to examination - Obligations of national judicial and administrative authorities

(Council Directive 71/305/EEC, Art. 29(5))

2 . Measures adopted by the institutions - Directives - Direct effect - Conditions - Implications

(EEC Treaty, Art. 189, third paragraph)

1 . Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305, from which Member States may not depart to any material extent when implementing it, prohibits the Member States from introducing provisions which require the automatic exclusion from procedures for the award of public works contracts of certain tenders determined according to a mathematical criterion, instead of obliging the awarding authority to apply the examination procedure laid down in the Directive, giving the tenderer an opportunity to furnish explanations.

Member States may require that tenders be examined when those tenders appear to be abnormally low, and not only when they are obviously abnormally low.

Administrative authorities, including municipal authorities, are under the same obligation as a national court to apply the provisions of Article 29(5) of the Directive and to refrain from applying provisions of national law which are inconsistent with them.

2 . Wherever the provisions of a directive appear, as far as their subject-matter is concerned, to be unconditional and sufficiently precise, those provisions may be relied upon by an individual against the State where that State has failed to implement the directive in national law by the end of the period prescribed or where it has failed to implement the directive correctly.

When the conditions under which individuals may rely on the provisions of a directive before the national courts are met, all organs of the administration, including decentralized authorities such as municipalities, are obliged to apply those provisions.

Costs

34 The costs incurred by the Spanish Government, the Italian Government and the Commission of the European Communities, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. As these proceedings are, in so far as the parties to the main proceedings are concerned, in the nature of a step in the action before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT,

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia by order of 16 December 1987, hereby rules :

(1) Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305 prohibits Member States from introducing provisions which require the automatic exclusion from procedures for the award of public works contracts of certain tenders determined according to a mathematical criterion, instead of obliging the awarding authority to apply the examination procedure laid down in the Directive, giving the tenderer an opportunity to furnish explanations.

(2) When implementing Council Directive 71/305/EEC, Member States may not depart to any material extent from the provisions of Article 29(5) thereof.

(3) Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305 allows Member States to require that tenders be examined when those tenders appear to be abnormally low, and not only when they are obviously abnormally low.

(4) Administrative authorities, including municipal authorities, are under the same obligation as a national court to apply the provisions of Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC and to refrain from applying provisions of national law which conflict with them .

1 By order of 16 December 1987, which was received at the Court Registry on 30 March 1988, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EEC Treaty a number of questions on the interpretation of Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (Official Journal, English Special Edition 1971 (II),p . 682) and the third paragraph of Article 189 of the EEC Treaty .

2 The questions were raised in proceedings brought by Fratelli Costanzo SpA (hereinafter referred to as "Costanzo "), the plaintiff in the main proceedings, for the annulment of a decision of the Giunta municipale (Municipal Executive Board) of Milan eliminating the tender submitted by Costanzo from a tendering procedure for a public works contract and awarding the contract in question to Ing. Lodigiani SpA (hereinafter : "Lodigiani ").

3 Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC provides as follows

> "If, for a given contract, tenders are obviously abnormally low in relation to the transaction, the authority awarding contracts shall examine the details of the tenders before deciding to whom it will award the contract. The result of this examination shall be taken into account.
> For this purpose it shall request the tenderer to furnish the necessary explanations and, where appropriate, it shall indicate which parts it finds unacceptable.
> If the documents relating to the contract provide for its award at the lowest price tendered, the authority awarding contracts must justify to the Advisory Committee set up by the Council Decision of 26 July 1971 the rejection of tenders which it considers to be too low."

4 Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305 was implemented in Italy by the third paragraph of Article 24 of Law No 584 of 8 August 1977 amending the procedures for the award of public works contracts in accordance with the directives of the European Economic Community (Gazzetta Ufficiale della Repubblica Italiana (Official Journal of the Italian Republic) No 232 of 26 August 1977, p. 6272). That provision is worded as follows :

> "If, for a given contract, tenders are abnormally low in relation to the transaction, the authority awarding the contract shall, after requesting the tenderer to furnish the necessary explanations and after indicating, where appropriate, which parts it considers unacceptable, examine the details of the tenders and may disallow them if it takes the view that they are not valid; in that event, if the call for tenders provides that the lowest tender price is the criterion for the award of the contract, the awarding authority is obliged to notify the rejection of the tenders, together with its reasons for doing so, to the Ministry of Public Works, which is responsible for forwarding the information to the Advisory Committee for Public Works Contracts of the European Economic Community within the period laid down by the first paragraph of Article 6 of this Law ."

5 Subsequently, in 1987, the Italian Government adopted three decree laws in succession which provisionally amended the third paragraph of Article 24 of Law No 584 (Decree Law No 206 of 25 May 1987, Gazzetta Ufficiale No 120, 26.5.1987, p. 5; Decree Law No 302 of 27 July 1987, Gazzetta Ufficiale No 174, 28.7.1987, p. 3; and Decree Law No 393 of 25 September 1987, Gazzetta Ufficiale No 225, 26.9.1987, p. 3).

6 The three decree laws each contain an Article 4 worded in identical terms, as follows :

"In order to speed up the procedures for the award of public works contracts, for a period of two years from the date on which this decree enters into force tenders with a percentage discount greater than the average percentage divergence of the tenders admitted, increased by a percentage which must be stated in the call for tenders, shall be considered abnormal for the purposes of the third paragraph of Article 24 of Law No 584 of 8 August 1977 and shall be excluded from the tendering procedure."

7 The decree laws lapsed because they were not converted into laws within the period prescribed by the Italian Constitution. However, a subsequent law provided that the effects of legal measures adopted pursuant to them were to remain valid (Article 1(2) of Law No 478 of 25 November 1987, Gazzetta Ufficiale No 277, 26.11.1987, p. 3).

8 In preparation for the 1990 World Cup for football, to be held in Italy, the Comune di Milano issued a restricted call for tenders for alteration work on a football stadium. The criterion chosen for awarding the contract was that of the lowest price.

9 The call for tenders stated that in accordance with Article 4 of Decree Law No 206 of 25 May 1987 tenders which exceeded the basic amount fixed for the price of the work by a percentage more than 10 points below the average percentage by which the tenders admitted exceeded that amount would be considered anomalous and consequently eliminated .

10 The tenders admitted to the procedure exceeded the basic amount fixed for the price of the work by an average of 19.48 %. In accordance with the call for tenders any tender which did not exceed the basic amount by at least 9.48% was to be automatically eliminated

11 The tender submitted by Costanzo was less than the basic amount. Accordingly, on 6 October 1987 the Giunta Municipale, on the basis of Article 4 of Decree Law No 393 of 25 September 1987, which in the mean time had replaced the decree law cited in the call for tenders, decided to exclude Costanzo' s bid from the tendering procedure and to award the contract to Lodigiani, which had submitted the lowest tender of those which fulfilled the condition set out in the call for tenders

12 Costanzo challenged that decision in proceedings before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia, claiming inter alia that it was illegal on the ground that it was based on a decree law which was itself incompatible with Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305.

13 The national court therefore referred the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling :

"A - Given that, under Article 189 of the EEC Treaty, the provisions contained in a directive may relate to the 'result to be achieved' (hereinafter referred to as 'provisions as to results') or else be concerned with the 'form and methods' required to achieve a given result (hereinafter referred to as 'provisions as to form and methods'), is the rule contained in Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 (where it provides that - should a tender be obviously abnormally low - the authority must 'examine the details' of the tender and request the tenderer to furnish the necessary explanations, indicating where appropriate which parts it finds unacceptable) a 'provision as to results' and therefore of such a nature that the Italian Republic was obliged to 'transpose' it without any amendment of substance (as indeed it did, by the third paragraph of Article 24 of Law No 584 of 8 August 1977) or is it a 'provision as to form and methods' , with the result that the Italian Republic could derogate from it by providing that where a tender is abnormally low the tenderer must automatically be eliminated from the tendering procedure, without any 'examination of the details' and without any request to the tenderer to furnish 'explanations' for the 'abnormal tender' ?

B - If the reply to Question A is negative (in the sense that Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC is to be held to be a 'provision as to form and methods'):

B - 1 . Did the Italian Republic (after 'transposing' the aforesaid provision by way of Law No 584 of 8 August 1977 without introducing any amendment of substance regarding the procedure to be followed in cases where a tender is abnormally low) retain the power to amend the domestic implementing provision? In particular, could Article 4 of Decree Law No 206 of 25 May 1987, Decree Law No 302 of 27 July 1987 and Decree Law No 393 of 25 September 1987 (whose wording is identical) amend Article 24 of Law No 584 of 8 August 1977?

B - 2 . Could the (identically worded) Articles 4 of the decree laws mentioned above amend Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC, as implemented by Law No 584 of 8 August 1977, without stating adequate reasons therefor, regard being had to the fact that a statement of reasons - which is necessary for Community legislation (see Article 190 of the EEC Treaty) - appears also to be necessary for domestic legislation introduced to give effect to Community provisions (which is therefore 'sub-primary' legislation and, in the absence of indication to the contrary, must also be subject to the rule which requires 'primary' legislation to state reasons)?

C - Is there, in any event, a conflict between Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC and the following provisions :

(a) the third paragraph of Article 24 of Law No 584 of 8 August 1977 (which refers to 'abnormally low' tenders, whereas the directive is concerned with tenders which are 'obviously' abnormally low and provides for examination of the details only in cases of 'obvious' abnormality);

(b) Article 4 of Decree Laws Nos 206 of 25 May 1987, 302 of 27 July 1987 and 393 of 25 September 1987 (which make no allowance for preliminary examination of the details or a request for clarification to the party concerned, contrary to Article 29(5) of the Directive; furthermore, the decree laws mentioned above do not refer to 'obviously' abnormal tenders and to that extent appear to be invalid, as does Law No 584 of 8 August 1977)?

D - If the Court of Justice rules that the aforesaid Italian legislative provisions conflict with Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC, was the municipal authority empowered, or obliged, to disregard the domestic provisions which conflicted with the aforesaid Community provision (consulting the central authorities if necessary), or does that power or obligation vest solely in the national courts?"

14 Reference is made to the Report for the Hearing for a fuller account of the facts of the case before the national court, the applicable legislation, the course of the procedure, and the written observations submitted to the Court, which are mentioned or discussed hereinafter only in so far as is necessary for the reasoning of the Court .

The second part of the third question and the first question

15 In the second part of the third question the Tribunale amministrativo regionale seeks in essence to establish whether Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305 prohibits Member States from introducing provisions which require the automatic exclusion from procedures for the award of public works contracts of certain tenders determined according to a mathematical criterion, instead of obliging the awarding authority to apply the examination procedure laid down in the directive, giving the tenderer an opportunity to furnish explanations. In its first question it asks whether the Member States may, when implementing Council Directive 71/305, depart to any material extent from Article 29(5) thereof.

16 With regard to the second part of the third question it should be noted that Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305 requires the awarding authority to examine the details of tenders which are obviously abnormally low, and for that purpose obliges the authority to request the tenderer to furnish the necessary explanations. Article 29(5) further requires the awarding authority, where appropriate, to indicate which parts of those explanations it finds unacceptable. Finally, if the criterion adopted for the award of the contract is the lowest price tendered, the awarding authority must justify to the Advisory Committee set up by the Council Decision of 26 July 1971 (Official Journal, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 693) the rejection of tenders which it considers to be too low.

17 The Comune di Milano and the Italian Government maintain that it is in keeping with the aim of Article 29(5) to replace the examination procedure which it envisages, giving the tenderer an opportunity to state its views, with a mathematical criterion for exclusion . They point out that the aim of that provision is, as the Court ruled in its judgment of 10 February 1982 in Case 76/81 Transporoute v Minister for Public Works ((1982)) ECR 417, at p. 428), to protect tenderers against arbitrariness on the part of the authority awarding the contract. A mathematical criterion for exclusion affords an absolute safeguard. It has the further advantage of being faster in its application than the procedure laid down by the Directive .

18 That argument cannot be upheld. A mathematical criterion for exclusion deprives tenderers who have submitted exceptionally low tenders of the opportunity of demonstrating that those tenders are genuine ones. The application of such a criterion is contrary to the aim of Directive 71/305, namely to promote the development of effective competition in the field of public contracts.

19 The answer to the second part of the third question must therefore be that Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305 prohibits Member States from introducing provisions which require the automatic exclusion from procedures for the award of public works contracts of certain tenders determined according to a mathematical criterion, instead of obliging the awarding authority to apply the examination procedure laid down in the Directive, giving the tenderer an opportunity to furnish explanations.

20 With regard to the first question, it should be observed that it was in order to enable tenderers submitting exceptionally low tenders to demonstrate that those tenders are genuine ones that the Council, in Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305, laid down a precise, detailed procedure for the examination of tenders which appear to be abnormally low . That aim would be jeopardized if Member States were able, when implementing Article 29(5) of the directive, to depart from it to any material extent.

21 The answer to the first question must therefore be that when implementing Council Directive 71/305 Member States may not depart to any material extent from the provisions of Article 29(5) thereof.

The second question

22 In its second question the national court asks whether, after implementing Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305 without departing from it to any material extent, Member States may subsequently amend the domestic implementing provision, and if so whether they must give reasons for doing so.

23 The national court raised this question only in the event that the answer to the first question should be that Member States could, when implementing Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305, depart materially from it.

24 In the light of the answer given to the first question the second question is devoid of purpose.

The first part of the third question

25 In the first part of its third question the national court seeks to establish whether Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305 allows Member States to require the examination of tenders whenever they appear to be abnormally low, and not only when they are obviously abnormally low.

26 The examination procedure must be applied whenever the awarding authority is contemplating the elimination of tenders because they are abnormally low in relation to the transaction. Consequently, whatever the threshold for the commencement of that procedure may be, tenderers can be sure that they will not be disqualified from the award of the contract without first having the opportunity of furnishing explanations regarding the genuine nature of their tenders.

27 It follows that the answer to be given to the first part of the third question is that Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305 allows Member States to require that tenders be examined when those tenders appear to be abnormally low, and not only when they are obviously abnormally low.

The fourth question

28 In the fourth question the national court asks whether administrative authorities, including municipal authorities, are under the same obligation as a national court to apply the provisions of Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305 and to refrain from applying provisions of national law which conflict with them.

29 In its judgments of 19 January 1982 in Case 8/81 Becker v Finanzamt Muenster-Innenstadt ((1982)) ECR 53, at p. 71 and 26 February 1986 in Case 152/84 Marshall v Southampton and South-West Hampshire Area Health Authority ((1986) ECR 723, at p. 748) the Court held that wherever the provisions of a directive appear, as far as their subject-matter is concerned, to be unconditional and sufficiently precise, those provisions may be relied upon by an individual against the State where that State has failed to implement the directive in national law by the end of the period prescribed or where it has failed to implement the Directive correctly.

30 It is important to note that the reason for which an individual may, in the circumstances described above, rely on the provisions of a directive in proceedings before the national courts is that the obligations arising under those provisions are binding upon all the authorities of the Member States.

31 It would, moreover, be contradictory to rule that an individual may rely upon the provisions of a directive which fulfil the conditions defined above in proceedings before the national courts seeking an order against the administrative authorities, and yet to hold that those authorities are under no obligation to apply the provisions of the directive and refrain from applying provisions of national law which conflict with them. It follows that when the conditions under which the Court has held that individuals may rely on the provisions of a directive before the national courts are met, all organs of the administration, including decentralized authorities such as municipalities, are obliged to apply those provisions.

32 With specific regard to Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305, it is apparent from the discussion of the first question that it is unconditional and sufficiently precise to be relied upon by an individual against the State. An individual may therefore plead that provision before the national courts and, as is clear from the foregoing, all organs of the administration, including decentralized authorities such as municipalities, are obliged to apply it.

33 The answer to the fourth question must therefore be that administrative authorities, including municipal authorities, are under the same obligation as a national court to apply the provisions of Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC and to refrain from applying provisions of national law which conflict with them.

Du Pont de Nemours Italiana SpA v Unità sanitaria locale No 2 di Carrara.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Toscana - Italia.
Public supply contracts - Reservation of 30 % of such contracts to undertakings located in a particular region.
Case C-21/88.

1.Free movement of goods - Quantitative restrictions - Measures having equivalent effect - Reservation of a proportion of a public supply contract to undertakings located in a particular region of the national territory - Not permissible - Measure benefiting only part of domestic production - No effect

(EEC Treaty, Art. 30)

2.Free movement of goods - Quantitative restrictions - Measures having equivalent effect - Measure which might be regarded as aid within the meaning of Article 92 of the Treaty - Applicability of the prohibition of measures having equivalent effect not precluded by that possibility

(EEC Treaty, Arts 30 and 92)

1.Article 30 of the Treaty precludes national rules which reserve to undertakings established in particular regions of the national territory a proportion of public supply contracts.

Although the restrictive effects of a preferential system of that kind are borne in the same measure both by products manufactured by undertakings from the Member State in question which are not situated in the relevant region and by products manufactured by undertakings established in the other Member States, the fact remains that all the products benefiting by the preferential system are domestic products. Moreover, the fact that the restrictive effect exercised by a State measure on imports does not benefit all domestic products but only some cannot exempt the measure in question from the prohibition set out in Article 30.

2.The Treaty provisions on aid may in no case be used to frustrate the Treaty rules on the free movement of goods. They both pursue a common purpose, namely to ensure the free movement of goods between Member States under normal conditions of competition. The fact that a national measure might be regarded as aid within the meaning of Article 92 is therefore not a sufficient reason to exempt it from the prohibition contained in Article 30.

Judgment

1 By order of 1 April 1987, which was received at the Court on 20 January 1988, the tribunale amministrativo regionale della Toscana (Regional Administrative Tribunal for Tuscany) referred three questions to the Court pursuant to Article 177 of the EEC Treaty for a preliminary ruling on the interpretation of Articles 30, 92 and 93 of the EEC Treaty in order to determine the compatibility with those provisions of Italian rules reserving to undertakings established in the Mezzogiorno (Southern Italy) a proportion of public supply contracts .

2 Those questions were raised in a dispute between Du Pont de Nemours Italiana SpA, supported by Du Pont de Nemours Deutschland GmbH, and Unità sanitaria locale No 2 di Carrara (Local Health Authority No 2, Carrara, hereinafter referred to as "the local health authority "), supported by 3M Italia SpA, concerning the conditions governing the award of contracts for the supply of radiological films and liquids .

3 Under Article 17(16) and (17) of Law No 64 of 1 March 1986 (Disciplina organica dell' intervento straordinario nel Mezzogiorno - system of rules governing special aid for Southern Italy), the Italian State extended to all public bodies and authorities, as well as to bodies and companies in which the State has a shareholding, and including local health authorities situated throughout Italy, the obligation to obtain at least 30% of their supplies from industrial and agricultural undertakings and small businesses established in Southern Italy in which the products concerned undergo processing.

4 In accordance with the provisions of that national legislation, the local health authority laid down by decision of 3 June 1986 the conditions governing a restricted tendering procedure for the supply of radiological films and liquids. According to the special terms and conditions set out in the annex, it divided the contract into two lots, one, equal to 30% of the total amount, being reserved to undertakings established in Southern Italy. Du Pont de Nemours Italiana challenged that decision before the tribunale amministrativo regionale della Toscana, on the ground that it had been excluded from the tendering procedure for that lot because it did not have an establishment in Southern Italy. By decision of 15 July 1986, the local health authority proceeded to award the contract for the lot corresponding to 70% of the total amount in question. Du Pont de Nemours Italiana also challenged that decision before the same court.

5 In the course of its consideration of the two actions the national court decided to request the Court to give a preliminary ruling on the following questions :

(1) Must Article 30 of the EEC Treaty, in so far as it imposes a prohibition on quantitative restrictions on imports and all measures having equivalent effect, be interpreted as precluding the national legislation in question?

(2) Is the reserved quota which is provided for by Article 17 of Law No 64 of 1 March 1986 in the nature of "aid" within the meaning of Article 92 inasmuch as it is intended "to promote the economic development" of a region "where the standard of living is abnormally low" by leading to the establishment of undertakings so as to contribute to the socio-economic development of such areas?

(3) Does Article 93 of the EEC Treaty confer exclusively on the Commission the power to determine whether aid within the meaning of Article 92 of the EEC Treaty is permissible, or is that power also vested in the national court to be exercised in connection with the examination of any conflicts arising between national law and Community law?

6 Reference is made to the Report for the Hearing for a fuller account of the facts, the applicable legislation and the written observations submitted to the Court, which are mentioned or discussed hereinafter only in so far as is necessary for the reasoning of the Court .

A - First question

7 In its first question, the national court seeks to ascertain whether national rules reserving to undertakings established in certain regions of the national territory a proportion of public supply contracts are contrary to Article 30, which prohibits quantitative restrictions on imports and all measures having equivalent effect.

8 It must be stated in limine that, as the Court has consistently held since the judgment in Dassonville (judgment of 11 July 1974 in Case 8/74 Procureur du Roi v Dassonville ((1974)) ECR 837, paragraph 5), Article 30, by prohibiting as between Member States measures having an effect equivalent to quantitative restrictions on imports, applies to all trading rules which are capable of hindering, directly or indirectly, actually or potentially, intra-Community trade.

9 It must be pointed out, moreover, that according to the first recital in the preamble to Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (Official Journal 1977, L 13, p. 1), which was in force at the material time, "restrictions on the free movement of goods in respect of public supplies are prohibited by the terms of Articles 30 et seq. of the Treaty ".

10 Accordingly, it is necessary to determine the effect which a preferential system of the kind at issue in this case is likely to have on the free movement of goods.

11 It must be pointed out in that regard that such a system, which favours goods processed in a particular region of a Member State, prevents the authorities and public bodies concerned from procuring some of the supplies they need from undertakings situated in other Member States. Accordingly, it must be held that products originating in other Member States suffer discrimination in comparison with products manufactured in the Member State in question, with the result that the normal course of intra-Community trade is hindered.

12 That conclusion is not affected by the fact that the restrictive effects of a preferential system of the kind at issue are borne in the same measure both by products manufactured by undertakings from the Member State in question which are not situated in the region covered by the preferential system and by products manufactured by undertakings established in other Member States.

13 It must be emphasized in the first place that, although not all the products of the Member State in question benefit by comparison with products from abroad, the fact remains that all the products benefiting by the preferential system are domestic products; secondly, the fact that the restrictive effect exercised by a State measure on imports does not benefit all domestic products but only some cannot exempt the measure in question from the prohibition set out in Article 30 .

14 Furthermore, it must be observed that, on account of its discriminatory character, a system such as the one at issue cannot be justified in the light of the imperative requirements recognized by the Court in its case-law; such requirements may be taken into consideration only in relation to measures which are applicable to domestic products and to imported products without distinction (judgment of 17 June 1981 in Case 113/80 Commission v Ireland ((1981)) ECR 1625).

15 It must be added that neither does such a system fall within the scope of the exceptions exhaustively listed in Article 36 of the Treaty .

16 However, the Italian Government has invoked Article 26 of Directive 77/62 (cited above), which provides that "this directive shall not prevent the implementation of provisions contained in Italian Law No 835 of 6 October 1950 (Official Gazette No 245, of 24.10.1950, of the Italian Republic) and in modifications thereto in force on the date on which this directive is adopted; this is without prejudice to the compatibility of these provisions with the Treaty ".

17 It should be pointed out in that regard, first, that the content of the national legislation to which the national court refers (Law No 64/86) is in some respects different and more extensive than it was at the time of the adoption of the directive (Law No 835/50) and, secondly, that Article 26 specifies that the directive is to apply "without prejudice to the compatibility of these provisions with the Treaty ". In any event, the directive cannot be interpreted as authorizing the application of national legislation whose provisions are contrary to those of the Treaty and, consequently, as impeding the application of Article 30 in a case such as this.

18 It must therefore be stated in answer to the national court' s first question that Article 30 must be interpreted as precluding national rules which reserve to undertakings established in particular regions of the national territory a proportion of public supply contracts .

B - Second question

19 In its second question, the national court seeks to establish whether in the event that the rules in question might be regarded as aid within the meaning of Article 92 that might exempt them from the prohibition set out in Article 30.

20 In that regard, it is sufficient to recall that, as the Court has consistently held (see, in particular, the judgment of 5 June 1986 in Case 103/84 Commission v Italy ((1986)) ECR 1759), Article 92 may in no case be used to frustrate the rules of the Treaty on the free movement of goods. It is clear from the relevant case-law that those rules and the Treaty provisions relating to State aid have a common purpose, namely to ensure the free movement of goods between Member States under normal conditions of competition. As the Court made clear in the judgment cited above, the fact that a national measure might be regarded as aid within the meaning of Article 92 is therefore not a sufficient reason to exempt it from the prohibition contained in Article 30 .

21 In the light of that case-law - there being no need to consider whether the rules in question are in the nature of aid - it must be stated in answer to the national court' s second question that the fact that national rules might be regarded as aid within the meaning of Article 92 cannot exempt them from the prohibition set out in Article 30 .

C - Third question

22 It follows from the answers given to the preceding questions that, in a case such as this, the national court must ensure the full application of Article 30. Accordingly, the third question, which is concerned with the role of the national court in assessing the compatibility of aid with Article 92, has become otiose.

Costs

23 The costs incurred by the Italian Government, the French Government and the Commission of the European Communities, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. As these proceedings are, in so far as the parties to the main proceedings are concerned, in the nature of a step in the proceedings before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

in answer to the questions submitted to it by the tribunale amministrativo regionale della Toscana, by order of 1 April 1987, hereby rules :

(1) Article 30 of the EEC Treaty must be interpreted as precluding national rules which reserve to undertakings established in particular regions of the national territory a proportion of public supply contracts .

(2) The fact that national rules might be regarded as aid within the meaning of Article 92 of the Treaty cannot exempt them from the prohibition set out in Article 30 of the Treaty.

Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic.
Failure of a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Public supply contracts in the data-processing sector - Undertakings partly or wholly in public ownership - National legislatrion not in compliance with obligations under Community law.
Case C-3/88.

1.Community law - Principles - Equal treatment - Discrimination by reason of nationality - Prohibition - Covert discrimination - Included

(EEC Treaty, Arts 52 and 59)

2.Freedom of movement - Freedom of establishment - Freedom to provide services - Derogations - Activities connected with the exercise of official authority - Technical activities in the field of data processing carried out for the public authorities - Excluded

(EEC Treaty, Arts 52, 55, 1st paragraph, 59 and 66)

3.Freedom of movement - Freedom of establishment - Freedom to provide services - Procedures for the award of public supply contracts - National legislation giving companies controlled by the national public sector exclusive rights to supply goods in the field of data processing - Not permissible

1.The principle of equal treatment, of which Articles 52 and 59 of the Treaty embody specific instances, prohibits not only overt discrimination by reason of nationality but also all covert forms of discrimination which, by the application of other criteria of differentiation, lead in fact to the same result.

2.The exception to freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services provided for by the first paragraph of Article 55 and by Article 66 of the EEC Treaty must be restricted to those of the activities referred to in Articles 52 and 59 which in themselves involve a direct and specific connection with the exercise of official authority . That is not the case in respect of activities concerning the design, programming and operation of data-processing systems for the public authorities, since they are of a technical nature and thus unrelated to the exercise of official authority.

3.A Member State which provides that only companies in which all or a majority of the shares are either directly or indirectly in public or State ownership may conclude agreements for the development of data-processing systems for the public authorities thereby fails to fulfil its obligations under Articles 52 and 59 of the Treaty and Directive 77/62 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts .

having regard to the Report for the Hearing and further to the hearing on 21 June 1989, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General delivered at the sitting on 4 October 1989,

Judgment

1 By an application lodged at the Court Registry on 6 January 1988 the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EEC Treaty seeking a declaration that, by adopting provisions under which only companies in which all or a majority of the shares are either directly or indirectly in public or State ownership may conclude agreements with the Italian State for the development of data-processing systems for the public authorities, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 52 and 59 of the EEC Treaty and Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (Official Journal 1977, L 13, p. 1, hereinafter referred to as "the directive ").

2 It had come to the Commission' s notice that the legislation in force in Italy authorized the State to conclude agreements, in a number of sectors of public activity (taxation, health, agriculture and urban property), only with companies in which all or a majority of the shares were directly or indirectly in public or State ownership . The Commission considered that those rules were contrary to the abovementioned provisions of Community law, and on 3 December 1985 it addressed a letter of formal notice to the Italian Government, thus setting in motion the procedure provided for in Article 169 of the Treaty .

3 On 1 July 1986, as no communication had been received from the Italian Government, the Commission delivered the reasoned opinion provided for in the first paragraph of Article 169 of the Treaty.

4 At the request of the Italian Government, two meetings were held with officials of the Commission, one in Rome on 25 to 27 January 1987 and the other in Brussels on 10 March 1987, with a view to clarifying the situation. On 5 May 1987, the Italian Government stated its position on the reasoned opinion. The Commission considered that position unsatisfactory and decided to bring the present action.

5 Reference is made to the Report for the Hearing for a fuller account of the Italian legislation in issue, the course of the procedure and the submissions and arguments of the parties, which are mentioned or discussed hereinafter only in so far as is necessary for the reasoning of the Court.

Failure to comply with Articles 52 and 59 of the EEC Treaty

6 In the Commission' s view, by providing that only companies in which all or a majority of the shares are directly or indirectly in public or State ownership may conclude agreements for the development of data-processing systems for the public authorities, the laws and decree-laws in issue, although applicable without distinction to Italian undertakings and to those of other Member States, are discriminatory and constitute a barrier to the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services laid down in Articles 52 and 59 of the Treaty.

7 The Italian Government claims first of all that the laws and decree-laws in dispute make no distinction on the basis of the nationality of companies which may conclude the agreements in issue. Consequently, since the Italian State owns all or a majority of the share capital not only in certain Italian companies but also in certain companies of other Member States, both types of company may take part without any discrimination in the establishment of the data-processing systems in issue.

8 According to the Court' s case-law the principle of equal treatment, of which Articles 52 and 59 of the Treaty embody specific instances, prohibits not only overt discrimination by reason of nationality but also all covert forms of discrimination which, by the application of other criteria of differentiation, lead in fact to the same result (see, in particular, the judgment of 29 October 1980 in Case 22/80 Boussac v Gerstenmeier ((1980)) ECR 3427).

9 Although the laws and decree-laws in issue apply without distinction to all companies, whether of Italian or foreign nationality, they essentially favour Italian companies. As the Commission has pointed out, without being contradicted by the Italian Government, there are at present no data-processing companies from other Member States all or the majority of whose shares are in Italian public ownership.

10 In justification of the public ownership requirement, the Italian Government claims that it is necessary for the public authorities to control the performance of the contracts in order to adapt the work to meet developments which were unforeseeable at the time when the contracts were signed. It also claims that for certain types of activity which the companies have to carry out, particularly in strategic sectors, which involve, as in the present case, confidential data, the State must be able to employ an undertaking in which it can have complete confidence.

11 In that regard it must be stated that the Italian Government had sufficient legal powers at its disposal to be able to adapt the performance of contracts to meet future and unforeseeable circumstances and to ensure compliance with the general interest, and that in order to protect the confidential nature of the data in question the Government could have adopted measures less restrictive of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services than those in issue, in particular by imposing a duty of secrecy on the staff of the companies concerned, breach of which might give rise to criminal proceedings . There is nothing in the documents before the Court to suggest that the staff of companies none of whose share capital is in Italian public ownership could not comply just as effectively with such a duty .

12 The Italian Government also maintains that in view of their confidential nature the activities necessary for the operation of the data-processing systems in question are connected with the exercise of official authority within the meaning of Article 55.

13 As the Court has already held (see the judgment of 21 June 1974 in Case 2/74 Reyners v Belgium ((1974)) ECR 631), the exception to freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services provided for by the first paragraph of Article 55 and by Article 66 of the EEC Treaty must be restricted to those of the activities referred to in Articles 52 and 59 which in themselves involve a direct and specific connection with the exercise of official authority. That is not the case here, however, since the activities in question, which concern the design, programming and operation of data-processing systems, are of a technical nature and thus unrelated to the exercise of official authority .

14 Finally, the Italian Government claims that in view of the purpose of the data-processing systems in question and the confidential nature of the data processed, the activities necessary for their operation concern Italian public policy within the meaning of Article 56(1) of the Treaty.

15 That argument must also be dismissed. It need merely be pointed out that the nature of the aims pursued by the data-processing systems in question is not sufficient to establish that there would be any threat to public policy if companies from other Member States were awarded the contracts for the establishment and operation of those systems . It must also be borne in mind that the confidential nature of the data processed by the systems could be protected, as stated above, by a duty of secrecy, without there being any need to restrict freedom of establishment or freedom to provide services.

16 It follows from the foregoing considerations that the claim based on failure to comply with Articles 52 and 59 of the Treaty must be upheld .

Failure to comply with Directive 77/62/EEC

17 The Commission considers that the laws and decree-laws in issue infringe the provisions of the directive as regards the purchase by the public authorities of the equipment necessary for the establishment of the data-processing systems in question. Since such equipment is to be regarded as "products" within the meaning of Article 1(1)(a) of the directive and since the value of the relevant public supply contracts exceeds the amount fixed in Article 5, the competent authorities should have followed the award procedures prescribed in the directive and complied with the obligations laid down in Article 9, which requires notices of such contracts to be published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

18 The Italian Government objects, first, that in addition to the purchase of the hardware a data-processing system comprises the creation of software, the planning, installation, maintenance and technical commissioning of the system and sometimes its operation. The interdependence of those activities means that complete responsibility for the establishment of the data-processing systems provided for by the laws and decree-laws in issue must be given to a single company. Therefore, and bearing in mind that the hardware is an ancillary element in the establishment of a data-processing system, the directive is inapplicable. The Italian Government adds that according to Article 1(a) of the directive the concept of public supply contracts covers only contracts the principal object of which is the delivery of products.

19 That argument cannot be accepted. The purchase of the equipment required for the establishment of a data-processing system can be separated from the activities involved in its design and operation. The Italian Government could have approached companies specializing in software development for the design of the data-processing systems in question and, in compliance with the directive, could have purchased hardware meeting the technical specifications laid down by such companies .

21 Under that provision, contracting authorities need not apply the procedures provided for in Article 4(1) and (2) "for equipment supply contracts in the field of data processing, and subject to any decisions of the Council taken on a proposal from the Commission and defining the categories of material to which the present exception does not apply. There can no longer be recourse to the present exception after 1 January 1981 other than by a decision of the Council taken on a proposal from the Commission to modify this date ".

22 The decisions mentioned by the Italian Government were adopted on the basis of Article 235 of the Treaty and not pursuant to Article 6(1)(h) of the directive. They relate to the implementation of a programme in the field of data processing which does not concern, either directly or indirectly, the rules applicable to contracts for the supply of data-processing equipment.

23 In the Italian Government' s submission, the supply contracts in issue also fall within the exceptions provided for in Article 6(1)(g) of the directive, which authorizes contracting authorities not to follow the procedures referred to in Article 4(1) and (2) "when supplies are declared secret or when their delivery must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the provisions laid down by law, regulation or administrative action in force in the Member State concerned, or when the protection of the basic interests of that State' s security so requires ". It refers, in that regard, to the secret nature of the data involved, which is essential in the fight against crime, particularly in the areas of taxation, public health and fraud in agricultural matters.

24 That objection concerns the confidential nature of the data entered in the data-processing systems in question. As has already been pointed out, however, observance of confidentiality by the staff concerned is not dependent on the public ownership of the contracting company .

25 The Italian Government also claims that the activities to be carried out by the specialized companies chosen for the development of the data-processing systems in question constitute a public service activity . Agreements concluded between the State and the companies chosen to carry out those activities are therefore excluded from the scope of the directive, Article 2(3) of which provides :

> "When the State, a regional or local authority or one of the legal persons governed by public law or corresponding bodies specified in Annex I grants to a body other than the contracting authority - regardless of its legal status - special or exclusive rights to engage in a public service activity, the instrument granting this right shall stipulate that the body in question must observe the principle of non-discrimination by nationality when awarding public supply contracts to third parties."

26 That argument cannot be accepted. The supply of the equipment required for the establishment of a data-processing system and the design and operation of the system enable the authorities to carry out their duties but do not in themselves constitute a public service.

27 Finally, the Italian Government claims that the derogation provided for in Article 6(1)(e) of the directive should be applied in the case of the data-processing system at the Finance Ministry. Under that subparagraph, contracting authorities need not apply the procedures referred to in Article 4(1) and (2) "for additional deliveries by the original supplier which are intended either as part replacement of normal supplies or installations, or as the extension of existing supplies or installations where a change of supplier would compel the contracting authority to purchase equipment having different technical characteristics which would result in incompatibility or disproportionate technical difficulties of operation or maintenance ".

28 In that regard it is sufficient to note that such cases of additional deliveries cannot justify a general rule that only companies in which all or a majority of the share capital is in Italian public ownership may be awarded supply contracts.

29 It follows from the foregoing that the claim based on failure to comply with Directive 77/62/EEC must also be upheld.

30 It must therefore be held that by providing that only companies in which all or a majority of the shares are either directly or indirectly in public or State ownership may conclude agreements for the development of data-processing systems for the public authorities, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 52 and 59 of the EEC Treaty and Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976.

Costs

31 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the defendant has failed in its submissions, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

hereby :

(1)Declares that by providing that only companies in which all or a majority of the shares are either directly or indirectly in public or State ownership may conclude agreements for the development of data-processing systems for the public authorities, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 52 and 59 of the EEC Treaty and Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976;

(2)Orders the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

Judgment of the Court
of 22 September 1988
Commission of the European Communities v Ireland.
Public works contract - Community tender procedure - Applicability of Article 30 of the EEC Treaty.
Case 45/87.

1 . Approximation of legislation - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 71/305 - Scope - Exclusion of water and energy services - Publication in the Official Journal of a notice relating to a contract covered by the exception - Effect - Applicability of the directive - None

(Council Directive 71/305, Art. 3 (5))

2 . Free movement of goods - Quantitative restrictions - Measures having equivalent effect - Public works contract - Invitation to tender - Technical specification requiring the materials used to comply with a national standard - Not permissible

1 . Directive 71/305 on the procedures for the award of public works contracts, Article 3 (5) of which excludes from its scope contracts awarded by the production, distribution, transmission or transportation services for water and energy, cannot apply to such a contract notwithstanding that provision simply because the Member State in question requested the publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities by reference to the obligatory publication of contract notices laid down by the directive . Such a step, whether taken because of an error or because the Member State initially intended to seek a financial contribution from the Community, cannot cause an exception not to apply where the exception is laid down in a provision which is wholly unambiguous and justified by reasons unaffected by that step.

2 . In so far as it allows a public body for whose acts it is responsible to include in the contract specification for tender for a public works contract a clause stipulating that the materials used must be certified as complying with a national technical standard, a Member State fails to fulfil its obligations under Article 30 of the Treaty . Such a clause is liable to impede imports in so far as it may cause economic operators utilizing materials equivalent to those certified as complying with the relevant national standards to refrain from tendering.

Judgment

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 13 February 1987, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EEC Treaty for a declaration that by allowing the inclusion in the contract specification for the Dundalk Water Supply Augmentation Scheme - Contract No 4 of a clause providing that the asbestos cement pressure pipes should be certified as complying with Irish Standard 188:1975 in accordance with the Irish Standard Mark Licensing Scheme of the Institute for Industrial Research and Standards (IIRS) and consequently refusing to consider (or rejecting without adequate justification) a tender providing for the use of asbestos cement pipes manufactured to an alternative standard providing equivalent guarantees of safety, performance and reliability, Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 30 of the EEC Treaty and Article 10 of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (Official Journal, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682).

2 Dundalk Urban District Council is the promoter of a scheme for the augmentation of Dundalk' s drinking water supply. Contract No 4 of that scheme is for the construction of a water-main to transport water from the River Fane source to a treatment plant at Cavan Hill and thence into the existing town supply system. The invitation to tender for that contract by open procedure was published in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 13 March 1986 (Official Journal S 50, p . 13).

3 Clause 4.29 of the specification relating to Contract No 4, which formed part of the contract specification, included the following paragraph :

"Asbestos cement pressure pipes shall be certified as complying with Irish Standard Specification

188:1975 in accordance with the Irish Standard Mark Licensing Scheme of the Institute for Industrial Research and Standards. All asbestos cement watermains are to have a bituminous coating internally and externally. Such coatings shall be applied at the factory by dipping."

4 The dispute stems from complaints made to the Commission by an Irish undertaking and a Spanish undertaking. In response to the invitation to tender for Contract No 4, the Irish undertaking had submitted three tenders, one of which provided for the use of pipes manufactured by the Spanish undertaking. In the Irish undertaking' s view, that tender, which was the lowest of the three submitted by it, gave it the best chance of obtaining the contract. The consulting engineers to the project wrote a letter to the Irish undertaking concerning that contract stating that there would be no point in its coming to the pre-adjudication interview if proof could not be provided that the firm supplying the pipes was approved by the IIRS as a supplier of products complying with Irish Standard 188:1975 (" IS 188 "). It is common ground that the Spanish undertaking in question had not been certified by the IIRS but that its pipes complied with international standards, and in particular with ISO 160:1980 of the International Organization for Standardization.

5 Reference is made to the Report for the Hearing for a fuller account of the relevant provisions, the background to the case and the submissions and arguments of the parties and of the intervener, which are mentioned or discussed hereinafter only in so far as is necessary for the reasoning of the Court.

6 In the Commission' s view, this action raises inter alia the question of the compatibility with Community law, in particular Article 30 of the EEC Treaty and Article 10 of Directive 71/305, of the inclusion in a contract specification of clauses like the disputed Clause 4.29 . It further argues that the Irish authorities' rejection, without any examination, of a tender providing for the use of Spanish-made pipes not complying with Irish standards also infringed those provisions of Community law. It is appropriate to examine first the issues raised by Clause 4.29.

7 Article 10 of Directive 71/305, to which the Commission refers, provides that Member States are to prohibit the introduction into the contractual clauses relating to a given contract of technical specifications which mention products of a specific make or source or of a particular process and which therefore favour or eliminate certain undertakings. In particular, the indication of types or of a specific origin or production is to be prohibited. However, such indication is permissible if it is accompanied by the words "or equivalent" where the authorities awarding contracts are unable to give a description of the subject of the contract using specifications which are sufficiently precise and intelligible to all parties concerned . The words "or equivalent" do not appear in Clause 4.29 of the contract notice at issue in this case.

8 The Irish Government argues that the provisions of Directive 71/305 do not apply to the contract in question. It points out that Article 3 (5) of the directive provides that the directive is not to apply to "public works contracts awarded by the production, distribution, transmission or transportation services for water and energy ". There is no doubt that the contract in this case was a public works contract to be awarded by a public distribution service for water .

9 The Commission does not deny that fact but points out that Ireland requested the publication of the relevant notice in the Official Journal by reference to the obligatory publication of contract notices laid down by the directive. The Commission, in common with the Spanish Government, which intervened in support of its conclusions, considers that, having voluntarily brought itself within the scope of the directive, Ireland was obliged to comply with its provisions.

10 With regard to this point, the Irish Government' s argument must be accepted . The actual wording of Article 3 (5) is wholly unambiguous, in so far as it excludes public works contracts of the type at issue from the scope of the directive. According to the preamble to the directive, that exception to the general application of the directive was laid down in order to avoid the subjection of distribution services for water to different systems for their works contracts, depending on whether they come under the State and authorities governed by public law or whether they have separate legal personality . There is no reason to consider that the exception in question no longer applies, and the reasons underlying it are no longer valid, where a Member State has a contract notice published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, whether through an error or because it initially intended to seek a contribution from the Community towards the financing of the work.

11 The application must therefore be dismissed in so far as it is based on the infringement of Directive 71/305.

Article 30 of the Treaty

12 It must be observed at the outset that the Commission maintains that Dundalk Urban District Council is a public body for whose acts the Irish Government is responsible. Moreover, before accepting a tender, Dundalk Council has to obtain the authorization of the Irish Department of the Environment. Those facts have not been challenged by the Irish Government.

13 It must also be noted that according to the Irish Government the requirement of compliance with Irish standards is the usual practice followed in relation to public works contracts in Ireland.

14 The Irish Government points out that the contract at issue relates not to the sale of goods but to the performance of work, and the clauses relating to the materials to be used are completely subsidiary . Contracts concerned with the performance of work fall under the Treaty provisions relating to the free supply of services, without prejudice to any harmonization measures which might be taken under Article 100. Consequently, Article 30 cannot apply to a contract for works.

15 In that connection, the Irish Government cites the case-law of the Court and, in particular, the judgment of 22 March 1977 in Case 74/76 Iannelli & Volpi v Meroni ((1977)) ECR 557, according to which the field of application of Article 30 does not include obstacles to trade covered by other specific provisions of the Treaty.

16 That argument cannot be accepted. Article 30 envisages the elimination of all measures of the Member States which impede imports in intra-Community trade, whether the measures bear directly on the movement of imported goods or have the effect of indirectly impeding the marketing of goods from other Member States. The fact that some of those barriers must be considered in the light of specific provisions of the Treaty, such as the provisions of Article 95 relating to fiscal discrimination, in no way detracts from the general character of the prohibitions laid down by Article 30.

17 The provisions on the freedom to supply services invoked by the Irish Government, on the other hand, are not concerned with the movement of goods but the freedom to perform activities and have them carried out; they do not lay down any specific rule relating to particular barriers to the free movement of goods. Consequently, the fact that a public works contract relates to the provision of services cannot remove a clause in an invitation to tender restricting the materials that may be used from the scope of the prohibitions set out in Article 30.

18 Consequently, it must be considered whether the inclusion of Clause 4.29 in the invitation to tender and in the tender specifications was liable to impede imports of pipes into Ireland.

19 In that connection, it must first be pointed out that the inclusion of such a clause in an invitation to tender may cause economic operators who produce or utilize pipes equivalent to pipes certified as complying with Irish standards to refrain from tendering

20 It further appears from the documents in the case that only one undertaking has been certified by the IIRS to IS 188:1975 to apply the Irish Standard Mark to pipes of the type required for the purposes of the public works contract at issue. That undertaking is located in Ireland . Consequently, the inclusion of Clause 4.29 had the effect of restricting the supply of the pipes needed for the Dundalk scheme to Irish manufacturers alone.

21 The Irish Government maintains that it is necessary to specify the standards to which materials must be manufactured, particularly in a case such as this where the pipes utilized must suit the existing network . Compliance with another standard, even an international standard such as ISO 160:1980, would not suffice to eliminate certain technical difficulties.

22 That technical argument cannot be accepted. The Commission' s complaint does not relate to compliance with technical requirements but to the refusal of the Irish authorities to verify whether those requirements are satisfied where the manufacturer of the materials has not been certified by the IIRS to IS 188. By incorporating in the notice in question the words "or equivalent" after the reference to the Irish standard, as provided for by Directive 71/305 where it is applicable, the Irish authorities could have verified compliance with the technical conditions without from the outset restricting the contract only to tenderers proposing to utilize Irish materials.

23 The Irish Government further objects that in any event the pipes manufactured by the Spanish undertaking in question whose use was provided for in the rejected tender did not meet the technical requirements, but that argument, too, is irrelevant as regards the compatibility with the Treaty of the inclusion of a clause like Clause 4.29 in an invitation to tender.

24 The Irish Government further maintains that protection of public health justifies the requirement of compliance with the Irish standard in so far as that standard guarantees that there is no contact between the water and the asbestos fibres in the cement pipes, which would adversely affect the quality of the drinking water.

25 That argument must be rejected. As the Commission has rightly pointed out, the coating of the pipes, both internally and externally, was the subject of a separate requirement in the invitation to tender . The Irish Government has not shown why compliance with that requirement would not be such as to ensure that there is no contact between the water and the asbestos fibres, which it considers to be essential for reasons of public health.

26 The Irish Government has not put forward any other argument to refute the conclusions of the Commission and the Spanish Government and those conclusions must consequently be upheld.

27 It must therefore be held that by allowing the inclusion in the contract specification for tender for a public works contract of a clause stipulating that the asbestos cement pressure pipes must be certified as complying with Irish Standard 188:1975 in accordance with the Irish Standard Mark Licensing Scheme of the Institute for Industrial Research and Standards, Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 30 of the EEC Treaty.

The rejection of the tender providing for the use of the Spanish-made pipes

28 The second limb of the Commission' s application is concerned with the Irish authorities' attitude to a given undertaking in the course of the procedure for the award of the contract at issue.

29 It became apparent during the hearing that the second limb of the application is in fact intended merely to secure the implementation of the measure which is the subject of the first limb. It must therefore be held that it is not a separate claim and there is no need to rule on it separately.

Costs

30 Under Article 69 (2) of the Rules of Procedure the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Nevertheless, by virtue of the first subparagraph of Article 69 (3) the Court may order the parties to bear their own costs in whole or in part where each party succeeds on some and fails on other heads. As the Commission has failed in one of its submissions, the parties must be ordered to bear their own costs.

On those grounds,

hereby :

(1) Declares that by allowing the inclusion in the contract specification for tender for a public works contract of a clause stipulating that the asbestos cement pressure pipes must be certified as complying with Irish Standard 188:1975 in accordance with the Irish Standard Mark Licensing Scheme of the Institute for Industrial Research and Standards, Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 30 of the EEC Treaty;

(2) Dismisses the remainder of the application;

(3) Orders the parties, including the intervener, to bear their own costs .

COMMISSION OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES BROUGHT AN ACTION UNDER ARTICLE 169 OF THE EEC TREATY FOR A DECLARATION THAT BY ADOPTING THE TENDERING PROCEDURE RELATING TO THE DUNDALK WATER SUPPLY AUGMENTATION SCHEME : CONTRACT NO 4, IRELAND HAD FAILED TO COMPLY WITH ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER ARTICLE 30 OF THE EEC TREATY AND COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC OF 26*JULY 1971 CONCERNING THE COORDINATION OF PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS (OFFICIAL JOURNAL, ENGLISH SPECIAL EDITION 1971 (II), P. 682), AND IN PARTICULAR ARTICLE 10 (2) THEREOF.

2 BY AN APPLICATION LODGED AT THE COURT REGISTRY ON THE SAME DAY, THE APPLICANT REQUESTED THE COURT, UNDER ARTICLE 186 OF THE EEC TREATY AND ARTICLE 83 OF THE RULES OF PROCEDURE, PRIMARILY TO MAKE AN INTERIM ORDER THAT IRELAND SHOULD TAKE SUCH MEASURES AS MAY BE NECESSARY TO PREVENT, UNTIL SUCH TIME AS THE COURT HAS GIVEN FINAL JUDGMENT IN THIS CASE OR A SETTLEMENT HAS BEEN REACHED BETWEEN THE COMMISSION AND IRELAND, THE AWARD OF A CONTRACT FOR THE WORK RELATING TO THE DUNDALK WATER SUPPLY AUGMENTATION SCHEME : CONTRACT NO 4. ALSO IN THAT APPLICATION, IN THE EVENT THAT SUCH A CONTRACT SHOULD ALREADY HAVE BEEN AWARDED, THE COMMISSION REQUESTED THE COURT TO ORDER THE DEFENDANT TO TAKE SUCH MEASURES AS MAY BE NECESSARY TO CANCEL THAT CONTRACT .

3 IT APPEARS FROM THE DOCUMENTS IN THE CASE, IN PARTICULAR A LETTER DATED 3 FEBRUARY 1987, THAT IRELAND GAVE AN UNDERTAKING TO THE COMMISSION NOT TO AWARD THE CONTRACT BEFORE 20 FEBRUARY 1987. IRELAND STATED, MOREOVER, THAT IT WOULD NOT BE ABLE TO DELAY THE AWARD ANY FURTHER UNLESS THE COURT OF JUSTICE SO ORDERED.

4 BY ORDER OF 16 FEBRUARY 1987 PURSUANT TO ARTICLE 84 (2) OF THE RULES OF PROCEDURE, THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF JUSTICE THEREFORE DECIDED IN THE INTERESTS OF JUSTICE AND IN ORDER TO MAINTAIN THE STATUS QUO TO ORDER THE DEFENDANT TO TAKE SUCH MEASURES AS MIGHT BE NECESSARY TO PREVENT THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT IN QUESTION BY DUNDALK URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL BEFORE THE FINAL ORDER WAS DELIVERED IN THE PROCEEDINGS FOR INTERIM MEASURES IN CASE 45/87 R.

5 IRELAND PRESENTED ITS WRITTEN OBSERVATIONS ON 2 MARCH 1987. THE PARTIES PRESENTED ORAL ARGUMENT ON 9 MARCH 1987.

6 BEFORE CONSIDERING THE MERITS OF THIS APPLICATION FOR INTERIM MEASURES IT MAY BE USEFUL TO GIVE A BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF THE BACKGROUND TO THIS CASE AND IN PARTICULAR OF THE VARIOUS FACTS THAT PROMPTED THE COMMISSION TO BRING THE MAIN PROCEEDINGS.

7 DUNDALK URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL IS THE PROMOTER OF THE PROJECT KNOWN AS THE DUNDALK WATER SUPPLY AUGMENTATION SCHEME. CONTRACT NO 4 OF THAT SCHEME CONCERNS THE CONSTRUCTION OF A WATER MAIN TO TRANSPORT WATER FROM THE RIVER FANE SOURCE TO A TREATMENT PLANT AT CAVAN HILL AND THENCE INTO THE EXISTING TOWN SUPPLY SYSTEM. THE INVITATION TO TENDER FOR THIS CONTRACT BY OPEN PROCEDURE WAS PUBLISHED ON PAGE 13 OF SUPPLEMENT NO S*50 OF THE OFFICIAL JOURNAL OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES OF 13 MARCH 1986. AT POINT 13 OF THE PUBLISHED NOTICE IT WAS STATED THAT :

"THE CONTRACT WILL BE AWARDED, SUBJECT TO THE DUNDALK URBAN DISTRICT

COUNCIL BEING SATISFIED AS TO THE ABILITY OF THE CONTRACTOR TO CARRY OUT THE WORK, TO THE CONTRACTOR WHO SUBMITS A TENDER, IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE TENDER DOCUMENTS, WHICH IS ADJUDGED TO BE THE MOST ECONOMICALLY ADVANTAGEOUS TO THE COUNCIL IN RESPECT OF PRICE, PERIOD OF COMPLETION, TECHNICAL MERIT AND RUNNING COSTS.

THE LOWEST OR ANY TENDER NEED NOT NECESSARILY BE ACCEPTED."

8 IN RESPONSE TO THAT INVITATION TO TENDER, AN IRISH CONTRACTOR, P.*J.*WALLS (CIVIL) LTD (HEREINAFTER REFERRED TO AS "WALLS"),SUBMITTED THREE TENDERS. ONE WAS BASED ON THE USE OF ASBESTOS CEMENT PIPES SUPPLIED BY A SPANISH COMPANY, URALITA SA. WALLS CONSIDERED THAT THAT TENDER, WHICH WAS THE LOWEST IT HAD SUBMITTED, OFFERED IT THE BEST POSSIBILITY OF OBTAINING THE CONTRACT. HOWEVER, THE ENGINEERS CONSULTED BY THE DUNDALK AUTHORITIES CONCERNING THE PROJECT CONSIDERED THAT THE TENDER DID NOT COMPLY WITH CLAUSE 4.29 OF THE SPECIFICATION FOR THE CONTRACT. THAT CLAUSE PROVIDES THAT :

"ASBESTOS CEMENT PRESSURE PIPES SHALL BE CERTIFIED AS COMPLYING WITH IRISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION 188-1975 IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE IRISH STANDARD MARK LICENSING SCHEME OF THE INSTITUTE FOR INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH AND STANDARDS. ALL ASBESTOS CEMENT WATER MAINS ARE TO HAVE A BITUMINOUS COATING INTERNALLY AND EXTERNALLY. SUCH COATINGS SHALL BE APPLIED AT THE FACTORY BY DIPPING."

THE CONSULTING ENGINEERS THEREFORE INFORMED WALLS THAT THAT TENDER COULD NOT BE CONSIDERED. WALLS AND URALITA THEN COMPLAINED TO THE COMMISSION THAT THEIR TENDER HAD NOT BEEN DULY CONSIDERED.

9 IN FACT ONLY ONE MANUFACTURER HAS OBTAINED APPROVAL FROM THE INSTITUTE FOR INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH AND STANDARDS AS REGARDS IRISH STANDARD (IS) 188 AND IS AUTHORIZED TO AFFIX THE IRISH STANDARD MARK TO PIPES OF THE TYPE REQUIRED FOR THE WORK IN QUESTION. THAT COMPANY IS TEGRAL PIPES LTD, OF DROGHEDA, IRELAND.

10 THE COMMISSION TOOK THE VIEW THAT CLAUSE 4.29 INFRINGED ARTICLES 30 TO 36 OF THE EEC TREATY AND ARTICLE 10 OF COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC AND THEREFORE INITIATED THE PRE-LITIGATION PROCEDURE UNDER ARTICLE 169 OF THE EEC TREATY BY A TELEX DATED 11 AUGUST 1986. THAT TELEX DREW IRELAND' S ATTENTION TO THE ALLEGED INFRINGEMENTS AND INVITED IT TO SUBMIT ITS OBSERVATIONS. BY LETTER DATED 9 SEPTEMBER 1986 THE DEFENDANT STATED THAT IT DID NOT ACCEPT THE VALIDITY OF THE COMPLAINT SINCE THE COMPLAINANTS HAD NOT SUBMITTED ANY EVIDENCE THAT THEIR PRODUCTS MET THE REQUIREMENTS OF IS 188 OR ANY EQUIVALENT RECOGNIZED INTERNATIONAL STANDARD.

11 BY LETTER DATED 20 OCTOBER 1986 THE COMMISSION FORMALLY REITERATED ITS VIEWS TO THE DEFENDANT AND INVITED IT TO SUBMIT ITS OBSERVATIONS WITHIN TWO WEEKS OF RECEIVING THE LETTER. IRELAND' S REPLY DID NOT SATISFY THE COMMISSION WHICH, BY LETTER OF 13 JANUARY 1987, DELIVERED A REASONED OPINION STATING THAT CLAUSE 4.29 INFRINGED ARTICLES 30 TO 36 OF THE EEC TREATY AND ARTICLE 10 OF COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC; THE COMMISSION REQUESTED IRELAND TO TAKE ALL NECESSARY MEASURES TO COMPLY WITH THE REASONED OPINION WITHIN 15 DAYS FOLLOWING NOTIFICATION. BY LETTER DATED 3 FEBRUARY 1987 IRELAND

STATED THAT IT STOOD BY THE VIEWS EXPRESSED IN ITS LETTER OF 9*SEPTEMBER 1986. IT DID, HOWEVER, ALSO UNDERTAKE NOT TO AWARD THE CONTRACT BEFORE 20 FEBRUARY 1987. SINCE IRELAND HAD NOT COMPLIED WITH THE REASONED OPINION, THE COMMISSION APPLIED TO THE COURT ON 13 FEBRUARY 1987 PURSUANT TO ARTICLE 169 OF THE EEC TREATY FOR A DECLARATION THAT IRELAND HAD FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE TREATY .

12 PURSUANT TO ARTICLE 186 OF THE EEC TREATY, THE COURT OF JUSTICE MAY IN CASES BEFORE IT PRESCRIBE ANY NECESSARY INTERIM MEASURES.

13 AS A CONDITION FOR THE GRANT OF A MEASURE SUCH AS THAT REQUESTED, ARTICLE 83 (2) OF THE RULES OF PROCEDURE PROVIDES THAT AN APPLICATION FOR INTERIM MEASURES MUST STATE THE CIRCUMSTANCES GIVING RISE TO URGENCY AND THE FACTUAL AND LEGAL GROUNDS ESTABLISHING A PRIMA FACIE CASE FOR THE INTERIM MEASURES APPLIED FOR.

14 IN ORDER TO ESTABLISH A PRIMA FACIE CASE FOR THE INTERIM MEASURE IT SEEKS THE APPLICANT REFERS TO THE TWO SUBMISSIONS ON WHICH IT BASES ITS MAIN APPLICATION. ITS FIRST SUBMISSION IS THAT, HAVING REGARD TO ITS DETAILED TECHNICAL REQUIREMENTS, CLAUSE 4.29 OF THE SPECIFICATIONS FOR THE CONTRACT IS INCOMPATIBLE WITH ARTICLE 10 OF COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC .

15 ARTICLE 10 (1) OF DIRECTIVE 71/305 STATES THAT THE "TECHNICAL SPECIFICATIONS MAY BE DEFINED BY REFERENCE TO NATIONAL STANDARDS ". HOWEVER, ARTICLE 10 (2) LAYS DOWN CERTAIN CONDITIONS WITH WHICH SUCH TECHNICAL SPECIFICATIONS MUST COMPLY. IT PROVIDES : "UNLESS SUCH SPECIFICATIONS ARE JUSTIFIED BY THE SUBJECT OF THE CONTRACT, MEMBER STATES SHALL PROHIBIT THE INTRODUCTION INTO THE CONTRACTUAL CLAUSES RELATING TO A GIVEN CONTRACT OF TECHNICAL SPECIFICATIONS WHICH MENTION PRODUCTS OF A SPECIFIC MAKE OR SOURCE OR OF A PARTICULAR PROCESS AND WHICH THEREFORE FAVOUR OR ELIMINATE CERTAIN UNDERTAKINGS. IN PARTICULAR, THE INDICATION OF TRADE MARKS, PATENTS, TYPES OR OF A SPECIFIC ORIGIN OR PRODUCTION, SHALL BE PROHIBITED. HOWEVER, IF SUCH INDICATION IS ACCOMPANIED BY THE WORDS 'OR EQUIVALENT' , IT SHALL BE AUTHORIZED IN CASES WHERE THE AUTHORITIES AWARDING CONTRACTS ARE UNABLE TO GIVE A DESCRIPTION OF THE SUBJECT OF THE CONTRACT USING SPECIFICATIONS WHICH ARE SUFFICIENTLY PRECISE AND INTELLIGIBLE TO ALL PARTIES CONCERNED."

16 THE COMMISSION' S SECOND SUBMISSION IS THAT CLAUSE 4.29 INSERTED IN THE SPECIFICATIONS BY DUNDALK URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, A BODY SUBJECT TO THE AUTHORITY OF THE IRISH DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT, CREATES A BARRIER TO TRADE WHICH IS CONTRARY TO ARTICLE 30 OF THE EEC TREATY SINCE IT HAS THE EFFECT OF EXCLUDING THE USE OF PIPES MANUFACTURED IN OTHER MEMBER STATES WHICH WOULD PROVIDE GUARANTEES OF SAFETY, PERFORMANCE AND RELIABILITY EQUIVALENT TO THOSE OFFERED BY PIPES MANUFACTURED BY THE IRISH COMPANY, TEGRAL PIPES LTD, WHICH IS THE ONLY UNDERTAKING CERTIFIED TO IS 188 AS REQUIRED BY THAT CLAUSE. IRELAND HAS, MOREOVER, NOT PUT FORWARD ANY GROUND BASED ON ARTICLE 36 OF THE EEC TREATY OR ON THE "MANDATORY REQUIREMENTS" WITHIN THE MEANING OF THE COURT' S CASE-LAW TO JUSTIFY THAT INFRINGEMENT OF ARTICLE 30 OF THE EEC TREATY. THE EXISTENCE OF SUCH AN INFRINGEMENT IS ALSO CLEARLY BORNE OUT BY THE FACT THAT CONTRACTORS WHICH MIGHT HAVE CONSIDERED SUBMITTING A TENDER BASED ON THE USE OF IMPORTED PIPES WERE DETERRED FROM DOING SO AND A CONTRACTOR WHO DID IN FACT SUBMIT SUCH A

TENDER WAS HAMPERED BY THE FACT THAT HE WAS UNAWARE OF THE ADDITIONAL CONDITIONS WHICH MIGHT BE IMPOSED IF OTHER PIPES WERE TO BE USED .

17 IN THE WRITTEN OBSERVATIONS SUBMITTED BY IT IN THESE PROCEEDINGS FOR INTERIM MEASURES, THE DEFENDANT ARGUES THAT ARTICLE 30 OF THE EEC TREATY IS NOT APPLICABLE SINCE THERE IS NO BARRIER TO TRADE OR, IN ANY EVENT, NO BARRIER TO TRADE AS A RESULT OF A COMMERCIAL PROVISION OR OTHER MEASURE ADOPTED BY IRELAND. IT REFERS TO THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT OF 22 MARCH 1977 (IANNELLI & VOLPI SPA V MERONI ((1977)) ECR 577) IN PARAGRAPH 9 OF WHICH THE COURT STATED THAT THE FIELD OF APPLICATION OF ARTICLE 30 OF THE EEC TREATY "DOES NOT INCLUDE OBSTACLES TO TRADE COVERED BY OTHER PROVISIONS OF THE TREATY ". IT POINTS OUT THAT, IN ANY EVENT, ANY BARRIER TO TRADE IN THIS FIELD WOULD BE COVERED BY OTHER PROVISIONS OF COMMUNITY LAW, NAMELY COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC ADOPTED PURSUANT TO ARTICLE 57 (2) AND ARTICLES 66 AND 100 OF THE EEC TREATY, AND IS THUS EXCLUDED FROM THE SCOPE OF ARTICLE 30 OF THE TREATY. THE PROPER COURSE FOR THE COMMISSION TO TAKE IN ORDER TO PUT AN END TO THE BARRIERS TO TRADE RESULTING FROM DISPARITY BETWEEN NATIONAL STANDARDS IS TO PROPOSE MEASURES OF HARMONIZATION UNDER ARTICLE 100 OF THE EEC TREATY RATHER THAN TO APPLY ARTICLE 30 .

18 IT DOES NOT APPEAR THAT THE FIRST SUBMISSION RELIED ON BY THE COMMISSION CAN ESTABLISH A PRIMA FACIE CASE FOR THE INTERIM MEASURES APPLIED FOR . IT IS CLEAR FROM THE SIXTH RECITAL IN THE PREAMBLE TO DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC READ IN CONJUNCTION WITH ARTICLE 5 (3), WHICH PROVIDES THAT :

> "THE PROVISIONS OF THIS DIRECTIVE SHALL NOT APPLY TO PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS AWARDED BY THE PRODUCTION, DISTRIBUTION, TRANSMISSION OR TRANSPORTATION SERVICES FOR WATER AND ENERGY",

THAT THE PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACT NO 4 OF THE DUNDALK WATER SUPPLY AUGMENTATION SCHEME DOES NOT FALL WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THAT DIRECTIVE AND IS NOT SUBJECT TO THE REQUIREMENTS LAID DOWN THEREIN.

19 AS REGARDS THE COMMISSION' S SECOND SUBMISSION, IT SHOULD BE POINTED OUT THAT ONCE IT IS FOUND THAT PRIMA FACIE DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC DID NOT APPLY TO THE PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACT IN QUESTION, IRELAND' S ARGUMENTS AGAINST THE APPLICABILITY OF ARTICLE 30 OF THE EEC TREATY WHICH IT BASES ON THE JUDGMENT IN IANNELLI & VOLPI SPA V MERONI BECOME WHOLLY IRRELEVANT. FURTHERMORE, AS THE COMMISSION HAS RIGHTLY POINTED OUT, SECONDARY COMMUNITY LEGISLATION SUCH AS A DIRECTIVE CANNOT DEROGATE FROM A DIRECTLY APPLICABLE PROVISION OF THE EEC TREATY SUCH AS ARTICLE 30.

20 THE NEXT STEP IS TO EXAMINE WHETHER CLAUSE 4.29 OF THE SPECIFICATIONS MAY AMOUNT TO A BARRIER TO TRADE AND WHETHER SUCH A BARRIER IS IMPUTABLE TO A MEASURE ADOPTED BY IRELAND.

21 ALTHOUGH IT WOULD SEEM NORMAL THAT IN A PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACT SUCH AS THAT AT ISSUE THE MATERIALS TO BE USED MAY BE REQUIRED TO COMPLY WITH A CERTAIN TECHNICAL STANDARD, EVEN A NATIONAL STANDARD, IN ORDER TO ENSURE THAT THEY ARE APPROPRIATE AND SAFE, SUCH A TECHNICAL STANDARD CANNOT, WITHOUT CREATING PRIMA FACIE A BARRIER TO TRADE WHICH IS CONTRARY TO ARTICLE 30 OF THE EEC TREATY, HAVE THE EFFECT OF EXCLUDING, WITHOUT SO MUCH AS AN EXAMINATION, ANY TENDER BASED ON ANOTHER TECHNICAL STANDARD RECOGNIZED

IN ANOTHER MEMBER STATE AS PROVIDING EQUIVALENT GUARANTEES OF SAFETY, PERFORMANCE AND RELIABILITY

22 IN THIS CASE IT SHOULD BE OBSERVED THAT THE AUTOMATIC EFFECT OF CLAUSE 4.29 OF THE SPECIFICATIONS, BY ITSELF AND WITHOUT ANY OTHER JUSTIFICATION, IS TO EXCLUDE ANY TENDER BASED ON THE USE OF ANY TYPES OF PIPES OTHER THAN THOSE CERTIFIED TO COMPLY WITH IS 188, THAT IS TO SAY THOSE MANUFACTURED BY THE ONLY UNDERTAKING CERTIFIED TO THAT STANDARD, TEGRAL PIPES LTD, IRELAND, ALTHOUGH THERE ARE A NUMBER OF FEATURES IN THE DOCUMENTS BEFORE THE COURT THAT SUGGEST THAT THE POSSIBILITY CANNOT NECESSARY BE RULED OUT THAT EQUIVALENT TECHNICAL STANDARDS EXIST IN OTHER MEMBER STATES.

23 SINCE THAT CLAUSE WAS INSERTED IN THE SPECIFICATIONS BY DUNDALK URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, A BODY SUBJECT TO THE AUTHORITY OF THE MINISTER FOR THE ENVIRONMENT AND FOR WHOSE ACTS IRELAND IS RESPONSIBLE, THE BARRIER TO INTRA-COMMUNITY TRADE TO WHICH IT PRIMA FACIE GIVES RISE IS IMPUTABLE TO IRELAND.

24 IN THE LIGHT OF THE FOREGOING IT MUST BE CONSIDERED THAT THE COMMISSION HAS INDEED RAISED A MATERIAL ARGUMENT WHICH ESTABLISHES A PRIMA FACIE CASE FOR THE INTERIM MEASURE APPLIED FOR.

25 ALTHOUGH IT MAY BE CONSIDERED THAT IN THIS CASE THE COMMISSION HAS INDICATED FACTUAL AND LEGAL GROUNDS ESTABLISHING A PRIMA FACIE CASE FOR THE INTERIM MEASURE APPLIED FOR, THE COURT STILL HAS TO ASSESS THE CIRCUMSTANCES GIVING RISE TO URGENCY.

26 THE COURT HAS CONSISTENTLY HELD THAT THE URGENCY REQUIRED BY ARTICLE 83 (2) OF THE RULES OF PROCEDURE IN REGARD TO AN APPLICATION FOR INTERIM MEASURES MUST BE ASSESSED ON THE BASIS OF THE NEED TO ADOPT SUCH MEASURES IN ORDER TO AVOID SERIOUS AND IRREPARABLE DAMAGE TO THE PARTY SEEKING THOSE MEASURES.

27 THE COMMISSION SUBMITS THAT IF THE CONTRACT IN QUESTION WERE AWARDED IN A MANNER CONTRARY TO COMMUNITY LAW, IRREPARABLE HARM WOULD BE CAUSED NOT ONLY TO THE INTERESTS OF THE COMMUNITY BUT ALSO TO THOSE OF CONTRACTORS WHOSE TENDERS WERE NOT CONSIDERED AS A RESULT OF CLAUSE 4.29 AND THEIR SUPPLIERS. THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT WILL CREATE A SITUATION WHEREBY THE INFRINGEMENT BECOMES PROGRESSIVELY IRREVERSIBLE AS COMMITMENTS ARE ENTERED INTO BY THE CONTRACTOR, ORDERS ARE PLACED AND PHYSICAL WORK COMMENCES ON THE EXECUTION OF THE CONTRACT. THE URGENCY FOR THE INTERIM MEASURES APPLIED FOR IS SUFFICIENTLY HIGHLIGHTED BY THE MERE FACT THAT IRELAND' S UNDERTAKING NOT TO AWARD THE CONTRACT IN QUESTION EXPIRED ON 20 FEBRUARY 1987.

28 THE COMMISSION ALSO STATES THAT A DELAY IN THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT WILL NOT INVOLVE SERIOUS INCONVENIENCE FOR THE IRISH AUTHORITIES SINCE OTHER PHASES OF THE DUNDALK WATER SUPPLY AUGMENTATION SCHEME ARE STILL AT THE DESIGN STAGE. A DELAY IN THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT IN QUESTION WILL THEREFORE SCARCELY DELAY THE ACHIEVEMENT OF THE ULTIMATE OBJECTIVE OF INCREASING THE WATER SUPPLY IN THE DUNDALK AREA.

29 IRELAND CONTENDS THAT THE COMMISSION HAS NOT RAISED ANY SERIOUS ARGUMENTS SHOWING THAT THE DAMAGE TO WHICH THE SITUATION WOULD ALLEGEDLY GIVE RISE

WOULD BE SERIOUS AND IRREPARABLE. THE COMMISSION HAS MERELY INFERRED AS MUCH FROM THE TRITE OBSERVATION THAT THE PIPELINE CAN ONLY BE CONSTRUCTED ONCE AND REFERENCE TO ALL THE CONSEQUENCES THAT ENTAILS. IT HAS NOT STATED WHO WILL SUFFER DAMAGE AND HOW OR THE NATURE AND EXTENT OF THE DAMAGE. BESIDES, TENDERERS WRONGFULLY EXCLUDED FROM CONSIDERATION FOR THE CONTRACT CAN ALWAYS CLAIM DAMAGES.

30 IRELAND EMPHASIZES THAT CONTRARY TO WHAT THE COMMISSION ASSERTS, THE INTERIM MEASURE APPLIED FOR WOULD HAVE THE EFFECT OF DELAYING COMPLETION OF THE SCHEME ITSELF WHICH WOULD HAVE VERY SERIOUS IMPLICATIONS FOR THE PEOPLE OF DUNDALK AND THE SURROUNDING REGION.

31 IRELAND CITES THE FOLLOWING EXAMPLES OF THE REPERCUSSIONS FOR THE PEOPLE OF DUNDALK IF THE INTERIM MEASURE APPLIED FOR IS GRANTED :

THE OVERALL PROJECT, WHOSE OBJECTIVE IS TO PROVIDE WATER TO THE TOWN OF DUNDALK BY 1990, HAS BEEN SUBDIVIDED INTO EIGHT CONTRACTS. THE COMPLETION OF THREE OF THOSE CONTRACTS IS DEPENDENT ON THE COMMENCEMENT OF WORK ON THE CONTRACT AT ISSUE, CONTRACT NO 4. THE WORK UNDER CONTRACT NO 4 MUST BE STARTED BY JUNE AT THE LATEST IF THE PROJECT IS TO BE COMPLETED BY 1990.

FROM A PUBLIC INQUIRY HELD IN 1982 IT EMERGED THAT THE 30*000 INHABITANTS OF DUNDALK HAVE FOR MANY YEARS BEEN FACED BY ACUTE WATER SHORTAGES WHICH HAVE FREQUENTLY NECESSITATED WATER RATIONING. EVIDENCE WAS ALSO GIVEN AT THE INQUIRY THAT THE WATER SHORTAGE CONSTITUTES A SERIOUS FIRE HAZARD AND EVEN A HEALTH HAZARD. IT IS ALSO A SERIOUS DISINCENTIVE TO ATTRACTING INDUSTRY TO THE REGION.

32 ALTHOUGH AT FIRST SIGHT THE PROBLEM SEEMS TO BE A MATTER OF SOME URGENCY, PARTICULARLY SINCE THE DAMAGE TO THE COMMISSION, AS GUARDIAN OF THE INTERESTS OF THE COMMUNITY, WILL ARISE AS SOON AS THE CONTRACT AT ISSUE IS AWARDED, IT MAY BE NECESSARY IN PROCEEDINGS FOR INTERIM MEASURES UNDER ARTICLES 185 AND 186 OF THE EEC TREATY TO WEIGH AGAINST EACH OTHER ALL THE INTERESTS AT STAKE.

33 IN THIS CASE THE OBJECTIVE OF THE PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACT IN QUESTION, NAMELY TO SECURE WATER SUPPLIES FOR THE INHABITANTS OF THE DUNDALK AREA BY 1990 AT THE LATEST, AND THE AGGRAVATION OF THE EXISTING HEALTH AND SAFETY HAZARDS FOR THEM IF THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT AT ISSUE IS DELAYED TILT THE BALANCE OF INTERESTS IN FAVOUR OF THE DEFENDANT. IT SHOULD BE STRESSED THAT A QUITE DIFFERENT ASSESSMENT MIGHT BE ARRIVED AT IN THE CASE OF OTHER PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS SERVING DIFFERENT PURPOSES WHERE A DELAY IN THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT WOULD NOT EXPOSE A POPULATION TO SUCH HEALTH AND SAFETY HAZARDS .

APPLICATION FOR INTERIM MEASURES - INTERIM MEASURES - POWERS OF THE PRESIDENT UNDER ARTICLE 84 (2) OF THE RULES OF PROCEDURE

IN CASE 45/87 R,

COMMISSION OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES, REPRESENTED BY ITS AGENT, ERIC L . WHITE, MEMBER OF ITS LEGAL SERVICE, WITH AN ADDRESS FOR SERVICE IN LUXEMBOURG AT THE OFFICE OF G. KREMLIS, JEAN MONNET BUILDING, KIRCHBERG, APPLICANT,

V

IRELAND, REPRESENTED BY J. L. DOCKERY, CHIEF STATE SOLICITOR, WITH AN ADDRESS FOR SERVICE IN LUXEMBOURG AT THE IRISH EMBASSY, 28, ROUTE D' ARLON,

DEFENDANT,

APPLICATION FOR INTERIM MEASURES TO PREVENT THE AWARD OF A CONTRACT RELATING TO THE DUNDALK WATER SUPPLY UNTIL THE FINAL JUDGMENT IN THE MAIN ACTION IN THE PRESENT CASE,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF JUSTICE

OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

MAKES THE FOLLOWING

1 DUNDALK URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL IS THE PROMOTER OF A PROJECT KNOWN AS THE DUNDALK WATER SUPPLY AUGMENTATION SCHEME. CONTRACT NO*4 OF THIS SCHEME CONCERNS THE CONSTRUCTION OF A WATER MAIN TO TRANSPORT WATER FROM THE RIVER FANE SOURCE TO A TREATMENT PLANT AT CAVAN HILL AND THENCE INTO THE EXISTING TOWN SUPPLY SYSTEM. THE INVITATION TO TENDER FOR THIS CONTRACT BY OPEN PROCEDURE WAS PUBLISHED IN SUPPLEMENT 50 OF THE OFFICIAL JOURNAL OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES OF 13 MARCH 1986, P . 13. AT POINT 13 OF THE PUBLISHED NOTICE IT WAS STATED THAT

> "THE CONTRACT WILL BE AWARDED, SUBJECT TO THE DUNDALK URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL BEING SATISFIED AS TO THE ABILITY OF THE CONTRACTOR TO CARRY OUT THE WORK, TO THE CONTRACTOR WHO SUBMITS A TENDER, IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE TENDER DOCUMENTS, WHICH IS ADJUDGED TO BE THE MOST ECONOMICALLY ADVANTAGEOUS TO THE COUNCIL IN RESPECT OF PRICE, PERIOD OF COMPLETION, TECHNICAL MERIT AND RUNNING COSTS.

THE LOWEST OR ANY TENDER NEED NOT NECESSARILY BE ACCEPTED."

2 THE COMMISSION RECEIVED COMPLAINTS THAT ONE OF THE TENDERS SUBMITTED WAS BEING UNFAIRLY EXCLUDED FROM CONSIDERATION. ONE OF THE COMPLAINANTS

IS AN IRISH CONTRACTOR TENDERING FOR THE CONTRACT, P. J . WALLS (CIVIL) LTD (" WALLS "), AND THE OTHER IS THE SPANISH COMPANY OFFERING TO SUPPLY ASBESTOS CEMENT PIPES FOR THE CONTRACT, URALITA SA (" URALITA ").

3 WALLS SUBMITTED THREE OFFERS IN RESPONSE TO THE TENDER INVITATION, ONE OF WHICH BASED ON THE USE OF PIPES SUPPLIED BY "URALITA" OF SPAIN, WAS THE LOWEST TENDER OFFERED. THE CONSULTING ENGINEERS TO THE PROJECT HAVE, HOWEVER, STATED THAT THIS TENDER IS NOT IN ACCORDANCE WITH CLAUSE 4.29 OF THE SPECIFICATION TO THE CONTRACT WHICH PROVIDES THAT :

> "ASBESTOS CEMENT PRESSURE PIPES SHALL BE CERTIFIED AS COMPLYING WITH IRISH STANDARD SPECIFICATION 188-1975 IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE IRISH STANDARD MARK LICENSING SCHEME OF THE INSTITUTE FOR INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH AND STANDARDS. ALL ASBESTOS CEMENT WATERMAINS ARE TO HAVE A BITUMINOUS COATING INTERNALLY AND EXTERNALLY. SUCH COATINGS SHALL BE APPLIED AT THE FACTORY BY DIPPING ".

ONLY PIPES MADE BY TEGRAL PIPES LTD OF DROGHEDA, IRELAND, ARE CURRENTLY CERTIFIED TO THIS STANDARD.

4 FOLLOWING VARIOUS DISCUSSIONS, THE COMMISSION INSTITUTED PROCEEDINGS UNDER ARTICLE 169 OF THE EEC TREATY ON 20 OCTOBER 1986, SETTING OUT ITS VIEW THAT THIS CLAUSE OF THE SPECIFICATION CONSTITUTED A BREACH OF ARTICLES 30 TO 36 OF THE EEC TREATY AND OF ARTICLE 10 OF COUNCIL DIRECTIVE OF 71/305/EEC OF 26 JULY 1971 COORDINATING PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS (OFFICIAL JOURNAL L*185 OF 25 AUGUST 1971, P. 5 (ENGLISH SPECIAL EDITION P. 682)*). THE IRISH GOVERNMENT REPLIED ON 14 NOVEMBER 1986. THE COMMISSION WAS NOT SATISFIED WITH THIS REPLY AND ADDRESSED A REASONED OPINION TO THE IRISH GOVERNMENT ON 13 JANUARY 1987. THE IRISH GOVERNMENT REPLIED ON 3 FEBRUARY 1987. THE IRISH GOVERNMENT AGREED TO UNDERTAKE NOT TO AWARD THE CONTRACT UNTIL 20 FEBRUARY 1987.

5 BY AN APPLICATION LODGED AT THE COURT REGISTRY ON 13*FEBRUARY 1987, THE COMMISSION APPLIED FOR A DECLARATION THAT BY THE INCLUSION OF CLAUSE 4.29 IN THE CONTRACT AND BY THE REFUSAL TO ACCEPT THE USE OF ASBESTOS CEMENT PIPES MANUFACTURED TO AN EQUIVALENT STANDARD, IRELAND HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER ARTICLE 30 OF THE EEC TREATY AND ARTICLE 10 OF COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC.

6 BY AN APPLICATION LODGED AT THE COURT REGISTRY ON 13*FEBRUARY 1987, THE APPLICANT REQUESTED THE COURT, PURSUANT TO ARTICLE 186 OF THE EEC TREATY AND ARTICLE OF THE RULES OF PROCEDURE, TO ORDER IRELAND TO TAKE SUCH MEASURES AS MAY BE NECESSARY TO PREVENT, UNTIL SUCH TIME AS THE COURT HAS GIVEN FINAL JUDGMENT IN THIS CASE OR A SETTLEMENT HAS BEEN REACHED BETWEEN THE COMMISSION AND IRELAND, THE AWARD OF A CONTRACT FOR THE WORKS TO WHICH THIS CASE RELATES, OR IF SUCH A CONTRACT SHOULD ALREADY HAVE BEEN AWARDED, TO ORDER IRELAND TO TAKE SUCH MEASURES AS MAY BE NECESSARY TO CANCEL SUCH A CONTRACT.

7 ACCORDING TO ARTICLE 84 (2) OF THE RULES OF PROCEDURE, THE PRESIDENT MAY GRANT AN APPLICATION FOR INTERIM MEASURES EVEN BEFORE THE OBSERVATIONS OF THE OPPOSITE PARTY HAVE BEEN SUBMITTED. THAT DECISION MAY BE VARIED OR CANCELLED EVEN WITHOUT ANY APPLICATION BEING MADE BY ANY PARTY.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

8 IT APPEARS NECESSARY TO MAKE USE OF THIS POWER IN THE PRESENT CASE SO AS TO ENSURE THAT THE APPLICATION FOR INTERIM MEASURES IS NOT PREJUDICED BY THE EXISTENCE OF A FAIT ACCOMPLI. IF THE CONTRACT IN QUESTION WERE AWARDED BEFORE THE APPLICATION FOR INTERIM MEASURES IS DECIDED, DIFFICULT QUESTIONS MIGHT ARISE AS TO THE POSSIBILITY OF SUBSEQUENTLY CANCELLING IT. MOREOVER, THE COMMISSION STATES THAT OTHER PHASES OF THE SCHEME (FOR EXAMPLE, THE PUMPING STATION) ARE STILL AT THE DESIGN STAGE AND THAT A DELAY IN THE AWARD IS THEREFORE UNLIKELY TO DELAY THE ULTIMATE OBJECTIVE OF INCREASING WATER SUPPLY IN THE DUNDALK AREA. THE INTERESTS OF JUSTICE AND OF THE PARTIES INVOLVED CAN THEREFORE BEST BE MAINTAINED BY AN ORDER MAINTAINING THE STATUS QUO UNTIL THERE HAS BEEN THE POSSIBILITY OF HEARING THE PARTIES AND DECIDING THE APPLICATION FOR INTERIM MEASURES WITH ALL DUE DELIBERATION.

On those grounds,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT,

by way of an interim decision, hereby orders as follows :

(1) Ireland shall take such measures as may be necessary to prevent, until such time as the application by the Commission for interim measures has been disposed of or until further order, the award by Dundalk Urban District Council of Contract No*4 of the Dundalk Water Supply Augmentation Scheme.

(2) The costs are reserved.

Done at Luxembourg on 16 February 1987.

Judgment of the Court (Fourth Chamber)
of 20 September 1988
Gebroeders Beentjes BV v State of the Netherlands.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Arrondissementsrechtbank 's-Gravenhage - Netherlands.
Procedure for the award of public works contracts.

1 . Approximation of laws - Procedure for the award of public works contracts - Directive 71/305 - Scope - Contracts awarded by a body which falls within the notion of the State although it is not formally part of the State administration - Included

(Council Directive 71/305, Art. 1)

2 . Approximation of laws - Procedure for the award of public works contracts - Directive 71/305 - Technical ability and knowledge of tenderers - Criteria for checking - Award of contracts - Most economically advantageous tender - Condition concerning employment of long-term unemployed persons - Permissibility - Conditions - Publicity requirements - Direct effect of Articles 20, 26 and 29 of the directive

(Council Directive 71/305, Arts 20, 26 and 29)

3 . Measures adopted by the institutions - Directives - Implementation by the Member States - Need to ensure effectiveness of directives - Obligation of national courts

(EEC Treaty, Art. 5 and Art. 189, third paragraph)

4 . Measures adopted by the institutions - Directives - Direct effect

(EEC Treaty, Art. 189, third paragraph)

1 . A body whose composition and functions are laid down by legislation and which depends on the authorities for the appointment of its members, the observance of the obligations arising out of its measures and the financing of the public works contracts which it is its task to award must be regarded as falling within the notion of the State for the purpose of Article 1 of Directive 71/305, so that that directive applies to public works contracts awarded by that body.

2 . With regard to the award of a public works contract falling within the scope of Directive 71/305,

(i)the criterion of specific experience for the work to be carried out is a legitimate criterion of technical ability and knowledge for the purpose of ascertaining the suitability of contractors pursuant to Articles 20 and 26 of the directive. Where such a criterion is laid down by a provision of national legislation to which the contract notice refers, it is not subject to the specific requirements laid down in the directive concerning publication in the contract notice or the contract documents;

(ii)the criterion of "the most acceptable tender", as laid down by a provision of national legislation, may be compatible with the directive if it reflects the discretion which the authorities awarding contracts have in order to determine the most economically advantageous tender on the basis of objective criteria and thus does not involve an element of arbitrary choice. It follows from Article 29 (1) and (2) of the directive that where the authorities awarding contracts do not take the lowest price as the sole criterion for the award of a contract but have regard to various criteria with a view to awarding the contract to the most economically advantageous tender, they are required to state those criteria in the contract notice or the contract documents;

(iii)the condition relating to the employment of long-term unemployed persons is compatible with the directive if it has no direct or indirect discriminatory effect on tenderers from other Member States of the Community. An additional specific condition of this kind must be mentioned in the contract notice.

Articles 20, 26 and 29 of the directive may be relied on by an individual before the national courts.

3 . The Member States' obligation arising from a directive to achieve the result envisaged by the directive and their duty under Article 5 of the Treaty to take all appropriate measures, whether general or particular, to ensure fulfilment of that obligation are binding on all the authorities of the Member States, including, for matters within their jurisdiction, the courts. It follows that in applying national law, in particular the provisions of a national law specifically introduced in order to implement a directive, national courts are required to interpret their national law in the light of the wording and the purpose of the directive in order to achieve the result referred to in the third paragraph of Article 189 of the Treaty

4 . Where the provisions of a directive appear, as far as their subject-matter is concerned, to be unconditional and sufficiently precise, those provisions may be relied on by individuals against the State where that State fails to implement the directive in national law within the prescribed period or where it fails to implement the directive correctly.

are concerned, a step in the action before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber),

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Arrondissementsrechtbank, The Hague, by a judgment of 28 January 1987, hereby rules :

(1) Directive 71/305 applies to public works contracts awarded by a body such as the local land consolidation committee.

(2) The criterion of specific experience for the work to be carried out is a legitimate criterion of technical ability and knowledge for the purpose of ascertaining the suitability of contractors. Where such a criterion is laid down by a provision of national legislation to which the contract notice refers, it is not subject to the specific requirements laid down in the directive concerning publication in the contract notice or the contract documents.

The criterion of "the most acceptable tender", as laid down by a provision of national legislation, may be compatible with the directive if it reflects the discretion which the authorities awarding contracts have in order to determine the most economically advantageous tender on the basis of objective criteria and thus does not involve an element of arbitrary choice. It follows from Article 29 (1) and (2) of the directive that where the authorities awarding contracts do not take the lowest price as the sole criterion for the award of a contract but have regard to various criteria with a view to awarding the contract to the most economically advantageous tender, they are required to state those criteria in the contract notice or the contract documents.

The condition relating to the employment of long-term unemployed persons is compatible with the directive if it has no direct or indirect discriminatory effect on tenderers from other Member States of the Community. An additional specific condition of this kind must be mentioned in the contract notice.

(3) The provisions of Articles 20, 26 and 29 of Directive 71/305 may be relied on by an individual before the national courts.

1 By a judgment of 28 January 1987, which was received at the Court on 3 February 1987, the Arrondissementsrechtbank, The Hague, referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EEC Treaty a number of questions on the interpretation of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (Official Journal, English Special Edition 1971 (II) p. 682).

2 These questions arose in proceedings between Gebroeders Beentjes BV and the Netherlands Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries in connection with a public invitation to tender for a public works contract in connection with a land consolidation operation.

3 In the main proceedings, Beentjes, the plaintiff, claimed that the decision of the awarding authority rejecting its tender, although it was the lowest, in favour of the next-lowest bidder had been taken in breach of the provisions of the abovementioned directive.

4 It was in these circumstances that the Arrondissementsrechtbank stayed the proceedings and asked the Court for a preliminary ruling on the following questions :

"(1) Is a body with the characteristics of a 'local committee' , as provided for in the Ruilverkavelingswet 1954 and described in paragraph 5.3 of ((the national court' s)) judgment to be regarded as 'the State' or a 'regional or local authority' for the purposes of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971?

(2) Does Directive 71/305/EEC allow a tenderer to be excluded from a tendering procedure on the basis of considerations such as those mentioned in paragraph 6.2 of ((the national court' s)) judgment if in the invitation itself no qualitative criteria are laid down in this regard (but reference is simply made to general conditions containing a general reservation such as that relied upon by the State in this case)?

(3) May parties such as Beentjes in a civil action such as this rely on the provisions of Directive 71/305/EEC indicating the cases in which and the conditions under which a tenderer may be excluded from the tendering procedure on qualitative grounds, even if in the incorporation of those provisions of the directive in national legislation the contracting authority is given wider powers to refuse to award a contract than are permitted under the directive?"

5 As regards the second question, it should be stated that the considerations referred to in the national court' s judgment concern the reasons for which Beentjes' tender was rejected by the awarding authority, which considered that Beentjes lacked sufficient specific experience for the work in question, that its tender appeared to be less acceptable and that it did not seem to be in a position to employ long-term unemployed persons. It is apparent from the documents before the Court that the first two criteria cited above were provided for in Article 21 of the Uniform Rules on Invitations to Tender of 21 December 1971 (Uniform Aanbestedingsreglement, hereinafter referred to as "the Uniform Rules "), to which the contested invitation to tender referred, while the condition regarding the employment of long-term unemployed persons was expressly set out in the invitation to tender.

6 Reference is made to the Report for the Hearing for a more detailed account of the facts of the main proceedings, the relevant provisions of Community and national law, the written observations submitted to the Court and the course of the proceedings, which are mentioned or discussed hereinafter only in so far as is necessary for the reasoning of the Court.

7 By its first question, the national court seeks in substance to establish whether Directive 71/305/EEC applies to the award of public works contracts by a body such as the local land consolidation committee .

8 It appears from the documents before the Court that the local land consolidation committee is a body with no legal personality of its own whose functions and composition are governed by legislation and that its members are appointed by the Provincial Executive of the province concerned . It is bound to apply rules laid down by a central committee established by royal decree, whose members are appointed by the Crown . The State ensures observance of the obligations arising out of measures of the committee and finances the public works contracts awarded by the local committee in question.

9 The objective of Directive 71/305/EEC is to coordinate national procedures for the award of public works contracts concluded in Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities or other legal persons governed by public law.

10 Pursuant to Article 1 (b) of the Directive, the State, regional or local authorities and the legal persons governed by public law specified in Annex I are to be regarded as "authorities awarding contracts ".

11 For the purposes of this provision, the term "the State" must be interpreted in functional terms. The aim of the directive, which is to ensure the effective attainment of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts, would be jeopardized if the provisions of the directive were to be held to be inapplicable solely because a public works contract is awarded by a body which, although it was set up to carry out tasks entrusted to it by legislation, is not formally a part of the State administration.

12 Consequently, a body such as that in question here, whose composition and functions are laid down by legislation and which depends on the authorities for the appointment of its members, the observance of the obligations arising out of its measures and the financing of the public works contracts which it is its task to award, must be regarded as falling within the notion of the State for the purpose of the abovementioned provision, even though it is not part of the State administration in formal terms.

13 In reply to the first question put by the national court, it should therefore be stated that Directive 71/305/EEC applies to public works contracts awarded by a body such as the local land consolidation committee .

The second question

14 The second question put by the national court seeks, in the first place, to establish whether Directive 71/305/EEC precludes the rejection of a tender on the following grounds :

(i)lack of specific experience relating to the work to be carried out;

(ii)the tender does not appear to be the most acceptable in the view of the awarding authority;

(iii) inability of the contractor to employ long-term unemployed persons .

Secondly, it seeks to determine what prior notice is required by the directive as regards the use of such criteria, should they be regarded as compatible with the directive.

15 According to the structure of the directive, in particular Title IV (Common rules on participation), the examination of the suitability of contractors to carry out the contracts to be awarded and the awarding of the contract are two different operations in the procedure for the award of a public works contract. Article 20 of the directive provides that the contract is to be awarded after the contractor' s suitability has been checked.

16 Even though the directive, which is intended to achieve the coordination of national procedures for the award of public works contracts while taking into account, as far as possible, the procedures and administrative practices in force in each Member State (second recital in the preamble), does not rule out the possibility that examination of the tenderer' s suitability and the award of the contract may take place simultaneously, the two procedures are governed by different rules.

17 Article 20 provides that the suitability of contractors is to be checked by the authorities awarding contracts in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing and of technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 25 to 28. The purpose of these articles is not to delimit the power of the Member States to fix the level of financial and economic standing and technical knowledge required in order to take part in procedures for the award of public works contracts but to determine the references or evidence which may be furnished in order to establish the contractor' s financial and economic standing and technical knowledge or ability (see judgment of 9 July 1987 in Joined Cases 27 to 29/86 CEI and Bellini ((1987)) ECR 3347). Nevertheless, it is clear from these provisions that the authorities awarding contracts can check the suitability of the contractors only on the basis of criteria relating to their economic and financial standing and their technical knowledge and ability.

18 As far as the criteria for the award of contracts is concerned, Article 29 (1) provides that the authorities awarding contracts must base their decision either on the lowest price only or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, on various criteria according to the contract : e.g. price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit.

19 Although the second alternative leaves it open to the authorities awarding contracts to choose the criteria on which they propose to base their award of the contract, their choice is limited to criteria aimed at identifying the offer which is economically the most advantageous. Indeed, it is only by way of exception that Article 29 (4) provides that an award may be based on criteria of a different nature "within the framework of rules whose aim is to give preference to certain tenderers by way of aid, on condition that the rules invoked are in conformity with the Treaty, in particular Articles 92 et seq ."

20 Furthermore, the directive does not lay down a uniform and exhaustive body of Community rules; within the framework of the common rules which it contains, the Member States remain free to maintain or adopt substantive and procedural rules in regard to public works contracts on condition that they comply with all the relevant provisions of Community law, in particular the prohibitions flowing from the principles laid down in the Treaty in regard to the right of establishment and the freedom to provide services (judgment of 9 July 1987, cited above).

21 Finally, in order to meet the directive' s aim of ensuring development of effective competition in the award of public works contracts, the criteria and conditions which govern each contract must be given sufficient publicity by the authorities awarding contracts.

22 To this end, Title III of the directive sets out rules for Community-wide advertising of contracts drawn up by awarding authorities in the Member States so as to give contractors in the Community adequate information on the work to be done and the conditions attached thereto, and thus enable them to determine whether the proposed contracts are of interest. At the same time additional information concerning contracts must, as is customary in the Member States, be given in the contract documents for each contract or else in an equivalent document (see ninth and tenth recital in the preamble to the directive).

23 The different aspects of the question put by the national court must be examined in the light of the foregoing.

24 In this case specific experience relating to the work to be carried out was a criterion for determining the technical knowledge and ability of the tenderers. It is therefore a legitimate criterion for checking contractors' suitability under Articles 20 and 26 of the directive .

25 The exclusion of a tenderer because its tender appears less acceptable to the authorities awarding the contract was provided for, as appears from the documents before the Court, in Article 21 of the Uniform Rules. Under Article 21 (3), "the contract shall be awarded to the tenderer whose tender appears the most acceptable to the awarding authority ".

26 The compatibility of such a provision with the directive depends on its interpretation under national law. It would be incompatible with Article 29 of the directive if its effect was to confer on the authorities awarding contracts unrestricted freedom of choice as regards the awarding of the contract in question to a tenderer.

27 On the other hand, such a provision is not incompatible with the directive if it is to be interpreted as giving the authorities awarding contracts discretion to compare the different tenders and to accept the most advantageous on the basis of objective criteria such as those listed by way of example in Article 29 (2) of the directive

28 As regards the exclusion of a tenderer on the ground that it is not in a position to employ long-term unemployed persons, it should be noted in the first place that such a condition has no relation to the checking of contractors' suitability on the basis of their economic and financial standing and their technical knowledge and ability or to the criteria for the award of contracts referred to in Article 29 of the directive.

29 It follows from the judgment of 9 July 1987, cited above, that in order to be compatible with the directive such a condition must comply with all the relevant provisions of Community law, in particular the prohibitions flowing from the principles laid down in the Treaty in regard to the right of establishment and the freedom to provide services .

30 The obligation to employ long-term unemployed persons could inter alia infringe the prohibition of discrimination on grounds of nationality laid down in the second paragraph of Article 7 of the Treaty if it became apparent that such a condition could be satisfied only by tenderers from the State concerned or indeed that tenderers from other Member States would have difficulty in complying with it. It is for the national court to determine, in the light of all the circumstances of the case, whether the imposition of such a condition is directly or indirectly discriminatory.

31 Even if the criteria considered above are not in themselves incompatible with the directive, they must be applied in conformity with all the procedural rules laid down in the directive, in particular the rules on advertising. It is therefore necessary to interpret those provisions in order to determine what requirements must be met by the various criteria referred to by the national court

32 It appears from the documents before the Court that in this case the criterion of specific experience relating to the work to be carried out and that of the most acceptable tender were not mentioned in the contract documents or in the contract notice; these criteria are derived from Article 21 of the Uniform Rules, to which the notice made a general reference. On the other hand, the requirement regarding the employment of long-term unemployed persons was the subject of special provisions in the contract documents and was expressly mentioned in the notice published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

33 As regards the criterion of specific experience relating to the work to be carried out, it should be stated that although the last sentence of Article 26 of the directive requires the authorities awarding contracts to specify in the contract notice which of the references concerning the technical knowledge and ability of the contractor are to be produced, it does not require them to list in the notice the criteria on which they propose to base their assessment of the contractors' suitability.

34 Nevertheless, in order for the notice to fulfil its role of enabling contractors in the Community to determine whether a contract is of interest to them, it must contain at least some mention of the specific conditions which a contractor must meet in order to be considered suitable to tender for the contract in question. However, such a mention cannot be required where, as in this case, the condition is not a specific condition of suitability but a criterion which is inseparable from the very notion of suitability.

35 As regards the criterion of "the most acceptable offer", it should be noted that even if such a criterion were compatible with the directive in the circumstances set out above, it is clear from the wording of Article 29 (1) and (2) of the directive that where the authorities awarding the contract do not take the lowest price as the sole criterion for awarding the contract but have regard to various criteria with a view to awarding the contract to the most economically advantageous tender, they are required to state these criteria in the contract notice or the contract documents. Consequently, a general reference to a provision of national legislation cannot satisfy the publicity requirement.

36 A condition such as the employment of long-term unemployed persons is an additional specific condition and must therefore be mentioned in the notice, so that contractors may become aware of its existence .

37 In reply to the second question put by the national court it should therefore be stated that :

(i) the criterion of specific experience for the work to be carried out is a legitimate criterion

of technical ability and knowledge for the purpose of ascertaining the suitability of contractors. Where such a criterion is laid down by a provision of national legislation to which the contract notice refers, it is not subject to the specific requirements laid down in the directive concerning publication in the contract notice or the contract documents;

(ii) the criterion of "the most acceptable tender", as laid down by a provision of national legislation, may be compatible with the directive if it reflects the discretion which the authorities awarding contracts have in order to determine the most economically advantageous tender on the basis of objective criteria and thus does not involve an element of arbitrary choice. It follows from Article 29 (1) and (2) of the directive that where the authorities awarding contracts do not take the lowest price as the sole criterion for the award of a contract but have regard to various criteria with a view to awarding the contract to the most economically advantageous tender, they are required to state those criteria in the contract notice or the contract documents;

(iii) the condition relating to the employment of long-term unemployed persons is compatible with the directive if it has no direct or indirect discriminatory effect on tenderers from other Member States of the Community. An additional specific condition of this kind must be mentioned in the contract notice.

The third question

38 The third question seeks in substance to establish whether Articles 20, 26 and 29 of Directive 71/305 may be relied upon by individuals before the national courts.

39 As the Court held in its judgment of 10 April 1984 in Case 14/83 Von Colson and Kamann v Land Nordrhein-Westfalen ((1984)) ECR 1891, the Member States' obligation arising from a directive to achieve the result envisaged by the directive and their duty under Article 5 of the Treaty to take all appropriate measures, whether general or particular, to ensure fulfilment of that obligation are binding on all the authorities of the Member States, including, for matters within their jurisdiction, the courts. It follows that in applying national law, in particular the provisions of a national law specifically introduced in order to implement a directive, national courts are required to interpret their national law in the light of the wording and the purpose of the directive in order to achieve the result referred to in the third paragraph of Article 189 of the Treaty.

40 Furthermore, the Court has consistently held (see most recently the judgment of 26 February 1986 in Case 152/84 Marshall v Southampton and South-West Hampshire Health Authority ((1986)) ECR 723) that where the provisions of a directive appear, as far as their subject-matter is concerned, to be unconditional and sufficiently precise, those provisions may be relied on by individuals against the State where that State fails to implement the directive in national law within the prescribed period or where it fails to implement the directive correctly.

41 It is therefore necessary to consider whether the provisions of Directive 71/305 in question are, as far as their subject-matter is concerned, unconditional and sufficiently precise to be relied on by an individual against the State.

42 As the Court held in its judgment of 10 February 1982 in Case 76/81 Transporoute v Minister for Public Works ((1982)) ECR 417, in relation to Article 29, the directive' s rules regarding participation and advertising are intended to protect tenderers against arbitrariness on the part of the authority awarding contracts.

43 To this end, as has been stated in relation to the reply to the second question, the rules in question provide inter alia that in checking the suitability of contractors the awarding authorities must apply criteria of economic and financial standing and technical knowledge and ability, and that the contract is to be awarded either solely on the basis of the lowest price or on the basis of several criteria relating to the tender. They also set out the requirements regarding publication of the criteria adopted by the awarding authorities and the references to be produced. Since no specific implementing measure is necessary for compliance with these requirements, the resulting obligations for the Member States are therefore unconditional and sufficiently precise.

44 In reply to the third question it should therefore be stated that the provisions of Articles 20, 26 and 29 of Directive 71/305 may be relied on by an individual before the national courts.

JUDGMENT

1 BY THREE JUDGMENTS OF 15 JANUARY 1986, WHICH WERE RECEIVED AT THE COURT ON 3 FEBRUARY 1986, THE CONSEIL D' ETAT OF BELGIUM REFERRED TO THE COURT FOR A PRELIMINARY RULING UNDER ARTICLE 177 OF THE EEC TREATY SEVERAL QUESTIONS ON THE INTERPRETATION OF COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC OF 26 JULY 1971 CONCERNING THE COORDINATION OF PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS (OFFICIAL JOURNAL, ENGLISH SPECIAL EDITION 1971 (II), P. 682).

2 THOSE QUESTIONS AROSE IN THE CONTEXT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR THE ANNULMENT OF DECISIONS AWARDING VARIOUS PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS.

3 THE PLAINTIFF IN THE MAIN PROCEEDINGS IN CASE 27/86 (CEI) WAS EXCLUDED IN FAVOUR OF AN UNDERTAKING WHICH HAD SUBMITTED A HIGHER TENDER ON THE GROUND THAT THE TOTAL VALUE OF THE WORKS, BOTH PUBLIC AND PRIVATE, WHICH CEI HAD IN HAND AT THE TIME OF THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT EXCEEDED THE LIMIT LAID DOWN BY THE APPLICABLE BELGIAN RULES

4 THE TENDERS SUBMITTED BY THE PLAINTIFF IN THE MAIN PROCEEDINGS IN CASES 28 AND 29/86 (BELLINI) WERE ALSO EXCLUDED IN FAVOUR OF UNDERTAKINGS WHICH HAD SUBMITTED HIGHER TENDERS ON THE GROUND THAT BELLINI DID NOT SATISFY THE CRITERIA LAID DOWN BY THE BELGIAN LEGISLATION FOR RECOGNITION IN THE CLASSES REQUIRED BY THE CONTRACT DOCUMENTS NOTWITHSTANDING THE FACT THAT IT HAD SUBMITTED A CERTIFICATE OF RECOGNITION ISSUED IN ITALY IN A CLASS WHICH ENTITLED IT TO BID IN ITALY FOR CONTRACTS OF A VALUE CORRESPONDING TO THAT OF THE BELGIAN CONTRACTS IN QUESTION.

5 IN THE THREE MAIN PROCEEDINGS, THE PLAINTIFFS ALLEGE IN SUPPORT OF THEIR APPLICATIONS FOR ANNULMENT OF THE DECISIONS AWARDING THE CONTRACTS, INTER ALIA, THAT THOSE DECISIONS WERE CONTRARY TO THE PROVISIONS OF DIRECTIVE 71/305.

A - IN CASE 27/86

> "(1) ARE THE REFERENCES ENABLING A CONTRACTOR' S FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC STANDING TO BE DETERMINED EXHAUSTIVELY ENUMERATED IN ARTICLE 25 OF DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC?

(2) IF NOT, CAN THE VALUE OF THE WORKS WHICH MAY BE CARRIED OUT AT ONE TIME BE REGARDED AS A REFERENCE ENABLING A CONTRACTOR' S FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC STANDING TO BE DETERMINED WITHIN THE MEANING OF ARTICLE 25 OF THE DIRECTIVE?"

B - IN CASES 28 AND 29/86

"DOES DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC OF 26 JULY 1971 CONCERNING THE COORDINATION OF PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS, AND IN PARTICULAR ARTICLE 25 AND ARTICLE 26 (D) THEREOF, PERMIT A BELGIAN AWARDING AUTHORITY TO REJECT A TENDER SUBMITTED BY AN ITALIAN CONTRACTOR ON THE GROUNDS THAT THE UNDERTAKING HAS NOT SHOWN THAT IT POSSESSES THE MINIMUM AMOUNT OF OWN FUNDS REQUIRED BY BELGIAN LEGISLATION AND THAT IT DOES NOT HAVE IN ITS EMPLOY ON AVERAGE THE MINIMUM NUMBER OF WORKERS AND MANAGERIAL STAFF REQUIRED BY THAT LEGISLATION, WHEN THE CONTRACTOR IS RECOGNIZED IN ITALY IN A CLASS EQUIVALENT TO THAT REQUIRED IN BELGIUM BY VIRTUE OF THE VALUE OF THE CONTRACT TO BE AWARDED?"

7 REFERENCE IS MADE TO THE REPORT FOR THE HEARING FOR A FULLER ACCOUNT OF THE BACKGROUND TO THE MAIN PROCEEDINGS, THE COMMUNITY AND NATIONAL LEGISLATION AT ISSUE, THE WRITTEN OBSERVATIONS SUBMITTED TO THE COURT AND THE CONDUCT OF THE PROCEDURE, WHICH ARE MENTIONED OR DISCUSSED HEREINAFTER ONLY IN SO FAR AS IS NECESSARY FOR THE REASONING OF THE COURT.

THE QUESTION CONCERNING THE EXHAUSTIVE NATURE OF THE LIST OF REFERENCES IN ARTICLE 25 OF THE DIRECTIVE

8 THE FIRST PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 25 OF THE DIRECTIVE PROVIDES THAT PROOF OF THE CONTRACTOR' S ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL STANDING MAY, AS A GENERAL RULE, BE FURNISHED BY ONE OR MORE OF THE REFERENCES MENTIONED THEREIN . UNDER THE SECOND PARAGRAPH, THE AUTHORITIES AWARDING CONTRACTS ARE REQUIRED TO SPECIFY IN THE NOTICE OR IN THE INVITATION TO TENDER WHICH REFERENCES THEY HAVE CHOSEN FROM AMONG THOSE MENTIONED IN THE PREVIOUS PARAGRAPH "AND WHAT REFERENCES OTHER THAN THOSE MENTIONED UNDER (A), (B) OR (C) ARE TO BE PRODUCED ".

9 IT CAN BE SEEN FROM THE VERY WORDING OF THAT ARTICLE AND, IN PARTICULAR, THE SECOND PARAGRAPH THEREOF, THAT THE LIST OF REFERENCES MENTIONED THEREIN IS NOT EXHAUSTIVE.

10 THE REPLY TO THE NATIONAL COURT MUST THEREFORE BE THAT THE REFERENCES ENABLING A CONTRACTOR' S FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC STANDING TO BE DETERMINED ARE NOT EXHAUSTIVELY ENUMERATED IN ARTICLE 25 OF DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC.

THE QUESTION CONCERNING THE VALUE OF THE WORKS WHICH MAY BE CARRIED OUT AT ONE TIME

11 WITH REGARD TO THE NATIONAL COURT' S SECOND QUESTION IN CASE 27/86, IT SHOULD BE NOTED THAT THE TOTAL VALUE OF THE WORKS AWARDED TO A CONTRACTOR AT A PARTICULAR MOMENT MAY BE A USEFUL FACTOR IN DETERMINING, IN A SPECIFIC INSTANCE, THE FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC STANDING OF A CONTRACTOR IN RELATION TO HIS OBLIGATIONS. SINCE THE REFERENCES ARE NOT EXHAUSTIVELY ENUMERATED IN ARTICLE 25 OF THE DIRECTIVE, THERE IS THEREFORE NO REASON WHY SUCH INFORMATION SHOULD NOT BE REQUIRED OF TENDERERS BY WAY OF A REFERENCE WITHIN THE MEANING

OF THAT ARTICLE.

12 HOWEVER, IN THE LIGHT OF THE GROUNDS OF THE ORDER FOR REFERENCE, THE CONTENT OF THE BELGIAN LEGISLATION MENTIONED THEREIN AND THE ARGUMENTS BEFORE THIS COURT, THE NATIONAL COURT' S QUESTION MUST BE UNDERSTOOD AS ALSO SEEKING TO ASCERTAIN WHETHER A NATIONAL RULE FIXING THE MAXIMUM VALUE OF WORKS WHICH MAY BE CARRIED OUT AT ONE TIME IS COMPATIBLE WITH THE DIRECTIVE.

13 IN THAT REGARD, IT SHOULD BE NOTED THAT THE FIXING OF SUCH A LIMIT IS NEITHER AUTHORIZED NOR PROHIBITED BY ARTICLE 25 OF THE DIRECTIVE, BECAUSE THE PURPOSE OF THAT PROVISION IS NOT TO DELIMIT THE POWER OF THE MEMBER STATES TO FIX THE LEVEL OF FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC STANDING REQUIRED IN ORDER TO TAKE PART IN PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS BUT TO DETERMINE THE REFERENCES OR EVIDENCE WHICH MAY BE FURNISHED IN ORDER TO ESTABLISH THE CONTRACTOR' S FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC STANDING.

14 IN ORDER TO RULE ON THE COMPATIBILITY OF SUCH A LIMIT WITH THE DIRECTIVE AS A WHOLE, THE PURPOSE AND OBJECT OF THE DIRECTIVE MUST BE BORNE IN MIND. THE PURPOSE OF DIRECTIVE 71/305 IS TO ENSURE THAT THE REALIZATION WITHIN THE COMMUNITY OF FREEDOM OF ESTABLISHMENT AND FREEDOM TO PROVIDE SERVICES IN REGARD TO PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS INVOLVES, IN ADDITION TO THE ELIMINATION OF RESTRICTIONS, THE COORDINATION OF NATIONAL PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS . SUCH COORDINATION "SHOULD TAKE INTO ACCOUNT AS FAR AS POSSIBLE THE PROCEDURES AND ADMINISTRATIVE PRACTICES IN FORCE IN EACH MEMBER STATE" (SECOND RECITAL IN THE PREAMBLE TO THE DIRECTIVE). ARTICLE 2 EXPRESSLY PROVIDES THAT THE AUTHORITIES AWARDING CONTRACTS ARE TO APPLY THEIR NATIONAL PROCEDURES ADAPTED TO THE PROVISIONS OF THE DIRECTIVE.

15 THE DIRECTIVE THEREFORE DOES NOT LAY DOWN A UNIFORM AND EXHAUSTIVE BODY OF COMMUNITY RULES. WITHIN THE FRAMEWORK OF THE COMMON RULES WHICH IT CONTAINS, THE MEMBER STATES REMAIN FREE TO MAINTAIN OR ADOPT SUBSTANTIVE AND PROCEDURAL RULES IN REGARD TO PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS ON CONDITION THAT THEY COMPLY WITH ALL THE RELEVANT PROVISIONS OF COMMUNITY LAW AND, IN PARTICULAR, THE PROHIBITIONS FLOWING FROM THE PRINCIPLES LAID DOWN IN THE TREATY IN REGARD TO THE RIGHT OF ESTABLISHMENT AND THE FREEDOM TO PROVIDE SERVICES.

16 THE FIXING IN A MEMBER STATE OF A MAXIMUM VALUE FOR WORKS WHICH MAY BE CARRIED OUT AT ONE TIME IS NOT CONTRARY TO THE SAID PRINCIPLES AND THERE IS NOTHING TO SUGGEST THAT IT HAS THE EFFECT OF RESTRICTING ACCESS BY CONTRACTORS IN THE COMMUNITY TO PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS.

17 IN THOSE CIRCUMSTANCES, IT MUST BE HELD THAT AS COMMUNITY LAW NOW STANDS, THERE IS NO REASON WHY THE MEMBER STATES, IN THE CONTEXT OF THEIR POWERS IN REGARD TO PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS, SHOULD NOT FIX A MAXIMUM VALUE FOR WORKS WHICH MAY BE CARRIED OUT AT ONE TIME.

18 THE REPLY TO THE NATIONAL COURT SHOULD THEREFORE BE THAT A STATEMENT OF THE TOTAL VALUE OF THE WORKS AWARDED TO A CONTRACTOR MAY BE REQUIRED FROM TENDERERS AS A REFERENCE WITHIN THE MEANING OF ARTICLE 25 OF DIRECTIVE 71/305 AND THAT NEITHER THAT ARTICLE NOR ANY OTHER PROVISION OF THE DIRECTIVE

PRECLUDES A MEMBER STATE FROM FIXING THE VALUE OF THE WORKS WHICH MAY BE CARRIED OUT AT ONE TIME.

THE QUESTION CONCERNING THE EFFECTS OF BEING INCLUDED IN AN OFFICIAL LIST OF RECOGNIZED CONTRACTORS IN ONE MEMBER STATE VIS-A-VIS THE AUTHORITIES AWARDING CONTRACTS IN OTHER MEMBER STATES

19 IN ORDER TO REPLY TO THIS QUESTION, IT IS NECESSARY TO MAKE CLEAR THE FUNCTION OF A CONTRACTOR' S INCLUSION IN AN OFFICIAL LIST OF RECOGNIZED CONTRACTORS IN A MEMBER STATE IN THE OVERALL SCHEME OF THE DIRECTIVE .

20 UNDER ARTICLE 28 (1), MEMBER STATES WHICH HAVE OFFICIAL LISTS OF RECOGNIZED CONTRACTORS MUST ADAPT THEM TO THE PROVISIONS OF ARTICLE 23 (A) TO (D) AND (G) AND OF ARTICLES 24 TO 26.

21 THE SAID PROVISIONS OF ARTICLE 23 DEFINE THE CIRCUMSTANCES RELATING TO THE INSOLVENCY OR DISHONESTY OF A CONTRACTOR JUSTIFYING HIS EXCLUSION FROM PARTICIPATION IN A CONTRACT. THE PROVISIONS OF ARTICLES 25 AND 26 CONCERN THE REFERENCES WHICH MAY BE FURNISHED AS PROOF OF THE CONTRACTOR' S FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC STANDING, ON THE ONE HAND, AND TECHNICAL KNOWLEDGE OR ABILITY ON THE OTHER.

22 THE HARMONIZATION OF OFFICIAL LISTS OF RECOGNIZED CONTRACTORS PROVIDED FOR IN ARTICLE 28 (1) IS THEREFORE OF LIMITED SCOPE. IT CONCERNS IN PARTICULAR REFERENCES ATTESTING TO THE FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC STANDING OF CONTRACTORS AND THEIR TECHNICAL KNOWLEDGE AND ABILITY . ON THE OTHER HAND, THE CRITERIA FOR THEIR CLASSIFICATION ARE NOT HARMONIZED.

23 ARTICLE 28 (2) PROVIDES THAT CONTRACTORS REGISTERED IN SUCH LISTS MAY, FOR EACH CONTRACT, SUBMIT TO THE AUTHORITY AWARDING CONTRACTS A CERTIFICATE OF REGISTRATION ISSUED BY THE COMPETENT AUTHORITY . THAT CERTIFICATE IS TO STATE THE REFERENCES WHICH ENABLED THEM TO BE REGISTERED IN THE LIST AND THE CLASSIFICATION GIVEN IN THAT LIST .

24 ARTICLE 28 (3) ENTITLES CONTRACTORS REGISTERED IN AN OFFICIAL LIST IN ANY MEMBER STATE WHATEVER TO USE SUCH REGISTRATION, WITHIN THE LIMITS LAID DOWN IN THAT PROVISION, AS AN ALTERNATIVE MEANS OF PROVING BEFORE THE AUTHORITY OF ANOTHER MEMBER STATE AWARDING CONTRACTS THAT THEY SATISFY THE QUALITATIVE CRITERIA LISTED IN ARTICLES 23 TO 26 OF THE DIRECTIVE (JUDGMENT OF 10 FEBRUARY 1982 IN CASE 76/81 TRANSPOROUTE V MINISTER FOR PUBLIC WORKS ((1982)) ECR 417).

25 IN REGARD, IN PARTICULAR, TO EVIDENCE OF CONTRACTORS' ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL STANDING AND TECHNICAL KNOWLEDGE OR ABILITY, REGISTRATION IN AN OFFICIAL LIST OF RECOGNIZED CONTRACTORS MAY THEREFORE REPLACE THE REFERENCES REFERRED TO IN ARTICLES 25 AND 26 IN SO FAR AS SUCH REGISTRATION IS BASED UPON EQUIVALENT INFORMATION.

26 INFORMATION DEDUCED FROM REGISTRATION IN AN OFFICIAL LIST MAY NOT BE QUESTIONED BY THE AUTHORITIES AWARDING CONTRACTS. NONE THE LESS, THOSE AUTHORITIES MAY DETERMINE THE LEVEL OF FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC STANDING AND TECHNICAL KNOWLEDGE AND ABILITY REQUIRED IN ORDER TO PARTICIPATE IN A GIVEN CONTRACT.

27 CONSEQUENTLY, THE AUTHORITIES AWARDING CONTRACTS ARE REQUIRED TO ACCEPT

THAT A CONTRACTOR' S ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL STANDING AND TECHNICAL KNOWLEDGE AND ABILITY ARE SUFFICIENT FOR WORKS CORRESPONDING TO HIS CLASSIFICATION ONLY IN SO FAR AS THAT CLASSIFICATION IS BASED ON EQUIVALENT CRITERIA IN REGARD TO THE CAPACITIES REQUIRED. IF THAT IS NOT THE CASE, HOWEVER, THEY ARE ENTITLED TO REJECT A TENDER SUBMITTED BY A CONTRACTOR WHO DOES NOT FULFIL THE REQUIRED CONDITIONS

28 THE REPLY TO THE NATIONAL COURT SHOULD THEREFORE BE THAT ARTICLE 25, ARTICLE 26 (D) AND ARTICLE 28 OF THE DIRECTIVE MUST BE INTERPRETED AS NOT PRECLUDING AN AWARDING AUTHORITY FROM REQUIRING A CONTRACTOR RECOGNIZED IN ANOTHER MEMBER STATE TO FURNISH PROOF THAT HIS UNDERTAKING HAS THE MINIMUM OWN FUNDS, MANPOWER AND MANAGERIAL STAFF REQUIRED BY NATIONAL LAW EVEN WHEN THE CONTRACTOR IS RECOGNIZED IN THE MEMBER STATE IN WHICH HE IS ESTABLISHED IN A CLASS EQUIVALENT TO THAT REQUIRED BY THE NATIONAL LAW BY VIRTUE OF THE VALUE OF THE CONTRACT TO BE AWARDED.

COSTS

29 THE COSTS INCURRED BY THE COMMISSION OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES, THE KINGDOM OF SPAIN AND THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC, WHICH HAVE SUBMITTED OBSERVATIONS TO THE COURT, ARE NOT RECOVERABLE. SINCE THESE PROCEEDINGS ARE, IN SO FAR AS THE PARTIES TO THE MAIN PROCEEDINGS ARE CONCERNED, IN THE NATURE OF A STEP IN THE ACTION PENDING BEFORE THE NATIONAL COURT, THE DECISION ON COSTS IS A MATTER FOR THAT COURT.

ON THOSE GROUNDS,

THE COURT (SIXTH CHAMBER),

IN ANSWER TO THE QUESTIONS REFERRED TO IT BY THE CONSEIL D' ETAT OF BELGIUM BY JUDGMENTS OF 15 JANUARY 1986, HEREBY RULES :

(1) THE REFERENCES ENABLING A CONTRACTOR' S FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC STANDING TO BE DETERMINED ARE NOT EXHAUSTIVELY ENUMERATED IN ARTICLE 25 OF COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC OF 26 JULY 1971 CONCERNING THE COORDINATION OF PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS.

(2) A STATEMENT OF THE TOTAL VALUE OF THE WORKS AWARDED TO A CONTRACTOR MAY BE REQUIRED FROM TENDERERS AS A REFERENCE WITHIN THE MEANING OF ARTICLE 25 OF DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC AND NEITHER THAT ARTICLE NOR ANY OTHER PROVISION OF THE DIRECTIVE PRECLUDES A MEMBER STATE FROM FIXING THE VALUE OF THE WORKS WHICH MAY BE CARRIED OUT AT ONE TIME.

(3) ARTICLE 25, ARTICLE 26 (D) AND ARTICLE 28 OF DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC MUST BE INTERPRETED AS NOT PRECLUDING AN AWARDING AUTHORITY FROM REQUIRING A CONTRACTOR RECOGNIZED IN ANOTHER MEMBER STATE TO FURNISH PROOF THAT HIS UNDERTAKING HAS THE MINIMUM OWN FUNDS, MANPOWER AND MANAGERIAL STAFF REQUIRED BY NATIONAL LAW EVEN WHEN THE CONTRACTOR IS RECOGNIZED IN THE MEMBER STATE IN WHICH HE IS ESTABLISHED IN A CLASS EQUIVALENT TO THAT REQUIRED BY THE NATIONAL LAW BY VIRTUE OF THE VALUE OF THE CONTRACT TO BE AWARDED.

Judgment of the Court of 16 May 1991 Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic. Failure of a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Measure having equivalent effect - Aid for the purchase of motor vehicles of domestic manufacture. Case C-263/85.

1. Free movement of goods - Quantitative restrictions - Measure having equivalent effect - Reservation of part of a public contract to undertakings established in a given region of the national territory - Not permissible - Measure favouring only part of national production - No impact

(EEC Treaty, Art. 30)

2. Free movement of goods - Quantitative restrictions - Measure having equivalent effect - Measure capable of being classified as aid within the meaning of Article 92 of the Treaty - Possibility not excluding the applicability of the prohibition of measures having equivalent effect

(EEC Treaty, Arts 30 and 92)

1. Article 30 of the Treaty precludes national legislation which reserves to undertakings established in particular regions of the national territory a proportion of public supply contracts.

2. Since only national producers, albeit not all of them, may benefit from the advantage granted, it is of little consequence that such a preferential system also has a restrictive effect as regards national producers (see judgment in Case C-21/88 Du Pont de Nemours Italiana [1990] ECR-I 889).

3. As the Court has already held (judgments in Case 103/84 Commission v Italy [1986] ECR 1759 and in Case C-21/88 Du Pont de Nemours Italiana, supra), the fact that a national measure may be classified as aid within the meaning of Article 92 of the Treaty is not a sufficient reason for exempting it from prohibition under Article 30.

In Case C-263/85,

APPROXIMATION OF LAWS - PROCEDURE FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS - DEROGATIONS FROM THE COMMON RULES - STRICT INTERPRETATION - EXISTENCE OF EXCEPTIONAL CIRCUMSTANCES - BURDEN OF PROOF

(COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305, ART. 9 (B) AND (D)*)

ARTICLE 9 OF DIRECTIVE 71/305 CONCERNING THE COORDINATION OF PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS ALLOWS DEROGATIONS FROM THE COMMON RULES IN A NUMBER OF CASES WHICH INCLUDE THOSE SET OUT IN PARAGRAPHS (B) AND (D). THOSE DEROGATIONS FROM THE RULES INTENDED TO ENSURE THE EFFECTIVENESS OF THE RIGHTS CONFERRED BY THE TREATY IN THE FIELD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS MUST BE INTERPRETED STRICTLY AND THE BURDEN OF PROVING THE ACTUAL EXISTENCE OF EXCEPTIONAL CIRCUMSTANCES JUSTIFYING A DEROGATION LIES ON THE PERSON SEEKING TO RELY ON THOSE CIRCUMSTANCES.

HAVING REGARD TO THE REPORT FOR THE HEARING AND FURTHER TO THE HEARING ON 6 NOVEMBER 1986,

AFTER HEARING THE OPINION OF THE ADVOCATE GENERAL DELIVERED AT THE SITTING ON 13 JANUARY 1987,

1 BY AN APPLICATION LODGED AT THE COURT REGISTRY ON 28 JUNE 1985 THE COMMISSION OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES BROUGHT AN ACTION UNDER ARTICLE 169 OF THE EEC TREATY FOR A DECLARATION THAT THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC, MORE PARTICULARLY THE MUNICIPALITY OF MILAN, AS A LOCAL PUBLIC AUTHORITY, BY DECIDING TO AWARD BY PRIVATE CONTRACT A CONTRACT FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF A PLANT FOR THE RECYCLING OF SOLID URBAN WASTE AND THUS FAILING TO PUBLISH A NOTICE THEREOF IN THE OFFICIAL JOURNAL OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES, HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305 OF 26 JULY 1971 CONCERNING THE COORDINATION OF PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS (OFFICIAL JOURNAL, ENGLISH SPECIAL EDITION 1971 (II), P.*682).

2 REFERENCE IS MADE TO THE REPORT FOR THE HEARING FOR THE FACTS AND THE SUBMISSIONS AND ARGUMENTS OF THE PARTIES, WHICH ARE MENTIONED OR DISCUSSED HEREINAFTER ONLY IN SO FAR AS IS NECESSARY FOR THE REASONING OF THE COURT.

I - ADMISSIBILITY

3 THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC HAS RAISED AN OBJECTION OF INADMISSIBILITY. IT MAINTAINS THAT IT FULLY COMPLIED WITH THE REASONED OPINION DELIVERED BY THE COMMISSION AND THAT, CONSEQUENTLY, AN ACTION BEFORE THE COURT OF JUSTICE UNDER ARTICLE 169 OF THE EEC TREATY IS NO LONGER ADMISSIBLE .

4 IN ITS REASONED OPINION DELIVERED IN THE PRE-LITIGATION PROCEDURE THE COMMISSION REQUESTED THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC "TO ADOPT THE MEASURES NECESSARY TO COMPLY WITH THIS REASONED OPINION WITHIN 30 DAYS OF NOTIFICATION HEREOF" AND IN THE FINAL PARAGRAPH THEREOF STATED THAT "BY NECESSARY MEASURES IS MEANT ABOVE ALL A WRITTEN UNDERTAKING BY THE MUNICIPALITY OF MILAN THAT IT WILL COMPLY WITH ALL THE PROVISIONS OF DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC IN FUTURE ".

5 IN RESPONSE TO THE REASONED OPINION, THE ITALIAN AUTHORITIES SENT TO THE COMMISSION A COPY OF A LETTER IN WHICH THE MINISTER FOR THE INTERIOR INSTRUCTED THE PREFECT OF MILAN TO ENJOIN THE MUNICIPALITY OF MILAN STRICTLY TO ENSURE THAT THE DIRECTIVE WAS COMPLIED WITH IN FULL IN FUTURE TOGETHER WITH THE FOLLOWING WRITTEN DECLARATION BY THE MAYOR OF MILAN DATED 19 APRIL 1984 :

> "... ALTHOUGH CONVINCED THAT THE MUNICIPAL ADMINISTRATION ACTED, AS ON EVERY OTHER OCCASION, IN A LAWFUL MANNER IN AUTHORIZING THE AWARD BY PRIVATE CONTRACT OF A CONTRACT FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE SAID PLANT FOR THE RECYCLING OF SOLID URBAN WASTE,
> I HEREBY DECLARE,
> AS REQUESTED IN THE AFOREMENTIONED OPINION, THAT THE MUNICIPALITY OF MILAN WILL ENSURE THAT, IN THE FUTURE, TOO, ITS ADMINISTRATIVE ACTION

IS IN CONFORMITY WITH THE PROVISIONS OF PRIMARY AND SECONDARY LEGISLATION, INCLUDING ALL THE PROVISIONS OF DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC, BY ACCORDING THEM FULL RESPECT, IN BOTH FORM AND SUBSTANCE ".

6 IT IS CLEAR FROM THE DOCUMENTS BEFORE THE COURT THAT SUBSEQUENTLY THERE WERE CONSIDERABLE DELAYS IN THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE PROPOSED PLANT, THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT FOR WHICH WAS OBJECTED TO BY THE COMMISSION IN ITS REASONED OPINION, AND THAT CONSIDERABLE CHANGES HAD TO BE MADE TO THE PROJECT. HOWEVER, NO STEPS WERE TAKEN WITH A VIEW TO PROCEEDING TO A FRESH INVITATION TO TENDER UNDER CONDITIONS COMPLYING WITH THE TERMS OF THE REASONED OPINION.

7 IT MUST BE POINTED OUT THAT THE PURPOSE OF THE PROCEDURE PROVIDED FOR IN ARTICLE 169 OF THE EEC TREATY IS, INTER ALIA, TO AVOID A SITUATION IN WHICH A MEMBER STATE' S CONDUCT IS PUT AT ISSUE BEFORE THE COURT WHEN, FOLLOWING THE COMMENCEMENT BY THE COMMISSION OF THE INFRINGEMENT PROCEDURE, THE STATE ADMITS THE BREACH OF OBLIGATIONS WITH WHICH IT IS CHARGED AND REMEDIES THAT BREACH WITHIN THE PERIOD FIXED BY THE COMMISSION.

8 IN THIS CASE, HOWEVER, THE DECLARATION ISSUED BY THE MAYOR OF MILAN DISPUTES THE VIEW EXPRESSED BY THE COMMISSION IN ITS REASONED OPINION AS TO THE EXISTENCE OF AN INFRINGEMENT AND NO PRACTICAL MEASURE ENTAILING ACCEPTANCE OF THAT POINT OF VIEW HAS BEEN ADOPTED BY THE ITALIAN AUTHORITIES.

II - SUBSTANCE

10 BY REFERENCE TO THE OBSERVATIONS SUBMITTED TO THE COMMISSION BY THE MUNICIPALITY OF MILAN DURING THE PRE-LITIGATION PROCEDURE, THE DEFENDANT JUSTIFIED THE AWARD BY PRIVATE CONTRACT OF THE CONTRACT IN QUESTION BY RELYING UPON ARTICLE 9 (B) AND (D) OF DIRECTIVE 71/305.

11 ACCORDING TO THE DEFENDANT, THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE TYPE OF PLANT ENVISAGED INVOLVED THE USE OF EXCLUSIVE RIGHTS HELD BY THE UNDERTAKINGS TO WHICH THE CONTRACT WAS AWARDED AND SECONDLY, AS THE RESULT OF CERTAIN EVENTS, IN PARTICULAR THE ACCIDENT AT SEVESO, THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE PLANT WAS A MATTER OF EXTREME URGENCY.

12 IT SHOULD BE OBSERVED THAT DIRECTIVE 71/305 IS INTENDED TO FACILITATE THE EFFECTIVE ATTAINMENT WITHIN THE COMMUNITY OF FREEDOM OF ESTABLISHMENT AND FREEDOM TO PROVIDE SERVICES IN RESPECT OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS. TO THAT END IT LAYS DOWN COMMON RULES, IN PARTICULAR REGARDING ADVERTISING AND PARTICIPATION, SO THAT PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS IN THE MEMBER STATES ARE OPEN TO ALL UNDERTAKINGS IN THE COMMUNITY .

13 ARTICLE 9 OF THE DIRECTIVE PERMITS AWARDING AUTHORITIES TO AWARD THEIR WORKS CONTRACTS WITHOUT APPLYING THE COMMON RULES, EXCEPT THOSE CONTAINED IN ARTICLE 10, IN A NUMBER OF SITUATIONS, INCLUDING (B) AND (D), DESCRIBED UNDER THE FOLLOWING :

"WHEN, FOR TECHNICAL OR ARTISTIC REASONS OR FOR REASONS CONNECTED WITH THE PROTECTION OF EXCLUSIVE RIGHTS, THE WORKS MAY ONLY BE CARRIED OUT BY A PARTICULAR CONTRACTOR"; (B)

AND

"IN SO FAR AS IS STRICTLY NECESSARY WHEN, FOR REASONS OF EXTREME URGENCY BROUGHT BY EVENTS UNFORESEEN BY THE AUTHORITIES AWARDING CONTRACTS, THE TIME-LIMIT LAID DOWN IN OTHER PROCEDURES CANNOT BE KEPT"; (D).

14 THOSE PROVISIONS, WHICH AUTHORIZE DEROGATIONS FROM THE RULES INTENDED TO ENSURE THE EFFECTIVENESS OF THE RIGHTS CONFERRED BY THE TREATY IN THE FIELD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS, MUST BE INTERPRETED STRICTLY AND THE BURDEN OF PROVING THE ACTUAL EXISTENCE OF EXCEPTIONAL CIRCUMSTANCES JUSTIFYING A DEROGATION LIES ON THE PERSON SEEKING TO RELY ON THOSE CIRCUMSTANCES.

15 IN THE PRESENT CASE, NO FACTS OF SUCH A NATURE AS TO SHOW THAT THE CONDITIONS JUSTIFYING THE DEROGATIONS PROVIDED FOR IN THE AFOREMENTIONED PROVISIONS WERE SATISFIED HAVE BEEN PUT FORWARD. CONSEQUENTLY, THE COMMISSION' S APPLICATION MUST BE GRANTED WITHOUT ANY NEED TO EXAMINE THE FACTS AT ISSUE MORE CLOSELY.

16 IT MUST THEREFORE BE DECLARED THAT SINCE THE MUNICIPALITY OF MILAN DECIDED TO AWARD BY PRIVATE CONTRACT A CONTACT FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF A PLANT FOR THE RECYCLING OF SOLID URBAN WASTE AND THUS DID NOT PUBLISH A CONTRACT NOTICE IN THE OFFICIAL JOURNAL OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES, THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305 OF 26 JULY 1971 CONCERNING THE COORDINATION OF PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS

17 ACCORDING TO ARTICLE 69 (2) OF THE RULES OF PROCEDURE, THE UNSUCCESSFUL PARTY IS TO BE ORDERED TO PAY THE COSTS. SINCE THE DEFENDANT HAS FAILED IN ITS SUBMISSIONS, IT MUST BE ORDERD TO PAY THE COSTS .

ON THOSE GROUNDS,

THE COURT

HEREBY :

(1) DECLARES THAT SINCE THE MUNICIPALITY OF MILAN DECIDED TO AWARD BY PRIVATE CONTRACT A CONTRACT FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF A PLANT FOR THE RECYCLING OF SOLID URBAN WASTE AND THUS DID NOT PUBLISH A CONTRACT NOTICE IN THE OFFICIAL JOURNAL OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES, THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC OF 26 JULY 1971 CONCERNING THE COORDINATION OF PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS;

(2) ORDERS THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC TO PAY THE COSTS.

Judgment of the Court
of 16 June 1987
Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic.
Transparency of financial relations between Member States and public undertakings.

COMPETITION - PUBLIC UNDERTAKINGS - TRANSPARENCY OF FINANCIAL RELATIONS BETWEEN MEMBER STATES AND PUBLIC UNDERTAKINGS - DISTINCTION BETWEEN THE ROLE OF THE STATE AS PUBLIC AUTHORITY AND AS A PRODUCER OR AS A PROVIDER OF SERVICES - BODY INTEGRATED INTO THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE STATE - DESIGNATION AS PUBLIC UNDERTAKING - LACK OF LEGAL PERSONALITY DISTINCT FROM THAT OF THE STATE - NO EFFECT

(COMMISSION DIRECTIVE 80/723, ART. 2)

THE DISTINCTION BETWEEN "PUBLIC AUTHORITIES" AND "PUBLIC UNDERTAKINGS" PROVIDED FOR IN ARTICLE 2 OF DIRECTIVE 80/723 ON THE TRANSPARENCY OF FINANCIAL RELATIONS BETWEEN MEMBER STATES AND PUBLIC UNDERTAKINGS FLOWS FROM THE RECOGNITION OF THE FACT THAT THE STATE MAY ACT EITHER BY EXERCISING PUBLIC POWERS OR BY CARRYING ON ECONOMIC ACTIVITIES OF AN INDUSTRIAL OR COMMERCIAL NATURE BY OFFERING GOODS AND SERVICES ON THE MARKET. IN ORDER TO MAKE SUCH A DISTINCTION, IT IS THEREFORE NECESSARY, IN EACH CASE, TO CONSIDER THE ACTIVITIES EXERCISED BY THE STATE AND TO DETERMINE THE CATEGORY TO WHICH THOSE ACTIVITIES BELONG.

THE STATE MAY CARRY OUT THE SAID ACTIVITIES THROUGH A SEPARATE BODY OVER WHICH IT MAY EXERCISE THE DOMINANT INFLUENCE REQUIRED BY ARTICLE 2 OF THE DIRECTIVE OR CARRY OUT THOSE ACTIVITIES DIRECTLY THROUGH A BODY FORMING PART OF THE STATE ADMINISTRATION. THE FACT THAT A BODY HAS OR HAS NOT, UNDER NATIONAL LAW, LEGAL PERSONALITY DISTINCT FROM THAT OF THE STATE IS IRRELEVANT IN DECIDING WHETHER IT MAY BE REGARDED AS A PUBLIC UNDERTAKING WITHIN THE MEANING OF DIRECTIVE 80/723, BECAUSE, ON THE ONE HAND, THE PURPOSE OF THAT DIRECTIVE WOULD BE CALLED IN QUESTION IF ITS APPLICATION DEPENDED ON WHETHER OR NOT STATE BODIES HAD LEGAL PERSONALITY DISTINCT FROM THAT OF THE STATE, AND, ON THE OTHER, THE ABSENCE OF LEGAL PERSONALITY DISTINCT FROM THAT OF THE STATE DOES NOT PREVENT THE EXISTENCE OF FINANCIAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THE STATE AND THOSE OF ITS BODIES WHICH CARRY OUT ECONOMIC ACTIVITIES

1 BY AN APPLICATION LODGED AT THE COURT REGISTRY ON 29 APRIL 1985, THE COMMISSION OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES BROUGHT AN ACTION BEFORE THE COURT UNDER ARTICLE 169 OF THE EEC TREATY FOR A DECLARATION THAT BY REFUSING TO SUPPLY INFORMATION TO IT CONCERNING THE AMMINISTRAZIONE AUTONOMA DEI MONOPOLI DI STATO, THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER ARTICLE 5 (2) OF COMMISSION DIRECTIVE 80/723 OF 25 JUNE 1980 ON THE TRANSPARENCY OF FINANCIAL RELATIONS BETWEEN MEMBER STATES AND PUBLIC UNDERTAKINGS (OFFICIAL JOURNAL L 195, P . 35).

2 REFERENCE IS MADE TO THE REPORT FOR THE HEARING FOR THE FACTS OF THE CASE, THE COURSE OF THE PROCEDURE AND THE ARGUMENTS OF THE PARTIES, WHICH ARE MENTIONED OR DISCUSSED HEREINAFTER ONLY IN SO FAR AS IS NECESSARY FOR THE REASONING OF THE COURT.

3 IT IS NOT CONTESTED THAT THE AMMINISTRAZIONE AUTONOMA DEI MONOPOLI DI STATO (HEREINAFTER REFERRED TO AS THE "AAMS ") EXERCISES AN ECONOMIC ACTIVITY INASMUCH AS IT OFFERS GOODS AND SERVICES ON THE MARKET IN THE MANUFACTURED TOBACCO SECTOR. FURTHERMORE, IT IS COMMON GROUND THAT THE AAMS DOES NOT HAVE LEGAL PERSONALITY SEPARATE FROM THAT OF THE STATE.

4 THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT DEFENDS ITS REFUSAL TO SUPPLY THE INFORMATION SOUGHT BY THE COMMISSION ON THE GROUND THAT THE AAMS MAY NOT BE REGARDED AS A "PUBLIC UNDERTAKING" WITHIN THE MEANING OF ARTICLE 2 OF DIRECTIVE 80/723, BUT MUST BE REGARDED AS ONE OF THE "PUBLIC AUTHORITIES" WITHIN THE MEANING OF THE SAME ARTICLE. IN THAT REGARD, IT CONTENDS THAT IF THE AAMS, AS A STATE BODY, IS A PUBLIC AUTHORITY, IT CANNOT BE AT THE SAME TIME A PUBLIC UNDERTAKING WITHIN THE MEANING OF THE DIRECTIVE.

5 ACCORDING TO ARTICLE 2 OF DIRECTIVE 80/723, "PUBLIC AUTHORITIES" MEANS "THE STATE AND REGIONAL OR LOCAL AUTHORITIES" AND "PUBLIC UNDERTAKING"

MEANS "ANY UNDERTAKING OVER WHICH THE PUBLIC AUTHORITIES MAY EXERCISE DIRECTLY OR INDIRECTLY A DOMINANT INFLUENCE BY VIRTUE OF THEIR OWNERSHIP OF IT, THEIR FINANCIAL PARTICIPATION THEREIN, OR THE RULES WHICH GOVERN IT ".

6 IT SHOULD BE NOTED, AS THE COURT STATED IN ITS JUDGMENT OF 6 JULY 1982 (JOINED CASES 188 TO 190/80 FRENCH REPUBLIC, ITALIAN REPUBLIC AND UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND V COMMISSION ((1982)) ECR 2545) THAT THE ESSENTIAL PURPOSE OF DIRECTIVE 80/723 IS TO PROMOTE THE EFFECTIVE APPLICATION TO PUBLIC UNDERTAKINGS OF THE PROVISIONS CONTAINED IN ARTICLES 92 AND 93 OF THE TREATY CONCERNING STATE AID . AS CAN BE SEEN FROM THE RECITALS IN THE PREAMBLE TO THE DIRECTIVE, THE COMPLEXITY OF THE RELATIONS BETWEEN NATIONAL PUBLIC AUTHORITIES AND PUBLIC UNDERTAKINGS TENDS TO HINDER THE PERFORMANCE BY THE COMMISSION OF ITS SUPERVISORY DUTIES WITH THE RESULT THAT A FAIR AND EFFECTIVE APPLICATION OF THE AID RULES IN THE EEC TREATY IS POSSIBLE ONLY IF THOSE FINANCIAL RELATIONS ARE MADE TRANSPARENT. IN PARTICULAR, THE SIXTH RECITAL IN THE PREAMBLE STATES THAT WITH REGARD TO PUBLIC UNDERTAKINGS, SUCH TRANSPARENCY SHOULD ENABLE A CLEAR DISTINCTION TO BE MADE BETWEEN THE ROLE OF THE STATE AS PUBLIC AUTHORITY AND ITS ROLE AS PROPRIETOR.

7 THE DISTINCTION PROVIDED FOR IN THE SIXTH RECITAL FLOWS FROM THE RECOGNITION OF THE FACT THAT THE STATE MAY ACT EITHER BY EXERCISING PUBLIC POWERS OR BY CARRYING ON ECONOMIC ACTIVITIES OF AN INDUSTRIAL OR COMMERCIAL NATURE BY OFFERING GOODS AND SERVICES ON THE MARKET. IN ORDER TO MAKE SUCH A DISTINCTION, IT IS THEREFORE NECESSARY, IN EACH CASE, TO CONSIDER THE ACTIVITIES EXERCISED BY THE STATE AND TO DETERMINE THE CATEGORY TO WHICH THOSE ACTIVITIES BELONG.

8 IT MUST BE OBSERVED THAT FOR THAT PURPOSE, IT IS OF NO IMPORTANCE THAT THE STATE CARRIES OUT THE SAID ECONOMIC ACTIVITIES BY WAY OF A DISTINCT BODY OVER WHICH IT MAY EXERCISE, DIRECTLY OR INDIRECTLY, A DOMINANT INFLUENCE ACCORDING TO THE CRITERIA LAID DOWN IN ARTICLE 2 OF THE DIRECTIVE OR THAT IT CARRIES OUT THE ACTIVITIES DIRECTLY THROUGH A BODY FORMING PART OF THE STATE ADMINISTRATION. IN THE LATTER CASE, THE FACT THAT THE BODY IS INTEGRATED INTO THE STATE ADMINISTRATION IMPLIES AUTOMATICALLY THE EXERCISE OF A DOMINANT INFLUENCE WITHIN THE MEANING OF THE SAID ARTICLE 2. IN SUCH CASES, THE FINANCIAL RELATIONS CAN BE EVEN MORE COMPLEX AND THE TRANSPARENCY WHICH THE DIRECTIVE SEEKS TO ACHIEVE THEREFORE BECOMES EVEN MORE NECESSARY. IN THIS CASE, THE FACT THAT THE AAMS IS INTEGRATED INTO THE STATE ADMINISTRATION DOES NOT THEREFORE PREVENT ITS BEING REGARDED AS A PUBLIC UNDERTAKING WITHIN THE MEANING OF DIRECTIVE 80/723.

9 THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT ALSO CONTENDS THAT IN ORDER FOR THE PUBLIC AUTHORITIES TO EXERCISE AN INFLUENCE ON A PUBLIC UNDERTAKING, THEY MUST BE LEGALLY DISTINCT FROM THE LATTER. IN ITS OPINION, A PUBLIC UNDERTAKING MUST THEREFORE NECESSARILY HAVE A LEGAL PERSONALITY DISTINCT FROM THAT OF THE STATE.

10 THAT ARGUMENT CANNOT BE ACCCEPTED. THE PURPOSE OF DIRECTIVE 80/723, AS INDICATED ABOVE, WOULD BE CALLED INTO QUESTION IF ITS APPLICATION DEPENDED ON WHETHER OR NOT STATE BODIES HAD LEGAL PERSONALITY DISTINCT FROM THAT OF THE STATE. THE RESULT WOULD BE THAT, ACCORDING TO THE LEGAL FORM CHOSEN BY THE MEMBER STATES, THE ECONOMIC ACTIVITIES OF AN INDUSTRIAL OR COMMERCIAL

NATURE CARRIED ON BY CERTAIN STATE BODIES WOULD BE COVERED BY THE DIRECTIVE WHEREAS THOSE CARRIED ON BY OTHER BODIES WOULD NOT. FURTHERMORE, THE APPLICATION OF THE DIRECTIVE IN REGARD TO THE SAME ACTIVITY WOULD DIFFER FROM ONE MEMBER STATE TO ANOTHER ACCORDING TO THE LEGAL FORM WHICH EACH MEMBER STATE GIVES TO THE PUBLIC UNDERTAKINGS CARRYING ON THAT ACTIVITY.

11 IN THAT REGARD, IT MUST BE POINTED OUT, AS THE COURT HAS FREQUENTLY EMPHASIZED IN ITS DECISIONS, THAT HAVING RECOURSE TO MEMBER STATES' DOMESTIC LAW IN ORDER TO LIMIT THE SCOPE OF PROVISIONS OF COMMUNITY LAW UNDERMINES THE UNITY AND EFFECTIVENESS OF THAT LAW AND CANNOT, THEREFORE, BE ACCEPTED. CONSEQUENTLY, THE FACT THAT A BODY HAS OR HAS NOT, UNDER NATIONAL LAW, LEGAL PERSONALITY SEPARATE FROM THAT OF THE STATE IS IRRELEVANT IN DECIDING WHETHER IT MAY BE REGARDED AS A PUBLIC UNDERTAKING WITHIN THE MEANING OF THE DIRECTIVE.

12 THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT ALSO CONSIDERS THAT THE CONCEPT OF "FINANCIAL RELATIONS", THE TRANSPARENCY OF WHICH THE DIRECTIVE SEEKS TO ENSURE, PRESUPPOSES RELATIONS BETWEEN DISTINCT LEGAL PERSONS.

13 IT MUST BE OBSERVED IN THAT REGARD THAT THE FACT THAT A BODY CARRYING OUT ECONOMIC ACTIVITIES OF AN INDUSTRIAL OR COMMERCIAL NATURE IS INTEGRATED INTO THE STATE ADMINISTRATION AND DOES NOT HAVE LEGAL PERSONALITY SEPARATE THEREFROM DOES NOT PREVENT THE EXISTENCE OF FINANCIAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THE STATE AND THAT BODY. THROUGH THE MECHANISM OF BUDGETARY APPROPRIATIONS, THE STATE DISPOSES BY DEFINITION OF THE POWER TO INFLUENCE THE ECONOMIC MANAGEMENT OF THE UNDERTAKING, PERMITTING IT TO GRANT COMPENSATION FOR OPERATING LOSSES AND TO MAKE NEW FUNDS AVAILABLE TO THE UNDERTAKING, AND MAY THEREFORE PERMIT THAT UNDERTAKING TO CARRY OUT ITS ACTIVITIES INDEPENDENTLY OF THE RULES OF NORMAL COMMERCIAL MANAGEMENT, WHICH IS PRECISELY THE SITUATION WHICH THE DIRECTIVE SEEKS TO MAKE TRANSPARENT.

14 FINALLY, THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT CONTENDS THAT IT FOLLOWS FROM ANNEX I TO COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 80/767 OF 22 JULY 1980 ADAPTING AND SUPPLEMENTING IN RESPECT OF CERTAIN CONTRACTING AUTHORITIES DIRECTIVE 77/62/EEC COORDINATING PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC SUPPLY CONTRACTS (OFFICIAL JOURNAL L 215, P. 1) THAT THE AAMS FORMS PART OF THE ITALIAN MINISTRY OF FINANCE. A FOOTNOTE TO ANNEX I CONCERNING THE MINISTRY OF FINANCE EXCLUDES THE TOBACCO AND SALT MONOPOLIES FROM THE LIST OF ITALIAN PURCHASING ENTITIES COMING WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE DIRECTIVE .

15 IN THAT REGARD, IT MUST BE OBSERVED THAT IN THE CONTEXT OF DIRECTIVE 80/767, AS THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT STATES, THE AAMS IS REGARDED AS FORMING PART OF THE MINISTRY OF FINANCE. HOWEVER, AS CAN BE SEEN FROM THE COURT' S REASONING ABOVE, THAT CIRCUMSTANCE IS OF NO CONSEQUENCE IN REGARD TO WHETHER OR NOT IT IS A PUBLIC UNDERTAKING WITHIN THE MEANING OF DIRECTIVE 80/723.

16 IT FOLLOWS FROM THE FOREGOING CONSIDERATIONS THAT THE AAMS MUST BE REGARDED AS A PUBLIC UNDERTAKING WITHIN THE MEANING OF ARTICLE 2 OF DIRECTIVE 80/723.

17 IT MUST THEREFORE BE DECLARED THAT BY REFUSING TO SUPPLY INFORMATION TO THE COMMISSION CONCERNING THE AMMINISTRAZIONE AUTONOMA DEI MONOPOLI

DI STATO, THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER ARTICLE 5 (2) OF COMMISSION DIRECTIVE 80/723 OF 25 JUNE 1980 ON THE TRANSPARENCY OF FINANCIAL RELATIONS BETWEEN MEMBER STATES AND PUBLIC UNDERTAKINGS.

COSTS

18 UNDER ARTICLE 69 (2) OF THE RULES OF PROCEDURE, THE UNSUCCESSFUL PARTY IS TO BE ORDERED TO PAY THE COSTS. SINCE THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC HAS FAILED IN ITS SUBMISSIONS, IT MUST BE ORDERED TO PAY THE COSTS.

On those grounds,

hereby :

(1) Declares that by refusing to supply information to the Commission concerning the Amministrazione Autonoma dei Monopoli di Stato, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 5 (2) of Commission Directive 80/723 of 25 June 1980 on the transparency of financial relations between Member States and public undertakings;

(2) Orders the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

Judgment of the Court
of 28 March 1985
Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic.
Directive - Coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts.
Case 274/83.

(EEC TREATY , ART. 169)

2.APPROXIMATION OF LAWS - PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS - AWARD OF CONTRACTS - CRITERIA - THE MOST ECONOMICALLY ADVANTAGEOUS TENDER

(COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC , ART. 29 (1))

3.MEMBER STATES - IMPLEMENTATION OF DIRECTIVES - OBLIGATION TO PROVIDE INFORMATION - FAILURE TO PROVIDE INFORMATION - FAILURE TO FULFIL OBLIGATIONS

(EEC TREATY , ARTS 5 AND 155)

1 . IT FOLLOWS FROM THE PURPOSE ASSIGNED BY ARTICLE 169 OF THE EEC TREATY TO THE PRELIMINARY STAGE OF THE PROCEDURE UNDER ARTICLE 169 , OF WHICH THE INITIAL LETTER IS PART , THAT THE LETTER IS INTENDED TO DEFINE THE SUBJECT-MATTER OF THE DISPUTE AND TO INDICATE TO THE MEMBER STATE WHICH IS INVITED TO SUBMIT ITS OBSERVATIONS THE FACTORS ENABLING IT TO PREPARE ITS DEFENCE. THE OPPORTUNITY FOR THE MEMBER STATE CONCERNED TO SUBMIT ITS OBSERVATIONS CONSTITUTES AN ESSENTIAL GUARANTEE REQUIRED BY THE TREATY AND , EVEN IF THE MEMBER STATE DOES NOT CONSIDER IT NECESSARY TO AVAIL ITSELF THEREOF , OBSERVANCE OF THAT GUARANTEE IS AN ESSENTIAL FORMAL REQUIREMENT OF THE PROCEDURE UNDER ARTICLE 169.

ALTHOUGH IT FOLLOWS THAT THE REASONED OPINION PROVIDED FOR IN ARTICLE 169 MUST CONTAIN A COHERENT AND DETAILED STATEMENT OF THE REASONS WHICH LED THE COMMISSION TO CONCLUDE THAT THE STATE IN QUESTION HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ONE OF ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE TREATY , THE COURT CANNOT IMPOSE SUCH STRICT REQUIREMENTS AS REGARDS THE INITIAL LETTER , WHICH OF NECESSITY WILL CONTAIN ONLY AN INITIAL BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE COMPLAINTS AND THERE IS NOTHING THEREFORE TO PREVENT THE COMMISSION FROM SETTING OUT IN DETAIL IN THE REASONED OPINION THE COMPLAINTS WHICH IT HAS ALREADY MADE MORE GENERALLY IN ITS INITIAL LETTER.

2.FOR THE PURPOSES OF ARTICLE 29 (1) OF DIRECTIVE 71/305 CONCERNING THE COORDINATION OF PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS THE AWARD OF A CONTRACT ON THE BASIS OF THE CRITERION OF THE MOST ECONOMICALLY ADVANTAGEOUS TENDER PRESUPPOSES THAT THE AUTHORITY MAKING THE DECISION IS ABLE TO EXERCISE ITS DISCRETION IN TAKING A DECISION ON THE BASIS OF QUALITATIVE AND QUANTITATIVE CRITERIA THAT VARY ACCORDING TO THE CONTRACT IN QUESTION AND IS NOT RESTRICTED SOLELY TO THE QUANTITATIVE CRITERION OF THE AVERAGE PRICE STATED IN THE TENDERS

3.THE MEMBER STATES ARE OBLIGED , BY VIRTUE OF ARTICLE 5 OF THE EEC TREATY , TO FACILITATE THE ACHIEVEMENT OF THE COMMISSION ' S TASKS WHICH , UNDER ARTICLE 155 OF THE EEC TREATY , CONSIST IN PARTICULAR OF ENSURING THAT

THE PROVISIONS OF THE TREATY AND THE MEASURES ADOPTED BY THE INSTITUTIONS PURSUANT THERETO ARE APPLIED.

WHERE , FOR THAT PURPOSE , A DIRECTIVE IMPOSES UPON THE MEMBER STATES AN OBLIGATION TO PROVIDE INFORMATION IN ORDER TO ENABLE THE COMMISSION TO CHECK WHETHER THE DIRECTIVE HAS BEEN IMPLEMENTED EFFECTIVELY AND COMPLETELY , THE FAILURE BY A MEMBER STATE TO PROVIDE THE INFORMATION CONSTITUTES A FAILURE TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS , EVEN IF THE COMMISSION WAS , IN FACT , ABLE TO OBTAIN INFORMATION REGARDING THE IMPLEMENTING PROVISIONS ADOPTED BY THAT STATE.

1 BY APPLICATION LODGED AT THE COURT REGISTRY ON 16 DECEMBER 1983 , THE COMMISSION OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES BROUGHT AN ACTION PURSUANT TO ARTICLE 169 OF THE EEC TREATY FOR A DECLARATION THAT , BY ADOPTING CERTAIN PROVISIONS CONCERNING THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS AND BY FAILING TO NOTIFY THE COMMISSION OF THE MAIN PROVISIONS OF NATIONAL LAW WHICH IT ADOPTED IN THE FIELD COVERED BY COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC OF 26 JULY 1971 CONCERNING THE COORDINATION OF PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS (OFFICIAL JOURNAL , ENGLISH SPECIAL EDITION 1971 (II), P. 682), THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE EEC TREATY.

2 ON 26 JULY 1971 , THE COUNCIL OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES ADOPTED TWO DIRECTIVES FOR ATTAINING FREEDOM OF ESTABLISHMENT AND FREEDOM TO PROVIDE SERVICES IN RELATION TO PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS. THE FIRST , DIRECTIVE 71/304/EEC (OFFICIAL JOURNAL , ENGLISH SPECIAL EDITION 1971 (II), P . 678) IMPLEMENTS , WITH REGARD TO PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS , THE PRINCIPLE OF THE PROHIBITION OF DISCRIMINATION BASED ON NATIONALITY IN THE MATTER OF FREEDOM TO PROVIDE SERVICES. THE SECOND , DIRECTIVE 71/305/EEC (OFFICIAL JOURNAL , ENGLISH SPECIAL EDITION 1971 (II), P. 682), PROVIDES FOR THE COORDINATION OF NATIONAL PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS AND LAYS DOWN IN PARTICULAR :

COMMON ADVERTISING RULES (ARTICLE 12 ET SEQ.);

3 IN ITS JUDGMENT OF 22 SEPTEMBER 1976 (CASE 10/76 COMMISSION V ITALY (1976) ECR 1359) THE COURT HELD THAT BY FAILING TO ADOPT , WITHIN THE PRESCRIBED PERIOD , THE MEASURES NECESSARY TO COMPLY WITH COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305 , THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC HAD FAILED TO FULFIL AN OBLIGATION UNDER THE TREATY. ON 8 AUGUST 1977 THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC ADOPTED , IN RESPONSE TO THAT JUDGMENT , LAW NO 584 (GAZZETTA UFFICIALE (OFFICIAL GAZETTE) NO 232 OF 26 AUGUST 1977 , P. 6272), WHICH IN THE COMMISSION ' S OPINION DULY IMPLEMENTED THE DIRECTIVE

4 ON 10 DECEMBER 1981 , THE ITALIAN LEGISLATURE ADOPTED LAW NO 741 CONCERNING ' SUPPLEMENTARY RULES TO SPEED UP PROCEDURES FOR THE PERFORMANCE OF PUBLIC WORKS ' (GAZZETTA UFFICIALE NO 344 OF 16 DECEMBER 1981 , P. 8271). SINCE THE COMMISSION CONSIDERED THAT SEVERAL OF THE PROVISIONS OF THAT LAW , ESPECIALLY ARTICLES 9 , 10 , 11 , 13 AND 15 , INFRINGED IN PARTICULAR THE PROVISIONS OF DIRECTIVE 71/305 CONCERNING THE PUBLICATION OF CONTRACT NOTICES IN THE OFFICIAL JOURNAL OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES , PROOF OF THE FINANCIAL , ECONOMIC AND TECHNICAL CAPACITY OF THE CONTRACTOR AND THE CRITERIA FOR THE AWARD OF CONTRACTS AND THAT , MOREOVER , BY FAILING TO NOTIFY IT OF THE TEXT OF THAT LAW , ITALY HAD FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER ARTICLE 33 OF THE DIRECTIVE , IT REQUESTED THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT , BY A LETTER DATED 17 DECEMBER 1982 , PURSUANT TO ARTICLE 169 OF THE EEC TREATY , TO SUBMIT ITS OBSERVATIONS WITH REGARD TO THE EIGHT ALLEGATIONS THEREIN CONTAINED WITHIN TWO MONTHS OF RECEIPT OF THE LETTER .

5 BY A LETTER DATED 24 FEBRUARY 1983 FROM ITS PERMANENT REPRESENTATION , THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT ADMITTED THAT THE COMPLAINTS WITH REGARD TO THE

THIRD , FOURTH AND FIFTH PARAGRAPHS OF ARTICLE 10 AND ARTICLE 13 OF LAW NO 741 WERE JUSTIFIED BUT CONTESTED THE ALLEGATIONS WITH REGARD TO ARTICLE 9 , THE FIRST PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 10 AND ARTICLE 11 AND THE FIRST SENTENCE OF THE SECOND PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 15 OF THE LAW. THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT SENT TO THE COMMISSION , IN AN ANNEX TO THAT LETTER , THE TEXT OF A PRELIMINARY DRAFT LAW DRAWN UP BY THE MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS IN RESPONSE TO THE REQUESTS MADE BY THE COMMISSION.

6 SINCE THE COMMISSION TOOK THE VIEW THAT IT WAS UNABLE TO TAKE THAT PRELIMINARY DRAFT LAW INTO ACCOUNT IN SO FAR AS IT AMOUNTED MERELY TO ' A VAGUE AND INCOMPLETE INTENTION ON THE PART OF THE COMPETENT AUTHORITIES TO COMPLY WITH THE PROVISIONS OF THE DIRECTIVE ' , IT DELIVERED A REASONED OPINION DATED 2 AUGUST 1983 WHICH REPEATED ALL THE COMPLAINTS WHICH HAD ALREADY APPEARED IN ITS INITIAL LETTER. IN THAT OPINION , THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC WAS INVITED TO ADOPT THE NECESSARY MEASURES WITHIN ONE MONTH.

7 BY A TELEX MESSAGE DATED 27 SEPTEMBER 1983 , THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT , IN RESPONSE TO THE REASONED OPINION , INFORMED THE COMMISSION OF THE INTENTION OF THE MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS TO LAY THE AFOREMENTIONED DRAFT BEFORE THE ITALIAN PARLIAMENT ONCE AGAIN SINCE IT HAD LAPSED AT THE END OF THE PREVIOUS LEGISLATIVE PERIOD. SINCE NO FURTHER STEPS WERE TAKEN THE COMMISSION DECIDED TO BRING AN ACTION BEFORE THE COURT.

8 LAW NO 687 AMENDING LAW NO 741 AND THE PROVISIONS RELATING TO PROVISIONAL SECURITY AND ADVERTISING WAS NOT ADOPTED UNTIL 8 OCTOBER 1984 .

9 IN THIS ACTION THE COMMISSION ALLEGES IN THE FIRST PLACE THAT ON 10 DECEMBER 1981 , ITALY ADOPTED LAW NO 741 CONCERNING SUPPLEMENTARY RULES TO SPEED UP PROCEDURES FOR THE PERFORMANCE OF PUBLIC WORKS (GAZZETTA UFFICIALE NO 344 OF 16 DECEMBER 1981 , P. 8271) ARTICLES 9 , 10 , 11 , 13 AND 15 OF WHICH INFRINGE CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF DIRECTIVE 71/305 AND IN THE SECOND PLACE THAT CONTRARY TO ARTICLE 33 OF THAT DIRECTIVE ITALY DID NOT NOTIFY THE TEXT OF THE LAW TO THE COMMISSION .

I - THE ADOPTION OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS IN LAW NO 741

(A) ADMISSIBILITY OF INCREASED TENDERS

10 THE COMMISSION CONTENDS THAT ARTICLE 29 (1) OF THE DIRECTIVE PROVIDES FOR ONLY TWO CRITERIA FOR THE AWARD OF CONTRACTS , THAT IS TO SAY THE LOWEST PRICE OR THE MOST ECONOMICALLY ADVANTAGEOUS TENDER , WHILST ARTICLE 9 OF THE ITALIAN LAW PERMITS THE ACCEPTANCE OF AN INCREASED TENDER NOT CORRESPONDING TO EITHER OF THOSE TWO CRITERIA IN THE CASE OF A RESTRICTED INVITATION TO TENDER.

11 THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT REPLIES TO THAT ALLEGATION THAT THE POSSIBILITY OF SUBMITTING TENDERS INCREASED WITH REGARD TO THE BASIC PRICE FOR TENDERS FIXED BY THE ADMINISTRATION CONFORMS TO THE CRITERION OF ' THE LOWEST PRICE ' PROVIDED FOR IN ARTICLE 29 (1) OF THE DIRECTIVE. ARTICLE 9 OF THE ITALIAN LAW PROVIDES THAT THE CONTRACT IS TO BE AWARDED TO THE TENDERER WHO SUBMITS THE OFFER WHICH EXCEEDS THE PRICE FIXED BY THE SMALLEST MARGIN SO THAT THE CONTRACT IS ALWAYS AWARDED TO THE PERSON WHO TENDERS ' THE LOWEST PRICE '.

12 IN THE LIGHT OF THE SUBMISSIONS MADE BY THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT , THE COMMISSION HAS WITHDRAWN ITS COMPLAINT WITH REGARD TO THAT MATTER

(B) PROCEDURE FOR MAKING INCREASED TENDERS

13 ACCORDING TO THE COMMISSION , ARTICLE 9 OF ITALIAN LAW NO 741 OF 10 DECEMBER 1981 , IN CONJUNCTION WITH THE THIRD PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 1 OF LAW NO 504 OF 3 JULY 1970 (GAZZETTA UFFICIALE NO 179 OF 17 JULY 1970), PROVIDES THAT THE CALCULATION OF PRICES IN THE CONTEXT OF TENDERING PROCEDURES IS TO INCLUDE THE POSSIBILITY OF MAKING HIGHER TENDERS ACCORDING TO THE ' ANONYMOUS ENVELOPE ' PROCEDURE , WHEREAS ARTICLE 29 (3) OF THE DIRECTIVE PROHIBITS THE CALCULATION OF PRICES IN ACCORDANCE WITH THAT PROCEDURE AFTER THE EXPIRY OF THE TIME-LIMITS REFERRED TO THEREIN.

14 THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT REPLIES TO THAT ALLEGATION THAT RECOURSE TO THE ANONYMOUS ENVELOPE PROCEDURE DOES NOT FOLLOW FROM ARTICLE 9 OF THE LAW OF 1981 AND THAT IN PRACTICE THAT PROCEDURE IS NEITHER PROVIDED FOR NOR USED IN CONNECTION WITH THE AWARD OF CONTRACTS UNDER ARTICLE 9 . IT IS ONLY IN ORDER TO CLARIFY THE POSITION AND TO ELIMINATE THE COMMISSION ' S DOUBTS THAT ARTICLE 1 OF THE DRAFT LAW , APPROVED ON 22 DECEMBER 1983 , PROHIBITS THE USE OF THE ANONYMOUS ENVELOPE PROCEDURE PROVIDED FOR IN ARTICLE 1 OF LAW NO 504/70 WITH REGARD TO CONTRACTS FALLING WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE DIRECTIVE.

15 SINCE THE DRAFT LAW WAS ADOPTED ON 8 OCTOBER 1984 THE COMMISSION HAS WITHDRAWN ITS COMPLAINT IN THE COURSE OF THE ORAL PROCEDURE.

(C) SECRET TENDER EQUAL TO OR CLOSEST TO THE AVERAGE TENDER

16 ACCORDING TO THE COMMISSION THE CRITERION FOR THE AWARD OF A CONTRACT , FOR WHICH IN ITALY THE FIRST PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 10 OF LAW NO 741 REFERS TO ARTICLE 4 OF LAW NO 14 OF 2 FEBRUARY 1973 AND THEREFORE TO ARTICLE 1 (D) OF THAT LAW WHICH PROVIDES THAT THE CONTRACT IS TO BE AWARDED TO THE TENDERER WHOSE TENDER EQUALS THE AVERAGE TENDER OR FAILING THAT IS THE NEAREST TENDER BELOW THAT AVERAGE , DOES NOT CORRESPOND TO EITHER OF THE TWO CRITERIA PROVIDED FOR IN ARTICLE 29 (1) OF THE DIRECTIVE , THAT IS TO SAY THE LOWEST PRICE OR THE MOST ECONOMICALLY ADVANTAGEOUS TENDER ACCORDING TO VARIOUS CRITERIA DEPENDING ON THE CONTRACT.

17 THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT , ON THE CONTRARY , CONSIDERS THAT THE CRITERION OF THE AVERAGE PRICE ENABLES THE MOST ECONOMICALLY ADVANTAGEOUS TENDER TO BE DETERMINED BY VIRTUE OF THE SPECIFIC RULES RELATING TO THE APPLICATION OF THAT CRITERION AS DEFINED IN ARTICLE 4 OF LAW NO 14/73. MOREOVER , IN THE COURSE OF THE ORAL PROCEDURE THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT HAS RAISED AN OBJECTION OF INADMISSIBILITY ON THE GROUND THAT IN THE COMMISSION ' S INITIAL LETTER THE FIRST PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 10 OF LAW NO 741 WAS ALLEGED TO BE INCOMPATIBLE ONLY WITH ARTICLE 29 (3) OF THE DIRECTIVE , WHEREAS IN ITS REASONED OPINION THE COMMISSION MAINTAINED THAT THE CRITERION FOR THE AWARD OF A CONTRACT IN QUESTION DID NOT CORRESPOND TO EITHER OF THE CRITERIA PROVIDED FOR IN ARTICLE 29 (1) OF THE DIRECTIVE.

18 IT SHOULD BE RECALLED THAT UNDER ARTICLE 169 OF THE TREATY THE COMMISSION MAY BRING BEFORE THE COURT AN ACTION FOR A DECLARATION THAT A STATE HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS ONLY IF THAT STATE DOES NOT COMPLY WITH

THE REASONED OPINION WITHIN THE PERIOD LAID DOWN THEREIN BY THE COMMISSION. THE COMMISSION DOES NOT DELIVER ITS REASONED OPIONION UNTIL THE MEMBER STATE HAS BEEN GIVEN AN OPPORTUNITY TO SUBMIT ITS OBSERVATIONS.

19 IT FOLLOWS FROM THE PURPOSE ASSIGNED TO THE PRELIMINARY STAGE OF THE PROCEDURE UNDER ARTICLE 169 THAT THE INITIAL LETTER IS INTENDED TO DEFINE THE SUBJECT-MATTER OF THE DISPUTE AND TO INDICATE TO THE MEMBER STATE WHICH IS INVITED TO SUBMIT ITS OBSERVATIONS THE FACTORS ENABLING IT TO PREPARE ITS DEFENCE.

20 AS THE COURT HELD IN ITS JUDGMENT OF 11 JULY 1984 (CASE 51/83 COMMISSION V ITALY (1984) ECR 2793) THE OPPORTUNITY FOR THE MEMBER STATE CONCERNED TO SUBMIT ITS OBSERVATIONS CONSTITUTES AN ESSENTIAL GUARANTEE REQUIRED BY THE TREATY AND , EVEN IF THE MEMBER STATE DOES NOT CONSIDER IT NECESSARY TO AVAIL ITSELF THEREOF , OBSERVANCE OF THAT GUARANTEE IS AN ESSENTIAL FORMAL REQUIREMENT OF THE PROCEDURE UNDER ARTICLE 169 .

21 ALTHOUGH IT FOLLOWS THAT THE REASONED OPINION PROVIDED FOR IN ARTICLE 169 OF THE EEC TREATY MUST CONTAIN A COHERENT AND DETAILED STATEMENT OF THE REASONS WHICH LED THE COMMISSION TO CONCLUDE THAT THE STATE IN QUESTION HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ONE OF ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE TREATY , THE COURT CANNOT IMPOSE SUCH STRICT REQUIREMENTS AS REGARDS THE INITIAL LETTER , WHICH OF NECESSITY WILL CONTAIN ONLY AN INITIAL BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE COMPLAINTS. AS THE COURT STATED IN ITS JUDGMENT OF 31 JANUARY 1984 (CASE 74/82 COMMISSION V IRELAND (1984) ECR 317) THERE IS NOTHING THEREFORE TO PREVENT THE COMMISSION FROM SETTING OUT IN DETAIL IN THE REASONED OPINION THE COMPLAINTS WHICH IT HAS ALREADY MADE MORE GENERALLY IN ITS INITIAL LETTER.

22 IN THAT RESPECT IT IS CLEAR FROM THE DOCUMENTS ON THE FILE THAT IN ITS INITIAL LETTER DATED 17 DECEMBER 1982 THE COMMISSION ALLEGED THAT THE FIRST PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 10 OF LAW NO 741 INFRINGED ARTICLE 29 (3) OF DIRECTIVE 71/305 WHICH PROHIBITS THE ANONYMOUS ENVELOPE PROCEDURE . BUT IT ALSO STATED , AFTER CITING THE TEXT OF THE LAW , THAT THE PROVISION INFRINGED THE DIRECTIVE ' IN A MANNER ANALAGOUS TO THAT INDICATED IN THE PRECEDING PARAGRAPH '. IN THAT PARAGRAPH IT COMPLAINED THAT ARTICLE 9 OF LAW NO 741 PROVIDED INTER ALIA FOR A CRITERION FOR THE AWARD OF CONTRACTS WHICH WAS NOT COMPATIBLE WITH EITHER OF THE TWO CRITERIA PROVIDED FOR IN ARTICLE 29 (1) OF THE DIRECTIVE .

23 CONSEQUENTLY , ALTHOUGH ITS WORDING IS NOT VERY EXPLICIT , THE INITIAL LETTER DID GIVE NOTICE TO THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT OF THE COMPLAINT AGAINST IT. THE COMMISSION ' S COMPLAINT IS THEREFORE ADMISSIBLE .

24 WITH REGARD TO THE SUBSTANCE OF THE COMPLAINT IT APPEARS THAT THE FIRST PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 10 OF LAW NO 741 CONTAINS , IN ADDITION TO THE CRITERIA FOR THE AWARD OF CONTRACTS OF THE LOWEST PRICE AND THE MOST ECONOMICALLY ADVANTAGEOUS TENDER , WHICH ARE PROVIDED FOR IN THE DIRECTIVE , THE CRITERION OF THE AVERAGE PRICE CALCULATED ON THE BASIS OF THE TENDERS IN THE LOWER HALF OF THE SCALE BETWEEN THE LOWEST AND HIGHEST TENDERS.

25 THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT ' S CONTENTION THAT THE CRITERION FOR THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT TO THE PERSON WHO SUBMITS ' THE TENDER WHICH EQUALS THE AVERAGE TENDER OR IS THE CLOSEST TO IT ' SERVES TO DETERMINE ' THE MOST ECONOMICALLY ADVANTAGEOUS TENDER ' WITHIN THE MEANING OF ARTICLE 29 OF THE DIRECTIVE IS INCORRECT. IN ORDER TO DETERMINE THE MOST ECONOMICALLY ADVANTAGEOUS TENDER , THE AUTHORITY MAKING THE DECISION MUST BE ABLE TO EXERCISE ITS DISCRETION IN TAKING A DECISION ON THE BASIS OF QUALITATIVE AND QUANTITATIVE CRITERIA THAT VARY ACCORDING TO THE CONTRACT IN QUESTION AND CANNOT THEREFORE RELY SOLELY ON THE QUANTITATIVE CRITERION OF THE AVERAGE PRICE.

26 IT IS THEREFORE NECESSARY TO DECLARE THAT THE FIRST PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 10 (1) OF LAW NO 741 IS NOT COMPATIBLE WITH DIRECTIVE 71/305 IN SO FAR AS IT CONTAINS A CRITERION FOR THE AWARD OF CONTRACTS WHICH IS NOT PROVIDED FOR IN ARTICLE 29 (1) OF THE DIRECTIVE.

(D) PUBLICATION OF CONTRACT NOTICES

27 THE COMMISSION ALSO MAINTAINS THAT THE THIRD PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 10 OF LAW NO 741 , IN SO FAR AS IT SUSPENDS UNTIL 31 DECEMBER 1983 THE OPERATION OF ARTICLE 7 OF LAW NO 14 OF 2 FEBRUARY 1973 AND THE PROVISIONS OF LAW NO 584 OF 8 AUGUST 1977 WITH REGARD TO THE PUBLICATION OF CONTRACT NOTICES , IS INCOMPATIBLE WITH ARTICLE 12 OF THE DIRECTIVE WHICH LAYS DOWN AN OBLIGATION TO PUBLISH CONTRACT NOTICES FALLING WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE DIRECTIVE IN THE OFFICIAL JOURNAL OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES. ACCORDING TO THE COMMISSION THE FOURTH PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 10 CONCERNING THE PUBLICATION OF AWARDS IS ALSO INCOMPATIBLE WITH ARTICLE 12 OF THE DIRECTIVE WHICH PROVIDES THAT CONTRACT NOTICES ARE NOT TO BE PUBLISHED IN THE DAILY PRESS BEFORE THEY HAVE BEEN DISPATCHED TO THE OFFICIAL JOURNAL.

28 THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT DOES NOT DISPUTE THAT THESE COMPLAINTS ARE WELL-FOUNDED. IT IS THEREFORE NECESSARY TO DECLARE THAT IT HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS IN THE MANNER ALLEGED.

(E) THE CONTRACTOR ' S FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC STANDING AND TECHNICAL KNOWLEDGE AND ABILITY

29 THE FIFTH PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 10 OF LAW NO 741 , TO THE EXTENT TO WHICH IT SUSPENDS UNTIL 31 DECEMBER 1983 ARTICLES 17 AND 18 OF LAW NO 584 OF 8 AUGUST 1977 , WHICH IMPLEMENT ARTICLES 25 AND 26 OF THE DIRECTIVE , IS IN THE COMMISSION ' S OPINION INCOMPATIBLE NOT ONLY WITH THE PROVISIONS LISTING THE REFERENCES WHICH THE AUTHORITY AWARDING THE CONTRACT MAY REQUIRE IN ORDER TO ASSESS THE CONTRACTOR ' S FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC STANDING AND TECHNICAL KNOWLEDGE AND ABILITY , BUT ALSO WITH ARTICLES 17 (D), 20 , 22 AND 27 OF THE DIRECTIVE , ACCORDING TO WHICH THE SUITABILITY OF CONTRACTORS IS TO BE CHECKED IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE CRITERIA OF ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL STANDING AND TECHNICAL KNOWLEDGE AND ABILITY REFERRED TO IN ARTICLES 25 , 26 AND 27 OF THE DIRECTIVE.

30 THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT DOES NOT DISPUTE THAT THESE COMPLAINTS ARE WELL-FOUNDED. IT IS THEREFORE NECESSARY TO DECLARE THAT IT HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS.

(F) ADDITIONAL OR MODIFIED WORKS

31 THE COMMISSION CONTENDS THAT ARTICLE 11 OF LAW NO 741 , BY AUTHORIZING THE ADMINISTRATION TO PROCEED WITH ' THE AWARD OF ADDITIONAL OR MODIFIED

WORKS , ONCE A FAVOURABLE OPINION HAS BEEN DELIVERED BY THE COMPETENT CONSULTATIVE BODY OR DELIBERATIVE BODY WITH REGARD TO APPROVAL OF THE RELEVANT EXPERTISE ' IS INCOMPATIBLE WITH ARTICLE 9 (F) OF THE DIRECTIVE IN SO FAR AS IT FAILS TO TAKE ACCOUNT OF ANY OF THE CONDITIONS PROVIDED FOR BY THAT PROVISION WITH REGARD TO THE AWARD OF ADDITIONAL WORKS TO THE CONTRACTOR WHO SUCCESSFULLY TENDERED FOR THE MAIN WORKS.

32 THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT STATES , ON THE CONTRARY , THAT ARTICLE 11 RELATES SOLELY TO ' THE AWARD OF ADDITIONAL OR MODIFIED WORKS ' AND DOES NOT RELATE TO THE CONDITIONS ON WHICH ADDITIONAL WORKS ARE TO BE AWARDED TO THE CONTRACTOR WHO WAS AWARDED THE MAIN CONTRACT PROVIDED FOR IN ARTICLE 9 (F) OF THE DIRECTIVE. THOSE CONDITIONS CONTINUE TO BE GOVERNED BY ARTICLE 5 (F) OF LAW NO 584/77 WHICH CONFORMS TO THE AFOREMENTIONED ARTICLE 9 (F) OF THE DIRECTIVE. WHERE THE CONDITIONS IN ARTICLE 5 (F) ARE SATISFIED , ARTICLE 11 PERMITS , AT THE MOST , THE AWARD OF WORKS TO THE SUCCESSFUL TENDERER BEFORE THE CONTRACT FOR ADDITIONAL WORKS HAS BEEN APPROVED IN ORDER TO SPEED UP PROCEDURES FOR THE PERFORMANCE OF PUBLIC WORKS. THE HYPOTHESIS ON WHICH THE COMMISSION ' S COMPLAINT IS BASED , NAMELY THAT ARTICLE 11 INTRODUCES A DEROGATION FROM THE PROVISIONS OF ARTICLE 9 (F) OF THE DIRECTIVE , THEREFORE LACKS ANY FOUNDATION.

33 IN THE LIGHT OF THE SUBMISSIONS MADE BY THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT , THE COMMISSION HAS STATED THAT IT IS NOT PROCEEDING WITH THIS COMPLAINT .

(G) URGENCY

34 THE COMMISSION MAINTAINS THAT ARTICLE 13 OF LAW NO 741 , IN SO FAR AS IT PERMITS , BY REFERENCE TO ARTICLE 41 (5) OF THE REGOLAMENTO (REGULATION) APPROVED BY REGIO DECRETO (ROYAL DECREE) NO 827 OF 23 MAY 1924 , THE AWARD OF PRIVATE CONTRACTS ' WHEN THE URGENCY OF THE WORKS , PURCHASES , TRANSPORT AND MATERIALS IS SUCH THAT THERE MUST BE NO DELAY ' , IS INCOMPATIBLE WITH ARTICLE 9 (D) OF THE DIRECTIVE TO THE EXTENT TO WHICH IT PERMITS URGENCY TO BE RELIED UPON IN CIRCUMSTANCES WHICH DO NOT CORRESPOND TO THE CONDITIONS PROVIDED FOR EXPRESSLY IN ARTICLE 9 (D).

35 THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT HAS NOT CONTESTED THAT ALLEGATION. IT IS THEREFORE NECESSARY TO DECLARE THAT IT HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS IN THE MANNER ALLEGED.

(H) SECURITY

36 FINALLY THE COMMISSION CONSIDERS THAT THE FIRST SENTENCE OF THE SECOND PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 15 OF LAW NO 741 , ACCORDING TO WHICH ' IF IT IS PROVIDED THAT THE UNDERTAKING INVITED TO TENDER CAN BE AWARDED ONLY ONE CONTRACT THAT UNDERTAKING SHALL PROVIDE ONLY ONE PROVISIONAL DEPOSIT , CALCULATED ON THE BASIS OF THE AMOUNT OF THE MOST VALUABLE CONTRACT ' , IS INCOMPATIBLE WITH ARTICLES 25 AND 26 OF THE DIRECTIVE TO THE EXTENT TO WHICH THE PROVISION OF SECURITY IS NOT MENTIONED IN THE EXHAUSTIVE LIST OF REFERENCES IN ARTICLES 25 AND 26 THAT MAY BE REQUIRED AT THE TENDERING STAGE AS PROOF OF THE CONTRACTOR ' S FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC STANDING AND TECHNICAL KNOWLEDGE AND ABILITY. SINCE A DEPOSIT SERVES AS A GUARANTEE TO THE AUTHORITY AWARDING IN THE CONTRACT THAT THE WORKS WILL BE PERFORMED PROPERLY , IT CAN BE REQUIRED ONLY OF THE CONTRACTOR TO WHOM THE CONTRACT IS AWARDED.

37 ACCORDING TO THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT , THIS COMPLAINT IS INADMISSIBLE ON THE GROUND THAT THE COMMISSION HAS NO INTEREST IN THE MATTER IN SO FAR AS THE COMPLAINT IS BASED SOLELY ON THE FIRST SENTENCE OF THE SECOND PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 15 OF LAW NO 741 SINCE IT IS NOT THAT PROVISION WHICH REQUIRES CONTRACTORS TO PROVIDE A PROVISIONAL DEPOSIT IN ORDER TO TAKE PART IN THE TENDERING PROCEDURE , BUT OTHER PROVISIONS WHICH ARE NOT IMPUGNED. THE FIRST SENTENCE OF THE SECOND PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 15 MERELY PROVIDES A POWER TO PERMIT A CONTRACTOR WHO IS TAKING PART IN SEVERAL TENDER PROCEDURES TO LODGE ONLY ONE PROVISIONAL DEPOSIT.

38 IN ADDITION , THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT CONTENDS THAT ARTICLE 16 (I) OF THE DIRECTIVE REFERS IN GENERAL TERMS TO ' DEPOSITS AND ANY OTHER GUARANTEES , WHATEVER THEIR FORM , WHICH MAY BE REQUIRED BY THE AUTHORITIES AWARDING CONTRACTS ' AND THEREFORE REFERS NOT ONLY TO THE DEFINITIVE DEPOSIT TO BE PAID BY THE TENDERER TO WHOM THE CONTRACT IS AWARDED , BUT ALSO TO A PROVISIONAL DEPOSIT WHOSE SPECIFIC PURPOSE IS TO GUARANTEE THAT THE TENDER IS SERIOUS AND TO COMPENSATE THE ADMINISTRATION IN ADVANCE FOR ANY INJURY. THE PROVISIONAL DEPOSIT MERELY REINFORCES THE OBLIGATION LAID DOWN IN ARTICLE 16 (M) OF THE DIRECTIVE THAT THE TENDERER MUST KEEP OPEN HIS TENDER FOR A CERTAIN PERIOD OF TIME.

II - FAILURE TO NOTIFY THE TEXT OF LAW NO 741

40 THE COMMISSION CLAIMS THAT , BY FAILING TO NOTIFY IT OF THE TEXT OF LAW NO 741 OF 10 DECEMBER 1981 , ITALY HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER ARTICLE 33 OF DIRECTIVE 71/305.

41 THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT FOR ITS PART CONSIDERS THAT THIS COMPLAINT HAS CEASED TO BE MATERIAL IN SO FAR AS THE COMMISSION WAS WELL AWARE OF THE TEXT OF THE LAW WHEN IT DELIVERED ITS REASONED OPINION.

42 IN THAT RESPECT IT IS NECESSARY TO DECLARE THAT EVEN IF THE COMMISSION WAS AWARE OF LAW NO 741 WHEN IT DELIVERED ITS REASONED OPINION , THE FACT REMAINS THAT THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT HAS NOT NOTIFIED IT OFFICIALLY OF THE TEXT OF THE LAW AS IT IS OBLIGED TO DO UNDER ARTICLE 33. IT SHOULD BE EMPHASIZED IN THAT RESPECT THAT THE MEMBER STATES ARE OBLIGED , BY VIRTUE OF ARTICLE 5 OF THE EEC TREATY , TO FACILITATE THE ACHIEVEMENT OF THE COMMISSION ' S TASKS WHICH , UNDER ARTICLE 155 OF THE EEC TREATY , CONSIST IN PARTICULAR OF ENSURING THAT THE PROVISIONS OF THE TREATY AND THE MEASURES ADOPTED BY THE INSTITUTIONS PURSUANT THERETO ARE APPLIED. IT IS FOR THOSE REASONS THAT ARTICLE 33 OF THE DIRECTIVE IN QUESTION , LIKE OTHER DIRECTIVES , IMPOSES UPON THE MEMBER STATES , AN OBLIGATION TO PROVIDE INFORMATION . IN THE ABSENCE OF SUCH INFORMATION , THE COMMISSION IS NOT IN A POSITION TO ASCERTAIN WHETHER THE MEMBER STATE HAS EFFECTIVELY AND COMPLETELY IMPLEMENTED THE DIRECTIVE.

43 IT IS THEREFORE NECESSARY TO DECLARE THAT THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC , BY FAILING TO NOTIFY THE COMMISSION OFFICIALLY OF THE TEXT OF LAW NO 741 , HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER ARTICLE 33 OF DIRECTIVE 71/305.

Judgment of the Court (Fourth Chamber)
of 10 July 1985
CMC Cooperativa muratori e cementisti and others v Commission of the European Communities.
European Development Fund - Amarti River diversion project. Case 118/83.

1 . INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS - SECOND LOME ACP-EEC CONVENTION - PROVISIONS ON FINANCIAL AND TECHNICAL COOPERATION - PROCEDURE FOR PLACING PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS - RESPECTIVE ROLES OF THE ACP STATE AND THE COMMISSION - POWER OF THE ACP STATE TO CONCLUDE CONTRACTS - ACT OR OMISSION OF THE COMMISSION IN RESPECT OF WHICH AN ACTION FOR ANNULMENT OR FOR FAILURE TO ACT MAY BE BROUGHT BY A TENDERER - NONE - ALLEGATION OF LIABILITY ON THE PART OF COMMUNITY-ADMISSIBILITY

(EEC TREATY , ART. 173 , SECOND PARA., ART. 175 , THIRD PARA., ART . 178 AND ART. 215 , SECOND PARA ; SECOND ACP-EEC CONVENTION OF 31 OCTOBER 1979 , ARTS 120 TO 123)

(SECOND ACP-EEC CONVENTION OF 31 OCTOBER 1979 , ARTS 121 AND 123).

1 . IN THE FRAMEWORK OF THE FINANCIAL AND TECHNICAL COOPERATION PROVIDED FOR BY THE SECOND ACP-EEC CONVENTION THE PROCEDURE FOR PLACING PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS INVOLVES A DIVISION OF POWERS BETWEEN THE COMMISSION AND THE AUTHORITIES OF THE ACP STATE CONCERNED. WHEREAS THE COMMISSION ADOPTS THE FINANCING DECISIONS ON BEHALF OF THE COMMUNITY , THE AUTHORITIES OF THE ACP STATE ARE RESPONSIBLE FOR PREPARING , NEGOTIATING AND CONCLUDING CONTRACTS. IT FOLLOWS THAT THERE CAN BE NO ACT OR OMISSION ON THE PART OF THE COMMISSION IN RESPECT OF WHICH TENDERERS MAY BRING AN ACTION FOR ANNULMENT OR FOR FAILURE TO ACT , UNDER ARTICLE 173 , SECOND PARAGRAPH , OR ARTICLE 175 , THIRD PARAGRAPH , OF THE EEC TREATY. THEY MAY HOWEVER BRING AN ACTION FOR DAMAGES , SINCE IT WOULD BE WRONG TO DISMISS THE POSSIBILITY THAT ACTS OR CONDUCT OF THE COMMISSION OR ITS OFFICIALS AND AGENTS IN CONNECTION WITH PROJECTS FINANCED BY THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND MIGHT CAUSE DAMAGE TO THIRD PARTIES.

2 . HAVING REGARD TO THE RESPONSIBILITIES CONFERRED ON IT IN THE INTEREST OF THE COMMUNITY BY ARTICLES 121 AND 123 OF THE SECOND ACP-EEC CONVENTION , THE COMMISSION IS UNDER A DUTY , IN ORDER TO ENSURE THE ECONOMICAL ADMINISTRATION OF THE RESOURCES OF THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND , TO MAKE CERTAIN , BEFORE APPROVING THE AWARD OF A CONTRACT FINANCED BY THAT FUND , THAT THE TENDER ACCEPTED IS THE LOWEST , IS ECONOMICALLY THE MOST ADVANTAGEOUS AND DOES NOT EXCEED THE SUM EARMARKED FOR THE CONTRACT.

APPLICATION PRIMARILY FOR A DECLARATION THAT THE COMMISSION DECISION DEPRIVING THE APPLICANTS OF THE AWARD OF A PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACT FINANCED BY THE FIFTH EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND IS VOID , AND , SECONDARILY , FOR A DECLARATION THAT THE COMMISSION ILLEGALLY FAILED TO ACT , AND FOR AN ORDER THAT THE COMMISSION SHOULD COMPENSATE THE APPLICANTS FOR THE DAMAGE CAUSED TO THEM BY ITS DECISION , ITS FAILURE TO ACT OR ITS ILLEGAL CONDUCT.

COSTS

50 UNDER ARTICLE 69 (3) OF THE RULES OF PROCEDURE THE COURT MAY , WHERE THE CIRCUMSTANCES ARE EXCEPTIONAL , ORDER THAT THE PARTIES BEAR THEIR OWN COSTS. IN THIS CASE IT SHOULD BE BORNE IN MIND THAT EVEN IF IT COULD NOT LEGALLY BIND THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND , THE SIGNATURE BY THE COMMISSION ' S LOCAL DELEGATE OF THE MINUTES OF THE MEETING OF THE TENDER COMMITTEE WITHOUT RESERVE OR QUALIFICATION LED THE APPLICANTS TO BELIEVE THAT THEIR LEGAL POSITION WAS THAT WHICH THEY HAVE ASSERTED BEFORE THE COURT. IT THEREFORE APPEARS FAIR AND REASONABLE TO ORDER THAT THE PARTIES BEAR THEIR OWN COSTS.

ON THOSE GROUNDS ,

THE COURT (FOURTH CHAMBER)

HEREBY :

(1) DISMISSES THE APPLICATION MADE BY THE APPLICANTS UNDER ARTICLE 91 OF THE RULES OF PROCEDURE FOR AN ORDER REQUIRING THE COMMISSION TO PRODUCE CERTAIN DOCUMENTS ;

(2)DISMISSES THE APPLICATION AS INADMISSIBLE IN SO FAR AS IT IS BASED ON ARTICLES 173 AND 175 OF THE EEC TREATY ;

(3)DISMISSES THE APPLICATION AS UNFOUNDED IN SO FAR AS IT IS BASED ON ARTICLE 178 AND THE SECOND PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 215 OF THE EEC TREATY ;

(4)ORDERS THE PARTIES TO PAY THEIR OWN COSTS.

MURATORI E CEMENTISTI , OF RAVENNA , ITALY , COOPERATIVA REGGIANA COSTRUZIONI , OF REGGIO EMILIA , ITALY , AND COOPERATIVA MURATORI E BRACCIANTI , OF CARPI , MODENA , ITALY , ACTING AS A CONSORTIUM , BROUGHT AN ACTION UNDER ARTICLES 173 , 175 AND 178 AND THE SECOND PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 215 OF THE EEC TREATY FOR THE ANNULMENT OF A COMMISSION DECISION THE EFFECT OF WHICH WAS TO DEPRIVE THE APPLICANTS OF THE AWARD OF A CONTRACT FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF A HYDRO-ELECTRIC DAM IN ETHIOPIA , THE AMARTI RIVER DIVERSION PROJECT , FINANCED BY THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND AND CARRIED OUT UNDER THE PROVISIONS ON FINANCIAL AND TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION OF THE SECOND ACP-EEC CONVENTION , SIGNED AT LOME ON 31 OCTOBER 1979 AND APPROVED BY COUNCIL REGULATION (EEC) NO 3225/80 OF 25 NOVEMBER 1980 (OFFICIAL JOURNAL 1980 , L 347 , P. 1 ; HEREINAFTER REFERRED TO AS ' THE CONVENTION '). IN THE ALTERNATIVE , THE APPLICANTS SEEK A DECLARATION THAT THE COMMISSION FAILED TO ACT , SHOULD IT BE FOUND THAT IT FAILED TO EXERCISE ITS POWERS IN THE CONTEXT OF THE TENDER PROCEDURE , GOVERNED BY TITLE VII OF THE CONVENTION. IN THE EVENT THAT IT IS FOUND TO BE NO LONGER POSSIBLE TO AWARD THE CONTRACT TO THE APPLICANTS , THEY CLAIM DAMAGES FOR THE LOSS THEREBY CAUSED TO THEM.

2 IT APPEARS FROM THE DOCUMENTS BEFORE THE COURT THAT IN DECEMBER 1981 THE ETHIOPIAN GOVERNMENT , ACTING THROUGH THE INTERMEDIARY OF THE ETHIOPIAN ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER AUTHORITY (HEREINAFTER REFERRED TO AS ' EELPA '), AS ' EMPLOYER ' , ISSUED AN INVITATION TO TENDER IN RESPECT OF CONSTRUCTION WORK ON THE AMARTI RIVER DIVERSION , CONSISTING OF THE DIVERSION OF THAT RIVER , ON THE CENTRAL PLATEAU ABOUT 190 KILOMETRES NORTH-WEST OF ADDIS ABABA , TOWARDS THE EXISTING FINCHAA RESERVOIR. THE INVITATION TO TENDER , BASED ON DOCUMENTS PUBLISHED UNDER THE TITLE ' NOTES ON DOCUMENTS FOR CIVIL ENGINEERING CONTRACTS ' BY THE INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF CONSULTING ENGINEERS (FIDIC), WHOSE HEADQUARTERS IS IN LAUSANNE , WAS PUBLISHED UNDER NO 1824 IN SUPPLEMENT TO THE OFFICIAL JOURNAL OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES , S 132 OF 14 JULY 1982 , PAGE 3. THE WORKS ARE FINANCED BY THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND AS PART OF ITS ACTION TO PROMOTE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT .

3 UNDER THE CONDITIONS OF TENDER , TENDERERS WERE REQUIRED TO DEMONSTRATE THEIR TECHNICAL EXPERIENCE AND COMPETENCE TO UNDERTAKE THE WORKS , THE MAJOR FACTOR BEING SUCCESSFUL EXECUTION , IN THE CAPACITY OF PRIME CONTRACTOR AND IN RECENT YEARS , OF A PROJECT OR PROJECTS CONTAINING ELEMENTS SIMILAR IN NATURE AND AT LEAST EQUAL IN SCALE TO THOSE SPECIFIED IN THE PROJECT (CLAUSE IT-1 , 4 (C)). THE TENDERERS WERE ALSO REQUIRED TO DEMONSTRATE THEIR CURRENT FINANCIAL CAPABILITY (CLAUSE IT-1 , 4 (D)).

4 THE QUALIFICATIONS OF THE TENDERERS WERE TO BE EXAMINED BY A TENDER COMMITTEE APPOINTED BY THE EMPLOYER ; THAT COMMITTEE WAS ASSISTED BY THE EEC DELEGATE AT ADDIS ABABA AND BY A CONSULTING ENGINEER (CLAUSE IT-1 , 4 , THIRD PARAGRAPH).

5 WITH REGARD TO THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT IT WAS STATED IN THE CONDITIONS OF TENDER THAT THE EMPLOYER DID NOT BIND ITSELF TO AWARD THE CONTRACT TO THE LOWEST TENDERER , BUT WOULD TAKE INTO CAREFUL CONSIDERATION THE WHOLE OF THE INFORMATION GIVEN IN THE TENDER AND IN ITS APPENDICES. IT WAS ADDED THAT THE TENDERER CHOSEN WOULD BE INFORMED THAT HIS OFFER HAS BEEN ACCEPTED AND INVITED TO SEND TO ADDIS ABABA A REPRESENTATIVE WITH A FULL POWER OF ATTORNEY FOR THE PURPOSE OF SIGNING THE CONTRACT (CLAUSE

6 THE FINAL DATE SET FOR THE SUBMISSION OF TENDERS WAS 5 NOVEMBER 1982 (SEE THE CORRIGENDUM TO THE INVITATION TO TENDER PUBLISHED IN OFFICIAL JOURNAL , S 193 OF 6 OCTOBER 1982 , P.3), AND ON THAT DATE EELPA HAD RECEIVED THREE OFFERS , SUBMITTED BY THE ITALIAN CONSORTIUM , BY RUSH & TOMPKINS BV , A COMPANY INCORPORATED UNDER NETHERLANDS LAW , AND BY BOSKALIS WESTMINSTER-BARESEL , A COMPANY INCORPORATED UNDER ENGLISH LAW.

7 IT SHOULD BE NOTED THAT THE TENDER OF RUSH & TOMPKINS BV WAS SUBMITTED ONLY IN THE FORM OF A TELEX COMMUNICATION , SINCE THE DESPATCH OF THE TENDER DOCUMENTS TO ADDIS ABABA HAD BEEN DELAYED BECAUSE OF DIFFICULTIES BEYOND THE CONTROL OF THE TENDERER. THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES ACCEPTED THAT THE CIRCUMSTANCES AMOUNTED TO A CASE OF FORCE MAJEURE AND THAT THE TENDER COULD THEREFORE BE CONSIDERED .

8 WHEN THE TENDERS WERE OPENED ON 8 NOVEMBER 1982 THE FOLLOWING TENDERS (EXPRESSED IN MILLIONS OF ECU) WERE ESTABLISHED :

1) RUSH & TOMPKINS BV : 24.3

2) ITALIAN CONSORTIUM : 26.7

3) BOSKALIS WESTMINSTER-BARESEL : 28.2

9 THE TENDER DOCUMENTS WERE THEN EXAMINED BY THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES , IN CONSULTATION WITH KAMPSAX , A DANISH FIRM OF CONSULTING ENGINEERS. IT SHOULD BE NOTED THAT KAMPSAX WAS CHOSEN BY THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES , ALTHOUGH ITS FEES WERE TO BE PAID BY THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND. THE COMMISSION HAS EMPHASIZED THAT ALTHOUGH IT ENTERED INTO CONTACT WITH KAMPSAX THAT FIRM ' S TASK WAS TO ADVISE THE ETHIOPIAN GOVERNMENT AND ITS SUCCESSIVE ASSESSMENTS OF THE TENDERS COULD NOT BIND THE COMMISSION.

10 ON 24 FEBRUARY 1983 THE TENDER COMMITTEE PROVIDED FOR IN THE CONDITIONS OF TENDER MET IN ADDIS ABABA , IN THE PRESENCE OF THE COMMISSION ' S LOCAL DELEGATE , TO EXAMINE THE REPORT OF KAMPSAX ON THE TENDERS SUBMITTED. WITH THE AGREEMENT OF THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES THE MINUTES OF THAT MEETING WERE PRODUCED TO THE COURT. IT APPEARS FROM THOSE MINUTES THAT THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE HAD RECEIVED IN ADVANCE A DRAFT REPORT AND A FINAL REPORT FROM KAMPSAX , AND THAT AT THE LAST MOMENT THE CONSULTANTS HAD MADE A FURTHER SLIGHT MODIFICATION TO THEIR CONCLUSIONS , AFTER CONSIDERING ADDITIONAL DOCUMENTS SUBMITTED BY RUSH & TOMPKINS BV. THE MINUTES SHOW THAT THE COMMITTEE WAS UNANIMOUS IN REJECTING THE TENDER OF RUSH & TOMPKINS BV , ALTHOUGH IT WAS THE MOST FAVOURABLE , ON THE GROUND OF A LACK OF TECHNICAL AND FINANCIAL CAPABILITY. THE COMMITTEE THEREFORE RECOMMENDED THAT THE SECOND TENDERER , THE ITALIAN CONSORTIUM , BE INVITED TO ATTEND IN ORDER TO NEGOTIATE THE CONTRACT. THE COMMITTEE ALSO DECIDED THAT SHOULD THE NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE ITALIAN CONSORTIUM FAIL , BOSKALIS WESTMINSTER-BARESEL SHOULD BE CONSIDERED THE SECOND QUALIFIED TENDERER.

11 ON 28 FEBRUARY 1983 THE FINAL REPORT OF KAMPSAX WAS TRANSMITTED BY THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES TO THE COMMISSION , IN THE PERSON OF THE CHIEF AUTHORIZING OFFICER OF THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND. IMMEDIATELY AFTERWARDS , ON 3 MARCH , EELPA SENT A TELEX COMMUNICATION TO THE ITALIAN CONSORTIUM INVITING

IT TO ATTEND IN ADDIS ABABA ON 14 MARCH TO BEGIN NEGOTIATIONS FOR THE CONCLUSION OF THE CONTRACT. WHEN , HOWEVER , THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE CONSORTIUM ARRIVED AT THE HEAD OFFICE OF EELPA ON THE DATE INDICATED , THEY WERE NOT ABLE TO MEET EELPA OFFICIALS. THE FOLLOWING DAY , 15 MARCH 1983 , THEY WERE INFORMED BY THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES THAT THE NEGOTIATIONS COULD NOT TAKE PLACE SINCE THE COMMISSION HAD REQUESTED THAT NEGOTIATIONS BE OPENED WITH RUSH & TOMPKINS BV.

12 IT APPEARS FROM THE DOCUMENTS BEFORE THE COURT THAT WHEN THE COMMISSION RECEIVED THE REPORT OF THE TENDER COMMITTEE IT DISAGREED WITH THE REJECTION OF THE LOWEST OFFER AND ASKED THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES AND , THROUGH THEM , KAMPSAX TO RECONSIDER THE QUESTION OF THE LACK OF TECHNICAL AND FINANCIAL QUALIFICATIONS OF RUSH & TOMPKINS BV . IN THE COURSE OF THAT REVIEW DIRECT CONTACTS TOOK PLACE BETWEEN THE COMMISSION AND KAMPSAX. DURING THE SAME PERIOD THE ITALIAN CONSORTIUM MADE REPRESENTATIONS TO THE COMMISSION ON SEVERAL OCCASIONS , AND WAS INFORMED ORALLY OF THE REASONS FOR THE COMMISSION ' S ACTION .

13 THE COMMISSION STATES THAT IN THE COURSE OF THOSE EFFORTS TO CLARIFY THE MATTER IT ESTABLISHED THAT RUSH & TOMPKINS BV WAS IN FACT A SUBSIDIARY OF AN ENGLISH GROUP , RUSH & TOMPKINS GROUP PLC , WHICH , TAKEN AS A GROUP , APPEARED TO IT TO HAVE THE TECHNICAL AND FINANCIAL CAPABILITIES NECESSARY FOR A PROJECT OF THIS SIZE. IN ITS SUCCESSIVE STATEMENTS KAMPSAX GRADUALLY CHANGED ITS VIEW AND FINALLY AGREED THAT , TAKING INTO ACCOUNT THE GUARANTEES PROVIDED BY ITS RELATIONSHIP WITH THE RUSH & TOMPKINS GROUP , MANIFESTED BY AN EXPRESS AND UNCONDITIONAL WRITTEN GUARANTEE (CORPORATE GUARANTEE) DATED 22 APRIL 1983 AND REPEATED IN IDENTICAL TERMS ON 21 JUNE 1983 , RUSH & TOMPKINS BV DID IN FACT POSSESS THE TECHNICAL AND FINANCIAL CAPABILITIES REQUIRED FOR THE COMPLETION OF THE PROJECT.

14 AT FIRST , THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES FOUND IT DIFFICULT TO AGREE WITH THAT ASSESSMENT , AS IS INDICATED BY A TELEX COMMUNICATION OF 25 APRIL 1983 SENT TO THE ITALIAN CONSORTIUM IN WHICH THEY STATED THAT PRESSURE HAD BEEN BROUGHT TO BEAR ON THEM BY THE COMMISSION.

15 ON 6 JUNE 1983 KAMPSAX SUBMITTED A FINAL REPORT RECOMMENDING , THIS TIME , THAT THE CONTRACT SHOULD BE AWARDED TO RUSH & TOMPKINS BV , SUPPORTED BY RUSH & TOMPKINS GROUP PLC. THAT REPORT WAS IMMEDIATELY ACCEPTED BY THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES , IN THE PERSON OF THE NATIONAL AUTHORIZING OFFICER. ON 10 JUNE 1983 THE CHIEF AUTHORIZING OFFICER OF THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND GAVE HIS AGREEMENT , AND THE CONTRACT BETWEEN THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES AND RUSH & TOMPKINS BV WAS SIGNED ON 6 JULY 1983 AND ENDORSED BY THE COMMISSION ' S DELEGATE ON THE AUTHORITY OF THE CHIEF AUTHORIZING OFFICER .

16 IN A TELEX COMMUNICATION OF 22 JUNE 1983 EELPA INFORMED THE ITALIAN CONSORTIUM THAT AS A RESULT OF DISCUSSIONS WITH KAMPSAX AND THE COMMISSION IT WAS NOW SATISFIED THAT THE LOWEST TENDERER , RUSH & TOMPKINS BV , HAD ALL THE QUALIFICATIONS REQUIRED IN ORDER TO UNDERTAKE THE AMARTI PROJECT. IT THEREFORE ASKED THE ITALIAN CONSORTIUM NOT TO PURSUE THE MATTER.

17 ON 24 JUNE 1983 THE ITALIAN CONSORTIUM BROUGHT THIS ACTION , TOGETHER WITH AN APPLICATION FOR THE ADOPTION OF INTERIM MEASURES. THAT APPLICATION RESULTED IN AN ORDER OF 5 AUGUST 1983 WHICH EXPRESSED DOUBTS WITH REGARD

TO THE REGULARITY OF THE PROCEDURE BUT DID NOT GRANT THE MEASURES REQUESTED ((1983) ECR 2583).

18 TWO ISSUES OF A PRELIMINARY NATURE WERE RAISED BY THE PARTIES DURING THE PROCEEDINGS :

IN ITS APPLICATION THE APPLICANT CONSORTIUM REQUESTED THE PRODUCTION BY THE COMMISSION OF A NUMBER OF DOCUMENTS. SINCE THE COMMISSION DID NOT ACCEDE TO THAT REQUEST , EXCEPT IN REGARD TO CERTAIN DOCUMENTS REFERRED TO BELOW , THAT CLAIM WAS REPEATED DURING THE PROCEEDINGS , IN THE FORM OF AN INTERLOCUTORY APPLICATION UNDER ARTICLE 91 OF THE RULES OF PROCEDURE , THEN IN ITS REPLY AND AT THE HEARING ;

FOR ITS PART , THE COMMISSION RAISED AN OBJECTION OF INADMISSIBILITY WITH REGARD BOTH TO THE ACTION FOR ANNULMENT AND THE ACTION FOR FAILURE TO ACT AND TO THE ACTION FOR DAMAGES AND THE INTERLOCUTORY APPLICATION FOR THE PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS.

19 THOSE ISSUES MUST BE RESOLVED BEFORE THE SUBSTANCE OF THE CASE IS DEALT WITH .

THE PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

20 IT APPEARS FROM THE CLAIMS OF THE APPLICANTS THAT THEY WISH TO HAVE ACCESS TO THREE SETS OF DOCUMENTS WHICH MAY CONTAIN INFORMATION RELEVANT TO THEIR ACTION : THE TENDER DOCUMENTS OF RUSH & TOMPKINS , WHICH ARE IN THE POSSESSION OF THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES ; THE REPORTS DRAWN UP BY KAMPSAX FOR THOSE AUTHORITIES ; FINALLY , THE COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN THE COMMISSION ON THE ONE HAND AND THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES AND KAMPSAX ON THE OTHER.

21 DURING THE PROCEEDINGS THE COMMISSION VOLUNTARILY PRODUCED THE FOLLOWING DOCUMENTS , HAVING FIRST OBTAINED THE AGREEMENT OF THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES OR OF RUSH & TOMPKINS BV AS APPROPRIATE :

A SUMMARY OF THE CONTENTS OF APPENDIX A CONCERNING THE QUALIFICATIONS OF THE TENDERER , ANNEXED TO THE TENDER OF RUSH & TOMPKINS BV ;

A WRITTEN GUARANTEE OF 22 APRIL 1983 PROVIDED TO EELPA BY THE RUSH & TOMPKINS GROUP PLC , IN FAVOUR OF RUSH & TOMPKINS BV , REPLACED BY THAT OF 21 JUNE 1983 ;

THE MINUTES OF THE MEETING OF THE TENDER COMMITTEE AT ADDIS ABABA ON 24 FEBRUARY 1983.

THE AUTHENTICITY OF THOSE DOCUMENTS IS NOT DISPUTED.

22 ON 23 DECEMBER 1983 THE APPLICANTS MADE AN APPLICATION UNDER ARTICLE 91 (1) OF THE RULES OF PROCEDURE SEEKING AN ORDER FOR THE PRODUCTION OF ALL THE OTHER DOCUMENTS REQUESTED BY THEM IN THEIR MAIN APPLICATION .

23 IN ITS OBSERVATIONS SUBMITTED PURSUANT TO ARTICLE 91 (2) THE COMMISSION ARGUES THAT A CLAIM FOR THE PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS DOES NOT CONSTITUTE A ' PRELIMINARY OBJECTION ' OR A ' PROCEDURAL ISSUE ' WITHIN THE MEANING OF THE PROVISION REFERRED TO. SUCH A CLAIM OVERLAPS WITH THE NORMAL EXAMINATION OF THE CASE AS PROVIDED FOR IN ARTICLE 45 ET SEQ. OF THE RULES OF PROCEDURE AND IS INADMISSIBLE.

24 WITH REGARD TO THE SUBSTANCE OF THE REQUESTS MADE , THE COMMISSION STATES THAT THE APPLICANTS ARE SEEKING TO BECOME PRIVY TO ALL THE DOCUMENTS IN THE COMMISSION ' S POSSESSION AND ARE THUS ATTEMPTING TO ALTER THE PRINCIPLES REGARDING THE BURDEN OF PROOF , INASMUCH AS IT IS FOR EACH PARTY TO PROVE HIS ALLEGATIONS WITHOUT CLAIMING A RIGHT TO ' FISH ' FOR ARGUMENTS IN HIS ADVERSARY ' S FILES . THE COMMISSION ALSO DRAWS ATTENTION TO THE CONFIDENTIAL NATURE OF THE DOCUMENTS REQUESTED BY THE APPLICANTS INASMUCH AS THEY RELATE TO A TENDER PROCEDURE FOR WHICH THE ACP STATE CONCERNED WAS RESPONSIBLE AND TO COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN THE COMMISSION AND ITS LOCAL REPRESENTATIVE ON THE ONE HAND AND THE AUTHORITIES OF A NON-MEMBER COUNTRY ON THE OTHER .

25 BY ORDER OF 29 FEBRUARY 1984 THE COURT DECIDED TO RESERVE UNTIL FINAL JUDGMENT ITS DECISION ON THE PROCEDURAL ISSUE. DURING ITS EXAMINATION OF THE CASE IT DID NOT REQUIRE THE PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS OTHER THAN THOSE MENTIONED ABOVE WHICH WERE PROVIDED TO IT BY THE COMMISSION . IN THE COURSE OF THAT EXAMINATION IT BECAME APPARENT THAT ONCE THE COMMISSION HAD SUBMITTED CERTAIN DOCUMENTS VOLUNTARILY THE COURT WAS IN POSSESSION OF ALL THE INFORMATION NECESSARY FOR THE RESOLUTION OF THE CASE , AS WILL BECOME APPARENT FROM THE CONSIDERATIONS SET OUT BELOW REGARDING THE ADMISSIBILITY AND THE SUBSTANCE OF THE APPLICATION. THE REPEATED CLAIMS OF THE APPLICANTS MUST THEREFORE BE DISMISSED AS IRRELEVANT , AND IT IS NOT NECESSARY TO CONSIDER THE QUESTION WHETHER THE DOCUMENTS TO WHICH THEY WISH TO HAVE ACCESS ARE CONFIDENTIAL IN NATURE.

ADMISSIBILITY

26 THE COMMISSION CHALLENGES THE JURISDICTION OF THE COURT TO HEAR ACTIONS REGARDING INVITATIONS TO TENDER IN EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND PROJECTS . ACCORDING TO THE COMMISSION , IT IS THE ACP STATE CONCERNED WHICH IS RESPONSIBLE FOR PREPARING , NEGOTIATING AND CONCLUDING CONTRACTS IN RELATION TO A PARTICULAR PROJECT. IT FOLLOWS THAT THE DIRECT INTERLOCUTOR OF THE TENDERERS IS THE ACP STATE AND NOT THE COMMISSION . IT IS THAT STATE WHICH TAKES THE VARIOUS DECISIONS REQUIRED IN THE COURSE OF THE PROCEEDINGS , INCLUDING THE FINAL DECISION TO AWARD THE CONTRACT. ANY DISPUTE REGARDING THE AWARD OF A CONTRACT IS NECESSARILY A DISPUTE BETWEEN THE TENDERER AND THE ACP STATE AND MUST THEREFORE BE RESOLVED BY ARBITRATION IN ACCORDANCE WITH ARTICLE 132 (1) OF THE CONVENTION , WHICH APPLIES EQUALLY TO DISPUTES ARISING BETWEEN AN ACP STATE AND AN UNSUCCESSFUL TENDERER. IN THE ABSENCE OF ANY ACT OF THE COMMISSION ADDRESSED TO THE APPLICANTS THE COURT THEREFORE HAS NO JURISDICTION IN THE MATTER. ACCORDING TO THE COMMISSION BOTH THE CLAIM FOR ANNULMENT AND THE CLAIM FOR DAMAGES ARE INADMISSIBLE.

27 THE APPLICANTS DENY THAT RECOURSE TO ARBITRATION IS AN APPROPRIATE SOLUTION , AT LEAST IN THE CASE OF AN UNSUCCESSFUL TENDERER . THEY CONSIDER THAT THE COMMISSION CANNOT ESCAPE FROM ITS OBLIGATION TO ACCOUNT BEFORE THE COURT OF JUSTICE FOR ITS CONDUCT IN CARRYING OUT THE FUNCTIONS ATTRIBUTED TO IT IN THE CONTEXT OF THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND.

28 IN SO FAR AS THE APPLICATION IS BASED ON ARTICLES 173 AND 175 OF THE EEC TREATY REFERENCE SHOULD BE MADE TO THE CONSIDERATIONS SET OUT IN THE JUDGMENT OF 10 JULY 1984 (CASE 126/83 , STS V COMMISSION , (1984) ECR 2769), WHERE THE COURT

ANALYSED IN THE FOLLOWING TERMS THE RELATIONSHIPS WHICH ARISE IN CONNECTION WITH THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS FINANCED BY THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND BETWEEN THE COMMISSION AND THE ACP STATE CONCERNED ON THE ONE HAND AND BETWEEN THAT STATE AND UNDERTAKINGS WHICH SUBMIT TENDERS OR ARE AWARDED CONTRACTS ON THE OTHER :

' CONTRACTS FINANCED BY THE FUND REMAIN NATIONAL CONTRACTS WHICH THE AUTHORITIES OF EACH ACP STATE HAVE THE POWER TO PREPARE , NEGOTIATE AND CONCLUDE. IT IS FOR THE COMMISSION , ON THE OTHER HAND , TO ADOPT ON BEHALF OF THE COMMUNITY THE FINANCING DECISIONS REQUIRED FOR THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE PROJECTS AND PROGRAMMES DECIDED UPON IN AGREEMENT WITH THE ACP STATES.

SUCH A DIVISION OF POWERS REQUIRES CLOSE COLLABORATION BETWEEN THE COMMISSION AND THE ACP STATE CONCERNED IN THE PROCEDURE FOR PLACING PUBLIC CONTRACTS FINANCED BY THE FUND , AND ACCORDING TO THE GENERAL SCHEME OF THE CONVENTION SUCH COLLABORATION IS RESTRICTED TO THE TWO PARTNERS PRESENT AT THE TIME.... IT IS THUS CLEAR THAT THE MEASURES ADOPTED BY THE COMMISSION ' S REPRESENTATIVES DURING THAT PROCEDURE , WHETHER APPROVALS OR REFUSALS TO APPROVE , ENDORSEMENTS OR REFUSALS TO ENDORSE , ARE SOLELY INTENDED TO ESTABLISH WHETHER OR NOT THE CONDITIONS FOR COMMUNITY FINANCING ARE MET. THEY ARE NOT INTENDED TO INTERFERE WITH THE PRINCIPLE THAT THE CONTRACTS IN QUESTION REMAIN NATIONAL CONTRACTS WHICH THE ACP STATES ALONE ARE RESPONSIBLE FOR PREPARING , NEGOTIATING AND CONCLUDING , AND THEY CANNOT HAVE THAT EFFECT . . .. FOR THEIR PART , UNDERTAKINGS WHICH SUBMIT TENDERS FOR OR ARE AWARDED THE CONTRACTS IN QUESTION REMAIN OUTSIDE THE EXCLUSIVE DEALINGS CONDUCTED ON THIS MATTER BETWEEN THE COMMISSION AND THE ACP STATES ; THE MEASURES ADOPTED BY THE COMMISSION ' S REPRESENTATIVES IN THE COURSE OF THE PROCEDURE FOR THE PLACING OR IMPLEMENTATION OF THOSE CONTRACTS CANNOT BE REGARDED AS BEING ADDRESSED TO THEM AND THEY CANNOT CLAIM THAT THOSE MEASURES ARE ' ' OF DIRECT CONCERN ' TO THEM WITHIN THE MEANING OF THE SECOND PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 173 OF THE EEC TREATY . SUCH UNDERTAKINGS HAVE LEGAL RELATIONS ONLY WITH THE ACP STATE WHICH IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THE CONTRACT , AND MEASURES ADOPTED BY THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE COMMISSION CANNOT SUBSTITUTE IN RELATION TO THEM A COMMUNITY DECISION FOR THE DECISION OF THE ACP STATE , WHICH HAS SOLE POWER TO CONCLUDE AND SIGN THAT CONTRACT. '

29 IT FOLLOWS FROM THOSE CONSIDERATIONS THAT IN THIS CASE THERE IS NO MEASURE CAPABLE OF BEING THE SUBJECT OF PROCEEDINGS UNDER ARTICLE 173 OF THE TREATY ; NOR CAN IT BE SAID THAT THERE IS A FAILURE TO ADOPT SUCH A MEASURE IN REGARD TO THE APPLICANTS IN RESPECT OF WHICH AN ACTION MAY BE BROUGHT UNDER ARTICLE 175. AS A RESULT IT ALSO FOLLOWS THAT THE APPLICANT ' S CLAIMS ARE UNFOUNDED IN SO FAR AS THEY SEEK TO OBTAIN THE PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS WHICH MIGHT CONSTITUTE EVIDENCE OF AN ACT OR FAILURE TO ACT ON THE PART OF THE COMMISSION IN RESPECT OF WHICH AN ACTION MIGHT LIE.

30 THE APPLICATION IS THEREFORE INADMISSIBLE IN SO FAR AS IT IS BASED ON ARTICLES 173 AND 175 OF THE TREATY.

31 HOWEVER , THE OBJECTION OF INADMISSIBILITY RAISED BY THE COMMISSION MUST BE REJECTED IN SO FAR AS IT REFERS TO THE ACTION FOR DAMAGES BROUGHT PURSUANT TO ARTICLE 178 AND THE SECOND PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 215 OF THE TREATY. IT WOULD BE WRONG TO DISMISS THE POSSIBILITY THAT ACTS OR CONDUCT OF THE COMMISSION OR ITS OFFICIALS AND AGENTS IN CONNEXION WITH PROJECTS FINANCED BY THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND MIGHT CAUSE DAMAGE TO THIRD PARTIES. ANY PERSON WHO CLAIMS TO HAVE BEEN INJURED BY SUCH ACTS OR CONDUCT MUST THEREFORE HAVE THE POSSIBILITY OF BRINGING AN ACTION , IF HE IS ABLE TO ESTABLISH LIABILITY , THAT IS , THE EXISTENCE OF DAMAGE CAUSED BY AN ILLEGAL ACT OR BY ILLEGAL CONDUCT ON THE PART OF THE COMMUNITY.

THE ACTION FOR DAMAGES

32 IN SUBSTANCE THE APPLICANTS COMPLAIN THAT BY MAKING REPRESENTATIONS TO THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES AND THE CONSULTING ENGINEERS THE COMMISSION DEPRIVED THEM OF THEIR STATUS OF ' LOWEST QUALIFIED TENDERER ' , RECOGNIZED BY THE TENDER COMMITTEE IN ITS MEETING OF 24 FEBRUARY 1983 , AND GAVE PREFERENCE TO A TENDERER , RUSH & TOMPKINS BV , WHICH HAD NOT ESTABLISHED ITS TECHNICAL AND FINANCIAL CAPABILITY. IN PARTICULAR THE APPLICANTS COMPLAIN THAT THE COMMISSION PERMITTED THE ALTERATION OF THE TENDER DOCUMENTS BY ALLOWING RUSH & TOMPKINS , AFTER THE DATE ON WHICH THE TENDERS WERE OPENED , TO SUBMIT GUARANTEES PROVIDED BY THE RUSH & TOMPKINS GROUP PLC , WHICH IS INCONSISTENT WITH NORMAL PRACTICE IN INTERNATIONAL TENDERS AND IS CONTRARY TO THE PRINCIPLE OF EQUALITY OF TENDERERS .

33 IN VIEW OF THE EXTREMELY SUMMARY NATURE OF THE STATEMENT OF FACTS AND ARGUMENTS PRESENTED IN THIS REGARD BY THE APPLICANTS DURING THE WRITTEN PROCEDURE THE COURT ASKED THEM TO PRESENT MORE DETAILED ARGUMENT ON THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS DURING THE ORAL PROCEDURE :

' AS REGARDS THE CLAIM FOR DAMAGES , THE APPLICANTS ARE ASKED TO SPECIFY WHAT THEY CONSIDER TO BE THE COMMISSION ' S CONDUCT WHICH GAVE RISE TO THE DAMAGE WHICH THEY CLAIM TO HAVE SUFFERED AND WHAT ARE THE CIRCUMSTANCES WHICH HAVE LED THEM TO THE VIEW THAT THE COMMISSION ' S CONDUCT IS ILLEGAL.

IN THAT CONTEXT THE TWO PARTIES ARE ASKED TO GIVE PARTICULAR CONSIDERATION TO THE QUESTION WHETHER THE INVESTIGATIONS UNDERTAKEN BY THE COMMISSION FOLLOWING THE FIRST ASSESSMENT MADE BY THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES OF THE TECHNICAL AND FINANCIAL QUALIFICATIONS OF THE LOWEST TENDERER ARE COMPATIBLE WITH INTERNATIONALLY ACCEPTED STANDARDS IN THE MATTER AND ESPECIALLY WITH CLAUSE 12 OF THE INSTRUCTIONS TO TENDERERS IN THE NOTES ON DOCUMENTS FOR CIVIL ENGINEERING CONTRACTS OF THE INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION FOR CONSULTING ENGINEERS (FIDIC). '

34 IT SHOULD NOTED THAT AT THE HEARING THE APPLICANTS ONLY REPLIED TO THE SECOND QUESTION. IN THAT REGARD THEY STATED THAT TO ALLOW THE EX POST FACTO INTRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS SUCH AS THE ' CORPORATE GUARANTEE ' SUBMITTED BY RUSH & TOMPKINS BV WENT BEYOND THE SCOPE OF THE ' CLARIFICATIONS ' PERMITTED UNDER CLAUSE 12 OF THE FIDIC DOCUMENT AFTER THE OPENING OF A TENDER. ON THAT ISSUE THEY SUBMITTED EXPERTS ' OPINIONS FROM WHICH THE FOLLOWING POINTS MAY BE DRAWN.

35 A FIRST OPINION WAS DRAWN UP ON 6 NOVEMBER 1984 BY MR MARK LITTMAN , QC , A SPECIALIST IN THE FIELD OF INTERNATIONAL CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS . AFTER OBSERVING THAT THE DUTCH SUBSIDIARY OF RUSH & TOMPKINS WAS PERMITTED TO SUBMIT A TECHNICAL AND FINANCIAL GUARANTEE BY ITS PARENT COMPANY AFTER THE OPENING OF TENDERS , HE DRAWS THE FOLLOWING CONCLUSIONS :

' THIS APPEARS TO ME TO BE IN CERTAIN RESPECTS CONTRARY TO THE PRINCIPLES INVOLVED IN GOOD INTERNATIONAL TENDERING PRACTICE :

(1) IT SEEMS TO INVOLVE THE SUBMISSION OF A NEW TENDER BY THE DUTCH SUBSIDIARY AFTER THE FINAL DATE FOR THE SUBMISSION OF THE TENDERS , I.E . A TENDER FOR THE FIRST TIME ACCOMPANIED BY A TECHNICAL AND FINANCIAL GUARANTEE. THE PRINCIPLES WHICH I HAVE OUTLINED ABOVE , NAMELY , EQUALITY AND AVOIDANCE OF DISCRIMINATION BETWEEN THE TENDERERS , WOULD SUGGEST THAT SUCH A TENDER SHOULD HAVE BEEN REJECTED

(2)ONE WOULD DOUBT WHETHER THE SUBSIDIARY BECAME QUALIFIED BY SUCH GUARANTEES . THE NECESSITY FOR THE GUARANTEES WOULD APPEAR TO SHOW THAT THE DUTCH TENDERER WAS UNQUALIFIED. IF A COMPANY WHICH WAS UNQUALIFIED COULD BECOME QUALIFIED BY THE ISSUE OF GUARANTEES THIS WOULD MEAN THAT A COMPANY WITH NO FINANCIAL RESOURCES AND WITHOUT ANY TECHNICAL EXPERTISE COULD SO QUALIFY.

(3)IN SUBSTANCE WHAT HAPPENED IS THAT A NEW TENDERER HAS BEEN ALLOWED TO TENDER AFTER THE FINAL DATE FOR THE SUBMISSION OF TENDERS , NAMELY THE PARENT COMPANY. THIS WOULD ALSO BE CONTRARY TO THE ABOVE PRINCIPLES . OF COURSE , THE TENDER IS PRESENTED AS BEING ONE MADE BY THE SUBSIDIARY AND NO DOUBT THE PARENT COMPANY HAD ITS OWN REASONS FOR MAKING THE SUBSIDIARY RATHER THAN THE PARENT THE TENDERER. HOWEVER , THE SUBSTANCE OF THE MATTER APPEARS TO ME AS STATED. '

36 A SECOND OPINION WAS DRAWN UP ON 11 NOVEMBER 1984 BY CYRIL ARTHUR GILLOTT , AN ENGINEER SPECIALIZING IN INTERNATIONAL CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS . AFTER ANALYSING THE SITUATION HE CONSIDERS THAT THE PROCEDURE FOLLOWED WAS NOT CONSISTENT WITH NORMAL PRACTICE. HE TAKES THE VIEW THAT IN REFERRING TO ' CLARIFICATIONS ' ITEM 12 OF THE FIDIC DOCUMENT IS PRIMARILY CONCERNED WITH ENSURING THAT AMBIGUITIES , OMISSIONS , MODIFICATIONS OF CLAUSES AND SPECIFICATIONS AND THE LIKE ARE EXPLAINED , MADE GOOD OR REMOVED SO THAT ALL TENDERS CAN BE COMPARED ON AN EQUAL BASIS. HE CONSIDERS THAT THE GUARANTEE BELATEDLY REQUESTED FROM THE RUSH & TOMPKINS GROUP PLC WENT WELL BEYOND THE SCOPE OF SUCH CLARIFICATIONS.

37 IN ITS DEFENCE THE COMMISSION ARGUES THAT IT CANNOT BE BOUND BY ANY ASSESSMENTS MADE BY THE TENDER COMMITTEE AT THE MEETING OF 24 FEBRUARY 1983 AND THAT IT WAS UNDER A DUTY TO REVIEW CRITICALLY THE PROPOSALS MADE BY THE COMMITTEE. IN THAT REGARD IT PROVIDES THE FOLLOWING DETAILS.

38 IN THE FIRST PLACE , THE COMMISSION POINTS OUT THAT THE MINUTES OF THE MEETING OF THE TENDER COMMITTEE ON 24 FEBRUARY 1983 WERE SENT FROM ADDIS ABABA ON 28 FEBRUARY AND WERE RECEIVED BY THE COMMISSION AT THE BEGINNING OF MARCH ; IT WAS ONLY THEN THAT ITS OFFICERS WERE IN A POSITION TO EXAMINE THE PAPERS. THE FACT THAT AT THE SAME TIME THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES HAD ALREADY INVITED THE APPLICANTS TO ATTEND FOR NEGOTIATIONS ON THE CONCLUSION OF THE CONTRACT THEREFORE SEEMS PREMATURE ON THEIR PART , AND CANNOT BIND THE AUTHORITIES OF THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND. IN THAT REGARD THE COMMISSION EMPHASIZES THAT ALTHOUGH ITS LOCAL REPRESENTATIVE SIGNED THE MINUTES OF THE MEETING HE WAS NOT A MEMBER OF THE TENDER COMMITTEE , WHICH WAS RESPONSIBLE ONLY TO THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES , AND THAT HE HAD NO POWER TO BIND THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND. SO LONG AS THE CHIEF AUTHORIZING OFFICER HAD NOT GIVEN HIS APPROVAL THE NATIONAL AUTHORIZING OFFICER AND

THE EMPLOYER HAD NO LEGAL BASIS FOR OPENING NEGOTIATIONS WITH ANY ONE OF THE TENDERERS.

39 ACCORDING TO THE COMMISSION , AFTER CAREFUL STUDY OF THE TENDER DOCUMENTS THE OFFICERS OF THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND DISCOVERED INCONSISTENCIES IN THE POSITION TAKEN BY KAMPSAX. THEY ALSO FOUND THAT THE DOCUMENTS CONTAINED EVIDENCE THAT RUSH & TOMPKINS BV WAS SUPPORTED BY THE RUSH & TOMPKINS GROUP PLC , WHOSE QUALIFICATIONS IN THE FIELD WERE INDISPUTABLE. THAT WAS THE CONCLUSION DRAWN FROM APPENDIX A TO THE TENDER OF RUSH & TOMPKINS BV , OF WHICH THE COMMISSION HAS SUBMITTED A SUMMARY TO THE COURT. THE COMMISSION THEREFORE CONCLUDED THAT THERE WAS NO VALID REASON TO EXCLUDE THE TENDERER WHICH HAD SUBMITTED THE MOST FAVOURABLE TENDER. KAMPSAX GRADUALLY CAME ROUND TO THAT POINT OF VIEW , AND IN AN AIDE-MEMOIRE OF 6 JUNE 1983 IT RECOMMENDED THAT THE CONTRACT SHOULD BE AWARDED TO RUSH & TOMPKINS BV SUPPORTED BY THE RUSH & TOMPKINS GROUP. THAT WAS ACCEPTED BY THE EMPLOYER AND THE CHIEF AUTHORIZING OFFICER GAVE HIS AGREEMENT ON 10 JUNE ; THE CONTRACT WAS EXECUTED BETWEEN THE EMPLOYER AND RUSH & TOMPKINS BV ON 6 JULY 1983 AND ENDORSED BY THE NATIONAL AUTHORIZING OFFICER AND THE COMMISSION DELEGATE ON THE AUTHORITY OF THE CHIEF AUTHORIZING OFFICER.

40 THE COMMISSION CONSIDERS THAT ITS ACTION IS JUSTIFIED BY THE PROVISIONS OF ARTICLES 121 (2) AND 123 (2) (C) OF THE CONVENTION. TO REQUEST CLARIFICATIONS , WITHIN THE SCOPE OF ITS RESPONSIBILITIES , ON THE POINTS INITIALLY DISPUTED , THAT IS , THE TECHNICAL AND FINANCIAL CAPABILITY OF THE LOWEST TENDERER , IS NORMAL PRACTICE IN SUCH MATTERS AND IS CONSISTENT WITH FIDIC STANDARDS. INASMUCH AS THE REQUEST FOR INFORMATION DID NOT RESULT IN ANY MODIFICATION OF THE AMOUNT OF THE TENDER THERE WAS NO DISCRIMINATION AGAINST THE OTHER TENDERERS . THE COMMISSION DENIES THAT IT EXERTED ANY PRESSURE WHATEVER ON THE EMPLOYER AND THE CONSULTANTS ; ITS ACTIONS DID NOT GO BEYOND THE DISCUSSION NORMAL IN SUCH MATTERS.

41 IN SUPPORT OF THIS LAST POINT THE COMMISSION SUBMITS THE REPORT OF AN EXPERT , K. N. DROBIG , A CONSULTANT TO THE FIRM W. S. ATKINS & PARTNERS , DRAWN UP ON 16 FEBRUARY 1984. IN THAT REPORT THE EXPERT RAISES THE QUESTION WHETHER THE EVALUATION PROCESS FOLLOWED BY THE EMPLOYER WAS REASONABLE AND IN CONFORMITY WITH GOOD PRACTICE. AFTER REFERRING TO THE FACT THAT IN THIS CASE AN OPEN TENDER PROCEDURE WITHOUT A PRE-QUALIFICATION STAGE HAD BEEN CHOSEN , SO THAT IT WAS NECESSARY TO EVALUATE THE CAPABILITY OF TENDERERS TO CARRY OUT THE WORKS AT THE SAME TIME AS ALL THE OTHER QUESTIONS RAISED IN THE TENDER PROCEDURE , HE MAKES THE FOLLOWING REMARKS :

' ON GROUNDS OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTABILITY IT IS NOT UNREASONABLE TO ARGUE THAT THE EMPLOYER WAS UNDER AN OBLIGATION TO CALL FOR FURTHER INFORMATION IF THERE WAS REASONABLE DOUBT PARTICULARLY BEARING IN MIND THAT A THIRD PARTY WAS FINANCING THE PROJECT. IN THE EVENT IT WOULD APPEAR THAT THERE WAS REASONABLE DOUBT. ACCORDINGLY , IT APPEARS TO ME THAT THE EMPLOYER SHOULD HAVE ASKED FOR SUCH CLARIFICATION INITIALLY (AND SUCH FURTHER CLARIFICATION AS WAS SUBSEQUENTLY CONSIDERED NECESSARY) AND THIS IS THE ACTION THAT WAS TAKEN. IN THE FINAL EVENT SOUND EVALUATION PROCEDURES WERE FOLLOWED AND THE ORIGINAL OBJECTION AGAINST RUSH & TOMPKINS BV APPEARED TO HAVE BEEN WITHDRAWN AS THE FURTHER INFORMATION BECAME AVAILABLE

AND THE SITUATION CLARIFIED. VIEWING THE SITUATION WITH HINDSIGHT IT APPEARS UNFORTUNATE THAT IN THE PROCESS SO MUCH DELAY OCCURRED. NEVERTHELESS , I BELIEVE THE RIGHT PROCEDURE WAS FOLLOWED ALBEIT THAT THE PROCESS WAS EXTENDED AS A CONSEQUENCE. '

42 THE COMMISSION THEREFORE CONSIDERS THAT ITS CONDUCT IN THE MATTER CANNOT BE HELD TO BE ILLEGAL AND THAT THE ESSENTIAL BASIS FOR ANY FINDING OF LIABILITY ON THE PART OF THE COMMUNITY IS THEREFORE LACKING

43 THE ARGUMENTS SUBMITTED BY THE PARTIES CALL FOR THE FOLLOWING OBSERVATIONS.

44 AS THE COURT EMPHASIZED IN ITS JUDGMENT OF 10 JULY 1984 , REFERRED TO ABOVE , THE COMMISSION IS RESPONSIBLE FOR PREPARING AND ADOPTING FINANCING DECISIONS ON PROJECTS AND PROGRAMMES. THE SATISFACTORY IMPLEMENTATION OF SUCH DECISIONS REQUIRES THAT THE COMPETENT AGENTS OF THE COMMISSION ENSURE , BEFORE ANY PAYMENTS ARE MADE OUT OF COMMUNITY FUNDS , THAT THE CONDITIONS FOR SUCH PAYMENTS ARE IN FACT FULFILLED. IN THAT CONNECTION , IT SHOULD BE NOTED IN PARTICULAR THAT ARTICLE 121 (2) OF THE CONVENTION CONFERS ON BOTH THE CHIEF AUTHORIZING OFFICER AND THE COMMISSION ' S DELEGATE THE TASK OF ENSURING EQUALITY OF CONDITIONS FOR PARTICIPATIONS IN INVITATIONS TO TENDER , THAT THERE IS NO DISCRIMINATION AND THAT THE TENDER SELECTED IS ECONOMICALLY THE MOST ADVANTAGEOUS. FOR THAT REASON ARTICLES 122 AND 123 OF THE CONVENTION LAY DOWN A PROCEDURE FOR THE PLACING OF CONTRACTS WHICH ENABLES THE COMMISSION ' S REPRESENTATIVES TO ENSURE THAT THOSE CONDITIONS ARE FULFILLED.

45 IT FOLLOWS FROM THE FOREGOING THAT THE DECISION OF THE TENDER COMMITTEE ESTABLISHED BY THE ETHIOPIAN GOVERNMENT , RECORDED IN THE MINUTES OF THE MEETING OF 24 FEBRUARY 1983 , DID NOT BIND THE CHIEF AUTHORIZING OFFICER. THE FACT THAT THE LOCAL DELEGATE SIGNED THOSE MINUTES COULD NOT HAVE THAT EFFECT. ACCORDING TO SUBPARAGRAPHS (B), (C) AND (E) OF ARTICLE 123 (2) OF THE CONVENTION , THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND CAN ONLY BECOME BOUND AT THE END OF A PROCEDURE CONSISTING OF A PROPOSAL FOR THE PLACING OF THE CONTRACT MADE BY THE NATIONAL AUTHORIZING OFFICER , FOLLOWED BY THE AGREEMENT OF THE CHIEF AUTHORIZING OFFICER , WHICH MAY BE GIVEN THROUGH THE AGENCY OF THE LOCAL DELEGATE , AFTER AN EXAMINATION BY THE COMMISSION OF THE QUESTION WHETHER THE TENDER COMPLIES WITH THE CRITERIA LAID DOWN IN ARTICLE 123 (2) (C) AND ARTICLE 130 (1), THAT IS , WHETHER THE TENDER SELECTED IS THE LOWEST , IT IS ECONOMICALLY THE MOST ADVANTAGEOUS AND DOES NOT EXCEED THE SUM EARMARKED FOR THE CONTRACT. IT IS CLEAR THAT AT THE TIME OF THE TENDER COMMITTEE ' S DISCUSSION THOSE CONDITIONS WERE NOT YET MET. AT NO TIME , THEREFORE , WERE THE APPLICANTS DESIGNATED AS ' LOWEST QUALIFIED TENDERER ' IN CIRCUMSTANCES SUCH AS TO COMMIT THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND.

46 AS A RESULT THE EMPLOYER ' S INVITATION TO THE APPLICANTS AND ITS SUBSEQUENTLY EXPRESSED PREFERENCE FOR THEM COULD IN NO WAY HAVE THE EFFECT OF BINDING THE CHIEF AUTHORIZING OFFICER. IN PARTICULAR , THE COMMUNICATIONS OF THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES AND THE CRITICISMS OF THE COMMISSION CONTAINED THEREIN DO NOT CONSTITUTE EVIDENCE OF CONDUCT ON THE PART OF THE COMMISSION FOR WHICH THE COMMUNITY MIGHT INCUR LIABILITY .

47 WITH REGARD TO THE CLARIFICATIONS WHICH THE OFFICERS OF THE EUROPEAN

DEVELOPMENT FUND SOUGHT TO OBTAIN ON THE POINTS INITIALLY DISPUTED BY THE CONSULTANTS AND BY THE TENDER COMMITTEE REGARDING THE TECHNICAL AND FINANCIAL QUALIFICATION OF THE LOWEST TENDERER , IT MUST BE STATED THAT THE COMMISSION WAS NOT ONLY ENTITLED BUT WAS IN FACT UNDER A DUTY TO OBTAIN THAT INFORMATION IN FULFILMENT OF THE RESPONSIBILITIES CONFERRED ON IT IN THE INTEREST OF THE COMMUNITY BY ARTICLES 121 AND 123 OF THE CONVENTION , IN ORDER TO ENSURE THE ECONOMICAL ADMINISTRATION OF THE RESOURCES OF THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND . CONTRARY TO THE APPLICANTS ' ASSERTIONS , THE REQUESTS FOR CLARIFICATIONS , WHICH LED TO THE SUBMISSION BY RUSH & TOMPKINS BV OF A GUARANTEE FURNISHED BY THE RUSH & TOMPKINS GROUP PLC , DID NOT HAVE THE EFFECT OF SUBSTITUTING THE PARENT COMPANY FOR ITS SUBSIDIARY OR OF ALTERING A POSTERIORI THE CONDITIONS OF THE TENDER PROCEDURE . IRRESPECTIVE OF THE CONCLUSIONS WHICH THE COMMISSION COULD DRAW FROM THE TENDER DOCUMENTS THEMSELVES , THE PURPOSE OF THE GUARANTEE PROVIDED BY THE GROUP WAS ONLY TO MAKE EXPLICIT A LEGAL SITUATION WHICH ALREADY EXISTED OBJECTIVELY WHEN RUSH & TOMPKINS BV SUBMITTED ITS TENDER , BY REASON OF ITS RELATIONSHIP WITH THE GROUP OF WHICH IT WAS A MEMBER. IT SHOULD BE ADDED THAT THE CLARIFICATIONS SOUGHT DID NOT PREJUDICE THE EQUALITY OF THE TENDERERS , SINCE , BY ELIMINATING DOUBTS WHICH HAD ARISEN AS TO ITS QUALIFICATIONS , THEY SERVED ONLY TO RE-ESTABLISH THE LOWEST TENDERER IN THE POSITION TO WHICH IT WAS ENTITLED BY REASON OF THE AMOUNT OF ITS TENDER.

48 IT MAY THEREFORE BE HELD , ON THE BASIS OF THE CASE AS IT STANDS AND WITHOUT SEEKING FURTHER DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE , THAT THE ACTION OF THE COMMISSION AND ITS OFFICERS CANNOT BE CONSIDERED ILLEGAL AND THAT THERE IS NO LEGAL BASIS FOR THE ACTION FOR DAMAGES. THE QUESTION OF THE ASSESSMENT OF THE DAMAGE ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN SUFFERED BY THE APPLICANTS THEREFORE BECOMES IRRELEVANT.

49 IT FOLLOWS FROM THE FOREGOING THAT THE APPLICATION MUST BE DISMISSED AS UNFOUNDED IN SO FAR AS IT IS BASED ON ARTICLE 178 AND THE SECOND PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 215 OF THE TREATY.

(SECOND ACP-EEC CONVENTION OF 31 OCTOBER 1979 , ARTS 91 TO 154)

1 . WHERE THE PRELIMINARY OBJECTIONS RAISED BY A PARTY REGARDING THE JURISDICTION OF THE COURT AND THE ADMISSIBILITY OF THE MAIN APPLICATION CONSTITUTE A PREREQUISITE FOR THE DECISION ON THE ADMISSIBILITY OF THE APPLICATION FOR THE ADOPTION OF INTERIM MEASURES , THE JUDGE HEARING THAT APPLICATION CANNOT ESCAPE THE NECESSITY OF RESOLVING PROVISIONALLY THE VARIOUS PROBLEMS RAISED. FROM HIS POINT OF VIEW , IT IS SUFFICIENT IF HE CAN ESTABLISH , WITH A SUFFICIENT DEGREE OF PROBABILITY , THAT THERE IS A BASIS , ALBEIT PARTIAL , ON WHICH THE COURT MAY FOUND ITS JURISDICTION IN ORDER TO ENABLE HIM TO ACKNOWLEDGE THE EXISTENCE OF A LEGITIMATE INTEREST IN THE ADOPTION OF INTERIM MEASURES DESIGNED TO PRESERVE THE EXISTING POSITION PENDING A DECISION ON THE SUBSTANCE OF THE CASE.

2.IT IS IMPOSSIBLE TO ACCEPT THE VIEW THAT , BY PARTICIPATING IN A TENDER ORGANIZED , UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE SECOND ACP-EEC CONVENTION WHICH RELATE TO FINANCIAL AND TECHNICAL COOPERATION , BY AN ACP STATE , IN CLOSE COOPERATION WITH THE COMMUNITY INSTITUTIONS , WITH A VIEW TO THE EXECUTION OF A PROJECT FINANCED ENTIRELY BY THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND , AN UNDERTAKING ESTABLISHED IN THE COMMUNITY IS AUTOMATICALLY PLACED OUTSIDE THE JUDICIAL PROTECTION AFFORDED TO IT BY THE PROVISIONS OF THE EEC TREATY.

3.WHILST IT SEEMS CERTAIN THAT A CONTRACT FOR PUBLIC WORKS CONCLUDED BETWEEN THE AUTHORITIES OF AN ACP STATE AND THE SUCCESSFUL TENDERER UNDER THE PROVISIONS ON FINANCIAL AND TECHNICAL COOPERATION CONTAINED IN THE SECOND ACP-EEC CONVENTION FALLS OUTSIDE THE JURISDICTION OF THE COURT , THAT

DOES NOT MEAN THAT THERE CAN BE NO JUDICIAL REVIEW UNDER THE EEC TREATY OF ACTS OF THE COMMISSION IN THE CONTEXT OF THE TENDER PROCEDURE SET UP BY THE CONVENTION.

4.ALTHOUGH THE FUNCTIONS WHICH , UNDER THE PROVISIONS ON FINANCIAL AND TECHNICAL COOPERATION CONTAINED IN THE SECOND ACP-EEC CONVENTION , ARE PERFORMED BY THE COMMISSION IN CONNECTION WITH THE VARIOUS STAGES OF THE PREPARATION OF PROJECTS AND WITH PUTTING THOSE PROJECTS OUT TO TENDER ARE CLOSELY LINKED TO THE ACTS OF THE ACP STATE BENEFITING FROM THEM , THE FACT REMAINS THAT , ON THE ONE HAND , ALL THE DECISIVE OPERATIONS RELATING TO THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT ARE SUBJECT TO THE APPROVAL OF THE COMMISSION AND , ON THE OTHER HAND , THE COMMISSION , IN ITS CAPACITY AS MANAGER OF THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND , RETAINS CONTROL OVER THE ALLOCATION AND TRANSFER OF FUNDS EARMARKED FOR THE EXECUTION OF THE VARIOUS PROJECTS UNTIL SUCH TIME AS THEY ARE USED.

IT IS IN THAT LIGHT THAT THE QUESTION OF JURISDICTION WILL HAVE TO BE CONSIDERED BEFORE THE CONDITIONS LAID DOWN BY THE SECOND PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 83 OF THE RULES OF PROCEDURE CAN BE EXAMINED.

THE LEGAL CONTEXT OF THE DISPUTE

20 THE EXECUTION OF THE PROJECT WHICH HAS GIVEN RISE TO THIS DISPUTE MUST BE SEEN IN THE CONTEXT OF THE PROVISIONS ON FINANCIAL AND TECHNICAL COOPERATION WHICH FORM THE SUBJECT-MATTER OF TITLE VII (ARTICLES 91 TO 154) OF THE SECOND ACP-EEC CONVENTION. THAT CONVENTION WAS DULY ENTERED INTO BY THE COMMUNITY AND MUST THEREFORE BE REGARDED AS AN INTEGRAL PART OF THE COMMUNITY LEGAL ORDER , AS THE COURT HAD OCCASION TO EMPHASIZE , IN CONNECTION WITH AN AGREEMENT CONCLUDED UNDER SIMILAR CIRCUMSTANCES , IN ITS JUDGMENT OF 30 APRIL 1974 (CASE 181/73 HAEGEMAN V BELGIAN STATE (1974) ECR 449).

21 ACCORDING TO ARTICLE 95 OF THE CONVENTION , PROJECTS AND PROGRAMMES ENVISAGED BY TITLE VII ARE TO BE FINANCED BY THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND , THE ADMINISTRATION OF WHICH IS ENTRUSTED TO THE COMMISSION .

22 UNDER THE TERMS OF ARTICLE 108 , ' ' OPERATIONS FINANCED BY THE COMMUNITY ARE TO BE IMPLEMENTED BY THE ACP STATES AND THE COMMUNITY IN CLOSE COOPERATION , THE CONCEPT OF EQUALITY BETWEEN THE PARTIES BEING RECOGNIZED . ' ' THE SAME ARTICLE DEFINES THE RESPONSIBILITIES REGARDING THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE PROGRAMME OF FINANCIAL AND TECHNICAL COOPERATION WHICH ARE TO BE BORNE BY THE ACP STATES , THE ACP STATES AND THE COMMUNITY JOINTLY AND THE COMMUNITY. FOR THE PURPOSES OF THE PRESENT CASE IT SHOULD BE POINTED OUT IN THAT REGARD THAT :

THE ACP STATES ARE RESPONSIBLE FOR CHOOSING THE PROJECTS , FOR PRESENTING THEM FOR COMMUNITY FINANCING , FOR PREPARING , NEGOTIATING AND CONCLUDING CONTRACTS AND FOR IMPLEMENTING PROJECTS (ARTICLE 108 (2) (B) (D) AND (E));

THE ACP STATES AND THE COMMUNITY ARE JOINTLY RESPONSIBLE FOR APPRAISING PROJECTS , FOR TAKING THE NECESSARY IMPLEMENTING MEASURES TO ENSURE EQUALITY OF CONDITIONS FOR PARTICIPATION IN INVITATIONS TO TENDER AND CONTRACTS AND FOR ENSURING THAT THE PROJECTS FINANCED BY THE COMMUNITY ARE EXECUTED IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE ARRANGEMENTS DECIDED UPON AND WITH THE PROVISIONS OF THE CONVENTION (ARTICLE 108 (4) (C) (D) AND (F));

THE COMMUNITY IS RESPONSIBLE FOR PREPARING AND TAKING FINANCIAL DECISIONS ON PROJECTS (ARTICLE 108 (5)).

23 ARTICLES 111 , 112 AND 113 LAY DOWN DETAILED PROVISIONS CONCERNING THE APPRAISAL OF PROJECTS. ARTICLE 111 PROVIDES THAT PREPARATION OF THE DOSSIERS IS TO BE THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE ACP STATES CONCERNED AND ARTICLE 112 PROVIDES THAT APPRAISAL OF PROJECTS IS TO BE UNDERTAKEN IN CLOSE COLLABORATION BETWEEN THE COMMUNITY AND THE ACP STATES. ARTICLE 113 ADDS THAT THE CONCLUSIONS OF THE APPRAISAL ARE TO BE SUMMARIZED IN A FINANCING PROPOSAL , WHICH IS TO SERVE AS THE BASIS FOR THE COMMISSION ' S DECISION. ACCORDING TO

ARTICLE 113 (2), THE FINANCING PROPOSALS ARE TO BE DRAWN UP BY THE RELEVANT DEPARTMENTS OF THE COMMUNITY AND TRANSMITTED TO THE ACP STATES CONCERNED. ARTICLE 115 PROVIDES THAT THE FINANCING PROPOSAL IS TO BE THE SUBJECT OF A FINANCING AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE COMMISSION , ACTING ON BEHALF OF THE COMMUNITY , AND THE ACP STATE CONCERNED.

24 UNDER THE TERMS OF ARTICLE 120 , IT IS FOR THE ACP STATES TO IMPLEMENT THE PROJECTS FINANCED BY THE COMMUNITY. ACCORDINGLY THEY ARE TO BE RESPONSIBLE IN PARTICULAR FOR PREPARING , NEGOTIATING AND CONCLUDING THE NECESSARY CONTRACTS FOR THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THOSE OPERATIONS .

25 THE ADMINISTRATIVE MEASURES NECESSARY FOR THAT PURPOSE ARE THE SUBJECT OF A SET OF PRACTICAL ARRANGEMENTS PRESCRIBED IN ARTICLES 120 TO 124 OF THE CONVENTION. OF THOSE PROVISIONS THE FOLLOWING DETAILS ARE OF PARTICULAR RELEVANCE TO THE PRESENT CASE. ACCORDING TO ARTICLE 121 , THE COMMISSION IS TO APPOINT THE ' ' CHIEF AUTHORIZING OFFICER ' ' OF THE FUND , WHO IS TO ENSURE THAT FINANCING DECISIONS ARE CARRIED OUT AND IS TO BE RESPONSIBLE FOR MANAGING THE FUND ' S RESOURCES. IT IS THE CHIEF AUTHORIZING OFFICER WHO IS TO COMMIT , CLEAR AND AUTHORIZE EXPENDITURE AND KEEP THE ACCOUNTS OF COMMITMENTS AND AUTHORIZATIONS. UNDER THE TERMS OF ARTICLE 121 (2), THE CHIEF AUTHORIZING OFFICER , IN CLOSE COOPERATION WITH THE NATIONAL AUTHORIZING OFFICER , ' ' SHALL ENSURE EQUALITY OF CONDITIONS FOR PARTICIPATION IN INVITATIONS TO TENDER , AND SEE TO IT THAT THERE IS NO DISCRIMINATION AND THAT THE TENDER SELECTED IS ECONOMICALLY THE MOST ADVANTAGEOUS. IN THIS CONNECTION THE CHIEF AUTHORIZING OFFICER SHALL APPROVE THE DOSSIERS BEFORE INVITATIONS TO TENDER ARE ISSUED , RECEIVE THE RESULT OF THE EXAMINATION OF THE TENDERS AND APPROVE THE PROPOSAL FOR THE PLACING OF THE CONTRACT. ' '

26 ACCORDING TO ARTICLE 122 , THE GOVERNMENT OF EACH ACP STATE IS TO APPOINT A ' ' NATIONAL AUTHORIZING OFFICER ' ' TO REPRESENT THE AUTHORITIES OF HIS COUNTRY IN ALL OPERATIONS FINANCED FROM THE FUND ' S RESOURCES ADMINISTERED BY THE COMMISSION. THE NATIONAL AUTHORIZING OFFICER MAY DELEGATE SOME OF THOSE FUNCTIONS. UNDER THE TERMS OF ARTICLE 122 (2), THE NATIONAL AUTHORIZING OFFICER IS IN HIS TURN TO ENSURE , IN CLOSE COOPERATION WITH THE CHIEF AUTHORIZING OFFICER , ' ' THAT THERE IS EQUALITY OF CONDITIONS FOR PARTICIPATION IN INVITATIONS TO TENDER , THAT THERE IS NO DISCRIMINATION AND THAT THE TENDER WHICH IS ECONOMICALLY THE MOST ADVANTAGEOUS IS CHOSEN ' ' (ARTICLE 122 (2) (A)). HE IS TO PREPARE INVITATION TO TENDER DOSSIERS AND SUBMIT THEM TO THE DELEGATE FOR AGREEMENT BEFORE INVITATIONS TO TENDER ARE ISSUED ; HE IS TO ISSUE INVITATIONS TO TENDER , RECEIVE TENDERS , PRESIDE OVER THE EXAMINATION OF TENDERS , DECIDE THE OUTCOME OF THAT EXAMINATION AND TRANSMIT IT TO THE DELEGATE WITH A PROPOSAL FOR THE PLACING OF THE CONTRACT ; FINALLY IT IS HE WHO SIGNS THE CONTRACTS (ARTICLE 122 (2) (B), (C), (D) AND (E)).

27 UNDER ARTICLE 123 , THE COMMISSION IS TO APPOINT A ' ' DELEGATE ' ' TO EACH ACP STATE OR GROUP OF STATES TO REPRESENT IT FOR THE PURPOSE OF FACILITATING THE APPLICATION OF THE CONVENTION. THE DELEGATE IS TO WORK IN CLOSE COOPERATION WITH THE NATIONAL AUTHORIZING OFFICER AND DEAL WITH THAT OFFICER ON BEHALF OF THE COMMISSION. IN THAT CAPACITY HE IS TO APPROVE THE INVITATION TO TENDER DOSSIER AND BE PRESENT AT THE OPENING OF TENDERS (ARTICLE 123 (2)

(A) AND (B)). HE IS TO APPROVE THE NATIONAL AUTHORIZING OFFICER ' S PROPOSAL FOR THE PLACING OF THE CONTRACT WHEREVER THE FOLLOWING THREE CONDITION ARE FULFILLED : THE TENDER SELECTED IS THE LOWEST , IT IS ECONOMICALLY THE MOST ADVANTAGEOUS AND DOES NOT EXCEED THE SUM EARMARKED FOR THE CONTRACT (ARTICLE 123 (2) (C)).

28 IT IS STRESSED IN ARTICLES 125 OF 127 THAT , AS REGARDS OPERATIONS FINANCED BY THE COMMUNITY , PARTICIPATION IN INVITATIONS TO TENDER AND CONTRACTS IS TO BE OPEN ON EQUAL TERMS TO ALL NATURAL PERSONS AND COMPANIES OR FIRMS FALLING WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE TREATY AND TO ALL NATURAL PERSONS AND COMPANIES OR FIRMS OF THE ACP STATES AND THAT WORKS CONTRACTS FINANCED BY THE FUND ' S RESOURCES MANAGED BY THE COMMISSION ARE TO BE CONCLUDED FOLLOWING AN OPEN INVITATION TO TENDER.

29 UNDER THE TERMS OF ARTICLE 130 (1), THE CRITERIA FOR SELECTING THE TENDER WHICH IS ECONOMICALLY THE MOST ADVANTAGEOUS ARE TO TAKE INTO ACCOUNT , IN RESPECT OF EACH OPERATION , INTER ALIA , ' ' THE QUALIFICATIONS OF AND THE GUARANTEES OFFERED BY THE TENDERERS , THE NATURE AND CONDITIONS OF IMPLEMENTATION OF THE WORKS OR SUPPLIES AND THE PRICE , OPERATING COSTS AND TECHNICAL VALUE OF THOSE WORKS OR SUPPLIES . ' '

30 ACCORDING TO ARTICLE 131 , THE GENERAL CONDITIONS APPLICABLE TO THE AWARD AND PERFORMANCE OF WORKS CONTRACTS FINANCED FROM THE FUND ' S RESOURCES ADMINISTERED BY THE COMMISSION ARE CONTAINED IN THE GENERAL CONDITIONS WHICH , ON A PROPOSAL FROM THE COMMISSION , ARE TO BE ADOPTED BY DECISION OF THE COUNCIL OF MINISTERS. PENDING THAT DECISION - WHICH HAS AS YET NOT BEEN ADOPTED - THE JOINT DECLARATION FORMING ANNEX XII TO THE CONVENTION REFERS , IN THE CASE OF ACP STATES WHICH , LIKE ETHIOPIA , WERE NOT YET PARTIES TO THE YAOUNDE CONVENTION , TO THE ' ' NATIONAL LEGISLATION ' ' OF THE STATES CONCERNED OR TO ' ' ESTABLISHED PRACTICES REGARDING INTERNATIONAL CONTRACTS.

31 ARTICLE 132 PROVIDES AS FOLLOWS WITH REGARD TO THE SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES :

' ' 1 . ANY DISPUTE ARISING BETWEEN THE AUTHORITIES OF AN ACP STATE AND A CONTRACTOR , SUPPLIER OR PROVIDER OF SERVICES ON THE OCCASION OF THE PLACING OR PERFORMANCE OF A CONTRACT FINANCED BY THE FUND SHALL BE SETTLED BY ARBITRATION IN ACCORDANCE WITH RULES OF PROCEDURE ADOPTED BY THE COUNCIL OF MINISTERS.

2 . THE RULES OF PROCEDURE REFERRED TO ABOVE SHALL BE ADOPTED , ON A PROPOSAL , BY A DECISION OF THE COUNCIL OF MINISTERS NOT LATER THAN ITS FIRST MEETING FOLLOWING THE ENTRY INTO FORCE OF THIS CONVENTION. ' '

32 SINCE THE RULES REFERRED TO IN ARTICLE 132 HAVE NOT YET BEEN ADOPTED , REFERENCE MUST BE MADE TO ANNEX XIII OF THE CONVENTION , WHICH IS ENTITLED ' ' JOINT DECLARATION ON ARTICLE 132 OF THE CONVENTION ' ' AND IS WORDED AS FOLLOWS :

' ' AS A TRANSITIONAL MEASURE PENDING THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE DECISION PROVIDED FOR IN ARTICLE 132 THE FINAL DECISION ON ALL DISPUTES SHALL BE TAKEN IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE RULES ON CONCILIATION AND ARBITRATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE. ' '

JURISDICTION OF THE COURT

33 THE COMMISSION CLAIMS THAT THE COURT HAS NO JURISDICTION TO ENTERTAIN EITHER THE MAIN APPLICATION OR THE APPLICATION FOR THE ADOPTION OF INTERIM MEASURES. IT RAISES TWO FUNDAMENTAL OBJECTIONS REGARDING THE JURISDICTION OF THE COURT AND AN OBJECTION OF INADMISSIBILITY BASED ON TWO GROUNDS WITH PARTICULAR REFERENCE TO THE ACTION FOR ANNULMENT.

34 IN THE FIRST PLACE , THE COMMISSION ARGUES THAT THE ACP STATE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THE PREPARATION , NEGOTIATION AND CONCLUSION OF THE CONTRACT . IT FOLLOWS THAT IT IS THE ACP STATE AND NOT THE COMMISSION WHICH DEALS DIRECTLY WITH THE TENDERERS. WHILST IT IS TRUE THAT THE CONVENTION PROVIDES FOR COOPERATION BETWEEN THE COMMUNITY AND THE ACP STATE , THE FACT REMAINS THAT THE STATE IN QUESTION TAKES THE VARIOUS DECISIONS REQUIRED IN THE COURSE OF THE PROCEDURE , INCLUDING THE FINAL DECISION ON THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT. THE COOPERATION TO BE GIVEN BY THE COMMISSION IN THAT CONNECTION IS THEREFORE SAID TO BE OF A PURELY ' ' INTERNAL ' ' NATURE.

35 IN THE SECOND PLACE , THE COMMISSION CONTENDS THAT ARTICLE 132 OF THE CONVENTION AND THE JOINT DECLARATION WHICH FORMS THE SUBJECT-MATTER OF ANNEX XIII HAVE SET UP AN ARBITRATION PROCEDURE , WITH THE RESULT THAT ANY DISPUTE BETWEEN A TENDERER AND AN ACP STATE FALLS OUTSIDE THE JURISDICTION OF THE COURT.

36 WITH PARTICULAR REFERENCE TO THE ACTION FOR ANNULMENT , THE COMMISSION ARGUES THAT IN THIS CASE THERE WAS , ON ITS PART , NO DECISION WITHIN THE MEANING OF THE SECOND PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 173 OF THE EEC TREATY. THE ' ' ORDER ' ' TO ELIMINATE THE APPLICANTS AND TO GIVE PREFERENCE TO RUSH AND TOMPKINS BV WHICH , THE APPLICANTS ALLEGE , THE COMMISSION GAVE TO THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES AND WHICH CAME TO THE APPLICANTS ' KNOWLEDGE WHEN THEY VISITED ADDIS ABABA ON 15 MARCH 1983 , DID NOT , ACCORDING TO THE COMMISSION , CONSTITUTE A MEASURE WHICH COULD BE THE SUBJECT OF ANNULMENT. IN ANY EVENT , THE ACTION AGAINST THAT ' ' ORDER ' ' IS OUT OF TIME SINCE THE APPLICANTS THEMSELVES STATE THAT IT CAME TO THEIR KNOWLEDGE ON 15 MARCH 1983.

37 THE ANSWERS TO ALL THOSE QUESTIONS , THE COMPLEXITY OF WHICH SHOULD NOT BE UNDERESTIMATED , IS A MATTER FOR THE COURT ' S DECISION ON THE SUBSTANCE OF THE MAIN APPLICATION. HOWEVER , SINCE THE PRELIMINARY OBJECTIONS RAISED BY THE COMMISSION REGARDING THE JURISDICTION OF THE COURT AND THE ADMISSIBILITY OF THE MAIN APPLICATION CONSTITUTE A PREREQUISITE FOR THE DECISION ON THE ADMISSIBILITY OF THE APPLICATION FOR THE ADOPTION OF INTERIM MEASURES , THE JUDGE HEARING THAT APPLICATION CANNOT ESCAPE THE NECESSITY OF RESOLVING PROVISIONALLY THE VARIOUS PROBLEMS RAISED. FROM HIS POINT OF VIEW , IT IS SUFFICIENT IF HE CAN ESTABLISH , WITH A SUFFICIENT DEGREE OF PROBABILITY , THAT THERE IS A BASIS , ALBEIT PARTIAL , ON WHICH THE COURT MAY FOUND ITS JURISDICTION IN ORDER TO ENABLE HIM TO ACKNOWLEDGE THE EXISTENCE OF A LEGITIMATE INTEREST IN THE ADOPTION OF INTERIM MEASURES DESIGNED TO PRESERVE THE EXISTING POSITION PENDING A DECISION ON THE SUBSTANCE OF THE CASE.

38 SUBJECT TO THOSE RESERVATIONS , THE FOLLOWING OBSERVATIONS MAY BE MADE WITH REGARD TO THE PRELIMINARY OBJECTIONS RAISED BY THE COMMISSION .

39 AS THE COMMISSION RIGHTLY POINTED OUT , THE TENDERERS ESTABLISHED A LEGAL RELATIONSHIP SOLELY WITH THE ETHIOPIAN NATIONAL AUTHORITY AND MORE PARTICULARLY WITH THE NATIONAL AUTHORIZING OFFICER , WHO , ACCORDING TO THE INFORMATION SUPPLIED DURING THE PROCEEDINGS , IS THE ETHIOPIAN GOVERNMENT ACTING , FOR THE PURPOSES OF THE PRESENT PROJECT , THROUGH THE INTERMEDIARY OF EELPA , UNDER THE TERMS OF CLAUSE IT-I , PARAGRAPH (2), OF THE CONDITIONS OF TENDER.

40 NEVERTHELESS THE PROVISIONS OF THE CONVENTION AT THE SAME TIME IMPOSE SPECIFIC OBLIGATIONS ON THE COMMISSION AND MORE PARTICULARLY ON THE CHIEF AUTHORIZING OFFICER WITH REGARD TO ENSURING EQUALITY OF CONDITIONS FOR PARTICIPATION IN INVITATIONS TO TENDER , THE ELIMINATION OF DISCRIMINATION , SELECTION OF THE TENDER WHICH IS ECONOMICALLY THE MOST ADVANTAGEOUS , THE OPEN NATURE OF TENDERS AND THE PARTICIPATION ON EQUAL TERMS OF ALL NATURAL PERSONS AND COMPANIES OR FIRMS FALLING WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE EEC TREATY.

41 IT IS IMPOSSIBLE THEREFORE TO ACCEPT THE VIEW THAT , BY PARTICIPATING IN A TENDER ORGANIZED , UNDER THE TERMS OF THE CONVENTION , BY AN ACP STATE , IN CLOSE COOPERATION WITH THE COMMUNITY INSTITUTIONS , WITH A VIEW TO THE EXECUTION OF A PROJECT FINANCED ENTIRELY BY THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND , AN UNDERTAKING ESTABLISHED IN THE COMMUNITY IS AUTOMATICALLY PLACED OUTSIDE THE JUDICIAL PROTECTION AFFORDED TO IT BY THE PROVISIONS OF THE EEC TREATY.

42 IT DOES NOT APPEAR THAT ARTICLE 132 , CONCERNING THE SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES , AND THE JOINT DECLARATION ON THAT SUBJECT , EMBODIED IN ANNEX XIII TO THE CONVENTION , HAS THE EFFECT OF ELIMINATING ANY JUDICIAL PROTECTION WITH MAY BE AVAILABLE UNDER THE TREATY. AS THE COMMISSION HAS ACKNOWLEDGED , THE CONVENTION COULD NOT DEROGATE , AS FAR AS COMMUNITY SUBJECTS ARE CONCERNED , FROM THE PROVISIONS OF THE EEC TREATY GOVERNING ACCESS TO THE COURT. MOREOVER , IT WAS APPARENT FROM THE ARGUMENTS OF THE PARTIES THAT IT REMAINS DOUBTFUL WHETHER ARTICLE 132 APPLIES ONLY TO DISPUTES WHICH MAY ARISE , ON THE OCCASION OF THE PLACING OR PERFORMANCE OF A CONTRACT , BETWEEN THE ACP STATE AND THE UNDERTAKING WHICH IS AWARDED THE CONTRACT OR WHETHER THAT PROVISION IS ALSO APPLICABLE TO DISPUTES WHICH ARISE BETWEEN THE ACP STATE AND ANY UNDERTAKING WHICH IS NOT AWARDED THE CONTRACT BUT HAS PARTICIPATED IN THE TENDER PROCEDURE. THAT DOUBT IS INCREASED BY THE UNCERTAINTY REGARDING THE INTERPRETATION WHICH THE ACP STATES , AND ETHIOPIA IN PARTICULAR , MAY GIVE TO THE TERMS OF ARTICLE 132 AND ANNEX XIII .

43 MOREOVER , THE QUESTION ARISES WHETHER , IN ARBITRATION PROCEEDINGS INITIATED PURSUANT TO ARTICLE 132 AND ANNEX XIII , THAT IS TO SAY WITHIN THE FRAMEWORK OF THE PROCEDURE FOR CONCILIATION AND ARBITRATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE , ACTS OF THE COMMISSION MAY BE CHALLENGED AND WHETHER AN ARBITRAL DECISION TO BE GIVEN IN THAT CONTEXT MAY CONTAIN A JUDGMENT ON THE VALIDITY OF ACTS OF THE COMMISSION OR ESTABLISH A BASIS FOR COMMUNITY LIABILITY.

44 CONSEQUENTLY , WHILST IT SEEMS CERTAIN THAT THE CONTRACT CONCLUDED BETWEEN THE ACP STATE AND THE SUCCESSFUL TENDERER FALLS OUTSIDE THE JURIDICTION

OF THE COURT , THAT DOES NOT MEAN THAT THERE CAN BE NOT JUDICIAL REVIEW UNDER THE EEC TREATY OF ACTS OF THE COMMISSION IN THE CONTEXT OF THE TENDER PROCEDURE SET UP BY THE CONVENTION .

45 AS REGARDS THE OBJECTION OF INADMISSIBILITY RAISED BY THE COMMISSION IN RELATION TO THE ACTION FOR ANNULMENT , IN VIEW OF THE FACT THAT IT WOULD BE IMPOSSIBLE TO IDENTIFY , IN THE COOPERATIVE DECISION-MAKING PROCESS SET UP BY THE CONVENTION , A DECISION OF THE COMMISSION WHICH COULD BE THE SUBJECT OF AN ACTION , IT SHOULD BE OBSERVED THAT THE FUNCTIONS PERFORMED BY THE COMMISSION IN CONNECTION WITH THE VARIOUS STAGES OF THE PREPARATION OF PROJECTS AND WITH PUTTING THOSE PROJECTS OUT TO TENDER ARE UNDOUBTEDLY CLOSELY LINKED TO THE ACTS OF THE ACP STATE BENEFITING FROM THEM. NEVERTHELESS , ON THE ONE HAND , ALL THE DECISIVE OPERATIONS RELATING TO THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT ARE SUBJECT TO THE APPROVAL OF THE COMMISSION AND , ON THE OTHER HAND , THE COMMISSION , IN ITS CAPACITY AS MANAGER OF THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND , RETAINS CONTROL OVER THE ALLOCATION AND TRANSFER OF FUNDS EARMARKED FOR THE EXECUTION OF THE VARIOUS PROJECTS UNTIL SUCH TIME AS THEY ARE USED.

46 ALTHOUGH IT HAS NOT BEEN POSSIBLE AT THIS STAGE TO ESTABLISH WHETHER THERE WAS AN ' ' ORDER ' ' BY THE COMMISSION TO ELIMINATE THE APPLICANTS AND TO GIVE RUSH AND TOMPKINS BV PREFERENCE OVER THEM , IT IS CLEAR FROM THE INFORMATION SUPPLIED BY THE COMMISSION ITSELF THAT THE CONTRACT CONCLUDED WITH RUSH AND TOMPKINS BV ON 6 JULY 1983 BECAME EFFECTIVE ONLY BY VIRTUE OF THE APPROVAL OF THE CHIEF AUTHORIZING OFFICER AND THE ENDORSEMENT OF THE LOCAL COMMISSION DELEGATE.

47 UNDER THOSE CIRCUMSTANCES , IT CANNOT BE EXCLUDED THAT A THOROUGH EXAMINATION MIGHT REVEAL THE EXISTENCE OF AN ACT OF THE COMMISSION WHICH CAN BE ISOLATED FROM ITS CONTEXT AND WHICH MAY BE OF SUCH A NATURE AS TO ENABLE AN ACTION TO BE BROUGHT FOR ITS ANNULMENT.

48 THE COMMISSION ' S OBJECTION THAT THE ACTION IS OUT OF TIME MUST BE REJECTED . THE APPLICANTS HAVE EXPLAINED AT GREAT LENGTH THE DIFFICULTIES WHICH THEY EXPERIENCED IN OBTAINING INFORMATION REGARDING THE ATTITUDE TAKEN BY THE COMMISSION IN THIS CASE AND THE REASONS FOR THEIR ELIMINATION. THE INFORMATION WHICH THEY WERE ABLE TO OBTAIN IN ADDIS ABABA ON 15 MAY 1983 WAS NO MOR THAN HEARSAY. SUCH INFORMATION CANNOT THEREFORE BE REGARDED AS FULFILLING THE CONDITION LAID DOWN BY THE THIRD PARAGRAPH OF ARTICLE 173 OF THE EEC TREATY.

49 IT FOLLOWS FROM THE FOREGOING THAT , ALTHOUGH THE PLACING OF THE PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACT IN QUESTION OCCURRED OUTSIDE THE SPHERE OF JURISDICTION OF THE COMMUNITY , THERE ARE NEVERTHELESS SUFFICIENT CONNECTING FACTORS BETWEEN THE CIRCUMSTANCES OF THE DISPUTE AND THE PROVISIONS OF THE TREATY GOVERNING ACCESS TO THE COURT - NAMELY , THE ACTIVE PARTICIPATION OF THE COMMISSION IN THE PROCESS FOR REACHING A DECISION ON THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT , THE FINANCING OF THE PROJECT IN QUESTION BY THE EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND AND THE JUDICIAL PROTECTION TO WHICH THE APPLICANTS ARE , AS COMMUNTY SUBJECTS , ENTITLED TO CLAIM IN THE IMPLEMENTATION OF A CONVENTION CONCLUDED BY THE COMMUNITY - TO ALLOW THE FINDING THAT THERE EXISTS A LEGITIMATE INTEREST IN THE ADOPTION OF INTERIM MEASURES PENDING THE COURT ' S DECISION

ON THE QUESTIONS OF JURISDICTION AND ADMISSIBILITY RAISED BY THE COMMISSION.

URGENCY

50 THE APPLICANTS CLAIM THAT AN INTERIM DECISION OF THE COURT IS REQUIRED AS A MATTER OF URGENCY OWING TO THE IRREPARABLE DAMAGE WHICH WOULD BE CAUSED TO THEIR CORPORATE REPUTATION IN THE INTERNATIONAL TENDER MARKET IF THEY WERE ELIMINATED IN SPITE OF THEIR STATUS AS ' ' LOWEST QUALIFIED TENDERER ' ' IN THE TENDER PROCEDURE IN QUESTION , PARTICULARLY SINCE IT HAS RECEIVED WIDE INTERNATIONAL PUBLICITY. ONLY THE INTERVENTION OF THE COURT AT THIS STAGE COULD PREVENT DAMAGE WHICH OTHERWISE WOULD BE IRREVERSIBLE FOR THEM.

51 THE APPLICANTS ARE MISTAKEN IN THINKING THAT IN THE CIRCUMSTANCES THEIR ELIMINATION WOULD DAMAGE THEIR REPUTATION. PARTICIPATION IN A PUBLIC TENDER PROCEDURE , BY NATURE HIGHLY COMPETITIVE , INVOLVES RISKS FOR ALL THE PARTICIPANTS AND THE ELIMINATION OF A TENDERER UNDER THE TENDER RULES IS NOT IN ITSELF IN ANY WAY PREJUDICIAL. THAT IS ALL THE MORE TRUE SINCE THE APPLICANTS ' TENDER WAS NOT THE LOWEST AND SINCE THE FAVOURABLE PROSPECTS WHICH SEEMED TO BE EMERGING AT THE BEGINNING OF THE PROCEDURE FOR THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT WERE DUE NOT TO THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THEIR TENDER BUT TO THE FACT THAT THERE WAS SOME DOUBT AT THAT TIME CONCERNING THE QUALIFICATIONS OF A COMPETING TENDERER .

52 ON THE OTHER HAND , IT MUST BE ACKNOWLEDGED THAT THE APPLICANTS HAVE A LEGITIMATE INTEREST IN SEEKING THE ADOPTION OF AN INTERIM MEASURE AS SOON AS POSSIBLE , IN ORDER TO PREVENT - SHOULD THE PROCEDURE FOR THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT BE FOUND TO BE IRREGULAR - A CONTRACT FROM BEING CONCLUDED AND , SHOULD IT BE CONCLUDED , ITS PERFORMANCE FROM REACHING A STAGE AT WHICH AN IRREVERSIBLE DE FACTO SITUATION WOULD BE CREATED. IN THAT SENSE THE REQUIREMENT OF URGENCY LAID DOWN BY ARTICLE 83 OF THE RULES OF PROCEDURE MUST BE RECOGNIZED AS BEING SATISFIED.

THE NATURE OF A POSSIBLE INTERIM MEASURE AND THE GROUNDS ESTABLISHING A CASE FOR ITS ADOPTION

53 FOR THE REASONS STATED ABOVE , THE COURT HAS NO POWER TO INTERVENE IN THE CONCLUSION AND PERFORMANCE OF A CONTRACT CONCLUDED BETWEEN THE TENDERER AND AN AUTHORITY OF A NON-MEMBER COUNTRY. ON THE OTHER HAND , THERE DOES NOT SEEM TO BE ANY REASON PRECLUDING THE COURT FROM ISSUING , ON A PROVISIONAL BASIS , APPROPRIATE INJUNCTIONS TO THE COMMISSION EITHER IN ORDER TO PREVENT THE CONCLUSION OF A CONTRACT AS A RESULT OF A TENDER WHICH APPEARS TO BE CONTRARY TO THE RULES OF THE CONVENTION , OR TO OTHER RELEVANT RULES , OR IN ORDER TO PROHIBIT THE COMMISSION FROM ALLOCATING FUNDS FOR THE PERFORMANCE OF SUCH A CONTRACT IF IT HAS ALREADY BEEN CONCLUDED.

54 THE QUESTION ARISES WHETHER THE APPLICANTS HAVE BEEN ABLE TO MAKE OUT A PRIMA FACIE CASE FOR THE EXISTENCE OF CIRCUMSTANCES WHICH COULD JUSTIFY SUCH A MEASURE.

55 THE FACTS WHICH THE APPLICANTS HAVE ALLEGED AND WHICH THE COMMISSION HAS BEEN UNABLE TO CONTEST DO INDEED RAISE SERIOUS DOUBTS CONCERNING THE REGULARITY OF THE PROCEDURE FOLLOWED FOR THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT. AS HAS ALREADY BEEN MENTIONED , THE APPLICANTS HAD BEEN SUMMONED BY THE

COMPETENT NATIONAL AUTHORITY IN CIRCUMSTANCES WHICH AFFORDED GROUNDS FOR BELIEVING THAT THE CONTRACT WOULD BE SIGNED UPON THE CONCLUSION OF A FINAL ROUND OF NEGOTIATIONS. IT APPEARS FROM THE COMMUNICATIONS OF THE EMPLOYER , ENDORSING THE FINDINGS OF THE TENDER COMMITTEE AND THE CONSULTANT ENGINEER , THAT THE LOWEST TENDERER WAS NOT REGARDED AS TECHNICALLY AND FINANCIALLY QUALIFIED AND FOR THAT REASON IT HAD ORIGINALLY BEEN INTENDED TO AWARD THE CONTRACT TO THE APPLICANTS . IT ALSO APPEARS THAT THAT SITUATION WAS CHANGED NOT AS A RESULT OF A DECISION OF THE EMPLOYER BUT AT THE REQUEST OF THE COMMISSION .

56 WHEN THE COMMISSION WAS QUESTIONED ON THIS MATTER , IT STATED THAT FOLLOWING INVESTIGATIONS WHICH ARE NORMAL IN PUBLIC TENDER PROCEDURES IT BECAME APPARENT THAT THE LOWEST TENDERER , RUSH AND TOMPKINS BV , WHICH IS A MEMBER OF THE BRITISH RUSH AND TOMPKINS GROUP , WHOSE TECHNICAL AND FINANCIAL QUALIFICATIONS ARE UNDENIABLE , HAD THE BACKING OF THAT GROUP AND THAT THE GROUP UNDERTOOK TO GUARANTEE , FOR THE BENEFIT OF ITS NETHERLANDS SUBSIDIARY , THAT THE WORK WOULD BE SUCCESSFULLY COMPLETED. THE COMMISSION PRODUCED IN THAT CONNECTION A LETTER OF GUARANTEE ISSUED BY THE RUSH AND TOMPKINS GROUP , DATED 21 JUNE 1983 .

57 THE APPLICANTS CONTEST THE REGULARITY OF THAT PROCEDURE. IN THEIR VIEW , THE INTRODUCTION OF THE LETTER OF GUARANTEE HAD THE EFFECT OF ALTERING , AFTER THE OPENING OF THE TENDERS , CERTAIN ESSENTIAL TENDER CONDITIONS , TO SUCH AN EXTENT THAT IT IS DOUBTFUL WHETHER THE TENDERER AND THE UNDERTAKING TO WHICH THE CONTRACT WAS AWARDED ARE STILL STRICTLY IDENTICAL.

58 IN REPLY TO THAT ARGUMENT , THE COMMISSION CONTENDED THAT THE TENDER SUBMITTED ON 4 NOVEMBER 1982 ALREADY CONTAINED A GUARANTEE BY THE RUSH AND TOMPKINS GROUP , BUT IT WAS NOT IN A POSITION TO PRODUCE A COPY OF THAT LETTER OR TO INDICATE IN WHAT WAY THE GUARANTEE OF 21 JUNE 1983 , WHICH WAS APPARENTLY A DECISIVE FACTOR IN THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT , DIFFERED FROM THE ORIGINAL GUARANTEE.

59 CONSEQUENTLY , VIEWED AS A WHOLE , THE CIRCUMSTANCES IN WHICH THE UNDERTAKING WHICH WAS AWARDED THE CONTRACT WAS CHOSEN SEEM TO BE QUESTIONABLE. HOWEVER , IT IS NOT POSSIBLE AT THIS STAGE TO DETERMINE WHETHER THERE WAS IN THIS CASE ANY IRREGULARITY OF SUCH A NATURE AS TO VITIATE THE TENDER PROCEDURE OR WHETHER THE INQUIRIES AND CLARIFICATIONS REGARDING THE LOWEST TENDERER ARE IN ACCORDANCE WITH NORMAL PRACTICE IN PUBLIC TENDER PROCEDURES.

60 HOWEVER , THOSE DOUBTS , EVEN THOUGH THEY ARE GENUINE , DO NOT CONSTITUTE SUFFICIENT JUSTIFICATION FOR A MEASURE AS SERIOUS AS THE SUSPENSION OF THE PERFORMANCE OF THE CONTRACT , CONCLUDED BY THE ETHIOPIAN AUTHORITIES AND ENDORSED BY THE COMMISSION , BY MEANS OF THE BLOCKING OF THE FUNDS EARMARKED FOR THE PERFORMANCE OF THE CONTRACT.

61 IT MUST BE BORNE IN MIND THAT THE APPLICANTS WERE ONLY THE SECOND LOWEST TENDERERS. THE COMMISSION , WHICH IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THE FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION OF THE FUND , WAS THEREFORE UNDER A DUTY TO GIVE PRIORITY TO ITS EXAMINATION OF THE TENDER SUBMITTED BY THE LOWEST TENDERER WITH A VIEW TO CLARIFYING , IN CONFORMITY WITH THE CRITERIA LAID DOWN BY ARTICLE 130 OF THE CONVENTION , THE QUESTION OF THE QUALIFICATIONS AND GUARANTEES OF THAT TENDERER WHICH WERE IN DISPUTE. AS REGARDS THE DESIGNATION ' ' LOWEST QUALIFIED TENDERER

62 IT APPEARS , MOREOVER , FROM THE EXPLANATIONS SUPPLIED BY THE COMMISSION THAT , FOLLOWING CHECKS CARRIED OUT ON THE TECHNICAL AND FINANCIAL QUALIFICATIONS OF THE LOWEST TENDERER , BOTH THE NATIONAL AUTHORIZING OFFICER AND THE CHIEF AUTHORIZING OFFICER ARE NOW SATISFIED WITH THE CHOICE MADE FOR THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT. THIS ATTITUDE EMERGES FROM A TELEX MESSAGE SENT ON 22 JUNE 1983 BY EELPA TO THE APPLICANTS , IN WHICH THE EMPLOYER , AFTER EXPLAINING THE SITUATION , REQUESTS THE APPLICANTS ' ' TO DROP THE WHOLE MATTER AND LET BYGONES BE BYGONES. ' '

63 IN THOSE CIRCUMSTANCES IT SEEMS THAT THE BLOCKING OF THE FUNDS EARMARKED FOR THE EXECUTION OF THE PROJECT , WITH THE GRAVE CONSEQUENCES WHICH SUCH A MEASURE WOULD ENTAIL FOR ALL THE PARTIES CONCERNED , WOULD BE A DISPROPORTIONATE RESPONSE TO THE DOUBTS WHICH THE FACTS ALLEGED BY THE APPLICANTS HAVE RAISED CONCERNING THE REGULARITY OF THE TENDER PROCEDURES.

64 IT IS OPEN TO THE APPLICANTS TO PURSUE THEIR ACTION WITH A VIEW TO ENABLING THE COURT , AFTER A MORE THOROUGH EXAMINATION OF THE MATTERS INVOLVED IN THE DISPUTE , TO GIVE JUDGMENT ON ITS OWN JURISDICTION AND TO STATE THE CONSEQUENCES TO BE DRAWN FROM ANY IRREGULARITIES IN THE TENDER PROCEDURE , IN PARTICULAR WITH REGARD TO THE ISSUE OF LIABILITY.

65 FOR ALL THOSE REASONS , IT MUST BE HELD THAT , AT THIS STAGE , THE APPLICANTS HAVE FAILED TO ESTABLISH CIRCUMSTANCES MAKING OUT A PRIMA FACIE CASE FOR AN INTERIM MEASURE WITHIN THE MEANING OF ARTICLES 185 OR 186 OF THE EEC TREATY.

Judgment of the Court
of 10 February 1982
SA Transporoute et travaux v Minister of Public Works.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Conseil d'Etat - Grand Duchy of Luxembourg.
Freedom to provide services - Directives on public works contracts.
Case 76/81.

1 . FREEDOM TO PROVIDE SERVICES - COORDINATION OF PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS - PROOF OF TENDERER ' S GOOD STANDING AND QUALIFICATIONS - REQUIREMENT OF AN ESTABLISHMENT PERMIT - NOT PERMISSIBLE

(EEC TREATY , ART. 59 ; COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305 , ARTS. 23 TO 26)

1 . COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305 MUST BE INTERPRETED AS PRECLUDING A MEMBER STATE FROM REQUIRING A TENDERER IN ANOTHER MEMBER STATE TO FURNISH PROOF BY ANY MEANS , FOR EXAMPLE BY AN ESTABLISHMENT PERMIT , OTHER THAN THOSE PRESCRIBED IN ARTICLES 23 TO 26 OF THAT DIRECTIVE , THAT HE SATISFIES THE CRITERIA LAID DOWN IN THOSE PROVISIONS AND RELATING TO HIS GOOD STANDING AND QUALIFICATION.

THE RESULT OF THAT INTERPRETATION OF THE DIRECTIVE IS ALSO IN CONFORMITY WITH THE SCHEME OF THE TREATY PROVISIONS CONCERNING THE PROVISION OF SERVICES. TO MAKE THE PROVISION OF SERVICES IN ONE MEMBER STATE BY A CONTRACTOR ESTABLISHED IN ANOTHER MEMBER STATE CONDITIONAL UPON THE POSSESSION OF AN ESTABLISHMENT PERMIT IN THE FIRST STATE WOULD BE TO DEPRIVE ARTICLE 59 OF THE TREATY OF ALL EFFECTIVENESS , THE PURPOSE OF THAT ARTICLE BEING PRECISELY TO ABOLISH RESTRICTIONS ON THE FREEDOM TO PROVIDE SERVICES BY PERSONS WHO ARE NOT ESTABLISHED IN THE STATE IN WHICH THE SERVICE IS TO BE PROVIDED .

2 . WHEN IN THE OPINION OF THE AUTHORITY AWARDING A PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACT A TENDERER ' S OFFER IS OBVIOUSLY ABNORMALLY LOW IN RELATION TO THE TRANSACTION ARTICLE 29 (5) OF DIRECTIVE 71/305 REQUIRES THE AUTHORITY TO SEEK FROM THE TENDERER , BEFORE COMING TO A DECISION AS TO THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT , AN EXPLANATION OF HIS PRICES OR TO INFORM THE TENDERER WHICH OF HIS TENDERS APPEAR TO BE ABNORMAL , AND TO ALLOW HIM A REASONABLE TIME WITHIN WHICH TO SUBMIT FURTHER DETAILS

ON THE INTERPRETATION OF COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/304 OF 26 JULY 1971 CONCERNING

THE ABOLITION OF RESTRICTIONS ON FREEDOM TO PROVIDE SERVICES IN RESPECT OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS AND ON THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS TO CONTRACTORS ACTING THROUGH AGENCIES OR BRANCHES , AND COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305 , OF THE SAME DATE , CONCERNING THE COORDINATION OF PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS (OFFICIAL JOURNAL , ENGLISH SPECIAL EDITION 1971 (II), P . 678 AND P. 682),

1 BY JUDGMENT OF 11 MARCH 1981 WHICH WAS RECEIVED AT THE COURT ON 7 APRIL 1981 THE COMITE DU CONTENTIEUX DU CONSEIL D ' ETAT (JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE STATE COUNCIL) OF THE GRAND DUCHY OF LUXEMBOURG REFERRED TO THE COURT FOR A PRELIMINARY RULING UNDER ARTICLE 177 OF THE EEC TREATY TWO QUESTIONS CONCERNING THE INTERPRETATION OF COUNCIL DIRECTIVES 71/304 AND 71/305 OF 26 JULY 1971 CONCERNING , RESPECTIVELY , THE ABOLITION OF RESTRICTIONS ON FREEDOM TO PROVIDE SERVICES IN RESPECT OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS AND ON THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS TO CONTRACTORS ACTING THROUGH AGENCIES OR BRANCHES (OFFICIAL JOURNAL , ENGLISH SPECIAL EDITION 1971 (II), P. 678), AND THE COORDINATION OF PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS (IDEM , P . 682).

2 THE QUESTIONS AROSE IN THE COURSE OF A DISPUTE THE ORIGIN OF WHICH LAY IN A NOTICE OF INVITATION TO TENDER ISSUED BY THE ADMINISTRATION DES PONTS ET CHAUSSEES (BRIDGES AND HIGHWAYS AUTHORITY) OF THE GRAND DUCHY OF LUXEMBOURG , IN RESPONSE TO WHICH SA. TRANSPOROUTE ET TRAVAUX (HEREINAFTER REFERRED TO AS ' ' TRANSPOROUTE ' '), A COMPANY INCORPORATED UNDER BELGIAN LAW , HAD SUBMITTED THE LOWEST TENDER.

3 THE TENDER WAS REJECTED BY THE MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS BECAUSE TRANSPOROUTE WAS NOT IN POSSESSION OF THE GOVERNMENT ESTABLISHMENT PERMIT REQUIRED BY ARTICLE 1 OF THE REGLEMENT GRAND-DUCAL (GRAND-DUCAL REGULATION) OF 6 NOVEMBER 1974 (MEMORIAL (GAZETTE) A , 1974 , P. 1660 ET SEQ .) AND BECAUSE THE PRICES IN TRANSPOROUTE ' S TENDER WERE CONSIDERED BY THE MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS TO BE ABNORMALLY LOW WITHIN THE MEANING OF THE FIFTH AND SIXTH PARAGRAPHS OF ARTICLE 32 OF THAT REGULATION . AS A RESULT , THE MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS OF THE GRAND DUCHY OF LUXEMBOURG AWARDED THE CONTRACT TO A CONSORTIUM OF LUXEMBOURG CONTRACTORS WHOSE TENDER WAS CONSIDERED TO BE ECONOMICALLY THE MOST ADVANTAGEOUS.

4 TRANSPOROUTE BROUGHT AN ACTION BEFORE THE CONSEIL D ' ETAT FOR THE ANNULMENT OF THE DECISION. IN SUPPORT OF ITS APPLICATION IT CONTENDED INTER ALIA THAT THE REASONS GIVEN FOR REJECTING ITS TENDER AMOUNTED TO AN INFRINGEMENT OF COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305 , IN PARTICULAR ARTICLES 24 AND 29 (5) THEREOF.

5 CONSIDERING THAT THE DISPUTE THUS RAISED QUESTIONS CONCERNING THE INTERPRETATION OF COMMUNITY LAW , THE CONSEIL D ' ETAT REFERRED TO THE COURT FOR A PRELIMINARY RULING TWO QUESTIONS CONCERNING THE INTERPRETATION OF COUNCIL DIRECTIVES 71/304 AND 71/305.

FIRST QUESTION

6 THE FIRST QUESTION ASKS WHETHER IT IS CONTRARY TO THE PROVISIONS OF COUNCIL DIRECTIVES 71/304 AND 71/305 , IN PARTICULAR THOSE OF ARTICLE 24 OF DIRECTIVE 71/305 , FOR THE AUTHORITY AWARDING THE CONTRACT TO REQUIRE AS A CONDITION FOR THE AWARD OF A PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACT TO A TENDERER ESTABLISHED

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

IN ANOTHER MEMBER STATE THAT IN ADDITION TO BEING PROPERLY ENROLLED IN THE PROFESSIONAL OR TRADE REGISTER OF THE COUNTRY IN WHICH HE IS ESTABLISHED THE TENDERER MUST BE IN POSSESSION OF AN ESTABLISHMENT PERMIT ISSUED BY THE GOVERNMENT OF THE MEMBER STATE IN WHICH THE CONTRACT IS AWARDED.

7 DIRECTIVES 71/304 AND 71/305 ARE DESIGNED TO ENSURE FREEDOM TO PROVIDE SERVICES IN THE FIELD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS. THUS THE FIRST OF THOSE DIRECTIVES IMPOSES A GENERAL DUTY ON MEMBER STATES TO ABOLISH RESTRICTIONS ON ACCESS TO , PARTICIPATION IN AND THE PERFORMANCE OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS AND THE SECOND DIRECTIVE PROVIDES FOR COORDINATION OF THE PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS.

8 IN REGARD TO SUCH COORDINATION CHAPTER I OF TITLE IV OF DIRECTIVE 71/305 IS NOT LIMITED TO STATING THE CRITERIA FOR SELECTION ON THE BASIS OF WHICH CONTRACTORS MAY BE EXCLUDED FROM PARTICIPATION BY THE AUTHORITY AMENDING THE CONTRACT. IT ALSO PRESCRIBES THE MANNER IN WHICH CONTRACTORS MAY FURNISH PROOF THAT THEY SATISFY THOSE CRITERIA.

9 THUS ARTICLE 27 STATES THAT THE AUTHORITY AWARDING CONTRACTS MAY INVITE THE CONTRACTOR TO SUPPLEMENT THE CERTIFICATES AND DOCUMENTS SUBMITTED ONLY WITHIN THE LIMITS OF ARTICLES 23 TO 26 OF THE DIRECTIVE , ACCORDING TO WHICH MEMBER STATES MAY REQUEST REFERENCES OTHER THAN THOSE EXPRESSLY MENTIONED IN THE DIRECTIVE ONLY FOR THE PURPOSE OF ASSESSING THE FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC STANDING OF THE CONTRACTORS AS PROVIDED FOR IN ARTICLE 25 OF THE DIRECTIVE.

10 SINCE THE ESTABLISHMENT PERMIT IN QUESTION IS INTENDED , AS THE LUXEMBOURG GOVERNMENT HAS ACKNOWLEDGED IN ITS WRITTEN OBSERVATIONS , TO ESTABLISH NOT THE FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC STANDING OF UNDERTAKINGS BUT THE QUALIFICATIONS AND GOOD STANDING OF THOSE IN CHARGE OF THEM , AND SINCE THE EXCEPTION PROVIDED FOR IN ARTICLE 25 OF DIRECTIVE 71/305 DOES NOT APPLY , THE PERMIT CONSTITUTES A MEANS OF PROOF WHICH DOES NOT COME WITHIN THE CLOSED CATEGORY OF THOSE AUTHORIZED BY THE DIRECTIVE .

11 THE LUXEMBOURG GOVERNMENT SUBMITS , HOWEVER , THAT THE GRANT OF AN ESTABLISHMENT PERMIT IS EQUIVALENT TO REGISTRATION OF THE CONTRACTOR IN QUESTION IN A LIST OF RECOGNIZED CONTRACTORS WITHIN THE MEANING OF ARTICLE 28 OF DIRECTIVE 71/305 AND THEREFORE COMPLIES WITH THE TERMS OF THAT PROVISION.

12 IT SHOULD BE POINTED OUT , IN REPLY TO THAT ARGUMENT , THAT EVEN IF THE ESTABLISHMENT PERMIT MAY BE EQUATED WITH REGISTRATION IN AN OFFICIAL LIST OF RECOGNIZED CONTRACTORS WITHIN THE MEANING OF ARTICLE 28 OF DIRECTIVE 71/305 , THERE IS NOTHING IN THAT PROVISION TO JUSTIFY THE INFERENCE THAT REGISTRATION IN SUCH A LIST IN THE STATE AWARDING THE CONTRACT MAY BE REQUIRED OF CONTRACTORS ESTABLISHED IN OTHER MEMBER STATES.

13 ON THE CONTRARY , ARTICLE 28 (3) ENTITLES CONTRACTORS REGISTERED IN AN OFFICIAL LIST IN ANY MEMBER STATE WHATEVER TO USE SUCH REGISTRATION , WITHIN THE LIMITS LAID DOWN IN THAT PROVISION , AS AN ALTERNATIVE MEANS OF PROVING BEFORE THE AUTHORITY OF ANOTHER MEMBER STATE AWARDING CONTRACTS THAT THEY SATISFY THE QUALITATIVE CRITERIA LISTED IN ARTICLES 23 TO 26 OF DIRECTIVE 71/305.

14 IT SHOULD BE NOTED THAT THE RESULT OF THAT INTERPRETATION OF DIRECTIVE

71/305 IS IN CONFORMITY WITH THE SCHEME OF THE TREATY PROVISIONS CONCERNING THE PROVISION OF SERVICES. TO MAKE THE PROVISION OF SERVICES IN ONE MEMBER STATE BY A CONTRACTOR ESTABLISHED IN ANOTHER MEMBER STATE CONDITIONAL UPON THE POSSESSION OF AN ESTABLISHMENT PERMIT IN THE FIRST STATE WOULD BE TO DEPRIVE ARTICLE 59 OF THE TREATY OF ALL EFFECTIVENESS , THE PURPOSE OF THAT ARTICLE BEING PRECISELY TO ABOLISH RESTRICTIONS ON THE FREEDOM TO PROVIDE SERVICES BY PERSONS WHO ARE NOT ESTABLISHED IN THE STATE IN WHICH THE SERVICE IS TO BE PROVIDED.

15 ACCORDINGLY , THE REPLY TO THE FIRST QUESTION MUST BE THAT COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305 MUST BE INTERPRETED AS PRECLUDING A MEMBER STATE FROM REQUIRING A TENDERER ESTABLISHED IN ANOTHER MEMBER STATE TO FURNISH PROOF BY ANY MEANS , FOR EXAMPLE BY AN ESTABLISHMENT PERMIT , OTHER THAN THOSE PRESCRIBED IN ARTICLES 23 TO 26 OF THAT DIRECTIVE , THAT HE SATISFIES THE CRITERIA LAID DOWN IN THOSE PROVISIONS AND RELATING TO HIS GOOD STANDING AND QUALIFICATIONS.

SECOND QUESTION

16 THE SECOND QUESTION ASKS WHETHER THE PROVISIONS OF ARTICLE 29 (5) OF DIRECTIVE 71/305 REQUIRE THE AUTHORITY AWARDING THE CONTRACT TO REQUEST A TENDERER WHOSE TENDERS , IN THE AUTHORITY ' S OPINION , ARE OBVIOUSLY ABNORMALLY LOW IN RELATION TO THE TRANSACTION , TO FURNISH EXPLANATIONS FOR THOSE PRICES BEFORE INVESTIGATING THEIR COMPOSITION AND DECIDING TO WHOM IT WILL AWARD THE CONTRACT , OR WHETHER IN SUCH CIRCUMSTANCES THEY ALLOW THE AUTHORITY AWARDING THE CONTRACT TO DECIDE WHETHER IT IS NECESSARY TO REQUEST SUCH EXPLANATIONS.

17 ARTICLE 29 (5) OF DIRECTIVE 71/305 PROVIDES THAT IF A TENDER IS OBVIOUSLY ABNORMALLY LOW THE AUTHORITY AWARDING THE CONTRACT IS TO EXAMINE THE DETAILS OF THE TENDER AND , FOR THAT PURPOSE , REQUEST THE TENDERER TO FURNISH THE NECESSARY EXPLANATIONS. CONTRARY TO THE VIEW EXPRESSED BY THE LUXEMBOURG GOVERNMENT , THE FACT THAT THE PROVISION EXPRESSLY EMPOWERS THE AWARDING AUTHORITY TO ESTABLISH WHETHER THE EXPLANATIONS ARE ACCEPTABLE DOES NOT UNDER ANY CIRCUMSTANCES AUTHORIZE IT TO DECIDE IN ADVANCE , BY REJECTING THE TENDER WITHOUT EVEN SEEKING AN EXPLANATION FROM THE TENDERER , THAT NO ACCEPTABLE EXPLANATION COULD BE GIVEN. THE AIM OF THE PROVISION , WHICH IS TO PROTECT TENDERERS AGAINST ARBITRARINESS ON THE PART OF THE AUTHORITY AWARDING CONTRACTS , COULD NOT BE ACHIEVED IF IT WERE LEFT TO THAT AUTHORITY TO JUDGE WHETHER OR NOT IT WAS APPROPRIATE TO SEEK EXPLANATIONS.

18 THE REPLY TO THE SECOND QUESTION MUST THEREFORE BE THAT WHEN IN THE OPINION OF THE AUTHORITY AWARDING A PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACT A TENDERER ' S OFFER IS OBVIOUSLY ABNORMALLY LOW IN RELATION TO THE TRANSACTION ARTICLE 29 (5) OF DIRECTIVE 71/305 REQUIRES THE AUTHORITY TO SEEK FROM THE TENDERER , BEFORE COMING TO A DECISION AS TO THE AWARD OF THE CONTRACT , AN EXPLANATION OF HIS PRICES OR TO INFORM THE TENDERER WHICH OF HIS TENDERS APPEAR TO BE ABNORMAL , AND TO ALLOW HIM A REASONABLE TIME WITHIN WHICH TO SUBMIT FURTHER DETAILS.

COMMUNITIES , WHICH HAVE SUBMITTED OBSERVATIONS TO THE COURT , ARE NOT RECOVERABLE. AS THE PROCEEDINGS ARE , IN SO FAR AS THE PARTIES TO THE MAIN ACTION ARE CONCERNED , IN THE NATURE OF A STEP IN THE ACTION BEFORE THE NATIONAL COURT , THE DECISION AS TO COSTS IS A MATTER FOR THAT COURT.

ON THOSE GROUNDS ,

THE COURT

IN ANSWER TO THE QUESTIONS REFERRED TO IT BY THE COMITE DU CONTENTIEUX OF THE CONSEIL D ' ETAT OF THE GRAND DUCHY OF LUXEMBOURG BY JUGDMENT OF 11 MARCH 1981 , HEREBY RULES :

COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 71/305 MUST BE INTERPRETED AS PRECLUDING A MEMBER STATE FROM REQUIRING A TENDERER IN ANOTHER MEMBER STATE TO FURNISH PROOF BY ANY MEANS , FOR EXAMPLE BY AN ESTABLISHMENT PERMIT , OTHER THAN THOSE PRESCRIBED IN ARTICLES 23 TO 26 OF THAT DIRECTIVE THAT HE SATISFIES THE CRITERIA LAID DOWN IN THOSE PROVISIONS AND RELATING TO HIS GOOD STANDING AND QUALIFICATIONS.

APPLICATION FOR A DECLARATION THAT THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE EEC TREATY BY NOT ADOPTING WITHIN THE PRESCRIBED PERIODS THE PROVISIONS NEEDED TO COMPLY WITH COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 77/62/EEC COORDINATING PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC SUPPLY CONTRACTS (OFFICIAL JOURNAL 1977 , L 13 , P. 1), 1 BY APPLICATION LODGED AT THE COURT REGISTRY ON 2 JUNE 1980 THE COMMISSION OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES BROUGHT AN ACTION UNDER ARTICLE 169 OF THE EEC TREATY FOR A DECLARATION THAT BY FAILING TO ADOPT WITHIN THE PRESCRIBED PERIOD THE PROVISIONS NEEDED TO COMPLY WITH COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 77/62/EEC OF 21 DECEMBER 1976 COORDINATING PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC SUPPLY CONTRACTS (OFFICIAL JOURNAL 1977 , L 13 , P. 1) THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE EEC TREATY.

2 COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 77/62/EEC CONTAINS A NUMBER OF PROVISIONS INTENDED TO ENSURE THAT THE PROHIBITION OF RESTRICTIONS ON THE FREE MOVEMENT OF GOODS LAID DOWN BY ARTICLES 30 TO 37 OF THE EEC TREATY IS OBSERVED IN THE FIELD OF PUBLIC SUPPLY CONTRACTS. THE OBJECT OF THE PROVISIONS OF THE DIRECTIVE IS TO COORDINATE NATIONAL PROCEDURES CONCERNING PUBLIC SUPPLY CONTRACTS , IN PARTICULAR BY INTRODUCING EQUAL CONDITIONS OF COMPETITION FOR SUCH CONTRACTS IN ALL THE MEMBER STATES , AND TO ENSURE A DEGREE OF TRANSPARENCY ALLOWING THE OBSERVANCE OF THE PROHIBITION CONTAINED IN ARTICLES 30 TO 37 MENTIONED ABOVE TO BE BETTER SUPERVISED.

3 UNDER ARTICLE 30 OF THE DIRECTIVE MEMBER STATES WERE OBLIGED TO ADOPT

THE MEASURES NECESSARY TO COMPLY WITH IT WITHIN 18 MONTHS OF ITS NOTIFICATION AND TO INFORM THE COMMISSION THEREOF FORTHWITH. UNDER ARTICLE 31 THEY WERE , AND STILL ARE , FURTHER OBLIGED TO COMMUNICATE TO THE COMMISSION THE TEXTS OF THE BASIC PROVISIONS OF DOMESTIC LAW , WHETHER LAWS , REGULATIONS OR ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS , WHICH THEY ADOPT IN THE FIELD IN QUESTION.

4 THE PERIOD LAID DOWN BY ARTICLE 30 EXPIRED ON 23 JUNE 1978 WITHOUT THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC ' S HAVING ADOPTED THE NECESSARY MEASURES AND THE COMMISSION GAVE IT A FIRST REMINDER OF ITS OBLIGATION BY A LETTER OF 27 OCTOBER 1978. IT TOOK UP THE MATTER AGAIN AT THE MEETING ON 9 AND 10 NOVEMBER 1978 OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR PUBLIC CONTRACTS.

5 SEEING THAT ITS REMINDERS HAD NOT LED TO THE ADOPTION OF THE NECESSARY MEASURES , ON 13 MARCH 1979 THE COMMISSION INVITED THE GOVERNMENT OF THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PROCEDURE LAID DOWN BY ARTICLE 169 OF THE EEC TREATY TO SUBMIT ITS OBSERVATIONS WITHIN A PERIOD OF 20 DAYS. THE GOVERNMENT DID SO BY A TELEX MESSAGE OF 9 APRIL 1979. IN THAT MESSAGE IT WAS EXPLAINED THAT THE DRAFT LAW TO INCORPORATE THE DIRECTIVE INTO THE ITALIAN LEGAL SYSTEM HAD BEEN PASSED ONCE BY THE CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES ON 27 SEPTEMBER 1978 AND THEN BY THE SENATE ON 13 DECEMBER 1978 , BUT THAT CERTAIN AMENDMENTS HAD MADE IT NECESSARY FOR THE DRAFT TO BE REMITTED TO THE CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES . OWING TO THE DISSOLUTION OF THE LEGISLATURE PARLIAMENT COULD NOT COMPLETE ITS SCRUTINY OF THE DRAFT LAW. THE SITUATION REMAINED UNCHANGED THROUGHOUT 1979 AND ON 6 DECEMBER OF THAT YEAR THE COMMISSION ISSUED A REASONED OPINION DECLARING THAT THERE HAD BEEN A FAILURE ON THE PART OF THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE TREATY AND INVITING IT TO COMPLY WITH THAT OPINION WITHIN A PERIOD OF TWO MONTHS.

6 THAT INVITATION WAS NOT ACTED UPON AND ON 2 JUNE 1980 THE COMMISSION LODGED AN APPLICATION FOR A DECLARATION ESTABLISHING THE NON-COMPLIANCE. THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC POINTED OUT IN ITS DEFENCE THAT THE DELAY WAS DUE TO THE DISSOLUTION OF THE LEGISLATURE , CAUSING ALL DRAFT LAWS UNDER DISCUSSION TO LAPSE AND THEREBY RENDERING NECESSARY A NEW DRAFT , WHICH HAD BEEN PRESENTED TO THE SENATE ON 9 DECEMBER 1979 ; BUT IT DID NOT CLAIM THAT THE APPLICATION SHOULD BE DISMISSED.

7 THE CIRCUMSTANCES WHICH HAVE BEEN DESCRIBED CANNOT EXPUNGE THE NON-COMPLIANCE COMPLAINED OF. ACCORDING TO WELL-ESTABLISHED CASE-LAW A MEMBER STATE MAY NOT PLEAD PROVISIONS , PRACTICES OR CIRCUMSTANCES EXISTING IN ITS INTERNAL LEGAL SYSTEM IN ORDER TO JUSTIFY A FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH THE OBLIGATIONS IMPOSED BY COMMUNITY DIRECTIVES.

8 IT IS THEREFORE NECESSARY TO DECLARE THAT BY NOT ADOPTING WITHIN THE PRESCRIBED PERIOD THE PROVISIONS NEEDED TO COMPLY WITH COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 77/62/EEC OF 21 DECEMBER 1976 THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ONE OF ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE TREATY.

9 UNDER ARTICLE 69 (2) OF THE RULES OF PROCEDURE THE UNSUCCESSFUL PARTY IS TO BE ORDERED TO PAY THE COSTS IF THEY HAVE BEEN ASKED FOR IN THE SUCCESSFUL PARTY ' S PLEADINGS. SINCE THE DEFENDANT HAS BEEN UNSUCCESSFUL IT MUST BE ORDERED TO PAY THE COSTS.

ON THOSE GROUNDS ,

HEREBY :

1 . DECLARES THAT , BY NOT ADOPTING WITHIN THE PRESCRIBED PERIOD THE PROVISIONS NEEDED TO COMPLY WITH COUNCIL DIRECTIVE 77/62/EEC OF 21 DECEMBER 1976 COORDINATING PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC SUPPLY CONTRACTS (OFFICIAL JOURNAL 1977 , L 13 , P. 1), THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE EEC TREATY ;

2.ORDERS THE DEFENDANT TO PAY THE COSTS.

ALTHOUGH THE COURT HAS JURISDICTION TO REVIEW THE JUDGMENT OF THE DEPARTMENTS OF THE COMMISSION TO DECIDE WHETHER THERE IS ANY MISUSE OF POWERS OR A SERIOUS AND MANIFEST ERROR OF JUDGMENT IT MUST , HOWEVER , RESPECT THE DISCRETION GIVEN TO THE COMPETENT AUTHORITIES IN ASSESSING THE FACTORS TO BE TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT IN THE INTERESTS OF THE DEPARTMENT WITH A VIEW TO TAKING A DECISION TO ENTER INTO A CONTRACT FOLLOWING A REQUEST FOR TENDERS UNDER ARTICLE 59 (2) OF THE FINANCIAL REGULATION OF 25 APRIL 1973.

APPLICATION FOR ANNULMENT OF THE DECISION OF THE COMMISSION DATED 1 MARCH 1977 BY WHICH THE COMMISSION REJECTED THE APPLICANT ' S OFFER TO MAKE TEMPORARY STAFF AVAILABLE AND FOR AN ORDER THAT THE DEFENDANT PAY TO THE APPLICANT THE SUM OF BFRS 26 600 000 AS COMPENSATION FOR DAMAGE CAUSED TO THE APPLICANT BY THE SAID DECISION AND BY THE ACTS OF CERTAIN OFFICIALS OF THE COMMISSION.

1BY APPLICATION REGISTERED AT THE COURT ON 3 MAY 1977 THE APPLICANT , AGENCE EUROPEENNE D ' INTERIMS S.A., CLAIMS ON THE ONE HAND THE ANNULMENT OF THE DECISION OF THE COMMISSION DATED 1 MARCH 1977 BY WHICH THE COMMISSION REJECTED THE APPLICANT ' S TENDER LODGED IN RESPONSE TO THE COMMISSION ' S INVITATION

TO TENDER FOR THE SUPPLY OF TEMPORARY STAFF AND FURTHER AN ORDER THAT THE COMMISSION PAY COMPENSATION FOR THE DAMAGE THE APPLICANT SUFFERED AS A RESULT OF THE SAID DECISION AND BECAUSE OF THE CONDUCT OF CERTAIN OFFICIALS OF THE COMMISSION .

2IT APPEARS FROM THE FILE THAT AFTER THE COMMISSION HAD DECIDED IN NOVEMBER 1976 TO TERMINATE THE CONTRACTS WHICH IT HAD HAD WITH THE APPLICANT SINCE 1970 FOR THE SUPPLY OF TEMPORARY STAFF IT ISSUED ON 7 DECEMBER 1976 A RESTRICTED INVITATION TO TENDER FOR THE SUPPLY OF TEMPORARY STAFF WITHIN THE MEANING OF ARTICLE 59 (2) OF THE FINANCIAL REGULATION OF 25 APRIL 1973 APPLICABLE TO THE GENERAL BUDGET OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES (OFFICIAL JOURNAL L 116 , P. 1) AND THAT THE APPLICANT DULY FOLLOWED THE PROCEDURE.

4THE APPLICANT , ALONG WITH 18 OTHERS , LODGED A TENDER IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE CONDITIONS LAID DOWN IN THE INVITATION TO TENDER.

7BY LETTER DATED 1 MARCH 1977 THE COMMISSION INFORMED THE APPLICANT THAT ITS TENDER HAD NOT BEEN ACCEPTED.

8SUBSEQUENTLY THE MAJORITY OF THE TEMPORARY STAFF WHICH HAD PREVIOUSLY BEEN EMPLOYED BY THE APPLICANT OFFERED THEIR SERVICES TO RANDSTAD WHO THEREUPON SIGNED THEM UP.

11NONE OF THE PARTIES HAS QUESTIONED THE LAWFULNESS OF THE EXTENT OF THE COMMISSION ' S RECOURSE TO THE EMPLOYMENT OF TEMPORARY STAFF TO PROVIDE THE NECESSARY STAFF FOR THE PERFORMANCE OF ITS NORMAL WORK.

13SINCE THE REJECTION OF THE APPLICANT ' S TENDER WAS ONLY THE NECESSARY AND INEVITABLE CONSEQUENCE OF THE DECISION TO ACCEPT RANDSTAD ' S TENDER IT WAS UNNECESSARY FOR THE REASONS TO BE SEPARATELY STATED.

14IN THE SECOND PLACE THE APPLICANT ALLEGES THAT THE DECISION TAKEN IN FAVOUR OF THE INTERVENER INFRINGES THE PROVISIONS OF ARTICLE 59 (2) OF THE FINANCIAL REGULATION IN SO FAR AS IT INVOLVES THE REJECTION OF THE APPLICANT ' S TENDER WHEREAS

(A) THIS TENDER WAS , FROM THE POINT OF VIEW OF THE FACTORS OF ASSESSMENT LISTED IN THAT PARAGRAPH , MORE ATTRACTIVE THAN THE TENDER WHICH WAS ACCEPTED ; AND

(B) THE COMMISSION DID NOT SERIOUSLY CONSIDER THE TENDERS SUBMITTED AND MORE PARTICULARLY THE ONE WHICH IT ACCEPTED.

15ARTICLE 59 (2) OF THE FINANCIAL REGULATION PROVIDES :

' ' A CONTRACT FOLLOWING A REQUEST FOR TENDERS IS A CONTRACT ENTERED INTO BY THE CONTRACTING PARTIES FOLLOWING AN INVITATION TO TENDER. IN THIS CASE , THE OFFER THOUGHT TO BE THE MOST ATTRACTIVE MAY BE FREELY CHOSEN , TAKING INTO ACCOUNT THE COST OF PERFORMANCE , RUNNING COSTS INVOLVED , TECHNICAL MERIT , THE TIME FOR PERFORMANCE , TOGETHER WITH THE FINANCIAL GUARANTEES AND THE GUARANTEES OF PROFESSIONAL COMPETENCE PUT FORWARD BY EACH OF THE TENDERERS.

A REQUEST FOR TENDERS... IS SAID TO BE RESTRICTED WHERE IT IS ADDRESSED ONLY TO THOSE WHOM IT HAS BEEN DECIDED TO CONSULT BECAUSE OF THEIR SPECIAL QUALIFICATIONS. ' '

19IN THE PRESENT CASE THE PROPOSAL TO ENTER INTO A CONTRACT WITH RANDSTAD RECEIVED A FAVOURABLE OPINION FROM THE PURCHASES AND CONTRACTS ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

20ALTHOUGH THE COURT HAS JURISDICTION TO REVIEW THE JUDGMENT OF THE DEPARTMENTS OF THE COMMISSION TO DECIDE WHETHER THERE IS ANY MISUSE OF POWERS OR A SERIOUS AND MANIFEST ERROR OF JUDGMENT IT MUST , HOWEVER , RESPECT THE DISCRETION GIVEN TO THE COMPETENT AUTHORITIES , INCLUDING THE PURCHASES AND CONTRACTS ADVISORY COMMITTEE , IN ASSESSING THE FACTORS TO BE TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT IN THE INTERESTS OF THE DEPARTMENT FOR THE PURPOSE OF DECIDING TO ENTER INTO A CONTRACT FOR THE SUPPLY OF TEMPORARY STAFF TO AN INSTITUTION.

21BY PRODUCING A NUMBER OF COMPARATIVE TABLES OF FIGURES THE APPLICANT

HAS ATTEMPTED TO SHOW THE OBVIOUSLY ERRONEOUS NATURE OF THE COMMISSION ' S FINDING THAT RANDSTAD ' S TENDER WAS THE LOWEST.

22ON THE OTHER HAND AT THE REQUEST OF THE COURT THE COMMISSION HAS FILED CALCULATIONS IN SUPPORT OF ITS CLAIM THAT THE PRICES OFFERED BY RANDSTAD WERE MORE ATTRACTIVE THAN THOSE PROPOSED BY THE APPLICANT.

23THE APPLICANT HAS FILED WRITTEN OBSERVATIONS ON THE COMMISSION ' S CALCULATIONS.

24PROVIDED THAT THE COMMISSION HAS ASSESSED THE TENDERS FAIRLY ON THE SAME BASIS AND ACCORDING TO THE SAME CRITERIA THE CHOICE OF METHODS WHICH IT HAS EMPLOYED TO COMPARE THE TENDERS CANNOT BE QUESTIONED .

25IT IS ACCORDINGLY NECESSARY TO CONSIDER THE METHODS OF COMPARISON EMPLOYED BY THE COMMISSION.

26THE COMMISSION HAS EXPLAINED THE BASIC PRINCIPLE OF THE CALCULATIONS MADE BY ITS DEPARTMENTS WHEN CONSIDERING THE PRICES OF THE TENDERS .

27ACCORDING TO ITS EXPLANATIONS IT DREW UP A SCALE OF THE NET HOURLY SALARIES OF ITS OFFICIALS AND OTHER SERVANTS DOING THE SAME WORK AS THAT REQUIRED OF THE TEMPORARY STAFF IN THE INVITATION TO TENDER.

28A NET FIGURE IN RESPECT OF THE GROSS SALARIES PROPOSED BY THE TENDERERS WAS OBTAINED BY ADDING 14.8 % FOR HOLIDAY PAY AND MAKING THE NORMAL DEDUCTIONS , INCLUDING SOCIAL SECURITY CONTRIBUTIONS FOR WHICH THE WORKER IS LIABLE.

29COMPARISON OF THE AMOUNTS SO CALCULATED WITH THE SCALE OF NET SALARIES OF OFFICIALS OR OTHER SERVANTS OF THE COMMISSION SHOWED THAT THE APPLICANT ' S TENDER DID NOT IN MOST CASES COMPLY WITH THE PROVISIONS OF ARTICLE 10 OF THE BELGIAN LAW OF 28 JUNE 1976 (MONITEUR BELGE , 7 AUGUST 1976) WHICH CAME INTO FORCE ON 1 DECEMBER 1976 AND REQUIRES THAT THE SALARY OF TEMPORARY STAFF SHOULD NOT BE LESS THAN THAT TO WHICH SUCH STAFF WOULD HAVE BEEN ENTITLED IF THEY HAD BEEN EMPLOYED ON THE SAME TERMS AS A PERMANENT WORKER AND THE COMMISSION , THEREFORE , IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE REVIEW CLAUSE WHICH THE APPLICANT ' S TENDER CONTAINED CALCULATED THE NECESSARY COEFFICIENTS OF INCREASE AND APPLIED THEM TO THE PRICES SOUGHT BY THE APPLICANT.

31AFTER THE COMMISSION HAD MADE A FORECAST OF THE USE OF TEMPORARY STAFF ACCORDING TO THE STAFF POLICY WHICH IT CONTEMPLATED PURSUING IT COMPARED THE COSTS OF THE TENDERS BY MULTIPLYING THE HOURLY RATES PROPOSED BY THE TENDERERS , AFTER APPLYING THE REVIEW CLAUSE IN THE CASE OF THE APPLICANT , BY THE NUMBER OF HOURS STATED IN THE SAID FORECAST AND TAKING ACCOUNT OF ANY EFFECT THE INDEX AND REDUCTIONS MIGHT HAVE .

32AS REGARDS THE INDEX THE VARIATIONS IN 1976 WERE TAKEN.

33AS A RESULT OF THE ABOVE-MENTIONED OPERATIONS THE APPLICANT ' S PRICES WERE HIGHER THAN THOSE OF RANDSTAD.

34THE OBJECTIONS RAISED BY THE APPLICANT AGAINST THE METHODS OF CALCULATION ADOPTED BY THE COMMISSION BASICALLY CONCERN THE FACTORS OF ASSESSMENT WHICH THESE INVOLVE AND IN PARTICULAR THE CHOICE OF THE NET SALARIES OF

THE OFFICIALS OF THE COMMISSION APPLICABLE ON 31 DECEMBER 1976 AS A CRITERION OF CONFORMITY WITH ARTICLE 10 OF THE BELGIAN LAW , THE FORECAST OF THE USE OF TEMPORARY STAFF AND REFERENCE TO THE VARIATIONS IN THE INDEX IN 1976 AS A CRITERION FOR THE INFLUENCE OF THE INDEX ON THE PRICES PROPOSED.

35IN VIEW OF THE FACT THAT WHEN THE COMMISSION HAD TO APPLY THE BELGIAN LAW FOR THE PURPOSE OF ITS CALCULATIONS THAT LAW HAD JUST ENTERED INTO FORCE AND HAVING REGARD TO THE ABSENCE OF PRECISE INDICATIONS IT IS NOT POSSIBLE TO REPROACH THE COMMISSION FOR HAVING ADOPTED AS A CRITERION OF THE CONFORMITY OF THE TWO TENDERS WITH THE PROVISIONS OF ARTICLE 10 OF THE BELGIAN LAW THE NET HOURLY SALARY AS AT 31 DECEMBER 1976 OF OFFICIALS OF THE COMMISSION DOING THE SAME WORK AS THAT STATED IN THE INVITATION TO TENDER FOR TEMPORARY STAFF.

36FURTHER , THE COMMISSION HAD TO JUDGE THE TENDERS ON THE BASIS OF AN ASSESSMENT OF ITS FUTURE NEEDS AND IN PARTICULAR OF THE NUMBER OF HOURS OF USE OF THE TEMPORARY STAFF AND THE ALLOCATION OF THESE ACCORDING TO OCCUPATIONS AND ONLY THE COMMISSION IS IN A POSITION TO MAKE THIS ASSESSMENT.

38IT IS NOT POSSIBLE FROM THE FACTS ADDUCED BY THE APPLICANT TO SHOW THAT THE METHODS OF CALCULATION OF THE COMMISSION OR THE CRITERIA WHICH IT HAS ADOPTED ARE SUCH AS TO DISTORT THE COMPARISON OF PRICES PROPOSED IN THE TWO TENDERS OR THE COMMISSION ' S CONCLUSION THAT RANDSTAD ' S TENDER WAS THE LOWEST.

39EVEN ASSUMING THAT IN A PROCEDURE FOR REQUEST FOR TENDERS THE COMMISSION CHOSE AN UNDERTAKING WHOSE OFFER WAS HIGHER IN PRICE THAN THE OTHERS , THIS IS NOT IN ITSELF DECISIVE.

40OTHER FACTORS REFERRED TO BY THE COMMISSION TO JUSTIFY ITS CHOICE , IN PARTICULAR THE REFERENCES OF RANDSTAD AND THE FACT THAT THE SALARY PAID BY IT TO TEMPORARY STAFF WAS , IN RELATION TO THE PRICES PAID BY THE COMMISSION , AMONG THE HIGHEST , CAME WITHIN THE CONSIDERATIONS OF A TECHNICAL NATURE WHICH IT COULD TAKE INTO ACCOUNT UNDER ARTICLE 59 (2) OF THE FINANCIAL REGULATION FOR THE PURPOSE OF MAKING ITS CHOICE.

41AS HAS ALREADY BEEN STATED , THE APPLICANT CLAIMS THAT THERE WAS A MISUSE OF POWERS IN THAT THE PROCEDURE FOR REQUEST FOR TENDERS WAS USED NOT TO SUPPLY THE COMMISSION WITH THE MOST ATTRACTIVE SERVICES OF COMPETING FIRMS BUT TO FAVOUR RANDSTAD.

42THIS IS APPARENT , ACCORDING TO THE APPLICANT , NOT ONLY FROM THE FACT THAT THE PRICE PROPOSALS MADE BY IT WERE MORE ATTRACTIVE THAN THOSE OF RANDSTAD BUT ALSO FROM THE FACT THAT RANDSTAD SIGNED UP THE APPLICANT ' S TEMPORARY STAFF IN MARCH 1977 IMMEDIATELY AFTER THE PROCEDURE FOR REQUEST FOR TENDERS AND THAT THE COMMISSION ' S OFFICIALS WERE INVOLVED IN THIS , AS WAS NECESSARY IF RANDSTAD WAS TO FULFIL ITS CONTRACTUAL OBLIGATIONS TOWARDS THE COMMISSION.

43ON 17 MARCH 1977 AT A MEETING HELD IN BRUSSELS RANDSTAD , WITH THE IMPROPER

ASSISTANCE OF CERTAIN OFFICIALS OF THE COMMISSION , PROCEEDED TO SIGN UP ALMOST THE WHOLE OF THE TEMPORARY STAFF WHICH THE APPLICANT HAD MADE AVAILABLE TO THE COMMISSION.

44THIS WRONGFUL CONDUCT BY THE COMMISSION ' S OFFICIALS CORROBORATES THE APPLICANT ' S CLAIM THAT THE PROCEDURE FOR REQUESTS FOR TENDERS WAS USED TO FAVOUR ONE OF THE TENDERERS , NAMELY RANDSTAD.

45NEVERTHELESS , SUCH CONDUCT , WHICH , HOWEVER , IS DENIED BY THE COMMISSION , IS NO GROUND FOR CHALLENGING THE CHOICE OF RANDSTAD MADE PREVIOUSLY BY THE COMMISSION HAVING REGARD TO THE FACT THAT THE APPLICANT HAS NOT SUCCEEDED IN ESTABLISHING THE UNJUSTIFIED NATURE OF THE SAID CHOICE FOR THE REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMISSION AND HAVING REGARD TO ARTICLE 59 (2) OF THE FINANCIAL REGULATION.

46ACCORDINGLY THE APPLICATION FOR ANNULMENT MUST BE DISMISSED.

47THE APPLICANT CLAIMS FURTHER IN ITS APPLICATION THAT BY REJECTING ITS TENDER AND ACCEPTING THE LESS ATTRACTIVE TENDER OF RANDSTAD , THE COMMISSION ACTED WRONGLY AND THIS IS CORROBORATED BY THE ABOVE-MENTIONED CONDUCT OF ITS OFFICIALS WHICH RENDERS IT LIABLE TO MAKE GOOD THE DAMAGE ENSUING TO THE APPLICANT BY THE LOSS OF THE CONTRACT ENTERED INTO WITH RANDSTAD AND FOR THE LOSS OF STAFF.

51ACCORDINGLY THE APPLICANT CANNOT CLAIM ANY LEGALLY PROTECTED INTEREST IN RETAINING ITS TEMPORARY STAFF AFTER ITS CONTRACTUAL TIES WITH SUCH A PERSON HAVE BEEN TERMINATED.

52FURTHER IT APPEARS THAT THE APPLICANT DID NOT HAVE ANY IMPORTANT CUSTOMERS OTHER THAN THE COMMISSION SO THAT IT COULD NOT OFFER EMPLOYMENT PROSPECTS TO THE TEMPORARY STAFF WHICH HAD PREVIOUSLY BEEN ON ITS BOOKS.

53IN THESE CIRCUMSTANCES EVEN ASSUMING THAT CERTAIN OFFICIALS OF THE COMMISSION HAD ACTED IN SUCH A WAY AS TO BRING TO THE NOTICE OF THE TEMPORARY STAFF IN QUESTION THE DECISION OF THE COMMISSION TO TERMINATE THE CONTRACT WITH THE APPLICANT AND THE POSSIBILITY OF CONTINUING TO WORK FOR THE COMMISSION AS TEMPORARY EMPLOYEES OF RANDSTAD , SUCH CONDUCT , MOTIVATED BY CONSIDERATIONS OF THE INTERESTS OF THE SERVICE OR SOCIAL CONSIDERATIONS IS NOT AN ACT GIVING RISE TO LIABILITY ON THE PART OF THE COMMISSION TOWARDS THE APPLICANT.

Judgment of the Court
of 22 September 1976
Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic.
Public works contracts.
Case 10-76.

DIRECTIVES - MANDATORY NATURE - TIME-LIMITS - COMPLIANCE THEREWITH

(EEC TREATY , ARTICLE 189)

THE MANDATORY NATURE OF DIRECTIVES ENTAILS THE OBLIGATION FOR ALL MEMBER STATES TO COMPLY WITH THE TIME-LIMITS CONTAINED THEREIN IN ORDER THAT THEIR IMPLEMENTATION SHALL BE ACHIEVED UNIFORMLY WITHIN THE WHOLE COMMUNITY.

IN CASE 10/76

COMMISSION OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES , REPRESENTED BY ITS LEGAL ADVISER , ANTONINO ABATE , ACTING AS AGENT , WITH AN ADDRESS FOR SERVICE IN LUXEMBOURG AT THE OFFICE OF MARIO CERVINO , LEGAL ADVISER OF THE COMMISSION , BATIMENT CFL , PLACE DE LA GARE ,

APPLICANT ,

V ITALIAN REPUBLIC , REPRESENTED BY ITS AMBASSADOR ADOLFO MARESCA , ACTING AS AGENT , ASSISTED BY IVO MARIA BRAGUGLIA , VICEAVVOCATO DELLO STATO , WITH AN ADDRESS FOR SERVICE IN LUXEMBOURG AT THE ITALIAN EMBASSY ,

DEFENDANT ,

APPLICATION FOR A DECLARATION THAT THE GOVERNMENT OF THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER COUNCIL DIRECTIVE NO 71/305/EEC OF 26 JULY 1971 CONCERNING THE COORDINATION OF PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS (OJ , ENGLISH SPECIAL EDITION 1971 (II), P. 682 ,

1 BY AN APPLICATION WHICH WAS RECEIVED AT THE REGISTRY ON 5 FEBRUARY 1976 THE COMMISSION HAS BROUGHT BEFORE THE COURT UNDER ARTICLE 169 OF THE EEC TREATY AN ACTION SEEKING A DECLARATION THAT THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC HAS FAILED TO FULFIL ITS OBLIGATIONS UNDER DIRECTIVE NO 71/305/EEC OF THE COUNCIL OF 26 JULY 1971 (OJ , ENGLISH SPECIAL EDITION , 1971 (II), P. 682).

2 IN CONJUNCTION WITH DIRECTIVE NO 71/304/EEC OF THE SAME DATE CONCERNING THE ABOLITION OF RESTRICTIONS ON FREEDOM TO PROVIDE SERVICES IN RESPECT OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS , DIRECTIVE NO 71/305/EEC SEEKS TO COORDINATE THE NATIONAL PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF THESE CONTRACTS. UNDER ARTICLE 32 MEMBER STATES WERE TO ADOPT THE MEASURES NECESSARY TO COMPLY WITH THE DIRECTIVE WITHIN TWELVE MONTHS OF ITS NOTIFICATION TO THEM , WHICH PERIOD EXPIRED ON 29 JULY 1972.

3 SUBSEQUENT TO THIS DIRECTIVE THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC ADOPTED THE LAW OF 2 FEBRUARY 1973 RELATING TO THE PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC CONTRACTS BY RESTRICTED INVITATION TO TENDER (LICITAZIONE PRIVATA) THE TEXT OF WHICH WAS CONVEYED TO THE COMMISSION ON 16 AUGUST 1973.

IN APPLICATION OF ARTICLE 169 OF THE EEC TREATY THE COMMISSION , HOWEVER , INFORMED THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC BY LETTER OF 10 JUNE 1974 THAT IT CONSIDERED THAT THE OBLIGATIONS ARISING FROM THE ABOVEMENTIONED DIRECTIVE HAD NOT BEEN SATISFIED BY THE ADOPTION OF THE LAW.

4 IN THE FIRST PLACE IT WAS CLAIMED THAT THE DEFENDANT HAD EXCLUDED FROM THE SCOPE OF THE LAW PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS OTHER THAN BY RESTRICTED INVITATION TO TENDER.

5 SECONDLY , IT WAS ALLEGED THAT THE DEFENDANT HAD NOT COMPLIED WITH ARTICLE 29 OF THE DIRECTIVE WHEREBY THE ITALIAN ' ANONYMOUS ENVELOPE ' PROCEDURE HAD TO BE ABOLISHED BY 29 JULY 1975 OR 29 JULY 1979 ACCORDING TO THE ESTIMATED VALUE OF THE CONTRACT AS THE ITALIAN LAW OF 2 FEBRUARY 1973 MADE NO PROVISION IN THIS RESPECT.

6 IN ADDITION , UNDER ARTICLE 12 OF THE DIRECTIVE , AUTHORITIES AWARDING CONTRACTS WHO WISH TO AWARD A PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACT BY OPEN OR RESTRICTED PROCEDURE MUST MAKE THEIR INTENTION KNOWN BY MEANS OF A NOTICE PUBLISHED IN THE OFFICIAL JOURNAL OF THE COMMUNITIES WHEREAS THE ITALIAN LAW LIMITS ITSELF TO PROVIDING FOR THE PUBLICATION OF A NOTICE IN THE OFFICIAL JOURNAL OF THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC.

7 THE ITALIAN LAW DOES NOT CONTAIN THE PROVISIONS REFERRED TO IN ARTICLES 14 , 15 , 16 AND 17 OF THE DIRECTIVE CONCERNING THE TIME-LIMIT FOR THE RECEIPT OF REQUESTS TO PARTICIPATE , THE FORM REQUIRED FOR TENDERS AND THE COMPULSORY INDICATION OF THE TIME-LIMIT FOR THE COMPLETION OF THE WORKS PUT OUT TO TENDER.

8 FINALLY , ARTICLES 20 , 24 , 25 AND 26 OF THE DIRECTIVE LAY DOWN THE CRITERIA FOR QUALITATIVE SELECTION WHICH ALLOW CERTAIN UNDERTAKINGS TO BE EXCLUDED FROM PARTICIPATION IN THE CONTRACTS , WHILE THE ITALIAN LAW CONTAINS NO PROVISION TO THIS EFFECT AND RETAINS THE WIDE DISCRETION CONFERRED ON AUTHORITIES AWARDING CONTRACTS BY ARTICLE 89 OF THE ROYAL DECREE OF 23 MAY 1924.

9 THE DEFENDANT DID NOT CONTEST THE ALLEGED FAILURES AND , ON 5 JULY 1974 , CONVEYED TO THE COMMISSION A PRELIMINARY DRAFT OF A BILL ' CONTAINING THE COMMUNITY RULES IN FULL. '

10 THE DRAFT , WHICH ACCORDING TO THE COMMISSION SATISFIES THE ESSENTIAL REQUIREMENTS OF THE DIRECTIVE , WAS CONVEYED TO THE ITALIAN PARLIAMENT ON 13 AUGUST 1974 BUT HAS STILL NOT BEEN ADOPTED WITH THE RESULT THAT THE MEASURES INTENDED TO ENSURE THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE DIRECTIVE ARE NOT YET IN FORCE AT THE DATE OF THIS JUDGMENT.

11 ARTICLE 189 OF THE TREATY PROVIDES THAT A DIRECTIVE SHALL BE BINDING , AS TO THE RESULT TO BE ACHIEVED , UPON EACH MEMBER STATE TO WHICH IT IS ADDRESSED BUT LEAVES TO THE NATIONAL AUTHORITIES THE CHOICE OF FORM AND METHODS.

12 THE MANDATORY NATURE OF DIRECTIVES ENTAILS THE OBLIGATION FOR ALL MEMBER STATES TO COMPLY WITH THE TIME-LIMITS CONTAINED THEREIN IN ORDER THAT THE IMPLEMENTATION SHALL BE ACHIEVED UNIFORMLY WITHIN THE WHOLE COMMUNITY.

13 IT FOLLOWS THAT AS THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC HAS FAILED TO ADOPT , WITHIN THE PRESCRIBED PERIOD , THE MEASURES NECESSARY TO COMPLY WITH DIRECTIVE NO 71/305/EEC OF THE COUNCIL CONCERNING THE COORDINATION OF PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS , IT HAS FAILED TO FULFIL AN OBLIGATION UNDER THE TREATY.

COSTS

14 UNDER ARTICLE 69 (2) OF THE RULES OF PROCEDURE OF THE COURT OF JUSTICE , THE UNSUCCESSFUL PARTY SHALL BE ORDERED TO PAY THE COSTS.

THE DEFENDANT HAS FAILED IN ITS SUBMISSIONS.

IT MUST THEREFORE BE ORDERED TO PAY THE COSTS.

ON THOSE GROUNDS ,

THE COURT

HEREBY RULES :

1 . AS THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC HAS FAILED TO ADOPT , WITHIN THE PRESCRIBED PERIOD , THE MEASURES NECESSARY TO COMPLY WITH DIRECTIVE NO 71/305/EEC OF THE COUNCIL CONCERNING THE COORDINATION OF PROCEDURES FOR THE AWARD OF PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS , IT HAS FAILED TO FULFIL AN OBLIGATION UNDER THE TREATY.

2 . THE DEFENDANT SHALL PAY THE COSTS.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Geelhoed delivered on 11 March 2004.
Commission of the European Communities v French Republic.
Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Directive 92/50/EEC - Procedure for the award of public service contracts - Assistance to the maitre d'ouvrage for a sewage treatment plant - Award to the successful candidate in an earlier design contest without prior publication of a contract notice in the OJEC.
Case C-340/02.

1. In this case the Commission seeks a declaration that the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (2) (hereinafter the Directive') and, more specifically, Article 15(2) of that Directive.

2. The case was prompted by the award by the Communauté urbaine du Mans (municipality of Le Mans, hereinafter the municipality') of a study contract providing for assistance to the person responsible with the improvement of the Chauvinière sewage treatment works, without its having previously published a tender notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

I - Legal background

3. The following provisions of the Directive are relevant in this case:

- Article 1(g) reads: [For the purposes of this Directive] design contests shall mean those national procedures which enable the contracting authority to acquire, mainly in the fields of area planning, town planning, architecture and civil engineering, or data processing, a plan or design selected by a jury after being put out to competition with or without the award of prizes.'

- Article 7(1) reads: This Directive shall apply to public service contracts, the estimated value of which, net of VAT, is not less than ECU 200 000.'

- Article 8 reads: Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI.'

- Article 11(3), opening clause and (c). This provision is included in Title III of the Directive under the heading Choice of award procedures and rules governing design contests.' It reads: Contracting authorities may award public service contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice in the following cases:

(c) where the contract concerned follows a design contest and must, under the rules applying, be awarded to the successful candidate or to one of the successful candidates. In the latter case, all successful candidates shall be invited to participate in the negotiations;

...'

- Article 13 contains the provisions which apply to design contests forming part of a procedure for the award of a service contract whose estimated value net of VAT is not less than the value referred to in Article 7(1).

- Article 15(2) appears in Title V of the Directive under the heading Common advertising rules'. It reads: Contracting authorities who wish to award a public service contract by open, restricted or, under the conditions laid down in Article 11, negotiated procedure, shall make known their intention by means of a notice.'

II - Facts of the case and pre-litigation procedure

4. By letter of 7 October 1999 the Commission services requested the French authorities to explain the circumstances and procedures relating to a number of invitations for tenders issued by the municipality for the provision of services connected with improvements to the Chauvinière sewage treatment works.

5. The two notices of relevance to this case were placed in the Official Journal of 30 November 1996, Series S, No 233, and the Official Journal of 10 December 1998, Series S, No 239. The notice of 30 November 1996 concerned a restricted procedure for a contest relating to a feasibility study for a network of sewage treatment plants with a view to the requisite adaptation of the Chauvinière sewage treatment works to European environmental norms. In this contest FRF 200 000 was available for each of the three selected participants.

6. According to the notice of 30 November 1996, this contest formed the first of the three phases of a scheme of works for the improvement of the aforementioned sewage treatment works. The second phase consisted of the call for tenders for studies to assist the person responsible for the work with the establishment of the technical specifications on the basis of the successful design emerging from the contest, the drawing up of an environmental impact report for the operation and, finally, assistance to the person responsible for the performance of the work with the examination of the tenders received during the award procedure, with which the third phase was to begin. This third phase also involved the drawing up of the contract documents for the work and its performance.

7. The publication of the second notice of a call for tenders of 10 December 1998 concerned the provision of services in support of the person responsible for the work. It marked the beginning of the second phase, as described above.

8. When no official response was received from the French authorities to the Commission's letter of 7 October 1999, the Commission put them on formal notice by letter of 3 August 2000. The letter in question raised three complaints. They relate to the infringement of, respectively, Article 15(2), Article 27(2) and Article 36(1) of the Directive. In the same letter the Commission requested the French authorities to forward their comments and to take the necessary corrective measures within a period of two months.

9. In their letter of 21 November 2000 the French authorities completely rejected the Commission's complaints, as described in the letter of formal notice. The Commission considered this response unsatisfactory and, by letter of 26 July 2001, sent them a reasoned opinion.

10. In its reasoned opinion the Commission maintained the three complaints raised in the letter of formal notice. In its first complaint the Commission accused the French authorities of failing in the first award procedure to fulfil their obligation to ensure effective competition. Its second complaint was that the authorities had awarded a contract for assistance to the person responsible for the work to the successful candidates in the contest that formed part of the first phase of the project. That contract was for some FRF 5 million and was awarded without any prior public notice and without its being possible for potential competitors to be considered. In the third complaint the Commission maintained that in the public notice of 10 December 1998 the contracting authority had wrongly referred only to the tenderers' qualifications and capacities as award criteria. In its view, those factors might be used as selection criteria in the assessment of the admissibility of tenders, but not as award criteria.

11. By letter of 4 February 2002 the French authorities reacted to the Commission's reasoned opinion, acknowledging that its first and third complaints were justified.

12. That being the case, the Commission decided to bring this action which concerns only the second complaint formulated in the letter of formal notice and the reasoned opinion.

III - Proceedings

13. In its application, which was received at the Court on 24 September 2002, the Commission claims that the Court should:

- declare that, by virtue of the fact that the municipality awarded a study contract providing for assistance to the person responsible for the Chauvinière sewage treatment works, without previously publishing a tender notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities , the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 92/50/EEC and in particular Article 15(2) thereof;

- order the French Republic to pay the costs.

14. The French Government claims that the Court should:

- dismiss the action;

- order the Commission to pay the costs.

IV - Assessment

15. The Commission essentially advances two interconnected arguments in support of its view that the French Government has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 15(2) of the Directive.

16. It maintains that it is clear from the notice of 30 November 1996 announcing a contest in which the participants were to submit conceptual solutions, in the form of feasibility studies, for the adaptation of sewage treatment works to the relevant European norms, and from the documents to which that notice referred, that the overall project was divided into three phases: the search for a sound solution, assistance with the development of that solution into technical specifications and, finally, the setting up and implementation of the final project.

17. For the selected participants in the first phase, the contest, a total amount of FRF 600 000 was set aside as remuneration. For assistance to the person responsible for the work during the second phase a total amount of over FRF 4.5 million was provided for.

18. From the contest notice and associated documents it was also clear, the Commission continues, that the first and second phases differed significantly in terms of their substantive subject-matter. The first phase concerned the search for possible solutions for the adaptation of the sewage treatment works. The second phase concerned cooperation with the person responsible for the work in the implementation of his design under a study contract.

19. According to the contest notice, involvement in the implementation might encompass three activities:

- assistance to the person responsible for the work with the technical development of the design;

- drawing up of an environmental impact report in connection with the intended work;

- assistance to the person responsible for the work with analysis of the bids for the implementation of the third phase of the work.

20. This more detailed description of the second phase goes much farther, the Commission contends, than the subject-matter of a design contest, as defined in Article 1(g) of the Directive.

21. The Commission infers therefrom that the contest announced in the notice of 10 November 1996 can have concerned only the first phase of the work.

22. This view, it considers, is further corroborated by the wording of the notice itself, which states that the winner of the prize may be asked to become involved in the implementation of his design under a study contract.

23. This provision of the notice can be of no relevance because it presupposes that the subject-matter of that (subsequent) contract was clearly defined and that clear criteria for its award had been included in the notice.

24. As neither was the case, there could be no certainty on the part of the successful candidate that he would be awarded the contract for the implementation of the second phase of the work, let alone be entitled thereto.

25. The Commission states that the implementation of the second phase of the work should have formed the subject-matter of a second award procedure as distinct from the design contest of the first phase.

26. For its part, the French Government argues that there could have been absolutely no doubt about the contracting authority's desire to retain the option of awarding the successful candidate a study contract committing him to assist the person responsible for the work. Both the contest notice of 30 November 1996 and the associated award rules were clear in this respect.

27. It was therefore permissible for the contracting authority in the second phase to award the study contract to the winner of the design contest without prior publication of a second notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

28. That view of the matter was, moreover, confirmed by the fact that only FRF 600 000 was available as prize money for the contest. That was less than half of the minimum amount at which publication of the contest in the Official Journal became compulsory. The contracting authority was therefore not requested to publish the notice if it concerned only the contest provided for in the first phase of the work.

29. It was in turn to be inferred therefrom that publication of the notice in the Official Journal demonstrated the willingness of the contracting authority to indicate that this case involved not only a design contest but also, subsequently, a study contract the remuneration for which exceeded the minimum specified by Community law.

30. Secondly, the French Government goes on, the procedure followed in the present case complied with the relevant Community legislation, and in particular with Article 11(3)(c) of the Directive. Pursuant to that provision, the study contract, which followed the contest, might, in accordance with the notice, be awarded to the winner or winners of the contest. The fact that, according to the notice, the award to the successful candidates in the present case was optional could not detract from the applicability of the aforementioned provision.

31. In their reply and rejoinder the Commission and the French Government focus their arguments on the interpretation to be given to Article 11(3)(c) of the Directive.

32. According to the Commission, which relies in that connection on the Court's case-law, (3)the provisions authorising a departure from the rules seeking to ensure the effectiveness of Community law must be strictly interpreted.

33. In the present case the contest notice merely provided for the possibility of the study contract being awarded to the successful candidate, whereas Article 11(3)(c) of the Directive permits an award by negotiated procedure, without prior publication of a contract notice, only if the contract follows a design contest and must , under the rules applying, be awarded to one of the successful candidates.

34. From this the Commission infers that in the present case the limits to the exception to the general award requirements, which is to be interpreted strictly, were exceeded.

35. The French Government disputes the Commission's view. It maintains that Article 11(3)(c) of the Directive must be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority may reserve the right to invite competitive tenders for the contract which follows from the contest in an open procedure if express provision is made for that option in the notice, read, if necessary, with the rules concerning calls for tenders.

36. Such an interpretation would mean that the exception provided for in Article 11(3)(c) might be relied on only if the subsequent contract was awarded to the winner of the preceding contest. In all other cases there would have to be a further award procedure in accordance with the provisions of the Directive.

37. It seems to me that the Commission's objections to the failure to invite tenders for the second phase of the activities associated with the adaptation of the Chauvinière sewage treatment works are justified, although the arguments on which those objections are based are not entirely apposite.

38. Article 1(g) of the Directive defines the instances in which a contracting authority may proceed to the somewhat exceptional procedure of a contest.

39. It is clear from the notice of 30 November 1996 that the first phase of the activities - the carrying out of feasibility studies into the various options for the improvement of the sewage treatment works - complies in every respect with the definition in Article 1(g) of the Directive. The plans or designs concerned relate to hydraulic engineering.

40. However, the activities scheduled for the second phase of the activities only partly conform to the definition in Article 1(g) of the Directive. While this may be true of the first stage of those activities, namely assistance to the person responsible for the work with the establishment of detailed technical specifications, it is not true of the second and third stages. Neither the drawing up of an environmental impact report nor assistance to the person responsible with the analysis of the tenders for the implementation of the third phase conforms to the definition given in Article 1(g) of the Directive. Nor do these activities necessarily follow on from the contest.

41. The result of the foregoing is that a contest limited in content expands into a far wider range of activities, with a fairly substantial market value of more than FRF 4.5 million. In the procedure adopted by the contracting authority the general rules of the Directive on the award of public service contracts were not applied to those activities.

42. This prejudices the useful effect of the Directive, the very aim of which is to ensure that candidates for a public contract are in a position of equality both when they formulate their tenders and when those tenders are being assessed by the adjudicating authority. (4)

43. An examination of the procedure adopted in this call for tenders for compatibility with Article 11(3)(c) of the Directive corroborates this finding.

44. That provision, after all, permits an exception to the general rules in connection with prior design contests only if two conditions are satisfied:

(a) the contract concerned must ensue from the preceding contest;

(b) it must, under the rules applying, be awarded to the successful candidate or one of the successful candidates participating in that contest.

45. In the case at issue not even the first condition is satisfied, for the reasons given in paragraphs 40 and 41: if the contract is far wider in substance than the preceding contest, it cannot be maintained that there is a functional link between the contest and the subsequent contract such that the latter follows' the former.

46. Nor, according to the letter of Article 11(3)(c), is the second condition satisfied. The notice, after all, expressly states that the successful candidate may be invited to become involved in the implementation of his idea.

47. Unlike the French Government, I am of the opinion that this second condition must be strictly interpreted. That follows from the cumulative nature of the two conditions in Article 11(3)(c): there must be a functional link between the contest and the subsequent contract such that the contracting authority can state in advance, i.e. in the contest notice, that the successful candidate, or one of the successful candidates, must become involved in the subsequent contract. In the absence of such functional link the subsequent contract cannot be reserved for the successful candidate and should be awarded separately with due regard for the general provisions of the Directive.

48. As the exception for which Article 11(3)(c) of the Directive provides cannot be relied on for the award of the study contract at issue, the contracting authority should, pursuant to Article 15(2) of the Directive, have made known its intention in this respect by means of a notice published in the Official Journal of the European Communities .

49. I therefore conclude that the Commission is right in regard to its allegations against the French Government concerning the call for tenders for a study contract for assistance to the person responsible with works at the Chauvinière sewage treatment plant.

50. As the Commission seeks an order for costs against the French Republic, I propose that the latter should be ordered to pay the costs in accordance with Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure.

V - Conclusion

51. In view of the foregoing I propose that the Court should:

- declare that, by virtue of the fact that the municipality of Le Mans awarded a study contract providing for assistance to the person responsible for the Chauvinière sewage treatment plant, without previously publishing a tender notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities , the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 92/50/EEC and, in particular, Article 15(2) thereof;

- order the French Republic to pay the costs.

Directive 93/37/EEC - Public works contracts - Award of contracts - Right of the contracting authority to choose between the criterion of the lower price and that of the more economically advantageous tender.
Case C-247/02.

I - Introduction

1. The present case raises the question whether Member States may require the contracting authorities in a tendering procedure to award a contract solely on the basis of the criterion of the lowest price.

II - Legal background

A - Community law

2. The relevant provisions of Community law are set out in Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (2) (Directive 93/37').

3. Although Directive 93/37 applies in principle to the award of public works contracts, Article 3 also lays down provisions governing the award of public works concessions. Article 3 also contains provisions concerning the award of contracts by the concessionaire.

4. Article 3(3) applies where the concessionaire is himself a contracting authority, as referred to in Article 1(b). In such circumstances, he is to comply with the provisions of this Directive in the case of works to be carried out by third parties'.

5. Article 3(4) concerns the award of contracts by a concessionaire other than a contracting authority and, in that regard, provides as follows:

Member States shall take the necessary steps to ensure that a concessionaire other than a contracting authority shall apply the advertising rules listed in Article 11(4), (6), (7), and (9) to (13), and in Article 16, in respect of the contracts which it awards to third parties when the value of the contracts is not less than ECU 5 000 000 ....'

6. The basic rules on the criteria for the award of contracts are set out in Article 30 of Directive 93/37, which provides in paragraph 1 that:

1. The criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) either the lowest price only;

(b) or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract: e. g. price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit.'

B - National law

7. Article 21 of Framework Law No 109 of 11 February 1994 on public works (the Framework Law') lays down inter alia the criteria for the award of contracts. In the version applicable to the main proceedings, Article 21(1) of that law provides that the award of contracts under open or restricted procedures must be based on the criterion of the lowest price.

III - Facts, main proceedings and questions referred to the Court

8. In December 1989 and January 1990, the City of Brescia approved a project for the construction of an underground car park at Fossa Bagni, together with the relevant notice for the award of a concession contract to construct and manage that car park and a draft of the concession contract. In February 1991 the City of Brescia entrusted the construction and management of the car park to Sintesi SpA (Sintesi').

9. The final text of the agreement between the City of Brescia and Sintesi provided that Sintesi, as concessionaire, , must award the works contract by means of restricted invitation to tender at European level in accordance with the rules governing public works contracts.

10. On 22 April 1999, Sintesi published an invitation to tender on the basis of the most economically advantageous tender, to be assessed on the basis of price, technical merit and the time necessary for completion of the work.

11. After the pre-selection phase, Sintesi sent the pre-qualifying undertakings an invitation to tender together with the contract documentation. Ingg. Provera e Carrassi SpA (Provera'), which was also invited to tender, sought and was granted an extension of the period for submitting its tender. However, Provera informed Sintesi that it would not take part in the tendering procedure, which it claimed was unlawful. Nevertheless, Provera did not institute any legal proceedings directed against the subsequent procedural measures.

12. In May 2000, the tender identified as the most economically advantageous tender was accepted. In December 2000, the Autorità per la Vigilanza sui Lavori Pubblici adopted an unfavourable decision on the grounds that under the Framework Law the contract may be awarded only on the basis of the criterion of the lowest price and the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender can be applied only in the case of notices to tender for public construction and management concessions.

13. Sintesi challenged that decision before the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per la Lombardia on the ground, inter alia, of breach of Article 3 and Article 7 et seq. of Law No 241 of 7 August 1990 and breach of the law consisting in failure to comply with Article 30(1) of Directive 93/37.

14. The Tribunale takes the view that only the plea relating to Article 30 of Directive 93/37 is decisive and that it is therefore necessary to determine the discretion conferred on the contracting authority. Disapplication of national law can be justified only in the light of Article 81 EC. The contracting authorities are free to decide whether to award the contract on the basis of one criterion or the other. The principle of competition is relevant as regards the choice of the type of tendering procedure but not as regards the choice of the criterion for the award of contracts.

15. The Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per la Lombardia therefore stayed proceedings and referred the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

1. Does Article 30(1) of Directive 93/37 of 14 June 1993, in so far as it allows individual contracting authorities to choose either the lowest price or the most economically advantageous tender as the criterion for the award of a contract, constitute a logically consistent application of the principle of free competition which is already enshrined in Article 85 of the Treaty (now Article 81 EC) and requires that all tenders submitted as part of a procedure for the award of a contract announced within the single market be assessed in such a way as not to prevent, restrict or distort comparison between them?

2. Does Article 30 of Directive 93/37 of 14 June 1993, as a strictly logical consequence, preclude Article 21 of Law No 109 of 11 February 1994 from excluding, for the award of public works contracts under open and restricted procedures, the choice by the contracting authority of the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender, and prescribing, as a general rule, that of the lowest price only?

IV - Admissibility of the questions

16. It is first necessary to consider the argument that neither the relevant legal provisions nor the facts have been set out correctly and that the questions referred are theoretical. In that regard, reference must be made to the principles developed by the Court on the admissibility of references for preliminary rulings.

17. According to the Court's case-law, the admissibility of questions referred for a preliminary ruling turns on whether the national court defines the factual and legislative context of the questions it is asking or, at the very least, explains the factual circumstances on which those questions are based. (3)

18. Although the order for reference in this case does not contain an exhaustive description of the legal and factual situation, the information provided by the national court is adequate and the questions relate to specific technical points, thus enabling the Court to give a useful reply. According to the Court's case-law, (4) that is sufficient.

19. A further criterion for the admissibility of questions referred for a preliminary ruling is that the information provided in orders for reference must not only enable the Court usefully to reply but also give the Governments of the Member States and other interested parties the opportunity to submit observations pursuant to Article 20 of the Statute of the Court of Justice. It is the Court's duty to ensure that the opportunity to submit observations is safeguarded, bearing in mind that, by virtue of the abovementioned provision, only the orders for reference are notified to the interested parties. (5)

20. The number and content of the written observations submitted to the Court show that this requirement was fulfilled.

21. Finally, the order for reference also fulfils the requirement that the national court give details of the precise reasons which prompted it to consider the interpretation of Community law and to deem it necessary to refer questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling. (6)

22. It is now necessary to consider the argument put forward by several parties that the second question relates to the interpretation of national law and its compatibility with Article 30 of Directive 93/37.

23. In that regard it should be noted that the grounds of the order for reference refer to the compatibility of Article 21(1) of Law No 109 of 11 February 1994 with Article 81 EC et seq.', whereas the second question refers to the lawfulness of this national provision in the light of Article 30 of the directive.

24. On the basis of the principle that it is not for the Court to examine the compatibility of national law in the context of a reference for a preliminary ruling, the second question is inadmissible in so far as it relates to the compatibility of national provisions with Community law. However, the second question is admissible in so far as it concerns the interpretation of Community law, namely of Article 30(1) of Directive 93/37. As thus re-interpreted, the second question is therefore admissible without there being any need for it to be expressly reformulated.

V - The questions

25. For the purpose of providing the national court with useful information, it would appear appropriate to deal with both questions together.

26. There is no need to undertake a separate examination of Article 81 EC, referred to in the first question, since it must be concluded that it is Article 30 of Directive 93/37 and not Article 81 EC that is to be applied in the present case. Although there may indeed be situations in which the provision of competition law must be applied in cases relating to the award of public contracts, it is not evident from the question itself or from the other explanations provided by the national court that the main proceedings relate to the independent application of Article 81 EC. As well as procedural grounds, there are also substantive grounds which preclude Member States' legislative activities from being assessed on the basis of their compatibility with Article 81 EC, because that provision is directed at undertakings.

27. Nor does the present case relate to the validity of Article 30 of Directive 93/37 and its examination in the light of Article 81 EC. This provision may be taken into account at most as a criterion for an interpretation in conformity with primary law, that is to say an interpretation of Article 30 of the directive which is guided by the principle of competition.

A - Directives on the award of public contracts and the principle of competition in general

28. A number of parties refer in various ways to the importance of competition in relation to the directives on the award of public contracts. In that regard, it should be pointed out that, as the Commission notes, Directive 93/37 does not serve to implement Article 81 EC.

29. As regards the importance of the principle of free competition or principle of competition in relation to the directives on the award of public contracts, it is also appropriate to examine the legal basis of those directives. The three classic directives on services, supplies and works are based on Article 57(2) and Article 66 of the EC Treaty (now Article 47(2) EC and Article 55 EC), on Article 100a of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 95 EC) or on all three provisions.

30. Those legal bases are concerned with fundamental freedoms or with the Common Market, but do not relate expressly to competition.

31. However, the three classic directives on the award of public contracts - and not only those - have a different connection to competition. Thus, the development of effective competition in the field of public contracts is expressly stated as an objective in the preamble to each of them. (7) In numerous judgments the Court has confirmed that the aim of the directives is to ensure such competition. (8)

32. The Court has consistently held (9) that the directives, just like Community law in general, (10) are designed, first, to eliminate practices that restrict competition and, second, to open up the procurement market concerned to competition, that is to say, to ensure free access in particular for undertakings from other Member States.

33. The principle of competition is therefore one of the fundamental principles of Community law on the award of public contracts.

34. It fulfils several protective purposes. Firstly, the principle of competition is aimed at relations between the undertakings themselves, that is to say the candidates or tenderers. There is to be parallel competition between them when they respond to a call for tenders.

35. Secondly, the principle of competition concerns the relationship between the contracting authorities which must be classified as undertakings and the undertakings, in particular the conduct of a contracting authority in a dominant position on the market vis-à-vis the undertakings or of an undertaking in a dominant position on the market vis-à-vis the contracting authority, and the assessment of that conduct in the light of Article 82 EC. (11)

36. Thirdly, the principle of competition is designed to protect competition as an institution.

37. The principle of competition is expressed in the actual provisions of the directives on the award of public contracts, which include, first, the provisions on the permissible forms of procedure for the award of contracts and the conduct thereof, in particular the time-limits to be complied with in the various phases of the procedure, and the prohibition on renegotiation. (12)

38. Concrete expressions of the principle of competition also include, second, the provisions on contract documents, primarily technical specifications, the provisions on the selection of undertakings, and the provisions on the criteria for the award of contracts to which this case relates.

39. A minimum degree of transparency is required to guarantee competition. To that end, the directives on the award of contracts lay down a number of obligations concerning publicity. The obligation placed on the contracting authority to define the criteria in advance and also to adhere to them thereafter serves competition. On the other hand, in certain cases the need to ensure competition makes it necessary to withhold certain information about an undertaking from other undertakings. (13)

40. Finally, the participation in a tender procedure of those undertakings which were involved in the preparatory work therefor is also an important aspect of competition. (14)

B - Criteria for the award of contracts and competition

41. As regards the effect on competition of the two criteria for the award of contracts, it must be concluded that these criteria, laid down both in Article 30(1) of Directive 93/37 and also in the parallel provisions of the other directives on the award of public contracts, are intended to ensure genuine competition. (15)

42. An assessment of the effect on competition of the two criteria for the award of contracts in the context of the main proceedings is, in so far as it constitutes the application of the provisions of Community law to a specific case, not the object of the reference for a preliminary ruling.

43. A general assessment as to whether the criterion of the lowest price has, as a general rule, more favourable effects on competition than the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender cannot form the subject-matter of a legal analysis in a reference for a preliminary ruling. It must not be forgotten that the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender allows not only competition on price but also competition through other factors, that is to say, competition in respect of conditions. An assessment of the effects on competition of a particular criterion must be made on the basis of the specific circumstances, in particular the market concerned, and is therefore a matter for the national court.

44. In that respect the national court has to take account of the following: the primary decisive factor as regards the effects on competition is whether the same, objective criteria are applied to all the undertakings. (16) As regards the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender, it is the way in which it is precisely defined in the specific tendering procedure, that is to say the individual factors taken into account in assessing the most economically advantageous offer, that is decisive. Like the criteria for selecting tenderers, these factors must always be examined in the light of primary law. That naturally also includes the provisions of competition law.

45. However, the interpretation by the Court of the provisions of Community law on competition also depends on certain conditions being satisfied. For example, according to settled case-law, the need to provide an interpretation of Community law which will be of use to the national court makes it necessary for the national court to define the factual and legal context of the questions it is asking or, at the very least, explain the factual circumstances on which those questions are based. Those requirements are of particular importance in certain areas, such as that of competition, where the factual and legal situations are often complex.' (17)

C - Power of the Member States to lay down a particular criterion for the award of contracts

46. Central to this case is the question whether the Member States have the power to lay down, as a general rule, the criterion of the lowest price in respect of certain types of contract. Such a power of the Member States would also restrict the freedom of choice of the contracting authority which is affected by such a criterion.

47. At this juncture it should borne in mind generally that although the Member States enjoy a certain margin of discretion in transposing directives, they must observe the limits imposed by Community law. The Member States are also bound by those limits where they adopt measures to attain Community objectives, such as ensuring greater transparency in the field of the law governing public contracts and stemming abuse by contracting authorities.

48. Therefore, it is first necessary to consider the argument put forward by a number of the parties concerned that the legal act to be interpreted in the present case is a directive. In that regard, it should be noted that it cannot be inferred from the fact that the directives on the award of public contracts, like other directives, are addressed to the Member States, that the Member States are therefore empowered to lay down a particular criterion for the award of contracts.

49. It is also necessary to consider the argument that Directive 93/37 does not lay down a complete set of rules on the award of contracts. On that view, the fact that the aim of Directive 93/37 is not to lay down a complete system of legislation governing public contracts but simply to coordinate national procedures for the award of public works contracts, in the same way as the other directives on the award of contracts, might militate in favour of the Member States being empowered to lay down the criterion for the award of contracts. (18) Whilst it is necessary to concur with that conclusion, it cannot consequently be inferred that Directive 93/37 does not contain definitive rules on certain stages or aspects of the tendering procedure. Instead, this argument must be qualified in so far as the directives on the award of contracts definitively harmonise certain aspects of the tendering procedure.

50. On the other hand, the fact that the parties concerned - apart from certain purely private companies, as covered by the sectoral directive - are generally public contracting authorities, that is to say they can be associated with the relevant Member State, militates in favour of the Member States being able to lay down a criterion in an abstract manner. That follows from the definition of the term contracting authority' and finds expression in the possibility, recognised in the case-law, (19) of penalising infringements committed by them by means of the procedure for failure to fulfil obligations laid down in Article 226 EC.

51. From that aspect, the choice of criterion is therefore, strictly speaking, also a choice by the Member State. However, the difference concerning the criterion in the main proceedings lies in the fact that it was laid down in the Framework Law, that is to say, in a general and abstract manner, and at a different level, in fact by the legislature and not the contracting authority itself.

52. In order to answer the central question whether the Member States have the power to lay down in the abstract just a single criterion for the award of contracts, it is necessary to proceed from the following consideration.

53. The directives on the award of contracts expressly provide for two kinds of power, namely those of the Member States, such as the power to permit certain kinds of transmission, (20) and those of the contracting authorities, such as the ability, in certain cases, to carry out a negotiated procedure, permit variants, and prescribe a range.

54. On the other hand, certain provisions impose express obligations either on the Member States or on the contracting authorities. The latter category of provisions includes inter alia the provision of Article 30(1) of Directive 93/37 (The criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of contracts shall be: (a) either ... (b) or...'), which is relevant to this case, and the parallel provisions of the other directives on the award of contracts. Therefore, that provision does not establish an express power on the part of the contracting authority, but the requirement that only one of the two available criteria for the award of contracts be applied also includes the power of the contracting authority to choose one of the two.

55. The contracting authority loses this power in so far as its' Member State limits this choice, for example where it requires the contracting authorities to allow for only the criterion of the lowest price in certain cases.

56. Even if the contracting authorities have no subjective right to this freedom of choice, the question arises as to whether the Member States may oblige the contracting authorities to lay down a particular criterion.

57. Firstly, the fact that neither Article 30(1) of Directive 93/37 nor the other directives on the award of contracts provide for a corresponding power of the Member States militates against this. However, the need for such an express provision may be inferred from the fact that the directives on the award of contracts do indeed, as a general rule, provide for a power of the Member States to restrict the contracting authorities' right to lay down certain criteria. For example, the second sentence of Article 23(1) of Directive 93/37 and Article 28(1) of Directive 92/50 empower the Member States to oblige the contracting authorities to provide certain information in the contract documents.

58. However, there is no comparable provision as regards the criteria for the award of contracts.

59. The argument that Member States have the powers to impose on the contracting authorities a single criterion for the award of contracts is also countered by the fact that the equality of the two criteria provided for in all the directives on the award of contracts is thereby removed.

60. Finally, reference should be made to the Court's case-law, (21) which specifically states that the provision which is relevant in this case allows the contracting authorities to choose the criteria for the award of contracts.

61. Although this conclusion by the Court concerned the factors relating to the identification of the tender which is economically the most advantageous, it can be applied to the choice of the criterion for the award of contracts itself.

62. Aspects relating to competition may also be relied on to show that Member States do not have the power to lay down the criterion for the award of contracts. For example, laying down such a criterion restricts the contracting authorities' freedom to choose the criterion which is most appropriate for ensuring free competition in a specific tendering procedure. This possibility would disappear if the legislature laid down one criterion as a general rule. As the Italian Government also stated, Article 30 of Directive 93/37 precisely does not link to particular provisions the choice of one of the two criteria for the award of contracts.

63. Finally, according to the Court's case-law, (22) the aim of the directives on the award of contracts, namely to facilitate the operation of free competition between the tenderers as a whole, must be taken into account in interpreting the directive.

64. The judgment which is relevant to the present case in this respect is that in Impresa Lombardini and Others , in which the Court held as follows: It follows that Article 30(4) of the Directive precludes national legislation, such as that applicable in the main proceedings, which, first, requires the contracting authority, for the purposes of verifying abnormally low tenders, to take into account only certain explanations exhaustively listed... and, second, expressly excludes certain types of explanation...'. (23)

65. That judgment shows that the national legislature is barred from limiting the discretion of the contracting authorities in a manner not expressly permitted by the directive.

66. When the arguments put forward, and further developed here, for and against the Member States' power of relevance to these proceedings are weighed up, it is clear that the stronger arguments militate against such power.

VI - Conclusion

67. I therefore propose that the Court should answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling as follows:

1. Article 30(1) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts is to be interpreted as allowing the individual contracting authorities to choose either the lowest price or the most economically advantageous tender as the criterion for the award of a contract. In addition, the national court must interpret this provision in the light of the principle of free competition within the meaning of Article 81 EC.

2. Article 30(1) of Directive 93/37 is to be interpreted as precluding national legislation which excludes, for the award of public works contracts under open and restricted procedures, the choice by the contracting authority of the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender, and prescribes, as a general rule, that of the lowest price only.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Geelhoed delivered on 16 October 2003.
Grossmann Air Service, Bedarfsluftfahrtunternehmen GmbH & Co. KG v Republik Osterreich.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesvergabeamt - Austria.
Public procurement - Directive 89/665/EEC - Review procedures for the award of public contracts - Articles 1(3) and 2(1)(b) - Persons to whom review procedures must be available - Definition of interest in obtaining a public contract.
Case C-230/02.

I - Introduction

1 In this case the Austrian Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Public Procurement Office) has submitted for a preliminary ruling certain questions concerning the interpretation of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, (1) as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (2) (`Directive 89/665').

2 These questions have arisen in a dispute between Grossmann Air Service and the Republic of Austria.

II - Legal background

3 Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 provides:

`1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EE, and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

4 Article 2(1)(b) of Article 89/665 provides:

...

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;'.

B - National law

5 Directive 89/665 was transposed into Austrian law by the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Bundesvergabegesetz) 1997 (1997 Federal Public Procurement Law, BGBl. I, 1997/56; `the BVergG').

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

The BVergG provides for the creation of a Bundes-Vergabekontrollkommission (Federal Public Procurement Review Commission; `the B-VKK') and of a Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Public Procurement Office).

6 Under Paragraph 109 of the BVergG, the B-VKK is to be competent, until such time as the contract is awarded, to reconcile any differences of opinion between the awarding body and one or more candidates or tenderers concerning the application of this law or its implementing regulations (subparagraph 1). A request for the B-VKK to take action must be submitted to the directors of the Commission as soon as possible after the difference of opinion comes to light (subparagraph 6). Furthermore, the awarding body may not award the contract until four weeks after it has been informed of the request to take action, failing which the tendering procedure is to be declared void (subparagraph 8).

7 Under Paragraph 113 of the BVergG, the Bundesvergabeamt is responsible on application for carrying out a review procedure (subparagraph 1). To preclude infringements of this Federal Law and of the regulations implementing it, the Bundesvergabeamt is authorised until the time of the award to adopt interim measures and to set aside unlawful decisions of the contracting authority (subparagraph 2). After the award of the contract or the close of the contract award procedure, the Bundesvergabeamt is competent to determine whether, on grounds of infringement of this law or of any regulations issued under it, the contract has not been awarded to the best tenderer (subparagraph 3).

8 Paragraph 115(1) of the BVergG provides that where a trader claims to have an interest in the conclusion of a contract within the scope of this law, it may apply for the contracting authority's decision in the contract award procedure to be reviewed on the ground of unlawfulness, provided that it has been or risks being harmed by the alleged infringement.

III - Factual and procedural background

9 On 27 January 1998 the Federal Ministry for Finances invited bids in respect of the provision for the Austrian Federal Government and its delegations of non-scheduled passenger transport services by air in jet and propellor aircraft. Grossmann Air Service subsequently submitted a bid.

10 However, on 3 April 1998 the contract award procedure was discontinued. On 28 July 1998 bids were once again invited for these transport services. Although Grossmann Air Service requested the relevant tender documents, it did not submit a further bid.

11 By letter of 8 October 1998 the Austrian Government informed Grossmann Air Service of its intention to award the contract to Lauda Air Luftfahrt AG (`Lauda Air'). This letter was received by Grossmann Air Service on 9 October 1998. The contract with Lauda was entered into on 29 October 1998.

12 By an application dated 19 October 1998, which was posted on 23 October 1998 and received by the Bundesvergabeamt on 27 October 1998, Grossmann Air Service applied for review of the decision of the contracting authority to award the air services to Lauda Air and claimed that the decision should be set aside. It submitted that the invitation to tender had from the beginning been `tailored' to one bidder, namely Lauda Air, and that the other candidates had had no chance of winning the contract from the outset.

13 By decision dated 4 January 1999 the Bundesvergabeamt dismissed that application under Paragraph 115(1) and Paragraph 113(2) and (3) of the BVergG.

14 The Bundesvergabeamt took the view that Grossmann Air Service had failed to demonstrate adequately its interest in respect of the totality of the contract. It did not have available to it the requisite larger types of aircraft and was therefore unable to provide all the services requested. Moreover, it had not submitted a bid in the second invitation to tender. Furthermore, once the contract had been awarded the Bundesvergabeamt was no longer competent to annul it.

15 Grossmann Air Service subsequently brought a complaint against that decision before the Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court). By decision of 10 December 2001 (B 405/99-9) the Verfassungsgerichtshof set aside the decision of the Bundesvergabeamt on grounds of a breach of the constitutionally guaranteed right to proceedings before the ordinary courts. The Verfassungsgerichtshof also ruled that the mere fact that the alleged unlawfulness of the invitation to tender was not raised by Grossmann Air Service at an earlier stage of the contract award procedure was not necessarily sufficient to find that there was no legal interest in the review procedure.

16 The Bundesvergabeamt subsequently submitted the following questions for a preliminary ruling.

Questions submitted for a preliminary ruling

`(1) Is Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts to be interpreted as meaning that the review procedure must be available to any undertaking which has submitted a bid, or applied to participate, in a public procurement procedure?

In the event that the answer to Question 1 is no:

(2) Is the abovementioned provision to be understood as meaning that an undertaking only has or had an interest in a particular public contract if - in addition to its participating in the public procurement procedure - it takes all steps available to it under national law to prevent the contract from being awarded to another bidder?

(3) Is Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, in conjunction with Article 2(1) thereof, to be interpreted as meaning that an undertaking must be afforded the opportunity in law to seek review of an award procedure regarded by it as unlawful or discriminatory even where it is not capable of performing the totality of the services for which bids were invited and, for that reason, did not submit a bid in that award procedure.'

Explanation of the questions submitted for a preliminary ruling

17 In respect of the first two questions submitted the national court has observed that Grossmann Air Service allowed a period of 14 days to elapse between notification of the decision concerning the award (9 October 1998) and lodgement of its application for review with the Bundesvergabeamt (23 October 1998) without requesting the B-VKK to take action and thus to make the four-week period laid down in Paragraph 109(8) of the BVergG start to run or, in the event that such action were unsuccessful, to request that the Bundesvergabeamt adopt interim measures and set aside the decision concerning the award. Therefore, the national court considers that it is important to establish whether the application requirements under Paragraph 115(1) of the BVergG, in conjunction with Paragraph 109(1)(1), 109(6) and 109(8) thereof, are, when interpreted in the light of Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, to be understood as meaning that any bidder who wishes to be awarded a particular pending public contract has an interest in the conclusion of a contract falling within the scope of the BVergG simply by virtue of that fact or that the fact that not all remedies available in national law have been exhausted means that this interest has been lost.

18 In respect of the third question the Bundesvergabeamt observes that it is clear from the Verfassungsgerichtshof's decision of 10 December 2001 that it considers that discriminatory specifications may be removed in review procedures pursuant to Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665. An interpretation whereby the availability of review procedures to challenge discriminatory tender specifications is subject to the applicant's ability to satisfy those specifications could run counter to the objective (of Community law) to ensure complete and effective protection in respect of invitations to tender. Therefore, an undertaking providing air services which credibly demonstrates an interest in the conclusion of a contract for air services and regards itself as discriminated against by the form in which those air services are put out to tender - as an all-in contract - has a legal interest within the meaning of Paragraph 115(1) of the BVergG and is thus entitled to seek review of the allegedly unlawful specifications because it would otherwise be unable to prove the unlawfulness - in its view - of the invitation to tender and any harm that it may have suffered as a result.

19 Against that background, the question arises as to whether review procedures within the meaning of Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 are also available to a trader where it applies to the review body because of specifications which it considers to be discriminatory within the meaning of Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 and claims that it has been or risks being harmed as a result, even though it is unable to provide the service in the form set out in the invitation to tender and therefore did not submit a bid in that contract award procedure.

Procedure before the Court

20 The order for reference was lodged at the Registry of the Court on 20 June 2002. Written observations were submitted by Grossmann Air Service, the Austrian Government and the Commission. They provided further clarification of their view at the hearing on 10 September 2003.

IV - Appraisal

21 In view of the recent case-law of the Court the first two questions need not be dealt with in any great detail. These questions essentially seek to ascertain whether a trader having or having had an interest in obtaining a contract for the purposes of Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 may therefore avail himself of the review procedures provided for in that directive to have a decision concerning an award declared unlawful, even though not all the remedies available under national law have been exhausted, in order to prevent the contract being awarded to a third party.

22 These question were raised recently inter alia in Hackermüller (3) and more particularly in Fritsch and Others. (4)

23 Both cases raised the question whether any trader who wishes to be considered for the award of a public contract may institute review procedures pursuant to Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665. It is evident from Hackermüller that this is not so and that a Member State may lay down the additional requirement that the person concerned has been or risks being harmed by the infringement he alleges.

24 The second question is answered explicitly in Fritsch. This case also raised the question whether the national legislature can make a tenderer's interest in obtaining a specific contract, and therefore its right to institute the review procedures established by that directive, subject to the condition that it has beforehand applied to a conciliation commission such as the B-VKK. The Court's answer to this question was in the negative. It held that such a condition is contrary to the directive's objective of speed and effectiveness. However, it acknowledged that Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 expressly allows Member States to determine the detailed rules according to which they must make the review procedures available to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement, but that did not mean that they may give the term `interest in obtaining a public contract' an interpretation which may limit the effectiveness of that directive. That is the case where a trader is considered as having lost its interest on the ground that it failed first to apply to a conciliation commission, such as the B-VKK.

25 In the abovementioned cases the candidates participated in the contract award procedure. It is evident from the order for reference that this is not so in the present case. However, I concur with the Commission's view that participation in the award procedure is in principle a precondition for demonstrating an interest in obtaining a contract and possible harm caused by the allegedly unlawful award. It is difficult for a person who has not participated in the award procedure to maintain that he has an interest in challenging an allegedly unlawful decision concerning an award.

26 The third question, however, relates to a somewhat different situation. In that case it does not make sense for potential candidates to tender for a contract because the specifications for the services to be provided are laid down in such a way that they are unable to satisfy them from the outset. The question is then whether, in such a situation, the opportunity must be left open to apply for review of discriminatory specifications.

27 In my view, the answer to the question should be in the affirmative. In its recent case-law the Court has placed a broad interpretation on the words `decisions taken by the contracting authorities' used in Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665. (5) Moreover, it is clear from the wording of Article 2(1)(b) of the directive that the courts' powers in review procedures must include inter alia the power to `set aside... decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications...'. Therefore, it appears to me to be beyond dispute that the remedies intended by Directive 89/665 also extend to the review of decisions specifying the services requested in a contract award procedure.

28 However, such a remedy would have little practical value if it were not open to undertakings which had been excluded from participating in the contract award procedure from the outset by the relevant discriminatory specifications. Furthermore, in such a situation it may be excessive to ask that the effort to bid be made and the associated costs be incurred merely in order to retain the right to apply for review of discriminatory tender conditions. Therefore, these undertakings too must in principle be regarded as having an interest in the award of a public contract and consequently as entitled to apply for review.

29 The specifications for the requested services are relevant to the main proceedings underlying this case. Since the various elements of the requested air transport services had been brought together to create a single package, the number of candidates that could provide the overall package was greatly reduced and potential candidates for one or more parts of that package were excluded from the outset. It follows from what was stated in the preceding paragraph that they too must be regarded as persons having an interest in the award of the contract and therefore as entitled to apply for review. However, this is subject to the condition that they would have been able to participate in this procedure had it not been for these allegedly discriminatory conditions.

30 Finally, I further note that the interest of legal certainty requires that this opportunity to apply for review be used at the earliest possible stage. The lodgement of an application for review after the contract has been awarded should be regarded as belated. However, this is a matter for the national court.

V - Conclusion

31 In the light of the foregoing, I would recommend that the Court answer the questions submitted as follows:

- Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, is to be interpreted as meaning that the review procedure referred to in the directive is open to any person who has submitted a bid or participated in the contract award procedure.

- Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665/EEC precludes a trader which has participated in a procedure for the award of a contract from being regarded as having lost his interest in the award of that contract on the ground that he did not apply to a conciliation commission, such as the B-VKK established under the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Bundesvergabegesetz) 1997, before instituting a review procedure as referred to in that directive.

- Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665/EEC, in conjunction with Article 2(1)(b) thereof, is to be interpreted as meaning that a trader having an interest in the award of a contract must be afforded the opportunity in law directly to seek review of specifications in the tender conditions regarded by it as unlawful or discriminatory. This opportunity must also be open to those who can show that they would have bid for the contract had it not been for the discriminatory specification referred to.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Alber delivered on 9 September 2003. Rieser Internationale Transporte GmbH v Autobahnen- und Schnellstraßen-Finanzierungs- AG (Asfinag). Reference for a preliminary ruling: Oberster Gerichtshof - Austria. Carriage of goods by road - Tolls - Brenner motorway - Prohibition of discrimination - Discrimination on grounds of the nationality of the haulier or of the origin or destination of the vehicle. Case C-157/02.

I Introduction

1. The request for a preliminary ruling from the Oberster Gerichtshof (Supreme Court) of the Republic of Austria concerns the interpretation of provisions of Council Directive 93/89/EEC of 25 October 1993 on the application by Member States of taxes on certain vehicles used for the carriage of goods by road and tolls and charges for the use of certain infrastructures (hereinafter " Directive 93/89") (2) and of Directive 1999/62/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 17 June 1999 on the charging of heavy goods vehicles for the use of certain infrastructures (hereinafter " Directive 1999/62"). (3) By judgment of 5 July 1995 (4) the Court of Justice annulled the former directive on the grounds that it was adopted without due consultation of the Parliament. However, the Court preserved the effects of the directive until the adoption of a new directive. As is clear from the fourth recital in the preamble thereto, Directive 1999/62 replaces Directive 93/89 annulled by the Court.

2. This case concerns whether, and if so to what extent, the provisions of the two directives whose content is largely identical have direct effect in proceedings involving an Austrian transport undertaking which considers that it is subject to discrimination in breach of Community law as a result of the rates imposed for use of the full itinerary of the Brenner motorway and is therefore claiming from the motorway operator, before the court hearing the main proceedings, repayment of the toll amounts paid in the period from 1 January 1997 to 31 July 2000.

II Legal background

3. Under Article 2 of Directive 93/89, " toll" means payment of a specified amount for a vehicle travelling the distance between two points on the infrastructure referred to in Article 7(d); the amount is to be based on the distance travelled and on the category of the vehicle and " vehicle" means a motor vehicle or articulated vehicle combination intended exclusively for the carriage of goods by road and with a maximum permissible gross laden weight of not less than 12 tonnes.

4. Article 7 of Directive 93/89 provides:

" Member States may maintain or introduce tolls and/or introduce user charges in accordance with the following conditions:

(b) Without prejudice to Article 8(2)(e) and Article 9, tolls and user charges may not discriminate, directly or indirectly, on the grounds of the nationality of the haulier or of origin or destination of the vehicle;

...

(h) Toll rates shall be related to the costs of constructing, operating and developing the infrastructure network concerned.

5. Directive 1999/62, which replaces Directive 93/89 annulled by the Court, was adopted by the Council on 17 June 1999 and, pursuant to Article 13 thereof, entered into force on 20 July 1999. Under Article 12 thereof, it was to be implemented by 1 July 2000. Article 7(4), (9) and (10)

of Directive 1999/62 the content of paragraphs 4 and 9 being identical to Article 7(b) and (h) of Directive 93/89 provides:

" 4. Tolls and user charges may not discriminate, directly or indirectly, on the grounds of the nationality of the haulier or the origin or destination of the vehicle.

9. The weighted average tolls shall be related to the costs of constructing, operating and developing the infrastructure network concerned.

10. Without prejudice to the weighted average tolls referred to in paragraph 9, Member States may vary the rates at which tolls are charged according to:

(a) vehicle emission classes, provided that no toll is more than 50% above the toll charged for equivalent vehicles meeting the strictest emission standards;

(b) time of day, provided that no toll is more than 100% above the toll charged during the cheapest period of the day.

Any variation in tolls charged with respect to vehicle emission classes or the time of day shall be proportionate to the objective pursued.

6. In its judgment of 26 September 2000 (5) the Court declared that, " by raising, on 1 July 1995 and 1 February 1996, the tolls for the full itinerary on the Brenner motorway, a transit route through Austria used predominantly by goods vehicles of a maximum permissible gross laden weight of not less than 12 tonnes registered in other Member States, but not for part itineraries on that motorway, the great majority of the users of which are vehicles of a maximum permissible gross laden weight of not less than 12 tonnes used for the same type of transport and registered in Austria" , the Republic of Austria had failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89. The Court also declared that, " by not applying the abovementioned tolls only in order to cover the costs linked with the construction, operation and development of the Brenner motorway" , the Republic of Austria had failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 7(h) of the Directive.

III Facts and questions referred for a preliminary ruling

7. The plaintiff in the main proceedings is Rieser Internationale Transporte GmbH (hereinafter " Rieser"), a transport undertaking established in Austria. It operates heavy goods vehicles with a maximum permissible gross laden weight of not less than 12 tonnes and with more than three axles in international road haulage and in doing so makes regular use inter alia of the Brenner motorway which is subject to tolls.

8. In the light of the judgment which the Court gave in the infringement proceedings in Commission v Austria , (6) Rieser is seeking from the operator of the Brenner motorway, the Autobahnen- und Schnellstraßen Finanzierungs-AG (hereinafter " Asfinag"), partial repayment of the tolls for the use of the full itinerary of the Brenner motorway which were paid during the period between 1 January 1997 and 31 July 2000, in its view in breach of Community law.

9. By a licence (Fruchtgenussvertrag) concluded in June 1997 with its sole shareholder, the Republic of Austria, Asfinag was given responsibility for the construction, planning, operation, maintenance and financing of Austria ' s motorways and expressways, including the A 13 (Brenner motorway), with retrospective effect from 1 January 1997. Asfinag was also authorised by that licence to levy tolls and charges, in its own name and on its own account, in order thus to cover its costs.

10. Firstly, the Oberster Gerichtshof, before which the case was brought by means of an appeal on a point of law, has doubts as to the direct effect of Article 7(h) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(9) of Directive 1999/62. Secondly, the Oberster Gerichtshof also considers contrary to the view of the lower courts that the direct effect of the prohibition on discrimination laid down in Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(4) of Directive 1999/62 is also doubtful. Thirdly, it considers that clarification is necessary regarding the connection between annulled Directive 93/89 and the effects thereof, on the one hand, and Directive 1999/62, which it replaced on 17 June 1999 but which did not have to be implemented until 1 July 2000, on the other.

11. Accordingly, the Oberster Gerichtshof submitted the following questions for a preliminary ruling:

" (1) When concluding contracts with road users, is the defendant also required, in accordance with the Court of Justice ' s case-law on the functional concept of the State, to observe the directly applicable (" self-executing") provisions of Directive [93/89] and Directive [1999/62], with the result that the defendant cannot charge tolls higher than if those provisions had been complied with?

(2) If the answer to Question 1 should be " Yes" :

Are Article 7(b) and (h) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(4) and (9) of Directive 1999/62 directly applicable, in accordance with the Court of Justice ' s case-law, so that they may be relied on in the calculating of a toll consistent with those Directives in respect of vehicles, with more than three axles, used for the carriage of goods for the full itinerary of the Austrian Brenner motorway, even if the Directives have not been transposed, or have been transposed imperfectly, into Austrian law?

(3) If the answer to Question 2 should be " Yes" :

(a) How and by reference to what parameters is the authorised toll for a single journey on the full itinerary to be calculated?

(b) May Austrian hauliers too rely on the fact that the (excessive) rate for the full itinerary discriminates against them in comparison with road users who use only part itineraries of that motorway?

(4) If the answer to both Questions 1 and 2 should be " Yes" :

(a) Is the judgment of the Court of Justice in Case C-21/94 Parliament v Council , cited above, in which it was held that the effects of Directive 93/89, which it annulled, were to be preserved until the Council should have adopted a new directive, to be interpreted as meaning that the effects are to be preserved until the Member States have transposed the new directive or until the period prescribed for transposition has expired?

(b) If the answer to Question 4(a) should be " No" : are the Member States under an obligation during the period from 17 June 1999 to 1 July 2000 to have regard to the new Directive: must they for example observe any effects in advance?

IV Submissions of the parties and legal assessment

A Preliminary remarks on the infringement, alleged by Rieser, of Article 82 EC, read in conjunction with Article 86 EC

12. At the hearing Rieser stated that Asfinag had abused its dominant market position by levying excessive tolls and had thereby infringed Article 82 EC, read in conjunction with Article 86 EC.

13. In this connection, it must be stated that, according to established case-law, it is for the national court, not the parties to the main action, to bring a matter before the Court of Justice.

The right to determine the questions to be put to the Court thus devolves upon the national court alone and the parties may not change their tenor or add further questions. (7)

14. Since the national court has not submitted a question concerning the interpretation of Articles 82 EC and 86 EC, there is no need to examiner further the infringement of these provisions alleged by Rieser alone.

B The first question

15. By the first question the national court asks whether Rieser can rely directly on the abovementioned provisions of the two directives against a body such as Asfinag even though Asfinag is a legal person governed by private law which is nevertheless under State control.

1. Submissions of the parties

16. Rieser considers that Asfinag satisfies the criteria relating to the functional concept of the State since it is under the decisive influence of its sole shareholder, the Republic of Austria, and a task previously performed under State control has been transferred to it.

17. By contrast, Asfinag takes the view that, according to the Court ' s case-law, it is not required, when concluding contracts, to observe the directly effective provisions of directives since, as a joint stock company governed by private law, it levies the toll on the Brenner motorway on its own account, has legal personality of its own, does not exercise powers of a public authority, and its bodies are not bound by directions from bodies of the Republic of Austria.

18. In the view of the Commission, Asfinag must be ascribed, in functional terms, to the Austrian State and thus be regarded as a person to which Directive 93/89 and Directive 1999/62 are addressed. It is true that Asfinag is a joint stock company governed by private law which is bound to the Republic of Austria only contractually in such a way that its board is not subject to direction and that it levies the toll in its own name and on its own account and does not pass it on to the Republic of Austria. However, Asfinag is covered by the relevant provisions of the directives. The Republic of Austria is the defendant ' s sole shareholder and is entitled under the licence concluded with Asfinag to control all measures taken by Asfinag and its subsidiaries and to require at any time information on its activities. It has the right to set objectives. Asfinag has an obligation to it to draw up an annual maintenance plan and submit the relevant costs account to the federal government. Furthermore, it must each year and in good time submit to the federal government the planning invoices necessary for drawing up the federal budget, together with cost forecasts for the planning, construction, maintenance and administration of the federal motorways and federal expressways. Finally, Asfinag is not entitled to fix the relevant toll rate without authorisation. This is laid down by law in such a way that the rate of the remuneration must be fixed by the Federal Minister for Economic Affairs after consultation with the Federal Minister for Finance, by reference to the type of vehicle. Therefore, Asfinag is, whatever its legal form, included among the bodies against which the provisions of a directive capable of having direct effect may be relied on.

2. Legal assessment

19. As regards the first question referred for a preliminary ruling, it should first be noted that under the division of functions provided for by Article 234 EC, it is, according to established case-law, for the national court to apply the rules of Community law to an individual case. (8) Consequently, the Court cannot consider whether as is set out in the question " the defendant" , that is to say Asfinag, is required to observe the directly applicable provisions of directives in the light of the Court ' s case-law concerning the so-called " functional concept of the State".

20. However, it is for the Court to interpret the measures adopted by Community institutions and in particular to consider what effects they have and in particular whether those measures may be relied on against certain natural or legal persons or categories of persons. It is for the national court, on the other hand, to decide whether a party to proceedings before it falls within one of the categories so defined. (9)

21. Consequently, it is necessary to examine whether a body such as Asfinag may regardless of its legal personality as a legal person governed by private law be categorised, in functional terms, as a public authority against which the provisions of the abovementioned directives may be relied on directly.

22. In accordance with the Court ' s broad definition of the State, the direct effect of a directive can be relied on against any organs of public administration, including decentralised authorities such as municipalities. (10) The broad definition of the State also means that a directly effective provision of a directive can apply to the State even where it operates not as a public authority but in another form such as, for example, the owner of a public undertaking or as a majority or sole shareholder in a private undertaking.

23. According to established case-law, the starting point for this extension of the functional concept of the State is that a directive cannot of itself impose obligations on an individual and cannot therefore be relied upon as such against an individual. (11) However, when applying national law, whether adopted before or after the directive, the national court having to interpret that law must do so, as far as possible, in the light of the wording and the purpose of the directive so as to achieve the result it has in view and thereby comply with the third paragraph of Article 189 of the EC Treaty (now the third paragraph of Article 249 EC). (12)

24. In the light of the foregoing, where an individual is able to rely on a directive as against the State he may do so regardless of the capacity in which the latter is acting, whether employer or public authority. In either case it is necessary to prevent the State from taking advantage of its own failure to comply with Community law. (13)

25. Accordingly, the Court has also ruled that a body or a State undertaking, whatever its legal form, which has been made responsible, pursuant to a measure adopted by the State, for providing a public service under the control of the State and has for that purpose special powers beyond those which result from the normal rules applicable in relations between individuals is included in any event among the bodies against which the provisions of a directive capable of having direct effect may be relied upon. (14)

26. The problem could now be whether such (vertical) direct effect of a directive can exist also vis-à-vis a legal person governed by private law, which has been established by the State and operated by it as sole shareholder and which has had transferred to it without complete State supervision tasks to be performed on its own responsibility and on its own account which were previously carried out by the State itself as public tasks.

27. As regards this assessment, I would like to recall my Opinion in Collino and Chiappero , according to which the sanction of direct effect vis-à-vis the Member States only exercises its full impact if it affects the State in all instances, regardless of the specific legal form in which the State is acting. Whenever in fact the State, directly or indirectly, stands behind an institution or undertaking and controls it, then it is no longer a private individual. (15)

28. In this context it is necessary to assess below, on the one hand, the State ' s direct management, control and supervisory powers vis-à-vis an undertaking governed by private law and, on the other, the possibilities for indirectly intervening and exercising influence which arise from the structural link between the undertaking and the body governed by public law which stands behind it economically.

29. According to the principles set out above, the important factor as regards the State ' s direct management, control and supervisory powers is not necessarily whether an undertaking or other private body is formally subject to complete State supervision. Objectives laid down by law or individual powers of the State granted by agreement can also restrict the legal scope for manoeuvre available to the undertaking to the extent that they are, in terms of their effects, equivalent to complete supervision. Where, for example, the State is entitled to inspect any measures, including planning measures, taken by the undertaking and its subsidiaries, to set objectives and to require at any time information on its activities and its subsidiaries, the legal scope for manoeuvre of an undertaking is limited from the outset. This effect is reinforced where an undertaking is, within the economic field of activity transferred to it, bound absolutely to State objectives which are laid down by law and form part of the shareholders ' agreement and has to comply with statutory framework conditions, which, for example as in the case of Asfinag also cover fixing the rate of the tolls and charges to be levied by it, and the undertaking is limited, for its part, to putting forward proposals on their future structure.

30. As regards the possibilities of exercising indirect influence, account should be taken of whether the State, which stands behind the undertaking economically, is able, inside the company, to guide in accordance with its own will the areas of freedom which, in law, outwardly formally exist, as is probably the case where there is a sole shareholder.

31. All the possibilities for controlling and exercising influence directly and indirectly, as can be put into effect in respect of an undertaking such as Asfinag, justify regarding it as belonging, in practical terms, to the State.

32. Finally, the protective purpose of the directive also indicates that in a situation such as the present an undertaking which is, in terms of its form, governed by private law, must be regarded as a person to which one of its directly effective provisions is addressed. It is necessary not only to prevent the State from taking advantage of its own failure to comply with Community law, (16) but also from evading the effects of Community law by transferring the provision of public services to companies governed by private law.

33. The objective of the directives at issue in this case is to harmonise the levying of charges for the use of certain infrastructures in the Member States. This objective would be jeopardised if a Member State were able to evade the effects of the directives by organising under private law the relevant areas of responsibility conventionally assigned to the public administration. Accordingly, an undertaking governed by private law to which these tasks have been transferred through State act of organisation or legal agreement , and which satisfies the criteria of the broad definition of the State laid down by the Court, cannot be exempt from the direct effects of these directives.

34. Finally, it should be noted that, for the purposes of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, (17) Asfinag must be regarded as a contracting authority. (18) Under this provision, a contracting authority is, in addition to the State itself, any body governed by public law,

" established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

having legal personality, and financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law.

35. It is true that the term " contracting authority" does not necessarily have the same meaning as the term " State" in the functional sense against which an individual can rely on the direct effect of a directive. However, since in both cases the objective is to prevent the State evading the obligations upon it by transferring its tasks to a formally independent body, the fact that Asfinag satisfies the requirements for classification as a contracting authority provides an indication for the question to be answered in this case.

36. Therefore, I propose that the answer to the first question referred for a preliminary ruling should be that when concluding contracts with road users a legal person governed by private law is also required to observe the directly effective provisions of Council Directive 93/89/EEC of 25 October 1993 on the application by Member States of taxes on certain vehicles used for the carriage of goods by road and tolls and charges for the use of certain infrastructures and of Directive 1999/62/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 17 June 1999 on the charging of heavy goods vehicles for the use of certain infrastructures, where the State has transferred to that legal person the task of levying tolls for the use of public infrastructures and it has direct or indirect control of that legal person.

C The second and third questions

37. The second and third questions concern the same problem, that is to say the direct effect of the abovementioned provisions of Directives 93/89 and 1999/62 on the application by Member States of tolls and charges for the use of certain infrastructures. It is therefore appropriate to examine the two questions together.

1. Submissions of the parties

38. Rieser takes the view that the provisions of the directives include the necessary criteria to be directly effective and grant an individual the right to reimbursement of sums paid in excess. The toll for the full itinerary per kilometre amounts on average to EUR 3.41. By contrast, use of comparable part itineraries costs only around EUR 1.25 per kilometre. Thus, the sums to be reimbursed can be determined precisely. Rieser claims that it can rely on these directives even as an Austrian undertaking since they prohibit variations on the basis of origin or destination.

39. By contrast, Asfinag takes the view that Article 7(b) and (h) of Directive 93/89 and Articles 7(4) and (9) of Directive 1999/62 do not satisfy the requirements for direct effect.

40. The provisions of Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 and of Article 7(4) of Directive 1999/62 cannot have direct effect because their content is not sufficiently precise. They do not make it clear how, that is to say by comparing which part itineraries, the possibility of users of the full itinerary being placed at a disadvantage is to be assessed. The uncertainty in the choice made by the Court in Commission v Austria (19) of the part itineraries to be used for the comparison also demonstrates that the prohibition on discrimination on grounds of the origin or destination of the vehicle is not sufficiently clear and provides no " minimum guarantee". If the national courts were compelled to implement Directive 93/89, they would have to exercise a degree of latitude in laying down the criteria for choosing the itineraries to be compared and in fixing the correct rate of the toll tariffs. That, however, is a matter for the legislature alone.

41. Even if it is assumed that Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(4) of Directive 1999/62 are sufficiently precise, Austrian hauliers at least cannot rely on them since they are not placed at a disadvantage on grounds of their nationality and the directives on transport infrastructure costs are not intended to lay down provisions on competition between hauliers within the same Member State.

42. Nor does Article 7(h) of Directive 93/89 have direct effect. It provides merely that toll rates are to be related to the costs of constructing, operating and developing the infrastructure network concerned but contains no provisions regarding the calculation of such costs and the division thereof into individual vehicle categories, itineraries and periods. It is impossible, on the basis of these rules laying down only a vague objective, to put even an approximate figure on the permissible toll. Nor did the Court specify the method of calculating the costs of the infrastructure network in Commission v Austria . Finally, there are clearly several methods of calculation that are compatible with Article 7(h) of Directive 93/89. However, since there is a great degree of latitude in this case, Directive 93/89 cannot be directly effective.

43. These comments must also apply mutatis mutandis to Directive 1999/62 since the relevant provisions thereof (in particular Article 7(9)) have not been amended substantively in that respect and in particular are worded not in more precise but rather less clear terms than the rules contained in Directive 93/89. Article 7(9) of Directive 1999/62 takes as a basis " weighted average tolls" and not merely " tolls" . Article 7(10) of Directive 1999/62 provides for variations according to vehicle emission classes and time of day and Article 9(2) of Directive 1999/62 provides for the attribution of an (unspecified) percentage to environmental protection and the balanced development of transport networks. The calculation of the permissible rate of the toll for certain vehicles is thereby rendered even more difficult.

44. Directive 93/89 grants no individual rights even in accordance with its protective purpose. Its objective of eliminating distortions of competition is not adversely affected by the setting of different tariffs for the full itinerary and part itineraries. Neither Directive 93/89 itself nor the legal bases therefor in the EC Treaty reveal any legislative objective justifying the annulment of the toll contracts which it has concluded with the users of the Brenner motorway.

45. As regards Question 3(b), Asfinag takes the view that in any event Austrian hauliers cannot rely on the possible direct effects of the provisions of the directives since they are not placed at a disadvantage on grounds of their nationality and the directives on transport infrastructure costs are not intended to lay down provisions on competition between hauliers within the same Member State.

46. The Austrian Government also contends that the contested provisions of the directives do not have direct effect and argues in a manner similar to Asfinag that there is as little definition of the three cost items referred to therein constructing, operating and developing as there is of the term " infrastructure network concerned" . Consequently, it is completely unclear which costs are to be subsumed under these undefined terms and thus how they could enter into the corresponding calculation of the costs. Nor can the Member States ' already broad degree of latitude be restricted since the toll rate for the individual motorway user to be calculated pursuant to Article 7(h) of Directive 93/89 must merely be " related" to these cost items and does not have to correspond to them precisely. Furthermore, no provisions are laid down concerning the division of the costs into individual user categories. Finally, Article 7(h) contains no information on a method of calculation which is to be applied to produce a toll for the individual road user which is consistent with Directive 93/89.

47. On account of its largely identical wording, these uncertainties also exist in respect of Article 7(9) of Directive 1999/62. In the case of the new directive there are even additional elements which prevent the toll rate for the individual road user from being calculated directly. It makes it possible to organise different toll rates within a certain band according to vehicle emission classes and time of day (see Article 7(10)(a) and (b) of Directive 1999/62). According to the wording of the final sentence of Article 7(10) of Directive 1999/62, such variation in tolls charged with respect to vehicle emission classes or time of day must be proportionate to the objective pursued. However, Article 7(9) of Directive 1999/62 fails to provide any definition or detailed information on the possible variations.

48. In the absence of a mathematical result in accordance with Article 7(h) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(9) of Directive 1999/62, a toll rate calculated accordingly cannot be examined in the light of the prohibition on discrimination laid down in Community law. The direct effect of Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(4) of Directive 1999/62 must be rejected on account of the lack of preciseness of Article 7(h) of Directive 93/89 and of Article 7(9) of Directive 1999/62.

49. The fact that the Member States also have a very large degree of latitude in fixing a non-discriminatory toll, for example as regards the choice of the part itineraries to be used in this regard, also militates against direct effect.

50. As regards Question 3(a), the Republic of Austria submits, in the alternative, that Article 7(h) of Directive 93/89 merely names three parameters which are not specified in detail, that is to say the costs of constructing, operating and developing the infrastructure network concerned, which are to be used as criteria for establishing the toll rate. However, there are no indications as to how these costs are to be calculated and which cost components the three abovementioned items actually include. In its judgment in Commission v Austria the Court itself also made no pronouncement, based on a calculation of infrastructure costs, as to the rate of the Brenner toll consistent with the Treaty.

51. As regards Question 3(b), the Republic of Austria like Asfinag takes the view that Directives 93/89 and 1999/62 pursue, in the light of their preambles, the objective of laying down rules on competition between the hauliers of various Member States without intending thereby to establish a subjective right of individual road users to use a particular itinerary at a particular tariff. In any event, an Austrian haulier cannot rely on the provisions relating to discrimination on grounds of nationality under Directives 93/89 and 1999/62 since the rules on competition between hauliers of the same Member State are not covered by the legislative objective of the relevant enabling provision of primary law.

52. By contrast, the Commission takes the view that the prohibition on discrimination laid down in Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(4) of Directive 1999/62 requires no further indications for it to be directly effective. The Court has already classified a prohibition on discrimination as unconditional and sufficiently precise in the case of HI. (20)

53. The objective of the provisions at issue lies in protecting traffic in transit via the Brenner motorway from a toll that is excessive in comparison with that charged to users of part itineraries. However, transit traffic naturally does not include any purely national operation. Furthermore, the wording both of Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 and of Article 7(4) of Directive 1999/62 expresses the need to protect all transit traffic from discrimination, regardless of the nationality of the haulier. This is also consistent with the Court ' s conclusion in Commission v Austria. (21) If Rieser transits the full itinerary of the Brenner motorway, it can rely on Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 or Article 7(4) of Directive 1999/62 in the same way as any other foreign or Austrian haulier.

54. On the other hand, Article 7(h) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(9) of Directive 1999/62 cannot be said to have direct effect. Although the requirement that the toll be related to costs laid down therein gives the Member States some guidance for calculating tolls, they have, provided that they comply with this requirement, such a broad degree of latitude that the specific means of calculation does not have the unconditional or sufficiently precise character necessary for direct effect. Consequently, there is likewise no need to answer Question 3(a).

2. Legal assessment

(a) Preliminary remarks on the class of vehicles covered by the directive

55. In the second question referred for a preliminary ruling the national court takes as a basis vehicles with more than three axles. Under the fourth indent of Article 2 of Directive 93/89 and Article 2(d) of Directive 1999/62, for the purpose of the directive " vehicle" means a motor vehicle with a maximum permissible gross laden weight of not less than 12 tonnes. Accordingly, the number of axles is unimportant. Even though the two parameters will generally apply to the same class of vehicles, the following interpretation relates only to the vehicles defined in the directive. It is for the national court to determine whether the vehicles used by Rieser fall within that definition.

(b) The prohibition on discrimination under Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(4) of Directive 1999/62

(i) Direct effect

56. As the Court has consistently held, whenever the provisions of a directive appear, so far as their subject-matter is concerned, to be unconditional and sufficiently precise, they may be relied upon before the national courts by individuals against the State where the latter has failed to implement the directive in domestic law by the end of the period prescribed or where it has failed to implement the directive correctly. (22)

In Commission v Austria (23) the Court ruled that the obligations arising from Article 7(b) and (h) of Directive 93/89 had not been fulfilled correctly.

58. There has been no such Court ruling regarding the implementation of the provisions of Article 7(4) and (9) of Directive 1999/62 in domestic law. However, since their content is largely identical to those of the abovementioned provisions of previous Directive 93/89, the same should apply to them, at least as regards the period relevant in this case, namely that up until 1 July 2000, (24) within which the directive had to be implemented.

59. It must be examined whether the other conditions for the direct effect of the prohibition on direct or indirect discrimination based on the origin or destination of the vehicle laid down in Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(4) of Directive 1999/62 are satisfied. The prohibition on discrimination based on nationality, which is also laid down in these provisions, is not relevant in the present case. It is true that in Commission v Austria (25) the Court held that the structure of the charges involves discrimination based on nationality contrary to Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89. However, as an Austrian undertaking, Rieser does not belong to the category of persons placed in a less favourable position. Therefore, the following examination concentrates on whether Rieser can rely directly on the prohibition on discrimination based on the origin or destination of the vehicle. For it to be able to do so, this rule must be unconditional and sufficiently precise.

60. In this regard it should be noted that in various fields of Community law the Court has regarded prohibitions on discrimination contained in directives as directly effective. Accordingly, it has consistently held that the prohibition on (direct or indirect) discrimination based on sex as regards access to employment and working conditions and social security is sufficiently precise and unconditional to allow individuals to rely upon it before the national courts in order to preclude the application of any national provision inconsistent with it. (26)

61. As regards the award of public service contracts, the Court has ruled that a service provider can rely on the provisions of a directive laying down a general prohibition on discrimination if it is clear from an individual examination of their wording that they are unconditional and sufficiently clear and precise. (27)

62. Finally, the Court recently held that the prohibition laid down in Article 9(2) of Directive 97/13/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 10 April 1997 on a common framework for general authorisations and individual licences in the field of telecommunications services (28) is directly effective. (29)

63. In these circumstances there is in principle nothing to prevent direct effect being attributed also to the provisions of directives which prohibit discrimination based on the origin or destination of the vehicle, provided that they satisfy the minimum requirements of unconditionality and preciseness.

64. As regards whether or not Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(4) of Directive 1999/62 are sufficiently precise, it must be observed that these provisions preclude, generally and unequivocally, any discrimination based on the origin or destination of the vehicle. The supposed difficulties in establishing the itineraries to be compared, cited by the national court, Asfinag and the Austrian Government, do not prevent the prohibition on discrimination from being precise.

65. There can be discrimination if different rules are applied to comparable situations or the same rule is applied to different situations. In any event, the application of a prohibition on discrimination therefore requires a comparison of different factual situations and the rules which govern them. It is primarily for the body applying the law and not the legislature to make this comparison.

66. It is possible to lay down in rules the criteria to be taken into account, such as, for example, nationality or the origin or destination of the vehicle in the present case. However, in view of the variety of possible factual situations, it is impossible for the legislature to set out all the factors that may be relevant to the comparison. However, this in no way alters the clear statement of the prohibition on discrimination, namely that similar situations cannot be treated differently and different situations cannot be treated the same.

In Commission v Austria (30) the Court compared the toll per kilometre for following the full itinerary and the toll per kilometre for following certain part itineraries. In doing so it took account only of those part itineraries that link localities which are of economic significance and thus took into consideration a further criterion for the comparability of the itineraries in addition to the origin and destination of the vehicle. It is only on the part itineraries selected by the Court that there is heavy goods traffic similar to that on the full itinerary. This criterion is consistent with the spirit and purpose of the directive, namely to eliminate distortions of competition between transport undertakings. (31)

68. It must also be considered whether the prohibition on discrimination can be regarded as unconditional in the light of the exceptions and reservations laid down in Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 (" ... Without prejudice to Article 8(2)(e) and Article 9..."). (32)

69. The answer to this must also be in the affirmative. The reservation in favour of Article 8(2)(e) is a transitional provision which restricts the validity of the directive for a certain period but does not make the abovementioned principle subject to any condition as regards the scope thereof. The rule contained in Article 9 is also intended merely to leave open to the Member States the possibility of excluding border areas from the scope of the directive in accordance with the procedure laid down in the Council decision of 21 March 1962. However, it is clearly not intended to limit or make conditional the application of the principle of equal treatment within its scope ratione materiae and therefore it likewise does not prevent the conclusion being drawn that the prohibition on discrimination has direct effect. (33)

70. Therefore, if the criteria for the direct effect of Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 and Article

7(4) of Directive 1999/62 are satisfied where the provision is viewed in isolation, the question arises as to whether, in the light of the systematic link with the other provisions of the directive, the prohibition on discrimination can be regarded as sufficiently precise and unconditional to allow individuals to rely upon it against the State (in the broadest sense). Asfinag and the Austrian Government cast doubt on this, arguing that in view of the scope for differentiation and the latitude granted to the Member States by Article 7(h) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(9) of Directive 1999/62 as regards the structuring of toll rates it must be held that Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(4) likewise have no direct effect.

71. However, this argument cannot be accepted. In this respect it should be noted that the granting of a margin of latitude and discretion and a power of assessment in transposing a directive does not preclude the direct effect thereof if the objective of the directive is set out in sufficiently precise terms. Even where a provision of a directive leaves the Member States a degree of latitude as regards the form and methods for achieving the result, it can still prescribe unconditionally the result to be achieved, for example the abolition of any provisions contrary to the principle of equal treatment. (34)

72. Accordingly, it can be argued in the present case that the fact that the Member States are left a considerable degree of discretion and variation in fixing a toll rate that complies with the directive a point on which all the parties concerned agree cannot deny direct effect to the sufficiently precise and unconditionally worded prohibition on discrimination.

73. Therefore, it is clear that the provisions of Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(4) of Directive 1999/62 have direct effect as regards the objective set out therein which is to be attained when fixing a toll that complies with the directive.

(ii) May Austrian undertakings also rely on the prohibition on discrimination? (Question 3(b))

74. According to the wording of the provision in question, discrimination on the grounds of the nationality of the haulier or of origin or destination of the vehicle is not permitted. Whereas the first alternative no discrimination on the grounds of nationality clearly has in mind the protection of foreign hauliers, the second no discrimination on the grounds of origin or destination of the vehicle reveals no such (limited) protective purpose.

In Commission v Austria (35) the Court accordingly based its finding that there had been a failure to fulfil Treaty obligations on infringements of both alternatives of the prohibition on discrimination and stated that Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 prohibits not only any discrimination based on the nationality of hauliers but also any based on the origin or destination of the vehicle in order to avoid any form of distortion of competition as between transport undertakings in the Member States. (36)

76. The Court based the infringement of the second alternative, irrespective of the nationality of the haulier, solely on the fact that vehicles carrying goods are subject to a tariff difference, depending on whether those vehicles follow the full itinerary on the Brenner motorway or certain part itineraries, which operates to the detriment of vehicles engaged in transit traffic. (37)

77. It therefore follows that Austrian hauliers who transit the full itinerary of the Brenner motorway and are thereby placed at a disadvantage compared with certain users of part itineraries can rely on the second alternative of the prohibition on discrimination laid down in Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89.

78. This subjective protective purpose of the provision of the directive is in no way altered by the fact that, according to the Court ' s findings, the great majority of the vehicles engaged in transit traffic are not registered in Austria (38) and therefore in actual fact discrimination based on nationality coincides with discrimination based on the origin and destination of the vehicle.

(iii) Consequences of the direct effect of the prohibition on discrimination

79. In so far as an individual can rely on directly effective provisions of the directive, contrary national provisions are ineffective. The absence of any further need to pay the excessive toll is not the only consequence. In order to ensure the practical effect of the prohibition on discrimination, the amounts already paid must also be reimbursed in so far as they exceed the amounts paid by the favoured group, that is to say in this case the users of comparable itineraries.

80. According to the Court ' s well-established case-law, the right to obtain a refund of charges levied in a Member State in breach of rules of Community law is the consequence and the complement of the rights conferred on individuals by Community provisions as interpreted by the Court. (39) Furthermore, only by reimbursing the discriminatory charges is the distortion of competition caused by them eliminated again. (40)

81. The Court has already ruled to this effect on several occasions in connection with charges that have been levied in breach of the prohibition on discrimination. (41) However, each of those cases concerned breaches of prohibitions on discrimination arising directly from the provisions of the Treaty. It is not possible to see any reason why a breach of a directly effective prohibition on discrimination laid down in a directive should be treated any differently in terms of its others consequences. Furthermore, the Court has recognised an entitlement to compensation also in the case of breaches against different kinds of directly effective provisions of directives. (42)

82. An entitlement to reimbursement of payments made but not due exists also where they have been levied in breach of Community law by a formally private, but State-controlled undertaking. (43) In particular, it is not possible to raise against such an entitlement the argument that the amounts are levied not by public authorities as charges but as remuneration pursuant to an agreement of private law and that the Court ' s case-law concerning the reimbursement of charges in breach of Community law cannot therefore be applied. (44)

83. In that respect it should be noted that it is the settled case-law of the Court that the nature of a tax, duty or charge must be determined by the Court, under Community law, according to the objective characteristics by which it is levied, irrespective of its classification under national law. (45)

84. The same must apply where the consideration for the use of a State service is levied in the form of a contractual user remuneration as a result of the privatisation of the area of administration concerned but must be classified as a public (toll) fee in terms of its function or replaces such a fee. The view set out in the answer to the first question referred for a preliminary ruling, namely that a Member State may not evade its obligations under Community law by privatising or farming out particular areas of public administration, must also apply to the reimbursement of charges.

85. According to the Court ' s case-law, where the Member States or the legal persons and bodies covered by the broad concept of the State are in principle required to reimburse charges levied in breach of directly effective Community law, in the absence of Community rules governing the matter it is for the domestic legal system of each Member State to lay down the detailed procedural rules governing actions for safeguarding rights which individuals derive from Community law, provided, however, that such rules are not less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions and do not render in practice impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of rights conferred by Community law, in accordance with the principle of equivalence and effectiveness. (46)

86. It is also for the national court to establish the level of the amount to be reimbursed but in this regard it must be guided by the objective of offsetting discrimination between the users of the full itinerary and the users of the three part itineraries (InnsbruckSchönberg, InnsbruckMatrei/Steinach and Matrei/Steinachfrontier post) which the Court regarded as comparable in Commission v Austria. (47)

87. In that respect the question arises as to how account is to be taken of the possibility of the person paying the charge passing the costs on to a third party. This problem arises in the present case because according to the order for reference, Rieser claims that it was unable to pass the increase in the tolls on to its customers a claim that is disputed by Asfinag. (48)

88. According the Court ' s case-law, a person cannot demand repayment of taxes, charges and duties paid in breach of Community law where it is established that he has actually passed them on to other persons. (49)

89. In such circumstances, the burden of the charge levied but not due has been borne not by the payer of the charge, but by the customer to whom the cost has been passed on. Therefore, to repay the payer of the charge the amount of the charge already received from the customer would be tantamount to paying him twice over, which may be described as unjust enrichment, whilst in no way remedying the consequences for the customer of the illegality of the charge. (50)

90. However, the question whether an indirect charge has or has not been passed on in each case is a question of fact to be determined by the national court. The actual passing-on of such taxes, either in whole or in part, depends on various factors in each commercial transaction which distinguish it from other transactions in other contexts. (51) According to the Court ' s case-law, in any event it may not be assumed that they have been passed on. In particular, it is not for the payer of the charge to prove the contrary. Accordingly, a Member State may resist repayment to the person who paid of a charge levied in breach of Community law only where it is established that the charge has been borne in its entirety by someone other than that person and that reimbursement of the latter would constitute unjust enrichment. (52)

91. In addition, it should be borne in mind that even where it is established that the burden of the charge has been passed on in whole or in part to the customer, repayment to the payer of the charge of the amount thus passed on does not necessarily entail his unjust enrichment. The payer of the charge may also have suffered damage as a result of the very fact that he has passed on the charge levied in breach of Community law, because the increase in the price of the product brought about by passing on the charge has led to a decrease in sales. (53)

(c) The requirement that the toll be related to costs in accordance with Article 7(h) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(9) of Directive 1999/62

92. As regards the direct effect of Article 7(h) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(9) of Directive 1999/62, Asfinag, the Republic of Austria and the Commission essentially agree in their observations that these provisions do not have the unconditional or sufficiently precise character necessary for direct effect.

93. I concur with this view. The provisions merely give the Member States certain parameters (construction, operation and development of the road network or infrastructure network concerned) by which to establish the toll rate without defining these terms or otherwise limiting the degree of latitude left to the Member States in establishing the means of calculating the toll rate. The absence of preciseness in the rules is evident not least from the fact that the provisions of both directives require only that the toll rates be " related to" the abovementioned cost parameters and not that they strictly observe them or the like. Therefore apart from the abovementioned benchmarks Article 7(h) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(9) of Directive 1999/62 leave the Member States a choice as regards the organisation of the method of calculation used to calculate a toll that complies with the directive.

(d) Intermediate conclusion

94. Therefore, the second and third questions referred for a preliminary ruling should be answered as follows:

The prohibition on discrimination on grounds of the origin or destination of the vehicle laid down in Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(4) of Directive 1999/62 is directly effective. Undertakings which have paid for following the full itinerary using vehicles with a maximum permissible gross laden weight of not less than 12 tonnes a higher tariff per kilometre than users of economically comparable part itineraries can rely on the prohibition on discrimination and demand reimbursement of the toll levied in excess.

Austrian hauliers too can rely on Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(4) of Directive 1999/62.

Article 7(h) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(9) of Directive 1999/62 are not directly effective as regards calculating a toll that complies with the directives for vehicles with a maximum permissible gross laden weight of not less than 12 tonnes used for the carriage of goods on the full itinerary of the Austrian Brenner motorway.

D The fourth question

1. Submissions of the parties

95. Asfinag points out that although the Court annulled Directive 93/89 in Parliament v Council it preserved the effects of the annulled directive " until the Council has adopted a new directive" . (54)

96. Directive 1999/62 was adopted on 17 June 1999 and therefore, according to the clear wording of the abovementioned judgment, Directive 93/89 ceased to have effect on that date and consequently the rules on tolls could not have infringed this directive as from 17 June 1999. Directive 1999/62 could have effects in advance before the period prescribed for transposition had expired. However, in the period from 17 June 1999 to 1 July 2000 (the end of the period prescribed for transposition) the Republic of Austria took no measures which ran counter to the objectives of the new directive. Therefore, no legal void existed. However, Directive 1999/62 could not have direct effect before the period prescribed for transposition had expired.

97. The Austrian Government also refers to Parliament v Council and states that if, in connection with the continued effect of Directive 93/89, the Court had intended to take as a basis a date other than the date of the adoption of the directive, it would have expressed such intention clearly. Consequently, the continued effect of annulled Directive 93/89 pronounced in Parliament v Council could have existed only until the adoption of the new directive.

98. However, directives do not have binding effect merely when the period prescribed for transposition has expired. Since it recognised the effect of Directive 1999/62 in advance, the Republic of Austria adopted no measures at all that would have undermined the regulatory purpose of this directive.

99. On the other hand, it could not be concluded that there was direct effect before the period prescribed for transposition expired. Such an interpretation of the advance effect of a directive would ultimately lead to a circumvention of the fundamental notion underlying the two-tier nature of the directive, that is to say the need for a legislative measure of Community law and national law.

100. The Commission recalls that according to the fourth recital in the preamble to Directive 1999/62, which entered into force on 20 July 1999, it replaces Directive 93/89. Consequently, old Directive 93/89 ceased to have effect on that date. However, in the period from 20 July 1999 to 1 July 2000, the Member States were required to take account of Directive 1999/62 in so far as according to case-law they must, during the period for transposition allowed therein, refrain from taking any measures liable seriously to compromise achievement of the result prescribed by this directive. This follows directly from the second paragraph of Article 10 EC and the third paragraph of Article 249 EC and from Directive 1999/62 itself.

2. Legal assessment

101. In the main proceedings Rieser asserts claims for reimbursement of tolls levied in excess in the period from 1 January 1997 to 31 July 2000. For there to be such claims during the entire period, there must have been a rule of Community law which the toll tariffs infringed and on which Rieser can rely.

102. In this context, the two parts of the fourth question referred for a preliminary ruling essentially seek to ascertain the time until which Directive 93/89 had direct effect in favour of Rieser and the time from which, if appropriate, Directive 1999/62 had similar effects.

103. All the parties correctly conclude in so far as they have submitted observations on the fourth question referred for a preliminary ruling that the direct effect of Directive 93/89 ceased at the time successor Directive 1999/62 was adopted and did not continue in force until the period prescribed for transposing the new directive had expired. In Parliament v Council the Court ordered that the effects of Directive 93/89 be preserved " until the Council has adopted new legislation in the matter". (55)

104. An order that the effects of Directive 93/89 be preserved until Directive 1999/62 had been transposed appears to be entirely impossible for various reasons. In that case both the directives would be in force during the period prescribed for transposing Directive 1999/62. Where the directives differed from one another, it would be unclear as to which requirements the Member States were to satisfy during this period. Furthermore, the end of the effect of Directive 93/89 would depend on action by the Member States and would occur on a different date depending on the Member State concerned.

105. However, the parties disagree as regards the exact time at which the direct effects of the old directive cease the adoption or the entry into force of the new directive. Directive 1999/62 was adopted by the Council on 17 June 1999 but under Article 13 thereof did not enter into force until it was published in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 20 July 1999. The wording of the order that the effects be preserved points more towards the first date. (56) The national court also takes this date as a basis in Question 4(b).

106. However, the spirit and purpose of maintaining the effects of an annulled act is to prevent a legal void arising before a new act has replaced the annulled act. This is ensured only where the annulled act continues to have effect until the new act can produce effects. Since Directive 1999/62 did not have effect until it entered into force, this order by the Court must be construed as meaning that Directive 93/89 continued in force until this time, that is to say until 24.00 hours on 19 July 1999. (57) If " adoption" of the new act within the meaning of Parliament v Council were to be construed as the approval thereof by the Council, there would be no effective rules between 17 June and 20 July 1999.

107. Therefore, in respect of the period up to and including 19 July 1999, Rieser can plead that the toll was levied in breach of Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89.

(b) The effects of Directive 1999/62 before the expiry of the period prescribed for transposition

108. It must be examined whether Directive 1999/62 produced effects in favour of Rieser in the period between 20 July 1999 the date on which it entered into force and 30 June 2000 the end of the period prescribed for transposition. (58)

109. During this period the Member States are required to transpose the directive into national law and also to refrain from taking any measures liable seriously to compromise the result prescribed. (59) However, the requirement that no measures jeopardising the achievement of the result sought by a directive be taken, which is based on Article 10 EC and the third paragraph of Article 249 EC and laid down in particular in the judgment in Inter-Environnement Wallonie , (60) is not so extensive that national rules incompatible with the directive must be adjusted before the prescribed period expires.

110. At most in exceptional cases can the advance effects of the directive preclude the introduction of national provisions, that is to say where they run completely counter to the spirit and letter of the directive and thereby compromise the adjustment of the national legal order within the prescribed period. (61)

111. There is no such exceptional case here since the tariff at issue, which was in breach of the prohibition on discrimination laid down in Directive 1999/62, was introduced before the adoption of Directive 1999/62. Furthermore, the structure of the charges does not render the subsequent transposition of the directive considerably more difficult since the tariff could have been changed again in the short term. A particular transitional rule may have been necessary only in respect of multiple-trip cards.

112. It is settled case-law that the public authorities in the Member States are furthermore required to interpret national law, whether adopted before or after the directive, in the light of the directive. (62) Since a directive produces its effects in respect of the persons to which it is addressed even before it enters into force, there are certain factors indicating that the duty to interpret national law in conformity with the directive exists even before the period for transposing the directive expires. (63)

113. However, the Austrian provisions on the tariffs for the Brenner toll leave no scope for an interpretation which precludes any discrimination.

114. Nevertheless, it is not clear to what extent an individual can rely on a directive during the period prescribed for transposition where a Member State has already transposed it into national law but has done so incorrectly.

115. Firstly, Directive 93/89 had to be transposed into national law. If it is accepted that the rules on tolls at issue constituted, in the view of the Republic of Austria, correct transposition of Directive 93/89, there was hardly any further need for rules to be laid down after the adoption of Directive 1999/62 since the rules of the two directives are largely identical. In any event as is evident from the file Austria did not adjust the rules on tolls until after the judgment in the infringement proceedings and with effect from 1 February 2001. The replacement of Directive 93/89 by Directive 1999/62 did not, however, prompt the Austrian legislature to take any action.

116. In his Opinion in Hansa Fleisch Ernst Mundt (64) Advocate General Jacobs considered in detail the question whether or not an individual may, where a decision addressed to a Member State has already been implemented but implemented incorrectly, rely directly on that decision during the period prescribed for implementation laid down therein. Although that case relates to a decision, his observations on direct effect are also applicable to directives.

117. He rightly concludes that reliance on an act before the expiry of the period prescribed for the transposition thereof is not possible since otherwise the Member States that had made an attempt albeit incorrectly to effect transposition would be placed in a less favourable position that those which had remained completely inactive. Furthermore, the doctrine of direct effect is based on the idea that the Member State cannot rely, as against an individual, on the fact that it has failed to fulfil an obligation under Community law. However, the obligation to implement provisions of Community law does not become effective until the end of the period prescribed for implementation. In its judgment in that case the Court also held that the individual cannot rely directly on the decision during the period prescribed for transposition. (65)

118. Consequently, Rieser cannot demand partial reimbursement of the toll in respect of the period from 20 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 by pleading that the toll tariff breached the prohibition on discrimination laid down in Directive 1999/62.

(c) Infringement of the directly effective provisions of the Treaty

119. However, the question arises as to whether Rieser can base its claim in respect of this period on an infringement by the rules on tolls of a directly effective provision of the Treaty. It is true that the national court has referred no question to the Court in this regard. However, since it is established case-law that, in the procedure laid down by Article 234 EC providing for cooperation between national courts and the Court of Justice, it is for the latter to provide the referring court with an answer which will be of use to it and enable it to determine the case before it, (66) this matter should be examined.

120. Firstly, the rules on tolls might infringe Article 72 EC which requires the Member States not to alter existing provisions governing transport to the detriment of undertakings of other Member States. However, since this is a mere prohibition on discrimination on grounds of nationality or place of establishment, Rieser cannot, as a domestic undertaking, rely on this provision.

121. Secondly, there may have been a breach of the freedom to provide services. Under Article 51(1) EC, freedom to provide services in the field of transport is governed by the provisions of the title relating to transport. That restriction means that the objective laid down in Article 49 EC of abolishing during the transitional period restrictions on freedom to provide services is to be attained in the framework of the common transport policy provided for in Articles 70 EC and 71 EC. The Court has held (67) that, even on expiry of the transitional period, Articles 49 EC and 50 EC are not of direct application in the transport sector. (68) However, this does not prevent these provisions from serving as a reference point when it is a question of the Council ' s implementing freedom to supply services in that sector.

122. Council Regulation (EEC) No 881/92 of 26 March 1992 on access to the market in the carriage of goods by road within the Community to or from the territory of a Member State or passing across the territory of one or more Member States (69) introduced the freedom to provide services in the international carriage of goods by road. (70) Since Rieser followed the full itinerary of the Brenner motorway up to the Italian border, it must be concluded that it provided services in international carriage.

123. It is settled case-law that freedom to provide services within the meaning of Article 49 EC requires not only the elimination of all discrimination on grounds of nationality against providers of services who are established in another Member State, but also the abolition of any restriction, even if it applies without distinction to national providers of services and to those of other Member States, which is liable to prohibit, impede or render less attractive the activities of a provider of services established in another Member State where he lawfully provides similar services. (71) That freedom likewise precludes the application of any national legislation which has the effect of making the provision of services between Member States more difficult than the provision of services purely within one Member State. (72)

124. In accordance with this principle, the freedom to provide services may be relied on also by an undertaking against the State in which it is established where the services are provided to recipients established in another Member State. (73)

125. Application of the freedom to provide services in connection with rules on the motorway toll is not precluded by the adoption of Directives 93/89 and 1999/62 which lay down special rules in this regard. The effects of the former directive ceased on 20 July 1999 and the provisions of Directive 1999/62 had no direct effect before the end of the period prescribed for transposition, as stated above.

126. In the present case the discriminatory motorway toll does not prevent hauliers transporting goods in transit from following the full itinerary of the Brenner motorway. However, since the charges for using the full itinerary are disproportionately high in relation to those for using individual part itineraries, they are liable to affect the economic attractiveness of using the full itinerary. Consequently, they constitute a restriction on the freedom to provide services to the detriment of hauliers transporting goods in transit, regardless of where they are established.

127. Since the discriminatory rules on tolls cannot be justified either by overriding reasons relating to the public interest or by other reasons, (74) they probably constitute an unlawful restriction on the freedom to provide services under Article 49 EC.

128. An Austrian road haulier such as Rieser may, in compensation proceedings, rely on this provision of primary Community law which is directly effective in the period between 20 July 1999 and 30 June 2000.

129. As regards the final period in respect of which Rieser demands reimbursement of the toll, that is to say from 1 to 31 July 2000, it should be mentioned, merely for the sake of completeness in particular since the national court submitted no question in this regard that the prohibition on discrimination laid down in Directive 1999/62 has been directly effective since the expiry of the period prescribed for transposition on 1 July 2000.

V Conclusion

130. On the basis of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court reply as follows to the questions submitted:

(1) When concluding contracts with road users a legal person governed by private law is required to observe the directly effective provisions of Council Directive 93/89/EEC of 25 October 1993 on the application by Member States of taxes on certain vehicles used for the carriage of goods by road and tolls and charges for the use of certain infrastructures and of Directive 1999/62/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 17 June 1999 on the charging of heavy goods vehicles for the use of certain infrastructures, where the State has transferred to that legal person the task of levying tolls for the use of public infrastructures and it has direct or indirect control of that legal person.

(2) The prohibition on discrimination on grounds of the origin or destination of the vehicle laid down in Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(4) of Directive 1999/62 is directly effective. Undertakings which have paid for following the full itinerary using vehicles with a maximum permissible gross laden weight of not less than 12 tonnes a higher tariff per kilometre than users of economically comparable part itineraries can rely on the prohibition on discrimination and demand reimbursement of the toll levied in excess.

(3) Austrian hauliers too can rely on Article 7(b) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(4) of Directive 1999/62.

(4) Article 7(h) of Directive 93/89 and Article 7(9) of Directive 1999/62 are not directly effective as regards calculating a toll that complies with the directives for vehicles with a maximum permissible gross laden weight of not less than 12 tonnes used for the carriage of goods on the full itinerary of the Austrian Brenner motorway.

(5) Directive 93/89 ceased to have effect upon the entry into force of Directive 1999/62 on 20 July 1999.

(6) In the period from 20 July 1999 to 30 June 2000 Directive 1999/62 had no direct effects on which a haulier could rely in respect of a partial reimbursement of the toll for using the Brenner motorway (full itinerary). However, during this period a haulier can rely on the provisions of the Treaty on the freedom to provide services which apply in the field of the international carriage of goods by road under Council Regulation (EEC) No 881/92 of 26 March 1992 on access to the market in the carriage of goods by road within the Community to or from the territory of a Member State or passing across the territory of one or more Member States.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Mischo delivered on 27 February 2003.
EVN AG et Wienstrom GmbH v Republik Osterreich.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesvergabeamt - Austria.
Directive 93/36/EEC - Public supply contracts - Concept of the most economically advantageous tender - Award criterion giving preference to electricity produced from renewable energy sources - Directive 89/665/EEC - Public procurement review proceedings - Unlawful decisions - Possibility of annulment only in the case of material influence on the outcome of the tender procedure - Illegality of an award criterion - Obligation to cancel the invitation to tender.
Case C-448/01.

1 As a result of review proceedings initiated by a tenderer whose tender was rejected by the contracting authority and who contends that a criterion, relating to the supply of green electricity, for the award of a contract was unlawful, the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Procurement Office) (Austria) has asked the Court to interpret Article 26 of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (1) and Articles 1 and 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts. (2)

I - The legal context

A - The Community legislation

2 Article 26 of Directive 93/36 is headed `Criteria for the award of contracts' and reads as follows:

`1. The criteria on which the contracting authority shall base the award of contracts shall be:

...

(b) or, when award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract in question: e.g. price, delivery date, running costs, cost-effectiveness, quality, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical merit, after-sales service and technical assistance.

2. In the case referred to in point (b) of paragraph 1, the contracting authority shall state in the contract documents or in the contract notice all the criteria they intend to apply to the award, where possible in descending order of importance.'

3 Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 provides as follows:

`3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

4 Article 2(1)(b) and Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 provide as follows:

...

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

...

6. The effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law.

Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.'

5 Article 3(2) of Directive 96/92/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 19 December 1996 concerning common rules for the internal market in electricity (3) reads as follows:

`Having full regard to the relevant provisions of the Treaty, in particular Article 90, Member States may impose on undertakings operating in the electricity sector, in the general economic interest, public service obligations which may relate to reliability, including reliability of supply, regularity, quality and price of supplies and to environmental protection. Such obligations must be clearly defined, transparent, non-discriminatory and verifiable; they, and any revision thereof, shall be published and notified to the Commission by Member States without delay. As a means of carrying out the abovementioned public service obligations, Member States which so wish may introduce the implementation of long-term planning.'

6 The second recital of Directive 2001/77/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 27 September 2001 on the promotion of electricity produced from renewable energy sources in the internal electricity market (4) states that:

`The promotion of electricity produced from renewable energy sources is a high Community priority as outlined in the White Paper on Renewable Energy Sources... for reasons of reliability and diversification of energy supply, of environmental protection and of social and economic cohesion. That was endorsed by the Council in its resolution of 8 June 1998 on renewable sources of energy.'

7 The 12th recital of Directive 2001/77 states:

`The need for public support in favour of renewable energy sources is recognised in the Community guidelines for State aid for environmental protection, which, amongst other options, take account of the need to internalise external costs of electricity generation. However, the rules of the Treaty, and in particular Articles 87 and 88 thereof, will continue to apply to such public support.'

8 According to the 18th recital of the same directive:

`It is important to utilise the strength of the market forces and the internal market and make electricity produced from renewable energy sources competitive and attractive to European citizens.'

9 The purpose of Directive 2001/77 is, according to Article 1 thereof:

`to promote an increase in the contribution of renewable energy sources to electricity production in the internal market for electricity and to create a basis for a future Community framework thereof'.

10 Article 3(1) of the same directive provides as follows:

`Member States shall take appropriate steps to encourage greater consumption of electricity produced from renewable energy sources in conformity with the national indicative targets referred to in paragraph 2. These steps must be in proportion to the objective to be attained.'

11 Article 3(2) of Directive 2001/77 provides that each Member State is to set national indicative targets.

12 Article 3(4) of the same directive provides that, on the basis of the Member States' reports, the Commission is to assess whether the national indicative targets are consistent with the global indicative target of 12% of gross national energy consumption by 2010 and in particular with the 22.1% indicative share of electricity produced from renewable energy sources in total Community electricity consumption by 2010.

13 Article 5(1) of Directive 2001/77, entitled `Guarantee of origin of electricity produced from renewable energy sources', provides that:

`Member States shall, not later than 27 October 2003, ensure that the origin of electricity produced from renewable energy sources can be guaranteed as such within the meaning of this Directive according to objective, transparent and non-discriminatory criteria laid down by each Member State. They shall ensure that a guarantee of origin is issued to this effect in response to a request.'

B - The national legislation

14 In Austria the conclusion of public contracts is governed by the Bundesvergabegesetz (Federal Procurement Law, Bundesgesetzblatt für die Republik Osterreich I, 1997/56, `the BVergG').

15 Paragraph 117 of the BVergG provides as follows:

`1. The Bundesvergabeamt shall set aside, by way of administrative decision, taking into account the opinion of the Conciliation Committee in the case, any decision of the contracting authority in an award procedure where the decision in question:

(1) is contrary to the provisions of this Federal Law or its implementing regulations and

(2) significantly affects the outcome of the award procedure.

2. The setting aside of an unlawful decision may, in particular, take the form of the removal of discriminatory conditions for undertakings relating to technical, economic or financial specifications in the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure.

3. After the award of the contract, the Bundesvergabeamt shall, in accordance with the conditions of subparagraph 1, determine only whether the alleged illegality exists or not.'

II - The main proceedings

16 The Republic of Austria, as the contracting authority (`the defendant in the main proceedings'), invited tenders for the supply of electricity in an open procurement procedure. The subject of the award was the conclusion of a framework agreement, followed by individual contracts, for the supply of electricity to all the Federal Republic's administrative offices in the Land of Carinthia. The contract period was from 1 January 2002 to 31 December 2003. The invitation to tender, which was published in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 27 March 2001, included the following provision under the heading `Award criteria':

effect of the services on the environment in accordance with the contract documents.'

17 The tender had to state a price in ATS per kilowatt hour. This was to apply for the whole contract period and was not to be subject to escalation or adjustment. In addition to supplying electricity, the supplier was required to provide other services (in particular, to measure the electricity used by the Federal offices, to calculate the annual consumption, etc.). The supplier had to undertake to supply the Federal offices, so far as technically possible, with electricity from renewable energy sources and in any case not knowingly to supply electricity generated by nuclear fission. However, the supplier was not required to submit proof of his sources of supply. In the event of a breach of the undertaking to supply electricity from renewable energy sources or the undertaking not to supply electricity generated by nuclear fission, it would be open to the contracting authority to terminate the contract and to impose a penalty.

18 In the introduction to the tender documents it was stated that the contracting authority was aware that for technical reasons no supplier could guarantee that the electricity he supplied to a particular customer had actually been generated from renewable sources. Nevertheless the authority had decided to contract with tenderers who could supply at least 22.5 gigawatt hours per annum of electricity generated from renewable sources. The annual consumption of the Federal offices to which the contract related had been estimated at approximately 22.5 gigawatt hours. However, any differences between this tentative figure and the quantity actually supplied would not affect the agreed price per kilowatt hour.

19 It was specified as a particular ground for elimination that tenders would be eliminated if they did not contain proof that `in the past two years and/or in the next two years the tenderer has generated or purchased, and/or will generate or purchase, and has supplied and/or will supply to final customers, at least 22.5 gigawatt hours per annum of electricity generated from renewable sources'. The award criteria laid down were net price per kilowatt hour, which was given a weighting of 55%, and `electricity from renewable sources', which was given a weighting of 45%. As regards the latter criterion, it was stipulated that `only the amount of energy that can be supplied from renewable sources in excess of 22.5 gigawatt hours per annum will be taken into account'.

20 The tenders were opened on 10 May 2001. Four tenders had been submitted. That of the Kärntner Elektrizitäts-Aktiengesellschaft/Stadtwerke Klagenfurt (`KELAG') consortium stated a price of ATS 0.44 per kilowatt hour and, referring to a table showing the origin and the quantities of electricity generated or supplied by it, stated that it was able to supply an aggregate amount of renewable electricity of 3 406.2 gigawatt hours. Energie Oberösterreich AG also submitted a tender for a price of ATS 0.4191 per kilowatt hour if consumption exceeded 1 million gigawatt hours per annum and included a table for 1999 to 2002 showing the different amounts of electricity which could be supplied from renewable sources in each year in that period. The largest quantity shown was 5 280 gigawatt hours per annum. A tender was also submitted by BEWAG, showing a price of ATS 0.465 per kilowatt hour and including a table showing the proportion of the total electricity generated or supplied by it which was accounted for by renewable energy. The contracting authority concluded from the table that the quantity stated was 449.2 gigawatt hours.

21 The last tender was submitted by a consortium consisting of EVN AG and Wienstrom GmbH (`the applicants in the main proceedings'), which offered a price of ATS 0.52 per kilowatt hour. This tender gave no specific figures for the amount of electricity which could be supplied from renewable energy sources, but merely stated that the applicants in the main proceedings had their own electricity generation plants in which they generated electricity from renewable energy sources in a quantity of many times the annual consumption shown in the invitation to tender, which was 22.5 gigawatt hours. In addition, they had option rights in respect of the electricity generated by hydroelectric power stations of Osterreichische Elektrizitätswirtschafts-Aktiengesellschaft and other Austrian hydroelectric power stations, and other purchased energy derived mainly from long-term coordination contracts with the largest supplier of electricity certified as coming from renewable sources. In 1999 and 2000, only hydroelectric power from Switzerland was purchased and would continue to be purchased. In total, the quantity of electricity which would be supplied from renewable sources was many times greater than the amount which was the subject of the invitation to tender, and reference was made to the annual accounts for further information.

22 The defendant in the main proceedings considered that, of the four tenders submitted, the best was that of KELAG, which received the most points for each of the two award criteria. The applicants in the main proceedings received the fewest points in respect of both criteria.

23 After informing the contracting authority as early as 9 May and 30 May 2001 that they considered that various provisions of the invitation to tender, including the award criterion relating to `electricity generated from renewable energy sources', were unlawful, the applicants in the main proceedings applied on 12 June 2001 for conciliation proceedings before the Bundes-Vergabekontrollkommission (Federal Procurement Review Commission). The Commission refused to conduct conciliation proceedings on the ground that there was no prospect of success.

24 The applicants then lodged an application for review with the Bundesvergabeamt. They asked for the various decisions to be set aside, in particular the decision rejecting the tender for want of information on the generation and purchase of electricity from renewable energy sources during a certain period, the decision prescribing as an award criterion the provision of information on the generation and purchase of electricity from renewable energy sources in a certain quantity during a certain period, and the decision prescribing as an award criterion the availability of more than 22.5 gigawatt hours of electricity from renewable sources. In addition, the applicants applied for an interim order prohibiting the contracting authority from awarding the contract.

25 By decision of 16 July 2001 the Bundesvergabeamt granted the applicants' application and prohibited the award of the contract initially before 10 September 2001. On a further application by the applicants, the Bundesvergabeamt, by decision of 17 September 2001, made an interim order authorising the contracting authority to award the contract on condition that the award would be withdrawn and the contract rescinded if even only one of the applications to the Bundesvergabeamt by the applicants were granted or if the decision to award the contract in question to one of the applicants' co-tenderers were found to be unlawful as a result of any other finding of the Bundesvergabeamt.

26 On 24 October 2001 the framework agreement was awarded to KELAG, subject to the conditions subsequent set out in the aforementioned decision.

III - The questions referred

27 In order to determine the applications in the review proceedings for certain decisions of the contracting authority to be set aside, the Bundevergabeamt, by order of 13 November 2001, referred the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

`1. Do the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 26 of Directive 93/36/EEC, prohibit a contracting authority from laying down an award criterion in relation to the supply of electricity which is given a 45% weighting and which requires a tenderer to state, without being bound to a defined supply period, how much electricity he can supply from renewable sources to a group of consumers not more closely defined, where the maximum number of points is given to whichever tenderer states the highest amount and a supply volume is taken into account only to the extent that it exceeds the volume of consumption to be expected in the context of the contract to which the invitation to tender relates?

2. Do the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665/EEC, prohibit making the setting aside of an unlawful decision in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665/EEC dependent on proof that the unlawful decision was material to the outcome of the procurement procedure?

3. Do the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 26 of Directive 93/36/EEC, prohibit making the setting aside of an unlawful decision in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665/EEC dependent on proof that the unlawful decision was material to the outcome of the procurement procedure, where that proof has to be achieved by the review body examining whether the ranking of the tenders actually submitted would have been different had they been re-evaluated disregarding the unlawful award criterion?

4. Do the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular

Article 26 of Directive 93/36/EEC, require the contracting authority to cancel the invitation to tender if it transpires in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665/EEC that one of the award criteria it laid down is unlawful?'

IV - Discussion

A - The Court's jurisdiction to reply to the questions

28 In its written observations, the Commission is uncertain as to whether the Court of Justice has jurisdiction to reply to the questions referred to it, in view of the fact that, according to the Commission, decisions of the Bundesvergabeamt are not of the nature of judgments.

29 In this connection I refer to paragraphs 18 to 26 of my opinion in Case C-249/01 Hackermüller, (5) in which I took the view, after examining the same question, that the Bundesvergabeamt must be deemed a court or tribunal within the meaning Article 234 EC if it exercises its powers before the award of the contract, as in the present case.

30 Therefore I consider that the Court has jurisdiction to reply to the questions submitted by the Bundesvergabeamt.

B - The first question

31 The first question asked by the Bundesvergabeamt is whether the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 26 of Directive 93/36/EEC, prohibit a contracting authority from laying down an award criterion in relation to the supply of electricity which is given a 45% weighting and which requires a tenderer to state, without being bound to a defined supply period, how much electricity he can supply from renewable sources to a group of consumers not more closely defined, where the maximum number of points is given to whichever tenderer states the highest amount and a supply volume is taken into account only to the extent that it exceeds the volume of consumption to be expected in the context of the contract to which the invitation to tender relates.

32 It appears from the observations in the order for reference that this question summarises a number of problems confronting the Bundesvergabeamt. Therefore I propose to deal with them in the order in which they arise.

1. Admissibility of criteria for obtaining advantages not susceptible of direct financial evaluation

33 First of all, the Bundesvergabeamt questions whether the Community law of public contracts permits the contracting authority to lay down criteria seeking to obtain advantages not susceptible of direct financial evaluation, such as respect for the environment. The Bundesvergabeamt has certain doubts on this point in view of the fact that, according to its findings, the Commission considers that an award criterion must procure a direct economic advantage to the contracting authority.

34 It must be observed that, since the Bundesvergabeamt formulated its question and the interveners submitted their written observations, the Court has stated its position on this point in the judgment of 17 September 2002 in Case C-513/99 Concordia Bus Finland. (6)

35 In paragraph 69 of that judgment the Court held that `where... the contracting authority decides to award a contract to the tenderer who submits the economically most advantageous tender, it may take into consideration ecological criteria... provided that they are linked to the subject-matter of the contract, do not confer an unrestricted freedom of choice on the authority, are expressly mentioned in the contract documents or the tender notice, and comply with all the fundamental principles of Community law, in particular the principle of non-discrimination'.

36 In addition, in paragraph 55 of the same judgment, the Court expressly found that Article 36(1)(a) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, (7) the text of which is in substance the same as that of Article 26(1)(b) of Directive 93/36, `cannot be interpreted as meaning that each of the award criteria used by the contracting authority to identify the most economically advantageous tender must necessarily be of a purely economic nature ...'.

37 Therefore, subject to the conditions formulated by the Court which are set out above, it is lawful for a contracting authority to include in an invitation to tender award criteria relating to the environment. There is no doubt that the supply of green electricity can be described as such a criterion, which is confirmed by the judgment in Case C-379/98 PreussenElektra, (8) according to which `the use of renewable energy sources for producing electricity... is useful for protecting the environment in so far as it contributes to the reduction in emissions of greenhouse gases which are amongst the main causes of climate change which the European Community and its Member States have pledged to combat'. (9)

2. Verification by the contracting authority of the question whether a tender meets the award criterion formulated in the invitation to tender

38 Secondly, according to the Bundesvergabeamt, a problem arises with regard to the way in which the contracting authority has specifically formulated the criterion of `renewable energy'. The Bundesvergabeamt observes that the authority itself admitted that it was unable to check technically whether the electricity supplied was actually generated from renewable energy sources. In those circumstances, the question had to be asked whether the contracting authority was permitted to lay down an award criterion where it was impossible to ascertain whether that criterion enabled the desired objective to be attained.

39 The Netherlands Government alone expressly discusses this problem raised by the Bundesvergabeamt. According to that government, the provisions of Community law applying to the procedures for the award of contracts require a contracting authority to use only award criteria which permit the accuracy of the information given by suppliers regarding the award criteria to be actually checked.

40 I concur with the Netherlands Government's position.

41 As the Netherlands Government points out, `[if] a contracting authority were permitted to prescribe award criteria while at the same time stating that it was neither willing nor able to verify whether the suppliers presented correct information on that subject in their tenders, the authority's decision-making process could not take place in an objective and transparent manner.... Such a method of awarding a contract would be contrary to the general principles of the law of public contracts, as recognised by the Court in its case law, in particular the principles of equality and transparency, and the prohibition of arbitrary decisions'.

42 On this point reference may be made to the judgment in Case C-243/89 Commission v Denmark, (10) where the Court observed that `observance of the principle of equal treatment of tenderers requires that all the tenders comply with the tender conditions so as to ensure an objective comparison of the tenders submitted by the various tenderers'. (11)

43 In the same way, in the judgment in Case C-19/00 SIAC Construction (12) the Court observed that `when tenders are being assessed, the award criteria must be applied objectively and uniformly to all tenderers'. (13)

44 It seems to me that there is no guarantee that an award criterion will be applied objectively and uniformly to all tenderers if the contracting authority indicates in the invitation to tender that it will not check whether the tenderers actually meet that criterion.

45 Certainly it is not easy to establish the source of the electricity supplied to consumers because they have no means of knowing whether the current from the socket is generated from renewable energy sources or not.

46 This difficulty was recognised by the Court in the PreussenElektra judgment cited above, at paragraph 79 of which the court observed that `the nature of electricity is such that, once it has been allowed into the transmission or distribution system, it is difficult to determine its origin and in particular the source of energy from which it was produced'.

47 However, the Court added, at paragraph 80 of the same judgment, that `in that respect, the Commission took the view, in its proposal for a Directive 2000/C 311 E/22 of the European Parliament and of the Council on the promotion of electricity from renewable energy sources in the internal electricity market (OJ 2000 C 311 E, p. 320), submitted on 31 May 2000 [which has in the meantime become Directive 2001/77] that the implementation in each Member State of a system of certificates of origin for electricity produced from renewable sources, capable of being the subject of mutual recognition, was essential in order to make trade in that type of electricity both reliable and possible in practice'.

48 It follows that, even though it is not easy to determine the source of the electricity supplied, there are means of doing so, for example, by requiring certificates or, as the Netherlands Government observes, `by requiring tenderers to prove the quantity of electricity which is generated or purchased by them and comes from renewable sources, as well as the quantity from renewable sources which is intended, in accordance with the contracts they have made, for customers other than the contracting authority'.

3. The causal connection between the award criterion and the contracting authority's purpose

49 Thirdly, according to the Bundesvergabeamt, `there is a further problem with regard to the award criterion laid down. Since all that is evaluated is the amount of electricity which can be supplied from renewable sources, whereas how far the actual recipient of the award, on the basis of his generation structure, in fact contributes to increasing the generation of electricity from renewable sources is not examined, it appears questionable whether the purpose pursued by the authority can be achieved at all by means of this award criterion. It is certainly conceivable that the amount of electricity generated from renewable sources is not influenced at all by this award criterion, since it is entirely up to the award recipient whether he generates such electricity himself or purchases it from other sources'. (14)

50 On this point, as the Netherlands Government, which is the only participant in these proceedings to state its position on this problem raised by the Bundesvergabeamt, rightly observes, given the nature of the service to be provided, namely the supply of electricity from renewable sources, it is immaterial whether the supplier generates it himself or purchases it from other suppliers of the same kind of electricity. Electricity from a renewable source is by nature comparable, whether it is generated by the supplier or by a third party.

51 I also consider that the fact that the award criterion does not, according to the findings of the Bundesvergabeamt, permit the purpose pursued by the contracting authority, namely increasing the generation of electricity from renewable energy sources, to be achieved, is not in itself evidence that that criterion is contrary to the Community legislation on public contracts.

52 Even if the aims relating to the protection of the environment pursued by the contracting authority by including that criterion are not achieved, it does not follow that an environmental criterion in an invitation to tender would be unlawful.

4. The connection between the award criterion and the subject-matter of the contract

53 Fourth, according to the Bundesvergabeamt, `since the criterion in question was concerned only with how much could be supplied, and not how much could be supplied to the authority - in this regard the authority committed itself exclusively to electricity from renewable sources in any case - it appears questionable whether there are any direct economic advantages for the authority linked to such an award criterion'.

54 The question of the connection between the award criterion and the subject-matter of the contract has been discussed at length by the participants in these proceedings.

55 The defendant in the main proceedings and the Austrian Government consider that, when determining the most economically advantageous tender in the award procedure in question, by taking into account, in addition to the price, the amount of green electricity which each tenderer was able to supply over and above 22.5 gigawatt hours, which had to be supplied in any case, the contracting authority gave the reliability of supply of electricity of a particular quality the status of an award criterion.

56 On this point the Austrian Government observes that, the greater the amount of power available to an undertaking, the greater the reliability of supply, thus guaranteeing supply of the amount required during periods of peak demand on the electricity network or when there is a large temporary rise in consumption by the electricity buyer.

57 According to the same Government, supported by the defendant in the main proceedings, the reliability of supply as such is certainly a criterion which has some bearing upon the contract, but rather an economic criterion: the more efficient a tenderer is, the smaller the risk that the contracting authority's demand for electricity will not be met and that it will have to find a costly alternative in the short term.

58 According to the Swedish Government, it does not appear from the actual wording of Directive 93/36 or from the case-law that the contracting entity must itself derive an economic advantage from the award criteria which it applies. The criteria laid down in the invitation to tender were, according to the same Government, likely to promote the generation of electricity from renewable energy sources, which results in advantages in the form of a smaller impact on the environment and thus to a better environment for everyone. This creates the conditions for lasting development, according to the same Government.

59 On the other hand, the applicants in the main proceedings, the Netherlands Government and the Commission consider that, in so far as the award criterion stipulates that only the amount of energy supplied from renewable sources in excess of 22.5 gigawatt hours per annum, which is the estimated annual consumption of the Federal offices covered by the contract, is to be taken into account, that criterion is contrary to Directive 93/36 because there is not a sufficient connection between that criterion and the subject-matter of the contract.

60 According to the applicants in the main proceedings, in fact the award criterion in question grades the tenderers' capacity to supply as much electricity as possible from renewable energy sources and, in that way, ultimately ranks the tenderers themselves. In fact, therefore, the criterion was a disguised criterion of selection.

61 How much weight should be attached to these arguments?

62 First of all, it is no doubt true, as the defendant in the main proceedings and the Austrian Government correctly observe, that in the judgment in Case C-324/93 Evans Medical and Macfarlan Smith, (15) the Court stated that `reliability of supplies is one of the criteria which may be taken into account... in order to determine the most economically advantageous tender...'.

63 However, the question whether the criterion in the present case aims to ensure the reliability of supply is a question of fact which must be settled by the national court.

64 The order of the Bundesvergabeamt makes no reference to the fact that this criterion should in reality be understood as seeking to ensure the reliability of supply. In the following discussion, therefore, I shall proceed on the assumption that the criterion in question does not have that purpose.

65 Consequently the question arises of whether Directive 93/36 requires a connection between the award criterion and the subject-matter of the contract.

66 In my opinion in the Concordia Bus Finland case, cited above, referring to the judgment in Case C-225/98 Commission v France, (16) in which the Court found that an award criterion relating to employment, connected with a local campaign against unemployment, was in principle valid, I said that such a requirement was not apparent. (17)

67 However, in the Concordia Bus Finland judgment, cited above, the Court expressed its clear opinion on that question when it observed, in paragraph 69, that `the contracting authority... may take into consideration ecological criteria... provided that they are linked to the subject-matter of the contract...'. (18)

68 As the applicants in the main proceedings, the Netherlands Government and the Commission rightly observe, an award criterion consisting in allotting points for the amount of electricity generated from renewable energy sources which the tenderer will be able to supply to a group of consumers not more closely defined, account being taken only of the supply volume exceeding the consumption to be expected in the context of the invitation to tender, is not connected with the subject-matter of the contract. It is clear from the very wording of this criterion that it does not relate specifically to the actual subject-matter of the contract.

69 In my opinion, therefore, such a criterion is contrary to the requirements arising from Directive 93/36.

70 In addition, in the present it seems to me that it may give rise to discrimination between suppliers, in particular between small suppliers and large suppliers.

71 Let us suppose there are two suppliers who are able to supply the amount of electricity which is the subject of the contract, namely approximately 22.5 gigawatt hours per annum of green electricity. One is a small supplier specialising in green electricity for whom the contract in question is an important one. The other is a very large supplier for which green electricity is only a small part of its business but which nevertheless, by virtue of its size, is capable of supplying more green electricity than the small supplier. By definition, the contract in question is only a small contract for the very large supplier.

72 This example, although hypothetical, shows that, of the two suppliers who are perfectly capable of fulfilling the contract conditions, in reality the criterion in question only favours the large supplier because of its size. However, the size of an undertaking is not in itself an objective reason justifying a difference in the treatment of two tenderers who are able to fulfil the conditions connected with the subject of a contract.

5. The contracting authority's omission to specify, in the invitation to tender, the period for which tenderers must state in their tenders the amount of electricity from renewable sources which they can supply

73 Fifth, the Bundesvergabeamt finds that `the contracting authority omitted to fix any specific supply period for which the amount that could be supplied was to be stated'. The Bundesvergabeamt concludes from this that `it appears that the criterion laid down was not at all open to exact examination and allowed the authority too wide a discretion, that is to say it was incompatible with the principle of comparability of tenders, which derives from the requirement of transparency'.

74 As the Netherlands Government, which is the only intervener to comment expressly on this point, correctly observes, the tenderers must be informed in advance of the award criteria chosen by the contracting authority and the criteria must be formulated in such a way that the different tenders can be compared fairly and objectively.

75 In this connection, reference may be made to the SIAC Construction judgment cited above, in paragraph 42 of which the Court observed that `the award criteria must be formulated, in the contract documents or the contract notice, in such a way as to allow all reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderers to interpret them in the same way'.

76 It is for the national court to determine whether, having regard to all the documents submitted in the main proceedings, the award criteria of the contract in question meet that requirement.

6. The 45% weighting given to the award criterion

77 Finally, according to the Bundesvergabeamt, `it appears that giving the disputed criterion a weighting of 45% is problematic, since it could be objected that the authority must not permit considerations not open to monetary evaluation to influence the award decision to such a degree'.

78 On this point I consider that, provided that the authority applies valid criteria, it is free to decide on the weighting of those criteria, as the defendant in the main proceedings observes.

79 In paragraph 42 of the Evans Medical and Macfarlan Smith judgment, cited above, the Court stated that `in selecting the most economically advantageous tender, contracting authorities may choose the criteria which they intend to apply, but their choice may relate only to criteria designed to identify the most economically advantageous tender'.

80 If the contracting authority is free to choose the award criteria, I think it is also free to choose the weighting between them, provided that the weighting aims to identify the most economically advantageous tender.

7. Conclusion relating to the first question

81 Taking account of the foregoing, I propose that the reply to the first question from the Bundesvergabeamt should be that the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 26 of Directive 93/36, prohibit a contracting authority from laying down an award criterion in relation to the supply of electricity which is given a 45% weighting and which requires a tenderer to state, without being bound to a defined supply period, how much electricity he can supply from renewable sources to a group of consumers not more closely defined, where the maximum number of points is given to whichever tenderer states the highest amount and a supply volume is taken into account only to the extent that it exceeds the volume of consumption to be expected in the context of the contract to which the invitation to tender relates.

C - The second question

82 The second question from the Bundesvergabeamt is whether the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665, prohibit making the setting aside of an unlawful decision in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665 dependent on proof that the unlawful decision was material to the outcome of the procurement procedure.

83 With regard to this question, the Bundesvergabeamt observes that the national provision which it must apply in the review proceedings `does not permit the Bundesvergabeamt to set aside a decision by the authority merely on the ground that it regards it as unlawful. Instead, the relevant provision, Paragraph 117(1)(2) of the BVergG, requires that the decision contested in review proceedings must also have been of material influence for the outcome of the procurement procedure'. The Bundesvergabeamt is uncertain whether such a condition is consistent with Community law.

84 On this point it must be observed, as the Austrian Government points out, that the national provision concerned relates to the question of under what conditions a decision by the contracting authority may be set aside, and not the question, governed by Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, of the conditions under which a tenderer may seek a review.

85 Secondly, as the Austrian Government rightly notes, Directive 89/665, and in particular Article 2(1)(b), (19) does not lay down such conditions for setting aside a decision. Specifically, the directive does not state whether the setting aside of an unlawful decision in the context of review proceedings under Article 1 of the same directive may be subject to a requirement of proof that the unlawful decision materially affected the outcome of the award procedure.

86 It is clear from the judgments in Case C-92/00 Hospital Ingenieure (20) and Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others (21) that Community law does not in principle prevent national law from regulating aspects of the review procedure which are not provided for by the directive, `provided that the relevant national rules are not less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions (principle of equivalence) and that they do not make it practically impossible or excessively difficult to exercise rights conferred by Community law (principle of effectiveness) (see, by analogy, Case C-390/98 Banks [2001] ECR I-6117, paragraph 121; Case C-453/99 Courage and Crehan [2001] ECR I-6297, paragraph 29)'. (22)

87 Consequently the national court must ascertain whether, taking account of the circumstances of the case, the abovementioned condition is less favourable than that concerning similar domestic actions and whether it makes it practically impossible or excessively difficult to exercise rights conferred by the Community legal order.

88 I therefore propose that the reply to the second question should be that the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665, do not prohibit making the setting aside of an unlawful decision in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665 dependent on proof that the unlawful decision was material to the outcome of the procurement procedure, provided that such condition is not less favourable than that applying to similar domestic actions (principle of equivalence) and that it does not make it practically impossible or excessively difficult to exercise rights conferred by Community law (principle of effectiveness).

D - The third question

89 The third question from the Bundesvergabeamt is whether the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 26 of Directive 93/36, prohibit making the setting aside of an unlawful decision in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665 dependent on proof that the unlawful decision was material to the outcome of the procurement procedure, where that proof has to be achieved by the review body examining whether the ranking of the tenders actually submitted would have been different had they been re-evaluated disregarding the unlawful award criterion.

1. Comments of the Bundesvergabeamt

90 Regarding this question, the Bundesvergabeamt observes that `the legislative materials required to be taken account under the national approach to interpretation indicate that the question as to whether a contested decision of an authority was material for the outcome of the award procedure is to be examined by the review body by determining whether the award would have been made to a different tenderer had the authority proceeded lawfully'.

91 According to the Bundesvergabeamt, this means that `the review body ought to have ignored the award criterion held to be unlawful and examined the tenders actually submitted by reference to the remaining award criteria and decided whether this results in a different ranking from that following the examination carried out by the authority'.

92 However, the Bundesvergabeamt is uncertain as to whether that approach is compatible with Community law. It observes that `on the approach evidently required by domestic law, the award decision would be made in the review proceedings, and in that case the tenders would be evaluated on the basis of a weighting of criteria which had not been notified to the tenderers and which they accordingly could not take into account in drawing up their tenders. This result... appears to be incompatible with Article 26(2) of Directive 93/36, especially as a tenderer could legitimately argue that, if he had known that a different weighting of the criteria would be applied (in the present case 100% price instead of 55% price), he would accordingly have drawn up his tender in a different way'.

93 If this reasoning must be accepted, the only alternative, according to the Bundesvergabeamt, seems to be `cancellation of the invitation to tender, since otherwise the invitation to tender would be conducted on the basis of a weighting of criteria which was neither laid down by the authority nor notified to the tenderers'.

2. The parties' submissions

94 In their written observations, the defendant in the main proceedings and the Austrian Government do not share the doubts of the Bundesvergabeamt as to whether the approach described by it is compatible with Community law.

95 The defendant in the main proceedings maintains that a breach of the rules concerning the award of public contracts which does not result in a different ranking of tenders in no way affects the choice of the best tender. However, according to the Austrian Government, if the choice of the best tender is not affected, a tenderer who seeks a judicial review will obtain neither the contract nor compensation.

96 The same Government adds that disregarding the criterion in question would not have altered the award procedure in any way. The reason was that KELAG had also offered by far the lowest price.

97 The Austrian Government contends that it is impossible to see why review proceedings should take place at the request of a tenderer whose ranking gave no grounds for hope and where the alleged irregularity in the award procedure did not mean in any case that he or any other third parties concerned would have been given a higher ranking even if the award procedure had been properly conducted.

98 At the hearing, however, the Austrian Government asserted that the Bundesvergabeamt had raised the third question on the basis of an Austrian provision which had been repealed several years previously and that, in substance, the Government agreed with the view expressed by the Commission.

99 The Commission and the applicants in the main proceedings consider that the approach described by the Bundesvergabeamt is contrary to Community law.

100 The applicants contend that to ignore a prescribed award criterion, even if it is unlawful, is to disregard the central principles of Community law on the award of public contracts, such as publicity and transparency.

101 The Commission observes that the third question should not arise because neither the contracting authority nor the review body could change the award criteria after they had been notified.

102 The Swedish and the Netherlands Governments did not comment on this question.

3. Assessment

103 Let me begin by noting that the Austrian Government's remark that the Bundesvergabeamt had raised the third question on the basis of an Austrian provision which had been repealed several years previously should not prevent the Court from replying to the question.

104 It has consistently been held that it is solely for the national court to determine the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. (23)

105 Secondly, taking account of the Bundesvergabeamt's observations and my proposed reply to the second question, I consider that the third question must be understood as asking, in substance, whether a rule of domestic law, such as Paragraph 117 of the BVergG, which, in order for an unlawful decision in review proceedings to be set aside, requires proof that the decision materially affected the outcome of the award procedure, conflicts with the principle of effectiveness in so far as that rule requires the national court to ascertain whether the ranking of the tenders actually submitted would be different if they were re-evaluated without regard to the unlawful award criterion.

106 I think the reply to this question must be in the affirmative.

107 As the Commission rightly points out, the Court made the following observations in the SIAC Construction judgment cited above:

`41 ... [T]he principle of equal treatment implies an obligation of transparency in order to enable compliance with it to be verified (see, by analogy, Case C-275/98 Unitron Scandinavia and 3-S [1999] ECR I-8291, paragraph 31).

42 More specifically, this means that the award criteria must be formulated, in the contract documents or the contract notice, in such a way as to allow all reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderers to interpret them in the same way.

43 This obligation of transparency also means that the adjudicating authority must interpret the award criteria in the same way throughout the entire procedure (see, along these lines, Case C-87/94 Commission v Belgium, cited above, paragraphs 88 and 89)'. (24)

108 It follows that, with all the more reason, the award criteria must be interpreted in the same way throughout the entire procedure in order to uphold the principle of equal treatment.

109 In so far as it is based on the principle of equal treatment, this reasoning cannot be called into question by the Austrian Government's reference, in its written observations, to the French and English versions of Article 26(2) of Directive 93/36, (25) from which it is said to follow that alteration of the award criteria in the course of the procedure cannot in principle be ruled out.

110 The provision that the award criteria are not to be altered in the course of the procedure will not be fulfilled if the review body which is required to establish whether the conditions for setting aside a decision are fulfilled, carries out a re-evaluation of the tenders without regard to one of the award criteria.

111 In reality, this approach amounts to altering the criteria as laid down by the adjudicating authority, and this cannot be presumed to have no effect on the situation of the different tenderers.

112 On this point, as the Bundesvergabeamt and the applicants in the main proceedings correctly observe, if the award criteria formulated in the invitation to tender had been other than those actually shown in it, a tenderer who requested a review and the other tenderers as well could have submitted a different tender. In the present case, as the Bundesvergabeamt rightly points out, it was entirely conceivable that a tenderer who wanted to score points on the basis of the renewable source criterion would have tendered a lower price if he had known that ultimately the price criterion alone would be applied.

113 I therefore propose that the reply to the third question should be that the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 26 of Directive 93/36, prohibit making the setting aside of an unlawful decision in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665 dependent on proof that the unlawful decision was material to the outcome of the procurement procedure, where that proof has to be achieved by the review body examining whether the ranking of the tenders actually submitted would have been different had they been re-evaluated disregarding the unlawful award criterion.

E - The fourth question

114 The fourth question from the Bundesvergabeamt is whether the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 26 of Directive 93/36, require the contracting authority to cancel the invitation to tender if it transpires in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665 that one of the award criteria it laid down is unlawful.

115 It is clear from the Bundesvergabeamt's observations concerning the third question that the third and the fourth questions are closely connected in that, in the Bundesvergabeamt's opinion, if the third question receives a reply in the affirmative, that would automatically lead to the same reply to the fourth.

116 The interveners who have commented on this question have also proposed that the reply be the same as that to the third question.

117 For my part, I think the fourth question must be reworded if it is to receive a helpful reply.

118 The mere fact that, in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665, one of the award criteria is found to be unlawful cannot lead to the conclusion that the contracting authority must withdraw the invitation to tender.

119 As the defendant in the main proceedings and the Austrian Government correctly observed at the hearing, if a review is requested after the conclusion of the contract and if a Member State exercises its power under the second subparagraph of Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665, (26) a finding, in the course of the review proceedings, that an award criterion is unlawful will not lead to the withdrawal of the invitation to tender, but only to compensation for the rejected tenderer.

120 The question which arises is therefore whether the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 26 of Directive 93/36, require the contracting authority to cancel the invitation to tender if it transpires in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665 that one of the award criteria it laid down is unlawful and is therefore set aside by the review body.

121 If worded in this way, I think the question must be answered in the affirmative.

122 As is clear from the discussion of the third question, the award criteria must remain the same throughout the entire tendering procedure. Therefore a contracting authority cannot continue the procedure if an award criterion is set aside by a review body.

123 Consequently I propose that the reply to the fourth question should be that the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 26 of Directive 93/36, require a contracting authority to cancel the invitation to tender if it transpires in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665 that one of the award criteria it laid down is unlawful and is therefore set aside by the review body.

V - Conclusion

124 Having regard to the foregoing observations, I propose that the following replies be given to the questions from the national court:

- First question

The provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 26 of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, prohibit a contracting authority from laying down an award criterion in relation to the supply of electricity which is given a 45% weighting and which requires a tenderer to state, without being bound to a defined supply period, how much electricity he can supply from renewable sources to a group of consumers not more closely defined, where the maximum number of points is given to whichever tenderer states the highest amount and a supply volume is taken into account only to the extent that it exceeds the volume of consumption to be expected in the context of the contract to which the invitation to tender relates.

- Second question

The provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts do not prohibit making the setting aside of an unlawful decision in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665/EEC dependent on proof that the unlawful decision was material to the outcome of the procurement procedure, provided that such condition is not less favourable than that applying to similar domestic actions (principle of equivalence) and that it does not make it practically impossible or excessively difficult to exercise rights conferred by Community law (principle of effectiveness).

- Third question

The provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 26 of Directive 93/36/EEC, prohibit making the setting aside of an unlawful decision in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665/EEC dependent on proof that the unlawful decision was material to the outcome of the procurement procedure, where that proof has to be achieved by the review body examining whether the ranking of the tenders actually submitted would have been different had they been re-evaluated disregarding the unlawful award criterion.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Alber delivered on 10April2003. Traunfellner GmbH v Osterreichische Autobahnen- und Schnellstraßen-Finanzierungs-AG (Asfinag). Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesvergabeamt - Austria. Directive 93/37/EEC - Public works contracts - Concept of a variant - Conditions for consideration and assessment for the purpose of awarding a contract. Case C-421/01.

I Introduction

1. The reference for a preliminary ruling from the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Procurement Office, Austria) concerns the treatment of variants in a procedure for the award of public works contracts. One tenderer which was unsuccessful in its bid for the road construction contract concerned had submitted a tender proposing a lower-priced but, in its view, equivalent asphalt design instead of the concrete surface dressing stipulated in the tender document. This action concerns, on the one hand, the conditions governing the submission and subsequent assessment of variants (Questions 1 to 3) and, on the other hand, the potential repercussions of any improper treatment of variants, as the case may be, on a tendering procedure.

II Relevant legislation

A Community law: Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (2)(hereinafter: "Directive 93/37/EEC")

2. Article 19

"Where the criterion for the award of the contract is that of the most economically advantageous tender, contracting authorities may take account of variants which are submitted by a tenderer and meet the minimum specifications required by the contracting authorities.

The contracting authorities shall state in the contract documents the minimum specifications to be respected by the variants and any specific requirements for their presentation. They shall indicate in the tender notice if variants are not permitted.

3. Article 30

"1. The criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) either the lowest price only;

(b) or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract: e.g. price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit.

2. In the case referred to in paragraph 1(b), the contracting authority shall state in the contract documents or in the contract notice all the criteria it intends to apply to the award, where possible in descending order of importance.

B National law: the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen or Bundesvergabegesetz 1997 (Federal Procurement Law 1997; hereinafter: "BVergG") (3)

4. Paragraph 42

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

"1. In procedures other than the negotiated procedure, tenderers must ensure that their tenders meet the requirements of the tender notice. The wording prescribed by the contract documents may not be amended or supplemented.

...

4. An alternative tender [or "variant" , to adopt the terminology used in Directive 93/37/EEC (4)] is admissible only if it ensures the performance of qualitatively equivalent work. It shall be for the tenderer to prove equivalence. An alternative tender may relate to the work as a whole, to parts of the work or to the legal conditions underlying the performance of the work. Alternative tenders shall be designated as such and shall be submitted separately.

...

5. Paragraph 117

"1. The Bundesvergabeamt must declare void, by a decision adopted following the recommendation of the conciliation chamber in the case, any decision adopted by a contracting authority in the course of an award procedure which:

1. is contrary to the provisions of this federal law or its implementing regulations, and

2. has a substantial bearing on the outcome of the award procedure.

3. Following the award of the contract, the Bundesvergabeamt shall simply establish, in accordance with the requirements of paragraph 1 hereof, whether or not the law has been infringed as claimed.

III Facts

6. Acting for and on behalf of the Autobahnen- und Schnellstraßen Finanzierungs-AG (Austrian Motorway and Expressway Financing Company; hereinafter: "Asfinag"), the Land Government of Lower Austria launched an open procedure throughout the Community on 27 November 1997 inviting tenders for the repair of the section "between the 100.2 km and 108.6 km points of the carriageway from Neumarkt to Vienna" . The contract concerned bridge and road construction works.

7. With regard to resurfacing outside the motorway bridge areas, the tender document stated under the heading "Official Design" that a dual-layer concrete overlay of surface quality should be laid but did not describe those features as minimum requirements. Nor did the tender document contain any explicit statements regarding minimum technical specifications that would have to be met by variants that might be submitted. The tender document stated that variants were admissible. However, any variants submitted had to be accompanied by a comprehensive list of works as required by the tender document (main tender). No contract award criteria for assessing the economic and technical quality of tenders (whether tenders conforming to the tender document or variants) were laid down. Nor did the tender document stipulate that variants had to ensure the performance of work equivalent to that defined in the official design (nor was any reference made to Paragraph 42 of the BVergG which lays down that requirement), and there was no explanation of what was meant by "performance of equivalent work" either.

8. Traunfellner, the plaintiff in the main proceedings, submitted both a tender conforming to the tender document and a variant. Its variant was the cheapest of all the tenders submitted but, of all the tenders conforming to the tender document, its own tender came second behind that submitted by the Ilbau LSH Fischer Heilit & Woerner consortium, to which the contract was awarded.

9. In its variant, Traunfellner proposed substituting an asphalt overlay made from bitumen material for the concrete surface dressing. Technical clarification was provided in the form of an expert opinion which stated that under the conditions assumed for the section of carriageway concerned, the asphalt design would provide adequate resistance to deformation for a period of 20 years.

10. The technical test report commissioned by the Land government stated that, while a study on the possibility of substituting asphalt designs had been compiled in 1989, earlier contracts had shown that, despite careful execution of an asphalt design of this kind in compliance with the contract, grooves of considerable depth had appeared after only a short time and additional repair work had been necessary. It also pointed out that ensuring that the work would be performed in accordance with the official requirements if Traunfellner's variant was accepted would necessitate additional work at a cost of some ATS 2.5 million, thus reducing the price advantage to ATS 6.9 million. The report went on to explain that if the overlay was made of concrete, the new technologies were such that the road surface could be expected to resist deformation for at least 30 years. The concrete surface specified in the official design would, therefore, have a 50% longer life and cost only 8.5% more. Moreover, the objective of using existing old concrete to obtain a high-quality aggregate for the new concrete overlay (recycling) was not taken into account in the variant since only some of the existing crushed concrete would be used on site for secondary filling-in purposes. Much of the existing concrete surface would be put to an otherwise unspecified use off site. Preference was therefore to be given to the general repair of the carriageway in concrete, in accordance with the official tender document, at least in view of the lifetime and resistance to deformation of concrete. These two factors would, after all, reduce the subsequent need for maintenance, which in turn would result in less disruption to traffic and was therefore in keeping with the objective of minimising adverse effects on ease of movement, road safety and traffic flows. Accordingly, the variant should not be regarded as meeting the requirements of the official design and should therefore be disqualified. On the basis of that test report, the award commission decided on 17 March 1998 to propose that the contract be awarded to the Ilbau LSH Fischer Heilit & Woerner consortium.

11. Traunfellner requested that the referring Bundesvergabeamt annul the decision to disqualify its variant. The request was rejected on 21 April 1998 on the ground that the technical equivalence of the variant was not pertinent. It differed from the prescriptions of the tender document to such an extent that it was no longer an admissible variant. Even if it had been admissible, the referring court explained that it would not have been technically equivalent, as the contracting authority had the right to choose from among different technical systems.

12. Following that decision, the contract was awarded to the cheapest tender conforming to the tender document. The works have since been carried out.

13. Adjudicating on an appeal lodged by Traunfellner, the Verfassungsgerichtshof (Austrian Constitutional Court) overruled the decision of the Bundesvergabeamt of 21 April 1998 for failure to fulfil the obligation to state reasons. Under Austrian law, once the Verfassungsgerichtshof has annulled an administrative act (in this case, after the referring court's decision of 21 April 1998 had been overruled), the matter at issue is restored to the state it was in prior to the contested decision. The referring court is now required to give a fresh ruling on Traunfellner's request of 17 April 1998 for the annulment of the decision to disqualify the variant. However, as the award has since been granted, it merely remains for the court to determine in accordance with Paragraph 117(3) of the BVergG whether the decision to disqualify was lawful.

IV The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

14. The Bundesvergabeamt seeks to determine the circumstances in which a "variant" within the meaning of Article 19 of Directive 93/37/EEC arises, whether the "equivalence" criterion, used to assess variants, must be indicated in the tender documents and how a contracting authority should conduct itself where it subsequently transpires that its invitation to tender is defective. It has therefore referred the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

"Question 1: Is an alternative tender that consists in proposing an asphalt surface instead of overlaying the carriageway with concrete as specified in the tender notice a "variant" within the meaning of the first paragraph of Article 19 of Directive 93/37/EEC?

Question 2: Can a criterion established in national legislation to determine the admissibility of the acceptance of a "variant" within the meaning of the first paragraph of Article 19 of Directive 93/37/EEC, whereby "the performance of qualitatively equivalent work is ensured" by the variant, properly be regarded as a "minimum specification" required and stated by the contracting authority in accordance with the first and second paragraphs of Article 19 of Directive 93/37/EEC, if the contract documents refer only to the national provision and do not specify the comparative parameters to be used to assess "equivalence" ?

Question 3: Do Article 30(1) and (2) of Directive 93/37/EEC in conjunction with the principles of transparency and equal treatment prohibit a contracting authority from making the acceptance of an alternative tender, which differs from a tender conforming to the tender document in that it proposes a different technical quality, conditional on a positive assessment based on a criterion in national legislation requiring that "the performance of qualitatively equivalent work is ensured" if the contract documents refer only to the national provision and does not specify the comparative parameters to be used to assess "equivalence" ?

Question 4a: If the answer to Question 3 is in the affirmative, may a contracting authority conclude a tendering procedure like that described in Question 3 by awarding the contract?

Question 4b: If the answers to Questions 3 and 4a are in the affirmative, must a contracting authority conducting a tendering procedure as described in Question 3 reject variants proposed by tenderers without examining their contents, at any rate if it has not defined contract award criteria for assessing the technical differences between the variant and the tender notice?

Question 5: If the answers to Questions 3 and 4a are in the affirmative and the answer to Question 4b is in the negative, must a contracting authority conducting a tendering procedure as described in Question 3 accept a variant whose technical differences from the tender document it is unable to assess on the basis of contract award criteria owing to the absence of appropriate statements in the tender document if this variant is the lowest tender and contract award criteria have not otherwise been defined?

15. In support of its reference for a preliminary ruling the Bundesvergabeamt explains that the first question is designed to ascertain whether a tender proposing an asphalt road surface dressing instead of the concrete dressing specified in the tender document is a variant for the purposes of the first paragraph of Article 19 of Directive 93/37/EEC and whether the provisions of the directive which apply to variants can therefore be applied to the tender at issue.

16. It explains with regard to the second question that under Paragraph 42(4) of the BVergG the admissibility of accepting a variant depends on whether the performance of qualitatively equivalent work is ensured. It adds that assessing "equivalence" plays an important role in the award of contracts. In this case too, the contracting authority examined the variant for equivalence and concluded that it had none. However, the criteria applied by the contracting authority were not defined in the tender document or in the tender notice, as is standard practice for the contracting authorities in Austria.

17. The Bundesvergabeamt considers such an approach to be inconsistent with Article 30 of Directive 93/37/EEC and with the principles of transparency and equal treatment. Such inconsistency could be avoided only if the requirement applicable to variants that the performance of the work must be equivalent was regarded as a "minimum specification" for the purposes of the second paragraph of Article 19 of the directive. In that case, there would no longer be any need to mention the specific comparative parameters as contract award criteria. In its view, such an interpretation runs counter to the principles of the directive. The second paragraph of Article 19 of the directive clearly requires contracting authorities to state the minimum specifications in the contract documents. Merely applying a provision of national legislation which lays down the equivalence criterion could not be regarded as a specification required by the contracting authority in the contract document.

18. In addition, a mere reference to equivalence that was not further defined did not satisfy the requirements for transparency, nor was it compatible with the meaning of the word "state" [German: "erläutern"]. This word meant to explain and describe in greater detail, something which the contracting authority did not do.

19. The Bundesvergabeamt states with regard to the third question referred that the directive leaves contracting authorities a choice between only the lowest-price criterion and the system of awarding the contract to the most economically advantageous tender. In the former case, variants are precluded from the outset under the first paragraph of Article 19 of the directive. In the latter case, contracting authorities are required under Article 30(2) of the directive to indicate in the tender notice or contract documents the criteria established for assessing the tenders.

20. That comparison demonstrates that where different qualities may be proposed, they must be examined on the basis of the contract award criteria defined by the contracting authority. However, if the contracting authority has not defined any contract award criteria, it seems perfectly clear to the Bundesvergabeamt that variants must not be assessed or indeed accepted. The approach adopted by the contracting authorities in Austria is, in this respect, inconsistent with the scheme of the directive.

21. The Bundesvergabeamt also considers such an approach to be contrary to the principle of transparency. If, for the purpose of examining variants, a contracting authority had recourse to the "equivalence of the performance of the work" which it had not previously defined by indicating specific comparative parameters, it would be taking into account criteria which it had not published in advance. That is, in its view, incompatible with the consistent case-law of the Court of Justice (5) and makes it impossible for tenderers to judge in advance, on the basis of published criteria, whether the anticipated contract or the preparation of variants is of interest to them. (6) It adds that, in practice, the use of the indeterminate term "equivalence" , which the contracting authority only defines subsequently when it is assessing variants, leads to considerable uncertainty and protracted legal disputes. The contracting authority finds itself in dispute either with tenderers which have submitted variants that it does not regard as equivalent to its own requirements or with tenderers which have not proposed variants and question the equivalence of variants that the contracting authority intends to accept. Tenderers can only guess beforehand what the contracting authority will regard as equivalent. This results in considerable uncertainty among tenderers which prepare speculative variants, as it were, as well as among tenderers which do not propose variants but have to expect that their tenders will be beaten by a variant which the contracting authority considers to be equivalent after all the tenders have been opened.

22. In effect, the approach adopted leads to the introduction of a third, unlawful "mixed system" operating between the award of contracts on the basis of price alone and their award on the basis of the most economically advantageous tender. This system is, according to the Bundesvergabeamt, inconsistent with the case-law of the Court. (7) Furthermore, the application of a criterion which depends on a mere reference to national legislation is unlawful. (8)

23. By Questions 4 and 5 the Bundesvergabeamt seeks ultimately to ascertain the manner in which a contracting authority must proceed where it is established in the course of a procedure for the award of a contract that the award procedure adopted in Austria is unlawful. One possible course of action would be to decide against awarding the contract and to revoke the invitation to tender. That option is supported by the fact that the tendering procedure was initiated under conditions which have proved unlawful and must consequently cease to be applied. However, a second possible course of action would be to continue with the tendering procedure. It is however essential in this regard to bear in mind that the tendering procedure would have to be completed under restrictions which had not been notified previously to the tenderers. The tenderers had submitted variants on the assumption that it was permissible to propose variants that would be examined by the contracting authority for "equivalence", a criterion which was not defined further. If it is not possible to apply the equivalence criterion as permitted by the national legal order, then essential conditions governing the preparation of tenders are altered ex post facto. Such a departure from the conditions forming the basis of the tender document might be regarded as an infringement of the principle of equal treatment. (9)

24. A decision not to award the contract and to initiate a fresh tendering procedure may well be, therefore, the only proper alternative. In such circumstances, the decision actually taken by the contracting authority to reject the variant proposed by the plaintiff in the absence of equivalence and to award the contract to another tenderer would certainly be unlawful. On the other hand, to decide not to award the contract at all and to require the contracting authority to proceed with a fresh invitation to tender might be regarded as too extreme a consequence of an infringement of some provisions of Community law, especially as the Community requirements in question may also be met simply by refraining from the application, contrary to Community law, of an otherwise undefined "equivalence" criterion.

25. If, on the other hand, the tendering procedure is to be concluded, it is then necessary to determine the arrangements for the award of the contract. The referring court takes the view that there are two options to consider here; under the first, the contracting authority rejects the variant and awards the contract on the basis of lowest price or most economically advantageous tender, the only criteria that may be applied being those required by the contracting authority. That option would meet the objectives of the directive since, under the system referred to in Article 30 of the directive, the different qualities that may be offered were to be assessed precisely on the basis of contract award criteria. The fact that differences in quality cannot be assessed on the basis of those criteria make it impossible to compare the tender with those submitted by competitors. Where a comparison of this kind is impossible, however, the tender concerned would have to be disqualified in accordance with the principles of equal treatment.

26. It would also be possible, however, to require the contracting authority to accept the variant and to ignore the associated qualitative differences. However, it would not be advisable to adopt that approach as the contracting authority would then have to accept a tender which did not meet the qualitative requirements it had itself specified, the contracting authority having had no possibility of assessing the qualitative differences against some kind of yardstick. That would be contrary to the purpose of the directive, as defined by the Court, since the contracting authority would not be able in that case to compare tenders or to choose the tender which it considered the most advantageous on the basis of objective criteria. (10)

V Arguments of the parties and assessment

A Admissibility

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

27. In its written observations the Commission disputes the admissibility of the reference for a preliminary ruling. It refers to the arguments it put forward in Case C-314/01, in which it called into question the capacity of the Bundesvergabeamt as a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC on the ground that its decisions are non-binding. However, it retracted that objection at the hearing in view of the judgment which has since been delivered in the Swoboda case. (11) The reference for a preliminary ruling is admissible.

B The first question referred for a preliminary ruling

1. Arguments of the parties

28. Traunfellner, Asfinag, the Austrian and French Governments all take the view that the offering of an asphalt dressing as opposed to the concrete dressing specified in the tender document is a variant within the meaning of Article 19 of Directive 93/37.

29. Traunfellner considers that a variant comes into play where the tender proposed relates to a new execution method, a different design, different material or other alternatives which ensure that the work is performed on a more practical or cheaper basis. Asphalt, it argues, is a technical alternative to concrete. Assessment should therefore be aimed at the technical equivalence of the tender, the load-bearing capacity, the transverse flatness and the non-skid quality.

30. Asfinag keeps to a more general approach in its observations, taking the view that a variant comes into play where parts of the work specified in the tender document are substituted in a tender.

31. The Austrian Government points to the drafting history of the provision. In its proposed amendment to Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts the Commission had stated that only an amendment to the design plan or to the prescribed construction materials might be proposed. (12)

32. The French Government considers that the concept of a variant should be given a broad interpretation. In the tender document, which forms the basis of the main proceedings, concrete had not been defined as an absolutely necessary technical specification. Accordingly, asphalt was to be regarded as a variant.

33. The Commission points out that the question referred to the Court involves a point of fact that is essentially inadmissible. It may be answered only after it has been reworded. In its view, the question has to be construed as seeking to ascertain the conditions under which an alternative tender proposal can be regarded as a variant. It answers the question reworded in that manner by explaining that a procedure must be in place where the contract is awarded on the basis of the most economically advantageous tender, where variants may not be precluded and the proposed tender must meet the minimum specifications stated.

2. Assessment

34. By the first question the Bundesvergabeamt is seeking to ascertain whether the tender proposing the overlaying of an asphalt surface dressing constitutes a variant to overlaying with concrete as stipulated in the tender document.

35. This question involves including a specific point of fact under the Community concept of the "variant" within the meaning of Article 19 of Directive 93/37/EEC. Under the division of functions provided for by Article 234 EC, however, it is for the national court to apply the rules of Community law to an individual case. No such application is possible without a comprehensive appraisal of the facts of the case. (13) Consequently, the first question as it is currently worded is inadmissible.

36. The Court of Justice may, however, supply the referring court with an interpretation of Community law that will enable that court to resolve the legal problem before it. (14) Alternatively, should the Court decide to reword the first question, the following observations should therefore be made.

37. In the light of the Verfassungsgerichtshof's annulment of the first decision issued by the referring court on 21 April 1998 in this case, the first question must be understood as seeking to determine where the boundaries lie for the acceptance of a "variant" within the meaning of Article 19 of the Directive. When can one still speak of "variants" , and from what point does the work proposed differ from the work specified in the tender document to such an extent that the proposed amendment becomes inadmissible?

38. Although, reworded in this way, Question 1 becomes a point of law which the Court of Justice can in principle answer, it must be borne in mind that the proceedings before the Bundesvergabeamt relate to the award stage, not to the stage at which variants are assessed for their admissibility. According to the account in the order for reference, the contracting authority disqualified the variant at issue on the ground that it was not equivalent, not on the ground of its inadmissibility. Strictly speaking, the answer to Question 1 is consequently irrelevant to the dispute in the main proceedings and could therefore be regarded as a hypothetical question, which is inadmissible under consistent case-law. (15) The same argument applies to Question 2.

39. The first two questions make sense only if there is support for the Bundesvergabeamt's argument that appeals against decisions adopted by a contracting authority are inadmissible where the tendering procedure already involves an error in law at an earlier stage (in this case, the indication of minimum specifications in the tender document and the assessment of the admissibility of variants) but against which error there has been no objection (in this case, legal proceedings were not instituted until the contract had been awarded). The extent to which this view of the law is compatible with Community law, in particular with Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, (16) is the subject-matter of the proceedings in Case C-315/01 Gesellschaft für Abfallentsorgungs-Technik (GAT) . In his Opinion of 10 October 2002, Advocate General Geelhoed considered that approach to be incompatible with the review directive. (17) A judgment has not so far been delivered in that case. The question must remain unanswered in this case as it has not been discussed in the proceedings.

40. It is therefore necessary to point out in the alternative that variants under the first paragraph of Article 19 of Directive 93/37/EEC are inadmissible where they fail to satisfy the minimum specifications defined by the contracting authority. The point at which a variant comes into play therefore depends on the minimum specifications which are defined in the individual case by the contracting authority and which must be indicated in the tender document.

41. The parties' observations on the first question support the argument that everything turns on the circumstances of the individual case. The Commission points above all to procedural considerations, such as the award of contracts on the basis of the most economically advantageous tender and the absence of a measure excluding variants. However, it additionally focuses on compliance with the stated minimum specifications. The other parties mention specific aspects of the work specified in the tender document, such as new (construction) execution methods or new materials.

42. Article 19 of the directive stems from a Commission initiative. Its proposal for a directive amending Directive 71/305/EEC provided that variants may involve a fundamental alteration to the design plan or to the required building materials, or an alteration to working methods or to the anticipated working techniques. (18) Operators had to be afforded the possibility of proposing more advanced technical solutions. (19) The Commission subsequently broadened the scope of that proposal during the legislative procedure so that a "variant" had only to meet the minimum specifications required by the contracting authority. (20) That amendment then became Article 20a of Council

Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989 amending Directive 71/305/EEC concerning coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts. (21) It has the same wording as Article 19 of Directive 93/37/EEC. It is apparent from the legislative history that a variant can, in principle, relate to any part of the tender document. The aim of the provision in question, even as it currently stands, is to stimulate technical progress in the construction industry. It is drafted in a deliberately open manner and leaves it to the discretion of the contracting authorities to decide whether they wish to authorise or prohibit variants and to establish what type of variants they are prepared to consider. (22) The sole requirement imposed by Article 19 is that of the admissibility barrier governing the equivalence of the work proposed in the variant with the work specified in the tender document. Equivalence must be examined by reference to the minimum specifications that the contracting authority is required to impose.

43. It is clear from the foregoing considerations that assessing whether a variant does indeed come into play or whether the tender proposed must be disqualified on grounds of its inadmissibility is ultimately a matter for the contracting authority alone. Judicial review must be confined to examining whether the procedural requirements laid down in Directive 93/37/EEC and the minimum specifications defined by the contracting authority have been met and whether or not the contracting authority has blatantly exceeded the margin of discretion it enjoys in assessing the tenders, for example by entertaining unrelated considerations in examining equivalence. The factual assessment of whether the work proposed is consistent with the work specified in the tender document falls to the contracting authority, the only entity capable on account of its competence in the matter of assessing the equivalence of the work proposed with the work specified in the tender document.

44. I accordingly propose in the alternative that the answer to the first question referred should be that, in the context of an award decision on the basis of the most economically advantageous tender in an open procedure, a variant within the meaning of Article 19 of Directive 93/37/EEC comes into play where the submission of variants is permitted and where the relevant proposal replaces part of the work specified in the tender document yet at the same time meets the required minimum specifications.

C The second and third questions

45. Asfinag, the Austrian and French Governments all deal with Questions 2 and 3 jointly. The two questions essentially concern the obligation to publish the assessment criteria applied by the contracting authority. I will adopt the same approach in this respect.

1. Arguments of the parties

46. Traunfellner's view is that in so far as the tender document does not indicate any minimum specifications the equivalence condition laid down in Paragraph 42(4) of the BVergG must be regarded as a minimum specification for the purposes of Article 19 of the directive. The purpose of the work to be performed, which is specified in the tender document and thus known by all tenderers, constitutes the central connecting factor for examining equivalence.

47. Even where the tender document does not mention any criteria, it argues, variants have to be assessed. In such circumstances, the contracting authority simply seeks to ensure the performance of qualitatively equivalent work.

48. Asfinag and the Austrian Government highlight the difficulty in practice of imposing minimum specifications. Asfinag maintains that works contracts in particular are composed of a large number of elements. The contracting authority could not identify in advance the elements for which variants would be submitted. It was not necessary, however, to indicate specific criteria for all elements since the general criterion of equivalence of the work to be performed was sufficient. The principle of transparency was not infringed so long as it was guaranteed that all tenders would be assessed on the basis of the same award criteria. Article 30 of the directive, Asfinag maintains, did not prohibit an arrangement whereby acceptance of a variant was subject to the requirement that the performance of qualitatively equivalent work be ensured.

49. The Austrian Government points out first of all that, as far as it can see, the referring court is mixing the two aspects of minimum specifications within the meaning of Article 19 of the directive on the one hand and contract award criteria for the purposes of Article 30 of the directive on the other. It argues that the former aspect concerns the admissibility of a variant and the latter concerns the assessment of admissible tenders. The Commission concurs with that viewpoint.

50. The obligation to lay down minimum specifications existed, according to the Austrian Government, irrespective of whether or not variants were allowed. The minimum specifications had to be stated, meaning that the contracting authority was required to point out those specifications which it considered indispensable and which it would use as assessment criteria for examining the equivalence of a tender.

51. The Austrian Government also considers that where minimum specifications are defined, reference in the tender document to rules which are of general application and accessible to the public is permitted. Paragraph 35(2) of the BVergG expressly requires that it be stated in the tender documents that they are governed by the BVergG. Interested tenderers can find out about those rules for themselves. It adds that a reference to applicable provisions reduces the number of texts relating to the tender procedure that have to be published. Moreover, under Article 23 of the directive reference may be made to an authority from which information concerning the obligations to be fulfilled in terms of labour law can be obtained. It argues that the reference to a general, published provision can be compared to the above arrangement.

52. The French Government and the Commission take the contrasting view that a reference to applicable provisions does not as the Court has consistently held meet the requirements of transparency. (23)

53. The French Government considers that, in the main proceedings, the approach taken has resulted in discrimination against tenderers resident outside Austria. Furthermore, tenderers intending to submit variants were placed at a disadvantage as they did not know the criteria that would be used to assess their tenders.

54. The Commission adds that the reference to the equivalence of the work is insufficient where the use of specific materials is required. What is more, criteria such as durability and resistance to deformation must be mentioned.

55. In its view, variants may not be accepted where minimum specifications have not been mentioned. In such circumstances the tender document is contrary to Community law because there has been neither a prohibition on the submission of variants nor a reference to the minimum specifications that have to be met. Therefore, the tendering procedure may not be continued in those circumstances.

2. Assessment

56. The second question is focused on determining whether Paragraph 42 of the BVergG can be regarded, by virtue of a reference to that provision in the tender documents, as the establishment of minimum specifications within the meaning of Article 19 of the directive where there is a failure to specify the comparative parameters to be used to assess the equivalence of the work to be performed. This question can be broken down into two parts: first, the question whether the reference to a provision of national legislation meets the transparency requirement, and secondly, the question whether the rules under Paragraph 42(4) of the BVergG can be regarded as minimum specifications within the meaning of Article 19 of Directive 93/37.

57. The third question aims to determine whether Article 30 of the directive precludes a provision of national legislation which makes the acceptance of a variant conditional on the criterion requiring that a tender for equivalent work be submitted where, rather than being mentioned in the tender document, that criterion is apparent only from a provision to which the tender document refers. The issue of the compatibility of such an approach with the transparency requirement arises at this point too. In that respect this question overlaps with the second question. It is therefore necessary, first of all, to consider the aspects relating to the transparency requirement.

In Beentjes and Commission v France the Court of Justice held that where the authorities awarding the contract have regard to various criteria with a view to awarding the contract to the most economically advantageous tender, they are required to state those criteria in the contract notice or the contract documents. A general reference to a provision of national legislation cannot satisfy the publicity requirement. (24)

59. Those decisions concerning Article 30 of Directive 93/37/EEC are based on the principles of transparency and equal treatment, both of which are dominant principles within the context of public procurement which also form the basis of Directive 93/37/EEC, as is clear from the 10th and 11th recitals in the preamble thereto. The two principles must therefore be observed in the interpretation of Article 19 of the directive. Consequently, a general reference to a provision of national legislation is not sufficient to meet the requirement to state the minimum specifications either.

60. I therefore propose that the second and third questions referred be answered as follows: A reference to a provision of national legislation meets neither the requirement to lay down minimum specifications as provided for in Article 19 of Directive 93/37/EEC nor the requirement to lay down criteria on which to base the award of the contract as provided for in Article 30 of the directive.

61. Strictly speaking, that response obviates the need to answer the second part of the second question concerning the extent to which the rules laid down in Paragraph 42(4) of the BVergG can be regarded as minimum specifications. I will comment on that matter merely in the alternative, in the event that the Court adopts a different view as regards the publicity requirement.

62. The concept of minimum specifications within the meaning of Article 19 is not defined in the directive. As I have already pointed out with regard to the first question, the contracting authority enjoys a margin of discretion in laying down minimum specifications. Those specifications relate to features or results which distinguish the work specified in the tender document and which must be satisfied by the work proposed in the tender.

63. As also discussed earlier with regard to the first question, the contracting authority is, in principle, at liberty to decide whether it wishes to authorise or prohibit variants. If it decides to prohibit them, its decision must be expressly stated in the tender notice in accordance with the second sentence of the second paragraph of Article 19 of Directive 93/37/EEC. Where variants are allowed, the contracting authority is not obliged to say so in the tender document. (25)

64. However, as can be seen from the first sentence of the second paragraph of Article 19 of the directive, where variants are allowed, the contracting authority must state in the tender notice the minimum requirements to be met by those variants. (26) That obligation arises from the use of the mandatory expression "shall state... the minimum specifications" . If the contracting authority had been at liberty to decide in this case whether or not to lay down minimum specifications, the expression "may state... the minimum specifications" would certainly have been used.

65. This reading based on the wording of the provision concerned is also consistent with its spirit. Where variants are permitted, tenderers have to know the criteria on which basis their proposed tenders are to be assessed by the contracting authority. The assessment is carried out by reference to the minimum specifications which define the contracting authority's expectations vis-à-vis the work for which it has invited tenders. Tenders submitted in the form of variants are allowed only if the variants meet those specifications, which have been laid down previously (principle of equal treatment) and notified in the tender document (principle of transparency). (27) A tender document which permits variants since it does not expressly prohibit them but does not impose any minimum specifications does not, therefore, meet the requirements of Directive 93/37.

66. The objection that it is impossible in practice to state all the criteria in advance because the aspects on which variants will be submitted are as yet unknown must therefore be dismissed. The contracting authority should be able to set out its expectations vis-à-vis the work for which it invites tenders and the specifications under the individual subheadings, such as the load-bearing capacity of a bridge or the load-carrying capacity and durability of a road surface. The document inviting tenders for a works contract should above all set out the result expected by the contracting authority. The assessment whether a tender guarantees that result must be carried out for proposals consistent with the tender document and variants alike on the basis of objective criteria which must be notified to the tenderers in the tender document. It is of no consequence here whether the criteria govern admissibility, as in the context of Article 19 of Directive 93/37/EEC, or the award of the contract, as provided for in Article 30 of the directive. The principle of equality of tenderers and the principle of transparency apply to both provisions.

67. The rules in Paragraph 42(4) of the BVergG require that the work proposed by the variant be equivalent to the work specified in the tender document. That criterion does not relate to the features or result which distinguish the work put out to tender. On the contrary, it concerns the assessment of the work proposed as compared with the work for which tenders have been invited.

68. The equivalence criterion is also contained in the first paragraph in fine of Article 19 which states that account may be taken of variants which "... meet the minimum specifications required by the contracting authorities" . The Commission's proposal of 1986 stated that account must be taken of variants where they at least met the prescribed specifications in terms of quality. (28) The wording of that proposal, which was amended as early as in the procedure for adopting Directive 89/440/EEC in favour of the version currently in force, largely corresponds to the wording of Paragraph 42(4) of the BVergG. That provision states that a variant is allowed only if it "... ensures the performance of qualitatively equivalent work" .

69. It is apparent from those different expressions that the equivalence criterion cannot be a "minimum specification" for the purposes of Article 19 of Directive 93/37/EEC. On the contrary, it is the result that a variant must achieve. The issue of whether that result is achieved must be determined by reference to the minimum specifications used by the contracting authority to define its expectations vis-à-vis the work for which it has invited tenders. Equivalence does not in itself constitute an assessment criterion but merely defines the level to be attained by the variant.

70. Should the Court still consider it necessary, I therefore propose that this part of the second question be answered as follows: The equivalence criterion established for the purpose of assessing the admissibility of a variant is not a minimum specification required by the contracting authority as provided for in Article 19 of Directive 93/37.

D The fourth and fifth questions

1. Arguments of the parties

71. Asfinag and the Austrian Government take the view that the fourth and fifth questions are inadmissible in that they are hypothetical. They point out that the contract forming the basis of the main proceedings has since been awarded and the works completed. It merely remains for the referring court to decide whether the disqualification of the variant was lawful.

72. In the alternative, they consider with regard to Question 4a that the procedure can be concluded. Asfinag relies on Article 2 of Directive 89/665/EEC (29) in support of that argument. The Austrian Government refers to the fact that there is no obligation to award the contract (30) yet infers from that a contrario that the contracting authority may none the less conclude the procedure.

73. With regard to Question 4a, Traunfellner and the Commission on the other hand consider that, where the tender document has not met the requirements of Community law, the contracting authority may not conclude the procedure and must initiate a new procedure. Variants may be prohibited, in their view, only subject to very strict conditions.

74. As to Question 4b, Traunfellner maintains that if the contracting authority has allowed the submission of variants, it must also allow an assessment of equivalence. In view of the broad possibility of submitting variants, it would be unreasonable for the contracting authority to reject them without examination. In the alternative, Asfinag also supports that conclusion.

75. As regards Questions 4b and 5, the Commission on the other hand considers that variants should be rejected if contract award criteria have not been defined for assessing technical differences.

76. As far as Question 5 is concerned, Traunfellner takes the view that an obligation to accept the cheapest tender is incompatible with the spirit of the directive. It was indeed possible in the main proceedings to assess the technical differences on account of the equivalence of the variant submitted. Furthermore, road construction was an area in which there was vast experience; thus, it was unnecessary to indicate award criteria for assessing function-related, technical equivalence.

2. Assessment

77. According to consistent case-law, it is, in principle, solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case whether a preliminary ruling is necessary to enable it to deliver judgment and whether the questions which it submits to the Court are relevant. Consequently, where the questions submitted by the national court concern the interpretation of Community law, the Court of Justice is, in principle, bound to give a ruling. (31)

78. Nevertheless, the Court has also held that, in exceptional circumstances, it can examine the conditions in which the case was referred to it by the national court, in order to assess whether it has jurisdiction. The Court may consequently refuse to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling by a national court where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual and legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it. (32)

79. As Asfinag and the Austrian Government rightly point out, Questions 4a, 4b and 5 are no longer relevant in the main action. The referring court has itself observed that the contract for the bridge and road construction works has been awarded and the works completed. Thus, it only remains for the Bundesvergabeamt to rule on whether the disqualification of Traunfellner's variant from the tendering procedure was lawful. There is no longer any need in the main proceedings to resolve the issue of whether and, if so, how the tendering procedure is to be continued. Hence it is quite obvious that Questions 4 and 5 bear no relation to the purpose of the main proceedings and are hypothetical. According to settled case-law, such questions do not require an answer. (33)

80. In the alternative, should the Court consider the questions to be admissible, I propose that it answer them as follows:

81. Question 4a: A tendering procedure in the context of which the tender document does not specify the comparative parameters to be used to assess equivalence may not be concluded by awarding the contract. Under Article 30(2) of Directive 93/37/EEC all the criteria that the contracting authority intends to apply to the award are to be stated in the contract notice. As observed with regard to Questions 2 and 3, the principles of equal treatment and transparency form the basis of that provision. Using award criteria that have not been published in the tender document while continuing the tendering procedure would be contrary to those principles. Advocate General Mischo also reaches that conclusion in his Opinion of 27 February 2003 in the case of EVN and Wienstrom . (34)

82. Question 4b: This question is relevant only if the tendering procedure may be concluded. There is no need to give an answer in the light of the previous considerations. It should be stated, simply for the sake of completeness, that variants cannot be assessed if assessment criteria have not been published in the tender document. If they were assessed, however, that measure would offend against the principles of equal treatment and transparency.

83. Question 5: Where a contracting authority has decided to award the contract to the most economically advantageous tender, it cannot, in the course of the procedure, revert to awarding the contract on the basis of the lowest-price criterion. Changing the award criteria within a tendering procedure which is already under way is contrary to the transparency requirement. (35) Consequently, a variant whose technical differences from the tender document cannot be assessed on the basis of contract award criteria owing to the absence of appropriate statements in the tender document may not be accepted where it is the cheapest tender and contract award criteria have not otherwise been defined. Should the contract be awarded on the basis of the most economically advantageous tender, the criteria intended to be applied to the award of the contract must be stated, as prescribed by Article 30(2) of Directive 93/37/EEC. A tender document which does not meet that requirement is unlawful.

VI Conclusion

84. On the basis of the foregoing considerations I propose that the Court should:

(1) declare Questions 1, 4 and 5 inadmissible, and

(2) answer Questions 2 and 3 as follows:

The reference to a provision of national legislation does not meet the requirement to lay down minimum specifications within the meaning of Article 19 of Directive 93/37/EEC or the requirement to lay down contract award criteria for the purposes of Article 30 of the directive.

The equivalence criterion required to assess the admissibility of a variant is not a minimum specification required by the contracting authority for the purposes of Article 19 of Directive 93/37/EEC.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Mischo delivered on 25 February 2003. Fritsch, Chiari & Partner, Ziviltechniker GmbH and Others v Autobahnen- und Schnellstraßen-Finanzierungs-AG (Asfinag). Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesvergabeamt - Austria. Public contracts - Directive 89/665/EEC - Review procedures concerning the award of public contracts - Article 1(3) - Persons to whom review procedures must be available - Definition of interest in obtaining a public contract. Case C-410/01.

1. The Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Public Procurement Office) (Austria) is seeking an interpretation from the Court of Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, (2) as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (3) ("Directive 89/665").

2. In a case in which a trader has failed to avail itself of the conciliation procedure provided for under Austrian law, the Bundesvergabeamt is seeking to ascertain whether the abovementioned provision must be interpreted as meaning that a trader has no interest in obtaining a contract unless it has taken all steps available under national law to prevent the contract from being awarded to another tenderer and so to secure the award of the contract to itself.

I Legal background

A Community legislation

3. Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 provides:

"1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles, and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.

4. Article 2(1) and (6) of Directive 89/665 reads:

"1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take interim measures, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

6. The effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law.

Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.

B National legislation

5. Directive 89/665 was transposed into Austrian law by the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Bundesvergabegesetz 1997) (1997 Federal Public Procurement Law, BGBl. I, 1997/56, "the BVergG"). The BVergG provides for the creation of a Bundes-Vergabekontrollkommission (Federal Public Procurement Control Commission, "the B-VKK") and of a Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Public Procurement Office).

6. Paragraph 109 of the BVergG sets out the powers of the B-VKK. It contains the following provisions:

"1. The B-VKK shall be competent:

(1) until such time as the contract is awarded, to reconcile any differences of opinion between the awarding body and one or more candidates or tenderers concerning the application of the present federal law or its implementing regulations.

6. A request for the B-VKK to take action made under paragraph 1(1) must be submitted to the directors of the Commission as soon as possible after the difference of opinion comes to light.

7. If the B-VKK does not take action following a request from the awarding body it must inform that body immediately it does take action.

8. The awarding body may not award the contract until four weeks after ... it has been informed in accordance with paragraph 7, failing which the tendering procedure shall be declared void...

7. Paragraph 113 of the BVergG lays down the powers of the Bundesvergabeamt. It provides:

"1. The Bundesvergabeamt is responsible on application for carrying out a review procedure in accordance with the following provisions.

2. To preclude infringements of this Federal Law and of the regulations implementing it, the Bundesvergabeamt is authorised until the time of the award:

(1) to adopt interim measures and

(2) to set aside unlawful decisions of the contracting authority.

3. After the award of the contract or the close of the contract award procedure the Bundesvergabeamt is competent to determine whether, on grounds of infringement of this Federal Law or of any regulations issued under it, the contract has not been awarded to the best tenderer....

8. Paragraph 115(1) of the BVergG provides:

"Where an undertaking claims to have an interest in the conclusion of a contract within the scope of this Federal Law, it may apply for the contracting authority's decision in the contract award procedure to be reviewed on the ground of unlawfulness, provided that it has been or risks being harmed by the alleged infringement."

9. Under Paragraph 122(1) of the BVergG,

"[i]n the event of a culpable breach of the Federal Law or its implementing rules by the organs of an awarding body, an unsuccessful candidate or tenderer may bring a claim against the contracting authority to which the conduct of the organs of the awarding body is attributable for reimbursement of the costs incurred in drawing up its bid and other costs borne as a result of its participation in the tendering procedure."

10. Under Paragraph 125(2), first sentence, of the BVergG a claim for damages to be brought before the civil courts is admissible only if the Bundesvergabeamt has previously made a declaration under Paragraph 113(3).

II The main proceedings

11. In the autumn of 1999 Autobahnen- und Schnellstraßen-Finanzierungs-AG ("Asfinag") invited tenders prior to the award of a public services contract for "site management in respect of the construction of principal and subsidiary toll barriers, including electrical, internal and technological work, and the introduction of a data-transmission facility as part of the "LKW Maut Osterreich" project

" . The tenders were opened on 18 November 1999.

12. Together with a number of partners, Fritsch, Chiari & Partner Ziviltechniker GmbH ("the applicant") submitted its tender as a consortium. By letter of 28 January 2000 the applicant was informed that its tender had been placed second in the evaluation of the tenders and was therefore unsuccessful. On 8 February 2001 it was told that the contract had been awarded to a competitor and was informed of the amount of the contract.

13. The applicant then instituted a procedure under Paragraph 113(3) of the BVergG for a review by the Bundesvergabeamt, seeking a declaration that the contract had not been awarded to the best tenderer because the award criteria laid down by the contracting authority infringed the requirement contained in Paragraph 53 of the BVergG that the best tenderer must be determined in a comprehensible manner.

14. Before the Bundesvergabeamt, Asfinag stated that, under Paragraph 115(1) of the BVergG, only an undertaking claiming an interest in obtaining a contract falling within the scope of the BVergG is entitled to apply for review of a decision of the contracting authority on the ground of unlawfulness, where the alleged unlawfulness has caused or risks causing it harm. According to Asfinag, the applicant clearly had no interest in obtaining the contract since it had not submitted an application for conciliation to the B-VKK, as it was entitled to do under Paragraph 109(1) of the BVergG.

15. In support of its view, Asfinag maintains that public procurement law does not exist for its own sake but rather serves to determine where pre-contractual liability lies amongst the various parties to public procurement procedures, including the tenderers. If a tenderer considers that the award criteria do not comply with the law, it is required, as provided in Paragraph 109(6) of the BVergG, to inform the B-VKK as soon as possible, even before the tenders are opened. The principle of competition prohibits allowing a tenderer who considers that the award criteria do not comply with the law, first to submit a tender in order to ascertain whether it is the best tenderer and then to decide on its actions according to how the contract is awarded: if it is the best tenderer it does not make an application, but if it fails to obtain the contract, or is not the best tenderer, it applies to the competent authorities in order to have "a second bite at the cherry" as a result of the invitation to tender being revoked.

16. According to Asfinag, Paragraph 109(6) of the BVergG therefore imposes a time-limit for claims, so that the submission of a tender without any preliminary application being made to the B-VKK means that no claim may be brought in respect of defects in the invitation to tender which, if it had exercised due care, the tenderer should have been aware of at the time it prepared its tender. If in the present case the applicant had applied to the B-VKK before preparing its tender bid and had drawn Asfinag's attention to the alleged errors, no costs would have been incurred in preparing the tender.

17. The applicant denied the allegation that it had no interest, stating that according to the consistent practice of the public procurement supervisory bodies, submission of a tender within the time-limit was sufficient to establish an interest in obtaining a contract.

III The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

18. Considering that the Austrian legislation applying to the case before it should be interpreted in the light of Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 and that a decision in the case therefore required an interpretation of that provision, the Bundesvergabeamt, by order of 11 July 2001, decided to stay proceedings pending a preliminary ruling by the Court of Justice on the following questions:

"1. Is Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 to be interpreted as meaning that the review procedure must be available to any undertaking which has submitted a bid, or applied to participate, in a public procurement procedure?

(2) In the event that the answer to Question 1 is no:

Is the abovementioned provision to be understood as meaning that an undertaking only has or had an interest in a particular public contract if, in addition to its participating in the public procurement procedure, it takes or took all steps available to it under national law to prevent the contract from being awarded to another bidder and so to secure the award of the contract to itself?

19. In the order for reference the Bundesvergabeamt points out that in a judgment of 12 June 2001 (B 485/01-12, B 584/01-9, B 685/01-6) the Verfassungsgerichtshof (Austrian Constitutional Court) stated, referring to its judgment of 8 March 2001 (B 707/00), that according to the case-law of the Court of Justice, (4) the capacity to institute a review procedure under Article 1 of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted broadly and should therefore belong to any person seeking to obtain a specific public contract which is the subject of an invitation to tender. The question therefore arises whether that should be the case irrespective of whether that person has or has not availed himself of the opportunity afforded him by the contracting authority of exhausting all remedies available under domestic public procurement law (first question) or whether failure to exhaust all possible domestic remedies results in him forfeiting that interest (second question).

IV Analysis

A Whether the Court has jurisdiction to answer the questions referred by the Bundesvergabeamt

20. The Commission questions in its written observations whether the Court has jurisdiction to answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling since it considers that decisions of the Bundesvergabeamt are not of a judicial nature.

21. It should be pointed out, however, that this issue has in the meantime been settled by the Court in Case C-411/00 Swoboda , (5) at least as regards questions referred by the Bundesbegabeamt in the exercise of its powers during the period after the award of the contract. The Court held in that context that it was a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC. (6)

22. It is clear from the order for reference that in the main proceedings the Bundesvergabeamt is also exercising its powers during the period after the award of the contract. The case was brought on the basis of Paragraph 113(3) of the BVergG, (7) which provides: "[a]fter the award of the contract or the close of the contract award procedure, the Bundesvergabeamt is competent to determine whether, on grounds of infringement of this Federal Law or of any regulations issued under it, the contract has not been awarded to the best tenderer." (8)

23. It must therefore be concluded that the Court has jurisdiction to answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Bundesvergabeamt.

B On the questions

24. Like the French Government, I propose to deal with both the questions together.

25. Each question corresponds to the view put forward by one of the parties in the main proceedings on the point at issue, namely, the meaning of "an interest in obtaining a contract" : the first question reflects the applicant's view that the submission of a tender during a contract procedure or the request to participate in such a procedure are sufficient in order to establish that a tenderer has, once and for all, an interest in obtaining the contract, whilst the second question refers to Asfinag's view that the fact that a tenderer does not take or has not taken all steps available to it under national law to prevent the contract from being awarded to another tenderer, namely in this case the fact that it did not make an application to the B-VVK, demonstrates that that tenderer has forfeited an interest in obtaining the contract.

26. The applicant and the Austrian Government confirmed at the hearing that at the material time there was no statutory obligation on the applicant to make an application to the B-VKK after being informed by letter of 28 January 2000 that its tender had been placed second in the evaluation of the tenders and was therefore unsuccessful.

27. The order for reference does not contain any information from which I may conclude that this view is incorrect.

28. In essence, the questions amount to the single question of whether Directive 89/665 must be understood as meaning that a tenderer has or had an interest in obtaining a public contract only if it made a preliminary application to an advisory committee although such application was optional.

29. In my view the answer to that question is no.

30. First, it is clear straight away that Directive 89/665 does not specify any circumstances in which a tenderer forfeits an interest in obtaining a contract.

31. Second, to answer yes would mean that one inferred from the directive that the tenderer was under an obligation to make an application to an advisory committee although such application is optional under national law, otherwise it would forfeit an interest in obtaining the public contract. Such an inference cannot be made.

32. It is true that the directive does not preclude certain obligations being imposed on traders under national law.

33. This is clear, for example, from the last sentence of Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, which provides "... the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review."

34. It is also clear from Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others , (9) in which the Court held that extinctive time-limits at national level were compatible with Directive 89/665 provided they were reasonable.

35. However, the directive itself does not impose such obligations on traders, and moreover could never do so where it has no direct effect on individuals. (10)

36. I therefore suggest that the answer to the questions referred for a preliminary ruling should be that, in itself, Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 does not mean that an undertaking has or had an interest in obtaining a particular public contract only if, in addition to its participation in the public procurement procedure, it takes or took all steps available to it under national law to prevent the contract from being awarded to another tenderer and so to secure the award of the contract to itself.

37. In the alternative I should like, however, to consider the questions again from another angle.

38. They could also be interpreted as meaning that the Bundesvergabeamt is seeking to ascertain whether Directive 89/665 precludes a rule of national law under which a tenderer forfeits its interest in obtaining the contract if it has not taken all steps available to it under national law to prevent the contract from being awarded to another tenderer.

39. I stress that I have not found in the order for reference any express reference to a rule of Austrian law which states that although an application to the B-VKK is optional, failure to make such application would cause a tenderer to forfeit an interest in obtaining the contract. However, since only the referring court has jurisdiction to interpret its national law, one cannot exclude a priori that such a rule does exist. Therefore, in an attempt to provide an answer to the Bundesvergabeamt which is as useful as possible, I suggest that an answer should also be given to the questions as I have reworded them in the alternative.

40. At the hearing the French and Austrian Governments and the Commission rightly submitted that the answer to the questions worded in that way should be based on the judgment in Universale-Bau and Others , cited above, which was delivered after they had submitted their written observations.

41. In that case, in which reference had likewise been made by the Bundesvergabeamt, the Court held as follows:

> "Directive 89/665 does not preclude national legislation which provides that any application for review of a contracting authority's decision must be commenced within a time-limit laid down to that effect and that any irregularity in the award procedure relied upon in support of such application must be raised within the same period, if it is not to be out of time, with the result that, when that period has passed, it is no longer possible to challenge such a decision or to raise such an irregularity, provided that the time-limit in question is reasonable." (11)

42. Like the abovementioned interveners, I take the view that that ruling may be transposed to the present case.

As in Universale-Bau , cited above, in which the Court held that Directive 89/665 contains no provision specifically covering time-limits for the application for review which it sought to establish, (12) the directive in question does not either, as I stated above, (13) contain any provision concerning circumstances in which a tenderer might forfeit an interest in obtaining a

44. Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 indeed requires review procedures to be made available to "any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement" , although it does not define more fully either the concept of "interest" or any circumstances in which failure on the part of the tenderer to exercise due care may cause it to forfeit an interest in obtaining a contract since it is considered as not having or never having had such an interest. It is therefore for the national legal system of each Member State, where appropriate, to make such provision. (14)

45. Having reached this stage in the reasoning, I should like to quote in extenso paragraphs 72 to 76 of Universale-Bau and Others , cited above, which seem to me to apply mutatis mutandis to the question before us:

> "72. None the less, since there are detailed procedural rules governing the remedies intended to protect rights conferred by Community law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities, they must not compromise the effectiveness of Directive 89/665.
> 73. It is therefore appropriate to determine whether, in light of the purpose of that directive, national legislation such as that at issue in the main proceedings does not adversely affect rights conferred on individuals by Community law.
> 74. In that regard, it is appropriate to recall that, as is apparent from the first and second recitals in its preamble, Directive 89/665 is intended to strengthen the existing mechanisms, both at national and Community levels, to ensure the effective application of the directives relating to public procurement, in particular at a stage when infringements can still be corrected. To that effect, Article 1(1) of that directive requires Member States to guarantee that unlawful decisions of contracting authorities can be subjected to effective review which is as swift as possible.
> 75. The full implementation of the objective sought by Directive 89/665 would be undermined if candidates and tenderers were allowed to invoke, at any stage of the award procedure, infringement of the rules of public procurement, thus obliging the contracting authority to restart the entire procedure in order to correct such infringements.
> 76. Moreover, the setting of reasonable limitation periods for bringing proceedings must be regarded as satisfying, in principle, the requirement of effectiveness under Directive 89/665, since it is an application of the fundamental principle of legal certainty (see, by analogy, in relation to the principle of the effectiveness of Community law, Case C-261/95 Palmisani [1997] ECR I-4025, paragraph 28, and Case C-78/98 Preston and Others [2000] ECR I-3201, paragraph 33).

46. As in the case of the time-limits which were at issue in Universale-Bau and Others , cited above, I am of the view that a national rule which requires a tenderer to take all steps reasonably available to it to prevent the contract from being awarded to another tenderer, or else it would risk forfeiting an interest in obtaining the contract, is contributing towards achieving the objective of Directive 89/665 of establishing effective review procedures that are as rapid as possible. (16) In addition, it also meets the requirement of effectiveness contained in Directive 89/665 in so far as it is in the interest of legal certainty.

47. I should like to stress, however, that such forfeiture of an interest in obtaining the contract, in my view, cannot arise except where the tenderer has failed to take all the steps which are reasonably available to it, in the same way as the time-limits must also be reasonable. (17)

48. At the hearing the applicant stated that it had not had sufficient information to make a proper application to the B-VKK after being informed, by letter of 28 January 2000, that its tender had been placed second in the evaluation of the tenders and was therefore unsuccessful.

49. It is for the court making the reference to consider whether, in the light of such circumstances, the applicant had reasonably had available to it the step of making an application to the B-VKK. If that was not the case the applicant cannot be criticised for not having taken that step.

50. I therefore suggest that the answer to the questions referred for a preliminary ruling should, in the alternative, be that Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 does not preclude a rule of national law under which an undertaking has or had an interest in obtaining a particular public contract only if, in addition to its participating in the public procurement procedure, it takes or took all steps reasonably available to it under national law to prevent the contract from being awarded to another bidder and so to secure the award of the contract to itself.

V Conclusion

51. In the light of the above considerations, I suggest that the answer to the questions referred by the Bundesvergabeamt should be as follows:

Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, does not mean that an undertaking has or had an interest in obtaining a particular public contract only if, in addition to its participation in the public procurement procedure, it takes or took all steps available to it under national law to prevent the contract from being awarded to another bidder and so to secure the award of the contract to itself;

Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 does not, however, preclude a rule of national law under which an undertaking has or had an interest in obtaining a particular public contract only if, in addition to its participating in the public procurement procedure, it takes or took all steps reasonably available to it under national law to prevent the contract from being awarded to another bidder and so to secure the award of the contract to itself.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer delivered on 6May2003.
Bernhard Pfeiffer (C-397/01), Wilhelm Roith (C-398/01), Albert Süß (C-399/01), Michael Winter (C-400/01), Klaus Nestvogel (C-401/01), Roswitha Zeller (C-402/01) and Matthias Döbele (C-403/01) v Deutsches Rotes Kreuz, Kreisverband Waldshut eV.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Arbeitsgericht Lörrach - Germany.
Social policy - Protection of the health and safety of workers - Directive 93/104/EC - Scope - Emergency workers in attendance in ambulances in the framework of an emergency service run by the German Red Cross - Definition of 'road transport' - Maximum weekly working time - Principle - Direct effect - Derogation - Conditions.
Joined cases C-397/01 to C-403/01.

1. The Arbeitsgericht (Labour Court), Lörrach, Germany, which rules at first instance on employment matters, has referred to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling three questions regarding the interpretation of various provisions of Directive 93/104/EC concerning certain aspects of the organisation of working time. (2) The questions relate specifically to Article 1, which defines the scope of the directive; to Article 6, which establishes maximum weekly working time; and to Article 18(1)(b)(i), which provides for Article 6 to be disapplied in certain circumstances.

I - The facts of the main proceedings

2. The national court has submitted to the Court of Justice seven orders referring questions for preliminary rulings in seven separate disputes. In view of the fact that the questions in each dispute are identical and the facts similar, the seven cases were joined in the written stage of the procedure by Order of the President dated 7 November 2001.

3. All the plaintiffs are rescue workers who are qualified to provide emergency medical assistance and to operate patient transport, are employees or former employees of the German Red Cross (Deutsches Rotes Kreuz), and are seeking payment for overtime in two cases, and confirmation of their right not to work more than 48 hours per week in the other cases.

4. The defendant provides, inter alia, land-based emergency medical assistance services in part of the district of Waldshut, and operates several rescue posts which are open 24 hours and one which is only operational for 12 hours during the day. The service is effected using ambulances manned by two rescue workers or paramedics (Rettungtransportfahrzuegen), and by ambulances manned by a doctor accompanied by a rescue worker or a paramedic (Notarzt-Einsatzfahrzeugen).

When the alert is given, the rescue vehicles go to the place where the injured or sick person is to provide medical assistance. Usually, the vehicles then transport the patient to hospital.

5. In their employment contracts, it was agreed by the parties that the provisions of the Collective Agreement on Working Conditions for German Red Cross Employees, Workers and Trainees (Tarifvertrag über Arbeitsbedingungen für Angestellte, Arbeiter und Auszubildende des Deutschen Roten Kreuzes), hereinafter referred to as the Red Cross collective agreement', would be applicable.

6. In accordance with the provisions of that collective agreement, the average working time in the undertaking's emergency medical assistance service is 49 hours per week. It is common ground that the substantive requirements for extending the working hours, which are set out in Article 14(2)(b) of the collective agreement and entail the performance of stand-by duty (Arbeitsbereitschaft) of at least three hours per day, are met.

II - The applicable German legislation

7. In Germany, working time and rest periods are governed by the Law on working time (Arbeitszeitgesetz) of 6 June 1994, which was adopted in order to transpose Directive 93/104 into national law.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

8. Under Paragraph 2(1), working time is defined as the time between the beginning and the end of the working day, excluding breaks. Under Paragraph 3, working time must not exceed eight hours per working day, although it may be increased to 10 hours if the average period of working time over six calendar months, or 24 weeks, does not exceed eight hours per working day.

9. Under Paragraph 7(1)(1), by way of derogation from Article 3, under a collective or works agreement:

(a) the working day may be extended beyond 10 hours, even without compensation, where working time regularly includes a significant period of time spent on stand-by;

(b) the compensatory rest time may be postponed; and

(c) working hours may be extended, without compensation, to up to 10 hours per day for a maximum of 60 days per year.

10. Under Article 14(1) of the German Red Cross Collective Agreement, weekly working time, excluding breaks, must not exceed 39 hours (38ì hours with effect from 1 April 1990) per week. The average is usually calculated over a 26-week period.

In accordance with Article 14(2), normal working time may be increased to: (a) an average of 10 hours per day or 49 hours per week, if it includes a period of standby duty of at least two hours per day on average; (b) an average of 11 hours per day or 54 hours per week if the period of standby duty is three hours; and (c) an average of 12 hours per day or 60 hours per week if the employee remains in the workplace but only works when he is asked to do so.

Annex 2 contains special rules for staff in the emergency services. When the annex is applied to rescue workers attached to the ambulance service and to transport staff, account must be taken of the note on Article 14(2), pursuant to which the maximum working time of 54 hours per week, referred to in Article 14(2)(b), must be progressively reduced. From 1 January 1993, it was reduced to 49 hours.

III - The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

11. Before ruling on the disputes, the Arbeitsgericht Lörrach decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

(1) (a) Is the reference in Article 1(3) of Council Directive 93/104/EC ... to Article 2(2) of Council Directive 89/391/EEC of 12 June 1989 on the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the safety and health of workers at work, (3) under which the provisions of the directives are not applicable where characteristics peculiar to certain specific activities in the civil protection services inevitably conflict with their application, to be construed as meaning that the activity of the applicant, who is a qualified worker in the emergency medical assistance service, is caught by this exclusion?

(1) (b) Does the concept of road transport, for the purposes of Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104/EC, exclude from the scope of the directive only those driving activities in which, by their nature, great distances are covered and where working times cannot be fixed owing to the unforeseeability of any difficulties, or, alternatively, does it include rescue vehicle services, which comprise, at least in part, the driving of such vehicles and attendance on patients during the journey?

(2) In view of the judgment in Simap , (4) does Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104/EC require the express consent of an employee in order to extend the weekly working time to more than 48 hours, or, alternatively, does it suffice if it is agreed in the contract of employment that the working conditions are those established by collective agreements which allow weekly working time to be extended to more than 48 hours on average?

(3) Is the wording of Article 6 of Directive 93/104/EC sufficiently precise and unconditional

2. This Directive shall not be applicable where characteristics peculiar to certain specific public service activities, such as the armed forces or the police, or to certain specific activities in the civil protection services inevitably conflict with it.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, in keeping with the need to protect the safety and health of workers:

2. the average working time for each seven-day period, including overtime, does not exceed 48 hours.'

takes the necessary measures to ensure that:

- no employer requires a worker to work more than 48 hours over a seven-day period, calculated as an average for the reference period referred to in point 2 of Article 16, unless he has first obtained the worker's agreement to perform such work,

- no worker is subjected to any detriment by his employer because he is not willing to give his agreement to perform such work,

- the employer keeps up-to-date records of all workers who carry out such work,

- the records are placed at the disposal of the competent authorities, which may, for reasons connected with the safety and/or health of workers, prohibit or restrict the possibility of exceeding the maximum weekly working hours,

- the employer provides the competent authorities at their request with information on cases in which agreement has been given by workers to perform work exceeding 48 hours over a period of seven days, calculated as an average for the reference period referred to in point 2 of Article 16.

Before the expiry of a period of seven years from the date referred to in (a), the Council shall, on the basis of a Commission proposal accompanied by an appraisal report, re-examine the provisions of this point (i) and decide on what action to take.

V - Proceedings before the Court of Justice

13. Written observations in these proceedings were submitted, within the period laid down in Article 20 of the EC Statute of the Court of Justice, by the plaintiffs in the main proceedings and the Commission.

In view of the fact that none of the parties applied to present oral argument, the Court decided not to hold a hearing, in accordance with Article 104(4) of the Rules of Procedure.

VI - The observations submitted

14. It is the view of the plaintiffs in the main proceedings that the German Red Cross Collective Agreement allows the employer to decide unilaterally the average weekly working time, without the agreement of the employee, in the event that it is necessary to organise stand-by services at work. German academic opinion and case-law have defined such periods of duty, which are regarded as working time, as periods of active wakefulness under relaxed conditions. A collective agreement of this nature is contrary to Directive 93/104, since it provides for weekly working time to exceed 48 hours, from which it follows that, since the collective agreement complies with Paragraph 7(1)(1)(a) of the Law on working time, the German legislature has failed to implement correctly the provisions of the directive.

15. The Commission maintains that time spent by rescue workers on standby duty in their posts amounts to working time, which means that the activity they carry out is not covered by the exclusion in Article 2(2) of Directive 89/391 and is, therefore, included in the scope of Directive 93/104. The Commission also asserts that employees whose employer's activity is not in the road transport sector are not covered by the exclusion in respect of such activities which is laid down in Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104, even where the undertaking's activity includes the transport of goods or people. In the Commission's view, in order for weekly working time to exceed 48 hours, all the conditions set out in Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104 must be satisfied, including the condition which calls for the worker's express agreement. For that purpose, it will not suffice if the worker is merely aware that the employment relationship is governed by a collective agreement which allows for the weekly working time to be extended. The Commission argues that the wording of Article 6 of Directive 93/104 is sufficiently precise and unconditional to enable individuals to rely on it before national courts where a Member State has failed to implement it correctly. In such cases, the court must interpret national law in the light of the wording and purpose of the directive in order to achieve the result pursued.

VII - Analysis of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

16. By the first question, which is in two parts, the national court asks the Court of Justice to define the scope of Directive 93/104, with a view to clarifying whether it covers the activity carried out by the plaintiffs in the main proceedings.

A - The first part of the first question

17. The Arbeitsgericht wishes to ascertain, firstly, whether Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 and Article 2 of Directive 89/391 exclude from the scope of the directives the activity of rescue workers who work in an emergency medical assistance service.

18. As the Court pointed out in Simap , (5) Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 defines its scope first by referring expressly to Article 2 of Directive 89/391 and, second, by providing for a number of exceptions in relation to certain specified activities. Accordingly, in order to determine whether the work of rescue workers in an emergency medical assistance service falls within the scope of Directive 93/104, it is necessary first to consider whether it is covered by Directive 89/391.

19. In accordance with Article 2(1) of Directive 89/391, the directive applies to all sectors of activity, both public and private, and in particular to industrial, agricultural, commercial, administrative, service, educational, cultural and leisure activities. However, Article 2(2) provides that the directive is not applicable where characteristics peculiar to certain specific public service activities, such as the armed forces or the police, or to the civil protection services, inevitably conflict with it.

20. In Simap , (6) the Court found that the specific public service activities, referred to in the provision, are intended to uphold public order and security, which are essential for the proper functioning of society, and that, under normal circumstances, the activities of medical staff who carry out on-call duty cannot be assimilated to such activities.

21. In the case before the Court, it is necessary to confirm whether the emergency medical assistance service provided by the Red Cross rescue workers is part of the civil protection services. In the event that the answer to that question is in the affirmative, it will then be appropriate to examine whether the treatment is included among the specific activities whose characteristics would inevitably preclude the application to them of Directive 93/104 on the organisation of working time.

22. As the Court also noted in Simap , (7) it is clear both from the object of Directive 89/391, namely to encourage improvements in the safety and health of workers at work, and from the wording of Article 2(1) thereof, that it must necessarily be broad in scope. It follows that the exceptions, including that provided for in Article 2(2), must be interpreted restrictively.

23. Usually, civil protection is a public service whose principal aim is to ensure the safety of people and property in situations involving a serious risk to the public, disasters and major catastrophes, where the safety and the lives of individuals could be in danger.

24. The aim of an urgent medical assistance service provided by doctors and rescue workers in ambulances, such as that which is operated by the Red Cross in the main proceedings, is to provide first aid to patients and to transport them in the right conditions to receive the medical treatment they need. Civil protection is intended to deal with general emergencies and it does not, therefore, include the activity carried out by the above medical service under normal circumstances.

25. In the event of a catastrophe or disaster, the public authorities supply the human and material resources available to them, while also relying on organisations and undertakings, and even on individuals, should the need arise. In such exceptional circumstances, there can be no doubt that any ambulance service would be under an obligation to contribute its manpower and equipment to civil protection duties.

26. To my mind, the exclusion of certain specific civil protection service activities from the scope of the directive can be attributed to a number of reasons. The first is the diversity and magnitude of emergency situations, of the needs they generate and of the human and material resources which must be mobilised in a short space of time. The second is that the activity of the civil protection services is performed using the organisation, planning, coordination and management systems of a number of public and private services, vis-à-vis the danger to be tackled. The third reason is that the civil protection services are entitled to call upon all the residents of a country to perform individual tasks, and they may also request the participation of the security services, the emergency medical assistance services, the public and private fire services, and even the media.

Those features highlight not only the unforeseeable nature of the activities of the civil protection services, but also the fact that the majority of people who are called upon to participate in the event of a disaster are employed in undertakings which rescue and assist people and recover property. When such people take part in a rescue operation, they perform the tasks for which they are qualified, in accordance with the measures for the protection against and prevention of risks which have been adopted in their undertaking pursuant to national legislation implementing Directive 89/391. Finally, since, in the majority of cases, the civil protection services do not operate in the same way as employee-based structures, it is logical that they should not fall within the scope of a directive designed to encourage improvements in the safety and health of workers.

27. As I have already pointed out, the scope ratione materiae of Directive 89/391 is very wide, and, under normal circumstances, includes the activity of the Red Cross, namely the provision of ambulance-based emergency medical assistance. Where, in the event of a national catastrophe or disaster, the Red Cross is called upon to assist by the civil protection services, Red Cross employees are required to perform the same, or similar, tasks as those which they normally carry out; accordingly, the obligations relating to the safety and health of workers, laid down in Directive 89/391, remain unchanged. Therefore, it cannot be claimed that characteristics peculiar to that activity inevitably conflict with the application of the directive to it.

Consequently, the disputed activity falls within the scope of Directive 89/391, both under normal circumstances and in cases where, in the event of a catastrophe, the Red Cross assists the civil protection services.

28. As concerns the material scope of Directive 93/104, I note that, apart from sectors which provide certain forms of transport, and carry out fishing and maritime activities, the only other exclusion applies to the work of doctors in training. (8)

Since the activity of rescue workers in an emergency medical assistance service is not included among the exclusions laid down, Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 and Article 2 of Directive 89/391 must be construed as meaning that such activity falls within the scope of both directives.

B - The second part of the first question

29. The Arbeitsgericht goes on to consider the concept of road transport in Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104, in so far as it is excluded from the scope of the directive, in order to ascertain whether that sector includes the activity of an emergency rescue service which consists, at least in part, of driving vehicles and attending to patients during the journey.

30. The Court ruled on the aim of Directive 93/104 in BECTU , (9) noting that it is clear both from Article 118a of the Treaty, (10) which is its legal basis, and from the first, fourth, seventh and eighth recitals in its preamble, as well as the wording of Article 1(1), that the purpose of the directive is to lay down minimum requirements intended to improve the living and working conditions of workers through approximation of national provisions concerning, in particular, the duration of working time. The Court went on to say that harmonisation at Community level is intended to guarantee better protection of the health and safety of workers, so that they are entitled to minimum rest periods and adequate breaks.

31. Thus, Directive 93/104 sets out the minimum health and safety requirements for the organisation of working time, which apply to minimum periods of daily and weekly rest, annual leave, breaks, and maximum weekly working time, as well as to certain aspects of night work, shift work and patterns of work.

32. In my view, road transport is excluded from the scope of Directive 93/104 because, when the directive was adopted, there was already Community legislation in place containing more specific rules for the organisation of working time and working conditions in that sector.

I refer specifically to Regulation (EEC) No 3820/85 (11) which governs various social aspects of road transport, such as driving periods, breaks and rest periods, and which excludes carriage by vehicles used in emergency or rescue operations, which, to my mind, includes ambulances. (12)

33. The Court examined the extent of the exclusion of road transport activities from the scope of Directive 93/104 in Bowden and Others , (13) stating that, by referring to air, rail, road, sea, inland waterway and lake transport', the Community legislature indicated that it was taking account of those sectors of activity as a whole, whereas in the case of other work at sea' and the activities of doctors in training' it chose to refer precisely to those specific activities as such'. (14) Therefore, the exclusion of the road transport sector in particular extends to all workers in that sector.

As the Commission points out, in that judgment the Court took into account the activity of the employer but did not assess the activity carried out by the employees of the undertaking. If an undertaking belongs to one of the sectors in the list which the Court concluded were referred to as a whole', for example the road transport sector, then all the employees of that undertaking are excluded from the scope of Directive 93/104.

34. The activity carried out by the Red Cross, which employs rescue workers to provide medical assistance at the place where the patient is located and to transport the patient by ambulance to a hospital to receive the treatment he needs, is not included in the road transport sector, regardless of the fact that carriage is by land, in the same way that carriage by light aircraft or helicopter in the most critical cases cannot be classified as air transport.

35. However, the German court questions the treatment to be accorded to transport by ambulance in the light of the judgment delivered in Tögel , (15) in which the Court ruled that aspects of the transport of injured and sick persons with a nurse in attendance come within Annex I A, Category No 2, to Directive 92/50/EEC (16) relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts.

36. I do not consider that ruling to be conclusive as regards the definition of the scope of Directive 93/104 on the organisation of working time.

37. Directive 92/50 provides for two-tier application, depending on whether the service is included in the list in Annex I A or in the list in Annex I B. The contracts listed in Annex I A are awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI, while those in Annex I B must comply with the rules set out in Articles 14 and 16. Where the services feature in both lists the procedure is determined by reference to their value.

In Tögel , the disputed services were listed in both Annex I A, Category 2 (land transport services), and in Annex I B, Category 25 (health and social services), which was why the Court found that the contract could be governed by either procedure, depending upon whether the value of the services under Annex I A was higher or lower than the value of the services under Annex I B.

38. However, the case before the Court is not concerned with ascertaining the correct procedure to use in the award of a public service contract, and therefore Directive 92/50 and the case-law relating to its interpretation are not applicable.

39. For the reasons set out, it should be held that the concept of road transport in Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 does not include the activity of an emergency rescue service which consists, at least in part, of driving vehicles and attending to patients during the journey.

C - The second question

40. Next, the Arbeitsgericht asks whether, under Article 18(1)(b)(i), first indent, of Directive 93/104, the extension of weekly working time to more than 48 hours requires the express agreement of the employee, or whether, alternatively, it will suffice if the employee has agreed to the working conditions laid down by collective agreements which, in turn, permit the extension of weekly working time to more than 48 hours on average.

41. Under the provision in question, Member States are entitled not to apply Article 6 of Directive 93/104, which refers to maximum weekly working time, provided that they respect the general principles of the protection of the safety and health of workers, and provided that they take the necessary measures to ensure that no employer requires a worker to work more than 48 hours over a seven-day period, calculated as an average for the reference period referred to in point 2 of Article 16, without that worker's consent.

42. As the Court noted in Simap , (17) the wording of the first indent of Article 18(1)(b)(i) requires the consent of the worker. If the intention of the Community legislature had been to replace the worker's consent by that of a trade union in the context of a collective agreement, Article 6 of Directive 93/104 would have been included in the list in Article 17(3) of the directive of those articles from which derogations may be made by a collective agreement or agreement between the two sides of industry.

43. The Arbeitsgericht also wishes to clarify whether it is enough that the employee has given his consent to the application of a collective agreement which grants the employer the power, under certain circumstances, to extend the weekly working time beyond the maximum of 48 hours on average per seven-day period, including overtime, laid down in Article 6 of Directive 93/104.

44. In my opinion, the reply must be in the negative for a number of reasons. First, because, from an employee's point of view, there is an important difference between extending the weekly working time beyond the maximum laid down in Directive 93/104 and the duty to work overtime at the request of the employer, which is liable to prolong the normal working hours or working week.

45. As regards the second situation, the Court has ruled that Article 2(2)(i) of Directive 91/533/EEC on an employer's obligation to inform employees of the conditions applicable to the contract or employment relationship, (18) referring as it does to normal working hours, is not concerned with overtime, the characteristic feature of which is that it is performed outside normal working hours and is additional thereto. However, the employer must notify the employee of any term of the employment contract or employment relationship pursuant to which the employee is required to work overtime. That information must be notified under the same conditions as those laid down for the essential elements of the contract expressly mentioned in Article 2(2) of the directive. It may, where appropriate, by analogy with the provisions of Article 2(3) of the directive concerning normal working hours, take the form of a reference to the relevant laws, regulations and administrative or statutory provisions or collective agreements. (19)

46. That option does not arise, however, where the employer proposes to alter the normal working time for each week, so that the working hours consistently exceed the maximum period which Article 6 of Directive 93/104 prescribes with a view to protecting the safety and health of workers. Member States which opt not to apply that provision undertake to fulfil the obligations imposed on them by Article 18(1)(b)(i) of the same directive.

47. The second reason why the reply to the question should be in the negative is that the condition requiring a worker's agreement is not the only condition which must be fulfilled under Article 18(1)(b)(i) in order for Article 6 not to apply. It must be recalled that the primary aim of Directive 93/104 is to safeguard the health and safety of workers, who are the most vulnerable party in an employment relationship. Quite rightly, in order to prevent an employer from obtaining from an employee, through subterfuge or intimidation, a waiver of that employee's right not to have his weekly working time extended beyond the maximum laid down, a whole series of guarantees are attached to the employee's consent; namely that the employee concerned must not be subjected to any detriment because he does not agree to work in excess of 48 hours per week under the conditions set out, that the employer must keep up-to-date records of all workers who carry out such work and whose working hours exceed the weekly maximum, that the records must be placed at the disposal of the competent authorities, and that the employer must provide the competent authorities, at their request, with information on cases in which consent has been given by workers.

The mere reference to a collective agreement in the employment contract, in the circumstances described by the Arbeitsgericht, does not fulfil those conditions.

48. The final reason why the question must receive a negative reply is that it is clear from the wording of Article 18(1)(b)(i) that the option not to apply Article 6 is not a power which is granted to the two sides of industry or to the parties to an employment contract, but rather to the Member States, who must comply with the general principles of the protection of the safety and health of workers and take the necessary measures to guarantee the result pursued, namely that consent must be express, informed and free, that a refusal to give consent must not result in any detriment, that a written record of the agreement must be kept, and that the information must be made available to the competent authorities.

49. Therefore, it is my view that Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104 requires Member States who opt not to apply Article 6 to take all steps necessary to ensure the achievement of certain results, which include the guarantee that no employer may require an employee to work, without that employee's consent, for more than 48 hours on average over each seven-day period. Acceptance by an employee in his contract that the working conditions are those provided for in collective agreements, which, in turn, permit the weekly working time to be extended, on average, beyond the threshold, does not constitute validly given consent for those purposes.

D - The third question

50. By this question, the German court seeks to ascertain whether the wording of Article 6 of Directive 93/104 is sufficiently precise and unconditional to enable individuals to rely on it before national courts in the event that the provisions of the directive have not been transposed into national law.

51. The Court has consistently held that, (20) whenever the provisions of a directive appear, as far as their subject-matter is concerned, to be unconditional and sufficiently precise, those provisions may be relied on by individuals against the State where that State fails to implement the directive in national law within the prescribed period or where it fails to implement it correctly. A Community provision is unconditional where it is not qualified by any condition, or subject, in its implementation or effects, to the taking of any measure either by the institutions of the Community or by the Member States. (21) A Community provision is sufficiently precise to be relied upon by an individual and applied by a court where it imposes an obligation in unequivocal terms. (22)

52. Article 6 of Directive 93/104 requires the Member States to take the measures necessary to ensure that, in order to meet the need to protect the safety and health of workers, the period of weekly working time is limited so that it does not exceed 48 hours on average for each seven-day period, including overtime.

The provision is drafted clearly and precisely and it does not, in principle, allow the Member States any leeway when implementing the provision in national law.

53. It must be borne in mind, however, that for the purposes of calculating the average working time, Article 16(2) provides that the reference period must not exceed four months, although, under Article 17(4), it can extend to six or 12 months.

In that connection, the Court ruled in Simap (23) that even if those provisions of Directive 93/104 leave the Member States a degree of latitude regarding the reference period for the purposes of applying Article 6, that does not alter its precise and unconditional nature, since that degree of latitude does not make it impossible to determine minimum rights. The Court went on to say that it is clear from the terms of Article 17(4) of the directive that the reference period may not exceed 12 months and that it is therefore possible to determine the minimum protection which must be provided.

54. In the light of that interpretation by the Court, even in cases where Member States derogate from the reference period laid down in Article 16(2), Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104 is clear, precise and unconditional. In addition, Article 6(2) grants rights to individuals, and, accordingly, it may be relied upon before national courts where a Member State has not implemented it correctly within the prescribed period. (24)

55. Under Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104, Member States have the right not to apply Article 6, from which it follows that individuals are not always in a position to rely on the direct effect of the provision.

However, in order to exercise that option, the Member States must comply with the general principles of the protection of the safety and health of workers and must also take the measures necessary to achieve the specific results listed. It is for the national court to establish whether the Member State has exercised that power and whether the conditions laid down in Article 18(1)(b)(i) have been met. (25)

56. It is well-known that the Court has consistently refused to recognise that an individual may rely on a directive against another individual where that directive has not been correctly implemented by a State within the relevant period, ruling that, under Article 249 EC, the binding nature of a directive, which constitutes the basis for the possibility of relying on the directive before a national court, exists only in relation to each Member State to which it is addressed', from which it follows that a directive may not of itself impose obligations on an individual and that it may not therefore be relied on against that individual. (26)

57. In accordance with that case-law, the fact that the main proceedings involve disputes between individuals means that the employees are not entitled to invoke the direct effect of Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104. (27)

58. The Court has ruled, (28) in similar cases, that when applying national law, whether adopted before or after the directive, the national court that has to interpret that law must do so, as far as possible, in the light of the wording and the purpose of the directive so as to achieve the result it has in view and thereby comply with the third paragraph of Article 249 EC. Where it is seised of a dispute falling within the scope of a directive and arising from facts postdating the expiry of the period for transposing that directive, the national court must interpret the provisions of national law in such a way that they are applied in conformity with the aims of the directive.

Where it is impossible to provide an interpretation which conforms to the directive concerned, the national court must ensure the full effectiveness of Community law by setting aside on its own authority, where appropriate, any conflicting provisions of national law. The national court is not obliged to request or await the actual setting aside by the legislative authorities or by means of any other constitutional process. (29)

59. It is clear from the matters set out above that, where a Member State has not exercised the option envisaged in Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104, Article 6(2) of that directive precludes a provision, such as Article 7(1)(1)(a) of the German Law on working time, which allows for the extension of working hours beyond 10 hours, in a collective agreement or works agreement, where working time includes regular, significant periods of stand-by duty.

Accordingly, Article 14 of the German Red Cross Collective Agreement must be construed as meaning that, in so far as it is based on Article 7 above, the workers to whom it applies are not obliged to work in excess of 48 hours per week on average, having regard to the provisions of Article 16(2) and Article 17(4) of Directive 93/104 on the setting of the reference period for calculation of the average.

VIII - Conclusion

60. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court should give the following replies to the questions referred by the Arbeitsgericht Lörrach:

(1) (a) Article 1(3) of Council Directive 93/104/EEC of 23 November 1993 concerning certain aspects of the organisation of working time and Article 2 of Council Directive 89/391/EEC of 12 June 1989 on the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the safety and health of workers at work must be construed as meaning that the activity of rescue workers working in an emergency medical assistance service falls within the scope of both directives.

(1) (b) The concept of road transport in Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 does not include the activity of an emergency rescue service which consists, at least in part, of driving vehicles and attending to patients during the journey.

(2) Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104 requires Member States who opt not to apply Article 6 to take all steps necessary to ensure that no employer may require an employee to work, without that employee's consent, for more than 48 hours on average over each seven-day period. Acceptance by an employee in his contract that the working conditions are those provided for in collective agreements which, in turn, permit the weekly working time to be extended, on average, beyond that threshold, does not constitute validly given consent for those purposes.

(3) Even in cases where Member States derogate from the reference period laid down in Article 16(2), Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104 is clear, precise and unconditional. In addition, Article 6(2) grants rights to individuals, and, accordingly, it may be relied upon before national courts where a Member State has not implemented it correctly within the prescribed period. However, in view of the fact that the main proceedings involve disputes between individuals, the employees may not invoke the direct effect of the provision.

Where a Member State has not exercised the option envisaged in Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104, Article 6(2) of that directive precludes a provision, such as Article 7(1)(1)(a) of the German Law on working time, which allows for the extension of working hours to more than 10 hours in a collective agreement or works agreement, where working time includes regular, significant periods of stand-by duty. Accordingly, Article 14 of the Collective Agreement on Working Conditions for German Red Cross Employees, Workers and Trainees must be construed as meaning that, in so far as it is based on Article 7 above, the workers to whom it applies are not obliged to work in excess of 48 hours per week on average, having regard to the provisions of Article 16(2) and Article 17(4) of Directive 93/104 on the setting of the reference period for calculation of the average.

See the Opinion which I delivered in that case on 8 April 2003.

Academic opinion has been rather critical of that case-law. See, for example, Tridimas, T., Horizontal effect of directives: a missed opportunity', European Law Review , 1994, p. 621 et seq., particularly p. 635; Turnbull, E., The ECJ Rejects Horizontal Direct Effect of Directives', European Business Law Review , 1994, p. 230 et seq., particularly p. 233; Vilà Costa, B., Revista Jurídica de Catalunya , 1995, p. 264 et seq., particularly p. 269; Bernard, N., The Direct Effect of Directives: Retreating from Marshall', Industrial Law Journal , 1994, p. 97 et seq., particularly p. 99; Turner, S., Horizontal Direct Enforcement of Directives Rejected', Northern Ireland Legal Quarterly , 1995, p. 244 et seq., particularly p. 246; Emmert, F. and Pereira de Azevedo, M., Les jeux sont faits: rien ne va plus ou une nouvelle occasion perdue pour la CJCE', Revue trimestrielle de droit européen , p. 11 et seq., particularly p. 19; Betlem, G., Medium Hard Law - Still No Horizontal Direct Effect of European Community Directives After Faccini Dori', The Columbia Journal of European Law , 1995, p. 469 et seq., particularly p. 488; Regaldo, F., Il caso Faccini Dori: una occasione perduta?', Rivista di diritto civile , 1996, p. 65 et seq., particularly p. 110; and Antoniolli Deflorian, L., Il formante giurisprudenziale e la competizioni fra il sistema comunitario e gli ordinamenti interni: la svolta inefficiente di Faccini Dori', Rivista critica di diritto privato , 1995, p. 735 et seq., particularly p. 749.

(27) - It must be pointed out that Advocate General Lenz, in the Opinion he delivered in Faccini Dori , expressed his conviction that, for the future, it was necessary to recognise, in the context of the development of case-law based on the EC Treaty and in the interests of uniform, effective application of Community law, the general applicability of precise, unconditional provisions in directives in order to respond to the legitimate expectations nurtured by citizens of the Union following the achievement of the internal market and the entry into force of the Treaty on European Union. Opinion of Mr Advocate General Geelhoed delivered on 10 October 2002 Gesellschaft für Abfallentsorgungs-Technik GmbH (GAT) v Osterreichische Autobahnen und Schnellstraßen AG (OSAG). Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesvergabeamt - Austria. Public contracts - Directive 89/665/EEC - Review procedures concerning the award of public contracts - Power of the body responsible for review procedures to consider infringements of its own motion - Directive 93/36/EEC- Procedures for the award of public supply contracts - Selection criteria - Award criteria. Case C-315/01.

I Introduction

1. This request for a preliminary ruling from the Austrian Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Procurement Office) concerns the interpretation of certain articles of Directive 89/665/EEC (2) and Directive 93/36/EEC. (3) More specifically, it concerns the question whether in proceedings concerning the award of public contracts the review body may take into account, of its own volition and independently of the submissions of the parties, facts and circumstances which it considers to be relevant to the assessment of the lawfulness of the contract award procedure. The requesting court also wishes to know whether a decision taken by the review body of its own volition in this way can have implications for the applicant's standing to submit a claim for damages because of irregularities in the award of the contract. Questions are also asked about the admissibility of a number of criteria applied during the contract award procedure in the main proceedings.

II Legislative background

A Community law

2. Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 as amended by Article 41 of Directive 92/50 provides:

> "The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law."

3. Article 2(1), (6) and (8) of Directive 89/665 provides:

> "1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:
> (b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;
> (c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.
> ...
> 6. The effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law.
> Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.

8. Where bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character, written reasons for their decisions shall always be given. Furthermore, in such a case, provision must be made to guarantee procedures whereby any allegedly illegal measure taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the EEC Treaty [now Article 234 EC] and independent of both the contracting authority and the review body.

The members of such an independent body shall be appointed and leave office under the same conditions as members of the judiciary as regards the authority responsible for their appointment, their period of office, and their removal. At least the President of this independent body shall have the same legal and professional qualifications as members of the judiciary. The independent body shall take its decisions following a procedure in which both sides are heard, and these decisions shall, by means determined by each Member State, be legally binding.

4. Article 15(1) of Directive 93/36, which forms part of Chapter 1 (Common rules on participation) of Title IV, provides:

"Contracts shall be awarded on the basis for the criteria laid down in Chapter 3 of this Title, taking into account Article 16, after the suitability of the suppliers not excluded under Article 20 has been checked by the contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing and of technical capacity referred to in Articles 22, 23 and 24."

5. Article 23(1) of Directive 93/36, which forms part of Chapter 2 (Criteria for qualitative selection) of Title IV, provides:

"Evidence of the supplier's technical capacity may be furnished by one or more of the following means according to the nature, quantity and purpose of the products to be supplied:

(a) a list of the principal deliveries effected in the past three years, with the sums, dates and recipients, public or private, involved:

where effected to public authorities, evidence to be in the form of certificates issued or countersigned by the competent authority; where effected to private purchasers, delivery to be certified by the purchaser or, failing this, simply declared by the supplier to have been effected;

...

(d) samples, descriptions and/or photographs of the products to be supplied, the authenticity of which must be certified if the contracting authority so requests;

...

6. Article 26(1) of Directive 93/36, which forms part of Chapter 3 (Criteria for the award of contracts) of Title IV, provides:

"The criteria on which the contracting authority shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) either the lowest price only;

(b) or, when award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract in question: eg price, delivery date, running costs, cost-effectiveness, quality, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical merit, after-sales service and technical assistance.

B National law

7. Both Directive 93/36 and Directive 89/665 were transposed into Austrian law by the Bundesvergabegesetz (4) (Federal Procurement Law; hereinafter "BVergG").

8. Paragraph 113 of this law provides:

"1. The Bundesvergabeamt is responsible on application for carrying out a review procedure in accordance with the following provisions.

2. To preclude infringements of this Federal Law and of the regulations implementing it, the Bundesvergabeamt is authorised until the time of the award:

(1) to adopt interim measures and

(2) to set aside unlawful decisions of the contracting authority.

3. After the award of the contract or the close of the contract award procedure, the Bundesvergabeamt is competent to determine whether, on grounds of infringement of this Federal Law or of any regulations issued under it, the contract has not been awarded to the best tenderer.

9. Paragraph 115(1) and (5) provides:

"1. Where an undertaking claims to have an interest in the conclusion of a contract within the scope of this Federal Law, it may apply for the contracting authority's decision in the contract award procedure to be reviewed on the ground of unlawfulness, provided that it has been or risks being harmed by the alleged infringement.

5. The application shall contain:

(1) an exact designation of the contract award procedure concerned and of the contested decision,

10. Pursuant to Paragraph II(2), C, point 40a, of the Einführungsgesetz zu den Verwaltungsverfahrensgesetzen (Introductory Law to the Laws on Administrative Procedure) 1991, the Allgemeines Verwaltungsverfahrensgesetz (General Law on Administrative Procedure; hereinafter "AVG") 1991 applies to the administrative procedure adopted by the Bundesvergabeamt.

11. Paragraph 39(1) and (2) of the Allgemeines Verwaltungsverfahrengesetz 1991 provides:

"1. The evaluation procedure shall be governed by the provisions of administrative law.

2. In so far as the administrative provisions do not cover a matter, the authority shall proceed ex proprio motu and shall determine the procedure for the evaluation subject to the provisions contained in this Part.

III Facts of the main action and proceedings

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

12. On 2 March 2000 the Autobahnmeisterei (Motorway Authority) for St Michael/Lungau issued an invitation to tender on behalf of Osterreichische Autobahnen- und Schnellstraßen-Aktiengesellschaft (OSAG), as the issuing authority, for the supply of a "special motor vehicle: new, ready-to-use and officially approved road sweeper for the A9 Phyrn motorway, delivery to the Motorway Authority for Kalwang" in an open European procedure.

13. The tender period opened on 25 April 2000. The applicant in the main action, GAT Gesellschaft für Abfallentsorgungs-Technik GmbH (hereinafter "GAT"), submitted a tender as general agent for Austria of the German manufacturer Bucher-Schörling at a price of ATS 3 547 020 excluding value added tax, and there were four other tenderers. The tender submitted by the firm OAF & Steyr was ATS 4 174 290 net, while that of another tenderer came to ATS 4 168 690, excluding value added tax.

14. Point B.1.13 of the conditions in the invitation to tender, entitled "Tender Evaluation", provided:

"B.1.13 Tender Evaluation

The determination of which tender is technically and economically the most advantageous shall be made in accordance with the best tenderer principle. It is a fundamental condition that the vehicles tendered satisfy the conditions in the invitation to tender.

The evaluation shall be carried out as follows:

Tenders shall be evaluated in each case by reference to the best tenderer and points shall be calculated relative to the best tenderer.

(2) Other criteria

A maximum of 100 points shall be awarded for other criteria, and shall count for 20% of the overall evaluation.

2.1. Reference list of road sweeper vehicle customers in the geographical area comprising the part of the Alps within the European Union (references to be provided in German): weighting 20 points

Evaluation formula:

The highest number of customers divided by the next highest number and multiplied by 20 points.

15. On 16 May 2000 the contracting authority eliminated GAT's tender on the ground that that tender did not comply with the conditions in the invitation to tender inasmuch as the pavement cleaning machine tendered could be operated only down to temperatures of 0°C, whereas the invitation to tender had required a minimum operating temperature of -5°C. In addition, despite a request by the contracting authority, the applicant had not arranged for the machine to be inspected within a 300 kilometre radius of the authority issuing the invitation to tender, as required therein. Furthermore, the contracting authority doubted that the price in the applicant's tender was plausible. In addition, despite a request by the contracting authority, the applicant had not provided a sufficient explanation of the technical specifications concerning cleaning of the reflectors of the machine it had tendered.

16. In accordance with the award proposal of 31 July 2000, OAF & Steyr Nutzfahrzeuge OHG was awarded the contract by letter of 23 August 2000. By letters of 12 July 2000, the other tenderers were notified that a decision had been taken regarding the recipient of the award. GAT was informed by letter of 17 July 2000 that its tender had been eliminated, and by letter of 5 October 2000 it was notified of the identity of the recipient of the award and the contract price.

17. On 17 November 2000 the applicant applied for a declaration that the award in the contract award procedure had not been made to the best tenderer and argued that its tender had been eliminated unlawfully. The technical description included in its tender of the reflector cleaning had been sufficient for an expert. In addition, the contracting authority had been invited to inspect the factory of the applicant's supplier. GAT also contended that the award condition imposed by the contracting authority consisting of "the opportunity to inspect the subject of the invitation to tender within a 300 kilometre radius of the authority issuing the invitation to tender" contravened Community law because it constituted indirect discrimination. The contracting authority was required to accept any products within Europe that could be used as a reference. In addition, that criterion could be used only as an award criterion and not as a selection criterion, which was how the contracting authority had subsequently wrongly used it. It also pointed out that, although it was true that the basic version of the road sweeper it had tendered could be used only at temperatures down to 0°C, the contracting authority had reserved the right to purchase an additional option. The additional option tendered by the applicant would operate at -5°C, as required in the invitation to tender. Finally, its tender was not at an implausible price. The applicant had been able to give an adequate explanation of its low price to the contracting authority.

IV Questions submitted for a preliminary ruling

18. As the Bundesvergabeamt considers a ruling by the Court to be necessary, by order of 11 July 2001, the Bundesvergabeamt referred the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

> "1a. Is Article 2(8) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, or any other provision of that directive or any other provision of Community law to be interpreted as meaning that an authority responsible for carrying out review procedures within the meaning of Article 1(1) of that directive, including the exercise of the powers referred to in Article 2(1)(c) thereof, is precluded from taking into account, of its own motion and independently of the submissions of the parties to the review procedure, those circumstances relevant under the law governing contract award procedures which the authority responsible for carrying out review procedures considers material to its decision in a review procedure?

1b. Is Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665/EEC, if necessary considered in conjunction with other principles of Community law, to be interpreted as meaning that an authority responsible for carrying out review procedures within the meaning of Article 1(1) of that directive, including the exercise of the powers referred to in Article 2(1)(c) thereof, is precluded from dismissing an application by a tenderer that is indirectly aimed at obtaining damages, where the contract award procedure is already tainted by a material legal infringement attributable to a decision taken by the contracting authority, other than the decision being contested by that tenderer, on the ground that if the contested decision had not been taken the tenderer would none the less have been harmed for other reasons?

2. If Question 1a is answered in the negative: Is Directive 93/36/EEC coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, in particular Articles 15 to 26 thereof, to be interpreted as prohibiting a public contracting authority conducting contract award procedures from taking account of references relating to the products offered by tenderers not as proof of the tenderers' suitability but to satisfy an award criterion, such that the fact that those references are given a negative evaluation would not exclude the tenderer from the contract award procedure but would merely result in the tender receiving a lower evaluation, for example under a points system in which poor evaluation of references might be offset by a lower price?

3. If Questions 1a and 2 are answered in the negative: Is it compatible with the relevant provisions of Community law, including Article 26 of Directive 93/36/EEC, the principle of equal treatment and the obligations of the Communities under international law for an award criterion to provide that product references are to be evaluated on the basis of the number of references alone, there being no substantive examination as to whether contracting authorities' experiences of the product have been good or bad, and, moreover, that only references from the geographical area comprising the part of the Alps within the European Union are to be taken into account?

4. Is it compatible with Community law, in particular the principle of equal treatment, for an award criterion to permit opportunities to inspect examples of the subject of the invitation to tender to receive a positive evaluation only if available within a 300 kilometre radius of the authority issuing the invitation to tender?

5. If Question 2 is answered in the affirmative, or Question 3 or 4 in the negative: Is Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665/EEC, if necessary considered in conjunction with other principles of Community law, to be interpreted as meaning that if the contracting authority's infringement consists in imposing an unlawful award criterion, the tenderer will be entitled to damages only if he can actually prove that, but for the unlawful award criterion, he would have submitted the best tender?

V Assessment

19. In this procedure written observations have been submitted to the Court by GAT, the Austrian Government and the Commission. Both the Commission and the Austrian Government have disputed the admissibility of the questions. This is the first aspect to be considered below.

A Jurisdiction of the Bundesvergabeamt to submit questions for a preliminary ruling

20. The Commission raises the question whether the questions are admissible, since the decisions of the Bundesvergabeamt have no legal force. It refers to the comments it has made in Case C-314/00 Siemens and Arge , which is pending before the Court. In that case the Commission observes that, although the Bundesvergabeamt satisfies the criteria of a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC, as defined by the Court in its case-law, it doubts that the Bundesvergabeamt's rulings have any legal force. In this connection it refers to the case-law in which the Court has ruled that a national court may refer a question to the Court only if there is a case pending before it and if it is called upon to give judgment in proceedings intended to lead to a decision of a judicial nature. In particular, the Commission refers to Cases C-134/97 Victoria Film A/S (5) and C-178/99 Salzmann . (6) The Commission doubts that the rulings have legal force because the referring court in Case C-314/00 pointed out that the order made by the Bundesvergabeamt did not constitute an enforceable order to the contracting authority within the meaning of Paragraph 113(2), subparagraph 2, BVergG. In these circumstances the Commission does not exclude the possibility that the decisions of the Bundesvergabeamt are not of a judicial nature.

B Admissibility of the questions submitted for a preliminary ruling

21. The Austrian Government takes the view that Questions 1a and 5 are inadmissible. It believes that it can be inferred from the order of reference that these questions were raised in a procedure based on Paragraph 113(3) BVergG. According to the Austrian Government, this procedure is not a review procedure within the meaning of Directive 89/665 but an assessment procedure. In this connection the Austrian Government explains that the legislature had exercised the option offered by the second sentence of Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 to stipulate that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, only damages could be claimed. The Austrian Government explains that the Bundesvergabeamt is competent to conduct review procedures within the meaning of the directive. However, it had not been granted the powers referred to in Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665. On the basis of Paragraph 113(3) the Bundesvergabeamt must confine itself, after the conclusion of the contract, to determining whether or not procurement law has been infringed (for a similar provision see Paragraph 117(3) BVergG). This task was assigned to the Bundesvergabeamt to simplify procedures. For one thing, the Bundesvergabeamt, being the competent authority in the field of public contracts, is best suited to this task. In addition, possible divergences in the administration of justice, unnecessary legal costs and lengthy legal proceedings can be avoided in this way. For the award of damages, however, a civil court is the competent body. The assessment procedure before the Bundesvergabeamt should precede any action for damages in a civil court, because the claim would otherwise be inadmissible pursuant to Paragraph 125(2) BVergG. This provision also stipulates that the parties and the civil courts are bound by the Bundesvergabeamt's assessment. According to the Austrian Government, it follows from the foregoing that the assessment procedure is not a procedure within the meaning of Directive 89/665 and that answers to Questions 1a and 5 are not therefore needed for a ruling in the main action.

C Opinion

22. The Commission does not deny that the Bundesvergabeamt meets the criteria of a court or tribunal developed by the Court in previous case-law. However, it raises the question whether the decisions of the Bundesvergabeamt lead to a decision of a judicial nature. The Austrian Government, on the other hand, limits the plea of inadmissibility to two of the questions submitted, Questions 1a and 5. It believes that the Bundesvergabeamt does not need answers to these questions to be able to reach a decision. Those questions concerned, after all, matters which did not fall within the responsibilities of this body.

23. In the following I will first consider the plea entered by the Commission. I can be brief in this respect. There is no disputing that a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC is involved here. The Court has already accepted this (implicitly) on several occasions. (7) The question whether the decisions of the Bundesvergabeamt are often also of a judicial nature was recently considered in the Opinion delivered by Advocate General Mischo in Felix Swoboda . (8) He rightly says that a body may indeed issue decisions of a judicial nature even if it does not have the power to issue enforceable judicial directions. To illustrate this, he points out that the Court itself does not have such power, except in interlocutory proceedings. I agree with this view. As observed in that Opinion, although the Bundesvergabeamt does not have the capacity to issue enforceable directions to the contracting authorities, it has the power to annul their decisions and the measures it takes in this respect are binding. The case in which Advocate General Mischo delivered his Opinion similarly concerned a situation in which the Bundesvergabeamt was no longer able to set aside the decision of the contracting authority because the contract had already been concluded and under Austrian law the only course of action then remaining was to claim damages. In that situation the Bundesvergabeamt is left, pursuant to Paragraph 113(3) BVergG, with the power to determine whether the contract has been awarded to the best tenderer. A decision of this kind is not unimportant. Firstly, it is evident from Paragraph 125(2) BVergG that such a procedure before the Bundesvergabeamt is necessary since a subsequent action for damages in a civil court would otherwise be inadmissible. Secondly, the parties and the civil court are bound by the opinion of the Bundesvergabeamt. I therefore agree with Advocate General Mischo's conclusion that the Bundesvergabeamt, being a judicial body, has the authority to submit questions for a preliminary ruling.

24. It then needs to be considered whether all the questions submitted are admissible, as this is disputed by the Austrian Government. Austria states that the assessment procedures are not review procedures within the meaning of Directive 89/665. I cannot share this view.

25. It is evident from the structure of the Austrian legislation that the powers defined in Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of the directive have been assigned to the Bundesvergabeamt while the power defined in Article 2(1)(c) has been assigned to the civil courts. In this division of tasks the Austrian legislature has applied Article 2(2) of the directive. Austria then exercised the option offered by Article 2(6) of the directive. That provision permits the Member States to opt to restrict the powers of the body responsible for review procedures to awarding damages to anyone harmed by an infringement if the contract has already been concluded following its award.

26. The directive requires the Member States to provide for powers relating to interlocutory procedures, procedures for setting aside decisions and procedures for the award of damages. The fact that within the framework of procedures for the award of damages the Austrian legislature has provided in its national law for a two-stage procedure (what the Austrian Government calls the assessment procedure before the Bundesvergabeamt and the actual procedure for the award of damages in a civil court) does not preclude the Bundesvergabeamt's power to submit questions for a preliminary ruling, especially as the civil courts are bound by the Bundesvergabeamt's decisions. The procedures are thus closely linked. It would be contrary to the proper purpose of the directive for the Bundesvergabeamt to be unable to submit questions for a preliminary ruling in what the Austrian Government terms an assessment procedure.

27. It follows from the system of Austrian legislation, after all, that the Bundesvergabeamt determines whether the requirements arising from the directives on the award of public works and supply contracts have been satisfied. Its assessment, as already indicated above, has legal consequences since it forms the basis for determining whether an action for damages may be brought in a civil court. As the Bundesvergabeamt's decisions have legal consequences, questions may be duly submitted for a preliminary ruling within the framework of the assessment procedure, in which, it should be noted, it has to be considered whether Community law on public works and supply contracts or the national legislation transposing Community law has been infringed.

28. I cannot therefore share the Austrian Government's position that the first question submitted is irrelevant. It is this very body which is required to determine whether an infringement has occurred. It has an interest in knowing whether it may, ex proprio motu , include in the case aspects which have not been submitted by the parties. The situation is different where the fifth question is concerned. It asks when a tenderer is entitled to damages. Under Austrian law this is a matter for a civil court. Whether there is entitlement to damages in this particular case is therefore a question which should be answered by that court in accordance with its national law.

29. I therefore conclude that the Austrian Bundesvergabeamt has the authority to submit questions for a preliminary ruling and that, with the exception of Question 5, all the questions submitted by this body are admissible.

VI Merits

A Question 1a

30. By this question the requesting court is seeking to determine whether the consideration ex proprio motu of circumstances relevant to the contract award procedure is inconsistent with Article 2(8) of the directive or with any other provision of the directive or of Community law.

31. In the order for reference the Bundesvergabeamt explains that Paragraph 39(2) AVG requires it to take a decision ex proprio motu and therefore to examine whether award criteria other than those contested by the applicant are lawful. If it emerges that other criteria are also unlawful, the review may be rejected. The Bundesvergabeamt considers this inference from the wording of Paragraph

113(3) BVergG in conjunction with the principle of ex proprio motu in administrative procedures to be consistent, generally, with Community law. In view of the spirit of Paragraph 113(3) BVergG, however, it may be open to question whether this inference is also consistent with the principle of effective legal protection.

32. The referring court also observes that it is generally unaware of any provisions of Community law precluding action ex proprio motu , whilst it accepts that there is something of a contradiction between action ex proprio motu in administrative procedures and the audi alteram partem principle.

33. None the less, the Bundesvergabeamt finds it necessary to submit questions on this pursuant to the third paragraph of Article 234 EC. This action is prompted specifically by the judgment of the Bundesverfassungsgericht (Federal Constitutional Court) of 8 March 2001, in which questions arose about the compatibility of action ex proprio motu with the principle set out in Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665 that both sides are to be heard in the review procedure. The Bundesverfassungsgericht has set aside a number of decisions taken by the Bundesvergabeamt on the ground that this body took unlawful aspects of the contract award procedure into account ex proprio motu

34. The Commission points out that the directive does not require review procedures before an independent body within the meaning of Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665 to be based solely on the submissions of the parties and that the possibility of that body including relevant circumstances in the assessment ex proprio motu cannot therefore be ruled out as long as they have the right to be heard. The Austrian Government, referring in this regard to the observations it submitted in the Primetzhofer case, (9) similarly takes the view that action taken ex proprio motu is not inconsistent with the first part of the last sentence of Article 2(8) of the directive.

35. In its observations, which focus particularly on the consequences of action ex proprio motu , GAT essentially argues that it is inconsistent with the directive for circumstances which have not been cited by the parties to be taken into account in the assessment ex proprio motu .

36. It must first be observed that the Bundesvergabeamt is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC. On a previous occasion, the Court explained that, under the first subparagraph of Article 2(8), the Member States may choose between two solutions in establishing arrangements for the review of public contracts. Either a body of a judicial character is given jurisdiction or a body which is not of such a character is given jurisdiction, in which case the decisions of that body must be capable of being the subject of judicial review or of review by another body which must satisfy the particular requirements of the second subparagraph of Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665. (10) As the Bundesvergabeamt is to be regarded as a body of a judicial character ("the first option"), this guarantee provision does not apply. The Austrian Government's and the Commission's contention that action taken ex proprio motu is not inconsistent with the first part of the last sentence of Article 2(8) of the directive is therefore irrelevant in this case. The question continues to be relevant, however, since the referring court also submits it in its capacity as a "body of a judicial character" . Furthermore, the fact that a ruling was delivered after a procedure in which both sides were heard is one of the factors which the Court takes into account when determining whether the body concerned is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC.

37. For the following reasons I take the view that a procedure in which both sides are heard does not rule out action by the competent court ex proprio motu in an administrative procedure. A procedure in which both sides are heard means in fact that the parties can react to each other's points of view before the body with jurisdiction delivers a ruling and they must also be able to react to any aspects which this body includes in the examination ex proprio motu . The directive also requires the Member States to make provision for accessible, effective and appropriate procedures.

However, they are free to decide what form they should take. They may therefore stipulate that a court may take into account ex proprio motu circumstances which are relevant to its assessment. How far the Bundesvergabeamt is obliged to include in its assessment ex proprio motu all relevant circumstances, thus regardless of the submissions of the parties, is something that will be discussed in the context of the next question. It is my view, therefore, that it is not inconsistent with the directive for a court to take into account, of its own motion and independently of the submissions of the parties during the review procedure, circumstances relevant to the contract award procedure, provided that the intended aim of the directive, in other words, effective legal protection, is guaranteed.

B Question 1b

38. By Question 1b the Bundesvergabeamt seeks to establish whether Article 2(1)(c) of the directive, possibly in conjunction with other principles of Community law, precludes a decision by the review body dismissing an application by a tenderer that is indirectly aimed at obtaining damages where the contract award procedure was already unlawful on other grounds not cited by the tenderer.

39. In the order for reference the Bundesvergabeamt explains with regard to Questions 1a and 1b that Paragraphs 113(3) and 115(1) BVergG provide that, in a review procedure following the award of a contract, the Bundesvergabeamt must examine the decision of the contracting authority being contested by an applicant as to its lawfulness, but that the application is to be granted only if it is the unlawful decision being contested that has caused the contract not to be awarded to the best tenderer within the meaning of the law. Therefore, if the contract award procedure is already tainted by fundamental illegality because of a separate (and possibly earlier) decision by the contracting authority and the applicant has not contested that other decision by the contracting authority in the review procedure, an application for review cannot be granted. In that case, a tenderer who contests a decision by the contracting authority that is demonstrated to be unlawful may not make a claim for damages because a separate decision by the contracting authority which has not been challenged has already led to the conclusion that the contract award procedure concerned is unlawful. In such a case, the applicant will not have been "harmed" by the contested infringement within the meaning of Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665, because the harm, for example wasted tender costs, will already have been caused by an (earlier) infringement by the contracting authority.

40. GAT takes the view that the judicial practice of the Bundesvergabeamt, as referred to above, is inconsistent with the effective legal protection required by Community procurement law. GAT refers in this context to the judgment of the Bundesverfassungsgericht which comes to the conclusion on the basis of the Court's case-law that the right to seek a review pursuant to Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted broadly and that this right is enjoyed by anyone who has shown his interest in the award by submitting a tender. GAT explains that the Bundesverfassungsgericht concluded in that judgment that, in view of the extensive legal protection enjoyed by candidates and tenderers, it is doubtful that the Bundesvergabeamt's position that a review requested by a tenderer cannot succeed because the contract award procedure concerned is already tainted on another ground is compatible with Community law.

41. To illustrate this, GAT points out that, in the main action, the Bundesvergabeamt put forward its view that, if things had been done properly, the contract award procedure ought really to have been cancelled because the award criterion concerning a list of references is not permissible under either European or Austrian procurement law. GAT adds that the proceedings it has brought do not concern this criterion. In the Bundesvergabeamt's view the consequence is, however, that GAT is not entitled to damages. According to GAT, such legal practice, with the Bundesvergabeamt finding ex proprio motu that the procedure is unlawful, may be admissible if it occurs before the contract is awarded. In that event, a fresh invitation to tender from which the inadmissible criteria have been removed can be issued. The tenderer is not then harmed since he is able to compete again. After the contract has been awarded, on the other hand, reparation is not possible. Furthermore, tenderers have evaluated their legal position solely on the basis of what really happened in this specific case. It is on this, according to GAT, that the review procedure should therefore be based.

42. GAT maintains that the Bundesvergabeamt's legal practice in fact shifts the responsibility for a legally correct contract award procedure to the tenderers, whereas the contracting authority escapes all blame if the procedure is unlawful. It is not for the tenderer to bring to light all, or all potential, infringements during a contract award procedure. The right to seek a review is, after all, linked to his subjective rights, especially if he is harmed, or risks being harmed, by an infringement of the applicable law.

43. Both the Commission and the Austrian Government propose that this question should be answered in the affirmative. The Commission states that Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 requires the review procedures to be available to any person who has or has had an interest in the award of the contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. As regards the scope of the procedures for reviewing decisions of contracting authorities, the Commission refers to the Opinion of Advocate General Tizzano in Case C-92/00. (11) The considerations set out in that Opinion apply, according to the Commission, not only to procedures directed against a decision of the contracting authority but also to actions for damages under Article 2(1)(c), especially as the directive does not provide for the possibility of restricting an action for damages.

44. The Austrian Government points out that an answer in the negative would mean that, even if it were well founded, an appeal against the decision of the contracting authority would have to be dismissed because the harm suffered by the interested party had been caused by other irregularities in the contract award procedure not cited by him. An applicant in a contract award procedure would therefore be forced systematically to expose all irregularities in the procedure in order to assert his right. This view might be inconsistent with Directive 89/665, which requires effective action to be taken against any infringement alleged by the applicant. The dismissal of a substantively legitimate application might be seen as a denial of justice. On the other hand, the Austrian Government believes that, as the directive does not contain any explicit rules on this aspect, it can also be argued that the question should be answered solely by reference to national law.

45. The Court has recalled on several occasions that the aim of Directive 89/665 is to reinforce existing arrangements at both national and Community level for ensuring effective application of Community directives on the award of public contracts. For this reason, Article 1(1) of the directive requires the Member States to ensure that reviews can be conducted effectively and rapidly. The aim is thus to provide for the possibility of reviewing decisions taken by the contracting authorities, without any restriction as regards the nature and content of those decisions. (12) The scope of the directive thus precludes any interpretation and application that would result in the direct or indirect restriction of the options open to tenderers to seek a review. This, to my mind, is also true of actions for damages. Article 1(3) of the directive provides that the review procedures (including actions for damages) must be available to any person who has or has had an interest in the award of a certain public contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. Nowhere in the directive is there anything to say that this may be restricted. On the contrary, the only option open to the Member States is to restrict procedures after the contract has been concluded to actions for damages, which should then still be available to "any person who has been harmed by an infringement" . Neither the wording of Article 1(3) nor that of Article 2(6) indicates that this power of the interested tenderer can be restricted.

46. The practice described by the referring court means that tenderers harmed by an infringement for which the contracting authority is responsible cannot claim damages. A tenderer who believes that he has wrongly been denied a contract need not, after all, be aware that, at the stage when the tenderers were being selected, an unlawful criterion had already been applied, quite apart from the fact that he himself satisfied this unlawful criterion and therefore suffered no disadvantage because of it. If he had been excluded at that stage because of an unlawful criterion, he could have acted at that stage.

47. It would be inconsistent with the purpose of Community law in this field if an examination carried out by the Bundesvergabeamt ex proprio motu were to preclude reliance on an unlawful act committed towards a tenderer as a ground for bringing an action for damages. This is particularly so since a contract can no longer be contested once it has been concluded.

C Question 2

48. The referring court's aim in putting this question is to establish whether Directive 93/36 precludes a list of references relating to the products offered by the tenderers from being regarded as an award criterion.

49. It is clear from the order for reference that the contracting authority awards points for such lists without considering the relevant customers' experience of the product. A further requirement is that the lists concern customers in the geographical area comprising the part of the Alps within the European Union, an aspect partly covered by the next question. The issue here is whether a list of this kind may play a part in the assessment of the award, rather than being a qualitative selection criterion.

50. In essence, both the Commission and the Austrian Government observe that this is in the nature of a selection criterion rather than an award criterion and that it is inconsistent with the structure of Directive 93/36 for a list of references relating to the product offered by the tenderer not to be assessed in the context of the tenderer's suitability but to be taken into account in the assessment of the award.

51. Hitherto the Court has made a very clear distinction between selection criteria ("choice of tenderers") and award criteria ("choice of tenders"). (13) These are separate arrangements forming part of a contract award procedure, and they are subject to separate rules. The tenderer is chosen by reference to his financial and economic standing and technical capacity. The references or evidence that may be furnished to demonstrate tenderers' standing and capacity are specified in Articles 22, 23 and 24 of Directive 93/36, although the list is not exhaustive. Technical capacity may be demonstrated, according to Article 23 of the directive, by a list of the principal deliveries. For the award of the contract, selection can be based either on the lowest price or on criteria identifying the economically most advantageous tender. Article 26(1)(b) of Directive 93/36 gives a number of examples of criteria. Although this is not an exhaustive list and the contracting authority is free to opt for other criteria, that choice is restricted to criteria identifying the economically most advantageous tender. (14) It is evident from the order for reference that the list of references is regarded as an award criterion. As both the Commission and the Austrian Government have said, a list of references to which a certain number of points is awarded without account being taken of the experience of earlier contracting authorities appearing on the list is undoubtedly suitable as a qualitative selection criterion, but not as an award criterion. I share that view. The list of references here in question may say something about the tenderer's experience and technical expertise, but a list of this kind is not suitable for determining the most advantageous offer. Such a list of references does not, after all, give any indication at all of the services provided, the running costs or other criteria capable of determining which tender will ultimately prove to be economically the most advantageous for the contracting authority.

52. The above comments lead to the conclusion that the possibility of submitting a list of this kind as an award criterion is incompatible with Article 26 of Directive 93/36. I would add, unnecessarily no doubt, that it is not apparent from the order for reference what kind of references the tenderers concerned were required to submit as evidence of their technical capacity. The fact that this requirement cannot be an award criterion does not in itself mean that it was inappropriate as a selection criterion for the tenderer.

D Question 3

53. This question follows naturally from the previous one. Strictly speaking, it does not need to be answered since it has been referred only in the event that Questions 1a and 1b are answered in the negative. From the assessment of the previous question it is clear that the use of a list providing no information that is decisive for the assessment of the economic advantages of the tender cannot serve as an award criterion. In the following I shall therefore focus on the question whether taking account only of references from the geographical area comprising the part of the Alps within the European Union is compatible with Community law.

54. According to the Commission, it may be discriminatory to take into account only references from the geographical area comprising the part of the Alps within the European Union. The Austrian Government is also inclined to this view.

55. I am able to share this view. From the assessment of the previous question it is already apparent that the contracting authority may apply only award criteria to determine the economically most advantageous tender and that the use of a list of references is not suitable for this purpose. This is undoubtedly also true where it is required that such references from customers be restricted to references from the geographical area comprising the part of the Alps within the European Union. Leaving aside the question whether the list should be described as an award criterion or as a qualitative selection criterion, it is discriminatory in either case. As the Austrian Government has also pointed out, it is equally possible to make comparisons with experience in other mountainous areas where the climate and topology are similar. A tenderer may not therefore gain the necessary points because many of his clients are located in the Alpine area of Switzerland or, say, the French Pyrenees. It might be objected that this still applies regardless of whether tenderers are Austrian nationals or nationals of one of the EU or EEA countries or a country with which an international agreement has been concluded. In practice, however, a requirement that the list of customers relate only to the geographical area comprising the part of the Alps within the European Union, and thus de facto to the Alps situated in Austria and the relatively small parts of the Alps located in Italy and France, results in undertakings established in Austria being de facto in a privileged position.

56. I therefore conclude that the inclusion of criteria entailing geographical restrictions results in the number of tenderers being limited on the basis of geographical standards and that a criterion of this kind is therefore by its nature discriminatory with respect to potential applicants unable to satisfy this geographical criterion.

57. This question concerns the award criterion according to which a favourable assessment is possible only if the subject of the invitation to tender can be inspected within a 300 kilometre radius of the authority issuing the invitation to tender. The Commission has commented in this regard that, according to Article 23(1)(d) of Directive 93/36, the contracting authority may require samples, descriptions and/or photographs of the products to be supplied as proof of their suitability. The requirement that there be an opportunity for an inspection within a 300 kilometre radius is therefore a selection criterion. Austria too has argued that this is a selection criterion and not an award criterion. A criterion of this kind is, moreover, discriminatory, according to the Austrian Government, because it favours participants near the contracting authority, meaning, as a rule, participants from the Member State concerned or participants established very close to the border.

58. GAT has observed in this connection that Paragraph 60 BVergG indicates how evidence of technical capacity can be provided. As a rule, it consists of certificates, photographs and samples. Only in exceptional cases does the BVergG permit the product itself to be inspected, for example where it is of a complex nature (Paragraph 60(2) BvergG). It also follows from this provision that the inspection requirement may not be so worded that the reference object must be located near the contracting authority. Such a requirement would be inconsistent with the purpose of European procurement law because it would restrict the opportunities for manufacturers and suppliers from other Member States to participate in tender procedures. Consequently, Paragraph 60(2) BveregG provides that an on-the-spot inspection may be carried out either by the contracting authority itself or by an authorised body acting on its behalf in the tenderer's country of origin. According to the BVergG, where the complexity of the product to be supplied necessitates a personal inspection, a contracting authority must accept all products in Europe as a reference to assess technical capacity. GAT also explains that there is no analogous provision for the assessment of the economically most advantageous tender. None the less, the view prevailing in Austria was that, to enable the economically most advantageous tender to be assessed, the tender documents may provide for an opportunity to inspect the product or for similar evidence to be produced if the specific features of the object concerned require. GAT argues that there is no reason to make a distinction according to whether the opportunity for an inspection forms part of a selection criterion or an award criterion. A contracting authority's power to require an inspection near to where it was established amounted to hidden discrimination, since it was a requirement which only Austrian undertakings could as a rule satisfy. It would be different only if the products concerned were mass-produced or small in size, as the forwarding of a sample would then usually be sufficient. This case, however, concerned the manufacture of a specific model, which normally gave rise to very high transport costs. In such cases the manufacturer's interest prevailed and the contracting authority could not require that the inspection take place only in the vicinity of its establishment.

59. As discussed in the answers to the previous questions, the only award criteria that may be considered are those which might help to determine "the economically most favourable tender" . I fail to see how the criterion "opportunity for an inspection within a 300 kilometre radius" might contribute to this. It is thus a selection rather than an award criterion. Even then, however, it is inadmissible because a 300 kilometre radius imposes a real restriction. It is, after all, to the advantage of tenderers whose customers and/or establishment are located near the contracting authority and so usually have the same nationality as the contracting authority. It is therefore discriminatory in terms of the country of origin of the goods and/or services concerned and the nationality of the supplier. This aside, I do not see any need to restrict the possibility of an on-the-spot inspection of the object to a 300 kilometre radius of the authority issuing the invitation to tender. As GAT has also indicated, other options are possible if an on-the-spot inspection is required.

F Question 5

60. In point 29 I came to the conclusion that this question is inadmissible since, once the contract has been awarded, the Bundesvergabeamt is authorised only to determine whether the open contract award procedure has been carried out correctly and whether the contract has been awarded to the best tenderer: it is not authorised to award damages. In case the Court disagrees with me in this regard, I will consider this question further.

61. The premiss is that there has been an infringement and that this infringement consists in the adoption of an unlawful award criterion. The question then is whether the tenderer is entitled to damages only if it can actually be proved that, but for this unlawful award criterion, he would have been the best tenderer.

62. To clarify this question, the requesting court has stated that Community law does not expressly state under what conditions it must be held that a tenderer has actually been harmed by an infringement of the law committed by the contracting authority. It points out that it will often be difficult in practice to prove what the tenderer's tender would have been but for the unlawful criterion. On the other hand, it is in practice easier to carry out an investigation into infringements during contract award procedures if it is assumed that tenderers are harmed by any unlawful award criterion that is potentially relevant to the contents of their tenders.

63. Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 concerns the awarding of damages to persons harmed by an infringement. A similar provision can be found in Article 2(1)(d) of Directive 92/13. (15) The Commission rightly points out that, in contrast to the latter directive, which provides that, where a claim is made for damages representing the costs of preparing a bid or of participating in an award procedure, the person making the claim is required only to prove an infringement of procurement law and that he would have had a real chance of winning the contract, (16) Directive 89/665 does not include a provision to this effect. I would add that this directive does not contain any provisions concerning claims for damages representing other costs.

64. There being no such provision in the directive, this aspect is governed, according to the Court's settled case-law, (17) by national law, with due regard for the general principles of Community law, including the principle of equivalence and the principle of effectiveness. From this it follows that claims for damages are governed by the material and formal conditions defined by Austrian legislation. According to settled case-law, these conditions may not, however, be less favourable than those governing the same right of action on an internal matter (a principle on which the directive itself is based) and they may not be such that the exercise of the rights granted by the Community system of law is made practically impossible.

65. I would add in this context that the granting of an entitlement to damages to the tenderer only on condition that he can actually prove that, but for the unlawful award criterion, he would have won the contract may mean that the exercise of these rights is impossible in practice or at least seriously restricted.

66. On that hypothesis, which amounts to ruling out any compensation for the costs incurred in vain by a tenderer through participating in an irregular contract award procedure, potential applicants may be deterred from participating in such procedures. I consider this to be inconsistent with the aim of the procurement directives and with the purpose of Directive 89/665, the very objective of which is to increase the opportunities for reviewing infringements of these procurement directives. I conclude from this that Article 2(1)(c) of the directive cannot be interpreted so narrowly as to give a tenderer the right to damages only if he can prove that, but for the unlawful award criterion, he would have won the contract. Although the scale of the entitlement to damages is in principle governed by national law, the application of that law must not result in the exercise of the rights granted by the system of Community law becoming de facto impossible or at least seriously restricted.

VII Conclusion

67. In view of the above, I propose to the Court that the questions submitted for a preliminary ruling should be answered as follows:

(1a) Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts does not preclude an authority responsible for carrying out review procedures within the meaning of Article 1(1) of that directive, including the exercise of the powers referred to in Article 2(1)(c) thereof, from taking relevant circumstances into account of its own motion and independently of the submissions of the parties to the review procedure.

(1b) Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 does not preclude an authority responsible for carrying out review procedures within the meaning of Article 1(1) of that directive, including the exercise of the powers referred to in Article 2(1)(c) thereof, from dismissing an application by a tenderer that is indirectly aimed at obtaining damages, because the contract award procedure has allegedly already been tainted by deficiencies other than those cited by the tenderer.

(2) The provisions of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts prohibits a public contracting authority conducting a contract award procedure from taking account of references relating to the products offered by tenderers as an award criterion.

(3) A reference criterion whereby only the number of references is counted and no substantive examination is made of contracting authorities' experiences of the product is not an award criterion within the meaning of Article 26 of Directive 93/36. The consideration only of references from the geographical area comprising the part of the Alps within the European Union constitutes, moreover, discrimination prohibited by the Treaty on the ground of the origin of the goods or services concerned.

(4) A criterion under which applicants are considered only if the subject of the invitation to tender can be inspected within a 300 kilometre radius of the authority issuing the invitation to tender is not an award criterion. The criterion is, moreover, inadmissible because it is discriminatory.

(5) It does not follow from Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 that an entitlement to damages exists only if the tenderer can actually prove that, but for the unlawful award criterion, he would have been the best tenderer.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Geelhoed delivered on 20 November 2003.
Siemens AG Osterreich and ARGE Telekom & Partner v Hauptverband der österreichischen Sozialversicherungsträger.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesvergabeamt - Austria.
Public contracts - Directive 89/665/EEC - Review procedures concerning the award of public contracts - Effects of a decision by the body responsible for review procedures annulling the decision by the contracting authority not to revoke the procedure by which a contract was awarded - Restriction on the use of subcontracting.
Case C-314/01.

I - Introduction

1. In this case the Court has been asked to give a preliminary ruling on four questions concerning the interpretation of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, (2) as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (hereinafter Directive 89/665'). (3)

2. These questions have arisen in a dispute between Siemens AG Osterreich (Siemens') and ARGE Telekom & Partner (ARGE Telekom'), on the one hand, and the Hauptverband der österreichischen Sozialversicherungsträger (Central Association of Austrian Social Security Institutions), the contracting authority (the Hauptverband'), on the other.

3. The facts and proceedings relating to the dispute in which the questions submitted for a preliminary ruling have arisen are complex. They will be described below in Part III of this Opinion. It will be clear from this context that there may be reasonable doubt as to the admissibility of these questions, which, since the dispute in the main action has become devoid of any subject-matter, have become completely or partially hypothetical.

4. Although the wording of the questions is itself complex, it provides, in conjunction with the statement of reasons for the order for reference, a sufficient basis for a reply. The relevant aspects of that order will therefore be summarised in Part III of this Opinion. In essence, the Bundesvergabeamt, the body submitting the questions, asks whether, given its (limited) powers, the manner in which the Austrian legislature has implemented Directive 89/665 is appropriate.

II - Legislative background

5. Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 reads as follows:

1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC, and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, Article 2(7), on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

...

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

6. Article 2(1), (6), (7) and (8) of Directive 89/665 reads as follows:

1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

6. The effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law. Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.

7. The Member States shall ensure that decisions taken by bodies responsible for review procedures can be effectively enforced.

8. Where bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character, written reasons for their decisions shall always be given. Furthermore, in such a case, provision must be made to guarantee procedures whereby any allegedly illegal measure taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the EEC Treaty (now Article 234 EC) and independent of both the contracting authority and the review body.

The members of such an independent body shall be appointed and leave office under the same conditions as members of the judiciary as regards the authority responsible for their appointment, their period of office, and their removal. At least the President of this independent body shall have the same legal and professional qualifications as members of the judiciary. The independent body shall take its decisions following a procedure in which both sides are heard, and these decisions shall, by means determined by each Member State, be legally binding.'

7. Article 25 of Directive 92/50 provides:

In the contract documents, the contracting authority may ask the tenderer to indicate in his tender any share of the contract he may intend to subcontract to third parties.

This indication shall be without prejudice to the question of the principal service provider's liability.'

8. Article 32 of Directive 92/50 stipulates:

1. The ability of service providers to perform services may be evaluated in particular with regard to their skills, efficiency, experience and reliability.

2. Evidence of the service provider's technical capability may be furnished by one or more of the following means according to the nature, quantity and purpose of the services to be provided:

(c) an indication of the technicians or technical bodies involved, whether or not belonging directly to the service provider, especially those responsible for quality control;

...

(h) an indication of the proportion of the contract which the service provider may intend to sub-contract.

3. The contracting authority shall specify, in the notice or in the invitation to tender, which references it wishes to receive.

4. The extent of the information referred to in Article 31 and in paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of this Article must be confined to the subject of the contract; contracting authorities shall take into consideration the legitimate interests of the service providers as regards the protection of their technical or trade secrets.'

B - National law

9. Directives 89/665 and 92/50 were transposed into Austrian law in the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen 1997 (Federal Procurement Law 1997, BGBl. I, 1997/56, in the version published in BGBl. I, 2000/125; hereinafter the BVergG').

10. Paragraph 31 of the BVergG concerns the services performed by subcontractors and reads as follows:

(1) The contract documents shall specify whether subcontracting is permitted. The subcontracting of the whole contract is not permitted except in the case of purchase agreements and subcontracting to undertakings associated with the contractor. In the case of building contracts the subcontracting of the majority of the services... is not permitted.... The contracting authority shall ensure that the contractor's subcontractors themselves perform the greater parts of contracts subcontracted to them. In exceptional cases the contracting authority may specify in the contract documents, stating its reasons, that it is permissible for the majority of the contract to be subcontracted. Subcontracting parts of the contract is, moreover, permitted only if the subcontractor is qualified to perform his share of the work.

(2) The contracting authority shall ask the tenderer in the contract documents to indicate in his tender the proportion of the contract which he may intend to subcontract to third parties. This information shall be without prejudice to the question of the contractor's liability.'

11. Paragraph 40 of the BVergG - on withdrawal of the invitation to tender during the tendering period - stipulates:

(1) During the tendering period the invitation to tender may be withdrawn for compelling reasons, especially if before the end of the tendering period circumstances become known which, had they been known earlier, would not have led to an invitation to tender or would have led to an invitation to tender essentially different in substance.

(2) The withdrawal should be made known in the same manner as the invitation to tender.

(3) Tenderers and applicants to whom the contract documents have already been forwarded should be notified without delay of the withdrawal and of the reasons therefor.'

12. Paragraphs 52, 53, 53a, 54, 55 and 56 of the BVergG - on the assessment of tenders - read as follows:

Elimination of tenders

Paragraph 52

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

(1) Before the contracting authority proceeds to the selection of the tender qualifying for the award of the contract, it should immediately eliminate the following tenders on the basis of the results of the assessment:

1. tenders submitted by applicants who are unqualified or do not have the necessary financial, managerial or technical capability or are not reliable;

8. tenders which do not satisfy the tender requirements and faulty and incomplete tenders, if these shortcomings have not been or cannot be remedied, or partial tenders, if they are not admitted;

9. tenders received from applicants who, immorally or contrary to the principle of effective competition, have come to agreements with other applicants which are disadvantageous to the contracting authority;

Selection of the tender for the award of the contract; the best tender principle

Paragraph 53

From among the tenders remaining after elimination, the most favourable from a technical and economic standpoint shall be awarded the contract, in accordance with the standards laid down in the invitation to tender (the best tender principle). A written statement of reasons for the decision awarding the contract shall be drawn up

Announcement of the award of the contract

Paragraph 53a

(1) The contracting authority should inform the remaining tenderers without delay in writing or by fax... of the tenderer to which the contract is to be awarded. In connection with subparagraph 4, this communication may be used to give the unsuccessful tenderers all the reasons for the rejection of their tenders.

(2) On penalty of annulment, the contract shall not be awarded within a refraining period of two weeks from the announcement of the decision awarding the contract referred to in subparagraph 1.... If an accelerated procedure is adopted because of a need for urgency, the refraining period shall be shortened to one week.

(3) Unsuccessful tenderers may request in writing within a period of one week or, if because of a need for urgency an accelerated procedure is adopted pursuant to Paragraph 69, within a period of three days, after the announcement of the decision awarding the contract, to be informed of the grounds on which their tenders did not quality and of the features and advantages of the selected tender.

(4) The contracting authority should notify the unsuccessful tenderers of the name of the selected tenderer and the amount for which the contract has been awarded without delay on receipt of the request - provided that it has been made in time - and in any case three days before the end of the refraining period. The unsuccessful tenderers should also be informed of the features and advantages of the selected tender, provided that the disclosure of this information is not inconsistent with the public interest or with the legitimate commercial interests of undertakings or does not harm free and fair competition.

(5) If an unsuccessful tenderer takes the view that the decision taken by the contracting authority infringes the provisions of this Law and that he is consequently at risk of suffering a loss, he must inform the contracting authority without delay of his intention to open a review procedure, stating his reasons.

Award and implementing agreement

(1) During the award period the contractual relationship shall come into being at the time when the tenderer receives written confirmation of the acceptance of his tender. If the award period is exceeded or if the contract departs from the tender, the contractual relationship shall come into being only on the tenderer's written declaration that he accepts the contract. The tenderer should be given an appropriate period within which to make this declaration.

(2) ...

Cancellation of the invitation to tender after the expiry of the tender period

Paragraph 55

(1) After the tender period has expired, the invitation to tender shall be cancelled where there are mandatory reasons for doing so.

(2) The invitation to tender may be cancelled if, following the elimination of tenders in accordance with Paragraph 52, only one tender remains.

(3) The invitation to tender shall be deemed to have been cancelled if no tenders are received or if only one tender is received.

(4) Tenderers shall be informed without delay if the invitation to tender is cancelled and shall be informed of the reason.

(5) The cancellation of an invitation to tender... shall be announced in the same way as the invitation to tender.

Termination of the award procedure

Paragraph 56

(1) The award procedure shall end with the establishment of the supply agreement or with the cancellation of the invitation to tender.

(2) Each unsuccessful tenderer should be notified in writing immediately after the termination of the procedure....'

13. Paragraph 113 of the BVergG defines the powers of the Bundesvergabeamt. It reads as follows:

(1) The Bundesvergabeamt is responsible on application for carrying out a review procedure in accordance with the following provisions.

(2) Until the award of the contract, and for the purposes of removing infringements of this Federal Law and of the regulations made hereunder, the Bundesvergabeamt may:

1. grant interim measures; and

2. declare void decisions of the awarding department of the contracting authority that have been taken unlawfully.

(3) Once the contract has been awarded or the contract award procedure has been ended, the Bundesvergabeamt may determine that, as a result of an infringement of this Federal Law or of any regulations made hereunder, the award was not made to the tenderer who submitted the best offer. In such proceedings, the Bundesvergabeamt may, on the application of the contracting authority, also determine whether an applicant or tenderer who has been eliminated would have had any serious chance of being awarded the contract even if this Federal Law and the regulations made hereunder had been complied with.'

14. Paragraph 117(1) and (3) of the BVergG stipulates:

(1) A decision taken by the contracting authority during a contract award procedure shall be declared void by administrative order of the Bundesvergabeamt, with due regard for the recommendation of the mediation committee in the case concerned, if it

1. is inconsistent with the provisions of this Federal Law or of the regulations made hereunder and

2. has a significant influence on the outcome of the contract award procedure.

(3) If the contract has already been awarded, the Bundesvergabeamt shall, with due regard for the conditions set out in subparagraph 1, determine only whether or not it is unlawful as alleged.'

15. Paragraph 122(1) of the BVergG stipulates that if this Federal Law or the regulations made hereunder are culpably infringed by the departments of a contracting authority, an unsuccessful tenderer shall be entitled to claim compensation for the cost of submitting the tender and the other costs associated with participation in the contract award procedure from the contracting authority to which the conduct of the bodies of the awarding department must be ascribed.'

16. Under Paragraph 125(2) of the BVergG a claim for damages, which must be lodged with a civil court, is admissible only if the Bundesvergabeamt has previously reached a conclusion within the meaning of Paragraph 113(3). This conclusion is binding on the court applied to and on the parties to the proceedings before the Bundesvergabeamt.

17. Paragraph 5 of the Verwaltungsvollstreckungsgesetz (Law on Enforcement of Administrative Measures) stipulates:

(1) Where, due to its particular features, an obligation to permit something to be done, not to do something, or to do something cannot be performed by a third party, it shall be enforced by the authority responsible for enforcement requiring the person subject to the obligation to perform it on pain of fines or imprisonment.

(2) Enforcement shall be initiated by threatening to impose the penalty for the prohibited act or omission. The penalty threatened shall be imposed immediately the first time the prohibited act is committed, or once the period allowed for the act required to be done has expired without that act having been done. At the same time, a penalty, on each occasion more severe than the previous, shall be threatened for repetition or for further delay. As soon as the obligation has been performed, a penalty that has been threatened shall not be imposed.

(3) In any individual case, the penalty shall not exceed ATS 10 000 or imprisonment for longer than four weeks.

(4) Imposition of a penalty by way of fines is also permissible against legal persons, partnerships governed by commercial law and registered associations, except for bodies governed by public law.'

18. Paragraph 879 of the Allgemein Bürgerliches Gesetzbuch (General Civil Code) (ABGB) reads as follows:

(1) A contract which is contrary to a statutory prohibition or is immoral shall be void.

(2) In particular, the following contracts shall be void:

III - Facts and procedural context

A - Facts of the case and proceedings before the national authorities

19. On 21 September 1999, in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities , the Hauptverband announced a two-stage contract award procedure which it intended to conduct for the award of a contract to design, plan and construct a smart-card-based electronic data-processing (EDP) system, including the Austria-wide delivery, initialisation, personalisation, distribution and disposal of cards, delivery, installation and full-service maintenance of terminals, and support for EDP system operations, a call centre, card management and other services necessary for the operation of the system.

20. On 22 February 2000, the Hauptverband decided to invite five consortia to submit tenders and to eliminate a sixth consortium. Point 1.9 of the tender documents of 21 September 1999 and Point 1.8 of the invitation to tender documents of 15 March 2000 entitled Invitation to Tender' provided the following as regards subcontracting: A maximum of 30% of the services may be subcontracted, provided that the characteristic parts of the service, namely, project management, system design, development, construction, delivery and operation of the central components of the system that are specific to the project, development, delivery and management of the life-cycle of the cards and development and delivery of the terminals remain with the tenderer or consortium.'

21. According to the contracting authority, as is evident from the order for reference, that condition was imposed as a criterion of reliability for the purpose of ensuring that the services supplied would be free of technical errors, because if the card suppliers were personally liable, they would have a greater incentive to supply a service free of errors and the contracting authority would have greater influence.

22. Austria Card, a card supply company, which was to supply the part of the service involving card delivery' in each case, was a member of three of the four consortia which actually submitted tenders (including Siemens and ARGE Telekom). The only consortium in which Austria Card was not involved was formed by the firms EDS/ORGA.

23. By letter of 18 December 2000, the Hauptverband, as the contracting authority, notified three consortia of tenderers pursuant to Paragraph 53a of the BVergG that it intended to award the contract to EDS/ORGA.

24. The consortia that were not to be awarded the contract thereupon requested the Bundesvergabekontrollkommission (Federal Procurement Review Commission) to carry out arbitration proceedings. The latter refused to carry out arbitration proceedings in one case and attempted, unsuccessfully, to reach an amicable settlement in the other two cases. The three unsuccessful consortia then lodged review applications with the Bundesvergabeamt. The applications sought, primarily, the setting aside of the contracting authority's decision to award the contract to the EDS/ORGA consortium. Alternatively, they requested that the Hauptverband be ordered to cancel the invitation to tender.

25. By notice of 19 March 2001, the Bundesvergabeamt (Eighth Chamber) dismissed all the applications as being inadmissible on the ground that they lacked substance. In support of its decision the Bundesvergabeamt stated that the applicants' tenders had had to be eliminated by the contracting authority in accordance with Paragraph 52(1)(9) of the BVergG because Austria Card was a member of the three consortia concerned. The exchange of information thereby made possible and the negotiations which Austria Card necessarily had to conduct with the three consortia on the form of the tenders were to be regarded as constituting agreements between tenderers inconsistent with the principle of fair competition.

26. The pleadings reveal that this decision by the Bundesvergabeamt was annulled by judgment of the Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court) of 12 June 2001 on the ground that the constitutional right of the three consortia to proceedings in a court of law had been infringed. Before taking its decision, the Bundesvergabeamt had omitted to submit to the Court for a preliminary ruling a question on whether a tenderer whose tender had not been eliminated by the contracting authority could be refused his right to bring proceedings before the competent national authority.

27. On 28 and 29 March 2001, Debis, the third unsuccessful consortium, and ARGE Telekom again instituted, consecutively, review proceedings before the Bundesvergabeamt. They applied for annulment of the Hauptverband's decision not to cancel the invitation to tender and for interim measures to prohibit the contracting authority from awarding the contract either for a period of at least two months from submission of the application (Debis) or until the Bundesvergabeamt had reached its decision (ARGE Telekom).

28. In response to these applications the Bundesvergabeamt adopted an interim measure by notice of 5 April 2001 prohibiting the award of the contract until 20 April 2001.

29. In their applications Debis and ARGE Telekom presented arguments based on both national and Community law in support of their position that the invitation to tender was unlawful. They maintained that the invitation to tender should be cancelled because it followed from the Bundesvergabeamt's decision of 19 March 2001 that only one undertaking still qualified for the award of the contract. After all, if the tenders submitted by Siemens, ARGE Telekom and Debis could be eliminated under Paragraph 52(1) of the BVergG on the ground that they infringed the principle of fair competition, it followed from the provisions of Paragraph 55(2) and (3) of the BVergG that the invitation to tender had to be cancelled, since only one tenderer (EDS/ORGA) remained. The invitation to tender was, moreover, inconsistent with Community law, since an inadmissible standard of quality had been established in Point 1.8 of the invitation to tender of 15 March 2000. It excluded the possibility of the subcontracting of parts of the provision of services in excess of 30% of the total contract and, in all cases, of all typical contractual services, especially the delivery and management of the life-cycle of the cards. This had forced the applicants to include Austria Card as a member of the consortia which they had formed. Had it not been for the conditions laid down by Point 1.8 of the invitation to tender, the applicants could have relied on a subcontractor. In their opinion this requirement was inconsistent with Community law. They referred to the Court's judgment of 2 December 1999 in Holst Italia. (4) This showed that it must be possible to have the service which was the subject of the invitation to tender performed by suitable third parties.

30. By notice of 20 April 2001, the Bundesvergabeamt (Ninth Chamber) granted the applications of Debis and ARGE Telekom and, in accordance with Paragraph 113(2), No 2, of the BVergG declared void the Hauptverband's decision not to cancel the invitation to tender. In support of its decision, the Bundesvergabeamt stated that the invitation to tender had to be cancelled because it contained a substantially unlawful provision. Specifically, the Hauptverband's prohibition of subcontracting infringed the tenderer's right under Community law to rely on subcontractors' capacity in order to prove its own capacity, as interpreted by the Court in Holst Italia. (5)

31. Despite this notice, the Hauptverband decided on 23 April 2001 to award the contract to EDS/ORGA without delay, as a result of which the contract was concluded. The interim measures adopted by notice of 5 April 2001 had expired on 20 April 2001 and, notwithstanding an application to this effect, had not been extended. The Bundesvergabeamt's notice of 20 April 2001 merely made a statement about setting aside a failure to cancel', which is difficult to understand. From this the Hauptverband deduced that it had not been decided in a judicially compelling way that its own decision to award the contract to the lowest bidder was not valid or had been set aside.

32. The Hauptverband also decided to challenge the Bundesvergabeamt's decision of 20 April 2001 before the Verfassungsgerichtshof. The documents relating to the case show that the Verfassungsgerichtshof first dismissed, by order of 22 May 2001, the application to suspend the Bundesvergabeamt's decision and then, by judgment of 2 March 2002, annulled that decision.

33. On 30 April 2001 Siemens initiated a review procedure before the Bundesvergabeamt seeking the setting aside of various decisions taken by the Hauptverband relating to the decision to award the contract to EDS/ORGA. Siemens took the view that it followed from the annulment of the Hauptverband's decision not to cancel the contract award procedure announced in 1999 that its decision to award the contract was unlawful because it concerned a second, unpublicised contract award procedure. It also applied for interim measures. That application was dismissed by the Bundesvergabeamt on 11 May 2001, a decision on the other applications being reserved.

34. On 17 May 2001 ARGE Telekom similarly applied for interim measures and for the annulment of various decisions taken by the Hauptverband in connection with its decision not to cancel the contract award procedure.

35. On 18 May 2001 Siemens again applied for interim measures and for the annulment of the Hauptverband's decisions not to cancel the contract award procedure, to award the contract to EDS/ORGA, to issue a letter of award to EDS/ORGA and to conclude the contract with this consortium without first validly announcing the award decision.

36. By decision of 9 July 2001, the Bundesvergabeamt dismissed ARGE Telekom's and Siemens' applications for interim measures and otherwise reserved its decision.

37. The Bundesvergabeamt (Ninth Chamber) held that a decision on Siemens' applications of 30 April and 18 May 2001 and ARGE Telekom's application of 17 May 2001 required a more detailed interpretation of a number of provisions of Directive 89/665. By order of 27 July 2001, it therefore submitted the following questions for a preliminary ruling.

B - The questions submitted for a preliminary ruling and the related explanations

1. Is Council Directive 89/665, and in particular Article 2(1)(b) thereof, if necessary in conjunction with Article 2(7) thereof, to be interpreted as meaning that the legal effect of a decision taken by a national review body within the meaning of Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665 relating to the setting aside of a contracting authority's decision not to cancel a contract award procedure is that if national law does not provide any basis for the effective and compulsory enforcement of the review body's decision against the contracting authority, the contract award procedure is automatically terminated by the national review body's decision, without the need for any further act by the contracting authority?

2. Is Directive 89/665, in particular Article 2(7) thereof, if necessary in conjunction with Council Directive 92/50, in particular Articles 25 and 32(2)(c) thereof, or any other provisions of Community law, in particular having regard to the effet utile doctrine relating to the interpretation of Community law, to be construed as meaning that a provision in an invitation to tender which prohibits subcontracting material parts of the service concerned and, contrary to the case-law of the Court of Justice, in particular Case C-176/98 Holst Italia [1999] ECR I-8607, prevents the tenderer from using his contract with his subcontractor to prove that the services of a third party are actually available to him and which thus deprives him of his right to prove his own capability by relying on the services of a third party or to prove that he actually has available a third party's services, is so clearly contrary to Community law that a contract concluded on the basis of such an invitation to tender is to be regarded as invalid, in particular where national law in any case provides that illegal contracts are invalid?

3. Is Directive 89/665, in particular Article 2(7) thereof, or any other provision of Community law, in particular having regard to the effet utile doctrine relating to the interpretation of Community law, to be construed as meaning that a contract concluded contrary to a decision by a national review body within the meaning of Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665 relating to the setting aside of a contract authority's decision not to cancel a contract award procedure is invalid, in particular where national law in any case provides that immoral or illegal contracts are void but does not provide any basis for the effective and compulsory enforcement of the review body's decision against the contracting authority?

4a. Is Directive 89/665, in particular Article 2(1)(b) thereof, if necessary in conjunction with Article 2(7), to be interpreted as meaning that where national law does not otherwise provide any basis for the effective and compulsory enforcement of the review body's decision against the contracting authority, the review body has, by virtue of the direct application of Article 2(1)(b) in conjunction with Article 2(7), the power to issue a compulsory, enforceable order to the contracting authority to ensure that the unlawful decision is set aside, even though national law authorises the review body to issue only non-compulsory, non-enforceable orders to set aside contracting authorities' decisions in tenderers' applications for review within the meaning of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665?

4b. If Question 4a is answered in the affirmative: does Article 2(7) of Directive 89/665, if necessary in conjunction with other provisions of Community law, give the review body the power in such a case to threaten contracting authorities and the members of their executive organs with, and to impose on them, such fines or fines and imprisonment by way of coercive penalties as are necessary to enforce their orders and are calculated in accordance with judicial discretion, where the contracting authorities and the members of their executive organs do not comply with the orders issued by the review body?'

38. In its order for reference the Bundesvergabeamt gives a detailed explanation of the above questions. The main elements of this explanation can be summarised as follows:

39. To substantiate the first question, the Bundesvergabeamt points out inter alia that its decisions under Paragraph 113(2)(2) of the BVergG do not comprise any directions to the contracting authority that are enforceable at the instance of the successful applicant. In this respect the powers of the Bundesvergabeamt differ from those of similar national authorities in the areas of commercial law, construction law and the law on water resources, for example. Those authorities do have the power to issue enforceable instructions. This means that interested parties are in a far weaker legal position under public procurement law than parties in other areas of law. The Bundesvergabeamt wonders whether this outcome of national legislation is compatible with the requirements of Community law, as set out in particular in Article 2(7) of Directive 89/665.

40. In the case of Question 2 the Bundesvergabeamt points out that, in accordance with the Court's case-law, it proceeded in its decision of 20 April 2001 on the basis that every tenderer is entitled to rely on subcontractors to furnish evidence of technical capability if he can prove that their services are actually available to him. The Bundesvergabeamt therefore takes the view that it is entitled to assume that a provision relating to the tender requirements which largely excludes any such reliance on subcontractors from the outset is inconsistent with Community law and that the contract award procedure in which such a condition is imposed may not be carried through to its end, but must be cancelled.

As Community law relating to public procurement does not contain any provisions that give an explicit answer to the question as to the extent to which unlawful awards result in the invalidity of the contracts concluded on that basis, the question as to the validity of the contract can be regarded as one of national law.

Weighed against the principle of the effet utile of Community law, however, such a conclusion would be unsatisfactory. A contracting authority which did not abide by the provisions of Community law or comply with the review body's decisions might, after all, frustrate the achievement of the objectives of Community law without fear of any sanction where, as in the present case, national law could not guarantee compulsory enforcement of the review body's decisions.

In this context the Bundesvergabeamt considers it appropriate to determine whether a contract established on the basis of a contract award procedure in which provisions of Community law have been infringed must be considered invalid in civil law on the ground that it is unlawful or immoral.

41. In connection with the first two questions the Bundesvergabeamt also points out that, if the contracts concluded had to be considered invalid, it could still set aside decisions by the contracting authority (and, if necessary, take other measures if the Court were to answer Questions 4a and 4b in the affirmative) because, if the conclusion of the contract were invalid, the award must likewise be regarded as invalid. According to the Bundesvergabeamt, a more detailed interpretation of Community law is therefore needed to determine the powers of the national court or tribunal to decide on the validity of the award and of the contract concluded on that basis.

42. In the case of Question 3 the Bundesvergabeamt states that the Hauptverband, the contracting authority, not only disregarded the substantive provisions of Community public procurement law but also deliberately departed from the decision of the national review body within the meaning of Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665. Such an attitude should be regarded as immoral, with the associated implications for the validity of the contract.

43. In the case of Questions 4a and 4b the Bundesvergabeamt explains that national law does not ensure the effective enforcement of decisions made by review bodies because it does not provide for the compulsory enforcement of the setting aside of a contracting authority's decision. Although Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 gives the Member States considerable scope in determining the powers to be conferred on review bodies, if the result is that the provisions of Community public procurement law have insufficient effet utile , the Bundesvergabeamt regards the possibility of the review body directly exercising the powers provided for in the Directive as being worthy of consideration. The Bundesvergabeamt therefore wonders whether the administrative means of enforcement for which national law provides are equal to the task of ensuring effective compliance with Community law.

IV - Proceedings before the Court

44. In the order for reference the Bundesvergabeamt requests that the accelerated procedure for which Article 104a of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice provides be applied to the questions referred. It argues that an accelerated procedure might prevent the contracting authority from frustrating the enforcement of Community law, as interpreted by the Court, by establishing a fait accompli. If the questions referred were answered in the affirmative, a rapid decision could prevent major losses since the performance of the contract between the Hauptverband and EDS/ORGA had not yet commenced at the time when the order for reference was issued.

45. By order of 13 September 2001 the President of the Court dismissed this request, on the ground that the circumstances described by the Bundesvergabeamt did not indicate any exceptionally urgent need for answers to the questions.

46. The request for a preliminary ruling was received at the Registry of the Court on 9 August 2001. ARGE Telekom, the Hauptverband, EDS/ORGA, the Austrian Government and the Commission submitted written observations pursuant to Article 20 of the EC Statute of the Court of Justice. At the hearing on 18 September 2003 the Hauptverband, the Austrian Government and the Commission explained their positions at greater length.

V - Assessment

A - Preliminary observations

47. The background to the order for reference described in depth in points 19 to 37 above and the Bundesvergabeamt's comments on the questions it has submitted prompt a number of preliminary observations.

48. Once the Hauptverband, the contracting authority, had made it known to the remaining applicants in the contract award procedure pursuant to Paragraph 53 of the BVergG that it intended to award the contract to EDS/ORGA, three groups initiated proceedings before the Bundesvergabeamt:

(1) In a first set of proceedings the applicants in the main action sought the annulment of the Hauptverband's decision to award the contract to EDS/ORGA and the cancellation of the contract award procedure. They were unsuccessful in this, their application being declared inadmissible by order of 19 March 2001.

(2) In a second set of proceedings the unsuccessful applicants called on the Bundesvergabeamt inter alia to set aside the - notional - decision of the Hauptverband, the contracting authority, not to cancel the contract award procedure. They were forced to take this course because, as the Hauptverband and the Austrian Government have emphasised in their written and oral observations, the decision to award the contract itself could not be challenged before the Bundesvergabeamt a second time. The unsuccessful applicants succeeded with this second demand. By an interim measure of 5 April 2001 the Hauptverband was prohibited until 20 April 2001 from proceeding to award the contract. By order of 20 April 2001 the Bundesvergabeamt then set aside the notional decision not to cancel the contract award procedure. This order did not, however, prevent the conclusion of the contract between the contracting authority and EDS/ORGA a few days later.

(3) There then followed a third set of proceedings, in which the unsuccessful applicants in essence sought the annulment of the decisions taken by the Hauptverband after its decision to select EDS/ORGA as the best bidder', thus ignoring the Bundesvergabeamt's order of 20 April 2001 that the contract award procedure be cancelled. In the course of this third set of proceedings the Bundesvergabeamt raised the questions submitted for a preliminary ruling. From the order for reference it can be deduced that the applicants in these proceedings base their demands mainly on two arguments:

- the decision of 18 December 2000 to award the contract was invalid from the outset because the so-called Smart Card Committee had not yet given the approval required for the award of the contract;

- the decisions that led to the conclusion of the contract between the Hauptverband and EDS/ORGA were all void because they were taken in the context of an invalid contract award procedure.

49. There is no denying that a contract was concluded between the Hauptverband and EDS/ORGA, bringing to an end the second phase of the contract award procedure that had begun on 22 February 2000. Under Austrian law, only a civil court is competent to assess the validity of this contract and any claim for damages in connection therewith.

50. From the contents of the questions referred, read in conjunction with the detailed explanation relating thereto, it can be deduced that the Bundesvergabeamt doubts that the powers conferred on it are sufficient to ensure the effective application of Directive 89/665, since a contract award procedure which it considers contrary to Community law has none the less led to the award and conclusion of a significant contract.

51. To the extent to which this background to the questions has prompted the Bundesvergabeamt, implicitly on some occasions, more explicitly on others, to question the compatibility as such of the legal system underlying Austrian public procurement law with Directive 89/665, it exceeds the limits imposed by Article 234 EC on the preliminary ruling procedure, which restricts cooperation between the national courts and the Court of Justice to the interpretation of Community law for the benefit of a decision in the main action.

52. It is therefore necessary to examine whether the Court's answers to the questions referred to it for a preliminary ruling can be beneficial to a decision in the main action.

53. In the light of this and other factors the admissibility of the questions referred should first be appraised.

B - Admissibility

54. The Hauptverband, the Austrian Government and the Commission have contended in their written observations and their oral statements at the hearing, albeit for widely different reasons, that the questions are not admissible.

55. The Commission doubts that the Bundesvergabeamt is a court or tribunal, since it itself recognises in the order for reference that its decision does not contain any recommendations to the contracting authority that are capable of implementation'. It therefore asks whether the questions submitted by the Bundesvergabeamt are admissible, having regard to the Court's case-law and specifically to the judgments in Victoria Film (6) and Salzmann , (7) according to which a national court may refer a question to the Court under Article 234 EC only if there is a case pending before it and if it is called upon to give judgment in proceedings intended to lead to a decision of a judicial nature.

56. The Austrian Government takes the view that the questions are inadmissible because they are so worded as to be incomprehensible to those who are not familiar with Austrian formal and substantive public procurement law. It contends that a referring national court or tribunal must be expected to phrase complex and fundamental questions concerning the structure of the national legal order in such a way that they are also clear and comprehensible to those who are not familiar with the national legal order in question.

57. The Hauptverband considers the questions to be inadmissible because, in its view, the order for reference gives an incomplete description of the facts in the main action. In the present case the order concerns not one, but three different basic sets of proceedings. Furthermore, the Bundesvergabeamt omitted to refer in its order for reference to the proceedings pending before the Verfassungsgerichtshof and the Handelsgericht (Commercial Court) in Vienna.

58. Nor was the Bundesvergabeamt competent to submit questions for a preliminary ruling because after its decision of 19 March 2001 an appeal against the decision awarding the contract was no longer possible. The Bundesvergabeamt was therefore no longer entitled to assess the validity of that decision or the decisions which the Hauptverband had subsequently taken. Nor did the Bundesvergabeamt have any authority to assess the validity or invalidity of a contract governed by civil law which had been concluded after the expiry of the contract award procedure.

59. At the hearing the Austrian Government and the Hauptverband also referred to the implications of the Verfassungsgerichtshof's judgment of 2 March 2002 for the admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling. That judgment annulled the Bundesvergabeamt's decision of 20 April 2001. The Verfassungsgerichtshof held that it was logically impossible for a decision to be set aside if that decision called for something not to be done. The application to that effect from the consortia of tenderers which had not qualified for the award of the contract had therefore had to be declared inadmissible. As the Bundesvergabeamt had assessed the case in question in response to an inadmissible application, it had arrogated a power to which it was not entitled. The Hauptverband's right to a hearing before a court of law had therefore been infringed.

60. The Austrian Government and the Hauptverband contend that, as a result of this judgment by the Verfassungsgerichtshof, the relevance to the main action of the questions referred to the Court is at least partly lost, namely to the extent that they explicitly or implicitly concern the Bundesvergabeamt's decision of 20 April 2001, the questions thus becoming hypothetical. According to the Court's case-law, this would make them inadmissible. This would certainly be true of Question 1 and perhaps of Questions 3, 4a and 4b too.

61. The answer with respect to the Commission's first objection to the admissibility of the questions can be brief. Very recently, in the judgment in GAT , (8) the Court explicitly ruled that the decisions of the Bundesvergabeamt are indeed of a judicial nature and that the Court is therefore competent to answer questions submitted by that body. The Court pointed out in this context that it is evident from Paragraph 125(2) of the BVergG that an assessment by the Bundesvergabeamt under Paragraph 113(3) of the BVergG is not only a requirement for the admissibility of any claim for damages made to a civil court for the culpable infringement of the aforementioned provisions, but is also binding both on the parties to the proceedings before the Bundesvergabeamt and on the civil court concerned. Consequently, the Court is competent to answer questions referred to it by the Bundesvergabeamt.

62. Nor, it seems to me, does the Austrian Government's second objection to admissibility serve any purpose. It can indeed be deduced from the detailed order for reference and the explanation it contains what the Bundesvergabeamt is seeking to achieve with the questions referred, although the wording of those questions is not prima facie always clear. In raising this objection, which refers primarily to national law, the Austrian Government appears, moreover, to be ignoring the fact that the procedure for which Article 234 EC provides concerns the interpretation and validity not of national law but of Community law and especially, in the present case, the interpretation of a number of provisions of Directives 89/665 and 92/50. (9)

63. The third objection, raised by the Hauptverband, to the admissibility of the questions is more persuasive, partly in the light of my preliminary comments in points 48 to 53 above. Although, according to settled case-law of the Court, it is for the national courts to determine whether the order for reference accords with national formal and substantive law (10) and it is left to them to identify (11) and assess (12) assess the relevant facts, this authority is not unrestricted. If it can be deduced from the order for reference, from the court documents forwarded and from written and oral observations that the answers to the questions referred can clearly have no influence on the outcome of the main action and that they are therefore of a hypothetical nature, they should, again according to settled case-law of the Court, (13) be dismissed without a ruling.

64. In the light of the foregoing, it must therefore be examined whether the questions which the Bundesvergabeamt has submitted are relevant to the settlement of the main action.

65. As I have already observed in points 48 to 51 above, the Hauptverband has concluded a contract with EDS/ORGA without abiding by the decision of the Bundesvergabeamt in which the Hauptverband's - notional - decision not to cancel the contract award procedure was set aside. In the main action the applicants now state inter alia that the decisions by the Hauptverband which ultimately resulted in the conclusions of the contract are all void because they were taken in the context of an invalid contract award procedure.

66. Now that it has been determined that under Austrian law it is not the Bundesvergabeamt but a civil court which is competent to assess the legal validity of the contract concluded on 23 April 2002 between the Hauptverband and EDS/ORGA, the answers to the questions referred cannot in principle make any contribution to the settlement of the main action.

67. Under Austrian law the civil courts are competent to assess contracts concluded after their award. In accordance with the last sentence of Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665, Austrian law limits the powers of those courts to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement of the contract award requirements.

68. Now that it appears to have been established that in the situation underlying the main action the decision awarding the contract taken by the contracting authority was not annulled by the Bundesvergabeamt and, to implement that decision, one or more contracts were concluded as a result of their award, it must be assumed that only a civil court is competent to assess the contracts which have emerged from the contract award procedure here at issue.

69. In the light of the foregoing I take the view that it must be assumed that the questions submitted by the Bundesvergabeamt, which essentially ask whether the powers conferred on it in the BVergG satisfy the minimum requirements set out in Article 2(7) of Directive 89/665, are purely hypothetical.

70. The hypothetical nature of the questions is, moreover, reflected in their content. Taken together, they contain, as I have already observed in point 51, an invitation to the Court to weigh, in a context far removed from the actual legal dispute in the main action, the general system of legal protection for which the national contract award procedure provides against the applicable Community law. The Bundesvergabeamt thereby overlooks the fact that the procedure set out in Article 234 EC charges the Court to contribute to the administration of justice in the Member States and not to give learned opinions on general or hypothetical questions. (14)

71. As the final element in the assessment of the admissibility of the questions referred, the consequences of the Verfassungsgerichtshof's ruling of 2 March 2002 should be considered.

72. As is evident from the order for reference, the Bundesvergabeamt has submitted its questions primarily because its decision of 20 April 2001 setting aside the contracting authority's - notional - decision not to cancel the contract award procedure was not enforceable under Austrian law. This is quite obvious from the wording of Questions 1, 3, 4a and 4b. Now that the Verfassungsgerichtshof has annulled the decision of 20 April 2001 on the ground that the Bundesvergabeamt was not competent to take such a decision, the questions directly concerning this decision have no basis. They have thus become of a purely hypothetical nature, even without the arguments advanced above in support of this view being considered.

73. Although Question 2 does not refer directly to the decision of 20 April 2001, it seems to me that this question too is affected by the ruling of the Verfassungsgerichtshof referred to above. In substance, the statement of reasons for the - annulled - decision of 20 April 2001 was, after all, based on the assumption that the contract award procedure was invalid because it contained a contract award requirement which was contrary to Community law, as construed by the Court in Holst Italia. (15) However, that assumption is pivotal in Question 2. However correct it may be, the Court does not need to consider it now that it forms part of a ruling by the Bundesvergabeamt which cannot play any further part in the main action.

74. In view of the foregoing I conclude that the questions referred to the Court by the Bundesvergabeamt in this case are not relevant to the resolution of the legal dispute in the main action and so, being purely hypothetical, must be declared inadmissible.

C - Substance

75. Merely in the alternative, if and in so far as the Court does not agree with my opinion that all the questions submitted are inadmissible and concludes that only those directly affected by the Verfassungsgerichtshof's ruling of 2 March 2002, that is to say, Questions 1, 3, 4a and 4b, are inadmissible, I will now consider Question 2.

76. In this regard the Commission has observed, for good reason to my mind, that the question is based on the false premiss that it follows from the Court's ruling in Holst Italia (16) that the condition imposed by Point 1.8 of the contract award requirements of 15 March 2000 for permitting subcontractors' services is contrary to Community law.

77. Indeed, Directive 92/50, the directive applicable to the contract award procedure here at issue, does not contain any provision prohibiting subcontracting as such. It is clear from Article 25 of that directive that the contracting authority may ask the tenderer to indicate in his tender any share of the contract he may intend to subcontract to third parties. Article 32(2)(h) stipulates that evidence of the service provider's technical capability may be furnished through an indication of the proportion of the contract which he may intend to subcontract, according to the nature, quantity and purpose of the services to be provided.

78. In the assessment of the admissibility of a prohibition of subcontracting a distinction must be made, as the Commission, the Austrian Government and the Hauptverband have rightly observed, between such a prohibition where the suitability of tenders is being assessed and a prohibition in the case of the performance of the contract once it has been awarded.

79. The ruling of the Court in Holst Italia , (17) to which the Bundesvergabeamt refers, concerned the assessment and selection phase of a contract award procedure.

In paragraph 26 of that judgment the Court ruled in this respect: From the object and wording of those provisions, it follows that a party cannot be eliminated from a procedure for the award of a public service contract solely on the ground that that party proposes, in order to carry out the contract, to use resources which are not its own but belong to one or more other entities.'

In paragraph 31 the Court rounds off its reasoning by stating... that Directive 92/50 is to be interpreted as permitting a service provider to establish that it fulfils the economic, financial and technical criteria for participation in a tendering procedure for the award of a public service contract by relying on the standing of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them, provided that it is able to show that it actually has at its disposal the resources of those entities which are necessary for performance of the contract...'.

80. I interpret this ruling as follows: potential applicants for a public works contract may not be eliminated on the ground that they do not themselves have all the skills needed for the performance of the contract. Such a prohibition might result in the number of applicants being severely limited from the outset, especially in the case of large and technically complex contracts. This would mar the effect of Directive 92/50. However, to ensure that the contract, once awarded, is performed appropriately, the contracting authority may require that, where a tenderer relies on the skills of other entities, he vouch for the availability of their resources.

81. It is, however, evident from the wording of Point 1.8 of the contract award requirements, as referred to in point 20 of this Opinion, that this condition relates not to the tendering and selection phase of the contract award procedure but to the phase in which the contract for the performance of the works is concluded.

82. During that phase a prohibition or restriction of subcontracting, by which the contracting authority seeks to prevent the performance of essential parts of the contract from being left to entities whose capacities and qualities it has been unable to assess during the contract award procedure, is not inconsistent with Directive 92/50. It is evident from the wording of Article 25 of that directive that it applies explicitly to the tendering and assessment phase of the contract award procedure. Article 25 provides for the contracting authority to have an insight into the capacities of the entities concerned, which is necessary for a correct assessment of the tenders submitted. From this it is impossible to deduce an argument for prohibiting subcontracting in the phase in which the contract on the performance of the work is concluded with the selected tenderer after the contract has been awarded.

83. It follows from this that the premiss on which the Bundesvergabeamt's decision of 20 April 2001 is based, namely that Point 1.8 of the contract award requirements is contrary to Community law and that, therefore, the contract award procedure should be cancelled in its entirety, is in itself incorrect.

84. Although the Bundesvergabeamt has not asked in its questions for an assessment of its interpretation of the Court's ruling in Holst Italia , (18) it is my view that the Court can hardly let an obviously incorrect interpretation of its case-law pass unchallenged. This is all the truer if it formed the basis of the decision of the Bundesvergabeamt to which its questions refer and which may, for that and other reasons, make those questions hypothetical.

85. Furthermore, leaving aside the substantive premiss of the decision of 20 April and assuming that the invitation to tender included a condition inconsistent with Community law or continued despite a notice issued in view of this inconsistency by a review body within the meaning of Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665, an assessment should be made in accordance with applicable national law of the validity and possibly the cancellation of the contracts already concluded.

86. This view is endorsed inter alia in the Court's judgment in Alcatel (19)and in the Opinion of Advocate General Alber in Commission v Austria . (20)

VI - Conclusion

87. In view of the foregoing I propose that the Court should:

- declare the questions referred to the Court in the Bundesvergabeamt's order for reference of 11 July 2001 inadmissible;

- in the alternative, declare Questions 1, 3, 4a and 4b inadmissible and answer Question 2 as follows:

If there has been a contract award procedure which included a tender requirement inconsistent with Community law, or if the contract has been awarded despite a decision issued in view of this inconsistency by a review body within the meaning of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, the validity and possible cancellation of the contracts already concluded should be assessed in accordance with applicable national law.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Alber delivered on 3 April 2003.
Commission of the European Communities v Kingdom of Belgium.
Failure by a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Directive 92/50/EEC - Renewal of a contract for surveillance of the Belgian coast by aerial photography.
Case C-252/01.

I - Introduction

1 In these infringement proceedings, the Commission is claiming that the Kingdom of Belgium has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (1) (hereinafter: `Directive 92/50' or `the Directive' - articles cited without further definition are articles of the Directive). In particular, Belgium has infringed Article 11(3) and Article 15(2) by unfairly awarding a contract to perform services involving coastal surveillance by means of aerial photography by negotiated procedure (without prior publication of a notice) and failing to give prior notice of its intention to select that procedure. Belgium considers that the Directive is inapplicable because the contract involves security interests.

II - Legislative framework

Directive 92/50

2 According to the following articles:

Article 4(2):

`This Directive shall not apply to services which are declared secret or the execution of which must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions in force in the Member State concerned or when the protection of the basic interests of that State's security so requires.'

Article 8:

`Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI.'

Article 9:

`Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I B shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.' (2)

Article 10:

`Contracts which have as their object services listed in both Annexes I A and I B shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI where the value of the services listed in Annex I A is greater than the value of the services listed in Annex I B. Where this is not the case, they shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.'

Article 11(3):

`Contracting authorities may award public service contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice in the following cases:

(b) when, for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the services may be provided only by a particular service provider;

...'

Article 15(2):

`Contracting authorities who wish to award a public contract by open, restricted or, under the conditions laid down in Article 11, negotiated procedure, shall make known their intention by means of a notice.'

Article 30(1):

`In so far as candidates for a public contract or tenderers have to possess a particular authorisation or to be members of a particular organisation in their home country in order to be able to perform the service concerned, the contracting authority may require them to prove that they hold such authorisation or membership.'

III - Facts and procedure

4 On 7 April 1988, the - at that time state-run - Belgian Administration of Waterways and Maritime Affairs (3) issued a restricted invitation to tender for surveillance of the Belgian coast by means of aerial photography. The contract was awarded to the Belgian undertaking Eurosense Belfotop

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

NV (hereinafter: Eurosense Belfotop), which was adjudged to be technically and financially the best candidate.

5 With a view to regionalisation, the then Ministerial Committee for Economic and Social Industrialisation decided to award the contract for one year only. On 29 June 1989, the Flemish Government of the day decided to extend the contract by six years on the basis of the 1988 tender. The main purpose of the contract was to provide regular surveillance by means of aerial photography of the chain of dunes and the beaches, both above and below the waterline, the length of the Belgian coast, as well as to process the data obtained.

6 From 1992, the Flemish authorities examined the possibility of amending the contract by means of an addendum. On 13 April 1995, following a negotiated procedure without prior notification, the Flemish Minister for public contracts signed an addendum to the contract with Eurosense Belfotop, in the amount of BEF 534 million (without value added tax), to run for nine years.

7 Following an appeal, the Commission sent the Belgian authorities a letter of formal notice, on 27 December 1995, claiming that the addendum to the contract of 13 April 1995 fell within the scope of Directive 92/50 and that, according to Article 15(1) and (2), an `indicative notice' and a notice of intention to award should have been published in the Official Journal of the European Communities. The failure to publish a notice constituted an infringement of Article 15(1) (4) and (2). In addition, the award of the contract by negotiated procedure without prior notification was not justified under Article 11(3) of the Directive.

8 By its reply of 2 February 1996, the Belgian Government rejected the criticisms. In the first place, according to Article 4(2), the Directive was not applicable to the contract at issue. Furthermore, the award of the contract by negotiated procedure was justified under Article 11(3)(b) of the Directive. Five criteria were set for the award of the contract:

(a) Possession of a military security certificate;

(b) Possession of a licence from the aviation authorities to engage in aviation activity;

(c) Possession of the necessary know-how, the technology and the requisite equipment;

(d) The above three elements to be in the possession of a single undertaking;

(e) Sufficient financial capacity to be able to provide services annually to the value of some BEF 80 million.

Finally, other factors justified awarding the contract by negotiated procedure, such as the existence of exclusive rights, in particular intellectual property rights, the availability of aircraft within two hours' flying time and command of the Dutch language.

9 None the less, on 10 March 1999, the Commission sent the Kingdom of Belgium a reasoned opinion in which it stood by its criticisms. The Belgian Government responded by a letter of 1 June 1999. In that letter, it claimed, in particular, that the main object of the contract was to provide aerial photography services, which fell not within Category 12 of Annex I A of the Directive but within Category 27 (`Other services') of Annex I B.

10 By an application of 29 June 2001, the Commission brought an action for failure to fulfil an obligation. The Commission is seeking a ruling that:

- pursuant to the first paragraph of Article 226 EC, the Kingdom of Belgium has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, and Articles 11(3) and 15(2) thereof in particular,

- by failing, in respect of a contract to perform services involving coastal surveillance by means of aerial photography, to place a notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities, as required under the Directive; and

- by unjustifiably awarding the contract in question by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a notice;

- the Kingdom of Belgium should be ordered to pay the costs.

11 Although the Belgian Government has not formally submitted that the application should be dismissed, it expressly maintains that there is no infringement of the obligations flowing from Directive 92/50.

IV - Submissions of the parties

12 The arguments of the parties revolve around the statements of defence already submitted by the defendant Member State in the pre-litigation procedure. The following account of the submissions of the parties focuses on the three issues raised.

A - Directive 92/50 is inapplicable on the basis of Article 4(2) thereof (special security measures)

13 The Commission contends that the derogation under Article 4(2), which has to be strictly interpreted, is not applicable to this case. The fact that the undertaking commissioned to provide and process aerial photography has to have military security clearance cannot be considered to be a `special security measure' within the meaning of that provision, but must in fact be deemed to be a licence or `particular authorisation' which candidates within the meaning of Article 30(1) have to possess.

14 The Belgian Government, however, maintains that Article 4(2) is applicable because one of the selection criteria was possession of military security clearance. Undertakings which, when executing a public contract, have access to data, sites or equipment classified by the national authorities or NATO can obtain a military security certificate after undergoing security checks. Only authorised undertakings receive a list of the classified items, allowing them to operate in accordance with the original objective and to conceal the classified objects in any publications or reports, that is to say make them unidentifiable. Those undertakings which do not possess security clearance have, before processing the data, to transmit them to the general intelligence services, (5) which check to see whether they contain classified items and, if necessary, make the latter unidentifiable. That process is unworkable because it results in delays incompatible with emergency measures, in the event of storms for example, and also because relevant information is lost, where the negatives had been rendered unidentifiable.

B - Directive 92/50 is inapplicable pursuant to Annex I B thereof

15 The Commission contends that the contract falls under Reference No 867 (architectural, engineering and other technical services) of the CPC and, consequently, Category 12 of Annex I A of the Directive, with the result that the provisions of the Directive have to apply without exception. Category No 867 embraces several subcategories, such as, for example No 8675 (Engineering related scientific and technical consulting services), which are also broken down into subcategories. The services under the contract in question fall under Category No 86753 (Surface surveying services) and Category No 86754 (Map making services).

16 Although the contract covers services for the provision of aerial photography, which could of themselves fall within subcategory 87404 CPC, the contract has a far wider remit, being closely connected with the coastal surveillance programme drawn up by the authorities with the aim of guaranteeing the security of the coastal area and its inhabitants.

17 Moreover, the value of the services for the provision of aerial photography does not account for the bulk of the total contract value. The Commission estimates that of a total contract value of BEF 527 194 225, aerial photography accounts for BEF 245 464 732, that is to say 46.56%.

18 The Belgian Government claims that the main element of the contract comprises services for the provision of aerial photography which fall not under Category 12 of Annex I A of the Directive, but under Category 27 (Other services) of Annex I B of the Directive. None of the 27 categories listed in Annexes I A and I B of the Directive include the item `services for the provision of aerial photography'. In addition to the categories listed, the Directive refers to the United Nations CPC Classification. That Classification lists aerial photography under No 87504.1. But that number is not to be found in the annexes to the Directive. However, Category 27 of Annex I B covers `Other services', and is thus an open category containing no reference to CPC numbers. Aerial photography must therefore be assigned to that category.

19 Aerial photography is the main element of the contract. It covers both the taking of aerial photographs and the related processes and operations. In addition, the criteria governing the award of the contract in question relate to aerial photography. Finally, aerial photography accounts for BEF 295 202 732 of a total of more than BEF 527 194 225, so that the bulk of the monies, that is to say 56%, is taken up by aerial photography. The contract for the provision of services at issue has therefore to be classified as a service for the provision of aerial photography and, consequently, as `another service'. It therefore follows that Directive 92/50 is not applicable.

C - Justification for awarding the contract by negotiated procedure without prior notification in accordance with Article 11(3)(b) of the Directive

20 The Commission considers the reference to Article 11(3)(b) to be incorrect. It first submits that the obligation to be in possession of military security clearance has nothing to do with `technical reasons' within the meaning of that provision, and relates only to the possession of certain licences or authorisations.

21 Furthermore, the Belgian Government has neither claimed nor demonstrated that Eurosense Belfotop is the only undertaking to possess the requisite know-how, technology and equipment. Since the rules on the publication of public tenders were not applied, other candidates were prevented from proving that they met the conditions laid down. It has also to be pointed out that the contract requires the undertaking in question to develop a new technology, called aerial laser hypsometry. (6) But that technology has already been used abroad, confirming that the technical specifications were drawn up with a view to the undertaking in question and not vice versa. Nor can it be ruled out that, given a certain period of time, several undertakings would have been in a position to develop computer programs identical or comparable to the specialised programs hitherto utilised solely by Eurosense Belfotop.

22 The exclusive rights or intellectual property rights relating to the processes and programs in question cannot be considered to be exclusive rights within the meaning of Article 11(3) of the Directive, since they are merely the consequence of developing certain processes in implementation of the 1989 contract and, therefore, cannot be considered essential for performance of the contact. Any other party to a contract would similarly have had the opportunity to acquire certain exclusive rights in the process of executing the contract.

23 It is also conceivable that the results of the filming have become the property of the Region of Flanders and that, consequently, Eurosense Belfotop has no exclusive rights within the meaning of Article 11(3)(b). Finally, given that derogations have to be strictly interpreted, it is highly questionable whether intellectual property rights can be considered to be exclusive rights within the meaning of Article 11(3)(b).

24 The Belgian Government contends, solely in the event that the contract at issue is covered by Annex I A of the Directive - which it specifically rejects - that the award of the contract by negotiated procedure without prior notification is justified pursuant to Article 11(3) of the Directive. Only Eurosense Belfotop could be awarded the contract to provide the services both for technical reasons and for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights.

25 The technical reasons are linked to the selection criteria the Region of Flanders adopted in the negotiations. Having military security clearance was thus a condition for performance of the contract. At the time of the negotiations, Eurosense Belfotop had that clearance, as, incidentally, did three other companies. The Region of Flanders could not have awarded that contract to an undertaking that did not yet have military security clearance. The procedure for obtaining the clearance was lengthy and costly. In addition, aerial filming required a licence for aerial photography within the field of specialist photography.

26 Furthermore, the results of the photography, that is to say the films containing the aerial and the multispectral scanner images, in execution of the contract, required very special treatment and had to be converted into numerical data, tables, graphs and maps, requiring the use of special techniques and specially developed computer programs. It was possible to record data using aerial filming, and to process and interpret that data, only by using highly technical equipment in the hands of specially trained technical staff.

27 It was also necessary for a single undertaking to possess the requisite know-how, technology and equipment, with no possibility of subcontracting. The military security certificate meant that the undertaking could be given a list of military secrets, which the undertaking itself could then make unidentifiable. Before that certificate could be obtained, thorough checks were carried out on both staff and installations. There was also a very strict procedure governing access to the photographic material. The archive and storage facilities, as well as those in which the basic documentation was to be used, had to meet many security requirements. One of the contractual obligations was that the contractor should store all the basic documentation in its own installations, which were approved under the military security certificate. That condition in fact precluded any temporary involvement of other contractors or the use of subcontractors.

28 In addition, the flight staff had to be available within two flying hours, and the Dutch language had to be used in order to be able to communicate with the Region of Flanders in this particularly complex area. The candidate had also to possess adequate financial guarantees to ensure that it was able to continue to provide its services during the lifetime of a contract of such long duration. Both the experience of Eurosense Belfotop and that of the Belgian Administration for Waterways and Maritime Affairs had led to the conclusion that no other company was in a position to execute the contract and ensure programme continuity.

29 As regards the exclusive rights, and indeed both intellectual property rights in the various programs and exclusive rights to the data obtained, the Region of Flanders had concluded that Eurosense Belfotop was the only undertaking with which it could negotiate. The undertaking had itself developed the programs and techniques for carrying out the measurements and drawing the maps for surveillance of the Belgian coast. They were unique. Eurosense Belfotop had intellectual property and patent rights over them. In addition, the original contact of 1989 had provided that the photographs were to remain the exclusive property of Eurosense Belfotop. That contract had also provided that the results of the photography filming could be utilised by the Region of Flanders for its `personal use' only. They could not be passed on to third parties without the permission of Eurosense Belfotop. That obligation was valid for the lifetime of the contract and a further three years. Consequently, another undertaking would not have been able to use the data obtained by Eurosense Belfotop, and would thus not have been in a position to reproduce the changes to the Belgian coastline.

V - Analysis

A - Directive 92/50 is inapplicable pursuant to Article 4(2) thereof

30 It is first necessary to consider whether Directive 92/50 is in any way applicable to the contract at issue. Under Article 4(2), the Directive specifically does not apply to public service contracts the execution of which must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions of the Member State concerned. The Belgian Government takes the view that the contract at issue is a contract requiring special security measures of that nature.

31 It is true that the Belgian Government does not cite any laws, regulations or administrative provisions which, on the one hand, require the intelligence services to check all aerial photography - that requirement constituting, in the view of the Belgian Government, a `special security measure' within the meaning of the abovementioned provision - or, on the other, indicate that this automatic duty to conduct checks can be replaced by military security clearance. Even though the Belgian Government does not cite specific provisions, there is no reason to doubt their existence. At any event, the Commission has expressed no doubts as to the existence of that requirement or its legal basis, but has merely queried its classification as a `special security measure' within the meaning of Article 4(2).

32 The first question which arises is in fact how far the general requirement that the intelligence services check aerial photography can be cited for the purpose of classifying the contract at issue, since that requirement lapses immediately an undertaking has a security certificate, which was made a condition for the award of the contract in this case.

33 I consider it perfectly tenable for supervision by the intelligence services of all aerial photography to be considered to constitute `special security measures' for reasons of security policy. In that connection, the Belgian Government referred to possible acts of sabotage or terrorist attacks, requiring certain military installations or strategic locations to be kept secret. In the oral proceedings, the representative of the Belgian Government cited the example of the military base at Koksijde, on the Belgian coast. I therefore have no doubt that the adoption of certain security measures in relation to aerial photography and the classification of those measures as `special security measures' within the meaning of Article 4(2) of the Directive, is justified.

34 What is questionable, however, is whether it is possible to consider that special security measures are required for the `execution' (7) of the contract, if the undertaking awarded the contract has military security clearance, and the intelligence services therefore no longer have to carry out automatic checks on the aerial photography in the context of that contract.

35 The Commission contends that the military security certificate laid down as one of the selection criteria has to be considered to be a `particular authorisation' within the meaning of Article 30(1) of the Directive. It is one of the conditions governing the award of the contract. But if the contractor holds a military security certificate, no further `special security measures' are required when the contract is executed.

36 In my view, that argument does not take account of the fact that the issue or possession of a military security certificate does not obviate the need for any further security measures. Only the automatic checks by the intelligence services are no longer required. During the procedure before the Court, it was explained that an undertaking which holds a military security certificate is provided with lists of objects classified by the national authorities or NATO. It is the responsibility of the undertaking to take account of security requirements and, if appropriate, itself conceal militarily significant objects when aerial photographs are published. In my view, this amounts to transferring responsibility for the special security measures to the undertaking holding a military security certificate. That transfer of responsibility is probably also the reason why obtaining the military security certificate is such a time-consuming process. The security certificate does not just reflect the security status of an undertaking at a given point in time, it has also to provide a certain guarantee that security requirements will be met in relation to further activities.

37 I therefore consider that the requirement that the undertaking hold a military security certificate amounts to more than `particular authorisation' within the meaning of Article 30(1), which would preclude a contract executed by an undertaking with a military security certificate from being considered to be a contract requiring special security measures.

38 Complete documentation of the Belgian coast, including the port of Zeebrugge, using aerial photographs - taken over a long period of time - therefore seems to me entirely likely to impinge on the security interests of the Belgian State. I therefore consider it also plausible that execution of the contract requires special security measures, as the Belgian Government maintains.

39 I also consider that it is largely for the government of a Member State to evaluate and define that State's security interests. If, then, the Belgian Government maintains that execution of the contract requires special security measures, and that assertion is not patently questionable, the Court should consider this sufficient for Article 4(2) of the Directive to be relied upon. I therefore consider that the Kingdom of Belgium can properly invoke Article 4(2) of the Directive, with the result that the Directive is inapplicable. In those circumstances, the Belgian Government cannot be deemed to have infringed the Treaty.

40 Only if the Court does not agree with that analysis will it be necessary to consider the further submissions of the parties.

B - Directive 92/50 is inapplicable if the contract is classified under Annex I B of the Directive

41 If we assume that Directive 92/50 is in principle applicable to the contract for the provision of services at issue, the next question to arise is whether the services in question should be assigned to Annex I A or to Annex I B. The Directive provides for `two-tier application.' (8) According to the 21st recital of the Directive: `full application of this Directive must be limited, for a transitional period, to contracts for those services where its provisions will enable the full potential for cross-frontier trade to be realised;... contracts for other services need to be monitored for a certain period before a decision is taken on the full application of this Directive...'.

42 According to the seventh recital: `the field of services is best described, for the purpose of application of procedural rules and for monitoring purposes, by subdividing it into categories corresponding to particular positions of a common classification; whereas Annexes I A and I B of this Directive refer to the CPC nomenclature (common product classification) of the United Nations;... that nomenclature is likely to be replaced in the future by [a] Community nomenclature ...'. (9)

43 Under Article 8 of the Directive, contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A are to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI. Under Article 9 of the Directive, contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I B are to be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16. Only the common rules in the technical field under Article 14 and the obligation to publish the result of the tendering procedure under Article 16 then apply. It is therefore essential to determine to which category of Annex I the services underpinning the contract belong in order to meet the requirement under Community law to comply with the rules on awarding contracts.

44 The Commission contends that the contract at issue falls into category 12 of Annex I A, whereas the Belgian Government maintains that the contract is covered by category 27 of Annex I B. It seems to me to be indisputable that the contract in question contains elements of landscape architectural services and related scientific and technical consulting services. But, undeniably, the contract also has as its object aerial photography which does not a priori fall into category 12 of Annex I A. It is also undeniable that aerial photography is not specifically listed in either Annex I A or Annex I B.

45 The Belgian Government has pointed out that the CPC nomenclature specifically contains the item `aerial photography', in subcategory 87504. The Community nomenclature, the CPA, (10) in Regulation No 3696/93, contains a category 74.81.2 `photographic services' corresponding to CPC Reference No 875. Subcategory 74.81.25, designated `aerial photography', corresponds to CPC subcategory 87504.1. (11) Since it does not fit into any of the other categories in Annex I of the Directive, it is covered by category 27 `Other services'. This is a kind of catch-all category. It is the only category to which no CPC reference numbers are attached. Consequently, there can be no serious doubt that aerial photography falls into category 27. The Court also ruled in its judgment in Tögel (12) that the reference to the CPC nomenclature in Annexes I A and I B of Directive 92/50 is binding.

46 The sole question which arises concerns the rules according to which the contract must be awarded if parts of its object have to be assigned to Annex I A, while other parts are covered by Annex I B. Article 10 contains binding rules governing cases of that nature:

`Contracts which have as their object services listed in both Annexes I A and I B shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI where the value of the services listed in Annex I A is greater than the value of the services listed in Annex I B. Where this is not the case, they shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.'

47 In its judgment in Swoboda, (13) the Court ruled that Article 10 `provides an unequivocal test for the determination of the regime applicable to a contract composed of several services, which is based on the comparison of the value of the services referred to in Annex I B.' (14)

48 In that judgment, the Court specifically rejected the view that the main object of a contract determines the regime applicable to it. (15) It left no doubt that though the services under a contract to be awarded might be different in nature, they served to achieve a single purpose, so that the contract should be awarded uniformly. (16)

49 It is therefore essential to determine the value of the individual services. In its judgment in Swoboda, which it delivered in the context of a reference for a preliminary ruling, the Court held that `the classification of services in Annexes I A and I B to Directive 92/50 is primarily a question of fact for the contracting authority to determine, subject to review by the national courts.' (17)

50 In this case, however, there is no question of a review by the national courts, since these are infringement proceedings. The question of fact will therefore have to be decided by the Court of Justice in this instance.

51 Both the Commission and the Belgian Government have calculated the proportion of the contract taken up by aerial photography. The Commission arrived at a figure of 46.56%, whereas the Belgian Government has drawn up various calculations, which I do not wish to discuss in detail here, but all of which indicate that, in financial terms also, aerial photography clearly accounts for more than 50% of the contract.

52 The Belgian Government countered the Commission's suggestion of 46.56% with another calculation. According to the Belgian Government, the Commission had taken into account in its calculation only services of category I, II and II of the contract to provide services, but had failed to suggest a percentage to cover services in category IV `sum in reserve' (18) in relation to aerial photography. The purpose of the `sum in reserve' is to cover all kinds of requirements that might prove necessary but could not be anticipated at the time the contract was entered into. The term `in particular' (19) indicates that the sum can be used for services other than those covered by Clause 7 of the contract to provide services, that is to say it may also be used for services comparable to services in categories I, II and III.

53 If the percentage the Commission suggests to cover aerial photography in relation to services in categories I, II and III, that is to say 61.80%, is taken as a basis, and that percentage is transferred to services in category IV, we have to assume that aerial photography accounts for a total of 61.80% of the contract. That figure seems appropriate based on the ex ante assessment, which had to be made when the contract was awarded. It is clear, if we look at the services actually provided in the context of an assessment ex post facto, that aerial photography accounts for 56% of category IV services. In any event, the percentage taken up by aerial photography clearly represents more than 50% of the contract.

54 I do not consider that there can be any fundamental objections to the submissions of the Belgian Government, as set out above. In addition, I consider that the wording of the Swoboda judgment, (20) according to which the classification of services in Annexes I A and I B of the Directive is for the contracting authority to determine, indicates that the Court accords the contracting authority a margin of discretion in classifying the contract.

55 I therefore see no reason to call into question the Belgian Government's assessment that aerial photography accounts for the predominant value of the contract. Accordingly, the contract falls under Annex I B, with the result that the tendering procedure under Community law, under Titles III to VI of Directive 92/50, does not have to be followed. From that point of view also, the action for failure to fulfil an obligation must, therefore, be dismissed.

56 The question whether the Belgian Government can successfully rely on Article 11(3)(b) can therefore be left aside.

VI - Costs

57 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be order to pay the costs. The Belgian Government has not, however, applied for costs. It follows that the parties must be order to bear their own costs.

VII - Conclusion

58 In the light of the foregoing, I therefore propose that the Court:

(1) Declare the action dismissed.

(2) Order each party to bear its own costs.

(2) - Article 14 governs common rules in the technical field; and Article 16 lays down that the results of the tendering procedure are to be published.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Mischo delivered on 25 February 2003 Werner Hackermüller v Bundesimmobiliengesellschaft mbH (BIG) and Wiener Entwicklungsgesellschaft mbH für den Donauraum AG (WED). Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesvergabeamt - Austria. Public contracts - Directive 89/665/EEC - Review procedures concerning the award of public contracts - Article 1(3) - Persons to whom review procedures must be available. Case C-249/01.

1. The Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Public Procurement Office) (Austria) is seeking an interpretation from the Court of Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, (2) as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (3) ("Directive 89/665").

2. The Bundesvergabeamt is seeking in essence to ascertain whether the abovementioned provision should be understood as meaning that if a tenderer's bid is not eliminated by the contracting authority, but the review body finds in the course of the review procedure that the contracting authority would have been bound to eliminate it, the tenderer has been or risks being harmed by the infringement alleged by him.

I Legal background

A Community legislation

3. Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 provides:

> "1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles, and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.
> 3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.

4. Article 2(1), (4) and (6) of Directive 89/665 reads:

> "1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:
> (a) take interim measures, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

4. The Member States may provide that when considering whether to order interim measures the body responsible may take into account the probable consequences of the measures for all interests likely to be harmed, as well as the public interest, and may decide not to grant such measures where their negative consequences could exceed their benefits. A decision not to grant interim measures shall not prejudice any other claim of the person seeking these measures.

B National legislation

5. Directive 89/665 was transposed into Austrian law by the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Bundesvergabegesetz 1997) (1997 Federal Public Procurement Law, BGBl. I, 1997/56, "the BVergG").

6. Paragraph 113 of the BVergG provides:

"1. The Bundesvergabeamt is responsible on application for carrying out a review procedure in accordance with the following provisions.

2. To preclude infringements of this Federal Law and of the regulations implementing it, the Bundesvergabeamt is authorised until the time of the award:

(1) to adopt interim measures and

(2) to set aside unlawful decisions of the contracting authority.

3. After the award of the contract or the close of the contract award procedure the Bundesvergabeamt is competent to determine whether, on grounds of infringement of this Federal Law or of any regulations issued under it, the contract has not been awarded to the best tenderer....

7. Paragraph 115(1) of the BVergG provides:

"Where an undertaking claims to have an interest in the conclusion of a contract within the scope of this Federal Law, it may apply for the contracting authority's decision in the contract award procedure to be reviewed on the ground of unlawfulness, provided that it has been or risks being harmed by the alleged infringement."

8. Under Paragraph II(2)C, point 40a, of the Einführungsgesetz zu den Verwaltungsverfahrensgesetzen 1991 (the 1991 introductory law to the laws relating to administrative procedures, BGBl. 1991/50), the Allgemeines Verwaltungsverfahrensgesetz 1991 (1991 General law on administrative procedure, BGBl. 1991/51, "the AVG") is applicable to the Bundesvergabeamt's administrative procedure.

II The main proceedings

9. Bundesimmobiliengesellschaft mbH (BIG) together with Wiener Entwicklungsgesellschaft mbH für den Donauraum AG (WED) ("the defendants") invited tenders for a procedure in several stages to select architectural designs and decision parameters in order to award general planning contracts for building the new Engineering Faculty for the Technical University in Vienna. The first stage of the procedure involved a competition designed to be an "open search for interested parties to identify ideas" .

10. Several interested parties, including the architect and qualified engineer, Werner Hackermüller, and the company, Dipl.-Ing. Hans Lechner-ZT GmbH ("Lechner"), replied to the invitation to tender and submitted projects. During the second stage of the procedure, the selection, the Beratungsgremium (the advisory panel) recommended pursuing the procedure in the short term with Lechner. By letter of 10 February 1999, the four other tenderers accepted for the negotiation procedure, including Mr Hackermüller, were informed that the Beratungsgremium had not recommended implementation of their projects in its decision of 8 February 1999.

11. On 29 March 1999 Mr Hackermüller applied to the Bundesvergabeamt for institution of a review procedure pursuant to Paragraph 113(2) of the BVergG and requested inter alia that the Bundesvergabeamt should set aside (1) the decision of 8 February 1999 in which the Beratungsgremium and/or the defendants accepted the bid of a rival tenderer as the best tender and recommended that the selection procedure should be pursued with the rival tenderer in the short term, and (2) the decision by which the selection was made without regard to the criteria laid down in the invitation to tender.

12. By decision of 31 May 1999 the Bundesvergabeamt dismissed both Mr Hackermüller's applications on the grounds that he did not have locus standi because his bid should have been eliminated in the first stage of the procedure, under Paragraph 52(1), subparagraph 8, of the BVergG.

13. In support of its decision, the Bundesvergabeamt explained first of all that under Paragraph 115(1) of the BVergG a trader may apply for review only if he risks harm or some other disadvantage. It also pointed out that under Paragraph 52(1), subparagraph 8, of the BVergG the awarding body must, before selecting the successful bid, eliminate immediately, on the basis of the results of its examination of the bids, those which do not comply with the conditions of the invitation to tender or are incomplete or incorrect, if those errors have not been, or cannot be, rectified.

14. The Bundesvergabeamt went on to point out that, in the present case, as regards elimination of a project from the award procedure, point 1.6.7 of the invitation to tender expressly refers to Paragraph 36(4) of the Wettbewerbsordnung der Architekten (Competition rules for architects, "the WOA"), which provides that, where there is a ground for exclusion under Paragraph 8 of the WOA, the project in question must be rejected, and that Paragraph 8(1)(d) eliminates from participation in architectural competitions, among others, persons who include in the portfolio information enabling the author to be identified.

15. Finally, having established that Mr Hackermüller had met the condition for elimination contained in Paragraph 8(1)(d) of the WOA by giving his name under the heading "proposed organisation of overall planning" , so that his project should have been eliminated under the provisions of Paragraph 52(1), subparagraph 8, of the BVergG in conjunction with Paragraph 36(4) of the WOA, the Bundesvergabeamt concluded that Mr Hackermüller's project could no longer be considered for the contract and that since he could not be harmed by any potential infringements of the principle of the lowest tenderer and the rules of the selection procedure Mr Hackermüller had no locus standi to claim the infringements alleged in his applications.

16. On 7 July 1999 Mr Hackermüller brought an action for annulment of the Bundesvergabeamt's decision of 31 May 1999 before the Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court) (Austria). In its judgment of 14 March 2001 (B 1137/99-9) the Verfassungsgerichtshof, referring to an earlier judgment of 8 March 2001 (B 707/00), held that, in view of the broad interpretation that should be given, according to the Court's case-law, (4) to the concept of the capacity to instigate a review procedure under Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, it was questionable to interpret the conditions for making an application under Article 115(1), in conjunction with Article 52(1), of the BVergG as meaning that a tenderer who was not in fact eliminated by the contracting authority may be eliminated from the review procedure by the review body refusing his application for review if that body assumes on a preliminary basis that there is a ground for elimination of the tenderer. It therefore annulled the Bundesvergabeamt's contested decision for breach of the constitutional right to a procedure before the appropriate court, since the Bundesvergabeamt had been required, under the third paragraph of Article 234 EC, to refer a question on that subject to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling.

III The questions

17. It was in those circumstances that the Bundesvergabeamt decided, by order of 25 June 2001, to refer the following questions to the Court:

"1. Is Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 to be interpreted as meaning that any person seeking the award of a specific public contract is entitled to institute a review procedure?

2. In the event that the answer given to Question 1 is no:

Is the abovementioned provision to be understood as meaning that, if a tenderer's bid is not eliminated by the contracting authority, but the review body finds in the course of the review procedure that the contracting authority would have been bound to eliminate it, the tenderer has been or risks being harmed by the infringement alleged by him in this case the finding by the contracting authority that a rival tenderer submitted the best bid and that he must therefore have the right to bring a review procedure?

IV Analysis

A Admissibility of the questions referred by the Bundesvergabeamt

18. As a preliminary, it is necessary to consider an issue which was addressed in a recent judgment, (5) which is whether the Bundesvergabeamt constitutes a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC.

19. That issue was raised in particular by the Commission in Swoboda , cited above, following the order for reference from the Bundesvergabeamt of 11 July 2001 in Siemens and Arge Telekom & Partner , (6) in which the Bundesvergabeamt acknowledged that its decisions did not contain any "binding, enforceable directions addressed to the contracting authority" . (7) 20.

In Swoboda , cited above, a case in which the Bundesvergabeamt was exercising its powers during the period after the award of the contract, the Court held that it was a court within the meaning of Article 234 EC.

21. In paragraphs 27 and 28 of Swoboda the Court held that:

"... the main case relates to the period after the award of the contract. However, it is common ground that in Austrian law both the parties and the civil courts which are seised of a claim in damages during that time are bound in any case by the findings of the Bundesvergabeamt.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

In those circumstances, the binding nature of the decision of the Bundesvergabeamt in the main case cannot reasonably be called into question.

22. The issue now is whether that conclusion also applies in the present case, in which the Bundesvergabeamt is exercising its powers during the period before the award of the contract.

23. I am of the view that the answer is indisputably yes.

24. Unlike the period after the award of the contract, during which the Bundesvergabeamt has jurisdiction under Paragraph 113(3) of the BVergG to "determine whether... the contract had not been awarded to the best bidder..." , the period before the contract was awarded is different because the Bundesvergabeamt has jurisdiction under Paragraph 113(2) of the BVergG "... (1) to lay down interim measures and (2) to set aside unlawful decisions of the contracting authority"

25. If the power to "determine" is of a binding nature, all the more so, it seems to me, are the powers to lay down interim measures and to set aside unlawful decisions.

26. The Bundesvergabeamt is therefore a court within the meaning of Article 234 EC. In the light of the above, the questions referred by the Bundesvergabeamt for a preliminary ruling must be declared admissible.

B First question

27. In the first question the Bundesvergabeamt is seeking to ascertain whether Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 is to be interpreted as meaning that any person seeking the award of a specific public contract is entitled to institute a review procedure.

28. Mr Hackermüller suggests that the answer to that question should be yes, because in his opinion, anyone eliminated from the tendering procedure is harmed.

29. However, the defendants, the Austrian and Italian Governments, and the Commission suggest that the answer to the first question should, in essence, be no.

30. I support their view.

31. It is clear from the wording of Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 that review procedures must be "available... at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement" . (8)

32. Directive 89/665 therefore permits Member States to make access to review procedures subject to two cumulative conditions, namely, (1) the tenderer must have an interest in obtaining a public works contract and (2) the tenderer must have been or have risked being harmed.

33. The Commission is therefore right to consider that "mere interest in obtaining a contract is insufficient on its own" .

34. That interpretation is moreover corroborated, as the Austrian Government rightly points out, by the preparatory documents for Directive 89/665.

35. Although the Commission's original proposal for a Council Directive 87/C 230/05 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on procedures for the award of public supply and public works contracts, submitted by the Commission on 1 July 1987 (9) made no provision regarding the standing of a person entitled to institute a review procedure, Article 1 of the amended proposal submitted on 25 November 1988 (10) provided that the review procedure should be available to "any contractor or supplier taking part in a procedure for the award of a public supply or public works contract, or any third person entitled to tender for such an award..." .

36. As that wording was not adopted in Directive 89/665, it must be inferred that there was a deliberate choice on the part of the Council to enable Member States to make access to review procedures subject to the two conditions mentioned above.

37. I therefore suggest that the answer to the first question should be that Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as meaning that review procedures must be available to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a public works contract provided that person has also been or risks being harmed by the alleged infringement.

C Second question

38. Since I propose that the answer to the first question should be no, I must now also consider the second question. In that question the Bundesvergabeamt is seeking to ascertain whether Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 is to be understood as meaning that, if a tenderer's bid is not eliminated by the contracting authority, but the review body finds in the course of the review procedure that the contracting authority would have been bound to eliminate it, the tenderer has been or risks being harmed by the infringement alleged by him in this case the finding by the contracting authority that a rival tenderer submitted the best bid and that he must therefore have the right to bring a review procedure.

39. Mr Hackermüller considers that if the answer to the first question is no the answer to the second question should at any event be yes, otherwise the review procedure will be unavailable whenever a tenderer is eliminated by the contracting authority for any reason.

40. However, the defendants, the Austrian Government and the Commission propose that the answer should be no. The observations of the Italian Government may be interpreted as meaning that that government also proposes that the answer should be no if the Bundesvergabeamt may be regarded as a court.

41. Those interveners rely in that regard on the purpose of the review procedure, the effect of Directive 89/665 and the principle of equal treatment, which preclude an applicant from being awarded the contract or damages despite his own infringement of the invitation to tender or the provisions governing public works contracts.

42. It should be made clear first of all that in its decision of 31 May 1999 the Bundesvergabeamt held that Mr Hackermüller had no locus standi because his bid should have been eliminated in the first stage of the procedure, under Paragraph 52(1), subparagraph 8, of the BVergG. (11)

43. In its question the Bundesvergabeamt is therefore seeking, in substance, to ascertain whether Directive 89/665, and in particular Article 1(3) thereof, precludes such a rule of national law which it is applying.

44. As the Austrian Government rightly notes in its written observations, "... the review directive does not contain any provision concerning the assessment criteria which the review body should apply.... It therefore falls to Member States to adopt appropriate provisions, which must unquestionably comply with the general principles of public works contract law such as transparency and non-discrimination. Nor should such provisions conflict with the purpose of the review directive..." .

45. Similarly, the Court has held on a matter that was not specifically governed by Directive 89/665, namely determining the decisive moment for the purposes of assessing the legality of a decision withdrawing an invitation to tender, that it is for the domestic legal system of each Member State to determine that moment "... provided that the relevant national rules are not less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions (principle of equivalence) and that they do not make it practically impossible or excessively difficult to exercise rights conferred by Community law (principle of effectiveness) (see, by analogy, Case C-390/98 Banks v Coal Authority and Secretary of State for Trade and Industry [2001] ECR I-6117, paragraph 121 and Case C-453/99 Courage and Crehan [2001] ECR I-6297, paragraph 29)" . (12)

46. The question which arises is therefore whether the abovementioned rule used by the Bundesvergabeamt in its decision of 31 May 1999 does or does not make it practically impossible or excessively difficult to exercise rights conferred by Community law. (13)

47. In that regard, I should like to refer to a point raised in the Verfassungsgerichtshof's judgment of 8 March 2001 (14) which, in the words of the Austrian Government, is as follows: "... there is some uncertainty as to whether it is permissible under Community law as stated in legal literature to "reduce" legal protection for the tenderer in the main case since he has no remedy against the decision to eliminate him taken by the Bundesvergabeamt instead of the contracting authority

48. If it were true that as a result of the criterion in question the tenderer did not have any remedy against a decision which proves to be a decision eliminating him, I should indeed take the view that that criterion makes it excessively difficult to assert the rights conferred under Community law and, in particular, Directive 89/665.

49. There is indeed no doubt that a decision excluding a tenderer constitutes a decision within the meaning of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 against which it should be possible to institute a review procedure.

50. The Court has consistently held that the provision in Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 does not lay down any restriction with regard to the nature and content of the decisions referred to therein. (16) In his Opinion of 7 February 2002 in Santex , (17) Advocate General Alber inferred from this that an elimination decision constitutes a decision against which review, within the meaning of Directive 89/665, should be possible. (18)

51. Is it correct to state, however, in a situation such as that in the main case that "the tenderer has no remedy against the decision to eliminate him taken by the Bundesvergabeamt instead of the contracting authority" ?

52. In my view everything hangs on whether the review body has come to the conclusion that the tenderer should have been eliminated following an adversarial procedure, that is to say, after the tenderer has been given the opportunity to express his views on the grounds for possible elimination.

53. It is clear from Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665, which states that "... the independent body [is to] take its decisions following a procedure in which both sides are heard..." , that such a procedure constitutes an essential feature of a review procedure within the meaning of Directive 89/665.

54. However, even if the review body reaches the abovementioned conclusion following a procedure in which both sides are heard, there remains the question whether the Bundesvergabeamt is entitled to raise of its own motion a plea of infringement of a requirement such as that of anonymity.

55. In that regard, it seems to me to be beyond dispute that if, hypothetically, the contracting authority had first accepted Mr Hackermüller's bid and if another tenderer, being aware that Mr Hackermüller may have infringed the requirement of anonymity, had then instituted proceedings for infringement by the contracting authority of the rules governing public procurement, the Bundesvergabeamt could have decided that Mr Hackermüller should have been eliminated from the tendering procedure even though the contracting authority had not decided to do so earlier.

56. The only difference between that situation and the situation in the main proceedings therefore lies in the fact that in the first case the plea of infringement of the rule of anonymity is raised by one of the parties, whilst in the second case it is raised by the review body of its own motion.

57. In that regard I share the view expressed by Advocate General Geelhoed in his Opinion of 10 October 2002 in GAT (19) that "... Directive 89/665... does not preclude an authority responsible for carrying out review procedures... from taking relevant circumstances into account of its own motion and independently of the submissions of the parties." (20)

58. This approach seems to me moreover to be in accordance both with the purpose of Directive 89/665 and with the principle of equal treatment for all tenderers.

59. As regards that purpose, "... Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 requires the Member States to establish effective review procedures that are as rapid as possible to ensure compliance with Community directives on public procurement" . (21)

60. It appears to me to be contrary to that objective of having effective and rapid review procedures if, in a situation such as that in the present case, the review body is required to wait until a problem regarding the legality of the contract, which it discovers itself, is referred to it by one of the parties.

61. Equal treatment of all tenderers, which is a principle relating to the very essence of the public procurement directives, (22) means that all tenderers are entitled to have their tender, together with those of the other tenderers, dealt with in accordance with the terms of the invitation to tender and the rules on public procurement.

62. A tenderer cannot, therefore, be awarded a contract if he himself has infringed the terms of the invitation to tender or the rules applying to public procurement. As Mr Hackermüller pointed out at the hearing, the fact that other tenderers may also have committed infringements makes no difference since a tenderer cannot rely on the fact that other tenderers have benefited from an infringement in order to argue that he is a victim of discrimination.

63. Moreover, the fact that the review body should be able to raise such a plea of infringement of its own motion seems all the more justified with regard to the principle of equal treatment since, as the Austrian Government rightly observes, the tenderers are usually unaware of grounds for excluding any of their competitors from the contract.

64. I am therefore of the view that a rule of national law under which an appellant has no locus standi on the ground that his bid should already have been eliminated by the contracting authority does not make it practically impossible or excessively difficult to exercise rights conferred by Community law since the appellant has had the opportunity beforehand to express his views on the alleged grounds for elimination.

65. However, if he has not been given an opportunity to express his views, the decision of the review body would in fact amount to a decision to eliminate him without the opportunity for review, which would be contrary to Directive 89/665.

66. I therefore suggest that the answer to the second question should be that Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 does not preclude a tenderer being considered not to have been harmed by the infringement alleged by him in this case the finding by the contracting authority that a rival tenderer submitted the best bid if that tenderer's bid has not been eliminated by the contracting authority, but the review body finds in the course of the review procedure that the contracting authority would have been bound to eliminate it, provided the grounds for elimination relied upon as against the tenderer have been the subject of a procedure in which both sides were heard.

V Conclusion

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

67. In the light of the foregoing I propose the following answers:

to the first question:

"Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, must be interpreted as meaning that the review procedures must be available to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a public works contract provided that person has also been or risks being harmed by the alleged infringement."

to the second question:

"Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 92/50, does not preclude a tenderer being considered not to have been harmed by the infringement alleged by him in this case the finding by the contracting authority that a rival tenderer submitted the best bid if that tenderer's bid has not been eliminated by the contracting authority, but the review body finds in the course of the review procedure that the contracting authority would have been bound to eliminate it, provided the grounds for exclusion relied upon as against the tenderer have been the subject of a procedure in which both sides were heard."

Opinion of Advocate General Stix-Hackl delivered on 11 July 2002 Makedoniko Metro and Michaniki AE v Elliniko Dimosio. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Dioikitiko Efeteio Athinon - Greece. Public works contracts - Rules for participating - Group of contractors submitting a tender - Change in the composition of the group - Prohibition laid down in the contract documents - Compatibility with Community law - Review procedures. Case C-57/01.

I Introductory remarks

1. These proceedings concern the interpretation of a works coordination directive as well as of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (2) (hereinafter "the legal remedies directive"). In particular, the question in issue is whether a change in the composition of a consortium is permissible during procedures for award of a contract, and the effects of such a change on the legal protection available.

II Legal framework

A Community law

2. Of the directives material to the award process, Directive 71/305/EEC concerning coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, (3) as amended by Directive 89/440/EEC, (4) is relevant, and essentially corresponds to Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (5) (hereinafter "the works procurement coordination directive") to which reference will also be made below.

3. Article 1 of the latter provides, inter alia :

"For the purpose of this Directive

(a) "public works contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a contractor and a contracting authority as defined in (b), which have as their object either the execution, or both the execution and design, of works related to one of the activities referred to in Annex II or a work defined in (c) below, or the execution, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority;

(d) "public works concession" is a contract of the same type as that indicated in (a) except for the fact that the consideration for the works to be carried out consists either solely of the right to exploit the construction or in this right together with payment;

...

4. Article 21 states:

"Tenders may be submitted by groups of contractors. These groups may not be required to assume a specific legal form in order to submit the tender; however, the group selected may be required to do so when it has been awarded the contract."

5. As regards legal protection, the provisions of the legal remedies directive are decisive.

6. Article 1(1) of the legal remedies directive, in the form applicable at the relevant time, provided:

"The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC and 77/62/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles, and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law."

7. Article 2(1) of the said directive provides, inter alia ,

"The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

...

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

B National law

8. The award procedure at issue is governed principally by the provisions of Law No 1418/1984 entitled "Public Works and related matters" (23A) and of Presidential Decree No 609/1985 (223A).

9. In the present case, the contracting authority opted for a contract award procedure pursuant to Article 4(2)(b) of Law No 1418/1984. This type of procedure provides for the following stages:

10. Pre-selection of candidates, submission of tenders, assessment of tenders from a technical point of view, assessment of tenders from an economic and financial point of view and negotiations with the so-called provisional contractor or contractors.

11. Article 5(6) of Law No 1418/1984 states: "The substitution of a third party in the construction of part or all of the work (assignment of the work) is prohibited unless authorised by the developer. Whenever there is substitution, the contractor shall be fully liable together with the subcontractor to the contracting authority, the works personnel and any third party. By way of exception, substitution, together with exemption of the contractor from liability to the contracting authority, may be authorised if required in the interests of the work and the contractor is manifestly unable to complete the work. A presidential decree shall determine the qualifications of the substitute, the consequences for the contractor, the procedure for authorising substitution, issues arising on substitution of a member of a contracting group and particulars in connection therewith."

12. Article 51(1) of Presidential Decree No 609/1985, which was adopted on the basis, inter alia , of the foregoing provision, provides as follows:

"1. The substitution of another contracting undertaking in the construction of the work in accordance with Article 5(6) of Law No 1418/1984 shall be proposed by the department managing the project and shall be authorised by the responsible authority. In order that substitution may be authorised, the contracting undertaking which seeks to replace the contractor must have the same qualifications as those which were required for the award of the works to the contractor and must satisfy the responsible authority that it offers the appropriate guarantees for completion of the works."

13. The other provisions of this Article concern authorisation of substitution with exemption from liability for the original contractor (paragraph 2), substitution of a member of a contracting consortium, where substitution is sought by the said member (paragraph 3), termination of the contract if the contractor becomes insolvent (paragraph 5), and termination of the contract if the contractor is a sole operator and dies (paragraph 6).

14. Finally, Article 35 of the abovementioned presidential decree contains provisions concerning the obligations of the members of a contracting consortium as regards completion of the work which are borne by the consortium; paragraphs 6 and 7 of that article determine what happens to the consortium and the obligations of its members in the event of the death of the natural persons who, with their individual undertakings, participated in it, and in the event of the insolvency of a member of the consortium.

15. It is apparent from the combination of these provisions that the legislation relating to the tendering procedure for public works contracts provides, under certain conditions, for the substitution of a member of a consortium where such a contract has been awarded to the consortium in question. Such substitution, always after approval by the developer, is provided for only at the stage of execution of the works, that is to say the stage which follows signature of the contract between the contractor and the developer, and not prior to the award of the contract. (6)

16. In the supplementary notice in respect of the invitation to tender which is in issue in these proceedings (notice concerning the second stage of the award procedure), it was stated that those entitled to take part in that stage were the eight groups which declared their interest in the first stage of the award procedure and had been pre-selected. It was also stated that those groups were entitled to take part in the form that they had taken during the first stage of the award procedure, that the creation of groupings or other forms of cooperation between them was strictly precluded and, finally, that it was possible for a group to be enlarged by the addition of new members provided that the new members had not been included in any other groups pre-selected to take part in the second stage of the procedure.

17. In addition, Article 12 of that notice provided that each tenderer's file should include all the documents showing that the tenderer constituted, from a legal perspective, a consortium. Such documents included a certificate from a notary that a consortium had been formed by all the members of the pre-selected group, including any new members, in accordance with Article 6 of the supplementary notice. Each consortium had also to include certified minutes of the meetings of the boards of directors of all the members of the consortium, authorising their participation in the consortium in cooperation with the other members, which were to be mentioned by name, as well as copies of the articles of association of any new members of the consortium. Finally, it was provided that the file had to include all the items referred to in paragraphs 7.1, 7.2, 7.3 and 7.4 of the notice relating to the first stage of the tendering procedure.

18. Moreover, it was stated in the said notice that the consortia would be required to set out their intentions regarding the extent of their involvement in the financing of the project, and to submit a statement attesting to their willingness to invest the capital sums which were essential, in addition to any subsidies, to ensure completion, maintenance and operation of the work. Furthermore, any construction undertaking or consultancy was required to submit a certificate of registration in the commercial register of the country in which it was established and to submit evidence of its financial and economic resources and its technical capabilities. Finally, undertakings within the consortium which would have more specific responsibility for running the project, were required to submit appropriate certificates and to demonstrate their capability and their experience in the running of transportation projects and, in particular, of underground railways.

19. It is apparent from the abovementioned terms of the notice that provision is made during the second stage of the tendering procedure in question for a consortium which was pre-selected during the first stage to be enlarged by the addition of new members. However, such enlargement is permitted only within the time-frame set for submission of candidates' tenders. As the files show, that restriction was clearly dictated by the need for the competent adjudicating bodies under the award procedure to have available to them, initially on evaluating the technical bids, and subsequently when evaluating the financial studies and in calculating the corresponding public expenditure, all requisite information concerning each separate individual member's financial and economic resources, technical qualifications and capabilities, and aptitude for and experience in carrying out the works in question, for the purposes of appointing the provisional contractor. III Facts, main proceedings and questions referred for preliminary ruling

20. The Ministry for the Environment, Planning and Public Works issued a notice of an invitation to tender, approved by Decision D1d/2/207 of 18 June 1992 of the Minister, announcing the first stage (pre-selection stage) of an international tendering procedure for the appointment of a contractor for the "planning/construction, self-financing and operation of an underground railway for Thessaloniki" budgeted at GRD 65 000 000 000. At that stage, the awarding body selected eight groups of companies which had declared an interest, including the appellant consortium. Subsequently, by Decision D1/4/37 of the Minister for the Environment, Planning and Public Works on 1 February 1993, the bid documentation for the second stage of the tendering procedure was approved, including the supplementary notice and the contract specifications. At that stage technical proposals, financial studies and economic and financial proposals were submitted by, among others, the consortium Makedoniko Metro (hereinafter "Makedoniko") in its original form, and the consortium Thessaloniki Metro (Bouygues).

21. At the pre-selection stage, the members of the initial Makedoniko consortium were the undertakings Mikhaniki AE, Fidel SpA, Edi-Sta-Edilizia Stradale SpA and Teknocenter-Centro Servizi Administrativi-SRL.

22. In the second stage of the tendering procedure in question, that is, after the pre-selection stage and invitation to tender, the consortium was enlarged by the addition of the undertaking AEG Westinghouse Transport Systems GmbH (hereinafter "AEG"). Thus composed, the consortium submitted a bid.

23. As is apparent from the file, and not disputed by the parties, that was the composition of the consortium when it was nominated as provisional contractor (on 14 June 1994) and thus after the assessment of the bids.

24. After the negotiating committee had convened and negotiations commenced between the Hellenic Republic and the consortium as provisional contractor, the consortium, in a letter dated 29 March 1996, informed the Minister for the Environment, Planning and Public Works of the new composition of the consortium (the undertakings Mikhaniki AE, ABB Daimler-Benz Transportation (Deutschland) GmbH [Adtranz] and the Fidel Group, comprising the three Italian undertakings referred to above).

25. Responding to queries relating to rumours that the members of the abovementioned group of Italian companies had become insolvent and gone into liquidation, the consortium informed the Commission for Major Works, in a letter dated 14 June 1996, that the companies in the abovementioned group were no longer part of the consortium, and that the members of the consortium were, as at that time, the undertakings Mikhaniki AE, Adtranz and Transurb Consult. As the file shows, the agreement for the formation of the consortium in that composition was not submitted to the authorities. That notarial act was signed on 27 November 1996, barely two days before the decision of the Minister for the Environment, Planning and Public Works concerning the failure of negotiations, and almost two and a half years after the nomination of the appellant as the provisional contractor. It was also in that composition that the consortium later brought the action.

26. The Minister for the Environment, Planning and Public Works, acting for the awarding authority, found that the appellant had substantially departed from the provisions of the tender documentation, and considered that the negotiations had failed; further, he announced the termination of negotiations between the Greek State and the appellant, and called for negotiations with the second consortium, which was the next candidate for provisional contractor.

27. As a result, the consortium appealed to the Greek Council of State and applied for the awarding authority's decision to break off negotiations to be set aside. The Council of State considered that a change in the composition of a consortium was only permissible prior to submission of bids. Thus, the consortium was not entitled, in its altered composition, to apply for the decision to be set aside.

28. In its action before the Administrative Court of First Instance, Athens, Makedoniko, together with the other undertakings in the consortium, sought a declaration that the State was liable to pay the sums specified in the statement of claim by way of damages and financial compensation for the non-material losses suffered by them as a result of the above unlawful act and omission.

29. That claim was dismissed by the Administrative Court of First Instance, Athens, on the ground that, in the new composition in which the consortium had brought the action, it was not entitled to claim compensation.

30. Makedoniko appealed against the judgment to the Administrative Court of Appeal, Athens, claiming misinterpretation and misapplication of the relevant provisions in the judgment under appeal and, in the alternative, it asked that a reference for a preliminary ruling be made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities on the interpretation of the relevant Community provisions.

31. By order of 14 June 2000, the Administrative Court of Appeal, Athens, referred the following question to the Court of Justice:

> "Must a change in the composition of a consortium participating in procedures for the award of a public-works contract which occurs after submission of tenders and selection of the group as the provisional contractor, and is tacitly accepted by the awarding authority be interpreted in such a way as to result in the loss of that consortium's right to participate in the procedure and, by extension, also of its right to, or interest in, the award of the contract for execution of the works? Is such an interpretation consistent with the provisions and spirit of Directives 93/37/EEC and 89/665/EEC?"

IV On the preliminary question

32. In order for the Court of Justice to provide the national court with an answer that is relevant to the main proceedings, both preliminary questions must, as the Commission and the Austrian Government rightly argue, be rephrased. (8)

33. Thus, in the context of Article 234 EC, the Court has no jurisdiction to rule either on the interpretation of the provisions of national law or regulations or on their conformity with Community law. It may, however, supply the national court with an interpretation of Community law that will enable that court to resolve the legal problem before it. (9)

34. "Finally, according to settled case-law,... where questions are formulated imprecisely, [the Court may extrapolate] from all the information provided by the national court and from the documents in the main proceedings, the points of Community law which require interpretation, having regard to the subject matter of those proceedings." (10)

35. On the basis of the information supplied in the order for reference, having regard in particular to the fact that the national court has made this reference in the light of the relevant specific procurement directive, namely the works procurement coordination directive, as well as the corresponding legal remedies directive, it seems appropriate to split up the question as follows.

Should the provisions of the works procurement coordination directive be interpreted as precluding rules which prohibit a change in the composition of a consortium after submission of tenders?

Does the legal remedies directive apply to decisions concerning a change in the composition of a consortium, such as that which is in issue in the main proceedings?

A Submissions of the parties

36. Makedoniko argues that the enlargement of the consortium by the addition of AEG before submission of tenders was consistent with the supplementary notice of invitation to tender. As regards the subsequent change in the composition of the consortium, namely the withdrawal of AEG and addition of Adtranz, Makedoniko points out that this company was created by the merger of AEG, which, in the meantime, had changed its name to AEG Schienenfahrzeuge GmbH, with AEG Nahverkehr und Wagen GmbH. As legal successor, this new company had assumed the rights and liabilities of AEG. It follows that there was no substantive change in the composition of the consortium.

37. The last alteration in the composition of the consortium was attributable to the fact that the companies in the Fidel group had been obliged, due to changes in their legal status, to leave the consortium. The companies in the Fidel group went into liquidation in 1995. This last alteration had led to the addition of the Transurb Consult company, which in any event held only a very small interest.

38. Makedoniko makes the point that such events are typical for a public works contract. Even if this were a case of a public works concession, the legal remedies directive would apply, because it is only a particular manifestation of the general principle of effective legal protection.

39. Makedoniko suggests that the answer to the questions referred for preliminary ruling should be that a change in the composition of a consortium which has participated in a public works contract award procedure or the issue of a public works concession, which occurs after submission of tenders and provisional selection of the contractor and which is tacitly accepted by the awarding authority, can neither result in such a consortium losing its status as tenderer as a result, nor in the consortium or its members being deprived of their interest in the award or of the possibility of bringing an action to enforce the rights to which they are entitled under Community law. The latter is all the more relevant as that change is neither referred to as a reason for the decision to terminate negotiations with the consortium, nor the decision to exclude it. Any contrary interpretation of the relevant national provisions would run counter to the spirit and letter of the works procurement coordination directive, the legal remedies directive and the general principle of effective legal protection. At the hearing, Makedoniko argued further that prohibiting a change in composition after submission of tenders would constitute an infringement of the freedom to provide services.

40. The Greek Government points out that neither the works procurement coordination directive nor the legal remedies directive refer to a change in the composition of a consortium. A change in composition is not permitted during negotiations with the tenderer which has provisionally been selected as contractor. This follows from the fact that the only subject of negotiations is the final terms of the contract to be awarded and not the identity of the contractor, which is not negotiable. Therefore the identity of a provisionally selected contractor may not change.

41. In the absence of a rule under Community law, the permissibility of a change in the composition of a consortium arises solely under national law, which does not provide for substitution of a member of a consortium during negotiations. The question referred for preliminary ruling must, therefore, be answered in the affirmative.

42. The Austrian Government suggests first of all that the question referred for a preliminary ruling should be rephrased.

43. The Austrian Government concludes from the case-law of the Court, according to which the public procurement directives have not established uniform and exhaustive Community law, that the national legislature may adopt rules in the context of these directives, as Greece has indeed done.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Further, the contracting authorities also have a certain amount of flexibility, for example, in establishing rules relating to consortia. The parameters of this flexibility are set by primary legislation.

44. The purpose of the public procurement directives is to prevent preferential treatment being given to domestic tenderers, and to exclude the possibility of contracting authorities being guided by anything other than economic considerations.

45. The rephrased question should therefore be answered as follows.

> "The provisions of Directive 93/37/EEC do not preclude a change in the composition of a consortium after submission of tenders. The consortium does not, on the basis of the provisions of Directive 93/37/EEC, lose its right to participate in the tendering process, nor, consequently, does it lose its right to, or interest in, being awarded the contract for execution of the work."

46. In the opinion of the Commission , the first part of the question could be interpreted to mean that the Court should comment on national law, over which, however, it has no jurisdiction. Therefore, the Commission proposes that the question be rephrased, and divided into three parts.

47. First, it should be noted that the works procurement coordination directive contains no express provisions concerning a change in the composition of a consortium. Article 21 merely provides that groups of contractors which submit tenders may not be required to assume a specific legal form prior to the award. It is therefore, left to the national legislature or the individual contracting authority, to regulate the details. This applies also to public works concessions.

48. The answer to the first part of the rephrased question should, therefore, be that the works procurement coordination directive contains no provisions which preclude a provision of national legislation or of the contract documentation to the effect that a change in the composition of a consortium ceases to be permissible after a certain stage in the award procedure. This is particularly relevant after the submission of tenders.

49. Further, the Commission presumes that the principle of equal treatment of tenderers would be undermined if a contracting authority could, for the benefit of one tenderer, unilaterally change the terms which are fixed in the tender documentation as not being open to variation, without reopening the whole award procedure. This would otherwise prevent the other and also potential tenderers from benefiting from the change. The answer to the second part of the question should, therefore, be that Community law does not allow a public contracting authority to continue to negotiate with a bidder whose composition has changed, contrary to national law or to the terms of the contract documentation.

50. With regard to the third part of the question, the Commission points out that, under Article 1(1) of the legal remedies directive, only infringements of Community law and national rules implementing that law may be reviewed. This provision does not, therefore, require Member States to provide for procedures to allow review of decisions which have been taken in the context of an award procedure and which infringe rules that do not implement procurement directives.

51. In the Commission's view, therefore, the question referred to the Court should be answered as follows: a change in the composition of a consortium that is in breach of national law or the contract documentation does not affect the exercise of rights which the consortium could claim on the basis of the legal remedies directive, in particular, the right to claim damages.

B Assessment

52. In order to answer the question referred for preliminary ruling, it is first worth pointing out that legal protection in a review procedure under the legal remedies directive is afforded only if the conditions of its applicability are met. Since, however, its applicability is linked to the applicability of the specific procurement directives, and hence of the works procurement coordination directive, it is necessary to examine whether the procurement procedure in issue in this case falls within the scope of its applicability.

53. While that question is being examined, the question of whether the purpose of the procurement procedure in issue was to award a public works concession or a public works contract may remain open for the time being.

1. The applicability of the works procurement coordination directive

54. To begin with, we must consider the argument of the Greek Government according to which, under the case-law of the Court, (11) a contracting authority may refrain from awarding a contract. This aspect does not help us to answer the question referred for a preliminary ruling in so far as the relevant judgment concerned a set of circumstances different from those of the main proceedings. In that case, the award procedure ended without the contract being awarded, because the contracting authority had opted for a material other than that stipulated in the tender notice, which, however, meant a change in the subject-matter of the contract. By contrast with the judgment cited by the Greek Government, the contracting authority in this case did not only opt for another procedure, but had before it several tenders for consideration.

55. The Greek Government's view is also undermined by the fact that there may in principle also be cases in which the contracting authority has to award the contract in accordance with Community law; the question arises, therefore, whether there is such an obligation in the main proceedings as well. This presupposes, however, that Community law governs such a set of circumstances at all, namely the change in the composition of the consortium.

56. It is therefore now necessary to ascertain whether the works procurement coordination directive applies to rules on consortia such as those in the main proceedings, and whether that directive precludes the national rules in issue.

57. The starting point for this is the principle reflected in the case-law of the Court according to which the title of and recitals in the preamble to the works procurement coordination directive show that its aim is simply to coordinate national procedures for the award of public works contracts, so that it does not lay down a complete system of Community rules on the matter. (12)

58. Express rules on consortia are provided only in Article 21 of the works procurement coordination directive. However, that provision deals only with specific legal problems in connection with consortia. It thus affords them the right to submit tenders. Further, whilst it prohibits any requirement that consortia assume a particular legal form for the purpose of tendering, it does permit such requirement in the event of the award of a contract.

59. The view taken by the Austrian Government and the Commission that the public procurement directives do not expressly regulate changes in the composition of a consortium is, therefore, well-founded.

60. In view of these two factors, namely, incomplete harmonisation and the existence of only selective rules on consortia, one could draw the converse conclusion, that other aspects concerning consortia are not covered by the works procurement coordination directive. It could further be concluded that Member States and contracting authorities are free to regulate such matters that are otherwise not covered themselves. This includes rules as to the composition of a consortium, such as the legal consequences of changes in its composition.

61. In the present case, such national rules on changes in the composition of a consortium did exist. These became applicable with the change in the composition of the consortium which took place after the evaluation of its suitability. In this respect, the Commission rightly points out that one cannot infer from the public procurement directives any obligation for the contracting authority to check the suitability of the consortium in its new composition. If national legislation provides for a fresh evaluation of the consortium after a change in its composition, and this is not, however, carried out, then that is a legal issue to be determined according to national law.

62. To summarise, therefore: the works procurement coordination directive makes no provision for such circumstances, hence "only" national law applies. That is not to say that Member States, including their contracting authorities, are entirely free. Rather, they must observe the parameters of Community law, which will be considered in further detail below.

2. General principles of the public procurement directives

63. Certain principles can be inferred from the public procurement directives. The Greek Government rightly refers to the principles of transparency and competition. In that connection, the Court has declared that it is clear from the preamble to, and the second and tenth recitals of, the works procurement coordination directive, that it's aim is "to abolish restrictions on the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts in order to open up such contracts to genuine competition between entrepreneurs in the Member States" . (13)

64. Added to this, according to the case-law of the Court, is the requirement that contracting authorities observe the principle of non-discrimination of tenderers, in respect of which the Court points to several provisions of the public procurement directives which expressly require equal treatment. (14)

65. The Court also states that the prohibition of discrimination implies an obligation of transparency, in order to allow the contracting authority to ensure that the prohibition has been complied with. (15) Even if the view were to be taken that the procurement directives did not imply an obligation of equal treatment, the principle of equality which is a general principle of law, obtains.

66. The equal treatment obligation in the public procurement directives, as well as the principle of equality, would be breached, however, if the contracting authority unilaterally departed from its own rules concerning changes in the composition of consortia, particularly if it were to negotiate with a tenderer whose tender did not match the terms advertised. To that extent, an infringement of Community law can flow from the infringement of a national prohibition.

67. The prohibition on discrimination under Article 1(2) of the legal remedies directive cited by Makedoniko is, on the other hand, not relevant. Whilst that provision contains requirements for establishing legal protection, it does not extend the applicability of the legal remedies directive to infringements of national law.

3. Primary law

68. Further, it must be recalled that the public procurement rules of Member States, as well as the specific public procurement rules of the State's contracting authority, are subject to primary Community law, in particular the fundamental freedoms and the competition provisions addressed to the State, including legislation on State aid. (16)

69. In this context, it must be generally noted that the fundamental freedoms do not prohibit only direct or indirect discrimination, but also rules applicable without distinction which disproportionately inhibit any of the fundamental freedoms. From the information available to the Court, there is no indication that Greek law infringes the freedom to provide services. In any event, interpretation of the freedom to provide services is not the subject of the question referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling, nor, therefore, of these proceedings for a preliminary ruling.

4. The principles of equivalence and effectiveness

70. Since, as expounded above, there are no specific Community provisions governing changes in the composition of consortia, these are, in principle, the responsibility of the Member States. They are subject generally to the principles of equivalence and effectiveness which have been developed in case-law. (17)

71. According to the principle of equivalence, the rules of national law, thus also of specific public procurement law, must not be less favourable than those of corresponding, that is to say comparable, domestic provisions.

72. The principle of effectiveness obliges Member States, including the State's contracting authority, not to make the exercise of rights conferred by the system of Community law virtually impossible or excessively difficult.

5. Legal protection in the review procedure

73. As stated at the outset, the legal remedies directive, and thus also the review procedures which it governs, apply only to those awards which also fall within the scope of one of the public procurement directives, such as the works procurement coordination directive.

74. The applicability of the legal remedies directive is supported by the argument that the review procedures thereunder, in the submission of the Commission, also cover decisions of the contracting authority which interrupt negotiations with tenderers. That follows from the broad terms of Article 1 and Article 2 of the legal remedies directive, which refer to "decisions" without further qualification. That broad interpretation not only may be inferred from the travaux préparatoires, but also corresponds to the purpose of the legal remedies directive; which is to improve legal protection and to make it effective.

As regards the applicability of the legal remedies directive, one could also point to the fact that Article 1 comprises measures which Member States are to take in relation to "procedures falling within the scope of [the] Directives..." . However, it is not disputed that the contract award procedure in issue falls, as such, within the scope of one of the public procurement directives.

75. One could argue against the applicability of the legal remedies directive to decisions relating to changes in the composition of a consortium, that the decision of the contracting authority concerns national law, thus, in the present case, the rules on changes in the composition of a consortium. Accordingly, the substantive legal basis for that decision lies in national law.

76. Such an interpretation is supported by Article 1 of the legal remedies directive. According to that provision, the legal remedies directive applies only to infringements of "Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law"

77. Given the absence of such (that is to say, Community) legal rules on changes in the composition of a consortium, there cannot, logically, be any infringement of them or the rules implementing them. As rules of that type are purely a matter of national law, one of the preconditions for the applicability of the legal remedies directive has not, in this case, been satisfied.

78. The instruments of legal protection provided for in the legal remedies directive, such as the review procedure, only apply to decisions made by contracting authorities if such a decision infringes the rules referred to in Article 1 of the legal remedies directive. That may be the case where the contracting authority conducts negotiations with a tenderer whose tender does not meet the conditions of the tender, and thereby infringes the principle of equal treatment.

79. Where the decision of a contracting authority infringes both national law and Community law or rules implementing Community law, such a decision is subject to the legal remedies directive in so far as review of the decision according to the principles of Community law, or rules implementing Community law, is concerned. The provisions of the legal remedies directive, the right to a review procedure, apply only in that respect. Whether the contracting authority in the contract award procedure in issue has also taken decisions other than the decision to exclude the consortium because of a change in its composition, or whether the decision to exclude also incorporates other measures, such as the continuation of the contract award procedure with another tenderer, is not the issue in terms of the question which has been referred for preliminary ruling. That question is limited to the applicability of the legal remedies directive in relation to rules on changes in the composition of consortia.

80. The above finding certainly does not preclude Member States from providing, in their implementing rules, that the provisions of the legal remedies directive should also apply to infringements of national law, for example, of rules on changes in the composition of consortia.

6. Concluding remarks

81. Since the aspect in issue in these proceedings, namely the change in composition of a consortium, does not fall within the scope of the works procurement coordination directive, it is not necessary to determine whether the award procedure in issue concerned the award of a works concession or works contract.

82. The reply to the questions referred to the Court in this case should be that the provisions of the works procurement coordination directive are to be interpreted as not precluding rules which prohibit a change in the composition of a consortium after submission of a tender. The legal remedies directive does not apply to decisions concerning a change in the composition of a consortium such as that in issue in the main proceedings.

V Conclusion

83. Following the above it is proposed that the Court respond to the questions referred to it as follows:

The provisions of Directive 71/305/EEC concerning coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by Directive 89/440/EEC, and of Directive 93/37/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts are to be interpreted as not precluding rules which prohibit a change in the composition of a consortium after submission of a tender.

Directive 89/665/EEC on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts does not apply to decisions concerning a change in the composition of a consortium such as that in issue in the main proceedings.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Geelhoed delivered on 28 November 2002. Commission of the European Communities v Federal Republic of Germany. Failure by a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Admissibility - Legal interest in bringing proceedings - Directive 92/50/EEC - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice - Conditions. Joined cases C-20/01 and C-28/01.

I Introduction

1. In these two sets of infringement proceedings, the Commission seeks a declaration by the Court that Germany has failed to comply with certain obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (2) (hereinafter "the Directive"). It is alleged that the Municipality of Bockhorn and the City of Braunschweig awarded contracts for the treatment of waste water and refuse disposal without first having published a Community-wide notice.

2. The German Government does not dispute that Community law on the award of contracts ought to have been complied with in the two invitations to tender concerned, but contends that the actions brought by the Commission are inadmissible. It states that, when the time-limits laid down in the reasoned opinions expired, it had already admitted the infringements, which, moreover, no longer existed, since it had taken steps to bring them to an end. As against that view, the Commission argues that the consequences of the infringements are still appreciable. The contracts concluded are still being applied and the obligations entered into extend over a period of more than 30 years.

3. The main point at issue in both cases is therefore whether the Commission still has a legal interest in bringing proceedings. Another question which arises in this connection is whether the Treaty infringement procedure provided for in Article 226 EC must also be used to prevent systematic infringements of the procedural rules laid down in the Directive. Furthermore, Case C-28/01 is significant in terms of the application of environmental criteria in the interpretation of the directive.

II Legal framework

4. Article 8 of the Directive provides that contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex IA are to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI.

5. Title V (Articles 15 to 22) contains common rules on advertising. Under Article 15(2) of the Directive, contracting authorities that wish to award a public service contract by open, restricted or, under conditions laid down in Article 11, negotiated procedure, are to make known their intention by means of a notice.

6. Article 11(3) of the Directive reads:

"Contracting authorities may award public service contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice in the following cases:

(b) when, for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the services may be provided only by a particular service provider;

7. Under Article 16(1) of the Directive, contracting authorities which have awarded a public contract are to send a notice of the results of the award procedure to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities.

III Facts and procedure

A Facts and pre-litigation procedure in Case C-20/01

8. The Municipality of Bockhorn, situated in the Land of Lower Saxony, concluded with the energy distribution undertaking Weser-Ems-Aktiengesellschaft (hereinafter "EWE") a contract for the treatment of waste water. The contract entered into force on 1 January 1997 and is to last for a period of at least 30 years.

9. On 30 April 1999, the Commission, in accordance with the procedure under Article 226 EC, sent the Federal Republic of Germany a letter of formal notice. It stated that the German authorities had failed to comply with the provisions of the Directive when awarding the aforementioned contract.

10. In its reply of 1 July 1999, the German Government conceded that the contract concluded by the Municipality of Bockhorn ought to have been awarded in accordance with the provisions of Community law. It pointed out that the authorities of the Land of Lower Saxony had once again expressly called on the district authorities to comply strictly with the relevant Community provisions.

11. In its reasoned opinion of 21 March 2000, the Commission stated that the provisions of the Directive ought to have been applied, and that it was irrelevant in law that the infringement of the provisions of Community law had been acknowledged by the German Government. In addition, it called on the German Government forthwith to remind the authorities concerned of the legal position, and to oblige them to comply with the relevant provisions on the award of public contracts in future.

12. In a communication of 12 May 2000, the German Government once again acknowledged the infringement. It pointed out that, on the basis of the letter of formal notice and the intervention of the federal Government, the Ministry of Internal Affairs of the Land of Lower Saxony, by decree of 21 June 1999, had urged all district authorities in the Land to ensure in an appropriate manner that contracting authorities complied strictly with the Community provisions on the award of public contracts.

13. The German Government also stated that, under German law, it was virtually impossible to put an end to the infringement itself, as a legally valid contract had existed between the Municipality of Bockhorn and EWE since 1 January 1997, which could not be terminated without substantial compensation's being payable to EWE. The costs of such a termination of the contract would be disproportionately high.

B Facts and pre-litigation procedure in Case C-28/01

14. In this case, the City of Braunschweig, in Lower Saxony, and Braunschweigische Kohlebergwerke (hereinafter "BKB") concluded a contract under which the City of Braunschweig entrusted to BKB the thermal treatment of refuse for a period of 30 years from June/July 1999.

15. The competent authorities of the City of Braunschweig have not denied that the Directive was applicable to that transaction, but have contended that the transaction fell within the scope of the derogation provided for in Article 11(3) of the Directive. In its letter of formal notice of 20 July 1998 the Commission rejected that interpretation.

16. By letters of 4 August, 19 October and 15 December 1998, the German Government submitted observations on the letter of formal notice, arguing in particular that, in accordance with Article 11(3) of the Directive, it had, for technical reasons, been possible to award the contract only to BKB. The geographical proximity of the treatment plant to the city was an essential criterion in the award of the contract in order to avoid shipment over longer distances.

17. By letter of 16 December 1998, the German Government nevertheless admitted to the Commission that the City of Braunschweig had infringed the Directive in this case by applying the negotiated procedure without official publication.

18. The Commission responded by sending to the Federal Republic of Germany a reasoned opinion dated 6 March 2000 in which, in particular, it called upon the Federal Republic of Germany to remind the authorities concerned of the legal position without delay, and to urge them to comply with the relevant provisions on the award of public contracts in future.

19. In a communication of 17 May 2000, the purport of which was the same as that of the communication of 12 May 2000 referred to above in connection with Case C-20/01, the German Government acknowledged the infringement but pointed out that it was not possible in practice to terminate the contract concluded.

C Procedure before the Court and forms of order sought

20. The applications brought by the Commission in Case C-20/01 and C-28/01 were lodged at the Court Registry on 16 January and 23 January 2001 respectively. The cases were joined by order of the President of the Court on 15 May 2001.

21. In Case C-20/01, the Commission seeks a declaration by the Court that, by failing to invite tenders for the contract for the treatment of waste water in the Municipality of Bockhorn and to arrange for notice of the results of the procedure for the award of the contract to be published in the S Series of the Official Journal of the European Communities , the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to comply with its obligations under Article 8 in conjunction with Article 15(2) and Article 16(1) of the Directive.

22. In Case C-28/01, it seeks a declaration that, by virtue of the fact that the City of Braunschweig awarded a contract for refuse disposal by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, although the criteria laid down in the Directive for an award by negotiated procedure without a Community-wide invitation to tender were not fulfilled, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to comply with its obligations under Article 8 and Article 11(3)(b) of the Directive.

23. The Federal Republic of Germany contends that the actions should be dismissed as inadmissible or, in the alternative, as unfounded.

24. By order of the President of the Court of 18 May 2001, the United Kingdom was granted leave to intervene in support of the form of order sought by the German Government. The United Kingdom Government proposes first that Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 be joined. Secondly, it contends that the actions brought by the Commission should be upheld in so far as they both seek a declaration that the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Directive by failing to comply with Community law on the award of public contracts. Thirdly, it contends that the remainder of the applications should be dismissed.

25. A hearing was held on 10 October 2002.

IV Pleas in law and main arguments

26. In its application in Case C-20/01, the Commission claims that the Directive was applicable in this case. In its view, it is immaterial that the German Government conceded that, in accordance with the Directive, the contract concluded by the City of Bockhorn ought to have been the subject of a Community-wide invitation to tender. The fact that the Land government instructed the district authorities to comply strictly with the provisions of Community law when awarding public service contracts did not eliminate the Treaty infringement itself. The City of Bockhorn, it submits, is still infringing Community law by maintaining the contract for the treatment of waste water and continuing to apply it as before. Since the unlawful conduct persists, the defendant has not taken all the measures necessary to comply with the Directive within the period laid down in the reasoned opinion.

27. In Case C-28/01, the Commission claims that, by awarding the contract for refuse disposal to BKB without prior publication of a contract notice within the meaning of the Community provisions on the procedure for awarding public service contracts, the City of Braunschweig failed to comply with the Directive. The criteria laid down in Article 11(3)(b) of the Directive for an award by negotiated procedure are not fulfilled in this case. The City of Braunschweig is still infringing Community law in so far as it maintains and continues to apply the contract with BKB. Here too the unlawful conduct persists and the Federal Republic of Germany has not taken all the measures necessary to comply with the Directive within the period laid down in the reasoned opinion.

28. In both cases, the German Government starts by raising a plea of inadmissibility. Essentially, it takes the view that the actions brought by the Commission are inadmissible since there is no ongoing infringement of the Treaty which must be brought to an end by the Member State concerned. The purpose of the infringement procedure is to restore a situation which is in conformity with the Treaty. No such purpose is served where the Member State has put an end to the infringement before the period laid down by the Commission in the reasoned opinion expires. In this case, the infringements of the procedural rules in the Directive were exhausted on their commission.

29. In addition, the validity of the obligations entered into, in accordance with the principle pacta sunt servanda , is consistent with Community law and national law. According to the German Government, in the case of Community law, this may be inferred from Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts. (3) According to that provision, the contracts concluded by the contracting authorities may remain valid. (4) Under German law and under the relevant clauses of the contracts in question, there is no possibility of terminating the obligations in these cases, or that possibility exists only at the cost of a disproportionately high risk of liability.

30. In the alternative, the German Government calls into question the substance of the two alleged infringements of the Treaty. It submits that, in both applications, for the same reasons as those given in connection with the question of admissibility, the Commission's claims are unfounded. The German Government refers in this respect to the adage principles impossibilium nulla est obligato (there is no obligation to perform the impossible) and the principle pacta sunt servanda . Moreover, in Case C-28/01, it contends that the City of Braunschweig's decision to opt for the thermal treatment of waste and, consequently, to award the contract to BKB the only undertaking in the Braunschweig area which had the necessary infrastructure to dispose of waste by thermal means was unavoidable, and was justified under Community law, having regard to the principle of proximity.

31. The United Kingdom Government points out in its statement in intervention that it calls into question not the admissibility of the actions but in part their merits. In the light also of Directive 89/665, it submits that the question whether it is possible to terminate a contract for which, wrongfully, no invitation to tender was issued, in breach of Community law, is always a matter which falls within the competence of the Member State concerned. There is no legal interest in continuing proceedings aimed exclusively at obtaining a court decision which would be impossible to enforce because it would be contrary to the domestic law concerned.

32. In its observations on the statement in intervention, the German Government contests the admissibility of the intervention of the United Kingdom Government.

V Assessment

33. The Commission's objectives in these infringement proceedings are not in themselves very ambitious. It claims that Germany has infringed Community law by failing to comply with the rules of the Directive when awarding two contracts. In Case C-20/01, it more specifically seeks a finding against the defendant for infringement of Article 8 in conjunction with Articles 15(2) and 16(1) of the Directive, and, in Case C-28/01, a finding against the defendant for infringement of Article 8 and Article 11(3)(b) of the Directive.

34. The German Government does not deny that the Directive was applicable in both cases, and that public tendering procedures were necessary. That acknowledgement forms part of the plea of inadmissibility. The discussion of admissibility must therefore proceed on the assumption that public invitations to tender ought to have been issued (Section B). As regards, next, the merits of the actions brought, I shall examine in particular the defence plea concerning the principle of proximity, which was raised in the alternative in Case C-28/01 (Section C). To begin with, however, consideration must be given to the admissibility of the intervention of the United Kingdom, a remarkable matter arising in these proceedings (Section A).

A Admissibility of the United Kingdom's intervention

35. The German Government was no doubt astonished by the written observations of the United Kingdom Government, which, as intervener, formally endorsed the form of order sought by the Federal Republic of Germany but, in substance, largely supported the form of order sought by the Commission and contested by Germany.

36. In its observations on the United Kingdom's statement in intervention, the defendant therefore called into question the admissibility of the intervention in so far as, in the second head of the form of order it sought, the United Kingdom contended that the Court should declare that the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty by failing in these cases to comply with the provisions of the Directive on the award of public service contracts. In the view of the German Government, while it is true that the intervener's submissions need only partly support the form of order sought by one of the parties, Article 93(5)(a) of the Rules of Procedure nevertheless precludes the intervener from also opposing the party it is supporting. The intervention must be unambiguous, and must therefore, because of its partiality, either support or oppose the position of only one of the parties. In this respect, intervention in infringement proceedings differs from intervention, under Article 20 of the Rules of Procedure, in preliminary ruling proceedings, where an intervening Member State takes on the role of amicus curiae .

37. In its observations on the statement in intervention, the Commission points out also that the form of order it sought by its actions is precisely the same as the second head of the form of order sought by the United Kingdom in its statement in intervention. The third head, that the remainder of the application should be dismissed, is incomprehensible in itself.

38. I share the amazement of the Federal Republic of Germany and the Commission. The United Kingdom sought and was granted leave to intervene in support of the form of order sought by the Federal Republic of Germany. However, a comparison of the respective forms of order sought shows that the second head of the form of order sought by the United Kingdom is the same as the orders sought by the Commission in both applications. Both the United Kingdom and the Commission seek a finding against the Federal Republic of Germany to the effect that it has failed to comply with the Directive. The fact that the intervener then contends that the remainder of the application be dismissed can perhaps be explained by the emphasis it lays in its submissions on the effects of a judgment finding that there has been a failure to comply with the rules on the procedure for awarding public service contracts. To that extent, its assessment concurs with the view of the German Government. Nevertheless, the German Government's submissions in this regard form part of its defence plea alleging inadmissibility, while the United Kingdom does not expressly call the admissibility of the action into question at all.

39. It is permissible for the form of order sought by one of the parties to be supported only in part, rather than in full. (5) The United Kingdom had the choice of supporting the German Government's contention that the action be dismissed either as regards both the admissibility and the merits of the action or as regards the merits alone. It decided to support the contention regarding the merits of the action.

40. However, the question is whether, as the German Government claims, the intervention must be declared inadmissible in so far as the United Kingdom's submissions on the substance contradicts the German Government's submissions concerning admissibility.

41. In my opinion, this question must be answered in the affirmative. After all, the wording of the Statute and the Rules of Procedure is clear. According to the fourth paragraph of Article 37 of the EC Statute of the Court of Justice, an application to intervene is to be limited to supporting the form of order sought by one of the parties. That provision also forms the basis of Article 93(1)(e) of the Rules of Procedure, which states that the application to intervene must contain the form of order sought in support of which the intervener is applying for leave to intervene. On that basis, the President or the Court decides whether leave to intervene is to be granted. Article 37 of the EC Statute of the Court of Justice is developed further in Article 93(5) of the Rules of Procedure, which lays down requirements as to the content of the statement in intervention. According to Article 93(5)(a), inter alia, this must contain "a statement of the form of order sought by the intervener in support of or opposing, in whole or in part, the form of order sought by one of the parties" . (6)

42. Clearly, the stipulation that an intervener in adversarial proceedings should take sides was quite deliberate and the purpose of the intervention is not that the intervener should support the Community judicature by submitting written statements of case or written or oral observations in the manner of an amicus curiae , as is the case under Article 20(2) of the EC Statute and Article 104(4) of the Rules of Procedure. The rules of procedure applicable to the preliminary ruling procedure under Article 234 EC do not contain any restrictions in this regard.

43. Even though the Court of Justice has not as yet expressly commented on this question, its case-law provides further support for the view that the form of order sought by the intervener must not be at odds with that sought by the party it is supporting. Although the Community judicature is willing to allow the intervener to introduce new submissions in the proceedings, those submissions must either support or oppose the form of order sought by one of the parties. (7) Adding new forms of order or requesting in the statement in intervention that the Court should rule on other issues renders the intervention inadmissible. (8) The same applies to submissions by the intervener which, although intended to support the form of order sought by one of the parties, are based on grounds entirely unconnected with those on which the form of order sought by the party supported is based. (9) It follows from this that the intervener is not at liberty to deviate at will from the form of order sought by the party it is formally supporting.

44. The intervener is certainly not at liberty to intervene in the dispute by opposing the form of order sought by the party it supports. In its application of 17 April 2001, the United Kingdom requested leave to intervene in support of the form of order sought by the Federal Republic of Germany, and by order of 18 May 2001, the President of the Court expressly granted leave to intervene in support of the form of order sought by the defendant. (10) The second head of the form of order sought in the statement in intervention, that a declaration be made to the effect that the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to comply with the procedural rules laid down in the Directive, is contrary to the order of the President of the Court.

45. In the light of the foregoing, I consider the second head of the form of order sought by the intervener to be inadmissible. (11)

B Admissibility of the actions brought by the Commission

46. The German Government bases its view that both actions are inadmissible on the fact that the infringements of the Treaty had already ceased to exist when the time-limits laid down in the reasoned opinions expired. In its submission, the conclusion of the contracts with EWE and BKB respectively also ended the acknowledged infringements of the provisions of the Directive. According to the national law applicable, which is compatible with Community law Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 , an infringement of the procedural rules contained in the directive does not affect the validity of the contracts in question, which can therefore remain in force. Consequently, the Commission no longer has an objective interest in continuing the proceedings, especially as the German Government has for its part taken the measures necessary to prevent any repetition of the infringements committed.

47. In my opinion, this view must be rejected. On the one hand, it fails to take into account the nature and scope of the legal obligations incumbent on Member States under the Directive, and, on the other, it disregards the possible legal consequences of infringements of the Directive, even if those infringements cannot as such affect the validity of the contracts in question.

48. The Directive imposes a threefold obligation on Member States. First, they must ensure that the Directive is transposed into national law in such a way that it can produce the legal effects it was intended to have. Secondly, the Member States must see to it that the public contracting authorities actually comply with the relevant provisions of the Directive. Thirdly, they must take action to prevent threatened infringements of those provisions.

49. If it appears, on the basis of actual circumstances, that a Member State has failed to fulfil or has not adequately fulfilled that threefold duty of care, the ensuing situation is incompatible with the result which the Directive seeks to achieve. Freedom to provide services is then no longer guaranteed. (12)

50. In that regard, the Commission has an objective legal interest in obtaining a judgment from the Court to the effect that, in the context of the relevant contracts awarded by the Municipality of Bockhorn and the City of Braunschweig, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations. Such a finding against the defendant extends beyond those two individual cases, since it also shows that Germany, the addressee of the Directive, has not done everything necessary to ensure that it is enforced.

51. The implicit assertion by the German Government that, by reprimanding the district authorities, it has fulfilled its legal obligations at least for the future is in my view unsatisfactory. The Court has consistently held that the Member States remain fully responsible for ensuring compliance with the Directive in their spheres of territorial competence. They cannot evade responsibility for any future infringements of the Directive by taking the matter up with the local authorities.

52. The point made by the Commission at the hearing that it has received further complaints concerning infringements of the directive in question, some of which likewise relate to refuse, makes clear the ongoing nature of the duty of care incumbent on Member States in the transposition and application of the Directive. The purpose of the Directive means that the question whether the duty of care has been fulfilled usually has to be determined on the basis of individual breaches of that duty. In my opinion, that in itself renders untenable the German Government's view that the action brought by the Commission in this case is inadmissible.

53. However, the view adopted by the German Government is also clearly open to question from another angle. Ultimately, it would mean that proceedings under Article 226 EC against infringements of Community law which have ceased to exist and which are irreversible would be impossible in future. This would open the way to systematic infringements of the Directive committed by means of long-term contracts which are legally unassailable. In the case of certain types of economic activity carried on under the responsibility of the public authorities, such as refuse disposal or highway maintenance, the internal market for services would thus be geographically compartmentalised. It need hardly be said that such a consequence is contrary to the main aims of the Directive.

54. It must therefore by open to the Commission in individual cases, to obtain an order from the Court to the effect that a Member State is systematically failing to comply with its obligations under the Directive, or is in danger of failing to do so.

55. Seen against that background, a finding as to the existence of two actual infringements of the Directive goes further than the interest involved in obtaining such a finding. The purpose of the infringement procedure under Article 226 EC is not only to put an end to the infringement itself, but also to bring about a change in behaviour on the part of the recalcitrant State and prevent any repetition. (13) That result could no longer be achieved if the view of the German Government were accepted.

56. The German Government's view would have a similar effect on the power of the Court under Article 228(2) EC to impose a penalty payment on Member States which fail to comply with judgments. If, as the German Government considers, the Court were required to declare inadmissible actions brought by the Commission to obtain a declaration on infringements of the Directive which have become "definitive" , the Court of Justice would be left with no means of coercion under the aforementioned article in the event of repeated infringements of the Directive. The Community would then be powerless in the face of systematic infringements of the Directive, with no legal remedy at its disposal.

57. The continuation of the infringement proceedings, even if confined to the two cases pending, makes very good sense. The Commission has rightly pointed out that the alleged infringements will continue to produce legal effects, since they led to the conclusion of long-term contracts. The award of the contracts has therefore not yet produced all its legal effects. (14) Nor is there here a situation which is inherently unrectifiable.

58. The contracts in question came into existence as a result of unlawful conduct, a fact which has a bearing on the legal position of the parties to those contracts whose interests could have been adversely affected by those infringements of the law. An infringement of the procedural rules contained in the Directive can give rise to claims on the part of individuals, including claims for damages, which must be pursued in accordance with the relevant procedures under national law. (15) The assertion by the German Government that no third parties suffered any damage in these cases is irrelevant, since that fact cannot affect the admissibility of an action brought under Article 226 EC. (16) Moreover, that argument is open to question in so far as, according to the documents before the Court, the Commission investigated the alleged irregularities following complaints.

59. A finding of failure to fulfil obligations in these cases would clarify and strengthen the legal position of third parties and thus provide individuals with an effective legal remedy. (17) An effective action for damages in turn serves to safeguard the effectiveness of the Directive, since it urges the Member State to comply with the procedural rules in future. From that point of view, a finding by the Court that a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations also serves the interests of ensuring that the Directive is effectively implemented in national law.

60. In view of the foregoing, the remainder of the German Government's submissions can be quickly dealt with.

61. The maxim pacta sunt servanda is not relevant here, since the Commission has not denied that the contracts concluded can, as such, continue to exist. However, that does not affect the aforementioned possibility of claims for damages as an alternative remedy. Nor is that possibility altered by the fact that, as the German Government argues, the national liability laws are adequate and an action for damages based on Community law would be unnecessary. For the purposes of deciding whether an action for failure to fulfil obligations under the Directive is admissible, the state of the national liability laws is not decisive in any event.

62. Moreover, it is of course for the Court to determine whether or not there has been an infringement of the Treaty, even if the Member State in question does not deny the infringement. (18) The argument which the defendant draws from Article 232 EC, to the effect that recognition of the fact that there has been an infringement of the Treaty makes a finding to that effect by the Court superfluous because there is no longer any objective interest in such a finding, is incorrect, since, in this case, there is most definitely an objective interest in so doing.

63. The German Government also contends that the action brought by the Commission breaches the principle ne ultra petita and is therefore inadmissible. This argument must be rejected for the simple reason that the forms of order sought in the applications are the same in substance as the complaints raised by the Commission in the pre-litigation procedure and, in particular, in the reasoned opinion. (19) In both cases, the Commission seeks a declaration that, in the invitations to tender in question, Germany has infringed the same procedural rules of the Directive.

64. In view of the foregoing, I consider that in both cases there is a legal interest in bringing proceedings and that the actions brought by the Commission are admissible.

C Substance

1. Case C-20/01

65. In Case C-20/01, the Commission is, in my view, right to state that all the conditions for application of the Directive were satisfied in this case. The treatment of waste water is a service within the meaning of Article 8 and Annex IA, category 16 ("sewage and refuse disposal services; sanitation and similar services"). Even though EWE gave the Municipality of Bockhorn an undertaking that, as well as actually disposing of the waste water, it would also install certain sewerage facilities, the execution of those works was without question incidental to the main object of the contract, namely the treatment of waste water. Despite the mixed character of the contract, works, in so far as they are incidental to, rather than the object of, the contract, do not justify treating the contract as a public works contract within the meaning of the Directive on the award of public works contracts. (20) Even if the contract is confined to the part relating to the treatment of waste water in the narrow sense, its value far exceeds the maximum value of EUR 200 000 for the entire contract laid down in Article 7 of the Directive.

66. The Municipality of Bockhorn was therefore required, under Articles 8 and 15(2) of the Directive, to award contracts for the treatment of waste water by means of an award procedure and, under Article 16(1), to send a notice of the results of the award procedure to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities.

67. Moreover, the complaints raised by the Commission in Case C-20/01 are not in fact challenged by the German Government. In its reply, the German Government refers entirely, as regards the merits of the case, to its submissions on the plea of inadmissibility. Those, however, are clearly untenable.

2. Case C-28/01

68. In this case, it is common ground that, when awarding the contract in question to BKB, the City of Braunschweig clearly proceeded on the assumption that the Directive was applicable. The parties are in dispute as to whether the conditions for awarding a contract by negotiated procedure under Article 11(3) of the Directive were fulfilled. According to that provision, public service contracts may be awarded without prior publication of a contract notice, inter alia, in the case of services which, for technical reasons, may be entrusted only to a particular service provider.

69. The German Government justifies the failure to issue an invitation to tender on the ground that, in view of the circumstances of the case, the refuse disposal contract could be awarded only to BKB, which was already established in Braunschweig. The City of Braunschweig opted for a method of treating waste locally which made it possible to avoid the shipment of waste over longer distances. The proximity of the refuse disposal facility was therefore an essential condition for the performance of the contract in question. The criterion of the proximity of the processing facilities and the short shipping distance is thus consistent, according to the German Government, with the principle that environmental damage should as a priority be rectified at source. That principle is laid down in Article 174(2) EC (formerly Article 130r(2) of the EC Treaty), and has been clarified by the Court of Justice in its case-law. (21) In view of the facilities available at its headquarters, BKB was the only undertaking in a position to carry out the refuse treatment using the desired thermal procedure. At the time when the contract was concluded, no other undertaking had the waste disposal facilities required in the Braunschweig area, as was shown by a market analysis conducted by the City of Braunschweig. If new industrial plant had had to be built, the deadlines laid down for comprehensive refuse disposal could not have been met.

70. The Commission points out first of all that the derogation provided for in Article 11(3) of the Directive, being an exception to the general principle, must be interpreted restrictively. Only if the contract in question can indeed, for the reasons expressly stated in that provision, be performed by only one particular undertaking, may it be awarded by negotiated procedure. No evidence has been adduced, however, to show that the contract in this case could be performed only by BKB.

71. The Commission submits that, whatever significance is attached to environmental criteria in the award of public contracts, they may never be applied in a discriminatory manner. That is what, in its view, has happened here. Geographical proximity was the only criterion used, whilst other environmental issues were disregarded. For example, outside undertakings could have proposed the use of other procedures for disposing of non-hazardous refuse. Moreover, in the event of conflicting interests, the proximity principle laid down in Article 174(2) EC does not take precedence over other Community objectives, but is to be taken into account, as appropriate, only in the implementation of Community policy.

72. It must be pointed out first of all in this respect that the Commission has rightly stated that the scope of Article 11(3) of the Directive, as a derogation from the rule that contracts covered by the Directive are to be awarded in accordance with the Community procedure, must be interpreted restrictively. This means that the person seeking to rely on that derogation must prove that the exceptional circumstances justifying it actually exist. (22)

73. The option given by Article 11(3) of the Directive to contracting authorities to award public contracts without prior publication of a notice is justified by the fact that, in these cases, there is only one suitable source of procurement. In those circumstances, the obligation to issue a public invitation to tender would lead to an unnecessary procedure. In order for that provision to be successfully relied on, it must therefore be irrefutably established that there really is only one undertaking capable of performing the contract in question.

74. In a recent judgment in Concordia Bus Finland , the Court of Justice held that environmental protection criteria are also among the criteria for the award of contracts which may be taken into account by the contracting authority under Article 36(1)(a) of the Directive. (23) In the light of that case-law, it is in my opinion conceivable that principles relating to the environment should also be taken into account in the context of the application of Article 11(3) of the Directive, when determining whether there is only one source of procurement. However, the judgment in Concordia

Bus Finland also shows that reliance on environmental criteria in the award procedure must be carefully examined and must not constitute a licence to circumvent the fundamental objective of the Community Directives on the award of public contracts, namely to achieve the internal market and eliminate unequal treatment. (24)

75. In particular, there is an intrinsic danger of indirect discrimination in the application of Article 11(3) of the Directive, since that derogating provision is, by definition, premissed on unequal treatment and preference for an individual contractor. The view taken by the German Government means that tenderers established in Braunschweig are given priority, and sources of procurement located elsewhere are excluded right from the start. That makes it all the more necessary to adduce convincing evidence where use is made of the derogation under Article 11(3).

76. In my opinion, the German Government has not succeeded in providing convincing evidence that BKB was indeed the only conceivable source of procurement which the City of Braunschweig could reasonably commission to provide (thermal) refuse disposal services. Leaving aside the question whether the report produced for the City of Braunschweig and cited by the German Government is reliable, it is inconceivable that a contract to be concluded for a term of no less than 30 years should not have attracted several serious contenders. After all, (thermal) refuse disposal is not such a unique and unusual economic activity that it can be carried on only by one undertaking.

77. Even though the City of Braunschweig has opted for a particular form of refuse disposal, the contracting authority can none the less be expected to provide convincing evidence, when relying on the derogation provided for in Article 11(3) of the Directive, that the same result refuse disposal could not have been achieved just as effectively from the point of view of environmental technology through the use of other techniques. That evidence can be supplied if the criteria on which the decision to use that form of refuse disposal was based are objective and transparent. In these proceedings, Germany has failed to substantiate, or has substantiated inadequately, its assertion that a solution which did not take account of shipping distances would be unwise from an ecological point of view. Moreover, it has not in any way been shown to be the case that shipment of the refuse in question over longer distances would in any event pose a threat to the environment or, as the case may be, to public health. (25)

78. In this case a public invitation to tender within the meaning of this Directive was essential. The action brought by the Commission must therefore be upheld.

VI Conclusion

79. In view of the foregoing, I propose that the Court should rule as follows:

in Case C-20/01:

(1) Declare that, by failing to invite tenders for the award of the contract for the treatment of waste water in the Municipality of Bockhorn and to arrange for notice of the results of the procedure for the award of the contract to be published in the S Series of the Official Journal of the European Communities , the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to comply with its obligations under Article 8 in conjunction with Article 15(2) and Article 16(1) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts;

(2) Order the Federal Republic of Germany to pay the costs;

in Case C-28/01:

(1) Declare that, by virtue of the fact that the City of Braunschweig awarded a contract for refuse disposal by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, notwithstanding that the criteria laid down in Directive 92/50 for an award by negotiated procedure without a Community-wide invitation to tender were not fulfilled, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to comply with its obligations under Article 8 and Article 11(3)(b) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC;

(2) Order the Federal Republic of Germany to pay the costs.

(3) OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33; amended by Directive 92/50.

(4) Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 reads: "[t]he effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law. Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement" .

(6) My emphasis.

(7) According to the Court's case-law, the intervention procedure would otherwise be deprived of all meaning (see, for example, the judgment in Case 30/59 De gezamenlijke Steenkolenmijnen in Limburg [1961] ECR 18).

(8) See the judgment in Case C-377/98 Netherlands v Parliament and Council [2001] ECR I-7079, paragraph 9.

(9) Judgment in Case C-155/91 Commission v Council [1993] ECR I-939, paragraph 24.

(10) One of the consequences of leave to intervene is that the intervener must receive a copy of every document served on the parties, unless the President, on application by one of the parties, omits secret or confidential documents (see Article 93(3) of the Rules of Procedure).

(11) For the sake of completeness, it may be pointed out that the first head of the form of order sought in the statement in intervention of 17 September 2001, that Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 be joined, had already been made redundant by the order of the President of 15 May 2001.

(12) The purpose of coordinating the procedures for awarding public contracts at Community level is to eliminate barriers, inter alia, to the freedom to provide services and therefore to protect the interests of traders established in a Member State who wish to offer services to contracting authorities established in another Member State (cf., for example, the judgment in Case C-19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I-7725, paragraph 32. See also the 20th recital in the preamble to the directive.)

(13) Judgment in Case C-276/99 Germany v Commission [2001] ECR I-8055, paragraphs 24, 25 and 32.

(14) Judgment in Case C-362/90 Commission v Italy [1992] ECR I-2353, paragraphs 11 and 12. In that judgment, the Court deemed an action for failure to fulfil obligations to be inadmissible on the ground that, when the time-limit laid down in the reasoned opinion expired, the alleged infringement had produced all its legal effects and therefore no longer existed.

(17) In an action for damages before the national court, a finding that a Member State has failed to fulfil an obligation establishes the infringement of Community law as being legally effective (see, for example, the judgment in Case C-365/97 Commission v Italy [1999] ECR I-7773, paragraph 24).

(18) See, for example, the judgment in Case C-243/89 Commission v Denmark [1993] ECR I-3353, paragraph 30.

(21) The German Government refers, by way of example, to the judgment in Case C-2/90 Commission v Belgium [1992] ECR I-4431.

(22) Cf., to that effect, the judgment in Case C-318/94 Commission v Germany [1996] ECR I-1949, paragraph 13.

(24) Judgment in Concordia Bus Finland (cited in footnote 23, paragraphs 59 to 64, with references to earlier decisions).

(25) In this connection, see also the judgment in Case C-203/96 Dusseldorp and Others [1998] ECR I-4075, paragraphs 46 and 47. That case concerned the question whether the recycling of oil filters in other Member States and their shipment over a greater distance for the purposes of being exported would pose a threat to the health and life of humans within the meaning of the present Article 30 EC. Not only did the documents before the Court show that the recycling of filters was comparable in the two Member States concerned, but it was not established before the Court that the shipment of oil filters posed a threat to the environment or to the life and health of humans.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Alber delivered on 11 July 2002.
Arkkitehtuuritoimisto Riitta Korhonen Oy, Arkkitehtitoimisto Pentti Toivanen Oy and Rakennuttajatoimisto Vilho Tervomaa v Varkauden Taitotalo Oy.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Kilpailuneuvosto - Finland.
Directive 92/50/EEC - Public service contracts - Definition of contracting authority - Body governed by public law - Company set up by a regional or local authority to promote the development of industrial or commercial activities on the territory of that authority.
Case C-18/01.

I - Introduction

1 In these proceedings the Kilpailuneuvosto (1) (Finnish Competition Council) seeks from the Court of Justice a preliminary ruling on a number of questions concerning the interpretation of the concept of contracting authority in the form of a body governed by public law within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public contracts (2) (hereinafter `Directive 92/50').

2 Of particular concern in this context is the definition of needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character and the question whether this definition covers the activity of a share company which is owned by a municipality and builds industrial or commercial premises for private undertakings with a view to creating more favourable conditions for business activities in the municipality.

II - Legislative background

1. Directive 92/50

3 The decisive provisions of Article 1 of Directive 92/50 read as follows:

`For the purposes of this Directive:

...

(b) contracting authorities shall mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

Body governed by public law means any body:

- established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

- having legal personality, and

- financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law.

The lists of bodies or of categories of such bodies governed by public law which fulfil the criteria referred to in the second subparagraph of this point are set out in Annex I to Directive 71/305/EEC. These lists shall be as exhaustive as possible and may be reviewed in accordance with the procedure laid down in Article 30b of that Directive;

2. Finnish transposing act

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

4 Directive 92/50 was transposed into Finnish law by the Julkisista hankinnoista annettu laki (Law on public procurement) of 23 December 1992. The concept of bodies governed by public law is defined in Article 2 of that law on the basis of the wording of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50.

5 In the Finnish law the term `contracting authority' is defined as a legal person `belonging to the public administration'. This requirement is deemed to be satisfied where the legal person

(1) was established to look after tasks in the general interest with no industrial or commercial character and

(2) is financed primarily by a public authority or is under its supervision, or has an administrative, managerial or supervisory board over half of whose members are appointed by a public authority.

III - Facts of the initial proceedings

6 The main action concerns the award by the defendant, Varkauden Taitotalo Oy (hereinafter `Taitotalo') of a contract concerning the design and construction services for a building project. The commercial complex to be constructed by Taitotalo in the town of Varkaus is to be subsequently leased to firms in the technology sector.

7 Taitotalo is a company wholly owned by the town of Varkaus. According to its statutes, its field of activity is the administration of properties and shares in property companies and their sale and lease and the organisation and supply of property maintenance services and other service activity necessary in the administration of properties. The board of the company comprises three ordinary members appointed by the general meeting. The town of Varkaus holds all the voting rights at the general meeting. All the board members are officials of the town of Varkaus. The company's foundation document was signed on 21 January 2000; the company was entered in the commercial register on 6 April 2000.

8 Taitotalo is arranging for the construction of the `Tyyskän osaamiskeskus' in district 1 of the town of Varkaus. The company intends to buy the land from the town when the site has been parcelled out. The building project comprises two or three office blocks and a multi-storey car park, which are to be leased to firms in the technology sector. Taitotalo is purchasing the project management service and marketing and coordination of the activity from Keski-Savon Teollisuuskylä Oy (hereinafter `Teollisuuskylä').

9 Teollisuuskylä was established to build office premises for undertakings. According to its statutes, the company's field of activity comprises the construction, acquisition and administration of buildings and land for commercial purposes on the basis of ownership and leasehold rights with a view to then ceding these properties at cost price primarily to undertakings. The company is a subsidiary of the development company Keski-Savon Kehittämisyhtiö Oy (hereinafter `Kehittämisyhtiö'), which has the task of promoting the development of industrial and commercial activities in the central Savo economic area. Nearly half of this company's shares are owned by the town of Varkaus. Most of the other shares in Kehittämisyhtiö are owned by other municipalities in the region.

10 Teollisuuskylä originally called for tenders for the design of the Tyyskän osaamiskeskus by letter of 6 July 1999. The first stage of the project was to comprise the construction of the Tyyskä 1 building for Honeywell-Measurex Oy and the Tyyskä 2 building for a number of smaller undertakings. After the period for the submission of tenders had expired at the end of August 1999, however, Teollisuuskylä informed the tenderers that, owing to a change in the ownership structure of the property company that was to be established, tenders for the design and project management works would have to be invited in an open procedure in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

11 Teollisuuskylä then again invited tenders for the design and project management works for the Tyyskän osaamiskeskus on 4 September 1999. The tender documents showed the town of Varkaus and Teollisuuskylä to be the contracting authorities. According to the request for a preliminary ruling, a reference to the call for tenders was also published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, Series S - Invitations to Tender, No 35 of 2 September 1999 under the heading `Design contest'. This showed the town of Varkaus to be the contracting authority for a property company to be established.

12 Taitotalo informed the tenderers on 6 April 2000 - the date on which it was entered in the commercial register - that the design and project management of the Honeywell-Measurex Oy building had been awarded to JP-Terasto Oy and the design and project management of Tyyskä 2 to a group headed by Arkkitehtitoimisto Pekka Paavola Oy.

13 The applicant in the main proceedings, Arkkitehtuuritoimisto Riitta Korhonen Oy, applied to the requesting court, the Kilpailuneuvosto, for the annulment of Taitotalo's decision awarding the contract or, in the alternative, for compensation. In addition, Arkkitehtitoimisto Pentti Toivanen Oy and Rakennuttajatoimisto Vilho Tervomaa, who are also parties to the main proceedings, applied for compensation from Taitotalo on 26 April 2000.

14 The applicants in the main proceedings maintain that Taitotalo has infringed legislation on the award of contracts.

15 On 15 May 2000 Taitotalo applied to the Kilpailuneuvosto for the applicants' application to be declared inadmissible on the ground that it is not a contracting authority within the meaning of Paragraph 2 of the Julkisista hankinnoista annettu laki. Although the requirements of the second and third subparagraphs of Paragraph 2(2) were satisfied, the company had not been founded to meet needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character, and it was not therefore a legal person governed by public law. The public funds approved for the contract amounted to less than half the value of the contract. Taitotalo bases its reasoning on a ruling of the Korkein hallinto-oikeus (Finland's Supreme Administrative Court) of 1 December 1999.

IV - Questions submitted for a preliminary ruling

16 The Kilpailuneuvosto states in its decision to request a preliminary ruling that it has become the practice in Finland in recent years for the public authorities to carry out infrastructure measures such as those referred to in the main proceedings by employing share companies they own and manage as property owners and contracting authorities.

17 Given the frequency and significance of these cases, the Kilpailuneuvosto considers it very important to obtain an interpretation of the relevant provisions of Directive 92/50. It has therefore referred the following questions to the Court of Justice:

`Is a share company which a town owns and in which the town exercises control to be regarded as a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public contracts, where the company acquires design and construction services for a building lot comprising offices to be leased to undertakings?

As a supplementary question, the Kilpailuneuvosto enquires whether it affects the decision on the point that the town's building project endeavours to create the conditions for business activity to be carried on in the town.

As a second supplementary question, the Kilpailuneuvosto enquires whether it affects the decision on the point that the offices to be built are leased to one undertaking only.'

V - Comments by the parties and legal analysis

18 The defendant, the Finnish, French and Austrian Governments and the Commission took part in the written proceedings before the Court. Before the hearing the Finnish Government was requested in writing by the Court to describe in greater detail the conditions under which `development companies' operate and especially to explain whether these companies have a profit motive and bear their economic risk themselves. The Finnish Government and the Commission took part in the hearing.

1. Admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling

19 In their written comments the French Government and the Commission express doubts about the admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling on the ground that parts of the Kilpailuneuvosto's description of the facts in the initial proceedings are contradictory, incomplete and unclear.

20 The Commission's view is that it is not apparent what legislation in the main action formed the basis for the call for tenders and who formally acted as the contracting authority inviting the tenders. The request for a preliminary ruling did not reveal whether Taitotalo's activity amounted to no more than the activities described or whether the defendant had a further area of activity. Answering the abstract questions submitted for a preliminary ruling was also hampered by the fact that it was obviously a matter of subsuming to the scope of Directive 92/50 not one legal person but a group of legal persons. The Commission therefore wonders whether the Kilpailuneuvosto's explanation of the factual and legal context in which its questions arise is sufficiently clear within the meaning of the case-law of the Court of Justice.

21 The French Government points out that an organisation can be deemed to be a public body within the meaning of Directive 92/50 only if it has legal personality at the time of the publication of the call for tenders and throughout the procedure. Taitotalo might not yet have had legal personality at the time when the call for tenders was published in September 1999, since it had not been entered in the commercial register until 6 April 2000. Clearly, the municipality of Varkaus had been both the body inviting tenders and the contracting authority. This, however, invalidated the Kilpailuneuvosto's questions. The French Government therefore proposes that the Court should ask the national court for clarification pursuant to Article 104(5) of the Court's Rules of Procedure.

22 The Court takes the view in settled case-law that it is solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision to determine, with due regard for the particular circumstances of the case, the need for a preliminary ruling to enable it to deliver judgment. (3) This principle is justified, according to the Court of Justice, by the national court's direct and accurate knowledge of the facts of the case, which places it in the best position to decide on this question. (4) Consequently, where the questions submitted by the national court concern the interpretation of Community law, the Court of Justice is, in principle, bound to give a ruling. (5)

23 However, the Court of Justice also emphasises in settled case-law the need for the national court to define the factual and legislative context of the questions it is asking or, at the very least, to explain the assumptions of fact on which those questions are based so that the Court of Justice may arrive at an interpretation of Community law which will be of use to the national court. (6) Article 234 EC does not assign to the Court of Justice the task of giving a ruling on a question referred to it by a national court where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law sought by that court bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose or where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it. (7)

24 Thus the Court of Justice refuses to give a ruling on questions referred to it if it finds that the provisions of Community law are not applicable to the action. (8) It also refuses to express an opinion when its answer would not have any bearing on the main proceedings (9) or the interpretation requested is not relevant to the outcome of the action. (10)

25 In its request for a preliminary ruling (11) the Finnish Competition Council makes it abundantly clear that it considers the interpretation of Article 1(b) of the Directive to be important because this provision of Community law is linked to the award procedure in the main action. The parties cannot agree in the main action whether Taitotalo is a legal person within the meaning of the Finnish transposing act, Paragraph 2(2) of the Julkisista hankinnoista annettu laki, established for the purpose of looking after tasks in the general interest with no industrial or commercial character. If this company is to be regarded as part of the public administration, its award of contracts is, in the Kilpailuneuvosto's view, governed by the legislation on the award of public contracts.

26 Although the presentation of the facts pertinent to the interpretation to be undertaken could be more complete, the description of the activities of the defendant, Taitotalo, and its relations with the town of Varkaus is sufficiently comprehensible for a judicial appraisal of the questions submitted for a preliminary ruling to be possible.

27 As a useful answer is therefore by no means impossible, the request for a preliminary ruling is admissible.

2. Interpretation of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50

28 In its main question the Kilpailuneuvosto asks whether companies limited by shares which are controlled by public authorities are engaging in an industrial or commercial activity if they construct industrial or commercial premises for private undertakings, with the result that they cannot be deemed to have been established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character.

29 In agreement with the parties to the main proceedings, the parties who have submitted comments on the request for a preliminary ruling largely take the view that the defendant in the initial proceedings, Taitotalo, satisfies the third as well as the second requirement of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50. In the French Government's view, these requirements have at least been met since the date on which Taitotalo was entered in the commercial register.

30 As the description of the facts in the request for a preliminary ruling reveals, Taitotalo is a company limited by shares with legal personality whose management is subject to the supervision of the town of Varkaus. The town appoints all the members of the management bodies since it holds all the shares in the company.

31 At the hearing the representative of the Finnish Government stated in response to a question from the Judge-Rapporteur that it was possible and normal practice under Finnish law for the founders of a company to act on its behalf even before it had been entered in the commercial register. The newly created legal person then subsequently assumed the liabilities thus accrued, which were treated as if they had existed as company liabilities from the outset. Until that time, however, the liability of the founders of the company was unlimited.

32 This leaves only one requirement attached to the concept of a body governed by public law in need of interpretation in the present case: has an undertaking such as the defendant been established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character?

(a) Comments by the parties

33 The French Government shares the view of the defendant, Taitotalo, that the latter is not a contracting authority within the meaning of Directive 92/50. It maintains that Taitotalo was not established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character.

34 Taitotalo does not, in its opinion, create general conditions (infrastructure) for economic activities in the municipality, but carries out building projects for individual undertakings in accordance with their specific interests. It had a commercial purpose in that it operated at normal market prices.

35 In support of its arguments Taitotalo refers to the Court's judgments in Case C-44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others (12) and Case C-360/96 BFI Holding. (13) In the former judgment it had been found that an undertaking which carried out economic activities should not be classified as a public body within the meaning of the Directive solely because it had been established by a contracting authority or because the latter provided the undertaking with funds stemming from activities in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character. In Taitotalo's view, the Court confirmed in this ruling that an undertaking belonging to the public authorities did not fall within the scope of the Directive if it had not been established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character. The link that existed between a contracting authority and an undertaking because of the ownership structure and financing was not enough in itself to make the undertaking a public body.

36 The French Government similarly refers to the judgment in Case C-44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others. (14) It believes that the Court had considered in particular whether the activity of an entity was associated with sovereign powers with a view to determining whether that entity was meeting needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character. In the French Government's view, the defendant's activity in the present case has nothing to do with sovereign powers. In this respect the defendant's activity clearly differed from the activities of other entities on whose classification as contracting authorities the Court had already been called upon to give a ruling. (15)

37 To make the distinction, the French Government also refers to the judgment in Case C-237/99 Commission v France, (16) in which it was ruled that the building and letting of low-rent housing meet needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character. The building of low-rent housing was not, however, comparable in this respect to the construction and leasing of industrial or commercial premises.

38 The Finnish Government, on the other hand, takes the view that a company such as the defendant has been established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest of the citizens of the municipality within the meaning of Directive 92/50.

39 It refers to the objectives of Directive 92/50. The coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts in the Community was meant to remove the obstacles to the freedom to provide services and so to protect the interests of economic operators established in one Member State wanting to offer goods or services to contracting authorities established in another Member State. A further objective was to preclude any disorder in public finances, there being no controls over public contracts as there was in the case of private financing. The practical effectiveness of Directive 92/50 was threatened if a company such as that involved in the main action should not be classified as a contracting authority. Local authorities might be inclined to establish in their areas of activity companies whose contract award procedures were not then subject to the rules of the Directive.

40 In its comments the Finnish Government refers in particular to the legal status and the tasks of the municipalities in Finland. Paragraph 121 of the Finnish Constitution stated that Finland was divided into municipalities whose administration must be based on self-government by their inhabitants. This provision guaranteed the local authorities a comprehensive right to govern themselves which was enshrined in law. On this legal basis the municipalities provided a large proportion of public services in Finland. Within the municipalities' area of activity a distinction should be made between `general' and `special' tasks. The `special' tasks included those performed by the municipalities on the basis of specific legal provisions, examples being education, health and medical care and also regional planning and the technical implementation of infrastructure measures. The `general' sphere, on the other hand, included the tasks which a municipality might perform on the basis of the right of self-government which it was guaranteed by the Constitution, although they must concern `common matters'. Such matters served the interests and the physical and spiritual needs of the inhabitants of a municipality and were of relevance to the whole community.

41 The policy of economic promotion, according to the Finnish Government, is one of the essential tasks for which the Finnish municipalities are generally responsible. Creating infrastructure for economic activities was regarded as a common matter which was in the interests of the municipality's inhabitants. Undertakings of the defendant's type were meant to create industrial and commercial infrastructure in the area of their local authority by constructing and leasing industrial and commercial premises and offering comparable services. Finnish local authorities set up `development companies' comparable to the defendant with a view to attracting new branches of industry and commerce and promoting the development of business activities, especially when no one in the private sector could be found to create such infrastructure.

42 At the hearing the representative of the Finnish Government stated in response to the Court's written question that, while a municipality might make profits through its own economic activity, this was not intended and was merely a secondary aim. The activity of companies owned by municipalities was committed to the common good. Furthermore, Finnish law prohibited the municipalities to undertake purely economic activities. As `development companies' in principle bore their economic risk themselves, bankruptcy was a possibility, but this was normally prevented by their owners, the municipalities, as long as there was a municipal interest in the continued existence of the company.

43 Services like those offered by the defendant might also be provided for purely private-sector purposes. The purpose for which a company was established could not therefore be inferred from its activity; in particular, the area of activity of a development company could not be unequivocally deduced even from the commercial register.

44 The Finnish Government maintains that it is the defendant's task to provide the inhabitants of the municipality of Varkaus with services in connection with economic activities and therefore in the general interest. It was for this that it had been established by the municipality. It made no difference whether the municipality provided the services itself, or through an interposed company belonging to it, or purchased the service from a third party.

45 In reply to the question when a need has an industrial or commercial character, the Finnish Government refers to the judgment in BFI Holding, (17) in which the Court ruled that the fact that an entity competed with private suppliers in the market concerned might indicate that the need had an industrial or commercial character. In the present case, there appeared to be no significant competition in the area in which the companies concerned operated.

46 Like the Finnish Government, the Austrian Government takes the view that the spirit and purpose of the legislation should be taken into account when determining the personal scope of the directives on the award of public contracts. In the context of the interpretation of the concept of general interest the Austrian Government refers to its written comments in Case C-373/00 Truley v Bestattung Wien. (18) The restriction of those benefiting from a given activity did not, in its view, mean that the activity itself did not serve the general interest. The promotion of the location of technology undertakings in the municipality benefited consumers and the local population since, for example, the range of products and services available became wider or tax revenue was increased. Taitotalo's activity should therefore be regarded as meeting a need in the general interest.

47 Having regard to the Court's ruling in Joined Cases C-223/99 and C-260/99, (19) the Commission shares the view that Taitotalo's activity can be deemed to be in the general interest if it `stimulates trade' which is in the general interest. The Commission's representative explicitly pointed out at the hearing, however, that this appraisal might be different and the stimulus was perhaps purely hypothetical.

48 Both the Commission and the Austrian Government believe that the absence of any profit motive is an indication of the existence of a need which does not have an industrial or commercial character. An industrial or commercial activity was, in the final analysis, characterised by the fact that the undertaking bore the economic risk of its activity, with the result that, if the worst came to the worst, the company in question might become insolvent.

49 At the hearing the Commission's representative also reaffirmed that the Kilpailuneuvosto's partly unclear statement of the facts of the case made it impossible to determine with certainty whether a company limited by shares, such as Taitotalo, was a body governed by public law within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50. The statutes of the Taitotalo company did not, at least, make formal provision for a mechanism to enable the public authorities to make good any financial losses. This did not in any way mean that the public authorities did not in fact provide securities or vouch for the defendant.

50 In the Austrian Government's view the Kilpailuneuvosto needs to make an overall assessment of the competitive situation in which Taitotalo operates. It should not, in any case, be automatically inferred from the industrial or commercial activity of the undertakings benefiting from the building projects that Taitotalo's activity was industrial or commercial.

(b) Analysis

51 What is first required is an interpretation of the term `need in the general interest' so that it may be decided whether a company such as Taitotalo is meeting needs of this nature. Account must be taken in this process of the special features of the specific case so that a useful interpretation may be given. Only then is it possible to comply with the Court's requirement that `contracting authorities' be defined in functional terms. (20)

52 The next step is to consider whether the satisfaction of the need concerned by a company such as Taitotalo is of an industrial or commercial character.

(i) Need in the general interest

53 None of the directives on the award of public contracts (21) contains a legal definition of this vague legal concept. Vague legal concepts usually make interpretation difficult, since specific legal entities cannot be unequivocally assigned to them in either positive or negative terms.

54 As regards the principle of legal certainty inherent in Community law, which requires a legal provision to be clear and its application to be predictable for all concerned, (22) this finding is problematical. An interpretation must therefore lead to objective and transparent criteria for the definition of a need as being in the general interest. But if the authors of the directive had specified needs in the general interest, a functional interpretation as to the purpose of the directive would have been far from easy. Given the objectives of the directives on the award of public contracts, however, the concept must be more accurately defined to ensure the practical effectiveness of the principles of the free movement of goods and the freedom to provide services, as the Court has ruled on several occasions in connection with the legal form of entities or the underlying provisions. (23)

55 Hitherto the Court has described needs in the general interest as being needs closely linked to the institutional operation of the State. (24) They are needs which the State itself chooses to provide or over which it wishes to retain a decisive influence. (25)

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

56 As I pointed out in my Opinion in Case C-373/00 Truley v Bestattung Wien, (26) the Court has meanwhile classified a number of very different needs as being in the general interest. Like the list of bodies governed by public law contained in Annex I to Directive 71/305/EEC, (27) these examples from case-law may provide some indications for an interpretation.

57 In my Opinion on Case C-373/00 Truley v Bestattung Wien (28) I also explained why I consider an interpretation of needs in the general interest depending on how the Member State itself defines its area of activity to be incompatible with the purpose of the directives on the award of public contracts. Both the autonomy of Community law and the goal of its uniform application argue for the concept of needs in the general interest to be understood and interpreted as an autonomous concept in Community law. This view is endorsed by the purpose of the directives on the award of public contracts, which is to contribute to the completion and operation of the internal market. At the same time, however, I pointed out that an autonomous interpretation of the concept based on Community law must not result in national law becoming irrelevant.

58 The Finnish Government has emphasised that the services offered by a company such as Taitotalo, i.e. the acquisition, purchase and leasing of industrial and commercial premises, are intended to meet needs which are regarded as a matter for the local authorities in Finland. Seen through Finnish eyes, they are, then, needs which the local authorities and thus the State would themselves like to meet so that they may influence the location of industrial and commercial undertakings in the areas over which they have jurisdiction.

59 The Finnish Government has also explained what needs a municipality may seek to meet solely on the basis of its constitutional right of self-government, alongside its specific statutory duties: they must serve the interests and needs of the inhabitants of a municipality and be of relevance to the whole community.

60 National law thus requires that the municipalities' activities benefit their inhabitants. This suggests that the activities of municipal companies should always be classified as being in the general interest.

61 Taitotalo has emphasised, however, that its activities are guided primarily by the needs of its client undertakings. The question which then arises is whether this client orientation is inconsistent with an activity in the general interest. It should be remembered in this context that companies such as the defendant are likely to be at pains to offer suitable premises to any undertaking seeking them in the area under a municipality's jurisdiction, especially where, as in the main action, they are planning whole business centres.

62 In its judgment in Agorà and Excelsior (29) the Court found that the organiser of a trade fair acts not only in the immediate interest of the exhibitors and those visiting the fair but also in the interest of third parties, such as consumers. This analysis also provides indicators for the facts of the main action. Here too, as in the organisation of a trade fair, it does not seem justified to infer from the restriction of the group of client undertakings that the service offered by a company such as the defendant is not in the general interest.

63 The representative of the Finnish Government stated at the hearing that the municipalities establish development companies to attract business and so to promote economic activity in their area.

64 The first supplementary question, which reveals the background against which the construction projects in Varkaus are to be implemented, should also be considered at this juncture. I feel there is no doubt that, as a rule, the conditions for industrial or commercial activities are created not only for the sake of the undertakings themselves but primarily because the municipality hopes, among other things, that the location of industrial or commercial firms in its area will stimulate trade, generate employment opportunities for its inhabitants and increase its tax revenue. The activity of a company which succeeds in attracting business to the area is therefore helping to meet the needs of the inhabitants of the municipality and thus of the community at large.

65 The Commission argued at the hearing, on the other hand, that this stimulus might be hypothetical and the impact no more than indirect. The objection to this is that the location of undertakings in a municipality is indeed encouraged by the activities of `development companies'.

66 An intermediate conclusion to be drawn is that companies limited by shares which are controlled by the public authorities and build industrial or commercial premises for private undertakings to create more favourable conditions for business activities in a municipality can be regarded as having been established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest. The question is, however, whether the needs do not have an industrial or commercial character.

(ii) Meeting needs not having an industrial or commercial character

67 In its judgment in BFI Holding (30) the Court points out that it is clear from the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, in its different language versions, that the absence of an industrial or commercial character is a criterion intended to clarify the meaning of the term `needs in the general interest'. In the same judgment it also ruled that the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the directive draws a distinction between needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character and needs in the general interest having an industrial or commercial character. (31)

68 However, these statements simply enable the relationship among the various requirements set out in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 to be understood. They do not make it possible to define `needs having an industrial or commercial character'. The question remains, then, how needs in the general interest having an industrial or commercial character can be distinguished from those not having an industrial or commercial character and whether the need met by Taitotalo for the acquisition and administration of industrial or commercial premises with a view to their being sold or leased to firms in the technology sector is or is not of an industrial or commercial character.

69 In its past case-law the Court has outlined the following guides for interpreting the term:

70 The existence of significant competition, and in particular the fact that the entity concerned is faced with competition in the relevant market, may be indicative of the satisfaction of a need having an industrial or commercial character. (32) That a given need can also be met by private undertakings does not exclude the possibility of this need not having an industrial or commercial character within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50. (33) In the Court's view, needs not having an industrial or commercial character are generally, first, those which are met otherwise than by the availability of goods or services in the market and, second, those which, for reasons associated with the general interest, the State itself chooses to meet or over which it wishes to retain a decisive influence. (34)

71 Whether a company such as Taitotalo, which is in issue in the main proceedings, operates in a competitive environment is for the national court to verify, having regard to all its activities, as the Austrian Government has proposed. (35) This presupposes a definition both of the market for the services in question and its geographical extent. (36) This is a task for the requesting court to perform in full knowledge of the facts of the case.

72 The comments of the parties suggest that there is no significant competition in the area of activity of the company concerned. This is, however, an assumption. As the existence of competition is no more than an indication, a statement about it is not essential for an interpretation of the term `needs having an industrial or commercial character'.

73 All the parties agree that the activity of a company such as the defendant in the main action consists of the provision of services which may also be offered by a private undertaking. The views of the parties differ, on the other hand, when it comes to analysing the need which is satisfied.

74 Taitotalo's statutes are not available to the Court as an indication of the legal basis of its tasks. According to the statements made by the Kilpailuneuvosto and the Finnish Government, companies such as the defendant in the main action do not have a profit motive. The representative of the Finnish Government has submitted that Finnish local government law forbids the municipalities to establish companies on purely economic grounds to make profits. This argues against an economic activity, since business activity is, as a general rule, geared to the making of a corporate profit. If the municipalities are prevented by law from establishing companies with a profit motive, the conclusion must be that there is little or no room for the establishment of companies to meet needs having an industrial or commercial character.

75 Taitotalo, on the other hand, emphasises that it implements building projects for individual undertakings in accordance with their specific interests and that it does so at normal market prices. The French Government's view that what is decisive for the assessment of the task of companies such as Taitotalo is the activity of the entity concerned and not the activity of those for whom the buildings are constructed must be endorsed in this context.

76 It has already been pointed out during the discussion of needs in the general interest that limiting the direct beneficiaries or recipients of an activity or service does not argue against the activity being offered in the interest of the community at large. Nor can it be inferred from the fact that the beneficiaries or recipients of an activity or service are undertakings operating commercially that the entity offering them a certain activity or service is also doing so commercially. It is possible, after all, to conceive of many needs not having an industrial or commercial character which the State chooses, for reasons of public welfare, to meet itself or through entities forming part of it, in order to retain a decisive influence and which arise only in the case of undertakings operating commercially.

77 I have proposed, first in my Opinion in Agorà and Excelsior and latterly in my Opinion in Truley, that one of the relevant factors when considering whether an entity meets needs not having an industrial or commercial character is whether it bears the financial risk inherent in its decisions. If it must bear the financial consequences of its decisions itself, that is likely to indicate an industrial or commercial activity. (37)

78 This criterion enables the spirit and purpose of Directive 92/50 to be taken into account in its interpretation. According to its recitals, the aim of Directive 92/50 is to remove obstacles to the freedom to provide services and so to protect the interests of economic operators established in one Member State who wish to offer goods or services to contracting authorities established in another Member State. The risk of preference being given to domestic tenderers or certain applicants in the award of contracts by contracting authorities - possibly without due regard for the economic and financial consequences - is to be avoided. The Community legislature intended that the directives should be applied to entities which escape market forces in whole or in part. (38)

79 The determining factor in the examination of the requirements for the existence of a body governed by public law is therefore whether there is a danger of its being guided in its decisions on the award of contracts by other than economic considerations. (39) If this is the case, the achievement of the freedom to provide services is at risk, justifying the application of the directives on public contracts. (40) Where, however, an entity has to bear the economic risk of its activity itself, it is in principle compelled to allow itself to be guided by economic considerations and will choose its contractual partners accordingly.

80 In the case of undertakings which meet needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character there are always likely to be means by which the public authorities can offset any losses so that it does not become impossible for such undertakings to perform the tasks entrusted to them. The public authorities will refuse to give their support only when they have no further interest in the needs being met because they have ceased to be in the general interest.

81 Applying this yardstick to the defendant in the main proceedings, the referring court should begin by considering the extent to which Taitotalo's statutes require the town of Varkaus to make good any deficits incurred by Taitotalo. An obligation of this nature might also ensue from the Member State's relevant legislation or from customary practice. What should be considered in this context is not only whether there is an explicit provision on the offsetting of deficits but also standard practice. If, for example, the town of Varkaus does in fact make good or stand surety for any deficits incurred by the defendant in the main proceedings, the referring court must take this into account.

82 The Finnish Government's comments at the hearing indicate that the municipalities usually prevent companies they own from becoming bankrupt.

83 If, however, Taitotalo does indeed bear its economic and financial risk itself, without any prospect of assistance from the public authorities, it is meeting a need which has an industrial or commercial character.

84 The conclusion is therefore that the answer to the Kilpailuneuvosto's question is that a company limited by shares which is owned and controlled by a town and which provides design and construction services for a building project that includes industrial or commercial premises which are leased to undertakings in the general interest should be regarded as a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50/EEC relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public contracts if it is not required to bear the economic risk of its activity alone, because there is a possibility of any losses being offset by the town.

3. First supplementary question

(a) Comments by the parties

85 All parties who have submitted comments on this supplementary question believe that the fact that the town's building project is intended to create the conditions for industrial or commercial activities in a municipality is relevant to the assessment of the matter at issue.

86 Taitotalo emphasises, however, that this question has nothing to do with the case in which the Kilpailuneuvosto is in fact required to give a ruling, since it does not concern any building project of the town itself, as the supplementary question might indicate, but the improvement it - the defendant - achieves in the business activities of individual undertakings by implementing the project.

(b) Analysis

87 The supplementary question concerning the general interest has essentially been answered in the context of the interpretation of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50.

88 The location of new industrial and commercial activities and the associated promotion of the economy are needs in the general interest and so form part of the requirement set out in the first indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, which must be satisfied if an entity is to be defined as a body governed by public law within the meaning of the legislation.

89 It is therefore relevant to the assessment of the matter at issue that a building project implemented by the town is meant to create the conditions for business activities in the municipality, because a need in the general interest is then satisfied.

4. Second supplementary question

(a) Comments by the parties

90 Taitotalo and the Commission take the view that the leasing of the premises to be built to only one undertaking means that Taitotalo is not meeting needs in the general interest.

91 The Finnish, French and Austrian Governments, on the other hand, believe that the leasing of the buildings to be constructed to only one undertaking is irrelevant to the matter at issue.

(b) Analysis

92 As has already been stated, the general interest in the meeting of a need cannot be determined from the number of those directly benefiting from an activity or service.

93 The answer to the second supplementary question must therefore be that the leasing of the buildings to be constructed to only one undertaking is irrelevant to the assessment of the matter at issue.

VI - Conclusion

94 In view of the above deliberations I propose that the questions submitted by the Kilpailuneuvosto should be answered as follows:

A company limited by shares which is owned and controlled by a town and which awards contracts for design and construction services for a building project that includes industrial and commercial premises leased to undertakings in the general interest must be regarded as a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50/EEC relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts if it is not required to bear the economic risk of its activity alone, because there is a possibility of any losses being offset by the town.

It is relevant to the assessment of the matter at issue that a building project implemented by the town is meant to create the conditions for industrial or commercial activities in the municipality, because a need in the general interest is then met.

It is not relevant to the assessment of the matter at issue that the buildings to be constructed are leased to only one undertaking.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Mischo delivered on 2 May 2001.
Commission of the European Communities v French Republic.
Failure by Member State to fulfil its obligations - Directive 98/4/EC - Failure to transpose within the prescribed period.
Case C-439/00.

1. In these Treaty-infringement proceedings, which it brought on 28 November 2000, the Commission of the European Communities has asked the Court to declare that, by failing to adopt the laws, regulations and administrative measures necessary to comply with Directive 98/4/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 February 1998 amending Directive 93/38/EEC coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors or, at all events, by failing to communicate the same to the Commission, the French Republic has failed to comply with its obligations under that directive.

Facts and pre-litigation procedure

2. Article 2(1) of Directive 98/4/EC requires the Member States to enact the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with the directive by 16 February 1999 at the latest, and immediately to inform the Commission of them.

3. In the absence of any notification of the measures transposing the directive by the expiry of the time-limit, the Commission, by letter dated 10 May 1999, gave the French Government formal notice to submit its observations within two months.

4. By letter dated 6 January 2000, the French Government informed the Commission that the process of adopting the draft decree providing for the transposition of this directive, among others, was in hand, that the draft decree would shortly be submitted to the Conseil d'Etat (The Council of State) (France) and that the directive had already been partially transposed by an order dated 22 April 1998.

5. On 18 February 2000 the Commission sent a reasoned opinion to the French Republic requesting it to adopt the measures necessary to comply with the obligations resulting from the directive within two months from the date of notification of the opinion.

6. Having received no further information as to whether the legislative procedure had been brought to a conclusion and the decree enacted, the Commission brought the present action.

Analysis

7. Pointing out the obligations of the Member States under the third paragraph of Article 249 EC, the Commission submits that the French Republic was required to take the necessary measures to comply with the directive within the prescribed period.

8. In its defence the French Republic states that the transposition of the directive necessitates the amendment of the Code des marchés publics (Code of Public Procurement) as well as other legislative measures. A text amending the code has already been submitted to the Conseil d'Etat for consideration. The draft decree, which aims to transpose the directive so far as it concerns the contracting entities not subject to the Code des marchés publics, will also have to be submitted to the Conseil d'Etat, in the interest of consistency between the reform of the Code des marchés public and the whole body of legislation governing public procurement.

9. It is clear, however, that, at the date of commencement of the action, the legislation had not been amended to comply with Directive 98/4, which, moreover, the French Republic does not deny.

Conclusion

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

10. In these circumstances, I can only suggest to the Court that it allow the Commission's application and, as a result:

(1) declare that, by not adopting all the necessary laws, regulations and administrative measures necessary to comply with Directive 98/4/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 February 1998 amending Directive 93/38/EEC coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive;

(2) order the French Republic to pay the costs.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Mischo delivered on 18 April 2002.
Felix Swoboda GmbH v Osterreichische Nationalbank.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesvergabeamt - Austria.
Public service contracts - Directive 92/50/EEC - Scope ratione materiae - Moving offices of a central bank - Contract relating to both services listed in Annex I A to Directive 92/50 and services listed in Annex I B to that directive - Predominance in value terms of services listed in Annex I B.
Case C-411/00.

1 By order of 29 September 2000, the Fourth Chamber of the Bundesvergabeamt (Austria) referred to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling four questions concerning the interpretation of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts. (1)

2 Directive 92/50 distinguishes between `priority' public service contracts, to which the directive applies in full (Titles III to VI), and `non-priority' service contracts, to which only Articles 14 and 16 of the directive apply. Non-priority service contracts, which are considered to have little impact on cross-border trade, are thus covered only by the monitoring mechanism introduced by the directive. (2)

3 The priority services are listed in Annex I A to the directive, whilst the non-priority services are listed in Annex I B to the directive. The services are classified by reference to the United Nations Central (or Common) Product Classification (`CPC').

4 In the case of contracts relating both to services listed in Annex I A and to services listed in Annex I B, Article 10 of the directive provides:

`Contracts... shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI where the value of the services listed in Annex I A is greater than the value of the services listed in Annex I B. Where this is not the case, they shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.'

5 Directive 92/50 was transposed into Austrian law by the Bundesvergabegesetz (Austrian Federal Procurement Law). (3) Annex III to that federal law corresponds in essence to Annex I A to Directive 92/50, whilst Annex IV corresponds to Annex I B to the directive. The rule laid down in Article 10 of Directive 92/50 is transposed into Paragraph 3(4) of the Bundesvergabegesetz.

6 In the case in the main proceedings the applicant, Felix Swoboda GmbH (`Swoboda') is questioning precisely whether a procedure for the award of a public service contract was lawful as regards Paragraph 3(4) of the Bundesvergabegesetz. It is seeking a declaration from the national court that federal law was infringed because the contract was not awarded to the tenderer which submitted the most favourable bid. The observations of the contracting authority state that Swoboda did not take part in the tendering procedure in question.

7 The Osterreichische Nationalbank (the Austrian central bank, `the ONB'), the contracting authority, when moving to new offices located some 200 metres from its original address, awarded a contract `for removal and transport services'.

8 Apart from the physical removal (dismantling, packing, transporting and unpacking) which, according to the ONB, represented only 6.94% of the value of the contract, the main services to be provided were computer-aided logistics, coordination of all the removal activities, and the provision of a storage depot and organisation of the storage. The ONB therefore considered that the contract consisted mainly of `supporting and auxiliary transport services', which are listed in Annex IV to the Bundesvergabegesetz, and not `land transport services', which are listed in Annex III to the Bundesvergabegesetz and so are covered by the federal law in full. It therefore published only a notice of the contract awarded.

9 Swoboda considers that the contract should have been awarded in accordance with the Bundesvergabegesetz in full, since the value of the services listed in Annex III was in this case, it maintains, greater than the value of those listed in Annex IV.

10 The Bundesvergabeamt therefore considered it necessary, in order to resolve the dispute brought before it, to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC:

`(1) Must a service which serves a single purpose, but which could be subdivided into part services, be classified as a single service consisting of a main service and accessory, supporting services in accordance with the scheme of Directive 92/50/EEC, and in particular the types of services contained in Annex I A and I B, and treated as a service listed in Annex I A or I B to the directive according to its main object, or must each part service instead be considered separately in order to establish whether the service is subject to the directive in full as a priority service or only to individual provisions thereof as a non-priority service?

(2) How far may a service which describes a specific type of service (eg transport services) be broken down into individual services in accordance with the scheme of Directive 92/50/EEC without infringing the provisions on the award of service contracts or undermining the effet utile of Directive 92/50/EEC?

(3) Must the services referred to in this case (having regard to Article 10 of Directive 92/50/EEC) be classified as services listed in Annex I A to Directive 92/50/EEC (Category 2, Land transport services) and contracts which have as their object such services are to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI of the directive, or must they be classified as services listed in Annex I B to Directive 92/50/EEC (in particular Category 20, Supporting and auxiliary transport services, and Category 27, Other services) so that contracts which have as their object such services are to be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16, and under which CPC reference number must they be subsumed?

(4) In the event that consideration of the part services leads to the conclusion that a part service listed in Annex I A to the directive which, in principle, is subject in full to the provisions of Directive 92/50/EEC is, by way of an exception, not subject in full to the provisions of the directive on account of the principle of predominance laid down in Article 10 thereof, is there an obligation on the contracting authority to split off non-priority part services and to award contracts for them separately in order to respect the priority nature of the service?'

Admissibility of the questions

11 Since both the Commission and the defendant in the main proceedings have raised objections as to the admissibility of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling, it is appropriate to address those objections first of all.

12 In a preliminary remark, the Commission questions whether the Bundesvergabeamt is actually a `court or tribunal' within the meaning of Article 234 EC, since that is one of the conditions for the admissibility of the questions.

13 In that regard, I should like to refer directly to Case C-44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others. (4) In that case the Court of Justice implicitly, but necessarily, recognised the Bundesvergabeamt as a court or tribunal since it agreed to answer the questions the latter had referred to it. There is even less reason to contest that recognition since Advocate General Léger had addressed the issue of whether the Bundesvergabeamt was a court or tribunal in his Opinion.

At the end of his reasoning, with which I concur, he concluded that the Austrian Federal Procurement Office was to be regarded as a `court or tribunal' within the meaning of Article 234 EC. Subsequently, the Court of Justice has on several occasions when answering other questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Bundesvergabeamt (5) confirmed that the latter is recognised as a `court or tribunal'.

14 The Commission refers to the case-law of the Court of Justice, which requires that the decisions issued by national courts referring questions to it under Article 234 EC be `of a judicial character'. The Bundesvergabeamt, as it acknowledges in its order for reference of 9 August 2001 in Siemens and ARGE Telekom, (6) currently pending before the Court of Justice, does not have the capacity to issue enforceable directions. The Commission concludes from this that its decisions do not have the necessary judicial character. (7)

15 In that connection, it is clear that an authority may issue decisions of a judicial character even if it does not have the power to issue enforceable directions. The clearest evidence of this is that the Court of Justice of the European Communities itself does not have such a power, except when it is giving a ruling in interlocutory proceedings. (8) No one, however, at least as yet, has ventured to challenge its capacity as a court or tribunal.

16 Although the Bundesvergabeamt does not have that capacity to issue enforceable directions to contracting authorities, it has, at least until the contract is awarded, the power to annul their decisions, which is sufficient to make it a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC. Decisions of the Bundesvergabeamt `are binding as may be seen, inter alia, from the fact that it enjoys a power of annulment under the law'. (9)

17 Naturally, since the contract at issue in this case has already been awarded, the Bundesvergabeamt cannot be led to order an annulment in the main proceedings. This case in fact falls within Paragraph 113(3) of the Bundesvergabegesetz, which provides as follows:

`After the contract has been awarded, or after the procedure for awarding it is closed, the Federal Procurement Office shall have jurisdiction to determine whether a contract has not been awarded to the most favourable tenderer as a result of an infringement of this Federal Law or its implementing regulations. In proceedings of this nature the Federal Procurement Office shall also have jurisdiction to determine, at the request of the contracting authority, whether a potential tenderer or an unsuccessful tenderer has not had a genuine chance of being awarded the contract under a correct application of the provisions of the present Federal Law and its implementing regulations.'

18 This does not mean, however, that the Bundesvergabeamt will not issue a binding decision having the force of res judicata. Under Paragraph 125(2) of the Bundesvergabegesetz, an application for damages lodged by an unsuccessful tenderer is admissible only if the Bundesvergabeamt has found earlier that the contract has been awarded unlawfully under Paragraph 113(3). A civil court called upon to rule on that application for damages, and moreover the parties concerned, are bound by that finding.

19 It appears that the doubts expressed by the Commission originate from an unfortunate misunderstanding. From the fact that in the case which gave rise to the reference for a preliminary ruling in Siemens and ARGE Telekom, cited above, the Bundesvergabeamt was unsure whether it had sufficient powers with regard to Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts,(10) the Commission incorrectly concluded that the Bundesvergabeamt had doubts regarding its capacity as a court or tribunal.

20 I therefore consider that, at any event, in the proceedings instituted by Swoboda the Bundesvergabeamt has the capacity of a court or tribunal, within the meaning of Article 234 EC, enabling it to refer questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling.

21 The ONB questions Swoboda's capacity to bring the case in the main proceedings, contending that it does not have the capacity of tenderer or unsuccessful candidate, which is required under national law in order to bring such an action. Since Swoboda cannot claim damages, the finding that there has been an infringement of Directive 92/50 would be purely declaratory and would have no substantive effect on the case in the main proceedings.

22 In that connection, may I state simply that the matter of the capacity of the defendant in the main proceedings is one which is governed by national procedural rules. It is not for the Court of Justice to rule on such matters. It is for the national court alone to decide on matters of purely national law and to assess the need for a reference for a preliminary ruling. The only questions of interpretation of Community law which the Court of Justice may refuse to answer despite a reference by a national court are those which are hypothetical or submitted to it under a procedural device. (11) The present case is clearly not such an exception.

23 The ONB also contends that the Court has already ruled in Tögel (cited above) on questions comparable to those which have been referred to it in this case, and that it could therefore simply answer the questions referred to it by a reasoned order containing a reference to that judgment.

24 It should be stressed that Article 104(3) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice merely enables the Court to answer questions referred for a preliminary ruling by means of a reasoned order. It is under no obligation to do so.

25 Moreover, the facts in the main proceedings and the questions referred to the Court in Tögel appear to be significantly different from those we are dealing with in this case. In particular, in Tögel the Court was not called upon to answer the main question currently referred by the Bundesvergabeamt, which is whether a contract serving a single purpose, but comprising a number of part services, should be subject to the arrangements for awarding contracts applying to its main object, or should be subject to the arrangements for part services, which represent the predominant part of the contract in terms of value.

26 Lastly, the ONB points to the fact that the contract concerned contains no cross-border aspect and is of no interest to a foreign undertaking. Consequently, Community law does not apply to the case at issue since the situation does not have any aspect linking it with a cross-border situation. The ONB refers in particular in support of this argument to Case C-108/98 RI. SAN., (12) in which, it maintains, the Court ruled that a tendering procedure was not subject to the application of Community law where it had no foreign aspect to it.

27 That is a manifestly incorrect interpretation of the Court's judgment. In RI. SAN. the Court ruled that Article 55 of the EC Treaty (now Article 45 EC) did not apply in a situation in the main proceedings in which all the facts were confined to within one Member State. However, it did not rule on the applicability of Directive 92/50 with regard to the requirement of a foreign aspect.

28 The purpose of the Community directives concerning the award of public contracts is to establish procedures that are coordinated at Community level, irrespective of whether or not there are any cross-border aspects to the contracts concerned. The fact that the contract to which the case relates is only of limited interest to a foreign tenderer does not constitute adequate grounds for not applying Directive 92/50. Furthermore, to stipulate that the departure and arrival points of the service to be provided should be situated either side of a border is a requirement which is excessive in relation to the directive's objective, which is the opening up of markets, even those located entirely within a single Member State, to potential tenderers established in other Member States.

29 I shall now consider the questions referred by the national court. In order to follow the logical course of my reasoning I shall answer the fourth question before tackling the third.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

First question

30 In order to make the answers given to the court making the reference more succinct and to give an appropriate interpretation of Directive 92/50, I consider that in its first question the Bundesvergabeamt is in essence asking the Court how the arrangements for awarding a public service contract are determined where that contract serves a single purpose but could be subdivided into part services. Should the contract be classed as falling within Annex I A or I B to Directive 92/50, that is to say, according to the main object of the contract or according to the part services representing the major share by value of the contract?

31 In its order for reference the Bundesvergabeamt refers to the judgment in Gestion Hotelera Internacional (13) and notes that that judgment laid down a principle of predominance, under which the main object of the contract absorbs the supporting services associated with it for the purpose of determining which of the directives on the award of public contracts is applicable to a particular contract.

32 It does not seem to me that the reference to that judgment is relevant to resolving the question referred to the Court in this case.

33 In Gestion Hotelera Internacional the Court was asked to give a ruling on the applicability of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (14) to a contract whose main object was the assignment of property. The Court held in that case that `... a mixed contract relating both to the performance of works and to the assignment of property does not fall within the scope of Directive 71/305 if the performance of the works is merely incidental to the assignment of property'. (15)

34 The ruling contained in that judgment is corroborated by the 16th recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50:

`... public service contracts, particularly in the field of property management, may from time to time include some works;... it results from Directive 71/305/EEC that, for a contract to be a public works contract, its object must be the achievement of a work;... in so far as these works are incidental rather than the object of the contract, they do not justify treating the contract as a public works contract'.

35 The question referred to the Court appears to be significantly different in the present case. It is not a matter of which directive is applicable to the award of the contract concerned. All the written observations lodged with the Court recognise the applicability of Directive 92/50. It is rather a matter of determining which of the arrangements provided for under the directive apply to the contract. It is clear that nowhere does the directive provide that the main object of the contract can determine which of its annexes is applicable, and hence which arrangements relate to the present proceedings.

36 On the contrary, Article 10 of Directive 92/50 lays down a specific principle for determining which arrangements apply. The relevant arrangements are those described in the annex to which the services having a predominating value within the contract as a whole are assigned. Article 10 makes no reference to the main object of the contract. Directive 92/50 thus appears to be sufficiently clear on that point. There is therefore no need to introduce an additional criterion in respect of the main object of a contract in order to determine which arrangements will apply with regard to award of the contract.

37 The observations submitted by the Austrian Government in this connection do not, to my mind, call that view into question.

38 The Austrian Government considers that services are to be classified solely according to the

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

CPC nomenclature. (16) The CPC introduced a classification based on types of activity, it maintains, and not on individual services described in detail. A service serving a single purpose should be classified as a single service, since all the public procurement directives operate on the basis of a single type of service, including the various supporting services. Article 10 of Directive 92/50 applies only by way of exception, in cases where the contract in question covers several types of service.

39 Although I agree with the Austrian Government that the CPC nomenclature alone determines how services are to be classified, it does seem to me that the CPC classification is sufficiently specific to enable Article 10 of Directive 92/50 to be applied in full without any need to refer to the main object of the contract. A contract may well serve a single purpose and be subdivided, for the purpose of determining the arrangements applying to it, into the various part services which comprise it, each of which corresponds to a different CPC code.

40 The claim that `all the public procurement directives operate on the basis of a single type of service' amounts to a denial that Article 10 of Directive 92/50 has any rationale or effet utile.

41 Article 10 applies wherever a contract serves a single purpose but combines several different services corresponding to various CPC codes, where some are listed in Annex I A and others in Annex I B to Directive 92/50.

42 In answer to the first question, I consider therefore that it is appropriate, in order to determine which arrangements apply to a service contract serving a single purpose, but which could be subdivided into part services, to ascertain which of the annexes to Directive 92/50 each part service is assigned to. Under Article 10 of that directive the contract is to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI of the directive where the value of the services listed in Annex I A is greater than the value of the services listed in Annex I B. Conversely, if the value of the services listed in Annex I B is greater than the value of those listed in Annex I A, the contract will be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16 only of Directive 92/50. Thus the main purpose of the contract will have no bearing on the choice of the relevant arrangements.

Second question

43 In the light of the explanations given by the Bundesvergabeamt in the grounds of its order for reference, it seems to me that the national court is seeking in its second question to ascertain, for the purpose of determining the arrangements applicable to a particular type of contract, to what extent Directive 92/50 permits the subdivision of that contract into various part services.

44 The Bundesvergabeamt considers that such subdivision would mean in the present case that a contract whose main object was transport would not be subject to the arrangements corresponding to the `Transport' classification, namely the arrangements for priority services. Subdivision of the contract into part services would result in the application of Article 10 of Directive 92/50 and, hence, in the relevant arrangements being those for supporting transport services, which are the predominant services in terms of value. `Supporting and auxiliary transport services' have their own classification in the CPC and are listed in Annex I B to Directive 92/50.

45 The national court states in this connection that the provision of those supporting services, although predominant in terms of value, is necessary only because of the existence of the service which it regards as being the main service, that is to say, transport. It also makes the point that the consequence of such subdivision is to make the distance covered by the transport the factor which determines the arrangements to which the overall contract is subject, since that distance directly influences the value of the transport element in the contract. This is detrimental to legal certainty for tenderers since the classification of the contract would depend on an external factor which it is difficult to determine.

46 It seems to me that the answer to the second question is to be found in the considerations set out above in respect of the first question.

47 Whenever a contract is made up of several part services corresponding to different CPC classification codes it is necessary to subdivide the contract in order to determine which arrangements apply to it.

48 This is the direct result both of the binding nature of a CPC classification reference and of the very existence of Article 10 of Directive 92/50.

49 One cannot, on the pretext of seeking to apply the directive in full to a particular contract, disregard the fact that the contract is made up of services corresponding to several different codes in the CPC classification, especially as Directive 92/50, due to the existence of Article 10, offers a clear solution to such a situation.

50 Thus, as the ONB correctly states, in Tögel which concerned a service comprising the transport of patients, the Court did not consider that transport alone determined the arrangements applicable to the contract on the pretext that the health services were necessary only if the transport had actually taken place. On the contrary, it held in paragraphs 39 and 40 of the judgment that:

`... CPC reference number 93, appearing in Category No 25 (Health and social services) in Annex I B, clearly indicates that this category relates solely to the medical aspects of health services governed by a public contract such as the one at issue in the main proceedings, to the exclusion of the transport aspects, which come under Category No 2 (Land transport services), which have the CPC reference number 712.

... services consisting in the transport of injured and sick persons with a nurse in attendance come within both Annex I A, Category No 2, and Annex I B, Category No 25, to Directive 92/50, so that a contract for those services is covered by Article 10 of Directive 92/50'.

51 In my view, therefore, as regards services corresponding to different CPC references, it is necessary to separate them in order to determine which arrangements apply to the contract as a whole, even where the result of that subdivision will be to make a priority service subject only to a limited application of Directive 92/50. Far from depriving Directive 92/50 of any effet utile, this is in direct accordance with the wishes of the Community legislature expressed in Articles 9 and 10 of that directive.

52 Far from being detrimental to legal certainty for traders, the automatic application of that system and rigorous compliance with CPC references as classifications contained in Annexes I A and I B to the directive make for transparency and stability in the determination of which arrangements apply for the award of public service contracts.

Fourth question

53 In the fourth question, the Bundesvergabeamt is seeking to know whether Directive 92/50, in order to permit application thereof in full to priority part services, requires the contracting authority for a contract whose predominant value is represented by non-priority part services to divide the contract into two, that is to say, to award one contract for the priority services and another for the non-priority services.

54 In the light of the answers given to the preceding questions, I am of the view that Article 10 of Directive 92/50 precludes any obligation to divide up such contracts.

55 To require the separation of non-priority service contracts from a contract for priority services would in any event mean that Article 10 of Directive 92/50 had no scope at all. It is precisely the case of a contract combining both priority and non-priority services which the directive covers in Article 10. That article, far from requiring the contract to be divided up, introduces a system for determining arrangements that are common to all the services the contract comprises, both priority and non-priority.

56 I am, however, of the view that the contracting authority could be required to make such a division where the unity of the contract concerned appeared to be artificial or illogical and was indeed designed merely to avoid application in full of the directive to priority services.

57 Directive 92/50 does not cover such a situation directly. However, Article 7 of the directive restricts the applicability of the directive to contracts the estimated value of which is not less than ECU 200 000 and, in order to prevent any manipulation of that condition for the directive's applicability, Article 7(3) provides:

`The selection of the valuation method shall not be used with the intention of avoiding the application of this directive, nor shall any procurement requirement for a given amount of services be split up with the intention of avoiding the application of this article.'

58 Although that article refers to efforts to circumvent the directive by means of a dishonest assessment of the value of the contract, it seems to me that the scope of that prohibition on manipulation might be extended to cover a situation in which a contracting authority had, conversely, artificially grouped together various contracts, some priority, others not, with the aim of avoiding application of the directive in full to priority services.

59 That would be the case if the overall contract thus constituted did not serve a single purpose and clearly failed to meet the requirements of technical and economic unity.

60 In Commission v Italy, (17) the Court ruled that by not separating contracts for the purchase of data-processing equipment, on the one hand, and for the design and operation of a data-processing system, on the other, the Italian Republic had failed to fulfil its obligations. The two elements, the purchase of equipment, on the one hand, and the provision of computer services, on the other, clearly served to achieve a single purpose. However, the Court considered that they could be separated and that the Italian Government was in fact seeking to avoid the application of Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts to the contract for the purchase of the equipment. (18)

61 It would, however, be adopting too broad an interpretation of that judgment to conclude from it that a contracting authority is always required to award separate contracts for priority part services and non-priority part services which all serve to achieve the same purpose.

62 That judgment in fact pre-dated the adoption of Directive 92/50. The rule laid down in Article 2 of the directive, which states that a contract that covers the supply of both services and products falls within the scope of the services directive if the value of the services in question is greater than that of the products, was not yet in force. Thus it was a case in which, by making such an artificial combination of contracts the Italian State was totally avoiding the application of Community law to the contract as a whole. Such a situation can no longer arise, because the contract, which exceeded the threshold of ECU 200 000, would necessarily fall within the scope of either Directive 77/62 or Directive 92/50.

63 With regard to the contract at issue in the main proceedings, and in the light of the information available to the Court, it does not appear to constitute an artificial combination of priority and non-priority services. Indeed, as the defendant and the Austrian Government have stated, with sound arguments, it would have been illogical, from both the technical and the economic viewpoint, to award two contracts in this case: one for the actual transport and the other for all the logistics relating to the move. That would have led to additional coordination costs. However, it is for the national court to assess the cohesion of the contract in the main proceedings as a whole.

64 I therefore suggest that the answer to the fourth question should be as follows:

Where a contract as a whole has a clear economic and technical unity, contracting authorities are by no means required to avoid the application of Article 10 of Directive 92/50 by awarding separate contracts for non-priority part services, on the one hand, and priority part services, on the other, which serve to achieve the same purpose.

Third question

65 By this third question the Bundesvergabeamt is seeking to ascertain which annex to the directive and which CPC reference the services that comprise the contract in the main proceedings should be assigned to.

66 As the Court stated in Tögel (19) the assignment of services to Annex I A or Annex I B to Directive 92/50 must be done by reference to the CPC nomenclature.

67 Although the assignment of each service in the main proceedings to a CPC reference constitutes a point of fact, which it is for the national court to assess, I am of the view that the Court could provide guidance in this connection which would help the referring court in exercising its own jurisdiction.

68 I would therefore draw the attention of the national court to some of the CPC reference numbers.

69 Storage, which according to the ONB represents 23.91% of the total value of the contract, falls within CPC Division 74 `Supporting and auxiliary transport services', under reference number 742 `Storage services'. In this case, subclass 74290 `Other storage and warehousing services', seems to me to be the relevant one. CPC Division 74 appears in Annex I B to Directive 92/50 (Category 20).

70 Moreover, the coordination and logistics activities, to which the contracting authority attributes 32.13% of the total value of the contract, are probably also to be classified in CPC Division 74, more precisely in subclass 74800 `Freight transport agency services', the explanatory note to which reads:

`Freight brokerage services, freight forwarding services (primarily transport organisation or arrangement services on behalf of the shipper or consignee), ship and aircraft space brokerage services, and freight consolidation and break-bulk services'.

71 Subclass 74900 `Other supporting and auxiliary transport services' seems to me to be the one which, apart from the transport itself, covers the actual activities of moving, to which the ONB attributes 5.55% of the value of the contract. That subclass corresponds to the following activities:

`Freight brokerage services; bill auditing and freight rate information services; transportation document preparation services; packing and crating and unpacking and de-crating services; freight inspection, weighing and sampling services; and freight receiving and acceptance services (including local pick-up and delivery)'.

72 In the Commission's view, all the services comprising the contract in the main proceedings, since they constitute a single homogeneous service provision, should be assigned to that subclass. The final note `including local pick-up and delivery' implies that all the services the ONB required of its co-contractor should be included in subclass 74900.

73 I do not share the Commission's view on this point. `Supporting and auxiliary transport services' cannot, for anyone who has read the rules for the interpretation of the CPC carefully, include the transport itself which, even if it only represents a tiny proportion of the contract, cannot be totally excluded. The rules for the interpretation of the CPC state that classification is to be determined according to the terms of the headings. `Land transport services', the title of Division 71, could not be more explicit, so that there is no doubt that transport services such as those at issue here cannot be assigned to any other category. Moreover, if there were any doubt, the rule that the more specific category must take priority over categories of a more general scope would apply. There is no doubt that subclass 71234 `Transportation of furniture', for example, corresponds more closely to the services of transport itself than the subclass `Other supporting and auxiliary transport services'. The words `local pick-up and delivery' on which the Commission's reasoning is based are added only as a clarification of `freight receiving and acceptance services'. It therefore refers only to the beginning and the end phases of the transport, namely the pick-up and delivery, which provide the framework for the transport itself, and that may, depending on the case, take place by air or sea rather than by land.

74 That interpretation is confirmed, moreover, by the explanatory note to CPC subclass 71234 `Transportation of furniture', which covers road transport services `Over any distance'. So, whether the distance covered by the transport is short or long, it is still a transport service that is involved, which has its own CPC reference and cannot come under `Supporting and auxiliary transport services'.

75 Road transport services under CPC reference number 712 are assigned to Annex I A of Directive 92/50 (Category 2). It is possible to include the transport services carried out in performance of the contract at issue in the main proceedings under subclass 71234 `Transportation of furniture' and subclass 71239 `Transportation of other freight'.

76 I would also draw the attention of the national court to two other CPC references which are relevant to some of the services mentioned in the order for reference:

- CPC Class 8129 `Non-life insurance services', subclasses 81294 `Freight insurance services', 81295 `Fire and other property damage insurance services' and 81299 `Other insurance services n.e.c.' appear to me to be relevant. Insurance services are listed in Annex I A to Directive 92/50 (Category 6);

- CPC Division 94, more particularly, subclass No 94020 `Refuse disposal services' which includes inter alia collection, transport and disposal of industrial or commercial waste. That CPC reference also comes under Annex I A to Directive 92/50 (Category 16).

77 Lastly, I am of the view that the wages of the staff of the service providers should be included in the services to which they correspond and of which they form an integral part. Indeed, it would be difficult to imagine dissociating, for example, the activity of packing from the wages of the packers without rendering the activity of packing meaningless. Thus, to take the example of the wages of packers, those wages, like the activity of packing itself, come under subclass 74900 `Other supporting and auxiliary transport services'.

78 In that connection, it seems to me generally that to over-subdivide services would, on the one hand, be likely to render some services meaningless and, on the other hand, to produce a theoretical description of the contract that was too complex and did not correspond to its actual nature.

79 In answer to the third question, I consider therefore that some of the services mentioned in the statement of facts come under Annex I A and others under Annex I B to Directive 92/50. In the light of the allocation of those services as described in the order for reference, it seems to me that the services covered by CPC reference number 74 `Supporting and auxiliary transport services' represent the greater share of the contract in terms of value. Since that reference appears in Annex I B to Directive 92/50 (Category 20), it would appear that the whole contract should, according to Article 10 of Directive 92/50, be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16 of that directive, subject to the assessments to be made by the national court.

Conclusion

80 In the light of the above considerations, I suggest that the Court should answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Bundesvergabeamt as follows:

(1) It is appropriate, in order to determine which arrangements apply to a service contract serving a single purpose, but which could be subdivided into part services, to ascertain to which of the annexes to Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts each part service is to be assigned. Under Article 10 of that directive the contract is to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI of the directive where the value of the services listed in Annex I A is greater than the value of the services listed in Annex I B. Conversely, if the value of the services listed in Annex I B is greater than the value of the services listed in Annex I A, the contract is to be awarded in accordance only with Articles 14 and 16 of the directive.

(2) As regards services corresponding to different CPC references, it is necessary to separate them in order to determine which arrangements apply to the contract as a whole, even where the consequence of such separation would be to make a priority service subject only to a limited application of Directive 92/50.

(3) Some of the services mentioned in the statement of facts come under Annex I A and others under Annex I B to Directive 92/50. In the light of the allocation of those services as described in the order for reference, the services assigned to CPC reference number 74 `Supporting and auxiliary transport services' appear to represent the greater share of the contract in terms of value. Since that reference number appears in Annex I B to Directive 92/50 (Category 20) the whole contract should, under Article 10 of the directive, be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16 of that directive, subject to the assessments to be made by the national court.

(4) Where a contract as a whole has a clear economic and technical unity, contracting authorities are by no means required to avoid the application of Article 10 of Directive 92/50 by awarding separate contracts for non-priority part services, on the one hand, and priority part services, on the other, which serve to achieve the same purpose.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Alber delivered on 21March2002. Adolf Truley GmbH v Bestattung Wien GmbH. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien - Austria. Directive 93/36/EEC - Public supply contracts - Concept of 'contracting authority' - Public-law body - Funeral undertaking. Case C-373/00.

I Introduction

1. These proceedings concern the interpretation of the concept of contracting authority in the form of a "body governed by public law" within the meaning of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (2) (hereinafter "Directive 93/36"). Of particular concern are the definition of "needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character" and the question whether the activities of a funeral undertaking are covered by this concept.

II Legal framework

(1) Community legislation

2. Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36 defines the term "body governed by public law" as follows:

"For the purpose of this Directive:

...

(b) "contracting authorities " shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

"a body governed by public law " means any body:

established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

having legal personality, and financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law;

the lists of bodies or of categories of such bodies governed by public law which fulfil the criteria referred to in the second subparagraph are set out in Annex I to Directive 93/37/EEC. These lists shall be as exhaustive as possible and may be reviewed in accordance with the procedure laid down in Article 35 of Directive 93/37/EEC

(2) National legislation

3. The following legislation would appear to be particularly important in resolving the current issue:

(a) Gewerbeordnung 1994

4. The activity of funeral undertaker is governed by Paragraphs 130 to 134 of the Gewerbeordnung (Austrian Trade Regulations). (3)

5. That activity is not reserved to specific persons or, for example, to the State, the Länder or municipalities. However, the issue of a trading licence pursuant to Paragraph 131 of the Gewerbeordnung depends on there being a need for the intended exercise of that business. When this requirement is being considered, it is particularly important to establish whether the municipal authority has made adequate provision for funeral services.

6. According to the Vergabekontrollsenat (the Public-Procurement Review Chamber), a need for the exercise of the business is relevant only as regards the acquisition of a trading licence. An absence of subsequent need does not entitle the authorities to revoke a trading licence. Nor does the Gewerbeordnung provide for any territorial monopoly in such a way that the business may be exercised only in a certain territory.

7. Paragraph 132 of the Gewerbeordnung requires the Landeshauptmann (First Minister of the Land) to set maximum charges for funeral services. Such charges may be set for the whole Land , for individual administrative districts or even for individual municipalities.

(b) Wiener Leichen- und Bestattungsgesetz

At Land level, funeral services are governed by the Wiener Leichen- und Bestattungsgesetz (Law of the Land of Vienna on the activity of funeral undertaker) ("the WLBG"). (4) Paragraph 10(1) of that Law reads:

> "Where no arrangements are made for the funeral of the deceased within five days of the death certification being issued, the Magistrat [of the City of Vienna] shall arrange the funeral (by burial or cremation) at a funeral facility of the City of Vienna. The City of Vienna shall bear the costs of the funeral only in so far as they are not to be met by third parties or covered by the deceased's estate."

9. Paragraph 22(1) of the WLBG requires the burial or cremation of all corpses. According to Paragraph 22(2) in conjunction with Paragraph 23 of this Law, burial or cremation may be effected only at cemeteries, cineraria and special funeral establishments.

(c) Wiener Landesvergabegesetz (5)

10. Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36 has been transposed by Paragraph 12 of the Wiener Landesvergabegesetz (Law on the Award of Public Contracts of the Land of Vienna) ("the WLVergG"). Paragraph 12 stipulates:

> "(1) This Law shall apply to the award of contracts by contracting authorities. Contracting authorities within the meaning of this Law shall be:
> 1. Vienna as a Land or municipality and
> 2. bodies established under the law of the Land provided that they have been founded for the purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not being commercial in character, if they have at least some legal capacity, and
> (a) more than half of whose managers are appointed by bodies of the City of Vienna or of another entity within the meaning of points 1 to 4 or are persons appointed by bodies of the said entities for this purpose or
> (b) whose management is subject to supervision by the City of Vienna or other entities within the meaning of points 1 to 4 or
> (c) which are financed, for the most part, by the City of Vienna or other entities within the meaning of points 1 to 4,

3. undertakings monitored by the Austrian Court of Auditors which are not governed by Article 126b(2) of the Federal Constitutional Law in the version published in BGBl. I No 148/1999, which were established for the purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having a commercial character, and in which the City of Vienna as a Land or municipality holds at least the relative majority of the shares held by public authorities,

...

(d) Wiener Stadtverfassung

11. Also of relevance is the Wiener Stadtverfassung (Vienna Municipal Constitution WStV), (6) Paragraph 73 of which governs the activities of the Kontrollamt (Monitoring Office). In terms of organisation the Kontrollamt forms part of the Magistrat (Municipal Corporation) (Paragraph 106(1) of the WStV), which in turn is a body of the Municipality (City) of Vienna (Paragraph 8(11) of the WStV).

"(1) The Kontrollamt shall examine the overall conduct of the municipality and of the funds and foundations having legal personality and administered by municipal authorities for proper accounting, regularity, economy, efficiency and expediency (review of conduct). The Kontrollamt shall also examine the performance required of municipal authorities of official tasks relating to public safety or health; it shall also determine whether adequate, appropriate and proper safety measures have been taken by the entities and facilities administered by municipal authorities which pose a potential threat to public safety or health (review of safety). Decisions taken by the appropriate collective authorities concerning conduct and safety shall, however, be excluded from the review. In the standing orders for the Municipal Corporation the Mayor shall provide for the setting up within the Kontrollamt of a group to review conduct and another to review safety, each headed by a responsible person.

(2) The Kontrollamt shall also examine the conduct of commercial undertakings in which the municipality has a majority interest. Where such a commercial undertaking has a majority interest in another undertaking, the examination shall extend to that other undertaking. The Kontrollamt's powers of examination shall be assured by suitable measures.

(3) The Kontrollamt may further examine the conduct of entities (commercial undertakings, associations, etc.) in which the municipality has an interest other than that referred to in paragraph 2 or on whose organs the municipality is represented, provided that the municipality has reserved the right to carry out such a review. This shall also apply to entities which receive financial support from municipal resources or for which the municipality accepts liability.

(4) ...

(5) ...

(6) Upon decision by the Municipal Council or the Monitoring Committee or at the request of the Mayor or, in respect of the area of responsibility of his unit, of an office-holding city councillor, the Kontrollamt shall carry out special reviews of conduct and safety and shall inform the requesting authority of its findings.

(7) ...

(e) The articles of association of Bestattung Wien

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

12. The Kontrollamt's power to carry out reviews pursuant to Paragraph 73 of the WStV is reflected in Paragraph 10.3 of the articles of association of Bestattung Wien. According to this, the Kontrollamt of the City of Vienna is entitled to examine both Bestattung Wien's business management, in terms of proper accounting, regularity, economy, efficiency and expediency, and the annual accounts and situation report, including the recording of receipts and other documents, to inspect its business premises and facilities and to report the findings of such examinations to the competent authorities, the shareholders and the City of Vienna.

III Facts of the case

13. Until 1999 funeral services in Vienna were provided by Wiener Bestattung, a component undertaking of the Wiener Stadtwerke (Vienna Public Utilities). Neither entity had legal personality of its own. The Wiener Stadtwerke was an undertaking within the meaning of Paragraph 71 of the WStV and thus formed part of the Municipal Corporation (Paragraph 106(1) of the WStV). At that time calls for tenders similar to the one at issue in the main procedure were published on several occasions.

14. In 1999 the Wiener Stadtwerke was separated from the Municipal Corporation's administration and, as Wiener Stadtwerke Holding AG, was given its own legal personality. All of its shares are held by the City of Vienna.

15. One of the undertakings belonging to Wiener Stadtwerke Holding AG is Bestattung Wien GmbH (hereinafter "Bestattung Wien"), which similarly has legal personality of its own. Wiener Stadtwerke Holding AG is its sole shareholder. Bestattung Wien has provided funeral services in Vienna since 1999.

16. Although Bestattung Wien itself produces the coffins needed for funerals, it purchases the necessary coffin fittings and fixtures from other undertakings. In this connection, it invited tenders by open procedure in preparation for the award of a contract to supply coffin fittings and fixtures (shrouds, upholstery, coffin frames). The call for tenders was published throughout Austria in the official procurement gazette and also in the Amtsblatt der Stadt Wien (Official Journal of the City of Vienna). Adolf Truley GesmbH (hereinafter "Truley") submitted a tender in response to this invitation. By letter of 6 June 2000 it was informed by Bestattung Wien that it would not be awarded the contract.

17. According to Bestattung Wien, the reason for this rejection was the high price quoted by Truley in its tender. Truley asserts, on the other hand, that it was the only bidder to have complied with the call for tenders and ought therefore to have been considered. The part tenders submitted by the other bidders, it argues, did not comply with the call for tenders and should not therefore have been taken into consideration.

18. In the review proceedings brought against the rejection before the Vergabekontrollsenat, Bestattung Wien expressed the view that it should not be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of Directive 93/36 and the Wiener Landesvergabegesetz, the Law passed to transpose that directive. It was, it claimed, a company with its own legal personality, which was run on purely commercial lines and was completely independent from the City of Vienna. It has therefore applied for the appeal to be dismissed. Truley challenges this view of the law, referring to the ownership structure of Bestattung Wien, and considers the latter to be under an obligation to observe the rules on public contracts. The Vergabekontrollsenat has therefore to decide to what extent Bestattung Wien should be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of the legislation on the award of contracts.

IV Questions submitted for a preliminary ruling

19. In this context the Vienna Vergabekontrollsenat has referred the following three questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

1. Must the term "needs in the general interest" in Article 1(b) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts be interpreted as meaning that

(a) the definition of needs in the general interest must be derived from the national legal system of the Member State?

(b) the fact that a regional or local authority's obligation is subsidiary is in itself sufficient for the existence of a need in the general interest to be assumed?

2. In interpreting the requirement "meeting needs... not having an industrial or commercial character" laid down in Directive 93/36/EEC, is (a) the existence of significant competition an imperative condition or (b) are the factual or legal circumstances the determinant factors in that respect?

3. Is the requirement laid down in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36/EEC that the management of the body governed by public law must be subject to supervision by the State or a regional or local authority also fulfilled by a mere review as provided for through the Kontrollamt (Monitoring Office) of the City of Vienna?

V Views of the parties and assessment

(1) Admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling

(a) Court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC

20. The Court of Justice has not yet ruled that the Vienna Vergabekontrollsenat is a "court or tribunal" within the meaning of Article 234 EC. The question also arises in Cases C-470/99 and C-92/00 pending before the Court, in which judgments have yet to be delivered.

21. In my Opinion in Case C-470/99 delivered on 8 November 2001 I explained at some length why I believe the Vergabekontrollsenat should be regarded as a "court or tribunal" . I would therefore like to refer to those comments.

22. According to those comments, the Vergabekontrollsenat is, pursuant to Paragraph 94(2) of the WLVergG, responsible at first and last instance for reviewing decisions taken by a contracting authority in an award procedure. Its activity thus has a legal basis and represents compulsory jurisdiction. It is also a permanent body. The decisions of the contracting authorities are monitored in accordance with the rules laid down in the WLVergG and, where the latter does not contain any specific provisions, pursuant to Paragraph 94(3) of the WLVergG on the basis of the Allgemeines Verwaltungsverfahrensgesetz (General Law on Administrative Procedure) and the Verwaltungsvollstreckungsgesetz (Administration Enforcement Law). The Vergabekontrollsenat's independence vis-à-vis the administration is ensured by Paragraph 94(2) of the WLVergG, which stipulates that its decisions may not be altered or rescinded by administrative means. In addition, Paragraph 95(4) of the WLVergG guarantees the members of the Vergabekontrollsenat the independent exercise of office free from instructions. Paragraph 95(6) sets out the rules on partiality, a criterion on which the Court of Justice placed particular emphasis in Köllensperger and Atzwanger . (7) Paragraph 95(7) requires the administrative decisions of the Vergabekontrollsenat to be issued in writing. In view of these provisions, it must be assumed that the Vergabekontrollsenat meets the requirements of case-law to be satisfied by a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC.

(b) Need for a preliminary ruling

23. Bestattung Wien disputes the admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling, arguing that its capacity as a body governed by public law within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

93/36 is immaterial in the main proceedings since, pursuant to Paragraph 99 of the WLVergG, the Vergabekontrollsenat may decide only whether the contract was awarded to the lowest bidder. Truley's bid had come second from last in terms of price both as a whole and as regards the various items, for which the tender document allowed individual bids to be submitted. Consequently, it could never have been awarded the contract.

24. Furthermore, petitions for declaration attacking the absence of a call for tenders at European level and the absence of a notification of the weighting of the award criteria should be rejected by the Vienna Landesvergabesenat as inadmissible, since in those circumstances it is unable to judge whether the award was unlawful. In Bestattung Wien's view, this was an "artificial submission" that raised a purely hypothetical point of law.

25. It is settled case-law that, in the context of the cooperation between the Court of Justice and the national courts provided for by Article 234 EC, it is solely for the national court before which a dispute has been brought to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. Consequently, where the questions submitted by the national court concern the interpretation of Community law, the Court of Justice is, in principle, bound to give a ruling. (8)

26. An exception to this rule is possible only if it is obvious that the interpretation of Community law sought by the national court bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose or where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it. (9)

27. If it is assumed that Truley's submission is correct, the question referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling does not appear to be obviously irrelevant to the Vergabekontrollsenat's decision for, if Truley was the only bidder capable of submitting a tender that complied with the tender document, the award of the contract to a competitor would have been unlawful. In this respect Bestattung Wien's objection that, because of the estimated price, Truley's bid had come second from last is not the determinant factor.

28. These considerations are, however, significant only if Bestattung Wien was in any way obliged to call for tenders for the services concerned. This calls, first of all, for clarification whether it is a public body within the meaning of Article 1 of Directive 93/36 and Paragraph 12 of the WLVergG, the law passed to transpose the directive. It cannot therefore be stated that there is obviously no connection between the questions submitted and the main proceedings. Nor are the questions submitted by the Vergabekontrollsenat general and hypothetical.

29. The request for a preliminary ruling must therefore be considered admissible.

(2) First question: meeting needs in the general interest

30. In putting its first question, the Vergabekontrollsenat seeks to determine whether the activity of a funeral undertaker meets "needs in the general interest" . The first part of the question in this context is whether this term should be interpreted in accordance with Community law or national law. In the second part of the question the Vergabekontrollsenat asks whether Bestattung Wien perhaps meets a need in the general interest because of the provisions of Paragraph 10 of the WLBG.

(a) Point of reference for the interpretation of the term "needs in the general interest"

(i) Views of the parties

31. As regards the first part of the first question, the parties which have commented on the request for a preliminary ruling support all three conceivable solutions. Truley and the Austrian Government take the view that the term should be interpreted solely in accordance with Community law. Truley bases its view on the purpose of the directives on the award of public contracts, which, it argues, is to open the national markets to Community-wide competition. The bidders should not only be informed by the tender documents but should know in advance what agencies are required to invite tenders. In BFI Holding (10) the Court ruled that this term should be interpreted objectively. Moreover, a uniform interpretation is needed throughout the Community for reasons of legal certainty.

32. The Austrian Government refers to case-law according to which concepts in Community law must be given an independent interpretation where there is no explicit or implicit reference to the law of the Member States. (11) It also argues that this vague concept was chosen deliberately during the legislative procedure. Nor, it submits, is there any reference in the legal material to the need to consult national law in the interpretation of the concept.

33. Bestattung Wien, the French Government and the EFTA Surveillance Authority take the view that, although the concept should be interpreted in accordance with Community law, it must be applied in the light of national legislation.

34. Bestattung Wien's view is that the directives on the award of public contracts merely sought to approximate the national rules, not to harmonise legislation, and that the circumstances surrounding each case should therefore be considered in any assessment of the concept. An abstract and general definition would not reflect the functional nature of the concept of a contracting authority emphasised in the case-law. (12) The aim of Directive 93/36 was to open up the national public procurement markets, which were typically characterised by a general absence of competitive pressure to ensure that an open and economically appropriate award procedure free from discrimination was adopted. It should always be asked, therefore, whether the body concerned was subject to the possibility of State control and influence. Bodies whose conduct was not determined solely by general market mechanisms should be governed by the directives on the award of public contracts. Although needs in the general interest were needs of interest to society as a whole, the concept had to be defined with regard to the legal systems of the individual Member States, which were empowered to determine what they saw as needs in the general interest. To support this proposition, Bestattung Wien refers to Annex I to Directive 93/37. From this it followed that that directive itself was geared to the special features in the various Member States. The satisfaction of needs in the general interest did not pursue exclusively individual objectives, but was in the interest of society as a whole.

35. The French Government proposes that the concept of general interest should be given a Community-law definition, but that, when it is applied, the circumstances in the Member State concerned should be taken into account. It refers to the concepts of "services of general economic interest" in Articles 16 EC and 86 EC and to the Commission's communication on services of general interest. (13) In Mannesmann (14) and BFI Holding the Court also interpreted the concept in accordance with Community law. However, it should be added, according to the French Government, that in those judgments the Court had considered the reason for the establishment of the body concerned, the manner in which it performed its tasks and a possible link between the activity for which the body had been established and a fundamental sovereign right of the State. The particular situation obtaining in each case therefore justified differentiation in the application at national level of the criteria cited. The concept of needs in the general interest was vague and fluid and depended on the extent to which the State wanted to intervene.

36. The EFTA Surveillance Authority shares the view that the concept should be interpreted in accordance with Community law to ensure its uniform application. In support of its view it refers to the judgment in Linster . (15) It also points out that Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36 does not refer to the law of the Member States. However, it followed from the judgments in Mannesmann and BFI Holding that the provisions of national law should be considered in any assessment of the facts. Thus in those cases the circumstances in which a body had been established and the national legislation applicable to its establishment had been taken into account. In much the same way Paragraph 10 of the WLBG should be considered in the present case.

37. Finally, the Commission takes the view that the concept should be interpreted solely in accordance with national law. In its judgment in Mannesmann the Court of Justice, when classifying the State printing office, focused on the task it performed and its importance for the operation of the State as revealed by the national legislation. In its judgment in BFI Holding the Court, referring to the list in Annex I to Directive 93/37, had described the removal of household refuse as a need in the general interest. It had emphasised in this context that these were needs which the State reserved the right to meet itself or over which it wished to retain a determining influence. From these judgments the Commission infers that it is for the Member State concerned to determine what activities are undertaken in the general interest in each case. It also bases its view on the Opinion of Advocate General La Pergola in BFI Holding , where it was stressed that the directive refers to the legislation of the Member States. (16)

(ii) Appraisal

38. The first part of the first question concerns a rather theoretical problem in law, namely whether the concept of "needs in the general interest" should be interpreted in accordance with Community law or in accordance with the law of the Member State in question.

39. According to case-law, concepts of Community law must be given interpretations which are independent of the law of the Member States. The only exception occurs where Community law explicitly refers to national law. (17)

40. While Article 1 of Directive 93/36 does not refer explicitly to national law, the third subparagraph of Article 1(b) includes a reference to the list of bodies or of categories of such bodies governed by public law and fulfilling the criteria referred to in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) which are set out in Annex I to Directive 93/37/EEC. This might implicitly constitute a reference. According to the case-law, tacit references to the law of the Member States may also have to be taken into account. (18)

41. It must be borne in mind, however, that the list contained in Directive 93/37 is not exhaustive. (19) Although it is intended to be as complete as possible, it contains, in the final analysis, only examples of entities which are public bodies within the meaning of Article 1(b). The legal definition given in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, which is identical to the definition in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36 to be interpreted in the current proceedings, was inserted at the instigation of the European Parliament. To ensure the widest possible application of the directive, the Parliament inserted the term "organ governed by public law" , (20) which was subsequently changed to "body" . The inclusion of the legal definition was meant to replace the lists which were to be compiled pursuant to Article 1(b) of Directive 71/305/EEC and which identified contracting authorities. The intention was to ensure the application of the directive without exception (21) and to extend the scope of the directive to include construction work performed by third parties and financed completely or partly, directly or indirectly, from public resources. (22) The point of the general definition of the term "contracting authority" is specifically to ensure that, as far as possible, all entities physically belonging to the public sector are required to invite tenders whether or not they are included in the list. Thus the list is not exhaustive. To see in the reference to the list an implicit reference to national law does not therefore seem justified. Consequently, the position continues to be that the concept of needs in the general interest must be interpreted in accordance with Community law.

42. An interpretation based solely on Community law is required not only because of the independence of Community law but also to ensure its uniform application. (23) The unity of the Community legal system would be threatened if the concept of "needs in the general interest" were interpreted differently from one Member State to another. One and the same activity cannot be deemed to be in the general interest in one Member State and not to be in the general interest in another, since an authority in one Member State might then be obliged to call for tenders, while an authority entrusted with the same tasks in another Member State was not. This might lead to distortions of competition, which would be precisely the opposite of the goal of the directive of creating competition in the area of public contracts (see the 14th recital in the preamble).

43. An interpretation that depends on how the Member State concerned itself defines its area of activity seems equally incompatible with the purpose of the directives on the award of public contracts. Directive 93/36, like the other directives on the award of public contracts, is based on Article 95 EC. It is therefore meant to contribute to the establishment and functioning of the internal market. In particular, it seeks to bring about the free movement of goods in the area of public supply contracts. It therefore coordinates national legislation, as the fifth recital in the preamble to the directive shows. This coordination can succeed, however, only if uniform criteria are also developed for the interpretation of such pivotal concepts as "contracting authorities" or, more accurately, "public bodies" . The approximation of laws does not mean forgoing the uniform interpretation of pivotal concepts. The transparency and predictability achieved with the directives on the award of public contracts would be destroyed again if the concept of "needs in the general interest" , which plays a crucial role in identifying contracting authorities required to call for tenders, might be interpreted differently from one Member State to another.

44. It should be pointed out, however, that, even if the concept of "needs in the general interest" is interpreted in accordance with Community law, national law is not irrelevant, since the legal and actual circumstances of the individual case must be considered when this abstract legal concept is applied to practical situations.

45. Thus, when categorising the Austrian State printing office, the Court of Justice took careful account of the fact that it was established by law and that, in printing passports, driving licences, identity cards and legislative and administrative documents, it performs a task which is in the general interest. (24) In Telaustria the Court based its views on the fact that Telaustria was established by law and that its purpose is to provide public telecommunications services. (25) And when classifying public development and construction entities ("offices d'aménagement et de construction") and low-rent housing corporations ("sociétés anonymes d'habitations à loyer modéré") in its judgment in Case C-237/99, it also referred to the national legislation relating to those entities. (26)

46. The conclusion to be drawn as regards the first part of the first question is therefore that the concept of needs in the general interest should be interpreted in accordance with Community law. Only when this abstract legal concept is applied to practical situations should particular importance be attached to the legal and actual situation of the body concerned and, in this context, to national law.

(b) Funeral services as needs in the general interest

47. By its second question the Vergabekontrollsenat asks whether it can perhaps be deduced from Paragraph 10 of the WLBG that Bestattung Wien meets "needs in the general interest" .

48. It must first be stated in this regard that, given the division of responsibilities defined in Article 234 EC, it is for the national courts to apply to specific cases the provisions of Community law as interpreted by the Court of Justice. (27) In this respect the question submitted for a preliminary ruling should be rephrased in such a way that the Vergabekontrollsenat is asking whether legal subsidiarity of a regional or local authority's obligation to ensure the burial or cremation of a deceased person and to meet the associated costs is sufficient for it to be assumed that burial or cremation meets a need in the general interest.

(i) Views of the parties

49. In line with its comments on the first part of the question, Truley takes the view that Paragraph 10 of the WLBG is immaterial when it comes to deciding whether Bestattung Wien meets a need in the general interest. It maintains that the concept should be interpreted solely on the basis of Community law. Truley relies for its view on the judgment in BFI Holding , in which the Court opted for a functional interpretation of that concept. (28)

50. As regards funeral services, however, Truley's position is that they satisfy a need in the general interest. First, it claims this follows from a comparison with the list which is attached as Annex I to Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (29) and to which Article 1 of Directive 93/36 refers. Second, Truley regards funeral services to be one of the core general services which should, within the meaning of the judgment in BFI Holding , be provided by the State as the guardian of the interests of the public at large.

51. Bestattung Wien too attaches no importance to Paragraph 10 of the WLBG maintaining that it is no more than a rule laid down by the health authority to prevent epidemics. Nothing could be deduced from it for the classification of the funeral services in the wider sense which it provided.

52. As regards funeral services, it proposes that a distinction should be made between services in the narrower sense (cemetery management, opening and closing of the grave, lowering of the body or ashes, conduct of exhumations), which are provided by the City of Vienna, and services in the wider sense (laying out the body, funeral rites, transporting the body, washing and dressing the body and placing it in the coffin, taking care of the grave, obtaining certificates, placing death notices in newspapers), which are provided by Bestattung Wien. Only funeral services in the narrower sense satisfy needs in the general interest. Referring to the judgment in BFI Holding , it characterises these needs as being of the kind which either the State itself meets or over which it at least has a decisive influence. The business of undertaker is intended to produce a profit and is thus an economic activity, not the satisfaction of a need in the general interest. Apart from the possibility open to the First Ministers of the Länder of setting maximum charges, it is not subject to State supervision, unlike the management of cemeteries, for example. Nor is the examination of need required by the Gewerbeordnung an indication of the existence of a need in the general interest. At issue is a measure by which other trades, such as taxi firms, chimney sweeps and firms hiring out horse-drawn carriages, are affected. Bestattung Wien therefore believes that, in the absence of supervision by State bodies, it does not meet needs in the general interest but pursues a profit-oriented activity.

53. The Austrian Government shares Truley's and Bestattung Wien's views on Paragraph 10 of the WLBG. Besides referring to the health aspect, it emphasises that Paragraph 10 contains rules on the defrayment of costs. The satisfaction of a need in the general interest cannot be inferred from a subsidiary obligation of the City of Vienna to meet costs. It would be different if the City was under a subsidiary obligation to provide a funeral service itself.

54. In the context of the interpretation of the concept of general interest Austria refers to statements by the Commission on general services (30) and to the Opinion of Advocate General Van Gerven in Case C-179/90. (31) It takes the view that the concept of general interest means the interest of the community, of the public at large, of society as a whole or ensuring public welfare and should be contrasted with the interest of the individual. After all, this concept is evolving and cannot be accurately described. Austria argues for the task of funeral undertakings to be regarded as a task which is performed in the general interest.

55. The French Government and the EFTA Surveillance Authority, by contrast, consider Paragraph 10 of the WLBG to be an indication of the existence of a need in the general interest. The French Government emphasises that, in this case, the public purse meets the costs for Bestattung Wien. The EFTA Surveillance Authority infers from Paragraph 10 that the City of Vienna assumes the role of undertaker when no one else wants to become involved.

56. Finally, the Commission, following on from its opinion that the concept of needs in the general interest should be interpreted in accordance with national law, takes the view that Paragraph 10 of the WLBG is evidence of a need in the general interest.

(ii) Appraisal

57. In what follows the concept of needs in the general interest will be interpreted in accordance with Community law, and it will be decided whether Bestattung Wien satisfies such needs. The first step in this process is to consider whether a need in the general interest can already be deduced from the subsidiary obligation on the City of Vienna to instigate action and to meet costs pursuant to Paragraph 10 of the WLBG.

58. Paragraph 10 of the WLBG provides for the Municipal Corporation of the City of Vienna to arrange the funeral of a deceased person where no one makes arrangements for the funeral within five days of the death certification being issued. Provision is also made for the City of Vienna to bear the funeral costs in so far as they are not to be met by third parties or covered by the deceased's estate. This provision thus imposes a subsidiary obligation on the City of Vienna to arrange funerals and a subsidiary obligation to meet the attendant costs.

59. First of all, the wording of Paragraph 10 of the WLBG shows that the City of Vienna is responsible for concerning itself with the funeral of the deceased where no one else does so. This ensures that the obligation to bury or cremate the deceased enshrined in Paragraph 22 of the WLBG is fulfilled. Paragraph 22 in conjunction with Paragraph 23 also reveals that burial and cremation may not take place outside the cemeteries, cineraria and other facilities provided for the purpose. This provision is intended to afford protection against epidemics and other health hazards.

60. It should also be borne in mind that Paragraph 10 appears in Part I, Section 1, of the WLBG, which is headed "Coroner's activity" . This is a task performed by the police, the primary purpose being to determine the cause of death, as is evident from Paragraph 1(3) of the WLBG. Reference should also be made to Paragraph 8(1) of the WLBG, which stipulates that the death certificate must include information designed to give protection against hazards emanating from corpses. This provision too reveals that the protection of health is one of the reasons for requiring burial or cremation. These considerations support the assumption that burial or cremation should be seen as a need in the general interest.

61. In accordance with the above comments on the interpretation of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36, all legal and factual circumstances of the individual case should be taken into account in the interpretation of the concept of "needs in the general interest" . In the following it will therefore be considered whether it can be inferred from the other statements in the decision on a preliminary ruling that funeral services are a need in the general interest.

62. Nearly all of the parties which have set out their views in these proceedings have attempted to define the concept of needs in the general interest by comparing them with needs which are satisfied in the interests of the individual. Truley and the Austrian Government in particular have tried to introduce into the discussion the ideas developed in the context of general services that benefit the public as a whole and not just individuals.

63. As already pointed out, Directive 93/36 does not define the concept of needs in the general interest. Nor do the other directives on the award of public contracts Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, (32) Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (33) and Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (34) contain a definition of this term, which is also used in them.

64. Nor, so far as can be seen, has the Court of Justice yet adopted a generally applicable definition of what is meant by the concept of needs in the general interest as used in the directives on the award of public contracts. In the case-law, however, a number of needs of general interest have meanwhile been recognised: the production of such official printed documents as passports, driving licences and identity cards, (35) the removal and treatment of household refuse, (36) the management of national forests and woodland industries, (37) the management of a university, (38) the operation of public telecommunications networks and the provision of public telecommunications services, (39) the activities of the "Offices publics d'aménagement et de construction" and of a "Société anonyme d'habitations à loyer modéré" , which provide low-rent housing, (40) and, finally, the organisation of fairs and exhibitions. (41)

65. The examples given above concern circumstances which in principle benefit the general public. As stated earlier, burial or cremation is intended not least to afford protection against epidemics and other public health hazards. In this respect at least, funeral services should probably be deemed to satisfy a need in the general interest. If, then, they are seen as a single service, as all involved in the proceedings except Bestattung Wien consider them, it will be assumed that Bestattung Wien meets a need in the general interest.

66. Bestattung Wien proposes, however, that a distinction should be made between funeral services in the narrower sense (cemetery activities, burial and exhumation) and funeral services in the wider sense (taking care of the grave, laying out the body, obtaining certificates, placing death notices in newspapers). It argues that it undertakes only activities forming part of funeral services in the wider sense and does not therefore meet any needs in the general interest: its activities are purely commercial.

67. The activities listed by Bestattung Wien under the heading of funeral services in the wider sense correspond to the list in Paragraph 130(1), points 1 and 2, of the Gewerbeordnung. They are activities in which the emphasis is less on the general interest in health protection than on the interest of the individual in the observance of funeral rites. This might argue for the proposed distinction.

68. It should be borne in mind, however, that the provisions of the Gewerbeordnung and the WLBG to which the requesting court refers do not support the differentiation of the various areas of activity indicated by Bestattung Wien. The very fact that in the legislation of the Land of Vienna funeral services are governed by one and the same law, the Law on Undertaking (42) ("Wiener Leichen- und Bestattungsgesetz"), indicates that the two areas cannot be separated. Reference should also be made to Paragraph 34(4) of the WLBG, according to which "the employees of the legal entity or the employees of the undertaking appointed by the legal entity shall carry out the funeral ceremony in the mortuary and consecration rooms and transport the body or ashes to the grave... at one of the cemeteries of the City of Vienna. They shall also open and close all graves, lower the body or ashes and carry out exhumations...."

This provision covers all the various activities relating to the ceremony and burial differentiated by Bestattung Wien.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

This too argues against any distinction being made between the various areas of responsibility.

69. Similarly, Paragraph 130 of the Gewerbeordnung 1994 covers all the various services associated with funerals. In particular, Paragraph 130(1), point 1, refers to tasks connected with laying out the deceased and with the funeral ceremony, which are also the subject of Paragraph 33(4) of the WLBG. This too argues against the possibility of dividing the various activities into those undertaken in the general interest and those undertaken in the interest of an individual.

70. The following must also be considered. A factor to be taken into account in the examination of need pursuant to Paragraph 131 of the Gewerbeordnung is whether the municipality has made adequate provision for funerals. This implies that in principle it is the municipality which bears responsibility for funerals. As the example of the City of Vienna shows, it may perform this task itself, as the City did until 1999 through a dependent component undertaking of Wiener Stadtwerke, or entrust it to third parties. However, the fact that the municipality ensures the performance of this task, including the activities referred to in Paragraph 130(1) and (2) of the Gewerbeordnung, which Bestattung Wien classifies as funeral services in the wider sense, argues for a uniform view to be taken of the various aspects of funeral services and for them to be classified as a need in the general interest.

71. It must therefore be assumed from the above that the activity of undertaking meets a need in the general interest.

(3) Second question: meeting needs not having an industrial or commercial character

72. The purpose of the second question is to determine whether funeral services meet a need that does not have an industrial or commercial character. The Vergabekontrollsenat notes that some 550 undertakers are in operation throughout Austria. It also points out that the Landeshauptmann may impose a ceiling on charges for funeral services. It adds that in the main proceedings Truley advanced the view, which went unchallenged, that there was no significant competition in the local market in Vienna. According to the comments submitted by Truley during the preliminary ruling proceedings, Bestattung Wien is, under an agreement with the City of Vienna, the only provider of funeral services in Vienna. The Vergabekontrollsenat therefore asks whether the existence of significant competition is a condition for deciding that it is not a question of meeting needs not having an industrial or commercial character. In this context it would also like to know whether the factual or legal circumstances are the determinant factors in this respect and in which market, the local one or the national one, it is required to identify competition.

(a) Views of the parties

73. During its analysis of the second question Truley refers to the judgment in British Telecommunications , (43) from which it emerges, Truley claims, that there must be competition in both fact and in law. In particular, all the characteristics of the services concerned, the existence of alternative services, price factors, the dominance or otherwise of the contracting entity's position on the market and any legal constraints must be taken into account. In Truley's view, even as a matter of law there is no competition in the market for funeral services. The WLBG imposed on the City of Vienna a subsidiary obligation in public law to ensure the burial or cremation of the dead. This is true regardless of whether it performs this function itself or entrusts it to a private undertaking. Furthermore, the granting of licences pursuant to the Gewerbeordnung is linked to an examination of need. It largely excludes the pressure of competition and might lead to an undertaking occupying a monopoly position in a given area. Competition is also restricted by the Landeshauptmann's option of imposing a ceiling on charges since this prevents the formation of prices by the free play of market forces. This option was meant not least to help prevent a monopoly position from being abused.

74. Nor, Truley maintains, is there any competition in fact. Under an "exclusive agreement" between itself and the City of Vienna Bestattung Wien is the only provider of these services in Vienna. However, even if the existence of significant competition is assumed, the non-industrial or non-commercial character of the need for funeral services stems from the fact that it is one of the core responsibilities of the State within the meaning of the judgment in BFI Holding . (44) Where these needs are concerned, the existence of private providers does not rule out the assumption of non-industrial or non-commercial character.

75. From the commentaries on the Bundesvergabegesetz (the Federal law governing the award of public contracts) it may, moreover, be deduced that classification as a contracting authority is not justified only where the entity concerned has to operate under the same conditions as its private competitors. This is not true of Bestattung Wien since even its act of establishment enjoyed preferential tax treatment. In addition, its employees, who were all taken over from Wiener Stadtwerke, have a special employment relationship with the City's Municipal Corporation. It must also be assumed that their remuneration and pension entitlements are safeguarded by the Municipal Corporation. In this respect Bestattung Wien is in a better position than other funeral undertakings.

76. Referring to the literature on the legislation concerning the award of public contracts, Truley advances the view that, in the event of purely formal privatisation as in the present instance, the resulting entity continues to be a contracting authority.

77. Bestattung Wien shares the view that the second question should be considered on the basis of the existence of competition. Its conclusion, however, differs from Truley's. The determinant legal framework is, in its view, the Gewerbeordnung, according to which the business of funeral undertaking is not reserved for the State or specific entities, but may in principle be carried on by any undertaking. The fact that there is only one provider in certain areas is not necessarily due to the examination of need, but may also be the outcome of an entrepreneurial decision freely taken. In Austria there is, moreover, competition in the form of some 550 undertakers, all of whom are permitted to operate throughout the country. In Bestattung Wien's opinion there is also price competition, since a ceiling is not imposed on the charges for all funeral services. The price levels in Vienna for services not covered by the ceiling correspond to the national average. It also believes that it is an undertaking which operates in accordance with purely economic principles and makes a profit. The municipal authorities do not exercise any influence over its entrepreneurial decisions. For this reason too, it should not be classified as a body governed by public law within the meaning of Directive 93/36.

78. The Austrian and French Governments, the Commission and the EFTA Surveillance Authority take the view that the existence of competition is merely an indication that a need of an industrial or commercial character is being met. In each and every case the legal and factual situation must be examined. They also advance the following arguments:

79. Like Bestattung Wien, the Austrian Government points out that an undertaking is not in competition with others if it is preferred to other undertakings by the State as a result of certain legal arrangements or as a matter of fact. It is enough, however, for competition to be possible in fact and in law. On the other hand, there is no need, in its view, for competition to exist in fact, since this also depends on entrepreneurial decisions.

80. Referring to the judgments in Mannesmann andBFI Holding , the French Government submits that the existence of private providers in the market concerned does not rule out the assumption of an activity not having an industrial or commercial character. The case-law, it submits, shows that three criteria should be examined: the purpose for which the entity was established; the manner in which it performs its tasks; and the connection between its activities and the prerogatives of State action. All three criteria are satisfied in the present case. Bestattung Wien was established to meet a need previously met by the City. The City's subsidiary obligation to meet the costs pursuant to Paragraph 10 of the WLBG has a direct influence on the manner in which Bestattung Wien performs its tasks, and the subsidiary obligation to arrange funerals means that a need relating to health protection and hygiene is satisfied. Consequently, Bestattung Wien was established for the special purpose of meeting needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character.

81. The Commission is of the opinion that the existence of competition is not a condition sine qua non for deciding whether a need not have an industrial or commercial character is being satisfied. All factual and legal circumstances should be considered in answering that question.

82. The EFTA Surveillance Authority shares the view that, although Bestattung Wien is exposed to competition, it meets a need in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character because of Paragraph 10 of the WLBG.

(b) Appraisal

83. In its judgment in BFI Holding the Court ruled that the existence of significant competition, and in particular the fact that the entity concerned is faced with competition from private service providers in the marketplace, may be indicative of the absence of a need in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character. (45) However, the existence of competition in a sector is merely an indication that a given need has an industrial or commercial character. For, as the Court also stated in this judgment, the term "needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character" does not exclude needs which are or could be satisfied by private undertakings as well. (46) This case-law has been confirmed in the judgment in Agorà and Excelsior. (47)

84. In view of this case-law it should first be said with regard to the requesting court's second question that the existence of significant competition is not a condition sine qua non for designation of the need as not being of an industrial or commercial character. The existence of significant competition is rather no more than an indication of the satisfaction of an industrial or commercial need.

85. As regards the question whether in law and/or in fact competition must be no more than possible or must actually exist, it must first be said that according to the case-law cited above this can no longer be the decisive factor. If the existence of competition is merely an indication of the satisfaction of an industrial or commercial need, but this is not the only decisive issue, it cannot be decisive for the interpretation of the term "needs of an industrial or commercial character" whether competition is only possible in law or is also possible in fact or exists.

86. It should also be pointed out that in its judgment in BFI Holding the Court emphasised that the definition of a contracting authority is geared to the need and not to whether it may also be satisfied by private undertakings. (48) What is decisive, therefore, is the analysis of the need concerned.

87. Besides commenting on the indicative effect of competition in a given market, the Court stressed in its judgment in BFI Holding , with regard to the description of needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character, that in general the needs in question are ones which are met otherwise than by the availability of goods or services in the marketplace and which, for reasons associated with the general interest, the State itself chooses to meet or over which it wishes to retain a decisive influence. (49) These statements were confirmed in the judgment in Agorà and Excelsior . (50)

88. From these comments it follows that all circumstances, both legal and factual, must be taken into account in determining whether competition exists. It should thus be considered whether funeral services are provided otherwise than through the relevant market or whether, for reasons associated with the general interest, the City of Vienna itself chooses to provide them or at least to retain a decisive influence over their provision.

89. To answer these questions, the relevant market must first be identified. This is a question of fact, which must be answered by the requesting court itself. (51) In this context it should be borne in mind, on the one hand, that more than 500 registered undertakers may in principle operate throughout Austria. This may be an indication of the existence of a national market. On the other hand, it should be remembered that the Gewerbeordnung requires a licence to be obtained and the need for funeral services to be examined in this context. This examination has to be made by the Landeshauptmann, which may be an indication of a market limited to the federal Land concerned.

90. The examination to be made of the need for funeral services is also important in another respect. For one thing, it limits competition, regardless of how the relevant market is defined in geographical terms. The public authorities retain a crucial influence at least as regards the number of providers operating in the market.

91. For another, a particularly important factor to be considered in the examination of the need for funeral services pursuant to Paragraph 131(2) of the Gewerbeordnung is whether the municipality has made adequate provision for funerals. As stated above in connection with the first question, this implies that the municipality is active in the field of funeral services and thus possibly reserves this sector for itself. These two aspects must be assessed by the requesting court in the light of the case-law cited above.

92. It does not necessarily follow from the last of the factors referred to that the municipality reserves this activity for itself. Even if it arranges funerals itself, there may be an additional need which it does not itself meet, and it might therefore permit other undertakings to operate despite its own activity. If it reserves this activity for itself, however, the fact that it does so is likely to be a circumstance which should be considered in the classification of funeral services, since the public authorities' deliberate reservation of an activity for themselves is a ground for applying the directives on the award of public contracts to the entity which benefits in this way.

93. The question whether or not a need has an industrial or commercial character arises when it comes to determining the scope ratione personae of the directives. If the authorities reserve a given activity for themselves, the danger is that the decisions taken in the context of the exercise of that activity will be influenced by factors other than purely economic considerations. There is thus cause to apply the directives on the award of public contracts and so to assume that the need which is satisfied does not have an industrial or commercial character. Truley's contention that under an agreement with the City of Vienna Bestattung Wien has an exclusive right to provide funeral services in Vienna should be examined more closely by the requesting court in this context.

94. From the legal point of view, the national court should also bear in mind that competition in the market for funeral services is restricted not only by the aforementioned examination of the need for funeral services pursuant to Paragraph 131 of the Gewerbeordnung but also by the fact that the Landeshauptmann is required by Paragraph 132 of the Gewerbeordnung to set maximum charges. Bestattung Wien's objection that this is not true of all services does not necessarily seem relevant. The wording of Paragraph 132 of the Gewerbeordnung does not, at least, provide for any objective restriction to be imposed on certain services. In any event, the competition that is possible in law as a result of the licensing of several undertakers is restricted in so far as charges are not determined by the free interaction of supply and demand. This might be an indication that the service within the meaning of the case-law cited above can be provided otherwise than by the provision of services in the market. The public authorities exercise some influence over the provision of funeral services, moreover, by setting maximum charges, which, according to the case-law cited above, should similarly be taken into account.

95. In my Opinions in Agorà and Excelsior and Universale Bau I proposed that, when it was being considered whether an entity met needs not having an industrial or commercial character, one of the questions that should be asked was whether the entity bore the financial risk of its decisions. If it had to bear the financial consequences of its decisions itself, an industrial or commercial activity was likely to be involved. (52) If this yardstick is applied to Bestattung Wien, the requesting court should first consider the extent to which the articles of association of Bestattung Wien impose an obligation on the City to offset any losses incurred by Bestattung Wien. Truley's comments on the legal position of Bestattung Wien's employees and the possible protection of their remuneration and pension entitlements should also be examined. The extent to which the shareholders, i.e. Wiener Stadtwerke, which is in turn owned by the City, are obliged to contribute more capital if losses are incurred may also play a part in this context.

96. The subsidiary rule on meeting costs in the second sentence of Paragraph 10(1) of the WLBG, however, does not seem capable on its own of supporting the assumption that Bestattung Wien does not bear any economic risk. The rule on costs applies only where funeral costs are not met in some other way. In principle, however, the costs would be reimbursed to any undertaker. If, then, Paragraph 10 of the WLBG was interpreted as having the meaning outlined, any funeral activity would of necessity not have an industrial or commercial character. This does not appear to be compatible with the rules on the business of undertaker in the Gewerbeordnung, which require that it also be possible for this activity to be undertaken commercially.

97. The answer to the second question is therefore that for the interpretation of the term "needs not having an industrial or commercial character"

(a) the existence of significant competition is not an imperative condition for assuming that a need has an industrial or commercial character, and

(b) both the factual and the legal circumstances are determinant factors in establishing the level of competition.

(4) Third question: supervision by the State or a regional or local authority

98. In the third question the Vergabekontrollsenat asks whether the powers of the Kontrollamt of the City of Vienna in relation to Bestattung Wien result in the undertaking being monitored by the regional or local authority within the meaning of the third condition of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36.

(a) Views of the parties

99. Truley's view is that Bestattung Wien is subject to supervision by the City of Vienna within the meaning of Directive 93/36. It bases this view firstly on the ownership structure of Bestattung Wien: Bestattung Wien is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Wiener Stadtwerke Holding AG, whose sole shareholder is the City of Vienna. As a result of this ownership structure Bestattung Wien is also subject to supervision by the Austrian Court of Auditors. In addition, some members of Bestattung Wien's supervisory board are members of the management board of Wiener Stadtwerke Holding AG. The City's influence is also evident where the possibility of insolvency is concerned. Pursuant to Paragraph 10 of the WLBG, the City is always obliged to contribute appropriate capital if Bestattung Wien faces financial difficulty. Thus Bestattung Wien is not forced to take its decisions solely on the basis of economic criteria, since it does not bear the financial risk of its activities. Truley also refers to Paragraph 10.3 of the articles of association of Bestattung Wien, according to which Vienna's Kontrollamt examines Bestattung Wien's day-to-day business management and reports its findings to the City.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

100. Bestattung Wien, the Austrian Government and the Commission, on the other hand, take the view that a posteriori supervision, as carried out by the Kontrollamt of the City of Vienna in Bestattung Wien's case, does not meet the requirements to be satisfied by supervision within the meaning of Article 1 of Directive 93/36. Their various submissions are as follows:

101. Bestattung Wien maintains that supervision by the Kontrollamt has no influence on its day-to-day business or its business policy. It constitutes no more than a flow of information, which is permissible by the standards of competition law.

102. The Austrian Government adds that Article 1 of Directive 93/36 presupposes the possibility of exercising ex ante influence, enabling non-economic considerations to guide the decisions of the entity concerned.

103. The Commission refers to the Opinion of Advocate General Mischo in Case C-237/99 (53) and takes the view that supervision within the meaning of Article 1 of Directive 93/36 is characterised by the entity's heavy dependence on the public authorities. It believes this supervision must be reflected in the possibility of influencing day-to-day business, which is not true of the supervision of Bestattung Wien by the Kontrollamt of the City of Vienna.

104. The French Government focuses less on the timing of supervision than on its effect. Referring to Advocate General Mischo's comments in Case C-237/99, (54) it asks whether the supervision merely concerns proper accounting or causes the entity's business practices to follow a given course. As the Kontrollamt also examines the economy, efficiency and expediency of Bestattung Wien's business management, the possibility of exercising influence within the meaning of Article 1 of Directive 93/36 exists in this case.

105. The EFTA Surveillance Authority is of the opinion that the situation described in Article 1 of Directive 93/36 is characterised by a particularly close relationship of dependence. It suggests that the requesting court should consider whether Bestattung Wien has a similarly close relationship of dependence with the City.

(b) Appraisal

106. The third question seeks a determination as to whether, given the Kontrollamt's power to carry out investigations at Bestattung Wien, it can be assumed that there is a possibility of exercising influence within the meaning of the third criterion of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36. As the Court ruled in its judgement in Case C-237/99, the object when examining this criterion is to determine whether supervision forges a link with the public authorities that enables the latter to influence the decisions of the entity concerned in relation to public contracts. This means that the link existing between the entity and the public authorities must be equivalent to that which exists where one of the other two alternative criteria is fulfilled, namely where the body in question is financed, for the most part, by the public authorities or where the latter appoint more than half of the members of its managerial organs. (55)

107. Pursuant to Paragraph 10.3 of the articles of association of Bestattung Wien, the Kontrollamt is entitled to examine both Bestattung Wien's business management, in terms of proper accounting, regularity, economy, efficiency and expediency, and the annual accounts and situation report, including the recording of receipts and other documents, to inspect its business premises and facilities, and to report the findings of such examinations to the competent authorities, the shareholders and the City of Vienna. The question now is whether it may justifiably be assumed from this possibility of supervising Bestattung Wien that its day-to-day business and especially the award of contracts can be influenced. One important factor to be determined to this end is the time at which the supervision takes place.

108. In the third of the questions referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling the Vergabekontrollsenat obviously assumes that the Kontrollamt's supervision is a posteriori. If this is the case, it would seem impossible in principle to infer influence equivalent to that referred to in the third criterion in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36.

109. It seems doubtful, on the other hand, that the Kontrollamt's power relates to a posteriori supervision. According to Paragraph 10.3 of the articles of association of Bestattung Wien, the Kontrollamt of the City of Vienna is authorised to examine not only the annual accounts but also Bestattung Wien's "business management" . The first point to be made, therefore, is that the wording of this provision does not limit the Kontrollamt's power to a posteriori supervision. Bestattung Wien's annual accounts are reviewed a posteriori. Under the articles of association however, the Kontrollamt's supervisory power also extends to "business management" .

110. It should also be pointed out that the aforementioned provision empowers the Kontrollamt to examine not only Bestattung Wien's business management for proper accounting and regularity but also its transactions for economy, efficiency and expediency. The examination of expediency in particular indicates a very extensive supervisory power. It extends beyond the monitoring of proper accounting and monitoring confined to ensuring the lawfulness of the conduct of business and indicates a close relationship between supervisor and supervised. It does indeed correspond to the "review of conduct" required by Paragraph 73(1) of the WStV for entities forming part of the municipal administration.

111. This substantive equivalence is probably due to Paragraph 73(2) and (3) of the WStV, which requires the Kontrollamt to examine commercial undertakings in which the City has a holding. This too shows how close Bestattung Wien and the City of Vienna are.

112. An added factor is that the provision in question authorises the Kontrollamt not only to examine documents and receipts, i.e. to carry out an audit: it may also inspect Bestattung Wien's business premises and facilities. This too constitutes an extensive supervisory power, enabling the Kontrollamt to conduct independent examinations. Among other things, the provision is likely to ensure that the obligation pursuant to Paragraph 73(6) of the WStV to carry out specific acts in relation to the review of conduct is fulfilled. This again reflects a close link between the municipality and Bestattung Wien.

113. Finally, the Kontrollamt reports the findings of its examination pursuant to Paragraph 10.3 of the articles of association not only to the competent authorities and Bestattung Wien's shareholders but also to the City of Vienna. Apart from the fact that the City of Vienna holds all the shares in Bestattung Wien and so currently has to be informed in its capacity as shareholder, this provision enables the City to be informed even if it ceases to be a shareholder through Wiener Stadtwerke Holding AG. In this respect too, the public authorities exercise very wide-ranging control.

114. It should perhaps be added that the question raised by the requesting court seeks to determine how far Bestattung Wien fulfils the third criterion, which, according to Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36, must be satisfied for an entity to be deemed to be governed by public law and for the directives on the award of public contracts to become applicable. It should be pointed out in this connection that Bestattung Wien is wholly owned by Wiener Stadtwerke Holding AG, which is itself wholly owned by the City of Vienna. In its judgment in Mannesmann the Court of Justice inferred inter alia from the Austrian State's retention of the majority of the share capital of the State printing office that the latter was subject to State supervision. (56) In its judgment in Telaustria it confirmed this approach and similarly inferred from the State's shares in that company that it was able to exercise influence over it. (57) To this extent, it seems perfectly acceptable to agree that the regional or local authority has a decisive influence on Bestattung Wien.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

115. The answer to the third question is therefore that the requirement laid down in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36 that the management of a body governed by public law be subject to supervision by the State or a regional or local authority is also fulfilled by a review of the business management and the expediency of the actions of the body examined which includes a separate inspection of its business premises and facilities and provides for an obligation to report to the municipal authority which holds all the shares in the body examined through another undertaking all of whose shares it holds.

VI Conclusion

116. In view of the foregoing considerations I propose that the questions submitted for a preliminary ruling should be answered as follows:

(1) The term "needs in the general interest" should be interpreted in accordance with Community law. Only when this abstract legal concept is applied to a practical set of circumstances do the legal and factual situation of the body concerned and, in this context, national law become relevant.

Funeral services constitute a need in the general interest.

(2) In the interpretation of the requirement "meeting needs... not having an industrial or commercial character"

(a) the existence of significant competition is not an imperative condition for assuming that a need has an industrial or commercial character, and

(b) both the factual and the legal circumstances are determinant factors in establishing the extent to which competition occurs.

(3) The requirement laid down in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36 that the management of the body governed by public law must be subject to supervision by the State or a regional or local authority is also fulfilled by a review of the business management and the expediency of the actions of the body examined which includes a separate inspection of its business premises and facilities and provides for an obligation to report to the municipal authority that holds all the shares in the body examined through another undertaking all of whose shares it holds.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Alber delivered on 7 February 2002.
Santex SpA v Unità Socio Sanitaria Locale n. 42 di Pavia, and Sca Mölnlycke SpA, Artsana SpA and Fater SpA.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia - Italy.
Directive 93/36/EEC - Public supply contracts - Directive 89/665/EEC - Review procedures applicable to public contracts - Limitation period - Principle of effectiveness.
Case C-327/00.

I - Introduction

1 In the present proceedings for a preliminary ruling, the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per la Lombardia (Lombardy Regional Administrative Tribunal) (hereinafter `the national court') asks whether it can disregard the validity of an invitation to tender for a public supply contract which has not been challenged within the time-limit set by national law so that it can take into account the infringement of Community law by a clause in the invitation to tender in (subsequent) proceedings brought by a tenderer for review of his elimination when the award was made. The present case concerns proof of a tenderer's technical capacity under Article 22 of Directive 93/36/EEC coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (1) (hereinafter `Directive 93/96'). The national court asks whether a national rule which provides for the disapplication of unlawful administrative acts (Article 5 of Law No 2248 of 20 March 1865) also applies to clauses in an invitation to tender which are contrary to Community law. It also asks whether that principle follows from Article 6 of the Treaty on European Union in conjunction with the right to a fair hearing and effective judicial protection under Articles 6 and 13 of the European Convention on Human Rights. Consideration of the reference for a preliminary ruling also necessitates interpreting Directive 89/665/EEC on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (2) (hereinafter `Directive 89/665').

II - Facts and procedure

2 The main proceedings are at the instance of Santex S.p.A. (hereinafter `the claimant') against Unità Socio Sanitaria Locale n. 42 di Pavia (hereinafter `the defendant') on the ground that it was eliminated from a procurement procedure relating to a supply contract. It contests the decision as to the award of the contract as well as the invitation to tender which, in its opinion, contained a precondition for admission which was contrary to Community law.

3 According to the order for reference, the defendant published an invitation to tender for `direct supplies to people's homes of absorbent incontinence products' for a sum expected to amount to ITL 1 067 372 000 annually in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 23 October 1996. According to the order, the invitation to tender contained a clause to the effect that only undertakings which could prove aggregate turnover over the previous three-year period, for services identical to the one tendered for, of three times the basic estimated contract figure would be admitted to the tendering procedure.

4 The claimant stated in a letter dated 25 November 1996 addressed to the chairman of the defendant's special committee that that clause gave rise to an improper restriction on competition. Having regard to the very recent introduction of that kind of service by local health institutions (aziende sanitarie locale), the application of that clause would give rise to the exclusion of numerous tenderers, including the applicant, which had nevertheless in the last year achieved aggregate turnover amounting to double the estimated contract figure.

5 In view of those comments, the defendant's committee postponed the opening of the envelopes and requested the undertakings concerned to forward comprehensive documentation, taking the view that the clause in question could be interpreted as referring to the overall turnover of the participating undertakings and that the supply of products identical to those called for did not constitute a precondition for admission to the tendering procedure, but could be taken into consideration solely as a basis for awarding points for quality. (3)

6 That interpretation was objected to by Sca Mölnlycke S.p.A., which had the contract for the supply of identical products for the previous period. By a letter to the defendant, it called on the latter to comply strictly with the disputed clause of the invitation to tender.

7 Thereafter, the defendant called on the participating undertakings to supplement the documentation already submitted with a declaration as to the turnover achieved in respect of exactly the same products, with a list of the health institutions to which the products had been supplied.

8 The procurement procedure was terminated when the claimant and two other firms were excluded and the contract was awarded to Sca Mölnlycke.

9 The claimant observed that, had it been admitted, it would have been awarded the contract, and challenged both its exclusion from the procedure and the subsequent award of contract, and also contested the notice of invitation to tender on grounds of infringement of legal provisions and misuse of powers.

10 The defendant and Mölnlycke, which was joined to the proceedings, assert that the objection to the terms of the invitation to tender was out of time and should be rejected as unfounded.

11 The national court granted the application included in the action to suspend the operation of the contested measures, on the ground that there had been a breach of the Community competition principles. In so far as the invitation to tender set turnover as a parameter, it restricted participation by competing undertakings in an unlawful and excessive way. Even if the challenge to the notice of invitation to tender was out of time, the clause in the invitation to tender was none the less to be disapplied on the ground of infringement of Community law.

12 That order was set aside by the Fifth Chamber of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) by order of 29 August 1997, which did not contain a statement of the factual or legal grounds on which it was based.

13 After the proceedings for interim protective measures had been concluded, the defendant, which had in the meantime suspended the supply service previously provided by Sca Mölnlycke, entered into a definitive contract with that company for the subsequent period.

14 In the main proceedings, the national court has requested a preliminary ruling from this Court as to whether Article 22 of Directive 93/36 or Article 6(2) EC in conjunction with Articles 6 and 13 of the European Convention on Human Rights are to be interpreted as meaning that clauses of an invitation to tender which are contrary to Community law can be disapplied even if they have not been challenged within the time-limit laid down by national procedural law.

15 The Italian, French and Austrian Governments as well as the Commission participated in the written procedure before the Court.

III - The reference for a preliminary ruling

16 In the grounds of its order for reference, the national court states that the fact that the invitation to tender includes a clause which infringes Community law and the corresponding national transposition provisions is decisive. (4) In particular, the precondition for admission requiring turnover over the previous three-year period, for services identical to those in the invitation to tender, three times as high as the amount specified in the tender, infringes the principles of proportionality and of non-discrimination as between tenderers. However, national procedural law requires it first to adjudicate on the objection that the application was out of time.

17 The defence is founded on the fact that what prevented the claimant from taking part was the clause in the invitation to tender itself. Thus, it was immediately and directly harmful to the claimant's interest in taking part in the tender and should therefore have been challenged within 60 days from the date on which the claimant became aware of it, pursuant to Article 36 of Royal Decree No 1054 of 6 June 1924. (5)

18 However, the national court considers that it must guarantee effective protection of the rights and interests of applicants in procedures for the award of public contracts both when Community law applies and when national law applies. Therefore, it should disapply provisions in notices of invitation to tender that are unduly restrictive of the principle of maximum participation in public tendering procedures.

19 For that purpose a twofold criterion is consistently applied. First, the automatic inclusion of mandatory provisions in legislation governing tenders by analogous application of Article 1339 of the Civil Code, (6) which does not appear feasible in the present circumstances. Second, disapplication pursuant to Article 5 of Law No 2248 of 20 March 1865, Annex E, (7) which is still in force.

20 As regards the second principle, the Consiglio di Stato has indicated in general terms that, where a regulatory provision conflicts with legislation of higher order which has an impact on a personal right of an individual, the administrative courts may, in the same way as the ordinary judicial authorities under civil law, disapply it. However, there being no personal right involved, the Consiglio di Stato did not apply this rule to the present invitation to tender for the award of public contracts. It follows that the invitation to tender should have been challenged within 60 days, such that after that period expired the conditions in the invitation to tender were to be applied mandatorily.

21 Italian law distinguishes between legitimate interests (which always necessitate a timely challenge against the measure adversely affecting them) and subjective rights (which can be protected by disapplication). It appears that this distinction customarily drawn in national law is not justifiable under Community law.

22 The national court refers to the judgment in Simmenthal, (8) in which the Court of Justice held that a court called upon to apply provisions of Community law is under an obligation to guarantee the effectiveness of such provisions and, if necessary, to decline to apply any conflicting provisions of national legislation, without having to seek or await their prior repeal.

23 Moreover, on the basis of the decisions of the Court in Van Schijndel and van Veen (9) and Eco Swiss, (10) the national court considers that it is necessary first to verify whether in fact any rights had been seriously adversely affected or whether it had been made impossible to apply Community law as a result of the specific course of the administrative procedure laid down as a precondition for the award of the contract in question, which had had a negative impact on the effectiveness of judicial protection in relation to the application of the European provisions.

24 By the approach it had initially appeared to take, namely to interpret the contested clause restrictively, or to amend it, the defendant gave the claimant the impression that it was not necessary to challenge the invitation to tender. By its conduct, the defendant had created a situation of objective legal uncertainty for the claimant. For that reason, the principles this Court developed in Peterbroeck (11) must apply here.

25 In the present case there is a public interest finding the contested exclusion to be illegal, both having regard to the effective enforcement of Community law, on the one hand, and because of the interest of the public administration in opening the tendering procedure to wider competition, as a way of obtaining the best product at the most favourable price, on the other.

26 There are ample grounds for intervention by the national court of its own motion. Thus, the Court of Justice has held in Océano Grupo Editorial, (12) in relation to consumer contracts, that the national court is entitled to determine of its own motion whether a term of the contract before it is unfair when making its preliminary assessment as to whether a claim should be allowed to proceed.

27 The conclusion to be drawn from Eco Swiss, (13) namely that, where certain rules of national procedural law are not observed, the application ex proprio motu of Community law is not called for, does not apply in the factual and legal circumstances of the present case.

28 The national court has referred the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

(1) May Article 22 of Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 be interpreted as meaning that the competent national courts are required to protect citizens of the Union adversely affected by measures adopted in breach of Community law, by resorting, in particular, to disapplication as provided for in Article 5 of Law No 2248 of 20 March 1865 with respect to clauses of an invitation to tender which are contrary to Community law but were not challenged within the short limitation period laid down by national procedural law for the application of Community law by the court of its own motion, whenever it is found, first, that the application of Community law has been seriously impeded or rendered difficult in any way, and second, that there is a public interest, of Community or national origin, which justifies such application?

(2) Does Article 6(2) of the Treaty (14) which, by providing for respect of the fundamental rights safeguarded by the European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, has adopted the principle of effective judicial protection provided for in Articles 6 and 13 of that Convention, lead to the same conclusion?

IV - Legal framework

A - Community law

29 Article 22 of Directive 93/36 provides:

`1. Evidence of the supplier's financial and economic standing may, as a general rule, be furnished by one or more of the following references:

(a) - (b) ...

(c) a statement of the supplier's overall turnover and its turnover in respect of the products to which the contract relates for the three previous financial years.

2. The contracting authorities shall specify in the notice or in the invitation to tender which reference or references mentioned in paragraph 1 they have chosen and which references other than those mentioned under paragraph 1 are to be produced.

3. If, for any valid reason, the supplier is unable to provide the references requested by the contracting authority, he may prove his economic and financial standing by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate.'

30 In the present case, Article 1(1) and (3) and Article 2(1)(b) and (6) of Directive 89/665 are also relevant. They provide:

Article 1

`1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC and 77/62/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles, and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

2. ...

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

`1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

2. - 5. ...

6. The effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law.

Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.'

7. - 8. ...

Article 3

`1. The Commission may invoke the procedure for which this Article provides when, prior to a contract being concluded, it considers that a clear and manifest infringement of Community provisions in the field of public procurement has been committed during a contract award procedure falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC and 77/62/EEC.

B - Italian Law

31 Article 13 of Legislative Decree No 358 of 24 July 1992, which is headed `Consolidated text of the provisions relating to public supply contracts implementing Directives 77/62/EEC, 80/767/EEC and 88/295/EEC', transposes Article 22 of Directive 93/36 and provides as follows:

Article 13

`1. Evidence of the competing undertakings' financial and economic standing may be furnished by one or other of the following documents:

(a) - (b) ...

(c) a statement of the undertaking's overall turnover and its turnover in respect of the products to which the contract relates for the three previous financial years.

2. The contracting authorities shall specify in the notice or in the invitation to tender which of the documents mentioned in paragraph 1 must be produced and any other references which are to be produced...

3. If, for any valid reason, the supplier is unable to provide the references requested, he may prove his economic and financial standing by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate.'

32 Article 36(1) of Royal Decree No 1054 of 26 June 1924 (hereinafter Article 36 of the Law of 26 June 1924), which consolidates the laws relating to the Consiglio di Stato and whose application was extended to the administrative courts by Article 19 of Law No 1034 of 6 December 1971, is also material in the present dispute. It provides:

`Article 36

1. Except where time-limits are prescribed by specific laws relating to applications for review, the time-limit for submitting an application for review to the Consiglio di Stato in its judicial capacity shall be 60 days from the date on which the administrative decision was notified in the form and manner laid down by regulation or from the date on which it is apparent that the person concerned became fully aware of it....'

33 Finally, it is necessary to cite Article 5 of Law No 2248 of 20 March 1865 in the present proceedings:

`Article 5

The judicial authorities shall apply general and local administrative acts and regulations in so far as they are in conformity with primary legislation.'

V - Submissions of the parties

34 The Italian Government submits that the national court is proceeding on the basis that the Community law provisions have direct effect and that the protection provided by the Community legal order thus requires the national judge to ensure the effective application of those provisions irrespective of whether national procedural law was observed.

35 However, the Italian Consiglio di Stato has recently confirmed its case-law on invitations to tender, stating in a judgment of 7 April 1998 that an act which adversely affects a tenderer's right to take part in a public procurement procedure must be challenged within the usual time-limit of 60 days. If that period has expired, it is no longer possible to disapply the administrative act. The administrative act becomes immune to challenge, every action against it becomes inadmissible, and every cause of action based on the act's illegality had to be rejected.

36 The validity of the administrative act is a sanction for the failure of the person who considered his rights to be affected to act, and strengthens faith in the legality of the authority's conduct. Legal certainty requires that the administrative act be valid, in the same way as it requires the legal institutions of prescription and finality of judgments. If the invitation to tender could still be challenged, competitors' legitimate expectations and economic interests would be infringed.

37 The main dispute depends not so much on the legal nature of Article 22 of Directive 93/36 as on whether the requirements in the invitation to tender as regards financial and economic standing are lawful. The Italian Government considers that to be beyond doubt. In any case, Article 22 of the directive does not have direct effect.

38 The question arises as to the relationship between the general obligation of Member States under Article 10 EC to cooperate in the implementation of Community law, which is incumbent on national courts as well, and the principles of national procedural law.

39 The Italian Government points out that the Court has consistently held that in the absence of Community rules governing this matter, it is for the domestic legal system of each Member State to lay down the detailed rules of procedure governing actions for safeguarding rights which individuals derive from the direct effect of Community law. According to that case-law, those procedural rules must not be less favourable than those governing similar rights conferred by national law, and must not render virtually impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of rights conferred by Community law.

40 Italian law provides that administrative acts may be challenged within 60 days. Any infringement of either national or Community law may result in the administrative act being declared unlawful. Thus, there is no discrimination and there is nothing preventing the effective application of Community law. If judges were allowed to ignore national procedural law in cases of infringement of directly effective Community law there would be unjustified discrimination against national provisions of comparable content.

41 The principle of effective legal protection which derives from Articles 6 and 13 of the European Convention on Human Rights applies only in respect of Community acts and national acts giving effect to them; it cannot be applied in a way that is detrimental to national procedural rules.

42 Therefore, the Italian Government proposes that the questions referred should be answered as follows:

In the absence of any objective justification for applying different procedural rules to actions based on directly effective Community law, on the one hand, and actions based on national laws having the same content, on the other, it is not possible to disapply national procedural rules relating to the judicial enforcement of rights alleged to have been infringed.

43 The Austrian Government considers that the first question seeks to ascertain whether applicable Community law in the field of public procurement precludes the application of national limitation provisions. For that reason, the legal framework depends on the directive relating to review procedures in the field of public procurement, namely Directive 89/665.

44 The Republic of Austria submits that it is permissible to make applications to the competent review body for a procurement procedure subject to time-limits, provided this does not undermine the objectives of Directive 89/665 or infringe the principles of effectiveness and equal treatment that derive from the Treaty on European Union. The directive itself contains no exclusive rules as to the organisation of review bodies and the procedure to be followed in applications to them.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

For that reason, it is for each Member State to lay down the detailed procedural rules.

45 Nor is the legal protection given to other candidates and tenderers impaired by the 60-day time-limit for challenging administrative decisions at issue in the present case. Instead, its purpose is to ensure that unlawful decisions are declared as such and set aside as soon as possible once the person seeking legal protection has become aware of them, and this in the interest of the other candidates and tenderers, in the public interest of the proper functioning of the administration, and indeed in the interest of those taking the legal proceedings.

46 The Republic of Austria submits that the questions referred should therefore be answered as follows:

Directive 89/665 does not preclude national law under which, in the event of knowledge being acquired of the irregularities in the award, a time-limit is laid down for bringing review proceedings in respect of a specific decision of the contracting authority, with the effect that, if that time-limit is not complied with, that decision can no longer be challenged in subsequent stages of the procurement procedure. The time-limit laid down must not be such that the bringing or the pursuit of review proceedings is rendered virtually impossible or excessively difficult. In the event of knowledge being acquired of the irregularities in the award, it may be provided that every defect must be challenged within the time-limit laid down for that purpose, failing which any interests affected will be forfeited.

47 The French Government pleads the first question as asking whether a national court is required to verify the compatibility of a national act with Community law of its own motion where the act has not been challenged within the time-limit laid down by national procedural law. The French Government submits that this question should be answered in the negative.

48 The French Government, too, refers to the Court's judgment in Peterbroeck (15) and concludes that a time-limit of 60 days for bringing proceedings, such as is provided for in Italy in respect of challenges to administrative acts, does not render virtually impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of rights conferred by Community law.

49 By providing a legal framework for challenges and fixing a time-limit for raising them, limitation provisions serve the principle of legal certainty for the benefit of all parties. Legal certainty is one of the fundamental principles of the Community legal order. Those principles are of a public-policy nature and must be observed by the parties and the Court.

50 As regards the national court's view that the contracting authority's conduct in the present case after the invitation to tender had been published contributed to the inadmissibility of the proceedings brought by the claimant, the French Government referred to the case of Edis. (16) Admittedly, it was recognised in this case that the conduct of a national authority, combined with a time-limit, could have the effect of depriving a claimant of any opportunity of asserting his rights before the national courts. However, an undertaking such as the claimant could not mistake the necessity of bringing legal proceedings within the applicable time limits in order to protect its position, even if it was negotiating with the contracting authority at the same time.

51 The French Government suggests that the questions referred for preliminary ruling should therefore be answered as follows:

Community law does not require a national court seised of a matter within its jurisdiction to verify the compatibility of a national legal act with Community law of its own motion where the person affected has not challenged that act within the time-limit laid down by national procedural law.

Article 6(2) of the Treaty on European Union, in so far as it refers to Articles 6 and 13 of the European Convention on Human Rights, does not create any additional obligations in this regard.

52 In its observations, the Commission notes first that the criteria laid down in the case-law of the Court for the assessment of national systems of legal protection, such as the prohibition of discrimination and the requirement that they do not render virtually impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of rights, can be applied only where Community law does not, whether directly or by means of harmonised laws, contain the rules that must be applied in national law. Directive 89/665 applies in the field of public procurement and the reference for a preliminary ruling must be considered the light of that directive.

53 The Commission therefore suggests that the question referred for a preliminary ruling should be reformulated as follows:

Is Directive 89/665 to be interpreted as meaning that the competent national courts are required to protect citizens of the Union whose rights have been infringed by a measure taken in breach of Directive 93/36 by disapplying clauses in an invitation to tender which are incompatible with Community law but which have not been challenged within the time-limits laid down by national law, in order to apply of their own motion Community law at every stage of the procurement procedure, including the award decision?

54 Given that Directive 89/665 lays an obligation on the Member States to ensure that effective and rapid legal procedures are available against a contracting authority's decisions and allow unlawful decisions to be set aside irrespective of whether an earlier decision has been challenged within the applicable time-limits, the question whether the award and elimination decisions are `decisions' within the meaning of the directive must be considered.

55 The list in Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 of unlawful decisions that can be challenged is given by way of example only and is not exhaustive. As regards the award decision, the Commission refers to the case of Alcatel (17) in which it was held that the award decision was a decision within the meaning of Directive 89/665.

56 As regards the elimination decision, the Commission observes that this is the act by which the contracting authority responds to the undertaking's application to take part in the procurement procedure. In making this decision, the contracting authority refers to the general and special clauses in the invitation to tender and thereby takes a view as regards their interpretation. Therefore, this step constitutes a new, autonomous decision. If the invitation to tender infringes Community law, the contracting authority is actually obliged to give direct effect to Community law and make a lawful decision.

57 It followed that an elimination decision is a decision within the meaning of Directive 89/665 which must be capable of being challenged by rapid and effective legal remedies, and it is not necessary to have regard to an unlawful invitation to tender, which therefore is not to be given effect.

58 In the present case, moreover, the contracting authority initially gave the impression that the disputed clause in the invitation to tender could be regarded as an award criterion and not as a selection criterion and that it thus interpreted the invitation to tender in conformity with Community law or applied that law directly.

59 The preparatory acts to Directive 89/665 confirm the view expressed above. The Commission's original proposal provided: `Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure, at all stages of the contract award procedure, effective administrative and/or judicial remedies ...' (18). In the Council, the phrase, `at all stages of the contract award procedure' was deleted without explanation, and the Italian delegation requested that the expression `decisions' should be replaced by `every decision'. This request was subsequently withdrawn as a result of the common position on Article 1, which was included in the minutes. The common position stated in substance that the Council and the Commission declared that for the purposes of that directive every person excluded from taking part in a procedure for the award of a public contract because of an alleged infringement was a person who had or had had an interest in the award of a public contract and whose rights had been or risked being infringed.

60 The Commission proposes that the request for a preliminary ruling should be answered as follows:

Directive 89/665 requires a competent national court to ensure the protection of citizens of the Union whose rights have been infringed by administrative acts taken in breach of Directive 93/36 by disapplying clauses in an invitation to tender which are incompatible with Community law but which have not been challenged within the time-limit laid down by national procedural law, in order to apply of its own motion Community law at every stage of the procurement procedure, including the award decision.

VI - Assessment

61 If one reads the questions referred in the context of the reference for preliminary ruling, it becomes clear that, contrary to the formulation of the first question the national court is in fact not seeking an interpretation of Article 22 of Directive 93/36. The national court appears to be convinced that the disputed clause in the invitation to tender is unlawful. It considers that the clause infringes both Article 22 of Directive 93/36 and Article 3(1)(c) of Legislative Decree No 358 of 24 July 1992, which was enacted in order to transpose the Community-law provision into national law.

62 Admittedly, the Italian Government has indicated that it considers the disputed clause to comply with the relevant provisions. However, if the disputed provision were not to be regarded as incompatible with Community law, the national court's further question as to whether and if so under what conditions the clause could be disapplied would have no purpose. Therefore, for the purposes of further examination of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling it must be assumed, as does the national court, that the disputed clause is unlawful under both Community law and the national transposition provisions.

63 As regards the decision in the proceedings before it, the national court finds itself confronted with the problem that it considers the clause that led to the elimination of the claimant from the procurement procedure to be unlawful but to have become unchallengeable by virtue of national procedural law. (19) It appears from the Italian Government's submissions that not only is a belated challenge to the administrative act inadmissible, but also any causes of action in other proceedings based on the alleged unlawfulness of the administrative act must be rejected as inadmissible. This means that even incidental examination of the administrative act in question is usually impossible in subsequent administrative proceedings.

64 As a result of questions posed by the Judge-Rapporteur, there was a discussion at the hearing which led to the following being acknowledged. It is, under Italian law, possible to consider the validity of an allegedly unlawful administrative act incidentally. In civil law proceedings, for example concerning a claim for damages founded on the unlawful administrative act, such incidental consideration is clearly possible. It is only in administrative proceedings, where the public interest in the validity of the administrative act must take precedence, that its unlawfulness cannot be founded on as a cause of action.

65 The national court pointed out in the order for reference that the Italian Consiglio di Stato has held that where a regulatory provision conflicts with legislation of a higher order, the administrative courts as well may, in the same way as the ordinary judicial authorities under civil law, disapply it, in order to protect subjective rights. The national court has no doubt that this applies also in respect of administrative acts which conflict with Community law.

66 Therefore, it appears that under national law, whether an incidental challenge to an unlawful administrative act is admissible depends on the classification of the potential claimant - whether he can claim subjective rights or `merely' legitimate interests.

67 Since the claimant's legal position following the infringement of Article 22 of Directive 93/36 and the accompanying infringement of the transposition provision is clearly not an infringement of `subjective rights' within the meaning of Italian law, it is not possible for the national court to take into account what it considers to be the illegality of the invitation to tender within the framework of the proceedings to challenge the elimination decision.

68 Against this background, and contrary to the views of the participants in the proceedings before the Court, the national court's first question may be understood as asking whether Article 22 of Directive 93/36 grants a tenderer subjective rights. Thus, it concerns the classification of the legal position of participants in a procurement procedure as delimited by Article 22 of Directive 93/36.

69 On this approach, the Italian Government's submissions as to the legal nature of Article 22 of Directive 93/36 and, potentially, its direct effect would also be relevant, since the Court's doctrine of the direct effect of the provisions of a directive is based on the premiss that legal rights granted to individuals by a directive merit protection. According to established case-law, an individual can rely on provisions of a directive against the State if, as far as their subject-matter is concerned, they are unconditional and sufficiently precise, provided that they define rights. (20)

70 Article 22 appears in Chapter 2 of Title IV of Directive 93/36, `Criteria for qualitative selection'. The provision states what references may be required by a contracting authority as to the potential suppliers' financial and economic standing. The directive provides three possibilities:

`(a) appropriate statements from bankers;

(b) the presentation of the supplier's balance-sheets or extracts from the balance-sheets, where publication of the balance-sheet is required under the law of the country in which the supplier is established;

(c) a statement of the supplier's overall turnover and its turnover in respect of the products to which the contract relates for the three previous financial years.'

71 It appears from paragraph 2 of this provision that the various types of reference can be required either alternatively or cumulatively, and that the list of types of reference is not exhaustive. Accordingly, the contracting authority must also state in the contract notice or in the invitation to tender which references other than those mentioned under paragraph 1 are to be produced. In addition, paragraph 3 gives a potential supplier the right to prove his economic and financial standing by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate, if for `any valid reason' he is unable to provide the references requested by the contracting authority.

72 In short, the provision clearly contains guarantees for the potential supplier as regards the opportunity to take part in the procurement procedure.

73 None the less, the present case does not concern the direct effect of provisions of a directive, since there is no doubt that the relevant provision was correctly (21) transposed into national law. The problems which arise in the main proceedings from the infringement of these provisions arise at the level of legal protection.

74 Legal protection against an unlawful clause in an invitation to tender can be relevant at different levels. On the one hand, it might concern a direct challenge to the invitation to tender which, under Italian law, must be made within 60 days, as has already been explained. On the other hand, however, the unlawfulness may also continue, become reinforced or indeed first come to light at later stages of the procedure, in which case the subject of the challenge is not the invitation to tender as such but the decision regulating or terminating the particular stage of the procedure. In the main proceedings, it is the elimination decision which directly affects the claimant and which is the subject of its challenge.

75 In those circumstances, the question is whether and, if so, in what circumstances the initial unlawfulness of a clause in an invitation to tender can lead to the subsequent decision being set aside.

76 In principle, it is for the Member States to regulate challengeability to administrative acts. However, as regards the transposition of Community law, the principles the Court has developed in its consistent case-law must be observed. These are the principles of equivalence and effectiveness. These principles, which were not described as such in the case-law of the Court until recently, (22) state that procedural rules governing actions for safeguarding rights which individuals derive from Community law must not be less favourable than those governing similar rights conferred by national law and must not render virtually impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of rights conferred by Community law. (23)

77 The Court has repeatedly stated in a consistent line of decisions (24) that, under the principle of cooperation, it is for the national courts to ensure the legal protection which individuals derive from the direct effect of Community law. `In the absence of Community rules governing a matter, it is for the domestic legal system to designate the courts and tribunals having jurisdiction and to lay down the detailed procedural rules governing actions for safeguarding rights which individuals derive from the direct effect of Community law'. (25)

78 Therefore, one must first ascertain whether there are any Community rules governing the facts of the present case. Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts lays down minimum requirements for the legal protection to be conferred. Article 1(1) of the directive provides that the Member States are to take the measures necessary to ensure that decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively, and, in particular, as rapidly as possible, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement. Under Article 1(3), the Member States are to ensure that the review procedures are available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

79 There is no question that under that provision a tenderer who has been eliminated comes therefore within the class of persons who can initiate a review procedure. However, what is not clear is what decisions may or must be the subject of the review. The directive does not contain an exhaustive list of decisions which may be challenged. Article 2(1)(b) simply states: `[T]he Member States shall ensure that the measures taken... include provision for the powers to either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure'.

80 Even if the main proceedings may concern discriminatory economic or financial specifications, it is not clear at what stage in the procurement procedure these must be challenged. Therefore, it depends on whether the elimination decision as such is, for the purposes of the directive, a decision which may be challenged and, if so, whether the discriminatory nature of the economic or financial specifications may be raised in these proceedings.

81 In Alcatel, (26) the Court had to take a view on the question whether the award decision was a decision for the purposes of Directive 89/665. The Court answered this question in the affirmative. In considering the question, the Court based itself on the various stages in the procurement procedure referred to in Directive 89/665. `Directive 89/665 thus draws a distinction between the stage prior to the conclusion of the contract, to which Article 2(1) applies, and the stage subsequent to its conclusion, in respect of which a Member State may, according to the second subparagraph of Article 2(6), provide that the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures are to be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement'. (27)

82 An elimination decision is logically prior to the award decision, even if in practice this is sometimes only by a theoretical second. That being so, from the point of view of the course of the procedure, there appears to be no reason why an elimination decision should not be subject to full review.

83 Given the purpose of Directive 89/665, as defined in Article 1(3) thereof, namely that the review procedure must be available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public contract, the decision relating directly to the further participation in or elimination from the contract award procedure must be capable of review. An elimination decision is also a decision in which the contracting authority interprets the clauses in the invitation to tender and applies them autonomously to a candidate. This individual application of conditions previously laid down has clearly an independent, regulatory content which must be amenable to review. (28)

84 This approach is confirmed by the directive's legislative history, to which the Commission expressly referred in the present proceedings. (29) The common position, which was ultimately taken into the Protocol, stated in substance that the Council and the Commission declared that for the purposes of the directive every person excluded from taking part in a procedure for the award of a public contract because of an alleged infringement was a person who had or had had an interest in the award of a public contract and whose rights had been or risked being infringed.

85 Having regard both to the person entitled to initiate review proceedings and to the nature of the challengeable decision, this declaration suggests that legal protection against decisions by a contracting authority should be comprehensive.

86 For these reasons, the elimination decision is to be regarded as a decision against which review proceedings must be available. Where a Member State has exercised its powers under Article 1 of Directive 89/665 in such a way that the national review proceedings take the form of a challenge before the administrative courts to have the decision set aside, such a challenge must be available against an elimination decision. A failure to challenge earlier actions in the procedure cannot itself preclude the admissibility of a challenge to an elimination decision.

87 What is none the less in doubt is what effects the validity of an administrative measure adopted at an earlier stage in the procurement procedure have on the question whether the challenge to the elimination decision is well founded. Specifically, the validity of the invitation to tender has in substance the same effect as a limitation provision since, as explained above, (30) causes of action founded on its unlawfulness must be rejected as inadmissible.

88 The Court has already had a number of opportunities to state its view on the validity of national limitation provisions as regards enforcing Community law. (31) In each case, the Court has examined the conditions and circumstances of the individual exclusion of the Community-law claim closely and has determined the validity or invalidity of the exclusion provisions in the light thereof. It follows that there is no standard answer to the question as to the validity of a limitation provision.

89 The case of Peterbroeck, (32) which has already been referred to a number of times, was between a company and the Belgian State and concerned the applicable rate of non-resident tax. In the main proceedings, the complaint of an infringement of Community law was raised for the first time before the Cour d'Appel (Court of Appeal). According to the relevant domestic law, a litigant could no longer raise a new plea based on Community law before the Cour d'Appel once the 60-day period with effect from the lodging by the Director of a certified true copy of the contested decision had elapsed. (33)

90 The Court considered that a period of 60 days so imposed on a litigant was not objectionable per se. (34) However, it stated that for the purposes of applying the principles of equivalence and effectiveness, each case which raises the question whether a national procedural provision renders application of Community law impossible or excessively difficult has to be analysed by reference to the role of that provision in the procedure, its progress and its special features, viewed as a whole, before the various national instances. In that connection, account is to be taken, where appropriate, of the basic principles underlying the national system of legal protection, such as protection of the rights of the defence, the principle of legal certainty and the proper conduct of procedure. (35)

91 After having considered the particular features of the procedure in question, the Court came to the conclusion in that case that Community law precluded application of a domestic procedural rule whose effect was to prevent the national court, seised of a matter falling within its jurisdiction, from considering of its own motion whether a measure of domestic law was compatible with a provision of Community law when the latter provision had not been invoked by the litigant within a certain period. (36)

92 Joined Cases Van Schijndel and van Veen (37) concerned the applicability of the competition rules under the Treaty in a dispute concerning compulsory participation in an occupational pension scheme. In that case, the complaint of infringement of Community law was first raised in cassation proceedings before the Netherlands Hoge Raad (Supreme Court). The nature of cassation proceedings is that they exclude new submissions unless on points of law. In support of their complaint, the claimants relied on facts and circumstances which had not been relied on before the lower courts. (38) For the national court, the question arose as to whether it was none the less required to take Community law into account of its own motion.

93 On that point, the Court stated: `[W]here, by virtue of domestic law, courts or tribunals must raise of their own motion points of law based on binding domestic rules which have not been raised by the parties, such an obligation also exists where binding Community rules are concerned... The position is the same if domestic law confers on courts and tribunals a discretion to apply of their own motion binding rules of law'. (39) In considering the principles of equivalence and effectiveness, the Court stated that each case `must be analysed by reference to the role of that provision in the procedure, its progress and its special features, viewed as a whole, before the various national instances'. (40)

94 The Court reached the conclusion that the national court had to take into account of its own motion mandatory rules of Community law in the same way as it had to take into account mandatory rules of national law. However, this applied only to the extent that the courts were not obliged `to abandon the passive role assigned to them by going beyond the ambit of the dispute defined by the parties'. (41)

95 The case of Edis (42) concerned the repayment of amounts paid, though not due, in respect of a registration charge in breach of Community law. The fact that the charge infringed Community law came to light only in a judgment of the Court. (43) In reliance on a three-year limitation period which applied in tax law, the authority rejected the franchise debtor's claim to recover the money. The Court held that Community law did not prohibit a Member State from resisting actions for repayment of charges levied in breach of Community law by relying on a time-limit under national law of three years, provided that that time-limit applied in the same way to actions based on Community law for repayment of such charges as to those based on national law.

96 The case of Eco Swiss (44) concerned, inter alia, the question whether a national court was required to disapply a national procedural rule under which a divorce decree became final on the fulfilment of certain conditions, in order to be able to apply the applicable Community law to the relevant facts. (45) The Court answered that question in the negative. The Court considered that the time-limit laid down in national law for raising an action to have the decree set aside did not render excessively difficult or virtually impossible the exercise of rights conferred by Community law. (46)

97 In order to decide what consequences this case-law has for the present case, it must be recalled that limitation provisions are not objectionable per se. As in the case of Peterbroeck, a limitation period of 60 days is not as such objectionable. Nor, so far as Community law is concerned, is the application of limitation periods in the context of procedures for the award of public contracts in itself open to criticism. I expressed this view in my Opinion in Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau as well. (47)

98 However, it appears from the judgments referred to above (48) that the principles of equivalence and effectiveness must be observed, and the specific circumstances and legislative context of the individual case must be taken into account, when considering whether limitation provisions are compatible with Community law. (49)

99 It has already been shown above (50) that the principles of equivalence and effectiveness apply in particular where there are no Community rules governing a matter. In that connection, Directive 89/665 fell to be considered as regards the possibility of challenging an elimination decision. However, there must now be considered the question of the validity of limitation provisions applicable within the framework of procedures for the award of public supply contracts. Directive 89/665 does not contain any express provision in that regard. (51) Thus, the decision as to the validity of limitation provisions depends on whether the principles of equivalence and effectiveness are observed.

100 As regards the principle of equivalence, in the absence of any information to the contrary it is to be assumed that the limitation period relates in the same way to claims to enforce rights under national law as it does to claims to enforce rights under Community law.

101 The principle of effectiveness requires in substance (52) that national procedural rules must not render virtually impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of rights conferred by Community law. If the fact that an earlier administrative act infringed Community law comes to light in the context of an invitation to tender, it must be assumed that the 60-day limitation period does not prevent the effective application of Community law. Considerations of legal certainty and the proper course of procedure favour this approach. These require that competing tenderers' reliance on the regularity of previous stages of the procedure be protected.

102 A priori, Directive 89/665, which requires there to be `effective' and `rapid' measures for the review of a contracting authority's decisions, (53) does not provide a basis for criticising a 60-day limitation period. On the other hand, it has already been pointed out in the consideration of whether an elimination decision may be challenged that a subsequent decision in a procurement procedure can amount to the practical application of an earlier decision, with its own independent regulatory content.

103 Therefore, a purely theoretical consideration of the limitation period is not appropriate in the context of the problems in the present case. Instead, what is crucial is the specific circumstances and course of the procedure prior to the challenge to the elimination decision. Admittedly, the clause which led to the dispute was published with the invitation to tender. It was thereby announced to the parties interested in the award. The claimant had doubts already at that stage as to the lawfulness of the condition and indeed informed the contracting authority thereof.

104 The contracting authority reacted to the doubts the claimant expressed by postponing the opening of the envelopes and requesting the undertakings affected by that problem to forward comprehensive documentation, `taking the view that the clause in question could be interpreted as referring to the overall turnover of the participating undertakings and that the supply of products identical to those called for ... could be taken into consideration, not as a precondition for admission to the tendering procedure but solely as a basis for awarding points for quality'. (54)

105 The contracting authority thereby gave it to be understood that it would take the claimant's objections into account and created an expectation that it would apply the clause in question in a way that conformed with Community law. Only in the shape of the elimination decision did it take a definitive view as regards the interpretation it puts forward of the terms of the invitation to tender. In doing so, the contracting authority put forward an interpretation of the terms of the invitation to tender which made them appear unlawful (under Community law), at least in the estimation of the national court, whose task it is to decide the dispute.

106 What is highly significant is the fact that a different interpretation of the terms of the invitation to tender could have prevented the clause from being unlawful and that the contracting authority initially created the impression that it would proceed accordingly. Only through the elimination decision did the claimant obtain final clarity concerning what it considered to be the unlawful interpretation of the clauses in the invitation to tender. It was only by means of that decision that an illegality, admittedly already latent in the terms of the invitation to tender, was made specific.

107 It is therefore also arguable that it was only through the elimination decision that it became absolutely clear to the claimant that the clauses in the invitation to tender were unlawful. That knowledge, in its turn, could have consequences for the time from which the 60-day limitation period started to run. Whether it starts to run on publication of the invitation to tender in every case, or, possibly, in the circumstances in point here, only once it became known that the particular clause was unlawful, is ultimately a question to be answered by reference to national procedural law.

108 On the present facts, one must in any case assume that the exercise of rights conferred on the claimant by Community law has been rendered excessively difficult. It would therefore be unjust if the claimant were no longer permitted to raise in proceedings challenging the elimination decision the infringement of Community law which was admittedly already imminent in the terms of the invitation to tender but which breached the claimant's rights only by means of the elimination decision.

109 However, the French Government has pointed out that the claimant could have raised a protective action against the terms of the invitation to tender even though it was in negotiations with the contracting authority as regards the particular clause in the invitation to tender which it considered to be unlawful. That might have been true if the contracting authority had not reacted to the doubts the claimant expressed. However, given the way in which the authority initially approached those doubts, the claimant was entitled to believe that its request would be considered and, if appropriate, even be acted upon. One must also remember that the claimant was waiting for the contract to be awarded and it would perhaps not have been opportune for it to endanger its future relationship with the contracting authority by raising an action. (55)

110 Nor does raising a purely protective action appear to conform to the spirit of Directive 89/665. Article 1(3)(2) of the directive provides: `[I]n particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.' That power granted to the Member States suggests that parties should not be hindered from seeking an amicable settlement before an action is raised. In any case, it is not in the interests of the participating parties to surprise the contracting authority by raising an action.

111 As regards the consequences of that situation, the question arises as to whether the 60-day period for challenging the invitation to tender had not already been stopped from running. It is also conceivable that the contracting authority's conduct interrupted the time-limit for bringing proceedings, since it was evident that it initially considered the claimant's doubts and requested supplementary information not only from the claimant but also from the other tenderers affected. Since the exercise of the rights conferred on it by Community law was rendered excessively difficult for the claimant in the specific circumstances of the present case, it is in any case inappropriate to apply the 60-day time-limit rigidly.

112 It is incumbent on the national court to exhaust all the avenues available under national law in order to render the Community provisions applicable to the case before it. If there are no less drastic means available, the national court may have to apply the doctrine of disapplication under Article 5 of Law No 2248 of 20 March 1865, as it has already suggested. Any further legal consequences if the elimination decision is set aside are a matter for national law.

113 The proposed approach means that the national court's second question need not be considered, since the interests of the eliminated tenderer in terms of legal protection in the correct application of Community law are taken into account by the exhaustion of remedies available under national law.

VII - Conclusion

In conclusion, I suggest on the basis of the above considerations that the reference for a preliminary ruling should be answered as follows:

Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts is to be interpreted as meaning that the competent courts are obliged to grant an effective and rapid remedy against any decision of a contracting authority, including a decision eliminating an undertaking, irrespective of whether a previous decision has been challenged, if and to the extent that the contracting authority has by its conduct rendered it virtually impossible or excessively difficult for a citizen of the Union whose rights have been infringed by measures taken in breach of Community law to enforce the rights conferred on him by Community law before a court. It is for the national court to decide in the present proceedings whether this requires that the remedy of disapplication under Article 5 of Law No 2248 of 20 March 1865 be granted.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Alber delivered on 7November2002. Commission of the European Communities v Kingdom of Spain. Failure of a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Public procurement - Directive 93/37/EEC - Procedure for the award of public works contracts - State commercial company governed by private law - Company's object consisting of the implementation of a plan for repaying the costs of and establishing prisons - Concept of contracting authority. Case C-283/00.

I Introduction

1. The present action for infringement of the Treaties relates to the definition of the personal scope of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (2) ("Directive 93/37"). Spain takes the view that commercial undertakings whose capital involves public funding, but which are organised under private law, are not covered by the term "body governed by public law" within the meaning of the directive.

II Legal framework

2. According to Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, " "contracting authorities" shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

A "body governed by public law" means any body:

established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

having legal personality, and financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law.

3. That provision was transposed into Spanish law by Ley 13/1995 de Contratos de las Administraciones Publicas (3) ("Law 13/1995"). Article 1(3) of that Law reads:

"This law shall also apply to the award of contracts by independent bodies in all cases and by other bodies governed by public law and possessing legal personality, connected to or controlled by a public authority, if they meet the following criteria:

(a) that they were established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character,

(b) that they carry on activity which is financed, for the most part, by public authorities or other bodies governed by public law, or that their management is subject to supervision by those bodies, or that more than half the members of their administrative, managerial or supervisory board are appointed by the public authorities or by other bodies governed by public law.

4. The sixth provision supplementing Law 13/1995, entitled "Rules applicable to the award of contracts in the public sector" , reads:

"When awarding public procurement contracts, commercial companies in the capital of which public authorities or their independent bodies, or bodies governed by public law, have a majority holding, whether direct or indirect, shall comply with the rules on advertising and competition, unless the nature of the transaction to be effected is incompatible with those rules."

III Facts and pre-litigation procedure

5. Sociedad Estatal de Infraestructuras y Equipamientos Penitenciarios SA ("SIEPSA") was established by the Kingdom of Spain and started business on 7 April 1992. It was originally set up for a maximum period of eight years from start of business (Article 4 of its statutes). However, in 1998/99 the statutes were amended to the effect that the company now exists for an unlimited period.

6. According to Article 2 of its statutes, SIEPSA's remit is to implement programmes and measures provided for in the Plan de Amortizacion y Creacion de Centros Penitenciarios (Plan for the amortisation and establishment of penitentiary institutions) approved by the Council of Ministers. They involve on the one hand selecting and purchasing appropriate sites for the construction of new prisons either by SIEPSA itself or by third parties, including issuing invitations to tender for, implementing and financing the planning and construction work required to bring the institutions into operation, and on the other hand selling institutions which are surplus to requirements. The Spanish State is SIEPSA's sole shareholder. It is managed by an administrative board whose members are chosen by the Spanish Government. SIEPSA is subject only to Spanish private law, apart from public rules governing its budget, accounting and financial control.

7. In connection with the construction of the Centro Educativo Penitenciario Experimental de Segovia, SIEPSA issued an invitation to tender in which the public notice (Article 11), (4) the time-limit for receipt of tenders (Article 12), suitability criteria (Articles 24, 27 and 29(3)), award criteria (Articles 18 and 30) and treatment of abnormally low tenders (Article 30(4)) satisfied the requirements of Spain's Ley 13/1995, but it is not disputed that they did not satisfy the requirements of Directive 93/37.

8. Having carried out the pre-litigation procedure by sending a letter of formal notice on 6 November 1998 and a reasoned opinion on 25 August 1999, but without success, the Commission brought the present action.

IV Claims of the parties

9. The Commission claims that the Court of Justice should:

(1) declare that, by not complying with the provisions of Directive 93/37/EEC as a whole and more specifically with the provisions on public notices contained in Article 11(2), (6), (7) and (11) and those of Articles 12(1), 29(3), 18, 27 and 30(4), in connection with the tendering procedure for the execution of works for the Centro Educativo Penitenciario Experimental in Segovia issued by Sociedad Estatal de Infraestructuras y Equipamientos Penitenciarios SA, a company falling within the definition of contracting authority contained in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37/EEC, for which the amount exceeds by a considerable margin the threshold for application of the directive, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Community law;

(2) order the Kingdom of Spain to pay the costs.

10. The Kingdom of Spain contends that the Court should:

(1) dismiss the action;

(2) order the Commission to pay the costs.

V Submissions of the parties

11. The Kingdom of Spain did not address the alleged infringements of the provisions of Directive 93/37 in detail in its pleadings, but specifically admitted in its letter of 16 July 2002 that the invitation to tender in question did not satisfy the requirements of Directive 93/37 to which the Commission referred. The dispute therefore concerns only the question of whether SIEPSA is to be regarded as a contracting authority within the meaning of the directive. The parties' submissions are therefore repeated below only in so far as they relate to this question.

12. The parties both agree that SIEPSA both has its own legal personality and is also publicly controlled. The only question in dispute is to what extent SIEPSA meets needs not having an industrial or commercial character.

A Commission

13. The Commission takes the view that SIEPSA meets needs of a non-commercial nature in the general interest. Its analysis is principally based on the purpose for which SIEPSA was set up, rather than on the activities which it actually carries out.

14. The Commission bases its opinion first of all on Article 2 of SIEPSA's statutes, according to which SIEPSA was set up to carry out projects approved by the Council of Ministers as part of the "Plan de Amortizacion y Creacion de Centros Penitenciarios" . It deals with the construction and equipment of prisons and with the sale of institutions that are no longer needed, and thereby helps to implement State policy on prisons. The Commission underlines, referring to the judgment in Mannesmann , (5) that meeting this need in the general interest is closely linked to the maintenance of public order and that the State has a monopoly on criminal prosecution and imprisonment.

15. Furthermore, in operational terms SIEPSA is dependent on ministerial administration. When carrying out its activities it follows the recommendations of the general management of the prison administration, and this too is evidence that SIEPSA belongs to the public sector.

16. In addition, however, the Commission takes the view that SIEPSA's activities are also of a non-commercial nature. The construction of prisons and the sale of those which are no longer needed is not an activity for which there is a general market. The only demand for the construction of prisons is from the State, as part of the implementation of its prison policy.

17. However, even if SIEPSA's activities were to be classified as commercial, that does not preclude the application of Directive 93/37, since any economic activity carried out is merely a means of meeting a general interest (of a non-commercial nature) in the form of the implementation of policy on prisons.

18. The Commission also refers to the judgment in BFI Holding , (6) which states that the fact that private undertakings may also meet the same needs as the undertaking whose definition is at issue does not mean that that body may not be regarded as a contracting authority, nor is the absence of corresponding competition a condition for assuming a body to be public.

19. Even the fact that the aim of SIEPSA's operations may be to make a profit does not preclude its classification as a contracting authority. First, the wording of Directive 93/37 does not justify the assumption that bodies which make a profit are not meeting needs of a non-commercial nature in the general interest. Therefore the fact that a profit is made is not a feature which determines whether or not a body is commercial. Second, it is entirely doubtful whether a State enterprise such as SIEPSA actually pursues the aim of making a profit. SIEPSA's funding is derived solely from the general State budget. It was set up for the purpose of implementing a plan relating to the prison system, an area in which Member States do not usually regard profit-making as a priority. The Commission points out that SIEPSA made considerable losses in 1997 and 1998.

20. The Commission considers that the Spanish Government's reference to SIEPSA's classification under Spanish law is inappropriate. First, the term "body governed by public law" is to be interpreted according to Community law, and domestic law is thus irrelevant. If Ley 13/1995 excludes

SIEPSA from the scope of the rules of Community law on public contracts, then Directive 93/37 has not been correctly transposed.

21. Second, the fact that under Spanish law SIEPSA, in accordance with its legal form, is a private body governed by private law is irrelevant. Classification as a public law body does not depend on whether the rules governing the body's establishment and activity are those of public or private law, but on the purpose for which it is established.

22. Moreover, the wording of Directive 93/37 contradicts Spain's argument. Article 1 of the directive covers "any" body fulfilling the criteria listed, and so it cannot therefore matter whether a national regulation excludes certain bodies from the personal scope of the directive.

23. The reference to the distinction drawn in Directive 93/38/EEC (7) between bodies governed by public law on the one hand and public undertakings on the other also does not justify the assumption that public undertakings are excluded from the scope of Directive 93/37. The Commission takes the view, referring to Article 2 of Directive 93/38, that the purpose of specifically mentioning public undertakings is to include within the scope of Directive 93/38 undertakings with exclusive rights performing substantial activities in the sectors covered by that directive. That does not alter the meaning of the term "body governed by public law" , which is the same in all four directives on public procurement. In the opinion of the Commission, "public undertakings" are different from "bodies governed by public law" in so far as they are set up for commercial purposes.

B Spanish Government

24. The Spanish Government, on the other hand, takes the view that Directive 93/37 does not apply to SIEPSA. SIEPSA is, according to both the purpose for which it was set up and the tasks it performs, purely commercial in nature. It was set up to carry out all the activities required for the proper implementation of the programmes and measures contained in the plan for the amortisation and construction of prisons. The activities it performs are also of a purely commercial nature. Buying and selling property and planning and organising the execution of construction work are purely commercial activities, and the sums acquired thereby are used solely for the implementation of the plan. In that respect SIEPSA acts with the intention of making a profit, as is typical of a commercial approach.

25. The Spanish Government submits that the wording "body governed by public law" in Directive 93/37 refers to a public law body. Spanish public institutions, however, have traditionally made use of certain private law bodies in performing their duties. These are the "State business undertakings" ("Sociedades Mercantiles Estatales"). Their capital is held, at least for the most part, by the State or other public bodies. However, regardless of their legal form they are subject in their activity solely to private law, unless provisions of budget law or rules on accounting, financial control and public procurement provide otherwise. They do not exercise any public powers. SIEPSA is one such undertaking.

26. The Spanish legislation enacted to transpose Directive 93/37 excludes State business undertakings from the personal scope of the rules on public procurement. Where those undertakings award contracts, they are required only to make some advertisement of their invitations to tender and to comply with the competition rules. The SIEPSA invitation to tender at issue fulfilled both those requirements.

27. The Spanish Government also bases its argument on the fact that, unlike the other public procurement directives, only Directive 93/38 distinguishes between bodies governed by public law and public undertakings and declares that the rules on procurement also apply to public undertakings. This is not the case with Directive 93/37, however, which was adopted on the same day and is relevant in the present case, and that is why public undertakings like SIEPSA do not fall within its scope. If public undertakings are to be subsumed under the term "body governed by public law" , it then becomes difficult to understand why Directive 93/38 specifically distinguishes between those two categories.

28. The Spanish Government further considers that the Commission's interpretation does not take sufficient account of the independent significance of the requirement that the need should "not have an industrial or commercial character" . If it were sufficient that the body meets a need in the general interest, such as contributing to the prison system, then the requirement set out in the directive that that need must not have an industrial or commercial character would be redundant. However, the Court found in the judgment in BFI Holding (8) that this requirement has its own separate significance.

VI Assessment

29. Spain does not dispute that the invitation to tender issued by SIEPSA does not satisfy the requirements of Directive 93/37, but it considers that the directive does not apply to SIEPSA. The following discussion will therefore consider solely whether Directive 93/37 is applicable to SIEPSA.

30. The answer to that question depends on whether the company is to be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of the directive. The parties both agree that SIEPSA has its own legal personality, is controlled by the State and was established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest. However, they dispute whether those needs have a commercial or non-commercial character.

31. Spain focuses more on the activities actually carried out, which are the buying and selling of property, and it therefore contends that SIEPSA meets commercial needs. The Commission, on the other hand, focuses more on the purpose of SIEPSA's operations, which is to set up prisons. It infers from this that the need met is not of a commercial character.

32. None of the public procurement directives (9) defines the concept of non-commercial needs in the general interest. Up to now the Court has, as far as can be seen, considered the interpretation of this criterion only in BFI Holding (10) and Agorà . (11)

In BFI Holding it held that the absence of a commercial character is a criterion intended to clarify the meaning of the term "needs in the general interest" as used in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50. (12) It based its findings primarily on the practical effect of the provision. (13)

34. In the judgment in Agorà , referring to the bodies listed in Annex I to Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the co-ordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (14) in the version of Directive 93/37, it held that "... the needs in question are generally, first, those which are met otherwise than by the availability of goods or services in the market place and, secondly, those which, for reasons associated with the general interest, the State itself chooses to provide or over which it wishes to retain a decisive influence" . (15)

35. It also held in both judgments that the term needs in the general interest does not exclude needs which are or can be satisfied by private undertakings as well, but that the existence of significant competition, and in particular the fact that the entity concerned is faced with competition in the marketplace, may be indicative of the absence of a need in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character. (16)

36. In my Opinions in Agorà , (17)Universale Bau , (18)Truley (19) and Korhonen (20) I also suggested that the nature of the need should be ascertained by examining whether the entity in question has to bear any losses itself, in other words whether it bears the economic responsibility for its decisions in awarding contracts. If so, it must be assumed that it is guided by economic considerations in reaching its decisions, and its activity must then be assumed to be commercial. If, on the other hand, a publicly funded body stands behind the entity to offset any losses it incurs, there is a risk that the entity could also be influenced by considerations other than purely economic ones when awarding a contract. In such a case there is a threat to the free movement of goods and services, which is why the meaning and purpose of the directives on public procurement demand that they should apply to the entity. The Court confirmed this approach in its judgment in Agorà . (21)

37. Against the background of this case-law we may conclude the following with regard to SIEPSA. We have to agree with the Spanish Government that the requirement for the needs to be of a non-commercial nature has its own independent significance. For the directive to apply to SIEPSA it is not sufficient that it meets a need in the general interest in constructing prisons.

38. On the other hand, the purpose for which SIEPSA was set up is entirely relevant in deciding whether it meets needs of a non-commercial nature. The wording of Directive 93/37 requires the body to have been established for the specific purpose of meeting needs of a non-commercial nature. It follows that the body is outside the scope of the directive if it was established in order to meet needs of a commercial nature. It is not sufficient that it meets needs of a commercial nature as well. Rather, it must be a body offering goods and services on the open market and thus competing with other private and public economic operators. On the other hand, the directive does apply to bodies which carry out commercial activities, but which were actually established in order to meet other needs in the general interest. (22)

39. There is no open market for the goods and services offered by SIEPSA in planning and constructing prisons. Because of the State's penal monopoly there is only one single taker for those services, the Spanish State, which is alone in needing prisons. This argues against the assumption that SIEPSA meets needs of a commercial nature.

40. SIEPSA also meets a need in connection with which the Spanish State ensures that it has considerable influence over the way in which SIEPSA meets that need. It implements the Plan de Amortizacion y Creacion de Centros Penitenciarios approved by the government and in doing so works under the instruction of the State administration. On the basis of the case-law referred to earlier, this circumstance too argues in favour of the assumption that it meets needs of a non-commercial nature.

41. The fact that SIEPSA has to buy property as part of its activities does not alter this conclusion. The acquisition of new property and the sale of redundant property is merely a means by which SIEPSA carries out its business of setting up prisons for the Spanish State. It is not its purpose to trade in real property.

42. From the parties' submissions it is not entirely clear whether SIEPSA has to bear any losses incurred itself, or whether they are offset from the national budget. The Spanish Government submits that it is SIEPSA's aim to make a profit from its activities. The Commission disputes this and provides evidence that SIEPSA made substantial losses in 1997 and 1998. However, its submissions do not indicate who was required to bear the losses incurred.

43. Whether or not SIEPSA operates with the intention of making a profit does not ultimately appear, on the basis of previous case-law, to be conclusive for its classification. In the view of the Court of Justice the aim of making a profit may at best be an indication of commercial activity. In Agorà it regarded Ente Fiera as a body meeting needs of a commercial nature, even though it was non-profit-making. (23)

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

44. On the question of who is economically responsible for SIEPSA's decisions, too, account should be taken of the fact that it was established in order to implement the Spanish Government's decisions concerning the institutions required for its prison system. This concerns the practical requirements for implementing State prison policy, a need which the State has to meet somehow. The Spanish State established SIEPSA for this purpose and entrusted it with carrying out the tasks associated with it. In this respect it is to be assumed that the Spanish State also has an interest in SIEPSA's continued existence, since if it becomes insolvent, the State itself must once again directly meet the needs which SIEPSA was fulfilling. The State's interest in SIEPSA's continuation is evident from the extension of the period for which the undertaking was established. The company, originally set up for only eight years from the start of its activities, has since been converted into a company of unlimited duration (see point 5 above). That interest in SIEPSA's continuation provides grounds for assuming that the Spanish State as the sole shareholder will do everything to prevent SIEPSA from becoming insolvent. (24) So even if there is no official mechanism for offsetting any losses, SIEPSA will probably ultimately not have to bear sole responsibility for the economic consequences of its actions. There could therefore be a risk that, when awarding contracts, it might be influenced by considerations other than purely economic ones, which is sufficient for Directive 93/37 to be applied in order to ensure the free movement of goods and services.

45. As a preliminary finding, therefore, it must be concluded that, according to the criteria developed in earlier case-law, the needs met by SIEPSA are of a non-commercial nature.

46. The Spanish Government further bases its position on the fact that, under Spanish law, SIEPSA is subject only to private law. The legislation enacted to transpose the public procurement directives excludes all State business undertakings from the application of those directives.

47. It should be pointed out here that drawing a distinction according to the field of law to which the entity in question is subject is consistent with the wording of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37. That provision talks about bodies governed by public law , which suggests that bodies governed by private law are in principle excluded from the scope of the directive.

48. However, such an interpretation does not take sufficient account of the indents following those words, which list the criteria to be used for deciding whether a body is governed by public law. Those criteria, which must all be satisfied, (25) require that the body be "financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law" . It follows from this that it is a body which is controlled and directed by the public authorities. In spite of the wording body governed by public law , it does not depend on which branch of law the body is subject to, public or private.

49. In my Opinions in Truley (26) and Korhonen (27) I explained why I consider that it is not compatible with the spirit and purpose of the public procurement directives to interpret needs in the general interest according to how the Member State concerned itself defines its sphere of activity. The independent nature of Community law and the aim of its uniform application argue in favour of understanding and interpreting the term as an autonomous concept of Community law. This view is supported by the spirit and purpose of the public procurement directives, which is to contribute to the establishment and functioning of the single market.

50. The following example may illustrate this line of thought. If the branch of law to which the body was subject under national provisions were the deciding factor, the authorities of a Member State could easily evade the application of the public procurement directives. It would be sufficient to set up a company, a "Procurement PLC" , say, to which only private law was applicable, and to establish as the purpose of its business the procurement of office furniture, paper etc. for the State authorities. Although the State would be the sole shareholder and could influence all the decisions taken by the company, it would not be required to issue invitations to tender for contracts because "Procurement PLC" was subject to private rather than public law. That is clearly not consistent with the spirit and purpose of the public procurement directives.

51. The determination of the personal scope of Directive 93/37 cannot therefore depend on whether the body is subject to public or private law under domestic law. It is therefore immaterial in the present proceedings that SIEPSA is subject only to private law in Spain.

52. Lastly, the Spanish Government compares the wording of the sectoral Directive 93/38 with the wording of the other public procurement directives, pointing out that the sectoral directive refers to "public undertakings" as well as to "public authorities" . The definition of "public authorities" is identical to that of "contracting authorities" in the other procurement directives. Since Directives 93/36, 93/37 and 93/38 were adopted on the same date, the terms "public authorities" and "contracting authorities" are, it argues, to be interpreted as meaning the same. The Spanish Government infers from this that "public undertakings" cannot be "contracting authorities" within the meaning of Directive 93/37. Because the term "public undertakings" is not used in Directive 93/37, it does not apply to them.

53. It is true that the wording of Directive 93/37 does not specifically determine whether it is applicable to "public undertakings" . However, such undertakings may be subsumed under the legal definition of "contracting authorities" . As the example of SIEPSA shows, they too may have been established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest (of a non-commercial nature), they too may have their own legal personality and as follows from the legal definition given in Article 1(2) of Directive 93/38 they too are characterised by the fact that "the public authorities may exercise directly or indirectly a dominant influence by virtue of their ownership of [them], their financial participation therein, or the rules which govern [them]" . The question therefore arises whether it may be inferred from the absence of specific rules on "public undertakings" in Directive 93/37 that it does not apply to "public undertakings" .

54. The provision on "public undertakings" in Article 1 of Directive 93/38 indeed only makes sense if they do not come under "public authorities" within the meaning of that article. And since the definition of "public authorities" is identical to that of "contracting authorities" in the other procurement directives, it must also be assumed that these provisions are to be interpreted in the same way. Then, however, bodies covered by the term "public undertaking" could not be "contracting authorities" within the meaning of Directive 93/37. The wording of the provisions therefore initially supports the Spanish Government's position.

55. However, in schematic terms it should be pointed out that Directive 93/38 is a special set of rules applicable only to certain economic sectors: the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors. Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, on the other hand, apply to all public activities. Directive 93/38 is an exception in that respect. However, exceptional rules are in principle not an appropriate basis for interpreting general rules. This argues against the Spanish Government's restrictive interpretation of the term "contracting authorities" within the meaning of Directive 93/37 and in favour of the inclusion of "public undertakings" within the scope of that directive.

56. The historical development of the provisions on public procurement also argues against the Spanish Government's interpretation.

57. It is true that Directives 93/36, 93/37 and 93/38 were all adopted on 14 June 1993. It is therefore to be assumed that the legislature intended the terms to be used in the same way. However, the question then arises if we follow the Spanish Government's approach why it did not also use the term "public authorities" in Directives 93/36 and 93/37 if the definition of that term was the same as that of "contracting authorities" in the other two directives.

58. On the other hand, it should be pointed out that the terminology used in Directives 93/36 and 93/37 is consistent with that used in Directive 92/50 on public service contracts. That suggests that the terminology used in Directive 93/38 should be seen as a special set of rules compared with the other provisions on public procurement, and that no conclusions are to be drawn from it for the interpretation of the other directives.

59. The development of public procurement law as a whole also argues in favour of this approach. The field of public works contracts governed by Directive 93/37 was already covered by Directives 71/304/EEC (28) and 71/305/EEC and was adapted by Directive 89/440/EEC. (29) The public supply contracts regulated in Directive 93/36 were already covered by Directive 77/62/EEC, (30) as amended by Directives 80/767/EEC (31) and 88/295/EEC. (32) The field covered by Directive 93/38, on the other hand, was regulated for the first time considerably later, in Directive 90/531/EEC. (33) The chronology of these developments is another argument against referring to the rules contained in Directive 93/38 for the interpretation of Directive 93/37.

60. The legal definition given in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, including that of the term "contracting authorities" , goes back to an amendment proposed by the European Parliament during consultations on the Commission's proposed amendment of Directive 71/305. In its proposal the Commission had spoken only of "legal persons" . (34) In order to ensure that the directive on works contracts applied as extensively as possible, Parliament introduced the expression "organ governed by public law" , (35) later amended to "body" . The inclusion of the legal definition was intended to replace the lists to be drawn up under Article 1(b) of Directive 71/305 which defined the class of contracting authorities. It was designed to ensure the comprehensive application of the directive. (36) The intention was to extend the scope of the directive to construction work carried out by third parties which was funded wholly or in part and directly or indirectly from the public purse. (37)

61. It can thus be established that the term "contracting authorities" existed long before Directive 93/38 was adopted. If the legislature did not follow the terminology generally used in public procurement when it adopted the sectoral directive, no conclusions can be drawn from that special set of rules for the interpretation of terms used consistently in the other directives. In that respect the fact that the three 1993 directives were adopted at the same time does not prove that the legislature would have expressly referred to "public undertakings" in Directives 93/36 and 93/37 too if it had intended to include them in the personal scope of those directives.

62. The spirit and purpose of Directive 93/37 also argue against the interpretation which the Spanish Government draws from a comparison with Directive 93/38. As explained earlier, the legislature's intention was to replace the lists of contracting authorities by a generally valid definition in order to make it clear that the provisions apply to all bodies meeting certain criteria, even if they are not on the list of contracting authorities. It is contrary to this intention to try to exclude an entire area of public activity such as that of "public undertakings" solely because it is not specifically mentioned.

63. As explained earlier, the reason why Directive 93/37 is applicable is also valid for "public undertakings" within the meaning of Directive 93/38. They too are undertakings which, although organised as private companies, are controlled and directed by the public authorities. That influence on the part of the public authorities justifies their inclusion in the scope of the directive.

64. Unlike the other procurement directives, Directive 93/38 relates only to certain sectors. In 1990 when those areas were first regulated the bodies operating in the relevant market in those sectors were organised in many different ways. Water and electricity supplies and transport and telecommunications services were provided partly by public bodies and partly by private companies given exclusive rights by the Member States. The privatisation of broad areas of public services was only just beginning. In order to be able to cover the many different forms of organisation and structure in existence at that time, the legislature did not use the traditional term "contracting authorities" , but introduced the terms "public authorities" and "public undertakings" . This first of all made it clear that it did not depend on the form of organisation, and secondly it ensured that the sectoral directive applied to all bodies operating in those fields, provided that they fulfilled the criteria. This directive thus pursued exactly the same aim as with the definition of the term "contracting authorities" , including "bodies governed by public law" , in the other public procurement directives.

65. The fact that the fields regulated by Directive 93/38 are subject to considerable change is clear from two Commission communications. In 1998 it stated in its communication on "Public procurement in the European Union" : (38)

> "Following the liberalisation of some of the sectors covered by Directive 93/38/EEC, it is necessary to examine the degree of openness to competition of the liberalised sectors with a view to deciding whether the constraints the directive imposes on contracting entities are still justified. They were introduced because of the lack of competition resulting from the State's decision to grant a monopoly or a privileged position to an operator. In return for this preferential treatment by the State, the operators concerned had to comply with certain advertising and procedural requirements when awarding contracts. If a sector is found to be effectively open to competition, the constraints imposed by the directive should be removed.
> The Commission was the prime mover in the process of liberalisation in the sectors covered by Directive 93/38/EEC... It must now take account of the changes that have occurred and the new factors that are emerging on the market, by excluding from the scope of the Directive entities operating under real competitive conditions in the same way as private entities which base their decisions on purely economic criteria.

66. In 1999 the Commission declared that Directive 93/38 was largely inapplicable to the telecommunications sector. (39) These considerations confirm that Directive 93/38 contains special rules taking account of particular circumstances on the market in the relevant sectors at the time. It therefore does not give a generally applicable definition of the operators concerned, but regulates a special case.

67. It consequently cannot be inferred from the fact that Directive 93/37 does not expressly include "public undertakings" in its scope that they do not come under the term "contracting authorities" . This plea by the Spanish Government must therefore also be dismissed.

68. It must therefore be concluded that SIEPSA is a body governed by public law within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37. As the Spanish Government has admitted the individual infringements of the tendering rules complained of by the Commission, the decision given should be in accordance with the form of order sought by the Commission.

VII Costs

69. In the light of the foregoing the application must be granted. Under Article 69 of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party must be ordered to pay the costs if they are applied for by the successful party. As the Spanish Government has been unsuccessful in its application and the Commission has made such an application, Spain must be ordered to pay the costs of the proceedings.

VIII Conclusion

70. In the light of the foregoing I propose that the Court of Justice should give the following decision:

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Léger delivered on 19 March 2002 Altmark Trans GmbH and Regierungspräsidium Magdeburg v Nahverkehrsgesellschaft Altmark GmbH, and Oberbundesanwalt beim Bundesverwaltungsgericht. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesverwaltungsgericht - Germany. Regulation (EEC) No 1191/69 - Operation of urban, suburban and regional scheduled transport services - Public subsidies - Concept of State aid - Compensation for discharging public service obligations. Case C-280/00.

1. The present reference for a preliminary ruling seeks to determine the conditions under which Member States may allocate grants to undertakings which provide local public transport services.

The Bundesverwaltungsgericht (Federal Administrative Court) (Germany) raises several questions relating to the interpretation of Article 92(1) of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 87(1) EC), Article 77 of the EC Treaty (now Article 73 EC) and Regulation (EEC) No 1191/69 of the Council of 26 June 1969 on action by Member States concerning the obligations inherent in the concept of a public service in transport by rail, road and inland waterway, (2) as amended by Council Regulation (EEC) No 1893/91 of 20 June 1991 (3) (hereinafter "Regulation No 1191/69" or "the Regulation").

I The relevant provisions

A The Community provisions

2. The relevant provisions for the consideration of the dispute are those governing State aid and transport by land.

3. Article 92(1) of the Treaty forbids State aids which distort or threaten to distort competition. It provides:

> "Save as otherwise provided in this Treaty, any aid granted by a Member State or through State resources in any form whatsoever which distorts or threatens to distort competition by favouring certain undertakings or the production of certain goods shall, insofar as it affects trade between Member States, be incompatible with the common market" .

4. In the transport sector, Article 74 of the EC Treaty (now Article 70 EC) provides that the objectives of the Treaty are to be pursued in the framework of a common transport policy. Article 75 of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 71 EC) requires the Council to adopt the necessary provisions in order to implement that policy.

5. Article 77 of the Treaty concerns State aids which may be granted in the transport sector. It provides:

> "Aids shall be compatible with this Treaty if they meet the needs of coordination of transport or if they represent reimbursement for the discharge of certain obligations inherent in the concept of a public service."

6. Regulation No 1191/69 seeks to eliminate disparities arising from public service obligations which are imposed on transport undertakings by Member States. (4) It requires Member States to terminate public service obligations (5) and lays down common rules for the maintenance of those obligations and for the granting of compensation in respect of any financial burdens which may thereby devolve on undertakings. (6)

7. Article 1(1) of Regulation No 1191/69 provides as follows:

> "This Regulation shall apply to transport undertakings which operate services in transport by rail, road and inland waterway.
> Member States may exclude from the scope of this Regulation any undertakings whose activities are confined exclusively to the operation of urban, suburban or regional services

8. According to Article 1(2) "urban and suburban" services means transport services meeting the needs of an urban centre or conurbation, and transport needs between it and surrounding areas. "Regional services" are defined as transport services operated to meet the transport needs of a region.

9. Article 1(3) of the Regulation lays down the principle whereby "[t]he competent authorities of the Member States shall terminate all obligations inherent in the concept of a public service... imposed on transport by rail, road and inland waterway" .

10. The provisions of Article 1(4) and (5) provide for a derogation from that principle in two situations.

On the one hand, the competent authorities may conclude public service contracts with an undertaking to ensure adequate transport services or offer particular fares to certain categories of passenger. In such cases, the public service contracts must comply with the procedures laid down in Section V of Regulation No 1191/69.

On the other hand, the competent authorities are authorised to maintain or impose public service obligations for urban, suburban and regional passenger transport services. In such cases, the administrative act must comply with the procedures laid down in Sections II to IV of Regulation No 1191/69.

11. Pursuant to Article 2 of the Regulation, "public service obligations" means "obligations which the transport undertaking in question, if it were considering its own commercial interests, would not assume or would not assume to the same extent or under the same conditions" . Those obligations consist of the obligation to operate, the obligation to carry and tariff obligations. (7)

12. Article 6(2) of the Regulation stipulates that decisions to maintain a public service obligation are to provide for compensation to be granted in respect of the financial burdens resulting therefrom. The amount of such compensation is determined in accordance with "common compensation procedures" laid down in Articles 10 to 13 of Regulation No 1191/69.

13. At the procedural level, Article 17(2) of the Regulation provides that compensation paid pursuant to this Regulation is to be exempt from the preliminary information procedure laid down in Article 93(3) of the EC Treaty (now Article 88(3) EC).

B The national provisions

14. In Germany, the Personenbeförderungsgesetz (Law on Passenger Transport, hereinafter the "PBefG") requires that a licence be obtained for the purpose of transporting passengers by regular service vehicles. (8) Such licence is issued to an undertaking for the purpose of guaranteeing a specific transport service.

15. The licence imposes certain obligations on the transport operator, such as that of charging the authorised tariff only, complying with the approved timetable and complying with the operating and transport conditions imposed on it by operation of law. On the other hand, it confers on the beneficiary a status bordering on exclusivity since no authorisation will be granted for a transport operation on the same line while the licence is valid.

16. It is apparent from the file that, until 31 December 1995, the German legislature expressly availed itself of Article 1(1) of Regulation No 1191/69 as regards urban, suburban and regional transport. (9) The Regulations of the Federal Minister for Transport of 31 July 1992 (10) set aside the application of Regulation No 1191/69 for public transport.

17. As from 1 January 1996, the German legislature introduced a distinction between transport services operated "commercially" and transport services operated as a "public service" . (11)

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

18. The PBefG lays down the principle that urban, suburban and regional transport services must be operated commercially. (12) That term denotes services the costs of which are covered by receipts from the carriage of passengers, moneys received pursuant to statutory provisions on compensation in respect of tariffs and the organisation of transport and from other revenue of the undertaking. (13)

Licences for commercial transport services are governed by Paragraph 13 of the PBefG. That provision lays down a number of conditions governing the granting of licences, such as the applicant's financial status and reliability, and requires that the application be rejected where the service applied for would affect the interests of the public. If there are several applicants for the same service, the competent authority must make its choice having regard to the interests of the public and, in particular, taking into account cost-effectiveness.

19. On the other hand, where an adequate transport service cannot be provided commercially, it may be operated as a social service. (14) In such cases, the third sentence of Paragraph 8(4) of the PBefG provides that "the provisions in force of Regulation (EEC) No 1191/69 must apply" .

Transport licences operated in accordance with the public service conditions are governed by Paragraph 13a of the PBefG. Under that provision, a licence is to be issued provided it is necessary for the operation of a transport service by virtue of an administrative act or a public service contract within the meaning of Regulation No 1191/69. Further, the option chosen should be that which entails the least cost to the public. For the purpose of establishing the lowest cost, German law provides for a public tendering procedure in accordance with public procurement rules.

II The facts and procedure

20. The case in the main proceedings concerns the granting of licences to operate regular bus services in the Landkreis (administrative district) of Stendal in Germany.

21. On 25 September 1990, the Regierungspräsidium Magdeburg (the competent local authority body) (15) issued 18 licences to the undertaking Altmark Trans GmbH ("Altmark") for passenger transport on regional lines. Those licences expired on 19 September 1994.

22. By decision of 27 October 1994, the Regierungspräsidium issued new licences to Altmark. On the same basis, it rejected the application for licences lodged by Nahverkehrsgesellschaft Altmark GmbH (hereinafter "NVGA").

23. NVGA lodged an appeal against that decision on the grounds that Altmark was not a financially sound undertaking. It contended that the award of licences was unlawful because Altmark could not survive financially without the public subsides it received.

24. By decision of 29 June 1995, the Regierungspräsidium rejected that claim. Further, on 30 July 1996, it extended the validity of the licences granted to Altmark until 31 October 2002.

25. Accordingly, NVGA appealed to the Verwaltungsgericht Magdeburg (Administrative Court of first instance, Magdeburg) (Germany). The latter ruled that Altmark was financially sound since the foreseeable operational deficit would be covered by the subsidies paid by the administrative district of Stendal.

26. By contrast, the Oberverwaltungsgericht (Higher Administrative Court) of Sachsen-Anhalt revoked the licences issued to Altmark. That court held that Altmark's financial soundness was no longer guaranteed since it required subsidies from the administrative district of Stendal to operate the contested licences and that those subsidies were incompatible with Community law.

The Oberverwaltungsgericht held that the German legislature had excluded the application of Regulation

No 1191/69 to urban, suburban or regional transport only until 31 December 1995. After that date, therefore, the granting of subsidies had to comply with the conditions set out in Regulation No 1191/69 and, in particular, with the requirement that public service obligations should be imposed by an administrative act or public service agreement. However, that condition was not met in the instant case since the administrative district of Stendal had neither concluded any agreement with Altmark nor adopted any administrative act. The administrative district of Stendal was therefore no longer authorised to subsidise Altmark in respect of the licences issued to it.

The Oberverwaltungsgericht concluded therefore that Altmark was no longer able to operate commercially the transport services in dispute. Inasmuch as those services were dependent on public grants, they had to be operated in accordance with public service rules and, for that reason, must fall within the scope of Regulation No 1191/69.

27. Altmark lodged an appeal against that decision on a point of law to the Bundesverwaltungsgericht. In its order for reference, (16) that court points out that the court hearing the appeal had failed to interpret the provisions of national law. It stated that, in German law, the fact that an undertaking required subsidies to provide a public transport service was not sufficient to preclude its commercial status as provided for in Paragraph 8(4) of the PBefG.

On the other hand, the Bundesverwaltungsgericht expresses doubt as to the interpretation to be given to Community law. Having regard to Articles 77 and 92 of the Treaty, and to the provisions of Regulation No 1191/69, it is uncertain whether the fact that an undertaking needs subsidies in order to operate a local public passenger service means that it must necessarily be defined as a "social service" and that it must fall within the scope of application of Regulation No 1191/69.

III The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

28. In consequence, the Bundesverwaltungsgericht decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following question to the Court:

> "Do Articles 73 EC and 87 EC, read in conjunction with Regulation (EEC) No 1191/69, as amended by Regulation (EEC) No 1893/91, preclude the application of a provision of national law which permits licences to operate regular local public transport services to be granted in respect of services necessarily dependent on public subsidies without regard being had to Sections II, III and IV of the abovementioned regulation?"

29. In its order for reference, (17) the Bundesverwaltungsgericht states that its question is subdivided into three parts as follows:

> "1. Are grants to make up a deficit in respect of local public transport services subject at all to the prohibition on aid laid down in Article 87(1) EC or must they be considered, having regard to their regional scope not to be liable a priori to affect trade between Member States?

May the answer to that question depend on the specific location and importance of the relevant local transport area?

2. Does Article 73 EC generally enable the national legislature to authorise public grants to make up for deficits in respect of urban, suburban or regional public transport without regard being had to Regulation (EEC) No 1191/69?

3. Does Regulation (EEC) No 1191/69 enable the national legislature to authorise the operation of a regular urban, suburban or regional public passenger service which is completely dependent on public grants, without regard being had to Sections II, III and IV of the abovementioned regulation and to require application of these rules only where adequate transport provision is otherwise impossible?

Does that freedom allowed to the national legislature stem in particular from the fact that under the second subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Regulation (EEC) No 1191/69, as amended in 1991, it has the right to exclude urban, suburban or regional public transport undertakings completely from the scope of the regulation?

IV Subject-matter of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

30. The question referred by the Bundesverwaltungsgericht raises two sets of issues.

31. The first set of questions concerns the interpretation of Treaty provisions. It seeks to determine whether subsidies granted by the authorities of a Member State to offset the cost of public service obligations imposed on an undertaking operating a local passenger service constitute State aids caught by the prohibition laid down in Article 92(1) of the Treaty. (18) In addition, it is a matter of identifying the circumstances in which Article 77 of the Treaty may authorise the granting of such subsidies. (19)

32. The second set of questions concerns Regulation No 1191/69. They seek in essence to ascertain whether the authorities of a Member State may organise and finance a local public transport service without regard for the provisions of the Regulation regarding the maintenance of public service obligations and common compensation procedures. (20)

33. I think that the order of those questions must be reversed. Regulation No 1191/69 constitutes a lex specialis in relation to Articles 92 and 77 of the Treaty. It establishes a harmonised framework laying down the conditions under which the Member States may grant subsidies to offset the cost of pubic service obligations imposed on transport undertakings. Thus, the Regulation implements the Treaty rules governing State aid in the field of public transport services by land.

34. Accordingly, the first question which arises is to determine whether Regulation No 1191/69 applies to commercially operated transport services. If it does, the German authorities will be able to grant subsidies to those services only if they satisfy the conditions laid down by that Regulation. On the other hand, if the Regulation does not apply, it will be necessary to examine the Treaty provisions relating to State aid.

V The question of the application of Regulation No 1191/69

35. By its first question, the Bundesverwaltungsgericht asks whether, on a proper construction of the second subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Regulation No 1191/69, a Member State is permitted not to apply that Regulation to a limited category of local public passenger services, such as those services operated commercially within the meaning of Paragraph 8(4) and Paragraph 13 of the PBefG. (21)

36. Thus, the national court seeks to establish whether the German authorities may grant subsidies to those services without complying with the conditions laid down by Regulation No 1191/69.

37. It is apparent from the file (22) that the German legislature has made particular use of the second subparagraph of Article 1(1) of the Regulation.

As from 1 January 1996, the German authorities have partly excluded the Regulation. Contrary to the Regulations of 31 July 1992, (23) which quite simply excluded the application of the Regulation to public passenger transport, the current text of the PBefG precludes the application of the Regulation only in respect of commercial transport. Other transport, namely transport operated in accordance with public service rules, is subject to the provisions of Regulation No 1191/69.

38. The question which arises is, therefore, whether the second subparagraph of Article 1(1) permits the authorities of a Member State to exclude in part Regulation No 1191/69 for a limited category of local public transport services. (24)

39. The parties to the main proceedings consider that the German authorities were entitled to exclude commercial transport from the Regulation. Referring to the principle "in eo quod plus sit, semper inest et minus " , they contend that if the second subparagraph of Article 1(1) permits the application of the Regulation to be excluded for a complete category of transport (namely, urban, suburban and regional services), it must, a fortiori , permit a limited part of those services to be excluded.

Further, Altmark refers to the Commission's reply to Mr Jarzembowski's written question. (25) In that reply, it is alleged that the Commission expressly indicated that the exclusion of commercially operated transport was compatible with Community law and, in particular, with Regulation No 1191/69.

40. The Court has never had the opportunity to determine whether the Member States were able to provide for a part exemption from Regulation No 1191/69. In order to decide that question, I consider that the Court could draw a parallel with its case-law on the Sixth VAT Directive. (26) Two judgments appear to merit particular attention in that regard.

41. The first judgment (27) concerns the interpretation of Article 28(3)(b) of the Sixth Directive.

That provision, read in conjunction with point 16 of Annex F, enables Member States to continue to exempt from VAT, for a transitional period, the supply of buildings and building land under the conditions obtaining at the time of the adoption of the Sixth Directive.

At that time, property sales in the United Kingdom were exempt from VAT. Only the operations enumerated in Schedule 5 to the Finance Act 1972 were subject to VAT. Subsequent to the entry into force of the Sixth Directive, the United Kingdom amended its legislation so as to reduce the scope of the exemptions.

Norbury Developments Ltd considered that the contested amendment was contrary to the provisions of the Sixth Directive. It contended that the purpose of Article 28(3) was to "freeze" the exemptions in Annex F as at the date on which the Sixth Directive was adopted. The Court rejected that interpretation for the following reasons: (28)

> "[T]he amendments [made to the United Kingdom's legislation] have not widened the scope of the exemption; on the contrary, they have reduced it. Consequently, they were not adopted in disregard of the wording of Article 28(3)(b). Whilst that provision precludes the introduction of new exemptions or the extension of the scope of existing exemptions following the entry into force of the Sixth Directive, it does not prevent a reduction of those exemptions, since their abolition constitutes the objective pursued by Article 28(4) of the Sixth Directive.

It would be contrary to that objective to construe Article 28(3)(b) of the Sixth Directive narrowly, to the effect that a Member State may maintain an existing exemption but may not abolish it, even only partially, without thereby abolishing all the other exemptions. Moreover, ... such an interpretation would have adverse effects for the uniform application of the Sixth Directive. A Member State might find itself compelled to maintain all the exemptions existing at the date of adoption of the Sixth Directive, even if it regarded it as possible, appropriate and desirable progressively to implement the system laid down in the directive in the sphere under consideration

" . (29)

42. The Court expounded identical reasoning in Commission v France . (30) In that case, the Commission alleged that France had, subsequent to the entry into force of the Sixth Directive, amended its legislation by making the right to deduct VAT on private vehicles subject to the condition that the vehicle be used for driving instruction.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

The French Government contended that its legislation complied with Article 17(6) of the Sixth Directive which provides that "[u]ntil the above rules [adopted by the Council] come into force, Member States may retain all the exclusions provided for under their national laws when this directive comes into force" . The Court rejected the Commission's appeal for the following reasons:

> "The same reasoning [as that employed in Norbury Developments , cited above] can be applied in the interpretation of Article 17(6) of the Sixth Directive. Thus, where the legislation of a Member State, after the entry into force of the Sixth Directive, is amended so as to reduce the scope of existing exemptions and thereby brings itself into line with the objective of the Sixth Directive, that legislation must be considered to be covered by the derogation provided for by the second subparagraph of Article 17(6) of the Sixth Directive and is not in breach of Article 17(2).

In the present case, the national legislative amendment replaces a total exclusion of private cars from the right to deduct VAT with authorisation for partial deduction, that is to say in respect of vehicles and machines used exclusively for driving instruction.

It follows that the amendment so made to the French legislation has the effect of reducing the scope of existing exemptions and bringing that legislation into line with the general regime of deduction set out in Article 17(2) of the Sixth Directive

" . (31)

43. In my opinion, the following principle can be deduced from the foregoing case-law. Where a directive seeks to introduce a harmonised regime in a specific area and where it authorises Member States to provide for derogations therefrom, States availing themselves of that possibility may, following the entry into force of the directive, amend their legislation in order to reduce the scope of the exemptions and thereby comply with the objectives pursued by the directive. On the other hand, a Member State cannot, following the entry into force of the directive, extend the scope of the exemptions provided for by its national law (32) nor reintroduce a derogation which it had initially abolished. (33)

44. It seems to me that that principle can be applied in its entirety to the instant case.

45. First, we have seen that the objective of Regulation No 1191/69 is to introduce a harmonised framework into the sphere of the public service obligations imposed by Member States on undertakings which provide land transport services. It lays down the conditions under which Member States may impose public service obligations and grant subsidies to offset the charges arising from those obligations for undertakings.

46. Second, the Regulation authorises Member States to provide for derogations from the rules which it lays down. The second subparagraph of Article 1(1) provides that Member States may exclude urban, suburban or regional services from the scope of the Regulation.

47. Third, the German authorities, following the entry into force of the Regulation, (34) amended their legislation with a view to reducing the scope of the exemptions provided for by national law.

We have seen that, until 31 December 1995, the German legislature expressly excluded all local public passenger services from the scope of the Regulation. (35) However, as from 1 January 1996, the German authorities have limited that exclusion to commercial transport services. It follows that transport services operated as a public service now come within the scope of the Regulation.

48. Fourth, that legislative amendment contributes to the attainment of the objectives pursued by Regulation No 1191/69.

49. At this point, I would note that the Regulation seeks to eliminate the disparities resulting from the public service obligations which the Member States impose on undertakings providing transport services by land and which are capable of substantially distorting competition. However, for local and regional public transport services, the Community legislature has brought about gradual harmonisation and liberalisation.

Initially, it quite simply excluded local and regional transport from Regulation No 1191/69. The first version of the Regulation, adopted in 1969, provided that that Regulation "is at present to apply to ... undertakings not mainly providing transport services of a local or regional character" . (36)

Subsequently, in 1991, the Council introduced the principle whereby local and regional transport came within the scope of application of Regulation No 1191/69. However, that principle is not absolute since the second subparagraph of Article 1(1) of the Regulation permits Member States to continue to exclude urban, suburban or regional services. (37)

Lastly, on 26 July 2000, the Commission presented a proposal for Regulation 2000/C 365 E/10 to the Council and the Parliament. (38) The proposal lays down the conditions under which Member States may compensate transport operators for the costs incurred in fulfilling public service requirements and under which they may grant exclusive rights for the operation of public passenger transport. (39) Contrary to the current version of Regulation No 1191/69, that proposal no longer permits Member States to exclude local and regional passenger transport services.

50. It follows that Regulation No 1191/69 seeks gradually to liberalise local and regional passenger services by land.

51. The amendment made by the German legislature to the PBefG contributes to the attainment of those various objectives.

First, that amendment enables distortions of competition in the German local passenger sector to be reduced. Since part of those transport services are subject to the provisions of the Regulation regarding the maintenance of public service obligations and the methods of compensation, the contested amendment brings the German system in line with the objectives pursued by Regulation No 1191/69.

Second, it would seem that the contested amendment constitutes the first step towards complete liberalisation of local passenger transport services in the Federal Republic of Germany. At the hearing, the representative of Altmark stated that the Bundestag was in the process of examining proposals seeking to reduce or even abolish public authority involvement in the operation of local transport. If that information is correct, it would mean that the German authorities, like the Community legislature, are gradually making progress in the process of liberalising local passenger services.

52. Consequently, I consider that the German legislature was entitled to exclude commercial transport from the scope of Regulation No 1191/69. I therefore propose that the Court reply to the first question that the second subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Regulation No 1191/69 does not preclude, following its entry into force, a Member State from adopting a legislative measure for the purpose of limiting the exclusion of that Regulation to a specific category of local passenger services by land, such as those services operated commercially within the meaning of Paragraphs 8(4) and 13 of the PBefG.

53. In so far as Regulation No 1191/69 is not applicable to the transport services in question in the case in the main proceedings, the general provisions of the Treaty in respect of State aids must be examined.

VI Article 92(1) of the Treaty

54. The second question concerns Article 92(1) of the Treaty. The national court asks whether subsidies granted by the authorities of a Member State "to make up a deficit in respect of local public transport services" (40) come within the prohibition contained in the above provision.

55. Article 92(1) of the Treaty stipulates four cumulative conditions. To be caught by the prohibition contained in that provision, it is necessary that:

the measure should confer a selective advantage on certain undertakings or the production of certain goods;

the advantage should be granted directly or indirectly through State resources;

the advantage should distort or threaten to distort competition;

the measure should affect trade between Member States.

56. In the instant case, the question posed by the Bundesverwaltungsgericht is concerned exclusively with the last condition. The national court asks whether contested subsidies are subject to the prohibition contained in Article 92(1) of the Treaty or whether they are to be considered, "having regard to their regional scope, not to be liable a priori to affect trade between Member States" . (41)

57. In principle, the Court could therefore limit itself to examining the question of the effect of the contested subsidies on intra-Community trade.

58. However, after the hearing held in the present case, the Sixth Chamber of the Court delivered its judgment in the Ferring case. (42)

59. In that judgment, the question which arose was to determine whether financial advantages granted by the authorities of a Member State in order to compensate for the cost of public service obligations imposed by them on certain undertakings constitute State "aid" within the meaning of Article 92(1) of the Treaty.

On that point, the Sixth Chamber of the Court held that, where the value of the advantages granted by the public authorities does not exceed that of the costs incurred by the public service obligations, the contested measure cannot be regarded as aid within the meaning of Article 92(1). On the other hand, it ruled that, should the advantages exceed the cost of the public service obligations, those advantages do come within the scope of Article 92(1) of the Treaty in respect of the part which exceeds the stated cost of the public service obligations.

60. The Ferring judgment is of direct relevance to the reply that should be given to the question raised by the Bundesverwaltungsgericht.

If the reasoning expounded in that judgment is followed, the national court must first determine whether the subsidies paid by the administrative district of Stendal exceed the cost of the public service obligations arising out of the contested transport operations. The question of the effect of those subsidies on trade between Member States will arise only if and in so far as the value of those subsidies exceeds the cost of the public service obligations.

61. However, in the instant case, I propose that the Court should not apply Ferring . In my view, the interpretation given by the Sixth Chamber of the Court is such as to undermine the structure and logic of the Treaty provisions in respect of State aid.

62. Before explaining why I am inviting the Court to review the rule in Ferring , I shall briefly summarise the context of the case.

A The context of the Ferring judgment

63. The Commission's practice and the Community case-law provided different answers to the question at the centre of Ferring .

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

64. Initially, the Commission considered that subsidies designed to offset the cost of public service obligations did not constitute State aids within the meaning of Article 92(1) of the Treaty. (43)

65. The Court of First Instance of the European Communities rejected that interpretation in a judgment of 27 February 1997. (44) The case concerned tax concessions granted by the French authorities to La Poste to compensate for costs linked to its performance of public-interest tasks. Unlike the Commission, the Court of First Instance considered that the contested measures did constitute State aids within the meaning of Article 92(1) of the Treaty. (45) However, it added that those measures could be justified under Article 90(2) of the EC Treaty (now Article 86(2) EC). (46)

66. On 10 May 2000, the Court of First Instance confirmed its ruling in SIC v Commission (47) concerning the financing of Portuguese public television channels.

The Court of First Instance held that "the fact that a financial advantage is granted to an undertaking by the public authorities in order to offset the cost of public service obligations which that undertaking is claimed to have assumed has no bearing on the classification of that measure as aid within the meaning of Article 92(1) of the Treaty" . (48) The Court of First Instance pointed out that "Article 92(1) of the Treaty does not distinguish between measures of State intervention by reference to their causes or aims but defines them in relation to their effects" . (49) Accordingly "the concept of aid is an objective one, the test being whether a State measure confers an advantage on one or more particular undertakings" . (50)

67. Ferring is the first judgment in which the Court of Justice has ruled on the matter.

68. That case concerned a tax contribution introduced by the French authorities on the sale of medicinal preparations by pharmaceutical laboratories.

The French system of distributing medicinal preparations to pharmacies consists of two distinct channels: the first is through "wholesale distributors" and the second is through pharmaceutical laboratories. French legislation imposes on wholesale distributors certain public service obligations which essentially require that they hold an adequate stock of medicinal preparations and are able to guarantee delivery within a given time-limit in a given territory. The contested operation was designed to restore balance to the conditions of competition between the two distribution channels in so far as the pharmaceutical laboratories were not subject to the same obligations as the wholesale distributors.

The Tribunal des affaires de sécurité sociale de Créteil (Social Security Court) (France) had requested the Court to rule whether the contested contribution constituted a State aid within the meaning of Article 92(1) and, if so, whether it was justified under the provisions of Article 90(2) of the Treaty.

69. The Sixth Chamber of the Court replied to the first question by separating it into two parts.

70. First, it examined "whether, leaving aside the public service obligations laid down by French law, exempting wholesale distributors from tax on direct sales may, in principle, amount to State aid for the purposes of Article 92(1) of the Treaty" . (51)

In that respect, the Court held that the contested tax "may" meet the four conditions contained in Article 92(1). (52) The French authorities had conferred an economic advantage capable of strengthening the competitive position of wholesale distributors since, in the years following the introduction of the tax, "not only did the growth of direct sales recorded [by pharmaceutical laboratories] in the immediately preceding years cease, but the trend even reversed, with wholesale distributors recovering market share" . (53) Further, "there [could] be no doubt that a measure such as the tax on direct sales will influence trade patterns between the Member States" . (54)

71. Second, the Court went on to examine "whether the specific public service obligations imposed on wholesale distributors by the French system for the supply of medicines to pharmacies precludes the tax from being State aid" . (55)

On that point, it held that, "provided that the tax on direct sales imposed on pharmaceutical laboratories corresponds to the additional costs actually incurred by wholesale distributors in discharging their public service obligations, not assessing wholesale distributors to the tax may be regarded as compensation for the services they provide and hence not State aid within the meaning of Article 92 of the Treaty. Moreover, provided there is the necessary equivalence between the exemption and the additional costs incurred, wholesale distributors will not be enjoying any real advantage for the purposes of Article 92(1) of the Treaty because the only effect of the tax will be to put distributors and laboratories on an equal competitive footing" . (56)

72. The Sixth Chamber of the Court then replied to the question concerning Article 90(2) of the Treaty. It held that "if it is the case that the advantage for wholesale distributors in not being assessed to the tax on direct sales of medicines exceeds the additional costs that they bear in discharging the public service obligations imposed on them by national law, that advantage, to the extent that it exceeds the additional costs mentioned, cannot, in any event, be regarded as necessary to enable them to carry out the particular tasks assigned to them" . (57)

Accordingly, Article 90(2) of the Treaty cannot cover the contested tax in so far as the advantage it confers on wholesale distributors exceeds the cost of the public service obligations. (58)

B Assessment of the rule in Ferring

73. I do not concur with the reasoning expounded by the Sixth Chamber of the Court in Ferring . In my opinion, that reasoning is liable to undermine the structure and logic of the Treaty provisions in respect of State aid.

74. The Treaty provisions in respect of State aid are laid down in accordance with a precise structure.

Article 92(1) lays down the principle of prohibiting State aid which is capable of distorting competition and affecting trade between Member States. However, the Treaty provides for several categories of exception to that principle. (59)

First, Article 77 of the Treaty provides, in the specific field of transport, that aid is to be compatible with the Treaty if it meets the needs of the coordination of transport or if it represents reimbursement for the discharge of certain obligations inherent in the concept of a public service.

Second, the provisions of Article 92(2) and (3) set out the categories of aid which shall be or may be considered to be compatible with the common market. Such is, in particular, the case of aid the purpose of which is cultural.

Finally, Article 90(2) of the Treaty establishes an exception in respect of undertakings entrusted with the operation of services of general economic interest. It provides that "[such] undertakings... shall be subject to the rules contained in this Treaty, in particular to the rules on competition, insofar as the application of such rules does not obstruct the performance, in law or in fact, of the particular tasks assigned to them. The development of trade must not be affected to such an extent as would be contrary to the interests of the Community" .

75. That said, I consider that Ferring essentially poses three areas of difficulty with respect to the Treaty provisions.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

76. First, the grounds in Ferring confuse, in my opinion, two questions which are legally distinct: the question of characterising a measure as State aid and the question of justification for a State measure.

77. The objective of Article 92 of the Treaty is to prevent trade between Member States being affected by advantages granted by the public authorities which distort or threaten to distort competition. (60) Having regard to that objective, the Court has ruled that Article 92(1) does not distinguish between the measures of State intervention by reference to their causes or their aims but defines them in relation to their effects. (61) Accordingly, neither the fiscal character, (62) nor the social aim, (63) nor the general objectives (64) of a measure can enable it to avoid being characterised as aid within the meaning of Article 92(1) of the Treaty.

It follows that the concept of aid is an objective one. As the Court of First Instance pointed out in SIC v Commission , (65) the characterisation of a measure as aid depends solely on the question of whether or not it confers an advantage on one or more undertakings. In any event, State intervention cannot be assessed in terms of the objective pursued by the public authorities. (66) Those objectives may be taken into consideration only at a later stage in the analysis to determine whether the State measure is justified under the derogations provided for in the Treaty.

78. In the instant case, it appears that Ferring has created confusion between those two questions. The fact that the reasoning in the judgment was separated into two parts would appear to be significant in that respect. The Court first held that the contested exemption was capable of constituting a State aid caught by the prohibition provided for in Article 92(1). (67) Subsequently, it excluded the characterisation of aid "on account of the specific public service obligations imposed on wholesale distributors" . (68) Consequently, it was only in the light of Article 92(1) that the Court considered the question whether the contested measure was caught by the prohibition on aid and whether it could be justified with regard to the objectives pursued by the French authorities. (69)

79. Second, I consider that Ferring is liable to deprive Article 90(2) of the Treaty of a substantial part of its effect.

80. Article 90(2) of the Treaty constitutes the central Treaty provision for reconciling Community objectives. (70) As the Court has held, that provision seeks to reconcile the Member States' interest in using certain undertakings as an instrument of economic, fiscal or social policy with the Community's interest in ensuring compliance with the rules on competition and the preservation of the unity of the common market. (71)

81. Under the terms of the Ferring judgment, it must be considered that:

where an advantage granted by the authorities of a Member State is inferior or equal to the costs of public service obligations, the advantage does not constitute aid within the meaning of Article 92(1) of the Treaty; (72)

however, where the advantage granted by the authorities of a Member State is greater than the costs of the public service obligations, the portion which exceeds those costs "cannot, in any event, be regarded as necessary to enable them to carry out the particular tasks assigned to them" . (73)

82. That means that, in the first case, Article 90(2) of the Treaty will not apply because the contested measure is not caught by the prohibition provided for in Article 92(1). However, nor will Article 90(2) apply in the second case because the part of the aid which exceeds the costs of the public service obligations does not come within the scope of application of that derogation. Thus, the Ferring judgment would appear to have deprived Article 90(2) of the Treaty of its effect in the field of State aid.

83. The same considerations apply to the provisions of Article 77 of the Treaty and the regulations adopted for the application thereof.

84. Article 77 of the Treaty constitutes a provision derogating from Article 92(1) of the Treaty. (74) It permits Member States to grant aid by way of reimbursement for the discharge of certain obligations inherent in the concept of a public service in the field of transport by land. (75) Furthermore, Regulation No 1191/69 defines the conditions under which Member States may grant aids to provide compensation for such obligations. One of the objectives pursued by that regulation is to ensure that States do not "overcompensate" the charges arising out of public service obligations. That is why Articles 10 to 13 of the Regulation provide for common methods of compensation.

On 4 June 1970, the Council adopted Regulation (EEC) No 1107/70 on the granting of aids for transport by rail, road and inland waterway. (76) That regulation stipulates the conditions under which Member States may impose obligations inherent in the concept of a public service which involve the granting of aid under Article 77 of the Treaty not covered by Regulation No 1191/69. (77)

85. If the reasoning expounded in Ferring is followed, subsidies which are limited to offsetting the cost of public service obligations must be deemed not to constitute aids within the meaning of Article 92(1). That means that, in the field of transport by land, it becomes in practice pointless to apply the provisions provided for in Article 77 of the Treaty and in Regulations Nos 1191/69 and 1107/70. The criteria established by Ferring would appear to be sufficient to assess the compatibility of aid granted to undertakings entrusted with operating a public transport service by land. In other words, it would appear that Ferring has rendered the provisions laid down in Article 77 of the Treaty and in Regulations Nos 1191/69 and 1107/70 inoperative.

86. It follows from the above considerations that the interpretation given in Ferring is capable of depriving Articles 90(2) and 77 of the Treaty of a substantial part of their effect. (78) It may be questioned whether Ferring has not introduced a much more flexible system in place of those provisions. It may be useful, at this point, to compare briefly the conditions laid down in Article 90(2) with those established in Ferring .

87. Article 90(2) of the Treaty sets out six conditions for application. (79) Those conditions seek, in essence, to ensure that:

the undertaking concerned has actually been entrusted with the task of operating a service of general economic interest by an express act of the public authority; (80)

the activities carried out by the undertaking in fact constitute a public service task in the sense that it is "of a general economic interest exhibiting special characteristics as compared with the general economic interest of other economic activities" ; (81)

application of the Treaty rules frustrates the performance of the particular task of the undertaking; (82) the specific task of the undertaking cannot be performed by measures which are less restrictive of competition; (83)

the contested measure has no substantial effect on intra-Community trade. (84)

88. It follows from Ferring that a State measure may not be caught by Article 92(1) of the Treaty where it fulfils two conditions. It is necessary that (1) national legislation should impose public service obligations on the recipient undertakings (85) and that (2) the amount of the aid should not exceed the costs incurred by the public service obligations. (86)

89. In those circumstances, the system introduced by Ferring is characterised by considerable flexibility compared to the control provided for in Article 90(2) of the Treaty. In particular, that system does not permit it to be determined, in accordance with the Court's case-law, (87) whether the obligations imposed on undertakings have a sufficient link with the subject-matter of the service of general interest and whether they are designed to make a direct contribution to satisfying that interest. Similarly, it does not permit it to be ascertained whether the obligations are specific to the undertaking concerned and defined in a sufficiently precise manner. (88)

Moreover, it is not certain that the "necessary equivalence" referred to in Ferring (89) is comparable to the requirement that the application of the Treaty rules must "frustrate" the performance of the undertaking's task and to the proportionality test provided for in Article 90(2). In any event, Ferring does not contain any condition relating to the effect on trade between Member States. However, that condition is important since it may lead to a refusal to apply the benefit of Article 90(2) on the ground that the contested measure affects intra-Community trade in a manner contrary to the Community interest. (90)

90. Consequently, I consider that the criteria set out in Ferring do not establish an adequate framework for controlling aid granted by the Member States to undertakings entrusted with a task of general public importance. That control must be carried out within the framework of the provisions established for that purpose by the Treaty, namely Articles 77, 90(2) and 92(3) of the Treaty.

91. The final difficulty relates to the fact that the reasoning expounded in Ferring effectively removes measures for financing public services from the Commission's control.

92. The Commission occupies a "central role" (91) in the implementation of the Treaty provisions concerning State aid. It carries out a preventive review of new aid and keeps existing aid under constant review. The Commission also enjoys exclusive competence for declaring aid compatible or incompatible with the common market with regard to Articles 92 and 93 of the Treaty. (92)

In Banco Exterior de España , (93) the Court held that the power of the Commission also covered aid granted to undertakings responsible for the management of services of general economic interest within the meaning of Article 90(2). Further, in Case C-332/98 France v Commission , (94) the Court held that aid intended for undertakings entrusted with a public service task were subject to the obligation of prior notification provided for in Article 93(3) of the Treaty. The Court thus rejected the idea that aid of that nature could be implemented by the Member States without waiting for the Commission's decision on compatibility. (95)

It should also be recalled that, by virtue of Article 90(3) of the Treaty, the Commission must fulfil a "duty of surveillance" over the Member States in their relations with public undertakings. (96) To that end, the Commission is empowered to adopt decisions and directives to specify the obligations arising from Article 90(1). (97) The Court held that the duty of surveillance was "essential" so as to allow the Commission "to ensure the application of the rules on competition and thus to contribute to the institution of a system of undistorted competition in the common market" . (98)

93. However, Ferring effectively removes measures for the financing of public services from the control exercised by the Commission by virtue of the abovementioned provisions.

Measures which offset the cost of public service obligations are no longer subject to the obligation of notification as provided for in Article 93(3) since they do not constitute aid within the meaning of Article 92(1). For the same reason, existing measures are no longer held under constant review by the Commission as provided for in Article 93(1) and (2). Further, those measures are not covered by the control established by Article 90(3) since they do not come within the scope of application of the Treaty rules in respect of competition. (99)

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

94. If that is the effect of Ferring , I consider that it will have considerable repercussions for the Commission's policy on State aid.

95. It should be recalled that, in recent years, the Commission has undertaken an extremely wide-ranging review of the policy to be adopted with regard to services of general interest. (100) In that context, in December 2000 the Nice European Council requested the Commission to draw up a report in response to certain concerns.

According to the European Council, "[a]pplication of internal market and competition rules should allow services of general economic interest to perform their tasks under conditions of legal certainty and economic viability.... There is a need here especially for clarification of the relationship between methods of funding services of general interest and the application of the rules on State aid. In particular, the compatibility of aid designed to offset the extra costs incurred in performing tasks of general economic interest should be recognised, in full compliance with Article 86(2)" . (101)

96. The Commission presented its report to the Laeken European Council. (102) It stated that financial compensation granted to the provider of a service of general interest constitutes an economic advantage within the meaning of Article 87(1) EC. (103) However, such compensation may qualify for an exemption under Article 87(2) and (3) EC or it may qualify for a derogation under Articles 73 and 86(2) EC. (104) As regards the latter provision, the Commission considers that the measure is justified if the amount of aid does not exceed the additional costs incurred by public service obligations.

In addition, the Commission committed itself to exploring ways in which it could increase legal certainty in the sphere of services of public interest. (105) To that end, it has begun studying, in close cooperation with the Member States, the possibility of adopting a regulation for the block exemption of certain State aids in the area of services of general public importance. It also committed itself to adopting a number of other measures to increase transparency.

97. However, the reasoning expounded in Ferring is likely to call into question the measures which the Commission and Member States are seeking to implement in the sector. By ruling that aid intended to offset the cost of public service obligations does not come within the Treaty rules governing State aids, the Sixth Chamber of the Court would appear to have rendered pointless the efforts taken by the competent authorities to define Community policy in the area of public sector financing.

98. I would therefore ask the Court to review the interpretation given in Ferring . I would suggest that the Court follow the reasoning expounded by the Court of First Instance in SIC v Commission , cited above, and rule that financial compensation granted to an undertaking to offset the cost of public service obligations constitutes aid within the meaning of Article 92(1) of the Treaty, without prejudice to the possibility of that measure being exempted under the derogations provided in the Treaty and, particularly, under Articles 77 and 90(2).

C The facts of the case in the main proceedings

99. Since I am proposing that the interpretation given in Ferring should be set aside, it falls to consider whether the subsidies granted by the administrative district of Stendal are caught by the prohibition provided for in Article 92(1) of the Treaty. To that end, it must be determined whether the contested subsidies fulfil the four conditions laid down by that article.

100. First, I would point out that, in accordance with settled case-law, the concept of aid covers the advantages granted by public authorities which, in various forms, mitigate the charges normally included in the budget of an undertaking. (106) In order to determine whether a State measure constitutes aid, it is necessary to establish whether the recipient undertaking receives an economic advantage which it would not have obtained under normal market conditions. (107)

101. In the instant case, it is apparent from the file (108) that the contested subsidies amount to DEM 0.75 per kilometre travelled on routes in the region of Stendal. It is also apparent from the file that Altmark receives those subsidies in addition to its revenue and receipts stemming from the statutory provisions on compensation in respect of tariffs and the organisation of transport. (109)

Accordingly, the contested subsidies constitute an advantage which Altmark would not have obtained under normal market conditions and which mitigate the charges included in its budget. Moreover, the parties to the main proceedings considered that: "[i]t is manifest that the subsidies granted by the administrative district of Stendal are aids within the meaning of Community law and there is no need to examine this aspect of the question in any depth" . (110)

Further, the contested subsidies constitute a "selective" advantage within the meaning of Article 92(1) of the Treaty (111) since only the holder of a licence to operate the services concerned receives such subsidies.

102. Second, the contested subsidies are granted through State resources within the meaning of Article 92(1) of the Treaty. (112) The Court has held that "aid granted by regional and local bodies of the Member States, whatever their status and description" was aid financed from public resources. (113) That is the situation in the present case since the administrative district of Stendal is a local authority of the Federal Republic of Germany.

103. Third, I consider that the subsidies are liable to distort competition in the market of local passenger services.

The concept of the distortion of competition is given an extremely broad interpretation in Article 92(1). (114) The Court considers that competition is distorted when financial aid granted by the State strengthens the competitive position of the recipient undertaking compared with other undertakings with which it is in competition. (115) As a general rule, it may be assumed that all public aid distorts or threatens to distort competition. (116)

In the instant case, the subsidies granted by the administrative district of Stendal strengthen the competitive position of Altmark compared with other undertakings which wish to offer passenger services in the region of Stendal. The facts giving rise to the case in the main proceedings indicate that, without public subsidies, Altmark would probably not be able to continue to operate the contested services. (117) Accordingly, the subsidies granted by the administrative district of Stendal effectively prevent competing undertakings from placing their services on the market.

104. The final condition in Article 92(1) is the subject of a specific question by the Bundesverwaltungsgericht. That court asks whether, in view of the regional character of the transport services concerned, the subsidies granted by the administrative district of Stendal are capable of affecting trade between Member States. (118) Further, it asks whether the reply to that question depends on the specific location and importance of the relevant local transport area. (119)

105. In their written observations, Altmark (120) and the Regierungspräsidium (121) maintained that the contested aid had no effect on trade between Member States. They explained that, in accordance with the provisions of German law, licensed undertakings are not authorised to offer transport services outside the territory covered by the licence. Consequently, subsidies granted to an undertaking operating services in the region of Stendal would not affect, in any way whatsoever, the position of undertakings located in neighbouring countries or regions. In any event, the parties to the main proceedings consider that the aid has no significant effect on trade between the Member States.

106. It is apparent from the case-law that the requirement of an effect on trade between Member States is easily satisfied. (122) The Court considers that when State financial aid strengthens the position of an undertaking compared with other undertakings competing in intra-Community trade the latter must be regarded as affected by that aid. (123)

In that respect, the fact that the recipient undertaking is not involved in exporting services does not preclude an effect on trade. Where a State grants aid to an undertaking, domestic production may for that reason be maintained or increased with the result that undertakings established in other Member States have less chance of exporting their products to the market in that Member State. (124) Further, the simple fact that no trade exists between Member States at the time the aid is granted does not mean that such aid is not covered by Article 92(1). Aid is liable to affect intra-Community trade if the prospect of such trade is foreseeable. (125)

107. However, in the instant case, it is apparent from the file that trade between Member States is not only foreseeable but also, to a certain extent, already exists.

In its written observations, (126) the Commission stated that, even though the sector of passenger transport by land was still not liberalised at the legal level, several Member States had begun, from 1995, to open their markets to undertakings established in other Member States. Such is the case in the Kingdom of Belgium, the Kingdom of Denmark, the Kingdom of Spain, the Republic of Finland, the French Republic, the Portuguese Republic, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Kingdom of Sweden. Such is also the case in the Federal Republic of Germany for transport operated as a public service given that, since 1996, those services have been covered by Regulation No 1191/69. Thus, the Commission cites several examples of undertakings which offer local or regional passenger transport services in Member States other than their country of origin. (127)

108. Accordingly, I consider that the local or regional character of the transport in question in the case in the main proceedings is not such as to exclude the contested subsidies from the field of application of Article 92(1).

109. The argument of the parties that the aid granted by the administrative district of Stendal has no significant effect on trade must also be rejected.

First, it should be recalled that, since Tubemeuse , (128) the Court has consistently held that "the relatively small amount of aid or the relatively small size of the undertaking which receives it does not ... exclude the possibility that intra-Community trade might be affected" . (129) Further, there does not exist in the Court's case-law any threshold or percentage below which it may be considered that trade between Member States is not affected. (130)

Second, it should be pointed out that Commission Notice 96/C 68/06 on the de minimis rule for State aids (131) does not apply to the transport sector. (132) That is also the case in the new regulation on de minimis aid. (133) The Commission considered that: "In view of the special rules which apply in the sectors of... transport, and of the risk that even small amounts of aid could fulfil the criteria of Article 87(1) of the Treaty in those sectors, it is appropriate that this Regulation should not apply to those sectors" . (134)

110. Accordingly, I propose that the Court should reply to the second question referred for a preliminary ruling that the subsidies granted by the authorities of a Member State to offset the cost of public service obligations imposed on an undertaking entrusted with operating a local or regional passenger service by land constitute State aid liable to be caught by the prohibition provided for in Article 92(1) of the Treaty.

VII Article 77 of the Treaty

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

111. The final question referred for a preliminary ruling concerns the provisions of Article 77 of the Treaty. The national court asks whether that article permits the authorities of a Member State to grant subsidies to offset the cost of public service obligations imposed on an undertaking operating a regional road passenger service without having regard to the provisions of Regulation No 1191/69.

112. As we have seen, (135) Article 77 of the Treaty has been implemented by specific regulations, including Regulations Nos 1191/69 and 1107/70.

113. At the hearing, the Commission claimed that Article 77 of the Treaty was sufficiently precise for it to be applied independently. It considers that, like Article 95 of the ECSC Treaty, that provision permits Member States to grant aid outside of those cases expressly referred to in secondary Community legislation. In such a case, the Member States would be required to give notification as provided for in Article 93(3) of the Treaty. (136)

114. In my opinion, the Commission's argument cannot be accepted.

115. In the preamble to Regulation No 1107/70, the Council recalled that common rules for compensation payments arising from the normalisation of the accounts of railway undertakings, and compensation in respect of financial burdens resulting from public service obligations in transport by land had been adopted respectively by Regulation (EEC) No 1192/69 (137) and Regulation No 1191/69. (138)

It considered that "it is therefore necessary to specify the cases and the circumstances in which Member States may take coordination measures or impose obligations inherent in the concept of a public service which involve the granting of aids under Article 77 of the Treaty not covered by the aforesaid Regulation" . (139)

Moreover, Article 3 of Regulation No 1107/70 provides that: "[w]ithout prejudice to the provisions of Council Regulation (EEC) No 1192/69 ... and of Council Regulation (EEC) No 1191/69... , Member states shall neither take coordination measures nor impose obligations inherent in the concept of a public service which involve the granting of aids pursuant to Article 77 of the Treaty except in the following circumstances ..." . (140)

116. It follows that, contrary to the Commission's contention, Member States are no longer authorised to rely on Article 77 of the Treaty outside those cases referred to by secondary Community law. Regulation No 1107/70 sets out an exhaustive list of the conditions under which the authorities of the Member States may grant aid under Article 77 of the Treaty outside those situations provided for in Regulations Nos 1191/69 and 1192/69.

117. In those circumstances, I propose that the Court reply to the final question referred that Article 77 of the Treaty does not permit the authorities of a Member State to grant aid in order to offset the cost of public service obligations in the field of passenger transport by land without having regard to secondary Community legislation and, in particular, Regulations Nos 1191/69 and 1107/70.

118. It is apparent from the order for reference and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling that, in the instant case, the Bundesverwaltungsgericht wishes to know whether Community law permits the German authorities to grant aid to an undertaking operating a regional public passenger service without complying with the conditions laid down by Regulation No 1191/69. In order to give a helpful reply to the national court, it is therefore appropriate for me to continue my reasoning and examine whether Regulation No 1107/70 authorises the granting of such subsidies.

119. In that respect, the relevant provisions are those set out in Article 3(2) of Regulation No 1107/70. That article provides:

"Without prejudice to... Regulation (EEC) No 1191/69,... Member States shall... [not] impose obligations inherent in the concept of a public service which involve the funding of aids pursuant to Article 77 of the Treaty except... until the entry into force of relevant Community rules, where payments are made to rail, road or inland waterway transport undertakings as compensation for public service obligations imposed on them by the State or public authorities and covering either:

tariff obligations not falling within the definition given in Article 2(5) of Regulation (EEC) No 1191/69; or transport undertakings or activities to which that Regulation does not apply.

120. Article 3(2) of Regulation No 1107/70 therefore authorises Member States to grant aid under Article 77 of the Treaty where, on the one hand, the recipient undertakings or the transport activities concerned are excluded from the scope of application of Regulation No 1191/69 and where, on the other hand, no Community regulation specifically concerning the sector in question yet exists.

121. In my opinion, both those conditions are satisfied in the instant case. On the one hand, it has been shown that in Germany regional passenger transport services operated commercially are excluded from the scope of Regulation No 1191/69. On the other hand, with the exception of that Regulation, there does not currently exist any Community regulation specifically concerning public road passenger services.

122. Accordingly, I consider that Regulation No 1107/70 permits the authorities of Member States to grant, under Article 77 of the Treaty, aid to offset the cost of public service obligations which they impose on undertakings operating a regional road passenger service.

123. However, the attention of the national court should be drawn to the requirements laid down in Article 5 of Regulation No 1107/70 and in the Court's case-law.

Article 5 of Regulation No 1107/70 provides that Member States, in accordance with Article 93(3) of the Treaty, are required to inform the Commission of any plans to grant or alter aid and shall forward to the Commission "all information necessary to [enable it to] establish that such aid complies with the provisions of this Regulation" .

Moreover, the Court has held that "the effect of Article 77 of the Treaty, which acknowledges that aid to transport is compatible with the Treaty only in well-defined cases which do not jeopardise the general interests of the Community, cannot be to exempt aid to transport from the general system of the Treaty concerning aid granted by the States and from the controls and procedures laid down therein" . (141)

124. It follows that the authorities of the Member States can grant aid under Regulation No 1107/70 only if they have given prior notification of their plan to the Commission and obtained from the Commission a decision declaring the aid to be compatible with the common market.

125. In the present case, it is for the Bundesverwaltungsgericht to establish whether the subsidies granted by the competent authorities fulfil the conditions of Article 92(1) of the Treaty. If so, the national court must also ensure that the aid has been notified to the Commission in accordance with Article 93(3) of the Treaty and has not been implemented without prior authorisation.

If that is not the case, the national court must, pursuant to the Court's case-law, (142) guarantee that all the appropriate inferences will be drawn from the infringement in accordance with its national law. (143) Those inferences imply that the national court will, where necessary; order the recovery of the contested aid; (144)

declare unlawful the act instituting the contested aid and the measures implementing it; (145) order the competent public authorities to compensate for the damage that the payment of aid may possibly have caused (146) to its recipient (147) and to the recipient's competitors. (148)

126. In consequence, the reply to be given to the Bundesverwaltungsgericht must be that Article 77 of the Treaty does not permit the authorities of a Member State to grant subsidies to offset the cost of the public service obligations which they impose on an undertaking operating a regional road passenger service without complying with the conditions laid down by Regulation No 1191/69 or , failing that, the conditions laid down by Regulation No 1107/70.

VII Conclusion

127. In light of the preceding considerations, I therefore propose that the Court answer the three questions referred by the Bundesverwaltungsgericht as follows:

(1) Article 1(1) of Council Regulation (EEC) No 1191/69 of 26 June 1969 on action by the Member States concerning the obligations inherent in the concept of a public service in transport by rail, road and inland waterway, as amended by Council Regulation (EEC) No 1893/91 of 20 June 1991 does not preclude, following its entry into force, a Member State adopting a legislative measure for the purpose of limiting the exclusion of that regulation to a specific category of regional passenger services by land, such as those services operated commercially within the meaning of Paragraphs 8(4) and 13 of the Personenbeförderungsgesetz (Law on Passenger Transport by land).

(2) Subsidies granted by the authorities of a Member State to offset the cost of public service obligations imposed on an undertaking entrusted with operating a local or regional passenger service by land constitute State aid liable to be caught by the prohibition provided for in Article 92(1) of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 87(1) EC). In that respect, the relatively small amount of aid or the relatively small size of the undertaking which receives it does not, a priori, exclude the possibility that intra- Community trade might be affected within the meaning of that provision.

(3) Article 77 of the EC Treaty (now Article 73 EC) does not permit the authorities of a Member State to adopt measures authorising the granting of subsidies to offset the cost of the public service obligations which they impose on an undertaking operating a regional road passenger service without complying with the provisions of Regulation No 1191/69 or, failing that, the provisions of Council Regulation No 1107/70 of 4 June 1970 on the granting of aids for transport by rail, road and inland waterway.

(24) During the oral procedure, the Commission contended that Regulation No 1191/69 provided for "optional" harmonisation in the sector. Member States wishing to impose public service obligations were free to decide whether or not to apply the Regulation. The Commission did not state whether its contention was concerned solely with transport referred to in the second subparagraph of Article 1(1) of the Regulation or whether it covered all transport within the scope of application of the Regulation. In the latter case, I consider that the Commission's contention would be contrary to the objectives of Regulation No 1191/69. That Regulation seeks to eliminate the disparities arising out of public service obligations which the Member States impose on transport undertakings and which are capable of distorting competition (see the first recital of the Regulation and Council Decision 65/271/EEC of 13 May 1965 on the harmonisation of certain provisions affecting competition in transport by rail, road and inland waterway (OJ, English Special Edition 1965-1966, p. 67)). The attainment of those objectives would be seriously compromised if, for transport coming within the scope of the Regulation, Member States were able to impose public service obligations without regard to the provisions of the Regulation. If that were the case, they would reintroduce the distortions in competition which the Regulation specifically seeks to eliminate. Moreover, it would be difficult to reconcile the Commission's contention with the 15th recital of the Regulation which provides: "[w]hereas the provisions of this Regulation should be applied to any new public obligation as defined in this Regulation imposed on a transport undertaking" . Finally, the Commission's contention would be contrary to Article 189 of the EC Treaty (now Article 249 EC) as that provides that regulations are binding in their entirety and are directly applicable in all Member States.

(75) Article 77 of the Treaty provides that "aids shall be compatible with this Treaty... if they represent reimbursement for the discharge of certain obligations inherent in the concept of a public service" . At this point, it may already be noted that the rule in Ferring is difficult to reconcile with the wording of that provision. Had the authors of the Treaty considered that the subsidies provided to offset the cost of public service obligations were not aid within the meaning of Article 92(1), they would probably not have deemed it appropriate to insert an express provision declaring them compatible with the Treaty. It therefore seems that, contrary to the principle raised in the Ferring judgment, the intention of the authors of the Treaty was to bring aid to offset the cost of public service obligations within the scope of the prohibition contained in Article 92(1) of the Treaty, even where that aid does not exceed the costs incurred by the performance of public service obligations.

(98) Joined Cases C-48/90 and C-66/90 Netherlands and Others v Commission [1992] ECR I-565, paragraph 29.

(99) It is true that, by virtue of Ferring , measures which "overcompensate" the cost of public service obligations must be notified to the Commission. However, it seems that that obligation will rapidly become theoretical since, under the terms of the Ferring judgment (paragraph 32), the portion of aid which exceeds the cost of the public service obligations cannot, in any event, be justified with regard to Article 90(2) of the Treaty.

(100) See, for example, Commission Communication 96/C 281/03 on services of general interest in Europe (OJ 1996 C 281, p. 3) and Communication 2001/C 17/04, cited above.

It will be noted that, in the spirit of the Nice European Council, it is clear that State measures intended to offset the cost of public service obligations with regard to undertakings constitute State aids within the meaning of Article 92(1) of the Treaty, which may be justified under the provisions of Article 90(2) of the Treaty.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Léger delivered on 13 June 2002 Commission of the European Communities v Kingdom of Spain. Failure of a State to fulfil obligations - Directive 89/665/EEC - Review procedures in the field of public procurement - Transposition - Definition of contracting authority - Body governed by public law - Reviewable measures - Interim measures. Case C-214/00.

1. By this action, the Commission of the European Communities seeks a declaration that the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 1 and 2 of Directive 89/665/EEC. (2) It claims, in essence, that Spain has failed to transpose those articles correctly and completely into national law, because the national implementing measures preclude:

a priori from their field of application public bodies governed by private law; review of certain decisions adopted by the contracting authorities during the procedure for the award of public contracts, and the possibility of all types of appropriate interim measures being granted in relation to decisions adopted by the contracting authorities, by requiring that an action must first be brought against the unlawful measure.

I Legal framework

Community legislation

2. The aim of Directive 89/665 is to ensure the effective application of the Directives on public procurement, (3) in particular of Directive 71/305/EEC, (4) repealed and replaced by Directive 93/37/EEC, (5) of Directive 77/62/EEC, (6) repealed and replaced by Directive 93/36/EEC, (7) and of Directive 92/50/EEC. (8) Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 are designed to coordinate procedures for the award of public contracts for works, supplies and services in the Member States.

3. Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Article 41 of Directive 92/50, provides:

> "The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the provisions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, Article 2(7), [(9)] on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

4. Article 2(1) of the review directive states:

> "The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:
>
> (a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;
> (b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;
> (c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

5. Under Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665, "[w]here bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character, written reasons for their decisions shall always be given. Furthermore, in such a case, provision must be made to guarantee procedures whereby any allegedly illegal measure taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of judicial review...."

6. The term "contracting authorities" is defined in Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37.

7. Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, which is essentially identical in content to Article 1(b) of Directives 92/50 and 93/36, provides:

" "contracting authorities" shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

A "body governed by public law" means any body:

established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

having legal personality, and financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law.

National legislation

8. The scope ratione personae of the Spanish legislation on public procurement is established by Article 1 of Ley 13/1995 de Contratos de las Administraciones Publicas, (10) which covers all territorial public authorities, whether the State authorities or the authorities of the Autonomous Communities and regional or local authorities. Article 1(3) provides:

"This law shall also apply in every case to the awarding of contracts by autonomous bodies and by other bodies governed by public law having legal personality and connected with or under the control of a public authority, which fulfil the following criteria:

(a) they were established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character;

(b) they are financed, for the most part, by public authorities or other bodies governed by public law, or are subject to management supervision by those bodies, or have an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by public authority or by other bodies governed by public law.

9. The sixth additional provision of Law 13/1995, entitled "Rules applicable to the award of contracts in the public sector" , reads as follows:

"Commercial companies in which public administrations or their autonomous bodies, or bodies governed by public law, hold, directly or indirectly, a majority shareholding, shall, when awarding contracts, comply with the advertising and competition rules, unless the nature of the operation to be carried out is incompatible with those rules."

10. Since the present action was lodged, the Kingdom of Spain has adopted a new consolidated version of the aforementioned law, (11) which merely brings together and organises the previous provisions, without amending their substance.

11. As regards administrative appeals, Article 107 of Ley 30/1992 de Régimen Jurídico de las Administraciones Publicas y del Procedimiento Administrativo Comun, as amended by Ley 4/1999, (12) provides that the following measures are subject to direct appeal:

> "... procedural measures, if they decide, directly or indirectly, the substantive issues, render it impossible to continue the procedure, render it impossible to conduct a defence, or cause irreparable harm to legitimate rights or interests."

12. So far as concerns administrative appeal proceedings, Article 25(1) of Ley 29/1998 Reguladora de la Jurisdiccion Contencioso-Administrativa (13) (Law governing contentious-administrative jurisdiction), using the same wording as Law 30/1992, provides:

> "Administrative appeal proceedings are admissible in respect of provisions of a general nature and express and implicit measures, whether definitive or procedural, adopted by the public authority which bring an end to the administrative procedure, if they decide, directly or indirectly, the substantive issues, render it impossible to continue the procedure, render it impossible to conduct a defence, or cause irreparable harm to legitimate rights or interests."

13. Article 111 of Law 30/1992, provides, under the heading "Suspension of operation" :

> "1. Unless otherwise provided, the commencement of an action will not suspend the operation of the contested measure.
> 2. Notwithstanding the provisions of the previous paragraph, the body responsible for carrying out review may, having weighed up the harm which suspension would cause the public interest or third parties as against the harm caused to the applicant by the immediate implementation of the contested measure, and given adequate reasons, suspend operation of the contested measure, on its own initiative or at the request of the applicant, in one of the following circumstances:
> (a) Operation is likely to cause harm which is irreparable or reparable only with difficulty.
> (b) The dispute is based on one of the legal grounds for automatic nullity ... .
> 3. If the competent authority has not given an express decision on the application for suspension of operation of the contested measure within a period of 30 days from the date on which the application was entered in the case-list, suspension will be deemed to have been granted.

14. Article 129 et seq. of Law 29/1998 establish a system for the expeditious adoption of protective measures. Under Article 129(1):

> "The parties concerned may request, at any stage of the proceedings, the adoption of any measures to ensure the effectiveness of the judgment to be given."

15. Article 136 of the law provides:

> "1. In the circumstances referred to in Articles 29 and 30, a protective measure shall be adopted, unless it is evident that the criteria laid down in those articles are not fulfilled or that the measure will seriously affect the general interest or the interests of third parties, which the court shall assess in detail.
> 2. In the circumstances mentioned in the previous paragraph, measures may also be applied for before the appeal is lodged, and the application shall be examined in accordance with the provisions of the previous article. In that event, the party concerned shall request confirmation of the measures when he lodges the appeal, which he is required to do within 10 days from the date of notification of the adoption of the protective measures....

If no appeal ensues, the measures granted will be automatically void, and the applicant will be required to pay compensation for the damage caused by the protective measure.

16. Articles 29 and 30 of Law 29/1998 apply to: (a) cases in which the authority is required, pursuant to a provision, a contract or a measure, to provide a particular service to one or more specific persons; (b) cases in which the authority does not implement its definitive measures, or (c) blatantly unlawful conduct.

II Procedure

A The pre-litigation stage

17. By letter of 18 December 1991, the Spanish Government notified the Commission of the legislation in force at the time which it considered transposed Directive 89/665 into national law, namely the Ley reguladora de la Jurisdiccion Contencioso-Administrativo (Law governing administrative courts) of 27 December 1956, the Ley de Procedimiento Administrativo (Law governing administrative procedure) of 18 July 1958, the Ley de Contratos del Estado (Law on public procurement) and the Spanish Constitution.

18. Following various exchanges during 1994 between the Commission's departments and the Spanish authorities regarding the compliance of the national legislation with the Community provisions, on 29 May 1996 the Commission, considering that the replies given by the Spanish authorities were unsatisfactory, sent the Spanish Government a letter of formal notice.

19. In that letter, the Commission makes the following complaints about the Spanish transposition measures:

their scope ratione personae is not the same as that of the review directive;

"procedural" measures are subject to direct appeal only in exceptional circumstances, and an appeal on the merits must first be brought against an unlawful administrative measure before suspension can be granted.

20. On 9 October 1996, in reply to the letter of formal notice, the Spanish Government pointed out, with regard to the first point, that Law 13/1995 contained a literal transcription of the term "body governed by public law" referred to in Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37. As regards the two other points, it reiterated the circumstances in which a procedural measure may be subject to direct appeal and stressed the legal requirement that an action must first be brought against the unlawful decision before that decision may be suspended.

21. In spite of the various exchanges which took place during 1998, the Spanish authorities and the Commission maintained their respective positions in respect of the first and third complaints relating to scope of application and to interim measures. With regard to the second complaint, which alleged that the notion of renewable measures had been incorrectly transposed, the authorities informed the Commission, on 14 January 1999, that the new law on administrative courts partly amended the rules applicable to procedural measures.

22. On 2 February 1999, the Spanish authorities sent the Commission official notification of Laws 29/1998 and 4/1999.

23. The Commission considered that the new legislation still did not enable it to conclude that the Kingdom of Spain had put an end to the infringements alleged in the letter of formal notice and, on 25 August 1999, sent it a reasoned opinion. In that opinion, the Commission repeated the content of the letter of formal notice and invited the Spanish Government to adopt the measures necessary to comply with it within two months of the date of its notification.

24. On 8 November 1999, in reply to the reasoned opinion, the Spanish Government denied the alleged infringements and disputed the Commission's assessment.

25. The Commission considered that the reply given did not enable it to conclude that the Kingdom of Spain had complied with its obligations under the review directive and decided to bring the present action.

B Forms of order sought by the parties

26. The Commission's action was lodged at the Registry of the Court of Justice on 30 May 2000.

27. The Commission claims that the Court should:

"1. Declare that, by failing to adopt the measures needed to comply with Articles 1 and 2 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, and in particular by failing to:

extend the system of review procedures provided for by that directive to decisions adopted by all contracting authorities, within the meaning of Article 1(1) of Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EC and 93/37/EC, including companies governed by private law established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest which do not have an industrial or commercial character, have legal personality, and are financed for the most part by public authorities or other entities governed by public law, or are subject to management supervision by the latter, or have an administrative, management or supervisory board more than half of whose members are appointed by the public authorities or other entities governed by public law;

allow review to be sought of all decisions adopted by the contracting authorities, including all procedural measures, during the procedure for the award of public contracts;

provide for the possibility of appropriate interim measures being granted in relation to decisions adopted by the contracting authorities, including measures aimed at enabling administrative decisions to be suspended, removing for that purpose difficulties and obstacles of any type and in particular the need first to bring an action against the decision of the contracting authority, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Community law;

2. Order the Kingdom of Spain to pay the costs.

28. The Kingdom of Spain contends that the Court should:

" Dismiss the action;

Order the Commission to pay the costs.

III The first plea, concerning the incorrect transposition of the scope ratione personae of the review directive (infringement of Article 1(1) of the directive)

A Arguments of the parties

1. The Commission's arguments

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

29. The Commission alleges that the Kingdom of Spain was wrong to consider that entities governed by private law were excluded a priori from the scope ratione personae of the review directive.

30. The Commission points out that, when transposing Community directives into national law, the Member States are required to respect the meaning of the terms and definitions contained in them, in order to ensure uniform interpretation and implementation of the legislation in the different Member States.

31. Consequently, the Spanish authorities are required to give the term "body governed by public law" , used in the procedure directives, the meaning that it has in Community law. According to the Commission, Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 make no mention of the regime, public or private, under which the bodies governed by public law were set up, nor the legal form adopted, but focus rather on other criteria, including the purpose for which the bodies in question were created. That interpretation was confirmed in the judgment in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others . (14) In that case, the Court of Justice held that the expression must be interpreted in functional terms. Therefore, the legal form of an entity is irrelevant.

32. The Commission maintains that the wording of Article 1 of Law 13/1995, which reproduces almost verbatim the content of the corresponding provisions of the procedure directives, nevertheless contains one essential difference. Under the provision, entities governed by private law are excluded from the field of application of that law. In that regard, the Commission states that, in the Spanish legal system, the term "body governed by public law" is linked to the method by which those entities are set up. It therefore infers that Law 13/1995, read in conjunction with its sixth additional provision, adds a prerequisite which is not provided for in the Community legislation, namely that the entity should be governed by public law. Consequently, entities governed by private law are, by definition, always excluded from the scope of application of that law, even if they otherwise comply with the provisions of Article 1(3) of the Law in every respect.

33. Since public bodies incorporated under private law are excluded from the scope of that Spanish legislation, they likewise fall outside the scope of the provisions governing the procedures for awarding public contracts and, therefore, of the review procedures relating to public contracts, whether they were set up to meet needs of general interest or purely industrial or commercial needs. That exclusion therefore infringes the provisions of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 which define their scope, and also the provisions of Directive 89/665, since it precludes the application of the procedural safeguards provided by that directive.

34. As regards the Spanish Government's argument that the solution to the problems of interpretation regarding the term "needs in the general interest which are not of an industrial or commercial character" requires a detailed case-by-case assessment, in order to determine whether a body or an entity complies with the conditions for applicability of the directives, the Commission points out that those problems cannot provide a reason for excluding a priori, as that Government has done, a whole group of bodies entities governed by private law which fulfil the three conditions laid down by Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 from the scope of Directive 89/665, even if that exclusion is subject to a case-by-case review.

2. The arguments of the Kingdom of Spain

35. As its principal argument, the Spanish Government states that the Commission's action is ill-founded and therefore that it is wrong to maintain that the term "contracting authorities" contained in Article 1 of the review directive has been incorrectly transposed into the Spanish legal system.

36. According to the Spanish Government, the Commission, although formally complaining that it has infringed the provisions of Article 1 of the review directive, is in fact complaining that Article 1 of the procedure directives has been incorrectly transposed. However, since it has failed to bring the matter of the infringement of those provisions before the Court of Justice, the Commission has forfeited the possibility of obtaining a decision from the Court on that point. The Spanish Government maintains, therefore, that it is for the Commission to bring more suitable proceedings, and consequently to initiate a different form of procedure to establish the infringement of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 if it intends to proceed against the Kingdom of Spain for incorrectly transposing their scope ratione personae .

37. In any event, the Spanish Government maintains that Article 1 of the procedure directives is irrelevant to an interpretation of the term "contracting authorities" contained in Article 1 of the review directive, for two reasons. First, the review and procedure directives do not have the same subject-matter. Secondly, they take effect at different stages in the procedure of awarding public contracts. Directive 89/665 provides expressly that Member States must introduce efficient and rapid review procedures in the event of infringement of the rules contained in the directives concerning public procurement procedures. Directive 89/665 therefore takes effect after the procedure directives. The term "contracting authorities" contained in Directive 89/665 cannot, therefore, be interpreted in the light of the term "body governed by public law" previously defined in the procedure directives.

38. In the alternative, the Spanish Government contends that the scope ratione personae of the procedure directives has been correctly transposed.

39. As regards, first of all, the interpretation of the applicable rules, the Spanish Government points out that the expression "body governed by public law" , which is used in the procedure directives, refers to an entity governed by public law and that, in Spain, the terms "entity governed by public law" and "body governed by public law" are used indiscriminately.

40. The term "body governed by public law" does not lend itself to a general autonomous definition.

41. The Spanish Government accordingly states that, in Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, the term "body governed by public law" does not include commercial companies under public control. It submits that the fact that Directive 93/38/EEC (15) concerning public procurement in particular sectors makes a distinction between the term "body governed by public law" , which is the same in the four directives, and the term "public undertaking" , the definition of which corresponds to that of "public commercial company" , shows that there are two distinct concepts. The Spanish Government considers that commercial companies with mostly publicly-held capital are covered by the term "public undertaking" to which only Directive 93/38 applies. Those companies can never fall within the scope of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 since the term "public undertaking" appears only in Directive 93/38 although it could also have appeared in the other two directives adopted on the same day (namely Directives 93/36 and 93/37) if the legislature had so wished.

42. The Spanish Government also points out that, in order to define the term "body governed by public law" , it is first necessary to specify the commercial or industrial nature of the "need in the general interest" which it is designed to meet. It states that, in the Spanish legal system, public commercial companies have, in principle, the task of meeting needs in the general interest, which explains why they are under public control. However, those needs are of a commercial and industrial character, because, if that were not the case, they would not be the subject of a commercial company. In other words, in Spain, the legal form of the entity is crucial in determining the rules applicable to its activity. Thus, in Spain, a public entity, incorporated in public form, is governed by public law. On the other hand, a private entity, incorporated in private form, is governed by private law. It cannot be regarded as a body governed by public law and, in principle, is not covered by the rules governing public procurement.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

43. Since the interpretation of the term "body governed by public law" is not uniform in the various Member States, the Spanish Government considers that it is not possible to provide an overall definitive solution to determine the scope ratione personae of the procedure and review directives. It submits that, on the contrary, it is necessary to consider each specific case and, in particular, the context in which it evolves. The Spanish Government therefore concludes that, in order to determine whether or not a body or entity fulfils the conditions which would bring it within the scope ratione personae of the Community directives, each case must be examined separately.

B Assessment

44. It is apparent from Article 1 of Law 30/1992, read in conjunction with its sixth additional provision, that public bodies incorporated under private law are, in principle, excluded from the rules governing public procurement.

45. However, the wording of Article 1(1) of the review directive and also its objectives preclude a body's legal form and regime as a private entity being such as to exclude it from the scope ratione personae of the review directive.

46. Article 1(1) of the review directive expressly provides that the term "contracting authorities" is defined by reference to the scope of the procedure directives as established in Article 1(b) of those directives.

47. Article 1(1) of the review directive provides:

> "The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives [92/50, 93/36 and 93/37], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles... on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law."

48. That article thus states, in substance, that the decisions of the contracting authorities must be subject to effective and rapid review. It does not directly define the term "contracting authorities" but refers especially to the provisions relating to the scope of the directives governing public procurement procedures in the "traditional" sectors, as opposed to "special" sectors. (16) The procurement procedures for entities operating in special sectors are set out in Directive 90/531/EEC, (17) repealed and replaced by Directive 93/38. Directive 92/13/EEC (18) was especially (19) adopted in order to establish procedures for appeals against decisions taken by the contracting authorities pursuant to Directive 93/38. It adapts to the public utility sectors the appeal remedies provided for the traditional sectors by Directive 89/665 and also provides specific grounds of appeal. (20)

49. The scope of the review directive is therefore clearly restricted to the scope of the procedure directives operating in the "traditional" sectors. In consequence, the rules laid down in Directive 89/665 do not concern the appeal proceedings brought against decisions adopted by contracting authorities pursuant to Directive 93/38. The Spanish Government's argument that the distinction made in Directive 93/38 between the terms "contracting authorities" and "public undertaking" supports the conclusion that it is impossible to give the term "contracting authorities" contained in Article 1(1) of the review directive an independent definition is therefore irrelevant.

50. It follows from the above that the term "contracting authorities" contained in Article 1(1) of the review directive must be evaluated in the light of Article 1(b) of the procedure directives which define the scope ratione personae of those directives.

51. The objective of the review directive confirms the wording of Article 1(1), and thus the close link between that directive and the procedure directives.

52. It is clear, in fact, from the first, third and fourth recitals of the review directive, that the objective of Directive 89/665 is to establish grounds for effective and rapid review of decisions taken by contracting authorities pursuant to directives on public contracts for works, supplies and services, in order to ensure the effective application of the procedure directives.

53. The fact that the scope of the review directive and that of the procedure directives adopted previously are identical also justifies the use of a legislative technique which makes it possible to avoid needlessly overloading a provision, thereby rendering it easier to comprehend. A shared term for the same subject, such as public works, already defined in previous directives, may be explained by express reference to the relevant provisions of the directives adopted earlier, and that legislative technique cannot be criticised for not fulfilling the requirements of clarity and legal certainty.

54. It is apparent from the foregoing arguments that the term "contracting authorities" contained in Article 1 of the review directive is defined in Article 1(b) of the procedure directives. It remains to define what is meant by that term.

55. Under Article 1(b) of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 contracting authorities are:

> "... the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

Body governed by public law means any body:

established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

having legal personality and financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law

56. In respect of that definition, the Court has consistently held (21) that "... "contracting authority" , including a body governed by public law, must be interpreted in functional terms.

> " (22)

57. The Court has also invariably held that "a body governed by public law" means a body which satisfies the three cumulative conditions set out in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the procedure directives. (23)

58. Furthermore, according to the Court, the third condition set out in the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the procedure directives lists the alternative conditions which each reflect the close dependency of a body on the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law. (24)

59. It is in the light of that case-law that the Court assesses whether or not a body should be classified as a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of the procedure directives.

In Commission v France , cited above, the French Republic prevented "sociétés anonymes d'habitations à loyer modéré" (low-rent housing corporations), (25) falling within the scope of Article L. 411-1 et seq. of the French Construction and Housing Code, from being classified as bodies governed by public law, within the meaning of Directive 93/37. Although it accepted that SA HLMs definitely satisfied the first two conditions, it contended that they did not fulfil the third condition set out in the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive, since they did not have sufficiently close links with the public authorities to allow the latter to influence their decisions in relation to public contracts. Consequently, the French Government maintained that SA HLMs could not be regarded as contracting authorities and that, therefore, the procedures for awarding public works contracts were not applicable to them.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

61. The Court did not focus on the legal form and regime of those bodies covered by private law, but assessed whether the three cumulative conditions set out in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 were fulfilled. In that regard, it considered, unlike the French Government, that the third condition was also fulfilled since the management of SA HLMs was subject to supervision by the public authorities which allowed the latter to influence the decisions of the SA HLMs in relation to public contracts. (26)

62. Similarly, in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria , cited above, the Court held that an entity such as the Osterreichische Staatsdruckerei (OS) should be classified as a body governed by public law and, consequently, as a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37. The Court noted, however, that under the law which had created it, that entity had the status of a trader within the meaning of the Commercial Code, was listed in the Register of Companies of the Commercial Court of Vienna, Austria and carried on its activities in accordance with the rules governing commerce.

63. In the same way, in BFI Holding , (27) the Court held that ARA, a limited company incorporated in accordance with private law, to which the Municipalities of Arnhem and Rheden (Netherlands) had decided to entrust tasks in the field of waste collection and cleaning of the municipal road network, could fall within the scope of the term "body governed by public law" and, in consequence, be regarded as a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, if it fulfilled the conditions laid down in that provision. In that judgment, the Court stated that "the wording of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 makes no reference to the legal basis of the activities of the entity concerned" (28) and that, "with a view to giving full effect to the principle of freedom of movement, the term "contracting authority" must be interpreted in functional terms.... In view of that need, no distinction should be drawn by reference to the legal form of the provisions setting up the entity and specifying the needs which it is to meet.

" (29)

64. It is apparent from the above that bodies, entities and undertakings (30) which fall within the scope of the procedure directives are concerned by the review directive. In other words, those bodies must be regarded as contracting parties within the meaning of Article 1(1) of the review directive, if they fulfil the three cumulative conditions set out in Article 1(b) of the procedure directives. In that regard, it should be pointed out that, under Article 1(b) of the procedure directives, the legal form and regime of a body is not one of the criteria for classifying that body as a body governed by public law or as a contracting authority.

65. I therefore consider that the Spanish legislation transposing the review directive, by excluding a priori from the scope ratione personae of that directive bodies whose legal form and regime fall under by private law, is not complying with the meaning of "contracting authority" laid down in Article 1 of the review directive and defined in the directives on public procurement procedures, particularly in Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

66. From all the foregoing considerations I conclude that, by failing to extend the system of review procedures provided for by Directive 89/665 to decisions adopted by contracting authorities, within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, incorporated as private-law companies, which fulfil the conditions set out in that article, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 1 and 2 of Directive 89/665.

IV The second plea, alleging that the term "measures against which appeals can be brought" has been incorrectly transposed (infringement of Article 1(1) and Article 2(1) of the review directive)

A Arguments of the parties

1. The Commission's arguments

67. The Commission complains that the Kingdom of Spain limits the possibility of challenging certain decisions taken by the contracting authorities, particularly certain procedural measures.

68. The Commission points out that Directive 89/665 does not provide for any derogation from the possibility of challenging an unlawful decision taken by contracting authorities. Accordingly, it argues that, since the Spanish review provisions preclude the possibility of challenging certain unlawful decisions taken by contracting authorities, the scope of Directive 89/665 has been improperly reduced. The Commission points out that the Court of Justice, in its judgment in Alcatel Austria and Others , (31) held that it is clear from Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 that the subject-matter of those review procedures will be decisions taken by the contracting authorities, on the ground that they infringe Community law on public procurement or the national rules transposing it, and that the provision does not lay down any restriction with regard to the nature and content of those decisions.

69. The relevant Spanish provisions (namely, Article 107 of Law 30/1992 and Article 25(1) of Law 29/1998) limit the possibility of bringing actions challenging procedural measures, that is to say, administrative measures which do not bring an administrative procedure to an end.

70. In support of that view, the Commission refers to two types of procedural measure which, contrary to the provisions of the review directive, are not subject to appeal.

71. The first example refers to a decision given by the Tribunal Supremo (Supreme Court) (Spain) concerning the request for additional documentation. According to the Commission, the request for production of additional documents made to a company competing in a tender procedure can be challenged only if the undertaking concerned is excluded from the procedure because it has not produced the additional documents requested. The Commission argues that that undertaking, even if it is not excluded from the procedure, could still be put in a weak position in relation to the other undertakings competing. That is why the Commission considers that the request for production of additional documents should itself be subject to appeal.

72. The second example relates to proposals for awards from committees which are subject to the control of the contracting authority. According to the Commission, the proposals put forward by those committees entrusted by the contracting authority with the preparation of the award document cannot be challenged, in infringement of the review directive.

73. The Commission concludes that the Spanish transposition legislation excludes from any judicial review certain decisions taken by the contracting authority on account of their nature and content. By so doing, it infringes the provisions of Article 1 of the review directive.

2. The arguments of the Kingdom of Spain

74. The Kingdom of Spain disputes that plea on the ground that the Commission has not established the existence of an infringement. It submits that the measures to which the Commission refers cannot be regarded as open to appeal because they do not have an adverse effect or are not preparatory measures. It states that Articles 1 and 2 of the review directive expressly provide that only decisions which have an adverse effect may be subject to appeal. The case-law cited by the Commission does not contradict that. The judgment in Alcatel Austria and Others , cited above, is therefore irrelevant in the present case.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

75. The Spanish Government claims that the Commission's position fails to take account of the meaning of the term "procedural measure" in Spanish law.

76. Under Spanish law, by definition, a procedural measure does not result in harm to the party concerned but, at the very most, prepares a definitive decision which will be favourable or unfavourable to him. Thus, a procedural measure does not involve adopting a position, but forms part of a procedure initiated in order to prepare a decision. The Spanish Government states that if a measure which is ostensibly a procedural measure in itself involved adopting a position, it would cease to be a procedural measure in the strict sense and would be open to appeal. Indeed, if that were not the case, the fundamental right to effective legal protection would be jeopardised.

77. The distinction which Spanish law draws between procedural or preparatory measures (32) and decisions is not unusual. In fact, according to the Spanish Government, the review systems in various Member States also acknowledge the rule that procedural measures designed to facilitate the adoption of a decision cannot be disputed in isolation, but only during an action for the annulment of that decision, unless the applicant can show that it is not merely a procedural measure but rather a measure which causes him definitive harm. The Spanish system is therefore no different from other review systems existing in the various Member States.

78. In any event, the Spanish Government does not understand what benefit it is to the party concerned to challenge a procedural measure which in itself does not cause him any harm. Similarly, it maintains that the aim of the review directive cannot be to paralyse the efficient conduct of the public procurement procedure by allowing dilatory and untimely appeals against every measure taken preparatory to a decision adopted by a contracting authority.

79. As regards the Commission's assertion that the Spanish system jeopardises the uniform implementation of Directive 89/665, the Spanish Government points out that the Commission has not shown in what respect that system jeopardises the objective of the review directive. It notes that, in accordance with the settled case-law of the Court of Justice, it is for the Commission to adduce proof of the alleged infringement. In the present case, the Commission has not provided any specific example showing that the Spanish legislation does not permit the parties concerned to enjoy adequate and effective legal protection against any procedural measure which adversely affects them.

80. With regard to the first example presented by the Commission, the Spanish Government points out that the Commission has not stated the reason why the criteria applied by the Tribunal Supremo in the judgment it has cited are contrary to the objective of Directive 89/665. In that judgment, the Tribunal Supremo stated that:

the contested measure represents both the final decision awarding the contract and an obligation imposed by the administration on the three successful undertakings to provide it with certain additional documentation (first ground of the judgment); that obligation is a procedural measure since it does not bring an end to the tender procedure, but is only a stage in the process which will terminate in the award of the contract. It is not a decision subject to independent appeal but merely a preliminary to the decision. The validity of that request for additional documentation can be called in question only in proceedings to review the definitive measure (second ground of the judgment);

the challenge to the request for information does not render the award decision invalid (fifth ground of the judgment); the final award of the contract was challenged because the successful undertaking had not provided the documentation requested by the administration. According to the administration, the missing documentation was not essential and its absence was an irregularity which could quite easily be remedied (fourth ground of the judgment).

81. As regards the second example, the Spanish Government maintains that the committees in question cannot be regarded as contracting authorities, since they do not take decisions, but merely take part in the decision-making process.

82. In consequence, the Spanish Government considers that, since the Commission has not shown in what respect Directive 89/665 has not been correctly transposed into Spanish law and why it cannot take full effect until the general rule that a procedural measure, within the meaning of Spanish law, is not subject to appeal, is amended, the second plea must be rejected.

B Assessment

83. Under Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, decisions taken by the contracting authorities are to bereviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible where Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law have been infringed. Article 1(3) of the Directive specifies that the review procedures must be available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been orrisks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

84. Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665 lists the measures to be taken concerning the review procedures which the Member States must make available in national law. According to Article 2(1)(a), they must include provision for the adoption of interim measures by way of interlocutory procedures. Article 2(1)(b) refers to the possibility of setting aside or ensuring the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, and Article 2(1)(c) concerns the award of damages.

85. Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 does not define the decisions taken unlawfully which a party may ask to have set aside. The provision confines itself, in fact, to stating that such decisions include those concerning discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the documents relating to the contract award procedure in question. (33)

86. It is also clear from Articles 1 and 2 of Directive 89/665, read in conjunction with its aims, (34) that appeals against decisions taken by the contracting authorities are designed to ensure, at every stage of the award procedure, the effective application of Community directives on the award of public contracts, in particular at the stage where infringements can still be rectified. (35) Appeals which are limited to the possibility of obtaining financial compensation for harm suffered as a result of non-compliance with the Community directives on public procurement are therefore insufficient to ensure the full effectiveness of those rules.

87. The Court has inferred from those factors that all the decisions taken by contracting authorities, whatever their nature and content, may be challenged. (36) Accordingly, the review directive has been interpreted as precluding national provisions from refusing an injured applicant the opportunity to seek annulment of the contracting authority's decision prior to the conclusion of the contract as to the bidder in a tender procedure with which it will conclude the contract. It has also been held that the restriction of appeals against that decision to claims for damages (37) does not make it possible to ensure the effectiveness of the provisions of the procedure directives.

88. In view of the objectives of the review directive and of the wording of Articles 1 and 2, the Court thus intended to give a broad definition of the term "decision" , within the meaning of those provisions. "Decision" therefore means any act or measure, alleged to be unlawful in the light of the procedure directives, adopted during the procedure to award the contract in question, which produces effects or results which may be taken into account by the contracting authority in the final award decision.

89. That interpretation of the review directive is in accordance with its objective, which is to ensure the effective application of the Community directives on public procurement, at a stage when infringements may still be corrected or avoided. That objective cannot therefore be achieved by appeals only against the measures which cause harm and, a fortiori , only against the measures which bring an end to the award procedure in question. At that stage, it is difficult to see what measures could be taken with the aim of "correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned" . (38)

90. In the present case, the Spanish Government acknowledges that, under Spanish law, including in connection with public procurement procedures, appeals may be brought only against measures which have an adverse affect. "A measure which has an adverse effect" must be construed, in particular, as meaning the measure which brings the tendering procedure to an end. That is made expressly clear in the grounds of the judgment cited. (39) The Spanish Government also concedes and it is expressly stated in the judgment delivered by the Tribunal Supremo (40) that the measure by which the contracting authority requests documentation additional to the initial contract documents cannot be subject to independent appeal. In other words, a decision which may have an adverse effect and infringe Community law on public procurement, cannot as such be challenged immediately by a bidder who considers that he has been harmed. In order to do so, he must wait until the end of the tender procedure, that is to say, the adoption by the contracting authority of the award decision.

91. In my view, by requiring the applicant to furnish proof of the harm he suffers, and by depriving him, as a consequence, of the possibility of challenging a measure which may adversely affect him, Spanish law does not correctly transpose the provisions of Articles 1 and 2 of the review directive. The national provisions do not allow a decision likely to have harmful effects, by reason of the infringement of Community law on public procurement, to be challenged at the most appropriate time. They therefore prevent an individual from obtaining the interim measures intended to correct the alleged infringement or to prevent future damage. The obligation to furnish proof of the harm suffered is therefore an additional condition not provided for by the review directive and contrary to it.

92. It is apparent from the above considerations that, by not allowing review to be sought of all acts or decisions alleged to be unlawful under the provisions of the procedure directives, adopted during the procedure for the award of public contracts, which produce effects or results which may be taken into account by the contracting authority in the final award decision, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 1 and 2 of Directive 89/665.

V The third plea, alleging the incorrect transposition of the provisions concerning the adoption of interim measures (infringement of Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the review directive)

A Arguments of the parties

1. The Commission's arguments

93. The Commission argues that, in contrast to the provisions of Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 89/665, under the Spanish legislation transposing that provision, namely Article 111 of Law 30/1992 and Articles 129 to 136 of Law 29/1998, it is not possible to obtain preventive measures unless an action is brought simultaneously against the decision adopted unlawfully by the contracting authority. The Commission notes that only in exceptional circumstances, for example under Article 136(2) of Law 29/1998, may protective measures be sought if there is no action on the merits against the unlawful decision. It is apparent from the Spanish legislation transposing Article 2(1)(a) of the review directive, that the adoption of interim and protective measures is linked to the commencement of an action on the merits against the unlawful measure adopted by the contracting authority. Those measures are therefore necessarily ancillary to such an action and cannot in any event be sought separately.

94. The Commission points out that it is clear from the wording of Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the review directive, from its general organisation, from its objective and from the case-law of the Court of Justice (41) that protective measures are not ancillary to a main action, but are wholly separate measures which may be sought irrespective of the commencement of an action on the merits against the unlawful decision.

2. The arguments of the Kingdom of Spain

95. The Spanish Government does not dispute that, in its legal system, with a few exceptions, (42) the adoption of a protective measure, like suspension of operation, is linked to the prior commencement of an action on the merits. The application for interim measures must, in any event, be lodged at the time an action is brought on the merits or after it has commenced. An application for interim or protective measures is therefore not designed to be a separate action, but is linked to an action for annulment of the unlawful decision.

96. However, according to the Spanish Government, the obligation to contest the legality of a measure adopted by the contracting authority at the same time as lodging an application for protective measures does not negate the effectiveness of the system established by the review directive, since, in its submission, any application for protective measures involves an examination of the substance of the case, if only a prima facie assessment of the problem. Furthermore, that requirement does not detract from the effectiveness of the system or from the achievement of the objectives of that directive, since the obligation to challenge the legality of a measure adopted by the contracting authority at the same time as lodging an application for protective measures does not require the observance of strict formalities. The applicant need only write a simple letter. He is not therefore required immediately to lodge the action in accordance with the formal rules established.

97. According to the Spanish Government, the scheme adopted in Spain is, on the contrary, fully effective. Since Law 29/1998 came into force, the administrative courts may adopt, under Article 29 of that law, any type of positive protective measure, not only mere suspension.

98. The Spanish Government also disputes the assertion that the obligation to bring an action before protective measures are adopted is incompatible with the provisions of Directive 89/665, or even prohibited by them.

99. It maintains that that interpretation is supported by the fact that Community law is itself governed by criteria similar to those which underlie the Spanish legislation. In that regard, it refers to the provisions of Articles 242 and 243 EC, Article 36 of the EC Statute of the Court of Justice, Articles 83 to 90 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice and Articles 104 to 110 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance. Citing by way of example Article 83 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, it points out that an application for interim measures is not a separate legal remedy but rather an application which is ancillary to the main application, namely the action for annulment.

100. As regards the conclusion drawn by the Commission from the judgment in Commission v Greece , cited above, the Spanish Government maintains that the Court did not give judgment on the substance of the case. The Hellenic Republic acknowledged that it had not transposed the provisions of the review directive into its legal system within the time-limit set in the reasoned opinion. The Court did not therefore have to give a ruling on the substance of the alleged infringement. It did not therefore rule that the fact of making the grant of protective measures, such as suspension of operation, conditional on commencement of an action on the merits against the unlawful measure, constituted incorrect transposition of the review directive.

101. It thereby concludes that it makes no sense to require, as the Commission demands, interim measures to be wholly independent, since any protective measure is by definition an ancillary measure. Therefore, it requests the Court to declare the third plea unfounded and to reject it.

B Assessment

102. Unlike the Spanish Government, I consider that it is apparent from the wording of Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the review directive, from its general organisation, from its objective and from the case-law of the Court of Justice that protective measures cannot be regarded as ancillary to an action on the merits, but are measures which it must be possible to adopt separately.

103. As we have seen, the system established by the review directive is designed to ensure the effective application of the procedure directives. The review directive therefore requires appeal procedures against decisions taken unlawfully by the contracting authority to be effective and rapid. To that end, all decisions taken unlawfully by a contracting authority during the course of a public procurement procedure may be challenged in interlocutory proceedings by the injured parties. (43) Accordingly, it is a question of preventing, correcting or making good the illegalities committed.

104. It is clear from all the above that not only is any decision taken unlawfully by a contracting authority before the contract is concluded between the successful undertaking and the contracting authority open to challenge, but interim measures may also be obtained before an action on the merits is brought against the unlawful decision. In other words, it must be possible not only to lodge an application for interim measures, but also for the court to deal with that application before any action on the merits against the unlawful decision. Otherwise, the objective of the review directive, which is, in particular, to avoid or correct illegalities committed by the contracting authority, clearly could not be achieved. The need to adopt urgent and effective measures cannot easily be reconciled with a requirement that an action on the merits should be brought beforehand.

105. That interpretation was confirmed by the Court of Justice in Commission v Greece , cited above.

106. It was alleged that the Hellenic Republic had not correctly transposed the provisions of the review directive.

107. The Greek Government acknowledged that it had not taken the measures necessary to transpose the directive within the time-limit set in the reasoned opinion, but contended that a law had since been adopted which did meet the requirements of the review directive.

108. The Court did not, however, omit to point out that the provisions of that law did not correctly transpose the provisions of the review directive. It observed, in particular, that, as far as the suspension of contract award procedures referred to in Article 2(1)(a) of the review directive was concerned, the national legislation transposing the directive, since it made suspension of the measure conditional on the introduction of an action for annulment against the contested administrative measure, did not satisfy the requirements of the review directive.

109. Paragraph 11 of the judgment in Commission v Greece , cited above, stated specifically:

> "What is more, Article 52 of [Presidential Decree No 18/89] relates only to procedures for suspension of operation of measures and presupposes the existence of a main action seeking to have the contested administrative measure annulled, whereas, under Article 2 of [Directive 89/665],

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

the Member States are under a duty more generally to empower their review bodies to take, independently of any prior action , (44) any interim measures "including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract"

110. The Court also noted that the national legislation referred to contained no provision on damages, as provided for in Article 2(1)(c) of the review directive, for persons harmed in the event of an infringement of Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law. (45)

111. It is clear from that judgment that, contrary to what the Kingdom of Spain contends, the Court of Justice did not merely state that the directive had not been transposed within the time-limit set in the reasoned opinion, but examined the Greek law which was to be adopted and gave the reasons why it did not correctly transpose the provisions of the review directive.

112. From the foregoing considerations, I conclude that Member States must introduce a scheme providing for the adoption of all types of urgent measures, including positive measures, intended both to avoid and correct and to make good any illegalities committed by the contracting authority throughout the contract award procedure in question. That requirement is incompatible with the requirement of a prior action on the merits against the unlawful decision.

113. The Spanish Government does not deny that, in its legal system, interim or protective measures cannot be adopted before an action on the merits is brought against the unlawful decision. However, it claims that the Spanish system is not restrictive since a mere letter giving no reasons, in which the applicant states that he intends to challenge the decision on the merits, fulfils that obligation. If that were indeed the case, I must admit that I cannot understand the reasons for that "mere formality" to which the Spanish legislature nevertheless attaches particular significance. It seems to me disproportionate to make the effective application of the directive on this point (46) conditional on the prior completion of a mere formality.

114. As regards the Spanish Government's argument that the Spanish scheme with regard to protective measures is the same as that followed by Community law in proceedings before the Court of Justice, it has to be pointed out that the provisions and judgments referred to by the Spanish Government do not relate to the special review system established by Directive 89/665 or to its transposition by the Member States. Under the principle lex specialis derogat generali , (47) the specific scheme provided for by Directive 89/665 must necessarily prevail.

115. It follows from the foregoing arguments that, by making the grant of protective measures conditional on the requirement to bring an action on the merits against the decision adopted unlawfully by the contracting authority, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 1 and 2 of Directive 89/665.

VI Costs

116. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission has applied for costs and the Kingdom of Spain has been unsuccessful in its defence, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

VII Conclusion

117. For the reasons stated above, I propose that the Court should:

(1) Declare that, by failing to adopt the measures needed to comply with Articles 1 and 2 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, and in particular by failing to:

extend the system of review procedures provided for by that directive to decisions adopted by all contracting authorities, within the meaning of Article 1(1) of Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, Directive 93/36/EC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, and Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, including companies governed by private law established for the specific purpose or meeting needs in the general interest which do not have an industrial or commercial character, have legal personality, and are financed, for the most part, by public authorities or other entities governed by public law, or are subject to supervision by the latter, or have an administrative, management or supervisory board more than one half of whose members are appointed by public authorities or other entities governed by public law;

allow review to be sought of all decisions adopted by the contracting authorities, including all procedural measures, during the procedure for the award of public contracts;

provide for the possibility of appropriate interim measures being granted in relation to decisions adopted by the contracting authorities, including measures aimed at enabling administrative decisions to be suspended, removing for that purpose difficulties and obstacles of any type and in particular the need first to bring an action against the decision of the contracting authority,

the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Community law;

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Mischo delivered on 14 December 2000.
Commission of the European Communities v French Republic.
Failure of a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Failure to transpose Directive 97/52/EC.
Case C-97/00.

1. The Commission of the European Communities seeks a declaration from the Court that, by failing to communicate the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with all the provisions of European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 amending Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts respectively (the Directive), or by failing to adopt the measures necessary to comply therewith, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Directive. It also asks for an order for costs against the French Republic.

2. Under the first subparagraph of Article 4(1) of the Directive, the Member States were to bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with the Directive by 13 October 1998 and forthwith to inform the Commission thereof.

3. The Commission alleges that the French authorities have transposed into national law only the provisions laid down in Articles 1(1)(a), 2(1)(a) and 3(1)(a) of the Directive, relating to the thresholds above which contract notices must be published in the Official Journal of the European Communities. It considers that, in those circumstances, it should be found that, notwithstanding expiry of the time-limit laid down, the French Republic has not yet adopted the national provisions for transposing the whole of the Directive and, in any event, has not communicated them.

4. In its defence the French Government does not deny the infringement pleaded. It points out that the Directive has been partly transposed by the Order of 22 April 1998 which sets the thresholds above which contract notices have to be published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, and it asks the Court to find that the process for transposition of the Directive is in the course of being completed given that a draft decree is undergoing interdepartmental examination and will be submitted shortly to the Conseil d'Etat.

5. It is common ground that, on the date of expiry of the time-limit set by the reasoned opinion (Commission letter of 3 September 1999 setting a time-limit of two months from its notification), the French Republic still had not adopted the measures necessary to transpose the Directive in full.

6. The Commission's action should therefore be considered well founded.

7. Pursuant to Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the French Republic should be ordered to pay the costs.

Conclusion

8. In view of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court should rule as follows:

(1) by failing to communicate the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with all the provisions of European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 amending Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts respectively, or by failing to adopt the measures necessary to comply therewith, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive;

(2) the French Republic is to pay the costs.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Tizzano delivered on 28 June 2001.
Hospital Ingenieure Krankenhaustechnik Planungs-Gesellschaft mbH (HI) v Stadt Wien.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien - Austria.
Public service contracts - Directive 92/50/EEC - Procedure for the award of public service contracts - Directive 89/665/EEC - Scope - Decision to withdraw an invitation to tender - Judicial review - Scope.
Case C-92/00.

I - Introduction

1. By order of 17 February 2000, lodged at the Registry of the Court on 10 March 2000, the Vergabenkontrollsenat (Committee for the control of public service contracts) of the Land of Vienna (Austria) referred, under Article 234 EC, three questions for a preliminary ruling on the possible legal remedies applicable in respect of the procedures of a contracting authority which cancels an award procedure for a public contract. In particular, the national court asks this Court, first, whether Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 requires the Member States to initiate review proceedings in respect of such procedures in order to have them set aside. If that question is answered affirmatively, then the Vergabenkontrollsenat asks whether Directives 89/665 and 92/50 preclude the national court, before which review proceedings may be brought, from being necessarily limited to examining the arbitrary or sham nature of the contested cancellation of the award procedure (second question); and which is the relevant moment in time for assessing whether the decision to cancel the award procedure is lawful (third question).

II - Legal framework

A - Community law

2. Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Article 41 of Directive 92/50, provides:

The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or nation[al] rules implementing that law.

Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 provides:

1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

...

(a) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure.

The second paragraph of Article 2(6) provides:

Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.

Article 12(2) of Directive 92/50, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 amending Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC (OJ 1997 L 328,

p. 1) concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts respectively, provides:

Contracting authorities shall promptly inform candidates and tenderers of the decisions taken on contract awards, including the reasons why they have decided not to award a contract for which there has been an invitation to tender or to start the procedure again, and shall do so in writing if required. They shall also inform the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities of such decisions.

B - National law

3. In Austria the relevant national law is the Wiener Landesvergabegesetz (Viennese law on public procurement; hereinafter the WLVerG). Paragraph 32 (entitled Correction and withdrawal of an award procedure) (2) (3) and (4) of that law provides that:

(2) An invitation to tender may be withdrawn during the period for submission of tenders where events occur which, had they been previously known, would have excluded an invitation to tender being made or led to an invitation to tender with a substantially different content.

(3) At the expiry of the period for submitting tenders, the invitation to tender must be withdrawn where compelling grounds exist. Compelling grounds exist in particular where:

(1) events described in subparagraph 2 are not known until after the expiry of the period for submitting tenders,

or

(2) where all the tenders had to be excluded.

(4) An invitation to tender may be withdrawn, for example, when:

(1) no tender acceptable from an economic point of view has been submitted,

or

(2) only one tender remains after the exclusion of other tenders.

4. As regards the jurisdiction of the Vergabekontrollsenat, that is to say the court which made the present reference, Paragraph 99 of the WLVerG provides that that court is to have jurisdiction to review decisions of the contracting authority taken in the context of procedures for the award of public contracts. In particular, until such time as a contract is awarded, the Vergabekontrollsenat may adopt interim measures or declare void decisions taken unlawfully by the contracting authority on the grounds laid down in Paragraph 101 of the WLVerG. In cases where the contract has already been awarded, the Vergabekontrollsenat may declare that the contract has not been awarded to the best bidder owing to a breach of the WLVerG and may confirm, at the request of the contracting authority, whether, had that breach not occurred, the contract would have been awarded to a bidder who had been passed over.

5. Paragraph 101 of the WLVerG provides:

The Vergabekontrollsenat must set aside decisions of the awarding authority adopted in the course of a contract awarding procedure:

(1) where discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications appear in the tender notice inviting undertakings to participate in a closed procedure or a negotiated tender, or in the invitation to tender or tender specifications; or

(2) where a tenderer is passed over in breach of the criteria appearing in the tender notice in which undertakings are invited to participate in a closed procedure or a negotiated tender and the awarding authority might have come to a decision more favourable to the applicant if the infringed provisions had been complied with.

III - Facts and questions for a preliminary ruling

6. The City of Vienna, represented by the Magistrat der Stadt Wien - Wiener Krankenanstaltenverbund (hereinafter the City of Vienna or the respondent), in 1996 published an invitation to tender for the implementation of project management for realisation of the overall catering-supply concept in the premises of the Viennese associated hospitals.

7. Following submission of tenders, including one from the German company Hospital Ingenieure Krankenhaustechnik Planungs-Gesellschaft mbH (HI) (hereinafter HI or the tenderer) and one from the Austrian company Humanomed, the City of Vienna withdrew the invitation to tender within the period prescribed for awarding the contract for compelling reasons in accordance with the first subparagraph of Paragraph 32(3) of the WLVerG. In reply to a request for information submitted to it by HI, the City of Vienna stated that, in the light of the results of studies carried out by Humanomed in 1996, it had emerged that the project initially envisaged and put out to tender had to be developed in a decentralised manner and it had therefore been decided not to establish any central coordinating body; consequently, it was no longer necessary to allocate the contract covered by the invitation to tender. The same letter also stated that the withdrawal of the invitation to tender was clearly justified by supervening circumstances which, had they been known earlier, would have precluded the opening of the award procedure.

8. HI did not share that opinion, contending that the withdrawal was in fact due to the contracting authority's intention to favour the Austrian company Humanomed to the detriment of a company, like itself, from another Member State. Besides suspecting that the City of Vienna was, either directly or indirectly (through municipal undertakings), a shareholder in Humanomed, HI questioned the fact that Humanomed had been closely involved in the preparatory work for the invitation to tender, which had subsequently been withdrawn, and had thus influenced the drafting of the outline specifications of the project which was the subject of that invitation to tender. That being the case, Humanomed, according to HI, should have been excluded from the invitation to tender in compliance with the principle of equal treatment between different tenderers; thus, according to HI, the invitation to tender was withdrawn precisely in order to avoid the necessity of excluding Humanomed, whilst at the same time continuing to cooperate with that company. Accordingly, for all these reasons HI instituted proceedings before the Vergabekontrollsenat seeking, in particular, the commencement of review proceedings, an interim order, the annulment of certain tender documents and of the withdrawal of the invitation to tender on the ground that it was unlawful and discriminatory.

9. By decisions of 30 April and 10 June 1997, the Vergabekontrollsenat dismissed the action brought by HI. In particular, it declared the claim for the annulment of the withdrawal of the invitation to tender inadmissible on the grounds that, under Paragraph 101 of the WLVerG, such claims could be made only in respect of certain specific decisions, exhaustively listed, adopted in the course of an award procedure, and these did not include decisions to withdraw an invitation to tender.

10. However, on appeal brought by HI, the Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court) set aside the decision of the Vergabekontrollsenat. In particular, it held that, for the purposes of such a ruling, it was first necessary to resolve whether a withdrawal of an invitation to tender came within the scope of application of Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 and, since the Court of Justice had not yet had an opportunity to give a ruling on the matter, the Vergabekontrollsenat should have referred to it the relevant question for a preliminary ruling. Since the Vergabekontrollsenat had not done so, it had infringed both Article 234 EC and HI's constitutionally guaranteed right to a hearing before the proper court.

11. When the matter was referred back to it, the Vergabekontrollsenat then studied the action in light of the statements by the Verfassungsgerichtshof, and finally decided to refer the following questions to this Court for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Does Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665/EEC (review directive) require the decision of a contracting authority to cancel the procedure for the award of a contract for services to be reviewable in review proceedings leading, if appropriate, to its being set aside?

(2) If Question 1 is answered affirmatively, is there any provision of Directive 89/665 or of Directive 92/50/EEC which precludes a review limited to examination of the issue whether cancellation of the award procedure was arbitrary or sham?

(3) If Question 1 is answered affirmatively, which is the relevant moment in time for assessing whether the decision of the contracting authority to cancel the award procedure is lawful?

IV - Legal analysis

A - On the first question for a preliminary ruling

1. Introduction

12. With the first question for a preliminary ruling, the national court is essentially asking this Court to clarify whether, within the meaning of Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665, the obligation imposed on Member States to institute appropriate review procedures against the decisions taken by the competent authorities in the context of award procedures governed by Community directives relating to the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (the so-called substantive directives) also extends to the procedures for cancelling a contract (in this case, a contract for services).

13. However, as the Commission pointed out, it would have perhaps been more appropriate to extend the question at least to Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 according to which the Member States must ensure that decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed. In any case, in the following pages, as occurred in the discussion between the parties, it is inevitable that reference will be made to both provisions.

2. Arguments of the parties

14. Of the parties submitting observations in the present proceedings, only the applicant in the main proceedings has proposed that this question be answered in the affirmative. The other parties, namely the Commission and the Austrian Government, as well as the national court, have proposed a negative response on the basis of reasoning that I am now going to examine.

15. Whilst Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 requires the Member States to take the necessary measures to ensure that decisions taken by the contracting authority may be reviewed rapidly and effectively, it is clearly to pursue the objective, enshrined in the directive, of guaranteeing that Community law in relation to public contracts is implemented effectively. It follows that the requirement to establish review procedures to set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully by the contracting authority, as laid down in Article 2(1)(b) of the review directive, can refer only to those measures of the contracting authority which come within the scope of application of the substantive directives, that is to say only to decisions which, being subject to specific rules under those directives, may entail an infringement thereof. As the Commission points out, the preparatory work on Directive 89/665 would also point to this conclusion. The first version of Article 1(1) provided, in the initial proposal, that the aforementioned obligation on Member States be extended to the setting aside of all decisions taken in breach of Community and/or national rules on public contracts. However, despite requests by the Commission and by certain Member States, the draft was subsequently amended to limit the requirement to the setting aside of decisions taken in breach of Community law relating to public contracts and national rules transposing that law.

16. Thus, to maintain that the withdrawal of the invitation to tender comes within the decisions taken unlawfully referred to in Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665, it would need to be the subject of specific rules in the relevant substantive directive; in the present case, Directive 92/50. However, according to those who support this argument, that directive lays down no rules governing the conditions and form relating to the withdrawal of an invitation to tender for services, and thus does not even impose an obligation on the contracting authority to complete an award procedure. Article 12(2) of Directive 92/50 merely provides that, if so requested by a tenderer, the contracting authority is to inform candidates of the grounds of the withdrawal. Thus, it is contended that, unlike decisions to terminate the tendering procedure by awarding the contract, decisions to withdraw the invitation to tender do not constitute a decision within the meaning of Directive 89/665. Moreover, the Austrian Government asserts that that conclusion is confirmed by the fact that Article 2(1)(b) refers solely to decisions the contracting authority is obliged to take, under Directive 92/50, during an award procedure, while a decision of withdrawal constitutes an act that terminates such a procedure.

17. But that is not all. Community case-law also holds that the contracting authorities have wide discretion in how they choose to terminate an invitation to tender, either by deciding not to award the contract, or by withdrawing the invitation to tender; as already noted, the Community directives do not impose any particular limits or conditions in that respect and do not even require that there exist exceptional cases... based on serious grounds. However, those supporting that argument contend that if the contracting authority is not required to award a contract, that confirms that the decision to terminate an award procedure by withdrawing the relevant invitation to tender is not covered by the directive and thus does not constitute a decision within the meaning of Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665.

18. Finally, the Austrian Government contends that, under Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665, where a contract has already been concluded between the contracting authority and the successful tenderer, the Member States may limit damages to the protection of the rights of any parties harmed, thereby precluding the possibility of having the decision to award the contract set aside. It therefore does not see why, as far as decisions to withdraw an invitation to tender are concerned, the interested parties should be offered any greater protection. It contends that the only obligation the national legislature must meet in such a case is to guarantee the right of the tenderers to seek damages should the contracting authority withdraw the invitation to tender in an abusive manner. In any event, as the Commission points out, tenderers harmed by an unlawful withdrawal are not without means of redress to safeguard their interests. On the one hand, there are the remedies provided for by national law in the event of a breach of national provisions; on the other hand, they may avail themselves of the remedies guaranteed by Directive 89/665 where the contracting authority has published a new invitation to tender without complying with Community directives.

3. Assessment

19. In assessing these arguments, I should initially like to reiterate, albeit very summarily, the aims of the Community directives on public contracts, which seem to me to have been somewhat obscured in the foregoing arguments. As is well known, these directives have established a body of rules designed to give effect, in this sector too, to the freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services by guaranteeing all Community traders the right to participate in public calls to tender under conditions of absolute equality and total transparency. As in other sectors, the necessity to achieve that goal also in relation to public contracts required legislation that went beyond a mere ban on discrimination on grounds of nationality to embrace every eventuality that might lead, in any way whatever, to differences in the conditions governing access to and participation in an activity. Thus, there has also been a gradual movement away from a more limited set of rules, such as those laid down by the first directives on public supply and public works contracts, towards a more specific, incisive and, above all, tendentially global set of rules, such as those which have come about by degrees and which, in their main outlines, may now be considered almost complete.

20. In particular, for our present purposes, I note that the directives in question have a specific aim which is expressly stated in the directives themselves and repeatedly stressed in Community case-law. That aim is to guarantee equal treatment between tenderers and transparency at every stage of the award procedure, whilst imposing an obligation on Member States, as in the case of the directive here in question, to provide appropriate remedies at national level in order to ensure effective compliance with those principles. Accordingly, I must point out that those principles apply in the present case in so far as they go beyond the wording of the directives, which neither refer to those principles nor provide the basis for them, but which are intended solely to facilitate and ensure their effective application. In that respect, the Court has held that although the directive [71/305/EEC] makes no express mention of the principle of equal treatment of tenderers, the duty to observe that principle lies at very heart of the directive.

21. Accordingly, it follows not only that the contract directives must be interpreted in accordance with the traditional principles of Community case-law, and in particular with the principle requiring the provisions which implement the fundamental principles of freedom of movement to be interpreted in a way that does not restrict their scope or impair their effectiveness, but, above all, to be read in the light of their stated function of guaranteeing full and effective observance of the superior principles of equality of treatment and transparency. In particular, the review directive must be interpreted, in strict compliance with the aims of this directive and of the entire system, as meaning that its aim is to ensure at all levels effective observance of the substantive directives and of the principles underlying them so that, over and above the cases expressly provided for, it cannot be implicitly assumed or inferred, in relation to the procedures covered by those directives, that there are limits to the judicial safeguards which leave stages or phases of those procedures uncovered. It must also be interpreted in compliance with the principle of the justiciability of acts producing definite legal effects that reflects a general principle of Community law stemming from the constitutional traditions common to the Member States and has been enshrined in Articles 6 and 13 of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. In other words, it is necessary to follow a reasoning exactly opposite to that adopted by those who support the argument explained above.

22. Coming now to consider the specific question before us in the light of the preceding discussion, the negative reply proposed by the above argument seems highly debatable and, as far as the Commission is concerned, I would even say surprising when account is taken of its traditional approach in this matter. In any event, I do not think the argument in question stands up to critical analysis.

23. First, I note that the text of Directive 89/665 makes no mention of any restriction with regard to the nature and content of the decisions which Member States must ensure are open to review. On the contrary, Article 1(1) of the directive provides, without further specification, that it refers to award procedures governed by the relevant substantive directives and that in the context of those procedures the Member States must take the measures necessary to ensure that decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and rapidly: thus, that covers all decisions taken within the framework of those procedures, from start to finish, whether they result in the award of a contract, or in its termination on the basis of a decision to withdraw or cancel it. In any case, as the Court held in Alcatel Austria, the article does not provide for any restriction with regard to the nature and content of the decisions that have infringed Community law on public contracts or the relevant national implementing provisions (paragraph 35).

24. On the other hand, the wording of the subsequent Article 2(1)(b) of the directive in question (setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including etc.) leads to the same conclusion, given that it gives no indication of limits or any other sign that provides any authorisation whatsoever to restrict the scope of the decisions taken in terms of their content, the stage in the award procedure at which they are taken or on any other grounds. Finally, that is also confirmed by the wording of Article 2(1)(a) which requires Member States to make provision for interlocutory procedures to deal with any decision taken by the contracting authorities; it is not clear why procedures for the setting aside of decisions referred to in the subsequent Article 2(1)(b) should be more limited.

25. Thus, on the basis of a textual analysis alone, the directive not only fails to provide support for the argument under consideration, but, if anything, does the opposite. However, what is important for me to point out is the fact that the interpretation proposed here is also more consistent with the stated aims of the substantive directives on contracts, particularly of Directive 89/665 which, as the Court held in Alcatel Austria, is specifically intended to strengthen the existing mechanisms. Yet even from the perspective of the logic of the system it is not clear why, as HI observes, of the two main methods of concluding a tendering procedure, namely awarding a contract and withdrawing it, only the first method should be subject to control, whilst the second is not. And that is so even if by chance the decision to award the contract were to be taken in a totally arbitrary fashion or for the sole purpose of favouring a certain tenderer, and even if the tendering procedure were repeated several times until the tenderer who was hypothetically favoured was successful. That would imply, on the one hand, creating manifest and unjustifiable differences with respect to decisions to award contracts; on the other hand, it would imply leaving the contracting authority free to allow considerations, other than economic considerations, to be given preference thereby opening the way to the very risks of discrimination and lack of transparency which the directives have sought to remove: in other words, it would imply depriving those directives of their effectiveness and thus negating their purpose.

26. However, as noted above, those who support the argument in question insist above all on the correspondence between the review directive and the substantive directives, stressing that the latter make no provision in respect of the withdrawal of a tendering procedure and therefore they contend that, by definition, the relevant procedures fall outside the scope of application of the former directive, irrespective of the scope of the phrase decisions taken unlawfully employed by that directive. I would observe, however, first of all, that the assumption on which that argument is based, according to which only procedures and decisions for which specific rules are laid down in the substantive directives should be subject to the review directive, remains to be substantiated. It is equally legitimate, and even more consistent with the principles and logic of the system, as I have pointed out several times, to argue that the first directive covers all the stages and phases of the award procedures which are covered by the substantive directives, including those which, on account of their particular nature, do not require specific rules or require only limited regulation, as in the specific case of the withdrawal of a tendering procedure.

27. However, apart from the foregoing considerations, I must point out that the substantive directive which is relevant here, namely Directive 92/50, does not ignore the measures withdrawing an invitation to tender, even if it is limited in that respect, as already noted, to providing that the contracting authority, if so requested, is to communicate in writing the grounds on which it decided not to award a contract (Article 12(2) of Directive 92/50). It seems obvious to me that such an obligation to provide reasons is not of little consequence for our present purposes because stating the reason for a measure and judicial review of that measure are two aspects that are closely linked. As the Court's case-law also demonstrates, the former serves as a direct basis for the latter because the logic adopted by the author of the measure must be clearly and unequivocally discernible so that those affected can comprehend the reasons for the measure and the competent court can exercise its own power of review. Accordingly, if the directives require that reasons must be given, that is all the more reason for assuming that there is an obligation to establish judicial protection.

28. Nor, for the purposes of the present argument, can the aforementioned objection be raised that, since the contracting authority has wide discretion to withdraw a tendering procedure, tenderers have no right to claim that the procedure be concluded with the award of a contract. If, apart from the aforementioned obligation to provide reasons, procedural and substantive conditions governing withdrawal are not laid down, that does not mean that the relevant measures fall outside the review directive or that the power vested in national authorities may be exercised without control or limitation. The undoubted discretion which such authorities enjoy in that respect may affect, as we shall see in examining the second question, the scope of judicial review, but it certainly does not imply absolute freedom and removal from all control. Those authorities must continue to act in compliance with the relevant Community and national provisions and, above all, respect the principles of equality of treatment and transparency which, as the Court has held, lie at the very heart of the rules governing the matter and therefore are to be applied absolutely and unconditionally.

29. Before concluding with this point, I must still give my opinion on certain arguments put forward respectively by the Austrian Government and the Commission in favour of a negative reply to the question under consideration.

30. The first argument, as noted above (point 18), relies on Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665, concluding from it that if, in the event of a contract already having been awarded, Member States may limit the protection afforded to individuals to a claim for damages, there is no reason to offer them greater judicial protection in the case of a measure of withdrawal. It must be objected, however, that there is no similarity between the two situations referred to, that is to say between the phase preceding the award of the contract (to which Article 2(1) refers and which is of interest here) and the phase following the award (to which Article 2(6) refers). As the Court held in Alcatel Austria, Directive 89/665 itself clearly distinguishes between those two stages by laying down different rules (paragraph 37). On the other hand, any analogous extension of the rules laid down in Article 2(6) not only would not be justified under any aspect of the structure of the system in question, but would be completely at odds with the aims of that system.

31. Nor can it be maintained, as the Austrian Government still appears to claim, that a claim for damages caused by an unlawful withdrawal is sufficient to meet the claims of tenderers harmed by that withdrawal. I merely note that the review directive authorises the Member States to make actions for damages conditional on the contested decision first being set aside (see Article 2(5) of Directive 89/665) so that, at least in the case of such an eventuality, this latter type of remedy could not be precluded. Moreover, that seems to me to provide a further reason for giving a positive reply to the first question submitted by the Vergabekontrollsenat, given that, otherwise, any individuals affected would not even be able to bring an action for damages where the Member State in question had taken advantage of the opportunity offered it by the aforementioned Article 2(5).

32. For its part, the Commission initially contends that any tenderer harmed by an unlawful decision to withdraw an invitation to tender would in any event have available the remedies provided for by the laws of the Member States where national provisions are infringed. I do not know if such a prospect is likely to console those affected. However, it certainly does not meet the stated requirements and frankly it sounds rather odd coming from an institution which for years has been insisting that the directives on contracts be effectively implemented and has proposed more than one directive (such as, for instance, Directive 89/665) aimed precisely at reinforcing that guarantee at Community level, removing it from the disparities and deficiencies of the national legislation.

33. Equally consoling, but just as inconclusive for our present purposes, it seems to me, is the Commission's other observation to the effect that participation in an invitation to tender which is subsequently withdrawn is in some way protected by the fact that, if the contracting authority decided to award the contract in question by recommencing the tendering procedure, it would in any event have to comply with the relevant Community directives and this could in an appropriate case be subject to judicial review in accordance with the provisions of Directive 89/665. On the other hand, I would observe that a contracting authority does not always decide to launch a new invitation to tender for a contract previously withdrawn. However, even if that were the case, that would not make the action to set aside a decision of withdrawal any less effective because, if such action were successful, apart from the consequences noted above (point 31), the contracting authority's discretion would inevitably be limited should a new invitation to tender be launched as it would have to comply with the principles laid down by the judgment setting aside the decision.

34. Accordingly, in light of the foregoing observations, I consider that the reply to the first question for a preliminary ruling should be that Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/655 requires that the decision by the contracting authority to withdraw the invitation to tender for a contract for services may be examined and possibly set aside under a review procedure.

B - On the second question for a preliminary ruling

35. By the second question for a preliminary ruling, the Vergabekontrollsenat asks, if the first question is answered affirmatively, whether there is any provision of Directive 89/665 or Directive 92/50 which precludes judicial review of the legality of a withdrawal of an invitation to tender from having to be limited to examination of the issue whether that measure was arbitrary or sham.

36. In effect, this is a somewhat convoluted question which not even the grounds of the order for reference help to clarify, probably also because this reflects problems and concerns specific to the Austrian legal system. However, as far as I understand it, the Vergabekontrollsenat is disposed to give a negative reply, in other words seeking to limit judicial review to the decision to withdraw an invitation to tender, whilst HI takes the opposite view, arguing that it cannot be inferred from Directive 89/665 that an action to set aside a decision of withdrawal must be limited solely to examination of whether the contested measure was arbitrary or sham. On the contrary, in its opinion, a decision of withdrawal should be subject to full judicial review. Finally, for its part, the Commission, after repeating that withdrawal measures are excluded from Directive 89/665, merely notes that, if an action is brought before a national court challenging the lawfulness of a withdrawal of a tender, that court can verify whether the grounds for such a withdrawal are compatible with the national and, possibly, the Community provisions.

37. In coming to a general assessment of the question and thus leaving aside any situations specific to Austrian law, I must say that I have great difficulty identifying in the Community directives in question any provisions that are relevant from the point of view of the question submitted to us: in other words, provisions which make it possible to infer or, on the contrary, exclude limits to the scope of judicial control over a measure withdrawing an invitation to tender. It will certainly be necessary to keep firmly in mind what I have said above concerning the discretion enjoyed by the contracting authority in the matter, and the limits resulting from it, in this and all like cases, on the level of judicial review. Community case-law has repeatedly stressed that, given the nature of the power enjoyed by those authorities, review by the courts must be limited to checking that the rules governing the procedure and statement of reasons are complied with, that the facts are correct and that there is no manifest error of assessment or misuse of powers. However, beyond that limitation, directly connected, I repeat, to the nature of the power exercised in the present case, remains the fact that the national authorities will still always be obliged to respect the relevant Community and national provisions and, above all, the principles of equality of treatment and transparency repeatedly referred to; therefore, judicial review must also be extended to those aspects.

38. Accordingly, I consider that the answer to the question concerned should be that no provision of Directives 89/665 and 92/50 allows judicial review of the legality of the decision to withdraw an invitation to tender to be solely limited to an examination of the arbitrary or sham nature of that decision.

C - On the third question for a preliminary ruling

39. By this question also, submitted in the alternative in the event of an affirmative reply to the first question, the Austrian court asks finally what is the relevant moment for assessing whether the decision of the contracting authority to withdraw the invitation to tender is lawful.

40. In stating its reasons for that question, the Vergabekontrollsenat notes that Directive 89/665 contains no indication on the matter and that in its opinion there are two possible solutions: the moment at which the decision is taken by the contracting authority or the moment at which the decision is taken by the review body. In favour of the first solution is the fact that the decision of withdrawal is the subject of the application for review, whilst in favour of the second interpretation is the principle of the directive's effectiveness, which is intended to guarantee the existence of effective and rapid remedies. However, HI contends that reference should be made to the moment when the decision is given on the contested act whilst the Commission contends that, since the withdrawal of an invitation to tender is governed not by Community law but by the applicable national law, it is on the basis of the latter that the solution to the third question for a preliminary ruling will depend.

41. For my part, I would observe that Directive 89/665 makes no provision concerning the determining moment for the purpose of considering the lawful nature of a decision of withdrawal. I believe that is due to the nature of the directive itself which is not intended to harmonise legislation, but merely to coordinate existing procedures. Thus, its aim is not to create a comprehensive legal framework on the subject, but merely to lay down the necessary rules to ensure that the substantive directives are fully and effectively applied. It is to the individual national legal systems that one must look for specification of the detailed rules and procedures, in compliance, of course, with the rules and principles laid down in the directive, for the exercise of the protection provided for in it. As the Court has recently held, it is for the domestic legal system of each Member State to designate the courts and tribunals having jurisdiction and to lay down the detailed procedural rules governing actions for safeguarding rights which individuals derive from Community law.

42. Accordingly, in reply to the third question for a preliminary ruling, I consider that the Court should inform the national court that, without prejudice to the effectiveness and timeliness of the safeguards guaranteed by the principles and provisions of Community law, the relevant moment in time for the purpose of assessing the lawfulness of a decision taken by a contracting authority to withdraw an invitation to tender is to be determined on the basis of the applicable national law.

V - Conclusion

43. In light of the preceding considerations, I therefore propose that the Court rule as follows:

(1) Article 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts requires that the decision by the contracting authority to withdraw the invitation to tender for the award of a contract for services be examined and, possibly, set aside under a review procedure.

(2) No provision of Directive 89/665 or of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts allows for judicial review of the legality of the act withdrawing an invitation to tender to be limited solely to examination of whether that procedure was arbitrary or sham.

(3) Without prejudice to the effectiveness and timeliness of the safeguards guaranteed by the principles and provisions of Community law, the relevant moment in time for the purpose of assessing the lawfulness of a decision taken by a contracting authority to withdraw an invitation to tender is to be determined on the basis of the applicable national law.

Order

1 By order of 14 February 2000, received at the Court on 23 February 2000, the Vestre Landsret (Western Regional Court) referred for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC three questions on the interpretation of Articles 6 and 30 of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Articles 12 EC and 28 EC).

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

2 The questions were raised in proceedings between Mr Vestergaard and Spøttrup Boligselskab concerning the compatibility with Community law of a clause in the general conditions of the contract documents of a public works contract relating to the construction of 20 housing units in Spøttrup, Denmark, specifying that windows of a particular make should be used for the contract.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

3 Spøttrup Boligselskab is a Danish public housing body. In spring 1997 it called for tenders, in an open procedure, for the construction of 20 social housing units in the municipality of Spøttrup. The 20 units were to be built on four separate sites, which constituted separate legal entities.

4 As the total budget amount for the contract was DKK 9 643 000, below the threshold of EUR 5 000 000 laid down in Article 6 of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), Spøttrup Boligselskab did not follow the procedure under Directive 93/37. However, the conditions of tender were sent to those artisans who so wished.

5 For the carpentry lot for each site, which included the outside doors and windows, the contract documents contained the following clause: PVC windows and doors. Outside doors and windows shall be supplied by: Hvidbjerg Vinduet, Ostergade 24, 7790 Hvidberg (Denmark)

6 Mr Vestergaard, a master carpenter, submitted tenders for all the carpentry lots. As his tenders for two of the sites were the lowest, they were accepted. However, in connection with the signature of the contract, Mr Vestergaard made a reservation concerning the provision of windows of the Hvidbjerg Vinduet make, since he had calculated his tenders on the basis of providing windows of the Trokal make, which are made in Germany. The additional price if windows of the Hvidbjerg Vinduet make were used was DKK 23 743 excluding VAT. When signing the contract on 31 July 1997, Spøttrup Boligselskab stated that it could not accept that reservation.

7 The work was carried out. Mr Vestergaard used Hvidbjerg Vinduet windows, as required by Spøttrup Boligselskab. However, he maintained his claim for payment of DKK 23 743. Spøttrup Boligselskab rejected that claim.

8 On 29 October 1997 Mr Vestergaard made an application to the Klagenævnet for Udbud (Procurement Review Board, the Review Board), asking it to find that, by requiring in the call for tenders the use of a specified product for the outside doors and windows, Spøttrup Boligselskab had infringed Articles 6 and 30 of the Treaty.

9 The Bolig- og Byministeriet (Ministry of Housing and Urban Affairs, the Ministry) intervened in support of Mr Vestergaard. According to the Ministry, the disputed clause in the contract documents was contrary to its recommendations to contracting authorities.

10 The Bygge- og Boligstyrelsen (Construction and Housing Authority, now the Ministry) had stated in a memorandum of 2 May 1995 that it followed from the EC Treaty that, even if a call for tenders for public works contracts is not covered by the public procurement directives, the tenderers must be chosen on the basis of objective criteria and contracts concluded in a non-discriminatory manner. In addition, in a letter of 4 June 1997, that authority had stated that no contract concerning inter alia public works should contain terms which amounted to discrimination against suppliers on grounds of nationality or of the origin of the goods within the European Union.

11 Before the Review Board, the Ministry referred inter alia to the judgment in Case 45/87 Commission v Ireland [1988] ECR 4929.

12 By decision of 11 November 1988, the Review Board dismissed Mr Vestergaard's application.

13 It considered that Commission v Ireland concerned a large-scale project whose value exceeded

the threshold laid down in Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682) - since repealed and replaced by Directive 93/37 -, so that that judgment was of no relevance for the application before it.

14 The Review Board decided that public works contracts of low value which, unlike that at issue in Commission v Ireland, do not exceed the threshold in Directive 93/37, are generally of no interest or importance in the Community context, and that for such contracts the cost to the contracting authorities of complying with the provisions of Directive 93/37 on technical specifications would be disproportionate. It therefore concluded that Articles 6 and 30 of the Treaty do not, at least generally, impose an obligation to have the indication of a specified make required by the contracting authority followed by the words or equivalent for contracts below the threshold laid down in Directive 93/37.

15 Mr Vestergaard brought the matter before the Vestre Landsret, which stayed the proceedings and referred the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

1. Is a public body which invites tenders for works which are not covered by Council Directive 93/37/EEC, inasmuch as the threshold value is not exceeded, entitled to stipulate in the tender documents that a specified Danish make must be used, where that requirement in the tender documents is not accompanied by the words "or an equivalent make"?

2. Is a public body which invites tenders for works which are not covered by Council Directive 93/37/EEC, inasmuch as the threshold value is not exceeded, entitled to stipulate in the tender documents that a specified make must be used, where that requirement in the tender documents is not accompanied by the words "or an equivalent make"?

3. If Question 1 or Question 2 is answered in the negative, can such wording of tender documents as described in Questions 1 and 2 be regarded as constituting an infringement of Article 12 EC or Article 28 EC?

Findings of the Court

16 By its three questions, which should be examined together, the Vestre Landsret essentially asks whether the inclusion by a contracting authority in the contract documents for a public works contract not exceeding the threshold laid down in Directive 93/37 of a clause requiring the use of a product of a specified make is contrary to the fundamental rules of the Treaty, in particular Articles 6 and 30, where that requirement is not followed by the words or equivalent.

17 Since it considered that the answer to the questions, as reformulated, was clear from the case-law, in particular Case C-359/93 Commission v Netherlands [1995] ECR I-157, the Court, in accordance with Article 104(3) of the Rules of Procedure, informed the national court that it intended to give its decision by reasoned order and invited the parties referred to in Article 20 of the EC Statute of the Court of Justice to submit observations.

18 None of those parties raised any objection to the Court's intention to give its decision by reasoned order referring to the existing case-law.

19 To rule on the questions, it should be noted, to begin with, that the Community directives coordinating public procurement procedures apply only to contracts whose value exceeds a threshold laid down expressly in each directive. However, the mere fact that the Community legislature considered that the strict special procedures laid down in those directives are not appropriate in the case of public contracts of small value does not mean that those contracts are excluded from the scope of Community law.

20 Although certain contracts are excluded from the scope of the Community directives in the field of public procurement, the contracting authorities which conclude them are nevertheless bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the Treaty (see, to that effect, Case C-324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress [2000] ECR I-10745, paragraph 60).

21 Consequently, notwithstanding the fact that a works contract is below the threshold laid down in Directive 93/37 and thus not within the scope of that directive, the lawfulness of a clause in the contract documents for that contract must be assessed by reference to the fundamental rules of the Treaty, which include the free movement of goods set out in Article 30 of the Treaty.

22 In the light of that finding, it must be observed, next, that according to the case-law on public supply contracts the failure to add the words or equivalent after the designation in the contract documents of a particular product may not only deter economic operators using systems similar to that product from taking part in the tendering procedure, but may also impede the flow of imports in intra-Community trade, contrary to Article 30 of the Treaty, by reserving the contract exclusively to suppliers intending to use the product specifically indicated (see, to that effect, Commission v Netherlands, paragraph 27).

23 Moreover, in paragraph 22 of Commission v Ireland, which concerned a public works contract which did not fall within the scope of Directive 71/305, the Court considered, with reference to the conformity with Article 30 of the Treaty of a clause requiring asbestos cement pressure pipes to be certified as complying with Irish standard 188:1975, that by incorporating in the notice in question the words or equivalent after the reference to the Irish standard, the Irish authorities could have verified compliance with the technical conditions without from the outset restricting the contract solely to tenderers proposing to utilise Irish materials.

24 It is therefore clear from the case-law that, notwithstanding the fact that a public works contract does not exceed the threshold laid down in Directive 93/37 and does not thus fall within its scope, Article 30 of the Treaty precludes a contracting authority from including in the contract documents for that contract a clause requiring the use in carrying out the contract of a product of a specified make, without adding the words or equivalent.

25 In the light of the above considerations, there is no need to rule on the possible incompatibility of a clause such as that at issue in the main proceedings with Article 6 of the Treaty.

26 In those circumstances, the answer to the national court's questions must be that Article 30 of the Treaty precludes a contracting authority from including in the contract documents for a public works contract which does not exceed the threshold laid down in Directive 93/37 a clause requiring the use in carrying out the contract of a product of a specified make, where that clause does not include the words or equivalent.

Costs

27 The costs incurred by the Austrian Government and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Second Chamber)

hereby orders:

Article 30 of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 28 EC) precludes a contracting authority from including in the contract documents for a public works contract which does not exceed the threshold laid down in Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts a clause requiring the use in carrying out the contract of a product of a specified make, where that clause does not include the words or equivalent.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Geelhoed delivered on 27 September 2001.
Temco Service Industries SA v Samir Imzilyen and Others.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Cour du travail de Bruxelles - Belgium.
Directive 77/187/EEC - Safeguarding of employees' rights in the event of transfers of undertakings.
Case C-51/00.

I - Introduction

1. In this case the Cour du travail de Bruxelles (Higher Labour Court, Brussels), asks the Court to clarify the scope of Council Directive 77/187/EEC of 14 February 1977 on the approximation of the laws of the Member States relating to the safeguarding of employees' rights in the event of transfers of undertakings, businesses or parts of businesses (hereinafter: the directive).

2. At first sight, the facts appear to be rather complicated. The national court asks whether there is a transfer of an undertaking where undertaking A originally contracted with undertaking B for cleaning operations and undertaking B entrusts that work to undertaking C. Following the loss of the contract by undertaking B, undertaking C dismisses all its staff, except for four persons. Thereupon undertaking A awards that contract to undertaking D which employs a proportion of the staff of undertaking C under a collective labour agreement but takes over none of the assets of undertaking C, which continues to exist.

3. The Court has commented previously on the scope of the directive as regards the contracting out of services, in particular in the cleaning sector. The reference for a preliminary ruling from the Cour du Travail gives the Court an opportunity to clarify its case-law.

II - Legal background

A - Community law

4. The directive makes the necessary provision for the protection of employees in the event of a change of employer, in particular, to ensure that their rights are safeguarded. Article 1(1) states that the directive is to apply to the transfer of an undertaking, business or part of a business to another employer as a result of a legal transfer or merger.

5. Article 2(a) provides that transferor means, for the purposes of the directive, any natural or legal person who, by reason of a transfer within the meaning of Article 1(1), ceases to be the employer in respect of the undertaking, business or part of the business. Article 2(b) defines transferee, for the purposes of the directive, as any natural or legal person who, by reason of a transfer within the meaning of Article 1(1), becomes the employer in respect of the undertaking, business or part of the business.

6. Under Article 3(1), the transferor's rights and obligations arising from a contract of employment or from an employment relationship existing on the date of a transfer within the meaning of Article 1(1) are, by reason of such transfer, to be transferred to the transferee.

7. Under the first paragraph of Article 4(1), the transfer of an undertaking, business or part of a business does not in itself constitute grounds for dismissal by the transferor or the transferee. This provision does not preclude dismissals on economic, technical or organisational grounds requiring changes in the workforce.

8. The directive has been amended twice. Council Directive 98/50/EC of 29 June 1998 amending Directive 77/187/EEC on the approximation of the laws of the Member States relating to the safeguarding of employees' rights in the event of transfers of undertakings, businesses or parts of businesses codified certain terms in particular in the light of the case-law of the Court. In order to rationalise the wording, the Council repealed Directive 77/187 on 12 March 2001 and replaced it with Directive

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

2001/23/EC on the approximation of the laws of the Member States relating to the safeguarding of employees' rights in the event of transfers of undertakings, businesses or parts of undertakings or businesses.

9. Pursuant to Directive 98/50, Article 1(1) of the directive was renumbered Article 1(1)(a). Directive 98/50 introduced a new Article 1(1)(b) concerning the concept of transfer which reads as follows:

Subject to subparagraph (a)..., there is a transfer within the meaning of this Directive where there is a transfer of an economic entity which retains its identity, meaning an organised grouping of resources which has the objective of pursuing an economic activity, whether or not that activity is central or ancillary.

This clarification was prompted by considerations of legal security and transparency but does not alter the scope of the directive as interpreted by the Court of Justice.

B - National law

10. The abovementioned provisions of the directive were transposed into Belgian law by Collective Labour Agreement No 32 bis of 7 June 1985 concerning the safeguarding of employees' rights in the event of a change of employer as a result of the legal transfer of an undertaking and regulating the rights of employees taken over in the event of a takeover of assets following liquidation or judicial composition with transfer of assets, made mandatory by Royal Decree of 25 July 1985.

11. Also relevant to the case is a collective labour agreement of 5 May 1993 concerning the taking over of staff on transfer of a daily-maintenance contract, which applies to the cleaning sector. This has no connection with the collective labour agreement of 7 June 1985.

12. Under Article 3 of the collective labour agreement of 5 May 1993, the undertaking which secures the contract must, within a week of securing it, enquire of the undertaking losing the contract as to members of staff and working conditions. Article 4 provides that the undertaking securing the contract must, within two weeks of securing it and in any event at least one week before resumption of works, offer in writing at least 75% of the jobs on the site after the transfer to workers chosen by it forming part of the staff of the undertaking losing the contract, provided that those workers have at least six month's experience on the site. The selection is to be made on the basis of functional criteria. Under Article 5, workers taken over in accordance with the arrangements set out in Article 4 are to obtain a new contract of employment without any trial period and without loss of seniority.

III - Facts in the main action and procedure

13. The facts and background to the case can be summarised as follows.

14. In the period from 2 May 1993 to 8 January 1995 Volkswagen awarded the contract to clean certain of its production plants to Buyle-Medros-Vaes Associates SA (hereinafter: BMV). From the outset, BMV entrusted to General Maintenance Contractors SPRL (hereinafter: GMC) performance of the contract. GMC stated that the performance of the contract with Volkswagen was its only business at that time. In December 1994 Volkswagen terminated the contract between itself and BMV and, by a contract, awarded the cleaning operations to Temco Service Industries SA (hereinafter: Temco) as of 9 January 1995. For Temco the Volkswagen contract was one of many.

15. Volkswagen's choice of Temco had an effect on the staff of GMC which carried out the cleaning work at Volkswagen.

16. Since the contract between Volkswagen and BMV expired on 8 January 1995, GMC lawfully dismissed its entire staff, with the exception of four people, that is to say Messrs S. Imzilyen, M. Belfarh, A. Afia-Aroussi and K. Lakhdar, who enjoy special protection owing to their status as trade-union delegates. GMC served the notices provided for under Belgium law and took the steps necessary for closure of an undertaking and collective dismissal, authorised on 30 November 1994 by the Brussels Regional Office of Employment.

17. Applying the collective labour agreement of 5 May 1993, Temco engaged 42 of a total of 80 former GMC employees. The four trade-union delegates were not amongst the members of staff taken over.

18. Since GMC had a contract only with Volkswagen at the time, it sought acceptance by the relevant joint committee that there were economic or technical grounds allowing it to dismiss the four trade-union delegates. That request was turned down on 28 February 1995. In appeal proceedings the Tribunal du travail declared by judgment dated 13 September 1995 that it did not have jurisdiction to determine the claim. By judgment dated 23 November 1995 the Cour du travail upheld this judgment.

19. The file shows that the four received payment from GMC until December 1995 despite the fact that GMC took the view, as is apparent from correspondence with Temco, that in law the four had already been taken over by Temco by virtue of the Collective Labour Agreement No 32 bis. On 12 December 1995 the trade-union delegates were dismissed by GMC.

20. Under those circumstances the four brought claims against GMC, BMV and Temco before the Tribunal du travail de Bruxelles.

21. By a judgment of 12 March 1998 the Tribunal du travail de Bruxelles, declared the claim by the four persons concerned admissible and well founded in part as regards Temco SA. The Tribunal du travail declared inter alia that, pursuant to Collective Labour Agreement No 32 bis, the claimants, Messrs Afia Aroussi and Lakhdar, were automatically taken over on 9 January 1995 by the defendant Temco.

22. Temco lodged an appeal with the national court. It states the following reasons for the questions referred for a preliminary ruling.

23. The facts of the case are unusual in that Volkswagen entrusted the cleaning of its industrial plants to BMV which, for its part, did not perform the cleaning itself, but instead subcontracted it to GMC which, on losing the contract as a result of termination of the contract between Volkswagen and BMV, dismissed its entire staff, except the four trade-union delegates, whilst continuing, as indicated in the minutes of general meetings held in 1996 and 1997, to carry on business and seek new customers. That confirms that the attainment of its objective, as provided in the articles of association, related to more than mere performance of the Volkswagen contract, even if that was its principal or sole activity in 1994.

24. On the other hand, until December 1995, the four trade-union delegates, who considered that they enjoyed special protection against dismissal, demonstrated by their conduct that they were still members of the staff of GMC. The national court also notes that they never claimed to have entered into the service of Temco under Collective Labour Agreement No 32 bis. In the proceedings before the labour courts, GMC also took the view, even whilst expressing reservations, that the four persons concerned were still in its service. There would otherwise have been no sense to the proceedings seeking a declaration that there were technical or other grounds justifying their dismissal. The fact that those proceedings were unsuccessful is irrelevant.

25. The national court also notes that there is no relationship between GMC and Volkswagen, and no assets of any kind whatever passed from GMC to Temco. It is evident from the files that Volkswagen provides the contracted cleaning companies with the means necessary for the industrial cleaning of its plants.

IV - Questions referred for a preliminary ruling

26. The order for reference from the Cour du travail (Sixth Chamber), Brussels, dated 14 February 2000 was registered with the Court on 17 February 2000. The questions referred for a preliminary ruling are worded as follows:

1. Does Article 1(1) of Council Directive 77/187 of 14 February 1977 apply in a situation where undertaking A contracts with undertaking B for the cleaning of its industrial plants and undertaking B entrusts that work to undertaking C, which, following loss of the contract by undertaking B, dismisses its staff, except for four persons, whereupon undertaking D is awarded the contract by undertaking A, employs a proportion of the staff of undertaking C under a collective labour agreement but takes over none of the assets of undertaking C, which latter undertaking continues to exist and to pursue the objects for which it was incorporated?

2. In the event that undertaking C is held to be the transferor, even though it continues to exist, does the abovementioned directive preclude it from being able to retain certain workers in its service?

27. Written observations were submitted by Temco, Messrs S. Imzilyen and M. Belfarh, Messrs A. Afia-Aroussi and K. Lakhdar, SA Three S (formerly GMC) and BMV, and the Commission. On 17 May 2001 a hearing was held at which all the parties and the Commission set out their views.

V - Appraisal

A - The scope of the directive

Introduction

28. The first question referred by the Cour du Travail allows the Court to determine the scope of the directive on the basis of a situation in which an undertaking has terminated a contract with a business for the provision of services in order to carry on the contract thereafter with another business.

29. This is the fourth occasion on which the Court has been confronted, pursuant to the procedure laid down in Article 234 EC, with the question of the application of the directive to transactions in the cleaning sector. Each case turned on somewhat different facts. Schmidt concerned a case in which an undertaking entrusted by contract to another undertaking the responsibility for carrying out cleaning operations which it had previously performed itself directly. In Hernandez Vidal and Others the opposite situation arose and an undertaking which used to entrust the cleaning of its premises or part of them to another undertaking decided to terminate its contract with that other undertaking and in future to carry out the cleaning work itself.

30. The facts in Süzen are most closely related to those in the main proceedings. A person who had entrusted the cleaning of his premises to a first undertaking terminated his contract with the latter and, for the performance of similar work, entered into a new contract with a second undertaking. In Süzen the Court ruled that the directive does not apply to a situation in which a person who had entrusted the cleaning of his premises to a first undertaking terminates his contract with the latter and, for the performance of similar work, enters into a new contract with a second undertaking, if there is no concomitant transfer from one undertaking to the other of significant tangible or intangible assets or taking over by the new employer of a major part of the workforce, in terms of their numbers and skills, assigned by his predecessor to the performance of the contract.

31. On the basis of an extensive interpretation of the legal reasoning in Süzen the Commission and all the parties other than Temco conclude that in the present case there was a contractual transfer of an undertaking within the meaning of Article 1(1) of the directive.

32. However, I do not consider this approach to be satisfactory. In my view, such a finding takes insufficient account of the economic context in which services are contracted out. The particular economic conditions under which contracts for the provision of services are concluded, and also the purpose of the directive, the case-law of the Court, and the circumstances of the case set out by the national court, lead me to conclude that the directive does not apply in the present case.

Contracting out of services: the economic context

33. In support of my view I must first examine in greater depth the economic context in which contracts for the contracting out of services are concluded.

34. Volkswagen's conduct is characteristic of the present trend for companies to contract out tasks which do not form part of their core activities to companies specialised in providing ancillary services under contract. Obvious examples are companies engaged in cleaning operations, surveillance services, catering activities, customer service, education and training, hardware and software provision, and product development, etc. The service providers often operate on a local level and on a small scale, carrying on their activities on the premises of the company awarding the contract. In that respect the possibility cannot be ruled out that competing companies will be performing work for the same contracting company at the same time. Essentially, particular blocks of economic activities are engaged in on these service markets for a specific period. This period can range from one day for the provision of catering at a specific event, for example, to a number of years in the case of cleaning operations. Once the contract expires, the service provider competes again for the favour of the contract awarder who will select a competitor if it offers better conditions and services. Where, for example, the staff of an establishment complains about the catering, the awarder will seek a contract with a caterer which offers better service.

35. In the case of such economic activities labour generally constitutes a major cost item. Since the contracts between undertakings contracting out and service providers are usually concluded for a relatively limited period, staffing in this sector is characterised by an appreciable rate of turnover.

36. The markets for these categories of services are developing apace. There is a large and growing number of undertakings contracting out and the number of service providers is also increasing. This constitutes a significant difference from contracts offered on markets on which there are a relatively limited number of providers and customers such as, for example, the markets in rail transport and radio and television frequencies. On these markets the selection of a particular trader by the contract awarder has a significant influence on the market position of the competitors and the loss of a contract can in itself jeopardise the continued existence of the service provider. In the case of the contracting out of services such as in the present case, a service provider which loses a contract will, generally speaking, go in search of new customers.

37. Moreover, the markets in the contracting out of services are characterised by great diversity. This applies both to high-quality services with great added value, such as software and engineering activities, and services which are provided by persons with fewer skills, such as cleaning operations. Furthermore, sub-specialisations appear within sectors. The present case is illustrative of this diversity. At the hearing it was pointed out that the cleaning of industrial plants occupies a special position within the cleaning sector and is not comparable with more customary cleaning work in schools and offices.

38. On account of the heterogenous and dynamic nature of these markets, the Court must, in my view, be reticent in regard to the application of the directive in the case of changes of contract. The dynamics of the market might be disrupted if the existence of a transfer within the meaning of the directive were assumed too readily. The obligation to respect the rights of all the members of staff of a company solely on the basis of the takeover of a contract and the takeover of a proportion of existing staff will give a potential new contractor less incentive to pick up the contract. Undertakings might even be deterred from competing for the contract. All this could lead to the ossification of markets. The facts in the main proceedings again provide an example. The question is whether or not Temco would have been willing to enter into the contract for the cleaning operations at Volkswagen under the same conditions if the company had had to take over the entire staff of GMC instead of 42 employees.

39. It could be argued that in this connection the compulsory takeover of the entire staff forms part of the normal risk run by traders. This finding is correct where there is an actual takeover of the operation of a company within the meaning of company law. In that case the transferee makes a cost-benefit analysis of the undertaking to be taken over and the takeover price is determined inter alia by past performance and the compulsory takeover of the staff. The same occurs in the case of contracts which run for a long time and which are awarded through official invitations to tender. However, where services are contracted out, the award of a contract for a relatively short period is central and in that respect the compulsory takeover of the staff cannot, in my view, be regarded as a normal commercial risk.

40. The aim of Directive 77/187 is to ensure continuity of employment relationships within an economic entity, irrespective of any change of ownership. The directive is based on Article 100 of the EC Treaty (now Article 94 EC) and for that reason considerations relating to the market and competition must be taken into consideration. In a market which is characterised by specialisms, short-term contracts between undertakings contracting out and service providers and considerable turnover of staff, employee protection is better served by conventional employment law than by employment protection relating to the takeover of undertakings. Furthermore, if the service provider is required too readily to take over the entire staff, the objective of the directive will become disproportionate in relation to the principle of freedom of contract and of freedom to engage in business activities.

The criteria for application of the directive and development of the Court's case-law

41. The fact that, in assessing a transaction, account must be taken of the economic context in which it takes place is also clear from the case-law of the Court. As has been seen, the Community legislature did not define the concepts transfer, undertaking, legal transfer or merger in Article 1(1) of the directive. For this reason it is for the Court to define these Community terms. In a series of decisions and in light of the social purpose of the directive those basic concepts must be interpreted flexibly. Instead of rigid, closely circumscribed definitions the Court has opted for criteria which must be applied by the national court in accordance with the circumstances of the case.

42. The criteria for application of the directive can be summarised as follows. Firstly, the transfer must relate to an undertaking which is defined as a stable economic entity. The undertaking must be transferred pursuant to a contract and in that respect the Court has stated that there must be a change, on the basis of a contract, in the legal or natural person responsible for operating this entity and who incurs the obligations of an employer vis-à-vis the employees of the undertaking.

43. Secondly, the decisive criterion for establishing whether there is a transfer for the purpose of the directive is whether the business in question retains its identity, as indicated by the fact that its operation is actually continued or resumed with the same or similar activities. That criterion has now been codified by Regulation 98/50 in Article 1(1)(b) of the amended directive.

44. In the specific case before it the national court must determine whether these conditions are met in the light of the interpretative criteria laid down by the Court. According to the Court, the national court must consider all the facts characterising the transaction in question, including the type of undertaking or business, whether or not the business's tangible assets, such as buildings and movable property, are transferred, the value of its intangible assets at the time of the transfer, whether or not its customers are transferred and the degree of similarity between the business carried on before and after the transfer and the period, if any, of any interruptions in that business. It should be noted, however, that all those circumstances are merely individual factors in the overall assessment to be made and cannot therefore be considered in isolation.

45. Since the national court must consider all the facts in assessing a transaction, the type and characteristics of the relevant markets for the provision of services must, in my view, also be taken into account where services are contracted out. This can be achieved by having regard to those characteristics in interpreting the concepts legal transfer and undertaking within the meaning of Article 1(1) of the directive.

46. The case-law of the Court in respect of the abovementioned concepts has undergone significant development.

47. Thus, the requirement that the transfer must take place pursuant to a contract is not limited to situations in which contractual relations exist between the transferor and transferee of the undertaking. On account of the differences between language versions and between the laws of the Member States, regard must also be had, in determining that concept, to the scheme and objective of the directive. For those reasons, the Court has extended the concept contract so that the directive is applicable wherever, in the context of contractual relations, there is a change in the natural or legal person who is responsible for carrying on the business and incurs the obligations of an employer towards employees of the undertaking. For example, it is irrelevant whether or not there is a transfer of ownership or that there is consensus as regards the transfer. The fact that termination of a lease of a restaurant is followed by a new lease with another operator does not preclude application of the directive. The reasoning of the Court is that in such a situation the transfer is effected in two stages, through the intermediary of a third party, in that the undertaking is first transferred by the original lessee to the owner and the latter then transfers it to the new lessee.

48. However, the Court has not gone so far as to accept that there may be no link at all between the transferor and the transferee. In Redmond, in which a public authority - the Municipality of Groningen - changed its subsidy policy and decided to withdraw the subsidy to a foundation seeking to assist drug addicts and to grant it to another foundation with the same aim, the Court, while considering that the directive could be applicable, attached importance to the fact that the old and the new foundation arranged for by mutual agreement the transfer of patients, accommodation, information and resources. In the case where a motor vehicle dealership concluded with one undertaking was terminated and a new dealership was awarded to another undertaking the Court ruled that the fact that an agreement and guarantee containing a provision relating to costs incurred in the transfer of the staff was concluded between the principal shareholder of the old undertaking and the new dealer confirmed that there was a legal transfer within the meaning of the directive.

49. In Süzen the Court considered that the lack of any direct contractual link between the two undertakings successively entrusted with the cleaning of a school can certainly not be conclusive as regards the application of the directive. However, at the same time the Court applied the requirement that, for the purposes of contractual relations, there must be a change in the operation of the undertaking.

50. Moreover, the complete abandonment of the requirement relating to contractual relations between transferee and transferor would be contra legem. The wording of the directive refers expressly to the contractual relationship in the form of a contract or merger.

51. Alongside the concept contract the concept of undertaking within the meaning of Article 1(1) of the directive has also been further elaborated in the case-law. The Court proceeds on the basis that the directive can be applied wherever the transfer relates to a stable economic entity whose activity is not limited to performing one specific works contract. The concept of entity refers to an organised grouping of persons and assets facilitating the exercise of an economic activity with a view to a specific objective. There can be a transfer only were the identity of such an economic entity is retained. However, an undertaking can retain its identity where, for example, its principal place of business moves to another municipality, the transferor terminates all its activities after the transfer and a large proportion of the staff are dismissed.

52. Such an extensive interpretation is also central to Süzen in which the concept economic entity is separated from the existence of assets. In sectors in which an economic entity is able to function without any significant tangible or intangible assets, the maintenance of its identity following the transaction affecting it cannot, the Court argues, be logically dependent on the transfer of such assets. In certain labour-intensive sectors, such as the cleaning sector, the Court acknowledges that a group of workers engaged in a joint activity on a permanent basis may constitute an economic entity. Therefore, such an entity is capable of maintaining its identity after it has been transferred where the new employer does not merely pursue the activity in question but also takes over a major part, in terms of numbers and skills, of the employees specifically assigned by his predecessor to that task. In those circumstances, the new employer takes over a body of assets enabling him to carry on the activities or certain activities of the transferor undertaking on a regular basis.

53. This reasoning determines the limits in regard to the situations to which the Court considered the directive could properly be applied. Other judgments are more restrictive. The driving of underground tunnels and the operation of bus routes are not labour-intensive activities. In Rygaard it was made clear that the taking over, with a view to completing, with the consent of the awarder of the main building contract, works started by another undertaking, of two apprentices and an employee, together with the materials assigned to those works, does not constitute a transfer within the meaning of the directive. In that case undertaking A had accepted a contract to complete joinery work for undertaking B. With the consent of undertaking B, undertaking A then had part of the work completed by undertaking C. The Court considered that there was no takeover as between undertakings A and C because the transfer of the work did not include the transfer of a body of assets enabling the activities or certain activities of the transferor undertaking to be carried on permanently.

54. Süzen states unequivocally that, in regard to the contracting out of services, the mere fact that the service provided by the old and the new contracting parties is similar does not therefore support the conclusion that an economic entity has been transferred. An entity cannot be reduced to the activity entrusted to it. Its identity also emerges from other factors, such as its workforce, its management staff, the way in which its work is organised, its operating methods or indeed, where appropriate, the operational resources available to it. In the Court's view, the mere loss of a service contract to a competitor cannot by itself support the proposition that there has been a transfer within the meaning of the directive.

55. This case-law concerning the subject-matter of the takeover within the meaning of Article 1(1) of the directive shows that the Court interprets the retention of the identity of an economic entity broadly but that that identity must be reflected in a degree of organisation and permanence and cannot be constituted merely by the placing of a contract by one customer.

The application of the criteria in the present case

56. Returning to the case before the Court, I would point out that the national court has highlighted a number of specific circumstances. In the first instance Volkswagen had awarded the cleaning contract to BMV which subsequently entrusted the work to GMC. Therefore, there was no direct contractual link between GMC and Volkswagen or a fortiori between GMC and the new contracting party, Temco. Furthermore, no assets of any kind were transferred from GMC to Temco. A proportion of the staff were indeed taken over by Temco, but the takeover took place after the employees other than the four trade-union delegates had already been dismissed by GMC. The takeover of the staff is a consequence of the obligations on Temco arising from a collective labour agreement. Moreover, the national court states that GMC continued to exist even after BMV had lost the contract with Volkswagen.

57. Since the case concerns cleaning operations, consideration could be given, in keeping with Süzen, solely to whether or not Temco is carrying on the activities which BMV-GMC carried on at Volkswagen and has taken over a major part of the staff which GMC used for the cleaning operations in question. As I noted earlier, I take the view that such consideration is too limited. In assessing the facts characterising the transaction in question, it is also necessary, under the case-law referred to above, to consider the type of undertaking and the type of activity carried on. I propose that the Court should adopt a broader criterion in this regard by also taking account of the economic circumstances under which the transaction takes place.

58. In this respect I find it difficult, on the basis of the information provided by the national court and in view of the economic context, to conclude that the identity of the cleaning company was transferred to the new contracting party in the context of contractual relations. The sole inference that may be drawn is that Temco took over a proportion of the staff of GMC in order to perform the contract which it concluded with Volkswagen.

59. First of all, it is clear that the fact that Volkswagen awards a contract for industrial cleaning operations to a new contracting party does not constitute a takeover within the meaning of company law. There is merely a contract to perform certain economic activities. Moreover, in light of the abovementioned paragraphs of the judgment in Süzen, the fact that BMV lost the contract to provide cleaning services at Volkswagen to Temco does not support the proposition that there was a transfer of an undertaking for the purposes of the directive.

60. In my view, it is not logically possible to speak of a takeover of an undertaking as a result of legal transfer or merger merely on the basis of the fact that, where services are contracted out, the new contracting party takes over (a major part of) the staff of the previous contracting party. In this respect it is irrelevant whether or not this takeover of staff takes place voluntarily, for example because the new contracting party requires the know-how of the staff in order to perform the contract to provide services, or involuntarily, for example because a collective labour agreement compels it to do so.

61. In regard to the requirement concerning contractual relations, apart from the fact that one succeeded the other as service provider in respect of Volkswagen, there is no actual link between BMV-GMC and Temco. Temco took over a proportion of the staff after GMC had already lawfully dismissed its members of staff. GMC stated that, when dismissal of the 76 employees was requested, it was unaware of the identity of the new contracting party. It is evident from the facts set out by the national court that consent for the dismissal was granted on 30 November 1994 by the Employment Department for the Brussels region, whilst Volkswagen entered into the contract with Temco in December 1994. No artificial arrangement between GMC, BMV and Temco, for example to escape the application of the directive, is evident. In my view, there can therefore be no question of any contractual relationship, even an indirect one. The two-stage reasoning applied by the Court in its case-law, that is to say that no direct contractual link is necessary between the transferor and the transferee, also assumes a certain link and the mediation of an intermediary undertaking. However, it is not evident that Volkswagen, as the undertaking contracting out services, was actively involved in the relationship between the old and the new contracting party.

62. Furthermore, the business did not retain its identity. In the present case that identity cannot be constituted by the continuation of the same activities - in this case industrial cleaning operations - because this continuation is inherent in the change in contracting party where services are contracted out.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

63. Nor in my view does such an entity retain its identity where the new employer not only continues the activity in question but also takes over a major part, in terms of numbers and skills, of the employees specially assigned by his predecessor to that task. Since the employees dismissed by GMC clearly have specific knowledge of the operations at Volkswagen, it is entirely normal, from a market point of view, for Temco to have offered contracts to some of the staff who had been dismissed. In my view, the mere take-over of a major part of the staff by the new contracting party in a dynamic market has no connection with the identity of a business and therefore provides no conclusive argument. In that case the new contractor does not acquire the body of assets enabling the activities or certain activities of the transferor undertaking to be carried on a permanent basis. Even if activities carried out are essentially based on manpower, the identity of a business cannot be derived solely from the number and skills of the staff who are taken over. In determining identity, account must be taken of other factors relating to the staff, such as management, organisational structure, division of labour, and systems of training, pay and promotion. If, where services are contracted out, a proportion of the staff are taken over as a result of a change of contracts for the performance of a specific contract, it is not possible to regard that as permanent continuation of the activity in question on account of the nature of the contract, which is by definition of temporary duration.

64. In light of the foregoing, I am thus of the view that the directive is not applicable in the present case. The requirement that within the context of contractual relations the identity of the business be retained is not fulfilled.

65. That conclusion is in my opinion, also warranted.

66. Firstly, any other view would have the paradoxical result that the directive, which seeks to protect all employees where undertakings are taken over, would even apply to the contracting out of services if a proportion of the staff were taken over to carry out a block of similar work. It would be even less comprehensible if the takeover of the staff by the new contracting party did not occur voluntarily but took place on the basis of obligations arising from a collective labour agreement. For in such a case the transfer of an undertaking is dictated by the collective labour agreement.

67. Secondly, there is no reason why, where a service provider loses a contract as a result of commercial considerations, that is to say because another undertaking would offer better terms, the new contracting party should automatically have to retain the entire staff of the undertaking which lost the contract merely because its commercial activity happens to be essentially based on manpower. A significant consequence of this would be, for example, that if a caterer in a company canteen were changed on account of the poor service provided by the staff the new contracting party would have to deal with the staff with whom the party awarding the contract was not satisfied. In market terms, an excessively broad view would be unwarranted and could result in far-reaching and unforeseeable consequences in a dynamic economic situation. Further extension of the criteria for application of the directive would inevitably lead on those markets to arbitrariness and legal uncertainty.

68. Thirdly, the directive is aimed at protecting existing staff, but, as indicated above, the contracting out of services primarily involves, in my view, a change of contracts of a specific duration and not a permanent takeover of an undertaking together with its existing staff. In the present case the complete takeover of the staff, with the safeguarding of the employees' rights arising from the collective labour agreement with GMC, could result in discrimination against the employees of Temco. It cannot be ruled out that Temco has better motivated and qualified staff who would be excluded from the operations at Volkswagen as a result of the application of the directive. For Temco, Volkswagen was only one of many principals. Furthermore, Temco is deprived of an opportunity to seek other members of staff on the labour market. The protection afforded to sitting employees thereby results in clear discrimination against employees entering the market.

B - The protection afforded by the directive

69. If the Court rules that there was no transfer of an undertaking in the present case, the second question need not be answered. In the event that the Court should take a different view, I will deal with this question in brief below.

70. By the second question the national court seeks to ascertain whether the directive nevertheless precludes GMC, in its capacity as the transferor in the event of takeover, from being able to retain workers in its service. In the main proceedings tensions arose because the dismissal by GMC of four trade-union delegates was not permitted on account of the protection from dismissal afforded by national law. As a result the four were able to exercise their rights under the directive with greater difficulty or not at all. In fact, this question comes down to whether the four employees could have relied on the protection afforded by Article 3(1) of the directive vis-à-vis Temco if they had not terminated their employment with GMC on account of their protection against dismissal and also if they had not been dismissed by the transferor.

71. Therefore, it is necessary to examine the significance of the national legislation concerned for the interpretation of the directive, in relation to the action of the employees concerned.

72. The directive is intended to protect workers in the event of takeover by making it possible for them to enter automatically into the service of the new employer under the same conditions as those agreed with the transferor. The rules of the directive are, in the view of the Court, mandatory in nature, so that it is not possible to derogate from them in a manner unfavourable to employees. Accordingly, the transfer of the contracts of employment cannot be dependent on the intention of the transferor or the transferee. Nor are they free to determine, by mutual agreement, the time at which the obligations arising in the employment relationship are transferred to the transferee because the obligations in question are transferred to the transferee as from the date of transfer.

73. Therefore, it follows that GMC, as the transferor, cannot infringe the rights of the employees concerned by retaining them in its service. In my view, the fact that GMC is compelled to do so by national law is not decisive. When the directive has been transposed, national law cannot be interpreted to the detriment of these employees. The abovementioned case-law precludes such an interpretation which, moreover, would undermine the practical effect of the directive.

74. However, the mandatory nature of Article 3(1) of the directive is limited by a worker's freedom to choose his occupation. The protection which the directive is intended to guarantee is redundant where the worker concerned decides of his own accord not to continue the employment relationship with the new employer after the transfer. In that case, it is for the Member States to determine what is to happen concerning the contract of employment or employment relationship. National law may for example provide that the contract of employment should be maintained with the transferor.

75. In the present case there is disagreement as to whether or not the four trade-union delegates voluntarily decided not to transfer to Temco. In its order for reference the Cour du travail states that in the period leading up to their dismissal by GMC in December 1995 the four never claimed to have entered into the service of Temco. Since they considered that they enjoyed special protection against dismissal, they demonstrated by their conduct up to their dismissal that they were still members of the staff of GMC.

76. However, these matters are contested by GMC-BMV and the four trade-union delegates. They assert that in the period from 9 January 1995 to 11 December 1995 the four were indeed still on the payroll and continued to receive part of their pay from GMC without having to perform any work in return, but that this situation was created by Temco's refusal to take them over. Consequently, there could be no question of them deciding voluntarily not to transfer.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

77. The observations submitted and the explanations given by the parties at the hearing do not really make it possible to establish whether or not the four voluntarily by their conduct renounced their rights under the directive. Therefore, it must be left to the national court to make a final judgment in the light of the actual circumstances. In that regard, account must be taken of the fact that the trade-union delegates enjoyed special legal protection based on national law which could explain a certain reluctance on their part to transfer to Temco. Since the obligations legally devolve to the transferee at the time of the takeover, I consider that the national court must take as a basis the conduct of the employees concerned during the period in which the transfer took place, that is to say around 9 January 1995. The principle of legal certainty in respect of the transferee and the transferor also requires that this be the case.

VI - Conclusion

78. In light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court answer the questions referred by the Cour du Travail, Brussels, as follows:

(1) Article 1(1) of Council Directive 77/187/EEC of 14 February 1977 on the approximation of the laws of the Member States relating to the safeguarding of employees' rights in the event of transfers of undertakings, businesses or parts of businesses does not apply in a situation where undertaking A contracts with undertaking B for the cleaning of its industrial plants and undertaking B entrusts that work to undertaking C, which, following loss of the contract by undertaking B, dismisses all its staff, except for four persons, whereupon undertaking D is awarded the contract by undertaking A, employs a proportion of the staff of undertaking C under a collective labour agreement but takes over none of the assets of undertaking C, which latter undertaking continues to exist and to pursue the objects for which it was incorporated.

(2) The second question need not be answered.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Alber delivered on 20 September 2001.
The Queen v Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, ex parte Omega Air Ltd (C-27/00) and Omega Air Ltd , Aero Engines Ireland Ltd and Omega Aviation Services Ltd v Irish Aviation Authority (C-122/00).
References for a preliminary ruling: High Court of Justice (England & Wales), Queen's Bench Division (Crown Office) - United Kingdom and High Court - Ireland.
Regulation (EC) No 925/1999 - Noise emissions of aeroplanes - Prohibition of re-engined aeroplanes with engines with a by-pass ratio of less than 3 - Validity.
Joined cases C-27/00 and C-122/00.

I - Introduction

1. These two reference for preliminary rulings concern the validity of a provision of Regulation (EC) No 925/1999. That regulation restricts the use of aeroplanes at European airports, in the interests of protection against noise. The Court is asked whether it is lawful for the regulation to exclude aeroplanes which have been completely re-engined from those restrictions only if the engines have what is known as a by-pass ratio of three or more, while a lower by-pass ratio leads to the application of restrictions on use. Omega intends to equip Boeing 707s with new engines which have a by-pass ratio of 1.74. Omega claims that as a result of further technical measures these aeroplanes are not in fact noisier, and are moreover more economical and cleaner.

II - Legal background

A - Council Regulation (EC) No 925/1999 of 29 April 1999 on the registration and operation within the Community of certain types of civil subsonic jet aeroplanes which have been modified and recertificated as meeting the standards of volume I, Part II, Chapter 3 of Annex 16 to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, third edition (July 1993) (the Regulation)

2. The aim of the Regulation is to reduce aircraft noise at airports in the Community by laying down rules for the operation and registration of older aeroplanes which have been modified to reduce their noise. On its background in international and Community law, the report of José Valverde Lopez, Member of the European Parliament, states as follows:

The Chicago Convention on International Civil Aviation is one of the main documents where the regulation of noise emissions from aeroplanes is concerned. It divides aeroplanes into three categories or chapters:

Chapter 1 covers aeroplanes that were among the noisiest at the time and may now no longer be used.

Chapter 2 aeroplanes are, under Directive 92/14/EEC, [] to be phased out from April 1995 to April 2002. From 1 April 2002 they may no longer be used in the EU, even if exempted in the annex to the directive referred to above. These Chapter 2 aeroplanes may, however, be equipped with "hushkits" so that they produce less noise and can be included in Category 3.

However, "hushkitted" aeroplanes only just satisfy the standards for Chapter 3 and are not therefore really comparable with "proper" Chapter 3 aeroplanes. They are not only relatively noisy and so cause considerable noise pollution around airports, but also cause more pollution in the form of CO2 and other air pollutants than more recent Chapter 3 aeroplanes. Both fuel consumption and emissions of carbon monoxide and nitrogen oxide are far higher in hushkitted Chapter 2 aeroplanes than genuine Chapter 3 aeroplanes (by as much as 50% and 30% respectively).

3. The issue in the present proceedings is not, however, modification by means of hushkits, but complete re-engining. The Regulation prohibits the use of modified aeroplanes at airports in the Community, unless they have been modified by complete re-engining with engines having a by-pass ratio of three or more. Aeroplanes with new engines with a by-pass ratio of less than three may thus in principle not be used in the Community. Only aeroplanes which were already operated in the Community on the date of application of the Regulation could continue to be used.

4. To understand the importance of by-pass ratio, a brief description of how turbofan engines function is appropriate.

5. The engines of jet aircraft produce mainly two sorts of noise. Part of the noise comes from the mechanical parts of the engine, the other - traditionally no doubt the predominant - part is produced by the air expelled by the engine when it meets the surrounding air. This airflow produces the thrust of a jet engine. It is characterised by a high temperature and a high speed. The higher those are in relation to the surrounding air, the more noise is produced.

6. In a turbofan engine the noise from the exhaust is reduced because, in addition to the high-speed airflow through the core of the engine (the actual turbine) an airflow at lesser speed is directed through a duct surrounding the engine core (the by-pass airflow). This by-pass airflow is produced by a fan at the front of the engine. The fan contributes to the overall thrust of the engine. The by-pass airflow has the result that when the core airflow leaves the engine it meets the external air less turbulently. As a result, the noise of the exhaust is less than where there is no by-pass airflow. The higher the ratio of the by-pass airflow to the core airflow, the less noise is produced. The by-pass ratio of three used as the limit in the Regulation means that the by-pass airflow is three times greater than the core airflow. For the engines envisaged by Omega, however, the by-pass airflow is not even twice the core airflow.

7. Omega further states, without being contradicted, that increasing the by-pass airflow requires a larger fan at the front of the engine, however. The larger the fan, the more noise it produces. Fan noise is greater during landing because the slower speed of the fan blades produces a less aerodynamic and hence noisier flow of air.

8. The prohibition of re-engined aeroplanes whose engines have a by-pass ratio of less than three follows from Article 3 in conjunction with the definition in Article 2(1) and (2) of the Regulation.

9. Article 3, headed Non-complying aeroplanes, reads as follows:

1. Recertificated civil subsonic jet aeroplanes shall not be registered in the national register of a Member State as from the date of application of this Regulation.

2. Paragraph 1 shall not affect civil subsonic jet aeroplanes which were already on the register of any Member State on the date of application of this Regulation and have been registered in the Community ever since.

3. Notwithstanding the provisions of Directive 92/14/EEC and in particular Article 2(2) thereof, as from 1 April 2002 recertificated civil subsonic jet aeroplanes registered in a third country shall not be allowed to operate at airports in the territory of the Community unless the operator of such aeroplanes can prove that they were on the register of that third country on the date of application of this Regulation and prior to that date have been operated, between 1 April 1995 and the date of application of this Regulation, into the territory of the Community.

4. Recertificated civil subsonic jet aeroplanes which are on the registers of Member States may not be operated at airports in the territory of the Community as from 1 April 2002 unless they have been operated in that territory before the date of application of this Regulation.

10. Article 2(1) of the Regulation first defines a civil subsonic jet aeroplane covered by the Regulation as a civil subsonic jet aeroplane ... powered by engines with a by-pass ratio of less than three. Already in this definition a by-pass ratio of less than three is used as a limiting criterion. Civil subsonic jet aeroplanes powered by engines with a higher by-pass ratio do not fall within the scope of the Regulation at all.

11. Article 2(2) of the Regulation defines a recertificated civil subsonic jet aeroplane as a civil subsonic jet aeroplane initially certificated to Chapter 2 or equivalent standards, or initially not noise-certificated which has been modified to meet Chapter 3 standards either directly through technical measures or indirectly through operational restrictions; civil subsonic jet aeroplanes which initially could only be dual-certificated to the standards of Chapter 3 by means of weight restrictions, have to be considered as recertificated aeroplanes; civil subsonic jet aeroplanes which have been modified to meet Chapter 3 standards by being completely re-engined with engines having a by-pass ratio of three or more are not to be considered as recertificated aeroplanes (emphasis added).

12. The chapters referred to are, according to Article 2(3) of the Regulation, the noise standards as defined in Volume I, Part II, Chapter 2 and Chapter 3 respectively of Annex 16 to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, third edition (July 1993).

13. Recitals 5 and 6 in the preamble to the Regulation give the following reasons for the prohibition laid down in the Regulation:

(5) Whereas older types of aeroplanes modified to improve their noise certification level have a noise performance which is significantly worse, mass for mass, than that of modern types of aeroplanes originally certificated to meet the standards of Volume I, Part II, Chapter 3 of Annex 16 to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, third edition (July 1993); whereas such modifications prolong the life of an aeroplane that would normally have been retired; whereas such modifications tend to worsen the gaseous emissions performance and fuel burn of earlier technology aero engines; whereas aeroplanes may be re-engined to achieve a noise performance comparable to that of those originally certificated to meet Chapter 3 requirements;

(6) Whereas a rule which prohibits the addition of those older modified types of aeroplanes to Member States' registers as from the date of application of this Regulation can be considered as a protective measure aimed at preventing a deterioration of the noise situation around Community airports as well as improving the situation regarding fuel burn and gaseous emissions.

14. The Common Position of the Council of 16 November 1998 justifies the introduction of the passage on re-engined aeroplanes as follows:

In addition, the Council explicitly excluded re-engined aeroplanes (i.e. aeroplanes whose engines have been completely replaced) as these aeroplanes have noise performance comparable to those originally certificated to meet Chapter 3 standards.

15. Why the Council requires a by-pass ratio of three or more is not explained.

B - WTO law

16. Article 2 of the Agreement on Technical Barriers to Trade states:

2.2 Members shall ensure that technical regulations are not prepared, adopted or applied with a view to or with the effect of creating unnecessary obstacles to international trade....

2.3 Technical regulations shall not be maintained... if the... objectives can be addressed in a less trade-restrictive manner.

2.4 Where technical regulations are required and relevant international standards exist... Members shall use them, or the relevant parts of them, as a basis for their technical regulations except when such international standards or relevant parts would be an ineffective or inappropriate means for the fulfilment of the legitimate objectives pursued, for instance because of fundamental climatic or geographical factors or fundamental technical problems.

2.8 Wherever appropriate, Members shall specify technical regulations based on product requirements in terms of performance rather than design or descriptive characteristics.

III - Facts

17. The main proceedings are brought by Omega Air Ltd and several associated undertakings. They will be referred to below as Omega.

18. According to the order for reference in Case C-27/00, Omega is concerned with trading in aircraft, primarily Boeing 707s. It also carries on related activities, such as aircraft engine maintenance. Omega is developing a programme for the gradual replacement of the engines in Boeing 707s by newly manufactured engines with a by-pass ratio of 1.74. The modified aeroplanes will be referred to below as Omega 707s.

19. The aeroplanes to which this programme is directed are not currently operated in the Community, nor do they fly to Community airports. The transitional provisions in Article 3 of the Regulation would therefore not apply to them. They could not be operated in the Community in the form envisaged. For that reason the Omega 707 would not be commercially viable for potential customers.

20. Omega submits that its modified aeroplanes comply with the same noise and gaseous emission standards as those required of aeroplanes which are not excluded. Its plans to fit the Boeing 707s with new engines are effectively brought to a halt by the Regulation. As a result it is unable to secure further financing for its re-engining programme and will incur financial losses.

21. In the proceedings before the Court, Omega gave more information on the background to its project. It says that the re-engining programme was already made public in September 1996.

22. Before reaching a decision, Omega looked at the use of other engines with a higher by-pass ratio. Since the use of such engines would have necessitated extensive and cost-intensive modifications to the wings, the engine now to be used was chosen.

23. There have been only three programmes so far for the complete re-engining of civil aircraft. Omega's programme was the only one in existence during the drafting and adoption of the Regulation.

IV - The questions referred

24. The High Court of Justice of England and Wales states in its order for reference:

Omega advanced six grounds for the invalidity of the Regulation. The High Court, after inspection of the application and evidence, considers that three of these grounds merit reference to the Court of Justice. They are reflected in the three parts of the question referred to the Court of Justice. The High Court rejected as unarguable the other three grounds advanced by Omega, relating respectively to discrimination, legitimate expectations and breach of the Chicago Convention on International Civil Aviation, 7 December 1944.

25. It therefore refers the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

Is Article 2(2) of Council Regulation (EC) No 925/1999 invalid in so far as it defines "recertificated civil subsonic jet aeroplanes" so that re-engined aeroplanes "with engines having a by-pass ratio of three or more" are not subject to prohibitions imposed by the Regulation but aeroplanes wholly re-engined with engines having a by-pass ratio of less than three are subject to prohibitions, having regard in particular to:

(i) the duty to give reasons under Article 253 EC;

(ii) the general principle of proportionality;

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

(iii) such rights as private parties may derive from the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and/or the Agreement on Technical Barriers to Trade?

26. The High Court of Ireland states that the case before it raises the question of the validity of the Regulation. As it does not have jurisdiction to decide the point, it refers the following question to the Court:

Is Article 2(2) of Council Regulation (EC) No 925/1999 of 29 April 1999 on the registration and operation within the Community of certain types of civil subsonic jet aeroplanes which have been modified and recertificated as meeting the standards of volume I, Part II, Chapter 3 of Annex 16 to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, third edition (July 1993), invalid so far as it defines "recertificated civil subsonic jet aeroplanes" as including "civil subsonic jet aeroplanes" as defined at Article 2(1) thereof that have been modified to meet Chapter 3 standards by being completely re-engined with engines having a by-pass ratio of less than three, having regard in particular to:

I. the duty to give reasons under Article 253 EC,

II. the principle of equal treatment,

III. the principle of proportionality,

IV. the compatibility of that provision with the Agreement establishing the World Trade Organisation and in particular the Agreement on Technical Barriers to Trade annexed thereto?

27. With the order for reference, the High Court, Dublin, referred to the already pending Case C-27/00 and requested the Court to hear both cases together expeditiously.

V - Legal assessment

A - The duty to give reasons

Assessments of the referring courts and submissions of the parties

28. The order for reference from the High Court, London, criticises the absence of any statement of reasons for the provision at issue.

29. Omega regards the insertion of the provision at issue into the draft regulation in November 1998 as incomprehensible. It submits in detail that the statement of reasons makes no reference to the following aspects:

- why the Regulation covers re-engining at all;

- why it bases the limit on by-pass ratio;

- why the limit is a by-pass ratio of three;

- why, contrary to the usual practice of Community law, a standard is based not on actual performance but on design;

- why, contrary to the WTO Agreement on Technical Barriers to Trade, it replaces existing international standards - Chapter 3 of the annexes to the Chicago Convention - by a new criterion; and

- why the business of an undertaking is affected so radically in order to bring about so little advantage, or even a disadvantage, for the Community.

30. Omega states that it learnt in early September 1998 of the proposal to introduce a by-pass ratio criterion, and at once started to make its interests known to the Commission, Members of the European Parliament and representatives of the Member States.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

31. The other parties observe, referring to the case-law, that the statement of the reasons for a general measure may be confined to indicating the general situation which led to its adoption and the general objectives which it is intended to achieve. It is not necessary, on the other hand, to give reasons for every technical choice in the regulation. They take the view that the statement of reasons in the Regulation discloses its objectives and the starting situation sufficiently clearly, whereas the decision to set a by-pass ratio of three is a technical means for achieving those objectives. The reasons for that need not be stated in detail, in the case of a general measure.

32. The Commission, the Council and the United Kingdom Government point out that by-pass ratio was already used in other provisions at Community level and in the context of the International Civil Aviation Organisation (ICAO). Undertakings active in air transport were aware of this.

33. The United Kingdom Government considers, finally, that it is not permissible when assessing the statement of reasons in the Regulation to take account of alleged contradictions in the reasons of the Common Position of the Council for the introduction of the provision at issue. Nor is the Council obliged to state reasons for amending the Commission's proposal for a legal measure. Moreover, the Common Position did not express a view on the importance of by-pass ratio for reducing noise.

Opinion

34. The requirements which statements of reasons for measures of general application must comply with are limited, according to settled case-law. Thus the Court said in its judgment on the working time directive:

[W]hilst the reasoning required by Article 190 of the EC Treaty [now Article 253 EC] must show clearly and unequivocally the reasoning of the Community authority which adopted the contested measure so as to enable the persons concerned to ascertain the reasons for it and to enable the Court to exercise judicial review, the authority is not required to go into every relevant point of fact and law....

35. In Case C-122/94, cited in the judgment in Case C-84/94, the Court said: ... if the contested measure clearly discloses the essential objective pursued by the institution, it would be excessive to require a specific statement of reasons for each of the technical choices made by the institution.

36. The Court regularly points out that in the case of measures of general application, the statement of reasons may be confined to indicating the general situation which led to its adoption, on the one hand, and the general objectives which it is intended to achieve, on the other.

37. The preamble to the Regulation shows both the general situation which led to its adoption and the objectives pursued by the Community with the measure. The situation is characterised by environmental harm caused by air traffic at Community airports. The aim of the Regulation is to reduce aircraft noise, harmful emissions and fuel burn.

38. The recitals show further that the Regulation is intended to introduce stricter requirements than those which derive from Chapter 3 alone. Recital 5 states that meeting the standards of Chapter 3 by modifying aeroplanes leads to results which are worse than those of modern types of aeroplanes. That is the reason for departing from the standard of Chapter 3.

39. By introducing the criterion of modification, the Regulation already departs from the general regulatory practice alleged by Omega of basing standards on actual performance. Modification, like re-engining, is not an element of performance but of design.

40. Recital 5 at the same time states without reservation, finally, that re-engined aeroplanes may achieve the same results as modern aeroplanes. By-pass ratio is not mentioned.

41. Only the definitions of civil subsonic jet aeroplanes and recertificated civil subsonic jet aeroplanes in Article 2(1) and (2) of the Regulation use the by-pass ratio of three to delimit the types of aeroplane covered by the Regulation. No express reason is given for the use of that criterion.

42. It must be doubted, however, whether the lack of such a reason withholds from the addressees of the Regulation information which must be communicated in the context of the statement of reasons for a regulation. It may be concluded from the overall structure of the Regulation that the legislature assumed that new engines with a by-pass ratio of less than three would produce worse environmental results than engines with a higher by-pass ratio or completely newly developed aeroplanes. Since the addressees of the Regulation as a rule have expert knowledge in the field of aircraft technology, it must have been possible for them to draw that conclusion. A corresponding explanation would indeed have been desirable, but would in the present case have produced little more clarity. Detailed considerations of questions of engine technology may in any event, according to the case-law referred to above, not be required of the statement of reasons for a regulation of general application. Whether the implied view taken by the legislature is correct is not a question of the statement of reasons but a question of the assessment to be carried out by the legislature.

43. More extensive obligations to state reasons could arise if it is taken into account that the legislature - as will be discussed in detail - had a broad discretion in the present case. In this respect, the Court has held in connection with Commission decisions on agriculture:

... Where the Commission has such latitude [a wide power for the assessment of complex economic situations], it has a duty not only to identify the factors which influenced its decision but also to state their effect.

44. That requirement could be applied by analogy to all legislative measures which are adopted on the basis of a wide power of assessment. However, only in those few cases where the effect of the material factors is unclear, so that the relevant expectations of the legislature require explanation, does it have independent significance. In the present case it was surely clear to all concerned that engines with a high by-pass ratio are because of their design quieter in principle than engines with a lower by-pass ratio. An express reference in the context of the statement of reasons would certainly have been in the interests of clarity, but does not appear to be essential here. Even if this stricter requirement for the statement of reasons were applied, the lawfulness of the contested provision would not therefore be called into question.

45. As regards the alleged departure from international standards and from the WTO Agreement on Technical Barriers to Trade, the duty in Community law to state reasons cannot extend to showing that every provision is consistent with such international rules or giving reasons for any divergence. The latter would even contain an implied admission of a breach of international law.

46. The lawfulness of the use of the by-pass ratio of three as a limiting criterion is not therefore called into question by the Regulation's statement of reasons.

B - Proportionality

Submissions of the parties

47. It is common ground between the parties that in accordance with the principle of proportionality a measure must be appropriate and necessary for achieving its objective. They also agree in principle that the contested provision is intended for the protection of the environment, primarily by reducing noise, but also by reducing fuel burn and harmful emissions.

48. Omega takes the position, however, that the Court must examine strictly whether the principle of proportionality has been complied with, because the contested provision diverges from the Chicago Convention, the normal legislative approach of Community law, and the law of the WTO, and seriously affects Omega's business activity without producing a corresponding benefit for the Community.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Omega also points out that the legislature did not have to make an urgent decision in this case and was able to rely on definite scientific knowledge when assessing the situation.

49. Omega disputes both the appropriateness and the necessity of the contested provision for achieving the objective. Defining a by-pass ratio takes no account at all of actual noise performance. Omega accepts that by-pass ratio is of importance for the noise profile of an engine, but asserts that the aeroplanes to be re-engined by it would, because of special technical measures, be comparable in all respects with modern aeroplanes under Chapter 3 whose engines have a considerably higher by-pass ratio.

50. Omega has submitted estimated figures for the Omega 707 and comparison values for the Airbus A300 B4-203 and the Boeing 767-200 JT90-7R4D, whose engines each have a by-pass ratio of three or more. According to those figures, the Omega 707 is said to be slightly noisier on take-off and laterally but slightly quieter on approach. It even appears that the comparison aeroplanes may be noisier on approach than the Omega 707 on sideline measurement.

51. Omega then observes that the emission figures of the engines envisaged, in terms of hydrocarbons, carbon monoxide and oxides of nitrogen, are below the figures for engines of a comparable Airbus A300-B4-200F, and in terms of hydrocarbons and oxides of nitrogen even below the figures for all comparable aeroplanes. For fuel burn too, a Boeing 707 re-engined by Omega is over 40% better than an Airbus A300-B4-200F.

52. Omega emphasises that the provision at issue is in any case not necessary. It is obviously less restrictive to determine limits for noise, gaseous emissions and fuel burn than to regulate the design of aeroplane engines. That method corresponds to the approach previously used in Community law, the Chicago Convention and the WTO.

53. The other parties - the United Kingdom Government, the Irish Aviation Authority, the Council and the Commission - regard the Regulation as proportionate, on the other hand.

54. They point out that because of the wide legislative discretion judicial review is limited to cases of manifest error of assessment, misuse of powers or exceeding the bounds of discretion. In the main proceedings the United Kingdom Department of the Environment referred to the case-law of the Court of Justice in matters of agriculture, according to which a regulation may be declared to be disproportionate only if it is manifestly inappropriate for achieving the objective pursued.

55. The other parties further stress that the Regulation is intended not only to reduce noise but also to limit other harm to the environment. They are of the opinion that the by-pass ratio of an engine is inextricably linked with noise generation, and also with fuel burn and gaseous emissions.

56. According to the United Kingdom Government, it appears from a report by the experts from the United Kingdom Department of the Environment in the main proceedings that the boundary between noisy and quiet engines is to be drawn at a by-pass ratio of three. The Commission observes that it is immaterial in practice whether the line is drawn at a by-pass ratio of three or a by-pass ratio of two. In practice no engines are used with a by-pass ratio between those two figures. The United Kingdom Government refutes in detail the comparisons made by Omega with other types of aeroplanes.

57. The expert from the United Kingdom Department of the Environment submitted in a report for the Commission that in addition to the subjective evaluation of measurements at specific points the influence of the noise measured there on the size of the noise footprint - the area affected by a specified noise level - should also be taken into account. The expert states that a reduction by 5 decibels leads to a reduction of that area on take-off by over 50%, and another 5 decibels would lead to a reduction by over 80%.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

58. The United Kingdom Government and the Irish Aviation Authority state that the definition of noise limits could not serve the more comprehensive aims of the Regulation in the field of environmental protection as well as the contested provision, which may be expected to produce improvements in fuel burn and gaseous emissions as well.

59. The Commission and the Council refer to the high degree of complexity of measuring aircraft noise. The Regulation is also not meant to anticipate the agreement of new standards within the ICAO. They point out, finally, that all those concerned could be aware of the forthcoming regulation from 1998.

60. On being specifically asked, the United Kingdom, the Commission and the Council expressly reiterated their view that reference to a by-pass ratio of three is a less restrictive means than the definition of new standards for noise, gaseous emissions and fuel burn. On the one hand, the number of re-engined aeroplanes is relatively small. On the other hand, the expense of defining new standards is very great, and it would in particular require the involvement of international institutions. The existing noise standards apply to whole aeroplanes, while the standards for certain emissions apply to engines. They are not appropriate for attaining the objectives of the Regulation.

Opinion

(1) The criterion of review to be applied

(a) The principle of proportionality

61. The Court defines the principle of proportionality as follows:

The Court has consistently held that the principle of proportionality is one of the general principles of Community law. By virtue of that principle, measures imposing financial charges on economic operators are lawful provided that the measures are appropriate and necessary for meeting the objectives legitimately pursued by the legislation in question. Of course, when there is a choice between several appropriate measures, the least onerous measure must be used and the charges imposed must not be disproportionate to the aims pursued.

A measure is therefore proportionate only if it is appropriate and necessary and is not disproportionate to the aim pursued.

62. Those principles do not apply only where there is a financial charge, but to any assessment of a conflict between the aims of Community measures and the consequent effects on legally protected interests.

(b) Discretion of the legislature

63. The criterion of review to be applied is, however, relativised by the Court:

In a sphere in which the Community legislature is called on to undertake complex assessments based on technical and scientific information which is liable to change rapidly, judicial review of the exercise of its powers must be limited to examining whether it has been vitiated by a manifest error of assessment or a misuse of powers or whether the legislature has manifestly exceeded the limits of its discretion.

64. The provision at issue is based on such complex assessments based on technical and scientific information which is liable to change rapidly. The criterion of judicial review in the context of proportionality is therefore limited in the way described.

(c) No restriction of review for appropriateness

65. According to the formulations used in consistent case-law in the field of agriculture, review might even be restricted further. In that field the Court regularly states, when reviewing proportionality, that the legality of a measure adopted in that sphere can be affected only if the measure is manifestly inappropriate having regard to the objective which the competent institution intends to pursue. The stages of necessity and proportion between the contested measure and the aim pursued would then no longer have to be examined.

66. Closer consideration shows, however, that cases in which the Court addressed the question of appropriateness alone did not raise any points concerning necessity or reasonableness. Furthermore, there are judgments of the Court and the Court of First Instance and opinions in which that formulation is used even though questions of necessity and reasonableness were then discussed.

67. The conclusion must be that manifest errors of assessment with respect to necessity and the proportion between the contested measure and its aim may also lead to annulment of the contested provision.

(d) Review of manifest error of assessment

68. In its judgment in Nölle the Court defined the requirements for a manifest error in connection with the adoption of anti-dumping regulations. The finding of dumping necessary in such cases may be based on a comparison of the prices charged by the manufacturers of the product in question in a comparable country. The Court then verifies whether the institutions neglected to take account of essential factors for the purpose of establishing the appropriate nature of the country chosen and whether the information contained in the documents in the case were considered with all the care required for the view to be taken that the normal value was determined in an appropriate and not unreasonable manner.

69. In the context of that verification the Court held that a finding that there has been such a manifest error presupposes proof of the error. If such proof is not possible, that goes to the onus on the person who asserts that a regulation in unlawful.

70. If, moreover, already in the legislative procedure specific facts have been submitted which contradict the view taken by the legislature, then it may be obliged to take those facts into account.

71. It must be conceded that findings from anti-dumping cases may not be applied without further ado to other proceedings. Although regulations imposing anti-dumping duties by their nature and scope are of a legislative nature, they may be of direct and individual concern to producers, exporters or importers. They are therefore to be classified by their nature as between legislation and individual decision. However, the consequences of this particularity are limited essentially to procedural law, in particular the standing of the undertakings concerned to bring proceedings. The findings in the Nölle judgment on the criterion of review for manifest errors of assessment, on the other hand, raise no particular problems when transferred to legislative activity in the classic sense. If it can be proved beyond doubt, in the context of a reference for a preliminary ruling, that there was an error of assessment on the part of the legislature, the Court may not ignore that. That is all the more so if the basic facts must have already been known to the legislature during the legislative procedure.

(2) Application to the reference for a preliminary ruling

72. According to the above considerations, the contested provision is based on a manifest error of assessment if it is shown beyond doubt

- that it is not appropriate for reducing environmental damage by aeroplanes, especially noise,

- that it does not constitute the least restrictive means of achieving that objective equally effectively, or

- if the burden caused by it is not proportionate to that aim.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

(a) Legislative objective

73. The legislative objective of the reference to a by-pass ratio of three or more is the reduction of environmental harm caused by air traffic, with respect in particular to noise, fuel burn and harmful emissions. The basis of that determination was the view that engines with a by-pass ratio of three or more are not as noisy, consume less fuel and also emit less harmful substances than engines with a by-pass ratio of less than three.

(b) Appropriateness

74. There is a manifest error in the assessment of appropriateness if it is the case that aeroplanes under Chapter 2 which are equipped with new engines whose by-pass ratio is below three are at least comparable, as regards noise, fuel burn and emissions, with aeroplanes under Chapter 3.

75. As far as can be seen, the parties are not in dispute over fuel burn and harmful emissions. Only with respect to noise do the two sides disagree in their assessment of the noise to be expected from re-engined aeroplanes. The figures submitted by Omega do not, however, impose the conclusion that its re-engined aeroplanes would be just as quiet as aeroplanes constructed with the aim of complying with the noise standards of Chapter 3. The measurements on take-off and laterally at least are higher than for the comparison aeroplanes mentioned. If one accepts as true Omega's assertion that the human ear can perceive a difference only from noise differences of 3 decibels, then Omega's aeroplanes would be audibly noisier measured laterally, but on take-off there would be no perceivable difference, and their advantage on approach would be at the margin of what is audible. It would in principle be within the legislature's discretion in that situation to attach greater weight to the disadvantages of Omega's aeroplanes than to their advantages.

76. Moreover, Omega has not measured these figures in practice, but can only produce estimates. Omega has not therefore shown convincingly that the provision at issue was manifestly inappropriate for attaining the objective of improved protection of the environment.

77. The appropriateness of the by-pass ratio as a criterion for quieter aeroplanes is also supported, finally, by the fact that the Community legislature has already based other rules on the assessment that a greater by-pass airflow is likely to mean quieter engines. A by-pass ratio of two is used in Article 2(1) of Directive 92/14 and Article 4(e) of Directive 89/629/EEC as an alternative to compliance with noise limits. This alternative to compliance with noise limits is already suggested in Resolutions A31-11 and A32-8 of the ICAO Assembly, according to which the Member States, if anticipating the application of the limits in Chapter 3, are to provide for an exception for aeroplanes having engines with a high by-pass ratio.

78. It cannot therefore be said that the criterion of by-pass ratio is inappropriate for reducing aeroplane noise.

(c) Necessity

79. A manifest error in the assessment of necessity presupposes that other measures can be adopted which are just as appropriate for achieving the aim pursued, but are less burdensome for manufacturers in the position of Omega and at least no more burdensome for third parties.

80. A possibility here is the definition of specific standards for noise, fuel burn and emissions separately, which may even, depending on the legislative objective, go beyond the requirements of Chapter 3. That would be at least as suitable for achieving the legislative objective, since in would guarantee compliance with those standards in any event. The criterion of by-pass ratio alone, by contrast, does not guarantee any precise standards for the individual factors. That criterion allows only a presumption that the aeroplanes certificated will perform better than those not certificated. At least in theory, that criterion would, however, also permit the use of aeroplanes or engines with less good performance.

81. The definition of specific standards would at the same time be less burdensome, because it would not restrict the freedom of choice of designers and airlines as regards the technical solution to be used for attaining the regulatory objective. As Omega rightly submits, that view is confirmed in the law of public procurement both at Community level and at WTO level. Article 18(4) of Directive 93/38/EEC, Article 14(6) of Directive 92/50/EEC and Article VI(2)(a) of the Agreement on Government Procurement each provide that requirements as to the technology used are permitted only in exceptional cases and on objective grounds. The same approach may also be found in Article 2.8 of the Agreement on Technical Barriers to Trade.

82. The arguments put forward in the present case against such standards fail to convince. There is no apparent reason why those standards should be confined to noise without taking reasonable account of fuel consumption or harmful emissions. The Commission may be right in its view that ascertaining whether a type of aeroplane complies with such standards is more difficult than simply taking account of the by-pass ratio. However, it also submits that noise values at least are already ascertained in the context of certification, still necessary, of the aeroplane type for the purpose of compliance with Chapter 3. Stricter standards could link up with that examination. Moreover, there should be no objection to imposing the costs of additional examinations on the person seeking to have a type of aeroplane certificated.

83. The legislature's presumption, in principle not refuted by the submissions of the parties to the present proceedings, that re-engined aeroplanes whose engines have a by-pass ratio of three or more are quieter could even - depending on how strict such standards were - justify exempting those aeroplanes from the, possibly cost-intensive, additional demonstration of compliance with such standards.

84. As regards anticipation of stricter international standards, European rules may well prejudice them politically, but certainly not as a matter of law. Nor is it apparent why international bodies should be involved in setting new standards, while an additional criterion not used internationally may be determined unilaterally.

85. Further indications of the lack of necessity of a rule which fastens exclusively on by-pass ratio are the earlier references to by-pass ratio in Directives 92/14 and 85/629 and in ICAO Resolutions A31-11 and A32-8. They provide that aeroplanes may be certificated if they either comply with noise limits or have a by-pass ratio of two or more or a high by-pass ratio as the case may be. Those provisions manifestly proceed from the assessment that aeroplanes with lower by-pass ratios too may be able to comply with noise limits.

86. Finally, it was explained at the hearing that the draft of a new Chapter 4, to be decided on shortly, of the annexes to the Chicago Convention would determine the next generation of noise standards not by reference to by-pass ratio but solely on the basis of specific noise limits.

87. Consequently, the introduction of the by-pass ratio as the criterion for prohibiting the use of re-engined aeroplanes is based on a manifest error of assessment with respect to necessity. The provision is therefore invalid.

C - GATT 1994 and the Agreement on Technical Barriers to Trade

Submissions of the parties

88. In Case C-27/00, Omega stated that, subject to a change in the Court's case-law, it would not pursue this point further in view of the judgment in Case C-149/96. In Case C-122/00, however, Omega criticises that judgment, aiming at a ruling that the contested provision is void on the ground of breach of WTO law.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

89. The Court - according to Omega - distinguishes, when reviewing the compatibility of Community measures with international agreements, according to whether those measures are based on reciprocal and mutually advantageous arrangements. That distinction is not helpful, however, as all international agreements rest on that basis. Moreover, in that case the element of mutuality had been irrelevant, since it concerned the obligations under international law of subjects of international law. The Court should therefore abandon that line of case-law.

90. Even if the Court wishes to continue in principle to exclude direct effect of WTO law in the Community, it can still review whether individual provisions are sufficiently clear and unconditional to permit direct application. Unlike with other provisions of WTO law, in the case of the provisions of the Agreement on Technical Barriers to Trade that condition is satisfied. The provision at issue clearly infringes those provisions in several respects, which Omega describes in detail.

91. The United Kingdom Government, the Irish Aviation Authority, the Commission and the Council refer to the judgment in Case C-149/96, according to which a possible conflict with WTO law cannot affect the validity of a regulation. They submit in the alterative that the provisions of the Agreement on Technical Barriers to Trade are not infringed.

Opinion

92. Omega misunderstands the basis of the Court's case-law. The decisive point is that legal disputes on the content of WTO law are based on negotiations between the Governments. The withdrawal of unlawful measures is indeed the solution given preference in WTO law, but WTO law does also permit other solutions - for example, settlement, payment of compensation or suspension of concessions. The Court set this out in detail in its judgment in Case C-149/96.

93. The Community's position in those negotiations would be seriously affected if Community law recognised a unilateral direct effect of obligations under WTO law.

94. Direct reliance on rules of WTO law as against measures taken by WTO members appears inappropriate from the point of view of WTO law as well, however. Regardless of their wording, all provisions of WTO law are subject to a general reservation which accords the States concerned various possibilities of reacting to a breach.

95. It is therefore not for the Court but for the WTO, or the members of the WTO, to ensure that WTO law is observed in the legal systems concerned. Direct effect of WTO rules is clearly not part of their legislative content. Such content may not be ascribed, at Community level, to WTO law in its original form but at most in the form of transposition measures. In that context WTO law may be (indirectly) significant. Direct effect of WTO law in the legal systems of the WTO members cannot, on the other hand, sensibly be brought about unilaterally by individual legal systems, but only at WTO level.

96. The conclusion in the judgment in Case C-149/96, namely that having regard to their nature and structure, the WTO agreements are not in principle among the rules in the light of which the Court is to review the legality of measures adopted by the Community institutions, must therefore be maintained. The exceptions mentioned there do not apply here. The fact that the provisions of the Agreement on Technical Barriers to Trade referred to above are perhaps sufficiently precise and unconditional in their wording to be amenable to direct application cannot lead to a different conclusion. They are subject to the general condition of WTO law that the members of the WTO are to comply with their obligations not by direct effect of WTO law in their legal systems but exclusively by specific transposition of those obligations.

D - Equal treatment

Submissions of the parties

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

97. Omega considers that the contested provision unjustifiably differentiates between aeroplanes which have been re-engined with engines with a by-pass ratio below three and noisier aeroplanes which can continue to be used at European airports. Recital 5 in the preamble to the Regulation shows that re-engined aeroplanes can attain the same performance as modern Chapter 3 aeroplanes. Re-engining does not therefore justify the additional requirement of a by-pass ratio of three or more.

98. Omega points out that there are aeroplanes under Chapter 3 - MD 80s - which were fitted as new with the engines it intends to use. The engine envisaged also achieves similar results, as regards noise, fuel consumption and emissions, as engines with a by-pass ratio of three or more.

99. Omega also objects to the fact that re-engining with engines with a by-pass ratio below three is equated with modifying aeroplanes by the installation of hushkits.

100. Finally, Omega asserted in its pleadings in Case C-27/00 that the fixing of the by-pass ratio discriminates against United States manufacturers, since the prohibition of re-engined aeroplanes was justified by reference to engines of the American manufacturer Pratt &Whitney. At the hearing, however, the representative of Omega in Case C-122/00 stressed that he had not made that submission.

101. The United Kingdom Government submits, with respect to alleged discrimination against United States manufacturers, that US and European manufacturers offer engines with a by-pass ratio of three or more. The engine used by Omega is also not the only one with a by-pass ratio below three, as at least one Russian engine of that kind is probably still produced. Moreover, the idea of discrimination against American manufacturers is far-fetched in view of international interconnections. The United Kingdom Government further sets out in detail why the comparisons with individual types of aeroplanes by Omega are mistaken.

102. The Irish Aviation Authority takes the view that it is in any event justified to subject re-engined aeroplanes to stricter requirements than older aeroplanes. Since the by-pass ratio is moreover decisive for noise performance, engines with a higher by-pass ratio may be treated differently from engines with a low by-pass ratio. Finally, American and European undertakings are affected equally by the Regulation.

103. The Commission and the Council emphasise that no reasons are given for this question and therefore base their observations on assumptions. Differentiating according to by-pass ratio is justified by the consequences of the by-pass ratio for noise, fuel burn and gaseous emissions. The distinction as against aeroplanes equipped from the outset with the same engine is justified by the fact that the latter were also certificated originally under Chapter 3. Equal treatment with re-engined aeroplanes follows from the fact that in both cases the original construction is considerably modified. Any disadvantageous treatment of American manufacturers is to be dealt with, finally, only in the context of the questions referred concerning WTO law.

104. It is settled case-law that the principle of equal treatment requires that comparable situations must not be treated differently and different situations not treated alike unless such treatment is objectively justified.

105. Its special importance alongside the principle of proportionality lies in the fact that it prohibits the introduction of measures which are proportionate in principle if they affect comparable situations differently without objective justification. For this element of review, it is thus irrelevant whether - as put forward here - the reference to a by-pass ratio of three is not necessary. What matters is whether like situations have been treated differently without objective justification.

106. Omega adduces three different comparison groups:

- European and United States engine manufacturers;

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

- re-engined aeroplanes and Chapter 3 aeroplanes; and

- re-engined aeroplanes with engines with a by-pass ratio below three and aeroplanes merely modified with hushkits.

107. No sufficient indications have been submitted of direct or covert disadvantageous treatment of US undertakings by the reference to a by-pass ratio of three. The fact that no undertaking located in the European Community and only one remaining American undertaking manufactures engines with a by-pass ratio below three if anything confirms the Commission's view that such engines no longer correspond to the state of technology.

108. The distinction between re-engined or modified aeroplanes and aeroplanes originally designed for the requirements of Chapter 3 is justified above all by considerations of protecting the existing position. Manufacturers who have designed an aeroplane to meet Chapter 3 standards and airlines which have acquired those aeroplanes in principle enjoy greater protection of legitimate expectations with respect to the usability of those aeroplanes than manufacturers and owners of aeroplanes which as originally designed do not meet those standards. The latter must have reckoned with the fact that their aeroplanes would no longer be usable in their existing form when the standards of Chapter 3 were introduced.

109. Moreover, it must be presumed that newer aeroplanes which were already designed with a view to the standards of Chapter 3 will in principle perform better than older aeroplanes which meet the standards under Chapter 3 only as a result of being modified.

110. Re-engined aeroplanes are thus not comparable with aeroplanes which were originally designed in accordance with the requirements of Chapter 3.

111. As regards the comparison between re-engined aeroplanes with a by-pass ratio below three and aeroplanes which have merely been equipped with hushkits, Omega complains not of unequal treatment but of equal treatment of the two groups.

112. The two groups of aeroplanes are made subject by the Regulation to the same prohibition and the same exceptions. They differ, however, in that modification involves reduced engine performance together with increased fuel burn and emissions, whereas new engines already meet the corresponding noise limits in their normal operation. A side-effect of those circumstances is that modified aeroplanes often comply only marginally with the noise limits under Chapter 3, as any further improvement in noise emission will presumably cause loss of performance.

113. Not every difference between comparison groups, however, can preclude treating them in the same way, since otherwise any general rule would be impossible. Rather, it must be the case that the differences between the comparison groups actually require different treatment. As already stated, the legislature was entitled to assume that re-engining with engines with a by-pass ratio below three will lead to worse noise results than re-engining with engines with a higher by-pass ratio. That would also apply to a comparison with aeroplanes which were designed from the outset in accordance with Chapter 3. However, modification with hushkits would also lead to poorer noise results. From the point of view of the principle of equal treatment, the common points of the comparison groups adduced are preponderant, not the differences between them.

114. There is therefore no indication of a breach of the principle of equal treatment.

VI - Conclusion

115. I therefore propose the following ruling:

Council Regulation (EC) No 925/1999 of 29 April 1999 on the registration and operation within the Community of certain types of civil subsonic jet aeroplanes which have been modified and recertificated

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

as meeting the standards of volume I, Part II, Chapter 3 of Annex 16 to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, third edition (July 1993) is invalid, in so far as in Articles 2 and 3 it prohibits the operation in the Community of civil subsonic jet aeroplanes which have been modified to meet Chapter 3 standards by being completely re-engined with engines having a by-pass ratio below three.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Jacobs delivered on 10 May 2001.
SIAC Construction Ltd v County Council of the County of Mayo.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Supreme Court - Ireland.
Public works contracts - Award to the most economically advantageous tender - Award criteria.
Case C-19/00.

1. Under Community rules, public works contracts must be awarded on the basis either of the lowest price or of the most economically advantageous tender; in the latter case all the criteria to be applied must be stated in the contract notice or documents.

2. Where in that context it is stated that the tender most advantageous in respect of cost and technical merit will be accepted, and where the lowest bidders are all of accepted competence, may the contract be awarded not to the bidder whose tender is formally the lowest but to the bidder whose tender is, in the opinion of the consulting engineer, likely to be lowest in ultimate cost? That is, in essence, the question raised in the present case by the Supreme Court of Ireland.

Legislation

3. The relevant Community legislation in force at the material time in the main proceedings was Council Directive 71/305 (the Directive).

4. Of its provisions, essentially only those of Article 29(1) and (2) are in issue in the present case:

1. The criteria on which the authorities awarding contracts shall base the award of contracts shall be:

- either the lowest price only;

- or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract: e.g. price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit.

2. In the latter instance, the authorities awarding contracts shall state in the contract documents or in the contract notice all the criteria they intend to apply to the award, where possible in descending order of importance.

The main proceedings and the request for a preliminary ruling

5. The facts as they appear from the Supreme Court's order for reference and the documents annexed to it are as follows.

6. In February 1992 Mayo County Council (the County Council) advertised in the Official Journal of the European Communities for tenders for construction of a sewerage and sewage disposal improvement scheme, comprising sewers, storm water drains, rising mains and water supply pipes, all complete with various fittings, together with two pumping stations and a waste water treatment works.

7. The contract was to be of the measure-and-value type, in which the estimated quantities of each item are set out in a bill of quantities. The tenderer fills in a rate for each item and a total price for the estimated quantity. The price payable is determined by remeasuring the actual quantities on completion of the work and valuing them at the rates quoted in the tender. This type of contract is used in particular where it is not possible to establish precise quantities before work begins.

8. Under the heading Award criteria (other than price), the contract notice published in the Official Journal stated: the contract shall be awarded to the competent contractor submitting a tender which is judged to be the most advantageous to the council in respect of cost and technical merit...

9. Other contract documents included the instructions to tenderers, the specification, and the conditions of contract. The following relevant points emerge from those documents:

- among the terms defined were tender total (the total of the priced bill of quantities on the date of its acceptance) and contract price (the sum to be ascertained and paid on completion of the contract), although those terms do not appear to have been used systematically throughout the documents;

- the award would be made to the tenderer whose tender was adjudged the most economically advantageous to the County Council in respect of price and technical merit;

- the County Council none the less reserved the right not to accept the lowest or even any tender;

- the decision would be taken on the recommendation of a consulting engineer, who would check the three lowest tenders for errors in calculation and would compare prices with his own estimates of cost to ensure that items were adequately priced to meet the highest standard of workmanship without additional expenditure if the tender appeared underpriced;

- the revised tender price (that is to say, the price established after arithmetic correction) would form the basis for comparison of tenders;

- all items had to be priced, with rates stated in the appropriate places;

- however, where no price or rate was entered against an item, that item would be deemed to be covered by the other rates and prices. (This practice, known as zero-rating, is used by tenderers to submit fewer, inclusive prices for major items covering all related minor items, rather than pricing each individual item in detail.)

10. There were 24 tenderers. The three lowest were SIAC Construction Ltd (SIAC), Pat Mulcair (Mulcair) and Pierse Contracting Ltd (Pierse). Following arithmetic corrections, the tender totals were IEP 5 378 528 for SIAC, IEP 5 508 919 for Mulcair, and IEP 5 623 966 for Pierse.

11. In his extremely detailed report of 30 June 1992, the consulting engineer stated that those tenders were equal in technical merit.

12. However, he had serious reservations regarding SIAC's tender, as the pricing system used greatly reduces the freedom of the consulting engineer to properly and fully administer the contract in a way that, in his view, is the most economically advantageous to the Mayo County Council. In general, SIAC's approach greatly reduced control over all the items in the bill of quantities, which would in one way or another vary on final measurement. Specifically, it had zero-rated 27.5% of the items, whereas Mulcair had zero-rated only 18% and had priced all major items of measured work. SIAC had also deducted in its entirety a provisional sum of IEP 90 000 which had been included for certain materials. (It appears that SIAC considered this to mean that it had to supply such materials free of charge - the effect of which would seem to be similar to that of zero-rating, in that the price was deemed to be included in that of other items.) Mulcair had, in the engineer's opinion, submitted a better balanced tender than SIAC's, and one which might well give far better value for money and might even cost less.

13. In his recommendations, the consulting engineer stated that Pierse's tender had to be rejected simply on price. He then gave a number of reasons for - with the greatest reluctance - not recommending SIAC's tender, in particular the zero-rating practices described above, which caused distortion and rendered proper management and control extremely difficult if not impossible. He expressed his serious doubts that in fact [SIAC's] tender would prove at the end of the day to be the lowest. He therefore recommended that Mulcair's corrected tender be accepted. That was done and the contract has since been completed.

14. When making the award, however, the County Council informed SIAC of those reasons for not accepting its tender. SIAC challenged the County Council's decision before the High Court, which dismissed its action for judicial review and damages on 17 June 1997.

15. One issue was whether the term cost indicated a criterion other than price, in the sense of tender total, in the contract documents. The High Court found that the two terms were used interchangeably and were intended to have the same meaning. In choosing criteria which were stipulated in the contract notice and amplified in other contract documentation, the County Council had exercised a discretionary power of selection which was largely predicated on the exercise of professional judgement. The High Court confined itself to examining whether the County Council's decision was unreasonable, and concluded that it was not. SIAC appealed to the Supreme Court.

16. SIAC submitted in its appeal that the County Council was required to accept its tender as the lowest priced. Since all tenderers had the requisite technical merit, the only relevant criterion could be cost (which was synonymous with price). Cost/price could not mean ultimate cost; it could mean only tender price. By taking account of ultimate cost, the County Council had departed from the specified award criteria, contrary to the principles of transparency, foreseeability of the adjudication process and equality of tenderers.

17. The County Council contended that it was entitled to exercise a discretion and to award the contract on the basis of its consulting engineer's recommendation as to which tender was the most advantageous in respect of cost and technical merit. In a measure-and-value contract, cost must be understood as the ultimate cost to the awarding authority. Furthermore, the consulting engineer was entitled to make comparisons between prices quoted and his own estimates of cost. SIAC had understood that the criterion of cost referred to the probable cost of the contract to the County Council.

18. The Supreme Court has decided to stay the proceedings and submit the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

In a situation where an authority is awarding a contract pursuant to the provisions of the second indent of Article 29(1) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC, Chapter 2, of 26 July 1971 as applied in the national law of a Member State, and where the authority shall have specified the "Award criteria (other than price)" as being that the contract would be awarded to "the competent contractor submitting a tender which is adjudged to be the most advantageous to the" (awarding authority) "in respect of cost and technical merit", and where the three lowest tenderers shall have been contractors of accepted competence and shall have submitted valid tenders of accepted technical merit, and where the tender prices of the three lowest tenderers shall not have diverged greatly, is the awarding authority obliged to award the contract to the contractor who shall have tendered the lowest price or is the awarding authority entitled to award the contract to the contractor with the second lowest price on the basis of the professional report of its consulting engineer that the ultimate cost of the contract to the awarding authority is likely to be less if the contract is awarded to the contractor who tendered the second lowest price than it would be if the contract were awarded to the contractor who tendered the lowest price?

Observations to the Court

19. Written observations have been submitted by SIAC, the County Council, the Irish Government, the Austrian Government and the Commission. SIAC, the County Council, the French Government, the Irish Government and the Commission presented oral submissions at the hearing.

20. SIAC argues that the criterion of cost or price stated in the tender documents must mean the total price of the tender as submitted; by adjudicating between SIAC and Mulcair on the basis of projected ultimate cost, the County Council departed from the award criteria it had itself stipulated. In doing so, it breached the principle of non-discrimination, failed to ensure transparency and foreseeability, and acted subjectively and arbitrarily, conferring on itself what amounted to total discretion.

21. The County Council contends that the references to cost and price can be only to the probable cost of the performed contract and that the question is simply whether it is permissible for an awarding authority to adopt that cost (as assessed by its consulting engineer) as an award criterion under the second indent of Article 29(1) of the Directive. It considers that it is permissible, since the case-law shows that an awarding authority must have some discretion in determining the most economically advantageous offer on the basis of objective criteria, which may include future consequences of the choice made.

22. The French, Irish and Austrian Governments support essentially the County Council's position. The Irish Government agrees in particular that, in the context of a measure-and-value contract where final costs and quantities cannot be accurately predicted, proper compliance with the tendering instructions ensures a fair sharing of the risk which is compromised by excessive use of zero-rating; moreover, the professional judgment of a consulting engineer is in principle not subjective but is in any event open to challenge in the national courts if any lack of objectivity can be established. The Austrian Government agrees with the County Council that to require an awarding authority to adjudicate on the basis of the lowest tender price when it had stipulated a different criterion would be contrary to the provisions and principles of the Directive.

23. The Commission, finally, adopts a position more favourable to SIAC. It considers that where the only relevant criterion is cost, corresponding to the price tendered, a contracting authority is not entitled to have regard to previously unmentioned criteria such as zero-rating, balanced tenders or pricing methodology. Where price is a criterion, it must mean the lowest tender price, whether the context is the first or the second indent of Article 29(1) of the Directive; to take ultimate cost as a criterion would give rise to problems of certainty and objectivity, such as the apparently subjective assessment made by the consulting engineer in the present case.

Analysis

The meaning of price and cost

24. A crucial point in the case is what is meant by cost or price in the tender documents. The High Court found that the words were used interchangeably and were intended to have the same meaning, but does not seem to have decided what that meaning was. The point apparently remains in issue before the Supreme Court, with SIAC arguing that it meant the arithmetically corrected price given in the tender (the tender total defined in the contract documents) and the County Council arguing that it meant the foreseeable final cost (the contract price).

25. SIAC wishes this Court to rule that the terms price and cost in the tender documents cannot, as a matter of Community law, be construed as meaning ultimate cost, and the County Council argues that the Supreme Court's question presupposes that they must have that meaning.

26. Although that is, I consider, a question of interpretation of the terms of a contract governed by Irish law and as such a matter for the Irish courts, this Court may none the less provide guidance as to the meaning of price in the Directive which may be of assistance in arriving at an interpretation.

27. The word price is used in both indents of Article 29(1) of the Directive.

28. In the first indent, the term lowest price only can, I consider, apply only to the price stated in the tender. Any alternative interpretation would detract from the clarity of that provision, which is obviously intended to enshrine an absolutely objective standard; nor, indeed, has any suggestion been made to the contrary.

29. The Commission considers that the word price must be given the same construction in the second indent.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

30. I agree, but do not regard that point as decisive. The second indent allows awarding authorities to assess the most economically advantageous tender on the basis of various criteria according to the contract and provides a non-exhaustive list of such criteria, including price. Other criteria may thus be used, provided that they are stated in the contract notice or contract documents in accordance with Article 29(2), and one such criterion might be probable ultimate cost. It can hardly be denied that the lowest ultimate cost to the awarding authority may qualify as the most economically advantageous.

31. For the reasons given above, I shall not express any opinion on whether cost (or price) in the tender documents means the total of the tender submitted or the foreseeable ultimate price of the contract but shall consider the competing hypotheses in turn.

32. First, however, it will be helpful to examine some general considerations concerning the interpretation and application of the Directive.

The application of award criteria

33. The main purpose of regulating the award of public contracts in general is to ensure that public funds are spent honestly and efficiently, on the basis of a serious assessment and without any kind of favouritism or quid pro quo whether financial or political. The main purpose of Community harmonisation is to ensure in addition abolition of barriers and a level playing-field by, inter alia, requirements of transparency and objectivity.

34. The way in which award criteria are to be applied under the Community rules has been clarified by the Court in a number of judgments, in particular Beentjes, Storebælt Bridge and Walloon Buses, all of which have been cited by the parties who have submitted observations.

35. Beentjes concerned the legality of certain criteria stipulated in the contract documents. Although those criteria were different from that in issue in the present case, some relevant points emerge from the judgment. A stipulation that the award is to be made to the tenderer whose tender appears the most acceptable is incompatible with Community law if, as interpreted in national law, it confers unrestricted freedom of choice on the awarding authority but not if its effect is to allow comparison between tenders on the basis of objective criteria such as those listed in the second indent of Article 29(1) and, where such criteria are used, they must be stated in the contract notice or documents.

36. The Storebælt Bridge case was an action brought by the Commission against Denmark on the ground of irregularities in a major tendering procedure. One tenderer had submitted a tender not in compliance with the tender conditions and the awarding authority entered into negotiations with that tenderer resulting in amendments to the conditions and the acceptance of its tender. The Court held in particular that the principle of equal treatment of tenderers lies at the heart of the Directive and requires that all tenders must comply with the tender conditions in order to ensure an objective comparison.

37. In Walloon Buses, an action brought by the Commission against Belgium (on the basis of another procurement directive), an awarding authority was held to be in breach of Community law because it took into account an amendment to the tender of only one tenderer, awarded the contract on the basis of figures which did not correspond to the requirements of the contract documents and took into account additional features suggested by one tenderer but not among the stipulated award criteria. The Court again stressed the need to respect the principles of equal treatment of tenderers and of transparency.

38. It thus appears clear from the wording of Article 29(1) and (2) and from the case-law that unless an awarding authority specifies the criteria of economic advantageousness which it intends to apply under the second indent of Article 29(1) it is bound to award the contract on the basis of the lowest price only; where it does specify such criteria it is bound by them and may not deviate from them in the course of the procedure. The requirements of transparency, objectivity and equality of opportunity are respected only if all tenderers know in advance on what criteria their tenders will be judged and those criteria are assessed objectively.

39. With those considerations in mind, I turn to the two alternative hypotheses on which the parties to the main proceedings base their submissions. It must also be remembered that the award procedure was governed by the second indent of Article 29(1) and by Article 29(2) of the Directive, not by the stricter requirements of the first indent of Article 29(1).

First hypothesis: The terms price and cost in the tender documents mean the arithmetically corrected total of the tender submitted

40. On this hypothesis, the outcome of the national proceedings seems straightforward. It is common ground that the award was made (at least at the final stage of adjudicating between the two lowest tenders) on the basis of likely ultimate cost and not on the basis of the tender total as defined in the contract documents. Thus, if likely ultimate cost was not one of the award criteria specified in accordance with Article 29(2), its use was contrary to the provisions of the Directive and the principles governing their application.

41. Such a situation would be akin to those in the Storebælt Bridge and Walloon Buses cases, even though in this case there do not appear to have been any formal amendments to the tender conditions or to the tender of the successful tenderer. The mere fact of awarding the contract on the basis of criteria of which tenderers were not informed prevents them from planning the structure of their tenders so as to achieve optimum competitivity and clearly fails to meet the requirements of transparency embodied in Article 29(2) - a fact which vitiates the procedure regardless of whether the criteria used were in fact objective and regardless of whether all tenderers were kept equally uninformed of the true basis on which the award would be made.

42. If those are the circumstances, therefore, the reply to the national court's question must be that the awarding authority was not entitled to award the contract on the basis of likely ultimate cost.

Second hypothesis: The terms price and cost in the tender documents mean the likely ultimate cost to the County Council

43. On this hypothesis, the above objections are in principle not relevant. It is assumed that the criterion of likely ultimate cost was chosen and was then applied. However, it is still necessary to examine whether the choice of criterion was permissible, whether it was stated clearly in accordance with Article 29(2), whether it was applied objectively and whether tenderers were treated equally.

44. I have taken the view that likely ultimate cost is in principle a permissible award criterion in the context of the second indent of Article 29(1), but I have not yet considered whether it was permissible in the form it took in the present case.

45. It is understandable that where, in a measure-and-value contract, the final quantities are likely to vary from the estimated quantities on the basis of which tenders are submitted, the way in which tenders are structured and in particular the approach to zero-rating may affect the ranking of tenders as between the estimate and the ultimate cost.

46. For example, x linear units of drain may be estimated, tenderers being asked to quote a figure per unit, together with separate figures for an estimated number of ancillary items such as manholes, overflows, connections, gullies, valves and ventilating columns, and for excavation in rock, clay, silt etc.

47. If tenderer A submits an inclusive figure per linear unit of drain (zero-rating all the others) and tenderer B submits full itemised figures, their tenders may be compared satisfactorily on the basis of the estimated quantities. However, where the final length of drain laid is different, that comparison will not hold true unless the quantities of ancillary items and types of excavation remain proportionately the same. Among other things, it may be easier for the awarding authority (or its consulting engineer) to control expenditure in respect of variations by exercising technical choices in the case of tenderer B than in the case of tenderer A. Where tenders are very close in value, as was the case here, it does not seem unreasonable to suppose that tender B may prove the lower in ultimate cost.

48. Furthermore, since final quantities will deviate from those estimated but the deviations cannot be predicted with any formal accuracy, it seems reasonable that assessment of the probable effect of different pricing structures on final cost should be based on the professional judgment of an experienced consultant. On the one hand, such a person is in principle qualified to assess that effect with the greatest achievable accuracy and, on the other, he should be aware of the margin of uncertainty which his predictions must involve and will be able to take that factor into account when making his recommendation.

49. The criterion applied in the present case thus seems to me to be a permissible one.

50. The next question is whether the criterion was stated sufficiently clearly in the contract documents, but in a case such as the present that must be a matter for the national court. Obviously, on the present hypothesis, tenderers were informed that their tenders would be assessed on the basis of likely ultimate cost, but I consider it still necessary to examine whether the information given in the contract notice and contract documents was sufficient to allow them to plan their tenders to take account of the way in which that assessment would be made, in particular with regard to the effects of zero-rating. If it was not, there would be a failure to comply with Article 29(2) and the principle of transparency.

51. When examining that question, the national court should take into consideration not merely the literal terms of the contract documents but also the way in which they may be presumed to be understood by a normally experienced tenderer in the context of a measure-and-value contract. Bearing in mind that certainty as to the criteria to be applied is of paramount importance in drafting a tender, the national court should consider to what extent the distinction between tender total and contract price, and the respective role of each, was made clear, and whether the relevant indications were sufficiently prominent in the tender documents. I consider it relevant that, as I have stated above, the word price is normally to be understood as the price stated in the tender, even in the context of the second indent of Article 29(1).

52. In that regard, the County Council has pointed to the statement that the consulting engineer would compare prices with his own estimates of cost. However, that statement may not have any relevance here; it seems to have been confined to the situation in which particular items appeared to have been underpriced.

53. It is again for the national court to determine whether the criterion was applied objectively. That issue is related, but not identical, to the question of unreasonableness, which was addressed in some detail by the High Court by considering whether the award decision plainly and unambiguously flew in the face of fundamental reason and common sense. The test for objectivity should be, I consider, rather less extreme.

54. The essential question here is whether the factors taken into account are capable of supporting the conclusions drawn from them.

55. The consulting engineer's recommendation was based on his professional opinion as to likely ultimate cost. In my view such professional judgment should in principle be considered objective, even though it must of necessity involve some extrapolation from strictly verifiable facts, provided that it is based in all essential points on objective factors regarded in good professional practice as relevant and appropriate to the assessment to be made.

56. Finally, there is the question of equal treatment of tenderers. There is no suggestion in the present case that the successful tenderer benefited from special treatment of the kind seen in the Storebælt Bridge and Walloon Buses cases, where a single tenderer was allowed to make adjustments or negotiate on a different basis after all the tenders had been submitted. However, SIAC has laid great stress on the fact that, of the 24 tenderers, 22 were eliminated on the basis of the tender total alone and only two tenders were examined on the basis of likely ultimate cost.

57. I have stated above that I consider an examination of pricing structure a permissible method of assessing likely ultimate cost because variations in final quantities may affect the final contract price differently depending on the approach to pricing used in the tender.

58. However, since the effect of different pricing approaches on ultimate cost cannot extend beyond a certain range, it would serve no purpose to analyse all tenders in that way. The difference between tenders may be too great for such analysis to have any effect on their ranking. In that event, a higher bid may in my view be refused on the basis of the tender total alone. There is no contradiction between that approach and the scrutiny of pricing structures in order to adjudicate between closely competing tenders. That view is not affected by the fact that tenderers were informed that the arithmetically corrected tender total would form the basis for comparison, provided that the consulting engineer did indeed use the corrected figures when making that closer scrutiny.

59. The question might be raised on the present facts whether all the tenders apart from those of Mulcair and SIAC did in fact fall outside the range within which an examination of pricing structure might affect the ranking of tenders on the basis of likely ultimate cost. In particular, of the three lowest tenders to be examined in detail, Pierse's was not examined in that way, even though the difference between its corrected total and that of Mulcair's bid was no greater than that between the tender totals of Mulcair and SIAC. However, that fact cannot affect the validity of the adjudication as between Mulcair and SIAC, and no other tenderer appears to have challenged the outcome of the award procedure.

60. Subject to the qualifications I have mentioned, it seems to me that the notion of ultimate cost could properly be used as an award criterion on the present hypothesis. The approach which I am advocating should be sufficient, I consider, to allay the fears expressed by the Commission at the hearing, to the effect that the use of that criterion would lead to an unacceptable degree of uncertainty and lack of objectivity in procurement procedures. In my view it - like any other criterion - may be used only where the principles of transparency, objectivity and equality as between tenderers are clearly respected.

Conclusion

61. In the light of all the above considerations, I am of the opinion that the question referred by the Irish Supreme Court should be answered in the following way:

In a procedure governed by the second indent of Article 29(1) and Article 29(2) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC, an awarding authority is entitled to award the contract to the tenderer whose tender, although not the lowest, is likely in the professional opinion of the authority's consulting engineer to be lowest in ultimate cost, provided that transparency, objectivity and equal treatment of tenderers are ensured, and in particular that:

- the award criterion was clearly stated in the contract notice or contract documents; and

- the professional opinion is based in all essential points on objective factors regarded in good professional practice as relevant and appropriate to the assessment made.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Mischo delivered on 13 December 2001.
Concordia Bus Finland Oy Ab, formerly Stagecoach Finland Oy Ab v Helsingin kaupunki and HKL-Bussiliikenne.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Korkein hallinto-oikeus - Finland.
Public service contracts in the transport sector - Directives 92/50/EEC and 93/38/EEC - Contracting municipality which organises bus transport services and an economically independent entity of which participates in the tender procedure as a tenderer - Taking into account of criteria relating to theprotection of the environment to determine the economically most advantageous tender - Whether permissible when the municipal entity which is tendering meets those criteria more easily.
Case C-513/99.

1. The Korkein hallinto-oikeus (Supreme Administrative Court), Finland (hereinafter the national court), refers three questions concerning the interpretation of Article 2(1), (2) and (4) and Article 34(1) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as also Article 36(1) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts.

I - Legal framework

Community law

Directive 92/50

2. Article 1 of the Directive provides that:

For the purposes of this Directive:

(a) public service contracts shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority, to the exclusion of:

...

(ii) contracts awarded in the fields referred to in Articles 2, 7, 8 and 9 of Directive 90/531/EEC or fulfilling the conditions in Article 6(2) of the same Directive;

...

3. Article 36 of Directive 92/50, which is headed Criteria for the award of contracts, is worded as follows:

1. Without prejudice to national laws, regulations or administrative provisions on the remuneration of certain services, the criteria on which the contracting authority shall base the award of contracts may be:

(a) where the award is made to the economically most advantageous tender, various criteria relating to the contract: for example, quality, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical assistance and after-sales service, delivery date, delivery period or period of completion, price; or

(b) the lowest price only.

2. When the contract is to be awarded to the economically most advantageous tender, the contracting authority shall state in the contract documents or in the tender notice the award criteria which it intends to apply, where possible in descending order of importance.

Directive 93/38

4. Article 2 of Directive 93/38 provides that:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

1. This Directive shall apply to contracting entities which:

(a) are public authorities or public undertakings and exercise one of the activities referred to in paragraph 2;

(b) when they are not public authorities or public undertakings, have as one of their activities any of those referred to in paragraph 2 or any combination thereof and operate on the basis of special or exclusive rights granted by a competent authority of a Member State.

2. Relevant activities for the purposes of this Directive shall be:

(c) the operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, trolley bus, bus or cable.

As regards transport services, a network shall be considered to exist where the service is provided under operating conditions laid down by a competent authority of a Member State, such as conditions on the routes to be served, the capacity to be made available or the frequency of the service;

...

4. The provision of bus transport services to the public shall not be considered to be a relevant activity within the meaning of paragraph 2(c) where other entities are free to provide those services, either in general or in a particular geographical area, under the same conditions as the contracting entities.

...

5. Article 34 of Directive 93/38 states that:

1. Without prejudice to national laws, regulations or administrative provisions on the remuneration of certain services, the criteria on which the contracting entities shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) the most economically advantageous tender, involving various criteria depending on the contract in question, such as: delivery or completion date, running costs, cost-effectiveness, quality, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical merit, after-sales service and technical assistance, commitments with regard to spare parts, security of supplies and price; or

(b) the lowest price only.

2. In the case referred to in paragraph 1(a), contracting entities shall state in the contract documents or in the tender notice all the criteria which they intend to apply to the award, where possible in descending order of importance.

...

6. Article 45(3) and (4) of Directive 93/38 provides that:

3. Directive 90/531/EEC shall cease to have effect as from the date on which this Directive is applied by the Member States and this shall be without prejudice to the obligations of the Member States concerning the deadlines laid down in Article 37 of that Directive.

4. References to Directive 90/531/EEC shall be construed as referring to this Directive.

The national law

7. Directives 92/50 and 93/38 were transposed into Finnish law by the Laki julkisista hankinnoista 1505/1992 (Law on public procurement) as amended by Laws 1523/1994 and 725/1995 (hereinafter Law

8. Under Paragraph 4(1) of Regulation 243/1995, that regulation does not concern contracts to which Regulation 567/1994 applies. Under Paragraph 1(10) of Regulation 567/1994, that regulation does not concern contracts to which Regulation 243/1995 applies.

9. Paragraph 43 of Regulation 243/1995 provides that:

1. The contracting entity must approve either the tender which is economically the most advantageous overall according to the assessment criteria for the contract or the tender which is lowest in price. Criteria for assessment of overall economic advantage may be, for example, the price, delivery period, completion date, costs of use, quality, life cycle costs, aesthetic or functional characteristics, technical merit, maintenance service, reliability of delivery, technical assistance and environmental questions.

10. Paragraph 21(1) of Regulation 567/1994 correspondingly lays down that the contracting entity must approve the tender which is economically the most advantageous overall according to the assessment criteria for the supply, service or works, or the tender which is lowest in price. Criteria for assessment of overall economic advantage may be, for example, the price, delivery period, costs of use, life cycle costs, quality, environmental effects, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical merit, maintenance services and technical assistance.

II - The main proceedings

The organisation of bus transport within the city of Helsinki

11. The order for reference states that Helsinki City Council decided on 27 August 1997 that tendering would gradually be introduced for the entire bus transport network within the city of Helsinki, with the first route being put out to tender starting from the autumn 1998 timetable.

12. Under the regulations on public transport in the city of Helsinki, the Joukkoliikennelautakunta (public transport committee) and subordinate thereto the Helsingin kaupungin liikennelaitos (transport department of the city of Helsinki, hereinafter the transport department) are responsible for the planning, development, implementation and other organisation and supervision of public transport in the city of Helsinki, unless provided otherwise.

13. The same regulations provide that the commercial service committee of the city of Helsinki is responsible for decisions on awarding urban public transport services in accordance with the objectives adopted by the Helsinki city council and the public transport committee. In addition, the purchasing unit of the city of Helsinki is responsible for tasks relating to contracts for urban public transport services.

14. The transport department is a commercial undertaking of the municipality which is divided operationally and economically into production units for the different modes of transport (buses, trams, metro, and tracks and property). The production unit for buses is HKL-Bussiliikenne (hereinafter HKL). The transport department also comprises a head unit, consisting of a planning unit and an administrative and economic unit. The planning unit functions as an order-placing office which prepares proposals for the public transport committee as to which routes are to be tendered for and what level of service is to be required. The production units are economically distinct from the rest of that department and have separate accounting and balance sheets.

The tender procedure

15. By a letter of 1 September 1997 and a tender notice published in the public procurement section of the Official Journal on 4 September 1997, the purchasing unit called for tenders for operating the urban bus network within the city of Helsinki, according to routes and timetables described in more detail in a document in seven lots. The main proceedings relate to lot 6 of the invitation to tender, relating to route 62.

16. The file shows that the tender notice stated that the tender would be awarded to the undertaking whose tender was most economically advantageous overall to the city. In assessing overall economic advantage account would be taken of three types of criteria, namely the overall price of operation, the quality of the (bus) fleet and the operator's quality and environment management.

17. As regards, first of all, the overall price of operation, the most favourable tender would receive 86 points and the number of points of the other tenders would be calculated as follows: Number of points = amount of the annual operating payment of the most favourable tender divided by the amount of the tender in question and multiplied by 86.

18. Next, as regards the quality of the vehicle fleet, additional points would be awarded, in particular for the use of buses having nitrogen oxide emissions below 4g/kWh (+2.5 points/bus) or below 2g/kWh (+3.5 points/bus) and external noise below 77 dB(A) (+ 1 point/bus).

19. Lastly, in relation to the operator's quality and environment programme, additional points would be awarded for a body of certified qualitative criteria and for a certified environment programme.

20. The purchasing unit received eight tenders for lot 6, among them tenders from HKL and Swebus Finland Oy Ab (later renamed Stagecoach Finland Oy Ab and then Concordia Bus Finland Oy Ab (hereinafter Concordia)). The tender from Swebus Finland Oy Ab contained two variants, tenders A and B.

21. The commercial service committee decided on 12 February 1998 to choose HKL as transport operator for lot 6, as its tender was considered to be economically most advantageous overall. The order for reference shows that Concordia had submitted the lowest price tender, receiving 81.44 points for its A tender and 86 points for its B tender. HKL had received 85.75 points. As regards vehicle fleet, HKL had obtained the most points, 2.94 points, with Concordia obtaining 0.77 points for its A tender and -1.44 points for its B tender. The 2.94 points obtained by HKL under this head included the maximum awards for nitrogen oxide emissions below 2g/kWh as well as for an external noise level below 77 dB. Concordia had obtained no additional points in respect of nitrogen oxide emissions or noise level. HKL and Concordia had both obtained maximum points for quality and environment certification. The greatest total number of points, 92.69 points, was thus obtained by HKL. Concordia was placed second, having obtained 86.21 points for its A tender and 88.56 points for its B tender.

The procedure before the national courts

22. Concordia applied to the Kilpailuneuvosto (Competition Council, Finland) for an order setting aside the decision of the commercial service committee, founding its claims in particular on the argument that the awarding of extra points for a fleet below a certain nitrogen oxide emission limit and below a certain noise level was unfair and discriminatory. According to Concordia, extra points were allotted for the use of a type of bus which only one tenderer, namely HKL, was able in practice to offer.

23. The Kilpailuneuvosto dismissed the application. It held that the contracting entity is entitled to determine what sort of fleet it wants. Setting the criteria and determining their weight must, however, take place objectively, with the needs of the contracting entity and the quality of service being taken into account. The contracting entity must be able if necessary to give reasons for the appropriateness of the choice and the application of the selection criteria.

24. The Kilpailuneuvosto held that the city of Helsinki's decision to favour low-emission buses was an environment policy decision aimed at reducing the harm caused to the environment by bus traffic. That did not fall to be regarded as a procedural error. If a tenderer had been treated unfairly with regard to that criterion, intervention was possible. It held, however, that all tenderers had had the opportunity, if they so wished, of acquiring gas-driven buses. It therefore found that it had not been shown that the criterion in question discriminated against the applicant.

25. Concordia brought appeal proceedings, seeking for the decision of the Kilpailuneuvosto to be quashed. It submitted that the extra points awarded for buses with low gas and noise emissions favoured HKL, which was the only tenderer able in practice to use a fleet which could obtain such extra points. It further submitted that environmental factors which were not directly linked to the object of the tender should not be taken into account in assessing the overall advantage.

26. In its order for reference the national court states first that in order to decide whether the provisions of Regulation 243/1995 or Regulation 567/1994 are applicable in the case, it is necessary to ask whether the contract at issue in the main proceedings falls within the scope of Directive 92/50 or Directive 93/38. It notes in that regard that Annex VII to Directive 93/38 mentions, for Finland, both the public or private entities which operate bus transport in accordance with the Laki luvanvaraisesta henkilöliikenteestä tiellä (Law on licensed public transport by road) and the transport department of the city of Helsinki which operates the metro and tram network.

27. The national court then states that consideration of the case also requires the interpretation of provisions of Community legislation in order to establish whether a city, when awarding a contract of the kind at issue in the main proceedings, may take into account environmental considerations connected with the bus fleet tendered. If the claims put forward by Concordia as regards points given for environmental elements and other points were accepted, this would mean that the number of points obtained by its B tender exceeded the number of points obtained by HKL.

28. The national court observes in that connection that Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 and Article 34(1)(a) of Directive 93/38 do not mention environmental questions in the list of criteria for establishing the economically most advantageous tender. It says that in its judgments in Beentjes and Evans Medical and Macfarlan Smith the Court ruled that in selecting the most economically advantageous tender it is for the contracting authorities to choose which criteria they wish to use in awarding the contract. However, this choice could only relate to criteria designed to identify the most economically advantageous tender.

29. Lastly, the national court refers to the Commission's communication of 11 March 1998 Public Procurement in the European Communities (COM(1998) 143 final), in which it states that environmental considerations may be taken into account for determining the economically most advantageous tender overall, if the contracting entity itself benefits directly from the ecological qualities of the product.

III - Questions submitted for a preliminary ruling

30. The national court accordingly decided to stay proceedings and to ask the Court for a preliminary ruling on the following questions:

(1) Are the provisions on the scope of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84), in particular Article 2(1)(a), (2)(c) and (4), to be interpreted as meaning that that directive applies to a procedure of a city which is a contracting entity for the award of a contract concerning the operation of bus transport within the city, if

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

- the city is responsible for the planning, development, implementation and other organisation and supervision of public transport in its area,

- for the above functions the city has a pubic transport committee and a city transport department subordinate thereto,

- within the city transport department there is a planning unit which acts as an ordering unit which prepares proposals for the public transport committee on which routes should be put out to tender and what level of quality of services should be required, and

- within the city transport department there are production units, economically distinct from the rest of the transport department, including a unit which provides bus transport services and takes part in tender procedures relating thereto?

(2) Are the European Community provisions on public procurement, in particular Article 36(1) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) or the equivalent Article 34(1) of Directive 93/38/EEC, to be interpreted as meaning that, when organising a tender procedure concerning the operation of bus transport within the city, a city which is a contracting entity may, among the criteria for awarding the contract on the basis of the economically most advantageous tender, take into account, in addition to the tender price and the quality and environment programme of the transport operator and various other characteristics of the bus fleet, the low nitrogen oxide emissions and low noise level of the bus fleet offered by a tendering undertaking, in a manner announced beforehand in the tender notice, such that if the nitrogen oxide emissions or noise level of the individual buses are below a certain level, extra points for the fleet may be taken into account in the comparison?

(3) If the response to the above question is affirmative, are the Community provisions on public procurement to be interpreted as meaning that the awarding of extra points for the abovementioned characteristics relating to nitrogen oxide emissions and noise level of the fleet is, however, not permitted if it is known beforehand that the department operating bus transport belonging to the city which is the contracting entity is able to offer a bus fleet possessing the above characteristics, which in the circumstances only a few undertakings in the sector are otherwise able to offer?

IV - Analysis

The first question

31. In the first question, the national court is essentially seeking to ascertain whether Directive 93/38 should be interpreted as applying to a factual matrix of the kind described in the order for reference. The answer to this question will enable the national court to decide whether Directive 93/38 or Directive 92/50 applies in the context of the main proceedings.

Preliminary observation

32. Without going so far as to claim that the first question is inadmissible, certain parties, including Concordia and the Netherlands Government, submit that it has no bearing on the answer to the second and third questions. They say that the provisions in relation to which issues are referred to the Court in the second and third questions are effectively identical in both directives. It follows that it is not necessary to determine in advance which of the two directives applies.

33. It should be remembered that in principle it is solely for the national court to determine both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. A refusal to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling by a national court is possible only when it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it.

34. Such exceptional circumstances do not exist in the present case. On the contrary, the national court clearly establishes the connection between its first question and the main action when it says that [i]n order to decide whether the provisions of Regulation 243/1995 or 567/1994 are applicable in the case, it is necessary also to seek a preliminary ruling on whether an award of the kind at issue here falls within the scope of Directive 92/50 or 93/38.... I therefore consider that the national court's first question should be answered.

Position of the parties

35. The city of Helsinki, the Finnish Government, the Greek Government and the Austrian Government consider that Directive 93/38 applies. In essence, their position is that the transport department is part of the system of the city of Helsinki. The city of Helsinki, including its transport department, being the public authority referred to in Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 93/38, which exercises an activity referred to in Article 2(2)(c), it is that directive which is applicable.

36. They add that the terms of Article 2(4) of Directive 93/38 are not inconsistent with this point of view. They submit that that provision does not apply, as it is not to be inferred from the order for reference that other entities could freely provide the bus transport service under the same conditions as the contracting entity.

37. Both Concordia and the Commission, on the other hand, consider that Directive 92/50 is applicable. The Commission states that it appears from the order for reference that neither the city of Helsinki, its committees nor its purchasing unit operated a network providing a transport service to the public, but that it was the production units of the transport department which operated networks providing a transport service to the public. These units, which are separate from the remainder of the transport department, are not contracting entities in the contract at issue in the main action.

38. The Netherlands Government and the Swedish Government express no views on the first question.

39. The United Kingdom Government considers that it is for the national court to decide which of the two directives is applicable, having regard to Article 2 of Directive 93/38.

Appraisal

40. To answer the first question it is necessary to consider the scope of Directive 93/38.

41. Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 93/38 provides that it applies to contracting entities which are public authorities or public undertakings and exercise one of the activities referred to in paragraph 2.

42. In the present case, it is to be inferred from the order for reference that it is the commercial service committee of the city of Helsinki which was responsible for regulating the procurement of urban public transport services. The contracting entity in the main action is therefore unquestionably a public authority within the meaning of Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 93/38.

43. For Directive 93/38 to apply, it is also necessary that the public authority exercises one of the activities referred to in paragraph 2. The relevant activity in the present case is that referred to in Article 2(2)(c), namely the operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by... bus .... The second indent of that provision goes on to state that As regards transport services, a network shall be considered to exist where the service is provided under operating conditions laid down by a competent authority of a Member State, such as conditions on the routes to be served, the capacity to be made available or the frequency of the service.

44. It follows in my opinion that Directive 93/38 applies to a public authority which operates a network and which intends to conclude a contract relevant to that network. On the other hand, I am of the view that Directive 93/38 does not apply where a contracting entity organises a tender procedure whose purpose is that the operation itself of the network is to be carried on by other parties.

45. The Austrian Government, in submitting that Directive 93/38 applies because [t]he operation of a public bus network is undoubtedly the provision of a service in the field of transport within the meaning of Article 2(2)(c) of Directive 93/38 and in stating that [a]ccording to the order for reference... it is the operation of such a network which was the purpose of the tender procedure, appears to me to be suggesting that Directive 93/38 applies because the operation of the network was the subject of the tender procedure at issue.

46. I am however of the view that such an interpretation of the scope of Directive 93/38 cannot be justified having regard to the text of the Directive.

47. It follows from Article 2(1) of the directive that it applies only where the contracting entity exercises an activity, in this case that of the operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by... bus.... It also follows from Article 2(4) that this activity is equivalent (in the present case) to [t]he provision of bus transport services to the public.

48. The terms operation and provision indicate that it is the contracting entity itself which should be making the bus service available. It is therefore not sufficient, for a contracting entity to be regarded as operating a network, that it lays down, for example, rules as to the route to be served or the frequency of the service. It follows from the second indent of Article 2(2)(c) that the laying down of conditions on the routes to be served etc. does not amount to the operation of a network, but only to constituting or defining it. In other words, to operate a network means to run it oneself, generally using one's own workforce and buses.

49. It therefore follows that the directive applies if the contracting entity itself operates a bus network and, in the course of exercising this activity, initiates a tender procedure, for example in relation to bus purchases. On the other hand, where a contracting entity initiates a tender procedure whose purpose is to pass responsibility for the operation of a network to a third party, it is not exercising an activity which consists in the operation of a network.

50. This interpretation is confirmed not just by Article 2 of Directive 93/38 but also by the list of services which may be the subject of a tender procedure under that directive. Articles 15 and 16 of the directive refer to Annexes XVI A and XVI B. The services which are specified there in a detailed manner are services which are clearly intended to provide support to the activity exercised by the contracting entity as defined by Article 2(2) of the directive. One would look there in vain for a service such as the service which is the object of the invitation to tender in the present case, namely the actual operation of a bus network.

51. Furthermore, it is not in my view correct to interpret Directive 93/38 in such a wide manner that its scope includes a tender procedure whose object is the activity described in Article 2(2)(c) of the directive.

52. Directive 93/38 is an exception to the general rules, which are laid down for service contracts by Directive 92/50. This is confirmed by the judgment in Telaustria and Telefonadress, where the Court held at paragraph 33 that where a contract is covered by Directive 93/38 governing a specific sector of services, the provisions of Directive 92/50, which are intended to apply to services in general, are not applicable.

53. The Court has consistently held that exceptions must be strictly interpreted. It follows in the present case that the scope of Directive 93/38 should not be widely interpreted.

54. A tender procedure whose object is the taking over by a third party of the operation of a bus network is therefore not covered by Directive 93/38. It is however covered by Directive 92/50 if all its conditions apply.

55. However, this conclusion does not yet provide the answer to the first question put by the national court. As indicated above, several parties refer not to the object of the tender procedure, but to the fact that the transport department (which includes HKL) is part of the system of the city of Helsinki. They take from that that, where a route is awarded to HKL, the city of Helsinki is exercising an activity comprising the operation of a bus network within the meaning of Article 2(2)(c) of Directive 93/38, so that that directive is applicable.

56. This argument is also incorrect.

57. It should first be recorded that the question asked by the national court relates to the directive applicable to a specific public service contract. The question therefore clearly assumes that a public service is in issue, and it would be inappropriate to question this assumption.

58. It is essential to the concept of a public service contract, whether it be regulated by Directive 92/50 or Directive 93/38, that it consists in a contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a contracting entity (or a contracting authority), on the one hand, and a service provider, on the other.

59. It follows that unless this essential characteristic of a service contract is to be disregarded, HKL must be regarded as a separate entity from the city of Helsinki. It would be contrary to the notion of a public contract to treat the city of Helsinki as being at one and the same time the contracting entity and the service provider.

60. It follows from that that if the city of Helsinki is, through its commercial service committee, the contracting entity, HKL can by definition not be the contracting entity. Similarly, if HKL is the service provider operating the bus network, the city of Helsinki cannot by definition do the same. As the city of Helsinki is not exercising an activity which consists in the operation of a bus network, as Article 2(2)(c) of Directive 93/38 requires, the conclusion must be that that directive does not apply.

61. I therefore propose that the answer given to the first question be that the provisions concerning the scope of Directive 93/38, in particular Article 2(1)(a), (2)(c) and (4), are not to be interpreted as meaning that that directive applies to the procedure of a municipality which is a contracting entity for the award of a contract concerning the operation of an urban bus transport service, if

- the municipality is responsible for the planning, development, implementation and other organisation and supervision of public transport in its area,

- for the above functions the municipality has a public transport committee and a city transport department subordinate thereto,

- within the municipal transport department there is a planning unit which acts as an ordering unit which prepares proposals for the public transport committee on which routes should be put out to tender and what level of quality of services should be required, and

- within the municipal transport department there are production units, economically distinct from the rest of the transport department, including a unit which provides bus transport services and takes part in tender procedures relating thereto.

The second question

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

62. By its second question the national court is essentially seeking to ascertain whether Article 36(1) of Directive 92/50 or Article 34(1) of Directive 93/38 allow there to be included among the criteria for awarding a contract on the basis of the economically most advantageous tender, the reduction of nitrogen oxide emissions or of noise levels in a manner such that if the nitrogen oxide emissions or noise level of certain buses are below a certain level, extra points may be taken into account in the comparison.

Position of the parties

63. Concordia submits that in a public contract tender procedure the criteria on which the award is based must always be economic in nature, in accordance with the text of Directive 92/50. If the aim of the contracting authority were to satisfy environmental or other considerations, it would be necessary to utilise other procedures than those relating to the public tender procedure.

64. By contrast, all the other parties submit that it is permissible to include environmental criteria in the criteria for the award of a contract. They refer in particular to the fact that Article 36(1) of Directive 92/50 and Article 34(1) of Directive 93/38 only list by way of example certain matters which the contracting entity may take into account when awarding a contract, to Article 6 EC which requires the integration of environmental protection policy into the other Community policies, and to the Court's judgments in Beentjes and Evans Medical and Macfarlan Smith referred to above, which allow a contracting entity to select the criteria to be taken into account when considering the tenders submitted to it.

65. The different submissions do not however all found on the same considerations.

66. The city of Helsinki, supported by the Finnish Government, maintains that it is in its interests and those of its inhabitants that noxious emissions are limited as much as possible. The city of Helsinki, which is responsible for the protection of the environment within its area, would benefit from direct savings, particularly in the medico-social sector, representing approximately 50% of its total budget. Factors which contribute, even in a minor way, to the improvement of the overall state of health of the population would allow a rapid reduction of costs to a significant extent.

67. The Greek Government adds that the discretion given to the national authorities in the choice of criteria for the award of public contracts presupposes that this choice is not arbitrary and that the criteria taken into account are not contrary to the provisions of the Treaty, in particular its fundamental principles such as the right of establishment, the freedom to provide services and the prohibition of discrimination on grounds of nationality.

68. The Netherlands Government maintains that the criteria for award operated by the contracting authority must always have an economic dimension. It considers however that this requirement is met in the present case, as the city of Helsinki is both the contracting authority and the organisation having financial responsibility for environmental policy.

69. The Austrian Government maintains that the directives relating to public procurement procedures impose two essential restrictions on the selection of award criteria. First, the criteria chosen by the contracting entity must relate to the contract to be tendered and allow the offer which is economically most advantageous for the contracting entity to be ascertained. Secondly, the identified criteria must be capable of providing an objective basis for the discretion given to the contracting entity and must not include matters which would result in any choice being arbitrary.

70. The Austrian Government also submits that the criteria for award must relate directly to the subject of the contract, have objectively measurable effects and be economically quantifiable.

71. Similarly, the Swedish Government maintains that the choice available to the contracting entity is limited to the extent that the criteria for award must relate to the contract to be awarded and be appropriate to identify the economically most advantageous tender. It adds that these criteria must also comply with the provisions of the Treaty on the free movement of goods and services.

72. According to the United Kingdom Government, the provisions of Article 36(1) of Directive 92/50 and Article 34(1) of Directive 93/38 should be interpreted to mean that in the conduct of a tender procedure for the operation of bus transport services, a contracting authority or a contracting entity may, among other criteria for the award of the contract, take into account environmental criteria in assessing the economically most advantageous tender, provided that those criteria permit a comparison to be made between all tenders, relate to the services required and have been published in advance.

73. Lastly, the Commission submits that the criteria for award that may be taken into account in identifying the economically most advantageous tender must meet four conditions. The criteria must

- be objective,

- be applicable to all tenders,

- relate strictly to the purpose of the contract, and

- entail an economic advantage to the direct benefit of the contracting authority.

Appraisal

74. In order to answer the second question, the text of Directive 92/50, which in my opinion is applicable in the present case, should first be considered.

75. Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 provides that... the criteria on which the contracting authority shall base the award of contracts may be... where the award is made to the economically most advantageous tender, various criteria relating to the contract: for example, quality, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical assistance and after-sales service, delivery date or period of completion, price.

76. The city of Helsinki submits that the criteria relating to nitrogen oxide emissions and noise levels fall within the categories of quality and technical merit referred to expressly in the abovementioned provisions. In the text of its proposed answer to the second question, the Commission refers to certain characteristics of the fleet.

77. In my opinion, such an interpretation is entirely correct. The emissions criteria are irretrievably linked to the configuration of the fleet with which the city of Helsinki wishes to see the bus service operated. A contracting authority cannot be prohibited from requiring the use of a fleet having state of the art characteristics, even if it gives prime importance to one of the qualities of such a fleet, namely its characteristics in relation to gas emissions and engine noise.

78. More generally speaking, it may be observed that if the city of Helsinki had specifically stated in the call for tenders that the network should be operated exclusively by gas-driven buses, this would have been a technical specification relating to the characteristics of the services which are covered by the contract within the meaning of the Commission's Green Paper of 1996, referred to by the Commission in its submissions.

79. The Commission also refers to its Communication Public Procurement in the European Union, where it states that:

In general, any administration which so wishes can, in defining the goods or services which it intends to purchase, choose the products and services which correspond with its pre-occupations for the protection of the environment. The measures taken must, of course comply with the rules and principles of the Treaty, particularly that of non-discrimination.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

80. The greater includes the lesser. If the contracting authority may, in the context of award criteria, require on its own initiative that buses must be gas-driven, it may also give a certain number of points to undertakings able to operate the service using buses which meet particularly strict pollution requirements, and which only buses of this type are capable of complying with.

81. It is my opinion that the issue may be answered on the basis of the foregoing points alone.

82. If, however, the Court considers that the criteria at issue in the present case should be considered in an abstract manner, that is to say independently of their technical foundations, it is my opinion that it may be inferred from Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50, and in particular from the list of examples provided in it, that the directives do not necessarily prohibit the use of an environmental criterion, such as the criterion in the present case, in awarding a public contract. In order to determine the extent to which it is permissible to take such a criterion into account, it is none the less useful to consider, as an alternative approach, the Court's case-law relating to these and similar provisions.

83. The two judgments most often referred to are those in Beentjes and Evans Medical and Macfarlan Smith referred to above.

84. In the Beentjes judgment, when analysing Council Directive 71/305/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, the Court had to rule on the exclusion of a tenderer on the grounds that the tenderer was not in a position to employ long-term unemployed persons. It found first of all that such a condition has no relation to the checking of contractors' suitability on the basis of their economic and financial standing and their technical knowledge and ability or to the criteria for the award of contracts referred to in Article 29 of the directive.

85. Nevertheless, the Court did not find the condition incompatible with Directive 71/305. It continued by saying that [i]t follows from the judgment of 9 July 1987 [CEI and Bellini] that in order to be compatible with the directive such a condition must comply with all the relevant provisions of Community law, in particular the prohibitions flowing from the principles laid down in the Treaty in regard to the right of establishment and the freedom to provide services.

86. The Court further stated that [e]ven if the criteria considered above are not in themselves incompatible with the directive, they must be applied in conformity with all the procedural rules laid down in the directive, in particular the rules on advertising.

87. Next, in its judgment in the Evans Medical and Macfarlan Smith case, the Court, referring to the Beentjes judgment, held that in selecting the most economically advantageous tender contracting authorities may choose the criteria which they intend to apply, but their choice may relate only to criteria designed to identify the most economically advantageous tender. In the Court's opinion it followed that reliability of supplies is one of the criteria which may be taken into account under Article 25 of [Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by Council Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988] in order to determine the most economically advantageous tender

88. As well as these two judgments, it is worth recalling in the context of this analysis the recent judgment of 26 September 2000 in the case of Commission v France. In this judgment, the Court held that:

Under Article 30(1) of Directive 93/37, the criteria on which the contracting authorities are to base the award of contracts are either the lowest price only or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract, such as price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit.

None the less, that provision does not preclude all possibility for the contracting authorities to use as a criterion a condition linked to the campaign against unemployment provided that that condition is consistent with all the fundamental principles of Community law, in particular the principle of non-discrimination flowing from the provisions of the Treaty on the right of establishment and the freedom to provide services (see, to that effect, Beentjes, paragraph 29).

Furthermore, even if such a criterion is not in itself incompatible with Directive 93/37, it must be applied in conformity with all the procedural rules laid down in that directive, in particular the rules on advertising (see, to that effect, on Directive 71/305, Beentjes, paragraph 31). It follows that an award criterion linked to the campaign against unemployment must be expressly mentioned in the contract notice so that contractors may become aware of its existence (see, to that effect, Beentjes, paragraph 36).

89. Even though these judgments concern the directives relating to public works contracts (Beentjes and Commission v France) and public supply contracts (Evans Medical and Macfarlan Smith), the Court's reasoning is undoubtedly applicable to the directives relating to public service contracts.

90. As the Court had already held in its judgment in Evans Medical and Macfarlan Smith, [the Beentjes judgment], which concerns public works contracts, also applies to public service contracts in so far as there is no difference in this respect between the two types of contract. The same absence of difference clearly exists for public service contracts.

91. As regards the application of this case-law to the present matter, I am of the view that it may unquestionably be inferred from the abovementioned judgments that an environmental criterion may be included in the criteria for the award of a public service contract. The point common to the Beentjes and Commission v France judgments is that the Court recognised in each that it was permissible to include a criterion whose purpose was to serve the public interest among the criteria for the award of a public contract. In the Beentjes judgment the criterion in question was the obligation of a tenderer to employ long-term unemployed persons, and in Commission v France a condition linked to a local campaign against unemployment.

92. It is beyond dispute that the protection of the environment is likewise a criterion in the public interest. Reference need only be had to Article 6 EC, which states [e]nvironmental protection must be integrated into the definition and implementation of the Community policies and activities referred to in Article 3, in particular with a view to promoting sustainable development.

93. The notion that criteria which exist for the public benefit may be included in the criteria for the award of a public contract also seems to be one that is logical, indeed clearly logical. As public authorities have by definition a duty to serve the public interest, that interest must be able to guide them when they enter into a public contract.

94. That said, there are of course limits on the extent to which a criterion of public interest, such as one relating to the environment, may be included in the criteria for the award of a contract.

95. I infer two limits from the Beentjes and Commission v France judgments.

96. First, the criterion must be consistent with all the fundamental principles of Community law, and in particular the principle of non-discrimination flowing from the provisions of the Treaty on the right of establishment and the freedom to provide services.

97. Secondly, the criterion must be applied in conformity with all the procedural rules laid down in the relevant directive, in particular the rules on advertising. It follows that, as the Court held in its judgments in the Beentjes and Commission v France cases, the award criterion must be expressly mentioned in the contract notice so that contractors may become aware of its existence.

98. In my opinion, these two requirements are equally as applicable to the inclusion of an environmental criterion among the criteria for the award of a contract. The necessity for these restrictions is unquestionable in that the first prevents there being any failure to comply with the fundamental principles of Community law in the guise of serving the public interest, and the second ensures equality of treatment between all tenderers, a matter which lies at the heart of the rules relating to public contracts. Subject to these two points, in my opinion there is nothing which prohibits the taking into account of a criterion which serves the general interest, such as an environmental criterion.

99. However, several parties have specified further conditions which they suggest require to be met in order for an environmental criterion to be included in the award criteria for a public contract.

100. Some parties have stressed that the environmental criterion must be economic in nature. The Netherlands Government submits that in order to be valid the criterion must have an economic aspect. The Austrian Government claims that the criterion must demonstrate economic benefits that can be measured objectively. The Commission submits that the criterion must have a direct economic benefit for the contracting authority.

101. While I can agree with the proposition supported by several parties that in the present case the environmental criterion offered an economic benefit for the city of Helsinki, it is my opinion that an environmental criterion may be included in the award criteria without it being necessary to prove that it is economic in nature or offers an economic benefit, direct or indirect, for the contracting authority.

102. Admittedly, in its judgment in the Evans Medical and Macfarlan Smith case, the Court held that in selecting the most economically advantageous tender contracting authorities may choose the criteria which they intend to apply, but their choice may relate only to criteria designed to identify the most economically advantageous tender.

103. In my opinion, it does not follow from the fact that the contracting entity requires to identify the most economically advantageous tender that every criterion must of necessity be economic in nature or have an economic aspect.

104. If one refers to Article 36(1) of Directive 92/50, it will be seen that the contracting authority may, for example, include criteria relating to the aesthetic characteristics of a product. Unless the word economic were to be interpreted extremely widely, I am of the view that it is difficult to treat an aesthetic criterion as being economic in nature. It is even harder to see how it could have an economic benefit for a contracting authority.

105. Furthermore, at the very latest since the discussions on the Kyoto protocol, everyone is aware that the protection of the environment is a matter of considerable importance which concerns all the planet. I therefore do not consider it justifiable to permit an environmental criterion only where it offers an economic benefit for the relevant contracting entity. A criterion of this kind may be equally justifiable if it offers a benefit to other parties than the contracting entity or to the environment in general.

106. Lastly, the inappropriateness of such a requirement, as proposed in particular by the Commission, is in my opinion also confirmed by an answer given by the latter at the hearing. When asked how the fact that, as in the present case, extra points had been given to tenderers who were able to offer a service using low-floor buses conferred a direct economic benefit on the city of Helsinki, the Commission answered that this would increase the contracting entity's receipts as disabled and elderly people would be able to use buses more easily.

107. Putting aside the point that such a benefit would be at best indirect, it appears to me to be to be more appropriate to consider the encouraging of the use of low-floor buses as representing a service provided to certain sections of society rather than as a means of increasing the contracting entity's receipts.

108. The Austrian and Swedish Governments, as well as the Commission, also submit that the criterion must be linked to the subject-matter of the contract. For the Austrian Government, that means that the criterion must relate to the service to be provided or the manner in which it is to be carried out. The Commission goes so far as to say that the criterion must be strictly linked to the subject-matter of the contract.

109. In the present case, this criterion is clearly met.

110. One may however question whether it is necessary to impose such a requirement. In its judgment in the Commission v France case referred to above, the Court held that an award criterion relating to employment, linked to a local campaign against unemployment, was a valid criterion, subject to the two limitations referred to above. The same applied in the Beentjes judgment, where the Court held that a condition relating to long-term unemployed was acceptable.

111. Both these cases involved a works contract. These works could equally well have been carried out by persons who were not unemployed. The relevant requirement was therefore not linked to the subject of the contract, that is to say to the nature of the works to be carried out.

112. I conclude from that that it cannot be required that an environmental criterion must, unlike an employment-related criterion, be linked, or strictly linked, to the subject of the contract.

113. Lastly, the Commission states that the criterion must be objective and apply to all tenders.

114. Although it may be questioned how a criterion which relates to the aesthetic characteristics of a tender, which Article 36 of Directive 92/50 permits, may be objectively defined, it is necessary only to observe that in the present case the criteria relating to nitrogen oxide emissions and to noise levels clearly meet this requirement.

115. They are quantifiable or measurable and leave no room for a subjective margin of appreciation on the part of the contracting authority.

116. As regards the requirement that the criterion must apply to all tenders, this is indissociable from the Court's first requirement, according to which the award criterion must be consistent with all the fundamental principles of Community law, in particular the principle of non-discrimination flowing from the provisions of the Treaty on the right of establishment and the freedom to provide services.

117. It follows from all the above that a criterion linked to the protection of the environment may be included in the award criteria for a contract, provided that the criterion is consistent with the fundamental principles of Community law, in particular the principle of non-discrimination and the four freedoms, and that it is applied in conformity with all the procedural rules laid down in the directive, in particular the rules on advertising.

118. Before concluding my discussion of this question, it is worth briefly considering an analysis common to the Netherlands and Austrian Governments and the Commission which relates to the question of whether criteria touching on the quality and environment programmes of the contractors may be taken into account in the evaluation of the economically most advantageous tender.

119. In my opinion, this question goes beyond the terms of the reference for a preliminary ruling in this case.

120. Reference should be made in this regard to the question as put by the national court. It asks whether the city of Helsinki... may, among the criteria for awarding the contract on the basis of the economically most advantageous tender, take into account, in addition to the tender price and the quality and environment programme of the transport operator and various other characteristics of the bus fleet, [also] the low nitrogen oxide emissions and low noise level....

121. It is therefore clear that the national court is not asking the Court about the acceptability as award criteria of the tender price and the quality and environment programme of the transport operator and various other characteristics of the bus fleet but only about the acceptability of the criterion relating to the low nitrogen oxide emissions and low noise level.

122. Furthermore, the national court states that HKL and Concordia were awarded an equal number of points for the criterion relating to the quality and environment programme. Whether this requirement is permissible is thus not relevant to the outcome of the main action and I therefore do not propose to address it.

123. In light of these conclusions, I propose that the national court's question be answered by saying that the Community legislation on public procurement, in particular Article 36(1) of Directive 92/50, is to be interpreted as meaning that a municipality which organises, as the contracting entity, a tender procedure concerning the operation of an urban bus transport service may include, among the criteria for awarding the contract on the basis of the economically most advantageous tender, a criterion such as the one in the present case, relating to low nitrogen oxide emissions and low noise levels. That criterion must be applied in conformity with the fundamental principles of Community law, in particular the principle of non-discrimination and the four freedoms, and with all the procedural rules laid down in the relevant directive, in particular the rules on advertising.

The third question

124. By its third question the national court asks whether the criterion relating to the environment is none the less not permitted if it is known beforehand that the department operating bus transport belonging to the city which is the contracting entity is able to offer a bus fleet possessing the required characteristics, which in the circumstances only a few undertakings in the sector are otherwise able to offer.

Position of the parties

125. Concordia submits that the possibility of using buses powered by natural gas, which were in practice the only ones capable of meeting the additional criteria relating to low nitrogen oxide emissions and low noise levels, was a very limited one. At the time of the tender procedure, there was in all Finland only one service station which supplied natural gas. The capacity of the service station, which was not permanently installed, allowed for the refuelling of approximately 15 gas-driven buses. Just before the tender procedure in this case, HKL had ordered 11 new gas-driven buses. This meant that the service station's capacity was fully utilised and that no other vehicles could be supplied. Furthermore, the only existing service station was not permanently installed. According to Concordia, it would have been absurd to suppose that operators would invest millions in purchasing new vehicles which they could not use, or at least whose use would have been very uncertain.

126. From that, Concordia concludes that HKL was the only tenderer able in practice to offer gas-driven buses. It suggests that in setting more rigorous standards than those laid down by Euro 2, the true purpose of the tender procedure was to favour the production unit belonging to the contracting entity. Concordia therefore proposes that the third question be answered by stating that the awarding of points for low nitrogen oxide emissions and a reduction in noise levels cannot be allowed, at least where not all operators in the sector in question are able, even in theory, to offer services capable of meeting this award criterion.

127. The city of Helsinki first observes that it was under no obligation to put its bus transport operations out to tender, either under Community or Finnish law. Given that a tender procedure inevitably generates additional work and costs, there would have been no reason for it to instigate this procedure if it had known that only one undertaking, owned by it, was able to offer a fleet which met the relevant conditions or if it had truly wished to retain the operation of these services for itself.

128. The city of Helsinki further submits that it is HKL which currently is the greatest loser of awards and that it is Concordia which has expanded its market share in Helsinki the most. The city of Helsinki also states that in spring 1999 Concordia won the tender relating to bus service number 15, which required the use of gas-driven buses. This was conformed by Concordia at the hearing. The latter by its own admission confirmed that all the tenderers were able at any time, should they wished, to acquire gas-driven buses.

129. The Finnish Government considers that the evaluation of the objectivity of the criteria laid down in the tender procedure in this case is ultimately a question for the national court.

130. The Greek Government submits that the third question should be answered in the affirmative.

131. The Netherlands Government states that it is clear from the Court's case-law that the award criteria must be objective and that there may be no discrimination between the tenderers.

132. However, at paragraphs 32 and 33 of its judgment in the Fracasso and Leitschutz case, the Court held that where at the conclusion of a tender procedure there is only one tender remaining, the contracting authority is not required to award the contract to the only tenderer judged to be suitable. It does not therefore follow that if the application of the award criteria results in there being only one remaining tenderer, those criteria are invalid.

133. According to the Netherlands Government, it is for the national court to determine whether effective competition was jeopardised in the main proceedings.

134. The Austrian Government submits that the use of the award criteria at issue in the main proceedings does not, in principle, give rise to any problem, even where, as in the present case, only a relatively limited number of tenderers are able to meet them.

135. However, the Austrian Government draws attention to the 10th recital of European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 amending Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts respectively, in terms of which contracting authorities may seek or accept advice which may be used in the preparation of specifications for a specific procurement, provided that such advice does not have the effect of precluding competition.

136. According to the Austrian Government, it may be inferred from this recital, as also from the principles underlying the directives relating to public procurement, that undertakings which are directly or indirectly involved in the preparation of a tender procedure, and undertakings connected with them where there is a relationship of control between them, must be excluded from the process in so far as their participation would prevent competition.

137. The protection of the principle of free and fair competition and of equality of treatment for all applicants and tenderers within the meaning of the directives relating to public procurement could be compromised if there was an involvement, direct or indirect, of a competitor in the tender process in its preparation.

138. The Austrian Government concludes from that that in the main proceedings, if the organisational links between the city of Helsinki and HKL have the result that the latter might have an influence, in whatever form, on the definition of the project underlying the tender procedure and to the extent that the involvement of HKL in the development of the tender process would prevent competition, HKL should be excluded from participating.

139. The Swedish Government submits that the taking into account of the emissions criterion in the manner in which this was done in the main proceedings had the result that the tenderer who had gas- or alcohol-driven buses available to it was rewarded. According to the Swedish Government, there was however nothing to prevent the other tenderers from acquiring such buses. These vehicles have been available in the market-place for a number of years.

140. The Swedish Government considers that the giving of extra points for low emissions of nitrogen oxide and low noise levels does not amount to direct discrimination, but applies without distinction. Furthermore, this enhancement does not appear indirectly discriminatory in the sense that it would necessarily have had the result of favouring HKL. The Swedish Government accordingly concludes that this enhancement is not an obstacle to the free movement of goods and services or to the freedom of establishment.

141. According to the United Kingdom Government, the directive does not prohibit the award of extra points in evaluating offers when it is known beforehand that there are potentially few undertakings able to obtain these extra points, where the contracting authority made it known at the tender notice stage that there was a possibility of obtaining these additional points.

142. The Commission notes that according to the Court's case-law, compliance with the principle of equality of treatment lies at the heart of the directives relating to public contracts. This means that the conditions of competition between the tenderers must not be distorted.

143. Bearing in mind, however, the differences of view between the parties to the main action, the Commission feels that it is unable to determine whether the criteria applying in the present case contravene the principle of equality of treatment. It would therefore be a matter for the national court to rule on this question and to establish on the basis of objective, relevant and consistent evidence whether the said criteria were included exclusively for the purpose of selecting the undertaking to whom the contract was awarded or were determined for that purpose.

Appraisal

144. The national court asks whether the awarding of points for the characteristics relating to nitrogen oxide emissions and noise levels of the fleet is not permitted if it is known beforehand that the department operating bus transport belonging to the city which is the contracting entity is able to offer a bus fleet possessing the above characteristics, which in the circumstances only a few undertakings in the sector are otherwise able to offer.

145. This question effectively asks whether, in these circumstances, the principle of equality of treatment is contravened. I shall consider in turn whether this principle is contravened:

- where a single undertaking is able to meet the criterion in the case in question;

- where, in addition, the relevant undertaking belongs to the contracting authority.

146. As far as the first point is concerned, I agree with the Swedish Government that in circumstances such as those arising in the main action there is neither direct nor indirect discrimination between the various potential tenderers.

147. The relevant criterion applied without distinction to all tenders and, it appears, was advertised in accordance with the requirements of the directive.

148. In order to decide that the criterion in question had given rise to indirect discrimination towards Concordia, it would not be sufficient to find that that company had been treated differently from HKL, in the sense that the latter had been given points which had not been given to Concordia.

149. It follows from settled case-law that the principle of equality of treatment requires that comparable situations are not treated differently and that different situations are not treated similarly, unless such a difference in treatment can be justified objectively.

150. Without prejudice to the findings of the national court, it appears to me in the present case that the two undertakings were treated differently only because they were not in identical situations. One of them was able to offer the fleet requested and the other was not.

151. Finally, the specification of the criterion which gave rise to a difference in the awarding of points could only be considered to reveal the existence of discriminatory tactics if it were to appear that this criterion could not be justified objectively, having regard to the characteristics of the contract and the needs of the contracting authority.

152. As was seen above, a contracting authority cannot be prevented from requiring that the service in question be provided using a fleet which possesses the best available technical specifications.

153. To reach a contrary view would mean requiring the contracting authority to lay down the criteria having regard to the potential tenderers. As each call for tenders contains a whole series of criteria, the contracting authority would then require to establish those which could be provided by only one tenderer and remove them from his draft call for tenders. It could be that one tenderer was unable to meet one criterion, while another tenderer could not meet a different one.

154. Not only would such an approach result in a form of levelling down of the award criteria in eliminating all those which were truly selective, it would equally strip all content from the right recognised by the Court for the contracting authority to select the criteria for awarding the contract as it chooses. I would observe on further consideration that laying down criteria having regard to the potential tenderers would in my view result in a denial of the principle of equality of treatment. If a contracting authority were to remove a criterion from the tender notice on the basis that one or more tenderers were unable to meet it, the authority would in so doing disadvantage a tenderer who was able to comply, by neutralising the advantage he could have made use of.

155. My conclusion on the first point is therefore that the mere fact of including in a tender notice a criterion which can be met by only one tenderer does not contravene the principle of equality.

156. Is the position different when this tenderer is, like HKL, an undertaking which belongs to the contracting authority?

157. In this case there are two alternatives:

- either, HKL does not have any decision-making power or powers of economic and financial management of its own in relation to the contracting authority; in which case, one would find oneself in a situation to which the directive did not apply as HKL would not be a third party with whom the city of Helsinki was capable of contracting,

- or, HKL is in fact independent of the city of Helsinki, as I have assumed it to be in my answer to the first question; in which case the fact that HKL was the department operating bus transport belonging to the city which is the contracting entity would not in itself cause a difficulty in relation to the principle of equality of treatment, unless it could be shown that the inclusion of the criterion which is the subject of the dispute had no reason other than the favouring of HKL.

158. This is a question of pure fact, to be decided by the national court.

159. In this regard it is worth pausing to consider the arguments of the Austrian Government relating to the participation of a tenderer in the preparation of a tender notice.

160. I must agree entirely with that Government's opinion that a participation of this kind would be illegal as it would wholly negate the principle of the equality of treatment of all tenderers. In this context, one might refer to the judgment in the case of Ismeri Europa v Court of Auditors, where the Court treated the fact that a person who helps to evaluate and select bids for a public contract has this contract awarded to him as a confusion of interests, adding that such a fact was indicative of a serious malfunction of the institution or body concerned (paragraph 47).

161. From the point of view of the equality of treatment of all the tenderers, it seems to me that a real participation in the preparation of a tender notice by the tenderer to whom the contract is awarded is almost as serious as the contributing by that tenderer to the evaluation and selection of offers.

162. However, there is in the order for reference no indication that HKL had actually participated in the preparation of the tender notice in the case in question. The city of Helsinki stated at the hearing that such participation did not take place. Similarly, the national court asks no question in this regard. I am therefore of the view that it is not appropriate to give a formal answer on this point.

163. As a result, I propose answering the third question by saying that the right of a contracting entity to include in a tender notice, among the criteria for awarding a contract concerning the operation of an urban bus transport service, characteristics relating to nitrogen oxide emissions and noise levels of the fleet used, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, is not called into question by the fact that the entity's own transport undertaking is one of the few undertakings in the sector able to offer a bus fleet fulfilling those conditions, unless it is shown that this criterion was introduced with the sole aim of favouring that undertaking.

V - Conclusion

164. For the foregoing reasons, I suggest that the Court answer the questions submitted by the national court as follows:

(1) The provisions concerning the scope of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, in particular Article 2(1)(a), (2)(c) and (4), are to be interpreted as meaning that that directive does not apply to a procedure such as that at issue in the main proceedings.

(2) The Community legislation on public procurement, in particular Article 36(1) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, is to be interpreted as meaning that a municipality which organises, as the contracting entity, a tender procedure concerning the operation of an urban bus transport service may include, among the criteria for awarding the contract on the basis of the economically most advantageous tender, a criterion such as the one in the present case relating to low nitrogen oxide emissions and low noise levels. That criterion must be applied in conformity with the fundamental principles of Community law, in particular the principle of non-discrimination and the four freedoms, and with all the procedural rules laid down in the relevant directive, in particular the rules on advertising.

(3) The right of a contracting entity to include in a tender notice, among the criteria for awarding a contract concerning the operation of an urban bus transport service, characteristics relating to nitrogen oxide emissions and noise levels of the fleet used, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, is not called into question by the fact that the entity's own transport undertaking is one of the few undertakings in the sector able to offer a bus fleet fulfilling these conditions, unless it is shown that this criterion was introduced with the sole aim of favouring that undertaking.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Alber delivered on 24 October 2002.
Commission of the European Communities v CAS Succhi di Frutta SpA.
Appeal.
Case C-496/99 P.

I - Introduction

1 In 1996, the Commission initiated a tendering procedure for the supply of fruit juice earmarked for consignment as aid to the Caucasus. As payment for such supply, the successful tenderer would, instead of money, receive apples held in intervention stocks following their withdrawal from the market; in that procedure, tenderers were required to state the quantity they would accept as payment. When the applicant's tender was rejected however, it did not challenge that outcome. Once the lots had been awarded to other firms, the Commission notified the intervention agency that peaches could be withdrawn instead of apples, a modification that was subsequently extended to other types of fruit, and for that purpose coefficients of equivalence by weight were established for the individual types of fruit. It was not until those coefficients of equivalence were amended by a further Commission decision that the applicant brought an action against the Commission. The Court of First Instance granted the annulment requested by the applicant. The Commission as defendant in that case has lodged the present appeal against that judgment.

2 The Commission bases its appeal on a total of five pleas in law. In terms of admissibility of the application, it claims that C.A.S. Succhi di Frutta SpA (hereinafter: the applicant) had neither a right of action nor a legitimate interest in invoking the protection of the courts, and in terms of substance, it criticises the conclusion of the Court of First Instance that a new invitation to tender should have been issued, and complains that errors were committed by the Court of First Instance as regards determining the quantity of apples available in the Community at the material time (for further detail in that context, see point 18).

II - Relevant legislation and facts

3 By Regulation (EC) No 228/96 of 7 February 1996 on the supply of fruit juice and fruit jams intended for the people of Armenia and Azerbaijan, (1) the Commission initiated a tendering procedure. In that connection, Article 1 of that regulation provides: `A tendering procedure is hereby initiated for the supply of a maximum of 1 000 tonnes of fruit juice, 1 000 tonnes of concentrated fruit juice and 1 000 tonnes of fruit jams as indicated in Annex I, in accordance with the provisions of Regulation (EC) No 2009/95, (2) and in particular Article 2(2) thereof and the specific provisions of the present Regulation.' Article 2(2) of Regulation No 2009/95 provides: `The invitation to tender may relate to the quantity of products to be removed physically from intervention stocks as payment for the supply of processed products from the same group of products to a delivery stage to be determined in the notice of invitation to tender.'

4 In Annex I, Regulation No 228/96 indicated, for each of the six lots in respect of which tenders were invited, first, the characteristics of the product to be supplied and, secondly, the product which the successful tenderers were to take from the intervention agencies in payment for the relevant supply. The product to be withdrawn as regards Lots 1 and 2 was apples.

5 Article 3(2) of Regulation No 228/96 provides: `The offer of the tenderer shall indicate, for each lot, the total quantity of fruit, withdrawn from the market in accordance with Articles 15 and 15A of Regulation (EEC) No 1035/72, which he undertakes:

(a) to take over from the producer organisations concerned, in payment of all supply costs to the delivery stage defined in Article 2; ...

...'.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

6 Following the submission of a number of tenders within the period prescribed in Regulation No 228/96, Trento Frutta SpA and Loma GmbH were awarded the lots in question.

7 The applicant had participated in the tendering procedure for Lots 1 and 2. It is apparent from the documents in the case-file that its tenders were not accepted since it had proposed to withdraw, in payment for the supply of its products, a quantity of apples much greater than the quantities proposed by the two successful tenderers in their respective offers. It is also apparent from the documents in the case-file that Trento Frutta SpA had stated in its tenders that it was prepared to take peaches should there be a shortage of apples, a possibility that had not been mentioned in the invitation to tender.

8 By letter of 6 March 1996, the Commission informed the Azienda di Stato per gli Interventi nel Mercato Agricolo (AIMA), the Italian intervention agency, that the tender submitted by Trento Frutta SpA had been accepted. The Commission pointed out that, depending on the lot in question, that successful tenderer would receive as payment a given quantity of apples or, alternatively, peaches, or of oranges or, alternatively, apples or peaches.

9 By decision of 14 June 1996, adopted after the award, the Commission allowed the successful tenderers to take delivery of - instead of apples or oranges - `other products withdrawn from the markets, in predetermined quantities reflecting the processing equivalence of the products in question'. According to the second recital, that decision was adopted because, since the award, the quantities of apples and oranges withdrawn from the market had been negligible in comparison with the quantities required, although the withdrawal season was virtually over. The substitute products referred to in the decision were peaches and apricots and the coefficient of equivalence between peaches and apples was fixed at 1 to 1. Moreover, by a further decision of 22 July 1996, the Commission allowed the substitution of nectarines for the apples to be withdrawn by the successful tenderers in payment for the supply of their products.

10 On 26 July 1996, at a meeting organised at its request with the staff of the Commission Directorate-General for Agriculture (DG VI), the applicant presented its objections to the substitution, authorised by the Commission, of other fruit for apples and oranges. On 2 August 1996, the applicant sent to the Commission Technical Report No 94, prepared by the Dipartimento Territorio e Sistemi Agro-Forestali (Department of Land and Forestry Management) of the University of Padua, on the coefficients of economic equivalence of certain fruit to be used for processing into juice. (The fact of the matter was that, irrespective of the particular circumstances of this case, the decision to fix the coefficient of equivalence between apples and peaches at 1 to 1 had on the whole led to distortions on the peach market caused by the associated reduction in the value of peaches.) In the course of those negotiations, the Commission reviewed the arrangements for substituting other fruits for apples and oranges. It its decision of 6 September 1996 amending the decision of 14 June 1996, the Commission fixed new coefficients of equivalence between peaches on the one hand and apples and oranges on the other, which were less favourable to the successful tenderers. Under that decision, which - like the previous decision of 14 June 1996 - was addressed to Italy, France, Greece and Spain, 0.914 tonne of peaches could be substituted for 1 tonne of apples and 0.372 tonne of peaches for 1 tonne of oranges. Those new coefficients could be applied only to products which, on 6 September 1996, had not yet been withdrawn by the successful tenderers as payment for supplies.

III - Proceedings before the Court of First Instance and judgment delivered by that Court

11 By application registered at the Court of First Instance on 25 November 1996, the applicant brought an action in which it claimed that the Court should:

- annul the Commission Decision of 6 September 1996 amending the Commission Decision of 14 June

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

1996 on the supply of fruit juice and fruit jams intended for the people of Armenia and Azerbaijan;

- order the Commission to pay the costs.

12 The Commission contended that the Court should:

- dismiss the application as inadmissible or, in the alternative, unfounded;

- order the applicant to pay the costs.

13 By judgment of 14 October 1999 (C.A.S. Succhi di Frutta v Commission [1999] ECR II-3181), the Court of First Instance held the application in Case T-191/96 to be admissible and well founded. The Commission is challenging that judgment in its appeal.

(1) Admissibility

14 According to what is stated in the judgment under appeal, the Commission put forward the following arguments in that regard:

`41 The Commission contends that the application is inadmissible on two grounds: the applicant is not directly and individually concerned by the Decision of 6 September 1996, and it has no interest in obtaining its annulment.

42 The Commission points out first of all that the applicant does not dispute the award of the lots for which it submitted a tender. It contends that the act contested in this case did not provide for the replacement of apples and oranges by peaches, but merely amended the coefficients of equivalence between those fruits, that substitution having been authorised by the Decision of 14 June 1996.

43 The fact that those coefficients of equivalence may be more or less favourable to the successful tenderers can be of individual concern only to them. The applicant's situation, in relation to the Decision of 6 September 1996, is not in any way different from that of any operator in the sector concerned, other than the successful tenderers for the contract....

44 The case-law on challenging a tendering procedure... is not relevant. The Decision of 6 September 1996 is a measure independent of the notice of invitation to tender, adopted after the award of the contract, which it does not amend in any way. The successful tenderers are indeed those tenderers who offered to accept the smallest quantity of apples as payment. In those circumstances, the fact that the applicant took part in the tendering procedure in question does not confer on it any special attribute, as compared with any other third person, in relation to the Decision of 6 September 1996.

45 Furthermore, the mere fact that a measure may exert an influence on the competitive relationships existing on the market in question is not sufficient to enable any trader in any form of competitive relationship with the addressee of the measure to be regarded as directly and individually concerned by that measure....

46 Moreover, since the contested decision amended the coefficients of equivalence fixed in the decision of 14 June 1996 along the lines the applicant wished, it had no interest in requesting the annulment of that decision since the effect of that annulment would be to reinstate the previous coefficients....

47 The Commission states, finally, that the arguments put forward by the applicant could have been directed against the Decision of 14 June 1996, which was more unfavourable to it, but which it did not challenge within the prescribed time.'

15 Citing a number of judgments, the Court of First Instance made the following findings in that regard:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

`50 The fourth paragraph of Article 173 of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 230 EC) confers on natural or legal persons the right to bring an action for annulment against decisions addressed to them and against decisions which, although in the form of a regulation or a decision addressed to another person, are of direct and individual concern to them.

51 It is settled case-law that persons other than those to whom a decision is addressed may claim to be individually concerned, for the purpose of that provision, only if the decision at issue affects them by reason of certain attributes peculiar to them or by reason of factual circumstances in which they are distinguished from all other persons, and by virtue of those factors distinguishes them individually in the same way as the person addressed....

53 Moreover, the Commission does not dispute the fact that its Memorandum No 10663 of 6 March 1996, cited above [at paragraph 8], contains elements which do not correspond to the conditions laid down in the notice of invitation to tender provided for by Regulation No 228/96, in so far as it provides, inter alia, for the substitution of peaches for apples and oranges as the means of payment for the supplies from Trento Frutta. That memorandum therefore amends the arrangements for payment prescribed for the different lots.

54 The amendment of the arrangements for payment prescribed for the different lots was confirmed by the Decision of 14 June 1996 with regard to all the successful tenderers. Subsequently, the applicant asked the Commission to reconsider that decision. For that purpose, a meeting between the staff of DG VI and the applicant took place on 26 July 1996, following which the applicant sent the Commission Technical Report No 94... , [to that effect, see also point 10 above].

55 In the light of the new information brought to its attention in this way and of a reconsideration of the situation as a whole, in particular of the level of the price of peaches on the Community market recorded by its staff in mid-August 1996... , the Commission adopted the contested Decision of 6 September 1996, laying down new coefficients of equivalence between peaches, on the one hand, and apples and oranges, on the other.

56 Consequently, the contested decision must be regarded as an independent decision, taken following a request from the applicant, on the basis of new information, and it amends the conditions of the invitation to tender in that it provides, with different coefficients of equivalence, for the substitution of peaches for apples and oranges as a means of payment to the successful tenderers in spite of the contacts which took place in the interim between the parties.

57 In those circumstances, it must be held that the applicant is individually concerned by the contested decision. It is concerned, first, in its capacity as unsuccessful tenderer in so far as one of the important conditions of the invitation to tender - that concerning the means of payment for the supplies at issue - was later amended by the Commission. Such a tenderer is not individually concerned merely by the Commission decision which determines the fate, be it favourable or unfavourable, of each of the tenders submitted in answer to the notice of invitation to tender (Simmenthal v Commission, paragraph 25). It also retains an individual interest in ensuring that the conditions of the notice of invitation to tender are complied with at the stage when the award itself is implemented. The fact that the Commission did not point out in the notice of invitation to tender the possibility for successful tenderers to obtain fruit other than those prescribed as payment for their supplies denied the applicant the chance of submitting a tender different from that which it had submitted, and of thus having the same opportunity as Trento Frutta.

58 Secondly, in the particular circumstances of the case, the applicant is individually concerned by the contested decision because it was adopted after a reconsideration of the situation as a whole, undertaken at the applicant's request and in the light, in particular, of the additional information which it presented to the Commission.

59 ...

60 Furthermore, the argument based on the fact that the applicant did not challenge the Decision of 14 June 1996 within the prescribed time-limit must be rejected, since the contested decision cannot be regarded as a measure which is merely confirmatory of that decision.

61 The argument according to which the applicant has no interest in bringing proceedings since the sole effect of annulling the contested decision would be to reinstate the coefficients laid down in the Decision of 14 June 1996, which are less favourable to the applicant, must also be rejected.

62 It should not be presumed, for the purpose of determining whether the present action is admissible, that a judgment annulling the Decision of 6 September 1996 would have the effect merely of reviving the coefficients of equivalence laid down by the Decision of 14 June 1996, having regard, in particular, to the Commission's obligation to take the necessary measures to comply with the present judgment in accordance with Article 176 of the EC Treaty (now Article 233 EC)...

63 In any event, it is clear from paragraph 32 of Simmenthal v Commission that, even where a decision to award a contract has been fully implemented for the benefit of other competitors, a tenderer retains an interest in the annulment of such a decision; such interest consists either in the tenderer's being properly restored by the Commission to his original position or in prompting the Commission to make suitable amendments in the future to the system of invitations to tender if that system is found to be incompatible with certain legal requirements....

64 It follows that the application is admissible.'

(2) Substance

16 According to what is stated in the judgment under appeal, the Commission put forward inter alia the following arguments as regards the plea that Regulation No 228/96 as well as the principles of transparency and equal treatment had been infringed:

`71 The replacement, after the award, of the fruits to be received as payment does not in any way constitute a breach of the principles of equal treatment and transparency in that it had no influence on the course of the tendering procedure. The tenderers all competed under the same conditions, namely those laid down by Regulation No 228/96 and Annex I thereto. Since the replacement of fruit took place after the award, it did not have the slightest influence on the course of the operation.'

17 The Court of First Instance made the following findings in that regard:

`72 In connection with Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682), the Court of Justice held that, when a contracting entity had laid down prescriptive requirements in the contract documents, observance of the principle of equal treatment of tenderers required that all the tenders must comply with them so as to ensure objective comparison of the tenders (judgments in Case C-243/89 Commission v Denmark [1993] ECR I-3353, paragraph 37; and Case C-87/94 Commission v Belgium [1996] ECR I-2043, paragraph 70). In addition, it has been held that the procedure for comparing tenders has to comply at every stage with both the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers and the principle of transparency so as to afford equality of opportunity to all tenderers when formulating their tenders (Commission v Belgium, cited above, [at] paragraph 54).

73 That case-law can be applied to this case. It thus follows that the Commission was obliged to specify clearly in the notice of invitation to tender the subject-matter and the conditions of the tendering procedure, and to comply strictly with the conditions laid down, so as to afford equality of opportunity to all tenderers when formulating their tenders. In particular, the Commission could not subsequently amend the conditions of the tendering procedure, and in particular those relating to the tender to be submitted, in a manner not laid down by the notice of invitation to tender itself, without offending against the principle of transparency.

74 As stated above, the contested decision allows the successful tenderers, namely Trento Frutta and Loma, to take as payment for their supplies products other than those specified in the notice of invitation to tender and, in particular, peaches instead of apples and oranges.

75 Such a substitution is not provided for in the notice of invitation to tender as set out in Regulation No 228/96. It is clear from Annex I to that regulation... that only the products listed, namely, as regards Lots Nos 1, 2 and 5, apples, and, in respect of Lots Nos 3, 4 and 6, oranges, could be withdrawn by the successful tenderers as payment for the supplies.

76 Furthermore, it is clear from Article 6(1)(e)(1) of Regulation No 2009/95 ... that tenders were to be valid only where they indicated the quantity of product requested by the tenderer as payment for the supply of processed products under the conditions laid down in the notice of invitation to tender.

77 The substitution of peaches for apples or oranges as payment for the supplies concerned, and the fixing of the coefficients of equivalence between those fruits therefore constitute a significant amendment of an essential condition of the notice of invitation to tender, namely the arrangements for payment for the products to be supplied.

78 However, contrary to what the Commission contends, none of the provisions it cites, in particular, the first and second recitals in the preamble to Regulation No 228/96 and Article 2(2) of Regulation No 1975/95 ... , authorises such a substitution, even by implication. Neither is substitution provided for in the situation, put forward by the Commission, where the quantities of fruit in the intervention stocks are insufficient....

79 Furthermore, the contested decision not only provides for the substitution of peaches for apples and oranges, but also fixes coefficients of equivalence by reference to circumstances arising after the award, namely the level of the prices of the fruit concerned on the market in mid-August 1996 although the taking into consideration of such evidence, available after the award, in order to determine the arrangements for payment applicable to the supplies at issue, is not in any way provided for in the notice of invitation to tender.

80 In addition, the information supplied by the Commission in the course of the proceedings... does not show that, at the time when the contested decision was adopted, apples were not available in the intervention stocks, so as to prevent the performance of the operations specified in the notice of invitation to tender.

81 Even if there had been such a lack of availability, at the Community level, of apples which could be withdrawn, the fact remains that it was for the Commission to lay down, in the notice of invitation to tender, the precise conditions for any substitution of other fruit for that prescribed as payment for the supplies at issue, in order to comply with the principles of transparency and equal treatment. Failing that, it was for the Commission to initiate a new tendering procedure.

82 It follows from the foregoing that the contested decision infringes the notice of invitation to tender... and also the principles of transparency and equal treatment, and that it must therefore be annulled....'

IV - Grounds of appeal

18 The Commission bases its appeal, lodged by application of 21 December 1999, on five pleas in law, alleging that:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

(1) the applicant's situation is no different from that of any other third parties which, as such, are not entitled to challenge the decision on equivalence;

(2) the Court of First Instance asserted that the Commission may not alter the terms of payment, and yet at the same time stated that the Commission ought to have issued a new invitation to tender, which would have meant changing the terms of payment of the successful tenderers which had already fulfilled their contractual obligations;

(3) the Court of First Instance misinterpreted Community law relating to the concept of individual concern when it held that the applicant was individually concerned by the contested decision;

(4) the Court of First Instance misinterpreted the concept of an interest in bringing proceedings and in particular the scope of Article 176 of the Treaty (now Article 233 EC) and consequently found that the applicant had such an interest;

(5) the Court of First Instance misinterpreted the rules relating to the withdrawal of fruit provided for by the common organisation of the market in fruit and vegetables and as a result treated as available fruit withdrawn on dates prior to that on which payment was possible.

V - Assessment

19 It is clear from examining the first and third pleas that they concern the same issue. The third plea relates to the applicant's individual concern. (3) According to case-law, persons are individually concerned for the purposes of the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC `if [the] decision affects them by reason of certain attributes which are peculiar to them or by reason of circumstances in which they are differentiated from all other persons, and by virtue of these factors distinguishes them individually just as in the case of the person addressed.' (4) That definition therefore focuses on ascertaining whether the situation of the applicant distinguishes it, by virtue of certain circumstances, from any other third parties and thus corresponds to the wording of the first plea. Since, moreover, similar consideration has been given to these two pleas in the respective submissions of the parties, they will be examined together below.

(1) The first and third pleas, alleging that the applicant has no right of action in the absence of individual concern

(a) Arguments of the parties

(i) The Commission

20 The Commission takes the view that the applicant had no right of action since it was not individually concerned by the contested decision.

21 The view of the law expressed by the Court of First Instance in the judgment under appeal extends to excess the scope of the principle of equal treatment of tenderers. Although all tenderers taking part in a public tendering procedure indeed must be afforded equal treatment before the award, the legal position of the successful tenderer differs from that of the unsuccessful tenderer once the contract has been awarded. The Commission's relationship with the successful tenderer is contractual and, therefore, defined by the rules governing impossibility of performance, force majeure, etc. By contrast, there is no longer any legal relationship with unsuccessful tenderers after the award. The public procurement directives are no longer applicable after the award.

22 The Commission submits that the decision contested by the applicant, which concerns only the internal relationship with the successful tenderer, was adopted in the light of exceptional circumstances quite some time after the award. It could not, therefore, affect the applicant in a manner different to any other third party. The logical consequence of the approach taken by the Court of First Instance would have been to grant Allione Industria Alimentare SpA leave to intervene, but the

Court expressly dismissed an application to that effect.

23 The economic impact of a decision on equivalence between apples and peaches that was too liberal and was amended following a complaint by the applicant was, of course, felt by all producers of fruit juice and not just by the unsuccessful tenderers. The Commission adds that, by its line of reasoning the Court of First Instance turns the unsuccessful tenderers into the perfect embodiment of the principle of non-discrimination without, however, taking into account the distinction between general and individual concern provided for in the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC as regards the right to institute proceedings.

24 The Court of First Instance attached undue importance to the memorandum sent on 6 March 1996 to AIMA, which the Commission regards as non-binding. The memorandum was drafted as a result of exceptional circumstances and contains nothing more than a suggestion, not an imperative requirement, that the successful tenderers who agree to the arrangement be paid in fruit other than those originally specified in the invitation to tender.

25 The Commission further submits that it is also apparent from the case-law (5) that the fact that a decision is adopted which originates from a person's request is not such as to differentiate that person from any other. That is all the more true where the relevant decision is addressed to various Member States and it has implications only for the successful tenderers.

(ii) C.A.S. Succhi di Frutta

26 The applicant takes the view that the first plea raised in appeal is inadmissible because the Commission is merely relying on an argument that it has already put forward at first instance. (6) The third plea raised in appeal is inadmissible because the Commission is raising it for the first time before the Court of Justice although it was aware of it even at first instance. (7)

27 As far as the applicant is concerned, the Court of First Instance delivered the correct judgment. The applicant is individually concerned by the contested decision and accordingly entitled to institute proceedings. This is true not simply because it suffered an economic loss and approached the Commission about the problem but precisely because it had taken part in the tendering procedure. The applicant submits that it retains its tenderer status after the award.

28 Denying a right of action in this case to C.A.S. Succhi di Frutta, a measure which would be in keeping with the Commission's view, would have intolerable consequences. During performance of the contract, the contracting authority would be able to make fundamental changes to the invitation to tender without having to incur the risk of legal proceedings. In the extreme case of negotiated procedures, only those tenderers negotiating with the Commission would have a right of action.

29 The Court of Justice (8) and the Commission, in its statements as well as in relation to the authorities of the Member States, have always upheld the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers in the context of tendering procedures. It follows that the authorities inviting tenders have to adhere strictly to the terms of the invitation to tender which they themselves laid down and which prompted the tenderers to take part in the tendering procedure and to submit a particular tender. The principles of equal treatment and transparency cannot, on account of their importance, be applied only at the stage prior to the award.

30 Freedom to enter into a contract under civil-law rules after the award procedure presupposes compliance with all rules governing transparency prior to the award. Freedom of contract is restricted by those public procurement rules, which apply to contracting authorities. By claiming that, on account of exceptional circumstances, contracts other than those originally offered for tender may be executed, the Commission is venturing so far as to infringe itself the obligations imposed by the public procurement directives on the Member States.

(b) Assessment

(i) Admissibility

31 In paragraphs 50 to 58 of its judgment, the Court of First Instance addresses the issue of individual concern. Thus, the third ground of appeal is admissible because the subject-matter of the proceedings before the Court of First Instance is not changed in the appeal, for the purposes of Article 113(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, as a result of reliance on that ground.

32 With regard to the abovementioned argument raised at first instance and put forward by C.A.S. Succhi di Frutta in these proceedings against the admissibility of the second and fourth pleas, I intend at this juncture to make the following general points which will not be repeated later when it comes to examining the other grounds of appeal.

33 The purpose of appeals is to obtain a review of judgments of the Court of First Instance, in view of that Court's assessment of points of law, in accordance with Article 225(1) EC. This, of course, means that points of law which have already been discussed at first instance are again raised before the Court of Justice. The case-law cited by the applicant, (9) however, dismisses those arguments submitted in appeal which challenge the assessment of the facts by the Court of First Instance and confine themselves to repeating or reproducing word for word the arguments previously submitted to the Court of First Instance, including those based on facts rejected by that Court, and which contain no legal argument in support of the forms of order sought in the appeal. In reality, those pleas seek to obtain merely a re-examination of the application submitted to the Court of First Instance, which is in fact outside the jurisdiction of the Court of Justice.

34 In this case, the Commission takes issue with the views of the law expressed by the Court of First Instance and takes its own divergent views as the basis for its appeal. In that respect, there is no question of a mere repetition of submissions based on facts; what is involved is, rather, a dispute concerning points of law, which typifies the appeal procedure.

35 The first four pleas raised by the Commission in the appeal are, in those circumstances, admissible.

(ii) Substance

36 The Commission considers that the applicant is not individually concerned by the contested decision on equivalence of 6 September 1996 and consequently has no right of action pursuant to the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC.

37 Since the contested decision was not addressed to the applicant, what matters here, according to the definition set out above, (10) is whether the decision affects the applicant by reason of certain attributes which are peculiar to it or by reason of circumstances in which it is differentiated from all other persons, and by virtue of these factors distinguishes it individually just as in the case of the person addressed.

38 The connecting factor in the definition is, therefore, comparability with the person addressed. The manner in which the contested decision came to be created comprises several factors that present the applicant as though it were the person addressed. The applicant contacted the Commission staff responsible for such matters and subsequently held intensive negotiations with them. Following its complaint, the previously valid decision of 14 June 1996 was reviewed. It forwarded data and other documentation to the Commission, as a result of which further market analyses were carried out. Finally, a new decision - that contested in these proceedings - was adopted which met the applicant's request at least in part. It is by reason of those circumstances that the applicant is differentiated from all other persons.

39 Invoking the rule in Asocarne, (11) the Commission, on the other hand, takes the view that persons are not individually concerned by a decision merely by reason of their having been involved in the creation of that decision.

40 The Court of Justice held in Asocarne that, where an individual has participated in the preparation of a legislative measure, he may not, for that very reason, subsequently bring an action against that measure if, in the procedure for the adoption of that measure, no provision is made for any intervention by individuals. In that case it was taken as read that the possibility of instituting proceedings was restricted essentially because the subject-matter of the action was a directive, that is to say an abstract, general and normative measure. (12)

41 In the present case, however, no directives or regulations - comparable in this context with directives - have been contested. On the contrary, the subject-matter of the action is a Commission decision. Such a measure does not, in principle, have the general or normative quality expressly attributed to regulations under the first subparagraph of Article 249 EC and intrinsic to directives on account of the obligation they impose on Member States to legislate, as provided for in the second subparagraph of Article 249 EC. Under the third subparagraph of Article 249 EC, decisions, on the other hand, are to be binding only upon those to whom they are addressed. Therefore, the statement of the Court of Justice in Asocarne cannot readily be applied to the circumstances of this case.

42 The judgment in CIRFS, (13) one of the cases described by the Court of Justice in the order in Asocarne as different from the circumstances of that case, (14) is, on the contrary, the appropriate case-law for establishing individual concern in the circumstances of this case. The CIRFS case concerned an association's application for the annulment of a decision addressed to the French Republic in a competition procedure. The Court of Justice held that the applicant, which was the Commission's interlocutor with regard to the introduction and adaptation of the discipline and, during the procedure prior to those proceedings, actively pursued negotiations with it, in particular by submitting written observations to it and by keeping in close contact with the responsible departments, was individually concerned by the contested decision in its capacity as negotiator of the discipline. (15)

43 The Court also held in Van der Kooy (16) that a person is differentiated from all others as a result of his previous active participation in the procedure for granting aid involving his submission of written comments and his close contact with the Commission departments responsible for such matters.

44 Lastly, in a more recent judgment, (17) the Court again pointed to the significance of the part played by natural or legal persons in the administrative procedure as regards ascertaining whether those persons are individually concerned.

45 The applicant is, therefore, individually concerned by the contested decision on account of its position as negotiator in the administrative procedure.

46 In the Commission's view, that conclusion is incompatible with the judgment in Exporteurs in Levende Varkens. In that judgment, the Court of First Instance held that the fact that a person intervenes arbitrarily in the procedure leading to the adoption of a Community measure, particularly by sending to the competent Community institution letters criticising a measure which that institution has already adopted and seeking to influence its future action, is not such as to differentiate that person from any other. (18)

47 It is uncertain whether the applicant's intervention by means of a complaint can as such be described as arbitrary, because of the applicant's status as a tenderer in the previous tendering procedure. In that regard, the applicant is differentiated from Allione which did not submit any tender in the tendering procedure and which the Court of First Instance denied leave to intervene.

48 As a tenderer in the tendering procedure, certain rights accrue to the applicant in respect of the contracting authority, in particular the right to equal treatment for all tenderers. That right is laid down, for example, in Article 3(2) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (20) and in Article 4(2) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors. (21) It can be applied, in the form of a general principle, to the present proceedings.

49 The Court of Justice underlined the significance of that principle in a number of judgments. (22) In the cases of Commission v Belgium (23) and Embassy Limousines, (24) it also referred to the principle of transparency, which likewise determines the procedure.

50 In its capacity as the authority inviting tenders, the Commission has itself offended against those principles by virtue of the fact that the consideration, a fundamental component of a contract, in the form of apples or peaches, specified in the memorandum addressed to AIMA concerning the implementation of the award to the successful tenderer, did not correspond with the consideration mentioned in the notice of invitation to tender (apples alone). (25) Such considerations must hold true on account of the particular importance attached to the principles of the equal treatment of tenderers and of transparency, irrespective of whether the tenderer would have submitted a better tender had it been aware of the amended payment condition.

51 By its complaint, which gave rise to the contested decision, the applicant requested that the effects of that infringement of the principles of equal treatment and transparency at least be mitigated by the introduction of a more favourable decision on equivalence between apples and peaches which corresponds to the market conditions.

52 Therefore, rather than intervening in the proceedings arbitrarily, the applicant on the contrary asserted its original rights as a tenderer. This is a valid statement irrespective of the fact that it was additionally affected, as an ordinary economic operator, by the implications of the incorrect decision on equivalence for the market in peaches. As an unsuccessful tenderer, it cannot be compared with all other producers of fruit juice or fruit traders, which were affected by the decision merely by reason of their objective capacity as economic operators pursuing the same activity. All subsequent decisions continued to infringe the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers by granting to the successful tenderer the possibility - even though that possibility is not mentioned in the notice of invitation to tender - of substituting peaches for the apples to be supplied from intervention stocks as payment. That infringement was the basis both of the first and of the second - contested - decision on equivalence, both of which laid down the coefficient to be applied for the substitution of peaches for apples. In that context, it is irrelevant whether those decisions contained an express reference to that coefficient. After all, the substance of a decision on equivalence is the fundamental decision allowing different types of fruit to be treated as equivalent. Without a fundamental decision to allow the substitution of peaches for apples, there would have been no need to fix coefficients of equivalence between those two types of fruit because they would, in that case, have been pointless.

53 The Commission, on the other hand, considers that the applicant can no longer rely on its legal status as a tenderer and is not, therefore, individually concerned. The contested decision was adopted quite some time after the award, in the context of a contractual relationship under civil law between the Commission and the successful tenderer, in the light of an unforeseeable shortage of apples.

54 It should be examined first of all whether that argument is consistent with the findings of the Court of First Instance.

55 The decision allowing peaches to be substituted for apples, which, as explained, was the general basis for the subsequent decisions on equivalence, was adopted as early as 6 March 1996 in the memorandum to AIMA, immediately after the contract had been awarded to Trento Frutta SpA. The specific details of the arrangements for implementing the Commission's decision on the award were conveyed to the Italian intervention agency by that memorandum. Therefore, contrary to the view expressed by the Commission, the memorandum is not simply a non-binding proposal. However, when the memorandum was drafted, there was - according to other information supplied by the Commission - no discernible shortage of apples. It is apparent from the arguments raised in relation to the fifth plea that the period during which apples were withdrawn from the market and, by extension, could be made available to the intervention agencies did not end until 31 May 1996, that is to say three months later. The Commission submits that the original drafting of the conditions of the invitation to tender was itself contingent on there having been sufficient availability of apples in preceding years. The actual decision to allow substitution, which forms the basis and substance of the decision at issue in this case, was thus adopted not primarily in the light of unforeseeable circumstances arising after the award of the contract.

56 Furthermore, the contested decision was addressed to the Italian Republic, the French Republic, the Hellenic Republic and the Kingdom of Spain. It thus extended beyond the scope of a purely internal contractual relationship with the successful tenderer.

57 Those circumstances relating to the addressees of and the persons concerned by the decision illustrate a further point. By the contested decision addressed to certain Member States, the Commission laid down amended conditions governing the contract awarded to the successful tenderer, but instead of discussing those conditions with that successful tenderer, namely the other party to the contract, the Commission had held negotiations on the matter with the applicant. It was therefore acting largely independently, in some kind of position of superiority rather than as an equal partner in a relationship established purely under civil law. It thus maintained its contracting-authority status, even in the performance of the contract, along with the rights and obligations arising in that connection.

58 The legal status of unsuccessful tenderers is maintained in the same way, provided that a decision is adopted which concerns them in terms of their rights as tenderers.

59 However, the Commission's approach of dividing the procurement procedure rigidly into two sections subject to independent assessment does not meet the requirements of legal certainty. Such an approach would mean that although the Commission first and foremost, or any other contracting authority, would be bound by the rules governing procurement, in particular the principles of equal treatment and transparency, if they did not abide by those rules, action by unsuccessful tenderers against such non-compliance would be impossible in the majority of cases. In the absence of clarity, an infringement would not be detected and challenged immediately on the decision to award the contract. Were the Commission's approach adopted, it would escape subsequent scrutiny by the courts.

60 Just as this approach offends against the principles of equal treatment and transparency in the tendering procedure, it would likewise offend against the principle that where there are procedural rights and guarantees, there must be a procedure in place for their implementation. (26)

61 As the Commission's negotiating partner in the procedure prior to the [contested] decision and on account of its status as unsuccessful tenderer, the applicant was therefore individually concerned by the contested decision and consequently entitled to bring an action.

62 The first and third pleas raised must therefore be rejected.

(2) The plea alleging a contradictory assertion made by the Court of First Instance to the effect that a new invitation to tender should have been issued

(a) Arguments of the parties

(i) The Commission

63 In asserting that a new invitation to tender should have been issued in the event of a shortage of apples, the Court of First Instance has erred in law and has contradicted itself because it at the same time takes the view that the Commission may not alter the terms of payment. Since, in those circumstances, the Commission would have to pay pecuniary damages to the successful tenderers who did, for their part, comply with the contract, this would also lead to an amendment of the terms of payment in that money would be substituted for the apples. Following the approach taken by the Court of First Instance, the unsuccessful tenderers could have submitted different tenders had they in fact known of that substitution possibility.

64 The Commission adds that since the public procurement directives do not apply beyond the period from the invitation to tender to the award, they cannot be relied on for asserting that a new tendering procedure should be initiated where there is a change in circumstances during the performance of a contract. The two stages comprising the tendering procedure and the performance of the contract with the successful tenderer must be regarded as absolutely separate stages. The first comprises the obligation to observe the principles of transparency and equal treatment of tenderers, that is to say absolute contractual provisions and comparable tenders. The second stage - that of performance - often calls for adjustment of the contract in response to unforeseen events. Although the principles of transparency and equal treatment come into play at this stage where there are fundamental changes to be made, (27) the contested decision on equivalence, however, does not comprise any such fundamental change.

65 The Court of First Instance has, according to the Commission, made the mistake of considering the two stages as one. The Commission was under an obligation to pay the other party to the contract, despite the unforeseeable shortage of apples. It fulfilled that obligation by making peaches available. That obligation to effect payment at all costs in some form or another arises from its status as a party to the contract and explicit reference to it as such in the invitation to tender was not essential.

66 It was not feasible to take all contingencies into account in the invitation to tender. Adopting a coefficient of equivalence between the different types of fruits or other abstract payment mechanism would have involved a contingency and thus led to uncertainty, which is incompatible with the principles of transparency, equal treatment and comparability of tenders. Moreover, when the invitation to tender was issued, the Commission did not know if any peaches at all would be withdrawn from the market. There is, therefore, no need to determine the coefficient of equivalence until the possibility of a payment arises. Only then is it possible to take account of market development without partiality or discrimination.

(ii) C.A.S. Succhi di Frutta

67 In the applicant's view, the second plea is likewise inadmissible because it has already been raised in the proceedings at first instance.

68 The Commission's arguments are substantially flawed. The subsequent amendment of the conditions resulted primarily in discrimination against the unsuccessful tenderers. Such an amendment should have been made only by initiating a new tendering procedure. The Commission's approach, which the applicant regards as arbitrary, constitutes an infringement of the principles of transparency, equal treatment of tenderers and, ultimately, lawfulness.

(b) Assessment

69 According to the Commission, the assertion made by the Court of First Instance, that a new invitation to tender should be issued where the terms of payment are changed, is contradictory because even settlement of a claim for damages where it is impossible to effect payment with apples would amount to a change in the terms of payment, namely by satisfying the claim for damages with money.

70 That theory is precluded by the fact that the original right to payment and the right to damages, which does not accrue until later and is derived from the first paragraph of Article 288 EC in conjunction with the relevant provisions of civil law, are clearly distinguishable rights. The form taken by the right to payment as the original right to performance is determined by the conditions of the invitation to tender. The right to damages, however, arises under civil-law provisions in the event of impossibility of performance or a breach of obligations in the subsequent performance of the contract. The creation of that right and the form it takes are unconnected with the issue of whether the original right to payment was to be satisfied in money or in kind.

71 It is at this point that the distinction between the two stages of a procurement procedure, on which the Commission invariably dwells, becomes relevant. However, the right to damages, an ever-present possibility, will have no impact on the form of tender submitted by the individual tenderers. In that respect, the assertion by the Court of First Instance that a new tendering procedure should be initiated is not contradictory.

72 As regards the issue - again, in the Commission's view, suggesting inconsistency - of whether the terms of payment applying to the successful tenderers who have complied with the contractual provisions would have been amended had a new invitation to tender incorporating the possibility of substituting peaches been issued, I should first of all refer to the fact that the decision to allow substitution was taken as far back as 6 March 1996 in the memorandum to AIMA. The successful tenderers were awarded their respective contracts concurrent with that decision. Therefore, the successful tenderers for their part could not have already performed the respective contracts by that time.

73 Furthermore, a new tendering procedure meets the legal certainty requirement only if, as is the case here during the award procedure, an essential component of the conditions of the invitation to tender is altered. Those considerations remain unaffected by any rights to damages that may arise.

74 The fact that the alteration in the present case related to the form of the consideration given in return for the products to be supplied gives the lie to the Commission's view that the situation did not involve a fundamental alteration. It involved a substitution of the main benefits of the contract, thus amending fundamentally the conditions of the invitation to tender. Unlike in cases where a value payable in one currency is replaced by a sum expressed in a foreign yet freely convertible currency, the substitution of peaches for apples involved two entirely different things. In some cases there is greater demand for peaches than apples, whilst in others there is no demand at all. Apples and peaches are not products that can be naturally substituted for each other.

75 The Commission is also wrong to consider, as it does, that introducing the possibility of substitution by other fruit in the notice of the invitation to tender would have loaded the notice with uncertainty and in that respect offended against the principles of equal treatment and transparency. On the contrary, it is the fear that the contracting authority and other tenderers could circumvent the procurement rules and subsequently amend the conditions of the invitation to tender that leads to an element of uncertainty which does not satisfy the requirements for transparency or legal certainty.

76 The practical problems put forward could be tackled by setting out the notice of invitation to tender in the same way as the memorandum to AIMA which, as well as awarding the contract, in fact specified detailed arrangements for substitution. The notice could be drawn up in conjunction with a clause setting out - even at that early stage - the possibility of adjusting at a later stage the coefficient of equivalence in line with market fluctuations.

77 Overall, I therefore have to concur with the Court of First Instance that the Commission should have either specified in the notice of invitation to tender the precise conditions governing substitution of the fruit prescribed as payment for the supplies at issue or instituted a new tendering procedure when the conditions of the invitation to tender changed.

78 The second plea must therefore be rejected.

(3) The plea alleging that the Court of First Instance erred in law in finding that the applicant had an interest in bringing proceedings on the basis of Article 233 EC

(a) Arguments of the parties

(i) The Commission

79 The Commission's view is that the applicant has no interest in bringing an action for the annulment of the contested measure. The sole consequence of a judgment to that effect would be to reinstate the original decision on equivalence, which is less favourable to the applicant and which it did not contest.

80 According to the Commission, a judgment annulling a measure cannot apply beyond the confines of the measure contested in proceedings before the Court of Justice. A supposed obligation, extending beyond those confines, on the part of the Commission to repeal the earlier decision on equivalence which has not been contested has no basis in law and conflicts with legal certainty. The obligation to repeal the provisions declared unlawful in the judgment relates only to arrangements which have been laid down under the annulled measure.

81 It is no longer possible for the Commission to initiate a new tendering procedure since the dispatch of goods to the Caucasus has stopped.

82 The Commission submits that problems arise in the enforcement of the judgment delivered by the Court of First Instance in that the judgment did not mention any specific measures that would have to be implemented, nor did it limit the annulment. Even now, on account of the resulting retroactive effect, rights accruing to the successful tenderers under the earlier decisions still have to be satisfied, and the procedure has indeed been very protracted.

(ii) C.A.S. Succhi di Frutta

83 In the applicant's view, the fourth plea is likewise inadmissible because it has already been raised in the proceedings at first instance.

84 The applicant argues that it has a legitimate interest in obtaining the annulment of the contested decision. The Court of Justice has held that such an interest is maintained even where the contested decision has already been implemented because its annulment is capable of having further consequences and of serving to prevent repetitions of the unlawful measures in the future. (28) An interest in bringing proceedings arises even in the context of challenging a decision that has already been repealed since the annulment of that decision by the Court of First Instance cannot be equated with its repeal by the Commission and since it also has retroactive effect. (29)

85 Furthermore, there is an interest in obtaining the annulment of unlawful measures as the institution responsible for the unlawful act is required under Article 233 EC to take the necessary measures to comply with the judgment and accordingly remove the effects of that act. (30) Article 233 EC is deprived of its substance in the event of the Court of First Instance being required to define the specific measures to be taken in each case. Making the correct inferences from the operative part and the grounds in the light of all the decisions adopted on the matter is more in line with the principle of sound administration. In the contested judgment the Court of First Instance clearly finds that the possibility of substituting at a later stage peaches for the other fruit concerned constituted an error in law.

(b) Assessment

86 The Commission takes the view that the applicant has no interest in bringing the action since annulment of the contested decision means that the decision of 14 June 1996, which is less favourable to the applicant, will be reinstated.

87 The decision of 6 September 1996 contains a coefficient of equivalence between apples and peaches which corresponds to the market conditions. In that respect it is in fact more favourable to the applicant than the decision of 14 June 1996 which favoured the successful tenderers by laying down coefficients of equivalence which were not in line with market conditions.

88 It can be concluded from the foregoing that no such interest arises only if the decisive factor is the formation of the coefficients of equivalence and if the assumption that the less favourable decision would merely be reinstated is in fact correct.

89 As explained above, the possibility of substituting peaches for the apples to be supplied as payment, which was introduced at a later stage in the memorandum to AIMA concerning the implementation of the award but was not contained in the conditions of the invitation to tender, was the basis and substance of all the decisions on equivalence. That infringement of the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers and, by extension, of the procurement rules was, admittedly, mitigated to some extent by the decision of 6 September 1996, but even that more favourable decision comprises an infringement of a rule of law relating to the application of the Treaty in that it offends against the principle of equal treatment. That infringement may be asserted under the second and fourth paragraphs of Article 230 EC in the context of an action for annulment. The Court of Justice has held that there is an interest in bringing an action for the annulment of a decision entailing such an error in law for the sole purpose of preventing comparable unlawful measures. (31) The applicant achieved only partial success in terms of removing the effects of the infringement by obtaining a more favourable decision on equivalence in response to its complaint. The purpose of this action is the removal of the remaining elements of the infringement. In that connection, there remains, as before, an interest in bringing legal proceedings.

90 Moreover, it is impossible in practice to reinstate and actually implement the decision of 14 June 1996 because the operation for supplying fruit juice to the Caucasus has in fact ceased. It was carried out on the basis of the contested decision of 6 September 1996 since, in accordance with the first sentence of Article 242 EC, the action brought against that decision did not have suspensory effect and the President of the Court of First Instance had rejected the application lodged by the applicant for the suspension of the operation of the measure concerned. (32) As a result, the issue of damages alone remains to be addressed.

91 To assess whether the applicant is in any way entitled to damages, it is essential to establish whether responsibility for an infringement which resulted in a loss suffered by the applicant can be attributed to the Commission. The judgment by the Court of First Instance annulling the measure concerned can be relied on to establish that infringement. As provided for in the first paragraph of Article 231 EC in conjunction with the second and fourth paragraphs of Article 230 EC, it is apparent from the operative part of that judgment annulling the contested decision that there was an infringement and, from the grounds of the judgment, what precisely that infringement consisted in. Thus there is also an interest in obtaining the annulment of the contested decision on account of the possible consideration of the infringement in a subsequent action for damages.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

92 Furthermore, the Commission is required under the first paragraph of Article 233 EC to take all the necessary measures to comply with the judgment of the Court of Justice. Those measures include, inter alia, the removal of the effects of the illegal conduct found in the judgment annulling the act (33) with the result that the Commission may be required by the judgment to pay damages on its own initiative and without further legal action.

93 The problems additionally raised by the Commission as regards enforcement of the judgment delivered by the Court of First Instance do not arise. The annulment of the decision of 6 September 1996 requires no further enforcement. There is no reason for limiting the effects of the judgment to the past since there is no reasonable ground for restricting any right to damages that may arise.

94 In those circumstances, the applicant has an interest in bringing the action and, consequently, the fourth plea should also be rejected.

(4) The plea alleging a misinterpretation of the rules of the common organisation of the market in fruit and vegetables

(a) Arguments of the parties

(i) The Commission

95 The Commission regards the fifth plea as admissible since the substantive inaccuracy of the judgment by the Court of First Instance is apparent from the documents in the case and since the Court of First Instance has defined the legal nature of the facts it has found. (34)

96 In finding that apples were available in intervention stocks and that there was therefore no force majeure, the Court of First Instance committed an error in law. During the period from the point at which the successful tenderers could begin to withdraw fruit to the date of the first decision on equivalence on 14 June 1996, only 19 958.648 tonnes of apples were withdrawn from the market as intervention stocks, although the successful tenderers were entitled to the supply of a total of 39 500 tonnes of apples.

97 For their respective calculations to ascertain the quantity of apples available, both the Court of First Instance and the applicant relied - incorrectly - on dates inconsistent with the intervention mechanisms. Within the common organisation of the market in fruit and vegetables, intervention agencies do not have the option of buying in or storing stock, except in serious crisis situations. The fruit withdrawn from the market has to be destroyed or distributed free of charge among relief organisations.

98 The annex to the Commission's defence in the action before the Court of First Instance indicating that 200 000 tonnes had been available merely served to illustrate the fact that there had been sufficient availability of apples in the preceding years. It was therefore reasonable to assume, when the invitation to tender was issued, that there would be sufficient apples available for withdrawal from the market in order to pay for the fruit juice supplied.

99 The Court of First Instance failed to take account of those legal issues and misinterpreted the information provided. The substantive inaccuracy can clearly be seen from the documents handed over. The Court of First Instance erred in law when it regarded as available in intervention stocks apples withdrawn from the market prior to the date from which the successful tenderers could withdraw such stocks, and consequently its subsequent conclusions were also erroneous.

(ii) C.A.S. Succhi di Frutta

100 The applicant takes the view that the fifth plea is inadmissible as it involves a complaint concerning an incorrect appraisal of the facts, for which the Court of Justice has no jurisdiction in the appeal procedure. (35)

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

101 It adds that the Court of First Instance appraised the documents made available by the Commission correctly and was right to assume that there was sufficient availability of apples for the successful tenderers.

(b) Assessment

102 Under Article 225(1) EC and Article 51 of the EC Statute of the Court of Justice, appeals are limited to points of law. Accordingly, appeals may be based only on grounds relating to the infringement of rules of law, to the exclusion of any appraisal of the facts. The Court of First Instance has exclusive jurisdiction to establish and to assess the facts. (36) The availability of apples is an issue concerning a finding of fact, the re-examination of which therefore does not fall to the Court of Justice in the appeal procedure.

103 Although the Court of Justice has jurisdiction to review the legal characterisation of the facts established or assessed by the Court of First Instance and to review the legal conclusions it has drawn from those facts, (37) it has no jurisdiction to proceed with a new examination of the facts or to assess the evidence placed before it. (38) In taking the view that the Court of First Instance should have drawn different conclusions from the documents placed before it in terms of the availability of apples, the Commission is simply objecting to the assessment by the Court of First Instance of the facts and of the evidence. Since that assessment is precluded from a review by the Court of Justice, the corresponding plea is accordingly inadmissible.

104 In the Brazzelli case, the Court of Justice indeed did hold that `the Court of First Instance... has exclusive jurisdiction to find the facts except where the substantive inaccuracy of its findings is apparent from the documents submitted to it'. (39) However, if every inaccurate finding of fact, while apparent only from the documents submitted to the Court, were sufficient for the Court of Justice to have jurisdiction to review the facts at the appeal stage, there would be a risk of turning the Court of Justice into a second court hearing and determining points of fact, contrary to the legal parameters defined in the first sentence of Article 225(1) EC.

105 Should the Court of Justice indeed regard itself as having jurisdiction to review the assessment by the Court of First Instance of the facts in this case, then, following the underlying line of reasoning, the dispute concerning the availability of apples when the decisions on equivalence were adopted is irrelevant. As repeatedly stated above, the crucial infringement of the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers lay in the fact that the memorandum to AIMA of 6 March 1996 concerning the implementation of the award to the successful tenderer provided for the possibility to substitute peaches for apples in payment for the supplies given. However, at that point in time, the Commission itself, by its own account, assumed on the basis of experiences from previous years that sufficient apples would be available. Consequently, at the time relevant in this case, there was no unforeseeable shortage of apples.

106 The fifth plea must in those circumstances be rejected as inadmissible and, in any event, unfounded.

107 As a result, it should be held that the judgment of the Court of First Instance in Case T-191/96 is not vitiated by any illegality. The appeal must therefore be dismissed.

VI - Costs

108 Under Article 122 in conjunction with Articles 118 and 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings.

VII - Conclusion

In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court should:

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Jacobs delivered on 17 May 2001.
Firma Ambulanz Glöckner v Landkreis Südwestpfalz.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Oberverwaltungsgericht Rheinland-Pfalz - Germany.
Articles 85, 86 and 90 of the EC Treaty (now Articles 81 EC, 82 EC and 86 EC) - Transport of sick or injured persons by ambulance - Special or exclusive rights - Restriction of competition - Public interest task - Justification - Effect on trade between Member States.
Case C-475/99.

I - Introduction

1. The present case, referred by the Oberverwaltungsgericht Rheinland-Pfalz (Rhineland-Palatinate Higher Administrative Court), concerns the compatibility with Article 86 EC, read in conjunction with Article 82 EC, of a legislative provision under which private undertakings are to be refused authorisation to provide independent ambulance services where the grant of such an authorisation is likely to have adverse effects on the operation and profitability of the public ambulance service, which is entrusted for given geographical areas to private medical aid organisations such as the Red Cross.

II - The regional law at issue

2. In Germany ambulance services are governed by laws adopted at the level of the Länder. The relevant law in the Land of Rheinland-Pfalz (Rhineland-Palatinate) is the Rettungsdienstgesetz (Law on the public ambulance service) in its version of 22 April 1991 to which I will refer as RettDG 1991.

1. Basic concepts

3. The RettDG 1991 distinguishes in essence between two types of ambulance services, namely emergency transport (Notfalltransport) and patient transport (Krankentransport).

4. Emergency transport concerns emergency patients (Notfallpatienten), namely persons with life-threatening injuries or conditions. It consists of taking life-saving measures, preparing emergency patients for transport, and transporting them, with provision of appropriate care, to a hospital suitable for their further treatment.

5. Patient transport is the transport of persons ill, injured or otherwise in need of help who are not emergency patients. It consists of administering medically appropriate care and of transporting the patients at the same time as monitoring their condition.

6. Both emergency and patient transport services must be provided by ambulances (Krankenkraftwagen) of which there are essentially two types.

7. Emergency transport is normally to be provided by emergency ambulance (Rettungswagen). An emergency ambulance must be equipped with special apparatus. The person taking care of the emergency patient during the transport must be a qualified rescue service assistant (Rettungsassistent).

8. Patient transport is normally to be provided by a patient transport ambulance (Krankentransportwagen) which does not need to have the same technical equipment. It is moreover sufficient that the person taking care of the patient during the transport possesses the lesser qualification of an ambulance attendant (Rettungssanitäter).

9. The RettDG 1991 does not apply to the conveyance of patients not in need of qualified help or supervision, in vehicles other than ambulances (Krankenfahrten).

2. The public ambulance service (Rettungsdienst) consists in the provision to the population whenever necessary (bedarfsgerecht) and throughout the territory (flächendeckend) of both emergency and patient transport services. Contrary to what the referring court appears to assume it follows from documents submitted to the Court that patient transport (and not only emergency transport) was also covered by the rules in force before the RettDG 1991 as an integral part of the public ambulance service. The main feature of the public ambulance service is to guarantee ambulance services on a permanent basis and on similar quality conditions even in remote areas irrespective of the profitability of individual operations.

11. For the purposes of the organisation of the public ambulance service the Land is divided into operational areas (Rettungsdienstbereiche). Ambulance services within each operational area are to be coordinated by one central coordination unit (Rettungsleitstelle). The actual services are to be provided by ambulance stations (Rettungswachen) which are to be set up, staffed and equipped according to local requirements. It must be possible to reach any point on the public road network within 15 minutes after the central coordination unit is alerted.

12. Responsibility for the public ambulance service lies in principle with the Land, the administrative districts at provincial level (Landkreise) and the towns which are administrative districts in their own right (kreisfreie Städte).

13. However, according to Paragraph 5(1) of the RettDG 1991 the competent authority assigns (überträgt) the operation of the public ambulance service to recognised medical aid organisations (anerkannte Sanitätsorganisationen) if and in so far as those organisations are able and willing to guarantee a permanent public ambulance service. The public ambulance service may be assigned to other operators only if the organisations mentioned in Paragraph 5(1) are not willing or able to operate it.
