65 By its third question, the referring court is asking, in essence, whether Directive 89/665 precludes national legislation which provides that any application for review of a contracting authority's decision must be commenced within a time-limit laid down to that effect and that any irregularity in the award procedure relied upon in support of such application must be raised within the same period, if it is not to be out of time, with the result that, when that period has passed, it is no longer possible to challenge such a decision or to raise such an irregularity.

Observations submitted to the Court

66 The applicants in the main proceedings claim that the short periods prescribed for the commencement of applications for review by Paragraphs 97 and 98 of the WLVergG do not allow interested parties to check the grounds of a contracting authority's negative decision and, if appropriate, to ascertain the wrongful nature of the reasons advanced. Thus, it would be practically impossible for a reasoned application having some chance of success to be commenced within those periods.

67 Universale adds that candidates from other Member States cannot, as a general rule, comply with the time-limit of two weeks laid down in Paragraph 98 of the WLVergG, which is contrary to the fundamental principles of Community policy in the public procurement sector, namely, first, that of awarding public procurement contracts without discrimination and, secondly that of access for undertakings to a common market with large-scale opportunities strengthening the competitiveness of European undertakings.

68 In contrast, EBS submits that Directive 89/665 itself establishes a swift and effective procedure, calling for short time-limits after the expiry of which contracting authorities should be able to be sure that they can proceed with the procedure for awarding contracts. The necessity for short time-limits has clearly been shown in the main proceedings.

69 EBS emphasises, in particular, that nothing prevented the applicants in the main proceedings from the timeous expression of their reservations with regard to the invitation to tender, since it had mentioned to them, both that it would apply a `scoring' procedure to select the candidates who would be invited to tender and that it would not disclose the precise nature of the decision-making process. EBS adds that the application for review of the decision to invite certain candidates to tender had to be decided very quickly, otherwise it could not have pursued the procedure for the award of the contract. EBS points out finally that a time-limit of two weeks for applications for review of administrative decisions continues to be the general rule, citing as an example Paragraph 63(5) of the AVG, which provides that any decision of an administrative authority must be challenged within a time-limit of two weeks.

70 The Austrian and Netherlands Governments and the Commission maintain, in essence, that Directive 89/665 leaves it to Member States to lay down the specific detailed rules governing applications for review of public procurement procedures. They deduce therefrom that the Member States have discretion to fix the time-limits for applications for review, on the dual condition that the purposes of Directive 89/665 are not circumvented and that the fundamental principles of Community law are observed. The Austrian Government submits further that the time-limits for applications for review at issue in the main proceedings prevent public procurement procedures from being delayed more than necessary and reduce the risk of improper recourse to litigation, which are both in accordance with the objectives of Directive 89/665.

Findings of the Court

71 It should be noted, first of all, that, whilst the objective of Directive 89/665 is to guarantee the existence, in all Member States, of effective remedies for infringements of Community law in the field of public procurement or of the national rules implementing that law, so as to ensure the effective application of the directives on the coordination of public procurement procedures, it contains no provision specifically covering time-limits for the applications for review which it seeks to establish. It is therefore for the internal legal order of each Member State to establish such time-limits.

72 None the less, since there are detailed procedural rules governing the remedies intended to protect rights conferred by Community law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities, they must not compromise the effectiveness of Directive 89/665.

73 It is therefore appropriate to determine whether, in light of the purpose of that directive, national legislation such as that at issue in the main proceedings does not adversely affect rights conferred on individuals by Community law.

74 In that regard, it is appropriate to recall that, as is apparent from the first and second recitals in its preamble, Directive 89/665 is intended to strengthen the existing mechanisms, both at national and Community levels, to ensure the effective application of the directives relating to public procurement, in particular at a stage when infringements can still be corrected. To that effect, Article 1(1) of that directive requires Member States to guarantee that unlawful decisions of contracting authorities can be subjected to effective review which is as swift as possible.

75 The full implementation of the objective sought by Directive 89/665 would be undermined if candidates and tenderers were allowed to invoke, at any stage of the award procedure, infringement of the rules of public procurement, thus obliging the contracting authority to restart the entire procedure in order to correct such infringements.

76 Moreover, the setting of reasonable limitation periods for bringing proceedings must be regarded as satisfying, in principle, the requirement of effectiveness under Directive 89/665, since it is an application of the fundamental principle of legal certainty (see, by analogy, in relation to the principle of the effectiveness of Community law, Case C-261/95 Palmisani [1997] ECR I-4025, paragraph 28, and Case C-78/98 Preston and Others [2000] ECR I-3201, paragraph 33).

77 In light of the foregoing considerations, it must be held, first, that the conditions governing time-limits such as those at issue in the main proceedings appear to be reasonable with regard both to the objectives of Directive 89/665, as set out in paragraph 74 of this judgment, and to the principle of legal certainty.

78 Secondly, there can be no doubt that penalties such as prescription are such as to ensure that unlawful decisions of contracting authorities, from the moment they become known to those concerned, are challenged and corrected as soon as possible, which is also in accordance both with the objectives of Directive 89/665 and with the principle of legal certainty.

79 The answer to the third question must therefore be that Directive 89/665 does not preclude national legislation which provides that any application for review of a contracting authority's decision must be commenced within a time-limit laid down to that effect and that any irregularity in the award procedure relied upon in support of such application must be raised within the same period, if it is not to be out of time, with the result that, when that period has passed, it is no longer possible to challenge such a decision or to raise such an irregularity, provided that the time-limit in question is reasonable.

The fourth question

80 By its fourth question, the referring court is asking whether Directive 93/37 prohibits, in the context of a restricted procedure, the contracting authority from selecting those candidates who will be invited to tender according to methods of evaluation which have not been set out in the contract notice or in the tender documents, even if documents specifying those methods have been lodged with a notary.

Observations submitted to the Court

81 The applicants in the main proceedings claim that the procedure followed by EBS of not revealing to the candidates either the detailed rules of the `scoring' procedure or the importance of the different criteria for ranking the applications to take part is incompatible with the principles of transparency and objectivity. They add that the respective importance of the different ranking criteria must, in any event, appear in the contract notice, so as to exclude any arbitrariness in the contracting authority's decision and to enable the candidates to scrutinise the lawfulness thereof and to make use of their right of review.

82 In contrast, EBS and the Austrian Government submit that a procedure such as depositing with a notary documents specifying the detailed rules for evaluating the applications to take part is sufficient guarantee of compliance with the principles of non-discrimination and objectivity. They submit that, whilst it is clear from those principles that the contracting authority must prescribe in advance the procedure which it will use to choose the candidates and that such method of selection may not be subsequently changed, they do not thereby require the contracting authorities to divulge the precise details of the rules for evaluating the candidatures.

83 EBS makes clear that, in the main proceedings, it set out the principal criteria for ranking the applications to take part in the order of their importance, and that it was precisely to encourage lawful and fair competition that it did not make known in advance to the candidates the precise detailed rules for evaluating the applications. EBS in fact sought the five construction undertakings which were objectively the best for the works contract in issue, and not undertakings which adapt their tenders to the contracting authority's views, which usually show through in the choice of evaluation methods.

Findings of the Court

84 At the outset, it is appropriate to state that, in the main proceedings, it is common ground that EBS ordained from the beginning the value which would be attributed to each of the selection criteria which it intended using, but provided no indication in that respect in the invitation to tender, merely lodging the documents relating to the `scoring' procedure with a notary.

85 It is also clear that in this case the national court does not seek to ascertain whether a contracting authority is obliged, under Community law, to lay down prior to the contract notice the rules as to the ranking of the selection criteria which it intends to use, but that it is asking the Court only about compliance with the requirements for advertisement under Directive 93/37 in a situation where the contracting authority has laid down such rules in advance.

86 The fourth question must therefore be understood as asking whether Directive 93/37 is to be interpreted as meaning that, where, in the context of a restricted procedure, the contracting authority has laid down in advance the rules as to the weighting of the criteria for selecting the candidates who will be invited to tender, it is obliged to state them in the contract notice or the tender documents.

87 In order to reply to the question thus rephrased, it is appropriate to point out, from the outset, that Directive 93/37 contains no specific provision relating to the requirements for prior advertisement concerning the criteria for selecting the candidates who will be invited to tender in the context of a restrictive procedure.

88 The title of Directive 93/37 and the second recital in its preamble show that its aim is simply to coordinate national procedures for the award of public works contracts, although it does not lay down a complete system of Community rules on the matter (Joined Cases C-285/99 and C-286/99 Lombardini and Mantovani [2001] ECR I-9233, paragraph 33).

89 The Directive nevertheless aims, as is clear from its preamble and 2nd and 10th recitals, to abolish restrictions on the freedom of establishment and on the freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts in order to open up such contracts to genuine competition between entrepreneurs in the Member States (see, among others, Lombardini and Mantovani, cited above, paragraph 34).

90 As the Court has already stated in respect of Directive 71/305, which, as was pointed out in paragraph 6 of this judgment, was consolidated by Directive 93/37, in order to meet that aim, the criteria and conditions which govern each contract must be given sufficient publicity by the authorities awarding contracts (Case 31/87 Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635, paragraph 21).

91 The principle of equal treatment, which underlies the directives on procedures for the award of public contracts, implies an obligation of transparency in order to enable verification that it has been complied with (see, in particular, Case C-324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress [2000] ECR I-10745, paragraph 61, and Case C-92/00 HI [2002] ECR I-5553, paragraph 45).

92 That obligation of transparency which is imposed on the contracting authority consists in ensuring, for the benefit of any potential tenderer, a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the services market to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed

93 It follows therefrom that the procedure for awarding a public contract must comply, at every stage, particularly that of selecting the candidates in a restricted procedure, both with the principle of the equal treatment of the potential tenderers and the principle of transparency so as to afford all equality of opportunity in formulating the terms of their applications to take part and their tenders (see, to that effect, in relation to the stage of comparison of tenders, Case C-87/94 Commission v Belgium [1996] ECR I-2043, paragraph 54).

94 It is in that perspective that, in accordance with the 10th and 11th recitals in its preamble, Directive 93/37 lays down advertising requirements in respect of both the criteria for selecting candidates and those for awarding the contract.

95 Thus, in relation, first, to the selection criteria, Article 7(2) of Directive 93/37, which concerns negotiated procedures, requires that the candidates are to be selected according to known qualitative criteria.

96 In relation, secondly, to the criteria for awarding contracts, Article 13(2)(e) of that directive, relating both to negotiated and restricted procedures, provides that they form part of the minimum information which must be mentioned in the letter of invitation to tender, if they do not already appear in the contract notice.

97 Similarly, for all types of procedure, where the award of the contract is made to the most economically advantageous tender, Article 30(2) of Directive 93/37, which applies both to the open procedure and the restricted and negotiated procedures, imposes on the contracting authority the obligation to state in the contract documents or in the contract notice all the criteria it intends to apply to the award, where possible in descending order of their importance. Also according to that article, where the contracting authority has set out a ranking in their order of importance of the criteria for the award which it intends to use, it may not confine itself to a mere reference thereto in the contract documents or in the contract notice, but must, in addition, inform the tenderers of the ranking which it has used.

98 As the Court has stated in respect of Article 27(2) of Council Directive 90/531/EEC of 17 September 1990 on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1990 L 297, p. 1), the terms of which are substantially the same as those of Article 30(2) of Directive 93/37, the requirement thus imposed on the contracting authorities is intended precisely to inform all potential tenderers, before the preparation of their tenders, of the award criteria to be satisfied by these tenders and the relative importance of those criteria, thus ensuring the observance of the principles of equal treatment of tenderers and of transparency (see, Commission v Belgium, cited above, paragraphs 88 and 89).

99 It is therefore clear that the interpretation according to which, where, in the context of a restricted procedure, the contracting authority has laid down prior to the publication of the contract notice the rules for the weighting of the selection criteria it intends to use, it is obliged to bring them to the prior knowledge of the candidates, is the only interpretation which complies with the objective of Directive 93/37, as explained in paragraphs 88 to 92 of this judgment, since it is the only one which is apt to guarantee an appropriate level of transparency and, therefore, compliance with the principle of equal treatment in the procedures awarding contracts to which that directive applies.

100 Therefore, the answer to the fourth question referred must be that Directive 93/37 is to be interpreted as meaning that where, in the context of a restricted procedure, the contracting authority has laid down in advance the rules for weighting the criteria for selecting the candidates who will be invited to tender, it is obliged to state them in the contract notice or tender documents.

Judgment of the Court (Sixth Chamber) of 27 November 2001

Impresa Lombardini SpA - Impresa Generale di Costruzioni v ANAS - Ente nazionale per le strade and Società Italiana per Condotte d'Acqua SpA (C-285/99) and Impresa Ing. Mantovani SpA v ANAS - Ente nazionale per le strade and Ditta Paolo Bregoli (C-286/99).

Reference for a preliminary ruling: Consiglio di Stato - Italy.

Directive 93/37/EEC - Public works contracts - Award of contracts - Abnormally low tenders - Detailed rules for explanation and rejection applied in a Member State - Obligations of the awarding authority under Community law.

Joined cases C-285/99 and C-286/99.

Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 93/37 - Award of contracts - Abnormally low tenders - Automatic exclusion - Not permissible - Duty to use an examination procedure allowing the parties to be heard - Application of a mathematical criterion for identifying abnormally low tenders not revealing the exclusion threshold to the undertakings concerned before submission of their tenders - Whether permissible - Conditions - Exclusion of certain justifications - Not permissible

$$Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts must be interpreted as precluding legislation and administrative practice of a Member State which, first, allow the contracting authority to reject tenders offering a greater discount than the anomaly threshold as abnormally low, taking into account only those explanations of the prices proposed, covering at least 75% of the basic contract value mentioned in the contract notice, which tenderers were required to attach to their tender, without giving the tenderers the opportunity to argue their point of view, after the opening of the envelopes, on those elements of the prices proposed which gave rise to suspicions, and, second, require the contracting authority to take into consideration, for the purposes of examining abnormally low tenders, only explanations based on the economy of the construction method, technical solutions chosen, or exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer, but not explanations relating to all those elements for which minimum values are laid down by law, regulation or administrative provision or can be ascertained from official data.

However, provided all the requirements it imposes are otherwise complied with and the aims pursued by Directive 93/37 are not defeated, that Article 30(4) does not in principle preclude legislation and administrative practice of a Member State which, in the matter of identifying and examining abnormally low tenders, first, require all tenderers, under threat of exclusion from participation in the contract, to accompany their tender with explanations of the prices proposed, covering at least 75% of the basic value of that contract, and, second, apply a method of calculating the anomaly threshold based on the average of all the tenders received for the tender procedure in question, so that tenderers are not in a position to know that threshold at the time they lodge their file, the result produced by applying that calculation method having, however, to be capable of being reconsidered by the contracting authority.

Costs

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

87 The costs incurred by the Italian and Austrian Governments and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Sixth Chamber),

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Consiglio di Stato by orders of 26 May 1999, hereby rules:

Article 30(4) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts must be interpreted as follows:

- it precludes a Member State's legislation and administrative practice which allow the contracting authority to reject tenders offering a greater discount than the anomaly threshold as abnormally low, taking into account only those explanations of the prices proposed, covering at least 75% of the basic contract value mentioned in the contract notice, which tenderers were required to attach to their tender, without giving the tenderers the opportunity to argue their point of view, after the opening of the envelopes, on those elements of the prices proposed which gave rise to suspicions;

- it also precludes a Member State's legislation and administrative practice which require the contracting authority to take into consideration, for the purposes of examining abnormally low tenders, only explanations based on the economy of the construction method, technical solutions chosen, or exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer, but not explanations relating to all those elements for which minimum values are laid down by law, regulation or administrative provision or can be ascertained from official data;

- however, provided all the requirements it imposes are otherwise complied with and the aims pursued by Directive 93/37 are not defeated, it does not in principle preclude a Member State's legislation and administrative practice which, in the matter of identifying and examining abnormally low tenders, first, require all tenderers, under threat of exclusion from participation in the contract, to accompany their tender with explanations of the prices proposed, covering at least 75% of the basic value of that contract, and, second, apply a method of calculating the anomaly threshold based on the average of all the tenders received for the tender procedure in question, so that tenderers are not in a position to know that threshold at the time they lodge their file; the result produced by applying that calculation method must, however, be capable of being reconsidered by the contracting authority.

1 By two orders of 26 May 1999, received at the Court Registry on 30 July 1999, the Consiglio di Stato referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC five questions on the interpretation of Article 30(4) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54; the Directive).

2 The questions have been raised in two cases between the Italian companies Impresa Lombardini SpA - Impresa Generale di Costruzioni (Lombardini) (C-285/99) and Impresa Ing. Mantovani SpA (Mantovani) (C-286/99) and ANAS - Ente nazionale per le strade (National Road Agency; ANAS), the contracting authority under public law in Italy, concerning the rejection of tenders submitted by Lombardini and Mantovani in two restricted public works tendering procedures on the ground that those tenders were abnormally low.

Legal background

3 The directive was adopted on the basis of Article 57(2) of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 47(2) EC), Article 66 of the EC Treaty (now Article 55 EC) and Article 100A of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 95 EC).

4 According to the second recital in its preamble, the simultaneous attainment of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts awarded in Member States on behalf of the State, or regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law entails not only the abolition of restrictions but also the coordination of national procedures for the award of public works contracts.

5 Article 30 of the Directive, which appears in Chapter 3, headed Criteria for the award of contracts, of Title IV, headed Common rules on participation, provides:

1. The criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) either the lowest price only;

(b) or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract: e.g. price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit.

4. If, for a given contract, tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request, in writing, details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received.

The contracting authority may take into consideration explanations which are justified on objective grounds including the economy of the construction method, or the technical solution chosen, or the exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer for the execution of the work, or the originality of the work proposed by the tenderer.

If the documents relating to the contract provide for its award at the lowest price tendered, the contracting authority must communicate to the Commission the rejection of tenders which it considers to be too low.

However, until the end of 1992, if current national law so permits, the contracting authority may exceptionally, without any discrimination on grounds of nationality, reject tenders which are abnormally low in relation to the works, without being obliged to comply with the procedure provided for in the first subparagraph if the number of such tenders for a particular contract is so high that implementation of this procedure would lead to a considerable delay and jeopardise the public interest attaching to the execution of the contract in question....

National legislation

6 Article 30(4) of the directive was transposed into Italian law by Article 21(1a) of Law No 109 of 11 February 1994 (GURI No 41 of 19 February 1994, p. 5), the framework law on public works.

7 In the version as amended by Article 7 of Decree-Law No 101 of 3 April 1995 (GURI No 78 of 3 April 1995, p. 8), ratified by Law No 216 of 2 June 1995 (GURI No 127 of 2 June 1995, p. 3), that provision reads as follows:

In cases of awards of contracts for works worth ECU 5 million or more on the basis of the lowest-bid criterion mentioned in paragraph 1, the authority concerned must assess the irregularity, for the purposes of Article 30 of Council Directive 93/37 of 14 June 1993, of any tender which offers a higher discount than the percentage fixed before 1 January of each year by decree of the Minister of Public Works, after hearing the views of the Osservatorio (Monitoring Authority) for public works, having regard to the tenders admitted in the procedures held in the previous year.

To that end, the public administration may take account only of explanations based on the economy of the construction method or the technical solutions chosen, or the exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer, but not of explanations relating to all those elements for which minimum values are laid down by legislation, regulations or administrative provisions or for which minimum values can be ascertained from official data. Tenders must be accompanied, when submitted, by explanations concerning the most significant price components, indicated in the tender notices or the letters of invitation, which together add up to not less than 75% of the basic contract value.

8 By ministerial decrees of 28 April 1997 (GURI No 105 of 8 May 1997, p. 28) and 18 December 1997 (GURI No 1 of 2 January 1998, p. 26), both issued under the first subparagraph of Article 21(1a) of Law No 109/94, as amended, and determining the threshold at which tenders in tender notices were to be regarded as abnormal, the Minister of Public Works, having recognised the impossibility of setting a single threshold for the whole country and in view of the fact that the Osservatorio had not been established, decided that the percentage discount giving rise to the obligation on the contracting authority to undertake an examination of abnormal tenders would be fixed for 1997 and 1998 at a measure equal to the arithmetic mean of the discounts, in percentage terms, in the case of all tenders admitted, increased by the average arithmetic divergence of the discounts, in percentage terms, which exceed the said mean.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

9 In 1997, Lombardini took part in a restricted procedure for the award of a public works contract issued by the ANAS, with a view to carrying out works widening a section of motorway to three lanes, with a basic contract value of ITL 122 250 216 000.

10 Both the contract notice and the letter of invitation to submit tenders stated that the contract would be awarded in accordance with Article 21 of Law No 109/94, amended by Law No 216/95, the criterion to be applied being the maximum discount on the price schedule and on the cost of the rough work contracted for, and that the contracting authority would determine which tenders were to be considered as being abnormally low by applying the criterion laid down by the ministerial decree of 28 April 1997.

11 In accordance with Article 21(1a), the letter of invitation required tenderers to include with their bids explanations concerning the most significant price components equivalent to 75% of the basic contract value mentioned in the tender notice. The tender and the explanations as to its composition were, under threat of exclusion, to be drafted in accordance with the rules attached to that invitation and included in the envelope containing the administrative documentation. It was also stipulated, again under threat of exclusion, that the explanatory documentation necessary to check the soundness of the prices bid for the significant components of the contract was to be inserted into a separate sealed envelope, which was to be opened and its contents examined only in respect of tenders offering a discount higher than the arithmetical anomaly threshold. In the event that the contract was awarded to a tenderer whose bid offered such a discount, it was further provided that the price analyses and explanations produced in support of the tender were to form an integral part of the latter and were to be attached to the contract with contractual force.

12 Having fixed the anomaly threshold for the contract in question at 28.004%, in accordance with the detailed rules set out in the ministerial decree of 28 April 1997, the competent authority opened only envelopes containing the explanatory documentation in respect of those tenders offering a discount shown to be above that threshold, which included the tender by Lombardini.

13 Following the examination of that documentation, the authority declared all tenders offering a discount above that threshold inadmissible, without however giving the undertakings concerned the opportunity to submit other explanations after their tenders had been judged to be abnormally low and before the final awarding of the contract.

14 Lombardini's tender, which offered a discount of 29.88%, was thus excluded and the contract was awarded to Società Italiana per Condotte d'Acqua SpA, whose tender, offering a discount of 27.70%, was the lowest of the bids not regarded as being abnormally low.

15 Lombardini then brought an action before the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale del Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio, Italy), arguing that the Italian legislation did not comply with the requirements of the Directive inasmuch as, in order to remove any suspicion of abnormality, it was not sufficient to assess the explanations supplied on the submission of the tender, which might, moreover, concern only 75% of the basic contract price, but that, in the light of the directive, it was essential for the contracting authority then to ask the undertaking in question for details and clarifications in the context of a genuine exchange of information and argument.

16 The Administrative Court having dismissed its action by a decision of 1 July 1998, Lombardini brought the dispute before the Consiglio di Stato.

17 The Consiglio makes the point that Italian legislation and administrative practice require undertakings participating in a tender procedure, on the submission of their tenders, to provide explanations, on forms prepared for the purpose, and corresponding to at least 75% of the basic contract value, under threat of automatic exclusion from the tender, even though those operators are not able to know, at the time they submit their file and before the examination of all the tenders admitted to the procedure, the level of discount which the contracting authority will regard as abnormal. The Consiglio di Stato takes the view that resolution of the dispute requires it to be determined whether that legal situation complies with the Directive or whether, on the contrary, the Directive requires the contracting authority to exchange information and argument after the submission of the tenders, by means of an individual review in discussion with the operator concerned, without any time-limit for the provision by the latter of evidence capable of corroborating the credibility of his tender.

18 The Consiglio di Stato further questions the compatibility of the Italian legislation with Community law in so far as that legislation excludes any explanation relating to those elements for which minimum values are laid down by law, regulation or administrative provision or for which minimum values can be ascertained from official data. The provision in question might prove incompatible with Community law in so far as it risked hindering the operation of free competition and infringing the principle of finding the undertakings which submit the best tender, a principle which should be regarded as fundamental in Community law.

19 Considering that resolution of the case thus required interpretation of Community law, the Consiglio di Stato decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

1. Are clauses in calls for tenders for public works contracts which prevent the participation of undertakings which have not submitted with their tenders explanations in respect of the price indicated, being equal to at least 75% of the basic contract value, incompatible with Article 30(4) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts?

2. Is a mechanism for automatically calculating the anomaly threshold of tenders to be subjected to a check on their authenticity, based on a statistical criterion and an arithmetical mean, such that undertakings are unable to ascertain that threshold in advance, incompatible with Article

30(4) of Directive 93/37?

3. Is provision for a prior exchange of views, without the undertaking which has allegedly submitted an abnormal tender having the opportunity to state its reasons after the opening of the envelopes and before the adoption of the decision excluding that tender, incompatible with Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37?

4. Is a provision whereby the contracting authority may take account only of explanations relating to the economy of the construction method or the technical solutions adopted or the exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer incompatible with Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37?

5. Is the exclusion of explanations relating to items for which minimum figures can be ascertained from official lists incompatible with Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37?

20 In 1997, Mantovani took part in a restricted tendering procedure initiated by the ANAS for construction work on a stretch of country road. That contract notice indicated that the contract would be awarded to the tendering undertaking which allowed the largest discount in relation to the basic contract value, amounting to ITL 15 720 000 000.

21 The anomaly threshold having been fixed at 40.865%, Mantovani's tender, which involved a discount of 41.460%, above that threshold, was excluded for reasons similar to those which led to the exclusion of Lombardini's tender in Case C-285/99.

22 The works were awarded to the undertaking Paolo Bregoli, whose tender was the lowest amongst those not regarded as abnormally low.

23 Mantovani's action before the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale del Lazio was dismissed by a decision of 26 June 1998.

24 Mantovani having brought the dispute before the Consiglio di Stato, the latter, basing its argument on considerations similar to those set out in connection with Case C-285/99, decided to stay proceedings and refer five questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling, worded identically with those in Case C-285/99.

25 Coopsette Soc. coop. arl has been given leave to intervene in the main proceedings in support of Mantovani.

26 By Order of the President of the Court of Justice of 14 September 1999, Cases C-285/99 and C-286/99 were joined for the purposes of the written and oral procedure and the judgment.

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

27 It must be borne in mind at the outset that, although the Court may not, under Article 234 EC, rule upon the compatibility of a provision of domestic law with Community law or interpret domestic legislation or regulations, it may nevertheless provide the national court with an interpretation of Community law on all such points as may enable that court to determine the issue of compatibility for the purposes of the case before it (see, for example, Case C-292/92 Hünermund and Others [1993] ECR I-6787, paragraph 8; Case C-28/99 Verdonck and Others [2001] ECR I-3399, paragraph 28; Case C-399/98 Ordine degli Architetti and Others [2001] ECR I-5409, paragraph 48).

28 In those circumstances, the questions referred, which it will be convenient to examine together, should be understood as asking essentially whether Article 30(4) of the Directive is to be interpreted as precluding legislation and administrative practice of a Member State which:

- first, allow the contracting authority to reject as abnormally low tenders offering a discount exceeding the anomaly threshold - calculated in accordance with a mathematical formula by reference to the whole of the tenders received for the procedure in question, so that tenderers are not in a position to know that threshold at the time they lodge their file -, where that authority makes its decision taking account only of explanations of the proposed prices, relating to at least 75% of the basic contract value referred to in the contract notice, which the tenderers were required, under threat of being excluded from participation, to attach to their tender, without giving them the opportunity to express their point of view, after the opening of the envelopes, concerning the elements of the prices proposed which gave rise to suspicions, and

- second, require the contracting authority to take into consideration, for the purposes of checking abnormally low tenders, only explanations based on the economy of the construction method, technical solutions chosen, or exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer, but not explanations relating to all those elements for which minimum values are laid down by law, regulation or administrative provision or can be ascertained from official data.

29 The orders for reference and the documents before the court show that, under the legislation and administrative practice applicable in the main proceedings in the two cases, every tender had to be accompanied, at the time of submission, by explanations of the most significant price components representing at least 75% of the basic value of the contract in question. That information had to be submitted in a separate sealed envelope, the contents of which were to be examined only if the tender of the undertaking concerned offered a discount exceeding the anomaly threshold, which is fixed for each contract by reference to all the bids made by the tenderers, so that the latter do not know that threshold at the time they submit their file.

30 The facts show that the contracting authority sets aside as abnormally low those tenders offering a discount greater than the anomaly threshold so calculated, and systematically awards the contract to the undertaking whose tender is the lowest amongst the other tenders. The exclusion of abnormally low tenders and the award of the contract take place solely on the basis of an assessment by the competent authority of the explanations submitted at the same time as the tenders themselves and relating to only 75% of the basic contract value, without that authority asking the undertakings concerned for further details and without the latter having the possibility of supplying other explanations after their tender has been suspected of being abnormal.

31 The relevant national legislation further provides, first, that the contracting authority may take into account only explanations based on the economy of the construction method, technical solutions chosen, or exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer, while, secondly, precluding the contracting authority from basing its decision on explanations relating to any element for which a minimum values is laid down by law, regulation or administrative provision or which can be ascertained from official data.

32 It is in the light of those legal and factual characteristics that the Court must answer the questions referred for a preliminary ruling, as reformulated in paragraph 28 of this judgment.

The detailed rules for identifying, verifying and excluding abnormally low tenders

33 As regards this first aspect of the questions referred, the title of the Directive and the second recital in its preamble show that its aim is simply to coordinate national procedures for the award of public works contracts, although it does not lay down a complete system of Community rules on the matter.

34 The Directive nevertheless aims, as is clear from its preamble and second and tenth recitals, to abolish restrictions on the freedom of establishment and on the freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts in order to open up such contracts to genuine competition between entrepreneurs in the Member States (Ordine degli Architetti, paragraph 52).

35 The primary aim of the Directive is thus to open up public works contracts to competition. It is exposure to Community competition in accordance with the procedures provided for by the Directive which avoids the risk of the public authorities indulging in favouritism (Ordine degli Architetti, paragraph 75).

36 The coordination at Community level of procedures for the award of public works contracts is thus essentially aimed at protecting the interests of traders established in a Member State who wish to offer goods or services to contracting authorities established in another Member State and, to that end, to avoid both the risk of preference being given to national tenderers or applicants whenever a contract is awarded by the contracting authorities and the possibility that a body governed by public law may choose to be guided by considerations other than economic ones (see, to that effect Case C-380/98 University of Cambridge [2000] ECR I-8035, paragraphs 16 and 17; Case C-237/99 Commission v France [2001] ECR I-939, paragraphs 41 and 42).

37 The contracting authority is therefore required to comply with the principle that tenderers should be treated equally, as indeed is expressly shown by Article 22(4), the fourth subparagraph of Article 30(4) and Article 31(1) of the Directive.

38 In addition, the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality implies, in particular, an obligation of transparency in order to allow the contracting authority to ensure that it has been complied with [see, by analogy, in relation to Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), Case C-275/98 Unitron Scandinavia and 3-S [1999] ECR I-8291, paragraph 31].

39 It is in that perspective that, as the twelfth recital in its preamble shows, the Directive provides common rules for participation in public works contracts, including both qualitative selection criteria and criteria for the award of the contract.

40 More particularly concerning those criteria for the award of the contract, these are defined in particular in Article 30 of the Directive.

41 As the first recital in its preamble shows, the Directive constitutes a consolidation of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971(II), p. 682) and subsequent amendments thereto. As the Court has already held in paragraph 13 of its judgment in Case C-304/96 Hera [1997] ECR I-5685), Article 30(4) of the Directive corresponds to Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305, as amended by Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989 (OJ 1989 L 210, p. 1).

42 In its initial version, Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305 was worded as follows:

If, for a given contract, tenders are obviously abnormally low in relation to the transaction, the authority awarding contracts shall examine the details of the tenders before deciding to whom it will award the contract. The result of this examination shall be taken into account.

For this purpose it shall request the tenderer to furnish the necessary explanations and, where appropriate, it shall indicate which parts it finds unacceptable.

43 The Court has already held that when, in the opinion of the authority awarding a public works contract, a tenderer's offer is obviously abnormally low in relation to the transaction, Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305 requires the authority to seek from the tenderer, before coming to a decision as to the award of the contract, an explanation of his prices or to inform the tenderer which of his tenders appear to be abnormal and to allow him a reasonable time within which to submit further details (Case 76/81 Transporoute [1982] ECR 417, paragraph 18).

44 In paragraph 17 of that judgment, the Court held that the contracting authority may not in any circumstances reject an abnormally low tender without even seeking an explanation from the tenderer, since the aim of Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305, which is to protect tenderers against arbitrariness on the part of the authority awarding contracts, could not be achieved if it were left to that authority to judge whether or not it was appropriate to seek explanations.

45 Similarly, the Court has consistently held that Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305 prohibits Member States from introducing provisions which require the automatic exclusion from procedures for the award of public works contracts of certain tenders determined according to a mathematical criterion, instead of obliging the awarding authority to apply the examination procedure laid down in the Directive (Case 103/88 Fratelli Costanzo [1989] ECR 1839, paragraphs 19 and 21; Case C-295/89 Donà Alfonso [1991] ECR I-2967 (Summary publication), paragraphs 1 and 2 of the operative part).

46 The Court thus held that Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305 requires the awarding authority to examine the details of tenders which are obviously abnormally low, and for that purpose obliges it to request the tenderer to furnish the necessary explanations (Fratelli Costanzo, paragraph 16).

47 According to the Court, a mathematical criterion in accordance with which tenders which exceeded the basic value fixed for the price of the work by a percentage more than 10 points below the average percentage by which the tenders admitted exceeded that amount would be considered anomalous and consequently eliminated, deprives tenderers who have submitted particularly low tenders of the opportunity to demonstrate that those tenders are genuine ones, so that application of such a criterion is contrary to the aim of Directive 71/305, namely to promote the development of effective competition in the field of public contracts (Fratelli Costanzo, paragraph 18).

48 The Court also observed that it was in order to enable tenderers submitting exceptionally low tenders to demonstrate that those tenders were genuine ones, and thus to ensure the opening up of public works contracts, that the Council, in Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305, laid down a precise, detailed procedure for the examination of tenders which appear to be abnormally low, and that that aim would be jeopardised if Member States were able, when implementing that provision, to depart from it to any material extent (Fratelli Costanzo, paragraph 20).

49 It added, finally, that the examination procedure under Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305 had to be applied whenever the awarding authority was contemplating the elimination of tenders because they were abnormally low in relation to the transaction, so that tenderers could be sure that they would not be disqualified from the award of the contract without first having the opportunity of furnishing explanations regarding the genuine nature of their tenders (Fratelli Costanzo, paragraph 26).

50 Since the requirements laid down by both the initial and the amended version of Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305 are in substance identical to those imposed by Article 30(4) of the Directive, the foregoing considerations apply equally in relation to the interpretation of the latter provision.

51 In consequence, Article 30(4) of the Directive necessarily presupposes the application of an inter partes a procedure for examining tenders regarded by the contracting authority as abnormally low, placing the latter under an obligation, after it has inspected all the tenders and before awarding the contract, first to ask in writing for details of the elements in the tender suspected of anomaly which gave rise to doubts on its part in the particular case and then to assess that tender in the light of the explanations provided by the tenderer concerned in response to that request.

52 Apart from the fact that, under the legislation and administrative practice applicable in the main proceedings, the tendering undertakings are required at the time they submit their file to provide explanations in respect of only 75% of the value of the contract, whereas it is necessary for them to be able to prove the genuine nature of their tender in respect of all its constituent elements, such prior explanations are not in any event in accordance with the spirit of the inter partes examination procedure established by Article 30(4) of the Directive.

53 It is essential that each tenderer suspected of submitting an abnormally low tender should have the opportunity effectively to state his point of view in that respect, giving him the opportunity to supply all explanations as to the various elements of his tender at a time - necessarily after the opening of all the envelopes - when he is aware not only of the anomaly threshold applicable to the contract in question and of the fact that his tender has appeared abnormally low, but also of the precise points which have raised questions on the part of the contracting authority.

54 The above interpretation is, moreover, the only one which complies with both the wording and the purpose of Article 30(4) of the Directive.

55 It is apparent from the very wording of that provision, drafted in imperative terms, that the contracting authority is under a duty, first, to identify suspect tenders, secondly to allow the undertakings concerned to demonstrate their genuineness by asking them to provide the details which it considers appropriate, thirdly to assess the merits of the explanations provided by the persons concerned, and, fourthly, to take a decision as to whether to admit or reject those tenders. It is therefore not possible to regard the requirements inherent in the inter partes nature of the procedure for examining abnormally low tenders, within the meaning of Article 30(4) of the Directive, as having been complied with unless all the steps thus described have been successively accomplished.

56 Moreover, it is only subject to strict conditions laid down in the fourth subparagraph of Article 30(4) that the Directive allows the contracting authority to dispense with that inter partes procedure for examining abnormally low offers. Here there is no dispute that, in both sets of main proceedings, that derogatory provision is inapplicable ratione temporis.

57 Furthermore, the existence of a proper exchange of views, at an appropriate time in the procedure for examining tenders, between the contracting authority and the tenderer constitutes a fundamental requirement of the Directive, in order to prevent the contracting authority from acting in an arbitrary manner and to ensure healthy competition between undertakings.

58 Having regard to the foregoing considerations, it must be held that Article 30(4) of the Directive precludes legislation and administrative practice, such as that applicable in the cases referred, which allow the contracting authority to exclude a tender as abnormally low solely on the basis of explanations of the most significant price components, produced at the same time as the tender itself, without carrying out any inter partes examination of the suspect tenders by requesting clarification on points of doubt emerging on first examination and giving the undertakings concerned the opportunity to put forward their arguments in that regard before the final decision is taken.

59 In the tendering procedures at issue in the main proceedings, at the time when the tenderer submits his tender, which must be accompanied by explanations covering 75% of the basic contract value mentioned in the contract notice, he is not aware of the precise aspects of his tender which will be suspected of being abnormal, so that, at that stage of the procedure, he is not in a position to supply useful and complete explanations in support of the various elements constituting his tender.

60 The national court also asks whether Article 30(4) of the Directive similarly precludes legislative provisions and administrative practice of a Member State, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, whereby, first, tenderers are required, under threat of being excluded from participation in the contract, to accompany their tender with price explanations, covering at least 75% of the basic value of that contract, using forms designed for the purpose and, second, the anomaly threshold for tenders is calculated, in respect of each contract, on the basis of a mathematical formula which is a function of all the tenders actually lodged in the tendering procedure in question.

61 It should be noted that the Directive does not contain specific requirements in the matter.

62 More particularly concerning the first of the rules on matters of detail referred to in paragraph 60 of this judgment, this appears to be a requirement which affects all tenderers without distinction and appears to be intended to ensure a certain uniformity in the presentation of tenders, likely to facilitate an initial examination by the contracting authority and to allow a prima facie assessment to be made of the seriousness of the tender. It may indeed happen that, on the basis of those explanations alone, the contracting authority becomes convinced that, although the tender appears abnormally low, it is serious and the authority therefore accepts it. In that way, this rule contributes to accelerating the procedure for verifying tenders.

63 It is true that, as the Commission has rightly pointed out, a national procedure for awarding public works contracts would be incompatible with the requirements of Article 30(4) of the Directive if it did not ensure that the inter partes examination of abnormally low tenders required by that provision took place.

64 That would in particular be the case, as has already been held in paragraphs 58 and 59 of this judgment, if the contracting authority rejected a tender as abnormally low basing its argument solely on the explanations submitted at the time the tender was lodged, without carrying out inter partes examination required by the Directive, after the opening of the envelopes and before the final decision.

65 However, such a defect would originate not in the obligation itself to submit certain explanations together with the lodging of the tender, but rather in the disregard of the requirements of the Directive at a subsequent stage of the procedure for examining abnormally low tenders.

66 Article 30(4) of the Directive does not therefore preclude a requirement to provide explanation in advance, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, taken in isolation, provided that all the requirements arising from that provision are otherwise complied with by the contracting authorities.

67 As regards the second rule referred to in paragraph 60 of this judgment, it is undisputed that the Directive does not define the concept of an abnormally low tender and, a fortiori, does not determine the method of calculating an anomaly threshold. That is therefore a task for the individual Member States.

68 As for the anomaly threshold applied in the cases in the main proceedings, this results from a calculation carried out for each contract notice and is based essentially on the average of the tenders submitted for that contract.

69 Such a method of calculation appears at first sight to be objective and non-discriminatory.

70 The mere fact, cited by some of the tenderers involved in the main proceedings, that the anomaly threshold is not known to the undertakings at the time when they make their tender - since it is not determined until all the tenders have been submitted - is in any event not capable of affecting its compatibility with the Directive. At that stage of the procedure, all the tenderers, like the contracting authority itself, are unaware of what that threshold will be.

71 Some of the tenderers involved in the main proceedings have, however, argued that a method for calculating the anomaly threshold based on the average of the tenders for a given contract risks being falsified by tenders not corresponding to a genuine wish to contract but merely seeking to influence the result of that calculation. Competition might also be distorted, with tenderers seeking to submit not the best tender possible but that which, particularly on the basis of statistical criteria, stood the best probability of being the first amongst the non-suspect tenders, to which the contract is automatically awarded.

72 It is true that the result reached by a method for calculating the anomaly threshold based on the average of tenders may be significantly influenced by practices such as those described in the previous paragraph, which would be contrary to the aims of the Directive, as defined in paragraphs 34 to 36 of this judgment. That is why, for the effectiveness of the Directive to be fully preserved, that result must not be beyond challenge and must be capable of being reconsidered by the contracting authority should that prove necessary having regard in particular to the level of the anomaly threshold for tenders applied in comparable contracts and to the lessons derived from common experience.

73 It follows that, although, as stated in paragraphs 45 and 47 of this judgment, it is settled case-law that Community law precludes the automatic exclusion from public works contracts of certain tenders determined in accordance with a mathematical criterion, Community law does not in principle preclude a mathematical criterion, such as the anomaly threshold applied in the cases referred, from being used for the purposes of determining which tenders appear to be abnormally low, so long as the result to which application of that criterion leads is not beyond challenge, and the requirement for inter partes examination of those tenders in accordance with Article 30(4) of the Directive is complied with.

74 Some of the tenderers involved in the main proceedings have also argued, without having their allegations credibly refuted by the Italian government, that the two rules of Italian tendering procedure referred to in paragraph 60 of this judgment cannot be examined in isolation, given that the various aspects of that procedure are indissolubly interlinked.

75 They have argued in particular that the condition concerning the provision of explanations at the time of submission of the tender itself finds its justification only in the fact that the contracting authority takes its decision on the acceptance or rejection of the tender on the basis of those explanations alone, without allowing the undertakings to provide fuller explanations later. Moreover, they argue that that condition does not apply to the tenderers without distinction, in that only the envelopes of undertakings whose tenders appear abnormally low are opened, so that a tenderer not suspected of making an anomalous bid could be awarded the contract even if he submitted, as explanations, an envelope containing nothing at all. Finally, a distortion of competition between undertakings might result, because the obligation to accompany the tender with voluminous explanatory documentation entails for tenderers offering a particularly advantageous price not only a heavier administrative burden but also the inconvenience of having first to reveal information which might be confidential, and because it places undertakings from other Member States at a disadvantage in any event.

76 As regards those assertions, it is sufficient to observe that, whilst all the requirements imposed by Community law must unquestionably be complied with in the context of the various aspects of the national procedures for awarding public works contracts, which must moreover be applied in such a manner as to ensure compliance with the principles of free competition and equal treatment of tenderers and the obligation of transparency, the fact remains that the Court of Justice is not in a position to rule on those assertions.

77 To determine whether they are well founded requires findings and assessments of fact and an interpretation of domestic law which falls within the sole jurisdiction of the national court. The principles of interpretation concerning the scope of Article 30(4) of the Directive and the spirit and purpose of the latter, set out in paragraphs 34 to 40 of this judgment, provide that court with all the guidance necessary to enable it to assess the compatibility of the national provisions in question with Community law for the purposes of judging the cases before it.

The taking into account of explanations for abnormally low tenders

78 In relation to the second aspect of the questions referred, as reformulated in paragraph 28

of this judgment, it should be pointed out that, in the words of the second subparagraph of Article 30(4) of the Directive, the contracting authority may take into consideration explanations relating to the economy of the construction method, the technical solutions chosen, the exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer for the execution of the work, or the originality of the work proposed by the tenderer.

79 As is apparent from its very wording, that provision simply gives the contracting authority the possibility of basing its decision on certain types of objective explanation of the price proposed by a given tenderer, and does not impose upon it any obligation to do so.

80 Put back into its context, that provision is designed only to add further precision to the rule set out in the first subparagraph of Article 30(4) of the Directive, whereby the contracting authority is to request from the tenderer concerned details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received.

81 In that respect, the Court has already underlined, in paragraphs 51 to 59 of this judgment, the importance of the principle whereby, before the contracting authority can reject a tender as abnormally low, the tenderer must have a proper opportunity, in an inter partes procedure, to put forward his point of view on each of the various price components proposed.

82 Since, with a view to the development of effective competition in the area of public contracts, it is essential for that opportunity to be as full and as wide as possible, the tenderer must be able to submit in support of his tender all the explanations, and in particular those set out in the second subparagraph of Article 30(4) of the Directive, which, bearing in mind the nature and characteristics of the contract in question, he considers appropriate, without any limitation in that respect. The contracting authority is required to take into consideration all the explanations put forward by the undertaking before adopting its decision whether to accept or reject the tender in question.

83 It follows that, having regard to both its wording and its purpose, the second subparagraph of Article 30(4) of the Directive does not establish an exhaustive catalogue of explanations that are capable of being submitted, but merely gives examples of explanations which the tenderer may provide in order to demonstrate the genuineness of the various price elements proposed. A fortiori, the provision in question does not authorise the exclusion of certain types of explanation.

84 As the Austrian Government and the Commission have argued in their observations, and the Advocate General has emphasised in paragraphs 50 and 51 of his Opinion, any limitation in that regard would clearly contradict the Directive's aim of facilitating the operation of free competition between the tenderers as a whole. Such a limitation would involve the outright exclusion of tenders explained by considerations other than those allowed by the applicable national legislation, despite a price which may be more advantageous.

85 It follows that Article 30(4) of the Directive precludes national legislation, such as that applicable in the main proceedings, which, first, requires the contracting authority, for the purposes of verifying abnormally low tenders, to take into account only certain explanations exhaustively listed, that listing omitting moreover explanations relating to the originality of the tenderer's proposed works, even though such explanations are expressly referred to in the second subparagraph of the above provision, and, second, expressly excludes certain types of explanation, such as those relating to any elements for which minimum values are laid down by law, regulation or administrative provision or for which minimum values can be ascertained from official data.

86 In view of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the questions referred must be that Article 30(4) of the Directive is to be interpreted as follows:

- it precludes a Member State's legislation and administrative practice which allow the contracting authority to reject tenders offering a greater discount than the anomaly threshold as abnormally low, taking into account only those explanations of the prices proposed, covering at least 75% of the basic contract value mentioned in the contract notice, which tenderers were required to attach to their tender, without giving the tenderers the opportunity to argue their point of view, after the opening of the envelopes, on those elements of the prices proposed which gave rise to suspicions;

- it precludes a Member State's legislation and administrative practice which require the contracting authority to take into consideration, for the purposes of examining abnormally low tenders, only explanations based on the economy of the construction method, technical solutions chosen, or exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer, but not explanations relating to all those elements for which minimum values are laid down by law, regulation or administrative provision or can be ascertained from official data;

- however, provided all the requirements it imposes are otherwise complied with and the aims pursued by the Directive are not defeated, it does not in principle preclude a Member State's legislation and administrative practice which, in the matter of identifying and examining abnormally low tenders, first, require all tenderers, under threat of exclusion from participation in the contract, to accompany their tender with explanations of the prices proposed, covering at least 75% of the basic value of that contract, and, second, apply a method of calculating the anomaly threshold based on the average of all the tenders received for the tender procedure in question, so that tenderers are not in a position to know that threshold at the time they lodge their file; the result produced by applying that calculation method must, however, be capable of being reconsidered by the contracting authority.

Judgment of the Court (Fifth Chamber)
of 1 February 2001
Commission of the European Communities v French Republic.
Failure by a Member State to fulfil obligations - Directive 93/37/EEC - Public works contracts - Concept of 'contracting authority'.
Case C-237/99.

Approximation of laws Procedures for the award of public works contracts Directive 93/37 Contracting authorities Body governed by public law Definition Low-rent housing corporations Included Conditions

(Council Directive 93/37, Art. 1(b))

$$Under Article 1(b), second subparagraph, of Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, a body governed by public law means a body established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, which has legal personality and is closely dependent on the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law. With regard to that third condition characterising a body governed by public law, contained in the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive, since management supervision constitutes one of the three criteria referred to in that provision, it must give rise to dependence on the public authorities equivalent to that which exists where one of the other alternative criteria is fulfilled, namely where the body in question is financed, for the most part, by the public authorities or where the latter appoint more than half of the members of the managerial organs of the body.

Consequently, low-rent housing corporations which meet needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, which have legal personality and whose management is subject to supervision by the public authorities which allows the latter to influence their decisions in relation to public contracts, fulfil the three cumulative conditions which characterise a body governed by public law within the meaning of Directive 93/37 and are contracting authorities.

Judgment

Costs

63 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission has applied for costs and the French Republic has been unsuccessful, the latter must be ordered to pay the costs. The United Kingdom, which has intervened in the proceedings, must bear its own costs, pursuant to Article 69(4) of the Rules of Procedure.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Fifth Chamber)

1. Declares that, since the public management and construction entities of Val-de-Marne and Paris and the low-rent housing corporation Logirel did not publish contract notices in the Official Journal of the European Communities concerning the public contracts announced by notices in the Bulletin Officiel des Annonces des Marchés Publics of 7 and 16 February 1995 and the Moniteur des Travaux Publics et du Bâtiment of 17 February 1995, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, in particular Article 11(2) thereof;

2. Orders the French Republic to pay the costs;

3. Orders the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to bear its own costs.

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 24 June 1999, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 226 EC for a declaration that, in the context of various procedures for the award of public works contracts for the construction of housing organised by offices publics d'aménagement et de construction (public development and construction entities, hereinafter OPACs) and by sociétés anonymes d'habitations à loyer modéré (low-rent housing corporations, hereinafter SA HLMs), the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54, hereinafter the Directive), in particular Article 11(2) thereof.

Community legislation

2 The Directive provides in Article 1(b):

> "contracting authorities" shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

A "body governed by public law" means any body:

established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

having legal personality, and

financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law;

The lists of bodies and categories of bodies governed by public law which fulfil the criteria referred to in the second subparagraph are set out in Annex I. These lists shall be as exhaustive as possible and may be reviewed in accordance with the procedure laid down in Article 35. To this end, Member States shall periodically notify the Commission of any changes of their lists of bodies and categories of bodies.

3 Article 11(2) of the Directive provides:

Contracting authorities who wish to award a public works contract by open, restricted or negotiated procedure referred to in Article 7(2), shall make known their intention by means of a notice.

National legislation

4 The relevant provisions of French law are to be found in Book IV of the Construction and Housing Code (hereinafter the Code). According to Article L. 411-1, those provisions are designed to determine the rules applicable to the construction, acquisition, development, improvement, repair and management of collective or individual housing, whether urban or rural, which satisfies the technical characteristics and those relating to cost price determined by administrative decision and are intended for persons and families of modest means.

5 According to Article L. 411-2 of the Code, low-rent housing bodies consist of:

public development and construction entities;

public low-rent housing entities;

low-rent housing corporations;

low-rent housing cooperatives;

mortgage corporations;

low-rent housing foundations.

6 Article L. 421-1 of the Code defines OPACs as public industrial or commercial establishments.

7 According to Article L. 422-2 of the Code, SA HLMs are intended to carry out, under the conditions determined by their statutes and primarily with a view to making rented housing available, the operations set out in Article L. 411-1 of the Code.

8 Article L. 451-1 of the Code provides that low-rent housing bodies are to be subject to supervision by the administration. According to Article R. 451-1 of the Code, that supervision is to be carried out by the Minister responsible for finance and the Minister responsible for construction and housing.

9 Article L. 451-2 of the Code states that the officials responsible for supervising those bodies may, in the exclusive interest of performing their supervisory duties, consult any accounts, copy letters and documents relating to income and expenditure at the premises of the architects or developers who have dealt with bodies subject to that supervision.

10 Article L. 422-7 of the Code states:

In the event of serious irregularities, gross mismanagement or failure to act on the part of the administrative board, or of the managerial board and the supervisory board, of a low-rent housing corporation or mortgage corporation, the Minister responsible for construction and housing may, after hearing the observations of the corporation or after the latter has been duly invited to submit its observations, order that it be wound up and appoint a liquidator.

11 According to Article L. 422-8 of the Code, the Minister responsible for housing may in such cases merely suspend the managerial organs and appoint a provisional administrator, to whom all the powers of the managerial organs to continue the operations in progress are automatically transferred.

12 The first paragraph of Article L. 423-1 of the Code provides:

Any low-rent housing body which manages fewer than 1 500 housing units and has not built at least 500 housing units or granted 300 loans over a 10-year period may be dissolved and a liquidator appointed by decree of the Minister responsible for construction and housing or, in the case of a public low-rent housing entity or a public development and construction entity, by decree adopted jointly by that Minister and the Minister of the Interior.

13 Article L. 423-2 of the Code provides:

Any low-rent housing body which manages more than 50 000 housing units may be given formal notice, by decree of the Minister responsible for construction and housing, to transfer all or part of the housing units in excess of that number to one or more bodies designated by name.

14 By Decree No 93-236 of 22 February 1993 (JORF, 24 February 1993, p. 2941), an interministerial task force for the inspection of social housing was set up. Article 3 of that decree provides:

The task force shall be responsible for supervising natural or legal persons involved in social housing.

It shall carry out documentary and on-the-spot inspections of operations relating to the construction, acquisition or improvement of housing in respect of which financial assistance has been provided by the State or State-controlled funds have been used, or which form the subject-matter of an agreement with the State or are supported by tax-exempt resources.

It may be instructed by the Ministers to whom it is responsible to carry out checks and inquiries and also studies, audits or assessments in the field of social housing.

It shall draw up proposals as to the action to be taken following its inspection reports and shall ensure that the persons concerned by its inspections implement the measures taken by the Ministers to whom it is responsible.

The task force shall provide support to the decentralised departments of the ministries responsible for the economy, finance and budget and materials, when those departments so request.

Pre-litigation procedure

15 On 7 December 1995, the Commission sent the French authorities a formal letter, in which it questioned the compatibility with Community law of the procedures for the award of public works contracts by various low-rent housing management bodies.

16 More specifically, the Commission referred to an open call for tenders published in the Bulletin Officiel des Annonces des Marchés Publics of 7 February 1995 by the Val-de-Marne OPAC, to a limited call for tenders which SA HLM Logirel, established in Lyons (France), had published in the Moniteur des Travaux Publics et du Bâtiment of 17 February 1995 and to a notice of negotiated contracts which the Paris OPAC had published in the Bulletin Officiel des Annonces des Marchés Publics of 16 February 1995.

17 The Commission pointed out that the bodies in question had not published those notices in the Official Journal of the European Communities, contrary to the requirements of Article 11(2) of the Directive.

18 In reply, the French authorities maintained that the bodies in question were not contracting authorities within the meaning of the Directive.

19 The Commission was not satisfied with that reply and, in the light of the consistent practice of the bodies in question of not publishing notices of contracts in the Official Journal of the European Communities, it sent a reasoned opinion to the French Republic on 10 August 1998, stating that the French Republic had failed to fulfil its obligations under the Directive.

20 Since in its letter in reply to the reasoned opinion the French Republic merely reiterated the arguments already put forward in response to the formal letter, the Commission brought the present action.

Subject-matter of the action

21 The Commission requests the Court to declare that, in the context of various procedures for the award of public supply contracts for the construction of housing organised by OPACs and SA HLMs, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Directive.

22 However, the present action originates in three very specific award procedures, organised by the Paris and Val-de-Marne OPACs and by SA HLM Logirel. It is failure to comply with the Directive in relation to those three awards of public contracts that has formed the substance of the charge against the French Republic throughout the pre-litigation procedure.

23 It is true that the Commission stated in the reasoned opinion that it also criticised the French Republic for not having adopted a general measure in order to ensure compliance with Community law in relation to procedures for the award of public supply contracts organised by OPACs and SA HLMs. However, that complaint was not reproduced in the application to the Court.

24 The subject-matter of the present action should therefore be considered as confined to the three award procedures expressly referred to by the Commission in its application.

Substance

Arguments of the parties

25 As regards the application of the Directive to OPACs, the Commission refers first of all to Articles L. 411-1 and L. 421-1 of the Code in order to demonstrate that those provisions were adopted for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character. Next, it observes that OPACs have legal personality. Last, the Commission maintains, in particular, that it is clear from the composition of the administrative boards of the OPACs that the public authorities play a predominant role therein.

26 The Commission infers that OPACs thus fulfil the three conditions characteristic of a body governed by public law set out in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive.

27 The Commission concludes that, in those circumstances, the OPACs should have complied with the obligation laid down in Article 11(2) of the Directive to publish the contract notices in question in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

28 As regards the application of the Directive to SA HLMs, the Commission refers to the conditions laid down in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive and infers from Articles L. 411-1 and L. 422-2 of the Code that those bodies also meet needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character. Furthermore, they have legal personality.

29 As regards the third condition characteristic of a body governed by public law, the Commission observes that it consists of three alternative criteria. It contends that the criterion in respect of management supervision by the public authorities is satisfied. It refers in that regard to Articles L. 451-2 and R. 451-1 of the Code, which provide that SA HLMs are to be subject to State supervision. That supervision is explained in Articles L. 422-7 and L. 422-8 of the Code.

30 The Commission also refers to Articles L. 423-1 and L. 423-2 of the Code, and also to the standard clauses which must be included in the statutes of SA HLMs pursuant to Article R. 422-1 of the Code, which provides, in particular, that all accounting documents and reports presented at shareholders' meetings and the minutes thereof are to be submitted to the public authorities.

31 The Commission further claims that the interministerial task committee for the inspection of social housing set up by Decree No 93-236 also has extensive supervisory powers.

32 The French Government does not dispute that the OPACs and SA HLMs referred to in the action would have been required to comply with the obligation to publish contract notices laid down in the Directive if they had to be regarded as bodies governed by public law.

33 In the light of the judgments in Case C-44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others v Strohal Rotationsdruck [1998] ECR I-73 and Case C-360/96 Arnhem and Rheden v BFI Holding [1998] ECR I-6821, the French Government now also agrees with the Commission's conclusion that OPACs are bodies governed by public law.

34 However, while it accepts that SA HLMs satisfy the first two parts of the definition of a body governed by public law in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive, the French Government contends that they do not meet any of the three alternative criteria in the third part of that definition.

35 As regards, in particular, management supervision, the French Government claims that the supervision exercised by the public authorities in the present case corresponds to supervision of an administrative nature and not to management or investment supervision. The State has no influence on decisions concerning the proper functioning of SA HLMs. The French Government maintains that Article L. 422-7 of the Code can apply only in exceptional circumstances and that it cannot be inferred from that provision that the management of those corporations is subject to supervision by the public authorities on a regular and consistent basis. It claims that Article L. 422-8 of the Code also concerns exceptional circumstances: first, an administrator can be appointed only in the event of serious irregularities or gross mismanagement and, second, such an appointment is envisaged as being only pro tempore.

36 The French Government also claims that the supervision provided for in Articles L. 451-2 and R. 451-1 of the Code consists in checking the accounts of the bodies concerned. In practice, those provisions are more in the nature of a threat constantly hanging over the bodies which are liable to be visited than management supervision in the strict sense, resulting in decisions as to the choice of strategy or investment. Those provisions do not provide a means of exerting significant influence on the management of the bodies in question and the measures referred to therein are of no practical importance.

37 The French Government further maintains in its rejoinder that the supervision exercised pursuant to Decree No 93-236 takes the form of an inspection visit of an administrative nature, which ensures that the rules are observed, that the funds used by SA HLMs are applied in a transparent manner and that the Minister responsible for construction and housing is kept duly informed.

38 The United Kingdom, which was granted leave by order of the President of the Court of Justice of 26 January 2000 to intervene in the present proceedings in support of the form of order sought by the French Republic, also argues that management supervision covers neither mere verification of legality or of the appropriate use of funds nor exceptional measures capable of being taken vis-à-vis a specific body.

39 Since the present proceedings concern the possible classification of various bodies as bodies governed by public law within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive, it should be pointed out that, according to that provision, a body governed by public law means a body established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, which has legal personality and is closely dependent on the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law (see Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria, cited above, paragraph 20).

40 Furthermore, the three conditions set out in that provision are cumulative (Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria, cited above, paragraph 21).

41 As far as the purpose of the Directive is concerned, moreover, the Court has held that the purpose of coordinating at Community level the procedures for the award of public contracts is to eliminate barriers to the freedom to provide services and goods and therefore to protect the interests of traders established in a Member State who wish to offer goods or services to contracting authorities established in another Member State (see, most recently, Case C-380/98 The Queen v H.M. Treasury, ex parte University of Cambridge [2000] ECR I-8035, paragraph 16).

42 Consequently, the aim of the Directive is to avoid both the risk of preference being given to national tenderers or applicants whenever a contract is awarded by the contracting authorities and the possibility that a body financed or controlled by the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law may choose to be guided by considerations other than economic ones (University of Cambridge, paragraph 17).

43 It is in the light of those objectives that contracting authority, including a body governed by public law, must be interpreted in functional terms (see, to that effect, most recently, Case C-353/96 Commission v Ireland [1998] ECR I-8565, paragraph 36).

44 As regards the alternative conditions set out in the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive, each reflects the close dependency of a body on the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law (University of Cambridge, paragraph 20).

45 In the light of that case-law, it must be held, as regards OPACs, that it actually follows from the rules relating to them, as described by the Commission, whose arguments, moreover, have not been contradicted on that point by the French Government, that they fulfilled the thee conditions that characterise a body governed by public law set out in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive.

46 It follows that the action is well founded in that the charge against the French Republic is that the two OPACs expressly referred to did not comply with the obligation to publish the notices of contract in the Official Journal of the European Communities laid down in Article 11(2) of the Directive.

47 As regards SA HLMs, it is common ground, and it is not disputed by the French Government, that they meet needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and that they have legal personality.

48 As regards the third condition that characterises a body governed by public law, it is necessary to consider whether the various controls to which SA HLMs are subject render them dependent on the public authorities in such a way that the latter are able to influence their decisions in relation to public contracts.

49 As the Advocate General has observed at point 48 of his Opinion, since management supervision within the meaning of the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive constitutes one of the three criteria referred to in that provision, it must give rise to dependence on the public authorities equivalent to that which exists where one of the other alternative criteria is fulfilled, namely where the body in question is financed, for the most part, by the public authorities or where the latter appoint more than half of the members of its managerial organs.

50 In that regard, although, as the Advocate General observes at points 53 to 64 of his Opinion, SA HLMs are commercial companies, their activities are very narrowly circumscribed.

51 Article L. 411-1 of the Code defines their activities in general terms and provides that the technical characteristics and cost prices are to be determined by administrative decision. According to Article R. 422-1 of the Code, their statutes are to contain clauses consistent with the standard clauses set out in an annex to the Code, and those clauses are very detailed, in particular as regards the objects of those entities.

52 As the Advocate General observes at point 67 of his Opinion, since the rules of management are very detailed, the mere supervision of compliance with them may in itself lead to significant influence being conferred on the public authorities.

53 Second, as regards the supervision of SA HLMs' activities, in accordance with Articles L. 451-1 and R. 451-1 of the Code, low-rent housing bodies are subject to supervision by the administration and, more specifically, by the Minister responsible for finance and also by the Minister responsible for construction and housing. Those provisions do not specify the limits within which such supervision is to be exercised or whether it is to be confined to merely checking the accounts, as the French Government claims, although it has not adduced any evidence whatsoever to support the truth of that allegation.

54 Next, the Minister responsible for construction and housing is empowered by Article L. 422-7 of the Code to order that an SA HLM be wound up and to appoint a liquidator, and is also empowered under Article L. 422-8 of the Code to suspend the managerial organs and appoint a provisional administrator.

55 Those powers are provided for in the event of serious irregularities, gross mismanagement or failure to act on the part of the administrative board, or of the managerial board and the supervisory board. As the Advocate General observes at points 72 to 75 of his Opinion, the latter two cases fall within the management policy of the company concerned and not the mere verification of legality.

56 Furthermore, even accepting that, as the French Government maintains, the exercise of the powers conferred on the competent Minister by those provisions is in fact the exception, it none the less implies permanent supervision, which provides the only means of detecting gross mismanagement or failure to act on the part of the managerial organs.

57 Furthermore, it follows from Articles L. 423-1 and L. 423-2 of the Code that the Minister responsible for construction and housing may impose a specific course of management action on SA HLMs, either by requiring that they display a minimum level of dynamism or by placing limits on what is considered to be excessive activity.

58 Last, the interministerial task force for the inspection of social housing set up by Decree No 93-236 may, in addition to its responsibilities for conducting documentary and on-the-spot inspections of the operations of low-cost housing bodies, be made responsible for carrying out studies, audits or assessments in the field of social housing and may draw up proposals as to the action to be taken following its inspection reports. It also ensures that the persons concerned by its inspections implement the measures adopted by the Ministers to whom it is responsible.

59 It follows from all the provisions referred to in paragraphs 51 to 58 of the present judgment that the management of SA HLMs is subject to supervision by the public authorities which allows the latter to influence the decisions of the SA HLMs in relation to public contracts.

60 Consequently, SA HLMs, which also satisfy at least one of the three alternative criteria referred to in the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive, thus fulfil the three conditions which characterise a body governed by public law within the meaning of the Directive and are contracting authorities.

61 It follows that the action is also well founded in so far as it concerns the award of a public contract by SA HLM Logirel.

62 Accordingly, it must be held that since the Val-de-Marne and Paris OPACs and SA HLM Logirel did not publish contract notices in the Official Journal of the European Communities concerning the public contracts announced by notices in the Bulletin Officiel des Annonces des Marchés Publics of 7 and 16 February 1995 and the Moniteur des Travaux Publics et du Bâtiment of 17 February 1995, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Directive, in particular Article 11(2) thereof.

Costs

44 The costs incurred by the Commission, which has submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Fifth Chamber),

in answer to the question referred to it by the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia by orders of 26 and 27 November 1998, hereby rules:

A body

- whose object is to carry on activities relating to the organisation of fairs, exhibitions and other similar initiatives;

- which is non-profit-making but is administered according to the criteria of performance, efficiency and cost-effectiveness; and does not constitute a body governed by public law for the purposes of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts.

- which operates in a competitive environment

1 By orders of 26 and 27 November 1998, received at the Court on 10 June and 13 July 1999 respectively, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale (Regional Administrative Court) per la Lombardia referred for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC a question on the interpretation of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1, hereinafter the Directive).

2 Those questions were raised in proceedings between Agorà Srl (hereinafter Agora) and Excelsior Snc di Pedrotti Bruna & C. (hereinafter Excelsior), on the one hand, and the Ente Autonomo Fiera Internazionale di Milano (Governing Board for the Milan International Fair, hereinafter Ente Fiera) on the other, concerning, inter alia, whether the latter is a body governed by public law for the purposes of the Directive.

Legal background

3 Article 1 of the Directive provides as follows:

For the purposes of this Directive:

(b) contracting authorities shall mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

Body governed by public law means any body:

- established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

- having legal personality and

- financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law.

The lists of bodies or of categories of such bodies governed by public law which fulfil the criteria referred to in the second subparagraph of this point are set out in Annex I to Directive 71/305/EEC. These lists shall be as exhaustive as possible and may be reviewed in accordance with the procedure laid down in Article 30(b) of that Directive;

The main proceedings

4 Ente Fiera was founded as a committee at the beginning of the last century and converted into a legal person incorporated under private law in 1922. Article 1 of its articles of association provided, in the version applicable at the time of the facts in the main proceedings, as follows:

1. The objects of the Ente Autonomo Fiera Internazionale di Milano ... are to carry on and facilitate any activity concerned with the organisation of fairs and exhibitions and conferences and any other initiative which, by fostering trade relations, promotes the presentation of the production of goods and services and if possible their sale. The Ente is a non-profit-making body and carries on activities in the public interest. Its operations are governed by the principles of the Civil Code.

2. Management of the Ente shall be based on the criteria of performance, efficiency and cost-effectiveness.

3. The Ente may effect any operations not prohibited to it by law or its articles of association, including financial operations, loans and the conclusion of commercial guarantees in respect of movable and immovable property in pursuance of its objects; furthermore, it may form companies or bodies whose objects are similar, related or linked to its own, or acquire stakes or shares in such companies or bodies.

5 Article 3 of the articles of association, again in the version in force at the time of the facts in the main proceedings, provides that the Ente shall pursue the objects for which it was created using the proceeds arising from carrying on its activities, from administration (including special administration) and management of its assets and from contributions by legal or natural persons.

The factual background to Case C-223/99

6 By a request of 2 December 1997, supplemented on 24 December 1997, Agorà sought disclosure to it by Ente Fiera, under Article 25 of Law No 241 of 7 August 1990 containing new provisions relating to administrative procedure and the right of access to administrative documents (GURI No 192 of 18 August 1990, p. 7), of the documents concerning the award procedure for the hire of fixtures and fittings for reception areas and information points referred to in a notice of tender of 2 August 1997.

7 By decision of 5 January 1998, Ente Fiera refused to disclose those documents on the ground that it was not bound to comply with the requirements of transparency laid down by the public procurement rules.

8 Agorà challenged that decision before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia which, by judgment of 3 March 1998, upheld its application.

9 Ente Fiera appealed to the Sixth Chamber of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) which, by decision of 8 July 1998, found that there was a flaw vitiating the entire procedure at first instance, which led to the case being referred back to the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia.

10 By notice served on 19 October 1998, Agorà repeated its request before that court to be sent the documents and argued, on the question of the applicability to Ente Fiera of the rules on public service contracts, that it would be appropriate to make a reference for a preliminary ruling to the Court of Justice.

11 In its order for reference, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia states that the question whether the duty to comply with the requirements of transparency relied on by Agorà applies to Ente Fiera depends on whether that body is classified as a contracting authority. In that regard, it refers first of all to Judgment No 353 of 21 April 1995 of the Consiglio di Stato and to Judgment No 1365 of 17 November 1995 of the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia, both of which found that Ente Fiera is a body governed by public law for the purposes of Article 1(b) of the Directive and, secondly, to Judgment No 1267 of 16 September 1998, in which the Consiglio di Stato reversed the case-law in holding that Ente Fiera carries on an economic activity.

12 By a notice published in the Official Journal of the European Communities of 29 July 1997, Ente Fiera launched a restricted invitation to tender for the provision of cleaning services in respect of its exhibition premises for the period 1 January to 31 December 1998, with the possibility of a two-year extension.

13 Excelsior submitted a tender for consideration in respect of four out of the five lots to which the invitation to tender related. At the end of the procedure, the third lot was awarded to the Miles consortium. However, Ente Fiera subsequently cancelled the contract it had entered into with that consortium, alleging a serious breach of contract. The lot in question was then provisionally awarded to Ciftat soc. coop. arl (hereinafter Ciftat) for the period 13 February to 30 June 1998. On 7 March 1998, a fresh invitation to tender was published in the Official Journal of the European Communities relating to the third lot for the period 1 July to 31 December 1998, with an option to extend for the periods 1 January to 31 December 1999 and 1 January to 31 December 2000.

14 By applications served on 10 and 11 April 1998, Excelsior challenged before the national court the temporary award to Ciftat of the third lot, and the new invitation to tender relating to that lot published in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 7 March 1998.

15 In those circumstances, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia decided to stay proceedings and refer to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling the following question, which is identically worded in both cases:

May the definition of a body governed by public law contained in Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 be deemed applicable to the Ente Autonomo Fiera di Milano?

16 By Order of the President of the Court of Justice of 14 September 1999, Cases C-223/99 and C-260/99 were joined for the purposes of the written and oral procedure and the judgment.

Admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling in Case C-223/99

17 Ente Fiera argues, first of all, that the question referred to the Court in Case C-223/99 is inadmissible because the main proceedings concern the applicability of the Italian legislation on transparency and not the public procurement rules. Thus, whether Ente Fiera is classed as a body governed by public law is irrelevant to the main proceedings which relate to the right of access to administrative documents.

18 In that connection, it is settled case-law that, in the context of the cooperation between the Court of Justice and the national courts provided for by Article 234 EC, it is solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. Consequently, where the questions submitted by the national court concern the interpretation of Community law, the Court of Justice is, in principle, bound to give a ruling (see, inter alia, Case C-415/93 Bosman [1995] ECR I-4921, paragraph 59).

19 In this case, the national court clearly indicated that an interpretation of Article 1(b) of the Directive is necessary in order to enable it to decide whether Ente Fiera is bound to comply with the national rules on transparency to which the main proceedings relate.

20 The Court may not decline to give a ruling on a question referred to it by a national court unless it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law sought by that court bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose or where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (see, inter alia, Bosman, cited above, paragraph 61).

21 It follows that the reference for a preliminary ruling in Case C-223/99 is admissible.

The question referred 22 It must first of all be observed that the question referred, as formulated by the national court, concerns the definition of a body governed by public law for the purposes of Article 1(b) of the Directive as applied to a particular body, namely Ente Fiera.

23 It must be borne in mind that it is for the national court, by virtue of the division of functions provided for by Article 234 EC, to apply the rules of Community law, as interpreted by the Court, to a specific case (Case C-320/88 Shipping and Forwarding Enterprise Safe [1990] ECR I-285, paragraph 11, and Case C-107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I-8121, paragraph 31).

24 However, it is for the Court to extract from all the information provided by the national court, and in particular the grounds of the order for reference, the points of Community law which require interpretation, having regard to the subject-matter of the proceedings (Case 35/85 Tissier [1986] ECR 1207, paragraph 9).

25 It must first of all be observed, therefore, that the question relates to the interpretation of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive, which provides that a body governed by public law means a body established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, with legal personality and closely dependent on the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law.

26 In that regard, it should be noted that the three conditions set out in that provision are cumulative (Case C-44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others [1998] ECR I-73, paragraph 21).

27 Secondly, it is apparent from the two orders for reference that the national court considers that Ente Fiera in any event satisfies two of those three conditions, and that it is uncertain only as to whether the Ente was established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character.

28 It also appears from Article 1 of its articles of association that Ente Fiera's objects are to carry on and facilitate any activity concerned with the organisation of fairs and exhibitions, conferences and any other initiative which, by fostering trade relations, promotes the presentation of the production of goods and services and, if possible, their sale.

29 As the Commission states, this activity is pursued at international level by a number of different operators established in large cities in the various Member States who are in competition with each other.

30 In addition, although Ente Fiera is a non-profit-making organisation, it is managed according to the criteria of performance, efficiency and cost-effectiveness.

31 It follows from the foregoing that the question referred for a preliminary ruling must be understood as asking essentially whether a body whose object is to carry on activities relating to the organisation of fairs, exhibitions and other similar initiatives, which is non-profit-making, but managed according to the criteria of performance, efficiency and cost-effectiveness, and which operates in a competitive environment, meets needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character within the meaning of the first indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive.

32 In order to reply to the question thus reformulated, it must be borne in mind that the Court has already held that the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 draws a distinction between needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character and needs in the general interest having an industrial or commercial character (Case C-360/96 BFI Holding [1998] ECR I-6821, paragraph 36).

33 In that regard, it is clear, first of all, that activities relating to the organisation of fairs, exhibitions and other similar initiatives meet needs in the general interest.

34 An organiser of such events, in bringing together manufacturers and traders in one geographical location, is not acting solely in the individual interest of those manufacturers and traders, who are thereby afforded an opportunity to promote their goods and merchandise, but is also providing consumers who attend the events with information that enables them to make choices in optimum conditions. The stimulus to trade which results may be considered to fall within the general interest.

35 Secondly, the question arises whether, in the light of the information on the file, the needs in question are lacking an industrial or commercial character.

36 In that regard, it is useful to refer to the list of bodies governed by public law contained in Annex I to Directive 71/305/EEC of the Council of 26 July 1971 concerning the co-ordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682), as amended by Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), to which Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 refers. Though not exhaustive, that list is intended to be as complete as possible.

37 Analysis of the list reveals that the needs in question are generally, first, those which are met otherwise than by the availability of goods or services in the market place and, secondly, those which, for reasons associated with the general interest, the State itself chooses to provide or over which it wishes to retain a decisive influence (see to that effect BFI Holding, cited above, paragraphs 50 and 51).

38 Furthermore, although the Court has held that the term needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character does not exclude needs which are or can be satisfied by private undertakings as well (BFI Holding, cited above, paragraph 53), it has also found that the existence of significant competition, and in particular the fact that the entity concerned is faced with competition in the market place, may be indicative of the absence of a need in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character (BFI Holding, cited above, paragraph 49).

39 It must first of all be observed that the organisation of fairs, exhibitions and other similar initiatives is an economic activity which involves offering services on the market place. In this case, it is clear from the file that the body in question provides such services to exhibitors in consideration for payment. By its activity, it meets the commercial needs of, first of all, exhibitors who benefit from being able to promote the goods or services which they exhibit, and, on the other hand, visitors who wish to gather information with a view to making purchasing decisions.

40 Next, even if the body in question is non-profit-making, it does operate, as it clear from Article 1 of its articles of association, according to criteria of performance, efficiency and cost-effectiveness. Since there is no mechanism for offsetting any financial losses, it bears the economic risk of its activities itself.

41 Furthermore, the Commission's interpretative communication concerning the application of the Single Market rules to the sector of fairs and exhibitions (OJ 1998 C 143, p. 2) also gives an indication serving to confirm that holding fairs and exhibitions constitutes an industrial or commercial activity. That communication is intended, inter alia, to explain the manner in which freedom of establishment and the free movement of services benefit the organisers of fairs and exhibitions. It is clear that this does not involve needs which the State generally chooses to meet itself or over which it wishes to retain a decisive influence.

42 Lastly, the fact that a body such as that in issue in the main proceedings operates in a competitive environment - which it is for the national court to verify, having regard to all its activities at the international, national and regional levels - tends to confirm the view that the activity of organising fairs and exhibitions does not meet the criterion laid down by the first indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive.

43 The answer to the question referred must therefore be that a body

- whose object is to carry on activities relating to the organisation of fairs, exhibitions and other similar initiatives;

- which is non-profit-making but is managed according to the criteria of performance, efficiency and cost-effectiveness; and does not constitute a body governed by public law for the purposes of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive.

- which operates in a competitive environment

2. Article 1(1) of Directive 77/187 on the approximation of the laws of the Member States relating to the safeguarding of employees' rights in the event of transfers of undertakings, businesses or parts of businesses must be interpreted as meaning that that directive may apply where there is no direct contractual link between two undertakings which are successively awarded, following procedures for the award of public service contracts conducted in accordance with Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, a non-maritime public transport service such as the operation of scheduled local bus routes by a legal person governed by public law. However, in such a situation, Directive 77/187 does not apply where there is no transfer of significant tangible assets between the two undertakings.

Costs

45 The costs incurred by the Finnish, Dutch and United Kingdom Governments and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Sixth Chamber),

in answer to the question referred to it by the Korkein oikeus by order of 27 April 1999, hereby rules:

1. The taking over by an undertaking of non-maritime public transport activities such as the operation of scheduled local bus routes previously operated by another undertaking, following a procedure for the award of a public service contract under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, may fall within the material scope of Council Directive 77/187/EEC of 14 February 1977 on the approximation of the laws of the Member States relating to the safeguarding of employees' rights in the event of transfers of undertakings, businesses or parts of businesses, as set out in Article 1(1) of that directive.

2. Article 1(1) of Directive 77/187 must be interpreted as meaning that that directive may apply where there is no direct contractual link between two undertakings which are successively awarded, following procedures for the award of public service contracts conducted in accordance with Directive 92/50, a non-maritime public transport service such as the operation of scheduled local bus routes by a legal person governed by public law;

in a situation such as that in the main proceedings, Directive 77/187 does not apply where there is no transfer of significant tangible assets between those two undertakings.

1 By order of 27 April 1999, received at the Court on 7 May 1999, the Korkein oikeus (Supreme Court) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty (now Article 234 EC) a question on the interpretation of Article 1(1) of Council Directive 77/187/EEC of 14 February 1977 on the approximation of the laws of the Member States relating to the safeguarding of employees' rights in the event of transfers of undertakings, businesses or parts of businesses (OJ 1977 L 61, p. 26).

2 That question was raised in proceedings between Oy Liikenne Ab (Liikenne), a bus transport undertaking, and two of its drivers, Mr Liskojärvi and Mr Juntunen, concerning its refusal to grant them the same conditions of employment as those under which they had worked for their previous employer.

3 Directive 77/187 applies, as stated in Article 1(1) thereof, to the transfer of an undertaking, business or part of a business to another employer as a result of a legal transfer or merger. Under Article 1(3), it does not apply to sea-going vessels.

4 Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) is intended, as the 20th recital in its preamble states, to improve the access of service providers to procedures for the award of contracts, in order to eliminate practices that restrict competition in general and participation in contracts by other Member States' nationals in particular.

5 Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50 defines public service contracts as contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority. Under Article 1(b), contracting authorities are the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, and associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

6 Article 3(1) of Directive 92/50 prescribes that in awarding public service contracts contracting authorities are to apply procedures adapted to the provisions of the directive. Under Article 3(2), they must ensure that there is no discrimination between different service providers.

7 By virtue of Annex I A, to which Article 8 refers, Directive 92/50 covers inter alia land transport services.

The main proceedings

8 Following a tender procedure, Pääkaupunkiseudun yhteistyövaltuuskunta (Greater Helsinki Joint Board, YTV) awarded the operation of seven local bus routes, previously operated by Hakunilan Liikenne Oy (Hakunilan Liikenne), to Liikenne for three years.

9 Hakunilan Liikenne, which operated those routes with 26 buses, thereupon dismissed 45 drivers, 33 of whom that is, all those who applied were re-engaged by Liikenne. Liikenne also engaged 18 other drivers. The former Hakunilan Liikenne drivers were re-engaged on the conditions laid down by the national collective agreement in the sector, which are less favourable overall than those which applied in Hakunilan Liikenne.

10 When Liikenne replaced Hakunilan Liikenne, no vehicles or other assets connected with the operation of the bus routes concerned were transferred. Liikenne merely leased two buses from Hakunilan Liikenne for two or three months while waiting for the 22 new buses it had ordered to be delivered, and bought from Hakunilan Liikenne the uniforms of some of the drivers who entered its service.

11 Mr Liskojärvi and Mr Juntunen are among the 33 drivers dismissed by Hakunilan Liikenne and taken on by Liikenne. Since they considered that there had been a transfer of an economic entity between the two undertakings and they were therefore entitled to continue to enjoy the conditions of employment applied by their former employer, they brought an action against Liikenne in the Vantaan käräjäoikeus (Vantaa District Court). Liikenne denied that a transfer had taken place.

12 By judgment of 17 June 1996, the Vantaan käräjäoikeus ruled in favour of Mr Liskojärvi and Mr Juntunen. The Helsingin hovioikeus (Helsinki Court of Appeal) dismissed Liikenne's appeal against that decision by judgment of 23 October 1997, and Liikenne appealed on a point of law to the Korkein oikeus.

13 In its order for reference, the Korkein oikeus considers that the concept of a transfer of an undertaking remains unclear, especially in cases such as this one where the taking over of an activity is not based on a contract between the parties and no significant assets are transferred. It further observes that the context of the case before it is an award procedure conducted in accordance with Directive 92/50. Application of Directive 77/187 in such a context, while protecting the rights of employees, may obstruct competition between undertakings and prejudice the aim of effectiveness pursued by Directive 92/50. The Korkein oikeus is uncertain as to the interrelationship of the two directives in those circumstances.

14 Since it considered that the outcome of the case thus depended on the interpretation of Article 1(1) of Directive 77/187, the Korkein oikeus stayed the proceedings and referred the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

Is a situation in which the operation of bus routes passes from one bus undertaking to another as a consequence of a tender procedure under Directive 92/50/EEC on public service contracts to be regarded as a transfer of a business for the purposes of Article 1(1) of Directive 77/187/EEC?

The question referred for a preliminary ruling

15 By its question the national court asks essentially whether the taking over by an undertaking of non-maritime public transport activities such as the operation of scheduled local bus routes previously operated by another undertaking, following a procedure for the award of a public service contract under Directive 92/50, may fall within the material scope of Directive 77/187, as set out in Article 1(1) of that directive.

16 Liikenne submits that the answer to the Korkein oikeus's question must necessarily be in the negative. First, Hakunilan Liikenne and itself did not enter into any contractual relationship when the contract was awarded and did not agree on any objective of transferring an operation. While the Court has held that a transfer may take place in two stages through the intermediary of a third party such as the owner or the person putting up the capital, YTV is not such a third party, since it is not the owner of the bus routes it awards or the assets needed to operate those routes. Second, a transfer must relate to an economic entity, and a bus route or even a group of routes clearly does not constitute such an entity. Third, the assets of Hakunilan Liikenne needed to operate the routes in question were not taken over by Liikenne. Fourth, the Hakunilan Liikenne drivers taken on by Liikenne were engaged at their request by Liikenne, which could moreover have recruited any worker entitled to carry on that occupation. Finally, application of Directive 77/187 to awards of road transport services would cause serious problems, as the successful undertaking would have to take on obligations it had no knowledge of.

17 Mr Liskojärvi and Mr Juntunen, the Finnish, Netherlands and United Kingdom Governments and the Commission submit that the test for establishing the existence of a transfer is whether the economic entity in question retains its identity, as indicated inter alia by the fact that its operation is actually continued or resumed. It makes no difference that the transfer takes place on the occasion of a procedure for the award of public contracts, that there is no direct contractual relationship between the transferor and the transferee, and that the transfer follows from a unilateral decision of the public authorities.

18 Mr Liskojärvi and Mr Juntunen consider that in those circumstances the Korkein oikeus's question should be answered in the affirmative. The three Governments which submitted observations pursuant to Article 20 of the EC Statute of the Court of Justice and the Commission submit that it is for the national court to determine, on the basis of all the factual circumstances of the transaction at issue in the main proceedings, whether a transfer actually took place in the present case.

19 It must be recalled that the aim of Directive 77/187 is to ensure continuity of employment relationships within an economic entity, irrespective of any change of ownership. The fact that the activity carried on by such an entity is awarded successively to different operators by a public body cannot exclude the application of Directive 77/187, if passenger transport by bus does not involve the exercise of public authority (see, to that effect, Joined Cases C-173/96 and C-247/96 Sanchez Hidalgo and Others [1998] ECR I-8237, paragraphs 21 and 24).

20 The Court has thus held that Directive 77/187 may apply to a situation in which a public body which has contracted out its home-help service for persons in need or awarded a contract for the surveillance of some of its premises to one undertaking decides, on expiry or after termination of its contract with that undertaking, to contract out that service or award that contract to another undertaking (Sanchez Hidalgo, paragraph 34).

21 That conclusion cannot be challenged on the ground that the contract for bus transport in question was awarded following a public procurement procedure conducted in accordance with Directive 92/50. Directive 77/187 does not provide for any such exception to its scope, nor does Directive 92/50 contain any provision to that effect. So the circumstance that a transaction comes under Directive 92/50 does not of itself rule out the application of Directive 77/187 (see, similarly, the advisory opinions of the EFTA Court in Case E-2/95 Eidesund v Stavanger Catering A/S, Report of the EFTA Court 1 July 1995 31 December 1996, p. 1, paragraph 50, and Case E-3/96 Ask and Others v ABB Offshore Technology AS and Aker Offshore Partner AS, Report of the EFTA Court 1997, p. 1, paragraph 33).

22 The fact that the provisions of Directive 77/187 may in certain cases be applicable in the context of a transaction which comes under Directive 92/50 cannot be seen as calling into question the objectives of the latter directive. Directive 92/50 is not intended to exempt contracting authorities and service providers who offer their services for the contracts in question from all the laws and regulations applicable to the activities concerned, in particular in the social sphere or that of safety, so that offers can be made without any constraints. The aim of Directive 92/50 is that, in compliance with those laws and regulations and under the conditions it lays down, economic operators may have equal opportunities, in particular for putting into practice their rights of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services.

23 In such a context, operators retain their room to manoeuvre and compete with one another and submit different bids. In the field of passenger transport by scheduled bus services they may, for instance, adjust the standard of facilities of the vehicles and their performance in terms of energy and ecology, the efficiency of the organisation and methods of contact with the public, and, as with any undertaking, the profit margin desired. An operator who makes a bid must also be able to assess whether, if his bid is accepted, it will be in his interests to acquire significant assets from the present contractor and take over some or all of his staff, or whether he will be obliged to do so, and, if so, whether he will be in a situation of a transfer of an undertaking within the meaning of Directive 77/187.

24 That assessment, and that of the costs involved in the various possible solutions, are also part of the workings of competition and, contrary to Liikenne's submissions, cannot be regarded as disclosing an infringement of the principle of legal certainty. Any action in the field of competition will be subject to some uncertainty in relation to a number of factors, and it is the responsibility of operators to make realistic analyses. Admittedly, unlike its competitors, the undertaking which formerly had the contract knows precisely the costs it incurs in order to provide the service which is the subject of the contract; but this is inherent in the system and cannot justify not applying the social legislation, and that advantage is probably offset in most cases by the greater difficulty for that undertaking of changing its operating conditions in order to adapt them to the new conditions of the call for tenders, compared with competitors who make a bid from scratch.

25 The first answer to be given to the national court must therefore be that the taking over by an undertaking of non-maritime public transport activities such as the operation of scheduled local bus routes previously operated by another undertaking, following a procedure for the award of a public service contract under Directive 92/50, may fall within the material scope of Directive 77/187, as set out in Article 1(1) of that directive.

26 In view of the possible application of Directive 77/187 to a situation such as that before the national court, that court should, second, be given the criteria necessary to enable it to assess whether there was a transfer within the meaning of Article 1(1) of that directive in the present case. The national court observes in this respect that the takeover of the bus routes was not based on a contract between the old and new contractors and no significant assets were transferred between them.

27 The test for establishing the existence of a transfer within the meaning of Directive 77/187 is whether the entity in question retains its identity, as indicated inter alia by the fact that its operation is actually continued or resumed (Case 24/85 Spijkers [1986] ECR 1119, paragraphs 11 and 12, and Case C-234/98 Allen and Others [1999] ECR I-8643, paragraph 23).

28 While the absence of any contractual link between the transferor and the transferee or, as in this case, between the two undertakings successively entrusted with the operation of bus routes may point to the absence of a transfer within the meaning of Directive 77/187, it is certainly not conclusive (Case C-13/95 Süzen [1997] ECR I-1259, paragraph 11).

29 Directive 77/187 is applicable wherever, in the context of contractual relations, there is a change in the natural or legal person responsible for carrying on the business and entering into the obligations of an employer towards employees of the undertaking. Thus there is no need, in order for that directive to be applicable, for there to be any direct contractual relationship between the transferor and the transferee: the transfer may take place in two stages, through the intermediary of a third party such as the owner or the person putting up the capital (see, inter alia, Joined Cases C-171/94 and C-172/94 Merckx and Neuhuys [1996] ECR I-1253, paragraphs 28 to 30, and Süzen, paragraph 12).

30 Directive 77/187 can therefore apply where there is no direct contractual link between two undertakings successively awarded a contract, following procedures for the award of public service contracts in accordance with Directive 92/50, for a non-maritime public transport service, such as the operation of scheduled local bus routes, by a legal person governed by public law.

31 For Directive 77/187 to be applicable, however, the transfer must relate to a stable economic entity whose activity is not limited to performing one specific works contract (Case C-48/94 Rygaard [1995] ECR I-2745, paragraph 20). The term entity thus refers to an organised grouping of persons and assets facilitating the exercise of an economic activity which pursues a specific objective (Süzen, paragraph 13).

32 It is for the national court to establish if necessary, in the light of the guiding factors set out above, whether the operation of the bus routes at issue in the main proceedings was organised as an economic entity within Hakunilan Liikenne before being entrusted to Liikenne.

33 However, to determine whether the conditions for the transfer of an economic entity are satisfied, it is also necessary to consider all the factual circumstances characterising the transaction in question, including in particular the type of undertaking or business involved, whether or not its tangible assets such as buildings and movable property are transferred, the value of its intangible assets at the time of the transfer, whether or not the core of its employees are taken over by the new employer, whether or not its customers are transferred, the degree of similarity between the activities carried on before and after the transfer, and the period, if any, for which those activities were suspended. These are, however, merely single factors in the overall assessment which must be made, and cannot therefore be considered in isolation (see, in particular, Spijkers, paragraphs 13, and Süzen, paragraph 14).

34 So the mere fact that the service provided by the old and the new contractors is similar does not justify the conclusion that there has been a transfer of an economic entity between the two undertakings. Such an entity cannot be reduced to the activity entrusted to it. Its identity also emerges from other factors, such as its workforce, its management staff, the way in which its work is organised, its operating methods or indeed, where appropriate, the operational resources available to it (Süzen, paragraph 15, Sanchez Hidalgo, paragraph 30, and Allen, paragraph 27; see also Joined Cases C-127/96, C-229/96 and C-74/97 Hernandez Vidal and Others [1998] ECR I-8179, paragraph 30).

35 As pointed out in paragraph 32 above, the national court, in assessing the facts characterising the transaction in question, must take into account among other things the type of undertaking or business concerned. It follows that the degree of importance to be attached to the various criteria for determining whether or not there has been a transfer within the meaning of the directive will necessarily vary according to the activity carried on, and indeed the production or operating methods employed in the relevant undertaking, business or part of a business (Süzen, paragraph 18, Hernandez Vidal, paragraph 31, and Sanchez Hidalgo, paragraph 31).

36 On this point, the Commission submits, referring to Süzen, that the absence of a transfer of assets between the old and new holders of the contract for bus transport is of no importance, whereas the fact that the new contractor took on an essential part of the employees of the old contractor is decisive.

37 The Court has indeed held that an economic entity may, in certain sectors, be able to function without any significant tangible or intangible assets, so that the maintenance of the identity of such an entity following the transaction affecting it cannot, logically, depend on the transfer of such assets (Süzen, paragraph 18, Hernandez Vidal, paragraph 31, and Sanchez Hidalgo, paragraph 31).

38 The Court thus held that, since in certain sectors in which activities are based essentially on manpower a group of workers engaged in a joint activity on a permanent basis may constitute an economic entity, it must be recognised that such an entity is capable of maintaining its identity after it has been transferred where the new employer does not merely pursue the activity in question but also takes over a major part, in terms of their numbers and skills, of the employees specially assigned by his predecessor to that task. In those circumstances, the new employer takes over an organised body of assets enabling him to carry on the activities or certain activities of the transferor undertaking on a regular basis (Süzen, paragraph 21, Hernandez Vidal, paragraph 32, and Sanchez Hidalgo, paragraph 32).

39 However, bus transport cannot be regarded as an activity based essentially on manpower, as it requires substantial plant and equipment (see, reaching the same conclusion with respect to driveage work in mines, Allen, paragraph 30). The fact that the tangible assets used for operating the bus routes were not transferred from the old to the new contractor therefore constitutes a circumstance to be taken into account.

40 At the hearing, the representative of the defendants in the main proceedings emphasised the economic value of the contract between the contracting authority YTV and Liikenne, and submitted that this was a significant intangible asset. That value cannot be denied; but in the context of an award which is to be renewed, the value of such an intangible asset in principle falls to nil on the expiry of the old contract, since the award is necessarily thrown open again.

41 If an award procedure such as that at issue in the main proceedings provides for the new contractor to take over the existing contracts with customers, or if the majority of the customers may be regarded as captive, then it should nevertheless be considered that there is a transfer of customers.

42 However, in a sector such as scheduled public transport by bus, where the tangible assets contribute significantly to the performance of the activity, the absence of a transfer to a significant extent from the old to the new contractor of such assets, which are necessary for the proper functioning of the entity, must lead to the conclusion that the entity does not retain its identity.

43 Consequently, in a situation such as that in the main proceedings, Directive 77/187 does not apply in the absence of a transfer of significant tangible assets from the old to the new contractor.

44 The second answer to be given to the national court must therefore be that Article 1(1) of Directive 77/187 is to be interpreted as meaning that that directive may apply where there is no direct contractual link between two undertakings which are successively awarded, following procedures for the award of public service contracts conducted in accordance with Directive 92/50, a non-maritime public transport service such as the operation of scheduled local bus routes by a legal person governed by public law;

in a situation such as that in the main proceedings, Directive 77/187 does not apply where there is no transfer of significant tangible assets between those two undertakings.

Judgment of the Court (Sixth Chamber)
of 7 December 2000
ARGE Gewässerschutz v Bundesministerium für Land- und Forstwirtschaft.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesvergabeamt - Austria.
Public service contracts - Directive 92/50/EEC - Procedure for the award of public procurement contracts - Equal treatment of tenderers - Discrimination on grounds of nationality - Freedom to provide services.
Case C-94/99.

Approximation of laws Procedures for the award of public service contracts Directive 92/50 Principle of equal treatment of tenderers Participation of tenderers receiving subsidies from contracting authorities enabling them to submit tenders at prices lower than those of their competitors Not covert discrimination

(EC Treaty, Art. 59 (now, after amendment, Art. 49 EC); Council Directive 92/50)

$$The mere fact that the contracting authority allows bodies receiving subsidies of any kind, whether from that contracting authority or from other authorities, which enable them to submit tenders at prices appreciably lower than those of the other, unsubsidised, tenderers, to take part in a procedure for the award of a public service contract does not amount to a breach of the principle of equal treatment laid down in Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts.

The mere fact that a contracting authority allows such bodies to take part in a procedure for the award of a public service contract does not constitute either covert discrimination or a restriction contrary to Article 59 of the Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 49 EC).

Costs

41 The costs incurred by the Austrian and French Governments and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the proceedings pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Sixth Chamber),

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Bundesvergabeamt by decision of 5 March 1999, hereby rules:

1. The mere fact that the contracting authority allows bodies receiving subsidies of any kind, whether from that contracting authority or from other authorities, which enable them to submit tenders at prices appreciably lower than those of the other, unsubsidised, tenderers, to take part in a procedure for the award of a public service contract does not amount to a breach of the principle of equal treatment laid down in Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts.

2. The mere fact that a contracting authority allows such bodies to take part in a procedure for the award of a public service contract does not constitute either covert discrimination or a restriction contrary to Article 59 of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 49 EC).

1 By decision of 5 March 1999, received at the Court on 17 March 1999, the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Procurement Office), Austria, referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty (now Article 234 EC) four questions on the interpretation of Council Directive 92/50/EC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), and of Article 59 of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 49 EC).

2 Those questions were raised in proceedings between ARGE Gewässerschutz (ARGE) and the Bundesministerium für Land- und Forstwirtschaft (Federal Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry), the contracting authority, concerning the participation of semi-public tenderers in a procedure for the award of public service contracts.

The relevant Community provisions

3 The objective of Directive 92/50 is to coordinate procedures for the award of public service contracts. According to the second recital in the preamble thereto, the directive contributes to the progressive establishment of the internal market, defined as an area without internal frontiers in which the free movement of goods, persons, services and capital is ensured.

4 The sixth recital explains that the directive is intended to avoid obstacles to the free movement of services. The 20th recital adds that, in order to eliminate practices that restrict competition in general and participation in contracts by other Member States' nationals in particular, it is necessary to improve the access of service providers to procedures for the award of contracts.

5 For the purposes of the directive, Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 defines contracting authorities as the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

6 As provided in Article 1(b), a body governed by public law is any body:

established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character, and

having legal personality, and

financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to managerial supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law.

7 Article 1(c) defines service provider as any natural or legal person, including a public body, which provides services. A service provider who submits a tender is designated by the term tenderer.

8 Further, Article 1(d) defines open procedures as those national procedures whereby all interested service providers may submit a tender.

9 Article 3 provides as follows:

(1) In awarding public service contracts... contracting authorities shall apply procedures adapted to the provisions of this Directive.

(2) Contracting authorities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between different service providers.

10 Article 6 sets out an exception to the application of the procedures for the award of public service contracts:

This Directive shall not apply to public service contracts awarded to an entity which is itself a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) on the basis of an exclusive right which it enjoys pursuant to a published law, regulation or administrative provision which is compatible with the Treaty.

11 The first paragraph of Article 37, on the rejection of abnormally low tenders, provides as follows:

If, for a given contract, tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the service to be provided, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request in writing details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received.

The dispute in the main proceedings

12 ARGE, an association of undertakings and civil engineers, submitted tenders in an open procedure calling for tenders organised by the Bundesministerium für Land- und Forstwirtschaft, in which the public contracts in question concerned the taking and analysis of samples of water from various lakes and rivers in Austria for the years 1998/99 and 1999/2000. In addition to ARGE's tender, tenders were also submitted by service providers from the public sector, namely Osterreichische Forschungszentrum Seibersdorf GmbH and Osterreichische Forschungs- und Prüfungszentrum Arsenal GmbH, which are research and testing institutes.

13 In arbitration proceedings before the Bundes-Vergabekontrollkommission (Federal Procurement Review Commission), ARGE challenged the participation of those companies in the procedure for the award of the public procurement contracts concerned, claiming that, as semi-public tenderers, they received substantial State subsidies which were not actually linked to specific projects.

14 The Bundes-Vergabekontrollkommission considered that it was not contrary to paragraph 16 of the Bundesvergabegesetz (Federal Law on Public Procurement Contracts), which provides, inter alia, that the principles of free and fair competition must be observed and that all tenderers must be treated equally, for those institutes to participate, in competition with private tenderers.

15 ARGE then applied to the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Procurement Office) for review.

16 The Bundesvergabeamt, taking the view that interpretation of Community law was essential to resolution of the dispute, decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Does the decision of a contracting authority to admit to an award procedure bodies which receive subsidies of any kind, either from the authority itself or from other contracting authorities, which enable those bodies to tender in an award procedure at prices which are substantially below those of their commercially active competitors, infringe the principle of equal treatment of all tenderers and candidates in an award procedure?

(2) Does the decision of a contracting authority to admit such bodies to an award procedure constitute covert discrimination, if the bodies which receive such subsidies without exception have the nationality of, or are established in, the Member State in which the contracting authority is also established?

(3) Does the decision of a contracting authority to admit such bodies to an award procedure, even on the assumption that it does not discriminate against the other tenderers and candidates, constitute a restriction of the freedom to provide services which is not compatible with the provisions of the EC Treaty, in particular Article 59 et seq. thereof?

(4) May the contracting authority conclude service contracts with bodies which are exclusively or at least predominantly in public ownership and provide their services exclusively or at least predominantly to the contracting authority or other State institutions, without making the service the subject of an award procedure in competition with commercially active tenderers in accordance with Directive 92/50/EEC?

Preliminary observations

17 According to the order for reference, ARGE applied for arbitration in order to resolve the question whether permitting public-sector tenderers to take part in an award procedure under the Bundesvergabegesetz at the same time as purely private tenderers was compatible with the principles of free and fair competition and equal treatment of tenderers laid down in Article 16 of that Law.

18 In its order, the Bundesvergabeamt observes that if, as in the case in point, some of the tenderers are public bodies or undertakings which, as such, receive aid within the meaning of Article 92 of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 87 EC) or enjoy special advantages in terms of costs, the contracting authority is unable to ascertain reliably whether the price offered by those tenderers is reasonable or corresponds to the market situation, since it does not always reflect real economic costs. Those tenderers enjoy a substantial competitive advantage compared to other tenderers, in so far as the Member State concerned bears at least part of the costs, both fixed and variable, which are relevant to the calculation of their tender.

19 The Bundesvergabeamt thus raises the fundamental question of whether it is contrary to Community law for a contracting authority to allow bodies which are relieved by the Member State of some of the costs relevant to the calculation of their tender, in some circumstances by the granting of aid within the meaning of Article 92 of the Treaty, to take part in a tender procedure with unsubsidised tenderers.

20 By its first three questions, it asks, specifically, whether the decision to allow bodies thus enjoying an advantage to take part, when the advantages they enjoy enable them to submit tenders at prices appreciably lower than those of their competitors, infringes the principle of equal treatment of tenderers which, in its view, is inherent in Directive 92/50 and, in so far as the advantaged bodies are all Austrian, whether that decision amounts to covert discrimination or an obstacle to freedom to provide services contrary to Article 59 of the Treaty.

21 It considers that it is not impossible that the answer to those questions will reveal that it is contrary to Community law for advantaged bodies to take part. Nevertheless, it considers that the consequences of such a solution would be out of all proportion, since all State bodies possessing separate legal personality would be excluded from providing services for the State for pecuniary interest on the basis of a written contract. It is against that background that it poses the fourth question, by which it seeks a definition of the limits to the in-house providing exception to the application of the directives governing the award of public procurement contracts, relating to contracts concluded by a contracting authority with certain public bodies connected to it.

The first question

22 ARGE maintains that the Community directives applicable in the sphere of public contracts are based on the principle that tenderers must compete against each other under normal market conditions, that is to say, without the market's being distorted by, in particular, the actions of the Member State concerned. That is made explicit in the Treaty, which prohibits in principle restrictions on competition, whether attributable to private undertakings or to the Member States. It is also clear from the directives themselves: in accordance with Article 37 of Directive 92/50 and Article 34(5) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84), the contracting authority must first examine in more detail those tenders which appear abnormally low and which, it is suspected, were made possible by the grant of aid. According to ARGE, if the legislature had considered that it was acceptable for subsidised bodies and undertakings to take part in award procedures, such provisions would have been unnecessary.

23 ARGE submits that the participation of tenderers receiving public subsidies necessarily entails unequal treatment and discrimination against unsubsidised tenderers in the determination of the best offer. In short, such participation is, in its view, unlawful in the light of the objective of Directive 92/50, as expressed in the 20th recital in the preamble thereto, namely, to eliminate practices that restrict competition in general and participation in contracts by other Member States' nationals in particular.

24 The Court must observe that, as the Bundesvergabeamt has noted, the contracting authority is bound, under Directive 92/50, to observe the principle of equal treatment of tenderers. Under Article 3(2) of the directive, contracting authorities are to ensure that there is no discrimination between different service providers.

25 Nevertheless, as the Austrian and French Governments and the Commission have argued, the mere fact that contracting authorities allow bodies which receive subsidies enabling them to submit tenders at prices appreciably lower than those of the other, unsubsidised, tenderers, to take part in a procedure for the award of a public procurement contract does not amount to a breach of the principle of equal treatment.

26 If the Community legislature had intended to require contracting authorities to exclude such tenderers, it would have stated this explicitly.

27 Articles 23 and 29 to 37 of Directive 92/50 lay down detailed criteria for the selection of service providers permitted to submit a tender and the criteria for the award of the contract, but none of those provisions provides that tenderers may be excluded or their tenders rejected simply because they receive public subsidies.

28 On the contrary, Article 1(c) of Directive 92/50 expressly authorises the participation, in a procedure for the award of a public procurement contract, of bodies funded in some cases out of the public purse. It provides that a tenderer means a service provider which has submitted a tender and defines that provider as any natural or legal person, including a public body, which offers its services.

29 While it is not, therefore, contrary in itself to the principle of equal treatment of tenderers for public bodies to take part in a procedure for the award of public procurement contracts, even in circumstances such as those described in the first question, it is not excluded that, in certain specific circumstances, Directive 92/50 requires, or at the very least allows, the contracting authorities to take into account the existence of subsidies, and in particular of aid incompatible with the Treaty, in order, where appropriate, to exclude tenderers in receipt of such aid.

30 The Commission correctly states in this connection that a tenderer may be excluded from a selection procedure where the contracting authority considers that it has received aid incompatible with the Treaty and that the obligation to repay illegal aid would threaten its financial well-being, so that that tenderer may be regarded as unable to offer the necessary financial or economic security.

31 However, in order to answer the question of principle raised in the main proceedings, it is neither necessary nor indeed possible, having regard to the contents of the case-file, to define the conditions in which contracting authorities would be bound, or entitled, to exclude tenderers which receive subsidies.

32 In answer to the first question it is, therefore, sufficient to state that the mere fact that the contracting authority allows bodies receiving subsidies of any kind, whether from that contracting authority or from other authorities, which enable them to submit tenders at prices appreciably lower than those of the other, unsubsidised, tenderers to take part in a procedure for the award of a public service contract does not amount to a breach of the principle of equal treatment laid down in Directive 92/50.

The second and third questions

33 In its order for reference, the Bundesvergabeamt states that the subsidies received by certain tenderers benefit solely those bodies which have their principal place of business in Austria and which are connected to Austrian regional or local authorities. It considers it possible that the assumption of all or some of the operating costs of national bodies, thus enabling them to submit tenders at prices lower than those of any other, unsubsidised, tenderers, might be regarded as covert discrimination on grounds of nationality contrary to Article 59 of the Treaty. It adds that, while there might exist in other Member States bodies granted comparable subsidies by their Member State which could take part in the procedure for the award of a public service contract, commercial service providers of other Member States are not to be expected to encounter, in such a procedure, Austrian tenderers enjoying a considerable competitive advantage over them through subsidies received from Austrian regional or local authorities.

34 For the Bundesvergabeamt, even if permitting advantaged national bodies to take part in a tender procedure does not amount to covert discrimination, it must nevertheless be regarded as a restriction on freedom to provide services in other Member States since, relying on provisions which ensure that their costs are covered in whole or in part, such bodies can, in addition to the public interest purposes for which they were established, offer services on conditions and at prices which the other, unsubsidised, tenderers cannot match.

35 ARGE maintains that the fact that advantaged tenderers can take part in a tendering procedure is contrary to the prohibition of discrimination on grounds of nationality.

36 As the Commission has observed in its written observations, as a rule aid is granted to undertakings established on the territory of the Member State granting it. Such a practice, and the consequent unequal treatment of undertakings of other Member States is thus inherent in the concept of State aid. It does not, however, amount in itself to covert discrimination or a restriction on freedom to provide services within the meaning of Article 59 of the Treaty.

37 Furthermore, in the dispute in the main proceedings it is not contended that participation in the procedure in question was subject, de jure or de facto, to a condition requiring in effect that subsidised tenderers should possess the nationality of the Member State to which the adjudicating authority belongs or that they should have their seat in that State.

38 In those circumstances, the reply to be given to the second and third questions must be that the mere fact that a contracting authority allows bodies receiving subsidies of any kind, whether from that contracting authority or from other authorities, which enable them to submit tenders at prices appreciably lower than those of the other, unsubsidised, tenderers, to take part in a procedure for the award of a public service contract does not constitute either covert discrimination or a restriction contrary to Article 59 of the Treaty.

39 In view of the replies given to the first three questions and given the context in which the fourth question has been posed (see paragraph 21 above), there is no need to answer it.

40 It is also relevant to point out that the Court considered a similar question in its judgment in Case C-107/98 Teckal v Comune di Viano [1999] ECR I-8121, concerning Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1). It ruled that that directive is applicable where a contracting authority, such as a local authority, plans to conclude in writing, with an entity which is formally distinct from it and independent of it in regard to decision-making, a contract for pecuniary interest for the supply of products, whether or not that entity is itself a contracting authority.

26 May 1998 (1)

In Case T-60/98 R,

Ecord Consortium for Russian Co-operation , a joint venture under Danish law comprising the following members:

- Danagro Adviser A/S, a company governed by Danish law, established at Glostrup (Denmark),

- Plunkett Foundation, a foundation governed by English law, established at Long Hanborough (United Kingdom),

- Irish Agri-Food Development Ltd, a company governed by Irish law, established at Dublin, applicant,

v

Commission of the European Communities, represented by Marie-Josée Jonczy, Legal Adviser, acting as Agent, with an address for service at the office of Carlos Gómez de la Cruz, of its Legal Service, Wagner Centre, Kirchberg,

defendant,

APPLICATION for interim measures relating to a Commission Decision of 17 March 1998 declaring inadmissible a tender submitted by the applicant in response to an invitation to tender for a project financed under the TACIS programme (Project FDRUS 9701, entitled 'Russia: Promoting Co-operative Ventures by Independent Farmers),

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

makes the following

Order

Facts and Procedure

1. The applicant is a joint venture set up by three firms in order to draw up a joint tender for a project concerning the provision of technical assistance in Russia (Project FDRUS 9701, entitled 'Russia: Promoting Co-operative Ventures by Independent Farmers). The project is financed by Commission funds under the TACIS programme (Programme for Technical Assistance to the Commonwealth of Independent States and Mongolia).

2. On 16 January 1998 the Commission sent the applicant an invitation to tender for this project ('the invitation to tender).

3. The invitation to tender stated that the tender was to be sent to the following address: TACIS Procurement Unit, Rue de la Loi 99, B-1040 Brussels.

4. It stated, in particular:

'Attention: When addressing your offer to the Tacis Procurement Unit please strictly limit yourself to above address.

Avoid to add or to use any other terms (e.g. Commission, European Union, ...). In these cases your offer may be submitted to the wrong place and risks to be delivered at the Procurement Unit after the deadline.

5. The tender had to be submitted by 11.00 hrs local time on 16 March 1998 at the latest.

6. The file and oral pleadings reveal that the management of the TACIS programme was entrusted to a private firm governed by Luxembourg law. The TACIS Procurement Unit, which is responsible for that management, thus constitutes a technical assistance unit independent of the Commission. Its role is inter alia to assist the Commission in issuing invitations to tender, the organisation of assessment committees, for which it provides the secretarial services, and the drafting of contracts.

7. On 13 March 1998 the applicant dispatched its tender by DHL courier.

8. The following indications were given on DHL's air consignment note:

'2 To (Receiver)

Company name

European Commission

Delivery address

TACIS Procurement Unit

Rue de la Loi, 99

Brussels.

9. In accordance with the Commission's instructions of 15 November 1991 that all mail for the Commission be delivered to the central mail office at Rue de Genève 12, B-1140 Evere, DHL delivered the applicant's tender to that address on 16 March 1998 at 8.30 hrs.

10. According to statements by the Commission - which are not disputed by the applicant - DHL, following its usual practice, returned to the central mail office approximately two hours later, that is to say towards 10.30 hrs, to retrieveconsignments not intended for the Commission. At that point the applicant's consignment was handed back to DHL so that it could deliver it to the right address.

11. The following day, 17 March 1998, the applicant's tender was delivered by DHL to the TACIS Procurement Unit in Brussels, at 99 Rue de la Loi.

12. By letter of 17 March 1998 (hereinafter the 'contested decision), the Commission rejected the applicant's tender on the ground that it was submitted to the TACIS Procurement Unit after the deadline.

13. By application lodged at the Court Registry on 6 April 1998, the applicant brought an action for annulment of that decision. The case was registered under number T-60/98.

14. By a separate application lodged at the Court Registry the same day it also brought an application for interim measures pursuant to Articles 185 and 186 of the Treaty.

15. The applicant claims that the President of the Court of First Instance should:

- order the Commission to consider the applicant's tender and, if appropriate, admit the applicant to the talks it conducts with the other tenderers;

- in the alternative, 'order the Commission to reissue the invitation to tender for the project to the companies on the same shortlist in accordance with the normal procedure in the very near future.

16. In its written observations lodged on 14 April 1998 the Commission contended that the application should be dismissed in its entirety.

17. The oral submissions of the parties were heard on 5 May 1998.

Law

18. Under the combined provisions of Articles 185 and 186 of the Treaty and Article 4 of Council Decision 88/591/ECSC, EEC, Euratom, of 24 October 1988 establishing a Court of First Instance of the European Communities (OJ 1988 L 319, p. 1), as amended by Council Decision 93/350/Euratom, ECSC, EEC, of 8 June 1993 (OJ 1993 L 144, p. 21), the Court of First Instance may, if it considers that circumstances so require, in any cases before it prescribe any necessary interim measures.

19. Article 104(1) of the Rules of Procedure provides that an application to suspend the operation of any measure is to be admissible only if the applicant is challenging that measure in proceedings before the Court of First Instance. Paragraph 2 of that Article provides that an application for the adoption of interim measures is to statethe circumstances giving rise to urgency and the pleas of fact and law establishing a prima facie case for the interim measures applied for. The measures applied for must be of a provisional nature in that they must not prejudge the decision on the substance (see, most recently, Case T-86/96 R Arbeitsgemeinschaft Deutscher Luftfahrt-Unternehmen and Hapag-Lloyd v Commission [1998] ECR II-0000, paragraph 24).

20. In view of the circumstances of the case, we should first consider the condition relating to the establishment of a prima facie case.

21. In support of its application for interim measures the applicant argues that the contested decision constitutes a prima facie breach of the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations. It maintains, in support of that argument, that it followed the Commission's instructions scrupulously. The address of TACIS Procurement Unit was given on DHL's air consignment note as stipulated in the invitation to tender.

22. It was only because of the Commission's contradictory instructions that the applicant's consignment was delivered in time but to a different place. That change in its destination was the result of a permanent instruction of the Commission, dating from 1991, that all mail was to be delivered to a central mail office within the Commission, even where the address given in the air consignment note differed from the usual postal address of the Commission.

23. The applicant argues that, if the Commission had not given those instructions to DHL, its tender would have reached the TACIS Procurement Unit in time. The applicant submits that, in the circumstances, it could legitimately expect that its tender would be delivered to the correct address.

24. In reply to a question put by the President of the Court, the applicant pointed out that, although the invitation to tender stipulated that any reference to the Commission was to be avoided, the Commission itself had contributed to the confusion by printing the invitation to tender on its own headed notepaper.

25. The Commission had, therefore, committed a wrongful act in rejecting the applicant's tender. The contested decision, it is alleged, constitutes a prima facie breach of the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations, a principle which forms part of the Community legal order (Case 112/77 Töpfer v Commission [1978] ECR 1019).

26. The Commission submits that, as the applicant's tender was submitted after the deadline, it had no choice but to reject it under the rules applied by the institution regarding invitations to tender. Their purpose was to guarantee equal treatment oftenderers. The Commission submits that to accept the applicant's tender would entail discrimination against the other firms which did submit their tenders in time.

27. As regards the existence of a prima facie case, it points out that the applicant, contrary to its claims, did not follow scrupulously the instructions given in the invitation to tender in that it wrote the name of the Commission on DHL's air consignment note. Under the circumstances it should have been aware of the risk that the tender would be delivered to the wrong address, and consequently would arrive at the TACIS Procurement Unit after the deadline.

Findings of the court hearing the application for interim measures

28. In support of its application for interim measures the applicant confines itself to pleading that the contested decision constitutes a prima facie breach of the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations.

29. Despite the express warning in the invitation to tender (see paragraph 4 above), the applicant indicated on DHL's air consignment note that the consignment in question was intended for the 'European Commission (see paragraph 8 above).

30. The application for interim measures is therefore based on the incorrect premiss that the applicant followed scrupulously the instructions in the invitation to tender.

31. As is clear from the oral pleadings, the purpose of those instructions was precisely to prevent events such as those which occurred in this case. If the Commission's name features on the air consignment note there is a great risk that the consignment in question will be delivered to the central mail office at Evere, in accordance with the general instructions of 1991 (see paragraph 9 above).

32. The applicant cannot plead lack of experience in this area. It does not dispute the Commission's claims, first, that it had already responded to invitations to tender from the TACIS Procurement Unit without making any mistakes in the address and, second, that it recently signed an extension of contract following an invitation to tender organised in the same way as that in this case.

33. As it did not heed the warning in the invitation to tender, it could not legitimately expect that its tender would be delivered in time to the TACIS Procurement Unit. Accordingly, the plea alleging breach of the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations appears prima facie to be unfounded.

34. In the absence of any other pleas in fact or in law which would justify prima facie the adoption of the interim measures applied for, the application for interim measures must be dismissed, without there being any need to consider whether the other conditions for the adoption of interim measures have been met in this case.

On those grounds,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

hereby orders:

1. The application for interim measures is dismissed.

2. The decision as to costs is reserved.

(Art. 230, fourth para., EC)

2. European Community public procurement - Conclusion of a contract following an invitation to tender - Discretion of the institutions - Judicial review - Limits

3. Procedure - Introduction of new pleas in law in the course of the proceedings - Conditions - New plea - Concept

(Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, Arts 44(1)(c) and 48(2))

1. An action brought by a natural or legal person is admissible only if that person can show a legal interest in bringing proceedings. In the context of a procedure for the award of public contracts, the awarding institution cannot claim that the tenderer whose bid was not accepted has no legal interest in bringing proceedings on the ground that it submitted a tender which was in any event unacceptable. Inasmuch as annulment of the contested decision would entail reopening the tender procedure under different conditions, the applicant does indeed have a legal interest in bringing the proceedings in order to be able to submit a fresh tender without being faced by competition from the previously successful tenderer.

(see paras 28, 33)

2. Like the other institutions, the Parliament has a wide discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender and the Court's review should be limited to checking that there has been no serious and manifest error. Nevertheless, in accordance with the principles of sound administration and solidarity as between the Community institutions and the Member States, the institutions are required to ensure that the conditions laid down in an invitation to tender do not induce potential tenderers to infringe the national legislation applicable to their business.

(see paras 39, 41)

3. It is clear from the provisions of Articles 44(1)(c) and 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, taken together, that the application initiating proceedings must indicate the subject-matter of the dispute and set out in summary form the pleas raised and that no fresh issue may be raised in the course of proceedings unless it is based on matters of law or of fact which come to light in the course of the written procedure. However, the fact that the applicant became aware of a factual matter during the course of the procedure before the Court of First Instance does not mean that that element constitutes a matter of fact coming to light in the course of the procedure. A further requirement is that the applicant was not in a position to be aware of that matter previously.

APPLICATION, first, for the annulment of the Parliament's decision not to accept the applicant's tender submitted in response to invitation to tender no 99/S 18-8765/FR, concerning a contract for passenger transport using vehicles with drivers during the sessions of the European Parliament in Strasbourg and, secondly, for damages for loss allegedly suffered by the applicant as a result of that decision,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES (Fifth Chamber), composed of: R. García-Valdecasas, President, P. Lindh and J.D. Cooke, Judges, Registrar: G. Hertzig, Administrator, having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 14 March 2000,

Costs

71 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs, if they have been asked for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the applicant has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs, as asked for by the Parliament.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Fifth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Dismisses the application;

2. Orders the applicant to bear its own costs and pay those of the Parliament.

Facts

1 On 27 January 1999 the European Parliament, under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), published in the Official Journal of the European Communities a notice of an invitation to tender under the open procedure (99/S 18-8765/FR) (OJ 1999 S 18, p. 28 (the Notice)) for passenger transport using vehicles with drivers (the invitation to tender). The conditions for submitting a tender were set out in the Notice, in the description of the services to be provided, which contained administrative and technical clauses, and in the draft framework contract.

2 The Notice stated at point 2 that the contract was to take the form of a framework contract with a company providing passenger transport services using vehicles with drivers carried out on the basis of order forms specific to each job. The place of performance of the services was to be Strasbourg (point 3). According to point 5, the contract was divided into two lots. Lot No 1 concerned the hire of cars and minibuses with drivers, whilst Lot No 2 related to the hire of buses. The present action concerns solely the award of Lot No 1 of the contract.

3 According to point 13 of the Notice tenderers could be companies, individual contractors, as well as groupings of companies and/or individual contractors.

4 Paragraph 14 of the Notice stated: Service providers: Tenderers (or their executive(s)) must prove that they have been active in the sector for 3 years. They must also prove that they have a minimum annual turnover of FRF 2 000 000 for lot 1 and FRF 68 750 for lot 2

5 By way of criteria for awarding the contract, the notice stated at paragraph 16 that the economically most advantageous tender would be accepted, regard being had to the prices tendered and the tender's technical merit.

6 Paragraph 1.1.3 of the specification of the services to be provided (administrative clauses) stipulated that the approximate requirements of the European Parliament were for between 25 and 60 cars and 2 to 4 minibuses on average for the daily provision of services of between 6 and 12 hours' work. The hours were laid down at paragraph 5 (technical clauses), under which provision of services was to begin at 07.30 hrs and to cease with the end of parliamentary business (between 22.00 hrs and 24.00 hrs, depending on the day). In that same paragraph it was further stated:

Given that peak activity is recorded between 7.30 and 9.00 and between 20.00 and 22.00, the contractor shall undertake in its tender that it will be able to deal with a request for reinforcement in case of need. The minimum duration of the service shall be two consecutive hours.

7 At paragraph 2.1 (technical clauses) the Parliament also stated that the transport in question was to be effected in unmarked vehicles.

8 The last subparagraph of paragraph 6 (administrative clauses) provided:

The tender for and provision of the services must be in conformity with the applicable legislation.

9 Similarly, the draft framework contract annexed to the tender (Article VI, second paragraph) stated:

Moreover, the contractor shall ensure that, in providing the services tendered for, the applicable national and local rules are strictly observed.

10 On 10 February 1999 the applicant submitted its tender to the Parliament. It was worded as follows:

We tender for lot 1 in regard to the daily segment of hours outside the peak periods at the hourly rates given in Annex 1.

We can make available to the Parliament 30 vehicles with drivers (...) from Monday to Friday during the Strasbourg sessions of the Parliament.

However, we cannot offer services during the peak periods (...) that is to say from 07.00 hrs to 9.00 hrs and from 19.00 hrs to 22.00 hrs.

Services during the peak periods are technically and financially unfeasible.

Our company cannot in fact undertake to make available so many vehicles during the peak periods. No undertaking in the region could so without subcontracting to taxi operators working outside the legislation.

11 In Annex 2 to its tender the applicant appended a document entitled L'action civile en concurrence déloyale (civil action for unfair competition) in which it pointed out that civil proceedings followed by criminal proceedings had been brought in connection with the activities of the Association Centrale des Autos Taxis de la Communauté Urbaine de Strasbourg (Central Taxi Association for the municipality of Strasbourg (ACATS TAXI 13) which undertook, on the Parliament's account under a contract for the hire of cars with drivers, the transport in unmarked vehicles of officials and members of the European Parliament. The applicant observed that only a limousine service enabled the Parliament's requirements to be satisfied in compliance with the legislation governing the conveyance of persons for valuable consideration. The applicant developed its point of view in that document.

12 On 24 February 1999 the Parliament asked tenderers to let it know the number of vehicles which they had available on that date and the number of vehicles which they reckoned on having available if they were awarded the contract.

13 In reply the applicant pointed out that it had five limousines and that it was in the process of buying three other vehicles. It further stated:

We can make available to you from Monday to Friday (outside rush hour times) during each parliamentary session sixty vehicles conforming to the technical clauses of the tender procedure.

14 The Parliament decided to accept the tender submitted by Coopérative Taxi 13 as the most advantageous, regard being had to the award criteria contained in the Notice.

15 By a letter of 7 April 1999 the Parliament informed the applicant that its tender had been unsuccessful owing to the difference in price as between its tender and the tender by the undertaking to which the contract had been awarded following the invitation to tender (the contested decision).

16 By a letter dated 15 April 1999 the applicant explained to the Parliament that it was given to understand that the latter was renewing the contract entered into with l'Association (ou coopérative) des Artisans Taxis. It once again expressed its doubts as to the legality of such a contract under French law. In that connection it attached particular weight to the legal impossibility of taxis carrying out the transport of members and officials of the European Parliament under the conditions laid down in the award procedure (unmarked vehicles). It stated that, although the tender submitted by the Artisans Taxis Strasbourgeois might be financially more advantageous, the services would nevertheless be provided outside any legal framework, contrary to the terms of the invitation to tender. It also pointed out that it did not enjoy the numerous fiscal benefits granted to taxis and that its concern to observe the laws and regulations in force precluded it from submitting a tender at a competitive price. Therefore, it was faced, in its view, with a situation of unfair competition. Finally, it asked the Parliament to express a view on these arguments.

17 By letter dated 19 April 1999 the applicant, following up its letter of 15 April 1999, submitted a report dated March 1992 from the Interior Ministry (Inspectorate General for Administration) concerning the taxi business in the municipality of Strasbourg and the airport of Strasbourg-Entzheim.

18 In a letter dated 11 May 1999 Mr Rieffel, Director-General of Administration in the Parliament, replied:

Your letters dated 15 and 19 April 1999, in which you communicated to us certain information concerning French legislation on the taxi business and also requested the European Parliament to form a view on your observations as to whether the services provided by Coopérative Taxi 13 comply with that legislation, call for the following comments on my part.

In order to avoid any subsequent disputes, the European Parliament in its invitation to tender no 99/S 18-8765/FR made it an obligation that "the contracting party is to ensure that the applicable local and national legislation is strictly applied in the performance of the services requested"

(Article VI(2) of the draft contract). In that connection I would point out that it is not for the European Parliament but for the competent French judicial authorities to interpret the legislation.

As regards the abovementioned invitation to tender, the European Parliament, for its part, observed all the rules and procedures for the award of contracts and, first and foremost, the terms of Directive 92/50.

As to the provision of services no information has come to my notice which would lead me to believe that the Coopérative Taxi 13 is not observing the conditions laid down in the invitation to tender. Besides, no administrative or judicial authority has hitherto raised any query with the European Parliament concerning the conditions under which the contract is being implemented.

19 It was under those circumstances that, by an application lodged with the Court of First Instance on 8 June 1999, the applicant brought the present proceedings.

20 Since the applicant did not lodge a reply within the period prescribed, the written procedure was closed on 20 September 1999.

21 By a letter dated 20 January 2000, the applicant lodged an application for the written procedure to be reopened under the second paragraph of Article 42 of the EC Statute of the Court of Justice rendered applicable to proceedings before the Court of First Instance by Article 46 thereof.

22 By decision of the President of the fifth Chamber of 31 January 2000 that application was refused.

23 Upon hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court decided to open the oral procedure. Oral argument and the replies by the parties to questions put to them by the Court were presented at the hearing in open court on 14 March 2000.

Forms of order sought by the parties

24 The applicant claims that the Court should:

- annul the contested decision;

- order the Parliament to pay to it, in accordance with Article 288 EC, damages of FRF 1 000 000 for losses suffered,

25 The defendant contends that the Court should:

- dismiss the action;

- order the applicant to pay the costs.

Admissibility

Arguments of the parties

26 Whilst not formally raising an objection of inadmissibility, the Parliament submits that the applicant has no interest in bringing the present action since it submitted a tender which in no event could be accepted. The applicant, it claims, is not in a position to provide the services requested by the Parliament, as set out in the description of the services to be provided.

27 At the hearing the applicant retorted that, although it is true that it could not cover transport requirements during peak times (see paragraph 6 above), the reason for that was that such services could not feasibly be provided and that, therefore, as it had informed the Parliament in the course of the tender procedure, no undertaking in the region was able to do so without subcontracting to taxi operators working in breach of the legislation.

28 In accordance with settled case-law, an action brought by a natural or legal person is admissible only if that person can show a legal interest in bringing proceedings (judgment in Case T-117/95 Corman v Commission [1997] ECR II-95, paragraph 83 and order in Case T-5/99 Andriotis v Commission and Cedefop [2000] ECR II-0000, paragraph 36).

29 It is true that the applicant has confined itself to seeking the annulment of the decision not to accept its tender. It is also true that the applicant stated that it was unable to satisfy all the conditions laid down by the Parliament in the description of the services to be provided.

30 However, in its tender the applicant stated that it was bidding for lot no 1 daily segment outside peak periods. It stated that it was unable to provide transport services during peak periods, that is to say from 07.00 hrs to 09.00 hrs and from 19.00 hrs to 22.00 hrs owing to the fact that the provision of such services was technically and financially not feasible. In that connection the applicant emphasised that no undertaking could make available so many vehicles during the peak periods without subcontracting to taxi operators working in breach of the legislation. In the document appended as Annex 2 to its tender, it stated that to use taxis to transport persons in unmarked vehicles under the contract with the Parliament was contrary to the ban under French legislation on taxis being operated for valuable consideration without their distinctive markings (see paragraph 11 above).

31 By a letter dated 11 May 1999 the Parliament replied that it was for the competent French judicial authorities and not for it to interpret the French legislation. However, it affirmed that it had available to it no information which would lead it to believe that Coopérative Taxi 13 was not observing the conditions of the invitation to tender. Besides, the Parliament stated that no reference had been made to it by any administrative or judicial authority to challenge the conditions under which the contract at issue was being implemented (see paragraph 18 above).

32 It follows that the present dispute primarily concerns the question whether the Parliament was entitled to take the view that Coopérative Taxi 13 was able to observe the conditions for the performance of the contract at issue in accordance with French legislation.

33 Accordingly, the Parliament cannot claim that the applicant has no legal interest in bringing proceedings on the ground that it submitted a tender which was in any event unacceptable. Inasmuch as annulment of the contested decision, owing to the fact that use of taxis under the contract at issue is not permitted under French legislation, would entail reopening the tender procedure, the applicant does indeed have a legal interest in bringing the present proceedings in order to be able to submit a fresh tender without being faced by competition from taxi companies operating outside the legislation.

34 Accordingly, the allegation by the Parliament that the present action is inadmissible must be rejected.

The claim for annulment

35 In its application the applicant raises two pleas alleging, first, infringement of the French law applicable to the taxi business and of the description of services to be provided and, secondly, breach of the principle of non-discrimination, inasmuch as the Parliament is said to have disregarded French legislation when it issued the invitation to tender. At the hearing the applicant raised a third plea alleging breach of the condition in the notice under which service providers had to prove that they had been active in the sector for three years.

First plea: infringement of the French law applicable to the taxi business and of the description of services to be provided

36 The applicant contends that the award of the contract at issue to Coopérative Taxi 13, or to any other taxi undertaking, is in breach of the French legislation applicable to the taxi business. That legislation prohibits the use of taxis as unmarked vehicles for the transport of persons for valuable consideration. In fact, taxis enjoy certain exemptions which cannot be extended to other business. Thus, in entering into the contract at issue with Coopérative Taxi 13, the Parliament infringed the condition laid down in Article 6 of the description of services to be provided (administrative clauses) under which the tender for, and performance of, services must be in conformity with the applicable legislation.

37 The Parliament observes that the French legislation applicable to the activities described in the tender is Law No 82-1153 of 30 December 1982 laying down guidelines for domestic transport (Official Journal of the French Republic of 31 December 1982) and Decree No 87-242 of 7 April 1987 defining and laying down the conditions governing performance of private non-urban passenger transport by road (Official Journal of the French Republic of 8 April 1987, p. 3980). According to the Parliament, that legislation in no way prohibits the provision of the services forming the subject-matter of the tender. On the contrary, Article 3 of Decree No 87-242 requires undertakings providing vehicles with drivers to be entered in the register of undertakings engaged in public passenger transport by road. Coopérative Taxi 13 forwarded with its tender a certificate of entry in that register enabling it to offer vehicles for hire for passenger transport in unmarked vehicles.

38 Moreover, the Parliament contends that the applicant is not entitled to bring proceedings under Article 6 of the description of services to be provided (administrative clauses) challenging the award of the contract at issue. The purpose of that provision is to protect the rights of the Parliament by allowing it to rescind the contract awarded as a result of the invitation to tender if the successful tenderer fails to observe the applicable legislation. Accordingly, that stipulation cannot be invoked against the decision awarding the contract by unsuccessful tenderers.

39 Like the other institutions, the Parliament has a wide discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender and the Court's review should be limited to checking that there has been no serious and manifest error (see Case 56/77 Agence Européenne d'Intérims v Commission [1978] ECR 2215, paragraph 20, Case T-19/95 Adia Intérim v Commission [1996] ECR II-321, paragraph 49, and Case T-203/96 Embassy Limousines & Services v Parliament [1998] ECR II-4239, paragraph 56).

40 Furthermore, under the second paragraph of Article 230 EC, the Court has jurisdiction, in the context of annulment proceedings, to adjudicate in actions for lack of competence, infringement of essential procedural requirements, infringement of the EC Treaty or of any rule of law relating to its application, or misuse of powers. It follows that the Court cannot treat the alleged infringement of French legislation as a question of law for which unlimited judicial review is available. Review of that kind is a matter exclusively for the French authorities.

41 Nevertheless, in accordance with the principles of sound administration and solidarity as between the Community institutions and the Member States, the institutions are required to ensure that the conditions laid down in an invitation to tender do not induce potential tenderers to infringe the national legislation applicable to their business.

42 In the present case, the Parliament stated that the French legislation did not ban the provision in unmarked taxis of the transport services forming the subject-matter of the invitation to tender, provided that those services were covered by an entry in the register of undertakings engaged in public passenger transport by road. It must be observed that the applicant has failed to demonstrate that that assertion by the Parliament was manifestly erroneous. The applicant merely invoked the French legislation concerning the taxi business; it has not established that the legislation on non-urban private passenger transport services by road could not apply to taxis operating unofficially, where the latter provide the services provided for in the invitation to tender. Moreover, it is not contested that Coopérative Taxi 13 provided a certificate establishing that it is entered in the register of undertakings engaged in public passenger transport by road. The Parliament has shown that that registration was required by the abovementioned French legislation on private transport services, which lends credence to its arguments.

43 In those circumstances, the applicant has not demonstrated that the Parliament manifestly misdirected itself in its interpretation of the French legislation.

44 Nor, moreover, is the applicant entitled in law to rely on the clause in the draft framework contract under which the services must be provided in conformity with the legislation in force. That clause cannot be interpreted as imposing a requirement on the Parliament to check, not only that the person to whom the contract is awarded is entered in the register, as mentioned above, but also that that person is performing the contract in accordance with French legislation. As the Parliament has clearly stated, under that clause, the person to whom the contract is awarded must ensure that he is acting in conformity with the French legislation and, consequently, must suffer the consequences of a failure to do so.

45 It should be added that the Parliament stated at the hearing that, should it be wrong in its interpretation of the French legislation, it would be compelled to rescind the contract under that clause.

46 It follows from the foregoing that the first plea based on an infringement of the French legislation applicable to the taxi business and of the description of services to be provided must be rejected.

The second plea: breach of the principle of non-discrimination

Arguments of the parties

47 The applicant maintains that, like the other operators of limousines which had submitted tenders, it was discriminated against on financial grounds.

48 It observes that, under French legislation, taxis receive a free road-tax disc (vignette) and tax reductions on fuel. They are also exempt from professional charges.

49 Thus, the applicant contends that, even if the Parliament was not the instigator of that discrimination, it has in fact infringed the principle of non-discrimination.

50 The Parliament argues that this plea relates in fact to the legislative choices open to a Member State concerning two separate economic activities. However, it goes on to argue that is not for the Community judicature to assess the validity of national legislation in the context of an action for annulment, that not being a head of jurisdiction under the second paragraph of Article 230 EC.

51 In the alternative the Parliament maintains that it has not infringed the principle of non-discrimination in the present case. Even on the supposition that there is a difference of treatment under French law as between taxi operators and operators of limousines with drivers, the procedure for the award of public contracts to which the Community institutions are subject does not allow cognisance to be taken of that difference.

Findings of the Court

52 It should first of all be observed that the applicant is not claiming that the Parliament is the instigator of the alleged discrimination between operators of limousines and taxi companies.

Indeed, the applicant acknowledges that that discrimination is due solely to the difference of treatment as between those two occupational categories under French law.

53 However, since the applicant has not demonstrated that the Parliament's interpretation of the French legislation applicable to the services forming the subject-matter of the invitation to tender was manifestly erroneous (see paragraph 43 above), it is no more entitled to claim that the Parliament infringed the principle of non-discrimination on the ground that it failed to take account of that difference of treatment. The Parliament cannot, under the applicable Community legislation, take into consideration differences in market opportunities engendered by French law. It is obliged to accept the financially most advantageous tender, regard being had to the criteria set out in the Notice.

54 Accordingly, the second plea must also be rejected.

The third plea: breach of the condition in the Notice under which service providers had to show that they had been operating in that sector for three years

55 At the hearing the applicant claimed that the Parliament had failed to observe the requirement of three years' activity in the area concerned laid down in point 14 of the Notice (see paragraph 4 above) on the ground that Coopérative Taxi 13 was established in October 1998 and its registration took effect only on 1 December 1998.

56 The applicant explained the delay in raising this plea by the fact that it was only on reading the defence that it became aware of the fact that the awarding authority had not observed that requirement.

57 At the hearing the Parliament observed that there is no reference in the application to the alleged irregularity of the tender procedure constituted by the fact that tenderers had to prove that they had been active in this sector for three years. On that ground it considers that plea to be inadmissible.

58 In any event it contended that that plea is unfounded. Although it is true that Coopérative Taxi 13 was established recently, nevertheless its members, who carried on their activity within the framework of the earlier taxi cooperative, have the requisite experience. In that connection, the Parliament explained that the experience required by the Notice and the description of services to be provided is to be assessed not in regard to the undertaking but in regard to the drivers called on to conduct the transport operations in question.

59 It is clear from the provisions of Articles 44(1)(c) and 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, taken together, that the application initiating proceedings must indicate the subject-matter of the dispute and set out in summary form the pleas raised and that no fresh issue may be raised in the course of proceedings unless it is based on matters of law or of fact which come to light in the course of the written procedure (see, inter alia, judgments in Case 306/81 Verros v Parliament [1983] ECR 1755, paragraph 9, Case T-207/95 Ibarra Gil v Commission [1997] ECR-SC I-A-13 and II-31, paragraph 51 and Case T-217/95 Passera v Commission [1997] ECR-SC I-A-413 and II-1109, paragraph 87).

60 The plea in question was not raised, either directly or by implication, in the application, nor is it closely linked with the other pleas raised therein. It is therefore a fresh plea, as the applicant itself acknowledges. It follows that it is inadmissible unless it is based on matters of law or of fact which have come to light in the course of the written procedure.

61 The applicant claimed that it was only on reading the defence that it became aware of the fact that Coopérative Taxi 13 did not meet the requirement that tenderers had to prove that they had been active in the sector for three years.

62 It is important to point out, in that connection, that the fact that the applicant became aware of a factual matter during the course of the procedure before the Court of First Instance does not mean that that element constitutes a matter of fact coming to light in the course of the procedure. A further requirement is that the applicant was not in a position to be aware of that matter previously (see judgment in Case T-141/97 Yasse v EIB [1999] ECR-SC II-929, paragraphs 126 to 128).

63 As is clear from the case-file, the applicant was indeed in a position to be able to ascertain, prior to lodgment of the application, the circumstances under which Coopérative Taxi 13 was set up. It stated in its letter to the Parliament of 15 April 1999 that it was given to understand that the Parliament was renewing the contract which had been entered into with the association (coopérative) des artisans taxis. In that letter it went on to state that although the tender submitted by the artisans taxis strasbourgeois might be financially more favourable, the services provided would not be covered by any legal framework, contrary to the terms of the invitation to tender.

64 In response to those allegations the Parliament's Director-General for Administration, in his letter of 11 May 1999, clearly stated that the successful tenderer was Coopérative Taxi 13 (see paragraph 18 above). On lodging its application on 8 June 1999, the applicant was therefore perfectly aware of the fact that Coopérative Taxi 13 had obtained the contract as a result of the invitation to tender. It could therefore have made inquiries with the competent authority as to the date on which Coopérative Taxi 13 was set up.

65 Consequently, on the supposition that it was only on reading the defence that the applicant noticed that there might be an inconsistency between acceptance of the tender by Coopérative Taxi 13 and the condition in the Notice under which tenderers had to prove that they had been active in the sector for three years, it cannot be heard to say that it was not possible for it to raise that inconsistency in the application.

66 Therefore, since the applicant was in a position to raise in its originating application the plea based on an infringement of the abovementioned condition, it cannot, under the terms of Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure, raise it at the stage of the hearing (see judgment in Joined Cases T-305/94 to T-307/94, T-313/94 to T-316/94, T-318/94, T-325/94, T-328/94, T-329/94 and T-335/94 Limburgse Vinyl Maatschappij and Others v Commission [1999] ECR II-931, paragraph 63).

67 In light of the foregoing, the abovementioned plea put forward for the first time at the hearing is not based on matters of law or fact coming to light during the course of the procedure and must consequently be declared inadmissible.

The claim for damages

68 Under the second paragraph of Article 288 EC and the general principles to which that provision refers, Community liability depends on fulfilment of a set of conditions as regards the unlawfulness of the conduct alleged against the institution, the fact of damage and the existence of a causal link between the conduct in question and the damage complained of (see judgment in Case T-336/94 Efisol v Commission [1996] ECR II-1343, paragraph 30).

69 Since in its pleas and arguments set out above the applicant has not shown that the Parliament's conduct was unlawful, its claim for damages must be dismissed.

70 It follows from all the foregoing that the application must be dismissed in its entirety.

1. Since the existence of a public works contract is a condition for application of Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, Article 1(a) must be interpreted in such a way as to ensure that the Directive is given full effect. It is clear that the Directive aims to abolish restrictions on the freedom of establishment and on the freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts in order to open up such contracts to genuine competition. The development of such competition entails the publication at Community level of contract notices. Exposure to Community competition in accordance with the procedures provided for by the Directive ensures that the public authorities cannot indulge in favouritism.

2. Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts gives definitions of contracting authority (Article 1(b)), works (Article 1(a) and Annex II) and a work (Article 1(c)).

The definition given by the Community legislature confirms that those elements are closely related to the aim of the Directive. They must play a decisive role, therefore, when it falls to be determined whether a public works contract exists for the purposes of the Directive.

This means that in circumstances involving the execution, or the design and execution, of works or the execution of a work for a contracting authority within the meaning of the Directive, the assessment of the situation in terms of the other elements referred to in Article 1(a) of the Directive must be made in such a way as to ensure that the Directive is not deprived of practical effect, particularly where that situation displays special characteristics because of the provisions of national law applicable to it.

3. The fact that a provision of national law allowing direct execution of infrastructure works forms part of a set of urban development regulations that are of a special nature and pursue a specific aim, separate from that of Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, is not sufficient to exclude the direct execution of works from the scope of the Directive when the elements needed to bring it within its scope are present.

(see para. 66)

4. It does not follow from the fact that, under a development plan, the municipal authorities in question are not free to choose the other party to the contract since by law that person must be the owner of the land in question that the relationship between the authorities and the developer does not constitute a contract, since it is the development agreement concluded between them which determines in each case the various infrastructure works to be undertaken, together with the related terms and conditions, including the requirement that the projects for such works be approved by the municipality.

(see para. 71)

5. The pecuniary nature of the contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts relates to the consideration due from the public authority concerned in return for the execution of the works which are the object of the contract referred to in Article 1(a) of the Directive and which will be at the disposal of the public authority.

(see para. 77)

6. Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts does not require that, in order to be classed as a contractor, a person who enters into a contract with a contracting authority must be capable of direct performance using his own resources. The person in question need only be able to arrange for execution of the works in question and to furnish the necessary guarantees in that connection.

(see para. 90)

7. In order to comply with Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts in cases concerning the execution of infrastructure works, the municipal authorities constituting a local authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of the Directive need not themselves apply the award-of-contract procedures laid down therein. The Directive would still be given full effect if the national legislation allowed the municipal authorities to require the developer holding the building permit, under the agreements concluded with them, to carry out the work contracted for in accordance with the procedures laid down in the Directive so as to discharge their own obligations under the Directive. In such a case, the developer must be regarded, by virtue of the agreements concluded with the municipality exempting him from the infrastructure contribution in return for the execution of public infrastructure works, as the holder of an express mandate granted by the municipality for the construction of that work. Article 3(4) of the Directive expressly allows for the possibility of the rules concerning publicity to be applied by persons other than the contracting authority in cases where public works are contracted out.

(see paras 57, 100)

8. Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts precludes national urban development legislation under which, without the procedures laid down in the Directive being applied, the holder of a building permit or approved development plan may execute infrastructure works directly, by way of total or partial set-off against the contribution payable in respect of the grant of the permit, in cases where the value of that work is the same as or exceeds the ceiling fixed by the Directive.

(see para. 103 and operative part)

9. When the national court has not identified the provisions of Community law of which it seeks an interpretation, nor specified precisely which aspects of the relevant national legislation raise difficulties in terms of Community law when applied in the case before it, it is not possible to identify the specific problem arising in the main proceedings concerning the interpretation of Community law and therefore the question referred for a preliminary ruling must be held inadmissible.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Sixth Chamber),

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per la Lombardia by order of 11 June 1998, hereby rules:

Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts precludes national urban development legislation under which, without the procedures laid down in the Directive being applied, the holder of a building permit or approved development plan may execute infrastructure works directly, by way of total or partial set-off against the contribution payable in respect of the grant of the permit, in cases where the value of that work is the same as or exceeds the ceiling fixed by the Directive.

1 By order of 11 June 1998, received at the Court on 9 November 1998, the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per la Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court of Lombardy) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty (now Article 234 EC) two questions on the interpretation of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54, hereinafter the Directive).

2 Those questions were raised in the course of two actions brought against the City of Milan. The plaintiffs in the first action are the Ordine degli Architetti delle Province di Milano e Lodi (Order of Architects of the Provinces of Milan and Lodi; hereinafter the Order of Architects) and Piero de Amicis, an architect; the second action was brought by the Consiglio Nazionale degli Architetti (National Council of Architects; hereinafter the CNA) and Leopoldo Freyrie, an architect. Pirelli SpA (hereinafter Pirelli), Milano Centrale Servizi SpA (hereinafter MCS) and the Fondazione Teatro alla Scala, formerly the Ente Autonomo Teatro alla Scala (hereinafter the FTS) were joined as defendants.

Community legislation

3 The Directive was adopted on the basis of Article 57(2) of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 47(2) EC), Article 66 of the EC Treaty (now Article 55 EC) and Article 100a of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 95 EC).

4 According to the second recital in the preamble to the Directive, the simultaneous attainment of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts awarded in Member States on behalf of the State, or regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law entails not only the abolition of restrictions but also the coordination of national procedures for the award of public works contracts.

5 According to the tenth recital, to ensure development of effective competition in the field of public contracts, it is necessary that contract notices drawn up by the contracting authorities of Member States be advertised throughout the Community.

6 Under Article 1(a), (b) and (c) of the Directive:

For the purposes of this Directive:

(a) "public works contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a contractor and a contracting authority as defined in (b), which have as their object either the execution, or both the execution and design, of works related to one of the activities referred to in Annex II or a work defined in (c) below, or the execution, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority;

(b) "contracting authorities" shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

...

(c) a "work" means the outcome of building or civil engineering, works taken as a whole that is sufficient of itself to fulfil an economic and technical function.

7 The activities referred to in Annex II, mentioned in Article 1(a) of the Directive, are the building and civil engineering works in Class 50 of the general industrial classification of economic activities within the European Communities (NACE). The construction of buildings is expressly listed among those activities.

8 Article 3(4) of the Directive provides:

Member States shall take the necessary steps to ensure that a concessionaire other than a contracting authority shall apply the advertising rules listed in Article 11(4), (6), (7), and (9) to (13), and in Article 16, in respect of the contracts which it awards to third parties when the value of the contracts is not less than [EUR] 5 000 000.

9 Articles 4 and 5 specify the types of contract to which the Directive does not apply, namely (i) contracts governed by Council Directive 90/531/EEC of 17 September 1990 on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1990 L 297, p. 1); (ii) works contracts which are declared secret or the execution of which must be accompanied by special security measures or when the protection of the basic interests of the Member State's security so requires; and (iii) public contracts governed by different procedural rules and awarded in pursuance of certain international agreements or pursuant to the particular procedure of an international organisation.

10 Article 6(1) states that the Directive applies to public works contracts whose estimated value net of VAT is not less than [EUR] 5 000 000.

11 With respect to the procedures for awarding public works contracts, Article 7(2) and (3) of the Directive specify the circumstances in which contracting authorities may employ negotiated procedures, these being defined in Article 1(g) of the Directive as procedures where contracting authorities consult contractors of their choice and negotiate the terms of the contract with one or more of them.

12 Article 7(2) of the Directive lists three cases in which the negotiated procedure must be preceded by publication of a contract notice. Article 7(3) lists five cases in which prior publication of a contract notice is not necessary: (i) where an open or restricted procedure has proved unsuccessful; (ii) when, for practical or legal reasons, the works may only be carried out by a particular contractor; (iii) in cases of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseen by the contracting authorities; (iv) in cases requiring additional works not provided for in a contract which has already been awarded; and (v) for works consisting in the repetition of similar works provided for under an earlier contract, awarded in accordance with the open procedure or the restricted procedure.

13 Article 7(4) of the Directive states that, in all other cases, contracting authorities are to award their public works contracts in accordance with the open procedure or the restricted procedure.

14 Under Article 11(2) of the Directive, a contracting authority which wishes to award a public works contract by open, restricted or negotiated procedure in one of the cases referred to in Article 7(2) must advertise that intention by means of a notice.

15 Under Article 11(9) of the Directive, the notice must be published in full in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

National legislation

Italian legislation on urban development

16 It is clear from the documents before the Court that in Italy construction is subject to the control of the public authorities. Under Article 1 of Law No 10 of 28 January 1977 laying down rules concerning the suitability of land for development (GURI No 27 of 29 January 1977, hereinafter Law No 10/77), [a]ny activity involving the urban development of municipal land and building works on such land entails liability to contribute to the related costs and the execution of such works is conditional upon permission being granted by the mayor.

17 Article 3 of Law No 10/77 provides, under the heading, Charge for the grant of building permission, that the grant of permission entails liability to pay a proportion of the urban development and construction costs (hereinafter the infrastructure contribution).

18 The infrastructure contribution is paid to the municipality when permission is granted. However, under Article 11(1) of Law No 10/77, by way of total or partial set-off against the amount due, the holder of the permission may undertake to execute the infrastructure works directly, in accordance with the procedures and standards laid down by the municipality.

19 Under Article 4(1) of Law No 847 of 29 September 1964 - entitled Authorisation for municipalities and groups of municipalities to arrange loans for the purchase of land for the purposes of Law No 167 of 18 April 1962 - as amended by Article 44 of Law No 865 of 22 January 1971 and Article 17 of Law No 67 of 11 March 1988 (hereinafter Law No 847/64), primary infrastructure works comprise residential streets, leisure areas, parking space, sewers, networks for the distribution of water, electricity and gas, street lighting and formal parks and gardens.

20 Under Article 4(2) of Law No 847/64, secondary infrastructure works comprise pre-school facilities; primary and secondary schools; buildings and campuses to accommodate higher and further education facilities; local markets; municipal branch offices; churches and other religious buildings; local sports facilities; community centres; cultural and health and fitness facilities; and local parks and gardens.

21 Provisions similar to those in Article 11(1) of Law No 10/77, albeit relating solely to primary infrastructure works, were already included in Article 31(4) of Law No 1150 of 17 August 1942 on urban development (GURI No 244 of 17 August 1942), as amended by Framework Law No 765 of 6 August 1967 (hereinafter Law No 1150/42), which provides that in no case shall permission to build be granted unless the primary infrastructure is already in place or unless the municipalities have made provision for its installation within three years thereafter or unless private persons undertake to execute those works at the same time as the construction work in respect of which they have been granted permission.

22 Specifically with regard to the coordinated execution of a number of works under a single development plan - as in the present case - Article 28(5) of Law No 1150/42 provides:

Permission from the municipality is conditional upon conclusion of an agreement, to be registered by or on behalf of the owner, under which:

(1) ... the land required for secondary infrastructure works shall be transferred free of charge, subject to the provisions of subparagraph (2) below;

(2) the owner shall undertake to bear the costs of the primary infrastructure works; the owner shall also undertake to meet part of the cost of the secondary infrastructure works involved in the development project or of the works necessary to link the area to the various public utilities;

the amount payable shall be commensurate with the nature and extent of the project works;

(3) the works referred to in subparagraph (3) above must be completed within ten years;

23 Article 28(9) of Law No 1150/42 provides that infrastructure works for which the owner is responsible must be executed within ten years.

24 At regional level, Article 8 of Lombard Regional Law No 60 of 5 December 1977 (Bolletino Ufficiale della Regione Lombardia, 2nd supplement, No 49, of 12 December 1977; hereinafter LRL No 60/77) provides that private persons may, in applications for permission, request authorisation to execute the primary or secondary infrastructure works directly, by way of total or partial set-off against the infrastructure contribution, such authorisation being granted by the municipality in so far as [it] is considered to be in the public interest.

25 On the other hand, execution of the infrastructure works involved in a development plan is governed by Article 12 of LRL No 60/77, as amended by LRL No 31 of 30 July 1986 (Bolletino Ufficiale della Regione Lombardia, 2nd supplement, No 31, of 4 August 1986, hereinafter LRL No 31/86). Article 12(1) provides:

[t]he agreement necessary for the grant of building permission in respect of the operations planned under the development project must provide for:

(a) ...;

(b) the execution, by or on behalf of the owners, of all the primary infrastructure works and part of the secondary infrastructure works or those necessary to link the area to public utilities;... where execution of those works involves costs lower than those estimated respectively for primary and secondary infrastructures within the meaning of the present Law, the balance must be paid; in any event, it shall be open to the municipality to require, rather than direct execution of the works, payment of a sum commensurate with the actual cost of the infrastructure works involved in the development projects and with the nature and extent of the building works, and in any event of an amount not lower than the charges provided for in the municipal resolution referred to in Article 3 of the present Law.

26 Cultural facilities are included in the list of secondary infrastructure works set out in Article 22(b) of Lombard Regional Law No 51 of 15 April 1975.

The Italian legislation relating to the administrative procedure

27 Under Article 11 of Law No 241 of 7 August 1990 introducing new rules governing administrative procedure and the right of access to administrative documents (GURI No 192 of 18 August 1990, hereinafter Law No 241/90), the administrative authorities may conclude, without prejudice to the rights of third parties and in pursuit of the public interest, agreements with interested parties with a view to determining the discretionary terms of the final measure or, in cases for which the law so provides, to substituting such agreements for that measure.

The dispute before the national court and the questions submitted for a preliminary ruling 28 It appears from the order for reference that the present request for a preliminary ruling has arisen in the course of two actions for the annulment of Resolution No 82/96 of 12 September 1996 and Resolution No 6/98 of 16 and 17 February 1998, adopted by the Milan City Council (hereinafter the contested resolutions).

29 By Resolution No 82/96 of 12 September 1996, the Milan City Council approved the Scala 2001 Project, a programme of works involving various separate operations.

30 The project provided for execution of the following works:

- restoration and conversion of the Teatro alla Scala, a historical building occupying an area of approximately 30 000 m2;

- conversion of municipal buildings forming part of the Ansaldo complex;

- construction, in the area known as the Bicocca, of a new theatre (commonly known as the Teatro alla Bicocca, but officially called the Teatro degli Arcimboldi) with seating for 2 300, on a piece of land covering 25 000 m2 (plus 2 000 m2 parking space), intended initially, throughout the period required for the restoration and conversion of the La Scala opera house, to accommodate the activities normally housed there, and later to accommodate all the activities associated with the performance of dramatic works and other cultural events.

31 In the Bicocca area, according to the order for reference, a large-scale development project - privately promoted and known as the Bicocca project - was already under way. This was aimed at transforming the old industrial estate of Bicocca and involved the conversion of a huge complex of buildings. Pirelli, together with other private operators, was the owner-developer of that project. At the material time, the project, which had been started in 1990, was nearing completion. One of the urban development measures planned by the City of Milan for the Bicocca area was a multi-communal general-purpose complex. It decided that the new theatre planned for under the Scala 2001 Project should form part of that complex.

32 By Resolution No 82/96, the Comune di Milano (Milan Municipal Council) also assumed a number of commitments in relation to the Scala 2001 Project, concerning the execution of works, timetables and funding, when it approved a special agreement which the City of Milan had concluded with Pirelli, the Ente Autonomo Teatro alla Scala and MCS, as agent for the promoters of the Bicocca project. That agreement, which was signed on 18 October 1996, provided inter alia that the Bicocca element of the Scala 2001 Project would be executed in accordance with the following rules:

- Pirelli was to bear the cost of coordinating the preliminary and final stages of the project and its execution, as well as the building operations involved in the restoration of the La Scala opera house, the conversion of the buildings in the Ansaldo complex and the construction of the Teatro alla Bicocca; the actual task of coordination was to be entrusted to MCS;

- MCS, as agent for the promoters of the development project, would be responsible for construction of the Teatro alla Bicocca (as well as the adjacent car-park) in the area covered by the development project and on the land earmarked for that purpose, which the promoters had undertaken to transfer free of charge to the City of Milan; that construction would be classed as secondary infrastructure and undertaken in return for reduction of the infrastructure contribution due to the City of Milan under Italy's national and regional legislation. MCS's responsibility was expressly confined to execution of the outer shell of the building, ready for fitting out. One of MCS's obligations was to hand over the building before the end of 1998;

- Responsibility for fitting out the Teatro alla Bicocca, on the other hand, was to remain with the City of Milan, which would organise a tendering procedure for that purpose.

33 The Order of Architects and Mr De Amicis in his own right brought proceedings before the Regional Administrative Court of Lombardy for annulment of Resolution No 82/96.

34 Following changes in policy made at the beginning of 1998 by the new municipal administration, which wanted the Teatro alla Bicocca to be capable of accommodating larger audiences than the original La Scala building, the Comune di Milano adopted Resolution No 6/98 which, inter alia:

- approved the preliminary plan for construction of the new theatre in the Bicocca area;

- confirmed that execution of that work would in part be undertaken directly by the promoters in accordance with their contractual obligations under the development plan - the associated costs being estimated at ITL 25 billion - and in part on the basis of a tendering procedure organised by the City of Milan;

- amended the agreement of 18 October 1996 with regard to the time-limits set for certain of the operations planned; in particular, the date set for completion of the Teatro alla Bicocca became 31 December 2000.

35 The CNA and Mr Freyrie, acting in his own right, brought actions before the Regional Administrative Court of Lombardy for annulment of Resolution No 6/98.

36 In both actions (joined for the purposes of the final judgment), the applicants challenge the validity of the contested resolutions both under Italian law on urban development and public procurement and under Community law. As regards the latter, they argue that the Teatro alla Bicocca is in the nature of public works and that the Comune di Milano ought therefore to have followed the Community procedure for inviting tenders. However, by the contested resolutions the Council had awarded the contract on the basis of private negotiations, thereby damaging the interests represented by the Order of Architects and the applicant architects.

37 In the order for reference, the national court concludes that the City of Milan correctly applied the Italian legislation, both national and regional, on urban development. However, suspecting that the Italian legislation should be disapplied - since it permits infrastructure works to a value higher than the ceiling fixed by the Directive to be executed without a prior call for tenders - the national court decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

1. Is national and regional legislation which allows a builder (who holds a building permit or approved development plan) to carry out infrastructure works directly, by way of total or partial set-off against the contribution payable (Article 11 of Law No 10/77, Articles 28 and 31 of Law No 1150 of 17 August 1942, Articles 8 and 12 of Law No 60 of the Lombardy Region of 5 December 1977), contrary to Directive 93/37/EEC, having regard to the strict tendering principles imposed on Member States by Community law in respect of all public works of a value of [EUR] 5 million or more?

2. Notwithstanding the principles concerning tendering referred to above, may agreements between the administrative authorities and a private person (generally permitted by Article 11 of Law No 241 of 7 August 1990) be regarded as compatible with Community law in areas where the procedure is that the administrative authorities choose a party with whom a contract for services is to be concluded, in cases where such services exceed the threshold laid down by the relevant directives?

38 The City of Milan and the FTS contend that the first question is unrelated to the subject-matter of the main proceedings.

39 They argue that, since the applicants in the main proceedings are either architects or professional bodies representing architects, the national court has confined admissibility of the main proceedings to issues arising from the award of contracts for the design of the Teatro alla Bicocca, to the exclusion of those for building works. Design work constitutes the provision of services. However, the first question concerns the interpretation of Directive 93/37 which covers public works contracts, not public service contracts, which are governed by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L

40 Moreover, the design work in question was, quite simply, provided free of charge to the City of Milan, which means that the cost of that work cannot be included in the cost of constructing the Teatro alla Bicocca, direct execution of which, by way of set-off against the infrastructure contribution, would damage the interests of architects.

41 It is settled law that in the context of the cooperation between the Court of Justice and the national courts provided for by Article 177 of the Treaty, it is solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court (see, for example, Case C-379/98 PreussenElektra [2001] ECR I-2099, paragraph 38). The Court may refuse to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main proceedings or to their purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted (see, in particular, PreussenElektra, cited above, paragraph 39).

42 In the present case, it is clear from the order for reference that the applicants in the main proceedings seek annulment of the contested resolutions because they permitted a public work - the Teatro alla Bicocca - to be executed directly, without recourse to a Community tendering procedure, thus damaging the applicants' interests. It is also clear from the order for reference that those actions have been declared admissible.

43 There is no doubt that, if a Community tendering procedure had to be organised for the construction of the Teatro alla Bicocca, it could also cover the related design work. The fact that such work is covered by the Directive is confirmed by the wording of Article 1(a), which defines public works contracts, for the purposes of the Directive, as contracts which have as their object either the execution, or both the execution and design, of works.

44 Consequently, the Court must reject the argument that the first question, in so far as it concerns the interpretation of the Directive, bears no relation to the subject-matter of the dispute in the main proceedings.

45 Accordingly, the fact that the design work on the Teatro alla Bicocca was provided free of charge does not cast any doubt on the relevance of the first question.

46 That question must therefore be answered.

47 The first question concerns the compatibility with the Directive of the national and regional legislation at issue in the main proceedings, under which infrastructure works may be executed directly in return for exemption, wholly or in part, from the contribution due.

48 It should be noted at the outset that, in the context of proceedings brought under Article 177 of the Treaty, the Court does not have jurisdiction to give a ruling on the compatibility of a national measure with Community law. However, it does have jurisdiction to supply the national court with a ruling on the interpretation of Community law so as to enable that court to determine whether such compatibility exists in order to decide the case before it (see, inter alia, Joined Cases C-37/96 and C-38/96 Sodiprem and Others [1998] ECR I-2039, paragraph 22).

49 The first question should therefore be understood as seeking to ascertain whether the Directive precludes national urban development legislation under which the holder of a building permit or of an approved development plan may execute infrastructure works directly, by way of total or partial set-off against the contribution payable in respect of the grant of such permission in cases where the value of that work is the same as or exceeds the ceiling fixed by the Directive.

50 In order to answer that question (thus understood), it must be determined whether the direct execution of infrastructure works, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, constitutes a public works contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of the Directive.

51 According to the definition given in that provision, a public works contract necessarily comprises the following elements: a contract for pecuniary interest, concluded in writing, between a contractor and a contracting authority as defined in Article 1(b) of the Directive, which has as its object either the execution of a certain work or of works as defined by the Directive.

52 Since the existence of a public works contract is a condition for application of the Directive, Article 1(a) must be interpreted in such a way as to ensure that the Directive is given full effect. It is clear from the preamble to the Directive and from the second and tenth recitals, in particular, that the Directive aims to abolish restrictions on the freedom of establishment and on the freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts in order to open up such contracts to genuine competition. As the tenth recital states, the development of such competition entails the publication at Community level of contract notices.

53 Furthermore, the Directive gives definitions of contracting authority (Article 1(b)), works (Article 1(a) and Annex II) and a work (Article 1(c)).

54 The definition given by the Community legislature confirms that those elements are closely related to the aim of the Directive. They must play a decisive role, therefore, when it falls to be determined whether a public works contract exists for the purposes of the Directive.

55 This means that in circumstances involving the execution, or the design and execution, of works or the execution of a work for a contracting authority within the meaning of the Directive, the assessment of the situation in terms of the other elements referred to in Article 1(a) of the Directive must be made in such a way as to ensure that the Directive is not deprived of practical effect, particularly where that situation displays special characteristics because of the provisions of national law applicable to it.

56 Those are the criteria in the light of which it must be determined whether the notion of public works contracts covers the direct execution of infrastructure works, such as the building of the outer shell of a theatre, under conditions such as those provided for by Italian urban development legislation.

The element relating to a contracting authority

57 It is common ground that the municipality involved in the main proceedings constitutes a local authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of the Directive and it therefore falls within the definition of contracting authority given in that provision.

The element relating to the execution of works or of a work as defined in Article 1(a) of the Directive

58 Under Article 1(a) of the Directive, public works contracts must have as their object:

- the execution, or both the execution and design, of works related to one of the activities referred to in Annex II; or

- the execution, or both the execution and design, of a work as defined in Article 1(c), that is to say the outcome of building or civil engineering works taken as a whole that is sufficient of itself to fulfil an economic and technical function; or

- the execution, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority.

59 Infrastructure works of the kind listed in Article 4 of Law No 847/64 constitute either building or civil engineering works, hence activities of the kind referred to in Annex II to the Directive, or works sufficient in themselves to fulfil an economic and technical function. They thus satisfy, at the very least, the criteria laid down in the first and second indents of paragraph 58 above.

60 Specifically, construction of the outer shell of a theatre (the activity at issue in the main proceedings) is an activity in Group 501 of the NACE, entitled Construction of... buildings, both residential and non-residential, referred to in Annex II to the Directive.

61 Consequently, the execution of infrastructure works such as the construction of the outer shell of a theatre constitutes works for the purposes of Article 1(a) of the Directive.

62 It thus follows from paragraphs 57 to 61 above that the situation at issue includes the two important elements - a contracting authority and works or a work - which must both be present if it is to be concluded that a public works contract exists.

The element relating to the existence of a contract

63 According to the Milan City Council, Pirelli, MCS and the FTS, this element is lacking because the direct execution of infrastructure works is provided for by a rule contained in the Italian national and regional legislation on urban development, which differs from the Community public procurement legislation in terms of its subject-matter, purpose, characteristics and the interests protected.

64 The above parties also contend that the local authority has no power to choose the person to be given responsibility for executing works since, by operation of law, that person is the owner of the land to be developed.

65 Lastly, both the Comune di Milano and the other defendants in the main proceedings contend that, even if it were accepted that direct execution could be carried out on the basis of commitments incorporated in the development agreement, the contractual element would still be lacking. The development agreement is governed by public law and concluded in the exercise of public authority, not private initiative. It cannot, therefore, be a contract for the purposes of the Directive. The municipality retains the powers delegated to it by the State for the management of its territory, one of which is the power to amend or revoke development plans in the light of changing circumstances or to adopt new criteria of assessment which better meet those needs (judgment No 6941 of 25 July 1994 of the Corte Suprema di Cassazione, Combined Chambers). For the same reason, they say, the typical elements constituting the raison d'être of a works contract are also lacking.

66 It should be noted, first, that the fact that the provision of national law allowing direct execution of infrastructure works forms part of a set of urban development regulations that are of a special nature and pursue a specific aim, separate from that of the Directive, is not sufficient to exclude the direct execution of works from the scope of the Directive when the elements needed to bring it within the scope of the Directive are present.

67 In that regard, as the national court pointed out, the infrastructure works referred to in Article 4 of Law No 847/64 are fully capable of constituting public works, partly because they are specifically designed to meet development requirements over and above the construction of housing and partly because they come wholly under the control of the competent administrative authority since it holds a legal right over the use of such works, so as to ensure that they remain at the service of all members of the local community.

68 These are important considerations because they confirm that the planned works are intended, as has always been maintained, for the benefit of the public.

69 Moreover, it is clear from the order for reference that Article 28(5) of Law No 1150/42 allows for the possibility of secondary infrastructure works being executed directly as part of a development project and that, according to Article 12 of LRL No 60/77, as amended by Article 3 of LRL No 31/86, direct execution is the norm. However, those provisions do not preclude the existence of a contract, as required by Article 1(a) of the Directive.

70 By effect of the above provision of Lombard regional legislation, the municipal authorities retain at all times the power to require in lieu of the direct execution of works payment of a sum commensurate with the actual costs of the works and with the extent and nature of those works. Moreover, where infrastructure works are executed directly, a development agreement must always be concluded between the municipal authorities and the owner or owners of the land to be developed.

71 It is true that the municipal authorities are not free to choose the other party to the contract since by law that person must be the owner of the land in question. However, it does not follow that the relationship between the authorities and the developer does not constitute a contract, since it is the development agreement concluded between them which determines in each case the various infrastructure works to be undertaken, together with the related terms and conditions, including the requirement that the projects for such works be approved by the municipality. Furthermore, it is by virtue of the commitments assumed by the developer in that agreement that the municipality acquires legal rights over use of the works contracted for, so that they can be made available to the public.

72 In the main proceedings, that is borne out by the fact that pursuant to the contested resolutions the Teatro alla Bicocca must be brought into being partly through direct execution by the developers in accordance with their contractual obligations under the development plan and partly through a tendering procedure organised by the City of Milan.

73 Lastly, contrary to the argument put forward by the Comune di Milano and the other defendants in the main proceedings, the fact that the development agreement is governed by public law and was concluded in the exercise of public power does not preclude, but rather militates in favour of, the existence of a contract as required by Article 1(a) of the Directive. In several Member States, any contract concluded between a contracting authority and a contractor is an administrative contract, which as such is governed by public law.

74 In the light of the above considerations, the terms of the development agreement and the agreements concluded under it are sufficient to provide the contractual element required by Article 1(a) of the Directive.

75 Moreover, that interpretation is consistent with the basic aim of the Directive which, as stated in paragraph 52 above, is to open up public works contracts to competition. Exposure to Community competition in accordance with the procedures provided for by the Directive ensures that the public authorities cannot indulge in favouritism. Accordingly, the fact that the public authorities are not free to choose the contractor cannot in itself justify non-application of the Directive, since that would ultimately preclude from Community competition the execution of works to which the Directive would otherwise apply.

The element relating to a contract for pecuniary interest

76 According to the Comune di Milano and the other defendants in the main proceedings, the contract is not bilateral, since no consideration is due from the municipality. The developer's right to obtain building permission is not the quid pro quo for payment of the infrastructure contribution or the direct execution of infrastructure works, and the provision of services to the site, which takes place as part of the process of transforming the area, does not depend either on the benefits arising from that transformation or on the advantage gained by the holder of the building permit.

77 It must be pointed out that the pecuniary nature of the contract relates to the consideration due from the public authority concerned in return for the execution of the works which are the object of the contract referred to in Article 1(a) of the Directive and which will be at the disposal of the public authority.

78 In a case such as that before the national court, the question whether - in circumstances where infrastructure works have been executed directly - the contract is of a pecuniary nature for the municipal authorities must be considered from a specific viewpoint, because of the peculiarities of Italian urban development legislation.

79 Thus, under Article 28(5)(2) of Law No 1150/42 and Article 12(b) of LRL No 60/77, as amended by Article 3 of LRL No 31/86, it is the owners of the land to be developed who bear the costs of primary infrastructure works as well as a proportion of the costs of the secondary infrastructure works needed for the project or of other works needed in order to link the area concerned to public utilities.

80 That being so, Article 11(1) of Law No 10/77 provides that the holder of building permission may undertake to carry out the infrastructure works directly... by way of total or partial set-off against the amount payable in respect of the infrastructure contribution, payment of which is linked to the grant of permission, pursuant to Article 3 of that Law.

81 The phrase by way of set-off used in Article 11(1) of Law No 10/77 suggests that, in consenting to the direct execution of infrastructure works, the municipal authorities waive recovery of the amount due in respect of the contribution provided for in Article 3 of that Law.

82 However, several parties - the Comune di Milano and the other defendants in the main proceedings, and the Italian Government - contend that this interpretation is incorrect, primarily because provision is made for payment of the infrastructure contribution as an alternative to the direct execution of works and, consequently, it is erroneous to believe that there is a financial obligation towards the municipality in any event, which is waived in cases where the works are executed directly. The real effect of the direct execution of works is that it gives the owner-developer freedom to build, relieving him of the obligation to pay the infrastructure contribution due as a result of the grant of building permission. The term set-off refers, therefore, to the fact that execution of the works discharges an obligation, not to consideration or some other benefit granted to the developers by the municipality.

83 Those objections concern the interpretation of Italian urban development legislation and the way in which the legislature envisaged the relationship between the direct execution of works and the obligation to pay the infrastructure contribution. Reference must be made, therefore, to the appraisal of that relationship made by the national court.

84 The national court states in the order for reference that, contrary to the arguments put forward by the defendants in the main proceedings, a holder of a building permit or an approved development plan who executes infrastructure works is not providing any service free of charge, since he is in fact settling a debt to the same value (but involving no cash adjustment) which arises towards the municipality - namely, the infrastructure contribution - and the fact that that obligation may be met in either of two forms - a cash payment or direct execution of the works - does not mean that the basis of the obligation can be differentiated according to the alternative that is chosen (or predetermined by the legislature).

85 That interpretation of the national legislation is consistent with the aim of the Directive, referred to in paragraph 52 of this judgment, and is therefore conducive to ensuring that the Directive has full effect.

86 Accordingly, the requirement that the contract be of a pecuniary nature must be held to be satisfied.

The element relating to a contract concluded in writing

87 It is not contested that there is a written contract in the present case: the development agreement between the municipality and the owner(s)-developer(s) was concluded in writing.

The element relating to the contractor

88 According to the Comune di Milano, the other defendants in the main proceedings and the Italian Government, that element is lacking because the developer is not necessarily the contractor or a construction undertaking, but derives his status from the fact that he owns the site to be developed. He is not required to satisfy particular conditions concerning his technical capabilities, solvency and so forth, save for the obligation to provide the municipality with appropriate guarantees in relation to the commitments entered into under the development agreement.

89 Furthermore, it is apparent from the replies to a question put by the Court that the responsibility of choosing the contractors to be entrusted with designing and executing the works lies solely with the developer holding the building permit. The works are executed in his name, not in the name of the municipality. He undertakes to hand over the infrastructure works to the municipality once they have been completed.

90 It should be noted that Article 1(a) of the Directive does not require that, in order to be classed as a contractor, a person who enters into a contract with a contracting authority must be capable of direct performance using his own resources. The person in question need only be able to arrange for execution of the works in question and to furnish the necessary guarantees in that connection.

91 Thus, Article 20 of the Directive states that [i]n the contract documents, the contracting authority may ask the tenderer to indicate in his tender any share of the contract he may intend to subcontract to third parties.

92 Along the same lines, the Court ruled that Directive 92/50 permits a service provider to establish that it fulfils the economic, financial and technical criteria for participation in a tendering procedure for the award of a public service contract by relying on the standing of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them, provided that it is able to show that it actually has at its disposal the resources of those entities which are necessary for performance of the contract (see Case C-176/98 Holst Italia [1999] ECR I-8607).

93 According to the documents before the Court, in a situation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, the developer holding a building permit has an obligation by virtue of the commitments entered into under the development agreement with the municipality to give the latter sufficient guarantees that the completed works will be handed over to the municipality and that the operator selected to execute the works will subscribe to the agreements concluded with the municipal authorities. That is the position in the present case, in so far as MCS signed the agreements entered into by the City of Milan with Pirelli.

94 In those circumstances, neither the fact that the developer is unable to execute the work using his own resources nor the fact that the operator who will be entrusted to carry out the work is chosen by the developer holding the building permit rather than by the municipal authorities means that the abovementioned element is lacking.

95 Furthermore, the fact that the infrastructure works are carried out by the holder of the building permit in his own name, before being handed over to the municipality, is not sufficient to divest the latter of its status as contracting authority in relation to the execution of such works.

96 Consequently, the contractor element must also be regarded as present.

97 In the light of the foregoing, it must be concluded that the direct execution of infrastructure works in the circumstances provided for by the Italian legislation on urban development constitutes a public works contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of the Directive.

98 It follows that, when the estimated value, net of VAT, of such works is equal to or exceeds the ceiling fixed by Article 6(1) thereof, the Directive applies.

99 Consequently, the municipal authorities are under an obligation to comply with the procedures laid down in the Directive whenever they award a public works contract of that nature.

100 That does not mean that, in cases concerning the execution of infrastructure works, the Directive is complied with only if the municipal authorities themselves apply the award-of-contract procedures laid down therein. The Directive would still be given full effect if the national legislation allowed the municipal authorities to require the developer holding the building permit, under the agreements concluded with them, to carry out the work contracted for in accordance with the procedures laid down in the Directive so as to discharge their own obligations under the Directive. In such a case, the developer must be regarded, by virtue of the agreements concluded with the municipality exempting him from the infrastructure contribution in return for the execution of public infrastructure works, as the holder of an express mandate granted by the municipality for the construction of that work. Article 3(4) of the Directive expressly allows for the possibility of the rules concerning publicity to be applied by persons other than the contracting authority in cases where public works are contracted out.

101 With regard to the procedures laid down by the Directive, it is clear from Articles 7(4) and 11(2) and (9), read together, that contracting authorities which wish to award a public works contract must advertise their intention by publishing a notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities, except in any of the cases exhaustively listed in Article 7(3) of the Directive where the contracting authority is authorised to use the negotiated procedure without first publishing a contract notice.

102 In the present case, there is nothing in the documents before the Court to suggest that the direct execution of infrastructure works under the conditions laid down by the Italian legislation on urban development is capable of falling within one of the cases contemplated in Article 7(3).

103 It should therefore be stated in answer to the first question that the Directive precludes national urban development legislation under which, without the procedures laid down in the Directive being applied, the holder of a building permit or approved development plan may execute infrastructure works directly, by way of total or partial set-off against the contribution payable in respect of the grant of the permit, in cases where the value of that work is the same as or exceeds the ceiling fixed by the Directive.

104 The CNA maintains that this question is irrelevant. Since none of the conditions provided for by Article 11 of Law No 241/90 is satisfied in the case before the national court and having regard to the fact that the agreements concluded for the award of public contracts outside the procedures laid down by the relevant directives undoubtedly impair the rights of contractors or of members of a profession seeking to have the contract awarded to them, Article 11 of Law No 241/90 does not apply in circumstances such as those at issue.

105 Without there being any need to evaluate the CNA's arguments, it must be observed that the national court has not identified the provisions of Community law of which it seeks an interpretation; nor does it specify precisely which aspects of the relevant Italian legislation raise difficulties in terms of Community law when applied in the case before it.

106 In the absence of such information, it is not possible to identify the specific problem arising in the main proceedings concerning the interpretation of Community law.

107 It must therefore be concluded that the second question is inadmissible.

1. Article 1(b) of Directives 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, 93/36 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts and 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts provides, in its first subparagraph, that contracting authorities covers inter alia, bodies governed by public law, and in its second subparagraph, that a body governed by public law means any body established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character (first indent), having legal personality (second indent) and financed for the most part by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law (third indent).

In the third indent, the expression financed... by [one or more contracting authorities] , properly construed, includes awards or grants paid by one or more contracting authorities for the support of research work and student grants paid by local education authorities to universities in respect of tuition for named students. Payments made by one or more contracting authorities either in the context of a contract for services comprising research work or as consideration for other services such as consultancy or the organisation of conferences do not, by contrast, constitute public financing within the meaning of those directives.

On a proper construction, the term for the most part in Article 1(b), second subparagraph, third indent, cited above, means more than half.

In order to determine correctly the percentage of public financing of a particular body, account must be taken of all of its income, including that which results from a commercial activity.

Judgment

Costs

45 The costs incurred by the Governments of the United Kingdom, France, the Netherlands and Austria, and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Fifth Chamber),

in answer to the questions referred to it by the High Court of Justice of England and Wales, Queen's Bench Division (Divisional Court) by order of 21 July 1998, hereby rules:

1. The expression financed... by [one or more contracting authorities] in Article 1(b), second subparagraph, third indent, of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts and Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, properly construed, includes awards or grants paid by one or more contracting authorities for the support of research work and student grants paid by local education authorities to universities in respect of tuition for named students. Payments made by one or more contracting authorities either in the context of a contract for services comprising research work or as consideration for other services such as consultancy or the organisation of conferences do not, by contrast, constitute public financing within the meaning of those directives.

2. On a proper construction, the term for the most part in Article 1(b), second subparagraph, third indent, of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 means more than half.

3. In order to determine correctly the percentage of public financing of a particular body account must be taken of all of its income, including that which results from a commercial activity.

4. The decision as to whether a body such as the University of Cambridge is a contracting authority must be made annually and the budgetary year in which the procurement procedure commences must be regarded as the most appropriate period for calculating the way in which that body is financed, so that the calculation must be made on the basis of the figures available at the beginning of the budgetary year, even if they are provisional. A body which constitutes a contracting authority for the purposes of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 when a procurement procedure commences remains, as far as that procurement is concerned, subject to the requirements of those directives until such time as the relevant procedure has been completed.

1 By order of 21 July 1998, which was received at the Court on 26 October 1998, the High Court of Justice of England and Wales, Queen's Bench Division (Divisional Court), referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty (now Article 234 EC) four questions concerning the interpretation of Article 1 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), Article 1 of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and Article 1 of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54).

2 The questions arose in proceedings brought by the University of Cambridge (the University) in the High Court following the decision of H.M. Treasury (the Treasury) to retain universities of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in the list of bodies governed by public law notified to the Commission and reproduced in Annex I to Directive 93/37, while amending the text of that annex.

3 Article 1 of Directive 93/37 provides:

For the purpose of this directive:

(b) "contracting authorities" shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, [or] associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

A "body governed by public law" means any body:

- established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

- having legal personality, and

- financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law;

The lists of bodies and categories of bodies governed by public law which fulfil the criteria referred to in the second subparagraph are set out in Annex I. These lists shall be as exhaustive as possible and may be reviewed in accordance with the procedure laid down in Article 35. To this end, Member States shall periodically notify the Commission of any changes of their lists of bodies and categories of bodies;

4 Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 and Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36 were drafted in terms essentially identical to Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37.

5 As far as the United Kingdom is concerned, the list of bodies and categories of bodies governed by public law in Annex I to Directive 93/37 includes universities and polytechnics, maintained schools and colleges.

National legislation

6 Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 were transposed into United Kingdom law by the following measures:

- Public Services Contracts Regulations 1993 (S.I. 1993/3228)

- Public Supply Contracts Regulations 1995 (S.I. 1995/201)

- Public Supply Contracts Regulations 1991 (S.I. 1991/2680).

7 Those regulations do not reproduce Annex I to Directive 93/37. However, each of them contains a definition of the bodies governed by public law based on the definition provided by Community law.

The main proceedings and the questions referred

8 In 1995 and 1996 the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals of the Universities communicated to the Treasury its view that Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 did not apply universally to universities, so that the reference to universities in Annex I to Directive 93/37, to which the third indent of Article 1(b) of those directives refers, should be deleted.

9 On 17 January 1997 the Treasury suggested to the Commission that the reference to Universities and polytechnics, maintained schools and colleges be replaced by the words Maintained schools. Universities and colleges financed for the most part by other contracting authorities, thereby restricting the circumstances in which the abovementioned directives were applicable in the case of universities and taking into account the most recent developments, the Further and Higher Education Act of 1992 having rendered obsolete, in this context, the title of polytechnics.

10 That proposal has not yet been adopted by the Commission under the procedure provided for in Article 35 of Directive 93/37.

11 The amendment to Annex I of Directive 93/37 proposed by the Treasury did not satisfy the University, which brought an application for judicial review (dated 7 November 1996) in the High Court contesting the position adopted by the Treasury.

12 On 21 March 1997 the matter came before the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court, which gave the University leave to seek judicial review on the ground that there was a substantive issue concerning the interpretation of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, and more specifically the exact interpretation of the expression financed, for the most part by one or more contracting authorities.

13 By order of 21 July 1998, the High Court of Justice of England and Wales, Queen's Bench Division (Divisional Court), stayed proceedings pending a preliminary ruling on the following questions:

1. Where Article 1 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC, Council Directive 93/37/EEC and Council Directive 93/36/EEC ("the directives") refers to any body "financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law" what monies are to be included in the expression "financed... by [one or more contracting authorities]"? In particular, in relation to payments to an entity such as the University of Cambridge, does the expression include:-

(a) awards or grants paid by one or more contracting authorities for the support of research work;

(b) consideration paid by one or more contracting authorities for the supply of services comprising research work;

(c) consideration paid by one or more contracting authorities for the supply of other services, such as consultancy or the organisation of conferences;

(d) student grants paid by local education authorities to universities in respect of tuition for named students?

2. What percentage or other meaning is to be given to the expression "for the most part" in Article

1 of the directives?

3. If the expression "for the most part" is defined in terms of a percentage figure, is the calculation limited to considering sources of finance for academic and related purposes or should it include finance obtained in relation to commercial activities as well?

4. Over what period should any calculation be made for determining whether a university is a "contracting authority" in respect of any particular procurement, and how are foreseeable or future changes to be taken into account?

First question

14 As appears from the order for reference, universities in the United Kingdom are financed from various sources and those funds are provided for a variety of purposes and on various grounds. Some funds go to universities on the basis of periodical assessments of the quality of the research they do and/or depending on the number of students they receive; other funds come from awards, grants or the supply of food and accommodation; still others represent payment for services commissioned by charities, government departments, industry or commerce.

15 It is therefore necessary to determine the real nature of each of the forms of financing referred to in the first question in order to determine their significance for the University and hence the influence they have on whether that body is to be regarded as a contracting authority.

16 It should be borne in mind at the outset that, as far as the purpose of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 is concerned, the Court has held that the purpose of coordinating at Community level the procedures for the award of public contracts is to eliminate barriers to the freedom to provide services and goods and therefore to protect the interests of traders established in a Member State who wish to offer goods or services to contracting authorities established in another Member State (see, to that effect, Case C-360/96 Gemeente Arnhem, Gemeente Rheden v BFI Holding [1998] ECR I-6821, paragraph 41).

17 Consequently, the aim of the directives is to avoid both the risk of preference being given to national tenderers or applicants whenever a contract is awarded by the contracting authorities and the possibility that a body financed or controlled by the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law may choose to be guided by considerations other than economic ones (see, to that effect, Case C-44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others v Strohal Rotationsdruck [1998] ECR I-73, paragraph 33, and BFI Holding, cited above, paragraphs 42 and 43).

18 According to Article 1(b), second subparagraph, of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, a body governed by public law means any body established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character (first indent), having legal personality (second indent) and financed for the most part by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law (third indent).

19 In the main proceedings it is common ground that the University meets the two conditions mentioned in the first two indents of Article 1(b), second subparagraph, of the directives. Consequently, whether the University is to be included in the list for Annex I of Directive 93/37 depends in this case solely on the answer to the question whether that university is financed for the most part by one or more contracting authorities within the meaning of the third indent of that provision.

20 As regards the alternative conditions set out in Article 1(b), second subparagraph, third indent, of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, paragraph 20 of the judgment in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria (cited above) indicates that each reflects the close dependency of a body on the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law. The provision thus defines the three forms of body governed by public law as three types of close dependency on another contracting authority.

21 Whilst the way in which a particular body is financed may reveal whether it is closely dependent on another contracting authority, it is clear that that criterion is not an absolute one. Not all payments made by a contracting authority have the effect of creating or reinforcing a specific relationship of subordination or dependency. Only payments which go to finance or support the activities of the body concerned without any specific consideration therefor may be described as public financing.

22 It follows that payments in the form of awards or grants for the support of research work, such as those referred to in paragraph (a) of the first question, may be regarded as financing by a contracting authority. Though the recipient of such financing need not be the university itself, but a member of it in his capacity as a provider of services, we are concerned with financing that goes to the institution as a whole in the context of its research work.

23 Similarly, the grants referred to in paragraph (d) of the first question may be classified as public financing. Those payments constitute a social measure introduced for the benefit of certain students who by themselves would not be able to meet tuition fees which are sometimes very high. Since there is no contractual consideration for those payments, they should be regarded as financing by a contracting authority in the context of its educational activities.

24 The position is quite different in the case of the sources of financing referred to in paragraphs (b) and (c) of the first question. The sums paid by one or more contracting authorities constitute in that case consideration for contractual services provided by the university, such as the execution of particular research work or the organisation of seminars and conferences. It matters little in this context whether those activities of a commercial nature happen to coincide with the teaching and research activities of the university. The contracting authority has in fact an economic interest in providing the service.

25 Naturally, such a contractual relationship may also make the body concerned dependent on the contracting authority. However, as the Advocate General has noted in paragraph 46 of his Opinion, the nature of the relationship is not the same as that which would result from a mere subsidy. Rather, it is analogous to the dependency that exists in normal commercial relationships formed by reciprocal contracts freely negotiated between the contracting parties. Consequently, the payments referred to in paragraphs (b) and (c) of the first question do not fall within the concept of public financing.

26 Accordingly, the reply to the first question is that the expression financed... by [one or more contracting authorities] in Article 1(b), second subparagraph, third indent, of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, properly construed, includes awards or grants paid by one or more contracting authorities for the support of research work and student grants paid by local education authorities to universities in respect of tuition for named students. Payments made by one or more contracting authorities either in the context of a contract for services comprising research work or as consideration for other services such as consultancy or the organisation of conferences do not, by contrast, constitute public financing within the meaning of those directives.

27 The second question asks, in essence, what meaning is to be given to the expression financed for the most part in Article 1(b), second subparagraph, third indent, of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37.

28 For that purpose it is necessary to consider whether for the most part means a specific percentage, or whether it is to have some other meaning.

29 Contrary to the submissions of the Commission and the Governments under Article 20 of the EC

Statute of the Court of Justice, supporting a quantitative interpretation of the term for the most part, so that it would refer to public financing in excess of 50%, the University maintains that it is to be interpreted qualitatively. The University contends that account should be taken only of payments which confer on those making them control of procurement. However, if the interpretation should be quantitative, then the term must on any view be taken to mean that the financing in question is predominant. This, according to the University, can only be the case where it represents three quarters of the total financing.

30 That interpretation cannot be upheld. Apart from the fact that there is no support for it in the wording of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, it does not reflect the ordinary meaning of the phrase for the most part, which in normal usage always means more than half, without it being necessary for one group to be predominant or preponderant as regards another.

31 That is, moreover, borne out by the wording of Article 1(2) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84), which defines public undertaking as, inter alia, an undertaking in which the public authorities hold, directly or indirectly, the majority of the undertaking's subscribed capital or control, directly or indirectly, the majority of the votes attaching to shares issued by the undertaking. As the Advocate General noted in paragraph 58 of his Opinion, if such quantitative criteria are sufficient to classify an undertaking as a public undertaking, that must be the case a fortiori when determining the conditions under which public financing is to be regarded as for the most part.

32 In addition, interpreting for the most part as meaning more than half is consistent with the provisions in respect of one of the other cases referred to in Article 1(b), second subparagraph, third indent, of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37. According to those provisions, the term body governed by public law also includes any body having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law.

33 Accordingly, the reply to the second question is that, on a proper construction, the term for the most part in Article 1(b), second subparagraph, third indent, of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 means more than half.

Third question

34 In the third question, which is closely linked to the previous two, the national court asks, in essence, what is to be included in the basis for calculating the financing which is for the most part public. In particular, it asks whether all sources of financing for the university are to be taken into account when determining whether financing is for the most part public or whether regard should be had only to sources of finance for academic and related activities.

35 As to that, it is sufficient to note that when Article 1(b), second subparagraph, third indent, of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 refers to financing which is for the most part from public sources, that necessarily implies that a body may also be financed in part in some other way without thereby losing its character as a contracting authority.

36 The reply to the third question is therefore that in order to determine correctly the percentage of public financing of a particular body account must be taken of all of its income, including that which results from a commercial activity.

Fourth question

37 In the fourth question the national court asks what period is to be taken into consideration in calculating the university's financing and how account is to be taken of changes which may occur in the course of a procurement procedure, when determining whether the university is a contracting authority for the purposes of a particular procurement.

38 It is to be noted at the outset that in the absence of an express provision to that effect in Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, the reply to both parts of this question must take into account the requirement of legal certainty, as stated by the Court in paragraph 34 of Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria (cited above). Although in determining whether a body is to be regarded as a contracting authority for the purposes of a specific procurement regard must be had to its precise financial situation, it is also necessary to ensure a measure of foreseeability for the procurement procedure, when the financing of a body such as the University may vary from one year to the next.

39 Although the directives are silent as to the period to be taken into consideration when determining whether a body is a contracting authority, they do contain provisions regarding the publication of indicative notices from time to time which may provide useful guidance for the reply to this question. Article 15(1) of Directive 92/50 and Article 9(1) of Directive 93/36 provide expressly that indicative notices are to be published by the contracting authorities as soon as possible after the beginning of the budgetary year where the total amount of the procurement which they envisage awarding during the subsequent 12 months is equal to or greater than ECU 750 000. The provisions thus imply that the contracting authority retains that status for 12 months from the beginning of each budgetary year.

40 Accordingly, the decision as to whether a body such as the University is a contracting authority must be made annually and the budgetary year during which the procurement procedure is commenced must be regarded as the most appropriate period for calculating how that body is financed.

41 That being so, legal certainty and transparency require that both the University and third parties concerned are in a position to know from the beginning of the budgetary year whether the procurement contracts they envisage awarding during that year fall within the scope of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37. It follows that for the purposes of deciding whether a university is a contracting authority the way in which it is financed must be calculated on the basis of the figures available at the beginning of the budgetary year, even if they are only provisional.

42 As regards the second part of the fourth question, the national court asks, in essence, whether, and if so how, account is to be taken of any changes in financing which may occur during a procurement procedure compared with the way in which the body had been financed at the date of the commencement of the procedure.

43 As the Court noted in paragraph 34 of Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria (cited above), the principle of legal certainty requires that the Community rules be clear and their application foreseeable for all those concerned. As a result of that requirement, and of those pertaining to the protection of the interests of tenderers, it is necessary for a body which on the date of the commencement of the procurement procedure constitutes a contracting authority for the purposes of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 to remain, as far as that procurement is concerned, subject to the requirements of those directives until the relevant procedure has been completed.

44 Accordingly, the reply to the fourth question is that the decision as to whether a body such as the University is a contracting authority must be made annually and the budgetary year in which the procurement procedure commences must be regarded as the most appropriate period for calculating the way in which that body is financed, so that the calculation must be made on the basis of the figures available at the beginning of the budgetary year, even if they are provisional. A body which constitutes a contracting authority for the purposes of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 when a procurement procedure commences remains, as far as that procurement is concerned, subject to the requirements of those directives until such time as the relevant procedure has been completed.

of 5 October 2000
Commission of the European Communities v French Republic.
Failure to fulfil obligations - Public procurement contracts in the transport sector - Directive 93/38/EEC - Applicability ratione temporis - Rennes urban district light railway project - Contract awarded by negotiated procedure without a prior call for competition.
Case C-337/98.

1. Approximation of laws - Public procurement procedures in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Directive 93/38 - Effects of the directive on decisions of the contracting authority adopted before expiry of the period for transposition - None

(Council Directive 93/38)

2. Actions for failure to fulfil obligations - Proof of failure - Burden on Commission - Submission of evidence that the obligation has not been fulfilled

(EC Treaty, Art. 169 (now Art. 226 EC))

1. In the area of public procurement, Community law does not require an awarding authority in a Member State to intervene, at the request of an individual, in existing legal relations established for an indefinite period or for several years where those relations came into being before expiry of the period prescribed for transposition of the directive in question. That general principle can be applied to all the stages of a procedure for the award of a contract which are completed before the expiry of the period prescribed for transposition of a directive but form part of a procedure which ended after that date. Accordingly, Directive 93/38 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors is not applicable to the choice made by the contracting entity's decision to use a negotiated procedure without a prior call for competition to award a contract, made before the expiry of the period prescribed for transposing that directive and forming part of an award procedure which was not completed until after the expiry of the period prescribed.

2. In proceedings under Article 169 of the Treaty (now Article 226 EC) for failure to fulfil an obligation, it is incumbent on the Commission to prove that the obligation has not been fulfilled and to place before the Court the evidence necessary to enable it to determine whether that is the case.

(see para. 45)

APPLICATION for a declaration that, by its decision of 22 November 1996 to award the turnkey contract for the Rennes urban district light railway project to Matra-Transport, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84), and Articles 4(2) and 20(2)(c) thereof in particular, composed of: G.C. Rodríguez Iglesias, President, J.C. Moitinho de Almeida and L. Sevon (Presidents of Chambers), P.J.G. Kapteyn, J.-P. Puissochet, P. Jann, H. Ragnemalm, M. Wathelet and V. Skouris (Rapporteur), Judges, Advocate General: F.G. Jacobs,

THE COURT,

Registrar: D. Louterman-Hubeau, Principal Administrator,

having regard to the Report for the Hearing, after hearing oral argument from the parties at the hearing on 2 February 2000, at which the Commission was represented by M. Nolin and the French Republic by J.-F. Dobelle, Deputy Director of the Legal Affairs Directorate of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, acting as Agent, and K. Rispal-Bellanger, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 23 March 2000,

gives the following

Judgment

Costs

58 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the French Republic has applied for costs and the Commission has been unsuccessful, the latter must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

hereby:

1. Dismisses the application;

2. Orders the Commission of the European Communities to pay the costs.

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 14 September 1998 the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EC Treaty (now Article 226 EC) for a declaration that, by its decision of 22 November 1996 to award the turnkey contract for the Rennes urban district light railway project to Matra-Transport (hereinafter Matra), the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199 p. 84, hereinafter the Directive), and Articles 4(2) and 20(2)(c) thereof in particular.

2 Article 4(1) and (2) of Directive 93/38 provides:

1. When awarding supply, works or service contracts, or organising design contests, the contracting entities shall apply procedures which are adapted to the provisions of this Directive.

2. Contracting entities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between different suppliers, contractors or service providers.

3 Article 20(2)(c) of Directive 93/38 provides:

Contracting entities may use a procedure without prior call for competition in the following cases:

(c) when, for technical or artistic reasons or for reasons connected with protection of exclusive rights, the contract may be executed only by a particular supplier, contractor or service provider.

4 Article 45(1) and (3) of Directive 93/38 provides:

1. Member States shall adopt the measures necessary to comply with the provisions of this Directive and shall apply them by 1 July 1994.

3. Directive 90/531/EEC shall cease to have effect as from the date on which this Directive is applied by the Member States and this shall be without prejudice to the obligations of the Member States concerning the deadlines laid down in Article 37 of that Directive.

Directive 90/531/EEC

5 Apart from certain differences in drafting, the provisions of Council Directive 90/531/EEC of 17 September 1990 on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1990 L 297, p. 1), concerning the principle of non-discrimination between suppliers or contractors (Article 4) and authorised use of a procedure without prior call for competition (Article 15) were essentially the same as the corresponding provisions of Directive 93/38, reproduced at paragraphs 2 and 3 of this judgment.

6 Article 37(1) and (2) of Directive 90/531 provides:

1. Member States shall adopt the measures necessary to comply with this Directive by 1 July 1992. They shall forthwith inform the Commission thereof.

2. Member States may stipulate that the measures referred to in paragraph 1 shall apply only from 1 January 1993.

The national legislation

7 Article 104, II, of the Code des Marchés Publics (Public Procurement Code) reads as follows:

Negotiated contracts may be entered into without a prior call for competition when only one specific contractor or supplier is capable of carrying them out.

This applies in the following cases:

(1) when requirements can be met only by [work or supplies] which necessitate recourse to a patent, a licence or exclusive rights held by a single contractor or supplier;

(2) when requirements can be met only by [work or supplies] which, by reason of technical necessity, substantial preliminary investment, special plant or equipment or know-how, can be contracted out only to a specific contractor or supplier;

(3) in the case of the [work or supplies] mentioned in the last sentence of Article 108.

Such contracts need not be the subject of a public competition notice pursuant to Article 38.

Background to the dispute

8 By resolution No 89-18 of 26 October 1989, the committee of the Syndicat intercommunal des transports collectifs de l'agglomération rennaise (the joint municipal grouping responsible for public transport in the Rennes district, hereinafter Sitcar) voted:

(1) to confirm previous decisions to provide a reserved-track network for the district,

(2) to confirm, for the first line, the main principles set out in the "TAU" research, that is to say:

- a service for Villejean from West to East;

- a line through the historic centre from North to South;

- a service to the station with improved connections between the three urban, inter-urban and rail networks;

- a service for the suburbs of Alma-Châtillon and Blosne in the most important South-Eastern sector...

(3) to opt for the "VAL" automatic light railway system,

(4) to seek the highest possible level of government funding,

(5) to establish all such contacts as may be useful with the Region and the Département on the basis previously indicated...

(6) to authorise the Bureau to engage in the necessary consultations with a view to consideration at a forthcoming meeting of the Committee of the contract for drawing up preliminary specifications...

(7) to investigate at the earliest possible date an amendment to the current apportionment of the contribution of the municipalities to Sitcar ...

9 By resolution No 90-25 of 19 July 1990, the Committee of Sitcar voted:

(1) to record that the design and execution of the "system and equipment linked to the system" will be the subject of a turnkey contract with Matra-Transport once it is in a position to agree to a guaranteed guide price,

(2) to approve in principle the conclusion with that company of a support and research contract to accompany the preliminary specifications for the "Civil engineering work and equipment not linked to the system" part of the work and to authorise the chairman of the Committee to sign it.

10 In a letter dated 9 July 1991 from its chairman and managing director to the chairman of the Committee of Sitcar, Matra stated that the guaranteed price for the reference programme of March 1991 was FRF 987 million at January 1991 prices. However, the chairman and managing director of Matra pointed out that on the basis of that price Matra had, at Sitcar's request, sought savings both by means of additional contributions from Matra-Transport and proposed adjustments to programmes which did not adversely affect the standard of the service provided. On that basis, the chairman and managing director of Matra suggested certain changes to the programme data to Sitcar and announced that if those new data were approved the system part of the VAL project could be reduced to a guaranteed price of FRF 953.2 million excluding tax and at January 1991 prices.

11 By resolution No 93-44 of 30 March 1993, the Urban District Council of Rennes (hereinafter the District Council), which replaced Sitcar in 1992, first, approved the turnkey contract offered by Matra under the negotiated procedure and, second, authorised the semi-public company operating public transport in the Rennes conurbation (hereinafter Semtcar) to sign the contract with Matra in accordance with the provisions of the mandate agreement approved by the District Council by decision of 15 January 1993.

12 By judgment of 16 February 1994 the Tribunal Administratif (Administrative Court), Rennes, annulled the declaration of public interest of 15 February 1993 concerning the Rennes urban district light railway project (hereinafter the UDP), which meant, inter alia, that the proposed State subsidy to finance the work could not be paid.

13 By resolution No 95-233 of 22 September 1995, the District Council decided to withdraw its previous resolution of 30 March 1993 approving the contract with Matra and authorising its signature by Semtcar, that resolution not having been implemented even inchoately and having become redundant. By resolution No 95-234 it also decided to request Semtcar to resume detailed negotiation/finalisation of the contract with Matra within the framework of the provisional budget for the operation and to submit it anew to the District Council for approval.

14 Finally, by resolution No 96-280 of 22 November 1996 the District Council approved the terms of the draft negotiated contract to be concluded with the company Matra-Transport International for the work on the system and equipment linked to the system, the total amount of the contract being FRF 1 054 360 000 without tax and at November 1996 prices, comprising a fixed part amounting to FRF 1 050 490 000 without tax and a conditional part amounting to FRF 3 870 000 without tax. It also authorised Semtcar to sign the contract pursuant to Article 7.4 of the mandate agreement of 23 November 1993.

Pre-litigation procedure

15 Having received a complaint concerning the award of the contract for the Rennes urban district light railway project to Matra, the Commission, by letter of 7 January 1997, asked the French authorities to provide it with certain information concerning the award of that contract and to justify their recourse, in awarding the contract, to a negotiated procedure on the basis of Article 104, II, of the Public Procurement Code without a prior call for competition.

16 The French authorities replied to the Commission by letter of 17 February 1997 and by two additional notes of 25 February and 4 March 1997. They stated, inter alia, that the contract at issue had been awarded by a resolution of the Committee of Sitcar of 26 October 1989, the date on which the contracting entity had chosen a VAL type light railway supplied by Matra. According to the French authorities, that resolution awarded the contract before the entry into force on 1 January 1993 of Directive 90/531 and a fortiori before the entry into force, on 1 July 1994, of Directive 93/38 and Articles 4(2) and 20(2)(c) thereof in particular. Furthermore, the French authorities stated, as a secondary point, that Matra was the only company capable of meeting the requirements of the local authority. They contended, in that regard, that the company had already made significant preliminary investments at the Rennes site and concluded that no Community rule had been breached.

17 As it considered that reply to be unsatisfactory, the Commission, by letter of 17 June 1997, gave the French authorities formal notice pursuant to Article 169 of the Treaty, that they should submit their observations within six weeks, inter alia concerning the compatibility of the provisions of Article 104, II, of the Public Procurement Code, which was the legal basis of the decision of the contracting entity, with the requirements of Article 20(2)(c) of Directive 93/38.

18 By letter of 20 August 1997 the French authorities replied to the letter of formal notice, confirming that the decision to award the turnkey contract to Matra had been taken by resolution of 26 October 1989 and, contending, in the alternative, that Article 104, II, of the Public Procurement Code was compatible with Article 20(2)(c) of Directive 93/38. Two further replies were sent on

29 September and 7 November 1997.

19 As it considered that those replies did not contain anything which addressed the complaints made in the letter of formal notice, the Commission, on 15 March 1998, sent the French Republic a reasoned opinion, to which it replied on 12 June 1998.

20 It is against that legal and factual background that the Commission brought this action.

Merits

21 The Commission contends that the award to Matra of the turnkey contract for the Rennes urban district light railway project by negotiated procedure without a prior call for competition constitutes a breach of Directive 93/38 and, in particular, Articles 4(2) and 20(2)(c) thereof.

22 Since it is clear from paragraphs 8 to 11 of the present judgment that some of the events relating to the contract at issue took place before the expiry of the period prescribed for the transposition of Directive 93/38, it is necessary to consider, before deciding whether that directive has been infringed, as alleged, whether it is applicable to the procedure at issue.

23 It is clear inter alia from the resolution by the Committee of Sitcar of 19 July 1990, and, in particular, the statement that the design and execution of the system and equipment linked to the system would be the subject of a turnkey contract with Matra-Transport once it was in a position to agree to a guaranteed guide price, that, on that date, negotiations between the contracting entity and Matra were already under way.

24 Furthermore, in his letter of 9 July 1991 the chairman and managing director of Matra confirmed that if certain changes to the reference project which he proposed were approved the system part of the VAL project could be reduced to a guaranteed price of FRF 953.2 million without tax and at January 1991 prices, which is a serious indication that, on that date, negotiations between the contracting entity and Matra were at an advanced stage.

25 It is thus clear that the negotiations between the contracting entity and Matra were begun before 1 July 1994, the date on which the period prescribed for transposition of Directive 93/38 expired, and even before 9 August 1993, the date of the publication of that directive in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

26 Since negotiations are the defining characteristic of a negotiated procedure for the award of a contract, it must be held that, in the present case, the procedure at issue was initiated before the adoption of Directive 93/38 and a fortiori before the expiry of the period prescribed for its transposition. That directive does not lay down any transitional rules for procedures already initiated before 1 July 1994 and still in progress on that date.

27 Accordingly, in order to rule on the application of the provisions of Directive 93/38 invoked by the Commission in the present case and since the procedure at issue took place over a long period, the law applicable to that procedure ratione temporis must first be ascertained.

28 The Commission submits that, in determining the law applicable to an award procedure, the date of the award of the contract must normally be taken into account. The Commission does not rule out the possibility of also taking account of the date of the initiation of the award procedure. However, it states that the length of time between such initiation and the award of the contract must be reasonable, which it is not in this case.

29 According to the Commission, the contract in question was not awarded until the resolution of 22 November 1996, that is to say, long after the entry into force of Directive 93/38. It maintains that the resolution of 26 October 1989 only concerned the decision to opt for the VAL light railway technology, which had been developed at the time by at least two manufacturers. Even on 19 July

1990 it was still not possible to speak of a contract with Matra, as there was no agreement on any price or on the terms of a contract. Accordingly, the decision to award the contract to Matra was not made until the resolution of the District Council of 30 March 1993, that is to say after that company had formally committed itself to a guaranteed price.

30 The Commission states that, if everything had been decided by that date it would not have brought this action, although Directive 90/531 had already entered into force. However, it notes that, following the annulment of the UDP by the Tribunal Administratif, Rennes, the contracting entity withdrew the resolution of 30 March 1993, although there was no legal requirement that it do so. In French administrative law, withdrawal is equivalent to annulment in a contentious matter. The Commission concludes that, since the withdrawal was not challenged by Matra, it has become definitive, which means that the resolution is deemed never to have existed. The contract at issue was therefore awarded to Matra by the resolution of 22 November 1996.

31 The French Government, on the other hand, contends that, even though public contracts are defined in Community law as contracts concluded in writing, that does not prevent the date of the initiation of the award procedure from being taken into account in determining the law applicable to that procedure. Moreover, the requirement that the time between the initiation of the procedure and the award of the contract should be reasonable if the initiation is to be taken into account in determining the applicable law has no foundation in either Community legislation or the case-law of the Court.

32 The French Government contends that the appointment of Matra as the contractor does not date from the resolution of 22 November 1996 but, implicitly, from that of 26 October 1989, as, since VAL was one of Matra's products, no firm other than Matra could have been selected by the contracting entity as contractor. The resolution of 19 July 1990, it contends, constitutes a decision to award. According to the French Government, once the resolution became enforceable and Matra had committed itself to a price, Matra was entitled to rely on that resolution since it created subjective rights in that company's favour. As Matra had committed itself to an objective guaranteed price of FRF 953.2 million without tax on 9 July 1991, it had from that time a right to the conclusion of a turnkey contract with the Rennes Urban District Council.

33 As regards the withdrawal of the resolution of 30 March 1993, the French Government submits, first, that it was imposed on the contracting entity and, second, that it was not the result of a wish to renegotiate the substantive terms of the contract. Moreover, it was not its purpose, or its effect, to call into question the decision taken on 19 July 1990 to enter into a contract with Matra. In withdrawing that measure, the District Council simply postponed the signature of the contract, thereby acting in consequence of the annulment of the UDP, an act of the Préfet, the annulment of which could be attributed neither to the Rennes urban district nor to Matra, the party to which the contract had been awarded.

34 The French Government accepts that the withdrawal of that measure entails the eradication of the contract in law for the future and for the past. However, aside from purely formal, procedural considerations, the substantive contractual terms were, if not validated, at least beyond all reproach and, as a result, the procedure for the award of the contract was, in fact if not in law, merely suspended pending a new UDP. Consequently, the withdrawal of the resolution of 30 March 1993 was purely formal and cannot therefore undermine the continuity of the substantive procedure.

35 It must be observed, first, that by this action for failure to fulfil obligations, the Commission claims that the French Republic has committed a breach of Directive 93/38 which stems from a specific decision taken by the contracting entity. That decision concerned the contracting entity's choice of a negotiated procedure without a prior call for competition in awarding the contract at issue. It is that choice, according to the Commission, which has no basis in Article 20(2) of Directive 93/38.

36 It must be borne in mind, second, that the decision by a contracting entity concerning the type of procedure to be followed and whether it is necessary for a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of a public contract constitutes a distinct stage in the procedure, a stage during which the essential characteristics of the execution of the procedure are defined and which may, as a rule, take place only at the point when that procedure is initiated.

37 Accordingly, in determining whether Directive 93/38 is applicable to such a decision and, therefore, what were the obligations of the contracting entity under Community law in that regard, account must be taken, as a rule, of the point in time at which that decision was adopted.

38 It is true that, in the present case, the decision to use a negotiated procedure without a prior call for competition forms part of an award procedure which did not end until November 1996, that is to say more than two years after the expiry of the period prescribed for transposition of Directive 93/38. However, according to the case-law on public procurement, Community law does not require an awarding authority in a Member State to intervene, at the request of an individual, in existing legal relations established for an indefinite period or for several years where those relations came into being before expiry of the period prescribed for transposition of the directive (see, to that effect, Case C-76/97 Tögel [1998] ECR I-5357, paragraph 54).

40 As regards the Commission's argument that the date to be taken for the purpose of determining the applicability of Directive 93/38 ratione temporis is that of the award of the contract, it need merely be observed that it would be contrary to the principle of legal certainty to determine the applicable law by reference to the date of the award of the contract since that date marks the end of the procedure, while the decision of the contracting entity to proceed with or without a prior call for competition is normally taken at the initial stage of that procedure.

41 In the present case, even though it is not clear from the documents before the Court that there was a formal decision by the contracting entity to proceed by way of negotiated procedure without a prior call for competition to award the contract at issue, it is important to bear in mind that, in its resolution of 19 July 1990, the Committee of Sitcar voted to record that the design and execution of the "system and equipment linked to the system" will be the subject of a turnkey contract with Matra-Transport. It is clear from that sentence that, by the date of that resolution at the latest, and thus well before the expiry of the period prescribed for transposition of Directive 93/38, the decision of the contracting entity to proceed by way of negotiated procedure without a prior call for competition had already been adopted.

42 Accordingly, it must be concluded that Directive 93/38 is not applicable to the choice made by the contracting entity to use a negotiated procedure without a prior call for competition to award the contract for the Rennes urban district light railway project.

43 However, it must be observed that, by two separate resolutions of 22 September 1995, the contracting entity, first, withdrew the resolution of 30 March 1993 awarding the contract to Matra and, second, asked Semtcar to continue negotiations with that company.

44 Accordingly, it must be considered whether the negotiations opened after 22 September 1995 were substantially different in character from those already conducted and were, therefore, such as to demonstrate the intention of the parties to renegotiate the essential terms of the contract, so that the application of the provisions of Directive 93/38 might be justified.

45 In that regard, it must be observed, as a preliminary point, that, according to settled case-law, in proceedings under Article 169 of the Treaty for failure to fulfil an obligation, it is incumbent on the Commission to prove that the obligation has not been fulfilled and to place before the Court the evidence necessary to enable it to determine whether that is the case (see, inter alia, Case C-96/98 Commission v France [1999] ECR I-8531, paragraph 36).

46 It follows that, in the present case, it is for the Commission to adduce all such evidence as is necessary to prove that fresh negotiations were commenced after 22 September 1995 and were such as to demonstrate the intention of the parties to renegotiate the essential terms of the contract, which would justify the application of the provisions of Directive 93/98.

47 In that regard, the Commission submits that an analysis of the resolutions of 30 March and 22 November 1996 shows that they concerned different offers in terms of subject-matter and price. According to the Commission, the 1993 offer concerns the VAL 206 system for an amount of FRF 966.4 million without tax, while the 1996 offer proposes a VAL 208 system for FRF 1 054 million without tax.

48 First, the difference in the number serves in fact to distinguish two different versions of the VAL technology. Second, in financial terms, the two offers differed by almost FRF 90 million, that is to say there was an increase of 10% of the value of the contract between January 1993 and November 1996, which is more than the rate of inflation over that period.

49 The Commission concludes on the basis of that information that there are substantial differences in terms of technology and price between the two offers by Matra, which proves that they did not concern the same contract.

50 It must be observed, to begin with, that the fact that the 1993 offer concerned the VAL 206 system whereas the 1996 offer concerned the VAL 208 system does not constitute proof that an essential term of the contract was renegotiated, which would justify the application of Directive 93/38.

51 First, as the French Government has pointed out, that alteration in the terms of the contract is attributable to the development of equipment between 1993 and 1996 and concerns its dimensions, and then only marginally (2 cm in width). Second, it cannot be ruled out that, in a negotiated procedure which, by its nature, may extend over a long period of time, the parties might take account of technological developments which take place while the negotiations are under way, without that being regarded each time as a renegotiation of the essential terms of the contract justifying the application of new rules of law.

52 Second, as regards the Commission's argument concerning the difference in price between the contract proposed in 1993 and that proposed in 1996, it must be observed that, even if that difference was greater than the rate of inflation during that period, that fact likewise does not prove that the negotiations opened after the withdrawal of the resolution of 30 March 1993 were intended to renegotiate an essential term of the contract.

53 As the French Government has pointed out, without being contradicted by the Commission, the increase in price was a result of the exact application of the formula for the revision of prices contained in the draft contract approved by the two parties in 1993. That fact is thus an indication of the continuity of the procedure rather than evidence that an essential term of the contract had been renegotiated.

54 Third, it must be added that it is clear from certain documents placed before the Court that the negotiations in fact resumed shortly after 22 September 1995 on the basis of everything that had previously taken place.

55 First, the phrase resume detailed negotiation/finalisation used in the second resolution of 22 September 1995 clearly implies the continuation and updating of negotiations. Second, the French Government produced a letter dated 30 November 1995 sent by Matra to Semtcar, stating that Matra had studied the impact of adjustments to the planned execution of the work and, in view of the agreement to update the schedule of special administrative clauses, confirmed the continued validity until 30 September 1996 of its offer negotiated in early 1993.

56 Accordingly, it must be held that the Commission has not adduced evidence capable of proving that fresh negotiations demonstrating the intention of the parties to renegotiate the essential terms of the contract were opened following the withdrawal of the resolution of 30 March 1993 and, therefore, after the expiry of the period prescribed for the transposition of Directive 93/38.

57 Accordingly, having regard to all the foregoing considerations, the application must be dismissed.

of 7 December 2000
Telaustria Verlags GmbH and Telefonadress GmbH v Telekom Austria AG, joined party: Herold Business Data AG.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesvergabeamt - Austria.
Public service contracts - Directive 92/50/EEC - Public service contracts in the telecommunications sector - Directive 93/38/EEC - Public service concession.
Case C-324/98.

Approximation of laws Public procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors Directive 93/38 Scope Contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a contracting authority and a private undertaking for the provision of public telecommunication services Included Consideration consisting in an exploitation right Excluded Obligations of the contracting entities

$$Directive 93/38 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors covers a contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between, on the one hand, an undertaking which is specifically responsible under the legislation of a Member State for operating a telecommunications service and whose capital is wholly held by the public authorities of that State and, on the other, a private undertaking, where under that contract the first undertaking entrusts the second with the production and publication, for the purpose of distribution to the public, of printed and electronically accessible lists of telephone subscribers (telephone directories).

However, although it is covered by Directive 93/38, such a contract is excluded, under Community law as it stands at present, from the scope of that directive by reason of the fact, in particular, that the consideration provided by the first undertaking to the second consists in the second obtaining the right to exploit for payment its own service.

Notwithstanding the fact that, as Community law stands at present, such contracts are excluded from the scope of Directive 93/38, the contracting entities concluding them are, none the less, bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the Treaty, in general, and the principle of non-discrimination on the ground of nationality, in particular, that principle implying, in particular, an obligation of transparency in order to enable the contracting authority to satisfy itself that the principle has been complied with.

That obligation of transparency which is imposed on the contracting authority consists in ensuring, for the benefit of any potential tenderer, a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the services market to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed.

It is for the national court to rule on the question whether that obligation was complied with in the case in the main proceedings and also to assess the materiality of the evidence produced to that effect.

Costs

67 The costs incurred by the Austrian, Danish, French and Netherlands Governments and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Sixth Chamber),

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Bundesvergabeamt by order of 23 April 1998, hereby rules:

1. Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors covers a contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between, on the one hand, an undertaking which is specifically responsible under the legislation of a Member State for operating a telecommunications service and whose capital is wholly held by the public authorities of that State and, on the other, a private undertaking, where under that contract the first undertaking entrusts the second with the production and publication, for the purpose of distribution to the public, of printed and electronically accessible lists of telephone subscribers (telephone directories);

although it is covered by Directive 93/38, such a contract is excluded, under Community law as it stands at present, from the scope of that directive by reason of the fact, in particular, that the consideration provided by the first undertaking to the second consists in the second obtaining the right to exploit for payment its own service.

2. Notwithstanding the fact that, as Community law stands at present, such contracts are excluded from the scope of Directive 93/38, the contracting entities concluding them are, none the less, bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the Treaty, in general, and the principle of non-discrimination on the ground of nationality, in particular, that principle implying, in particular, an obligation of transparency in order to enable the contracting authority to satisfy itself that the principle has been complied with.

3. That obligation of transparency which is imposed on the contracting authority consists in ensuring, for the benefit of any potential tenderer, a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the services market to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed.

4. It is for the national court to rule on the question whether that obligation was complied with in the case in the main proceedings and also to assess the materiality of the evidence produced to that effect.

1 By order of 23 April 1998, received at the Court on 26 August 1998, the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Procurement Office) referred for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty (now Article 234 EC) seven questions on the interpretation of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) and of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84).

2 Those questions have been raised in proceedings between Telaustria Verlags GmbH (Telaustria) and Telefonadress GmbH (Telefonadress), on the one hand, and Telekom Austria AG (Telekom Austria), on the other, concerning the conclusion by Telekom Austria of a concession contract with Herold Business Data AG (Herold) for the production and publication of printed and electronically accessible lists of telephone subscribers (telephone directories).

Legislative framework

Community legislation

Directive 92/50

3 Article 1 of Directive 92/50 states:

For the purposes of this directive:

(a) public service contracts shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority, to the exclusion of:

4 The eighth recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50 states:

... the provision of services is covered by this directive only in so far as it is based on contracts;... the provision of services on other bases, such as law or regulations, or employment contracts, is not covered.

5 Furthermore, the 17th recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50 states:

... the rules concerning service contracts as contained in Council Directive 90/531/EEC of 17 September 1990 on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors [OJ 1990 L 297, p. 1] should remain unaffected by this directive.

Directive 93/38

6 Under Article 45(3) of Directive 93/38, Directive 90/531 is to cease to have effect as from the date on which Directive 93/38 is applied. Article 45(4) states, moreover, that references to Directive 90/531 are to be construed as referring to Directive 93/38.

7 Under the 24th recital in the preamble to Directive 93/38:

... the provision of services is covered by this directive only in so far as it is based on contracts;... the provision of services on other bases, such as law, regulations or administrative provisions or employment contracts, is not covered.

8 Article 1(2) of Directive 93/38 defines public undertaking as any undertaking over which the public authorities may exercise directly or indirectly a dominant influence by virtue of their ownership of it, their financial participation therein, or the rules which govern it. A dominant influence on the part of the public authorities shall be presumed when these authorities, directly or indirectly, in relation to an undertaking:

hold the majority of the undertaking's subscribed capital....

9 Article 1(4) of Directive 93/38 defines supply, works and service contracts as contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one of the contracting entities referred to in Article 2, and a supplier, a contractor or a service provider, having as their object:

(a) in the case of supply contracts...

(b) in the case of works contracts...

(c) in the case of service contracts, any object other than those referred to in (a) and (b) and to the exclusion of:

10 The last indent of Article 1(4) thereof states:

Contracts which include the provision of services and supplies shall be regarded as supply contracts if the total value of supplies is greater than the value of the services covered by the contract.

11 Furthermore, Article 1(15) of Directive 93/38 defines public telecommunications services and telecommunications services as follows:

> "public telecommunications services" shall mean telecommunications services the provision of which the Member States have specifically assigned notably to one or more telecommunications entities;
> "telecommunications services" shall mean services the provision of which consists wholly or partly in the transmission and routing of signals on the public telecommunications network by means of telecommunications processes, with the exception of radio-broadcasting and television.

12 Article 2(1) and (2) of Directive 93/38 states:

1. This directive shall apply to contracting entities which:

(a) are public authorities or public undertakings and exercise one of the activities referred to in paragraph 2;

2. Relevant activities for the purposes of this directive shall be:

...

(d) the provision or operation of public telecommunications networks or the provision of one or more public telecommunications services.

The national legislation

13 The Telekommunikationsgesetz (Telecommunications Law, BGBl. I No 100/1997), which entered into force on 1 August 1997, determines, in particular, the obligations of providers, concessionaires and operators of a voice telephony service.

14 Under Paragraph 19 of the Telekommunikationsgesetz, every provider of a public voice telephony service must maintain an up-to-date list of subscribers, maintain an information service about subscribers' numbers, provide for calls free of charge to emergency services, and make telephone directories available at least weekly in electronically readable form on request to the regulatory authority free of charge and to other providers for an appropriate charge, for the purposes of giving information or publishing directories.

15 Under Paragraph 26(1) of the Telekommunikationsgesetz, the regulatory authority is to ensure that a comprehensive directory of all subscribers to public voice telephony services is available. Concessionaires who offer a public voice telephony service via a fixed or mobile network are obliged to transmit subscriber data to the regulatory authority, against payment, for that purpose.

16 Furthermore, under Paragraph 96(1) of that Law, the operator of a public telecommunications service must produce a directory of telephone subscribers. This may take the form of a printed document or a telephone information service, Bildschirmtext (videotex system), electronic data support or any other technical form of communication. Paragraph 96 further regulates the minimum requirements for the data and the structure of those directories and the communication of subscriber data to the regulatory authority or to third parties.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

17 Telekom Austria, founded under the Telekommunikationsgesetz, is a limited company in which the Republic of Austria holds all the shares. It is the successor to the former Post & Telegraphenverwaltung (Post and Telegraph Administration; the PTV) and carries out the former functions of the PTV, including the obligation to ensure that a directory of all subscribers to public voice telephony services is available.

18 Whereas until 1992 the PTV fulfilled by its own means its obligation to publish, in particular, an official telephone directory known as the White Pages, in 1992, because of the high cost of printing and distributing that directory, it decided to seek a partner and concluded a contract with a private undertaking for the publication of that directory.

19 Since that contract was to expire on 31 December 1997, on 15 May 1997, Telekom Austria, which had replaced the PTV, published in the Amtsblatt zur Wiener Zeitung (bulletin annexed to the Austrian Official Journal) an invitation to submit tenders for a public service concession for the production and publication of printed and electronically accessible lists of telephone subscribers (telephone directories) commencing with the 1998/99 edition and then for an indefinite period.

20 Since Telaustria and Telefonadress took the view that the procedures prescribed by Community and national law for the award of public contracts should have been applied to the contract which would be concluded as a result of the abovementioned invitation to submit tenders, on 12 and 17 June 1997 respectively, they made applications to the Bundes-Vergabekontrollkommission (Federal Procurement Review Commission) for an arbitration procedure to be initiated under Paragraph 109 of the Bundesvergabegesetz 1997 (Federal Procurement Law, BGBl. I No 56/1997; the BVergG).

21 After having joined those two applications, the Bundes-Vergabekontrollkommission issued a reasoned recommendation in favour of the applicants, concluding on 20 June 1997 that the provisions of the BVergG applied to the planned contract.

22 Since Telekom Austria had continued negotiations on the conclusion of that contract, on 24 June 1997, Telaustria made an application to the Bundesvergabeamt for a re-examination procedure to be initiated, combined with an application for an interim order. By application of 4 July 1997, Telefonadress applied to be joined in those proceedings. On 8 July 1997, Herold, which is the company with which Telekom Austria was negotiating, also joined in the proceedings as a third party in support of the forms of order sought by Telekom Austria.

23 Before the Bundesvergabeamt, Telekom Austria submitted that the contract to be concluded fell outside the scope of the directives on the award of public service contracts on the grounds, first, that the contract was not for pecuniary interest and, second, that the case concerned a public service concession excluded from the scope of Directives 92/50 and 93/38.

24 Having first adopted an interim order in favour of the applicants, on 10 July 1997, the Bundesvergabeamt replaced that order with a new order giving provisional permission for the conclusion of the contract between Telekom Austria and Herold, on condition that provision be made for the possibility for that contract to be terminated in order to resume a proper procurement procedure if it transpired that the planned contract fell within the scope of the Community and national rules on public procurement.

25 On 1 December 1997, Herold, to which the concession was to be granted shortly thereafter, passed into the ownership of the undertaking GTE which, on 3 December 1997, ceded to Telekom Austria a holding of 26% in the capital of Herold, which thus became a joint subsidiary of GTE and Telekom Austria. On 15 December 1997, the contract at issue in the main proceedings was formally concluded between Herold and its minority shareholder, namely Telekom Austria.

26 In the grounds of its order for reference, the Bundesvergabeamt observes that that contract, consisting of several, partly interlocking contracts, concerns the production of printed telephone directories and provides, in particular, for the provision of the following services on the part of Herold: collecting, processing and arranging subscriber data, production of telephone directories and certain advertising services. As regards the payment of the other contracting party, the contract stipulates that Herold is not to be directly remunerated for providing the services, but that it may exploit them commercially.

27 In view of all those facts, and in particular of the method by which the service provider is to be remunerated, such as to result in the classification of that contract as one of service concession, and in view of its own considerations, the Bundesvergabeamt, being uncertain as to the interpretation of Directives 92/50 and 93/38, decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice.

Principal question:

Can it be inferred from the legislative history of Directive 92/50/EEC, in particular the proposal of the Commission (COM (90) 372 final, OJ 1991 C 23, p. 1), or from the definition of the term "public service contract" in Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50/EEC, that certain categories of contracts concluded by contracting authorities subject to that directive with undertakings which provide services are to be excluded a priori from the scope of the directive, solely on the basis of certain common characteristics as specified in that proposal of the Commission, without the need to rely on Article 1(a)(i) to (viii) or Articles 4 to 6 of Directive 92/50/EEC?

If the principal question is answered in the affirmative:

Do such categories of contracts also exist, having regard in particular to the 24th recital in the preamble to Directive 93/38/EEC, within the scope of Directive 93/38/EEC?

If the second question is answered in the affirmative:

May those categories of contracts excluded from the scope of Directive 93/38/EEC be adequately described, by analogy with Commission Proposal COM (90) 372 final, as having as their essential feature that a contracting entity which falls within the scope ratione personae of Directive 93/38/EEC cedes a service for which it is responsible to an undertaking of its choice in return for the right to operate the service concerned for financial gain?

Supplementary to the first three questions:

Is a contracting entity which falls within the scope ratione personae of Directive 93/38/EEC obliged, where a contract concluded by it contains elements of a service contract within the meaning of Article 1(4)(a) of Directive 93/38/EEC together with elements of a different contractual nature which are not within the scope of that directive, to sever the part of the overall contract which is subject to Directive 93/38/EEC, in so far as that is technically possible and economically reasonable, and make that part the subject of a procurement procedure under Article 1(7) of that directive, as the Court of Justice held in Case C-3/88 before the entry into force of Directive 92/50/EEC with respect to a contract which was not subject as a whole to Directive 77/62/EEC?

If that question is answered in the affirmative,

Is the contractual concession of the exclusive right to operate a service for financial gain, which will give the service provider an income which cannot be determined but which in the light of general experience will not be inconsiderable and may be expected to exceed the costs of providing the service, to be regarded as payment for the provision of the service, as the Court of Justice held in Case C-272/91 in connection with a supply contract and a right ceded by the public authorities in lieu of payment?

Supplementary to the above questions:

Are the provisions of Article 1(4)(a) and (c) of Directive 93/38/EEC to be interpreted as meaning that a contract which provides for the provision of services within the meaning of Annex XVI A, category 15, loses the nature of a service contract and becomes a supply contract if the result of the service is the production of a large number of identical tangible objects which have an economic value and thus constitute goods within the meaning of Articles 9 and 30 of the EC Treaty?

If that question is answered in the affirmative,

Is the judgment of the Court of Justice in Case C-3/88 to be interpreted as meaning that such a supply contract is to be severed from the other components of the service contract and made the subject of a procurement procedure under Article 1(7) of Directive 93/38/EEC, in so far as this is technically possible and economically reasonable?

The first and second questions

28 By the first and second questions, which can be examined together, the national court raises essentially two issues.

29 The first is whether a contract for pecuniary interest is covered, by reason of the contracting parties and its specific object, by Directives 92/50 or 93/38 where under that contract, which was concluded in writing between, on the one hand, an undertaking which is specifically responsible under the legislation of a Member State for operating a telecommunications service and whose capital is wholly held by the public authorities of that State and, on the other, a private undertaking, the first undertaking entrusts the second with the production and publication, for the purpose of distribution to the public, of printed and electronically accessible lists of telephone subscribers (telephone directories).

30 By the second issue raised, the national court seeks essentially to ascertain whether such a contract, whose specific object is the services mentioned in the preceding paragraph, although it is covered by one of those directives, is excluded, as Community law stands at present, from the scope of the directive which covers it, because, in particular, the consideration provided by the first undertaking to the second consists in the second obtaining the right to exploit for payment its own service.

31 In order to deal with the first issue raised, it should be noted at the outset that, as is clear from the 17th recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50, the provisions of that directive must not affect those of Directive 90/531 which, since it preceded Directive 93/38, also applied, like that directive, to procurement procedures in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors.

32 Since Directive 90/531 was replaced by Directive 93/38, as is clear from Article 45(3) of that directive, and since the references to Directive 90/531 are to be construed, according to Article 45(4) of Directive 93/38, as referring to Directive 93/38, it must be concluded, as under the regime applicable when the sectoral Directive 90/531 was in force, that the provisions of Directive 92/50 must not affect those of Directive 93/38.

33 Consequently, where a contract is covered by Directive 93/38 governing a specific sector of services, the provisions of Directive 92/50, which are intended to apply to services in general, are not applicable.

34 In those circumstances, it is necessary only to examine whether the contract at issue in the main proceedings can be covered, by reason of the contracting parties and its specific object, by Directive 93/38.

35 In this respect, it is necessary to determine, first, whether an undertaking, such as Telekom Austria, falls within the scope ratione personae of Directive 93/38 and, second, whether a contract, whose object is the services mentioned in paragraph 26 above, comes within the material scope of that directive.

36 As regards the scope ratione personae of Directive 93/38, it is common ground, as is clear from the order for reference, that Telekom Austria, whose capital belongs entirely to the Austrian public authorities, constitutes a public undertaking over which those authorities may, by virtue of the fact that the Republic of Austria holds the entire capital, exercise a dominant influence. It follows that Telekom Austria must be regarded as a public undertaking for the purpose of Article 1(2) of that directive.

37 Furthermore, it is common ground that, under the Telekommunikationsgesetz under which it was founded, that public undertaking carries on the activity which consists in the provision of public telecommunications services. It follows that Telekom Austria constitutes a contracting entity for the purpose of Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 93/38 in conjunction with Article 2(2)(d) thereof.

38 Moreover, since it is also common ground that the aforementioned contract provides for the performance of services which are Telekom Austria's responsibility under the Telekommunikationsgesetz and consist in the provision of public telecommunications services, it is sufficient, in order to determine whether the contract at issue in the main proceedings comes within the material scope of Directive 93/38, to determine whether the specific object of that contract is covered by the provisions of Directive 93/38.

39 In this respect, it should be noted, as in the order for reference, that the services which are Herold's responsibility include:

collecting, processing and arranging of subscriber data, in order to make them technically accessible, operations which require data gathering, data processing and tabulation, and services of data banks, which are in category 7, entitled Computer and related services, of Annex XVI A to Directive 93/38;

production of printed telephone directories, which comes under category 15 of Annex XVI A to that directive, a category covering Publishing and printing services on a fee or contract basis; advertising services, which come under category 13 of Annex XVI A to Directive 93/38.

40 Since those services are directly linked to an activity relating to the provision of public telecommunications services, it must be concluded that the contract at issue in the main proceedings, whose specific object is the services referred to in the preceding paragraph, is covered by Directive 93/38.

41 In answering the second issue raised by the national court, it must be noted at the outset that the court links its questions to Proposal 91/C 23/01 of 13 December 1990 for a Council Directive relating to the coordination of procedures on the award of public service contracts (OJ 1991 C 23, p. 1; the proposal of 13 December 1990) and adopts the definition of public service concession proposed in that document by the Commission.

42 In that regard, it is necessary to state that the Court is in a position to deal with the second issue raised without its being necessary for it to adopt the definition of public service concession referred to in Article 1(h) of the proposal of 13 December 1990.

43 It should be noted at the outset that Article 1(4) of Directive 93/38 refers to contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing and, without making express reference to public service concessions, provides only indications about the contracting parties and about the object of the contract, defining them in particular in the light of the method of remunerating the service provider and without drawing any distinction between contracts in which the consideration is fixed and those in which the consideration consists in a right of exploitation.

44 Telaustria proposes that Directive 93/38 be interpreted as meaning that a contract under which the consideration consists in a right of exploitation also comes within its scope. In its submission, in order for Directive 93/38 to apply to such a contract, it is sufficient, in accordance with Article 1(4) of that directive, for the contract to be for pecuniary interest and concluded in writing. It would therefore be unjustified to infer that such contracts are excluded from the scope of Directive 93/38 simply because that directive is silent about the method by which the service provider is to be remunerated. Telaustria adds that the fact that the Commission did not propose to include provisions about that type of contract within the scope of the Directive indicates that it considered that the Directive covers any contract for the provision of services, regardless of the arrangements for remunerating the provider.

45 Since Telekom Austria, the Member States which have submitted observations and the Commission dispute that interpretation, it is necessary to assess its merits in the light of the history of the relevant directives, in particular in the field of public service contracts.

46 In that regard, it should be recalled that both in its proposal of 13 December 1990 and in its amended proposal 91/C 250/05 of 28 August 1991 for a Council Directive relating to the coordination of procedures on the award of public service contracts (OJ 1991 C 250, p. 4; the proposal of 28 August 1991), which resulted in the adoption of Directive 92/50 which covers public service contracts in general, the Commission had expressly proposed that public service concessions be included within the scope of that directive.

47 Since that inclusion was justified by the intention to ensure coherent award procedures, the Commission stated, in the 10th recital in the preamble to the proposal of 13 December 1990, that public service concessions should be covered by this directive in the same way as Directive 71/305/EEC applies to public works concessions. Although the reference to Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682) was withdrawn from the 10th recital in the preamble to the proposal of 28 August 1991, that proposal none the less expressly maintained the purpose of ensuring coherent award procedures in that recital.

48 However, during the legislative process, the Council eliminated all references to public service concessions, in particular because of the differences between the Member States as regards the delegation of the management of public services and modes of delegation, which could create a situation of very great imbalance in the opening-up of the public concession contracts (see point 6 of document No 4444/92 ADD 1 of 25 February 1992, entitled Statement of reasons of the Council and annexed to the common position of the same date).

49 The outcome was the same for the Commission's position expressed in its amended proposal 89/C 264/02 of 18 July 1989 for a Council Directive on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1989 C 264, p. 22), which resulted in the adoption of Directive 90/531, which was the first directive in those sectors on the award of public contracts and preceded Directive 93/38, in which the Commission had also proposed for those sectors certain provisions designed to govern public service concessions.

50 None the less, as is clear from point 10 of document No 5250/90 ADD 1 of 22 March 1990, entitled Statement of reasons of the Council and annexed to the Council's common position of the same date on the amended proposal for a Council Directive on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, the Council did not act on that Commission proposal to include in Directive 90/531 rules on public service concessions, on the ground that such concessions existed in only one Member State and that it was inappropriate to proceed with their regulation in the absence of a detailed study of the various forms of public service concessions granted in the Member States in those sectors.

51 In view of those circumstances, the Commission did not propose the inclusion of public service concessions in its proposal 91/C 337/01 of 27 September 1991 for a Council Directive amending Directive 90/531 (OJ 1991 C 337, p. 1), which subsequently resulted in the adoption of Directive 93/38.

52 That finding is also supported by the way in which the scope of the directives on public works contracts evolved.

53 Article 3(1) of Directive 71/305, which was the first directive on the subject, expressly excluded concession contracts from its scope.

54 None the less, Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989 amending Directive 71/305 (OJ 1989 L 210, p. 1) inserted in Directive 71/305 Article 1b which expressly addressed public works concessions by making the advertising rules laid down in Articles 12(3), (6), (7), (9) to (13) and 15a thereof applicable to them.

55 Subsequently, Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), which replaced Directive 71/305 as amended, expressly refers to public works concessions among the contracts within its scope.

56 On the other hand, Directive 93/38, adopted on the same day as Directive 93/37, provided for no rule on public service concessions. It follows that the Community legislature decided not to include such concessions within the scope of Directive 93/38. If it had wished to, it would have done so expressly, as it did when adopting Directive 93/37.

57 Since public service concession contracts do not therefore come within the scope of Directive 93/38, it must be concluded that, contrary to the interpretation proposed by Telaustria, such contracts are not included in the concept of contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing appearing in Article 1(4) of that directive.

58 The answers to the first and second questions must therefore be that:

Directive 93/38 covers a contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between, on the one hand, an undertaking which is specifically responsible under the legislation of a Member State for operating a telecommunications service and whose capital is wholly held by the public authorities of that State and, on the other, a private undertaking, where under that contract the first undertaking entrusts the second with the production and publication, for the purpose of distribution to the public, of printed and electronically accessible lists of telephone subscribers (telephone directories);

although it is covered by Directive 93/38, such a contract is excluded, under Community law as it stands at present, from the scope of that directive by reason of the fact, in particular, that the consideration provided by the first undertaking to the second consists in the second obtaining the right to exploit for payment its own service.

59 However, the fact that such a contract does not fall within the scope of Directive 93/38 does not preclude the Court from helping the national court which has sent it a series of questions for a preliminary ruling. To that end, the Court may take into consideration other factors in making an interpretation which may assist the determination of the main proceedings.

60 In that regard, it should be borne in mind that, notwithstanding the fact that, as Community law stands at present, such contracts are excluded from the scope of Directive 93/38, the contracting entities concluding them are, none the less, bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the Treaty, in general, and the principle of non-discrimination on the ground of nationality, in particular.

61 As the Court held in Case C-275/98 Unitron Scandinavia and 3-S [1999] ECR I-8291, paragraph 31, that principle implies, in particular, an obligation of transparency in order to enable the contracting authority to satisfy itself that the principle has been complied with.

62 That obligation of transparency which is imposed on the contracting authority consists in ensuring, for the benefit of any potential tenderer, a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the services market to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed.

63 It is for the national court to rule on the question whether that obligation was complied with in the case in the main proceedings and also to assess the materiality of the evidence produced to that effect.

The third and fifth questions

64 In view of the answers given to the first and second questions, it is not necessary to answer the third, since it was raised only in the event that the Court answered the second question in the affirmative.

65 Furthermore, since the fifth question was referred to the Court for the purpose of clarification on the third question, it is not necessary to answer that question either.

The fourth, sixth and seventh questions

66 In view of the answers given to the first and second questions, it is likewise unnecessary to answer the fourth, sixth or seventh questions, since they were raised only in the event that the Court declared that Directive 93/38 was applicable to the contract at issue in the main proceedings.

Reference for a preliminary ruling: Klagenævnet for Udbud - Denmark.
Public supply contracts - Directive 93/36/EEC - Award of public supply contracts by a body other than a contracting authority.
Case C-275/98.

Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public supply contracts - Directive 93/36 - Article 2(2) - Independent in scope from Directive 92/50 - Where the contracting authority grants to a body other than such an authority the right to engage in a public service - Obligatory to require compliance with the principle of non-discrimination - No obligation to require compliance with tendering procedures

$$Article 2(2) of Directive 93/36 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts - which is independent in scope from the provisions of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts - is to be interpreted as follows:

- it requires a contracting authority which grants to a body other than such a contracting authority special or exclusive rights to engage in a public service activity to require of that body, in relation to the public supply contracts which it awards to third parties in the context of that activity, that it comply with the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality;

- it does not, however, require in those circumstances that the contracting authority demand that, in awarding such public supply contracts, the body in question comply with the tendering procedures laid down by Directive 93/36.

having regard to the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 8 July 1999,

gives the following

Judgment

1 By order of 15 July 1998, received at the Court on 20 July 1998, the Klagenævnet for Udbud (hereinafter `the Procurement Review Board') referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty (now Article 234 EC) two questions on the interpretation of Article 2(2) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1).

2 Those questions were raised in proceedings between, on the one hand, Unitron Scandinavia A/S (`Unitron') and 3-S A/S, Danske Svineproducenters Serviceselskab (`3-S') and, on the other, the Ministeriet for Fødevarer, Landbrug og Fiskeri (Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Fisheries; `the Ministry') concerning the award of a public contract for eartags for pigs.

3 Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36 provides:

`For the purposes of this Directive:

(b) "contracting authorities" shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, and associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

"a body governed by public law" means any body:

- established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

- having legal personality, and

- financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law.'

4 Article 2(2) of Directive 93/36 provides:

`When a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) grants to a body other than a contracting authority - regardless of its legal status - special or exclusive rights to engage in a public service activity, the instrument granting this right shall stipulate that the body in question must observe the principle of non-discrimination by nationality when awarding public supply contracts to third parties.'

5 The Procurement Review Board was established by Danish Law No 344 of 6 June 1991, subsequently amended several times, in the context of the implementation of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), since amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

The dispute in the main proceedings

6 In accordance with Council Directive 92/102/EEC of 27 November 1992 on the identification and registration of animals (OJ 1992 L 355, p. 32), eartags must be applied to pigs in order to enable their provenance to be determined. The Danish legislation transposing that directive provides that, after their approval by the Veterinary Department of the Ministry, the tags are to be supplied by Danske Slagterier (Danish abattoirs; `DS'), which is a private undertaking.

7 In order to limit the number of approved eartags for pigs, the Veterinary Department and DS established a tendering procedure. In November 1996, DS, which was entrusted with its implementation, sent tendering documents to a number of potential suppliers and, at the conclusion of the procedure, entered into supply contracts for three years from 1 April 1997 with Allflex dan-mark ApS and Daploma A/S.

8 Unitron and 3-S are producers of eartags for pigs. In a complaint submitted to the Procurement Review Board, they argued that DS serves a public interest and in reality acts on behalf of the Ministry, so that it should be treated as a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36. In the alternative, the applicants in the main proceedings maintain that DS should have followed the procedure laid down by Article 2(2) of Directive 93/36.

9 By decision of 22 January 1998, the Procurement Review Board first held that DS was effectively the purchasers of the eartags from the suppliers and that the value of that contract exceeded the threshold under Article 5 of Directive 93/36.

10 It then held that the Ministry's award to an undertaking of the management of the eartag system should probably have been the subject of a tendering procedure in accordance with Directive 93/36. It found, however, that that question was not the issue in the procedure pending before it.

11 Finally, having held that DS was not a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36, the Procurement Review Board dismissed the applicants' argument that that directive had to be applied to DS by analogy.

12 As regards the alternative plea based on Article 2(2) of Directive 93/36, the Procurement Review Board points out that that provision essentially reproduces the content of Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1), which was adopted at a time when there was as yet no directive in existence concerning public contracts for services.

13 Since public contracts for services formed the subject-matter of Directive 92/50, the Procurement Review Board is uncertain as to the present scope of Article 2(2) of Directive 93/36, since it essentially reproduces a text prior to Directive 92/50.

14 In those circumstances, the Procurement Review Board decided to stay proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

`1. Does Article 2(2) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts still have an independent meaning after the adoption of Council Directive 92/50/EEC relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (as both amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC)?

2. If Question 1 is answered in the affirmative, does the provision accordingly mean that, where a contracting authority entrusts the administration of a pig eartagging scheme to a private undertaking which is not a contracting authority, the contracting authority should stipulate, on the one hand, that the undertaking should comply with the prohibition against discrimination on the ground of nationality in public supply contracts which the undertaking awards to third parties and, on the other hand, that the procurement of goods linked to the scheme should be put out to public tender if the value of the goods to be procured exceeds the threshold value in Council Directive 93/36?'

Admissibility

15 As a preliminary point, it must be observed that, as the Advocate General has rightly found in paragraphs 17 and 18 of his Opinion, the Procurement Review Board is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the Treaty.

16 In the Ministry's submission, the Court should refuse to reply to the questions, since, whatever interpretation is given to the provision at issue, the legal position of the applicants will not thereby be altered.

17 If, on the one hand, Article 2(2) of Directive 93/36 had to be interpreted as merely requiring the Ministry to insist that DS comply with the principle of non-discrimination, that interpretation would change nothing as regards Unitron and 3-S, which are both established in Denmark. If, on the other hand, it had to be interpreted as imposing a tendering obligation in accordance with that directive, the Ministry submits that that interpretation could not benefit the applicants either, since a fresh tendering procedure in accordance with Directive 93/36 took place after the tendering procedure which formed the subject-matter of the main proceedings, causing any infringement which there might have been to disappear.

18 It is sufficient to observe, on this point, that it is solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court (see, inter alia, Case C-415/93 Union Royale Belge des Sociétés de Football Association and Others v Bosman and Others [1995] ECR I-4921, paragraph 59). A request from a national court may be refused by the Court of Justice only where it is obvious that the interpretation of a Community rule or assessment of its validity which is sought bears no relation to the facts or purpose of the main action, or if the Court of Justice does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions (see, in particular, Bosman, paragraph 61; Case C-60/98 Butterfly Music v CEMED [1999] ECR I-0000, paragraph 13).

19 That is not the case here. It is not impossible that the answers to the questions referred might cause the Procurement Review Board to annul the tendering procedure at issue in the main proceedings or to hold that it was irregular. It is not for the Court of Justice to assess the possible consequences in national law of the fact that a new tendering procedure in accordance with Directive 93/36 took place after the main proceedings were brought.

20 The questions referred to the Court are therefore admissible.

21 The first point to note is that Directive 93/36 was adopted after Directive 92/50.

22 Secondly, the second recital in the preamble to Directive 93/36 shows that that directive is intended, in particular, to align the provisions on the awarding of public supply contracts on the provisions of Directive 92/50. The latter were thus expressly taken into consideration when Directive 93/36 was adopted.

23 It follows that the provisions of Directive 92/50 cannot influence the scope of the provisions of Directive 93/36, including those which already appeared in Directive 77/62.

24 As regards, more particularly, Article 2(2) of Directive 93/36, that interpretation is confirmed by the fact that that provision does not govern only those situations in which Directive 92/50 is applicable. It cannot therefore be maintained that Directive 92/50 has deprived that provision of its purpose.

25 The answer to the first question must therefore be that Article 2(2) of Directive 93/36 is independent in scope from the provisions of Directive 92/50.

Question 2

26 The national court's findings show that DS is not a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36.

27 It follows that the obligation under Article 6(1) of Directive 93/36 to apply the tendering procedures defined in Article 1(d), (e) and (f) of that directive does not apply to a body such as DS.

28 Moreover, Directive 93/36 contains no provision comparable to Article 3(3) of Directive 92/50 or Article 2(1) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), which requires contracting authorities to ensure compliance with the provisions of those directives in the case of certain contracts awarded by bodies other than contracting authorities.

29 On the contrary, under Article 2(2) of Directive 93/36, where a contracting authority grants to a body which is not a contracting authority special or exclusive rights to engage in a public service activity, the only requirement is that the measure whereby that right is granted must stipulate that, in relation to the public supply contracts which it awards to third parties in the context of that activity, the body in question must comply with the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality.

30 A systematic interpretation of that provision therefore shows that the contracting authority is not required to demand that the body in question comply with the tendering procedures laid down by Directive 93/36.

31 It should be noted, however, that the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality cannot be interpreted restrictively. It implies, in particular, an obligation of transparency in order to enable the contracting authority to satisfy itself that it has been complied with.

32 The answer to the second question must therefore be that Article 2(2) of Directive 93/36 is to be interpreted as follows:

- It requires a contracting authority which grants to a body other than such a contracting authority special or exclusive rights to engage in a public service activity to require of that body, in relation to the public supply contracts which it awards to third parties in the context of that activity, that it comply with the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality.

- It does not, however, require in those circumstances that the contracting authority demand that, in awarding such public supply contracts, the body in question comply with the tendering procedures laid down by Directive 93/36.

Costs

33 The costs incurred by the Commission, which has submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main action, a step in the proceedings pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

(First Chamber),

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Klagenævnet for Udbud by order of 15 July 1998, hereby rules:

1. Article 2(2) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts is independent in scope from the provisions of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts.

2. Article 2(2) of Directive 93/36 must be interpreted as follows:

- It requires a contracting authority which grants to a body other than such a contracting authority special or exclusive rights to engage in a public service activity to require of that body, in relation to the public supply contracts which it awards to third parties in the context of that activity, that it comply with the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality.

- It does not, however, require in those circumstances that the contracting authority demand that, in awarding such public supply contracts, the body in question comply with the tendering procedures laid down by Directive 93/36.

of 26 September 2000
Commission of the European Communities v French Republic.
Failure of a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Public works contracts - Directives 71/305/EEC, as amended by Directive 89/440/EEC, and 93/37/EEC - Construction and maintenance of school buildings by the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region and the Département du Nord.
Case C-225/98.

1. Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 93/37 - Common rules on advertising - Publication of a prior information notice by the contracting authorities - Scope - Limits

(Council Directive 93/37, Arts 11(1), 12 and 13)

2. Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 93/37 - Award of contracts - Award criteria - Condition linked to the campaign against unemployment - Permissible - Conditions - Rules on advertising

(Council Directive 93/37, Art. 30)

3. Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 93/37 - Number of candidates invited to tender in the context of a restricted procedure - Limitation to a maximum number of five tenderers - Not permissible

(Council Directive 93/37, Art. 22(2))

4. Freedom to provide services - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 71/305 - Designation of the lots by reference to classifications of national professional organisations - Proof of the tenderer's professional qualification - Requirement of proof of registration with the national Ordre des Architectes - Not permissible

(EC Treaty, Art. 59 (now, after amendment, Art. 49 EC); Council Directive 71/305, Arts 23 to 26)

1. The purpose of the rules on advertising laid down in Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, including publication of the prior information notice, is to inform all potential tenderers at the Community level in good time about the main points of a contract in order that they may submit their tender within the time-limits. That purpose shows that whether the prior information notice is compulsory must be determined by reference to the provisions of that directive relating to the time-limits for the receipt of tenders submitted by tenderers.

In this respect, Articles 12(1) and 13(3) of the Directive, which fix as a general rule the normal time-limits for the receipt of tenders at 52 days in respect of open procedures and 40 days in respect of restricted procedures, make no reference to the preliminary publication of a prior information notice. On the other hand, Articles 12(2) and 13(4) of the Directive, which confer on the contracting authorities the power to reduce the time-limits laid down in Articles 12 and 13, expressly link that power to the preliminary publication of a prior information notice. It follows that the publication of a prior information notice is compulsory only where the contracting authorities exercise their option to reduce the time-limits for the receipt of tenders.

2. Under Article 30(1) of Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, the criteria on which the contracting authorities are to base the award of contracts are either the lowest price only or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract, such as price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit. In the latter case, the contracting authorities are required to state these criteria in the contract notice or the contract documents.

None the less, that provision does not preclude all possibility for the contracting authorities to use as a criterion a condition linked to the campaign against unemployment provided that that condition is consistent with all the fundamental principles of Community law, in particular the principle of non-discrimination flowing from the provisions of the Treaty on the right of establishment and the freedom to provide services.

Furthermore, even if such a criterion is not in itself incompatible with Directive 93/37, it must be applied in conformity with all the procedural rules laid down in that directive, in particular the rules on advertising. It follows that an award criterion linked to the campaign against unemployment must be expressly mentioned in the contract notice so that contractors may become aware of its existence.

3. A Member State which, in contract notices, limits to five the number of candidates invited to tender for the contracts in question fails to fulfil its obligations under Article 22(2) of Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts.

Although it is true that Article 22(2) of the Directive does not provide for a minimum number of candidates which the contracting authorities are required to invite where they do not opt in favour of fixing a range as provided by that provision, the Community legislature none the less considered that, in the context of a restricted procedure and where the contracting authorities prescribe a range, a number of candidates below five is not sufficient to ensure genuine competition. The same must be true a fortiori in cases where the contracting authorities opt for inviting a maximum number of candidates. It follows that the number of undertakings which a contracting authority intends to invite to tender in the context of a restricted procedure cannot ever be less than five.

4. A Member State which, in contract notices, uses as the mode of designating the lots references to classifications of national professional organisations and also requires from the designer, as minimum standards for participation, proof of registration with the Ordre des Architectes fails to fulfil its obligations under Article 59 of the Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 49 EC) and under Directive 71/305 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts.

To the extent that the designation of the lots by reference to classifications of French professional organisations is likely to have a dissuasive effect on tenderers who are not French, it thereby constitutes indirect discrimination and, therefore, a restriction on the freedom to provide services, within the meaning of Article 59 of the Treaty. Moreover, first, the requirement of proof that the designer is registered with the Ordre des Architectes can only give advantage to the provision of services by French architects, which constitutes discrimination against Community architects and, accordingly, a restriction on their freedom to provide services. Second, Directive 71/305 precludes a Member State from requiring a tenderer established in another Member State to furnish proof by any means other than those prescribed in Articles 23 to 26 of that directive, that he satisfies the criteria laid down in those provisions and relating to his qualifications.

1. Declares that, in the course of the various procedures for the award of public works contracts for the construction and maintenance of school buildings conducted by the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region and the Département du Nord over a period of three years, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 59 of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 49 EC) as well as under Articles 12(5), 26 and 29(2) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989, and under Articles 8(3), 11(5), 22(2) and 30(2) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts;

2. Dismisses the application as to the remainder;

3. Orders the French Republic and the Commission of the European Communities to bear their own costs.

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 22 June 1998, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action, pursuant to Article 169 of the EC Treaty (now Article 226 EC), for a declaration that, in the course of the various procedures for the award of public works contracts for the construction and maintenance of school buildings conducted by the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region and the Département du Nord over a period of three years, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 59 of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 49 EC) as well as under Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682), as amended by Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989 (OJ 1989 L 210, p. 1; Directive 71/305), in particular under Articles 12, 26 and 29 thereof, and under Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), in particular under Articles 8, 11, 22 and 30 thereof.

The relevant legislation

2 According to the first recital in the preamble thereto, Directive 93/37 consolidated the provisions of Directive 71/305 for reasons of clarity and better understanding.

3 Article 8(3) of Directive 93/37 provides:

For each contract awarded, the contracting authorities shall draw up a written report which shall include at least the following:

- the name and address of the contracting authority, the subject and value of the contract,

- the names of the candidates or tenderers admitted and the reasons for their selection,

- the names of the candidates or tenderers rejected and the reasons for their rejection,

- the name of the successful tenderer and the reasons for his tender having been selected and, if known, any share of the contract the successful tenderer may intend to subcontract to a third party,

- for negotiated procedures, the circumstances referred to in Article 7 which justify the use of these procedures.

This report, or the main features of it, shall be communicated to the Commission at its request.

4 Under Article 11(1) of Directive 93/37, [C]ontracting authorities shall make known, by means of an indicative notice, the essential characteristics of the works contracts which they intend to award and the estimated value of which is not less than the threshold laid down in Article 6(1).

5 According to Article 11(5) of Directive 93/37, Contracting authorities who have awarded a contract shall make known the result by means of a notice.....

6 Article 11(7) of Directive 93/37 provides:

The contracting authorities shall send the notices referred to in paragraphs 1 to 5 as rapidly as possible and by the most appropriate channels to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities. In the case of the accelerated procedure referred to in Article 14, the notice shall be sent by telex, telegram or telefax.

The notice referred to in paragraph 1 shall be sent as soon as possible after the decision approving the planning of the works contracts that the contracting authorities intend to award.

The notice referred to in paragraph 5 shall be sent at the latest 48 days after the award of the contract in question.

7 Article 11(11) of Directive 93/37 provides:

The notice shall not be published in the official journals or in the press of the country of the contracting authority before the date of dispatch to the [Office for Official Publications] of the European Communities and it shall mention this date. It shall not contain information other than that published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

8 Article 12(1) and (2) of Directive 93/37 provides:

1. In open procedures the time-limit for the receipt of tenders fixed by the contracting authorities shall be not less than 52 days from the date of dispatch of the notice.

2. The time-limit for the receipt of tenders laid down in paragraph 1 may be reduced to 36 days where the contracting authorities have published the notice [provided] for in Article 11(1), drafted in accordance with the specimen in Annex IV A, in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

9 Article 13(3) and (4) of Directive 93/37 provides as follows:

3. In restricted procedures, the time-limit for receipt of tenders fixed by the contracting authorities may not be less than 40 days from the date of dispatch of the written invitation.

4. The time-limit for the receipt of tenders laid down in paragraph 3 may be reduced to 26 days where the contracting authorities have published the notice provided for in Article 11(1), drafted in accordance with the model in Annex IV A, in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

10 Under Article 22(2) of Directive 93/37:

[W]here the contracting authorities award a contract by restricted procedure, they may prescribe the range within which the number of undertakings which they intend to invite will fall. In this case the range shall be indicated in the contract notice.... The range shall be determined in the light of the [nature] of the work to be carried out. The range must number at least 5 undertakings and may be up to 20.

In any event, the number of candidates invited to tender shall be sufficient to ensure genuine competition.

11 Article 27 of Directive 93/37 provides:

1. Evidence of the contractor's technical capability may be furnished by:

(a) the contractor's educational and professional qualifications and/or those of the firm's managerial staff and, in particular, those of the person or persons responsible for carrying out the works;

(b) a list of the works carried out over the past five years, accompanied by certificates of satisfactory execution for the most important works. These certificates shall indicate the value, date and site of the works and shall specify whether they were carried out according to the rules of the trade and properly completed. Where necessary, the competent authority shall submit these certificates to the contracting authority direct;

(c) a statement of the tools, plant and technical equipment available to the contractor for carrying out the work;

(d) a statement of the firm's average annual manpower and the number of managerial staff for the last three years;

(e) a statement of the technicians or technical bodies which the contractor can call upon for carrying out the work, whether or not they belong to the firm.

2. The contracting authorities shall specify [in the notice or] in the invitation to tender which of these references are to be produced.

12 Finally, under Article 30(1) and (2) of Directive 93/37:

1. The criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) either the lowest price only;

(b) or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract: e.g. price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit.

2. In the case referred to in paragraph 1(b), the contracting authority shall state in the contract documents or in the contract notice all the criteria it intends to apply to the award, where possible in descending order of importance.

13 Apart from a number of differences in wording, the provisions of Directive 71/305, concerning the drawing up and communication of written reports (Article 5a), the detailed rules for publication with which the contracting authorities must comply (Article 12), the time-limits for the receipt of tenders and of requests to participate (Articles 13 and 14), proof of the contractor's technical knowledge or ability (Article 26) and the criteria for the award of contracts (Article 29(1) and (2)), had the same content as the corresponding provisions of Directive 93/37, set out in paragraphs 3 to 12 above.

Background to the dispute and pre-litigation procedure

14 The documents before the Court show that, at the beginning of 1993, the Commission's attention was drawn to the tendering procedure for a public works contract issued by open procedure and relating to the construction of the Lycée Polyvalent (multipurpose secondary school) at Wingles (Département du Pas-de-Calais). Since the value of that contract exceeded the Community threshold of ECU 5 million, a contract notice was published in the Official Journal of the European Communities (the Official Journal) of 21 January 1993, in accordance with Directive 71/305.

15 The Commission received a complaint and took the view that Directive 71/305 had not been complied with. Accordingly, by letter of 27 September 1993, in accordance with the procedure laid down in Article 169 of the Treaty, it gave the French authorities formal notice to submit their observations within two months of the notification of that notice. The Commission's allegations related to the time-limit for the receipt of tenders, which was less than 52 days, the discriminatory description of the lots, the discriminatory minimum standards, the criteria for the award of the contract which did not comply with Directive 71/305, the improper award of the contract and the failure to inform an eliminated tenderer of the reasons for rejection of his tender.

16 By letter of 20 December 1993, the French authorities provided the Commission with some information in response to the allegations set out in the formal notice.

17 The Commission took the view that that letter was not satisfactory and on 8 September 1995 sent a reasoned opinion to the French Republic. No reply was sent by the French authorities.

18 Meanwhile, pursuant to Directive 93/37, the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region published in the Official Journal of 18 February 1995 a series of 14 contract notices in connection with an operation known as Plan Lycées (Secondary School Plan), with an aggregate value of FRF 1.4 thousand million. The notices were identical for all the contracts and concerned restricted invitations to tender relating to the completion of contracts of modernisation and maintenance works over a period of 10 years. Groupings of undertakings were permitted to tender and minimum standards for participation were imposed, in particular concerning references and qualifications. Furthermore, those notices stated that the tenders would be assessed by taking account of various award criteria, including the quality/price ratio of the technical response and the services, the time-limit for completion of the works of construction and renovation excluding maintenance, and the mode of action and an additional criterion relating to employment. A further contract notice was published in the Official Journal of 24 June 1995, concerning the design and building of a secondary school to a high environmental standard, which required higher levels of qualification and that the architect be qualified to practise in France.

19 On 10 February 1995, an agreement was signed between the President of the Commission PME-Marchés des Constructions Scolaires of the Fédération Régionale du Bâtiment, the President of the Fédération Régionale des Travaux Publics and the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Regional Delegate of the Syndicat National du Béton Armé et des Techniques Industrialisées in order to define the detailed arrangements according to which regional and local PME (Petites et Moyennes Entreprises; small and medium-sized firms), represented by the signatories, could tender for the global contract for the construction and maintenance of the secondary schools of the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region in the form of joint groupings of mutually supportive undertakings divided into three categories per contract notice published. That agreement was published in the Moniteur du Bâtiment et des Travaux Publics of 17 February 1995, in the section entitled Textes Officiels (official instruments).

20 By letter of 21 November 1995, also sent pursuant to Article 169 of the Treaty, the Commission gave the French authorities formal notice to submit their observations on the irregularities noted in the course of the procedure for the award of the contracts coming under the Plan Lycées. The Commission objected to the policy adopted by the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region and, incidentally, the Département du Nord in awarding public works contracts for school buildings. Basing its assessment on the features of the Plan Lycées, but also on the precedent of the Wingles secondary school and certain procedures followed by the Conseil Général of the Département du Nord, the Commission called into question the policy of the contracting authorities of the Lille conurbation which was designed, in the long term, to award contracts for school buildings for which they were responsible to undertakings in the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region. The Commission also called into question the use of an additional criterion relating to local employment which stemmed from Interministerial Circular TEFP 14/93 of 29 December 1993 (published in the Moniteur du Bâtiment et des Travaux Publics of 14 January 1994, p. 235).

21 The French authorities did not reply to that letter of formal notice. The Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region none the less republished in the Official Journal of 5 January 1996, for reasons of budgetary planning, four contract notices concerning four secondary schools which had already formed the subject-matter of the Plan Lycées in February 1995.

22 The Commission received information about the forward programme of investment for the secondary schools of the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region for the period 1996-1998. The breadth of that programme led the Commission to consider all the contract notices relating to school buildings in the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region and the Département du Nord which had been published since 1993, the year in which the Wingles secondary school contract was awarded. Those procedures related to contracts issued by the two contracting authorities, namely the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region and the Département du Nord, over a period of three years.

23 By a supplementary letter of formal notice of 8 May 1996, the Commission restated its allegations and requested the French authorities, in particular, to send it all relevant information on the use by the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region of the additional criterion relating to employment and its links with the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region's plan known as Lycées Emploi Formation, the operation of the agreement published in the Moniteur du Bâtiment et des Travaux Publics of 17 February 1995, referred to in paragraph 19 above, the prior information and award notices and the written reports for all procedures for the award of the abovementioned contracts. It also requested them to take appropriate measures to ensure that the two contracting authorities in question fulfil their obligations under Community law within six weeks.

24 The French authorities replied on 9 August 1996 and provided various documents showing a marked improvement in the procedures for the award of contracts by the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region in respect of its new contracts. As to the remainder, the French authorities disputed the allegations put forward by the Commission.

25 As in respect of the Wingles secondary school, the Commission took the view that that letter did not satisfactorily respond to all the allegations in the letter of formal notice and, on 7 April 1997, sent a reasoned opinion to the French Republic. The French authorities did not reply to that reasoned opinion.

26 The Commission then brought the present action based on eight complaints which relate to the prior information procedure, the additional criterion relating to employment, the number of candidates selected, the method known as award by reference to the Code des Marchés Publics (French Code of Public Procurement), the mode of designating the lots, the minimum standards for participation, the procedure of information on contract awards and the failure to communicate the written reports.

Substance

The complaint relating to failure to observe the prior information procedure

27 The Commission claims that it is clear from Article 11(1), (7) and (11) of Directive 93/37 that prior information is a compulsory preliminary, to be effected first in the Official Journal, to publication of any individual contract notice. According to the Commission, the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region in this case simply published 14 separate contract notices for the first time on 18 February 1995 without having recourse to a preliminary prior information procedure.

28 Furthermore, on the basis of an examination of the contract notices published in the Supplement (S) to the Official Journal in 1993, 1994 and 1995, the Commission considers that the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region has only rarely adhered to the prior information procedure laid down in Articles 12 of Directive 71/305 and 11 of Directive 93/37.

29 The Commission also points out that it has not found any prior information notice published by the Département du Nord over the period concerned and finds, on the basis of the information at its disposal, that there has been a repeated failure to fulfil the obligations of prior information laid down in Articles 12 of Directive 71/305 and 11 of Directive 93/37.

30 The French Government does not deny that, considered in isolation, Article 11(1) of Directive 93/37 appears to be of a mandatory nature. It none the less contends that the compulsory nature of the advertising of a prior information notice before the advertising of any contract notice is not so clearly evident from Articles 12 and 13 of Directive 93/37. Those latter provisions provide that the time-limits for the receipt of tenders (52 days in open procedures and 40 days in restricted procedures) may be reduced, respectively, to 36 and 26 days where the contracting authorities have published an indicative prior information notice, which implies, according to the French Government, that the prior information notice provided for under Article 11(1) of Directive 93/37 is not compulsory.

31 It should be borne in mind, first, that, under Article 11(1) of Directive 93/37, contracting authorities are to make known, by means of an indicative notice, the essential characteristics of the works contracts which they intend to award and the estimated value of which is not less than the threshold laid down in Article 6(1) of that directive.

32 Second, it follows from Articles 12(1) and (2) and 13(3) and (4) of Directive 93/37 that, as a general rule, the time-limits for the receipt of tenders may not be less than 52 days from the date of dispatch of the contract notice in respect of open procedures and 40 days from the date of dispatch of the written invitation in respect of restricted procedures, but that they may be reduced, respectively, to 36 and 26 days only where the contracting authorities have published the prior information notice.

33 Since the compulsory or optional nature of the prior information notice is not expressly clear from the wording of those provisions, it is necessary to take account of the scheme which Directive 93/37 was intended to establish overall and, consequently, to examine Articles 11(1), 12(1) and (2) and 13(3) and (4) of Directive 93/37 jointly and systematically in order to arrive at a coherent interpretation and application of that directive.

34 The prior information procedure is one of the rules on advertising laid down in Directive 93/37. As is clear in particular from the 10th recital in the preamble to that directive, the purpose of those rules is to ensure development, at the Community level, of effective competition in the field of public works contracts, by ensuring that potential tenderers from other Member States are in a position to respond to the various invitations in circumstances comparable to those prevailing for national tenderers.

35 It follows that the purpose of the rules on advertising laid down in Directive 93/37, including publication of the prior information notice, is to inform all potential tenderers at the Community level in good time about the main points of a contract in order that they may submit their tender within the time-limits. That purpose shows that whether the prior information notice is compulsory must be determined by reference to the provisions of that directive relating to the time-limits for the receipt of tenders submitted by tenderers.

36 In this respect, Articles 12(1) and 13(3) of Directive 93/37, which fix as a general rule the normal time-limits for the receipt of tenders at 52 days in respect of open procedures and 40 days in respect of restricted procedures, make no reference to the preliminary publication of a prior information notice.

37 On the other hand, Articles 12(2) and 13(4) of Directive 93/37, which confer on the contracting authorities the power to reduce the time-limits laid down in Articles 12(1) and 13(3), expressly link that power to the preliminary publication of a prior information notice.

38 It follows that the publication of a prior information notice is compulsory only where the contracting authorities exercise their option to reduce the time-limits for the receipt of tenders.

39 If the publication of a prior information notice were compulsory for every award procedure, whatever the time-limit for the receipt of tenders, the reference to it in Articles 12(2) and 13(4) of Directive 93/37 would be superfluous.

40 By linking the exercise, by the contracting authorities, of the option to reduce the time-limits for the receipt of tenders to the obligation to publish a prior information notice, the Community legislature intended to give potential tenderers, as regards the time at their disposal to draw up their tender, safeguards comparable to those which they would have enjoyed if the normal time-limits had been applied.

41 That interpretation is furthermore borne out by the travaux préparatoires for Directive 89/440, which inserted the prior information procedure into Directive 71/305. In its proposal for a Council Directive amending Directive 71/305 (COM (86) 679 final), the Commission had initially proposed the insertion of an obligation to publish a prior information notice at least six months before the date on which such contracts are due to be put up for competition by also providing that the time-limit for the receipt of tenders would be doubled in the case of contracting authorities which had failed to fulfil that obligation. However, that proposal, which expressly characterised the prior information procedure as an obligation, was not accepted by the Council.

42 As regards, finally, the Commission's argument that the compulsory nature of the prior information notice was clearly acknowledged by the Court of Justice in Case C-272/91 Commission v Italy [1994] ECR I-1409, it is clear that that case concerned the indicative notice provided for under Article 9(1) of Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1), as amended by Council Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988 amending Directive 77/62 and repealing certain provisions of Directive 80/767/EEC (OJ 1988 L 127, p. 1; Directive 77/62).

43 The indicative notice provided for under Article 9(1) of Directive 77/62 does not, unlike the notice provided for under Article 11(1) of Directive 93/37, introduce any possibility of reducing the time-limits for the receipt of tenders. The problem of interpretation at issue in Commission v Italy, cited above, did not therefore arise in terms analogous to those in the present case.

44 In the light of all the foregoing considerations and given the fact that, in this case, it is clear from the case-file that the contracting authorities in question did not reduce the time-limits for the receipt of tenders in relation to the disputed contracts, it must be concluded that those contracting authorities were not in breach of their obligations under Directives 71/305 and 93/37, as regards the prior information procedure.

45 Consequently, the Commission's complaint relating to failure to publish prior information notices must be rejected as unfounded.

The complaint relating to the additional criterion linked to the campaign against unemployment

46 The Commission claims that, in expressly setting forth as an award criterion in a number of contract notices a condition relating to employment linked to a local project to combat unemployment, the French authorities have infringed Article 30 of Directive 93/37. The Commission acknowledges that the taking into account of employment-related projects may be regarded as a condition of performance for the purpose of the rule in Beentjes (Case 31/87 Beentjes v Netherlands State [1988] ECR 4635, paragraphs 28 and 37), but it points out that, in the present case, that possibility was characterised as an award criterion in the contract notices in question. Under Article 30 of Directive 93/37, award criteria must be based either on the lowest price or on the most economically advantageous tender.

47 Relying on paragraphs 28 and 37 of Beentjes, the French Government contends that an additional award criterion of that kind has been permitted by the Court of Justice. It states, furthermore, that the award criterion in question in this case does not constitute a primary criterion, such as those referred to in Article 29 of Directive 71/305, the purpose of which is to make it possible to determine which is the most advantageous tender, but a secondary criterion which is not decisive.

48 The first point to be noted here is that, by this complaint, the Commission alleges that the French Republic has infringed Article 30(1) of Directive 93/37 purely and simply by referring to the criterion linked to the campaign against unemployment as an award criterion in some of the disputed contract notices.

49 Under Article 30(1) of Directive 93/37, the criteria on which the contracting authorities are to base the award of contracts are either the lowest price only or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract, such as price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit.

50 None the less, that provision does not preclude all possibility for the contracting authorities to use as a criterion a condition linked to the campaign against unemployment provided that that condition is consistent with all the fundamental principles of Community law, in particular the principle of non-discrimination flowing from the provisions of the Treaty on the right of establishment and the freedom to provide services (see, to that effect, Beentjes, paragraph 29).

51 Furthermore, even if such a criterion is not in itself incompatible with Directive 93/37, it must be applied in conformity with all the procedural rules laid down in that directive, in particular the rules on advertising (see, to that effect, on Directive 71/305, Beentjes, paragraph 31). It follows that an award criterion linked to the campaign against unemployment must be expressly mentioned in the contract notice so that contractors may become aware of its existence (see, to that effect, Beentjes, paragraph 36).

52 As regards the Commission's argument that Beentjes concerned a condition of performance of the contract and not a criterion for the award of the contract, it need merely be observed that, as is clear from paragraph 14 of Beentjes, the condition relating to the employment of long-term unemployed persons, which was at issue in that case, had been used as the basis for rejecting a tender and therefore necessarily constituted a criterion for the award of the contract.

53 In this case, as has been stated in paragraph 48 above, the Commission criticises only the reference to such a criterion as an award criterion in the contract notice. It does not claim that the criterion linked to the campaign against unemployment is inconsistent with the fundamental principles of Community law, in particular the principle of non-discrimination, or that it was not advertised in the contract notice.

54 In those circumstances, the Commission's complaint relating to the additional award criterion linked to the campaign against unemployment must be rejected.

The complaint relating to the number of candidates selected

55 The Commission states that, in the contract notices published in the Official Journal of 18 February 1995, the text under heading 13 states: Maximum number of candidates which may be invited to submit a tender: 5. The Commission points out that, even if the French authorities seem to take the view, in their reply to the formal notice, that that maximum of five candidates fulfils the obligation to ensure genuine competition imposed by Directive 93/37, the disputed indication under heading 13 in the abovementioned contract notices suggests that the number of candidates invited to submit a tender might be less than five. Consequently, the French authorities have not fulfilled the obligation laid down in Article 22 of Directive 93/37.

56 The French Government, on the other hand, contends that the maximum number of five candidates fixed in the contract notices complies with the letter and the spirit of Article 22 of Directive 93/37 and, because of the characteristics of the type of contract in question, is sufficient in this case to fulfil the obligation to ensure genuine competition. The French Government infers from Article 22(2) of Directive 93/37 that there is nothing to prohibit a contracting authority from restricting to five the number of candidates invited to tender, so long as it considers that that number is sufficient to ensure genuine competition under objective and non-discriminatory conditions.

57 It should be recalled that, under the first subparagraph of Article 22(2) of Directive 93/37, where the contracting authorities award a contract by restricted procedure, they may prescribe the range within which the number of undertakings which they intend to invite will fall. Under the same provision, the range must number at least five undertakings and may be up to 20.

58 Furthermore, under the second subparagraph of Article 22(2) of Directive 93/37, the number of candidates invited to tender is, in any event, to be sufficient to ensure genuine competition.

59 It is true that Article 22(2) of Directive 93/37 does not provide for a minimum number of candidates which the contracting authorities are required to invite where they do not opt in favour of fixing a range as provided by that provision.

60 However, if the Community legislature considered that, in the context of a restricted procedure and where the contracting authorities prescribe a range, a number of candidates below five is not sufficient to ensure genuine competition, the same must be true a fortiori in cases where the contracting authorities opt for inviting a maximum number of candidates.

61 It follows that the number of undertakings which a contracting authority intends to invite to tender in the context of a restricted procedure cannot ever be less than five.

62 In this case, the conclusion to be drawn must be that, as the French Government itself accepts, the wording Maximum number of candidates which may be invited to submit a tender: 5 appearing in the contract notices published in the Official Journal of 18 February 1995 implies that it is the maximum number of candidates invited to tender for the contracts in question which was fixed at five. It follows that, on the basis of the disputed contract notices, a number of candidates below five was regarded as acceptable.

63 In those circumstances, it must be held that the Commission's complaint concerning the number of candidates selected is well founded and that the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 22(2) of Directive 93/37.

The complaint relating to the method known as award by reference to the Code des Marchés Publics 64 The Commission points out that, in most of the contract notices published between 1993 and 1995, the contracting authorities in question had recourse, in order to indicate the award criteria, to the method known as award by reference to the Code des Marchés Publics, which, it claims, is contrary to Articles 29(2) of Directive 71/305 and 30(2) of Directive 93/37. By referring generally to various provisions of the French Code des Marchés Publics, the abovementioned contract notices do not satisfy the requirement as to advertising, as stated in Beentjes.

65 Relying on the case-law of the Court (see Case 51/83 Commission v Italy [1984] ECR 2793), the French Government contends, first, that that complaint by the Commission must be regarded as inadmissible in that it was raised for the first time in the reasoned opinion.

66 Admittedly, in its supplementary letter of formal notice of 8 May 1996, the Commission adopted a position on the criteria for the award of the contracts in question and, in this respect, drew the French authorities' attention to the fact that the contract notices must enable contractors to assess whether the proposed contracts were of interest to them. However, the French Government submits that that reference did not apply expressly to the complaint relating to the method of award by reference to the Code des Marchés Publics, but formed part of the complaint concerning the additional criterion relating to employment. Thus that reference did not enable the French Government to define the complaint as relating to the method of award by reference to the Code des Marchés Publics, a method to which the Commission did not expressly refer until the reasoned opinion.

67 In the alternative, the French Government submits that Article 30(2) of Directive 93/37 does not require that the criteria for the award of the contract be listed in the contract notice, but permits the contracting authority to include them either in the contract notice or in the contract documents. In this case, the award criteria are expressly listed in the contract documents.

68 As regards the admissibility of this complaint of the Commission, it should be borne in mind, first, that it follows from the purpose assigned to the pre-litigation stage of the Treaty infringement procedure that the letter of formal notice is intended to define the subject-matter of the dispute and to indicate to the Member State, which is invited to submit its observations, the factors enabling it to prepare its defence (Case 274/83 Commission v Italy [1985] ECR 1077, paragraph 19).

69 Second, according to consistent case-law, the opportunity for the Member State concerned to submit its observations constitutes an essential guarantee required by the Treaty and, even if the Member State does not consider it necessary to avail itself thereof, observance of that guarantee is an essential formal requirement of the Treaty infringement procedure (see, in particular, Case 51/83, paragraph 5; and Case 274/83, paragraph 20).

70 Although it follows that the reasoned opinion provided for in Article 169 of the Treaty must contain a coherent and detailed statement of the reasons which led the Commission to conclude that the State in question has failed to fulfil one of its obligations under the Treaty, the Court cannot impose such strict requirements as regards the letter of formal notice, which of necessity will contain only an initial brief summary of the complaints. There is nothing therefore to prevent the Commission from setting out in detail in the reasoned opinion the complaints which it has already made more generally in its letter of formal notice (see Case 274/83, paragraph 21).

71 In this respect, it is clear from the documents before the Court that, in the supplementary letter of formal notice of 8 May 1996, the Commission made a general criticism of the award criteria in the disputed contract notices. It drew the French authorities' attention to the fact that the contract notices must enable undertakings to determine whether the information they contain enables them to assess whether the proposed contracts are of interest to them. It also referred to the case-law of the Court according to which a general reference to a provision of national legislation cannot satisfy the requirements as to advertising in respect of contract notices.

72 It follows that the formal notice, even if its wording was not very explicit as regards the method known as award by reference to the Code des Marchés Publics, none the less enabled the French Government to be aware of the complaint made against it. Therefore, the criticism of the award criteria subsequently made by the Commission in its reasoned opinion is a lawful detailed specification of the complaints raised in the letter of formal notice. The Commission's complaint is therefore admissible.

73 As regards the substance of the complaint, where the authorities awarding the contract do not take the lowest price as the sole criterion for awarding the contract but have regard to various criteria with a view to awarding the contract to the most economically advantageous tender, they are required to state these criteria in the contract notice or the contract documents. Consequently, a general reference to a provision of national legislation cannot satisfy the publicity requirement (Beentjes, paragraph 35).

74 The French Government does indeed contend that, in this case, the award criteria are expressly included in the contract documents. However, it did not supply the Court with any evidence which might prove that assertion.

75 It must therefore be concluded that the Commission's complaint relating to the method known as an award by reference to the Code des Marchés Publics is well founded and that the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 29(2) of Directive 71/305 and 30(2) of Directive

The complaint relating to the mode of designating the lots

76 The Commission claims that many of the contract notices examined refer, under the heading Works. Designation of lots and qualifications, to the classifications of French professional organisations, in particular the OPQCB and Qualibat - Qualifélec. As an example, the Commission gives the qualification Qualibat Chauffage 5312, which corresponds to a design office of approved technical expertise in environmental engineering with at least four years' practical experience and at Level 6 in the Convention Collective ETAM des Bâtiment et Travaux Publics (collective agreement for the construction and civil engineering industry).

77 Admittedly, the French authorities pointed out, in their reply to the letter of formal notice, that those notices do not state that the certificates which may be taken into account are exclusively certificates issued by Qualibat or Qualifélec. The Commission claims, none the less, that the technical specifications selected by the contracting authorities in question may have the effect of giving advantage to French undertakings, which are familiar with that system of quality certification and are accustomed to submitting documents or services in conformity with the references required in the contract notice.

78 The French Government contends that such references are purely indicative and, that being so, cannot be discriminatory. The addition of a classification number is quite superfluous since it features alongside the description of each lot in everyday language (electricity, plumbing, and so on).

79 Furthermore, the reference, under heading 3 of the contract notices, to classifications defined by professional organisations does not of itself have a discriminatory effect since it does not give to French candidates as opposed to candidates who are nationals of other Member States any additional information about the services to be provided. It is not a question of specifying, under that heading, information relating to the selection criteria or the criteria for the award of the contract, but of giving guidance about the nature of the lots which is explained in greater detail in the contract documents.

80 According to the Court's case-law the principle of equal treatment, of which Article 59 of the Treaty is a specific expression, prohibits not only overt discrimination by reason of nationality but also all covert forms of discrimination which, by the application of other criteria of differentiation, lead in fact to the same result (see, to that effect, Case 3/88 Commission v Italy [1989] ECR 4035, paragraph 8).

81 In this case, although the reference to classifications of French professional organisations does not imply that the certificates which may be taken into account are exclusively those issued by those bodies, it remains the case that the technical specifications selected are so specific and abstruse that, as a rule, only French candidates are able immediately to discern their relevance. Consequently, the use of those references to designate the lots has the effect of supplying more information to French undertakings about the nature of the lots, thereby making it easier for those undertakings to submit tenders which comply with the coded references appearing in the contract notice.

82 On the other hand, it is more difficult for tenderers from other Member States to submit tenders within the brief time-limit set since they must first find out from the contracting authorities in question the purpose and content of those references.

83 Therefore, to the extent that the designation of the lots by reference to classifications of French professional organisations is likely to have a dissuasive effect on tenderers who are not

French, it thereby constitutes indirect discrimination and, therefore, a restriction on the freedom to provide services, within the meaning of Article 59 of the Treaty.

84 Consequently, the Commission's complaint relating to the mode of designating the lots is well founded and the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 59 of the Treaty.

The complaint relating to the minimum standards for participation

85 The Commission claims that the minimum standards for participation specified under heading 10 in a certain number of contract notices published by the Département du Nord require from the designer proof of registration with the Ordre des Architectes (French association for architects). It states that, notwithstanding the distinction drawn by the French authorities between, on the one hand, the scheme of registration and, on the other, the scheme of permission to pursue the profession of architect in France, in the majority of cases heading 10 of the contract notices states unambiguously for the designer: proof of registration with the Ordre des Architectes. Consequently, the Département du Nord has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 59 of the Treaty by imposing restrictions on Community architects' freedom to provide services.

86 The Commission also points out that, as regards the Wingles secondary school, the minimum standards referred to in the contract notice required the provision of a certificate of OPQCB, Qualifélec, FNTP professional qualification. First, Articles 23 to 28 of Directive 71/305 lay down the qualitative criteria for selection of candidate undertakings and, more specifically, Article 26 defines the means of furnishing proof of technical knowledge or ability. Second, it is clear from Case 76/81 Transporoute v Ministère des Travaux Publics [1982] ECR 417 that evidence of an undertaking's professional qualification cannot be furnished by a means of proof which falls outside the closed category of those authorised by Article 26 of Directive 71/305. Therefore, the contracting authority concerned has failed to fulfil its obligation under that provision.

87 In this respect, the Court finds, first, that the requirement of proof that the designer is registered with the Ordre des Architectes can only give advantage to the provision of services by French architects, which constitutes discrimination against Community architects and, accordingly, a restriction on their freedom to provide services.

88 Second, according to the case-law, Directive 71/305 precludes a Member State from requiring a tenderer established in another Member State to furnish proof by any means other than those prescribed in Articles 23 to 26 of that directive, that he satisfies the criteria laid down in those provisions and relating to his qualifications (see, to that effect, Transporoute, paragraph 15).

89 In any event, the French Government itself recognises that those criticisms by the Commission are well founded but submits that the infringements committed are essentially the result of the inexperience of the contracting authorities in question in applying the Community rules on the award of public contracts.

90 Consequently, it must be concluded that the Commission's complaint relating to the minimum standards for participation is well founded and that the French Republic has failed in its obligations under Articles 59 of the Treaty and 26 of Directive 71/305.

The complaints relating to the procedure of information on contract awards and the failure to communicate the written reports 91 The Commission claims that, during the period from 1993 to 1995, the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region failed to fulfil the obligation to publish information on contract awards, as provided for in Articles 12(5) of Directive 71/305 and 11(5) of Directive 93/37. The award notices seem to have been published only by the Département du Nord, which constitutes an additional failure to fulfil its obligations on the part of the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region.

92 Furthermore, the Commission states that the French authorities did not send it the information required by its supplementary letter of formal notice of 8 May 1996, in particular the written reports on all the procedures criticised. Consequently, the French authorities have failed to fulfil their obligations under the second subparagraph of Article 8(3) of Directive 93/37.

93 The French Government admits, first, that the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region did not publish award notices in accordance with Articles 11(5) of Directive 93/37 and 12(5) of Directive 71/305 and, second, that the written reports on the procedures in question were not sent to the Commission in accordance with Article 8(3) of Directive 93/37. It adds that that failure can only be explained by the inexperience of those contracting authorities in applying the Community rules on the award of public contracts.

94 Therefore, it must be concluded that the complaints relating to the procedure of information on contract awards and the failure to communicate the written reports are well founded and that the French Republic has failed in its obligations under Article 12(5) of Directive 71/305 and Articles 8(3) and 11(5) of Directive 93/37.

95 In the light of all the foregoing, the Court finds that, in the course of the various procedures for the award of public works contracts for the construction and maintenance of school buildings conducted by the Nord-Pas-de-Calais Region and the Département du Nord over a period of three years, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 59 of the Treaty as well as under Articles 12(5), 26 and 29(2) of Directive 71/305 and under Articles 8(3), 11(5), 22(2) and 30(2) of Directive 93/37.

Order of the President of the Court of 26 November 1999 Azienda nazionale autonoma delle strade (ANAS). Reference for a preliminary ruling: Corte dei Conti - Italy. Article 177 of the EC Treaty (now Article 234 EC) - Definition of "court or tribunal of a Member State" - Directive 92/50/EC - Procedures for the award of public service contracts. Case C-192/98.

Preliminary rulings - Reference to the Court - Court or tribunal of a Member State within the meaning of Article 177 of the Treaty (now Article 234 EC) - Meaning - To be determined on the basis of the body's constitution and role - Role of the Corte dei Conti (Italian Court of Auditors), in the context within which reference was made to the Court, consisting in the evaluation and verification of the results of administrative action - Not a judicial function

$$The question whether a body may refer a question to the Court falls to be determined on the basis of criteria relating both to the constitution of that body and to its function. Thus, a national body may be classified as `a court or tribunal' within the meaning of Article 177 of the Treaty when it is performing judicial functions, but when exercising other functions - of an administrative nature, for example - it cannot be recognised as such.

It follows that in order to establish whether a national body, entrusted by law with different categories of function, is to be regarded as a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the Treaty, it is necessary to determine in what specific capacity it is acting within the particular legal context in which it seeks a ruling from the Court. For the purposes of that analysis, no relevance is to be attributed to the fact that, when otherwise configured, the body concerned falls to be classified as a court or tribunal for the purposes of Article 177 of the Treaty (even the same entity whose status is in issue, when it is exercising powers other than those in the context of which the reference was made).

The Corte dei Conti (Court of Auditors) is not performing a judicial function - and cannot therefore make a reference to the Court of Justice - when, in the context in which reference is made, it is exercising its powers of ex post facto review which is an administrative role consisting in the evaluation and verification of the results of administrative action.

Reference for a preliminary ruling: Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Sardegna - Italy.
Directive 92/50/EEC - Public service contracts - Proof of standing of the service provider - Possibility of relying on the standing of another company.
Case C-176/98.

Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - Service provider relying on the standing of another company as proof of its own standing - Conditions - Assessment by the national court

$$Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts is to be interpreted as permitting a service provider to establish that it fulfils the economic, financial and technical criteria for participation in a tendering procedure for the award of a public service contract by relying on the standing of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them, provided that it is able to show that it actually has at its disposal the resources of those entities which are necessary for performance of the contract. It is for the national court to assess, in the light of the evidence adduced to that effect, whether that has been shown.

32 The costs incurred by the Italian, Netherlands and Austrian Governments and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. THE COURT in answer to the question referred to it by the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per la Sardegna by order of 10 February 1998, hereby rules:

Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts is to be interpreted as permitting a service provider to establish that it fulfils the economic, financial and technical criteria for participation in a tendering procedure for the award of a public service contract by relying on the standing of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them, provided that it is able to show that it actually has at its disposal the resources of those entities which are necessary for performance of the contract. It is for the national court to assess whether the requisite evidence in that regard has been adduced in the main proceedings.

1 By order of 10 February 1998, received at the Court on 11 May 1998, the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per la Sardegna (Regional Administrative Court for Sardinia) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty (now Article 234 EC) a question on the interpretation of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

2 That question was raised in proceedings between Holst Italia SpA (`Holst Italia') and the Municipality of Cagliari concerning the award by the latter to Ruhrwasser AG International Water Management (`Ruhrwasser'), by negotiated tender procedure, of a contract for the collection and purification of domestic waste water.

The Community legislation

3 Directive 92/50 lays down qualitative selection criteria for the determination of candidates admitted to take part in procedures for the award of a public service contract.

4 Article 31 of that directive provides:

`1. Proof of the service provider's financial and economic standing may, as a general rule, be furnished by one or more of the following references:

(a) appropriate statements from banks or evidence of relevant professional risk indemnity insurance;

(b) the presentation of the service provider's balance sheets or extracts therefrom, where publication of the balance sheets is required under company law in the country in which the service provider is established;

(c) a statement of the undertaking's overall turnover and its turnover in respect of the services to which the contract relates for the previous three financial years.

2. The contracting authorities shall specify in the contract notice or in the invitation to tender which reference or references mentioned in paragraph 1 they have chosen and which other references are to be produced.

3. If, for any valid reason, the service provider is unable to provide the references requested by the contracting authority, he may prove his economic and financial standing by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate.'

5 Article 32 of Directive 92/50 is in the following terms:

`1. The ability of service providers to perform services may be evaluated in particular with regard to their skills, efficiency, experience and reliability.

2. Evidence of the service provider's technical capability may be furnished by one or more of the following means according to the nature, quantity and purpose of the services to be provided:

(a) the service provider's educational and professional qualifications and/or those of the firm's managerial staff and, in particular, those of the person or persons responsible for providing the services;

(b) a list of the principal services provided in the past three years, with the sums, dates and recipients, public or private, of the services provided;

- where provided to contracting authorities, evidence to be in the form of certificates issued or countersigned by the competent authority,

- where provided to private purchasers, delivery to be certified by the purchaser or, failing this, simply declared by the service provider to have been effected;

(c) an indication of the technicians or technical bodies involved, whether or not belonging directly to the service provider, especially those responsible for quality control;

(d) a statement of the service provider's average annual manpower and the number of managerial staff for the last three years;

(e) a statement of the tool, plant or technical equipment available to the service provider for carrying out the services;

(f) a description of the service provider's measures for ensuring quality and his study and research facilities;

(g) where the services to be provided are complex or, exceptionally, are required for a special purpose, a check carried out by the contracting authority or on its behalf by a competent official body of the country in which the service provider is established, subject to that body's agreement, on the technical capacities of the service provider and, if necessary, on his study and research facilities and quality control measures;

(h) an indication of the proportion of the contract which the service provider may intend to subcontract.

3. The contracting authority shall specify, in the notice or in the invitation to tender, which references it wishes to receive.

4. The extent of the information referred to in Article 31 and in paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of this Article must be confined to the subject of the contract; contracting authorities shall take into consideration the legitimate interests of the service providers as regards the protection of their technical or trade secrets.'

6 Article 25 of Directive 92/50 further provides:

`In the contract documents, the contracting authority may ask the tenderer to indicate in his tender any share of the contract he may intend to subcontract to third parties.

This indication shall be without prejudice to the question of the principal service provider's liability.'

7 Lastly, Article 26 of Directive 92/50 provides:

`1. Tenders may be submitted by groups of service providers. These groups may not be required to assume a specific legal form in order to submit the tender; however, the group selected may be required to do so when it has been awarded the contract.

2. Candidates or tenderers who, under the law of the Member State in which they are established, are entitled to carry out the relevant service activity, shall not be rejected solely on the grounds that, under the law of the Member State in which the contract is awarded, they would have been required to be either natural or legal persons.

3. Legal persons may be required to indicate in the tender or the request for participation the names and relevant professional qualifications of the staff to be responsible for the performance of the service.'

The main proceedings

8 In 1996 the Municipality of Cagliari conducted a negotiated tendering procedure for the award, on the basis of the most advantageous tender submitted, of a three-year contract for the management of water purification and sewage disposal plants.

9 The invitation to tender, published in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 3 January 1997, provided that interested undertakings were to provide proof, in particular, of (a) an average annual turnover equal to or greater than ITL 5 000 million during the period from 1993 to 1995 in the field of the management of water purification and sewage disposal plants and

(b) actual management of at least one domestic waste water purification plant for a period of two consecutive years during the previous three years, and that, in the absence of such proof, such undertakings were to be excluded from the tendering procedure.

10 Ruhrwasser, which had been registered as a company since only 9 July 1996, was unable to show any turnover whatsoever for the period from 1993 to 1995 or to show that it had actually managed at least one domestic waste water purification plant during the previous three years.

11 In order to establish its standing to take part in the tendering procedure, on the conclusion of which it was awarded the contract, Ruhrwasser provided documentation relating to the financial resources of another entity, the German public-law body Ruhrverband. That body is the sole shareholder in the undertaking RWG Ruhr-Wasserwirtschafts-Gesellschaft, which, together with five other companies, set up Ruhrwasser as a joint venture undertaking in the form of a company limited by shares and governed by German law, owned as to one sixth by each of the parent companies, the object of which is to enable those companies to win contracts abroad for the collection and treatment of water.

12 Holst Italia also took part in the procedure, but its offer was regarded as less advantageous by the committee awarding the contract. It thereupon brought proceedings before the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per la Sardegna for annulment of the decision of the Cagliari Municipal Council approving the award of the contract to Ruhrwasser, on the ground that the latter had not produced the documentation needed in order to be eligible to submit a tender.

13 Ruhrwasser intervened in the proceedings before the Tribunale and lodged an interlocutory application for a declaration that the invitation to tender was illegal in so far as it prohibited a candidate undertaking from producing references concerning another undertaking with a view to establishing its own standing to submit a tender.

14 Following examination of the relationship between Ruhrwasser and the companies by which it had been formed, the Tribunale considered that there was a `close connection between Ruhrverband and Ruhrwasser which allows the latter to avail itself of the facilities and organisation of the former'. In those circumstances, it took the view that it was necessary to verify whether Directive 92/50 was to be interpreted as meaning that references concerning an entity connected with the candidate undertaking could be accepted as proof of the latter's standing.

15 According to the Tribunale, although the Court accepted, in its judgments in Case C-389/92 Ballast Nedam Groep v Belgian State [1994] ECR I-1289 (`Ballast Nedam Groep I') and Case C-5/97 Ballast Nedam Groep v Belgian State [1997] ECR I-7549 (`Ballast Nedam Groep II') that an undertaking may prove that it has the necessary standing by furnishing references in respect of other companies within the same group, the situation at issue in those judgments is to be distinguished from that in the present case, inasmuch as, first, it concerned public works contracts governed by Council Directive 71/304/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the abolition of restrictions on freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts and on the award of public works contracts to contractors acting through agencies or branches (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 678) and Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the co-ordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682), and not public service contracts, and, second, the company concerned in Ballast Nedam Groep I and Ballast Nedam Groep II, unlike Ruhrwasser, enjoyed a dominant position within the group of companies which, it claimed, had the requisite standing as the parent company of its subsidiaries.

16 In order to ascertain whether, despite those differences of law and fact, the decision reached by the Court in its previous judgments was also applicable to a situation such as that in issue in the main proceedings, the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per la Sardegna decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

`Does Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts permit a company to prove that it possesses the technical and financial qualifications laid down for participation in a procedure for the award of a public service contract by relying on the references of another company which is the sole shareholder of one of the companies having a holding in the first-mentioned company?'

17 According to Holst Italia, references concerning an entity other than the candidate undertaking may be relied on, in the context of Directive 92/50, only if that company can show the existence of a clear structural link connecting it with the company possessing the standing needed for performance of the contract.

18 Such a structural link, constituting, according to the plaintiff in the main proceedings, a fundamental guarantee for the contracting authority, presupposes, according to the Court's case-law, that the company submitting the tender exerts a dominant influence on the entity whose references it uses and actually has at its complete disposal all the latter's resources. That is not the case where the tenderer merely relies on obligations of a commercial nature entered into by an entity indirectly holding a minority share of its capital. To accept, in such circumstances, that the standing of a third party may be taken into account would mean that the standing claimed would cease to be personal in character.

19 The Italian Government likewise doubts that a subsidiary indirectly owned by an entity is capable of claiming that it has at its disposal the technical and financial resources of that entity. It acknowledges, however, that it is for the national court to assess the evidence provided in that connection by the tenderer.

20 By contrast, Ruhrwasser, like the Netherlands and Austrian Governments, considers that the legal nature of the link established between associated undertakings cannot in any circumstances be asserted against those undertakings as a ground for refusing to take into account, in favour of one member of the group, the standing of another member. Irrespective of the nature of the organisation found to exist, the only relevant consideration is the consequences to which it gives rise in terms of the availability of its resources.

21 It follows, according to Ruhrwasser, that where, in addition to structural links relating, in particular, to possession of the capital, there exist mandatory obligations requiring resources to be made available to the subsidiary participating in the tendering procedure, that effectively proves actual possession of the resources needed to perform the contract.

22 According to the Commission, the basic ruling arrived at by the Court in its judgments in Ballast Nedam Groep I and Ballast Nedam Groep II is applicable by analogy to a situation such as that in the present case. However, it emphasises that a tenderer cannot be presumed actually to have at its disposal the resources necessary for the performance of the contract, whatever the nature of its legal relationship with the members of the group of which it forms part, and that the availability of those resources must be the subject of a careful examination by the national court of the evidence which the party concerned is required to provide. The order for reference does not conclusively show that any such examination has been carried out in the main proceedings on the basis of adequate documentation.

23 The Court observes first of all that, as is apparent from the sixth recital in the preamble thereto, Directive 92/50 is designed to avoid obstacles to freedom to provide services in the award of public service contracts, just as Directives 71/304 and 71/305 are designed to ensure freedom to provide services in the field of public works contracts (Ballast Nedam Groep I, paragraph 6).

24 To that end, Chapter 1 of Title VI of Directive 92/50 lays down common rules on participation in procedures for the award of public service contracts, including the possibility of subcontracting part of the contract to third parties (Article 25) and of the submission of tenders by groups of service providers without their being required to assume a specific legal form in order to do so (Article 26).

25 In addition, the criteria for qualitative selection laid down in Chapter 2 of Title VI of Directive 92/50 are designed solely to define the rules governing objective assessment of the standing of tenderers, particularly as regards financial, economic and technical matters. One of those criteria, provided for in Article 31(3), allows tenderers to prove their financial and economic standing by means of any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate. A further provision, contained in Article 32(2)(c), expressly states that evidence of the service provider's technical capability may be furnished by an indication of the technicians or technical bodies, whether or not belonging directly to the service provider, on which it can call to perform the service (see, to the same effect, as regards Directive 71/305, Ballast Nedam Groep I, paragraph 12).

26 From the object and wording of those provisions, it follows that a party cannot be eliminated from a procedure for the award of a public service contract solely on the ground that that party proposes, in order to carry out the contract, to use resources which are not its own but belong to one or more other entities (see, to the same effect, as regards Directives 71/304 and 71/305, Ballast Nedam Groep I, paragraph 15).

27 It is therefore permissible for a service provider which does not itself fulfil the minimum conditions required for participation in the procedure for the award of a public service contract to rely, vis-à-vis the contracting authority, on the standing of third parties upon whose resources it proposes to draw if it is awarded the contract.

28 However, such recourse to external references is subject to certain conditions. As stated in Article 23 of Directive 92/50, the contracting authority is required to verify the suitability of the service providers in accordance with the criteria laid down. That verification is intended, in particular, to enable the contracting authority to ensure that the successful tenderer will indeed be able to use whatever resources it relies on throughout the period covered by the contract.

29 Thus, where, in order to prove its financial, economic and technical standing with a view to being admitted to participate in a tendering procedure, a company relies on the resources of entities or undertakings with which it is directly or indirectly linked, whatever the legal nature of those links may be, it must establish that it actually has available to it the resources of those entities or undertakings which it does not itself own and which are necessary for the performance of the contract (see, to the same effect, as regards Directives 71/304 and 71/305, Ballast Nedam Groep I, paragraph 17).

30 It is for the national court to assess the relevance of the evidence adduced to that effect. In the context of that assessment, Directive 92/50 does not permit the exclusion, without due analysis, of specific types of proof or the assumption that the service provider has available to it resources belonging to third parties merely by virtue of the fact that it forms part of the same group of undertakings.

31 Consequently, the answer to be given to the question referred must be that Directive 92/50 is to be interpreted as permitting a service provider to establish that it fulfils the economic, financial and technical criteria for participation in a tendering procedure for the award of a public service contract by relying on the standing of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them, provided that it is able to show that it actually has at its disposal the resources of those entities which are necessary for performance of the contract. It is for the national court to assess whether the requisite evidence in that regard has been adduced in the main proceedings.

Judgment

1 By orders of 19 November and 11 December 1997, received at the Court on 9 April 1998, the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale della Campania (General Administrative Court for Campania) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty (now Article 234 EC) two questions on the interpretation of Articles 55 and 90(2) of the EC Treaty (now Articles 45 EC and 86(2) EC).

2 Those questions have been raised in proceedings between RI.SAN. Srl (hereinafter `RI.SAN.') and the Municipality of Ischia, Italia Lavoro SpA (hereinafter `Italia Lavoro'), formerly GEPI SpA (hereinafter `GEPI'), and Ischia Ambiente SpA (hereinafter `Ischia Ambiente') concerning the organisation by the Municipality of a solid urban waste collection service.

3 Article 22(3) of Law No 142/90 of 8 June 1990 on local autonomy (GURI No 135 of 12 June 1990) provides that municipalities and provinces may use the following management forms for local public services for which they are responsible under the law:

`(a) public management, where, owing to the small size or the characteristics of the service, it is not expedient to create an institution or an undertaking;

(b) concessions to third parties, where there are technical, economic or social expediency reasons;

(c) by special undertakings, inter alia for the management of several services of economic and commercial interest;

(d) by institutions, for the provision of social services not having any commercial interest;

(e) by mixed-capital limited companies with a majority public holding, where participation by other public or private persons appears expedient owing to the nature of the service to be provided.'

4 Article 4(6) of Law No 95/95 of 29 March 1995 on mixed-capital public service companies (GURI No 77 of 1 April 1995), amending Decree-Law No 26/95 of 31 January 1995 (GURI No 26 of 31 January 1995), provides:

`In order to promote employment or re-employment of workers, the municipalities and the provinces may form limited companies with GEPI SpA, inter alia for the purpose of operating local public services.'

5 Article 4(8) of that Law provides that `the shareholdings of GEPI SpA in the companies referred to in this article shall be transferred within five years by public tender'.

6 GEPI is a financial company formed pursuant to Article 5 of Law No 184/71 of 22 March 1971 (GURI No 105 of 28 April 1971). Its objects are to assist in maintaining and increasing the level of employment. Its share capital is held entirely by the Treasury Minister.

7 By decision of the municipal council of 19 March 1996, the Municipality of Ischia formed a mixed-capital limited company under Article 22(3)(e) of Law No 142/90 to run the solid urban waste collection service. Pursuant to Article 4(6) of Law No 95/95, the share capital of the company was held as to 51% by the municipality and as to 49% by GEPI. By decision of 7 November 1996, the municipal council entrusted to that company, Ischia Ambiente, the solid urban waste collection service which had previously been provided by RI.SAN., which held a contract due to expire on 4 January 1997.

8 By two actions, RI.SAN. challenged the municipal council decisions claiming, in particular, that the choice of private partner should have been made through public tender procedure and that the waste collection service should also have been awarded under such a procedure.

9 The court which has made this reference has expressed doubts about the compatibility with community law, more particularly with the principle of freedom to provide services and the principle of free competition, of Article 4(6) of Law No 95/95, which allows a local authority to choose GEPI as a partner for the management of local public services without any prior invitation to tender.

10 It ruled, however, that Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) was not relevant in determining the case, since the case did not concern the award of a public service contract but the award of a public service concession.

11 In those circumstances the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale della Campania decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

`1 Must Article 55 of the Treaty (which is applicable inter alia to the services sector by virtue of the reference in Article 66 of the Treaty), pursuant to which "[t]he provisions of this Chapter shall not apply, so far as any given Member State is concerned, to activities which in that State are connected, even occasionally, with the exercise of official authority", be interpreted so widely as to include the activities of GEPI SpA (now Italinvest SpA) as a participant in local authorities' mixed companies for the management of local public services, within the meaning of Article 4(6) of Law No 95 of 29 March 1995 (converting into law, with amendments, Decree-Law No 26 of 31 January 1995), where that participation purports to be for the purpose of "promoting employment or re-employment of workers" already assigned to the service the management of which is at issue, having regard to Article 5 of Law No 184 of 22 March 1971 establishing GEPI SpA, which gives GEPI the task of "contributing to the maintenance and growth of employment levels facing temporary difficulties, such as to demonstrate the specific possibility of reorganising the undertakings concerned", in the manner set out therein?

2. In view of the abovementioned legislation governing GEPI SpA (now Italinvest SpA), may there be applicable to this case the derogation provided for in Article 90(2) of the Treaty, according to which "[u]ndertakings entrusted with the operation of services of general economic interest... shall be subject to the rules contained in this Treaty, in particular to the rules on competition, in so far as the application of those rules does not obstruct the performance in law or in fact, of the particular tasks assigned to them"?'

The subject-matter of the reference

12 The Municipality of Ischia, Italia Lavoro, Ischia Ambiente, the Italian Government and the Commission have submitted observations on the question whether the procedure for choosing the entity entrusted with running the waste collection service may be covered by the provisions of Directive 92/50.

13 That directive applies to the award of public service contracts which are defined, in Article 1(a), as contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority.

14 The national court has, however, expressly excluded the relevance of Directive 92/50, on the ground that only a public service concession was involved, and not a public service contract.

15 The definition of public service concession within the meaning of the Community rules on public contracts and the question whether such a concession is excluded from the scope of Directive 92/50 are matters governed by Community law. Such questions may therefore be the subject of a reference for a preliminary ruling, under Article 177 of the Treaty, if a national court considers that a decision on one of those questions is necessary in order to give judgment.

16 However, even supposing, contrary to the position taken here by the referring court, that Directive 92/50 is relevant in determining the case before it, it must be observed that the reference and the questions raised relate only to the provisions of the Treaty and that the referring court has not provided the factual information which would be necessary for the Court to rule on the interpretation of that directive.

17 In those circumstances, the Court must confine its answer to the provisions of the Treaty expressly mentioned in the questions referred for a preliminary ruling.

18 By its first question, the referring court asks essentially whether Article 55 of the Treaty is to be interpreted as allowing a municipality to choose, without any prior invitation to tender, a financial company as a partner in a mixed-capital company with a majority public shareholding having as its object the running of the solid urban waste collection service.

19 As far as that question is concerned, it should be observed that the application of Article 55 of the Treaty, read in combination, where appropriate, with Article 66 of the EC Treaty (now Article 55 EC), in so far as they form a derogation from the provisions of the Treaty relating respectively to freedom of establishment and to the freedom to provide services, presupposes that those latter provisions are applicable in principle.

20 According to the referring court's analysis, the correctness of which the Court is unable to verify, the award of a public service contract is not at issue in the main proceedings. However, that does not rule out the possibility that provisions of the Treaty on freedom of movement, which impose in particular on the Member States obligations to ensure equal treatment and transparency vis-à-vis economic operators from other Member States, may be relevant.

21 However, the case-file shows that RI.SAN., which challenges the legality of the choice made by the municipality, has its seat in Italy and does not operate on the Italian market in reliance on freedom of establishment or freedom to provide services.

22 Such a situation does not therefore have any connecting link with one of the situations envisaged by Community law in the area of the free movement of persons and services.

23 The answer to be given to the first question must therefore be that Article 55 of the Treaty does not apply in a situation such as that in the main proceedings in which all the facts are confined to within a single Member State and which does not therefore have any connecting link with one of the situations envisaged by Community law in the area of the freedom of movement for persons and freedom to provide services.

The second question

24 By its second question, the national court asks essentially whether Article 90(2) of the Treaty is to be interpreted as allowing a municipality to choose, without any prior invitation to tender, a financial company as partner in a mixed limited company with a majority public shareholding having as its object the running of the solid urban waste collection service.

25 It must be remembered that Article 90(2) constitutes a derogation from the rules of the Treaty, in particular its competition rules, whose application it therefore presupposes.

26 However, as indicated above, in paragraphs 19 to 22, the provisions relating to freedom of movement for persons and freedom to provide services do not apply in a situation such as that existing in the main proceedings. Moreover, neither the order for reference nor the written observations provide the Court with the factual and legal information which would enable it to interpret the other rules of the Treaty, in particular the competition rules, in relation to the situation created by the choice, without a prior invitation to tender, of GEPI as partner in a company with a majority public shareholding having as its object the running of the solid urban waste collection service.

27 In those circumstances, the Court is unable to provide a useful answer to the second question.

Costs

28 The costs incurred by the Italian Government and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

(Fifth Chamber),

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale della Campania by orders of 19 November and 11 December 1997, hereby rules:

Article 55 of the EC Treaty (now Article 45 EC) does not apply in a situation such as that in the main proceedings in which all the facts are confined to within a single Member State and which does not therefore have any connecting link with one of the situations envisaged by Community law in the area of the freedom of movement for persons and freedom to provide services.

Judgment of the Court (Fifth Chamber)
of 18 November 1999
Teckal Srl v Comune di Viano and Azienda Gas-Acqua Consorziale (AGAC) di Reggio Emilia.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Tribunale amministrativo regionale per l'Emilia-Romagna - Italy.
Public service and public supply contracts - Directives 92/50/EEC and 93/36/EEC - Award by a local authority of a contract for the supply of products and provision of specified services to a consortium of which it is a member.
Case C-107/98.

1 Preliminary rulings - Jurisdiction of the Court - Extraction of the relevant points of Community law - Jurisdiction of the national courts - Application of provisions as interpreted

(EC Treaty, Art. 177 (now Art. 234 EC))

2 Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public supply contracts - Directive 93/36 - Scope - Contracts awarded by a contracting authority to a distinct and independent body - Covered - Where the successful tenderer is itself a contracting authority - Irrelevant

1 Where, under the procedure provided for by Article 177 of the Treaty (now Article 234 EC), questions are formulated imprecisely, the Court may extract - from all the information provided by the national court and from the documents concerning the main proceedings - the points of Community law requiring interpretation, having regard to the subject-matter of the dispute. In order to provide the national court with a satisfactory answer, the Court may deem it necessary to consider provisions of Community law which the national court has not mentioned in its question. On the other hand, by virtue of the division of functions provided for under the above provision, it is for the national court to apply the rules of Community law, as interpreted by the Court, to a specific case. No such application is possible without a comprehensive appraisal of the facts of the case.

2 Directive 93/36 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts is applicable in cases where a contracting authority, such as a local authority, plans to conclude in writing, with an entity which is formally distinct from it and independent of it in regard to decision-making - which is not the position where the local authority exercises over a legally distinct person a form of control similar to that exercised over its own departments and, at the same time, the person carries out the essential part of its activities together with the controlling local authority or authorities - a contract for pecuniary interest for the supply of products, whether or not that entity is itself a contracting authority.

The only permitted exceptions to the application of Directive 93/36 are those which are exhaustively and expressly mentioned therein. That Directive does not contain any provision comparable with Article 6 of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, which excludes from its scope public contracts awarded, under certain conditions, to contracting authorities.

in answer to the question referred to it by the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per l'Emilia-Romagna by order of 10 March 1998, hereby rules:

Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts is applicable in the case where a contracting authority, such as a local authority, plans to conclude in writing, with an entity which is formally distinct from it and independent of it in regard to decision- making, a contract for pecuniary interest for the supply of products, whether or not that entity is itself a contracting authority.

1 By order of 10 March 1998, received at the Court on 14 April 1998, the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per l'Emilia-Romagna (Regional Administrative Court for Emilia Romagna) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty (now Article 234 EC) a question on the interpretation of Article 6 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

2 That question has arisen in proceedings between Teckal Srl (`Teckal'), on the one hand, and the Municipality of Viano and Azienda Gas-Acqua Consorziale (AGAC) di Reggio Emilia (`AGAC'), on the other, concerning the award by that municipality of the contract for the management of the heating services for certain municipal buildings.

3 Article 1(a) and (b) of Directive 92/50 provides as follows:

`For the purposes of this Directive:

(a) public service contracts shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority...

(b) contracting authorities shall mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

4 Article 2 of Directive 92/50 provides:

`If a public contract is intended to cover both products within the meaning of Directive 77/62/EEC and services within the meaning of Annexes I A and I B to this Directive, it shall fall within the scope of this Directive if the value of the services in question exceeds that of the products covered by the contract.'

5 Article 6 of Directive 92/50 provides that:

`This Directive shall not apply to public service contracts awarded to an entity which is itself a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) on the basis of an exclusive right which it enjoys pursuant to a published law, regulation or administrative provision which is compatible with the Treaty.'

6 Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) repealed Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1). References to the repealed directive are, pursuant to Article 33 of Directive 93/36, to be construed as references to the latter directive.

7 Article 1(a) and (b) of Directive 93/36 provides as follows:

`For the purpose of this Directive:

(a) "public supply contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing involving the purchase, lease [,] rental or hire purchase, with or without option to buy, of products between a supplier (a natural or legal person) and one of the contracting authorities defined in (b) below. The delivery of such products may in addition include siting and installation operations;

(b) "contracting authorities" shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

National legislation

8 Under Article 22(1) of Italian Law No 142 of 8 June 1990 on the organisation of local authorities (GURI No 135 of 12 June 1990) (`Law No 142/90'), municipalities are to provide for the management of public services involving the production of goods and the performance of activities designed to achieve social purposes and to promote economic and civil development of local communities.

9 Article 22(3) of Law No 142/90 provides that municipalities may ensure the performance of these services on a work-and-materials basis, by way of concession to third parties, or by having recourse to special undertakings, non profit-making institutions or companies in which local public authorities hold the majority of shares.

10 Article 23 of Law No 142/90, which defines special undertakings and non-profit making institutions, provides as follows:

`1. A special undertaking is a body (ente strumentale) established by a local entity, having legal personality, commercial autonomy and its own statutes, approved by the municipal or provincial council.

3. The organs of the undertaking and of the institution shall be the board of management, the chairman and the director who assumes managerial responsibility. The detailed arrangements for appointment and removal of members of the board of management shall be laid down by the statutes of the local authority.

4. In performing their activities, the undertaking and institution must satisfy criteria of effectiveness, efficiency and profitability, and must achieve a balanced budget by balancing costs and receipts, including transfers.

6. The local administration shall provide the start-up capital, define objectives and policy, approve the documents of constitution, exercise supervision, monitor management results, and cover any social costs which may arise.

11 Under Article 25 of Law No 142/90, the municipalities and provinces may, for purposes of the joint management of one or more services, set up a consortium in accordance with the provisions governing the special undertakings referred to in Article 23. To that end, each municipal council must approve, by absolute majority, an agreement at the same time as the statutes of the consortium. The general meeting of the consortium shall be composed of the representatives of the member entities, represented by the mayor, the chairman or their deputies. The general meeting shall elect the board of management and approve the documents of constitution prescribed by the statutes.

12 AGAC is a consortium set up by several municipalities - including that of Viano - to manage energy and environmental services, pursuant to Article 25 of Law No 142/90. Under Article 1 of its Statutes (`the Statutes'), it has legal personality and operational autonomy. Article 3(1) of the Statutes states that its function is to assume direct responsibility for, and manage, a number of listed public services, which include `gas for civil and industrial purposes; heating for civil and industrial purposes; activities related and ancillary to the above'.

13 Under Article 3(2) to (4) of the Statutes, AGAC may extend its activities to other related or ancillary services, hold shares in public or private companies or have interests in bodies for the management of related or ancillary services, and, finally, provide services or supplies to private persons or to public bodies other than the member municipalities.

14 Under Articles 12 and 13 of the Statutes, the most important managerial acts, which include preparation of accounts and budgets, must be approved by the general meeting of AGAC, consisting of representatives of the municipalities. The other managerial bodies are the council, the chairman of the council and the director-general. They are not answerable to the municipalities for their managerial acts. The natural persons who sit on these bodies do not exercise any functions in the member municipalities.

15 Under Article 25 of the Statutes, AGAC must achieve a balanced budget and operational profitability. Pursuant to Article 27 of the Statutes, the municipalities provide AGAC with funds and assets, in respect of which AGAC pays them annual interest. Article 28 of the Statutes provides that any profits in the financial year are to be allocated among the member municipalities, retained by AGAC to increase its reserve funds, or reinvested in other AGAC activities. Under Article 29 of the Statutes, where a loss occurs, the financial deficit may be corrected through, inter alia, the injection of new capital by the member municipalities.

16 Article 35 of the Statutes provides for arbitration to resolve any disputes between the member municipalities or between those municipalities and AGAC.

The dispute in the main proceedings

17 By Decision No 18 of 24 May 1997 (`the Decision'), the municipal council of Viano conferred on AGAC the management of the heating service for a number of municipal buildings. That decision was not preceded by any invitation to tender.

18 The task of AGAC lies, specifically, in the area of the operation and maintenance of the heating installations of the municipal buildings in question, including any necessary repairs and improvements, and the supply of fuel.

19 The remuneration of AGAC was fixed at ITL 122 million for the period from 1 June 1997 to 31 May 1998. Of that amount, the value of the fuel supplied represents 86 million and the cost of operation and maintenance of the installations represents 36 million.

20 Under Article 2 of the Decision, at the expiry of the initial one-year period, AGAC undertakes to continue providing the service for a further period of three years, at the request of the Municipality of Viano, following modification of the conditions set out in the Decision. Provision is also made for a subsequent extension.

21 Teckal is a private company operating in the area of heating services. In particular, it supplies heating oil to individuals and public bodies, purchasing it beforehand from producer undertakings. It also services oil- and gas-operated heating installations.

22 Teckal brought proceedings before the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per l'Emilia-Romagna, in which it argued that the Municipality of Viano should have followed the tendering procedures for public contracts required under Community legislation.

23 The national court, which is uncertain as to whether Directive 92/50 or Directive 93/36 is applicable, takes the view that, in any event, the application threshold of ECU 200 000 laid down in both directives was exceeded.

24 In view of the twofold nature of the task entrusted to AGAC, which consists, first, in providing a variety of services, and, second, in supplying fuel, the national court formed the view that it could not discount the applicability of Article 6 of Directive 92/50.

25 In those circumstances, the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale stayed proceedings and requested the Court to interpret Article 6 of Directive 92/50 `from the points of view set out in the grounds of this judgment'.

Admissibility

26 AGAC and the Austrian Government contend that the question submitted for preliminary ruling is inadmissible. AGAC submits, first, that the amount of the contract at issue in the main proceedings is below the threshold laid down in Directives 92/50 and 93/36. The price of fuel, it argues, should be deducted from the estimated amount of the contract, inasmuch as AGAC, being itself a contracting authority, acquires its stock of fuels through public tendering procedures. Furthermore, the contract in question is not one of indeterminate duration.

27 Second, AGAC contends that the request for a preliminary ruling concerns in reality the interpretation of national law. The national court is in fact asking the Court to interpret certain provisions of national law to enable it to determine whether the exception under Article 6 of Directive 92/50 applies.

28 For its part, the Austrian Government submits that the request for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible on the ground that it does not contain any question. In the area of the law relating to public contracts, it is particularly important that questions should be precisely formulated.

29 As regards, first of all, the question whether the value of the contract in question exceeds the threshold laid down in Directives 92/50 and 93/36, it should be borne in mind that Article 177 of the Treaty is based on a clear separation of functions between the national courts and the Court of Justice, which means that, when ruling on the interpretation or validity of Community provisions, the Court of Justice is empowered to do so only on the basis of the facts which the national court puts before it (see, in particular, Case C-30/93 AC-ATEL Electronics Vertriebs v Hauptzollamt München-Mitte [1994] ECR I-2305, paragraph 16).

30 In that context, it is not for the Court of Justice but for the national court to ascertain the facts which have given rise to the dispute and to establish the consequences which they have for the judgment which it is required to deliver (AC-ATEL Electronics Vertriebs, cited above, paragraph 17).

31 While it is true, therefore, that the method for calculating the amount of the contract is defined in the Community provisions, that is to say, Article 7 of Directive 92/50 and Article 5 of Directive 93/36, on the interpretation of which the national court may, if necessary, submit questions for a preliminary ruling, it is, none the less, by virtue of the division of functions provided for by Article 177 of the Treaty, for the national court to apply the rules of Community law to a specific case. No such application is possible without a comprehensive appraisal of the facts of the case (see Case C-320/88 Staatssecretaris van Financien v Shipping and Forwarding Enterprise Safe [1990] ECR I-285, paragraph 11).

32 It follows that the Court cannot substitute its own appraisal in regard to the calculation of the value of the contract for that of the national court and conclude, on the basis of its appraisal, that the reference for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible.

33 Next, it must be pointed out that in the context of Article 177 of the Treaty the Court has no jurisdiction to rule either on the interpretation of provisions of national laws or regulations or on their conformity with Community law. It may, however, supply the national court with an interpretation of Community law that will enable that court to resolve the legal problem before it (Case C-17/92 Federacion de Distribuidores Cinematograficos v Spanish State [1993] ECR I-2239, paragraph 8).

34 Finally, according to settled case-law, it is for the Court alone, where questions are formulated imprecisely, to extract from all the information provided by the national court and from the documents in the main proceedings the points of Community law which require interpretation, having regard to the subject-matter of those proceedings (Case 251/83 Haug-Adrion v Frankfurter Versicherungs-AG [1984] ECR 4277, paragraph 9, and Case C-168/95 Arcaro [1996] ECR I-4705, paragraph 21).

35 In the light of the information contained in the order for reference, the national court must be understood to be asking, essentially, whether the provisions of Community law governing the award of public contracts are applicable in a case where a local authority entrusts the supply of products and the provision of services to a consortium of which it is a member, in circumstances such as those in point in the main proceedings.

36 The reference for a preliminary ruling must therefore be declared admissible.

Substance

37 It is clear from the order for reference that the Municipality of Viano entrusted to AGAC, by a single measure, both the provision of certain services and the supply of certain products. It is also common ground that the value of those products is greater than that of the services.

38 It follows a contrario from Article 2 of Directive 92/50 that, if a public contract relates both to products within the meaning of Directive 93/36 and to services within the meaning of Directive 92/50, it will fall within the scope of Directive 93/36 if the value of the products covered by the contract exceeds that of the services.

39 In order to provide a satisfactory answer to the national court which has referred a question to it, the Court of Justice may deem it necessary to consider provisions of Community law to which the national court has not referred in its question (Case 35/85 Procureur de la République v Tissier [1986] ECR 1207, paragraph 9, and Case C-315/88 Bagli Pennacchiotti [1990] ECR I-1323, paragraph 10).

40 It follows that, in order to provide an interpretation of Community law which will be of assistance to the national court in this case, it is necessary to interpret the provisions of Directive 93/36, not Article 6 of Directive 92/50.

41 In order to determine whether the fact that a local authority entrusts the supply of products to a consortium in which it has a holding must give rise to a tendering procedure as provided for under Directive 93/36, it is necessary to consider whether the assignment of that task constitutes a public supply contract.

42 If that is the case, and if the estimated amount of the contract, without value added tax, is equal to or greater than ECU 200 000, Directive 93/36 will apply. Whether the supplier is or is not a contracting authority is not conclusive in this regard.

43 It should be pointed out that the only permitted exceptions to the application of Directive 93/36 are those which are exhaustively and expressly mentioned therein (see, with reference to Directive 77/62, Case C-71/92 Commission v Spain [1993] ECR I-5923, paragraph 10).

44 Directive 93/36 does not contain any provision comparable to Article 6 of Directive 92/50, which excludes from its scope public contracts awarded, under certain conditions, to contracting authorities.

45 It should also be noted that this finding does not affect the obligation on those contracting authorities to apply in turn the tendering procedures laid down in Directive 93/36.

46 In its capacity as a local authority, the Municipality of Viano is a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36. It is therefore a matter for the national court to ascertain whether the relationship between the Municipality of Viano and AGAC also meets the other conditions which Directive 93/36 lays down for a public supply contract.

47 That will, in accordance with Article 1(a) of Directive 93/36, be the case if the contract in question is a contract for pecuniary interest, concluded in writing, involving, inter alia, the purchase of products.

48 It is common ground in the present case that AGAC supplies products, namely fuel, to the Municipality of Viano in return for payment of a price.

49 As to whether there is a contract, the national court must determine whether there has been an agreement between two separate persons.

50 In that regard, in accordance with Article 1(a) of Directive 93/36, it is, in principle, sufficient if the contract was concluded between, on the one hand, a local authority and, on the other, a person legally distinct from that local authority. The position can be otherwise only in the case where the local authority exercises over the person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, at the same time, that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling local authority or authorities.

51 The answer to the question must therefore be that Directive 93/36 is applicable in the case where a contracting authority, such as a local authority, plans to conclude in writing, with an entity which is formally distinct from it and independent of it in regard to decision-making, a contract for pecuniary interest for the supply of products, whether or not that entity is itself a contracting authority.

of 28 October 1999
Alcatel Austria AG and Others, Siemens AG Osterreich and Sag-Schrack Anlagentechnik AG v Bundesministerium für Wissenschaft und Verkehr.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesvergabeamt - Austria.
Public procurement - Procedure for the award of public supply and works contracts - Review procedure.
Case C-81/98.

1 Approximation of laws - Review procedures relating to the award of public supply and public works contracts - Directive 89/665 - Decision awarding contracts - Member States under an obligation to provide full legal protection for tenderers

(Council Directive 89/665, Art. 2(1)(a) and (b) and Art. 2(6), second subpara.)

2 Approximation of laws - Review procedures relating to the award of public supply and public works contracts - Directive 89/665 - Member States under an obligation to provide for review procedures in respect of decisions awarding contracts - Where national legislation does not enable the protection provided for by the Directive to be ensured - Obligation to remedy damage to individuals where it is not possible to interpret national law consistently with the Directive

1 The combined provisions of Article 2(1)(a) and (b) and the second subparagraph of Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts must be interpreted as meaning that the Member States are required to ensure that the contracting authority's decision prior to the conclusion of the contract as to the bidder in a tender procedure with which it will conclude the contract is in all cases open to review under a procedure whereby unsuccessful tenderers may have that decision set aside if the relevant conditions are met, notwithstanding the possibility, once the contract has been concluded, of obtaining an award of damages.

2 Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts cannot be interpreted to the effect that, even where there is no award decision which may be the subject of an application to have it set aside, the bodies in the Member States having power to review public procurement procedures may hear applications under the conditions laid down in that provision.

In such circumstances, if provisions of national law cannot be interpreted in a manner consistent with Directive 89/665, those concerned may seek compensation, in accordance with the appropriate procedures under national law, for the damage suffered by reason of the failure to transpose the Directive within the prescribed period.

Costs

51 The costs incurred by the Austrian, German and United Kingdom Governments, by the Commission of the European Communities and by the EFTA Surveillance Authority, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the proceedings pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

(Sixth Chamber),

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Bundesvergabeamt by order of 3 March 1998, hereby rules:

1. The combined provisions of Article 2(1)(a) and (b) and the second subparagraph of Article 2(6) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts must be interpreted as meaning that the Member States are required to ensure that the contracting authority's decision prior to the conclusion of the contract as to the bidder in a tender procedure with which it will conclude the contract is in all cases open to review in a procedure whereby an applicant may have that decision set aside if the relevant conditions are met, notwithstanding the possibility, once the contract has been concluded, of obtaining an award of damages.

2. Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 89/665 cannot be interpreted to the effect that, even where there is no award decision which may be the subject of an application to have it set aside, the bodies in the Member States having power to review public procurement procedures may hear applications under the conditions laid down in that provision.

1 By order of 3 March 1998, received at the Court on 25 March 1998, the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Procurement Office) referred for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty (now Article 234 EC) three questions on the interpretation of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33).

2 The questions arose in a dispute between Alcatel Austria AG and Others, Siemens AG Osterreich and Sag-Schrack Anlagentechnik AG on the one hand and the Bundesministerium für Wissenschaft und Verkehr (Federal Ministry of Science and Transport, `the Bundesministerium') on the other concerning the award of a public supply and works contract.

Community law

3 Article 1 of Directive 89/665 provides:

`1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC and 77/62/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles, and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

2. Member States shall ensure that there is no discrimination between undertakings claiming injury in the context of a procedure for the award of a contract as a result of the distinction made by this Directive between national rules implementing Community law and other national rules.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

4 Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665 provides:

`The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

5 Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 states:

`The effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law.

Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.'

Austrian law

6 In Austria public procurement is governed, with regard to the Federal State, by the Bundesvergabegesetz (Federal Procurement Law, BGBl. No 462/1993, `the BVergG'), in the version prior to the 1997 amendments (BGBl. No 776/1996).

7 Paragraph 9, point 14, thereof defines the award as the declaration made to the tenderer, accepting his tender.

8 Under Paragraph 41(1), the contractual relationship between the authority and the tenderer comes into being, within the period allowed for making the award, when the tenderer receives notification of the acceptance of his offer.

9 Under Paragraph 91(2), the Bundesvergabeamt may, up to the time the award is made, adopt interim measures and set aside unlawful decisions of the awarding department of the contracting authority for the purpose of removing infringements of the BVergG and of the regulations made thereunder.

10 Paragraph 91(3) provides that, once the contract has been awarded, the Bundesvergabeamt has power to determine that as a result of an infringement of the BVergG or of the regulations made thereunder the award was not made to the tenderer making the best offer.

11 Paragraph 94 provides inter alia:

`1. The Bundesvergabeamt must set aside by way of a decision, taking into account the opinion of the Conciliation Committee in the case, any decision of the contracting authority in an award procedure which

(1) is contrary to the provisions of this Federal Law or its implementing regulations and

(2) significantly affects the outcome of the award procedure.

Facts

12 On 23 May 1996, the Bundesministerium published an invitation to tender for the supply, installation and demonstration of all the hardware and software components of an electronic system for automatic data transmission to be installed on Austrian motorways.

13 The invitation to tender was issued in accordance with the open procedure provided for in Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1).

14 On 5 September 1996 the contract in question was awarded to Kapsch AG and it was signed on the same day. The other tenderers, who learned of the contract through the press, applied between 10 and 22 September 1996 to the Bundesvergabeamt for review.

15 On 18 September 1996, the Bundesvergabeamt dismissed the applications for interim measures to suspend performance of the contract on the ground that, pursuant to Paragraph 91(2) of the BVergG, once an award is made it no longer has power to make interim orders. A complaint was lodged against that decision with the Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court).

16 Pursuant to Paragraph 91(3) of the BVergG, the Bundesvergabeamt determined, by decision of 4 April 1997, that various breaches of the BVergG had occurred and brought the review procedure to an end.

17 The decision of the Bundesvergabeamt of 18 September 1996 was set aside by the Verfassungsgerichtshof.

18 In view of that judgment, the Bundesvergabeamt reopened the procedure terminated on 4 April 1997 in order to examine the merits, and on 18 August 1997 made an order provisionally prohibiting the contracting authority from further performance of the contract concluded on 5 September 1996.

19 The Republic of Austria lodged a complaint against that order before the Verfassungsgerichtshof which, by order of 10 October 1997, gave suspensive effect to the complaint, with the result that the interim measure adopted by the Bundesvergabeamt on 18 August 1997 was provisionally inoperative.

20 In its order for reference, the Bundesvergabeamt states that the BVergG does not deal separately with the public law and private law aspects in the procedure for the award of contracts. Rather, the contracting authority participates in the procedure exclusively as a bearer of private rights, which means that the State as contracting authority employs the rules, forms and methods of civil law. Under Paragraph 41(1) of the BVergG, the contractual relationship between the authority and the tenderer comes into being, within the period allowed for making the award, when the tenderer receives notification of the acceptance of his offer.

21 Consequently, the national court states, the award and the conclusion of the contract in Austria do not as a rule formally occur at the same time. The decision of the contracting authority as to the party with whom it wishes to contract is normally made before it is incorporated in writing, and the decision on its own is not sufficient to create the contract, since the tenderer must at the very least receive notice of that decision; in practice, however, the contracting authority's decision as to whom to award the contract is one taken internally without, under Austrian law, any public manifestation thereof. Accordingly, from the outsider's point of view the declaration of the award and the conclusion of the contract occur together, since, as a rule, the outsider does not have and cannot have, at any rate legally, any knowledge of the internal decision of the contracting authority. The award decision itself, that is to say the decision of the contracting authority as to the party with whom it wishes to contract, is not open to challenge. The point in time at which the award is made is of decisive importance for the review procedure before the Bundesvergabeamt.

22 The national court states that under Paragraph 91(2) of the BVergG the Bundesvergabeamt has power up to the time the award is made to adopt interim measures and to set aside unlawful decisions of the awarding department of the contracting authority for the purpose of removing infringements of the BVergG and of the regulations made thereunder. After the award has been made, it merely has power to determine that as a result of an infringement of the BVergG or of the regulations made thereunder the award was not made to the tenderer making the best offer. In the case of culpable infringement of the BVergG by agents of an awarding body, Paragraph 98(1) thereof provides that compensation is payable to the unsuccessful candidate or tenderer by the contracting authority to which the conduct of those agents is attributable.

23 Lastly, the national court notes that, under Paragraph 102(2) of the BVergG, a claim for compensation before the ordinary courts in such a case is admissible only if there has been a prior determination by the Bundesvergabeamt within the meaning of Paragraph 91(3). Irrespective of Paragraph 91(3), the courts and the parties to the procedure before the Bundesvergabeamt are bound by that determination. It is evident from the structure of the review procedure that, in respect of the area covered by the BVergG, the Austrian federal legislature has opted under Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665/EEC to limit the remedy to an award of damages.

Questions referred for a preliminary ruling

24 In those circumstances, the Bundesvergabeamt decided to stay proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

`1. When implementing Directive 89/665/EEC, are Member States required by Article 2(6) thereof to ensure that the contracting authority's decision prior to the conclusion of the contract as to the bidder in a tender procedure with which, in the light of the procedure's results, it will conclude the contract (i.e. the award decision) is in any event open to a procedure whereby an applicant may have that decision annulled if the relevant conditions are met, notwithstanding the possibility once the contract has been concluded of restricting the legal effects of the review procedure to an award of damages?

2. If Question 1 is answered in the affirmative:

Is the obligation described in Question 1 sufficiently clear and precise to confer on individuals the right to a review corresponding to the requirements of Article 1 of Directive 89/665/EEC, in which the national court must in any event be able to adopt interim measures within the meaning of Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of that directive and to annul the contracting authority's award decision, and the right to rely in proceedings on that obligation as against a Member State?

3. If Question 2 is answered in the affirmative:

Is the obligation described under Question 1 also sufficiently clear and precise to mean that in such a procedure the national court must disregard contrary provisions of national law which would prevent the court from fulfilling that obligation, and must fulfil that obligation directly as part of Community law even if national law lacks any basis on which to act?'

Admissibility

25 The Bundesministerium and the Austrian Government contend that, in so far as the contract has already been performed in its entirety, there is in reality no longer a dispute in the main proceedings. The answer to the questions raised will therefore be irrelevant, since the applicants in the main proceedings can only obtain damages at this stage, the award of which is in any case provided for under the BVergG.

26 Although the Commission has expressed doubts as to the admissibility of the questions referred to the Court, it considers that a ruling by the Court could have an effect on subsequent developments in the main case, in particular because the level of any damages payable to the applicants in the main proceedings could be affected by the answer to the questions raised, and that the answer to the first question could mean that the contract or the award decision must be set aside, which would then make it necessary to deal with the second and third questions.

27 In the order for reference, the national court stated that, under domestic law, the question arose whether it was entitled or even required under Community law to set aside its decision of 4 April 1997 terminating the first award procedure on the ground that the contract had not been awarded to the tenderer which had made the best offer. In the light of that procedural issue, the questions referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling would remain pertinent even if the award procedure in question had in the meantime been settled.

28 In the circumstances, it must be held that as the answer to the questions raised may affect the outcome of the dispute in the main proceedings the questions are admissible.

First question

29 By its first question, the national court is asking essentially whether the combined provisions of Article 2(1)(a) and (b) and the second subparagraph of Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as meaning that the Member States are required to ensure that the contracting authority's decision, prior to the conclusion of the contract, as to the bidder in a tender procedure with which it will conclude the contract is in all cases open to review in a procedure whereby an applicant may have that decision set aside if the relevant conditions are met, regardless of the possibility, once the contract has been concluded, of obtaining an award of damages.

30 Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665 lists the measures to be taken concerning the review procedures which the Member States must make available in national law. According to Article 2(1)(a), they must include provision for the adoption of interim measures by way of interlocutory procedures. Article 2(1)(b) refers to the possibility of setting aside or ensuring the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, and Article 2(1)(c) concerns the award of damages.

31 It is common ground that Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 does not define the decisions taken unlawfully which a party may ask to have set aside. The Community legislature confined itself to stating that such decisions include those containing discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the documents relating to the contract award procedure in question.

32 Nothing in Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 indicates that an unlawful decision awarding a public contract does not fall within the category of decisions taken unlawfully in respect of which application may be made to have them set aside.

33 As is clear from the first and second recitals in the preamble to Directive 89/665, the directive reinforces existing arrangements at both national and Community level for ensuring effective application of Community directives on the award of public contracts, in particular at the stage where infringements can still be rectified (Case C-433/93 Commission v Germany [1995] ECR I-2303, paragraph 23).

34 In that regard, Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 requires the Member States to establish effective review procedures that are as rapid as possible to ensure compliance with Community directives on public procurement.

35 It is clear from that provision that the subject-matter of those review procedures will be decisions taken by the contracting authorities, on the ground that they infringe Community law on public procurement or the national rules transposing it; the provision does not, however, lay down any restriction with regard to the nature and content of those decisions.

36 The Bundesministerium and the Austrian Government contend, essentially, that the organisation of the procedure before the Bundesvergabeamt, whereby once a contract has been concluded the decision of a contracting authority may be challenged only in so far as the unlawful nature of the decision has resulted in damage to the party seeking review in national proceedings, and whereby the procedure is to be limited to easing the conditions for the award of damages by the ordinary courts, complies with Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665.

37 As the Advocate General observed in points 36 and 37 of his Opinion, it is clear from the actual wording of Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 that the limitation of review procedures provided for therein applies only after the conclusion of the contract following the awarding decision. Directive 89/665 thus draws a distinction between the stage prior to the conclusion of the contract, to which Article 2(1) applies, and the stage subsequent to its conclusion, in respect of which a Member State may, according to the second subparagraph of Article 2(6), provide that the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures are to be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.

38 Moreover, the interpretation proposed by the Bundesministerium and the Austrian Government might lead to the systematic removal of the most important decision of the contracting authority, that is to say the award of the contract, from the purview of the measures which, under Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665, must be taken concerning the review procedures referred to in Article 1, thereby undermining the purpose of Directive 89/665 which, as noted in paragraph 34 of this judgment, is to establish effective and rapid procedures to review unlawful decisions of the contracting authority at a stage where infringements may still be rectified.

39 The Austrian Government also contends that if Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as drawing a distinction between the decision awarding a contract and the conclusion of that contract, the directive fails to specify in any way what time should elapse between the two stages. The United Kingdom Government indicated at the hearing that no time should be fixed since there are different types of award procedure.

40 The argument based on the lack of an intervening period between the decision awarding a contract and the conclusion of the contract is irrelevant. The fact that there is no express provision in that connection cannot justify interpreting Directive 89/665 in such a way as to remove decisions awarding public contracts systematically from the purview of the measures which, according to Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665, must be taken concerning the review procedures referred to in Article 1.

41 With regard to the time which must elapse between the decision awarding a contract and its conclusion, the United Kingdom Government also states that no such time is specified in Directive 93/36 and that the directive's provisions, as Articles 7, 9 and 10 thereof show, are exhaustive.

42 All that need be stated in that regard, as the Advocate General noted in points 70 and 71 of his Opinion, is that those provisions correspond to the equivalent provisions in the directives which preceded Directive 89/665, the first recital in the preamble to which states that they `do not contain any specific provision ensuring their effective application'.

43 It follows from those considerations that the combined provisions of Article 2(1)(a) and (b) and the second subparagraph of Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 are to be interpreted as meaning that the Member States are required to ensure that the contracting authority's decision prior to the conclusion of the contract as to the bidder in a tender procedure with which it will conclude the contract is in all cases open to review in a procedure whereby an applicant may have that decision set aside if the relevant conditions are met, notwithstanding the possibility, once the contract has been concluded, of obtaining an award of damages.

Second and third questions

44 By its second and third questions, which may be examined together, the national court is asking essentially whether Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted to the effect that, where that provision has not been fully transposed into national law, the bodies in the Member States having power to review public procurement procedures may also hear applications under the conditions laid down in that provision.

45 Paragraph 91(2) of the BVergG provides that the Bundesvergabeamt may examine the legality of award procedures and decisions within the ambit of the BVergG; the national legislature has thereby fulfilled its obligation to make provision for review, as the Advocate General observed at point 90 of his Opinion.

46 However, as the national court indicated in its order (see paragraphs 20 to 22 of this judgment), the contracting authority's decision as to whom to award the contract is one taken internally without, under Austrian law, any public manifestation thereof.

47 The explanations given in the order for reference show that the State, as contracting authority, employs the rules, forms and methods of civil law in the award procedure, so that the award of a public contract is effected by the conclusion of a contract between that authority and the tenderer.

48 Since the announcement of the award of a contract and its conclusion in practice occur together, in such a system there is no administrative law measure of which the persons concerned can acquire knowledge and which may be the subject of an application to have it set aside as provided for in Article 2(1)(b).

49 In such circumstances, where it is doubtful that the national court is in a position to give effect to the right of individuals to obtain review in matters concerning public procurement under the conditions set out in Directive 89/665, in particular Article 2(1)(a) and (b), it is useful to recall that, if national provisions cannot be interpreted in a manner consistent with Directive 89/665, those concerned may seek compensation, under the appropriate procedures in national law, for the damage suffered by reason of the failure to transpose a directive within the prescribed period (see, in particular, Joined Cases C-178/94, C-179/94 and C-188/94 to C-190/94 Dillenkofer and Others [1996] ECR I-4845).

50 Consequently, the answer to the second and third questions must be that Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 89/665 cannot be interpreted to the effect that, even where there is no award decision which may be the subject of an application to have it set aside, the bodies in the Member States having power to review public procurement procedures may hear applications under the conditions laid down in that provision.

Judgment of the Court (Fourth Chamber)
of 16 September 1999
Metalmeccanica Fracasso SpA and Leitschutz Handels- und Montage GmbH v Amt der Salzburger Landesregierung für den Bundesminister für wirtschaftliche Angelegenheiten.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesvergabeamt - Austria.
Public works contract - Contract awarded to sole tenderer judged to be suitable.
Case C-27/98.

1 Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 93/37 - Award of contracts - Whether it is compulsory to award the contract to the sole tenderer considered suitable - No such obligation

(Council Directive 93/37, Art. 18(1))

2 Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 93/37 - Article 18(1) - Direct effect

1 Article 18(1) of Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by Directive 97/52, must be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority is not required to award the contract to the only tenderer judged to be suitable.

In the first place, Directive 93/37 contains no provision expressly requiring a contracting authority which has put out an invitation to tender to award the contract to the sole tenderer; secondly, the contracting authority is not required to complete a procedure for the award of a public works contract.

2 Since no specific implementing measure is necessary for compliance with the requirements listed in Article 18(1) of Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by Directive 97/52, the resulting obligations for the Member States are unconditional and sufficiently precise. Accordingly, that provision can be relied on by an individual before the national courts.

Judgment

1 By order of 27 January 1998, the Bundesvergabeamt referred to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty (now Article 234 EC) a question on the interpretation of Article 18(1) of Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 amending Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts respectively (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1).

2 This question was raised in proceedings between Metalmeccanica Fracasso SpA and Leitschutz Handels- und Montage GmbH (hereinafter `Fracasso and Leitschutz') and Amt der Salzburger Landesregierung für den Bundesminister für wirtschaftliche Angelegenheiten (hereinafter `the Amt') concerning the latter's cancellation of an invitation to tender for a public works contract for which Fracasso and Leitschutz had submitted a tender.

3 Directive 93/37 codified Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1971 L 185, p. 5). Under Article 18(1) of Directive 93/37, as amended by Directive 97/52 (hereinafter `Directive 93/37'):

`Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Chapter 3 of this Title, taking into account Article 19, after the suitability of the contractors not excluded under Article 24 has been checked by contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing and of technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 26 to 29.'

4 Under Paragraph 56(1) of the Bundesvergabegesetz (Federal law on the acceptance of tenders - `the BVergG') the procedure for the award of a contract is terminated by the conclusion of a contract (the acceptance of a tender) or with the cancellation of the invitation to tender. The BVergG does not provide for another way of terminating the tendering procedure.

5 Paragraph 52(1) of the BVergG provides:

`(1) Before selecting the tender on the basis of which the contract is to be awarded, the contracting authority, in the light of the results of its examination, shall forthwith eliminate the following tenders:

1. tenders by bidders who do not have the necessary authorisation or economic and financial standing and technical knowledge or ability, or credibility;

2. tenders by bidders who are excluded from the procedure under Paragraph 16(3) or 16(4);

3. tenders the total price of which is not plausibly established;

6 Paragraph 55(2) of the BVergG provides:

`The invitation to tender may be cancelled if, following the elimination of tenders in accordance with Paragraph 52, only one tender remains.'

7 Paragraph 16(5) of the BVergG provides:

`Tendering procedures shall be carried out only where it is intended actually to award a contract in respect of the obligations to be performed.'

The dispute in the main proceedings

8 In the spring of 1996 the Amt issued an invitation to tender for surface works, including the erection of concrete barriers for the central reservation on a stretch of the A1 Westautobahn. The contract was awarded to ARGE Betondecke-Salzburg West.

9 In November 1996 the Amt decided, for technical reasons, that the central reservation on the stretch of motorway in question was to be fitted with protective barriers made of steel rather than concrete as stipulated in the invitation to tender. It then issued a further invitation to tender under an open procedure for the erection of steel safety rails for the central reservation. The tendering procedure began in April 1997.

10 Four undertakings, or groupings of undertakings, submitted tenders, including the grouping comprising Fracasso and Leitschutz.

11 After the Amt had examined all the tenders and eliminated those of the other three tenderers on the basis of Paragraph 52(1) of the BVergG, only the tender submitted by Fracasso and Leitschutz remained.

12 In the end the Amt decided to use concrete instead of steel for the construction of the central reservation barrier and to cancel the relevant invitation to tender pursuant to Paragraph 55(2) of the BVergG. It informed Fracasso and Leitschutz of those two decisions by letter.

13 Those companies then asked the BundesVergabekontrollkommission (Federal Procurement Review Commission) to conduct a conciliation procedure pursuant to Paragraph 109(1)(1) of the BVergG concerning the question whether the decision by the Amt to cancel the invitation to tender and its intention to issue a fresh invitation to tender for safety rails were in conformity with the provisions of the BVergG.

14 On 19 August 1997 the parties reached an amicable agreement on the new invitation to tender proposed by the conciliator, concerning the construction of steel safety rails for the sides of the motorway. This contract was to be awarded under a restricted procedure admitting in principle all the tenderers who had taken part in the cancelled tendering procedure.

15 Fracasso and Leitschutz then asked the BundesVergabekontrollkommission to complete the conciliation procedure, arguing that the dispute concerning the legality of the cancellation of the invitation to tender for safety rails for the central reservation had not been settled.

16 As the BundesVergabekontrollkommission declared that it had no authority in that regard, Fracasso and Leitschutz submitted to the Bundesvergabeamt an application for annulment of the decision by the Amt to cancel the invitation to tender.

17 Being in some doubt as to whether Paragraph 55(2) of the BVergG was compatible with Article 18(1) of Directive 93/37, the Bundesvergabeamt decided to stay proceedings and refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

`Is Article 18(1) of Directive 93/37/EEC, according to which contracts are to be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Chapter 3 of Title IV, taking into account Article 19, after the suitability of the contractors not excluded under Article 24 has been checked by contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing and of technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 26 to 29, to be interpreted as requiring contracting authorities to accept a tender even if it is the only tender still remaining in the tendering procedure? Is Article 18(1) sufficiently specific and precise for it to be relied on by individuals in proceedings under national law and, as part of Community law, to be used to oppose provisions of national law?'

18 By the first part of the question the national court is asking whether Directive 93/37 must be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority which has called for tenders is required to award the contract to the only tenderer judged to be suitable.

19 According to Fracasso and Leitschutz, the effect of Articles 7, 8, 18 and 30 of Directive 93/37, as interpreted by the Court, is that the contracting authority's option to refuse to award a public works contract or to reopen the procedure must be limited to exceptional cases and may be exercised only on serious grounds.

20 On the other hand, the Amt, the Austrian and French Governments and the Commission argue, essentially, that Directive 93/37 does not prohibit a contracting authority from taking no further action in a tendering procedure.

21 It is common ground that Directive 93/37 contains no provision expressly requiring a contracting authority which has put out an invitation to tender to award the contract to the only tenderer judged to be suitable.

22 Despite the fact that there is no such provision, it must be considered whether, under Directive 93/37, the contracting authority is required to complete a procedure for the award of a public works contract.

23 In the first place, as regards the provisions of Directive 93/37 cited by Fracasso and Leitschutz, it must be observed that Article 8(2) of Directive 93/37, which requires a contracting authority to inform candidates or tenderers as soon as possible of the grounds on which it decided not to award a contract in respect of which a prior call for competition was made, or to recommence the procedure, does not provide that such a decision is to be limited to exceptional cases or has necessarily to be based on serious grounds.

24 Similarly, as regards Articles 7, 18 and 30 of Directive 93/37, governing the procedures to be followed for the award of public works contracts and determining the applicable criteria for awarding them, it need merely be observed that no obligation to award the contract in the event that only one undertaking proves to be suitable can be inferred from those provisions.

25 It follows that the contracting authority's option, implicitly recognised by Directive 93/37, to decide not to award a contract put out to tender or to recommence the tendering procedure is not made subject by that directive to the requirement that there must be serious or exceptional circumstances.

26 Second, it should be observed that, according to the 10th recital in the preamble to Directive 93/37, the aim of that directive is to ensure the development of effective competition in the award of public works contracts (see also, on the subject of Directive 71/305, Case 31/87 Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635, paragraph 21).

27 In that connection, as the Commission has rightly pointed out, Article 22(2) of Directive 93/37 expressly pursues that objective in providing that, where the contracting authorities award a contract by restricted procedure, the number of candidates invited to tender must in any event be sufficient to ensure genuine competition.

28 Furthermore, Article 22(3) of Directive 93/37 provides that where the contracting authorities award a contract by negotiated procedure as referred to in Article 7(2), the number of candidates admitted to negotiate may not be less than three provided that there is a sufficient number of suitable candidates.

29 It must also be observed that Article 18(1) of Directive 93/37 provides that contracts are to be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Chapter 3 of Title IV thereof.

30 The provisions in Chapter 3 include Article 30, paragraph 1 of which lays down the criteria on which the contracting authorities are to base the award of contracts, that is to say, either the lowest price only or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract, such as price, period for completion, running costs, profitability or technical merit.

31 It follows that, to meet the objective of developing effective competition in the area of public contracts, Directive 93/37 seeks to organise the award of contracts in such a way that the contracting authority is able to compare the different tenders and to accept the most advantageous on the basis of objective criteria such as those listed by way of example in Article 30(1) (see, to that effect, on the subject of Directive 71/305, Beentjes, cited above, paragraph 27).

32 Where, on conclusion of one of the procedures for the award of public works contracts laid down by Directive 93/37, there is only one tender remaining, the contracting authority is not in a position to compare prices or other characteristics of various tenders in order to award the contract in accordance with the criteria set out in Chapter 3 of Title IV of Directive 93/37.

33 It follows from the foregoing that the contracting authority is not required to award the contract to the only tenderer judged to be suitable.

34 The answer to the first part of the question is, therefore, that Article 18(1) of Directive 93/37 must be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority is not required to award the contract to the only tenderer judged to be suitable.

The second part of the question

35 By the second part of the question, the national court is asking whether Article 18(1) of Directive

93/37 can be relied on before the national courts.

36 In that connection, it need merely be observed that, since no specific implementing measure is necessary for compliance with the requirements listed in Article 18(1) of Directive 93/37, the resulting obligations for the Member States are therefore unconditional and sufficiently precise (see, to that effect, on the subject of Article 20 of Directive 71/305, essentially reproduced in Article 18(1) of Directive 93/37, Beentjes, cited above, paragraph 43).

37 The answer to the second part of the question is, therefore, that Article 18(1) of Directive 93/37 can be relied on by an individual before the national courts.

Costs

38 The costs incurred by the Austrian and French Governments and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the proceedings pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

in answer to the question referred to it by the Bundesvergabeamt by order of 27 January 1998, hereby rules:

1. Article 18(1) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 amending Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts respectively must be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority is not required to award the contract to the only tenderer judged to be suitable.

2. Article 18(1) of Directive 93/37, as amended by Directive 97/52, can be relied on by an individual before the national courts.

Judgment of the Court
of 5 October 2000
Commission of the European Communities v French Republic.
Failure of a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Directive 93/38/EEC - Public works contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Electrification and street lighting works in the département of the Vendée - Definition of work.
Case C-16/98.

1. Approximation of laws - Public procurement procedures in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Directive 93/38 - Work - Definition - Criterion - Economic and technical function of the result of the works - Artificial splitting of a single work - Electrification and street lighting works - Assessment

(Council Directive 93/38, Art. 14(10), subpara. 1, second sentence, and (13))

2. Approximation of laws - Public procurement procedures in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Directive 93/38 - Work - Definition - Existence of a single contracting entity and possibility of a single undertaking's carrying out the whole of the works - Not decisive criteria

(Council Directive 93/38, Art. 14(10), subpara. 1, second sentence)

3. Approximation of laws - Public procurement procedures in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Directive 93/38 - Principle of non-discrimination between tenderers - Scope

1. In order to determine whether several lots of a single work have been artificially split within the meaning of Article 14(3) of Directive 93/38 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, that provision must be taken into account in conjunction with Article 14(10), first subparagraph, of that directive. In that connection, it is clear from the definition of work in Article 14(10), first subparagraph, second sentence, of Directive 93/38 that the existence of a work must be assessed in the light of the economic and technical function of the result of the works concerned.

It follows that, in the case of a series of specific maintenance and extension works on the existing electricity supply and street lighting networks, the result of which, once completed, will be subsumed within the function fulfilled by the networks concerned, the question whether there is a work must be assessed in the light of the economic and technical function fulfilled by the electricity supply and street lighting networks in question. An electricity supply network is intended, from a technical point of view, to transport the electricity produced by a supplier to individual end consumers; in terms of economics, they must pay the supplier for what they consume.

A street lighting network, on the other hand, is intended, from a technical point of view, to light public places using the electricity provided by the electricity supply network. The authority providing the street lighting assumes the cost itself, but subsequently recovers the amounts spent from the population served, without adjusting the sums demanded according to the benefit derived by the individuals concerned. It follows that an electricity supply network and a street lighting network have a different economic and technical function and that works on the electricity supply and street lighting networks cannot be considered to constitute lots of a single work artificially split contrary to Article 14(10), first subparagraph, and (13) of the Directive.

2. While the existence of a single contracting entity and the possibility of a Community undertaking's carrying out the whole of the works described in the contracts concerned may, according to circumstances, constitute corroborative evidence of the existence of a work within the meaning of Directive 93/38 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, they cannot constitute decisive criteria on that point. Thus, if there is a number of contracting entities and the whole of the works concerned cannot be carried out by a single undertaking, this will not call into question the existence of a single work where that conclusion results from the application of the criteria concerning function set out in Article 14(10), first subparagraph, second sentence, of the Directive. The definition of the term work in that subparagraph does not make the existence of a work dependent on matters such as the number of contracting entities or whether the whole of the works can be carried out by a single undertaking.

3. The principle of non-discrimination between tenderers laid down by Article 4(2) of Directive 93/38 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, applies to all the stages of the tendering procedure and not only from the time when a contractor submits a tender. That interpretation is consistent with the purpose of the Directive which is to open up the contracts to which it applies to Community competition. That purpose would be undermined if a contracting entity could organise a tendering procedure in such a way that contractors from Member States other than that in which the contracts are awarded were discouraged from tendering. It follows that Article 4(2) of the Directive, in prohibiting any discrimination between tenderers, also protects those who are discouraged from tendering because they have been placed at a disadvantage by the procedure followed by a contracting entity.

APPLICATION for a declaration that, in the course of the procurement procedure initiated by the Syndicat Départemental d'Electrification de la Vendée in December 1994 for the award of contracts for electrification and street lighting work, the French Republic failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 4(2), 14(1), (10) and (13), together with Articles 21, 24 and 25 of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199 p. 84),

Judgment

Costs

114 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. However, Article 69(3) provides that the Court may order that the costs be shared or that the parties bear their own costs if each party succeeds on some and fails on other heads.

115 Since the Commission and the French Republic have been partially unsuccessful, they should bear their own costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT,

hereby:

1. Declares that in so far as the French entities responsible for the tendering procedure for electrification contracts held in Vendée in December 1994

- split the work,

- did not publish in the Official Journal of the European Communities a call for competition for all the contracts comprised in that work above the threshold laid down in Article 14(10), second subparagraph, last sentence, of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors but confined themselves to doing so for six of them only,

- did not communicate all the information required by Annex XII to Directive 93/38 as regards the six calls for competition published in the Official Journal of the European Communities,

- did not communicate to the Commission the information required regarding the award of all the contracts comprised in that work above the threshold laid down in Article 14(10), second subparagraph, last sentence, of Directive 93/38,

the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 4(2) and 14(1), (10) and (13) together with Articles 21(1) and (5), 24(1) and (2) and 25(5) of that directive;

2. Dismisses the remainder of the application;

3. Orders the Commission of the European Communities and the French Republic to bear their own costs.

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 22 January 1998, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EC Treaty (now Article 226 EC) for a declaration that, in the course of the procurement procedure initiated by the Syndicat départemental d'Electrification de la Vendée (hereinafter Sydev) in December 1994 for the award of contracts for electrification and street lighting work, the French Republic failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 4(2), 14(1), (10) and (13), together with Articles 21, 24 and 25 of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199 p. 84, hereinafter the Directive).

2 The purpose of the Directive is to open up public procurement markets in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors.

3 Under Article 1(1) and (6) of the Directive:

For the purpose of this Directive:

1. "public authorities" shall mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, or associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

A body is considered to be governed by public law where it:

- is established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not being of an industrial or commercial nature,

- has legal personality, and

- is financed for the most part by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or is subject to management supervision by those bodies, or has an administrative, managerial or supervisory board more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law;

6. "tenderer" shall mean a supplier, contractor or service provider who submits a tender...

4 Article 2(1) and (2) of the Directive provides:

1. This Directive shall apply to contracting entities which:

(a) are public authorities or public undertakings and exercise one of the activities referred to in paragraph 2;

2. Relevant activities for the purposes of this Directive shall be:

(a) the provision or operation of fixed networks intended to provide a service to the public in connection with the production, transport or distribution of:

(i) drinking water; or

(ii) electricity; or

(iii) gas or heat;

or the supply of drinking water, electricity, gas or heat to such networks;

5 Under Article 4(2) of the Directive:

2. Contracting entities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between different suppliers, contractors or service providers.

6 Article 14(1), (10) and (13) of the Directive provides:

1. This Directive shall apply to contracts the estimated value, net of VAT, for which is not less than:

(c) ECU 5 000 000 in the case of works contracts.

10. The basis for calculating the value of a works contract for the purposes of paragraph 1 shall be the total value of the work. "Work" shall mean the result of building and civil engineering activities, taken as a whole, which are intended to fulfil an economic and technical function by themselves.

In particular, where a supply, work or service is the subject of several lots, the value of each lot shall be taken into account when assessing the value referred to in paragraph 1. Where the aggregate value of the lots equals or exceeds the value laid down in paragraph 1, that paragraph shall apply to all the lots. However, in the case of works contracts, contracting entities may derogate from paragraph 1 in respect of lots the estimated value, net of VAT, for which is less than ECU 1 million, provided that the aggregate value of those lots does not exceed 20% of the overall value of the lots.

13. Contracting entities may not circumvent this Directive by splitting contracts or using special methods of calculating the value of contracts.

7 Article 20(1) of the Directive provides that contracting entities may choose open, restricted or negotiated procedures, provided that, subject to paragraph 2, a call for competition has been made in accordance with Article 21.

8 Article 21(1) and (5) provides:

1. In the case of supplies, works or service contracts, the call for competition may be made:

(a) by means of a notice drawn up in accordance with Annex XII A, B or C; or

(b) by means of a periodic indicative notice drawn up in accordance with Annex XIV; or

(c) by means of a notice on the existence of a qualification system drawn up in accordance with Annex XIII.

5. The notices referred to in this Article shall be published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

9 Article 24(1) and (2) of the Directive provides:

1. Contracting entities which have awarded a contract or organised a design contest shall communicate to the Commission, within two months of the award of the contract and under conditions to be laid down by the Commission in accordance with the procedure laid down in Article 40, the results of the awarding procedure by means of a notice drawn up in accordance with Annex XV or Annex XVIII.

2. Information provided under Section I of Annex XV or under Annex XVIII shall be published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

10 Article 25(1) and (5) of the Directive provides:

1. The contracting entities must be able to supply proof of the date of dispatch of the notices referred to in Articles 20 to 24.

5. Contracts or design contests in respect of which a notice is published in the Official Journal of the European Communities pursuant to Article 21(1) or (4) shall not be published in any other way before that notice has been dispatched to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities. Such publication shall not contain information other than that published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

11 Article 45(1) of the Directive provides:

Member States shall adopt the measures necessary to comply with the provisions of this Directive and shall apply them by 1 July 1994. They shall forthwith inform the Commission thereof.

Facts and pre-litigation procedure

12 On 21 December 1994, Sydev, the organisation comprising the various joint municipal groupings responsible for electrification within the French département of Vendée, sent for publication in the Bulletin Officiel des Annonces des Marchés Publics (the official French bulletin of notices concerning public works and service contracts, hereinafter the BOAMP) a series of 37 notices of invitation to tender for electrification or street lighting works to be carried out over a three-year period in the département. Those notices, published in the BOAMP on 12 January 1995, concerned works amounting in total to FRF 609 000 000 over the three years, FRF 483 000 000 of which was for contracts for electrification and FRF 126 000 000 for contracts for street lighting.

13 In all the notices published in the BOAMP, Sydev was stated to be the body which awards the contract; tenders were to be sent to the works management office of Sydev, indicating the name of the municipal grouping concerned in each case. The description of the work to be carried out on the electricity supply networks was the same in all the cases: electrification work and associated generated work such as, for example, civil engineering on the telephone network, civil engineering on the cable television network, the public address system. The description of the work to be done on the lighting networks was also the same in the relevant notices: street lighting work and associated generated work such as, for example, the public address system.

14 Also on 21 December 1994, Sydev sent for publication at Community level the six main contract notices concerning electrification. Those notices, which were published on 6 January 1995 in the Official Journal of the European Communities (OJ S 3, p. 211), stated that tenders were to be sent to Sydev, indicating in each case the name of the local entity concerned. In all those notices Sydev was given as the name of the contracting entity, followed in all cases but one by the name of the local entity concerned.

15 The contracts were awarded under the restricted tendering procedure on the basis of price lists and order forms. The records of the tendering procedures disclosed by the French Government show that the contracts were awarded in accordance with the following procedure: initially, a shortlist was drawn up of candidates who had produced all the certificates attesting to compliance with administrative requirements and had the capacity to carry out the work in question; subsequently, one of the candidates was selected, probably on the basis of the lowest offer. Tenders were in the form of a percentage difference from the proposed list of prices; the successful candidate was to be given orders to carry out specific items of work over the three-year period.

16 Notices of the award of the 37 contracts at issue in this case (hereinafter the contested contracts), including the six contracts published in the Official Journal of the European Communities (hereinafter the OJEC), were published in the BOAMP on 29 September 1995. In those notices Sydev was described as the body which awarded the contract. On the other hand, no notice of award of the contracts was sent to the OJEC for publication.

17 The Commission took the view that the contested contracts were lots of a single work, which originated with a single contracting entity, that is to say Sydev, and that the rules of the Directive should have been applied to all of them, not merely to the six main lots. On 17 January 1996 it therefore sent a letter of formal notice to the French authorities, objecting to the splitting of the lots into different contracts, the failure to publish two-thirds of the lots at Community level and the use of a formula derived from the procedure for permanent tendering concerning which the Commission had already initiated another infringement procedure.

18 By letter of 14 June 1996, the French authorities denied the infringement complained of, contending that the contested contracts had not been artificially split but had genuinely been concluded by each of the joint municipal electrification groupings concerned in the département of Vendée and that, therefore, the threshold for publication of a notice in the OJEC had to be applied to each of the contracts individually. The French authorities also contended in their letter that the joint municipal groupings concerned did not use a procedure for permanent tendering during the currency of a contract.

19 On 7 April 1997, the Commission sent the French authorities a reasoned opinion alleging that in the procedure initiated by Sydev and its members in December 1994 the French Republic had failed to fulfil its obligations under the Directive, and in particular Articles 1(1), (5) and (7), 4(2), 14(1), (10) and (13), and Articles 21, 24 and 25. The Commission called on the French Government to take the measures necessary to comply with that reasoned opinion within one month of its notification. It also called on that government to provide it, within the same period, in accordance with Article 41 of the Directive, with all the information necessary to assess the exact position of the contract holders, inter alia, records of the award procedure and the contracts themselves.

20 By letter of 2 July 1997, the French authorities replied to that reasoned opinion, reiterating their previous arguments. They attached to that letter the records concerning the contested contracts and the tender documents relating to those contracts.

21 By note of 16 December 1997, the French authorities sent the Commission additional documentation, namely the schedules of special administrative clauses and the lists of prices for the contested contracts.

22 As it was not satisfied with the reply of the French Government to the reasoned opinion, the Commission brought this action.

Applicability of the Directive to the contested contracts given that it had not been transposed at the material time

23 It is common ground that at the end of 1994 and the beginning of 1995, when the procedure for the award of the contested contracts was under way, the French Republic had not yet transposed the Directive into its national law (see Case C-311/96 Commission v France [1997] ECR I-2939).

24 However, that fact does not preclude the applicability of the Directive to the contested contracts since the period prescribed in Article 45(1) for its transposition expired on 1 July 1994, that is to say before the procedure for the award of those contracts took place.

The complaints relied on 25 In support of its action the Commission relies on two series of complaints.

26 First, the contested contracts were concluded in breach of Article 14(1), (10) and (13) and

Articles 21, 24, 25 and 4(2) of the Directive: although they were in fact lots of a single work, that contract was artificially split on technical and geographical pretexts, in breach of the provisions of the Directive concerning the threshold, publication and equality of treatment between tenderers.

27 Second, the contract notices which the French authorities sent for publication in the OJEC were incomplete, which constituted a further instance of failure to fulfil obligations under the Directive.

28 In order to rule on the failure to fulfil obligations complained of, it should first be considered whether a single work was artificially split into several contracts within the meaning of Article 14(10), first subparagraph, and (13). If, once this question has been considered, it appears that this was in fact the case, the other instances of failure complained of should be considered in the light of the other provisions of the Directive.

The complaint that a single work was artificially split within the meaning of Article 14(10), first subparagraph, and (13) of the Directive

29 In order to define the term work for the purposes of this dispute, it must first be observed that, under Article 14(10), first subparagraph, of the Directive: The basis for calculating the value of a works contract for the purposes of paragraph 1 shall be the total value of the work. "Work" shall mean the result of building and civil engineering activities, taken as a whole, which are intended to fulfil an economic and technical function by themselves.

30 Article 14(13) provides: Contracting entities may not circumvent this Directive by splitting contracts or using special methods of calculating the value of contracts.

31 That paragraph sets out clearly the specific obligations deriving for contracting entities from Article 14(10), first subparagraph, of the Directive and must, therefore, be taken into account together with that subparagraph in ruling as to whether a work was split.

32 The French Government disputes the relevance of the term work in this case. It contends that it is not the fact that a work is being carried out which requires the procedures provided for by the Directive to be applied where the threshold laid down in it is reached but the fact that the contracts in question concern building or civil engineering activities referred to in Annex XI of that Directive, as specified in Article 1(4)(b) thereof.

33 It must be observed that the argument relied on by the French Government concerns the conditions for the application of the Directive to a works contract as defined in Article 1(4)(b) and not the conditions under which works contracts within the meaning of that subparagraph are to be regarded as forming part of a single work for the purpose of ascertaining whether the threshold for the application of the Directive, laid down by Article 14(1)(c), has been reached. Only the latter question is of relevance in the present case, as the Commission claims that the French Republic failed to observe that threshold by artificially splitting the work concerned.

34 Accordingly, that argument by the French Republic must be dismissed.

35 The criteria for deciding whether there is a work must also be established.

36 In that connection, it is clear from the definition of work in Article 14(10), first subparagraph, of the Directive that the existence of a work must be assessed in the light of the economic and technical function of the result of the works concerned.

37 The present case concerns a series of specific maintenance and extension works on the existing electricity supply and street lighting networks, the result of which, once completed, will be subsumed within the function fulfilled by the networks concerned.

38 It follows that, in the case of that type of works, the question whether there is a work must be assessed in the light of the economic and technical function fulfilled by the electricity supply and street lighting networks in question.

39 In the written procedure, both the Commission and the French Government expanded on their arguments concerning the premiss that the existence of a single contracting entity is a necessary condition in order for a series of contracts to be considered to be for the execution of a single work.

40 In answer to questions on that subject at the hearing, the Commission stated, however, that the existence of a single contracting entity is not a necessary condition, but merely an indication of the existence of a single work.

41 At the hearing the Commission also argued that contracts must be considered to be for the execution of a single work when they are so linked that a Community undertaking is likely to regard them as a single economic operation and tender for the whole operation.

42 It should be observed that, while the existence of a single contracting entity and the possibility of a Community undertaking's carrying out the whole of the works described in the contracts concerned may, according to circumstances, constitute corroborative evidence of the existence of a work within the meaning of the Directive, they cannot, on the other hand, constitute decisive criteria on that point. Thus, if there is a number of contracting entities and the whole of the works concerned cannot be carried out by a single undertaking, this will not call into question the existence of a single work where that conclusion results from the application of the criteria concerning function set out in Article 14(10), first subparagraph, second sentence, of the Directive.

43 The definition of the term work in that subparagraph does not make the existence of a work dependent on matters such as the number of contracting entities or whether the whole of the works can be carried out by a single undertaking.

44 That interpretation is consistent with the objective of the Directive which is to ensure that undertakings from other Member States will be able to tender for contracts or bundles of contracts likely to be of interest to them for objective reasons relating to their value.

45 First, it is conceivable that, for administrative or other reasons, a programme of works for the execution of a work within the meaning of the Directive might be the subject of several procedures originating with various contracting authorities. This might be so, for example, in the case of the construction of a road crossing the territory of several local authorities, each having administrative responsibility for a section of the road. In such a case, the above objective would be thwarted if the applicability of the Directive were ruled out on the ground that the estimated value of each section of the work was below the threshold of ECU 5 000 000.

46 Second, a Community undertaking may wish to be informed of the value of all the lots making up a work, even if it is not in a position to carry out all of them, as it is only in that way that it can assess the exact scope of the contract and adjust its prices according to the number of lots for which it proposes to tender, including, if necessary, those whose value is below the threshold of ECU 5 000 000.

47 It follows from the foregoing that in this case the question whether there is a work must be answered on the basis of the criteria laid down by Article 14(10), first subparagraph, second sentence, of the Directive, as set out in paragraph 38 of this judgment.

48 As the Commission complained that the French Republic had split the work concerned both on a technical basis (separate contracts for electrification and street lighting) and a geographical basis (separate contracts for each joint municipal grouping), it must first be considered whether electrification work and street lighting work was split, either at the level of the département as a whole or of the individual municipal groupings; if that is not the case, it must be ascertained, second, whether there was splitting within each of the two categories of works.

The complaint that the work was artificially split into electrification works and street lighting works

49 In support of its complaint, the Commission relies inter alia on the fact that the public address network is mentioned both in all the contract notices concerning electrification and in those concerning street lighting. It also cites the contract notices published by the relevant bodies in the départements of the Dordogne and Calvados which did not distinguish between street lighting work and electrification work.

50 The French Government contends that the present case concerns local electricity supply or street lighting networks which are independent of one another and that, therefore, the works on those networks are not contributing to the execution of a single work with functional or economic continuity.

51 In line with the finding at paragraph 38 of this judgment, in order to rule on this complaint, it is necessary to consider the economic and technical function fulfilled by the electricity supply and street lighting networks in question.

52 An electricity supply network is intended, from a technical point of view, to transport the electricity produced by a supplier to individual end consumers; in terms of economics, they must pay the supplier for what they consume.

53 However, a street lighting network is intended, from a technical point of view, to light public places using the electricity provided by the electricity supply network. The authority providing the street lighting assumes the cost itself, but subsequently recovers the amounts spent from the population served, without adjusting the sums demanded according to the benefit derived by the individuals concerned.

54 It follows that an electricity supply network and a street lighting network have a different economic and technical function.

55 It should be added that this difference of function is the same, whether at the level of the whole département or of the joint municipal groupings.

56 Accordingly, works on the electricity supply and street lighting networks cannot be considered to constitute lots of a single work artificially split contrary to Article 14(10), first subparagraph, and (13) of the Directive.

57 That finding is not affected by the considerations put forward by the Commission.

58 First, the fact that the works on the public address system are mentioned both in the notices concerning electrification and in those concerning street lighting does not mean that the respective networks fulfil the same economic and technical function. Their inclusion might be explained by the fact that parts of a public address network are carried by electricity supply ducts and street lighting masts, so that work on either of those networks entails work on the public address system.

59 Second, the fact that in two other French départements the contracting entities chose to include electrification work and street lighting work in the same contract notice does not alter the different economic and technical function which those networks are intended to fulfil.

60 Accordingly, the complaint alleging artificial splitting of the work into electrification works and street lighting works must be rejected.

The complaint that the electrification work was artificially split

61 The Commission complains that the French authorities artificially split the work in respect of electrification works. In that connection it points to the geographical contiguity of the networks, the simultaneity of the work programmes, the identical nature of the work descriptions in each contract notice and the overall coordination by Sydev.

62 The French Government contends that each joint municipal grouping concluded a separate contract for the network falling within its authority. It explains, on that point, that the joint municipal groupings are responsible for the low voltage electricity supply networks radiating from transformer substations which supply consumers in their territory with electricity.

63 The fact that those transformers may themselves be linked to a network of high-voltage lines does not mean that the whole system constitutes a single network and that, therefore, all the action taken on that network must be viewed as part of a single work. If that were the case, any action on the French electricity supply network as a whole would have to be considered to be a lot of a single work; such an interpretation would be too far-reaching and would run counter to the letter and spirit of the Community legislation on public procurement contracts, the sole purpose of which is to allow the tendering procedures for such contracts to be coordinated.

64 It must be observed in that regard that, even if, for administrative reasons, the joint municipal groupings in Vendée are responsible for the low-voltage electricity supply networks in the territory of the municipalities which those groupings comprise, that fact cannot, for the reasons stated in paragraphs 43 and 45 of this judgment, be of decisive importance, since those networks are interconnectable and, taken as a whole, they fulfil one economic and technical function, which consists in the supply and sale to consumers in the département of Vendée of electricity produced and supplied by Electricité de France.

65 As regards the contention of the French Government that such reasoning could be applied to the whole of the French electricity supply network, it must be observed that each tender for a contract must be assessed according to its context and its particular characteristics. In the present case, there are important factors which militate in favour of those contracts being aggregated at that level, such as the fact that the invitations for tenders for the contested contracts were made at the same time, the similarities between the contract notices and the fact that Sydev, the body comprising the joint municipal groupings responsible for electrification within the département, initiated and coordinated the contracts within a single geographical area.

66 This complaint of the Commission must, therefore, be upheld and it must be held that the contracts for electrification form part of a single work which has been artificially split. Accordingly, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 14(10), first subparagraph, and (13) of the Directive.

The complaint that the street lighting work was artificially split 67 The Commission submits that the work was artificially split in respect of street lighting works between several entities within the département of Vendée. It puts forward the same arguments in support of its complaint as those raised in support of the complaint concerning electrification.

68 In the written procedure, the French Government stressed the local nature and the autonomy of the street lighting networks.

69 It must be observed in that regard that, unlike electricity supply networks, street lighting networks are, from a technical point of view, not necessarily interdependent, as they can be restricted to built-up areas and no interconnection between them is necessary. Similarly, it is possible, in economic terms, for each of the local entities concerned to assume the financial burden arising from the operation of such a network. In the light of these factors, it is for the Commission to establish that, from a technical and economic point of view, the street lighting networks concerned in this case formed one unit within the département. The Commission has put forward no evidence to that effect.

70 It follows that, even if the economic and technical function of each street lighting network is the same as that of all the others within the département of Vendée, it is not possible to consider all those networks to form a whole with a single economic and technical function within the département.

71 Accordingly, that complaint of the Commission must be rejected.

72 At the hearing, the French Government expressed doubt as to whether street lighting works fall within the scope of the Directive or Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199 p. 54). On that point, it contended that a street lighting network does not involve the production, supply, transport or distribution of electricity as required by Article 2(2)(a) of the Directive, but, rather, concerns its consumption.

73 Leaving aside the question whether such a plea should be considered, given the stage of the procedure at which it was raised, suffice it to note that, in the light of the findings in paragraphs 56 and 71 of this judgment, there is no need to consider whether street lighting works fall within the scope of the Directive.

The complaint that obligations were not fulfilled as regards the threshold derived from Article 14(1)(c) and (10), second subparagraph, of the Directive 74 The Commission complains that, by artificially splitting the contract for the works at issue, the French authorities infringed the provisions of the Directive as regards the threshold.

75 It must be observed that Article 14(1)(c) established the threshold for the applicability of the Directive at ECU 5 000 000 and that, as regards the lots of a work, Article 14(10), second subparagraph, whilst requiring the value of all the lots to be aggregated, allows derogation from the Directive in respect of lots the estimated value, net of VAT, for which is less than ECU 1 million, provided that the aggregate value of those lots does not exceed 20% of the overall value of the lots.

76 In view of the finding made at paragraph 66 of this judgment, it must be ascertained whether the value of the contracts for electrification exceeds the above thresholds.

77 The documents before the Court show that those contracts, of which there are 19, account for a total estimated value, net of VAT, of FRF 483 000 000 over the three year period envisaged. That sum is well in excess of the threshold of ECU 5 000 000, which, at the material time, was equivalent to FRF 33 966 540.

78 It follows that the French authorities should have applied the Directive to all the lots making up the contract for electrification work, apart from those whose estimated individual value, net of VAT, was below the threshold of ECU 1 million which, at the material time, was equivalent to an amount of FRF 6 793 308, provided that their aggregate value did not exceed 20% of the overall value of the lots.

79 The evidence put forward by the Commission in reply to a question put by the Court shows that, of the electrification contracts only one, the estimated value, net of VAT, of which was FRF 6 000 000, did not exceed the threshold of ECU 1 million. The value of that contract was also less than 20% of the estimated total value, net of VAT, of all the electrification work.

80 The French authorities did not publish an invitation to tender at Community level for the 18 other electrification contracts, but only for six of them. Accordingly, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 14(1)(c), and (10), second subparagraph, of the Directive.

The complaint that Article 21(1) and (5) of the Directive was disregarded

81 It must be observed that, according to Article 21(1) of the Directive, the call for competition for a contract must be made by means of a notice drawn up in accordance with Annex XII of the Directive; that Annex provides in paragraph 5 that the notice must be published in the OJEC.

82 The Commission complains, first, that, because they split the work in respect of electrification works, the French authorities failed to publish a call for competition in the OJEC for all the contracts forming part of that work, confining themselves to doing so for only six of them.

83 Second, the notices concerning those six contracts, which the French authorities sent for publication in the OJEC, did not, according to the Commission, conform to the model in Annex XII to the Directive, because the information provided in those notices was insufficient to enable several of the headings set out in the model to be filled in. That conduct constituted a further failure to fulfil obligations under Article 21(1) of the Directive.

84 As already observed at paragraph 80 of this judgment, the French authorities confined themselves to publishing a call for competition at Community level in respect of only six of the 18 contracts for electrification works for which they were required to publish such a notice. The French Republic has thereby failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 21(1) and (5) of the Directive as regards the other 12 contracts.

85 It must be held that, as the French Republic acknowledges, the notices published in the OJEC concerning the six contracts for electrification are incomplete.

86 It follows that, as regards those notices, the French Republic has also failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 21(1) of the Directive.

The complaint that Article 24(1) and (2) of the Directive was disregarded

87 The Commission complains that the French authorities failed to notify it of the outcome of the tendering procedure for the electrification contracts, including those for which a contract notice was published in the OJEC, which prevented the publication in the OJEC of notices of the award of those contracts, in breach of the obligations deriving from Article 24 of the Directive.

88 The French Government admits the failure to fulfil its obligations complained of as regards the six contracts for which a notice was published in the OJEC. As regards the other contracts, it reiterates its argument that, in the absence of technical or geographical splitting, the Directive was not applicable to those contracts.

89 It must be observed that Article 24(1) of the Directive requires contracting entities which have awarded a contract to communicate to the Commission the results of the awarding procedure by means of a notice. Article 24(2) sets out the information to be published in the OJEC.

90 In the present case it is common ground that the French authorities did not communicate to the Commission the results of the 18 tendering procedures for the electrification contracts to which the Directive was applicable.

91 Accordingly, it must be held that the French Republic failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 24(1) and (2) of the Directive.

The complaint that Article 25 of the Directive was disregarded

92 The Commission submits that the failure of the French Republic to fulfil its obligations under Articles 21 and 24 of the Directive also entails a failure to fulfil its obligations under Article 25 thereof, concerning the dispatch and publication of the notices.

93 It must be observed that, under Article 25(1) of the Directive, the contracting entities must be able to supply proof of the date of dispatch of the notices referred to in Articles 20 to 24. Article 25(5) provides that contracts in respect of which a notice is published in the OJEC are not to be published before that notice has been dispatched to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities.

94 Given its general wording, the Commission's complaint seems to concern both the cases involving contracts for electrification where no notice of contract or of the award of the contract could have been dispatched to or published in the OJEC and the cases in which a contract notice, albeit incomplete, was published in it.

95 The Court must, therefore, distinguish between the two types of cases in order to assess the complaint raised by the Commission.

96 First, as regards the electrification contracts for which no contract notice or notice of award was sent for publication in the OJEC, although the Directive was applicable to them, there can be no failure to fulfil obligations under Article 25(1) of the Directive precisely because nothing was sent, since that paragraph is only applicable where a notice was actually sent.

97 However, since in all the cases notices were published in the BOAMP, it must be held that there was a failure to fulfil obligations under Article 25(5) of the Directive.

98 Second, as regards the cases of electrification contracts where a contract notice was published in the OJEC, even if the Commission's complaint did concern them, it must be observed, in the light of the documents produced to the Court, that those notices gave the date of their dispatch, which is not disputed by the Commission, and were dispatched for publication in the BOAMP on the same day.

99 In those circumstances, it cannot be held that there was a failure to fulfil obligations under Article 25(1) and (5).

The complaint that Article 4(2) of the Directive was disregarded

100 The Commission complains that the French Republic infringed Article 4(2) of the Directive. That complaint is based on the fact that all the electrification contracts were published at national level but only some of them were published at Community level, and then only incompletely.

101 The difference between the two series of notices published in the BOAMP and the OJEC is such, the Commission claims, as to mislead and place at a disadvantage tenderers from other Member States compared with their competitors from the Member State in which the contracts are to be awarded. There is less incentive for an undertaking which is not based in the area to respond to six different calls for tender each for an amount of little more than ECU 5 000 000, than to a call for tenders of around ECU 100 million. Moreover, a tenderer unaware of the exact scale of the contract, will, the Commission argues, normally put forward a less competitive price, all other things being equal, than a tenderer with knowledge of all the contracts.

102 The French Government reiterates its principal argument that there was no artificial splitting in the present case. In the alternative it contends that the procedure followed did not entail discrimination between tenderers because all candidates were asked to express their tender in the form of the amount by which it exceeded or undercut the list of prices proposed by the contracting entities.

103 It must be observed that, according to Article 4(2) of the Directive, Contracting entities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between different suppliers, contractors or service providers.

104 Having regard to the nature of the Commission's complaint, it must first be ascertained whether that paragraph requires that there be no discrimination between tenderers including potential tenderers.

105 In that connection, regard must be had to Article 1(6) of the Directive, which provides that tenderer is to mean a supplier, contractor or service provider who submits a tender.

106 It follows that, when it refers to suppliers, contractors or service providers, Article 4(2) of the Directive also concerns tenderers.

107 As to whether that paragraph also concerns potential tenderers, it must be held that the principle of non-discrimination applies to all the stages of the tendering procedure and not only from the time when a contractor submits a tender.

108 That interpretation is consistent with the purpose of the Directive which is to open up the contracts to which it applies to Community competition. That purpose would be undermined if a contracting entity could organise a tendering procedure in such a way that contractors from Member States other than that in which the contracts are awarded were discouraged from tendering.

109 It follows that Article 4(2) of the Directive, in prohibiting any discrimination between tenderers, also protects those who are discouraged from tendering because they have been placed at a disadvantage by the procedure followed by a contracting entity.

110 Second, it must be ascertained whether publication at Community level of only some of the electrification contracts constituted discrimination within the meaning of Article 4(2).

111 It must be observed in that connection that, in the absence of full publication at Community level of the electrification contracts to which the Directive applied, contractors from other Member States were not in a position to take a decision in the light of all the relevant information which should have been available to them. On the other hand, contractors who were able to consult the BOAMP, the majority of whom were probably nationals of the Member State in which the electrification contracts were awarded, had information concerning the exact scope of the work as regards electrification works.

112 Accordingly, it must be held that the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 4(2) of the Directive.

113 Having regard to all the foregoing considerations, it must be held that in so far as the French entities responsible for the tendering procedure for electrification contracts initiated in Vendée in December 1994

- split the work,

- did not publish in the OJEC a call for competition for all the contracts comprised in that work above the threshold laid down in Article 14(10), second subparagraph, last sentence, of the Directive but confined themselves to doing so for six of them only,

- did not communicate all the information required by Annex XII to that Directive as regards the six calls for competition published in the OJEC,

- did not communicate to the Commission the information required regarding the award of all the contracts comprised in that work above the threshold laid down in Article 14(10), second subparagraph, last sentence, of the Directive, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 4(2) and 14(1), (10) and (13), together with Articles 21(1) and (5), 24(1) and (2) and 25(5) of the Directive.

Order

1. By application lodged at the Registry of the Court on 12 December 1997, Société Anonyme de Traverses en Béton Armé (hereinafter 'Sateba') brought an appeal against the order of 29 September 1997 in Case T-83/97 Sateba v Commission [1997] ECR II-1523, (hereinafter 'the contested order') in which the Court of First Instance dismissed as inadmissible its application for annulment of the Commission's decision to take no further action on its complaint against Société Nationale des Chemins de Fer Belges (SNCB) of failing to comply with Community law in awarding a contract for the supply of concrete sleepers for use on its high-speed train line.

2. The context of the dispute and the factual background to the application are set out in the contested order as follows:

'1 The applicant, Sateba, is a company established in France which produces reinforced concrete sleepers for railway tracks. Its dispute with Société Nationale des Chemins de Fer Belges (the Belgian National Railway Company, hereinafter "the SNCB") arose in the context of a restricted call for tenders issued by the SNCB for the supply of monobloc concretesleepers for use on the Belgian TGV network, when the tender submitted by the applicant for the supply of duo-bloc concrete sleepers was not accepted by the contracting authority.

2 The applicant had previously been permitted to take part in a supplier qualification procedure organised by the SNCB, notice of which had been published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities on 27 July 1994 (OJ 1994 S 142, p. 132). On 19 December 1994, while that qualification procedure was taking place, the applicant received a copy of the restricted call for tenders in which the SNCB invited it to submit a tender for the supply, by 31 August 1995 and 30 September 1995 respectively, of 50 000 and 10 000 monobloc concrete sleepers (Special Conditions 8133.8504.001 of 14.12.1994).

3 In its reply dated 10 January 1995 Sateba offered to supply duo-bloc concrete sleepers, which it considered were compatible with the Belgian TGV network and satisfied the SNCB's requirements for use. In order to justify submission of a "variant" offer, the applicant first explained that, in view of the short periods for delivery laid down in the call for tenders, it would not be in a position to produce 60 000 monobloc sleepers without jeopardising its commitments to the Société Nationale des Chemins de Fer Français (French National Railway Company) (SNCF). It also noted that certain technical specifications sent to it by the SNCB were incompatible with those used in its factories which, nevertheless, regularly produce sleepers for use on TGV lines and have received an "Assurance Qualité Ferroviaire AQF2" (Railway Quality Assurance) certificate from the SNCF.

4 In a letter dated 24 March 1995 the SNCB informed the applicant that its tender had not been accepted "for failure to meet technical requirements". The SNCB considered that duo-bloc sleepers are different products from monobloc sleepers, as are wooden sleepers, and cannot therefore constitute a "variant" under Belgian law, since that term is reserved for solutions which are similar to the original concept and for which provision is made in the Special Conditions. The SNCB also pointed out that the applicant's approval procedure was not yet complete and followed the Q1 specification applicable to the supplier qualification system devised by it, notice of which had been published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

5 In a letter dated 28 April 1995 to the SNCB the applicant challenged the decision to reject its tender "for failure to meet technical requirements". Sateba claimed that Article 18(5) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84, hereinafter "Directive 93/38") prohibits reference in the specifications to a specific type of concrete sleeper, such as "monobloc", inthe present case, unless it is accompanied by the phrase "or equivalent". According to that provision, "[t]echnical specifications which mention ... a particular process and which have the effect of favouring or eliminating certain undertakings, shall not be used unless such specifications are indispensable for the subject of the contract". From this the applicant concluded that the proposed duo-bloc concrete sleepers were perfectly substitutable for the monobloc concrete sleepers and that the SNCB could not reject tenders for the supply of goods which were perfectly fitted for the use for which they were intended. According to the applicant, the substitutability of the two types of concrete sleeper was, furthermore, confirmed in an article on the Belgian TGV network which was published in a specialised journal and written by a director of the SNCB.

6 Furthermore, in its letter of 28 April 1995 the applicant claimed that the qualification system devised by the SNCB did not comply with the aforementioned directive. First, the fact that applicants for qualification were invited to submit tenders in restricted procurement procedures constituted an infringement of Article 31 of the directive, which provides that "the number of candidates selected must, however, take account of the need to ensure adequate competition". The SNCB thus reserved the right to eliminate candidates previously invited to submit tenders and, in so doing, rendered illusory the goal of ensuring adequate competition. Second, the alleged difficulty in approving the duo-bloc concrete sleepers produced by the applicant was contrary to Articles 30 and 34 of the directive. Since those goods were currently used on several thousand kilometres of track, in particular on the SNCF's TGV network, there was already objective evidence that the goods in question satisfied the L.23 technical specifications and thus the minimum requirements imposed by the contracting authority. The qualification procedure devised by the SNCB thus served to duplicate that objective evidence.

7 By letter dated 12 July 1995 the applicant lodged a complaint with the Secretariat-General of the Commission against the SNCB. In that letter it claimed that the position adopted by the SNCB served to restrict competition and constituted an obstacle to the free movement of goods, but it did not specify the provisions of the EC Treaty which it considered to have been breached or on which it based its complaint. The text of the complaint, under the heading "failure to comply with Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993", contained a short summary of the objections raised in the letter of 28 April 1995 to the SNCB, which is annexed to the applicant's complaint together with 13 other annexes.

8 By letter dated 22 July 1995 the Secretariat-General acknowledged receipt of the applicant's letter and informed it that its complaint would be examined by the Commission in the light of the applicable provisions of Community law. The fourth paragraph of that letter mentioned thepossibility ”of the Commission deciding to bring infringement proceedings against the Member State in question for failure to comply with Community law” and drew the applicant's attention to ”the purpose and nature of infringement proceedings under Article 169 of the EC Treaty”, which were set out in an annex.

9 On 1 December 1995 the applicant informed the Commission that it had submitted a tender in the context of a new restricted call for tenders launched by the SNCB on 14 July 1995. That tender, which included the same variant, was rejected on grounds similar to those relied upon in order to justify the rejection of its previous tender.

10 By letter dated 27 September 1996 the applicant expressed its disagreement, from both a legal and a technical point of view, with the conclusions of the experts consulted by the Commission. According to their reports, monobloc sleepers and duo-bloc sleepers are ”comparable”, rather than ”equivalent”, products. In its letter the applicant considered that ”the question is not whether two products are different, comparable or equivalent, but whether they are substitutable or interchangeable”, since those are the criteria usually applied in competition matters, both by the Court of Justice of the European Communities and by the French Cour de Cassation (Court of Cassation). It also noted that, in this sector, there is one single market for concrete sleepers, and not separate markets for monobloc sleepers and duo-bloc sleepers. The European standard defining the general technical characteristics to be exhibited by reinforced concrete sleepers, which is currently undergoing approval, confirms that view and demonstrates that monobloc and duo-bloc sleepers are intended for the same use and are, consequently, perfectly substitutable.

11 On 20 January 1997 the Directorate-General for Internal Market and Financial Services (DG XV), which is responsible for the drafting and implementation of Community public procurement law, informed the applicant of the Commission's decision to close the file on the ground that, in the case in point, there was not sufficient Community interest to justify pursuing the matter by formally initiating a procedure against the Belgian State. The Commission based that conclusion on the following considerations:

- the fact, of which the applicant complained, that the SNCB restricted its qualification system to suppliers of monobloc concrete sleepers, and which, according to the applicant, amounts to discrimination against suppliers of duo-bloc concrete sleepers, did not constitute an infringement of Community public procurement law, in particular Directive 93/38;

- on the basis of the information available to it and the current state of knowledge, the Commission could not conclude that the two products should be characterised as equivalent products. On the contrary, various technical experts considered that, although the products were comparable and could both be used in the construction of a high-speed train line, they were not equivalent products since they exhibited different characteristics, and presented different advantages and disadvantages. In addition to the relative advantages and disadvantages presented by the various types of sleeper, the contracting authority could take account of other technical information when fixing the criteria according to which it selected its material;

- at Community level there were approximately 60 suppliers of monobloc concrete sleepers and between 35 and 40 suppliers of duo-bloc sleepers. Effective competition could therefore be guaranteed even if it was limited to suppliers of monobloc sleepers or of duo-bloc sleepers.‘

3. On 1 April 1997, the appellant brought an action before the Court of First Instance for annulment of the Commission's decision to take no further action.

4. On 5 May 1997, the Commission raised a plea of inadmissibility, on the basis of Article 114(1) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, in respect of that application.

The contested order

5. In the contested order, the Court of First Instance dismissed the application pursuant to Article 114 of its Rules of Procedure which enables the Court of First Instance, where one of the parties has so requested, to rule on the inadmissibility of an action without considering the substance of the case and, where appropriate, without opening the oral procedure.

6. The Court of First Instance pointed out, at paragraph 32, that the procedural position of parties who have submitted a complaint to the Commission is fundamentally different in the case of a procedure under Article 169 of the Treaty from their position in a procedure under Council Regulation No 17 of 6 February 1962, First Regulation implementing Articles 85 and 86 of the Treaty (OJ, English Special Edition, 1959-1962 (I), p. 87).

7. The Court of First Instance stated, at paragraph 33, that in the present case, the complaint submitted by the applicant to the Commission could be properly examined by that institution under the procedure established by Article 169 of the Treaty.

8. It first pointed out, at paragraph 34, that the complaint formally identified the 'failure to comply with Directive 93/38' and that that formal heading was consistent with the substantive content of the complaint.

9. The Court of First Instance then noted, at paragraph 35, that the applicant had itself claimed that the position adopted by the SNCB served to restrict competition and constituted an obstacle to the free movement of goods. The Court of First Instance stated that the applicant could not deny that the appropriate procedure to be followed by the Commission in respect of possible infringements of Article 30 of the Treaty was that provided for in Article 169 of the Treaty.

10. Finally, as regards the procedure, the Court of First Instance added, at paragraph 36, that the appropriate nature, in the present case, of the Commission's action was not altered by the fact that the applicant's complaint related exclusively to conduct by a contracting entity, namely the SNCB, and did not criticise the relevant national legislation or the conduct of the Belgian Government. In that respect, the Court of First Instance recalled that acts of contracting entities are imputable to the Member States to which those entities belong and may therefore be condemned in the context of the infringement procedure established by Article 169 of the Treaty.

11. The Court of First Instance considered the alleged failure by the Commission to consider, on the basis of Regulation No 17, the anticompetitive practices supposedly committed by SNCB. The Court of First Instance noted, at paragraph 38, that as regards the exercise of the Commission's powers under Regulation No 17, the complaint submitted by the applicant did not contain any specific indication enabling it to be characterised as a request submitted under Article 3(2)(b) of that regulation. The Court of First Instance added that at no time had the applicant addressed to the Commission the requests which it claimed to have submitted and that it was only in the application for annulment that the applicant had referred for the first time to Article 86 of the Treaty and had identified the abuse of a dominant position allegedly committed by the SNCB.

12. Furthermore, the Court of First Instance pointed out, at paragraph 39, that the procedure under Regulation No 17 remains independent of the procedure for a finding that the conduct of a Member State infringes Community law and for termination of that conduct. The two procedures serve different purposes and are governed by different rules. The Court of First Instance concluded, at paragraph 40, that the decision to take no further action, which is challenged by the appellant, related exclusively to the procedure for a declaration of failure to fulfil obligations and did not constitute an implied rejection of a complaint submitted under Regulation No 17.

13. Finally, the Court of First Instance pointed out, at paragraph 41, that the findings contained in the Commission's letter did not have the effect of resolving the dispute between Sateba and the SNCB as to the legality of the public procurementprocedures undertaken by the latter and that the opinion notified in that letter was a factual element which the national court called upon to give a decision in the dispute must take into account in the course of its examination of the case but which is not binding on it.

14. In those circumstances, the Court of First Instance concluded, at paragraph 42, that the Commission had not committed any abuse of procedure and that it had acted properly in examining the complaint on the basis of Article 169 of the Treaty. The Commission's decision to discontinue the procedure for a declaration of failure to fulfil obligations was not subject to judicial review, which meant that the application had to be declared inadmissible.

The pleas put forward by the appellant

15. In support of its claim for annulment of the contested order, the appellant puts forward two pleas in law.

16. By its first plea, which is divided into three parts, the appellant alleges that the Court of First Instance committed an error of law by holding that the Commission had been entitled to examine the complaint under Article 169 of the Treaty, even though it was clear from the documents before the Court of First Instance that the complaint should have been examined on the basis of Regulation No 17. First of all, the appellant complains that the Court of First Instance misinterpreted Regulation No 17. Next it alleges that it applied an erroneous interpretation of Article 169 of the Treaty. Finally, it considers that the Court of First Instance misconstrued the concept of actionable measure and incorrectly held that it was not adversely affected by the Commission's decision.

17. By its second plea, the appellant alleges that the Court of First Instance seriously infringed the right of the defence and distorted the subject-matter of the proceedings by holding that the Commission had been entitled to adopt its decision on the basis of Article 169 of the Treaty.

18. The Commission considers that the Court of First Instance did not commit any error of law and that the appeal is clearly unfounded.

Findings of the Court

19. Pursuant to Article 119 of its Rules of Procedure, when the appeal is clearly inadmissible or clearly unfounded, the Court may, at any time, dismiss it by reasoned order.

The first part of the first plea

20. The appellant submits that the Court of First Instance misinterpreted Regulation No 17 by failing to examine the complaint in the light of the competition ruleswithin the framework of that regulation even though, according to the appellant, the complaint referred to a restriction on competition and, pursuant to Article 3(1) of Regulation No 17, the Commission may take action upon its own initiative in respect of an infringement of Articles 85 or 86 of the Treaty.

21. In that respect it should be pointed out that the Court of First Instance held, at paragraph 38 of the contested order, that the complaint did not contain any specific indication enabling it to be characterised as a request submitted under Regulation No 17 and that it was only in the application for annulment that the applicant referred for the first time to the competition rules in Article 86 of the Treaty.

22. The Court of First Instance held, at paragraph 34 of the contested order, that the complaint formally identified the 'failure to comply with Directive 93/38' and that that formal heading was consistent with the substantive content of the complaint.

23. The Court of First Instance therefore rightly held that, since the appellant's complaint concerned the public procurement rules in Directive 93/38, it could properly be examined by the Commission within the framework established by Article 169 of the Treaty and not from the point of view of the competition rules contained in Article 86 of the Treaty, which were not mentioned in the complaint.

24. Furthermore, the mere fact that reference is made to a restriction of competition is not sufficient to characterise an infringement of the competition rules in Article 86 of the Treaty when such a restriction is mentioned in the context of infringement of the public procurement rules contained in Directive 93/38. It is clear from the second, eleventh and twelfth recitals in the preamble to Directive 93/38 that one of its objectives is to ensure the free movement of goods by reacting against the absence of Community-wide competition for the supply to entities such as the SNCB, operating in the rail transport sector. The establishment of increased competition for the supply to such entities is thus one of the consequences of compliance with that directive. In those circumstances, a straightforward reference to a restriction on competition may therefore be interpreted as intended to supplement the allegation of infringement of the public procurement rules contained in Directive 93/38 and not as constituting a separate allegation based on the competition rules contained in the Treaty.

25. The fact that the Commission may take action upon its own initiative, pursuant to Article 3(1) of Regulation No 17, in order to examine a possible infringement of the competition rules contained in the Treaty cannot alter that conclusion, contrary to what the appellant appears to suggest.

26. The first part of the first plea must therefore be dismissed as clearly unfounded.

The second part of the first plea

27. Second, the appellant submits that the Court of First Instance applied an erroneous interpretation of Article 169 of the Treaty. It states that the Commission failed to state the legal basis for its decision in its letter concerning the closure of the file, and that the Court of First Instance was wrong in holding that the legal basis was Article 169 of the Treaty. Furthermore, it is not sufficient that Directive 93/38 be involved in order for Article 169 to apply, since the complaint related only to the conduct of the SNCB. Finally, the Court of First Instance did not establish the appropriate nature of the procedure by citing the case-law of the Court of Justice according to which acts of contracting entities are imputable to the Member States.

28. As regards the alleged lack of legal basis for the Commission's decision to take no further action, it is sufficient to point out that the appellant made no such allegation at any time before the Court of First Instance and, on the contrary, considered that the Commission had relied on Article 169 of the Treaty. Such a claim is therefore clearly inadmissible.

29. Pursuant to Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, no new plea in law may be introduced in the course of proceedings, unless it is based on matters of law or of fact which come to light in the course of the procedure.

30. To allow a party to put forward for the first time before the Court of Justice a plea in law which it has not raised before the Court of First Instance would be to allow it to bring before the Court of Justice, whose jurisdiction in appeals is limited, a case of wider ambit than that which came before the Court of First Instance. In an appeal the jurisdiction of the Court of Justice is thus confined to review of the findings of law on the pleas argued before the Court of First Instance (Case C-136/92 P Commission v Brazzelli Lualdi and Others [1994] ECR I-1981, paragraph 59).

31. As regards the argument that it is not sufficient that Directive 93/38 be involved in order for Article 169 to apply, that argument overlaps with the first part of the first plea in so far as it criticises the Court of First Instance for having held that Article 169 applied. The argument must therefore be rejected as clearly unfounded for the same reasons as those set out at paragraphs 23 to 25 above.

32. Finally, as regards the argument that the Court of First Instance failed to establish the appropriate nature of the procedure, the Court of First Instance cited the relevant case-law of the Court of Justice, at paragraph 36 of the contested order, referring, in particular, to Case C-87/94 Commission v Belgium [1996] ECR I-2043. As the Court of First Instance rightly pointed out, it follows from the application of the Community rules on public procurement and the case-law of the Court of Justice, that acts of contracting entities are imputable to the Member States to which those entities belong and may therefore be condemned in the context of the infringement procedure established by Article 169 of the Treaty.

33. The second part of the first plea must therefore be dismissed as both clearly unfounded and clearly inadmissible.

The third part of the first plea

34. Third, the appellant considers that by attributing a legal basis which did not exist to the Commission's decision not to take further action, the Court of First Instance misconstrued the concept of actionable measure in so far as it proceeded on the premiss that the Commission's decision did not affect the appellant's legal position in the context of a possible procedure in application of the competition rules. In particular, the appellant criticises the Court of First Instance for characterising as facts the findings contained in the Commission's letter concerning its decision to take no further action, since that characterisation, in so far as it may be taken into account by third parties, including a national court, is prejudicial to the appellant's interests.

35. In so far as the appellant's argument concerns an alleged lack of legal basis for the Commission's decision, it overlaps with the second part of the first plea and must be rejected as inadmissible for the same reasons as those set out at paragraph 28 above.

36. As regards the alleged effect of the Commission's decision on the appellant's legal position in the context of a competition procedure, the Court of First Instance rightly pointed out, at paragraphs 39 to 41 of the contested order, that the procedure under Regulation No 17 was independent of the procedure based on Article 169 of the Treaty for a finding that the conduct of a Member State infringes Community law and for termination of that conduct. The two procedures serve different purposes and are governed by different rules. The Court of First Instance rightly cited the case-law of the Court of Justice according to which the initiation of a procedure under Article 169 of the Treaty cannot automatically entail the adoption of a decision on the basis of Regulation No 17.

37. The Court of First Instance rightly concluded that the Commission's decision to take no further action related exclusively to the procedure for a declaration of failure to fulfil obligations and did not constitute an implied rejection of a complaint submitted under Regulation No 17.

38. Furthermore, the Court of First Instance correctly held that, although they constituted a factual element, the Commission's findings were not prejudicial to the appellant's interests in a possible procedure under the competition rules or the public procurement rules. As regards the latter procedure, the Court of First Instance was also correct in holding that the findings at issue were not binding on national courts.

39. As regards a possible competition procedure, it should be added that, according to the case-law of the Court of Justice, letters from the Commission concerning its decision to close a competition file may be taken into account by a national court called upon to resolve a dispute within the same field. However, the national court remains free to accept or reject the Commission's observations (see, in particular, Joined Cases 253/78 and 1/79 to 3/79 Giry and Guerlain and Others [1980] ECR 2327, paragraphs 12 and 13). The same is, a fortiori, true when the decision to close the file was adopted by the Commission in respect of matters falling within the scope of the public procurement rules, rather than the competition rules of the Treaty.

40. It follows that the third part of the first plea must be dismissed and that the first plea must be dismissed as both clearly unfounded and clearly inadmissible.

The second plea

41. In support of its second plea, the appellant claims that the Court of First Instance manifestly undermined the rights of the defence by laying down the principle that a person who has submitted a complaint has no procedural rights in the context of a procedure under Article 169 of the Treaty. Furthermore, the Court of First Instance distorted the subject-matter of the proceedings since it was aware that the case before it concerned an application for annulment of a decision adversely affecting the interests of a person in the sense contemplated in Article 173 of the Treaty.

42. As regards the first argument, concerning the absence of procedural rights for complainants under Article 169, the Court of First Instance rightly pointed out, at paragraph 32 of the contested order, that the procedural position of parties who have submitted a complaint to the Commission is fundamentally different in the case of a procedure under Article 169 of the Treaty from their position in the case of a proceeding under Regulation No 17. According to the settled case-law of the Court of Justice, the Commission is not bound to initiate a procedure under Article 169 but has a discretion which excludes the right for individuals to require it to adopt a specific position (see, in particular, Case 247/87 Star Fruit v Commission [1989] ECR 291, paragraph 11). It follows that the Court of First Instance was correct in stating that, in the case of a procedure under Article 169 of the Treaty, it is not open to persons who have lodged a complaint to bring an action before the Community judicature against a decision to take no further action on their complaint; nor do they have any procedural rights, comparable to those they may have in the case of a procedure under Regulation No 17, enabling them to require the Commission to inform them and to grant them a hearing. The appellant's argument must therefore be rejected as clearly unfounded.

43. As regards the second argument according to which the Court of First Instance distorted the subject-matter of the proceedings, that argument overlaps with thefirst plea. For the reasons set out at paragraphs 23 to 25 above, that argument should also be rejected as clearly unfounded.

44. In those circumstances, pursuant to Article 119 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, the appeal must be dismissed as both clearly unfounded and clearly inadmissible.

Costs

45. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, applicable to the appeal procedure by virtue of Article 118, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the appellant has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

hereby orders:

1. The appeal is dismissed;

2. The appellant is ordered to pay the costs of these proceedings.

Order of the Court (Fourth Chamber) of 17 July 1998
Société Anonyme de Traverses en Béton Armé (Sateba) v Commission of the European Communities.
Appeal - Public supply contracts - Decision to take no further action on a complaint concerning the conduct of the contracting authority.
Case C-422/97 P.

1 Approximation of laws - Public procurement procedures in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Directive 93/38 - Complaint by a tenderer alleging that the conduct of the contracting entity infringes the directive and restricts competition - Examination by the Commission under the procedure applicable to a failure by a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Whether permissible - Commission's power to take action upon its own initiative under the competition rules - Not relevant

(EC Treaty, Art. 169; Council Regulation No 17, Art. 3(1); Council Directive 93/38)

2 Appeals - Pleas in law - Plea put forward for the first time in the appeal - Inadmissible

(EC Statute of the Court of Justice, Art. 51)

3 Approximation of laws - Public procurement procedures in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Directive 93/38 - Acts of the contracting entities - Acts imputable to the Member States - Applicability of the procedure for a declaration of failure to fulfil obligations

(EC Treaty, Art. 169; Council Directive 93/38)

4 Actions for failure to fulfil obligations - Procedure - Independent of the competition procedure

(EC Treaty, Art. 169; Council Regulation No 17)

5 Actions for failure to fulfil obligations - Commission's right of action - Exercise of its discretion - Procedural position of parties who have submitted a complaint different from that in competition matters

1 In the case of a complaint submitted to the Commission by a tenderer for a public contract falling within the scope of Directive 93/38, criticising the conduct of the contracting entity, the mere fact that reference is made to a restriction of competition is not sufficient to indicate an infringement of the competition rules in Article 86 of the Treaty when such a restriction is mentioned in the context of infringement of the rules in that directive, but can legitimately be interpreted as intended to supplement that allegation. The fact that the Commission may take action upon its own initiative, pursuant to Article 3(1) of Regulation No 17, in order to examine a possible infringement of the competition rules contained in the Treaty cannot alter that conclusion.

2 A plea in law put forward for the first time in the appeal before the Court of Justice must be rejected as inadmissible. To allow a party to put forward for the first time before the Court of Justice a plea in law which it has not raised before the Court of First Instance would be to allow it to bring before the Court of Justice, whose jurisdiction in appeals is limited, a case of wider ambit than that which came before the Court of First Instance. In an appeal, the jurisdiction of the Court of Justice is thus confined to review of the findings of law on the pleas argued before the Court of First Instance.

3 It follows from the application of the Community rules on public procurement, in this case those covered by Directive 93/38, that acts of contracting entities are imputable to the Member States to which those entities belong and may therefore be condemned in the context of the infringement procedure established by Article 169 of the Treaty.

4 The procedure under Regulation No 17 in the field of competition is independent of the procedure based on Article 169 of the Treaty for a finding that the conduct of a Member State infringes Community law and for termination of that conduct. The two procedures serve different purposes and are governed by different rules, so that the initiation of a procedure under Article 169 of the Treaty cannot automatically entail the adoption of a decision on the basis of Regulation No 17. It follows that a decision by the Commission to take no further action in the context of a procedure for a declaration of failure to fulfil obligations relates exclusively to that procedure and does not constitute an implied rejection of a complaint submitted under Regulation No 17.

5 The procedural position of parties who have submitted a complaint to the Commission is fundamentally different in the case of a procedure under Article 169 of the Treaty from their position in the case of a proceeding under Regulation No 17 in the field of competition. As regards the former, the Commission is not bound to initiate the procedure but has a discretion which excludes the right for individuals to require it to adopt a specific position. Consequently it is not open to persons who have lodged a complaint in the case of a procedure under Article 169 of the Treaty to bring an action before the Community judicature against a decision to take no further action on their complaint; nor do they have any procedural rights, comparable to those they may have in the case of a procedure under Regulation No 17, enabling them to require the Commission to inform them and to grant them a hearing.

Judgment

1 By order of 29 May 1997, received at the Court on 2 September 1997, the High Court (Ireland) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty two questions on the interpretation of Article 1 of Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1), as amended by Council Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988 (OJ 1988 L 127, p. 1), and of Article 1 of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1).

2 Those questions were raised in proceedings between Connemara Machine Turf Co. Limited (hereinafter `Connemara'), a company incorporated under Irish law engaged in the production of machine-cut turf and the sale of chemical fertilisers, and Coillte Teoranta (The Irish Forestry Board Limited) concerning the award by the latter of two public supply contracts.

3 Until 1994 the award of public supply contracts was governed in the Community by Directive 77/62, as amended inter alia by Directive 88/295.

4 Article 1 of Directive 77/62 defines `contracting authority' as follows:

...

(b) "contracting authorities" shall be the State, regional or local authorities and the legal persons governed by public law or, in Member States where the latter are unknown, bodies corresponding thereto as specified in Annex I;

...'.

5 Point VI of Annex I to Directive 77/62 specifies, with respect to Ireland, that the corresponding bodies are `other public authorities whose public supply contracts are subject to control by the State'.

6 Directive 77/62 was repealed by Directive 93/36. That directive's provisions were to be transposed into national law by 14 June 1994 at the latest; Ireland had not yet done so on that date.

7 Under Article 1 of Directive 93/36,

...

(b) "contracting authorities" shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

"a body governed by public law" means any body:

- established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

- having legal personality, and

- financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law...'.

8 The establishment of Coillte Teoranta in the form of a private company was provided for by Section 9 of the Irish Forestry Act 1988 (hereinafter `the Act').

9 Under the Act, the objects of Coillte Teoranta are to carry on the business of forestry and related activities on a commercial basis and, in accordance with efficient silvicultural practices, to establish and carry on woodland industries, and to participate with others in forestry activities consistent with those objects.

10 Under Paragraph 3(14) of its memorandum of association, the objects of Coillte Teoranta, as owner of 12 national parks, access to which is free of charge, also include the provision of recreation, sporting, educational, scientific and cultural facilities.

11 The Irish Government transferred to Coillte Teoranta land and other property worth approximately IEP 700 000 000. In return for those assets, Coillte Teoranta issued shares to the Minister for Finance, who is thus its majority shareholder.

12 As regards the structure of Coillte Teoranta, it follows from the Act and its memorandum and articles of association that it was established by the Minister for Energy (hereinafter `the Minister'), that its memorandum and articles and any amendments thereto must be approved by him (Sections 11 and 15), that the chairman and other directors are appointed and their remuneration determined by him (Section 15(2)(b) and (d)), that the first Chief Executive is to be appointed by the Minister and hold office on the terms determined by him (Section 35), that the appointment of the company's auditors must be approved by the Minister (Section 15(2)(e)) and that the company is to comply with State policy and any ministerial directives with regard to the remuneration, allowances and conditions of employment of its employees (Section 36). Some of the Minister's decisions require the consent of the Minister for Finance.

13 In managing its business Coillte Teoranta must comply with the following obligations: the Minister may issue written directions requiring it to comply with State policy decisions of a general kind concerning forestry, or to provide or maintain specified services or facilities, or to maintain or use specified land or premises in its possession for a particular purpose (Section 38 of the Act); it is obliged to consult the Minister for Finance concerning forestry development in areas of scientific interest (Section 13); it must submit each year to the Minister a programme for the sale and acquisition of land (Section 14); the establishment and acquisition of subsidiaries must be approved by the Minister (Section 15(2)(g)); a general meeting must be convened if the two ministers so request (Paragraph 15 of the articles); and its annual report and auditor's report must be laid before the Irish Parliament (Sections 30 and 31 of the Act).

14 As regards finance, under the relevant provisions, Coillte Teoranta's share capital must be approved by the Minister for Finance (Section 10 of the Act). It is not authorised to borrow without the approval of the Minister (Section 24), and the Minister for Finance may guarantee repayment of any borrowings (Section 25). It may invest a sum not exceeding IEP 250 000 in other undertakings. That sum may be increased with the approval of the Minister given with the consent of the Minister for Finance (Section 15(2)(h)). He may also make sums available to Coillte Teoranta on particular terms for specific purposes.

15 On 12 March 1993 and 10 March 1994 Coillte Teoranta called for tenders for fertiliser supply contracts worth over ECU 200 000 in each case, without publishing a notice of tender in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

16 Connemara submitted tenders in each procedure, but they were not accepted.

17 On 21 June 1994 Connemara brought proceedings in the High Court inter alia for a declaration that the tender and award procedure of Coillte Teoranta was contrary to Directive 77/62. Coillte Teoranta submitted in this respect that it was not a contracting authority within the meaning of that directive.

18 In these circumstances, the High Court referred the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

`1. Is the defendant a "contracting authority" within the definition of the term "contracting authorities" contained in Article 1(b) of Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976?

2. Is the defendant a "contracting authority" within the definition of the term "contracting authorities" contained in Article 1(b) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993?'

19 Connemara and the Commission consider that, by virtue of the various provisions governing the status of Coillte Teoranta, it must be regarded as falling within the notion of the State, as defined by the Court in Case 31/87 Beentjes v Netherlands State [1988] ECR 4635.

20 In that judgment, they claim, the Court gave a functional interpretation to the concept of the State for the purposes of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682), which contained the same definition of contracting authorities as Directive 77/62. Following that interpretation, a body whose composition and functions are laid down by legislation and which largely depends on the public authorities must be regarded as falling within the notion of the State, even if it is not formally part of the State administration.

21 Connemara and the Commission further consider that Coillte Teoranta may also be regarded as an `other' public authority whose public supply contracts are subject to control by the State within the meaning of Point VI of Annex I to Directive 77/62.

22 The Irish Government and Coillte Teoranta, on the other hand, consider that the latter is not a contracting authority within the meaning of either Directive 77/62 or Directive 93/36.

23 They submit that Coillte Teoranta is a private undertaking subject to the Companies Act. It is thus a commercial company belonging to the State. The powers of appointing and removing its officers and defining its general policy are no more extensive than those provided for in the memorandum and articles of a private company which is owned almost entirely by a single shareholder. Its day-to-day business, on the other hand, is managed independently and the State has no influence on the award of contracts.

24 The French and United Kingdom Governments concentrate their observations on the question whether Coillte Teoranta is a body governed by public law within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36.

25 It must first be stated that the facts of the present case fall exclusively within the scope of Directive 77/62. At the time when the invitation to tender was issued, and even when the contract in question was awarded, the period for transposing Directive 93/36 had not yet expired, and Ireland had not yet transposed it.

26 It follows that the Court must confine itself to answering the question whether a body such as Coillte Teoranta is a contracting authority within the meaning of Directive 77/62.

27 On this point, it must be noted that, unlike the body concerned in Beentjes, Coillte Teoranta has legal personality. Moreover, it is common ground that it does not award public contracts on behalf of the State or a regional or local authority.

28 In those circumstances, Coillte Teoranta cannot be regarded as being the State or a regional or local authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 77/62. It must still be considered, however, whether it is one of the bodies corresponding to legal persons governed by public law listed in Annex I to Directive 77/62.

29 With reference to Ireland, that annex describes as contracting authorities other public authorities whose public supply contracts are subject to control by the State.

30 It must be borne in mind that the purpose of coordinating at Community level the procedures for the award of public supply contracts is to eliminate barriers to the free movement of goods.

31 In order to give full effect to the principle of free movement, the term `contracting authority' must be interpreted in functional terms (see, to that effect, the judgment of 10 November 1998 in Case C-360/96 Gemeente Arnhem and Gemeente Rheden v BFI Holding [1998] ECR I-6821, paragraph 62).

32 It must be emphasised here that it is the State which set up Coillte Teoranta and entrusted specific tasks to it, consisting principally of managing the national forests and woodland industries, but also of providing various facilities in the public interest. It is also the State which has power to appoint the principal officers of Coillte Teoranta.

33 Moreover, the Minister's power to give instructions to Coillte Teoranta, in particular requiring it to comply with State policy on forestry or to provide specified services or facilities, and the powers conferred on that Minister and the Minister for Finance in financial matters give the State the possibility of controlling Coillte Teoranta's economic activity.

34 It follows that, while there is indeed no provision expressly to the effect that State control is to extend specifically to the awarding of public supply contracts by Coillte Teoranta, the State may exercise such control, at least indirectly.

35 Consequently, Coillte Teoranta must be regarded as a `public authority whose public supply contracts are subject to control by the State' within the meaning of Point VI of Annex I to Directive 77/62.

36 The answer to the questions referred for a preliminary ruling must therefore be that a body such as Coillte Teoranta is a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 77/62, as amended by Directive 88/295.

which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

(Fifth Chamber),

in answer to the questions referred to it by the High Court by order of 20 May 1997, hereby rules:

A body such as Coillte Teoranta is a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by Council Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988.

Judgment of the Court (Sixth Chamber)
of 4 March 1999
Hospital Ingenieure Krankenhaustechnik Planungs-Gesellschaft mbH (HI) v
Landeskrankenanstalten-Betriebsgesellschaft.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Unabhängiger Verwaltungssenat für Kärnten - Austria.
Public service contracts - Effect of a directive not transposed into national law.
Case C-258/97.

1 Approximation of laws - Review procedures in relation to the award of public supply and public works contracts - Directive 89/665 - Bodies with jurisdiction to review procedures - Applicability of the conditions laid down in Article 2(8), second subparagraph, of Directive 89/665 - Conditions - `Courts or tribunals' - Not applicable

(Council Directive 89/665, Art. 2(8), second subpara.)

2 Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - Provision requiring Member States to establish bodies with jurisdiction to review procedures - Failure to transpose the Directive - Consequences - Whether possible for bodies with jurisdiction in relation to public supply and public works contracts also to hear appeals concerning public service contracts - Not axiomatic - National courts required to determine whether appeals are possible on the basis of the domestic law in force

(Council Directives 89/665, Art. 2(8), and 92/50, Art. 41)

3 Approximation of laws - Procedure for the award of public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - Scope - Engineering services, including planning, consultancy and studies relating to the running of a hospital - Covered - Falling within Category No 12 of Annex I A

(Council Directive 92/50, Annex I A)

4 Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - Direct effect

1 The conditions laid down in Article 2(8) of Council Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts do not apply to authorities whose composition and functioning are governed by rules such as those governing the Unabhängiger Verwaltungssenat für Kärnten (an independent administrative authority responsible for verifying the legality of administrative measures adopted by the Land of Carinthia), which displays all the characteristics required for it to be recognised as a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the Treaty.

2 Neither Article 2(8) nor any other provisions of Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts may be interpreted as meaning that, if Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts has not been transposed by the end of the period prescribed for that purpose, the review bodies in the Member States - established under Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665 - with jurisdiction to review procedures for the award of public supply and public works contracts may also hear appeals concerning procedures for the award of public service contracts.

However, in order to observe the requirement that domestic law must be interpreted in conformity with Directive 92/50 and the requirement that the rights of individuals must be protected effectively, the national court must determine whether the relevant provisions of its domestic law allow recognition of a right for individuals to bring an appeal in relation to awards of public service contracts.

The national court must determine in particular whether such a right of appeal may be exercised before the same bodies as those established to hear appeals concerning the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts.

3 Services relating to a number of engineering services, including planning, consultancy and studies for various medical facilities, and concerning tasks relating to the preparation and execution of projects for the construction of a paediatric clinic in a hospital and the corresponding medical facilities, fall within Category No 12 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts.

4 The provisions of Titles I and II of Directive 92/50 may be relied upon directly by individuals before national courts. The provisions of Titles III to VI may also be relied upon by an individual before a national court if it is clear from an individual examination of their wording that they are unconditional and sufficiently clear and precise.

The detailed provisions of Titles III to VI of Directive 92/50 on the choice of award procedures and the rules applicable to competitions, common technical and advertising rules, and participation and selection and award criteria, are, subject to exceptions and qualifications which are apparent from their terms, unconditional and sufficiently clear and precise to be relied on by service providers before national courts.

Judgment

Costs

40 The costs incurred by the Austrian Government and the Commission of the European Communities, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, pending before the referring body, the decision on costs is a matter for that body.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Unabhängiger Verwaltungssenat für Kärnten by order of 8 July 1997, hereby rules:

1. The conditions laid down in Article 2(8) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts do not apply to authorities whose composition and functioning are governed by rules such as those to which that body is subject.

2. Neither Article 2(8) nor any other provisions of Directive 89/665 may be interpreted as meaning that, if Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts has not been transposed by the end of the period prescribed for that purpose, the review bodies in the Member States with jurisdiction to review procedures for the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts, established under Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665, may also hear appeals concerning procedures for the award of public service contracts. However, in order to observe the requirement that domestic law must be interpreted in conformity with Directive 92/50 and the requirement that the rights of individuals must be protected effectively, the national court must determine whether the relevant provisions of its domestic law allow recognition of a right for individuals to bring an appeal in relation to awards of public service contracts. In circumstances such as those arising in the case in the main proceedings, the national court must determine in particular whether such a right of appeal may be exercised before the same bodies as those established to hear appeals concerning the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts.

3. Services of the kind with which the defendant's invitation to tender is concerned, namely tasks relating to the preparation and execution of projects for the construction of a paediatric clinic in a hospital and the corresponding medical facilities, fall within Category No 12 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50.

4. The provisions of Titles I and II of Directive 92/50 may be relied on directly by individuals before national courts. As regards the provisions of Titles III to VI, they may also be relied on by an individual before a national court if it is clear from an individual examination of their wording that they are unconditional and sufficiently clear and precise.

1 By order of 8 July 1997, received at the Court on 17 July 1997, the Unabhängiger Verwaltungssenat für Kärnten (Independent Administrative Senate for Carinthia) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty five questions on the interpretation of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33) and of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

2 Those questions were raised in proceedings between Hospital Ingenieure Krankenhaustechnik Planungs-Gesellschaft mbH (HI) (hereinafter `the plaintiff') and Landeskrankenanstalten-Betriebsgesellschaft (the establishment responsible for the management of Land hospitals, hereinafter `the defendant') concerning the award of a service contract relating to the construction of a paediatric hospital in Klagenfurt.

3 Article 1(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC, as amended by Article 41 of Directive 92/50, provides:

`1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC, and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following articles and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.'

4 Article 1(2) and (3) of Directive 89/665 provide:

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

5 Article 2 of the same directive provides:

`1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

7. The Member States shall ensure that decisions taken by bodies responsible for review procedures can be effectively enforced.

8. Where bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character, written reasons for their decisions shall always be given. Furthermore, in such a case, provision must be made to guarantee procedures whereby any allegedly illegal measure taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the EEC Treaty and independent of both the contracting authority and the review body.

The members of such an independent body shall be appointed and leave office under the same conditions as members of the judiciary as regards the authority responsible for their appointment, their period of office, and their removal. At least the President of this independent body shall have the same legal and professional qualifications as members of the judiciary. The independent body shall take its decisions following a procedure in which both sides are heard, and these decisions shall, by means determined by each Member State, be legally binding.'

6 Articles 8, 9 and 10 of Directive 92/50 provide:

Article 8

`Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI.'

Article 9

`Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I B shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.'

Article 10

`Contracts which have as their object services listed in both Annexes I A and I B shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI where the value of the services listed in Annex I A is greater than the value of the services listed in Annex I B. Where this is not the case, they shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.'

7 Under Article 168 of the Act concerning the conditions of accession of the Republic of Austria, the Republic of Finland and the Kingdom of Sweden and the adjustments to the Treaties on which the European Union is founded (OJ 1994 C 241, p. 21), Directive 92/50 was to be transposed into Austrian law before 1 January 1995.

Auftragsvergabegesetz (Law of the Land of Carinthia on the award of public contracts) which entered into force on 1 January 1994 (LGBl. No 55/1994). In Section VIII (`Remedies'), Article 59(1) provides that the procedure for awarding public contracts under that Law is to be subject to monitoring by the Unabhängiger Verwaltungssenat für Kärnten (an independent administrative authority responsible for verifying the legality of administrative measures adopted by the Land, hereinafter `the UVK').

9 The provisions concerning that authority are contained in a special statute, the Kärntner Verwaltungssenatsgesetz (LGBl. No 104/1990). It governs in particular the terms of reference of the authority, its composition and its independence.

10 It is common ground that, in the Land of Carinthia, the transposition of Directive 92/50 did not take effect until 1 July 1997.

The questions referred

11 The plaintiff submitted a tender in a procedure for the award of a contract organised by the defendant for the construction of a paediatric hospital in Klagenfurt. The procedure related to a number of engineering services, including planning, consultancy and studies for the various medical facilities.

12 After the contract was awarded to the Viennese company CMT Medizintechnik Gesellschaft mbH, the plaintiff, which had also participated in the procedure, commenced proceedings before the UVK, alleging that the tendering procedure had infringed the Community rules on public service contracts and was therefore unlawful.

13 Considering that it was unable to adjudicate on the dispute before it without seeking clarification as to the interpretation of Directives 89/665 and 92/50, the UVK stayed proceedings pending a preliminary ruling from the Court of Justice on the following five questions:

`1. Is Article 2(8) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts to be interpreted as meaning that the Unabhängiger Verwaltungssenat für Kärnten fulfils the conditions for a body responsible for review procedures with respect to services?

2. Are these or other provisions of Council Directive 89/665/EEC on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, from which there derives an individual right to have review proceedings conducted before authorities or courts which comply with the provisions of Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665/EEC, to be interpreted as being sufficiently precise and specific that, in the event of non-transposition of the directive in question by the Member State, an individual may successfully assert that legal right against the Member State in legal proceedings?

3. Are the provisions of Article 41 of Directive 92/50/EEC in conjunction with Directive 89/665/EEC, which are the basis of an individual's right to have review proceedings conducted, to be interpreted as meaning that a national court with the characteristics of the Unabhängiger Verwaltungssenat für Kärnten may, when conducting review proceedings on the basis of national provisions such as Article 59 et seq. of the Carinthian Auftragsvergabegesetz and the regulations relating thereto, disregard those provisions if they prevent the carrying out of review proceedings under the Carinthian Auftragsvergabegesetz for the award of public service contracts, and therefore nevertheless conduct review proceedings in accordance with Article 8 of the Carinthian Auftragsvergabegesetz?

4. Are the services mentioned in the facts of the case, with reference to Article 10 of Directive 92/50/EEC, to be classified as services coming under Annex IA, Category No 12, of Directive 92/50/EEC (architectural services; engineering services and integrated engineering services; urban planning and landscape architectural services; related scientific and technical consulting services; technical testing and analysis services)?

5. Are the provisions of Directive 92/50/EEC to be interpreted as satisfying the conditions laid down in the judgment in Case 41/74 Van Duyn (paragraph 12) for the direct applicability of a Community directive, with the result that services coming under Annex IA of the directive are to be awarded under the procedure therein mentioned, or are the relevant provisions of the directive in connection with the services mentioned in Annex IA capable of fulfilling the conditions laid down in the said case?'

The first question

14 By its first question the referring body seeks essentially to ascertain whether provisions such as those which govern its composition and functioning conform with the conditions laid down in Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665.

15 That provision is concerned with bodies hearing appeals against decisions adopted by authorities responsible for awarding public contracts falling within the scope of that directive.

16 Under the first subparagraph of Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665, Member States have two options in organising review procedures for public contracts.

17 The first option consists in vesting the power to hear appeals in judicial authorities. Under the second option, that power is, initially, granted to non-judicial authorities. In such circumstances, the decisions of those authorities must be amenable to judicial review or to review by another authority which meets the special requirements laid down in the second subparagraph of Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665 in order to ensure that an adequate remedy is available (Case C-103/97 Köllensperger [1999] ECR I-551, paragraph 29).

18 As the Advocate General observed in points 12 to 14 of his Opinion, a body such as the UVK displays all the characteristics required for it to be recognised as a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the Treaty.

19 It follows that if, as in a case such as this, the reviewing authority is of a judicial nature, the particular requirements of the second subparagraph of Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665 do not apply.

20 Accordingly, the answer to be given to the referring body must be that the conditions laid down in Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665 do not apply to authorities whose composition and functioning are governed by rules such as those to which that body is subject.

The second and third questions

21 By its second and third questions, which it is appropriate to consider together, the referring body seeks essentially to ascertain whether Article 2(8) or other provisions of Directive 89/665 must be construed as meaning that, if Directive 92/50 has not been transposed by the end of the period laid down for that purpose, the review bodies in the Member States with jurisdiction to review procedures for the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts, established under Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665, may also hear appeals concerning procedures for the award of public service contracts.

22 It must be noted at the outset that, in Case C-54/96 Dorsch Consult v Bundesbaugesellschaft Berlin [1997] ECR I-4961, paragraph 40, and Case C-76/97 Tögel v Niederösterreichische Gebietskrankenkasse [1998] ECR I-5357, paragraph 22), the Court held that it was for the legal system of each Member State to determine which court or tribunal has jurisdiction to hear disputes involving individual rights derived from Community law but that in each case the Member States must ensure that those rights are effectively protected. Subject to that reservation, it is not for the Court to involve itself in the resolution of questions of jurisdiction which may arise within the national judicial system from the classification of certain legal situations based on Community law.

23 In paragraphs 41 and 23 of those judgments, respectively, the Court went on to state that although Article 41 of Directive 92/50 requires the Member States to adopt the measures necessary to ensure effective review in the field of public service contracts, it does not indicate which national bodies are to be the competent bodies for that purpose or whether those bodies are to be the same as those which the Member States have designated in the field of public works contracts and public supply contracts.

24 It is nevertheless undisputed that, on the date on which the plaintiff instituted proceedings before the UVK, Directive 92/50 had not yet been transposed into domestic law in Carinthia. The Law transposing it did not enter into force until 1 July 1997.

25 Having regard to similar circumstances, in paragraphs 43 and 25 respectively of Dorsch Consult and Tögel, cited above, the Court stated that the Member States' obligation arising from a directive to achieve the result prescribed by the directive and their duty under Article 5 of the EC Treaty to take all appropriate measures, whether general or particular, to ensure fulfilment of that obligation is binding on all the authorities of Member States, including, for matters within their jurisdiction, the courts. It followed that, when applying national law, whether adopted before or after the directive, the national court having to interpret that law must do so, as far as possible, in the light of the wording and purpose of the directive so as to achieve the result it has in view and thereby comply with the third paragraph of Article 189 of the EC Treaty (see the judgments in Case C-106/89 Marleasing [1990] ECR I-4135, paragraph 8; Case C-334/92 Wagner Miret [1993] ECR I-6911, paragraph 20; and in Case C-91/92 Faccini Dori [1994] ECR I-3325, paragraph 26).

26 In paragraphs 44 and 26 respectively of its judgments in Dorsch Consult and Tögel, cited above, the Court also pointed out that the question of the designation of a body competent to hear appeals in relation to public service contracts is relevant even where Directive 92/50 has not been transposed. Where a Member State has failed to take the implementing measures required or has adopted measures which do not conform to a directive, the Court has recognised, subject to certain conditions, the right of individuals to rely in law on a directive as against a defaulting Member State. Although this minimum guarantee cannot justify a Member State in absolving itself from taking in due time implementing measures sufficient to meet the purpose of each directive (see, in particular, the judgment in Case C-253/95 Commission v Germany [1996] ECR I-2423, paragraph 13), it may nevertheless have the effect of enabling individuals to rely, as against a Member State, on the substantive provisions of Directive 92/50.

27 Finally, in paragraphs 45 and 27 respectively of the same judgments, the Court reiterated that, if the relevant domestic provisions cannot be interpreted in conformity with Directive 92/50, the persons concerned, using the appropriate domestic law procedures, may claim compensation for the damage incurred owing to the failure to transpose the directive within the time prescribed (see, in particular, the judgment in Joined Cases C-178/94, C-179/94, C-188/94, C-189/94 and C-190/94 Dillenkofer and Others [1996] ECR I-4845).

28 The answer to the second and third questions must therefore be that neither Article 2(8) nor any other provisions of Directive 89/665 may be interpreted as meaning that, if Directive 92/50 has not been transposed by the end of the period prescribed for that purpose, the review bodies in the Member States with jurisdiction to review procedures for the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts, established under Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665, may also hear appeals concerning procedures for the award of public service contracts. However, in order to observe the requirement that domestic law must be interpreted in conformity with Directive 92/50 and the requirement that the rights of individuals must be protected effectively, the national court must determine whether the relevant provisions of its domestic law allow recognition of a right for individuals to bring an appeal in relation to awards of public service contracts. In circumstances such as those arising in the case in the main proceedings, the national court must determine in particular whether such a right of appeal may be exercised before the same bodies as those established to hear appeals concerning the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts.

The fourth question

29 By its fourth question the referring body seeks to ascertain whether services such as those with which the defendant3s invitation to tender was concerned fall within Category No 12 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50.

30 Category No 12 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50 comprises architectural services, engineering services and integrated engineering services, urban planning and landscape architectural services, related scientific and technical consulting services and technical testing and analysis services.

31 For the reasons given by the Advocate General in point 25 of his Opinion, it is clear that services such as those with which the defendant's invitation to tender is concerned fall within Category No 12 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50.

32 The answer to the fourth question must therefore be that services of the kind with which the defendant's invitation to tender is concerned, namely tasks relating to the preparation and execution of projects for the construction of a paediatric clinic in a hospital and the corresponding medical facilities, fall within Category No 12 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50.

The fifth question

33 By its fifth question the referring body seeks essentially to ascertain whether Directive 92/50 may be relied on by individuals before national courts.

34 As the Court held in paragraph 42 of Tögel, cited above, it is settled case-law (see the judgment in Case 31/87 Beentjes v Netherlands State [1988] ECR 4635, paragraph 40) that whenever the provisions of a directive appear, as far as their subject-matter is concerned, to be unconditional and sufficiently precise, those provisions may be relied on by individuals against the State where that State fails to implement the directive in national law within the prescribed period or where it fails to implement it correctly.

35 It is therefore necessary to consider whether the relevant provisions of Directive 92/50 appear, as regards their content, to be unconditional and sufficiently precise to be relied on by an individual against the State.

36 It was held in paragraph 44 of Tögel, cited above, that the provisions of Title I, concerning the matters and persons covered by the directive, and of Title II, on the procedures applicable to contracts for the services listed in Annexes I A and I B, are unconditional and sufficiently precise to be relied on before a national court.

37 It was also held, in paragraph 45 of Tögel, that under Articles 8 and 10, which form part of Title II, the awarding authorities are required, in unconditional and precise terms, to award public contracts for services in accordance with national procedures in conformity with the provisions of Titles III to VI in the case of services coming wholly or mainly under Annex I A and with the provisions of Articles 14 and 16 in the case of services coming wholly or mainly under Annex I B. Article 14 constitutes Title IV whilst Article 16 appears under Title V.

38 Finally, the Court held in paragraph 46 of Tögel that the detailed provisions of Titles III to VI of Directive 92/50 on the choice of award procedures and the rules applicable to competitions, common technical and advertising rules, and participation and selection and award criteria, are, subject to exceptions and qualifications which are apparent from their terms, unconditional and sufficiently clear and precise to be relied on by service providers before national courts.

39 The answer to the fifth question must therefore be that the provisions of Titles I and II of Directive 92/50 may be relied on directly by individuals before national courts. As regards the provisions of Titles III to VI, they may also be relied on by an individual before a national court if it is clear from an individual examination of their wording that they are unconditional and sufficiently clear and precise.

of 19 May 1999
Commission of the European Communities v French Republic.
Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Freedom to provide services - Public procurement procedures - Water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors.
Case C-225/97.

1 Approximation of laws - Public procurement in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Application of the Community rules to public procurement procedures - Directive 92/13 - Judicial remedies at national level - Obligation for Member States to confer appropriate jurisdiction on review bodies - Where power is conferred on the courts to impose fines - Obligation fulfilled

(Council Directive 92/13, Arts 2(1)(c) and 5)

2 Approximation of laws - Public procurement in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Application of the Community rules to public procurement procedures - Directive 92/13 - Attestation system and conciliation procedure - Obligation for the Member States to adopt implementing measures

(Council Directive 92/13, Arts 3 to 7 and 9 to 11)

1 Chapter 1 (Articles 1 and 2) of Directive 92/13 relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors provides that the Member States are to take the measures necessary to ensure that appropriate judicial remedies are made available to prospective suppliers and operators in the event of infringement by the contracting entities of the rules applicable to contract award procedures. It also authorises the Member States to choose between various options as regards the powers to be exercised by the courts.

These requirements are satisfied where a Member State chooses the option provided for in Article 2(1)(c) of the Directive - the introduction of measures permitting, by means of appropriate procedures, the making of an order for the payment of a particular sum in cases where the infringement has not been corrected or prevented - and provides that a court has the power to impose a fine, the level of which it is to fix according to its assessment of the circumstances of each particular case. Such a fine meets the requirements set out in Article 2(5).

2 Chapter 2 (Articles 3 to 7) of Directive 92/13 relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors provides for an attestation system enabling the contracting entities to obtain an attestation that they have correctly applied the rules governing the award of contracts. Chapter 4 (Articles 9 to 11) of the Directive provides for a conciliation mechanism at Community level for the amicable settlement of any differences arising between the undertakings involved and the contracting entities.

The fact that the Directive offers the entities falling within its scope the possibility of recourse to an attestation system in no way signifies that the transposition of that system into national law is optional. The relevant provisions of the Directive must be implemented with unquestionable binding force, and the specificity, precision and clarity necessary to satisfy the requirements of legal certainty. Transposition into national law is also necessary in order to ensure that persons having an interest know of the existence of such a procedure and may have recourse to it.

French Republic, represented by Kareen Rispal-Bellanger, Head of the Subdirectorate for International Economic Law and Community Law in the Legal Affairs Directorate of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and Philippe Lalliot, Secretary for Foreign Affairs in the same Directorate, acting as Agents, with an address for service in Luxembourg at the French Embassy, 8B Boulevard Joseph II,

defendant,

APPLICATION for a declaration that, by not adopting all the measures necessary to comply with Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14), the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 1(2), 2(1)(c) and 2(5) of that Directive, and under Chapters 2 and 4 thereof,

THE COURT

(Sixth Chamber),

composed of: P.J.G. Kapteyn (Rapporteur), President of the Chamber, G. Hirsch and G.F. Mancini, Judges, Advocate General: A. La Pergola,

Registrar: L. Hewlett, Administrator,

having regard to the Report for the Hearing, after hearing oral argument from the parties at the hearing on 22 October 1998, at which the Commission was represented by Hendrik van Lier and the French Government by Anne Viéville-Bréville, chargé de mission in the Legal Affairs Directorate of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, acting as Agent, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 19 January 1999,

gives the following

Judgment

Costs

44 Under Article 69(3) of the Rules of Procedure, the Court may order that the parties are to bear their own costs if each party succeeds on some and fails on other heads. Since the Commission and the French Republic have been partly unsuccessful in their pleadings, they must be ordered to bear their own costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

hereby:

1. Declares that, by not adopting within the prescribed period all the measures necessary to comply with the provisions of Chapters 2 and 4 of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 13(1) thereof;

2. Rejects the remainder of the application;

3. Orders each of the parties to bear its own costs.

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 17 June 1997, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EC Treaty (now Article 226 EC) for a declaration that, by not adopting all the measures necessary to comply with Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14; hereinafter `the Directive'), the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 1(2), 2(1)(c) and 2(5) of that Directive, and under Chapters 2 and 4 thereof.

Community law

2 Article 13 of the Directive provides that the Member States are to take the measures necessary to comply with the Directive before 1 January 1993 and to inform the Commission thereof immediately.

Penalty payments

3 Chapter 1 of the Directive (Articles 1 and 2) concerns remedies at national level.

4 Article 1 provides:

`1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that decisions taken by contracting entities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, Article 2(8), on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of procurement or national rules implementing that law as regards:

(a) contract award procedures falling within the scope of Council Directive 90/531/EEC; and

(b) compliance with Article 3(2)(a) of that Directive in the case of the contracting entities to which that provision applies.

2. Member States shall ensure that there is no discrimination between undertakings likely to make a claim for injury in the context of a procedure for the award of a contract as a result of the distinction made by this Directive between national rules implementing Community law and other national rules.

5 Article 2 of the Directive provides:

`1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers:

either

(a) to take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedure, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further injury to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting entity;

and

(b) to set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the notice of contract, the periodic indicative notice, the notice on the existence of a system of qualification, the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure in question;

or

(c) to take, at the earliest opportunity, if possible by way of interlocutory procedures and if necessary by a final procedure on the substance, measures other than those provided for in points (a) and (b) with the aim of correcting any identified infringement and preventing injury to the interests concerned; in particular, making an order for the payment of a particular sum, in cases where the infringement has not been corrected or prevented.

Member States may take this choice either for all contracting entities or for categories of entities defined on the basis of objective criteria, in any event preserving the effectiveness of the measures laid down in order to prevent injury being caused to the interests concerned;

(d) and, in both the above cases, to award damages to persons injured by the infringement.

Where damages are claimed on the grounds that a decision has been taken unlawfully, Member States may, where their system of internal law so requires and provides bodies having the necessary powers for that purpose, provide that the contested decision must first be set aside or declared illegal.

2. The powers referred to in paragraph 1 may be conferred on separate bodies responsible for different aspects of the review procedure.

3. Review procedures need not in themselves have an automatic suspensive effect on the contract award procedures to which they relate.

4. The Member States may provide that, when considering whether to order interim measures, the body responsible may take into account the probable consequences of the measures for all interests likely to be harmed, as well as the public interest, and may decide not to grant such measures where their negative consequences could exceed their benefits. A decision not to grant interim measures shall not prejudice any other claim of the person seeking these measures.

5. The sum to be paid in accordance with paragraph 1(c) must be set at a level high enough to dissuade the contracting entity from committing or persisting in an infringement. The payment of that sum may be made to depend upon a final decision that the infringement has in fact taken place.

Attestation

6 Chapter 2 of the Directive (Articles 3 to 7) concerns the attestation system.

7 Article 3 provides that Member States are to give contracting entities the possibility of having recourse to an attestation system in accordance with Articles 4 to 7.

8 Article 4 provides:

`Contracting entities may have their contract award procedures and practices which fall within the scope of Directive 90/531/EEC examined periodically with a view to obtaining an attestation that, at that time, those procedures and practices are in conformity with Community law concerning the award of contracts and the national rules implementing the law.'

9 Article 7 of the Directive provides that the provisions of Articles 4, 5 and 6 are to be considered as essential requirements for the development of European standards on attestation.

The conciliation procedure

10 Chapter 4 of the Directive (Articles 9 to 11) concerns the conciliation procedure.

11 Article 9 provides:

`1. Any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract falling within the scope of Directive 90/531/EEC and who, in relation to the procedure for the award of that contract, considers that he has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement of Community law in the field of procurement or national rules implementing that law may request the application of the conciliation procedure provided for in Articles 10 and 11.

2. The request referred to in paragraph 1 shall be addressed in writing to the Commission or to the national authorities listed in the Annex. These authorities shall forward requests to the Commission as quickly as possible.'

French law

12 Under cover of a letter of 14 January 1994, the French authorities sent the Commission a copy of Law No 93-1416 of 29 December 1993 on review procedures relating to the award of certain supply and works contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (JORF of 1 January 1994, p. 10).

13 Article 1 of that Law provides:

`Article 7 of Law No 92-1282 of 11 December 1992 on procedures relating to the award of certain contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors shall be followed by Articles 7-1 and 7-2 which provide as follows:

> "Art. 7-1. In the case of failure to comply with the requirements to give notice and put up for tender, which apply to the award of contracts defined in Article 1 and governed by private law, the court may not adjudicate before conclusion of the contract save in the circumstances set out hereunder.

On application by any person with an interest in concluding the contract and likely to be harmed by non-compliance, the President of the appropriate court, or his deputy, may order the defaulting party to comply with its obligations. He shall prescribe the period within which the defaulting party must comply. He may also order a periodic penalty payment to be made as from the expiry of that period. He may nonetheless take into account the probable consequences of such a measure for all interests likely to be harmed, as well as the public interest, and may decide not to order such a measure where its negative consequences could exceed its benefits.

The application may also be submitted by the Ministère Public [Public Prosecutor's Office] where the Commission of the European Communities has notified the State of the reasons for which it maintains that there has been a clear and manifest breach of the obligations referred to in the first paragraph.

In setting the amount of the penalty payment, regard shall be had to the conduct of the party against which the order has been made and to the difficulties which it has encountered in order to comply therewith.

The President of the appropriate court, or his deputy, shall rule on such applications by way of an interlocutory decision which is not open to appeal.

If, on settlement of the periodic penalty payment, the infringement in question has not been corrected, the court may order payment of a fixed sum. In that case, the court's decision shall be by way of an interlocutory decision open to appeal in accordance with the rules governing proceedings for interim relief.

The penalty payment, whether periodic or fixed, shall be wholly distinct from damages. Orders to make periodic or fixed penalty payments shall be cancelled, wholly or in part, if it is established that the default or delay in implementing the court's order has been caused, wholly or in part, by external factors.

Art. 7-2. In the case of failure to comply with the requirements to give notice and put up for tender, which apply to the award of contracts which are defined in Article 1 and governed by public law, any person with an interest in concluding the contract and who is likely to be harmed by non-compliance may apply to the court, before conclusion of the contract, for the measures provided for in Article L. 23 of the Code des Tribunaux Administratifs et des Cours Administratives d'Appel.'"

14 Article 4 of Law No 93-1416 states:

`Article L. 23 of the Code des Tribunaux Administratifs et des Cours Administratives d'Appel provides as follows:

> "Art. L. 23. The President of the administrative court, or his deputy, may adjudicate in the case of failure to comply with the requirements to give notice and put up for tender, which apply to the award of contracts falling within the scope of Article 7-2 of Law No 92-1282 of 11 December 1992 concerning the award of certain contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors. The court may adjudicate before conclusion of the contract only in the circumstances set out hereunder.

A right of action lies with those persons who have an interest in concluding the contract and are likely to be harmed by the infringement.

The President of the administrative court, or his deputy, may order the defaulting party to comply with its obligations. He shall prescribe the period within which the defaulting party must comply. He may also order a periodic penalty payment to be made as from the expiry of that period. He may nonetheless take into account the probable consequences of such a measure for all interests likely to be harmed, as well as the public interest, and may decide not to order such a measure where its negative consequences could exceed its benefits.

In setting the amount of the penalty payment, regard shall be had to the conduct of the party against which the order has been made and to the difficulties which it has encountered in order to comply therewith.

Save in the case of procurement contracts awarded by the State, an application may also be submitted by the State where the Commission of the European Communities has notified it of reasons for which it maintains that there has been a clear and manifest breach of the above obligations.

The President of the administrative court, or his deputy, shall rule on such applications by way of an interlocutory decision which is not open to appeal.

If, on settlement of the periodic penalty payment, the infringement identified has not been corrected, the court may order payment of a fixed sum. In that case, the court shall rule by way of an interlocutory decision open to appeal in accordance with the rules governing proceedings for interim relief.

The penalty payment, whether periodic or fixed, shall be wholly distinct from damages. Orders to make periodic or fixed penalty payments shall be cancelled, wholly or in part, if it is established that the default or the delay in implementing the court's order has been caused, wholly or in part, by external factors.'"

The pre-litigation procedure

15 By letter of formal notice of 8 September 1995, the Commission informed the French authorities that the transposition into national law of the penalty payment system provided for in the Directive was inadequate, and the provisions of the Directive concerning the attestation system and the conciliation procedure had not been transposed into national law. Pursuant to Article 169 of the Treaty, the Commission called on the French Government to submit its comments within two months and to adopt the necessary amendments.

16 The French authorities replied on 13 November 1995, giving further details concerning the system of penalty payments and commenting on the provisions of the Directive concerning the conciliation procedure, which were not transposed into national law by Law No 93-1416.

17 However, in its reasoned opinion of 8 November 1996, the Commission maintained the charges regarding the penalty payment system and the non-transposition into national law of Chapters 2 and 4 of the Directive.

18 In their reply of 20 February 1997, the French authorities stated that, in their view, the operative part of Law No 93-1416 satisfied the requirements of the Directive; that they proposed shortly to publish a circular to provide individuals with guidance on the operation of the conciliation procedure; and that the departments concerned were studying possible means of ensuring that the Law's requirements concerning attestation were properly implemented.

19 Considering that reply to be unsatisfactory, the Commission brought the present proceedings.

The penalty payment

20 The first point to note is that it is common ground that the Commission does not dispute the French Republic's decision to avail itself of the option provided for in Article 2(1)(c) of the Directive.

21 As regards that choice, however, the Commission maintains, first, that the transposition into national law of Article 2(5) of the Directive - under which the sum to be paid in accordance with Article 2(1)(c) must be set at a level high enough to dissuade the contracting entity from committing or persisting in an infringement - requires a provision relating specifically to the level of penalty payments, either stating that they must be such as to have the dissuasive effect required or limiting the discretion enjoyed by the courts in determining that level. According to the Commission, if no such provision is made, the competent court will be prey to uncertainty.

22 The French Government contends that the Directive is silent as to any obligation on Member States to determine the amount of the payment and, given the diversity of the circumstances which may arise, it is important to allow the courts to set the amount in keeping with their assessment of the facts in each case, since it must be sufficiently high to ensure that the Directive's objectives are attained.

23 Article 2(5) of the Directive expressly provides that the sum to be paid in accordance with Article 2(1)(c) must be set at a level high enough to dissuade the contracting entity from committing or persisting in an infringement, but does not indicate whether the amount is to be fixed by the legislature or by the competent court.

24 As the Advocate General pointed out in point 13 of his Opinion, a penalty payment, being a coercive measure primarily intended to ensure that the court's decisions are complied with, is a deterrent in itself. Consequently, a provision laying down that the sum to be paid in accordance with Article 2(1) of the Directive must be set at a level high enough to be dissuasive does not as such affect or reinforce the latter provision.

25 Furthermore, the French Government contends - and the Commission offers no effective rebuttal - that in French law the penalty payment is by nature a coercive measure and an effective means of preventing non-compliance with court orders.

26 The Commission's next ground of complaint concerns the fact that Articles 1 and 4 of Law No 93-1416 provide, not only that the fixed penalty payment can be ordered only once the periodic penalty payment order has been cancelled, but also that, in setting the level of the fixed payment, account must be taken of the conduct of the party against whom the order was made and the difficulties it may have encountered in complying therewith. According to the Commission, the discretion thus left to the courts is limited by considerations which have been so vaguely defined that the system will be unable to operate properly.

27 On that point, it should be noted first that Article 2(1)(c) of the Directive merely requires the Member States which have chosen that option to take measures so that, in cases where the infringement has not been corrected or prevented, an order may be made under appropriate procedures for payment of a specific sum. Article 2(5) provides that this must be set at a level sufficiently high to dissuade the contracting entity from committing or persisting in an infringement, but does not specify whether the penalty payment must be fixed or periodic. Contrary to the Commission's assertion, Article 2(5) does not provide that the courts may order only fixed penalty payments in order to prevent or correct an infringement.

28 Secondly, as regards the Commission's argument that Articles 1 and 4 of Law No 93-1416 create - wrongly, in its view - a link between the penalty payment and the conduct of the party ordered to pay, it follows by definition from the right to a fair trial that, in procedures of the type laid down in Article 2(1)(c) of the Directive, the courts cannot disregard the conduct of that party or the difficulties which it has encountered in order to comply.

29 Lastly, the Commission submits that in so far as Law No 93-1416 does not really guarantee that the penalty payment will have a deterrent effect, it has established a procedure which is specific and less coercive than that provided for under French civil law, thereby infringing Article 1(2) of the Directive. The Commission maintains that there is a difference between the provisions governing penalty payments set out in Law No 93-1416 and the provisions of Law No 91-650 of 9 July 1991 on the reform of civil enforcement procedures (JORF of 14 July 1991, p. 9228). That difference, according to the Commission, indicates an intention on the part of the French legislature to make the special rules laid down in Law No 93-1416 less coercive than the general rules laid down in Law No 91-650.

30 In this connection it need only be pointed out that - as the French Government has maintained, without any real rebuttal from the Commission - the two Laws in question have different objectives. Law No 91-650, which aims to give a creditor with a right to recovery the means to enforce that right against the debtor's assets - in the context of the settlement of debts which have been acknowledged to be quantified and recoverable - does not confer on the courts any power to intervene in a contracting entity's procurement procedures.

31 As the Advocate General pointed out in point 17 of his Opinion, although Law No 91-650 introduced a penalty payment procedure, it could not provide a basis for the transposition into national law of the Directive.

32 Consequently, the Commission's allegation that the French legislature sought to set up a special procedure distinct from the rules of civil law in force and not providing the guarantees required under the Directive is unfounded.

33 It follows from the above considerations that the Commission's allegation concerning the inadequate transposition into national law of Articles 2(1)(c) and 2(5) of the Directive cannot be upheld.

The attestation

34 The Commission maintains that the attestation system provided for in Chapter 2 of the Directive has not been transposed into French law.

35 The French Government contends that, although the Member States are obliged to transpose Article 3 of the Directive into national law, that obligation may be discharged either by appointing attestators directly, as provided for by Article 6(2) of the Directive, or by entrusting a specialised body to do so, as is indirectly permitted by Article 7 thereof. It claims that the first option does not necessarily entail the adoption of a transposition measure; it merely requires that the contracting entities be informed of the options open to them under Community law. The French Government adds that it accorded the Directive the necessary publicity.

36 On that point, it should be noted that Article 3 of the Directive expressly requires the Member States to give contracting entities the possibility of having recourse to an attestation system in accordance with Articles 4 to 7. As the Commission has rightly pointed out, the provision made by the Directive for the entities falling within its scope to have recourse to an attestation system in no way signifies that the transposition of that system into national law is optional.

37 So far as concerns the publicity given to the Directive by the French Government, it need merely be recalled that, according to established case-law, the provisions of directives must be implemented with unquestionable binding force, and the specificity, precision and clarity necessary to satisfy the requirements of legal certainty (Case C-59/89 Commission v Germany [1991] ECR I-2607, paragraph 24).

38 It must therefore be held that the attestation system provided for in Chapter 2 of the Directive has not been transposed into French law within the prescribed period.

The conciliation procedure

39 Lastly, the Commission claims that the French Republic has failed to transpose into national law Articles 9 to 11 of the Directive, concerning the conciliation procedure.

40 The French Government contends that the conciliation procedure provided for in Article 9(2) of the Directive - which does not require Member States to do more than forward immediately to the Commission any request for conciliation made by a person having an interest - does not necessarily require the adoption of an implementing law or regulation. Moreover, in order to facilitate implementation of the conciliation procedure, the French Government apprised interested undertakings of the Directive's provisions by publishing the text in the April-May issue of Marchés Publics, the review to which all the professionals concerned refer.

41 On that point, it is enough to note that Article 9(1) of the Directive provides that any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract falling within the scope of Council Directive 90/531/EEC of 17 September 1990 on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1990 L 297, p. 1) and who, in relation to the procedure for the award of that contract, considers that he has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement of Community law in the field of procurement or national rules impelementing that law may request the application of the conciliation procedure provided for in Articles 10 and 11 of the Directive. Transposition into national law is therefore necessary in order to ensure that persons having an interest know of the existence of such a procedure and may have recourse to it.

42 Accordingly, it must be concluded that Articles 9 to 11 of the Directive, concerning the conciliation procedure, have not been transposed into national law within the prescribed period.

43 In view of all the foregoing, it must be held that, by not adopting within the prescribed period all the measures necessary to comply with the provisions of Chapters 2 and 4 of Directive 92/13, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 13(1) thereof.

Judgment of the Court (Sixth Chamber)
of 24 September 1998
EvoBus Austria GmbH v Niederösterreichische Verkehrsorganisations GmbH (Növog).
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesvergabeamt - Austria.
Public procurement in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Effect of a directive which has not been transposed.
Case C-111/97.

Approximation of laws - Public procurement procedures in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Directive 92/13 - Provision requiring Member States to establish review bodies - Non-transposition - Consequences - Power for the review bodies having competence in relation to public works contracts and public supply contracts also to hear applications for review in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Not a necessary consequence - Obligation on the part of national courts to determine whether it is possible to bring review proceedings under domestic law

(Council Directive 92/13)

Article 1(1) to (3), Article 2(1), and (7) to (9) and the other provisions of Council Directive 92/13 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors cannot be interpreted as meaning that, where the directive has not been transposed by the end of the period prescribed for that purpose, the review bodies of the Member States having competence in relation to procedures for the award of public works contracts and public supply contracts may also hear applications for review relating to procedures for the award of public contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors. However, in order to observe the requirement that domestic law be interpreted in conformity with Directive 9213 and the requirement that the rights of individuals be protected effectively, the national court must determine whether the relevant provisions of its domestic law allow recognition of a right for individuals to bring review proceedings in relation to awards of public contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors. The national court must, in particular, verify whether that right to bring review proceedings can be exercised before the same bodies as those established to hear applications for review concerning the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts.

If the provisions of domestic law are incapable of being interpreted in conformity with Directive 92/13, the persons concerned may, in accordance with the appropriate procedures under domestic law, claim compensation for damage suffered as a result of the failure to transpose the directive within the prescribed time-limit.

Judgment

Costs

24 The costs incurred by the Austrian Government and by the Commission of the European Communities, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the proceedings pending before the national referring body, the decision on costs is a matter for that body.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Bundesvergabeamt by order of 25 November 1996, hereby rules:

Article 1(1) to (3), Article 2(1), (7) to (9) and the other provisions of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors cannot be interpreted as meaning that, where the directive has not been transposed by the end of the period prescribed for that purpose, the review bodies of the Member States having competence in relation to procedures for the award of public works contracts and public supply contracts may also hear applications for review relating to procedures for the award of public contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors. However, in order to observe the requirement that domestic law be interpreted in conformity with Directive 92/13 and the requirement that the rights of individuals be protected effectively, the national court must determine whether the relevant provisions of its domestic law allow recognition of a right for individuals to bring review proceedings in relation to awards of public contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors. The national court must, in particular, verify whether that right to bring review proceedings can be exercised before the same bodies as those established to hear applications for review concerning the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts. If the provisions of domestic law are incapable of being interpreted in conformity with Directive 92/13, the persons concerned may, in accordance with the appropriate procedures under domestic law, claim compensation for damage suffered as a result of the failure to transpose the directive within the prescribed time-limit.

1 By order of 25 November 1996, received at the Court on 17 March 1997, the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Procurement Office) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty three questions on the interpretation of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14).

2 Those questions were raised in proceedings between EvoBus Austria GmbH (hereinafter `EvoBus') and the Niederösterreichische Verkehrsorganisations GmbH (hereinafter `Növog') relating to the award of a public supply contract in respect of buses.

Legal background

3 Directive 92/13 requires the Member States to lay down appropriate procedures for reviewing the legality of the procurement process in the sectors specified in the directive not later than 1 January 1993.

4 Article 1 of the Directive is worded as follows:

`1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that decisions taken by contracting entities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, Article 2 (8), on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field [of] procurement or national rules implementing that law...

2. Member States shall ensure that there is no discrimination between undertakings likely to make a claim for injury in the context of a procedure for the award of a contract as a result of the distinction made by this Directive between national rules implementing Community law and other national rules.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting entity of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

5 Article 2 provides:

`1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers:

either

(a) to take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedure, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further injury to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting entity; and

(b) to set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the notice of contract, the periodic indicative notice, the notice on the existence of a system of qualification, the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure in question;

or

(c) to take, at the earliest opportunity, if possible by way of interlocutory procedures and if necessary by a final procedure on the substance, measures other than those provided for in points (a) and (b) with the aim of correcting any identified infringement and preventing injury to the interests concerned; in particular, making an order for the payment of a particular sum, in cases where the infringement has not been corrected or prevented.

Member States may take this choice either for all contracting entities or for categories of entities defined on the basis of objective criteria, in any event preserving the effectiveness of the measures laid down in order to prevent injury being caused to the interests concerned;

(d) and, in both the above cases, to award damages to persons injured by the infringement.

Where damages are claimed on the grounds that a decision has been taken unlawfully, Member States may, where their system of internal law so requires and provides bodies having the necessary powers for that purpose, provide that the contested decision must first be set aside or declared illegal.

7. Where a claim is made for damages representing the costs of preparing a bid or of participating in an award procedure, the person making the claim shall be required only to prove an infringement of Community law in the field of procurement or national rules implementing that law and that he would have had a real chance of winning the contract and that, as a consequence of that infringement, that chance was adversely affected.

8. The Member States shall ensure that decisions taken by bodies responsible for review procedures can be effectively enforced.

9. Where bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character, written reasons for their decisions shall always be given. Furthermore, in such a case, provision must be made to guarantee procedures whereby any allegedly illegal measures taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the Treaty and independent of both the contracting entity and the review body.

The members of the independent body referred to in the first paragraph shall be appointed and leave office under the same conditions as members of the judiciary as regards the authority responsible for their appointment, their period of office, and their removal. At least the President of this independent body shall have the same legal and professional qualifications as members of the judiciary. The independent body shall take its decisions following a procedure in which both sides are heard, and these decisions shall, by means determined by each Member State, be legally binding.'

6 In Austria, the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Federal Law on Public Procurement, BGBl. (Bundesgesetzblatt = Federal Law Gazette) No 463/1993, hereinafter `the BVergG'), which entered into force on 1 January 1994, transposed into national law:

- Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), and

- Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84).

7 Paragraph 7(2) of the BVergG provides:

`This Law only applies in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors to the extent provided for in the fourth chapter of the third part. The provisions of the fourth part do not apply to procurement in those sectors.'

8 The fourth part of the BVergG relating to legal protection (Rechtsschutz) provides for a procedure for review by the Bundesvergabeamt. Thus, Paragraph 91(3) provides that an unsuccessful tenderer may appeal against the award of a public sector contract to the Bundesvergabeamt within two weeks of being informed of the award.

9 In the fourth chapter, entitled `Specific provisions relating to awarding authorities in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors', Paragraph 67(1) of the BVergG provides: `Only the provisions of this chapter apply to public awarding authorities, to the extent that they carry out an activity within the meaning of subparagraph 2, and to private awarding bodies.'

10 Directive 92/13 was transposed into domestic law by the federal law amending the federal law on the award of public contracts and the law on the employment of foreigners (BGBl. No 776/1996). That law entered into force on 1 January 1997.

The main proceedings

11 On 18 July 1996, EvoBus requested the Bundesvergabeamt to set in motion a review procedure under Paragraph 91(3) of the BVergG. That request related to the tendering procedure initiated by Növog in respect of the delivery of 36 to 46 buses for the regular inter-urban express bus service.

12 In support of its application, EvoBus claimed that, in the course of that procedure, the successful tender had been subsequently amended and the repurchase price of the buses thus increased from 34% to 55%.

13 In the circumstances, the Bundesvergabeamt decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions for a preliminary ruling:

`(1) May an individual derive, from Article 1(1) to (3), Article 2(1), (7) to (9) or any other provisions of Directive 92/13/EEC, a specific right to have review proceedings conducted before authorities or courts or tribunals complying with Article 2(9) of Directive 92/13/EEC, which is so sufficiently precise and specific that, in the event of non-transposition by a Member State of the provisions of the directive in question, an individual may rely on that provision?

If Question 1 is answered in the affirmative:

(2) In conducting a review procedure, must a national court having the attributes of the Bundesvergabeamt disregard provisions of national law such as Paragraph 7(2) in conjunction with Paragraph 67(1) of the Bundesvergabegesetz which preclude it from conducting a review procedure even where such review procedure is intended by the national legislature solely to serve the purpose of transposing Directive 89/665/EEC?

If Question 1 is answered in the affirmative:

(3) Must the adjudicating court disregard those or any comparable procedural provisions of national law in such circumstances, if they impede or prevent a review procedure from being effectively conducted?'

The first and second questions

14 By the first and second questions, which it is appropriate to deal with together, the national court is essentially asking whether Articles 1(1) to (3) and 2(1) and (7) to (9) or any other provisions of Directive 92/13 must be interpreted as meaning that, where the directive has not been transposed by the end of the period prescribed for that purpose, the review bodies of the Member States having competence in relation to procedures for the award of public supply and public works contracts may also hear applications for review relating to procedures for the award of public contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors.

15 It must first be pointed out that in its judgment in Dorsch Consult (Case C-54/96 [1997] ECR I-4961, paragraph 40), the Court observed that it is for the legal system of each Member State to determine which court or tribunal has jurisdiction to hear disputes involving individual rights derived from Community law. However, it is the Member States' responsibility to ensure that those rights are effectively protected in each case. Subject to that reservation, it is not for the Court to involve itself in the resolution of questions of jurisdiction to which the classification of certain legal situations based on Community law may give rise in the national judicial system.

16 Next, it must be observed that, although Article 1 of Directive 92/13 requires the Member States to adopt the measures necessary to ensure effective review in the field of public service contracts in the water, energy transport and telecommunications sectors, it does not indicate which national bodies are to be the competent bodies for this purpose and, furthermore, does not require that those bodies be the same as those which the Member States have designated in the field of public works contracts and public supply contracts.

17 It is common ground that, at the time when EvoBus made its application for review before the Bundesvergabeamt, namely 18 July 1996, Directive 92/13 had not been transposed into Austrian law.

18 In regard to such circumstances, the Court pointed out at paragraph 43 of the Dorsch Consult judgment, cited above, that Member States' obligation arising from a directive to achieve the result envisaged by the directive and their duty under Article 5 of the EC Treaty to take all appropriate measures, whether general or particular, to ensure fulfilment of that obligation, is binding on all the authorities of Member States, including, for matters within their jurisdiction, the courts. It follows that, when applying national law, whether adopted before or after the directive, the national court called upon to interpret that law must do so, as far as possible, in the light of the wording and the purpose of the directive so as to achieve the result which it has in view and thereby comply with the third paragraph of Article 189 of the EC Treaty (see Case C-106/89 Marleasing [1990] ECR I-4135, paragraph 8; Case C-334/92 Wagner Miret [1993] ECR I-6911, paragraph 20; and Case C-91/92 Faccini Dori [1994] ECR I-3325, paragraph 26).

19 That obligation requires the national court to determine whether the relevant provisions of domestic law allow recognition of a right for individuals to review in relation to awards of public service contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors. In circumstances such as those in point in the main proceedings, the national court is required in particular to determine whether that right to review may be exercised before the same bodies as those established to hear applications for review concerning the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts (see the judgment in Dorsch Consult, cited above, end of paragraph 46).

20 In the main proceedings, it is, however, common ground that, pursuant to Paragraphs 7(2) and 67(1) of the BVergG, the awarding authorities under Paragraph 67(2) are expressly excluded from the system of review established by that Law pursuant to Directive 89/665.

21 In those circumstances it must be pointed out that, if the relevant provisions of domestic law cannot be interpreted in conformity with Directive 92/13, the persons concerned may, in accordance with the appropriate procedures under domestic law, claim compensation for the damage incurred owing to the failure to transpose the directive within the time prescribed (Dorsch Consult, cited above, paragraph 45; on the question of Member States' liability in the event of non-transposition of a directive see, in particular, Joined Cases C-6/90 and C-9/90 Francovich and Others [1991] ECR

I-5357 and Joined Cases C-178/94, C-179/94, C-188/94, C-189/94 and C-190/94 Dillenkofer and Others [1996] ECR I-4845).

22 Accordingly, the answer to be given to the first and second questions is that Article 1(1) to (3), Article 2(1), (7) to (9) and the other provisions of Directive 92/13 cannot be interpreted as meaning that, where the Directive has not been transposed by the end of the period prescribed for that purpose, the review bodies of the Member States having competence in relation to procedures for the award of public works contracts and public supply contracts may also hear applications for review relating to procedures for the award of public contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors. However, in order to observe the requirement that domestic law be interpreted in conformity with Directive 92/13 and the requirement that the rights of individuals be protected effectively, the national court must determine whether the relevant provisions of its domestic law allow recognition of a right for individuals to bring review proceedings in relation to awards of public contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors. The national court must, in particular, verify whether that right to bring review proceedings can be exercised before the same bodies as those established to hear applications for review concerning the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts. If the provisions of domestic law are incapable of being interpreted in conformity with Directive 92/13, the persons concerned may, in accordance with the appropriate procedures under domestic law, claim compensation for damage suffered as a result of the failure to transpose the directive within the prescribed time-limit.

The third question

23 In view of the answer given to the first and second questions, it is not necessary to answer the third question.

Judgment of the Court (Sixth Chamber)
of 4 February 1999
Josef Köllensperger GmbH & Co. KG and Atzwanger AG v Gemeindeverband Bezirkskrankenhaus Schwaz.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Tiroler Landesvergabeamt - Austria.
National 'court or tribunal' within the meaning of Article 177 of the EC Treaty - Procedures for the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts - Body responsible for review procedures.
Case C-103/97.

1 Preliminary rulings - Reference to the Court - National court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the Treaty - Definition - Body competent to hear appeals concerning the award of public contracts

(EC Treaty, Art. 177)

2 Approximation of laws - Review procedures concerning the award of public supply and public works contracts - Directive 89/665 - Bodies responsible for review procedures - Applicability of the guarantee provisions of the second subparagraph of Article 2(8) of the directive - Conditions - Bodies of a judicial character - Not applicable

1 In order to determine whether a body making a reference for a preliminary ruling is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the Treaty, which is a question governed by Community law alone, account must be taken of a number of factors, such as whether the body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, whether it applies rules of law and whether it is independent. Those criteria are satisfied by the Tiroler Landesvergabeamt (Public Procurement Office of the Land of Tyrol), established by the Law of the Land of Tyrol on the Award of Contracts to review procedures for the award of public contracts.

It is apparent from the provisions on its composition and functioning that that body complies with the first five criteria, and that the independence of its members is guaranteed by the application of the General Law on Administrative Procedure, which contains very specific provisions on the circumstances in which members of the body in question must withdraw, failure to comply with that obligation constituting a procedural defect which may be challenged by the parties concerned. In addition, under the Land law, the giving of instructions to members of the Tiroler Landesvergabeamt in the performance of their duties is prohibited.

2 The conditions set out in Article 2(8) of Council Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts do not apply to provisions such as those governing the composition and functioning of the Tiroler Landesvergabeamt, since the guarantee provisions in that article do not apply to a body responsible for review procedures which is of a judicial character.

It is only if Member States have chosen to give jurisdiction over such reviews to bodies which are not of a judicial character that their decisions must be capable of being the subject of judicial review or of review by another body which must satisfy the particular requirements of Article 2(8) of the directive, so as to guarantee an adequate review.

Judgment

1 By order of 7 November 1996, received at the Court on 10 March 1997, the Tiroler Landesvergabeamt (Procurement Office of the Land of Tyrol) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty two questions on the interpretation of Article 2(8) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33).

2 Those questions were raised in proceedings between Josef Köllensperger GmbH & Co. KG (`Köllensperger') and Atzwanger AG (`Atzwanger') and Gemeindeverband Bezirkskrankenhaus Schwaz (Association of Municipalities for the Schwaz District Hospital) concerning the award of a contract for works relating to an extension to the Schwaz District Hospital.

3 Directive 89/665 aims to ensure that the Community directives in the field of public procurement are applied as effectively and rapidly as possible. Since the existing remedies in that field at national and Community level generally did not appear adequate and the individual directives did not provide for any specific remedies, that directive required the Member States to bring into force before 21 December 1991 adequate review procedures in the case of unlawful procedures for the award of public contracts (Articles 1(1) and 5).

4 Under Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665:

`Where bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character, written reasons for their decisions shall always be given. Furthermore, in such a case, provision must be made to guarantee procedures whereby any allegedly illegal measure taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the EEC Treaty and independent of both the contracting authority and the review body.

The members of such an independent body shall be appointed and leave office under the same conditions as members of the judiciary as regards the authority responsible for their appointment, their period of office, and their removal. At least the President of this independent body shall have the same legal and professional qualifications as members of the judiciary. The independent body shall take its decisions following a procedure in which both sides are heard, and these decisions shall, by means determined by each Member State, be legally binding.'

5 In Austria, Directive 89/665 was transposed at federal level by the Bundesvergabegesetz (Federal Procurement Law, hereinafter `the BVergG'). That Law provides for two procedures, an arbitration procedure before the Bundesvergabekontrollkommission (Federal Procurement Review Commission) and a procedure before the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Procurement Office).

6 In the Land of Tyrol, the directive was transposed by the Tiroler Gesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Law of the Land of Tyrol on the Award of Contracts, hereinafter `the TVergG'). That Law gives the Tiroler Landesvergabeamt jurisdiction to review procedures for the award of public supply and public works contracts and concessions.

7 Paragraph 6 of the TVergG states:

`1. The Landesvergabeamt shall be established at the Amt der Tiroler Landesregierung (Office of the Government of the Land of Tyrol). It shall consist of:

(a) a person familiar with public procurement matters, as President,

(b) an official of the Amt der Tiroler Landesregierung who has a knowledge of law, as rapporteur,

(c) a member of the judiciary,

(d) a member each to be proposed by the Wirtschaftskammer Tirol (Chamber of Commerce of Tyrol), the Architekten- und Ingenieurkonsultentenkammer für Tirol und Vorarlberg (Chamber of Architects and Consulting Engineers for Tyrol and Vorarlberg), the Kammer für Arbeiter und Angestellte für Tirol (Chamber of Workers and Employees for Tyrol) and the Tiroler Gemeindeverband (Tyrol Association of Municipalities), familiar with public procurement matters.

3. The members of the Landesvergabeamt are to be appointed by the Land Government for a term of five years. They must be eligible for election to the Landtag. In the case of the members referred to in subparagraphs 1(d) and 2, the Land Government must invite the bodies entitled to propose members to make a proposal within a period to be reasonably determined. If a proposal is not made in due time, the appointment is to be made without a proposal. Before appointing the member referred to in subparagraph 1(c), the President of the Oberlandesgericht (Court of Appeal) Innsbruck is to be heard. For each member a substitute is to be appointed in the same manner. Each member shall be represented by his substitute member in the event of being unable to act.

4. A member or substitute member of the Landesvergabeamt shall leave office early if he resigns or the appointment is revoked, and a member referred to in subparagraph 1(b) and (c) also on leaving his office or profession. Resignation shall be declared to the Land Government in writing ... An appointment is to be revoked if the conditions for appointment are no longer met or if circumstances occur which prevent proper exercise of the office and are likely to do so for a long time. If a member or substitute member leaves office early, a new member or substitute member is to be appointed immediately for the remainder of his term of office.

6. The Landesvergabeamt shall have a quorum qualified to decide by vote if all the members have been duly summoned and the President, the rapporteur, the member from the judiciary and at least one other member are present. It shall take its decisions by a simple majority of votes. If the votes are equal, the President's vote shall be decisive. Abstentions shall not be permitted.

7. The members of the Landesvergabeamt shall not be bound by instructions in the exercise of their office. Their decisions shall not be subject to administrative annulment or amendment.

8. The secretarial work of the Landesvergabeamt shall be dealt with by the Amt der Tiroler Landesregierung.'

8 On 6 April 1995 Köllensperger and Atzwanger applied to the Tiroler Landesvergabeamt for review of the award of the contract for works on the extension to the Schwaz District Hospital, seeking its annulment on the ground of infringement of the TVergG.

9 By decision of 27 June 1995 the Landesvergabeamt dismissed the application on the ground that the contract had been awarded to the company which made the best offer. In the Landesvergabeamt's view, it followed that even if the TVergG had been complied with by the contracting authority, the contract would not in any event have been awarded to Köllensperger and Atzwanger.

10 Köllensperger and Atzwanger thereupon complained to the Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court).

11 On 12 June 1996 the Verfassungsgerichtshof set aside the Landesvergabeamt's decision on the ground that on the date when it gave its decision, 27 June 1995, its composition did not fulfil the conditions laid down by Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665.

12 According to the Verfassungsgerichtshof, the President of the Landesvergabeamt - an engineer - did not possess the legal and professional qualifications required for members of the judiciary, so that the decision of 27 June 1995 had infringed the applicants' constitutionally guaranteed right to a hearing before the judge specified by the law.

13 On 16 July 1996 the President of the Landesvergabeamt who had held office at the time of the contested decision resigned his office with effect from 12 July, and a new president was appointed by the Tyrol Land Government.

14 When the proceedings were resumed before the Landesvergabeamt, Gemeindeverband Bezirkskrankenhaus Schwaz submitted that the composition of that body still did not comply with Directive 89/665.

15 Since the Landesvergabeamt had doubts with respect to the members referred to in Paragraph 6(1)(d) of the TVergG, it decided to refer the following two questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

`1. Is Article 2 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 to be interpreted as meaning that the (Tiroler) Landesvergabeamt (Procurement Office of the Land of Tyrol), established by the (Tiroler) Landesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Law of the Land of Tyrol on the Award of Contracts) of 6 July 1994, Landesgesetzblatt für Tirol (Official Journal of the Land of Tyrol) LGBl. No 87/1994, is a review body within the meaning of Article 2(8) of the Directive?

2. Does the Gesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Law on the Award of Contracts) of 6 July 1994, LGBl. No 87/1994, adequately provide for the transposition into national law of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989, on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, in relation to the review procedures mentioned in Article 1 thereof?'

Admissibility of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

16 It must first be considered whether the Tiroler Landesvergabeamt is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the Treaty, and consequently whether the questions are admissible.

17 It is settled case-law that, in order to determine whether a body making a reference for a preliminary ruling is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the Treaty, which is a question governed by Community law alone, the Court takes account of a number of factors, such as whether the body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, whether it applies rules of law and whether it is independent (see, as the most recent authority, Case C-54/96 Dorsch Consult v Bundesbaugesellschaft Berlin [1997] ECR I-4961, paragraph 23, and Case 61/65 Vaassen (neé Göbbels) [1966] ECR 261; Case 14/86 Pretore di Salo v Persons unknown [1987] ECR 2545, paragraph 7; Case 109/88 Danfoss [1989] ECR 3199, paragraphs 7 and 8; Case C-393/92 Almelo and Others [1994] ECR I-1477; and Case C-111/94 Job Centre [1995] ECR I-3361, paragraph 9).

18 The first five criteria are not in doubt. It is apparent from the provisions of Paragraph 6 of the TVergG on its composition and functioning that the Tiroler Landesvergabeamt complies with them.

19 It is not clear, on the other hand, that the condition of independence is satisfied.

20 As the Advocate General observes in point 25 of his Opinion, the TVergG does not contain any specific provisions on challenges to, or withdrawals by, members of the Landesvergabeamt.

21 Moreover, the passage in Paragraph 6(4) of the TVergG concerning removal of members `if the conditions for appointment are no longer met or if circumstances occur which prevent proper exercise of the office and are likely to do so for a long time' appears prima facie too vague to guarantee against undue intervention or pressure on the part of the executive.

22 On this point, it must be observed, first, that Paragraph 5(2) of the TVergG expressly states that, unless otherwise provided, the Allgemeines Verwaltungsverfahrensgesetz (General Law on Administrative Procedure) 1991 is to apply to review procedures concerning awards of contracts. That Law contains very specific provisions on the circumstances in which members of the body in question must withdraw. Moreover, according to the case-law of the Verfassungsgerichtshof, failure to comply with that obligation constitutes a procedural defect which may be challenged by the parties concerned.

23 Second, Paragraph 6(7) of the TVergG must be considered. By expressly prohibiting the giving of instructions to members of the Tiroler Landesvergabeamt in the performance of their duties, that provision repeats the terms of Article 20 of the Austrian Federal Constitutional Law on the independence of members of collegiate bodies with a judicial element, which include the Landesvergabeamt.

24 Those provisions, taken together, cannot therefore support any conclusion that Paragraph 6(4) of the TVergG does not guarantee the independence of the members of the Landesvergabeamt. It is not for the Court to infer that such a provision is applied in a manner contrary to the Austrian constitution and the principles of a State governed by the rule of law.

25 It follows that the Tiroler Landesvergabeamt must be regarded as a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the Treaty and that its questions are admissible.

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

26 By its questions the Tiroler Landesvergabeamt essentially asks whether provisions such as those which govern its composition and functioning satisfy the conditions set out in Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665.

27 That provision concerns the bodies responsible for review procedures relating to decisions taken by the competent bodies for the award of public contracts within the scope of Directive 89/665.

28 Under the first subparagraph of Article 2(8), the Member States may choose between two solutions in establishing arrangements for the review of public contracts.

29 The first solution is to give jurisdiction over reviews to bodies of a judicial character. The second solution is to give that jurisdiction, at a first stage, to bodies which are not of such a character. In that case, the decisions of those bodies must be capable of being the subject of judicial review or of review by another body which must satisfy the particular requirements of the second subparagraph of Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665, so as to guarantee an adequate review.

30 It follows that if, as in a case such as that in the main proceedings, the body responsible for review procedures is of a judicial character, those guarantee provisions do not apply.

31 Accordingly, the answer to the Landesvergabeamt's questions must be that the conditions set out in Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665 do not apply to provisions such as those governing its composition and functioning.

Costs

32 The costs incurred by the Austrian Government and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the proceedings pending before the national tribunal, the decision on costs is a matter for that tribunal.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Tiroler Landesvergabeamt by order of 7 November 1996, hereby rules:

The conditions set out in Article 2(8) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts do not apply to provisions such as those governing the composition and functioning of the Tiroler Landesvergabeamt.

Judgment of the Court (Sixth Chamber)
of 24 September 1998
Walter Tögel v Niederösterreichische Gebietskrankenkasse.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesvergabeamt - Austria.
Public service contracts - Direct effect of a directive not transposed into national law - Classification of services for the transport of patients.
Case C-76/97.

1 Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - Provision requiring Member States to establish review bodies - Failure to transpose - Consequences - Whether review bodies with jurisdiction to review procedures for the award of public supply and works contracts may hear appeals concerning procedures for the award of public service contracts - Not a necessary consequence - Obligation on the part of national courts to determine whether it is possible to appeal under domestic law

(Council Directive 89/665, Arts 1(1) and (2) and 2(1) and Council Directive 92/50, Art. 41)

2 Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - Scope - Services for the transport of injured and sick persons with a nurse in attendance - Included - Classification as Land transport services in Annex I A, Category No 2, and as Health and social services in Annex I B, Category No 25

(Council Directive 92/50, Annexes I A and I B)

3 Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - Direct effect

(Council Directive 92/50)

4 Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - Effects of the directive on existing legal situations concluded before expiry of the period for transposition - None

1 Neither Article 1(1) and (2), Article 2(1) nor any other provision of Directive 89/665, on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, may be interpreted as meaning that, if Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts has not been transposed by the end of the period laid down for that purpose, the review bodies in the Member States with jurisdiction to review procedures for the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts, established under Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665, may also hear appeals concerning procedures for the award of public service contracts.

However, in order to observe the requirement that domestic law must be interpreted in conformity with Directive 92/50 and the requirement that the rights of individuals must be protected effectively, the national court must determine whether the relevant provisions of its domestic law allow recognition of a right for individuals to bring an appeal in relation to awards of public service contracts. In that respect, the national court must determine in particular whether such a right of appeal may be exercised before the same bodies as those established to hear appeals concerning the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts.

2 Services consisting in the transport of injured and sick persons with a nurse in attendance come within both Annex I A, Category No 2, and Annex I B, Category No 25, to Directive 92/50, so that a contract for those services is covered by Article 10 of Directive 92/50.

Both Annex I A and Annex I B refer to the CPC nomenclature (common product classification) of the United Nations and those annexes clearly distinguish between transport and medical services delivered in the ambulance. The seventh recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50 clearly indicates that the reference in those Annexes to that nomenclature is binding. CPC reference number 93, appearing in Category No 25 (Health and social services) in Annex I B, clearly indicates that this category relates solely to the medical aspects of health services governed by a public contract, to the exclusion of the transport aspects, which come under Category No 2 (Land transport services), which have the CPC reference number 712.

3 The provisions of Titles I and II of Directive 92/50 may be relied on directly by individuals before national courts. As regards the provisions of Titles III to VI, these may also be relied on by an individual before a national court if it is clear from an individual examination of their wording that they are unconditional and sufficiently clear and precise.

The detailed provisions of Titles III to VI of the directive, on the choice of award procedures and the rules applicable to competitions, common technical and advertising rules, and participation and selection and award criteria, are, subject to exceptions and qualifications which are apparent from their terms, unconditional and sufficiently clear and precise to be relied on by service providers before national courts.

4 Community law does not require an awarding authority in a Member State to intervene, at the request of an individual, in existing legal situations concluded for an indefinite period or for several years where those situations came into being before expiry of the period for transposition of Directive 92/50.

Judgment

Costs

55 The costs incurred by the French and Austrian Governments and the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the proceedings pending before the referring body, the decision on costs is a matter for that body.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Bundesvergabeamt by order of 5 December 1996, hereby rules:

1. Neither Article 1(1) and (2), Article 2(1) nor any other provision of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989, on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, may be interpreted as meaning that, if Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts has not been transposed by the end of the period laid down for that purpose, the review bodies in the Member States with jurisdiction to review procedures for the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts, established under Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665, may also hear appeals concerning procedures for the award of public service contracts. However, in order to observe the requirement that domestic law must be interpreted in conformity with Directive 92/50 and the requirement that the rights of individuals must be protected effectively, the national court must determine whether the relevant provisions of its domestic law allow recognition of a right for individuals to bring an appeal in relation to awards of public service contracts. In circumstances such as those arising in the present case, the national court must determine in particular whether such a right of appeal may be exercised before the same bodies as those established to hear appeals concerning the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts.

2. Services consisting in the transport of injured and sick persons with a nurse in attendance come within both Annex I A, Category No 2, and Annex I B, Category No 25, to Directive 92/50, so that a contract for those services is covered by Article 10 of Directive 92/50.

3. The provisions of Titles I and II of Directive 92/50 may be relied on directly by individuals before national courts. As regards the provisions of Titles III to VI, these may also be relied on by an individual before a national court if it is clear from an individual examination of their wording that they are unconditional and sufficiently clear and precise.

4. Community law does not require an awarding authority in a Member State to intervene, at the request of an individual, in existing legal situations concluded for an indefinite period or for several years where those situations came into being before expiry of the period for transposition of Directive 92/50.

1 By order of 5 December 1996, received at the Court on 20 February 1997, the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Procurement Office) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty four questions on the interpretation of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), and of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

2 Those questions have been raised in proceedings between Mr Tögel and the Niederösterreichische Gebietskrankenkasse (Sickness Insurance Fund for Lower Austria) concerning the procedure for the award of public contracts for the transport of injured and sick persons.

Legal framework

3 Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Article 41 of Directive 92/50, provides:

`1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract-award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles, and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.'

4 Article 1(2) and (3) of Directive 89/665 is worded as follows:

`2. Member States shall ensure that there is no discrimination between undertakings claiming injury in the context of a procedure for the award of a contract as a result of the distinction made by this Directive between national rules implementing Community law and other national rules.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

5 Article 2 of Directive 89/665 provides:

`1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract-award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

7. The Member States shall ensure that decisions taken by bodies responsible for review procedures can be effectively enforced.

8. Where bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character, written reasons for their decisions shall always be given. Furthermore in such a case, provision must be made to guarantee procedures whereby any allegedly illegal measure taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the EEC Treaty and independent of both the contracting authority and the review body.

The members of such an independent body shall be appointed and leave office under the same conditions as members of the judiciary as regards the authority responsible for their appointment, their period of office, and their removal. At least the President of this independent body shall have the same legal and professional qualifications as members of the judiciary. The independent body shall take its decisions following a procedure in which both sides are heard, and these decisions shall, by means determined by each Member State, be legally binding.'

6 Moreover, Article 8 of Directive 92/50 provides for the observance of the provisions of Titles III to VI in the case of contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A thereto, whilst Article 9 provides that contracts which have as their object the services set out in Annex I B are to be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16 thereof.

7 Article 10 of Directive 92/50 provides:

`Contracts which have as their object services listed in both Annex I A and I B shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI where the value of the services listed in Annex I A is greater than the value of the services listed in Annex I B. Where this is not the case, they shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.'

8 Annex I A (Services within the meaning of Article 8) of Directive 92/50 is worded as follows:

11 Article 1 of Council Regulation (EEC) No 3696/93 of 29 October 1993 on the statistical classification of products by activity (CPA) in the European Economic Community (OJ 1993 L 342, p. 1) provides:

`1. The purpose of this Regulation is to establish a classification of products by activity within the Community in order to ensure comparability between national and Community classifications and hence national and Community statistics.

2. ...

3. This Regulation shall apply only to the use of this classification for statistical purposes.'

12 According to Point 1 of Commission Recommendation 96/527/EC of 30 July 1996 on the use of the Common Procurement Vocabulary (CPV) for describing the subject-matter of public contracts (OJ 1996 L 222, p. 10), the contracting entities covered by the Community directives dealing with the award of public contracts are recommended to use the terms and codes of the Common Procurement Vocabulary (CPV) published in Supplement 169 to the Official Journal of the European Communities for 1996.

13 Under Austrian law, Directive 89/665 was transposed into national law by the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Federal Law on the Award of Public Contracts, BGBl. 462/1993), which entered into force on 1 January 1994.

14 By virtue of Article 168 of the Act concerning the conditions of accession of the Kingdom of Norway, the Republic of Austria, the Republic of Finland and the Kingdom of Sweden and the adjustments to the Treaties on which the European Union is founded, of 24 June 1994 (OJ 1994 C 241, p. 21), Directive 92/50 was to be transposed into Austrian law by 1 January 1995. It is not disputed that transposition into national law occurred only on 1 January 1997, that is to say after the order for reference was made.

The main proceedings

15 Under national legislation the Austrian social security institutions are required to reimburse to insured persons the costs of transport incurred by them or by members of their families when they have had to call on medical assistance. Reimbursement includes the cost of transport within the country for transport to the nearest hospital for treatment or from the hospital to the patient's home and also, for outpatient treatment, to the nearest approved doctor or the nearest approved institution, reimbursement being made at the rates laid down by agreement.

16 As regards the transport of patients in the broad sense, a distinction is made between transport by ambulance with a duty doctor, the transport of injured and sick persons with a nurse and unaccompanied transport by ambulance without medical attendance.

17 The relationship between the social security institutions and the transporting undertakings are governed by private-law contracts which must afford insured persons and members of their families insured under them adequate access to the benefits provided for by the law and under agreements.

18 Thus, in 1984, the Niederösterreichische Gebietskrankenkasse entered into framework agreements with the Austrian Red Cross, regional section for Lower Austria, and the Austrian Federation of Samaritan Workers, for the provision of patient transport of all three types. Tariffs under these framework agreements are adjusted annually. Pursuant to these contracts, persons engaged in the transport of patients are not only required to undertake all transport on the ground, that is say transport accompanied by a duty doctor, the transport of injured and sick persons as well as unaccompanied transport by ambulance but must also coordinate and use dual-mode or multi-mode transport.

19 On 1 December 1992, the Bezirkshauptmannschaft Wien Umgebung (Chief Local Government Office for Vienna and District) granted Mr Tögel a licence to carry on a hire-car business, limited to the transport of injured and sick persons. The Niederösterreichische Gebietskrankenkasse repeatedly turned down the applicant's request for a direct-charging contract for that type of transport on the ground that that type of transport was adequately provided for under the two existing agreements. On 22 August 1996 Mr Tögel therefore applied to the Bundesvergabeamt for a declaration that the contract at issue concerned a service covered by Annex I A to Directive 92/50 and that, consequently, a public tender procedure should be carried out.

20 In those circumstances, the Bundesvergabeamt stayed the proceedings and referred the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

`1. May an individual derive, from Article 1(1) and (2), Article 2(1) or any other provisions of Council Directive 89/665/EEC, on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, a specific right to have review proceedings conducted before authorities or courts which comply with the provisions of Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665/EEC, which right is so sufficiently precise and specific that, in the event of non-transposition of the directive in question by the Member State, an individual may successfully assert that legal right against that Member State in legal proceedings?

2. In conducting a review procedure on the basis of an individual's right, founded on Article 41 of Directive 92/50/EEC in conjunction with Directive 89/665/EEC, to the conduct of a review procedure, must a national court having the attributes of the Bundesvergabeamt disregard provisions of national law such as Paragraph 91(2) and (3) of the Bundesvergabegesetz, which confer on the Bundesvergabeamt powers of review only in the case of infringements of the Bundesvergabegesetz and regulations adopted thereunder, on the ground that those provisions preclude a review procedure from being conducted under the Bundesvergabegesetz for awards of contracts for services, and must such a national court conduct a review procedure in accordance with the fourth part of the Bundesvergabegesetz?

3(a). Are the services mentioned in the facts of the case (with reference to Article 10 of Directive 92/50/EEC) to be classified as services coming under Annex I A, Category No 2 (Land transport services) and contracts for such services thus to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III and IV of the Directive, or are they to be classified as services coming under Annex I B to Directive 92/50/EEC (Health services) with the result that contracts for such services are to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Articles 13 and 14, or do those services fall entirely outside the sphere of application of Directive 92/50/EEC?

3(b). Do the provisions of Articles 1 to 7 of Directive 92/50/EEC satisfy the preconditions laid down in paragraph 12 of the judgment in Case 41/74 Van Duyn v Home Office on the direct applicability of a Community directive, with the result that services coming under Annex 1 B to the Directive are to be awarded under the procedure therein mentioned or are the relevant provisions of the Directive for the services mentioned in Annex 1 A capable of fulfilling the preconditions laid down in the abovementioned case?

4. Is there under Article 5 or other provisions of the EC Treaty, or under Directive 92/50/EEC, an obligation on the State to intervene in existing legal situations concluded for an indefinite period or for several years but which were not entered into in accordance with the abovementioned directive?'

The first and second questions

21 By its first and second questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the national court is asking essentially whether Article 1(1) and (2), Article 2(1), or any other provisions of Directive 89/665, must be interpreted as meaning that, if Directive 92/50 has not been transposed by the end of the period laid down for that purpose, the review bodies in the Member States with jurisdiction in regard to procedures for the award of public supply and public works contracts established under Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665 also have jurisdiction in regard to appeals in connection with procedures for the award of contracts for services.

22 In that connection, it should be recalled first of all that in paragraph 40 of its judgment in Case C-54/96 Dorsch Consult Ingenieurgesellschaft v Bundesbaugesellschaft Berlin [1997] ECR I-4961 the Court held that it was for the legal system of each Member State to determine which court or tribunal has jurisdiction to hear disputes involving individual rights derived from Community law but that in each case the Member States must ensure that those rights are effectively protected. Subject to that proviso, it is not for the Court to involve itself in the resolution of questions of jurisdiction which may arise within the internal judicial system from the classification of certain legal situations based on Community law.

23 At paragraph 41 of that judgment the Court went on to declare that, although Article 41 of Directive 92/50 requires the Member States to adopt the measures necessary to ensure effective review in the field of public service contracts, it does not indicate which national bodies are to be the competent bodies for this purpose or whether these bodies are to be the same as those which the Member States have designated in the field of public works contracts and public supply contracts.

24 However, it is undisputed that on 22 August 1996, the date on which Mr Tögel brought his application before the Bundesvergabeamt, Directive 92/50 had not been transposed into Austrian law. In fact, the Law giving effect to the directive entered into force only on 1 January 1997.

25 In view of those circumstances, the Court reiterated, at paragraph 43 of its judgment in Dorsch Consult, that the Member States' obligation arising from a directive to achieve the result envisaged by the directive and their duty under Article 5 of the EC Treaty to take all appropriate measures, whether general or particular, to ensure fulfilment of that obligation is binding on all the authorities of Member States, including, for matters within their jurisdiction, the courts. It followed that, when applying national law, whether adopted before or after the directive, the national court having to interpret that law must do so, as far as possible, in the light of the wording and purpose of the directive so as to achieve the result it has in view and thereby comply with the third paragraph of Article 189 of the EC Treaty (see the judgments in Case C-106/89 Marleasing [1990] ECR I-4135, paragraph 8; Case C-334/92 Wagner Miret [1993] ECR I-6911, paragraph 20; and in Case C-91/92 Faccini Dori [1994] ECR I-3325, paragraph 26).

26 At paragraph 44, the Court went on to point out that the question of the designation of a body competent to hear appeals in relation to public service contracts is relevant even where Directive 92/50 has not been transposed. Where a Member State has failed to take the implementing measures required or has adopted measures which do not conform to a directive, the Court has recognised, subject to certain conditions, the right of individuals to rely in law on a directive as against a defaulting Member State. Although this minimum guarantee cannot justify a Member State in absolving itself from taking in due time implementing measures sufficient to meet the purpose of each directive (see, in particular, the judgment in Case C-253/95 Commission v Germany [1996] ECR I-2423, paragraph 13), it may nevertheless have the effect of enabling individuals to rely, as against a Member State, on the substantive provisions of Directive 92/50.

27 Finally, at paragraph 45 of the judgment in Dorsch Consult, the Court reiterated that, if the relevant domestic provisions cannot be interpreted in conformity with Directive 92/50, the persons concerned, using the appropriate domestic law procedures, may claim compensation for the damage incurred owing to the failure to transpose the directive within the time prescribed (see, in particular, the judgment in Joined Cases C-178/94, C-179/94, C-188/94, C-189/94 and C-190/94 Dillenkofer and Others [1996] ECR I-4845).

28 The reply to be given to the first and second questions must therefore be that neither Article 1(1) and (2), Article 2(1) nor any other provision of Directive 89/665 may be interpreted as meaning that, if Directive 92/50 has not been transposed by the end of the period laid down for that purpose, the review bodies in the Member States with jurisdiction to review procedures for the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts, established under Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665, may also hear appeals concerning procedures for the award of public service contracts. However, in order to observe the requirement that domestic law must be interpreted in conformity with Directive 92/50 and the requirement that the rights of individuals must be protected effectively, the national court must determine whether the relevant provisions of its domestic law allow recognition of a right for individuals to bring an appeal in relation to awards of public service contracts. In circumstances such as those arising in the present case, the national court must determine in particular whether such a right of appeal may be exercised before the same bodies as those established to hear appeals concerning the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts.

The third question

The first part of the third question

29 By the first part of the third question the national court asks whether services consisting in the transport of injured and sick persons with a nurse in attendance, which are the services at issue in the main proceedings, come within Annex I A or Annex I B to Directive 92/50, to which Article 10 of that directive refers.

30 As regards the designation of the services governed by contracts covered by Directive 92/50, Articles 8 and 9 thereof refer to respectively Annex I A and Annex I B to that directive. In that connection, both Annex I A and Annex I B to Directive 92/50 refer to the CPC nomenclature.

31 According to Article 10 of Directive 92/50, contracts which have as their object services listed in both Annex I A and I B are to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI where the value of the services listed in Annex I A is greater than the value of the services listed in Annex I B. Where this is not the case, they are to be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.

32 According to the Niederösterreichische Gebietskrankenkasse, the services in question constitute services listed in Annex I B, Category No 25 (Health and social services). In that connection, it refers in particular to the CPV, Heading 85, which lists `ambulance services' amongst the `health and social services' to which it refers.

33 The Austrian Government takes the view that neither the CPC nomenclature nor the CPA nor the CPV enable the services to be classified in any of the categories mentioned in Annex I A or Annex I B.

34 On the other hand, in the Commission's view, it follows from the CPC nomenclature, the CPV and the CPA that the services in question must be classified as services mentioned in both Annex I A, Category No 2 (Land transport services) and Annex I B, Category No 25 (Health and social services).

35 In that connection, it should be observed that, according to Article 1(3) of Regulation No 3696/93, the classification provided for in the CPA must be used for statistical purposes and that, according to point 1 of Recommendation 96/527, the CPV is intended only to be used for the drawing up of notices and other communications published in connection with public tendering procedures.

36 It follows that the designations of services listed in Category No 2 of Annex I A and Category No 25 of Annex I B cannot be interpreted in the light of the CPA or the CPV.

37 On the other hand, as Advocate General Fennelly observes at paragraph 32 of his Opinion, the seventh recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50 clearly indicates that the reference in Annexes I A and I B to the CPC nomenclature is binding.

38 It must be observed next that, as Advocate General Fennelly explains more fully at paragraphs 36 to 48 of his Opinion, the global approach advocated by France at the hearing, which consists in allocating each service in its entirety to either Annex I A or Annex I B depending on the presence or absence of medical assistance, does not reflect the clear distinction in the Annexes between transport and medical services delivered in the ambulance.

39 Consequently, CPC reference number 93 appearing in Category No 25 (Health and social services) in Annex I B, clearly indicates that this category relates solely to the medical aspects of health services governed by a public contract such as the one at issue in the main proceedings, to the exclusion of the transport aspects, which come under Category No 2 (Land transport services), which have the CPC reference number 712.

40 The reply to be given to the first part of the third question must therefore be that services consisting in the transport of injured and sick persons with a nurse in attendance come within both Annex I A, Category No 2, and Annex I B, Category No 25, to Directive 92/50, so that a contract for those services is covered by Article 10 of Directive 92/50.

The second part of the third question

41 By the second part of the third question the national court is essentially seeking to ascertain whether the provisions of Titles I to VI of Directive 92/50 may be relied on by individuals before national courts.

42 It must be recalled here that the Court has consistently held (see the judgment in Case 31/87 Beentjes v Netherlands State [1988] ECR 4635, paragraph 40) that whenever the provisions of a directive appear, as far as their subject-matter is concerned, to be unconditional and sufficiently precise, those provisions may be relied on by individuals against the State where that State fails to implement the directive in national law within the prescribed period or where it fails to implement it correctly.

43 The question is, therefore, whether the relevant provisions of Directive 92/50 appear to be, as regards their content, unconditional and sufficiently precise to be relied on by an individual as against the State.

44 It should be observed first of all here that the provisions of Title I, concerning the matters and persons covered by the directive, and of Title II, on the procedures applicable to contracts for the services listed in Annexes I A and I B, are unconditional and sufficiently precise to be relied on before a national court.

45 Under Articles 8 and 10, which form part of Title II, the awarding authorities are required, in unconditional and precise terms, to award public contracts for services in accordance with national procedures in conformity with the provisions of Titles III to VI in the case of services coming wholly or mainly under Annex I A and with the provisions of Articles 14 and 16 in the case of services coming wholly or mainly under Annex I B. Article 14 appears under Title IV whilst Article 16 appears under Title V.

46 As Advocate General Fennelly observes at paragraph 57 of his Opinion, the detailed provisions of Titles III to VI of the directive, on the choice of award procedures and the rules applicable to competitions, common technical and advertising rules, and participation and selection and award criteria, are, subject to exceptions and qualifications which are apparent from their terms, unconditional and sufficiently clear and precise to be relied on by service providers before national courts.

47 The reply to be given to the second part of the third question must therefore be that the provisions of Titles I and II of Directive 92/50 may be relied on directly by individuals before national courts. As regards the provisions of Titles III to VI, these may also be relied on by an individual before a national court if it is clear from an individual examination of their wording that they are unconditional and sufficiently clear and precise.

The fourth question

48 By its fourth question the national court asks whether a Member State is required, under Article 5 or any other provision of the EC Treaty or under Directive 92/50/EEC, to intervene in existing legal situations concluded for an indefinite period or for several years in a manner not in conformity with the abovementioned directive.

49 Since the directive had not yet been transposed into Austrian law at the time when the order for reference was made, that question cannot, in the present case, concern any obligation on the Austrian legislature to intervene in this area.

50 The fourth question must therefore be construed as seeking to ascertain whether Community law requires an awarding authority of a Member State to intervene at the request of an individual in existing legal situations concluded for an indefinite period or for several years in a manner not in conformity with Directive 92/50.

51 It should be recalled here that it is settled case-law that unconditional and sufficiently precise provisions of a directive may be relied on before a national court by the persons concerned against any public authority required to apply laws, regulations or administrative provisions of national law which are not in conformity with that directive, even if that directive has not yet been transposed into the domestic legal order of the State in question.

52 It follows that an individual may rely before a national court on the provisions of Directive 92/50 if they are unconditional and sufficiently precise, when an awarding body of a Member State has awarded a public service contract in breach of those provisions, provided, however, that the award was made after expiry of the transposition period provided for by that directive.

53 In this instance, the file shows that the framework contracts at issue in the main proceedings were entered into in 1984, that is to say even before adoption of the directive.

54 The reply to be given to the fourth question must therefore be that Community law does not require an awarding authority in a Member State to intervene, at the request of an individual, in existing legal situations concluded for an indefinite period or for several years where those situations came into being before expiry of the period for transposition of Directive 92/50.

In Case C-43/97,

Commission of the European Communities, represented by Paolo Stancanelli, of its Legal Service, acting as Agent, with an address for service in Luxembourg at the office of Carlos Gomez de la Cruz, of its Legal Service, Wagner Centre, Kirchberg,

v

APPLICATION for a declaration that, by failing to adopt within the prescribed period the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and by failing to notify those provisions, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the first subparagraph of Article 34(1) of that directive, composed of: G.F. Mancini, President of the Chamber, J.L. Murray, G. Hirsch, H. Ragnemalm (Rapporteur) and R. Schintgen, Judges, Advocate General: C.O. Lenz,

THE COURT

(Sixth Chamber),

Registrar: R. Grass,

having regard to the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 12 June 1997,

gives the following

Judgment

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 3 February 1997, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EC Treaty, seeking a declaration that, by failing to adopt within the prescribed period the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and by failing to notify those provisions, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the first subparagraph of Article 34(1) of that directive.

2 Under the first subparagraph of Article 34(1) of Directive 93/36, Member States were to bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with the directive before 14 June 1994 and immediately to inform the Commission thereof.

3 On 9 August 1994, not having been informed of the measures taken to transpose Directive 93/36 and not having any other information from which it was possible to conclude that the Italian Republic had fulfilled its obligations, the Commission gave the Italian Government notice to submit its observations within two months.

4 On 25 October 1995, not having received any reply, the Commission sent the Italian Government a reasoned opinion, requesting it to adopt the necessary measures within a period of two months from that notification.

5 The Commission did not receive any reply from the Italian authorities and therefore brought the present action.

6 The Italian Republic does not deny that it has failed to fulfil its obligations as set out in the application and merely states that it will shortly adopt measures to remedy the situation. It states that under the draft 1995/1996 Community Law, currently before the Italian Parliament, responsibility is to be delegated to the Government for transposing Directive 93/96 into national law by means of a legislative decree which will be adopted as soon as the 1995/1996 Community Law enters into force.

7 Since Directive 93/96 has not been transposed within the period laid down therein, the Italian Republic must be found to have failed to fulfil its obligations as contended by the Commission.

8 That conclusion cannot be called into question by the Italian Government's argument that the failure with which it is charged is of minor importance inasmuch as the basic provisions concerning procedures for the award of public supply contracts have long formed part of the national legal system as a result of the implementation of Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1), as amended on several occasions.

9 The Italian Government does not deny that Directive 93/96 imposes new obligations on the Member States, which they were to implement by 14 June 1994 at the latest.

10 Contrary to what the Commission claims, however, the Court does not have to take account of the failure to notify the laws, regulations or administrative provisions necessary to comply with the directive, since the Italian Republic did not adopt those provisions within the period prescribed in the reasoned opinion (see Case C-147/94 Commission v Spain [1995] ECR I-1015, paragraph 7).

11 It must therefore be found that, by failing to adopt within the prescribed period the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with Directive 93/36, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the first subparagraph of Article 34(1) of that directive.

Costs

12 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the Italian Republic has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

hereby:

1. Declares that, by failing to adopt within the prescribed period the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the first subparagraph of Article 34(1) of that directive;

2. Dismisses the remainder of the application;

3. Orders the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

composed of: J.C. Moitinho de Almeida, acting for the President of the Chamber, J.-P. Puissochet (Rapporteur) and L. Sevon, Judges,

- the Commission of the European Communities, by Hendrik van Leer, Legal Adviser, acting as Agent,

having regard to the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 23 October 1997,

gives the following

1 By judgment of 18 December 1996, received at the Court on 13 January 1997, the Raad van State (Council of State), Belgium, referred to the Court under Article 177 of the EC Treaty a question concerning the interpretation of the judgment given by the Court in Case C-389/92 Ballast Nedam Group v Belgian State [1994] ECR I-1289 (hereinafter `BNG I').

2 The question has been raised in proceedings between Ballast Nedam Groep, a company incorporated under Netherlands law (hereinafter `BNG'), and the Belgian State concerning non-renewal of the registration of that undertaking. Those proceedings have already given rise to the submission of a preliminary question on the interpretation of Council Directive 71/304/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the abolition of restrictions on freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts and on the award of public works contracts to contractors acting through agencies or branches (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 678) and Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682).

3 The question submitted by the Raad van State in its first reference for a preliminary ruling was as follows:

`Do Council Directive 71/304/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the abolition of restrictions on freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts and on the award of public works contracts to contractors acting through agencies or branches and Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, in particular Articles 1, 6, 21, 23 and 26, permit, in the event of the Belgian rules on the registration of contractors being applied to the dominant legal person within a "group" governed by Netherlands law, in connection with the assessment of the criteria relating inter alia to technical competence which a contractor must satisfy, account to be taken only of that dominant legal person as a legal entity and not of the "companies within the group" each of which, having its own legal personality, belongs to that "group"?'

4 In its judgment in BNG I, the Court replied to that question that Directives 71/304 and 71/305 had to be interpreted as permitting, for the purposes of the assessment of the criteria to be satisfied by a contractor when an application for registration by the dominant legal person of a group was being examined, account to be taken of companies belonging to that group, provided that the legal person in question established that it actually had available the resources of those companies which were necessary for carrying out the works. It was for the national court to assess whether such proof had been produced in the main proceedings.

5 Since the parties to the proceedings cannot agree on the meaning of that ruling, the Raad van State has decided to refer to the Court a further question for a preliminary ruling, worded as follows:

`Should the word "permit" in the phrase "permit... account to be taken ..." appearing in the operative part of the judgment given on 14 April 1994 in Case C-389/92 be understood as meaning "require"?

If the word "permit" in the abovementioned phrase is not to be understood as being equivalent to the word "require", does that mean that the Member State in question enjoys a discretionary power in the matter, even where the condition laid down by the Court is satisfied?

In which cases and on what grounds is it then appropriate to take account of the companies belonging to a dominant legal person of a group?'

6 By this question the national court is asking in effect whether it follows from the judgment in BNG I that Directives 71/304 and 71/305 are to be interpreted as meaning that the authority competent to decide on an application for registration submitted by a dominant legal person of a group is under an obligation, where that person is established as having actual power of disposition over the resources of the companies belonging to the group necessary for performing works contracts, to take account of those companies.

7 BNG and the Commission consider that that question calls for an affirmative reply. In their view, where proof is produced that the dominant legal person of a group has actual power of disposition over the resources of the companies belonging to that group, the competent authority must necessarily take account of those companies.

8 For its part, the Belgian Government contends, with reference to the judgment of the Court in Joined Cases 27/86, 28/86 and 29/86 CEI and Others [1987] ECR 3347, that the Member States enjoy a margin of discretion in assessing the classification criteria to be satisfied by a contractor upon examination of an application for registration lodged by a dominant legal person of a group, even if the condition laid down by the Court is satisfied.

9 The reference to that case is not relevant. Whilst, as the Court pointed out at paragraph 22 of the judgment in CEI and Others, the criteria for classification in the various official lists of recognized contractors provided for in Article 28 of Directive 71/305 are not harmonized, that is not true of some of the qualitative selection criteria laid down in Articles 23 to 28, in particular references attesting to contractors' financial and economic standing and their technical knowledge and ability provided for in Articles 25 and 26. It is clear from the judgment in BNG I that the condition laid down by the Court therein specifically relates to references for demonstrating the technical, financial and economic standing of a company seeking registration on an official list of approved contractors.

10 In that judgment, the Court stated first that a holding company which does not itself execute works may not, because its subsidiaries which do carry out works are separate legal persons, be precluded on that ground from participation in public works contract procedures (paragraph 15).

11 It went on to state that it is for the contract-awarding authorities, as Article 20 of Directive 71/305 specifies, to check the suitability of contractors in accordance with the criteria referred to in Articles 25 to 28 of that directive (paragraph 16).

12 Finally, the Court explained that when a company produces references relating to its subsidiaries in order to prove its economic and financial standing and technical knowledge, it must establish that, whatever the nature of its legal link with those subsidiaries, it actually has available to it the resources of the latter which are necessary for carrying out the contracts. It is for the national court to assess, in the light of the factual and legal circumstances before it, whether such proof has been produced in the main proceedings (paragraph 17).

13 It follows from all the foregoing considerations that a holding company which does not itself carry out works may not be precluded from participating in procedures for the award of public works contracts, and, therefore, from registration on an official list of approved contractors if it shows that it actually has available to it the resources of its subsidiaries necessary to carry out the contracts, unless the references of those subsidiaries do not themselves satisfy the qualitative selection criteria mentioned in Articles 23 to 28 of Directive 71/305.

14 The reply to the question submitted must therefore be that Directives 71/304 and 71/305 are to be interpreted as meaning that the authority competent to decide on an application for registration submitted by a dominant legal person of a group is under an obligation, where it is established that that person actually has available to it the resources of the companies belonging to the group that are necessary to carry out the contracts, to take account of the references of those companies in assessing the suitability of the legal person concerned, in accordance with the criteria mentioned in Articles 23 to 28 of Directive 71/305.

Costs

15 The costs incurred by the Belgian Government and by the Commission of the European Communities, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the proceedings pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

(Third Chamber),

Order of the Court of First Instance (First Chamber)
First Instance (First Chamber)First Instance (First Chamber)1997.
Société anonyme de traverses en béton armé (Sateba) v Commission of the European Communities.
Public procurement - Complaint - Proceedings for a declaration of failure to fulfil obligations - Decision to close the file - Action for annulment - Inadmissibility.
Case T-83/97.

Approximation of laws - Public procurement procedures in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Directive 93/38 - Complaint by a tenderer alleging that the conduct of the contracting entity infringes the directive and restricts competition and constitutes an obstacle to the free movement of goods - Examination by the Commission under the procedure applicable to failure by a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Permissibility - Failure to initiate the procedure under Regulation No 17 - Abuse of procedure - None - Distinct and independent character of the two procedures

(EC Treaty, Art. 169; Council Regulation No 17; Council Directive 93/38)

It is proper for the Commission to examine under the procedure established by Article 169 of the Treaty a complaint in which a tenderer for a procurement contract alleges that the conduct of the contracting entity constitutes an infringement of Directive 93/38 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, and serves to restrict competition and constitutes an obstacle to the free movement of goods. Recourse to that procedure is no less justified by the fact that the complaint related exclusively to conduct by the contracting entity and did not comprise any criticism of the relevant national legislation or the conduct of the government concerned since, in the application of the Community rules on public procurement, the acts of contracting entities must be imputed to the Member States to which those entities belong.

In so far as such a complaint does not contain any specific indication which would enable it to be characterized as a request submitted under Article 3(2)(b) of Regulation No 17, the Commission does not, therefore, commit any abuse of procedure by not examining it in the light of competition law.

Furthermore, and even supposing that the complainant did properly request the Commission to initiate the procedure under Regulation No 17, that procedure remains independent of the procedure for a finding that the conduct of a Member State infringes Community law and for termination of that conduct. The two procedures serve different purposes and are governed by different rules. The fact that the Commission decides not to initiate a procedure for a declaration of failure to fulfil obligations or decides to discontinue such a procedure, cannot therefore imply that it is prevented from finding that the conduct of the contracting entity at issue constitutes an infringement of the competition rules and ordering termination of the infringement. It follows that a decision to close the file, adopted in the context of a procedure for a declaration of failure to fulfil obligations, relates exclusively to that procedure and does not constitute an implied rejection of a complaint submitted under Regulation No 17, meaning that it does not affect the complainant's legal position in the context of a possible procedure in application of the competition rules.

of 10 November 1998
Gemeente Arnhem and Gemeente Rheden v BFI Holding BV.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Gerechtshof Arnhem - Netherlands.
Public service contracts - Meaning of contracting authority - Body governed by public law.
Case C-360/96.

1 Approximation of laws - Procedures for concluding public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - Contracting authorities - Body governed by public law - Needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character - Meaning - Existence of private undertakings capable of satisfying such needs - Not relevant

(Council Directive 92/50, Art. 1(b), second subpara.)

2 Approximation of laws - Procedures for concluding public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - Exception provided for by Article 6 of the directive - Condition - Observance of Treaty provisions

(EC Treaty, Art. 85 et seq.; Council Directive 92/50, Art. 6)

3 Approximation of laws - Procedures for concluding public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - Contracting authorities - Body governed by public law - Status not dependent on the relative importance of activities designed to satisfy needs in the general interest and of the way they are carried out

(Council Directive 92/50, Art. 1(b), second subpara.)

4 Approximation of laws - Procedures for concluding public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - Contracting authorities - Body governed by public law - Needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character - Legal form of provisions defining such needs - Not relevant

5 The second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, which provides that `[b]ody governed by public law means any body... established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character', must be interpreted as meaning that the Community legislature drew a distinction between needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character and needs in the general interest having an industrial or commercial character.

The term `needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character' does not exclude needs which are or can be satisfied by private undertakings as well. The fact that there is competition is not sufficient to exclude the possibility that a body financed or controlled by the State, territorial authorities or other bodies governed by public law may choose to be guided by other than economic considerations.

However, the existence of competition is not entirely irrelevant to the question whether a need in the general interest is other than industrial or commercial. The latter needs are as a general rule met otherwise than by the availability of goods or services in the marketplace. In general, needs of that kind are those for which, for reasons associated with the general interest, the State itself chooses to provide or over which it wishes to retain a decisive influence.

The removal and treatment of household refuse may be regarded as constituting a need in the general interest. Since the degree of satisfaction of that need considered necessary for reasons of public health and environmental protection cannot be achieved by using disposal services wholly or partly available to private individuals from private economic operators, that activity is one of those which the State may require to be carried out by public authorities or over which it wishes to retain a decisive influence.

6 Recourse to Article 6 of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, which provides that `[t]his directive shall not apply to public service contracts awarded to an entity which is itself a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b)', is subject to the condition that the laws, regulations or administrative provisions on which the exclusive right of a body governed by public law is based must be compatible with the Treaty. The protection of competitors of bodies governed by public law is thus assured by Article 85 et seq. of the Treaty.

7 The status of a body governed by public law referred to in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of public service contracts is not dependent on the relative importance, within its business as a whole, of the meeting of needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character. It is likewise immaterial that commercial activities may be carried out by a separate legal person forming part of the same group or concern as it.

8 The second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 relating to coordination of public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that the existence or absence of needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character must be appraised objectively, the legal forms of the provisions in which those needs are mentioned being immaterial in that respect.

Costs

64 The costs incurred by the Netherlands, Danish, German, Spanish, French, Austrian, Finnish, Swedish and United Kingdom Governments and by the Commission of the European Communities, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the proceedings pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Gerechtshof, Arnhem, by judgment of 29 October 1996, hereby rules:

1. The second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that the legislature drew a distinction between needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character and needs in the general interest having an industrial or commercial character.

2. The term `needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character' does not exclude needs which are or can be satisfied by private undertakings as well.

3. The status of a body governed by public law is not dependent on the relative importance, within its business as a whole, of the meeting of needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character. It is likewise immaterial that commercial activities may be carried out by a separate legal person forming part of the same group or concern as it.

4. The second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as meaning that the existence or absence of needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character must be appraised objectively, the legal form of the provisions in which those needs are mentioned being immaterial in that respect.

1 By judgment of 29 October 1996, received at the Court Registry on 5 November 1996, the Gerechtshof (Regional Court of Appeal), Arnhem, referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty seven questions on the interpretation of Articles 1(b) and 6 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

2 Those questions were raised in proceedings brought by Gemeente Arnhem and Gemeente Rheden (Municipalities of Arnhem and Rheden, hereinafter `the municipalities') against BFI Holding BV (hereinafter `BFI'), which claims that the award of a contract for refuse collection should be subject to the procedure laid down in the abovementioned directive.

The applicable Community legislation

3 Article 1 of Directive 92/50 provides:

`For the purposes of this Directive:

...

(b) contracting authorities shall mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

Body governed by public law means any body:

- established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

- having legal personality and

- financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law.

The lists of bodies or of categories of such bodies governed by public law which fulfil the criteria referred to in the second subparagraph of this point are set out in Annex I to Directive 71/305/EEC. These lists shall be as exhaustive as possible and may be reviewed in accordance with the procedure laid down in Article 30b of that Directive;

4 Article 6 of Directive 92/50 provides:

`This Directive shall not apply to public service contracts awarded to an entity which is itself a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) on the basis of an exclusive right which it enjoys pursuant to a published law, regulation or administrative provision which is compatible with the Treaty.'

The Netherlands provisions

5 Directive 92/50 was transposed into Netherlands law by a framework law of 31 March 1993 (Stbl. 12) relating to the Community rules for the award of public contracts for the supply of goods, the execution of works and the supply of services, combined with Article 13 of the order of 4 June 1993 (Stbl. 305), as amended by the order of 30 May 1994 (Stbl. 379).

6 Articles 10.10 and 10.11 of the Wet Milieubeheer (Law on the Environment) require municipalities to ensure that, at least weekly, household refuse is collected from all properties in their districts where waste may regularly accumulate. The municipalities must designate an authority to undertake responsibility for such collection.

7 Under Article 2 of the Afvalstoffenverordening (Regulation on Waste) of Gemeente Rheden, as amended on 21 December 1993, the collecting authority is the Dienst Openbare Werken en Woningzaken, Afdeling Wegen en Reiniging, or such independent service as may replace it. Article 2 of the Regulation on Waste of Gemeente Arnhem, as amended on 4 July 1994, designates as the collecting authority the Dienst Milieu en Openbare Werken. It also states that `[a]s from 1 July 1994, that service shall be provided by the company ARA, an independent municipal cleaning service'.

The dispute in the main proceedings

8 In 1993 the municipalities planned merging the municipal refuse collection services and entrusting them to a new legal entity. By decisions of 6 and 28 June 1994 the Municipalities of Arnhem and Rheden decided to establish ARA, a public limited company, and to entrust to it a series of tasks defined by law in the field of waste collection and, in the case of Gemeente Arnhem, cleaning of the municipal road network.

9 ARA was incorporated on 1 July 1994. Article 2 of its statutes provides:

`1. The objects of the company shall be:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

(a) the performance of all economic operations aimed at collecting (or having collected and, so far as possible, recycling or having recycled), in an efficient, effective and environmentally responsible manner, waste such as household refuse, industrial waste and separable parts thereof to be specified, together with activities relating to the cleaning of highways, the elimination of vermin and disinfection;

(b) the (joint) setting up, cooperation with, participation in, the (joint) provision of management and supervision for, as well as the taking over and financing of, other undertakings whose activities have any connection with the objects set out under (a);

(c) the performance of all economic operations which are connected with the foregoing or may be conducive to the operations, activities and action defined above (provided that needs in the general interest are thereby met).

2. The company shall carry out such activities in a socially acceptable manner.'

10 Under Article 6 of its statutes, the shareholders of ARA may only be legal persons governed by public law or companies at least 90% of whose shares are held by such entities and, in addition, the company itself. Under Article 13(2) of the statutes, the municipalities are to appoint at least five of the minimum seven and maximum nine of the members of the supervisory board.

11 The framework agreements which the municipalities concluded with ARA specify, in particular in their preambles, that the municipalities wish to have the tasks in question carried out exclusively by ARA, and accordingly they grant it concessions for that purpose.

12 As far as ARA's remuneration is concerned, Article 8 of the framework agreement between Gemeente Rheden and ARA provides, in particular:

`8.1 Rheden shall pay ARA remuneration for services rendered, at a rate to be specified.

8.2 The remuneration for services referred to in the preceding paragraph shall be defined in a financial clause to be added to the specifications and quality standards for each operation contained in the partial contracts.

8.3 The actual remuneration for services rendered will be fixed:

(a) either on the basis of the unit prices agreed beforehand for each operation, result or batch of work;

(b) or on the basis of a fixed price agreed beforehand for a particular task;

(c) or on the basis of an invoice for costs actually incurred.

13 Article 9 of the framework agreement contains the following provisions:

`9.1 Advances on the above remuneration shall be paid on dates to be specified or on the basis of groups of operations, results or batches of work. Such advances shall be deducted from the final payments.

9.2 If ARA invoices and/or carries out operations for which payment is collected on behalf of Gemeente Rheden or receives any other payment from third parties in the name of Gemeente Rheden, that income must be transferred to the municipality in accordance with procedures to be agreed upon. As regards risks associated with the payment of such amounts, more detailed rules shall also be adopted.'

14 The service agreement for the collection of household refuse concluded between Gemeente Rheden and ARA provides, in Article 7, that the remuneration to be paid to ARA by the municipality for the collection and transport of waste and the method of calculation of such remuneration are to be set out in the implementation plan.

15 The same procedures for remuneration were agreed between Gemeente Arnhem and ARA.

16 Although initially ARA carried out all collection of household refuse, street cleaning and collection of industrial waste, those activities were subsequently split between it and Aracom, a public limited company. Whilst ARA continues to collect household refuse, Aracom was entrusted with the collection of industrial waste. Also, a holding company, ARA Holding NV, was incorporated and holds all the capital of those two companies.

17 BFI is a private undertaking whose business includes the collection and treatment of household and industrial waste.

18 On 2 November 1994 BFI brought proceedings before the Arrondissementsrechtbank (District Court), Arnhem, for a declaration that Directive 92/50 applied to the award of the contract granted to ARA, with the result that the municipalities should observe the tendering procedure laid down by that directive. By judgment of 18 May 1995 the Arrondissementsrechtbank, Arnhem, found in favour of BFI. It considered that the task in question had not been entrusted to an authority on the basis of an exclusive right which it enjoyed pursuant to a published law, regulation or administrative provision, so that the exception provided for in Article 6 of the directive was inapplicable.

19 The municipalities appealed against that decision to the Gerechtshof, Arnhem.

20 In its interlocutory judgment of 25 June 1996 the Gerechtshof, Arnhem, rejected the Arrondissementsrechtbank's interpretation to the effect that the contract had not been awarded to an authority on the basis of an exclusive right which it enjoyed pursuant to a published law, regulation or administrative provision within the meaning of Article 6 of Directive 92/50.

21 It took the view that, under the Wet Milieubeheer, the municipalities are under an obligation to ensure that household refuse is collected. In order to discharge that obligation, they appointed ARA, by orders of 6 and 28 June 1994, as sole operator responsible for waste collection. They also expressly amended their regulations on waste, which specifically grant ARA an exclusive right, since they prohibit any other body from collecting household refuse without the prior authority of the municipal council.

22 The Gerechtshof, Arnhem, therefore considered that ARA fell within the exception provided for in Article 6 of Directive 92/50 in so far as it was to be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50.

23 In those circumstances the national court stayed proceedings pending a preliminary ruling from the Court of Justice on the following questions:

`1. For the purposes of interpreting Article 6 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (the Directive), is the first indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive, which specifies that body governed by public law means any body ... established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, to be interpreted as distinguishing

(i) between needs in the general interest and needs having an industrial or commercial character, or

(ii) between needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character and needs in the general interest having an industrial or commercial character?

2. If the answer to the first question is that the distinction to be drawn is that set out in (i),

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

(a) is the phrase "needs in the general interest" to be understood as meaning that there can be no question of meeting needs in the general interest where private undertakings meet such needs?

and

(b) if so, is the phrase "needs having an industrial or commercial character" to be understood as meaning that needs having an industrial or commercial character are met whenever private undertakings meet such needs?

3. If the answer to the first question is that the distinction to be drawn is that set out in (ii), is the difference between "needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character" and "needs in the general interest having an industrial or commercial character" to be determined according to whether (competing) private undertakings meet such needs or not?

4. Is the requirement that the body must be established "for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character" to be interpreted as meaning that such a "specific purpose" can exist only where the body was established exclusively to meet such needs?

5. If not, must a body meet needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, almost exclusively, substantially, preponderantly or to some other degree in order to be or remain able to meet the requirement that it must be established for the specific purpose of meeting such needs?

6. Does it make any difference to the answers to Questions 1 to 5 whether the needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, which the body was set up to meet, derive from legislation in the formal sense, from administrative provisions, from acts of the administration or otherwise?

7. Does it make any difference to the answer to Question 4 if responsibility for the commercial activities is entrusted to a separate legal entity forming part of a single group or concern within which activities meeting needs in the general interest are also carried out?'

24 It must be noted at the outset that, in its written observations, the French Government submits that contracts between the municipalities and ARA may be regarded as public service concessions which, as such, fall outside the scope of Directive 92/50. It maintains that, for there to be a public service concession as defined in Community law, the contracting authority must be remunerated either on the basis of its right to operate the service or on the basis of that right and a price linked to it.

25 Without its being necessary to interpret the term public service concession, which is not at issue in the questions from the national court, it need merely be pointed out that it is clear from the information given by the municipalities in response to a question put to them by the Court, and in particular from Articles 8 and 9 of the framework agreement concluded between Gemeente Rheden and ARA and from Article 7 of the service agreement for the collection of household refuse concluded between the same parties, that the remuneration paid to ARA comprises only a price and not the right to operate the service.

26 The French Government also maintains that ARA should be classified as an association formed by one or more authorities within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50. Such an association is, in its view, a contracting authority ipso jure, there being no need to consider whether it is a body governed by public law.

27 It must be observed, as stressed by the Advocate General in points 40 and 41 of his Opinion, that an entity cannot fall simultaneously within both the categories described in Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 and that the term association has only a residual function, a fact confirmed by its position in the wording of that provision. It is therefore necessary to consider whether a company such as ARA, although set up on the initiative of two municipalities, can be characterised as a body governed by public law.

28 In that connection, it is clear from the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 that a body governed by public law means a body established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, which has legal personality and is closely dependent on the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law (see Case C-44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others v Strohal Rotationsdruck [1998] ECR I-73, paragraph 20).

29 As the Court held in paragraph 21 of Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria, cited above, the three conditions set out in that provision are cumulative.

30 The national court considers that the second and third conditions are fulfilled. Its questions thus relate only to the first condition.

The first question

31 By its first question, the national court seeks clarification as to the relationship between the terms `needs in the general interest' and `not having an industrial or commercial character'. It asks in particular whether the latter expression is intended to limit the term `needs in the general interest' to those which are not of an industrial or commercial character or, on the contrary, whether it means that all needs in the general interest are not industrial or commercial in character.

32 In that regard, it is clear from the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, in its different language versions, that the absence of an industrial or commercial character is a criterion intended to clarify the meaning of the term `needs in the general interest' as used in that provision.

33 In paragraphs 22 to 24 of Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria, cited above, the Court adopted the same interpretation in relation to the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), a provision which is, essentially, the same as the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50.

34 Moreover, the only interpretation capable of guaranteeing the effectiveness of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 is that it creates, within the category of needs in the general interest, a sub-category of needs which are not of an industrial or commercial character.

35 If the Community legislature had considered that all needs in the general interest were not of an industrial or commercial character it would not have said so because, in that context, the second component of the definition would serve no purpose.

36 The answer to the first question must therefore be that the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as meaning that the legislature drew a distinction between needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character and needs in the general interest having an industrial or commercial character.

The second question

37 The answer given to the first question makes it unnecessary to answer the second.

The third question

38 By its third question, the national court asks essentially whether the term `needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character' excludes needs which are also met by private undertakings.

39 According to BFI, the possibility of a body governed by public law must be ruled out where private undertakings may carry out the same activities, such activities therefore being capable of being performed on a competitive basis. In this case, more than half the municipalities in the Netherlands entrust the collection of waste to private economic operators. There is thus a commercial market and the entities active in it do not constitute bodies governed by public law within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50.

40 It must first be emphasised here that the first indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 refers only to the needs which the entity must meet and does not say whether or not those needs may also be met by private undertakings.

41 Next, it must be borne in mind that the purpose of coordinating at Community level the procedures for the award of public service contracts is to eliminate barriers to the freedom to provide services and therefore to protect the interests of economic operators established in a Member State who wish to offer goods or services to contracting authorities in another Member State.

42 Consequently, the objective of Directive 92/50 is to avoid the risk of preference being given to national tenderers or applicants whenever a contract is awarded by the contracting authorities (see, to that effect, Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria, cited above, paragraph 33).

43 The fact that there is competition is not sufficient to exclude the possibility that a body financed or controlled by the State, territorial authorities or other bodies governed by public law may choose to be guided by other than economic considerations. Thus, for example, such a body might consider it appropriate to incur financial losses in order to follow a particular purchasing policy of the body upon which it is closely dependent.

44 Moreover, since it is hard to imagine any activities that could not in any circumstances be carried on by private undertakings, the requirement that there should be no private undertakings capable of meeting the needs for which the body in question was set up would be liable to render meaningless the term `body governed by public law' used in Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50.

45 It is of no avail to object that, by recourse to Article 6 of Directive 92/50, the contracting authorities could evade competition from private undertakings which considered themselves capable of meeting the same needs in the general interest as the entity concerned. The protection of competitors of bodies governed by public law is already assured by Article 85 et seq. of the EC Treaty since the application of Article 6 of Directive 92/50 is subject to the condition that the laws, regulations or administrative provisions on which the body's exclusive right is based must be compatible with the Treaty.

46 It was for that reason that, in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria, cited above, paragraph 24, the Court held, without considering whether private undertakings might meet the same needs, that a State printer met needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character.

47 It follows that Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 may apply to a particular body even if private undertakings meet, or may meet, the same needs as it and that the absence of competition is not a condition necessarily to be taken into account in defining a body governed by public law.

48 It must be emphasised, however, that the existence of competition is not entirely irrelevant to the question whether a need in the general interest is other than industrial or commercial.

49 The existence of significant competition, and in particular the fact that the entity concerned is faced with competition in the marketplace, may be indicative of the absence of a need in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character.

50 Conversely, the latter needs are as a general rule met otherwise than by the availability of goods or services in the marketplace, as evidenced by the list of bodies governed by public law contained in Annex I to Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682), as amended by Directive 93/37, to which Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 refers. Although not exhaustive, that list is intended to be as complete as possible.

51 An analysis of that list shows that in general the needs in question are ones which, for reasons associated with the general interest, the State itself chooses to provide or over which it wishes to retain a decisive influence.

52 In this case it is undeniable that the removal and treatment of household refuse may be regarded as constituting a need in the general interest. Since the degree of satisfaction of that need considered necessary for reasons of public health and environmental protection cannot be achieved by using disposal services wholly or partly available to private individuals from private economic operators, that activity is one of those which the State may require to be carried out by public authorities or over which it wishes to retain a decisive influence.

53 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the third question must be that the term `needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character' does not exclude needs which are or can be satisfied by private undertakings as well.

The fourth, fifth and seventh questions

54 By its fourth, fifth and seventh questions, the national court asks whether the condition that a body must have been set up for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest means that the activity of that body must, to a considerable extent, be concerned with meeting such needs.

55 It must be borne in mind here that, in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria, cited above, paragraph 25, the Court held that it was immaterial whether, in addition to its duty to meet needs in the general interest, an entity was free to carry out other activities. The fact that meeting needs in the general interest constitutes only a relatively small proportion of the activities actually pursued by that entity is also irrelevant, provided that it continues to attend to the needs which it is specifically required to meet.

56 Since the status of a body governed by public law is not dependent on the relative importance, within its business as a whole, of the meeting of needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character, it is a fortiori immaterial that commercial activities may be carried out by a separate legal person forming part of the same group or concern as it.

57 Conversely, the fact that one of the undertakings of a group or concern is a body governed by public law is not sufficient for all of them to be regarded as contracting authorities (see, to that effect, Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria, cited above, paragraph 39).

58 The answer to the fourth, fifth and seventh questions must therefore be that the status of a body governed by public law is not dependent on the relative importance, within its business as a whole, of the meeting of needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character. It is likewise immaterial that commercial activities may be carried out by a separate legal person forming part of the same group or concern as it.

The sixth question

59 By its sixth question, the national court, finally, wishes to ascertain what inferences are to be drawn from the fact that the provisions setting up the entity in question and specifying the needs which it must meet are in the nature of laws, regulations or administrative or other provisions.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

60 It must be stated here that, whilst the requirement that the exclusive right be based on published laws, regulations or administrative provisions must be met for Article 6 of Directive 92/50 to be applicable, it forms no part of the definition of a body governed by public law.

61 The wording of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 makes no reference to the legal basis of the activities of the entity concerned.

62 Furthermore, it must be borne in mind that, with a view to giving full effect to the principle of freedom of movement, the term `contracting authority' must be interpreted in functional terms (see, to that effect, Case 31/87 Beentjes v Netherlands State [1988] ECR 4635, paragraph 11). In view of that need, no distinction should be drawn by reference to the legal form of the provisions setting up the entity and specifying the needs which it is to meet.

63 The answer to the sixth question must therefore be that the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as meaning that the existence or absence of needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character must be appraised objectively, the legal form of the provisions in which those needs are mentioned being immaterial in that respect.

of 17 December 1998
Commission of the European Communities v Ireland.
Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Public supply contracts - Review procedures - Definition of contracting authority.
Case C-353/96.

1 Approximation of laws - Review procedures in respect of the award of public supply and public works contracts - Directive 89/665 - Procedure enabling the Commission to take preventive action where there has been a clear and manifest infringement of Community provisions in the field of public procurement - Procedure unrelated to the infringement procedure under Article 169 of the Treaty

(EC Treaty, Art. 169; Council Directive 89/665)

2 Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public supply contracts - Directive 77/62 - Contracting authorities - Bodies corresponding to legal persons governed by public law - Annex I to Directive 77/62 - Public authorities whose public supply contracts are subject to control by the State

(Council Directive 77/62, Art. 1(b) and Annex I, Point VI)

1 The procedure under Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, which enables the Commission, where it considers that a clear and manifest infringement of Community provisions in the field of public procurement has been committed, to take up the matter with a Member State, constitutes a preventive measure which can neither derogate from nor replace the powers of the Commission under Article 169 of the Treaty, so that the way in which the Commission has used that procedure is irrelevant in assessing the admissibility of an action for failure to fulfil obligations brought by the Commission against a Member State by reason of its infringement of Community provisions in the field of public procurement.

2 A body such as Coillte Teoranta (Irish Forestry Board) is a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 77/62 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts.

Such a body, which has legal personality and does not award public contracts on behalf of the State or a regional or local authority, cannot be regarded as being the State or a regional or local authority, but constitutes a body corresponding to legal persons governed by public law within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 77/62 in conjunction with Point VI (Ireland) of Annex I thereto, where the State may exercise control, at least indirectly, over the award of public supply contracts.

Judgment

Costs

43 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since Ireland has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

hereby:

1. Declares that, since Coillte Teoranta failed to have a notice of tender for a contract for the supply of fertiliser published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by Council Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988;

2. Orders Ireland to pay the costs.

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 29 October 1996, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EC Treaty for a declaration that, by failing to comply with the provisions of Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1), as amended by Council Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988 (OJ 1988 L 127, p. 1), and in particular by failing to publish its invitation to tender for the supply of fertiliser on behalf of Coillte Teoranta in the Official Journal of the European Communities, Ireland had failed to fulfil its obligations under the EC Treaty.

Relevant Community legislation

2 Until 1994 the award of public supply contracts was governed in the Community by Directive 77/62, as amended inter alia by Directive 88/295.

3 Article 1 of Directive 77/62 defines `contracting authority' as follows:

`For the purpose of this directive:

...

(b) "contracting authorities" shall be the State, regional or local authorities and the legal persons governed by public law or, in Member States where the latter are unknown, bodies corresponding thereto as specified in Annex I;

...'.

4 Point VI of Annex I to Directive 77/62 specifies, with respect to Ireland, that the corresponding bodies are `other public authorities whose public supply contracts are subject to control by the State'.

5 Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) repealed Directive 77/62. Its provisions were to be transposed into national law by 14 June 1994 at the latest; Ireland had not yet done so on that date.

6 Under Article 1 of that directive,

`For the purpose of this Directive:

...

(b) "contracting authorities" shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

"a body governed by public law" means any body:

- established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

- having legal personality, and

- financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law;

...'.

7 Article 3 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33) provides:

`1. The Commission may invoke the procedure for which this Article provides when, prior to a contract being concluded, it considers that a clear and manifest infringement of Community provisions in the field of public procurement has been committed during a contract award procedure falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC and 77/62/EEC.

2. The Commission shall notify the Member State and the contracting authority concerned of the reasons which have led it to conclude that a clear and manifest infringement has been committed and request its correction.

3. Within 21 days of receipt of the notification referred to in paragraph 2, the Member State concerned shall communicate to the Commission:

(a) its confirmation that the infringement has been corrected; or

(b) a reasoned submission as to why no correction has been made; or

(c) a notice to the effect that the contract award procedure has been suspended either by the contracting authority on its own initiative or on the basis of the powers specified in Article 2(1)(a).

4. A reasoned submission in accordance with paragraph 3(b) may rely among other matters on the fact that the alleged infringement is already the subject of judicial or other review proceedings or of a review as referred to in Article 2(8). In such a case, the Member State shall inform the Commission of the result of those proceedings as soon as it becomes known.

5. ...'

Background to the dispute

8 The establishment of Coillte Teoranta in the form of a private company was provided for by Section 9 of the Irish Forestry Act 1988 (hereinafter `the Act').

9 According to the Act, the objects of Coillte Teoranta are to carry on the business of forestry and related activities on a commercial basis and, in accordance with efficient silvicultural practices, to establish and carry on woodland industries, and to participate with others in forestry activities consistent with those objects.

10 Under Paragraph 3(14) of its memorandum of association, the objects of Coillte Teoranta, as owner of 12 national parks, access to which is free of charge, also include the provision of recreation, sporting, educational, scientific and cultural facilities.

11 The Irish Government transferred to Coillte Teoranta land and other property worth approximately IEP 700 000 000. In return for those assets, Coillte Teoranta issued shares to the Minister for Finance, who is thus its majority shareholder.

12 As regards the structure of Coillte Teoranta, it follows from the Act and its memorandum and articles of association that it was established by the Minister for Energy (hereinafter `the Minister'), that its memorandum and articles and any amendments thereto must be approved by him (Sections 11 and 15), that the chairman and other directors are appointed and their remuneration determined by him (Section 15(2)(b) and (d)), that the first Chief Executive is to be appointed by the Minister and hold office on the terms determined by him (Section 35), that the appointment of the company's auditors must be approved by the Minister (Section 15(2)(e)) and that the company is to comply with State policy and any ministerial directives with regard to the remuneration, allowances and conditions of employment of its employees (Section 36). Some of the Minister's decisions require the consent of the Minister for Finance.

13 In managing its business Coillte Teoranta must comply with the following obligations: the Minister may issue written directions requiring it to comply with State policy decisions of a general kind concerning forestry, or to provide or maintain specified services or facilities, or to maintain or use specified land or premises in its possession for a particular purpose (Section 38 of the Act); it is obliged to consult the Minister for Finance concerning forestry development in areas of scientific interest (Section 13); it must submit each year to the Minister a programme for the sale and acquisition of land (Section 14); the establishment and acquisition of subsidiaries must be approved by the Minister (Section 15(2)(g)); a general meeting must be convened if the two ministers so request (Paragraph 15 of the articles); and its annual report and auditor's report must be laid before the Irish Parliament (Sections 30 and 31 of the Act).

14 As regards finance, under the relevant provisions, Coillte Teoranta's share capital must be approved by the Minister for Finance (Section 10 of the Act). It is not authorised to borrow without the approval of the Minister (Section 24), and the Minister for Finance may guarantee repayment of any borrowings (Section 25). It may invest a sum not exceeding IEP 250 000 in other undertakings. That sum may be increased with the approval of the Minister given with the consent of the Minister for Finance (Section 15(2)(h)). He may also make sums available to Coillte Teoranta on particular terms for specific purposes.

15 On 10 March 1994 Coillte Teoranta called for tenders for a fertiliser supply contract worth over ECU 200 000 for the period from 1 April 1994 to 31 March 1995. It did not have a notice published in the Official Journal of the European Communities. On 30 May 1994 it awarded the contract. On 21 June 1994 Connemara Machine Turf Co. Ltd, an undertaking whose tender had not been accepted, brought proceedings in the High Court challenging the award of the contract.

16 On 18 May 1994, before the contract was awarded, the Commission received a complaint concerning the tendering procedure. Pursuant to Article 3(1) of Directive 89/665, it sent a letter to the Irish Government on 30 June 1994. In that letter the Commission expressed doubts as to whether the award procedure complied with the Community rules on public supply contracts, and stated that the letter was deemed to be a letter of formal notice in accordance with Article 169 of the Treaty. It essentially argued that Coillte Teoranta as contracting authority had failed to publish an invitation to tender in the Official Journal of the European Communities as required by Directive 77/62, in particular Article 9 thereof.

17 The Irish Government, by letter of 22 July 1994, contested the Commission's arguments. It submitted that the procedure provided for in Article 3(1) and (2) of Directive 89/665 was not applicable, since the contract had been concluded before the Commission's letter was received; that, as provided for in Article 3(4) of Directive 89/665, the alleged infringement was already the subject of proceedings before a national court in Ireland; that Coillte Teoranta was not in any event a contracting authority within the meaning of either Directive 93/36 or Directive 77/62; that Ireland had correctly transposed the directives into national law; and that even if there had been a breach of the Community rules on public supply contracts, proceedings under Article 169 of the Treaty were inappropriate, in view of the existence of another remedy provided for in Directive 89/665.

18 Since it was not satisfied with the response, the Commission sent Ireland a reasoned opinion on 23 February 1996 pursuant to the first paragraph of Article 169 of the Treaty, to which Ireland replied by letter of 7 June 1996, confirming the position it had adopted in its earlier letter.

19 It was in these circumstances that the Commission brought the present action for failure to fulfil obligations.

Admissibility

20 While not formally contesting the admissibility of the application, the Irish Government raises the question whether proceedings under Article 169 of the Treaty may be initiated when other means exist of remedying a possible failure to fulfil obligations, such as those provided for in Article 3 of Directive 89/665.

21 It submits that, since proceedings were brought in the High Court on 21 June 1994, it is Article

3(4) of that directive which applies in the present case. It is in the context of those proceedings that any infringement of the relevant provisions on the award of public contracts should be assessed. Moreover, such an infringement would not be the result of a failure by Ireland to fulfil its obligations, but would be attributable to Coillte Teoranta if it were to be regarded as a contracting authority.

22 On this point, it must be noted that the special procedure under Directive 89/665 is a preliminary measure which can neither derogate from nor replace the powers of the Commission under Article 169 of the Treaty. That article gives the Commission discretionary power to bring an action before the Court where it considers that a Member State has failed to fulfil an obligation under the Treaty and that the State concerned has not complied with the Commission's reasoned opinion (Case C-359/93 Commission v Netherlands [1995] ECR I-157, paragraph 13).

23 As regards the question whether Ireland may be held liable for the actions of Coillte Teoranta as contracting authority, it is sufficient to state that the directives on public contract awards would be deprived of their effectiveness if the actions of a contracting authority were not imputable to the Member State concerned.

24 The application is accordingly admissible.

Substance

25 The Commission considers that only Directive 77/62 is relevant. It submits that by virtue of the various provisions governing the status of Coillte Teoranta, it must be regarded as falling within the notion of the State, as defined by the Court in Case 31/87 Beentjes v Netherlands State [1988] ECR 4635.

26 In that judgment, it claims, the Court gave a functional interpretation to the concept of the State for the purposes of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682), which contained the same definition of contracting authorities as Directive 77/62. Following that interpretation, a body whose composition and functions are laid down by legislation and which largely depends on the public authorities must be regarded as falling within the notion of the State, even if it is not formally part of the State administration.

27 The Commission further considers that Coillte Teoranta may also be regarded as an `other' public authority whose public supply contracts are subject to control by the State within the meaning of Point VI of Annex I to Directive 77/62.

28 According to the Irish Government, Coillte Teoranta cannot be regarded as a contracting authority within the meaning of either Directive 77/62 or Directive 93/36.

29 It submits that Coillte Teoranta is a private undertaking subject to the Companies Act. It is thus a commercial company belonging to the State. The powers of appointing and removing its officers and defining its general policy are no more extensive than those provided for in the memorandum and articles of a private company which is owned almost entirely by a single shareholder. Its day-to-day business, on the other hand, is managed independently and the State has no influence on the award of contracts.

30 On the other hand, Ireland does not dispute that if Coillte Teoranta were to be classified as a contracting authority, it should have published a notice of tender for the public contract in question.

31 It must first be stated that the facts of the present case fall exclusively within the scope of Directive 77/62. At the time when the invitation to tender was issued, and even when the contract in question was awarded, the period for transposing Directive 93/36 had not yet expired, and Ireland had not yet transposed it.

32 On the question whether Coillte Teoranta is a contracting authority for the purposes of Directive 77/62, it must be noted that, unlike the body concerned in Beentjes, Coillte Teoranta has legal personality. Moreover, it is common ground that it does not award public contracts on behalf of the State or a regional or local authority.

33 In those circumstances, Coillte Teoranta cannot be regarded as being the State or a regional or local authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 77/62. It must still be considered, however, whether it is one of the bodies corresponding to legal persons governed by public law listed in Annex I to Directive 77/62.

34 With reference to Ireland, that annex describes as contracting authorities other public authorities whose public supply contracts are subject to control by the State.

35 It must be borne in mind that the purpose of coordinating at Community level the procedures for the award of public supply contracts is to eliminate barriers to the free movement of goods.

36 In order to give full effect to the principle of free movement, the term `contracting authority' must be interpreted in functional terms (see, to that effect, the judgment of 10 November 1998 in Case C-360/96 Gemeente Arnhem and Gemeente Rheden v BFI Holding [1998] ECR I-6821, paragraph 62).

37 It must be emphasised here that it is the State which set up Coillte Teoranta and entrusted specific tasks to it, consisting principally of managing the national forests and woodland industries, but also of providing various facilities in the public interest. It is also the State which has power to appoint the principal officers of Coillte Teoranta.

38 Moreover, the Minister's power to give instructions to Coillte Teoranta, in particular requiring it to comply with State policy on forestry or to provide specified services or facilities, and the powers conferred on that Minister and the Minister for Finance in financial matters give the State the possibility of controlling Coillte Teoranta's economic activity.

39 It follows that, while there is indeed no provision expressly to the effect that State control is to extend specifically to the awarding of public supply contracts by Coillte Teoranta, the State may exercise such control, at least indirectly.

40 Consequently, Coillte Teoranta must be regarded as a `public authority whose public supply contracts are subject to control by the State' within the meaning of Point VI of Annex I to Directive 77/62.

41 Coillte Teoranta is therefore a contracting authority within the meaning of Directive 77/62. It was consequently obliged in the present case to have a notice of tender published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

42 It must therefore be held that, since Coillte Teoranta failed to have a notice of tender for a contract for the supply of fertiliser published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 77/62, as amended by Directive 88/295.

gives the following

Judgment

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 15 October 1996 the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EC Treaty for a declaration that, by failing to adopt within the prescribed period all the laws and regulations necessary to comply with Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and, in the alternative, by failing to notify it immediately of the measures adopted in order to transpose that directive, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under the third paragraph of Article 189 of the EC Treaty and Article 34(1) of the said directive.

2 Under Article 34(1) of Directive 93/36 Member States were to bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with that directive before 14 June 1994 and immediately to inform the Commission thereof.

3 Having received no notification of the measures taken to transpose Directive 93/36 into German law and in the absence of any other information from which it could conclude that the Federal Republic of Germany had fulfilled its obligations, the Commission initiated the procedure for failure to fulfil obligations provided for by Article 169 of the Treaty by sending a letter of formal notice to that Member State on 9 August 1994.

4 By letter of 6 October 1994 the German Government referred the Commission to a letter dated 25 July 1994 in which it informed the Commission that Directive 93/36 was to be transposed by means of an amendment to Part A of the Verdingungsordnung für Leistungen - ausgenommen Bauleistungen (Rules regarding Public Supply Contracts except in the Construction Sector, hereinafter `the VOL/A') and that that amendment was expected to be published in the autumn of 1994.

5 In the absence of any information concerning the proposed measures of transposition, the Commission, by letter of 16 January 1996, sent a reasoned opinion to the Federal Republic of Germany requesting it to take the measures necessary to comply with its obligations under Directive 93/36 within two months from notification.

6 In a letter dated 10 April 1996 the German Government informed the Commission that, in so far as Directive 93/36 constituted a restatement of Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1), which has been amended several times, it had already been transposed into German law by the rules which entered into force at the beginning of 1994.

7 In the same letter the German Government indicated that the transposition of the new elements contained in Directive 93/36 was under way. In that respect, it was necessary for the draft measures, which had previously been sent to the Commission, to be voted on by the German Government and approved by the Bundesrat (Federal Council). However, as a result of the Federal Republic of Germany's federal structure, it had not been possible to complete the process leading to adoption of those measures within the prescribed period.

8 Having received no information concerning the adoption of those draft measures or the entry into force of the corresponding provisions, the Commission brought the present action.

9 The Federal Republic of Germany does not deny the alleged infringement. It submits, however, that the important amendment of Directive 93/36 concerning the definition of `contracting authority' had already been incorporated into Paragraph 57(a)(1)(2) of the Zweites Gesetz zur Änderung des Haushaltsgrundsätzegesetzes (Second Law amending the Law on Budgetary Principles, BGBl. I, p. 1928).

10 Furthermore, according to the German Government, draft measures amending the VOL/A and the order governing the award of public supply contracts have been drawn up. Those draft measures provide that the amended VOL/A is to be given force of law. The legislation could enter into force during the first six months of 1997.

11 Since Directive 93/96 has not been fully transposed within the period prescribed therein the Commission's action is well founded.

12 It must therefore be held that, by failing to adopt within the prescribed period all the laws and regulations necessary to comply with Directive 93/96, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 34(1) of that directive.

Costs

13 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the Federal Republic of Germany has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

hereby:

1. Declares that, by failing to adopt within the prescribed period all the laws and regulations necessary to comply with Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 34(1) of that directive;

2. Orders the Federal Republic of Germany to pay the costs.

2 Actions for failure to fulfil obligations - Pre-litigation procedure - Purpose - Time granted to the Member State concerned - Requirement that a reasonable length of time be allowed - Criteria for assessment

(EC Treaty, Art. 169 (now Art. 226 EC))

3 Approximation of laws - Review procedures relating to the award of public supply and public works contracts - Directive 89/665 - Procedure enabling the Commission to take preventive action where there has been a clear and manifest infringement of the Community rules on public procurement - Unrelated to the infringement procedure under Article 169 of the Treaty (now Article 226 EC)

(EC Treaty, Art. 169 (now Art. 226 EC); Council Directive 89/665)

4 Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 93/37 - Where the Community rules are infringed by a contracting authority controlled and financed by one of the States within a Member State with a federal structure - Infringement imputable to the Member State

(Council Directive 93/37, Art. 1(b))

1 Since the subject-matter of an action brought under Article 169 of the Treaty (now Article 226 EC) is delimited by the pre-litigation procedure provided for therein, the action cannot be founded on any complaints other than those formulated in the reasoned opinion delivered by the Commission. Although the Commission is not obliged to indicate in the reasoned opinion the measures to be taken to eliminate the alleged infringement, it must, if it intends to make the failure to adopt a certain measure the subject-matter of its infringement action, specifically indicate to the Member State concerned that that measure must be adopted.

2 In the context of an action for failure to fulfil obligations, the purpose of the pre-litigation procedure is to give the Member State concerned an opportunity, on the one hand, to comply with its obligations under Community law and, on the other, effectively to put forward its defence to the complaints made by the Commission.

In view of the fact that the pre-litigation procedure has thus a dual purpose, the Commission must allow Member States a reasonable period to reply to letters of formal notice and to comply with reasoned opinions, or, where appropriate, to prepare their defence. In order to determine whether the period allowed is reasonable, account must be taken of all the circumstances of the case. Thus, very short periods may be justified in particular circumstances, especially where there is an urgent need to remedy a breach or where the Member State concerned is fully aware of the Commission's views long before the procedure starts.

3 The procedure by which, pursuant to Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, the Commission may - where it considers that a clear and manifest infringement of Community provisions in the field of public procurement has been committed - take up the matter with a Member State, constitutes a preventive measure which can neither derogate from nor replace the powers of the Commission under Article 169 of the Treaty (now Article 226 EC). It follows that the detailed provisions to which that special procedure is subject cannot affect the admissibility of an action brought under that provision.

4 A Member State which has a federal structure may be held liable for the actions of a contracting authority - within the meaning of Article 1(b), second subparagraph, of Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts - all the activities of which are controlled and financed by one of the component States. If the actions of such a contracting authority were not imputable to the Member State concerned, the provisions of Community law governing the award of public contracts would be deprived of their effectiveness.

Judgment

Costs

80 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the Republic of Austria has failed in its submission, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

hereby declares:

1. In connection with the building at Sankt Pölten of the new administrative and cultural centre for the Land of Lower Austria, the Republic of Austria, in awarding the contracts which were concluded before 6 February 1996 but which on 7 March 1996 had still not been performed or could reasonably have been cancelled, has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, under Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts and under Article 30 of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 28 EC).

2. The Republic of Austria is ordered to pay the costs.

1 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court on 7 October 1996, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EC Treaty (now Article 226 EC) for a declaration that, in connection with the building at Sankt Pölten of a new administrative and cultural centre for the Land of Lower Austria, the Republic of Austria, in awarding contracts which were concluded before 6 February 1996 but which on 7 March 1996 had still not been performed or could reasonably have been cancelled, had failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) and Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33) as well as under Article 30 of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 28 EC).

Facts and prelitigation procedure

2 According to the case-file, in 1986 the Government of the Land of Lower Austria decided to transfer its headquarters, which until then had been in Vienna, to Sankt Pölten.

3 The works for completing this big project, which comprises the complete construction of new buildings to house the government and the administration as well as the construction of a cultural centre at Sankt Pölten, commenced in 1992. Completion was scheduled for 1996, when Austria's millennium was to be commemorated.

4 At the beginning of February 1995, the Commission was informed, following a complaint, of an invitation to tender concerning a public supply contract, to be awarded in connection with the project, published in the Niederösterreichisches Amtsblatt (Lower Austrian Official Gazette). That invitation to tender was based on the Allgemeine Angebots- und Vertragsbedingungen (General Tendering Contract Conditions, hereinafter referred to as `the AAVB'), which the Commission considered to be contrary to Community law for infringement, in particular, of the advertising rules, the rules regarding specifications and the obligations to provide information to and for the protection of tenderers.

5 In a letter of 12 April 1995, the Commission informed the Austrian Government of its findings.

6 A few months later, the Commission received, not the expected amendments, but the notification of a Law relating to the awarding of contracts, enacted on 31 March 1995 by the Land of Lower Austria, which also raised objections because in practice it excluded from its scope of application the contracts relating to the project in question.

7 At the end of November 1995, the situation concerning those contracts was examined at a meeting between Austrian officials and Commission officials. In view of the fact that, at that time, contracts of considerable value were still to be awarded, the Commission insisted that Community law had to be observed with immediate effect. The Austrian authorities undertook to carry out the required amendments. However, they said that it was necessary to have a sufficiently reasonable transition period owing to technical problems linked to the adaptation.

8 The Commission considered that this statement was insufficient, at least with regard to the amendment of the AAVB and contract-awarding practices, which could be adapted immediately by a simple decision of the contracting authority, namely Niederösterreichische Landeshauptstadt Planungsgesellschaft mbH (hereinafter `Nöplan').

9 In those circumstances, the Commission, by letter of 15 December 1995, decided to initiate against the Republic of Austria the procedure provided for in Article 169 of the Treaty by requiring it to submit it observations on the alleged infringements within a period of one week from receipt of its letter.

10 By letter of 22 December 1995, the Austrian Government replied that the AAVB had been amended in the way required by the Commission, that Nöplan had taken the decision `to apply with immediate effect the Community directives to all invitations to tender' and that a draft Law amending the Law relating to the award of contracts enacted by the Land of Lower Austria had been drawn up.

11 The Commission took the view that that document did not make it clear that measures had been adopted to bring all the alleged infringements to an end. It therefore issued a reasoned opinion on 21 February 1996 in which it requested the Republic of Austria to take all the measures required to comply with it within a period of 14 days from its notification.

12 In its reply of 22 March 1996, the Austrian Government stated in particular that:

- contract-awarding practices had been amended on 6 February 1996, so that as from that date current awards had been suspended and observance of Community law was ensured for contract-award procedures which had still not been completed by that date;

- contracts of a total value of about ATS 360 million, awarded between 27 November 1995 (the date of the meeting between the Austrian officials and the Commission officials) and 6 February 1996, could not, for various reasons, be suspended or cancelled.

13 The Commission, taking the view that those contracts had been awarded in breach of Community law and that the conduct of the Republic of Austria was not justified, decided to bring this action.

The relevant law

The Community rules

14 In Article 8(1), Directive 93/37 provides:

`The contracting authority shall, within 15 days of the date on which the request is received, inform any eliminated candidate or tenderer who so requests of the reasons for rejection of his application or his tender, and, in the case of a tender, the name of the successful tenderer.'

15 Article 10(6) of the same directive provides, as regards the technical specifications contained in the contractual clauses relating to a given contract:

`Unless such specifications are justified by the subject of the contract, Member States shall prohibit the introduction into the contractual clauses relating to a given contract of technical specifications which mention products of a specific make or source or of a particular process and which therefore favour or eliminate certain undertakings. In particular, the indication of trade marks, patents, types, or of a specific origin or production shall be prohibited. However, if such indication is accompanied by the words "or equivalent", it shall be authorised in cases where the contracting authorities are unable to give a description of the subject of the contract using specifications which are sufficiently precise and intelligible to all parties concerned.'

16 Article 11 of Council Directive 93/37/EEC lays down the common advertising rules which contracting authorities must observe in relation to contracts which they intend to award. In particular, the first paragraph of Article 11(6) and Article 11(11) provide:

`6. The notices referred to in paragraphs 1 to 5 shall be drawn up in accordance with the models given in Annexes IV, V and VI and shall specify the information requested in those Annexes.

11. The notice shall not be published in the official journals or in the press of the country of the contracting authority before the date of dispatch to the Official Journal of the European Communities and it shall mention this date. It shall not contain information other than that published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.'

17 Article 12(1) of this Directive further provides:

`In open procedures the time limit for the receipt of tenders, fixed by the contracting authorities shall be not less than 52 days from the date of dispatch of the notice.'

18 Article 24 of Directive 93/37 lays down criteria for qualitative selection of contractors, that is to say legitimate reasons for which a contractor may be excluded from participation in a contract.

19 Finally, Article 30 of the Directive lays down criteria for the award of contracts. Paragraph (1) provides:

`The criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) either the lowest price only;

(b) or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract: e.g. price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit.'

20 Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 provides:

`1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC and 72/62/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively [...] on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

2. ...

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. ...'

21 Article 2(1)(c) of the Directive provides:

`1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

...

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.'

The conditions governing invitations to tender for the contracts in question

22 According to the case-file, in their version of 1 January 1995, the AAVB contained in particular the following points:

- point 2.5, entitled `Selection of tenders by the contract-awarding authority', provided that the contract-awarding authority reserved the right in all cases to select or to reject any tender without this giving rise, for tenderers, to any right, in particular for loss of profits. It was also provided that the contract-awarding authority was at liberty to decide on the award of the contract and that tenderers could not derive rights either from the statutory provisions or from standard ONORM A 2050. The contract-awarding authority was not under any obligation to give the reasons for which it had refused or awarded a contract.

- point 2.10 of the AAVB, entitled `Samples of specified/tendered products/makes/materials,' stated that, where materials were technically equivalent and offered at the same price, materials originating from Lower Austria or supplies from Lower Austrian firms would be preferred.

23 Moreover, a notice published in the Niederösterreichisches Amtsblatt of 6 January 1995, concerning the contract relating to the centralised management system for the Sankt Pölten administrative centre, contained the following clauses in the specifications for the work:

`The operating system for the administrative centre must meet IEEE 1003.X (POSIX) standards and must therefore be a UNIfied eXtension System V - product (Unix is a registered trade mark of the company AT&T)' (page 60 of the notice inviting tenders). As operating systems for the Unix command system, OS/2, Windows or Windows-NT are accepted (page 61 of the notice inviting tenders). As technical specifications of the system interfaces, OSF or X/OPEN were also required as well as, for the user interfaces for the operating software, OSF/Motiv, Unix and X-Windows.

24 According to the same notice, the period allowed for submission of tenders was set at three weeks.

Admissibility

25 The Austrian Government raises five objections of inadmissibility to the action. They are (i) that the complaint on which the action is based is inadmissible, (ii) that the infringements alleged in the reasoned opinion have ceased, (iii) that the time-limits set during the pre-litigation procedure were too short, (iv) that the form of order sought is too imprecise and (v) that the alleged infringements are irreparable.

The alleged inadmissibility of the complaint on which the action is based 26 The Austrian Government considers that the Commission's complaint, as defined in the form of order sought, relates to `contracts which were concluded before 6 February 1996 but which on 7 March 1996 had still not been performed or could reasonably have been cancelled'. That claim, in the form of order sought, was not contained in the reasoned opinion.

27 It should be observed that the objection of inadmissibility raised by the Republic of Austria is based on a reading of the claim contained in the application to the effect that the subject-matter of the application is the failure by the Republic of Austria to fulfil its obligation to cancel, as far as possible, the contracts concluded before 6 February 1996 but still not fully performed by the end of the period set in the reasoned opinion.

28 It must therefore be determined whether that definition of the subject-matter of the action is correct.

29 A reading of the form of order sought, as set out in paragraph 1 of this judgment, in the light of the submissions in, in particular, part II of the application, entitled `Subject-matter of the application' and setting out the alleged infringements, shows first of all that the Commission complains that the Republic of Austria has infringed a number of provisions of Community law in procedures for the award of contracts which took place under the version of the AAVB in force on 1 January 1995, in so far as those procedures led to contracts which were concluded before

6 February 1996 but which on 7 March 1996 had still not been fully performed.

30 In this part of its application, the Commission does not set out any complaint regarding the fact that the Republic of Austria did not cancel contracts which had been concluded.

31 It is only in part I of the application, setting out the facts and the pre-litigation procedure, that the Commission sets forth, as one of the aims of initiating the Treaty infringement proceedings, the aim of `ensuring, as far as possible, the annulment of contracts concluded in breach of Community law but still not performed'. At the end of that same part, it explains that it brought this action owing to the failure by the Republic of Austria to cancel contracts concluded in breach of Community law.

32 In those circumstances, the action brought by the Commission must be understood as relating to the Republic of Austria's Treaty infringement resulting from the breach of provisions of Community law affecting the procedures for the award of contracts which took place under the version of the AAVB in force on 1 January 1995. The references made in part I and in the form of order sought to the contracts concluded before 6 February 1996 but which on 7 March 1996 had still not been performed or could reasonably have been cancelled serve at any rate the purpose of defining the contracts to which this complaint relates.

33 In so far as the purpose of those references, beyond that of defining the contracts at which the complaint in the application relating to the breach of provisions of Community law is directed, is also to complain that the Republic of Austria failed to fulfil its obligation to cancel the contracts concluded before 6 February 1996 in so far as they could reasonably have been cancelled, it must be ascertained whether such a complaint was set out in the reasoned opinion.

34 According to settled case-law, the purpose of the pre-litigation procedure is to give the Member State concerned an opportunity, on the one hand, to comply with its obligations under Community law and, on the other, to avail itself of its right to defend itself against the complaints made by the Commission. The subject-matter of an action brought under Article 169 of the Treaty is therefore delimited by the pre-litigation procedure provided for by that article. Consequently, the action cannot be founded on any complaints other than those formulated in the reasoned opinion (Case C-206/96 Commission v Luxembourg [1998] ECR I-3401, paragraph 13).

35 In its reasoned opinion, the Commission set out the various infringements, committed in the conduct of contract-awarding procedures, of which the Republic of Austria was accused. It was also pointed out that the reply given by the Austrian authorities to the notice calling for its observations did not refer to `the contracts for which an award procedure had already been initiated, by means in particular of national publication, but which had not yet been the subject of an award decision' and pointed out that it was for the `Austrian authorities to take all appropriate measures to rectify the infringement in question' indicating that `this was also the case for contracts for which a definitive decision has still not been taken' or `for which a contract-awarding procedure has not yet been initiated'.

36 It follows that, although, in its reasoned opinion of 21 February 1996, the Commission was referring to the infringements committed in the contract-awarding procedures conducted under the version of the AAVB in force on 1 January 1995, it nowhere expressly referred to an obligation to cancel contracts concluded before 6 February 1996 in so far as this was reasonably possible.

37 That finding is, moreover, corroborated by the circumstance that, in the letter of formal notice of 15 December 1995, the Commission expressly referred `to those lots already awarded' and requested the Republic of Austria `to suspend the legal effects of the contracts already awarded contrary to Community law'. The fact that such a passage did not appear in the reasoned opinion therefore prompts the conclusion that the corresponding complaint was abandoned by the Commission in that opinion.

38 The Commission maintains, however, that the fact that in its reasoned opinion it requested the Austrian Government to take `all appropriate measures to rectify the infringement in question' was sufficient because, according to the case-law of the Court (Case C-247/89 Commission v Portugal [1991] ECR I-3659, paragraph 22), the Commission is not obliged to set out in its reasoned opinion the measures or steps to be taken to eliminate the infringement in question. It also points out that, in its reply to the reasoned opinion, the Austrian Government devoted a section to the `contracts already awarded', which indicated that the government had already addressed itself, in the pre-litigation procedure, to that claim.

39 It must be observed in this regard that, although, according to the case-law of the Court, the Commission is not obliged to indicate in the reasoned opinion the measures or steps to be taken to eliminate the infringement in question (see the judgment in Case C-247/89 Commission v Portugal, cited above, paragraph 22), that does not mean that it is not obliged to indicate in its reasoned opinion the complaints which will be the subject of its application to the Court (see, to this effect, Commission v Luxembourg, cited above, paragraph 13). Thus, the Commission must specifically indicate to the Member State concerned that it must adopt a certain measure if it intends to make the failure to adopt that measure the subject-matter of its infringement action. That procedural requirement, specific to the proceedings brought before the Court, does not, however, limit the rights which individuals have under the Community legal order and which may be invoked directly before the national court.

40 The fact that, in its reply to the reasoned opinion, the Austrian Government referred at length to the contracts already awarded and also explained the reasons for which the contracts concerned could not, in its view, be cancelled is not relevant in considering whether the omission in the reasoned opinion of the complaint relating to the failure to cancel the contracts already concluded was remedied. The safeguarding of the rights of the defence depends solely on the complaints contained in the application being identical to those in the reasoned opinion, and not on arguments taken up, spontaneously or following informal contacts in the reply which the Member State gives to the opinion.

41 Having regard to the foregoing considerations, it must be held that the Commission's complaint, in so far as it could be interpreted as seeking a declaration that the Republic of Austria ought, in any event, to have cancelled the contracts concluded in breach of Community law before 6 February 1996, must be held to be inadmissible.

Cessation of the infringements in question

42 The Austrian Government explains that, on 7 March 1996, the date on which the period set in the reasoned opinion expired, it had entirely brought to an end the infringements alleged in the reasoned opinion, since the AAVB had been amended in the way sought by the Commission and contract-awarding practice had also been amended after 6 February 1996.

43 Having regard to the findings in paragraphs 32 and 41 above, it must be determined whether, on the date on which the period set in the reasoned opinion expired, the Republic of Austria had brought to an end the alleged infringement arising from the breach of Community law affecting the contract-awarding procedures conducted under the version of the AAVB applying from 1 January 1995.

44 Although it is true that the Republic of Austria has, from 12 December 1995, amended the AAVB in the way indicated by the Commission and that, from 6 February 1996, it has applied the new version of the AAVB to all procedures already underway on that date, it is also established that it has done nothing in relation to the contract-awarding procedures conducted entirely under the version of the AAVB applying on 1 January 1995, so that any effects contrary to Community law produced by these procedures still subsisted on the date on which the period set in the reasoned opinion expired.

45 This objection of inadmissibility must therefore be dismissed.

Setting of excessively short periods in the pre-litigation procedure

46 The Austrian Government contests the admissibility of the action on the ground that the period of one week set for replying to the letter of formal notice and the period of 14 days set for complying with the reasoned opinion were unreasonably short.

47 It argues first of all that there was no urgency, since the situation objected to by the Commission antedated 6 February and was therefore entirely in the past and that the Commission was aware of this when it issued its reasoned opinion, since the Austrian authorities had informed it in writing, on 7 February 1996, that their contract-awarding practices had been adapted to Community law. Moreover, the Commission itself took almost a month to address to the Republic of Austria the reasoned opinion the sending of which had already been announced in a press release on 25 January 1996.

48 Secondly, the Republic of Austria contends that the periods set did not take account of the time needed for coordination between the federal authorities, the Land of Lower Austria and Nöplan following a re-evaluation of the legal position by the Land of the procedures objected to.

49 Lastly, in assessing whether the period set by the Commission in its reasoned opinion was reasonable, reference must be made to Article 3(3) of Directive 89/665, which mentions a period of 21 days.

50 The Commission replies that the periods set were justified having regard to the situation to which it was objecting. In particular, the period set in the letter of formal notice was justified because, following information received from the Austrian authorities themselves, at the beginning of December 1995 there were still contracts of considerable value to be awarded and it was therefore necessary to obtain as quickly as possible an assurance from the Austrian Government that those contracts would be awarded in compliance with Community law and that the existing infringements would be remedied. The period set in the reasoned opinion was also appropriate because the reply to the letter of formal notice did not seem to provide a guarantee that the Austrian Government was prepared to remedy all the infringements complained of, especially since it had not complied with the Commission's request to send it a list of, in particular, the contracts which were still to be published.

51 It must be observed in this regard that, according to the case-law of the Court, the dual purpose of the pre-litigation procedure (see paragraph 34 above) requires the Commission to allow Member States a reasonable period to reply to letters of formal notice and to comply with reasoned opinions, or, where appropriate, to prepare their defence. In order to determine whether the period allowed is reasonable, account must be taken of all the circumstances of the case. Thus, very short periods may be justified in particular circumstances, especially where there is an urgent need to remedy a breach or where the Member State concerned is fully aware of the Commission's views long before the procedure starts (judgment in Case 293/85 Commission v Belgium [1988] ECR 305, paragraph 14).

52 The question to be examined is therefore whether the shortness of the periods set by the Commission was justified in view of the particular circumstances of this case.

53 As regards, first of all, the one-week period set in the letter of formal notice, it must be concluded that, as the Commission quite rightly indicated without being effectively contradicted by the Austrian Government, the situation objected to was urgent, having regard to the contracts of considerable value which were still in the process of being awarded during the pre-litigation procedure on the basis of procedures which the Commission considered to be contrary to Community law.

54 Moreover, the adaptation to Community law of contract-awarding practices did not require any time-consuming coordination between the various authorities or departments since a simple decision by the contracting authority would have been sufficient. Besides, the Austrian authorities had already been informed of the Commission's complaints from the time of the meeting which had taken place at the end of November 1995.

55 Next, as regards the 14-day period set in the reasoned opinion, it is common ground that, at the time when that opinion was adopted, the Republic of Austria had not sent to the Commission the list of contract awards completed under the version of the AAVB in force on 1 January 1995, so that the Commission was unable to assess to what extent the notification made by the Republic of Austria on 7 February 1996 concerning the adaptation to Community law of contract-awarding practice with effect from 6 February 1996 was capable of guaranteeing that there would be no more contract-awarding procedures contrary to Community law. Similarly, the fact that the Commission issued its reasoned opinion nearly a month after the reports concerning the opinion appeared in the press, though regrettable, was not such as to detract from the urgency of the situation in question.

56 It follows that the periods set by the Commission in the letter of formal notice and in the reasoned opinion must be regarded as reasonable.

57 As regards the argument which the Austrian Government bases on Article 3(3) of Directive 89/665, it is sufficient to reiterate that the special procedure under that directive is a preventive measure which can neither derogate from nor replace the powers of the Commission under Article 169 of the Treaty (see Case C-353/96 Commission v Ireland [1998] ECR I-8565, paragraph 22). It follows that the detailed provisions to which that special procedure is subject cannot affect the admissibility of an action brought under Article 169 of the Treaty.

58 Consequently, this objection of inadmissibility must be dismissed.

Imprecise nature of the form of order sought

59 The Austrian Government contends that the action is inadmissible on the ground that in the form of order it seeks and at several places in its application the Commission refers both to the possibility of cancellation without indicating, in the part of the application devoted to its legal assessment, the criteria on the basis of which that possibility is to be assessed.

60 It is sufficient to observe that this objection has become devoid of purpose since in paragraph

41 above the Court held that, in so far as the Commission's application is to be understood as based on a complaint that the contracts concluded were not cancelled, it is inadmissible.

The objection that the alleged infringements are irreparable

61 The Austrian Government contests the admissibility of the application on the ground that the alleged infringement, consisting of a failure to cancel contracts already awarded, is by its nature incapable of being made good.

62 In any event, this objection is also devoid of purpose for the reason indicated in paragraph 60 above.

Substance

63 The Commission observes first of all that, as from the time of its accession to the European Union on 1 January 1995, the Republic of Austria was bound to observe Community legislation, which include the directives relating to the award of public contracts.

64 It contends, secondly, that, during the procedures for the award of contracts under the version of the AAVB in force as from 1 January 1995, the Republic of Austria infringed a number of provisions of Community law.

65 First of all, it infringed several provisions of Directive 93/37. Thus, it appears from the AAVB, in the version in force on 1 January 1995, and from the contract notice published in the Niederösterreichisches Amtsblatt of 6 January 1995 concerning the contract for the centralised management system for the Sankt Pölten administrative centre that Nöplan had not respected either the advertising rules laid down in Article 11(6) and (11) of that directive or the provision concerning a minimum period for the receipt of tenders laid down in Article 12 of that directive.

66 It also emerges from the AAVB, in particular point 2.5, that Nöplan had likewise not respected the obligation to provide reasons to tenderers whose applications were rejected, laid down in Article 8 of Directive 93/37.

67 Next, it follows in particular from point 2.5 of the AAVB that no account had been taken of either the qualitative selection criteria laid down by Directive 93/37, such as the grounds for exclusion laid down in Article 24, in the determination whether an undertaking fulfilled the conditions necessary for being able to participate in a tendering procedure, or of the criteria for the award of contracts laid down in Article 30 of that Directive.

68 Finally, as regards the technical aspect, Nöplan had, at least as regards the procedure for awarding the contract relating to the centralised management system for the Sankt Pölten administrative centre, infringed Article 10(6) of Directive 93/37 in so far as it included in the tender documents a specific specification concerning the operating system for the building control centre which had the effect of favouring `Unix products'.

69 Thirdly, the Commission complains that the Republic of Austria infringed its obligations under Article 30 of the Treaty. It claims that this is the case with regard to the insertion of the technical specification favouring `Unix products' which in its view entails an obstacle to the free movement of goods.

70 According to the Commission, the same applies as regards the preference which point 2.10 of the AAVB accords, in the case of equivalent tenders, to materials produced in Lower Austria or to Austrian undertakings.

71 Lastly, the Commission contends that the Republic of Austria infringed Directive 89/665. In particular, point 2.5 of the AAVB absolutely excludes from the outset all the rights which tenderers might assert in a selection procedure, which is contrary to the principles relating to the protection of tenderers laid down in Article 1(1) and (3) and Article 2(1)(c) of that directive.

72 The Austrian Government confines its defence to contesting the applicability of Directives 89/665 and 93/37 on the ground that, in its application, the Commission failed to indicate the legal reason for which Nöplan, as an independent legal entity and therefore itself a contracting authority within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, should have applied those directives directly. That question is of decisive importance, because the law of Lower Austria then in force concerning the award of public contracts had expressly excluded the Sankt Pölten project from its scope. Moreover, the Commission has not explained the reason for which Nöplan's conduct was imputable to the Republic of Austria.

73 The Austrian Government also maintains that the Commission also fails to indicate in its application the reason for which the construction of the new Sankt Pölten administrative and cultural centre, which it clearly considers to be a single project, in accordance with Article 1(c) and 6(3) and (4) of Directive 93/97, ought to have been subject, from the accession of the Republic of Austria to the European Union, to Directives 89/665 and 93/37.

74 The Court observes in this regard that it is common ground that Nöplan is a contracting authority within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 and that, as the Austrian Government itself admits in its defence, it has not contested the detailed analysis made by the Commission in the reasoned opinion of the relationship between the Land of Lower Austria and Nöplan whereby the Land of Lower Austria controls and finances all activities regarding the construction of the administrative centre. In those circumstances, Nöplan was under an obligation to respect the Community provisions governing the awarding of contracts, irrespective of any possibility for the operators concerned to invoke against it provisions governing the awarding of contracts which have direct effect.

75 As regards the question whether the Republic of Austria may be held liable for the actions of Nöplan as contracting authority, it is sufficient to state that the Community directives governing the award of public contracts would be deprived of their effectiveness if the actions of a contracting authority such as Nöplan were not imputable to the Member State concerned (see, to this effect, Commission v Ireland, cited above, paragraph 23).

76 Finally, it is clear from the case-file that, contrary to the assertions of the Austrian Government, the Commission did not in any way suggest that the construction of the new administrative and cultural centre at Sankt Pölten was to be regarded as a single project. On the contrary, in all the stages of these proceedings, it indicated to the Austrian Government that, having regard to the fact that the value of the contracts still to be awarded, from 1 January 1995, the date on which the Republic of Austria acceded to the European Union, exceeded the threshold laid down in Directive 93/37, that Member State had to comply with the Community provisions on the award of public contracts.

77 It follows that the objections made by the Republic of Austria to the applicability of Directives 89/665 and 93/37 must be dismissed.

78 The Austrian Government has not contested the substance of the infringements of which it is accused.

79 Having regard to the foregoing, it must be held that, in connection with the building at Sankt Pölten of the new administrative and cultural centre for the Land of Lower Austria, the Republic of Austria, in awarding the contracts which were concluded before 6 February 1996 but which on 7 March 1996 had still not been performed or could reasonably have been cancelled, has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directives 93/37 and 89/665 and under Article 30 of the Treaty.

Judgment of the Court (Sixth Chamber)
of 17 September 1998
Commission of the European Communities v Kingdom of Belgium.
Failure by a Member State to fulfil obligations - Public works contracts - Directives 89/440/EEC and 93/37/EEC - Failure to publish a contract notice - Application of negotiated procedure without justification.
Case C-323/96.

1 Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directives 71/305 and 93/37 - Scope - Contracting authority - State - Definition - Bodies exercising legislative, executive and judicial powers - Bodies of the federal authorities of a federal State - Included

(Council Directive 71/305, Art. 1(b), as amended by Directives 89/440, Art. 1(1), and 93/37, Art. 1(b))

2 Member States - Obligations - Implementation of directives - Failure to fulfil obligations - Justification - Not permissible

(EC Treaty, Art. 169)

1 The term `the State' referred to in the definition of contracting authority in Article 1(b) of Directive 71/305, as amended by Article 1(1) of Directive 89/440, and in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 necessarily encompasses all the bodies which exercise legislative, executive and judicial powers. The same is true of the bodies which, in a federal State, exercise those powers at federal level.

2 A Member State cannot rely on provisions, practices or circumstances existing in its internal legal order in order to justify its failure to comply with the obligations and time-limits laid down by a directive.

In Case C-323/96,

Commission of the European Communities, represented by Hendrik van Lier, Legal Adviser, acting as Agent, with an address for service in Luxembourg at the office of Carlos Gomez de la Cruz, of its Legal Service, Wagner Centre, Kirchberg, applicant,

v

Kingdom of Belgium, represented by Michel Flamée, of the Brussels Bar, acting as Agent, with an address for service in Luxembourg at the Belgian Embassy, 4 Rue des Girondins,

defendant,

APPLICATION for a declaration that, by failing to publish a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities both for the overall project and for each of the lots relating to the construction of the premises of the Vlaamse Raad, and by failing to apply the award procedures laid down in Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989, amending Directive 71/305/EEC concerning coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 210, p. 1), and in Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) and, more specifically, by having awarded Lot No 4 by negotiated procedure without justification, the Kingdom of Belgium has failed to fulfil its obligations under those directives and, more specifically, Articles 7 and 11 of Directive 93/37,

Judgment

Costs

45 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the Kingdom of Belgium has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

(Sixth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Declares that,

- by failing to publish a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities both for the overall project and for each of the lots relating to the construction of the premises of the Vlaamse Raad, and

- by failing to apply the award procedures laid down in Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989, and Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts and, more specifically, by having awarded lot No 4 by negotiated procedure without justification, the Kingdom of Belgium has failed to fulfil its obligations under those directives and, more specifically, under Articles 7 and 11(2) and (9) of Directive 93/37;

2. Orders the Kingdom of Belgium to pay the costs.

1 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court on 2 October 1996 the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EC Treaty for a declaration that:

- by failing to publish a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities (hereinafter `OJEC'), both for the overall project and for each of the lots relating to the construction of the premises of the Vlaamse Raad, and

- by failing to apply the award procedures laid down in Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989, amending Directive 71/305/EEC concerning coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 210, p. 1), and in Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) and, more specifically, by having awarded Lot No 4 by negotiated procedure without justification, the Kingdom of Belgium has failed to fulfil its obligations under those directives and, more specifically, Articles 7 and 11 of Directive 93/37.

Facts

2 It is apparent from the documents before the Court that, in 1993, the Vlaamse Raad, the Flemish Parliament in the Belgian federal system, decided to have premises of its own built in Brussels.

3 For the construction of those new premises the Vlaamse Raad followed a restricted procedure, in which 32 undertakings were invited to participate. No notice was published in the OJEC, either for the overall project or for the various lots, even though each lot exceeded the threshold laid down in the Community rules.

4 Lot No 4 (finishing and sanitary installations) was the subject of a `non-open' national procedure which commenced on 17 February 1994, without prior publication in the OJEC. After considering the 14 offers submitted in that context in the light of the award criteria, the lowest price, the Régie des Bâtiments selected the offer of an undertaking which had, in the meantime, been declared insolvent.

5 By decision of 19 May 1994 the executive of the Vlaamse Raad therefore annulled the tendering procedure and applied the single tender procedure, again without prior publication in the OJEC.

The pre-litigation procedure

6 By telex of 17 June 1994 the Commission informed the Belgian authorities that the procedure applied by the Vlaamse Raad constituted a clear and manifest infringement of the Community rules relating to public works contracts, and of the principle of equal treatment of candidates, which forms the basis for those rules. It consequently requested the Belgian authorities to annul the procedure relating to Lot No 4 immediately.

7 In the absence of any decision, notwithstanding the undertaking made by the Belgian authorities at a meeting on 1 July 1994 to adopt a decision as quickly as possible concerning the procedure for the award of Lot No 4, the Commission initiated the procedure under Article 169 of the Treaty by sending a letter of formal notice to the Belgian Government on 28 July 1994.

8 By letter of 31 August 1994 the Belgian Government replied that the Belgian public procurement legislation applied only to the executive authority, that is to say the administrations of the State, the Communities and the Regions and, so long as Directive 93/37 had not been correctly transposed with regard to the legislative authority, the latter was not required to comply with Community law. As regards Lot No 4 more specifically, the Belgian Government informed the Commission that the executive of the Vlaamse Raad had refused to annul the tendering procedure.

9 By letter of 16 November 1995 the Commission issued a reasoned opinion calling upon the Kingdom of Belgium to adopt the measures necessary to comply with it within 30 days of having cognisance of it.

10 By letter of 15 December 1995 the Belgian Permanent Representation to the European Union submitted a letter to the Commission dated 14 December 1995, in which the President of the Vlaamse Raad pointed out that there was no national legislation ensuring the independence of the Vlaamse Raad, as a parliamentary institution, when awarding public contracts. Furthermore, the letter stated that specific draft measures were being prepared and that the Vlaamse Raad was discussing the matter with the federal authority.

11 By letter of 10 April 1996 the Belgian Permanent Representation to the European Union subsequently submitted a further letter to the Commission, dated 25 February 1996 and signed by the President of the Vlaamse Raad, according to which, since it was no longer possible to wait for the opinion of the federal authority, the Vlaamse Raad was preparing a decree to transpose the directives concerned and would send further information to the Commission shortly.

12 In the absence of any communication since that time, the Commission brought the present proceedings.

Directive 93/37

13 As is clear from the first recital in its preamble, Directive 93/37 is intended, for reasons of clarity and better understanding, to consolidate the provisions of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682) and the provisions amending them.

14 Article 1 of Directive 93/37 provides:

`For the purpose of this Directive:

...

(b) "contracting authorities" shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

...

(e) "open procedures" are those national procedures whereby all interested contractors may submit tenders;

(f) "restricted procedures" are those national procedures whereby only those contractors invited by the contracting authority may submit tenders;

(g) "negotiated procedures" are those national procedures whereby contracting authorities consult contractors of their choice and negotiate the terms of the contract with one or more of them;

15 Article 6(1) and (3) of Directive 93/37 states:

`1. The provisions of this Directive shall apply to public works contracts whose estimated value net of VAT is not less than ECU 5 000 000.

...

3. Where a work is subdivided into several lots, each one the subject of a contract, the value of each lot must be taken into account for the purpose of calculating the amounts referred to in paragraph 1. Where the aggregate value of the lots is not less than the amount referred to in paragraph 1, the provisions of that paragraph shall apply to all lots. Contracting authorities shall be permitted to depart from this provision for lots whose estimated value net of VAT is less than ECU 1 000 000 provided that the total estimated value of all the lots exempted does not, in consequence, exceed 20% of the total estimated value of all lots.'

16 Article 7 of Directive 93/37 provides:

`1. In awarding public works contracts the contracting authorities shall apply the procedures defined in Article 1(e), (f) and (g), adapted to this Directive.

2. The contracting authorities may award their public works contracts by negotiated procedure, with prior publication of a contract notice and after having selected the candidates according to publicly known qualitative criteria, in the following cases:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

...

3. The contracting authorities may award their public works contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, in the following cases:

(a) in the absence of tenders or of appropriate tenders in response to an open or restricted procedure in so far as the original terms of the contract are not substantially altered and provided that a report is communicated to the Commission at its request;

(b) when, for technical or artistic reasons or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the work may only be carried out by a particular contractor;

(c) in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseen by the contracting authorities in question, the time-limit laid down for the open, restricted or negotiated procedures referred to in paragraph 2 cannot be kept. The circumstances invoked to justify extreme urgency must not in any event be attributable to the contracting authorities;

(d) for additional works not included in the project initially considered or in the contract first concluded but which have, through unforeseen circumstances, become necessary for the carrying out of the work described therein, on condition that the award is made to the contractor carrying out such work:

- when such works cannot be technically or economically separated from the main contract without great inconvenience to the contracting authorities, or

- when such works, although separable from the execution of the original contract, are strictly necessary to its later stages.

However, the aggregate amount of contracts awarded for additional works may not exceed 50% of the amount of the main contract;

(e) for new works consisting of the repetition of similar works entrusted to the undertaking to which the same contracting authorities awarded an earlier contract, provided that such works conform to a basic project for which a first contract was awarded according to the procedures referred to in paragraph 4.

As soon as the first project is put up for tender, notice must be given that this procedure might be adopted and the total estimated cost of subsequent works shall be taken into consideration by the contracting authorities when they apply the provisions of Article 6. This procedure may only be adopted during the three years following the conclusion of the original contract.

4. In all other cases, the contracting authorities shall award their public works contracts by the open procedure or by the restricted procedure.'

17 Finally, Article 11(2) and (9) of Directive 93/37 provides:

`2. Contracting authorities who wish to award a public works contract by open, restricted or negotiated procedure referred to in Article 7(2), shall make known their intention by means of a notice.

9. The notices referred to in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 shall be published in full in the Official Journal of the European Communities and in the TED data bank in the original languages. A summary of the important elements of each notice shall be published in the other official languages of the Community, the original text alone being authentic.'

18 According to Article 36(1) of Directive 93/37, Directive 71/305 is repealed, together with the provisions which amended it, without prejudice to the obligations of the Member States concerning the deadlines for transposition into national law and for application.

19 Directive 89/440 is one of the directives which amended Directive 71/305, prior to the adoption of Directive 93/37.

20 With the exception of a few differences in drafting, the provisions of Directive 71/305 as amended by Directive 89/440 concerning the definition of contracting authorities (Article 1(b)), the definition of the material scope (Article 4a), the procedures to be applied by the contracting authorities (Article 5) and the detailed rules concerning the publication of notices with which they were to comply, in particular when applying the negotiated procedure (Article 12(2) and (9)) were identical to the corresponding provisions of Directive 93/37, reproduced in paragraphs 14 to 17 above.

The application

21 As a preliminary point, it should be noted that, in its application, the Commission claims that the Kingdom of Belgium has failed to comply with Directives 89/440 and 93/37. It is apparent from the documents before the Court that Directive 89/440 was in force when the first tendering procedure was initiated and that Directive 93/37 was in force when the procedure relating to Lot No 4 was initiated. Furthermore, it should be recalled that Directive 93/37 repealed and replaced Directive 71/305, including the provisions which amended it, inter alia those in Directive 89/440.

22 The Commission argues that, in the present case, since `non-open' procedures were applied, without a contract notice and without publication in the OJEC, the Belgian Government failed to comply with Directive 89/440 and Article 11(2) and (9) of Directive 93/37.

23 It also points out that, in order to award a contract by negotiated procedure, the conditions laid down in Article 7 of Directive 93/37 must be satisfied. Thus, a contracting authority may only award a contract by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a notice when the conditions laid down in Article 7(3) of that directive are satisfied.

24 Therefore, by applying a negotiated procedure for the second phase of Lot No 4, notwithstanding the fact that none of the justifications required by Article 7 of Directive 93/37 were satisfied, the Kingdom of Belgium infringed that provision.

25 In order to resolve the dispute now before the Court, it is first necessary to consider whether the Vlaamse Raad is a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 71/305 as amended by Article 1(1) of Directive 89/440, and within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37.

26 The definition of contracting authority, which is identical in both directives, states that, for the purposes of each, `"contracting authorities" shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law'.

27 The term `the State' referred to by that provision necessarily encompasses all the bodies which exercise legislative, executive and judicial powers. The same is true of the bodies which, in a federal state, exercise those powers at federal level.

28 Furthermore, in Case 31/87 Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635, paragraphs 11 to 13, the Court, after stating that the term `the State', within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 71/305 should be interpreted in functional terms, held that a local land consolidation committee fell within that definition notwithstanding the fact that it was not an integral part of the State administration in formal terms. It would be inconsistent to hold that a legislative body does not fall within the definition of the State for the purposes of the Community directives on public works contracts, when a body which is not an integral part of the State administration in formal terms has been held to fall within that definition for the purposes of the application of one of those directives.

29 It follows that a legislative body such as the Vlaamse Raad must be held as falling within the definition of the State and thus constituting a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 71/305 as amended by Article 1(1) of Directive 89/440, and within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37.

30 Furthermore, it is not disputed that each of the lots which were the subject of the works contracts put out to tender by the Vlaamse Raad exceeded the threshold laid down by Article 4a of Directive 71/305, as inserted by Article 1(6) of Directive 89/440, and by Article 6 of Directive 93/37.

31 In those circumstances, the contracts put out to tender by the Vlaamse Raad fell within the scope of Directive 71/305, as amended by Directive 89/440, and Directive 93/37 and should therefore have been awarded in accordance with the rules set out therein.

32 Among those rules, Article 12(2) and (9) of Directive 71/305, as amended by Article 1(12) of Directive 89/440, provides that contracting authorities who wish to award a public works contract by open, restricted or negotiated procedure referred to in Article 5(2) are to make known their intention by means of a notice published in the OJEC.

33 Similarly, Article 11(2) and (9) of Directive 93/37 requires `contracting authorities who wish to award a public works contract by open, restricted or negotiated procedure referred to in Article 7(2)' to make known their intention by publishing a notice in the OJEC.

34 It follows from those provisions that the obligation to publish a notice does not exist only when the contracting authorities intend to award a public works contract by negotiated procedure referred to in Article 5(3) of Directive 71/305, as amended by Directive 89/440, or in Article 7(3) of Directive 93/37.

35 In the present case, the Belgian Government does not contest the fact that no notice was published in the OJEC, nor the fact that the conditions laid down in Article 5(3) of Directive 71/305, as amended by Directive 89/440, and in Article 7(3) of Directive 93/37 for carrying out a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a notice were not satisfied.

36 At the hearing, however, the Belgian Government referred to Article 4 of Directive 93/37 in support of a submission that, under certain circumstances, a Member State could legitimately dispense with the obligations laid down in that directive.

37 That article provides that Directive 93/37 does not apply to:

`(a) contracts awarded in the fields referred to in Articles 2, 7, 8 and 9 of Directive 90/531/EEC or fulfilling the conditions in Article 6(2) of that Directive;

(b) works contracts which are declared secret or the execution of which must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions in force in the Member State concerned or when the protection of the basic interests of the Member State's security so requires'.

38 Quite apart from the question of the belated nature of that plea, which the Belgian Government raised for the first time at the hearing without submitting any valid reason to explain the delay, it should be observed that the Belgian Government has not put forward anything to show that the works contracts put out to tender by the Vlaamse Raad came within one of the situations referred to in Article 4.

39 That plea must therefore be dismissed.

40 The Belgian Government also submitted that, at national level, the Law of 14 July 1976, which was in force at the material time, Article 2(1) of which provides that `Every Minister has authority, within the limits of his powers, to adopt decisions concerning the conclusion and performance of contracts of the State and the bodies which fall under its hierarchial authority', did not apply to legislative bodies, inter alia, because the independence and supremacy of the legislative authority under the Belgian Constitution prevented the legislative chambers, and thus the Vlaamse Raad, from being subject to Ministerial authority.

41 First, it should be pointed out that this plea, based on national law, affects neither the finding that the Vlaamse Raad constitutes a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 71/305 as amended by Article 1(1) of Directive 89/440, and within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, nor the resulting obligation to comply with the provisions of those directives as regards publication and award procedures.

42 According to settled case-law, a Member State cannot rely on provisions, practices or circumstances existing in its internal legal order in order to justify its failure to comply with the obligations and time-limits laid down by a directive (see, in particular, Case C-144/97 Commission v France [1998] ECR I-613, paragraph 8).

43 That plea must therefore also be dismissed.

44 In view of all the foregoing considerations, it must be held that

- by failing to publish a contract notice in the OJEC both for the overall project and for each of the lots relating to the construction of the premises of the Vlaamse Raad, and

- by failing to apply the award procedures laid down in Directive 71/305, as amended by Directive 89/440, and Directive 93/337 and, more specifically, by awarding Lot No 4 by negotiated procedure without justification, the Kingdom of Belgium has failed to fulfil its obligations under those directives and, more specifically, under Articles 7 and 11(2) and (9) of Directive 93/37.

Judgment

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 24 September 1996, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EC Treaty for a declaration that, by failing to adopt within the prescribed period the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and, in the alternative, by failing to inform the Commission forthwith of the adoption of such measures, the French Republic had failed to fulfil its obligations under the directive and in particular Article 34 thereof.

2 The first paragraph of Article 34(1) of Directive 93/36 provides that Member States are to adopt the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with the directive before 14 June 1994 and immediately inform the Commission thereof.

3 On 9 August 1994, having received no notification from the French Government of measures transposing Directive 93/36, the Commission gave the Government formal notice to submit its observations within two months, pursuant to the first paragraph of Article 169 of the Treaty.

4 Having received no reply, the Commission addressed a reasoned opinion to the French Government on 10 May 1995, requiring it to adopt the necessary measures within two months of the date of notification.

5 By letter of 17 August 1995, the French authorities informed the Commission that a bill had been laid before the Senate.

6 Having received no information to the effect that the legislative process had been completed, the Commission brought the present action.

7 The French Republic does not deny the failure to fulfil its obligations and merely states that, in order to remedy the situation, a bill together with implementing decrees will be adopted shortly.

8 Since Directive 93/36 has not been transposed within the period prescribed therein, the Commission's action must be held to be well founded.

9 The Court therefore finds that, by failing to adopt within the prescribed period the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with Directive 93/36, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the first paragraph of Article 34(1) of that directive.

Costs

10 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the French Republic has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

hereby:

1. Declares that, by failing to adopt within the prescribed period the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the first paragraph of Article 34(1) of that directive;

2. Orders the French Republic to pay the costs.

of such measures, the French Republic had failed to fulfil its obligations under the directive and in particular Article 45 thereof.

2 Article 45(1) of Directive 93/38 provides that Member States are to adopt the measures necessary to comply with the directive by 1 July 1994 and inform the Commission thereof forthwith.

3 As the Commission did not receive notification from the French Government of the measures for implementing Directive 93/38, it initiated the procedure under Article 169 of the Treaty by sending the Government a letter of formal notice on 20 January 1995.

4 That letter having produced no effect, the Commission delivered a reasoned opinion to the French Government on 16 January 1996, requiring it to adopt the necessary measures within two months from the date of notification.

5 By letter of 17 August 1995, the French authorities informed the Commission that a bill had been laid before the Senate.

6 Having received no information to the effect that the legislative process had been completed, the Commission brought the present action.

7 The French Republic does not deny the failure to fulfil its obligations and merely states that a bill together with implementing decrees will be adopted shortly.

8 Since Directive 93/38 has not been transposed within the period prescribed therein, the Commission's action must be held to be well founded.

9 The Court therefore finds that, by failing to adopt within the prescribed period the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with Directive 93/38, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 45(1) of that directive.

Judgment of the Court (Fourth Chamber)
of 16 October 1997
Hera SpA v Unità sanitaria locale no 3 - genovese (USL) and Impresa Romagnoli SpA.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Liguria - Italy.
Directive 93/37/EEC - Public procurement - Abnormally low tenders.
Case C-304/96.

1 Preliminary rulings - Jurisdiction of the Court - Limits - Question manifestly irrelevant

(EC Treaty, Art. 177)

2 Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 93/37 - Award of contracts - Abnormally low tenders - Rejected on application of the provisions in Article 30(4), last subparagraph, for derogation - Option available until 31 December 1992

3 With regard to the procedure for preliminary rulings under Article 177 of the Treaty, it is for the national courts alone, before which the proceedings are pending and which must assume responsibility for the judgment to be given, to determine, having regard to the particular features of each case, both the need for a preliminary ruling to enable them to give judgment and the relevance of the questions which they refer to the Court. A request for a preliminary ruling from a national court may be rejected only if it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law sought bears no relation to the facts of the main action or to its purpose.

4 Article 30(4), last subparagraph, of Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, which introduces temporary, derogating arrangements constituting an exception to the normal procedure laid down by Community legislation, must be interpreted as precluding contracting authorities from rejecting abnormally low tenders after 31 December 1992 without following the verification procedure provided for in the first subparagraph of that provision.

having regard to the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 29 May 1997,

gives the following

Judgment

1 By order of 4 July 1996, received at the Court on 19 September 1996, the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale (Regional Administrative Court), Liguria, referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty a question on the interpretation of Article 30(4) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54).

2 That question was raised in proceedings brought by Hera SpA against Unità Sanitaria Locale No 3 - Genovese (the local health authority, hereinafter `the USL') and Impresa Romagnoli SpA concerning a decision excluding Hera from a tendering procedure.

3 On 19 December 1995 the USL published an invitation to tender for a contract for works relating to the internal reorganization and technological adaptation of its property, the `Vecchio Istituto del Presidio Socio Sanitario' in Genoa. According to the invitation to tender, the contract was to be awarded to the tenderer offering the maximum discount against the base price of LIT 16 463 000 000.

4 Hera submitted the best tender, offering a discount of 17.3%. However, that bid was excluded from the tendering procedure on the ground that it was abnormally low, with the result that the contract was awarded to Impresa Romagnoli SpA.

5 The contracting authority's decision was based on Article 21(1a) of Law No 109 (GURI, Supplement No 29, of 19 February 1994), as amended by Decree Law No 101 (GURI No 78 of 3 April 1995) and Law No 216 (GURI No 127 of 2 June 1995). This provides that `until 1 January 1997, tenders in which the percentage discount exceeds by more than one-fifth the average of the discounts in all the tenders admitted shall be excluded from public works contracts for amounts above or below the Community threshold'.

6 In proceedings before the national court contesting the contracting authority's decision, Hera claimed, inter alia, that the USL had infringed Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37, which provides that:

`If, for a given contract, tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request, in writing, details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received.

However, until the end of 1992, if current national law so permits, the contracting authority may exceptionally, without any discrimination on grounds of nationality, reject tenders which are abnormally low in relation to the works, without being obliged to comply with the procedure provided for in the first subparagraph if the number of such tenders for a particular contract is so high that implementation of this procedure would lead to a considerable delay and jeopardize the public [interest] attaching to the execution of the contract in question. Recourse to this exceptional procedure shall be mentioned in the notice referred to in Article 11(5).'

7 The national court pointed out that the USL had correctly applied the Italian legislation providing for the exclusion of abnormally low tenders. It held, however, that there was a discrepancy between that legislation and Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37.

8 The national court decided to stay proceedings in the case pending a preliminary ruling from the Court on whether the Community rules `allow - and if so in what cases - a Member State to make temporary exceptions regarding the entry into force of directives where the latter set an express time-limit'.

9 It is clear from the order for reference that the national court's question is essentially whether Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 is to be interpreted as allowing the contracting authority to reject abnormally low tenders after 31 December 1992 without following the verification procedure provided for in the first subparagraph of that provision.

Admissibility

10 The Italian Government maintains that there is no need to reply to the question referred, given that provisions corresponding to those of Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 already had direct effect, that the Directive does not allow Member States to make any exceptions and that an explanatory circular has been published by the Italian Ministry of Public Works, calling on the authorities concerned to interpret and apply Article 21(1a) of Law No 109 in a manner consistent with Directive 93/37.

11 In that regard the Court has consistently held that it is for the national courts alone, before which the proceedings are pending and which must assume responsibility for the judgment to be given, to determine, having regard to the particular features of each case, both the need for a preliminary ruling to enable them to give judgment and the relevance of the questions which they refer to the Court. A request for a preliminary ruling from a national court may be rejected only if it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law sought bears no relation to the facts of the main action or to its purpose (see Case C-143/94 Furlanis v ANAS and Itinera [1995] ECR I-3633, paragraph 12). However, that is not the case here.

12 The Court must therefore answer the question referred.

The question

13 It should be recalled at the outset that, as the Commission has pointed out, Directive 93/37 consolidates Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971(II), p. 682) and subsequent amendments thereto. Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 corresponds to Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305 as amended by Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989 (OJ 1989 L 210, p. 1).

14 Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 lays down strict conditions circumscribing the contracting authority's power to waive the verification procedure for tenders which appear to be abnormally low. It may dispense with that procedure - exceptionally and provided that it does not discriminate on grounds of nationality - if the number of such tenders for a particular contract is so high that implementation of the procedure would lead to a considerable delay and jeopardize the public interest attaching to the execution of the contract in question. Moreover, that option is available only until 31 December 1992.

15 Furthermore, the Court, when called upon in Furlanis to adjudicate with regard to the provision in question - as it appeared in Directive 71/305, amended by Directive 89/440 - stated in paragraphs 17 and 20 of its judgment that the exception provided for was available only for procedures in which the definitive award was made by 31 December 1992 at the latest, emphasizing that the provision in question, which introduces temporary, derogating arrangements constituting an exception to the normal procedure, must be interpreted strictly.

16 It should therefore be stated in reply to the question referred for a preliminary ruling that Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 must be interpreted as precluding contracting authorities from rejecting abnormally low tenders after 31 December 1992 without following the verification procedure provided for in the first subparagraph of that provision.

Costs

17 The costs incurred by the Italian Government and by the Commission of the European Communities, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the proceedings pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

(Fourth Chamber),

in answer to the question referred to it by the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale della Liguria by order of 4 July 1996, hereby rules:

Article 30(4) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts must be interpreted as precluding contracting authorities from rejecting abnormally low tenders after 31 December 1992 without following the verification procedure provided for in the first subparagraph of that provision.

Judgment of the Court
of 17 September 1997
Dorsch Consult Ingenieurgesellschaft mbH v Bundesbaugesellschaft Berlin mbH.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Vergabeüberwachungsausschuß des Bundes - Germany.
Meaning of 'national court or tribunal' for the purposes of Article 177 of the Treaty - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Directive 92/50/EEC - National review body.
Case C-54/96.

1 Preliminary rulings - Reference to the Court - National court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the Treaty - Definition - Body competent to hear appeals concerning the award of public contracts

(EC Treaty, Art. 177)

2 Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - Provision requiring Member States to set up appeal bodies - Non-transposition - Consequences - Power of appeal bodies having competence in relation to procedures for the award of public works contracts and public supply contracts to hear appeals relating to procedures for the award of public service contracts as well - Not a necessary consequence - Obligation for the national courts to determine whether the national law in force provides a possibility of appeal

3 In order to determine whether a body making a reference to the Court of Justice is a court or tribunal for the purposes of Article 177 of the Treaty, which is a question governed by Community law alone, a number of factors must be taken into account, such as whether the body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, whether it applies rules of law and whether it is independent. The German Federal Public Procurement Awards Supervisory Board, which is established by law as the only body competent to determine, upon application of rules of law and after hearing the parties, whether lower review bodies have committed an infringement of the provisions applicable to procedures for the award of public contracts, whose decisions are binding and which carries out its task independently and under its own responsibility, satisfies those criteria.

4 It does not follow from Article 41 of Directive 92/50, relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, which requires Member States to ensure that decisions taken by contract-awarding authorities can be reviewed effectively, that, where the directive has not been transposed by the end of the period laid down for that purpose, the appeal bodies of the Member States having competence in relation to procedures for the award of public works contracts and public supply contracts may also hear appeals relating to procedures for the award of public service contracts. However, in order to observe the requirement that domestic law must be interpreted in conformity with the directive and the requirement that the rights of individuals must be protected effectively, the national court must determine whether the relevant provisions of its domestic law allow recognition of a right for individuals to bring an appeal in relation to awards of public service contracts. In this regard, the national court may be required in particular to determine whether such a right of appeal may be exercised before the same bodies as those established to hear appeals concerning the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts.

having regard to the Report for the Hearing, after hearing the oral observations of Dorsch Consult Ingenieurgesellschaft mbH, of the German Government and of the Commission at the hearing on 28 January 1997, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 15 May 1997,

gives the following

Judgment

Costs

47 The costs incurred by the German Government and by the Commission of the European Communities, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the proceedings pending before the national tribunal, the decision on costs is a matter for that body.

On those grounds,

THE COURT,

in answer to the question referred to it by the Vergabeüberwachungsausschuß des Bundes by order of 5 February 1996, hereby rules:

It does not follow from Article 41 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts that, where that directive has not been transposed by the end of the period laid down for that purpose, the appeal bodies of the Member States having competence in relation to procedures for the award of public works contracts and public supply contracts may also hear appeals relating to procedures for the award of public service contracts. However, in order to observe the requirement that domestic law must be interpreted in conformity with Directive 92/50 and the requirement that the rights of individuals must be protected effectively, the national court must determine whether the relevant provisions of its domestic law allow recognition of a right for individuals to bring an appeal in relation to awards of public service contracts. In circumstances such as those arising in the present case, the national court must determine in particular whether such a right of appeal may be exercised before the same bodies as those established to hear appeals concerning the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts.

1 By order of 5 February 1996, received at the Court on 21 February 1996, the Vergabeüberwachungsausschuß des Bundes (Federal Public Procurement Awards Supervisory Board, hereinafter `the Federal Supervisory Board') referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty a question on the interpretation of Article 41 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

2 The question has been raised in proceedings between Dorsch Consult Ingenieurgesellschaft mbH (hereinafter `Dorsch Consult') and Bundesbaugesellschaft Berlin mbH (hereinafter `the awarding authority') concerning a procedure for the award of a service contract.

3 On 28 June 1995 the awarding authority published in the Official Journal of the European Communities a notice advertising the award of a contract for architectural and construction engineering services. On 25 August 1995 Dorsch Consult submitted its tender to the awarding authority. In all, 18 tenders were received, of which seven, including that of Dorsch Consult, were chosen for further consideration. On 30 November 1995, two companies, together with an architect, were chosen to form a working party to perform the services which were the subject of the contract. The contract itself was signed on 12 January 1996. Dorsch Consult was informed on 25 January 1996 that its tender was not the most advantageous economically.

4 Having learned that the awarding authority had not chosen it for the contract but before its tender was formally rejected, Dorsch Consult had applied, on 14 December 1995, to the Bundesministerium für Raumordnung, Bauwesen und Städtebau (Federal Ministry for Regional Planning, Building and Urban Planning), as the body responsible for reviewing public procurement awards (Vergabeprüfstelle), seeking to have the contract-awarding procedure stopped and the contract awarded to it. It considered that, in concluding the contract with another undertaking, the awarding authority had acted in breach of both Directive 92/50 and Paragraph 57a(1) of the Haushaltsgrundsätzegesetz (Budget Principles Law, hereinafter `the HGrG'). By decision of 20 December 1995, the review body held that it had no competence in the matter on the ground that, under Paragraphs 57a and 57b of the HGrG, it had no power to review the award of contracts when they related to services.

5 In those circumstances, on 27 December 1995 Dorsch Consult lodged an application for a determination by the Federal Supervisory Board on the ground that the review body had wrongly declined jurisdiction. It stated that, in so far as Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33) had not been transposed, it was directly applicable and had to be complied with by the review bodies.

6 The Federal Supervisory Board found that the Federal Republic of Germany had not yet transposed Directive 92/50. Although a circular had been issued by the Federal Ministry for Economic Affairs on 11 June 1993 stating that the directive was directly applicable and that it had to be applied by the administration, it could not be regarded as a proper transposition of the directive. According to the Federal Supervisory Board, where public service contracts are concerned, German domestic law does not empower a review body to determine whether the provisions governing public procurement have been complied with. It is quite possible that the provisions of Directive 92/50 have direct effect. Finally, the Federal Supervisory Board is unsure whether, by virtue of Article 41 of Directive 92/50, the competence of existing review bodies also applies directly to the award of public service contracts.

7 The Federal Supervisory Board therefore suspended proceedings and referred the following question to the Court of Justice:

`Is Article 41 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 to be interpreted to the effect that, after 30 June 1993, the bodies set up by the Member States which, under Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989, are competent to review procedures for the award of public contracts falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC and 77/62/EEC are also competent to review procedures for the award of public service contracts within the meaning of Directive 92/50/EEC in order to determine whether alleged infringements of Community public procurement law or of domestic rules enacted in implementation of that law have taken place?'

Legal background

8 The purpose of Directive 92/50 is to regulate the award of public service contracts. It applies to contracts having a value above a certain limit. As far as the matter of legal protection is concerned, Article 41 provides:

`Article 1(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC... shall be replaced by the following:

> "1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC, and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or nation[al] rules implementing that law."'

.9 In accordance with Article 44(1), Directive 92/50 had to be transposed by the Member States before 1 June 1993.

10 Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665 provides:

`Where bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character, written reasons for their decisions shall always be given. Furthermore, in such a case, provision must be made to guarantee procedures whereby any allegedly illegal measure taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the EEC Treaty and independent of both the contracting authority and the review body.

The members of such an independent body shall be appointed and leave office under the same conditions as members of the judiciary as regards the authority responsible for their appointment, their period of office, and their removal. At least the President of this independent body shall have the same legal and professional qualifications as members of the judiciary. The independent body shall take its decisions following a procedure in which both sides are heard, and these decisions shall, by means determined by each Member State, be legally binding.'

11 Directive 89/665 was transposed into German law by a Law of 26 November 1993 (BGBl. I, p. 1928), which supplemented the HGrG by adding Paragraphs 57a to 57c.

12 Paragraph 57a(1) of the HGrG provides:

`In order to meet obligations arising from directives of the European Communities, the Federal Government shall regulate, by means of regulations, with the assent of the Bundesrat, the award of public supply contracts, public works contracts and public service contracts and the procedures for awarding public service contracts...'

13 Paragraph 57b(1) of the HGrG makes provision for the procedures for awarding public supply contracts, public works contracts and public service contracts mentioned in Paragraph 57a(1) to be reviewed by review bodies. Under Paragraph 57b(2), the Federal Government is to adopt, in the form of regulations, with the assent of the Bundesrat, the provisions governing the competence of those review bodies. According to subparagraph (3), a review body must initiate a review procedure if there is evidence of a breach of procurement rules applicable under a regulation adopted pursuant to Paragraph 57a. In particular, it must initiate that procedure where a person who has, or had, an interest in a particular contract claims that the aforementioned provisions were contravened.

14 According to Paragraph 57b(4) of the HGrG, the review body must determine whether the provisions adopted pursuant to Paragraph 57a have been complied with. It may compel the awarding authority to annul unlawful measures or decisions or to take lawful measures or decisions. It may also provisionally suspend a procedure for the award of a contract. Under Paragraph 57b(5), a review body may require the awarding authority to provide the information necessary for it to carry out its task. Subparagraph (6) provides that actions for damages in the event of breach of the provisions applicable in relation to the award of contracts are to be brought before the ordinary courts.

15 Paragraph 57c(1) of the HGrG provides that the Federation and the Länder must each establish a supervisory board, performing its functions independently and on its own responsibility, to supervise procedures for the award of contracts in the fields concerning them. According to subparagraphs (2), (3) and (4) of that provision, each supervisory board is to sit in chambers composed of a chairman, an official assessor and a lay assessor, who are to be independent and subject only to observance of the law. The chairman and one of the assessors must be public officials. As regards annulment or withdrawal of their appointment and their independence and dismissal, various provisions of the Richtergesetz (Law on the Judiciary) apply by analogy. As regards the annulment or withdrawal of a lay member's appointment, certain provisions of the Richtergesetz also apply by analogy. Where a lay member commits a serious breach of his duties, his appointment must be annulled. The term of office of a supervisory board's lay members is five years.

16 Under subparagraph (5), the supervisory board is to determine the legality of determinations made by review bodies but it does not review the way in which they ascertain the facts. Where a determination is found to be unlawful, the supervisory board directs the review body to make a fresh determination taking account of its own legal findings. Paragraph 57c(6) of the HGrG provides that any person claiming that the provisions governing the award of public contracts have been infringed may make application to the supervisory board within a period of four weeks following the relevant determination of the review body.

17 Paragraph 57c(7) of the HGrG establishes a Federal Supervisory Board (Vergabeüberwachungsausschuß des Bundes). Its official members are the chairman and assessors from the decision-making departments of the Bundeskartellamt (Federal Cartel Office). The president of the Bundeskartellamt decides on the composition of the Federal Supervisory Board and the formation and composition of its chambers. He appoints lay assessors and their deputies on a proposal from the leading public-law trade boards. He also exercises administrative supervisory control on behalf of the Federal Government. The Federal Supervisory Board adopts its own internal rules of procedure.

18 Pursuant to Paragraph 57a of the HGrG the Federal Government adopted a regulation on the award of contracts. This regulation is, however, applicable only to supply contracts and works contracts and not to contracts for services. Directive 92/50 has not yet been transposed by the Federal Republic of Germany.

19 Pursuant to Paragraphs 57b and 57c of the HGrG, the Federal Government has adopted a regulation on the procedure for review of public procurement awards (Verordnung über das Nachprüfungsvesfahren für öffentliche Verträge, BGBl. I 1994, p. 324). Paragraph 2(3) of the regulation provides:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

`The review body's determination regarding the awarding authority shall be given in writing, contain a statement of reasons and be notified without delay. The review body shall send without delay to the person claiming that there has been a breach of public procurement provisions the text of its determination, shall draw attention to the possibility of making application for a determination by the supervisory board within a period of four weeks and shall name the competent supervisory board.'

20 Paragraph 3 provides:

`(1) Procedure before the Public Procurement Awards Supervisory Board shall be governed by Paragraph 57c of the Haushaltsgrundsätzegesetz and by this regulation according to the rules of procedure which the board shall adopt.

(2) The Public Procurement Awards Supervisory Board shall be obliged, under Article 177 of the Treaty establishing the European Community, to make a reference to the Court of Justice of the European Communities when it considers that a preliminary ruling on a question relating to the interpretation of that Treaty or to the validity and interpretation of a legal act adopted on that basis is necessary in order to enable it to make its determination.

(3) Before a chamber makes any determination, the parties to the procedure before the procurement review body shall be heard.

(4) A chamber shall not be empowered to suspend a procedure for the award of a contract or to give other directions concerning a procedure for the award of a contract.

(5) A chamber shall reach its determination by an absolute majority of votes. Determinations shall be in writing, contain a statement of reasons and shall be sent to the parties without delay.'

21 The rules of procedure of the Federal Supervisory Board regulate the organization and allocation of cases and the conduct of procedure, which consists of a hearing to which the persons concerned are called, and the conditions governing determinations of the Federal Supervisory Board.

Admissibility

22 Before the question submitted by the national court is addressed, it is necessary to examine whether the Federal Supervisory Board, in the procedure which led to this reference for a preliminary ruling, is to be regarded as a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the Treaty. That question must be distinguished from the question whether the Federal Supervisory Board fulfils the conditions laid down in Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665, which is not in point in this case.

23 In order to determine whether a body making a reference is a court or tribunal for the purposes of Article 177 of the Treaty, which is a question governed by Community law alone, the Court takes account of a number of factors, such as whether the body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, whether it applies rules of law and whether it is independent (see, in particular, the judgments in Case 61/65 Vaassen (neé Göbbels) [1966] ECR 261; Case 14/86 Pretore di Salo v Persons unkown [1987] ECR 2545, paragraph 7; Case 109/88 Danfoss [1989] ECR 3199, paragraphs 7 and 8; Case C-393/92 Almelo and Others [1994] ECR I-1477; and Case C-111/94 Job Centre [1995] ECR I-3361, paragraph 9).

24 As regards the question of establishment by law, the Commission states that the HGrG is a framework budgetary law which does not give rise to rights or obligations for citizens as legal persons. It points out that the Federal Supervisory Board's action is confined to reviewing determinations made by review bodies. However, in the field of public service contracts, there is, as yet, no competent review body. The Commission therefore concludes that in such matters the Federal Supervisory Board has no basis in law on which it can act.

25 It is sufficient to note in this regard that the Federal Supervisory Board was established by Paragraph 57c(7) of the HGrG. Its establishment by law cannot therefore be disputed. In determining establishment by law, it is immaterial that domestic legislation has not conferred on the Federal Supervisory Board powers in the specific area of public service contracts.

26 Nor is there any doubt about the permanent existence of the Federal Supervisory Board.

27 The Commission also submits that the Federal Supervisory Board does not have compulsory jurisdiction, a condition which, in its view, may mean two things: either that the parties must be required to apply to the relevant review body for settlement of their dispute or that determinations of that body are to be binding. The Commission, adopting the second interpretation, concludes that German legislation does not provide for the determinations made by the Federal Supervisory Board to be enforceable.

28 It must be stated first of all that Paragraph 57c of the HGrG establishes the supervisory board as the only body for reviewing the legality of determinations made by review bodies. In order to establish a breach of the provisions governing public procurement, application must be made to the supervisory board.

29 Secondly, under Paragraph 57c(5) of the HGrG, when the supervisory board finds that determinations made by a review body are unlawful, it directs that body to make a fresh determination, in conformity with the supervisory board's findings on points of law. It follows that determinations of the supervisory board are binding.

30 The Commission also submits that since, according to the Federal Supervisory Board's own evidence, procedure before that body is not inter partes, it cannot be regarded as a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the Treaty.

31 It must be reiterated that the requirement that the procedure before the hearing body concerned must be inter partes is not an absolute criterion. Besides, under Paragraph 3(3) of the Verordnung über das Nachprüfungsverfahren für öffentliche Aufträge, the parties to the procedure before the procurement review body must be heard before any determination is made by the chamber concerned.

32 According to the Commission, the criterion relating to the application of rules of law is not met either, because, under Paragraph 57c of the HGrG and Paragraph 3(1) of the Verordnung über das Nachprüfungsverfahren für öffentliche Aufträge, procedure before the Federal Supervisory Board is governed by rules of procedure which it itself adopts, which do not take effect in relation to third parties and which are not published.

33 It is, however, undisputed that the Federal Supervisory Board is required to apply provisions governing the award of public contracts which are laid down in Community directives and in domestic regulations adopted to transpose them. Furthermore, general procedural requirements, such as the duty to hear the parties, to make determinations by an absolute majority of votes and to give reasons for them are laid down in Paragraph 3 of the Verordnung über das Nachprüfungsverfahren für öffentliche Aufträge, which is published in the Bundesgesetzblatt. Consequently, the Federal Supervisory Board applies rules of law.

34 Finally, both Dorsch Consult and the Commission consider that the Federal Supervisory Board is not independent. They point out that it is linked to the organizational structure of the Bundeskartellamt, which is itself subject to supervision by the Ministry for Economic Affairs, that the term of office of the chairman and the official assessors is not fixed and that the provisions for guaranteeing impartiality apply only to lay members.

35 It must be observed first of all that, according to Paragraph 57c(1) of the HGrG, the supervisory board carries out its task independently and under its own responsibility. According to Paragraph

57c(2) of the HGrG, the members of the chambers are independent and subject only to observance of the law.

36 Under Paragraph 57c(3) of the HGrG, the main provisions of the Richtergesetz concerning annulment or withdrawal of their appointments and concerning their independence and removal from office apply by analogy to official members of the chambers. In general, the provisions of the Richtergesetz concerning annulment and withdrawal of judges' appointments apply also to lay members. Furthermore, the impartiality of lay members is ensured by Paragraph 57c(2) of the HGrG, which provides that they must not hear cases in which they themselves were involved through participation in the decision-making process regarding the award of a contract or in which they are, or were, tenderers or representatives of tenderers.

37 It must also be pointed out that, in this particular instance, the Federal Supervisory Board exercises a judicial function, for it can find that a determination made by a review body is unlawful and it can direct the review body to make a fresh determination.

38 It follows from all the foregoing that the Federal Supervisory Board, in the procedure which led to this reference for a preliminary ruling, is to be regarded as a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 177 of the Treaty, so that the question it has referred to the Court is admissible.

Substance

39 By its question, the Federal Supervisory Board is asking in effect whether it follows from Article 41 of Directive 92/50 that, if that directive has not been transposed by the end of the period laid down for that purpose, the appeal bodies of the Member States having competence in relation to procedures for the award of public works contracts and public supply contracts may also hear appeals relating to procedures for the award of public service contracts.

40 It must be stated first of all that it is for the legal system of each Member State to determine which court or tribunal has jurisdiction to hear disputes involving individual rights derived from Community law. However, it is the Member States' responsibility to ensure that those rights are effectively protected in each case. Subject to that reservation, it is not for the Court to involve itself in the resolution of questions of jurisdiction to which the classification of certain legal situations based on Community law may give rise in the national judicial system (judgment in Case C-446/93 SEIM [1996] ECR I-73, paragraph 32).

41 Although Article 41 of Directive 92/50 requires the Member States to adopt the measures necessary to ensure effective review in the field of public service contracts, it does not indicate which national bodies are to be the competent bodies for this purpose or whether these bodies are to be the same as those which the Member States have designated in the field of public works contracts and public supply contracts.

42 It is, however, common ground that Paragraphs 57a to 57c of the HGrG were designed to transpose Directive 89/665 and that Paragraph 57a was to be the basis for the transposition of Directive 92/50 which the Federal Government has still not undertaken.

43 That being the case, it must be reiterated first of all that the Member States' obligation arising from a directive to achieve the result envisaged by the directive and their duty under Article 5 of the EC Treaty to take all appropriate measures, whether general or particular, to ensure fulfilment of that obligation is binding on all the authorities of Member States, including, for matters within their jurisdiction, the courts. It follows that, when applying national law, whether adopted before or after the directive, the national court having to interpret that law must do so, as far as possible, in the light of the wording and the purpose of the directive so as to achieve the result it has in view and thereby comply with the third paragraph of Article 189 of the EC Treaty (see the judgments in Case C-106/89 Marleasing [1990] ECR I-4135, paragraph 8; Case C-334/92 Wagner Miret [1993] ECR I-6911, paragraph 20; and in Case C-91/92 Faccini Dori [1994] ECR I-3325, paragraph 26).

44 Secondly, the question of the designation of a body competent to hear appeals in relation to public service contracts is relevant even where Directive 92/50 has not been transposed. Where a Member State has failed to take the implementing measures required or has adopted measures which do not conform to a directive, the Court has recognized, subject to certain conditions, the right of individuals to rely in law on a directive as against a defaulting Member State. Although this minimum guarantee cannot justify a Member State absolving itself from taking in due time implementing measures sufficient to meet the purpose of each directive (see, in particular, the judgment in Case C-253/98 Commission v Germany [1996] ECR I-2423, paragraph 13), it may nevertheless have the effect of enabling individuals to rely, as against a Member State, on the substantive provisions of Directive 92/50.

45 If the relevant domestic provisions cannot be interpreted in conformity with Directive 92/50, the persons concerned, using the appropriate domestic law procedures, may claim compensation for the damage incurred owing to the failure to transpose the directive within the time prescribed (see, in particular, the judgment in Joined Cases C-178/94, C-179/94, C-188/94, C-189/94 and C-190/94 Dillenkofer and Others [1996] ECR I-4845).

46 The answer to be given to the question referred to the Court must accordingly be that it does not follow from Article 41 of Directive 92/50 that, where that directive has not been transposed by the end of the period laid down for that purpose, the appeal bodies of the Member States having competence in relation to procedures for the award of public works contracts and public supply contracts may also hear appeals relating to procedures for the award of public service contracts. However, in order to observe the requirement that domestic law must be interpreted in conformity with Directive 92/50 and the requirement that the rights of individuals must be protected effectively, the national court must determine whether the relevant provisions of its domestic law allow recognition of a right for individuals to bring an appeal in relation to awards of public service contracts. In circumstances such as those arising in the present case, the national court must determine in particular whether such a right of appeal may be exercised before the same bodies as those established to hear appeals concerning the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts.

Judgment of the Court of 15 January 1998
Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria AG and Others v Strohal Rotationsdruck GesmbH.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Bundesvergabeamt - Austria.
Public procurement - Procedure for the award of public works contracts - State printing office - Subsidiary pursuing commercial activities.
Case C-44/96.

1 Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 93/37 - Contracting authorities - Body governed by public law - Definition - Body such as the Austrian State printing office - Included - Public works contracts - Definition - Works contracts awarded by the body in question - Included irrespective of the nature of the contract

(Council Directive 93/37, Art. 1(a) and (b))

2 Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 93/37 - Contracting authorities - Body governed by public law - Definition - Undertaking carrying on commercial activities and owned by a contracting authority - Excluded - Public works contracts - Definition - Contract relating to a works project which, from the outset, falls within the objects of an undertaking which is not a contracting authority - Excluded

(Council Directive 93/37, Art. 1(a) and (b))

3 Economic and social cohesion - Structural operations - Community funding - Condition - Conformity of the action concerned with the relevant Community legislation - Funding of a works project not covered by the public procurement legislation - Not subject to compliance with the relevant review procedures

(Council Regulation No 2081/93, Art. 7(1); Council Directives 89/665 and 93/37, Art. 1(b))

4 The first subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts defines contracting authorities as, inter alia, bodies governed by public law; the second subparagraph provides that the latter means any body established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, having legal personality and closely dependent on the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law.

An entity such as the Osterreichische Staatsdruckerei (Austrian State Printing Office, `OS') must be regarded as a body governed by public law and thus as a contracting authority within the meaning of the provisions referred to above, in so far as

- the documents which the OS must produce are closely linked to public order and the institutional operation of the State and require guaranteed supply and production conditions which ensure that standards of confidentiality and security are observed, bearing in mind, in that respect, that the condition that the body must have been established for the `specific' purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, does not mean that it should be entrusted only, or even primarily, with meeting such needs;

- the OS has legal personality;

- the Director-General of the OS is appointed by a body consisting mainly of members appointed by the Federal Chancellery or various ministries, the OS is subject to scrutiny by the Court of Auditors, the majority of its shares are still held by the Austrian State and a State control service is responsible for monitoring the printed matter which is subject to security measures.

Works contracts entered into by that entity are to be considered to be public works contracts within the meaning of Article 1(a) of the directive whatever their nature and irrespective of the relative proportion, whether large or small, which they represent of the activities of the OS pursued for the purpose of meeting needs not having an industrial or commercial character.

5 An undertaking which carries on commercial activities and in which a contracting authority, within the meaning of the first subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, has a majority shareholding is not to be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of the second subparagraph of that provision - according to which it must be a body established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character - and thus as a contracting authority on the sole ground that that undertaking was established by the contracting authority or that the contracting authority transfers to it funds derived from activities pursued in order to meet needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character.

Furthermore, a public works contract is not subject to the provisions of the directive when it relates to a project which, from the outset, falls entirely within the objects of an undertaking which is not a contracting authority and when the works contracts relating to that project were entered into by a contracting authority on behalf of that undertaking.

6 Pursuant to Article 7(1) of Regulation No 2081/93, amending Regulation No 2052/88, measures financed by the Structural Funds or receiving assistance from the European Investment Bank or from another existing financial instrument are to be in conformity with the provisions of the Treaties, with the instruments adopted pursuant thereto and with Community policies, including those concerning the rules on competition, the award of public contracts and environmental protection and the application of the principle of equal opportunities for men and women. In that respect, the requirement that the measures referred to must be in conformity with Community law presupposes that those measures fall within the scope of the relevant Community legislation.

It follows that the aforementioned provision must be interpreted as meaning that Community funding of a works project is not conditional upon the recipients complying with the review procedures within the meaning of Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, if they are not themselves contracting authorities within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts.

Judgment

Costs

50 The costs incurred by the Austrian, French and Netherlands Governments and the Commission of the European Communities, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT,

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Bundesvergabeamt by order of 2 February 1996, hereby rules:

1. An entity such as the Osterreichische Staatsdruckerei must be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, and thus as a contracting authority within the meaning of the first subparagraph of that provision so that works contracts, of whatever nature, entered into by that entity are to be considered to be public works contracts within the meaning of Article 1(a) of that directive.

2. An undertaking which carries on commercial activities and in which a contracting authority has a majority shareholding is not to be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, and thus as a contracting authority within the meaning of that provision, on the sole ground that that undertaking was established by the contracting authority or that the contracting authority transferred to it funds which it has earned from activities pursued in order to meet needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character.

3. A public works contract is not subject to the provisions of Directive 93/37 when it relates to a project which, from the outset, falls entirely within the objects of an undertaking which is not a contracting authority and when the works contracts relating to that project were entered into by a contracting authority on behalf of that undertaking.

4. Article 7(1) of Council Regulation (EEC) No 2052/88 of 24 June 1988 on the tasks of the Structural Funds and their effectiveness and on coordination of their activities between themselves and with the operations of the European Investment Bank and the other existing financial instruments, as amended by Council Regulation (EEC) No 2081/93 of 20 July 1993, is to be interpreted as meaning that Community funding of a works project is not conditional upon the recipients complying with the review procedures within the meaning of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts if they are not themselves contracting authorities within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37.

1 By order of 2 February 1996, received at the Court on 14 February 1996, the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Procurement Office) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty seven questions on the interpretation of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), and Article 7(1) of Council Regulation (EEC) No 2081/93 of 20 July 1993 amending Regulation (EEC) No 2052/88 on the tasks of the Structural Funds and their effectiveness and on coordination of their activities between themselves and with the operations of the European Investment Bank and the other existing financial instruments (OJ 1993 L 193, p. 5).

2 Those questions were raised in proceedings brought before that court by Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria AG and Others against Strohal Rotationsdruck GesmbH (hereinafter `SRG') concerning the application of the Austrian public procurement legislation at the initiation of such a procurement procedure.

The relevant Community provisions

Directive 93/37

3 Article 1 of Directive 93/37, which consolidates Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682), as last amended by Council Directive 90/531/EEC of 17 September 1990 on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1990 L 297, p. 1), provides:

`For the purpose of this Directive:

(a) "public works contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a contractor and a contracting authority as defined in (b), which have as their object either the execution, or both the execution and design, of works related to one of the activities referred to in Annex II or a work defined in (c) below, or the execution, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority;

(b) "contracting authorities" shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

A "body governed by public law" means any body:

- established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

- having legal personality, and

- financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law;

The lists of bodies and categories of bodies governed by public law which fulfil the criteria referred to in the second subparagraph are set out in Annex I....'

Directive 89/665

4 Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33) required Member States to take `the measures necessary to ensure that ... decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible... on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law'. According to Article 5, those measures were to be adopted before 21 December 1991.

Regulation No 2052/88

5 Article 7(1) of Regulation (EEC) No 2052/88 as amended by Regulation (EEC) No 2081/93 reads as follows:

`Measures financed by the Structural Funds or receiving assistance from the EIB or from another existing financial instrument shall be in conformity with the provisions of the Treaties, with the instruments adopted pursuant thereto and with Community policies, including those concerning the rules on competition, the award of public contracts and environmental protection and the application of the principle of equal opportunities for men and women.'

The Austrian legislation

6 Paragraph 1 of the Bundesgesetz über die Osterreichische Staatsdruckerei (Staatsdruckereigesetz) of 1 July 1981 (Federal Law on the Austrian State Printing Office, Bundesgesetzblatt für die Republik Osterreich 340/1981; hereinafter the `StDrG'), reads as follows:

`Economic entity "Osterreichische Staatsdruckerei" Paragraph 1.

(1) An independent economic entity is established with the name "Osterreichische Staatsdruckerei" (hereinafter the "Staatsdruckerei"). It has its registered office in Vienna and has legal personality.

(2) The Staatsdruckerei is a trader for the purposes of the Commercial Code. It must be registered in Part A of the Commercial Register of the Vienna Commercial Court.

(3) The activities of the Staatsdruckerei are to be pursued in accordance with the rules governing trade.'

7 The tasks to be carried out by the Osterreichische Staatsdruckerei (hereinafter the `OS') are described in Paragraph 2 of the StDrG. According to Paragraph 2(1), those tasks consist, in particular, of the production for the federal administration of printed matter requiring secrecy or security measures, such as passports, driving licences, identity cards, the federal official journal, the federal reports of laws and decisions, forms and the Wiener Zeitung. Those activities are collectively referred to as `public service obligations'.

8 Those activities, for which, according to Paragraph 2(3), the OS has sole responsibility, are, by virtue of Paragraph 13(1) of the StDrG, monitored by a State control service. Pursuant to Paragraph 12 of that Law, the prices for those orders are fixed - in accordance with commercial principles and taking into account, in particular, the need to keep capacity available - at the request of the Director-General of the OS, by the economic council, which, according to Paragraph 8(2), is composed of 12 members, eight of whom are appointed by the Federal Chancellery or various ministries and four by the works council. In accordance with Paragraph 5(2) of the StDrG, the Director-General of the OS is appointed by the economic council.

9 Furthermore, pursuant to Paragraph 15(6) of the StDrG, the OS is subject to scrutiny by the Court of Auditors.

10 According to Paragraph 2(2) of the StDrG, the OS may pursue other activities, such as the production of other printed matter and the publication and distribution of books, newspapers, etc. Finally, according to Paragraph 3 of that Law, the OS may acquire holdings in undertakings.

The dispute in the main proceedings

11 In February 1995, the OS took over Strohal Gesellschaft mbH, whose activities consisted of rotary `heatset' printing. On 11 October 1995, Strohal set up SRG, in which it holds 99.9% of the share capital, with the object of producing printed matter using the abovementioned process in printing works in Müllendorf.

12 In order to reduce the waiting period prior to those printing works becoming operational, while SRG was still in the process of being set up, the OS initiated a tendering procedure for a project relating to the technical installations on 18 October 1995. To that end, it incorporated into each of the works contracts a clause reserving the right to assign all its rights and obligations under those contracts to a third party of its choice at any time. Following a conciliation procedure before the Bundesvergabekontrollkommission (Federal Procurement Review Commission) which resulted in an amicable settlement, that call for tenders was withdrawn. After initiating a new tendering procedure, the OS informed tenderers that the firm responsible for the call for tenders and awarding contracts was SRG.

13 A conciliation procedure was subsequently initiated at the request of the Verband der Industriellen Gebäudetechnikunternehmen Osterreichs (Association of Industrial Construction Undertakings in Austria) in order to determine whether or not the tendering procedure should be conducted in accordance with the national legislation on public works contracts. In contrast to that association, SRG and the OS challenged the applicability of that legislation and claimed that, since there was no contracting authority, there was no public works contract in the present case.

14 The Bundesvergabekontrollkommission decided in their favour and held that the question did not fall within its jurisdiction. It did not, however, exclude the possibility of the need to comply with Directive 89/665 if the entity awarding the contract was in receipt of Community funds, in accordance with Article 7(1) of Regulation No 2081/93.

15 Since no amicable settlement was reached, Mannesmann Anlagebau and Others initiated a review procedure before the Bundesvergabeamt.

16 The Bundesvergabeamt was uncertain of the interpretation to be given to the Community law and referred the following questions for a preliminary ruling:

`1. Can a provision of a national law, such as Paragraph 3 of the Staatsdruckereigesetz in the present case, which confers special and exclusive rights on an undertaking, establish that undertaking as meeting needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37/EEC and make such an undertaking as a whole fall within the scope of that directive, even if those activities form only part of the undertaking's activity and the undertaking in addition participates in the market as a commercial undertaking?

2. In the event that such an undertaking falls within the scope of Directive 93/37/EEC only with respect to the special and exclusive rights conferred on it, is such an undertaking obliged to take organisational measures to prevent financial means obtained from earnings from those special and exclusive rights being switched to other sectors of activity?

3. If a contracting authority starts a project and that project is therefore to be classified as a public works contract within the meaning of Directive 93/37/EEC, may the intervention of a third party who prima facie does not fall within the personal scope of the directive have the effect of altering the classification of a project as a public works contract, or should such a proceeding be regarded as an evasion of the personal scope of the directive and incompatible with the aim and purpose of the directive?

4. If a contracting authority establishes undertakings for carrying on commercial activities and holds majority holdings in them which enable it to exercise economic control over those undertakings, does the classification as a contracting authority then also apply to those associated undertakings?

5. If a contracting authority transfers funds which it has earned from special and exclusive rights conferred on it to purely commercial undertakings in which it owns a majority holding, does that have the effect that, regardless of the legal position of the associated undertaking, that undertaking as a whole must let itself be treated and behave as a contracting authority within the meaning of Directive 93/37/EEC?

6. If a contracting authority which both meets needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character and also carries on commercial activities establishes operating installations which are capable of serving both purposes, is the award of the contract for constructing such operating installations to be classified as a public works contract within the meaning of Directive 93/37/EEC, or does Community law contain criteria according to which such an operating installation can be classified either as serving public needs or as serving commercial activities, and if so, which criteria?

7. Does Article 7(1) of Council Regulation (EEC) No 2081/93 of 20 July 1993 amending Regulation (EEC) No 2052/88 on the tasks of the Structural Funds and their effectiveness and on coordination of their activities between themselves and with the operations of the European Investment Bank and the other existing financial instruments make the recipients of the Community subsidies subject to the review procedures within the meaning of Directive 89/665/EEC, even if they themselves are not contracting authorities within the meaning of Article 1 of Directive 93/37/EEC?'

The first and sixth questions

17 By its first and sixth questions the national court is, essentially, asking whether an entity such as the OS should be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 and, thus, as a contracting authority within the meaning of the first subparagraph of that provision. If so, the national court further asks whether all works contracts, of whatever nature, entered into by that entity, constitute public works contracts within the meaning of Article 1(a) of that directive.

18 According to the applicants in the main proceedings, the Commission and the French Government, Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37 applies to all works contracts entered into by a body such as the OS, which pursues both activities intended to meet needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character and activities of a commercial nature.

19 SRG and the Austrian and Netherlands Governments, on the other hand, consider that a body such as the OS does not satisfy the criteria set out in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 and should not therefore be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of that provision.

20 Under the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, a body governed by public law means a body established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, which has legal personality and is closely dependent on the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law.

21 It is clear from that provision that the three conditions set out therein are cumulative.

22 As regards the first condition, it should be noted, first, that the OS was established in order to produce, on an exclusive basis, official administrative documents, some of which require secrecy or security measures, such as passports, driving licences and identity cards, whilst others are intended for the dissemination of legislative, regulatory and administrative documents of the State.

23 Furthermore, the prices for the printed matter which the OS is required to produce are fixed by a body consisting mainly of members appointed by the Federal Chancellery or various ministries and a State control service is responsible for monitoring the printed matter which is subject to security measures.

24 According to the legislation applicable to it, therefore, that entity was established for the purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character. The documents which the OS must produce are closely linked to public order and the institutional operation of the State and require guaranteed supply and production conditions which ensure that standards of confidentiality and security are observed.

25 Furthermore, it is apparent from Paragraphs 1(1) and 2(1) of the StDrG that the OS was established for the specific purpose of meeting those needs in the general interest. In that respect, it is immaterial that such an entity is free to carry out other activities in addition to that task, such as the production of other printed matter and the publication and distribution of books. The fact, raised by the Austrian Government in its written observations, that meeting needs in the general interest constitutes only a relatively small proportion of the activities actually pursued by the OS is also irrelevant, provided that it continues to attend to the needs which it is specifically required to meet.

26 The condition, laid down in the first indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the directive, that the body must have been established for the `specific' purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, does not mean that it should be entrusted only with meeting such needs.

27 As regards the second condition laid down in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, it should be noted that, according to the national Law, the OS has legal personality.

28 As regards the third condition, it should be noted that the Director-General of the OS is appointed by a body consisting mainly of members appointed by the Federal Chancellery or various ministries. Furthermore, it is subject to scrutiny by the Court of Auditors and a State control service is responsible for monitoring the printed matter which is subject to security measures. Finally, according to the statements made at the hearing by SRG, the majority of the shares in the OS are still held by the Austrian State.

29 It follows that an entity such as the OS must be classified as a body governed by public law within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 and must thus be regarded as a contracting authority within the meaning of the first subparagraph of that provision.

30 The Austrian and Netherlands Governments object that it is not possible to disregard the fact that the overall activity of an entity such as the OS is dominated by those activities pursued in order to meet needs having an industrial or commercial character.

31 In that respect, it should be recalled that, as stated at paragraph 26 above, the wording of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 does not exclude the possibility that a contracting authority may pursue other activities in addition to its specific task of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character.

32 As regards such activities, it should be noted first that Article 1(a) of the directive makes no distinction between public works contracts awarded by a contracting authority for the purposes of fulfilling its task of meeting needs in the general interest and those which are unrelated to that task.

33 The fact that no such distinction is made is explained by the aim of Directive 93/37 to avoid the risk of preference being given to national tenderers or applicants whenever a contract is awarded by the contracting authorities.

34 Finally, to interpret the first indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 in such a way that its application would vary according to the relative proportion of its activities pursued for the purpose of meeting needs not having an industrial or commercial character would be contrary to the principle of legal certainty which requires a Community rule to be clear and its application foreseeable by all those concerned.

35 The answer to the first and sixth questions referred by the national court should therefore be that an entity such as the OS must be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, and thus as a contracting authority within the meaning of the first subparagraph of that provision, so that works contracts, of whatever nature, entered into by that entity are to be considered to be public works contracts within the meaning of Article 1(a) of that directive.

The second question

36 In view of the answer given to the first and sixth questions, there is no need to answer the second question.

The fourth and fifth questions

37 By its fourth and fifth questions, the national court is essentially asking whether an undertaking which carries on commercial activities and in which a contracting authority has a majority shareholding must itself be considered to be a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, if that undertaking was established by the contracting authority in order to carry on commercial activities or if the contracting authority transfers to it funds derived from activities it pursues in order to meet needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character.

38 As pointed out at paragraph 21 above, it is clear from the wording of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 that the three conditions set out therein are cumulative.

39 It is therefore not sufficient that an undertaking was established by a contracting authority or that its activities are financed by funds derived from activities pursued by a contracting authority in order for it to be regarded as a contracting authority itself. It must also satisfy the condition set out in the first indent of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, that it must be a body established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character.

40 If that condition is not satisfied, an undertaking such as the one referred to by the national court cannot be considered to be a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of the directive.

41 The answer to the fourth and fifth questions referred by the national court must therefore be that an undertaking which carries on commercial activities and in which a contracting authority has a majority shareholding is not to be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, and thus as a contracting authority within the meaning of that provision, on the sole ground that that undertaking was established by the contracting authority or that the contracting authority transfers to it funds derived from activities pursued in order to meet needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character.

The third question

42 By its third question, the national court is seeking to ascertain whether a project which must be classified as a public works contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37 continues to be subject to the provisions of that directive when, before completion of the work, the contracting authority transfers its rights and obligations in the context of a call for tenders to an undertaking which is not itself a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of that directive.

43 In that respect, it is clear from Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37 that a contract which satisfies the conditions set out in that provision cannot cease to be a public works contract when the rights and obligations of the contracting authority are transferred to an undertaking which is not a contracting authority. The aim of Directive 93/37, which lies in the effective realisation of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services in the field of public works contracts, would be undermined if the application of the rules in the directive could be excluded on the sole ground that the rights and obligations of a contracting authority in the context of a call for tenders are transferred to an undertaking which does not satisfy the conditions set out in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37.

44 The contrary would be true only if it were to be established that, from the outset, the whole of the project at issue fell within the objects of the undertaking concerned and the works contracts relating to that project were entered into by the contracting authority on behalf of that undertaking.

45 It is for the national court to ascertain whether that is the case here.

46 The answer to the third question referred by the national court must therefore be that a public works contract is not subject to the provisions of Directive 93/37 when it relates to a project which, from the outset, falls entirely within the objects of an undertaking which is not a contracting authority and when the works contracts relating to that project were entered into by a contracting authority on behalf of that undertaking.

The seventh question

47 By its seventh question, the national court is essentially seeking to ascertain whether Article 7(1) of Regulation No 2052/88 as amended by Regulation No 2081/93 is to be interpreted as meaning that Community funding of a works project is conditional upon the recipients complying with the review procedures laid down by Directive 89/665, even if they themselves are not contracting authorities within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37.

48 As the Advocate General noted at point 105 of his Opinion, it is clear from the wording of Article 7(1) of Regulation No 2052/88 that the requirement that the measures referred to must be in conformity with Community law presupposes that those measures fall within the scope of the relevant Community legislation.

49 The answer to the seventh question referred by the national court must therefore be that Article 7(1) of Regulation No 2052/88 as amended by Regulation No 2081/93 is to be interpreted as meaning that Community funding of a works project is not conditional upon the recipients complying with the review procedures within the meaning of Directive 89/665, if they are not themselves contracting authorities within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37.

Judgment of the Court of First Instance (Fourth Chamber)
First Instance (Fourth Chamber)First Instance (Fourth Chamber)December 1998.
Embassy Limousines & Services v European Parliament.
Arbitration clause - Existence of a contract - Non-contractual liability - Withdrawal of an invitation to tender - Legitimate expectations - Assessment of damage.
Case T-203/96.

1 Procedure - Reference to the Court of Justice on the basis of an arbitration clause - Condition - Existence of a valid contract - Contract governed by Directive 92/50 requiring a written agreement - Requirement not fulfilled - Application inadmissible

(EC Treaty, Art. 181; Council Decision 88/591; Council Directive 92/50, Art. 1)

2 European Community public procurement contracts - Conclusion of a contract following an invitation to tender - Discretion of the institutions - Judicial review - Limits

3 Community law - Principles - Protection of legitimate expectations - European Community public procurement contracts - Tenderer encouraged, before the contract is awarded, to make irreversible investments - Community's non-contractual liability thereby incurred

4 European Community public procurement contracts- Tendering procedure - Obligation to comply with the principles of the equal treatment of tenderers and of transparency and to adopt a coherent line of conduct

5 European Community public procurement contracts - Tendering procedure - Expenses incurred by a tenderer - Right to compensation - None

6 The jurisdiction of the Court of First Instance, on the basis of the combined provisions of Decision 88/591, as amended, and Article 181 of the Treaty, to hear actions brought before it by natural or legal persons pursuant to an arbitration clause presupposes that the contract containing the clause is a valid contract.

An application made on the basis of an arbitration clause provided for in a framework contract forming part of an invitation to tender for the award of a contract by a Community institution is therefore inadmissible, where the framework contract has never been signed, in so far as such a contract is governed by Directive 92/50, which defines the contracts concerned as contracts concluded in writing. In that last regard, the existence of a valid contract cannot be inferred from the fact that a committee on procurements and contracts - an advisory body within the institution at issue - has given an opinion in favour of awarding the contract to the applicant, notwithstanding the importance generally accorded, in practice, to such an opinion in connection with an invitation to tender.

7 The institutions have a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender, and the Court's review should be limited to checking that there has been no serious and manifest error.

8 The right to rely on the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations extends to any individual who is in a situation in which it is apparent that the Community administration has led him to entertain justified expectations. Although it is true, in that regard, that traders must bear the economic risks inherent in their activities and that, in connection with a tendering procedure for a public procurement contract, those economic risks include, inter alia, the costs connected with the preparation of the bid, there may be a breach of the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations capable of giving rise to liability on the part of the Community where, before the contract in question is awarded to the successful tenderer, a tenderer is encouraged by the contracting institution to make irreversible investments in advance and thereby to go beyond the risks inherent in the business under consideration, consisting in making a bid.

9 In procedures for concluding public procurement contracts, the contracting institution must comply, at each stage of a tendering procedure, not only with the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers, but also with the principle of transparency. Therefore, a person who is closely involved in a tendering procedure and who has even been judged to be the successful tenderer, must receive, without any delay, precise information concerning the conduct of the entire procedure.

Furthermore, the institution is obliged to show a coherent and consistent attitude towards its tenderers. Any interventions by various administrative and political bodies within that institution cannot therefore justify the failure to comply with its obligations to the tenderers.

10 It is clear from the General Terms and Conditions applicable to the Communities' public procurement contracts that the contracting institution is not liable for any compensation with respect to tenderers whose tenders have not been accepted. It follows that the charges and expenses incurred by a tenderer in connection with his participation in a tendering procedure cannot in principle constitute damage capable of being remedied by the award of damages.

In Case T-203/96,

European Parliament, represented by François Vainker and Anders Neergaard, of its Legal Service, acting as Agents, assisted by Charles Price, of the Brussels Bar, with an address for service in Luxembourg at the General Secretariat of the European Parliament, Kirchberg,

defendant,

APPLICATION for compensation for the damage allegedly suffered by the applicant on account of the wrongful conduct of the Parliament in connection with Invitation to Tender No 95/S 158-76321/FR relating to a contract for passenger transport using chauffeur-driven vehicles, brought pursuant to Article 181 of the EC Treaty, under the arbitration clause in the third paragraph of Article 6 of the specifications of that invitation to tender and Article VIII of framework contract PE-TRANS-BXL-95/6, and, in the alternative, pursuant to Article 178 and the second paragraph of Article 215 of that Treaty,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

(Fourth Chamber),

composed of: P. Lindh, President, K. Lenaerts and J.D. Cooke, Judges,

Registrar: B. Pastor, Principal Administrator,

pay the costs, if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Parliament has been unsuccessful and the applicant has applied for costs, the Parliament must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

(Fourth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Orders the European Parliament to pay to the applicant a sum of BEF 5 000 000;

2. Declares that that sum will bear interest at an annual rate of 8% with effect from the date of this judgment and until due payment;

3. Orders the Parliament to pay its own costs and the costs of the applicant.

Background to the dispute

1 On 22 August 1995 the European Parliament, pursuant to Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1, hereinafter `Directive 92/50'), published in the Official Journal of the European Communities a tender notice (OJ 1995 S 158, p. 23, hereinafter `the notice'), in accordance with the open procedure, in respect of a contract for passenger transport using chauffeur-driven vehicles, in this case for Members of the European Parliament (Invitation to Tender No 95/S 158-76321/FR, hereinafter `the contested invitation to tender').

2 The notice indicated that the contract would take the form of a framework contract with a company providing the service and that it would be carried out on the basis of order forms specific to each operation. The contract would be concluded for a period of three years and renewable for two one-year periods. The place of delivery would be Brussels and the service providers would have to provide evidence to the effect that they had been active in the sector for five years. As contract award criteria, the notice stated that the economically most advantageous tender would be selected, taking account of the prices tendered and the technical merit of the tender.

3 On 13 September 1995 the General Secretariat of the Parliament, in the person of Mr Candidi, Head of the Human Resources and Administration Department, sent the applicant, Embassy Limousines &Services SA (hereinafter `Embassy'), in response to its written request of the same date, all the documents relating to the contested invitation to tender, namely framework contract PE-TRANS-BXL-95/6 (hereinafter `the framework contract'), the specifications relating to the invitation to tender and the technical specifications relating thereto.

4 The framework contract (Article VIII) and the specifications of the contested invitation to tender (third paragraph of Article 6) made the contracts awarded subject to Luxembourg law and provided for the exclusive jurisdiction of the Court of Justice of the European Communities. Any matters not governed by the specifications would be subject to the `General Terms and Conditions Applicable to Contracts' drawn up by the Commission of the European Communities (hereinafter `the General Terms and Conditions').

5 On 16 October 1995 the applicant submitted its tender.

6 On 4 December 1995 the Parliament, in the person of Mr Candidi, contacted Mr Hautot, the then Managing Director of Embassy, to tell him that the Advisory Committee on Procurements and Contracts (hereinafter `the ACPC') had that day delivered an opinion in favour of the authorising officer's proposal to award the contract to his company.

7 On 12 December 1995 the applicant sent to the Parliament a letter in which it reported on the measures it had taken in order to respond to the urgency of the situation in which the Parliament found itself. It stated that it had entered into contracts for leasing cars and renting mobile telephones (GSM), engaged drivers and attended to their social security, health insurance and tax situation. In the same letter the applicant reacted to rumours and gossip referring to an alleged lack of good character on the part of its executives and/or shareholders and questioning the quality of the services it provided.

8 As a result of those rumours and articles in the press casting doubt on the probity of certain Embassy executives, two of the latter, Mr Hautot and Mr Heuzer, were asked to go to Strasbourg in order to produce any documents required to show the good repute of their company. That meeting took place on 13 December 1995.

9 After that meeting Mr Feidt, the Director-General of Administration, sent a memorandum to the Secretary-General of the Parliament, which reads as follows:

`Further to the request made by the Bureaux of the European Parliament, an inquiry has been conducted by my departments in order to check whether the accusations made against the Embassy company... were well-founded.

The executives of that company were invited to travel to Strasbourg where they answered the questions put to them after supplying all the documents requested...

Thorough examination of those documents has shown that the allegations are completely without foundation.

In those circumstances, and given the need for the new company to organise on a practical level the setting up of the services, a decision urgently needs to be taken: it is imperative that the administration guarantee transport for Members of Parliament as soon as they return in January 1996.

Consequently I request your agreement to the signing of that contract as soon as possible.'

10 Nevertheless, on 19 December 1995 Mr Feidt referred to the ACPC a proposal that a contract with the company then responsible for provision of the services at issue (hereinafter `Company A') should be extended for one month. The minutes of the ACPC meeting of that date state inter alia:

`The ACPC,

- having regard to its opinion of 4 December 1995 in favour of concluding a contract with the Embassy company... , the successful candidate in the above tendering procedure,

- taking formal note that the internal decisions of the Parliament authorising the signing of the contract with the Embassy company... could not be finalised before the end of 1995,

- on the basis of Article 59(b) of the Financial Regulation and Article 11(3)(d) of Directive 92/50... , delivers an opinion in favour of a contract from 1 January 1996 to 31 January 1996 with Company [A ...] (the company which made the second lowest bid in the above tendering procedure) on the terms of the original contract and renewable for a maximum of one month (February 1996) after a further reference to the ACPC.

- invites the authorising officer to take all appropriate measures to ensure that the contract with the company which made the successful bid in the open tendering procedure is signed as soon as possible.'

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

11 A contract with Company A was concluded on 5 January 1996.

12 By letter of 25 January 1996 the applicant told the Parliament that it did not understand why that institution had not yet adopted the final decision on the contested invitation to tender.

13 At two meetings of 22 January 1996 and 26 February 1996 the ACPC delivered opinions in favour of two one-month extensions to the contract concluded with Company A. Finally, at a meeting of 1 April 1996, the ACPC gave an opinion in favour of a three-month extension to the contract concluded with that same company.

14 On 16 February 1996 the applicant sent a letter to Mr Ribeiro, a member of the College of Quaestors (the body responsible for making recommendations to the Bureau on questions concerning Members), in particular to clarify certain questions relating to the qualifications and experience of Embassy drivers.

15 By letters of 29 February and 4 March 1996 sent to the Parliament the applicant again expressed surprise at having not yet received the signed contract.

16 On 8 May 1996 the Bureau of the Parliament recommended to the authorising officer the initiation of a new tendering procedure.

17 On 28 May 1996 the applicant sent the Parliament a letter in which it asked it to indicate its reasons for deciding to reopen the procedure.

18 On 31 May 1996 the ACPC delivered an opinion in favour of annulling the contested invitation to tender. At the same time it also delivered an opinion, on a proposal from the authorising officer, in favour of signing a contract with Company A for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1996, while waiting for the results of the new invitation to tender. The minutes of that meeting show:

`The ACPC,

1. as to the annulment of Invitation to Tender No 95/S 158-76321/FR

...

- whereas the decision of the authorising officer to annul that invitation to tender is based on the opinion given by the Bureau at its meeting of 8 May 1996;

- whereas according to that opinion, which confirms the position taken by the College of Quaestors, "the present procedure is not likely to give Members a transport service of appropriate quality";

...

- delivers an opinion (eight votes for and one abstention) in favour of annulling the invitation to tender under discussion while pointing out that it is for the authorising officer to verify the economic basis of a new invitation to tender (its cost, difference in results compared with the first, etc.).

...'

19 By registered letter of 19 June 1996 the Parliament informed the applicant that the contested invitation to tender had been annulled and that the procedure had been reopened. That letter explained, in particular, that the Parliament had considered that none of the tenders received had been judged completely satisfactory and that the institution had been particularly concerned to give Members of Parliament a service of the highest technical quality, provided by very experienced professional drivers, all of which was not unarguably demonstrated in the documents presented by the tenderers. A new open invitation to tender would be launched, specifying the requirements of the Parliament more explicitly and more fully.

20 By letter dated 22 July 1996 the applicant formally requested the Parliament either not to annul the contested invitation to tender and to award it the contract, or to pay it satisfactory compensation.

21 After acknowledging that letter on 21 August 1996, Mr Feidt, by letter of 14 October 1996, rejected the applicant's requests. He stated:

`It is agreed that, in this case, no contract has been concluded between the Parliament... and... Embassy... since:

- the ACPC has no competence other than to deliver an opinion to the competent authorising officer, in this case myself; the ACPC does not take any decisions;

- according to Article 1 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC, to which you refer in your letter, "`public service contracts' shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority (the European Parliament)";

- there is no written contract, since proposed framework contract PE-TRANS-BXL-95/6, which formed part of the specifications and was therefore received by Embassy, has not been signed.'

`If Embassy believed, from 4 December 1995, that it had or would have a contract for passenger transport in Brussels as a result of the invitation to tender..., any misunderstanding should have been very quickly cleared up at the meeting of 13 December 1995.... According to the minutes of that meeting, which have been sent to me, Mr Hautot and Mr Heuzer of Embassy "have been informed that the ACPC had indeed expressed an opinion in favour of the authorising officer's proposal to award them the contract but that that opinion had the status of advice only and that the authorities had the power of final decision".'

23 Mr Feidt concluded that the Parliament saw no reason justifying the withdrawal or annulment of its decision to reopen the tendering procedure which had been communicated to Embassy by letter of 19 June 1996. He added that the ground justifying the reopening of the tendering procedure was not incompatible with the need felt by Mr Hautot to give a thorough account, in his letter of 16 February 1996 to Mr Ribeiro, of the considerable professional training and experience of the Embassy drivers.

Procedure and forms of order sought by the parties

24 It was in those circumstances that, by application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 10 December 1996, the applicant brought these proceedings.

25 Upon hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court of First Instance decided to open the oral procedure. In accordance with Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure, the parties were invited to reply to certain questions and to produce certain documents.

26 By order of 5 June 1998, the Court of First Instance, pursuant to Article 65(c) of its Rules of Procedure, ordered the hearing, as witnesses, of Mr Candidi and Ms Lahousse, officials of the Parliament, and of Mr Hautot and Mr Heuzer, representatives of the applicant company. The order provided that the witnesses would be heard on the content of the meeting which was held in Strasbourg on 13 December 1995. Mr Candidi and Mr Hautot would be heard on the subject and content of their telephone conversation of 4 December 1995. Finally, Mr Candidi and Ms Lahousse would be heard on their reaction to the applicant's letter of 12 December 1995 on the subject of certain investments it had made.

27 The parties and the witnesses were heard at the public hearing of 2 July 1998.

28 Embassy, the applicant, claims that the Court should:

- declare the application admissible and well founded and consequently order the Parliament to pay it the sum of BEF 21 028 460, subject to an increase or reduction in that amount in the course of the proceedings, by way of compensation for the financial, commercial and non-material damage which it has suffered on account of the wrongful conduct of the Parliament;

- order the Parliament to bear all the costs.

29 The Parliament, the defendant, contends that the Court should:

- dismiss the application;

- order the applicant to pay the costs.

30 In its application and reply the applicant stated that its action was brought pursuant to the third paragraph of Article 6 of the specifications of the contested invitation to tender and Article VIII of the framework contract, and therefore on the basis of Article 181 of the EC Treaty, and in the alternative, on the basis of Article 178 and the second paragraph of Article 215 of the Treaty, and that it concerned a claim for damages to compensate for the damage caused to the applicant by the wrongful conduct of the Parliament in connection with the contested invitation to tender.

Contractual liability of the Community

Arguments of the parties

31 The applicant claims that, although a contract between the parties had been properly concluded, the Parliament withdrew from it unilaterally and refused to perform it on the terms and conditions agreed.

32 It maintains, first, that the award of the contract at issue results from valid, public and unequivocal consensus ad idem. It stresses in that regard that, during their telephone conversation of 4 December 1995, Mr Candidi informed Mr Hautot that the decision to award the contract to Embassy had been taken and consequently invited him to do everything to ensure that the company was in a position to provide the services at issue from the beginning of January 1996. The applicant insists that, by officially informing him of the decision taken by the ACPC, the Parliament expressed its intent and thereby made its offer irrevocable. The Parliament thus showed its intention to contract with the applicant, thereby conferring on the applicant a contractual right which meant that the Parliament could not go back on its decision.

33 The applicant adds that, in reality, it is the ACPC which takes the decision to award a contract to an undertaking, since the authorising officer's only function is to formalise what has, in fact, already been decided by the ACPC.

34 Secondly, the applicant maintains that, at the very least, it should be considered that there is an apparent contract. It claims that all the factors necessary for the formation of a contract are present. In that regard it underlines the validity of its tender, the information given by Mr Candidi and the fact that the Parliament required it to begin to implement, from December 1995, the measures necessary for the performance of the contract from the first working day in January 1996.

35 The Parliament considers that, since no contract between the parties has been signed, the applicant's action for damages in contract is inadmissible. It points out that both the General Terms and Conditions and Directive 92/50 require any contract between the contracting authority and the successful tenderer to be in writing. It also contends that the last document of the invitation to tender constitutes a draft framework contract which must be signed by the service provider and by the authorising officer. However, that framework contract has never been signed either by the applicant or by the authorising officer.

36 It refutes moreover the applicant's allegation that it is in reality the ACPC which takes the decision to award a contract to an undertaking, by referring in that regard to the Financial Regulation of 21 December 1977 applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 1977 L 356, p. 1), from which it is clear that the ACPC constitutes only an advisory committee.

37 It considers, finally, that the doctrine of apparent contract which is invoked by the applicant does not correspond to any `general principle common to the laws of the Member States' so that it cannot be usefully invoked in this case.

Assessment by the Court

38 In accordance with the combined provisions of Council Decision 88/591/ECSC, EEC, Euratom of 24 October 1988 establishing a Court of First Instance of the European Communities (OJ 1988 L 319, p. 1), as subsequently amended, and Article 181 of the Treaty, the Court of First Instance has jurisdiction to hear, at first instance, actions in contract brought before it by natural or legal persons pursuant to an arbitration clause.

39 It is important to stress, however, that, in the words of Article 1 of Directive 92/50, applicable pursuant to Article 126 of Commission Regulation (Euratom, ECSC, EC) No 3418/93 of 9 December 1993 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of certain provisions of the Financial Regulation of 21 December 1977 (OJ 1993 L 315, p. 1), inasmuch as the value of the contract at issue exceeds the threshold laid down in Article 7(1) of that directive, `public service contracts shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority'.

40 In this case, it is not disputed that the value of the contract exceeds that threshold. The existence of contractual relations between the parties therefore presupposes that they have entered into a written contract. In that regard, it is appropriate to refer also to Article 3 of the General Terms and Conditions (applicable, in this case, pursuant to the first paragraph of Article 6 of the specifications). That article provides:

`3.1 The contracts shall be made binding by the agreement in writing of the parties thereto.

3.2 A contract shall be concluded by notification to the tenderer that his tender has been accepted.

Such notification shall be in the form of a purchase order or letter.

3.3 If the acceptance does not conform in all respects with the tender or if the Commission's decision is advised after the expiry of the period during which the tender was valid, the conclusion of the contract shall be subject to the tenderer's agreement in writing.

3.4 The contract may also take the form of a contract signed by both parties.'

41 It follows that the contract could not be finally awarded without the framework contract being signed by the two parties. However, since the framework contract has never been signed, it must be concluded that there is no valid contract in this case.

42 Moreover, the favourable opinion of the ACPC, as an opinion of an advisory body, cannot change that conclusion, notwithstanding the importance which is generally accorded to that opinion, in practice, in connection with an invitation to tender.

43 The applicant's allegation that there is an `apparent' contract must also be refuted. Without there being any need to consider the foundation of the doctrine of apparent contract in Community law or the conditions governing its application in this case, it is clear that the evidence put forward by the applicant does not permit any derogation from the requirement of a written contract. The representatives of Embassy have, furthermore, recognised in their testimony that they were aware of the need for a written agreement for the contract to be validly awarded.

44 It follows that, since the applicant has failed to demonstrate the existence of a valid contract, in so far as its application is made on the basis of Article 181 of the Treaty it must be declared inadmissible.

Non-contractual liability of the Community

45 The non-contractual liability of the Community under the second paragraph of Article 215 of the Treaty and the general principles to which that provision refers depends on fulfilment of a set of conditions as regards the unlawfulness of the conduct alleged against the institution, the fact of damage and the existence of a causal link between the conduct in question and the damage complained of.

Unlawfulness of the conduct alleged 46 In support of its application for compensation under Article 178 and the second paragraph of Article 215 of the Treaty, the applicant alleges an infringement of Directive 92/50 and the wrongful conduct of the Parliament in connection with the tendering procedure.

Infringement of Directive 92/50

- Arguments of the parties

47 The applicant points out that its tender was perfectly proper in form and content, in that it met in every particular the criteria of the contested invitation to tender. However, according to the applicant, it is unarguably clear that, from the beginning of January 1996, the Parliament, first by monthly contracts, then by subsequent contracts, awarded the service contract for the transport of Members of Parliament in chauffeur-driven motor vehicles to another company, also a tenderer and the second lowest bidder.

48 Embassy considers that its bid, which had been judged to be the economically most advantageous, must have been set aside for improper reasons and given way to a contract negotiated with another service provider. In that regard it quotes Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50 which states:

`Contracting authorities may award public service contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice in the following cases:

(a) in the absence of tenders or of appropriate tenders in response to an open or restricted procedure provided that the original terms of the contract are not substantially altered and that a report is communicated to the Commission at its request;

... '.

49 The Parliament contends that the reason for which it annulled the contested invitation to tender was that the condition requiring providers to have at least five years' experience in the sector, mentioned in the notice, had not been reproduced in the documents constituting the contested invitation to tender. The fact that that requirement was included in the notice but not reproduced in the invitation to tender could have been criticised, with justification, by a potential tenderer in a position to satisfy the terms eventually included in the invitation to tender, but who had not submitted a tender because he could not show evidence of five years' experience. That would be a breach of the principle of equal treatment of tenderers, which is an essential principle for the application of Directive 92/50 (see Case C-243/89 Commission v Denmark [1993] ECR I-3353, paragraphs 33 and 39, and Case C-87/94 Commission v Belgium [1996] ECR I-2043, paragraph 51).

50 The Parliament contends moreover that it wanted to avoid any risk of unlawfulness connected with contacts that certain of its officials had had with tenderers before the opening of bids, inter alia the contacts between Mr Candidi and the applicant. Contrary to what is laid down in Article 100 of Regulation No 3418/93 of 9 December 1993, cited above, no note for the file was drawn up following those contacts.

51 The Parliament also points out that Article 12(2) of Directive 92/50 expressly provides for the contracting authority to be able to decide not to award a contract in respect of which a prior call for competition was made, or to recommence the procedure for the award of the contract. In addition, Article 4 of the General Terms and Conditions provides that fulfilment of an adjudication or invitation-to-tender procedure does not involve the institution in any obligation to award the contract.

52 The Parliament states finally that the contract was temporarily awarded to Company A in accordance with Article 11(3)(d) of Directive 92/50 which provides for such a solution in cases of extreme urgency brought about by unforeseeable events. The need to ensure continuity of service in this case allegedly constitutes appropriate justification.

53 The Parliament infers from the foregoing that its decisions to annul the contested invitation to tender and to award the contract on a provisional basis to Company A were perfectly legitimate and that the adoption of those decisions does not therefore constitute a fault giving rise to liability on the part of the Community.

- Assessment by the Court

54 It is necessary, first, to point out that the contracting authority is not bound to follow through to its end a procedure for awarding a contract. It is clear from Article 12(2) of Directive 92/50 that, if the procedure is annulled, the contracting authority is simply bound to inform candidates or tenderers who so request in writing of the grounds on which it decided not to award a contract in respect of which a prior call for competition was made, or to recommence the procedure.

55 Moreover, Article 4 of the General Terms and Conditions states, first, that fulfilment of an adjudication or invitation-to-tender procedure does not involve the institution in any obligation to award the contract and, secondly, that it is not liable for any compensation with respect to tenderers whose tenders have not been accepted.

56 In addition, it must be recalled that the Parliament has a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender and the Court's review should be limited to checking that there has been no serious and manifest error (see Case 56/77 Agence Européenne d'Intérims v Commission [1978] ECR 2215, paragraph 20, and Case T-19/95 Adia Intérim v Commission [1996] ECR II-321, paragraph 49).

57 In this case the contested procedure for awarding the contract was not completed. Therefore, having received from the applicant a request in writing dated 28 May 1996, the Parliament informed it, by letter of 19 June 1996, of the grounds justifying the annulment of the contested invitation to tender and the reopening of the procedure (see paragraph 19 above).

58 In response to the applicant's allegations, Mr Feidt then pointed out in his letter of 14 October 1996 (see paragraphs 21 to 23 above) that the Parliament `[saw] no reason to withdraw or annul its decision to reopen the tendering procedure which has been communicated to Embassy by letter of 19 June 1996. The grounds of that decision are not incompatible with the need felt by Mr Hautot, who was obviously anxious, to give a thorough account to Mr Ribeiro, a member of the College of Quaestors of the European Parliament, in his letter of 16 February 1996, of the considerable professional training and experience of the Embassy drivers: Mr Hautot referred in his letter to the worries that Mr Ribeiro might have had about the quality of the drivers recruited by Embassy... '.

59 It follows that, whatever the legal worth of the different explanations given by the Parliament concerning the risk of discriminatory treatment of tenderers, it is clear that it followed the procedure laid down in the legal provisions applicable when it annulled the contested invitation to tender.

60 Furthermore, the applicant has put forward no evidence to show that the Parliament, in considering that none of the tenders received was totally satisfactory, has committed a grave and manifest error. Although the doubts about the competence of the drivers recruited by Embassy constituted a decisive ground of the Parliament's decision not to accept its bid, the applicant has not shown that the Parliament went beyond the proper bounds given the broad discretion it enjoys in that regard.

61 Since the annulment of the contested invitation to tender was not unlawful, the non-contractual liability of the Community cannot consequently be incurred on that account.

62 It is also necessary to reject the applicant's argument that the Parliament unlawfully awarded the contract, on a provisional basis, to Company A. In these proceedings the applicant is seeking, in substance, to obtain compensation for the damage caused to it on account of the allegedly wrongful conduct of the Parliament in connection with the contested invitation to tender. However, the provisional award of the contract at issue to Company A was made at the end of a negotiated procedure without prior publication, which is different from the open procedure disputed in this case. It follows that, even if the applicant succeeded in proving the unlawfulness of the negotiated procedure followed by the Parliament to compensate for the suspension of the contested invitation to tender, it could not be the cause of the damage allegedly suffered by the applicant in connection with the contested invitation to tender.

63 It follows from the foregoing that the liability of the Community cannot be incurred on account of an infringement of Directive 92/50 by the Parliament.

Unlawful conduct of the Parliament during the tendering procedure

- Arguments of the parties

64 The applicant claims that the conduct of the Parliament during the tendering procedure was wrongful and therefore gives rise to liability on the part of the Community, in so far as it could legitimately and reasonably lead the applicant to believe in the imminent conclusion of the agreement for the provision of services. Embassy states that the Parliament asked it on 4 December 1995 to engage in an important series of investments with a view to the immediate implementation of the agreement at the very beginning of January 1996. The applicant emphasises, in that regard, that, in reality, it is the ACPC which takes the decision to award a contract to an undertaking, so that the information given to the applicant concerning the favourable opinion of the ACPC constitutes de facto a decision.

65 It states, moreover, that the Parliament confirmed the imminent signing of the contract at issue, in particular during the visit of its representatives to Strasbourg on 13 December 1995, and that no-one has ever disputed that it had been decided to award it the contract. For seven and a half months from 4 December 1995 it was never disputed by anyone within the Parliament that the contract had indeed been awarded to the applicant, who had even been called the `successful candidate' by the ACPC.

66 The applicant therefore considers that the Parliament was at fault in requiring from it, in view of the urgency of the situation, preparations which were particularly demanding in terms of time, energy and resources, especially financial, for a contract which it eventually decided not to conclude and which it claims is non-existent. It considers that the Parliament's attitude constitutes an infringement of a general rule of conduct amounting to negligence. It adds that, in any event, the Parliament should have told it directly that the contract would not be performed at the beginning of January 1996, so that it could have immediately put an end to the steps it was taking and limited as far as possible the amount of damage it claims to have suffered.

67 Finally, the applicant claims that, in reality, the Parliament acted with the aim of favouring another company, namely the company which proved to be the second lowest bidder and which, in the course of 1996, provided the service at issue on a temporary basis. Embassy infers that the Parliament exceeded the powers conferred on it, in the more general context of a misuse of procedure designed to favour a third party. That unlawfulness constitutes a fault.

68 The Parliament contends that no fault giving rise to liability on the part of the Community can be imputed to it. First, it is clear from the papers in the file that the only communication from the Parliament which could possibly have constituted a wrongful act is the telephone conversation which Mr Candidi had with Mr Hautot on 4 December 1995 after the meeting of the ACPC on the same day. However, according to the Parliament, during that conversation Mr Candidi confined himself to confirming that the ACPC had given an opinion in favour of the proposal to award the contract to the applicant. He never told the applicant that a decision had been taken in its favour.

69 The Parliament adds that, if the applicant thought it wise, in those circumstances, to incur expenses and to make irreversible investments, it manifestly acted with a lack of judgment which cannot be expected on the part of a reasonably prudent trader. That is all the more true because Article 12(2) of Directive 92/50 provides for the possibility of annulling an invitation to tender and Article 4 of the General Terms and Conditions not only provides for the possibility of such an annulment but also excludes any compensation for tenderers in such a case. The telephone conversation of 4 December 1995 was not, moreover, followed by any written confirmation on the part of the Parliament.

70 The Parliament also contends that, even if Mr Candidi was imprudent and the applicant was misled, any possible misunderstanding was cleared up during the visit of the Embassy representatives to Strasbourg on 13 December 1995, on which occasion they were told that the opinion of the ACPC was purely advisory and that the authorities were responsible for the final decision.

71 The Parliament considers therefore that neither in the telephone conversation of 4 December 1995 nor during the visit of 13 December 1995 can a fault be identified on its part such as to give the applicant a right to damages. That conclusion may be drawn from the case-law of the Court of Justice and the Court of First Instance (see Joined Cases 19/69, 20/69, 25/69 and 30/69 Richez-Parise and Others v Commission [1970] ECR 325, paragraphs 36 to 41, Case 137/79 Kohll v Commission [1980] ECR 2601, paragraphs 12 to 15, and Case T-133/89 Burban v Parliament [1990] ECR II-245, paragraph 36, confirmed by Case C-255/90 P Burban v Parliament [1992] ECR I-2253, paragraphs 10 to 12).

72 Secondly, the Parliament states that the applicant must have known that Directive 92/50 and the General Terms and Conditions, both of which are applicable to the contract in question, provide that all contracts must be concluded in writing. Consequently, by inferring from Mr Candidi's statements that the contract had already been awarded, or that its award was imminent or that some decision had been taken by the Parliament which could justify incurring the expenses necessary to perform the contract, the applicant itself acted imprudently irrespective of any fault on the part of the Parliament (see Case C-330/88 Grifoni v EAEC [1991] ECR I-1045, and Case T-133/89 Burban v Parliament [1990] ECR II-245, paragraph 36).

- Assessment by the Court

73 The applicant claims, in substance, that, by fuelling its expectations of winning the contract and by encouraging it to take all the necessary steps in order to be operational from the beginning of January 1996, the Parliament caused it damage. It is necessary, consequently, to determine, in particular, whether the conduct of the Parliament during the contested tendering procedure constitutes a breach of the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations such as to give rise to liability on the part of the Community.

74 It is apparent from the case-law that the right to rely on the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations extends to any individual who is in a situation in which it is apparent that the Community administration has led him to entertain justified expectations (see, to this effect, Case 265/85 Van den Bergh en Jurgens and Lopik v Commission [1987] ECR 1155, paragraph 44, Case C-152/88 Sofrimport v Commission [1990] ECR I-2477, paragraph 26, Case T-489/93 Unifruit Hellas v Commission [1994] ECR II-1201, paragraph 51, Joined Cases T-481/93 and T-484/93 Exporteurs in Levende Varkens and Others v Commission [1995] ECR II-2941, paragraph 148, and Case T-336/94 Efisol v Commission [1996] ECR II-1343, paragraph 31).

75 In that regard, it is important to determine whether a prudent trader could have guarded against the risks run in this case by the applicant. Generally, it must be remembered that traders must bear the economic risks inherent in their activities, taking account of the circumstances of each case (see, inter alia, Joined Cases 83/76, 94/76, 4/77, 15/77 and 40/77 HNL and Others v Council and Commission [1978] ECR 1209, paragraph 7, and Case 267/82 Développement and Clemessy v Commission [1986] ECR 1907, paragraph 33). In connection with a tendering procedure, those economic risks include, inter alia, the costs connected with the preparation of the bid. The expenses thus incurred must therefore be borne by the undertaking which has chosen to participate in the procedure, since it in no way follows from the mere fact that an undertaking has the right to take part in a tendering procedure that its tender will be accepted (see paragraphs 54 and 55 above, and the Opinion of Advocate General Mancini in Développement and Clemessy v Commission, p. 1908, 1912).

76 On the other hand, if, before the contract in question is awarded to the successful tenderer, a tenderer is encouraged by the contracting institution to make irreversible investments in advance and thereby to go beyond the risks inherent in the business under consideration, consisting in making a bid, non-contractual liability may be incurred on the part of the Community (see, to that effect, Sofrimport v Commission, paragraphs 28 and 29).

77 In this case, it is common ground that the Parliament, in the person of Mr Candidi, took the initiative of telephoning the applicant on 4 December 1995 to tell it that the ACPC had delivered that day an opinion in favour of the authorising officer's proposal to award it the contract. It is clear from Mr Candidi's testimony that that initiative was not part of the normal procedure which provided, on the contrary, for the finalisation of the contract by the Parliament before any contact with the successful undertaking. However, in this case, the new company had to be in a position to provide its services from the beginning of January 1996 and it was therefore a matter of urgency that all necessary preparations be made in order to avoid an interruption in the service. Mr Candidi confirmed moreover that, at the time when he contacted the applicant, there was nothing to indicate to him that a final decision against the applicant would be taken.

78 That version of the facts is corroborated, moreover, by the testimony of Ms Lahousse. She confirmed that the successful undertaking had to be operational from 1 January 1996. Consequently the applicant, as the successful tenderer in the contested invitation to tender, had to make preparations in order to be in a position to perform the contract with effect from 1 January 1996. However, according to Ms Lahousse, the Bureau had raised, at a meeting of 11 December 1995, the problem of the integrity of the executives of the applicant company, and this was discussed during the meeting of 13 December 1995. As a consequence, a huge information campaign regarding the ability of the applicant to manage the contract in question was undertaken by a large number of drivers. That led to the suspension of the procedure between December 1995 and May 1996. For that reason, the administration did not receive precise instructions from the authorities on what to do about the contested invitation to tender until May 1996.

79 It follows that, at the beginning of December 1995, both the Parliament and the applicant believed that Embassy would perform the contract with effect from 1 January 1996. Consequently, although the applicant was not expressly invited to make the investments needed in order to have an infrastructure capable of providing the service required with effect from 1 January 1996, it is clear, given the circumstances of the case, that, in so doing, it acted in a reasonable and realistic way in order to satisfy the requirements expressed by the Parliament. It is not disputed that Embassy, in order to be able to provide those services with effect from 1 January 1996, was bound to take the measures necessary for the performance of the contract immediately after receiving the information from Mr Candidi on 4 December 1995. That argument is, moreover, supported by the lack of reaction from the officials of the Parliament to the applicant's letter of 12 December 1995. That letter referred, in particular, to the making of certain investments by reason of the urgency of the situation in which the Parliament found itself (see paragraph 7 above).

80 In those circumstances, the Parliament cannot rely on the case-law according to which an incorrect interpretation of a provision does not constitute in itself a wrongful act (see Richez-Parise and Others v Commission, Kohll v Commission and Case T-133/89 Burban v Parliament [1990] ECR II-245). That case-law, concerning actions by officials who had received erroneous information as to their rights under the Staff Regulations, cannot be applied to the circumstances of this case. A simple error of information about the interpretation of certain provisions of the Staff Regulations is not comparable to a situation in which the Parliament induced in its intended co-contracting party the certainty of winning a contract and, in addition, encouraged that party to make irreversible investments.

81 The Parliament cannot argue either that the applicant, as a tenderer in the tendering procedure, should have remained in a state of readiness in all circumstances and hence that it was Embassy's responsibility to have the infrastructure needed to perform the contract. In that regard, attention should be given to the statements of the Embassy representatives at the witness hearing, according to which the contract at issue, involving about 40 chauffeur-driven cars, was of some magnitude and extremely important for the applicant's business. It should have been clear to the Parliament that Embassy, as a new provider of the services requested, could not be ready without considerable investments.

82 Furthermore, contrary to the Parliament's contention, Embassy's certainty of winning the contract was not removed at the visit of its representatives to Strasbourg on 13 December 1995. At that meeting, the discussion centred on the truthfulness of certain rumours and articles in the press relating to the probity of the Embassy executives and not on the question of whether the company would win the contract at issue. However, that problem of probity was apparently resolved on the very day of the meeting. It is apparent from the testimony of Mr Heuzer, the applicant's representative, that Mr Candidi told him and Mr Hautot, by telephone, on their way back from Strasbourg, that that problem had been resolved. That information, which is not disputed by the Parliament, is moreover confirmed by Mr Feidt's internal memorandum written on the same day (see paragraph 9 above), explaining that the allegations concerning the probity of the Embassy executives were without any foundation and requesting the agreement of the Secretary-General to the signing of the contract with Embassy as soon as possible.

83 It is therefore clear from the file that it was not until several days after the meeting of 13 December 1995 that the Parliament decided not to award the contract to Embassy with effect from 1 January 1996, but to award it, on a provisional basis, to Company A which was a party to the preceding contract.

84 On 19 December 1995 Mr Feidt referred to the ACPC a proposal that the contract with Company

A should be extended for one month. It is clear from the minutes of the ACPC meeting (see paragraph 10 above) that the internal Parliament decisions allowing the signing of the contract with the applicant could not be finalised before the end of 1995 and that a contract running from 1 to 31 January 1996 would be concluded with Company A (as it was on 5 January 1996). On that occasion, moreover, the ACPC invited the authorising officer to make all necessary preparations for Embassy to sign the contract as soon as possible.

85 In that regard, without being contradicted on that point by the Parliament, Mr Hautot testified that nobody within the Parliament had contacted him in order to inform him that the contract had been provisionally awarded to another company for the period from 1 to 31 January 1996. It is therefore confirmed that it was as a result of steps he took himself that Mr Hautot discovered, shortly before Christmas, that the Parliament had, provisionally, awarded the contract to Company A. On that subject, it should be noted that the contracting body must comply, at each stage of a tendering procedure, not only with the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers, but also with the principle of transparency (see Commission v Belgium, cited above, paragraph 54). Therefore, a company which is closely involved in a tendering procedure and which has even been judged to be the successful tenderer, must receive, without any delay, precise information concerning the conduct of the entire procedure. Consequently, the Parliament ought to have informed the applicant before Christmas 1995 of the precise reasons for which it would not be awarded the contract with effect from 1 January 1996 as had been previously envisaged.

86 It follows from the foregoing that the Parliament, first, induced on the part of the applicant a legitimate expectation by encouraging it to take a risk which went beyond that normally run by tenderers in a tendering procedure and, secondly, failed to inform the applicant of an important change in the conduct of the tendering procedure.

87 In that regard it is not necessary to determine whether the officials of the Parliament acted in a way that was excusable. As the contracting body in the procedure for the award of contracts, the Parliament is obliged to show a coherent and consistent attitude towards its tenderers. The interventions of various administrative and political bodies within the Parliament cannot therefore justify the failure to comply with its obligations to the applicant.

88 It follows that the Parliament has committed a fault which gives rise to non-contractual liability on the part of the Community.

Damage and causal link

Arguments of the parties

89 The applicant considers that it has suffered the following damage:

(a) expenses and charges incurred by reason of its certainty of winning the contract, which can be broken down, according to invoices lodged with the reply, as follows:

- cost of active fleet reserved for the Parliament from 1 January 1996 until 31 March 1996 and insurance, namely 36 cars in total: BEF 3 272 545 (incl. VAT (including Value-Added Tax));

- parking expenses for the period from 1 January 1996 to 31 March 1996 for 36 vehicles: BEF 635 105 (incl. VAT);

- expenses of breaking off the contract for the fleet of 25 vehicles: BEF 1 146 980 (incl. VAT);

- telephone costs (GSM): BEF 424 480;

(b) expenses of organising the contract, consultants and other: BEF 886 600, split as follows:

- preparation of the contract, feasibility study and statistical analysis: BEF 131 325;

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

- assistance and preparation of data, tender and organisational advice: BEF 181 500 (incl. VAT);

- preparation, negotiation for fleet of vehicles, telephone contract and parking: BEF 124 963;

- travel and representation expenses (flat-rate basis): BEF 150 000;

- secretarial expenses (flat-rate basis): BEF 52 000;

- fax, telephones, administration, copying and printing (flat-rate basis): BEF 100 000;

- expenses in connection with recruitment, medical examinations, training (drafting of contracts, hiring of a meeting room) and familiarisation expenses for the drivers: BEF 200 000;

- fees of Mr Hautot, working exclusively on the tender and subsequently on the setting up of the Parliament contract from October 1995 until 30 June 1996: BEF 540 000;

(c) loss of profit estimated over five years on the basis of a three-year contract renewable for two twelve-month periods: BEF 10 000 000.

90 In addition, the applicant claims that the wrongful attitude of the Parliament caused it non-material damage. It explains that, in the certainty that it would be awarded the contract, it made promises not only to its shareholders, but also to third parties, with a view to expansion and commercial success. The particularly unclear circumstances in which the contract was not awarded (rumours about its solvency, capital base, the quality of its services and the reliability of its shareholders and/or administrators) were circulated in Belgian society, and particularly in Brussels society, which is particularly closed and narrow.

91 The applicant estimates that, subject to an increase or reduction in that amount, the non-material damage must be assessed at a flat rate of BEF 5 000 000.

92 The applicant states, moreover, that, had it not, in one way or another, been certain of winning the contract, it would never have invested the sums spent on setting up the services promised, so that the existence of the causal link between the fault alleged and the damage claimed, as required by the case-law, is proven. Furthermore, the particularly negative rumours which, at one time, circulated about it would not have been repeated or had any effect at all in terms of image and commercial reputation if, at the end of the day, the contract had been performed and/or concluded normally.

93 The Parliament considers that the applicant limits itself to pleading various heads of damage without adducing the slightest evidence to show that it really suffered the harm alleged. It adds that the applicant has adduced no proof that the invoices which it has produced corresponded to expenses incurred in connection with their supposed relations.

94 Furthermore, the Parliament disputes owing the applicant anything in respect of supposed non-material damage. First, the applicant adduces no evidence to show that its reputation was damaged and, secondly, it has no evidence showing that the Parliament was the cause of, or participated in, the spreading of the rumours which it pleads in support of its application.

95 The Parliament contends, finally, that the causal link between the fault alleged and the damage claimed is completely lacking, by reason of the circumstance that, as early as 13 December 1995, at the meeting in Strasbourg, the applicant had been told that the opinion of the ACPC was purely advisory and that the Parliament took the final decision about the granting of the contract. It adds that the expenses which the applicant incurred in the preparation and performance of the contract, and its loss of profit, are not, in any event, compensable, since Embassy has not shown that the first contract had been effectively awarded to it.

Assessment of the Court

96 In this case, it has been established that the fault committed by the Parliament gives rise to non-contractual liability on the part of the Community. On the other hand, no contractual liability has been incurred. In the circumstances the applicant is not justified in claiming compensation for its loss of profit, since that would result in giving effect to a contract which never existed.

97 Next, it is clear from Article 4 of the General Terms and Conditions that the contracting institution is not liable for any compensation with respect to tenderers whose tenders have not been accepted. It follows that the charges and expenses incurred by a tenderer in connection with his participation in a tendering procedure cannot in principle constitute damage which is capable of being remedied by an award of damages (see Case T-13/96 TEAM v Commission [1998] ECR I-4073, paragraph 71). In this case the applicant has provided no evidence that would permit a derogation from that principle. The applicant is therefore not justified in claiming reimbursement of the expenses relating to the preparation of the tender.

98 It remains, therefore, to determine the damage which is connected with the investments made by Embassy by reason of the information received on 4 December 1995 showing that the ACPC had delivered an opinion in its favour.

99 On that subject, it is clear from the file that, after receiving that information, the applicant immediately took the measures necessary for the performance of the contract. In a letter dated 5 December 1995 Mr Hautot expresses himself in these terms: `I will take responsibility for all recruitment... and all the working meetings with [the Parliament].... bringing together the necessary fleet is the responsibility of [Mr Heuzer] and his assistants.... I would ask everyone to make the effort required to put in place a flawless organisation for 1.1.96...' Next, a letter of 6 December 1995 from Budget Rent a Car reads: `... further to your express request, we confirm that we are proceeding with the official order and, thereafter, with the registration of the vehicles requested for 1996. ... to avoid duplication of effort we would remind you again that we are currently proceeding with the acquisition of the telecommunications infrastructure (GSM) needed for the proper conduct of your business.'

100 In addition the applicant, in its letter of 12 December 1995, reported on the measures it had taken in order to be capable of dealing with the urgency of the situation announced by the Parliament. In that letter the applicant therefore mentioned the contracts for leasing cars and GSM rental, the recruitment of drivers and attending to the latters' social security, health insurance and tax situation (see paragraph 7 above).

101 It follows that the aforementioned investments show a direct causal link with the telephone conversation of 4 December 1995.

102 In addition, by making those investments, Embassy did not exhibit a lack of prudence. First, it has already been established that its certainty of winning the contract had not been removed at the meeting in Strasbourg on 13 December 1995 (see paragraph 82 above). Secondly, the Parliament has put forward no argument which casts doubt on the truthfulness of the version of the facts given by the Embassy representatives, under oath, according to which the investments mentioned in the letter of 12 December 1995 had all been made in December 1995. Thirdly, it is clear from the testimony of the Parliament officials that Embassy did not receive any information to indicate that it might not eventually win the contract (see paragraphs 82 to 85 above).

103 It goes without saying that, in the absence of a clear refusal to award it the contract, the applicant had no reason to annul, during the first months of 1996, the contracts already concluded. It is useful to recall, in that regard, the minutes of 19 December 1995 in which the ACPC, while giving an opinion in favour of a contract from 1 January 1996 to 31 January 1996 with Company A, invites the authorising officer to do everything necessary in order for the contract with Embassy to be signed as soon as possible. That confirms that the Parliament itself intended, at that juncture, to award the contract to Embassy.

104 In view of the foregoing, the compensable damage can be considered to be made up of the damage pleaded by the applicant and mentioned above at paragraph 89(a), `expenses and charges incurred by reason of its certainty of winning the contract', and those mentioned under (b), `expenses of recruitment, medical examinations, training and familiarisation expenses for the drivers' and `preparation, negotiation for fleet of vehicles, telephone contract and parking'.

105 In that regard the Court rejects the argument of the Parliament according to which the applicant's invoices do not show that the expenses were incurred in connection with their relations. No document in the file goes to disprove the fact that those invoices correspond to the measures which Embassy took in order to respond to the urgency of the situation in which the Parliament found itself, measures on which Embassy had already reported in its letter of 12 December 1995.

106 However, it is clear from the file produced by the applicant that the GSM rental costs (BEF 424 450) cover the period from 19 January 1996 to 18 October 1996. The fact that the rental began to run only on 19 January 1996 is said to be due to a special offer of a rent-free period. However, the Court finds it reasonable to limit the recoverable costs to those relating to the period from 19 January 1996 to 31 March 1996. Inasmuch as the applicant did not relinquish that contract at the end of March 1996, at which point it should have realised that it was very likely that the Parliament contract would not be awarded to it, it must itself bear the costs incurred thereafter. The sum recoverable for GSM rental, including the estimated cost for breaking off the contract, can therefore be assessed at BEF 200 000.

107 Since the Parliament has not disputed the correctness of the sums claimed by the applicant, it is appropriate to assess Embassy's loss on the basis of the figures it has supplied (see paragraph 89 above). Compensation for the damage suffered by the applicant therefore amounts to the total sum of BEF 5 579 593 (incl. VAT). However, since the VAT paid by the undertaking can be reclaimed and is not, consequently, borne by Embassy, it cannot be taken into account in calculating the damages. It is therefore necessary to take into consideration the sums claimed exclusive of VAT, namely, according to Embassy's invoices, BEF 1 875 000 + BEF 829 583 for car rental, BEF 947 917 for breaking off the contract, BEF 524 880 for the parking of cars, and BEF 103 275 for the file relating to cars and telephone costs. To that must be added the sum for GSM rental, earlier calculated at BEF 200 000, and the flat-rate sum relating to the recruitment of drivers, amounting to BEF 200 000. The sum of the material damage suffered by the applicant amounts therefore to BEF 4 680 655.

108 Given the circumstances of this case it is also necessary to compensate the applicant for the non-material damage it has suffered. It has certainly neither shown that its reputation has been damaged nor proved that the Parliament was responsible for causing such damage. However, it is clear from the file that, although, from December 1995, Embassy took preparatory measures in order to respond to the urgency of the situation outlined by the Parliament officials, it did not know until 19 June 1996 that the contract would not be awarded to it (see paragraph 19 above). In those circumstances, by sending it no information - which had however been requested on many occasions - concerning the outcome of the tendering procedure, the Parliament placed Embassy in a position of uncertainty and forced it to make useless efforts with a view to responding to the urgency of the situation.

109 Consequently, the Court considers it equitable to quantify the damage, both material and non-material, suffered by the applicant at a total sum of BEF 5 000 000.

Judgment of the Court of First Instance (Second Chamber)
First Instance (Second Chamber)First Instance (Second Chamber)1999.
CAS Succhi di Frutta SpA v Commission of the European Communities.
Common agricultural policy - Food aid - Tendering procedure - Payment of successful tenderers in fruit other than those specified in the notice of invitation to tender.
Joined cases T-191/96 and T-106/97.

1 Actions for annulment - Natural or legal persons - Measures of direct and individual concern to them - Commission decision amending, after the award of supply contracts for food aid, the form of payment for successful tenderers - Action brought by an unsuccessful tenderer - Admissible

(EC Treaty, Art. 173, fourth para. (now, after amendment, Art. 230, fourth para., EC))

2 Actions for annulment - Action seeking annulment of a decision confirming an earlier decision not contested in good time - Inadmissible - Meaning of a `confirmatory' decision - Where a decision is adopted after reconsideration of an earlier decision and on the basis of new evidence - Not a confirmatory decision

(EC Treaty, Art. 173 (now, after amendment, Art. 230 EC))

3 Actions for annulment - Interest in bringing proceedings - Action contesting a decision which has been implemented - Action brought by a tenderer contesting the award to competitors of a contract which has been implemented in full - Admissible

(EC Treaty, Art. 173 (now, after amendment, Art. 230 EC))

4 Agriculture - Common agricultural policy - Food aid - Programmes for the free supply of agricultural products intended for the people of Armenia and Azerbaijan - Regulation No 228/96 - Contract award procedure - Principles of the equal treatment of tenderers and of transparency - Scope - Amendment by the contracting authority of one of the conditions in the notice of invitation to tender - Breach

(Commission Regulation No 228/96)

5 Actions for annulment - Time-limits - Point from which time starts to run - Date on which the measure came to the applicant's knowledge - Obligation on learning of the existence of the measure to request the whole text thereof within a reasonable period

(EC Treaty, Art. 173, fifth para. (now, after amendment, Art. 230, fifth para., EC))

1 Persons other than those to whom a decision is addressed may claim to be individually concerned, for the purposes of the fourth paragraph of Article 173 of the Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 230, fourth paragraph, EC), only if the decision at issue affects them by reason of certain attributes peculiar to them or by reason of factual circumstances in which they are distinguished from all other persons, and by virtue of those factors distinguishes them individually in the same way as the person addressed.

A decision adopted in implementation of a food aid programme, by which the Commission provides that peaches are to be substituted for the apples and oranges initially provided for in the notice of invitation to tender as the means of paying successful tenderers, and which amends the coefficients of equivalence as between those products, established in an earlier decision, must be regarded as an independent decision - distinct from that earlier decision - which amends the conditions of the invitation to tender. Such a decision is of individual concern, within the meaning of the fourth paragraph of Article 173 of the Treaty, to an unsuccessful tenderer. Such a tenderer is not individually concerned merely by the Commission decision which determines the fate, be it favourable or unfavourable, of each of the tenders submitted in answer to the notice of invitation to tender. It also retains an individual interest in ensuring that the conditions of the notice of invitation to tender are complied with at the stage when the award itself is implemented.

2 A decision adopted by the Commission in implementation of a food aid programme by means of a tendering procedure, following reconsideration of an earlier decision, cannot be regarded as a measure which is merely confirmatory of the earlier decision, where the new decision lays down different conditions in the invitation to tender and is based on new evidence. An action for annulment of that decision cannot be declared inadmissible, therefore, on the ground that the earlier decision was not contested in good time.

3 Even where a decision to award a contract has been fully implemented for the benefit of other competitors, a tenderer retains an interest in the annulment of such a decision; such interest consists either in the tenderer's being properly restored by the Commission to his original position or in prompting the Commission to make suitable amendments in the future to the system of invitations to tender if that system is found to be incompatible with certain legal requirements.

4 In the context of the tendering system for the implementation of Regulation No 228/96 on the supply of fruit juice and fruit jams intended for the people of Armenia and Azerbaijan, the procedure for comparing tenders has to comply at every stage with both the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers and the principle of transparency so as to afford equality of opportunity to all tenderers when formulating their tenders. The contracting authority is obliged to specify clearly in the notice of invitation to tender the subject-matter and the conditions of the tendering procedure, and to comply strictly with the conditions laid down.

A decision by which the Commission authorises successful tenderers to take by way of payment for their supplies products other than those specified in the notice of invitation to tender, whereas that substitution was not provided for in that notice as prescribed by the Regulation, and which fixes coefficients of equivalence in relation to those products by reference to circumstances arising after the award infringes the notice of invitation to tender and also the principles of transparency and equal treatment.

5 The point from which time starts to run for the purposes of bringing an action for annulment cannot be fixed at the date on which the applicant claims to have had sight of the full text of the contested decision, where it is established that the applicant already had knowledge of the existence of that measure and a reasonable period for requesting the full text thereof had long since elapsed by that date. It is for a party who has knowledge of a decision concerning it to request the whole text thereof within a reasonable period.

on the supply of fruit juice and fruit jams intended for the people of Armenia and Azerbaijan provided for in Regulation (EC) No 228/96,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

(Second Chamber), composed of: A. Potocki, President, C.W. Bellamy and A.W.H. Meij, Judges,

Registrar: H. Jung,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 10 February 1999,

gives the following

Judgment

Costs

104 Under the first subparagraph of Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. According to Article 87(3) of the Rules of Procedure, the Court of First Instance may order that the costs be shared or that each party bear its own costs, where each party succeeds on some and fails on other heads, or where the circumstances are exceptional.

105 Since the Commission has been unsuccessful in Case T-191/96, it must be ordered to pay the costs in that case, as applied for by the applicant. As regards the proceedings for interim relief in Case T-191/96 R, the Court of First Instance considers it appropriate, in the light of the order of the President of the Court of First Instance of 26 February 1997, to order each party to bear its own costs.

106 By contrast, since the applicant has been unsuccessful in Case T-106/97, it must be ordered to pay the costs in that case, as applied for by the Commission.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

(Second Chamber)

hereby:

1. Annuls Commission Decision C (96) 2208 of 6 September 1996;

2. Dismisses the application in Case T-106/97 as inadmissible;

3. Orders the Commission to pay the costs in Case T-191/96, orders each party to bear its own costs in Case T-191/96 R, and orders the applicant to pay the costs relating to Case T-106/97.

Legal framework, facts and procedure

1 On 4 August 1995, the Council adopted Regulation (EC) No 1975/95 on actions for the free supply of agricultural products to the peoples of Georgia, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Kyrgyzstan and Tajikistan (OJ 1995 L 191, p. 2). The first two recitals in the preamble to that regulation state that `it is advisable to supply Georgia, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Kyrgyzstan and Tajikistan with agricultural products in order to improve the food supply situation, taking into account the diversity of local situations without compromising development towards supplies according to market rules', and that `the Community has agricultural products in stock following intervention measures and it is advisable, exceptionally, to dispose, in priority, of these products in carrying out the action envisaged'.

2 Article 1 of Regulation No 1975/95 states:

`Under the conditions laid down by this Regulation, measures shall be taken for the free supply to Georgia, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Kyrgyzstan and Tajikistan of agricultural products, to be determined, which are available as a result of intervention measures; in the case where the products are temporarily not available in intervention they may be mobilised on the Community market in order to meet the commitments of the Community.'

3 Article 2 of Regulation No 1975/95 provides:

`1. The products shall be supplied unprocessed or in processed form.

2. The measures may also relate to foodstuffs available or which may be obtained on the market by payment with products coming from intervention stocks and belonging to the same group of products.

3. The supply costs, including transport and, where applicable, processing costs, shall be determined by invitation to tender or, for reasons connected with urgency or with difficulties of transportation, by direct agreement procedure.

4 Subsequently, the Commission adopted Regulation (EC) No 2009/95 of 18 August 1995 laying down detailed rules for the free supply of agricultural products held in intervention stocks to Georgia, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Kyrgyzstan and Tajikistan pursuant to Regulation No 1975/95 (OJ 1995 L 196, p. 4).

5 The second recital in the preamble to Regulation No 2009/95 states:

`... free supplies are foreseen in the form of agricultural products from intervention stocks without further processing and of products not available from intervention stocks but belonging to the same group of products;... therefore, specific detailed rules should be laid down for supplies of processed products;... provisions should be made in particular for such supplies to be paid for in raw materials from intervention stocks'.

6 Article 2(2) of Regulation No 2009/95 provides:

`The invitation to tender may relate to the quantity of products to be removed physically from intervention stocks as payment for the supply of processed products from the same group of products to a delivery stage to be determined in the notice of invitation to tender'.

7 According to Article 6(1)(e)(1) of Regulation No 2009/95, where Article 2(2) applies, tenders are only valid where they indicate `the proposed quantity of product, expressed in tonnes (net weight), to be exchanged for one tonne (net) of finished product under the conditions and to the delivery stage specified in the invitation to tender'.

8 Under Article 6(2) of Regulation No 2009/95:

`Tenders submitted which are not in accordance with the conditions of the present Article, or which only conform partially to the conditions of the tender Regulation or which contain conditions other than those laid down in this Regulation may be rejected.'

9 According to Article 15(1) of Regulation No 2009/95, notices of invitation to tender are to specify in particular:

`- the additional terms and conditions,

- the lots...,

...

- the main physical and technical characteristics of the various lots,

...'.

10 According to Article 15(2) of Regulation No 2009/95, in the case of invitations to tender as provided for in Article 2(2), the notice is to specify in particular:

`- the lot or group of lots to be taken over in payment for the supply,

- the characteristics of the processed product to be supplied, namely type, quantity, quality, packaging, etc.'.

11 The Commission then adopted Regulation (EC) No 228/96 of 7 February 1996 on the supply of fruit juice and fruit jams intended for the people of Armenia and Azerbaijan (OJ 1996 L 30, p. 18).

12 The first and second recitals in the preamble to Regulation No 228/96 state:

`... Regulation (EC) No 1975/95 provides that actions for the free supply of agricultural products may relate to foodstuffs available or capable of being obtained on the market by means of payment with products available following intervention measures;

... to respond to requests from the beneficiary States for fruit juices and fruit jams, it is appropriate to open a tender to determine the most advantageous conditions for the supply of such products and to provide the payment of the successful tenderer with fruit withdrawn from the market following the withdrawal operations in application of Articles 15 and 15A of Council Regulation (EEC) No 1035/72 of 18 May 1972 on the common organisation of the market in fruit and vegetables (OJ 1972 L 118, p. 1), as last amended by Commission Regulation (EC) No 1363/95 (OJ 1995 L 132, p. 8).'

13 According to Article 1 of Regulation No 228/96:

`A tendering procedure is hereby initiated for the supply of a maximum of 1 000 tonnes of fruit juice, 1 000 tonnes of concentrated fruit juice and 1 000 tonnes of fruit jams as indicated in Annex I, in accordance with the provisions of Regulation (EC) No 2009/95, and in particular Article 2(2) thereof and the specific provisions of the present Regulation.'

14 Annex I to Regulation No 228/96 contains the following details:

Lot No 1 Product to be supplied: 500 tonnes (net) of apple juice Product to be withdrawn: Apples

Lot No 2 Product to be supplied: 500 tonnes (net) of apple juice concentrated to 50%

Product to be withdrawn: Apples

Lot No 3 Product to be supplied: 500 tonnes (net) of orange juice Product to be withdrawn: Oranges

Lot No 4 Product to be supplied: 500 tonnes (net) of orange juice concentrated to 50%

Product to be withdrawn: Oranges

Lot No 5 Product to be supplied: 500 tonnes net of diverse fruit jams Product to be withdrawn: Apples

Lot No 6 Product to be supplied: 500 tonnes net of diverse fruit jams Product to be withdrawn: Oranges

For each of the lots, the delivery date is fixed at 20 March 1996.

15 By letter of 15 February 1996, the applicant submitted a tender for Lots Nos 1 and 2, offering to withdraw 12 500 tonnes and 25 000 tonnes of apples respectively as payment for the supply of its products for those two lots.

16 Trento Frutta SpA (`Trento Frutta') and Loma GmbH (`Loma') offered, respectively, to withdraw 8 000 tonnes of apples for Lot No 1 and 13 500 tonnes of apples for Lot No 2. In addition, Trento Frutta stated that, in the event of there not being enough apples, it was prepared to accept peaches.

17 On 6 March 1996, the Commission sent to the Azienda di Stato per gli Interventi nel Mercato Agricolo (the Italian intervention agency, `AIMA'), with a copy to Trento Frutta, Memorandum No 10663 stating that it had awarded Lots Nos 1, 3, 4, 5 and 6 to Trento Frutta. According to that memorandum, Trento Frutta would receive as payment, in priority, the following quantities of fruit withdrawn from the market:

Lot No 1 8 000 tonnes of apples or, alternatively, 8 000 tonnes of peaches;

Lot No 3 20 000 tonnes of oranges or, alternatively, 8 500 tonnes of apples or 8 500 tonnes of peaches;

Lot No 4 32 000 tonnes of oranges or, alternatively, 13 000 tonnes of apples or 13 000 tonnes of peaches;

Lot No 5 18 000 tonnes of apples or, alternatively, 18 000 tonnes of peaches;

Lot No 6 45 000 tonnes of oranges or, alternatively, 18 000 tonnes of apples or 18 000 tonnes of peaches.

18 On 13 March 1996, the Commission sent Memorandum No 11832 to AIMA informing it that it had awarded Lot No 2 to Loma in return for the withdrawal of 13 500 tonnes of apples.

19 Pursuant to Regulation No 228/96, AIMA took the measures necessary for giving effect to Commission Memoranda Nos 10663 and 11832, cited above, by means of Circular No 93/96 of 21 March 1996 which reproduced their content.

20 On 14 June 1996, the Commission adopted Decision C (96) 1453 on the supply of fruit juice and fruit jams intended for the people of Armenia and Azerbaijan, pursuant to Regulation No 228/96 (`the Decision of 14 June 1996'). According to the second recital in the preamble to that decision, since the award, the quantities of products in question withdrawn from the market had been negligible in comparison with the quantities required, although the withdrawal season was virtually over. It was therefore necessary, in order to complete that operation, to allow the successful tenderers wishing to do so to take as payment, in place of apples and oranges, other products withdrawn from the markets in predetermined quantities reflecting the processing equivalence of the products in question.

21 Article 1 of the Decision of 14 June 1996 provides that the products withdrawn from the market be made available to the successful tenderers (namely Trento Frutta and Loma) at their request, according to the following coefficients of equivalence:

(a) 1 tonne of peaches for 1 tonne of apples, (b) 0.667 tonne of apricots for 1 tonne of apples, (c) 0.407 tonne of peaches for 1 tonne of oranges, (d) 0.270 tonne of apricots for 1 tonne of oranges.

22 That decision was addressed to the Italian Republic, the French Republic, the Hellenic Republic and the Kingdom of Spain.

23 On 22 July 1996 the Commission adopted Decision C (96) 1916 on the supply of fruit juice and fruit jams intended for the people of Armenia and Azerbaijan, pursuant to Regulation No 228/96 (`the Decision of 22 July 1996'). According to the third recital in the preamble to that decision, the quantity of peaches and apricots available would not be sufficient to complete the operation and it was appropriate to allow, in addition, the substitution of nectarines for the apples to be withdrawn by the successful tenderers.

24 Article 1 of the Decision of 22 July 1996 provides that the products withdrawn from the market are made available to Trento Frutta and Loma, at their request, according to the coefficient of equivalence of 1.4 tonnes of nectarines for 1 tonne of apples.

25 That decision was addressed to the Italian Republic.

26 By action brought before the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale (Regional Administrative Court), Lazio, and notified to AIMA on 24 July 1996, the applicant sought the annulment of AIMA's Circular No 93/96, cited above.

27 On 26 July 1996, at the meeting organised at its request with the staff of Commission Directorate-General VI-Agriculture (DG VI), the applicant presented its objections to the substitution, authorised by the Commission, of other fruit for apples and oranges and obtained a copy of the Decision of 14 June 1996.

28 On 2 August 1996, the applicant sent to the Commission Technical Report No 94 prepared by the Dipartimento Territorio e Sistemi Agro-Forestali (Department of Land and Forestry Management) of the University of Padua on the coefficients of economic equivalence of certain fruit to be used for processing into juice.

29 On 6 September 1996, the Commission adopted Decision C (96) 2208 amending the Decision of 14 June 1996 on the supply of fruit juice and fruit jams intended for the people of Armenia and Azerbaijan, pursuant to Regulation No 228/96 (`the Decision of 6 September 1996'). According to the second recital in the preamble to that decision, in order to bring about a more balanced substitution of products, over the whole withdrawal period for peaches, between the apples and oranges used for the supply of fruit juice to the people of the Caucasus, on the one hand, and the peaches withdrawn from the market to pay for those supplies, on the other, it was appropriate to amend the coefficients established in the Decision of 14 June 1996. The new coefficients were to be applied only to products which had not yet been withdrawn by the successful tenderers as payment for supplies.

30 Under Article 1 of the Decision of 6 September 1996, Article 1(a) and (c) of the Decision of 14 June 1996 were amended as follows:

`(a) 0.914 tonne of peaches for 1 tonne of apples,... (c) 0.372 tonne of peaches for 1 tonne of oranges.'

31 That decision was addressed to the Italian Republic, the French Republic, the Hellenic Republic and the Kingdom of Spain.

32 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 25 November 1996, the applicant brought an action for annulment of the Decision of 6 September 1996. That case was registered under number T-191/96.

33 By order of 26 February 1997 in Case T-191/96 R CAS Succhi di Frutta v Commission [1997] ECR II-211, the President of the Court of First Instance dismissed an application for suspension of the operation of the Decision of 6 September 1996, made by the applicant on 16 January 1997.

34 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 9 April 1997, the applicant brought an action for annulment of the Decision of 22 July 1996, claiming that it had received a copy of that decision only on 30 January 1997, in the context of the proceedings for interim relief. That case was registered under number T-106/97.

35 By order of 20 March 1998, the President of the Second Chamber of the Court of First Instance dismissed an application by Allione Industria Alimentare SpA for leave to intervene in support of the form of order sought by the applicant in Case T-191/96 CAS Succhi di Frutta v Commission [1998] ECR II-575.

36 By order of 14 October 1998, the President of the Second Chamber of the Court of First Instance ordered that Cases T-191/96 and T-106/97 be joined for the purposes of the oral procedure and the judgment.

37 Upon hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court of First Instance (Second Chamber) decided to open the oral procedure without taking any measures of preparatory inquiry. However, it requested the Commission to indicate in writing before the hearing what had been the state of apple stocks available to the intervention agencies at the material time. The Commission complied with that request within the time-limit prescribed. The hearing took place on 10 February 1999.

Forms of order

38 In Case T-191/96, the applicant claims that the Court should:

- annul the Decision of 6 September 1996 amending the Decision of 14 June 1996;

- order the Commission to pay the costs.

39 In Case T-106/97, the applicant claims that the Court should:

- annul the Decision of 22 July 1996;

- order the Commission to pay the costs.

40 In these two cases, the Commission contends that the Court should:

- dismiss the application as inadmissible or, in the alternative, unfounded;

- order the applicant to pay the costs.

Case T-191/96

Admissibility

Arguments of the parties

41 The Commission contends that the application is inadmissible on two grounds: the applicant is not directly and individually concerned by the Decision of 6 September 1996, and it has no interest in obtaining its annulment.

42 The Commission points out first of all that the applicant does not dispute the award of the lots for which it submitted a tender. It contends that the act contested in this case did not provide for the replacement of apples and oranges by peaches, but merely amended the coefficients of equivalence between those fruits, that substitution having been authorised by the Decision of 14 June 1996.

43 The fact that those coefficients of equivalence may be more or less favourable to the successful tenderers can be of individual concern only to them. The applicant's situation, in relation to the Decision of 6 September 1996, is not in any way different from that of any operator in the sector concerned, other than the successful tenderers for the contract (see, in particular, order in Case T-183/94 Cantina Cooperativa fra Produttori Vitivinicoli di Torre di Mosto and Others v Commission [1995] ECR II-1941, paragraph 49).

44 The case-law on challenging a tendering procedure, in particular, Case 92/78 Simmenthal v Commission [1979] ECR 777, is not relevant. The Decision of 6 September 1996 is a measure independent of the notice of invitation to tender, adopted after the award of the contract, which it does not amend in any way. The successful tenderers are indeed those tenderers who offered to accept the smallest quantity of apples as payment. In those circumstances, the fact that the applicant took part in the tendering procedure in question does not confer on it any special attribute, as compared with any other third person, in relation to the Decision of 6 September 1996.

45 Furthermore, the mere fact that a measure may exert an influence on the competitive relationships existing on the market in question is not sufficient to enable any trader in any form of competitive relationship with the addressee of the measure to be regarded as directly and individually concerned by that measure (Joined Cases 10/68 and 18/68 Eridania Zuccherifici and Others v Commission [1969] ECR 459, paragraph 7).

46 Moreover, since the contested decision amended the coefficients of equivalence fixed in the Decision of 14 June 1996 along the lines the applicant wished, it had no interest in requesting the annulment of that decision since the effect of that annulment would be to reinstate the previous coefficients (see orders in Case T-6/95 R Cantine dei Colli Berici v Commission [1995] ECR II-647, paragraph 29; and in Case T-6/95 Cantine dei Colli Berici v Commission, not published in the ECR, paragraph 46).

47 The Commission states, finally, that the arguments put forward by the applicant could have been directed against the Decision of 14 June 1996, which was more unfavourable to it, but which it did not challenge within the prescribed time.

48 The applicant claims that it is directly concerned by the contested decision. It is also individually concerned by the contested decision, first, in its capacity as tenderer (Simmenthal v Commission, paragraphs 25 and 26) and, second, by reason of the extremely serious economic loss that it has suffered because of the allocation to competitors, as payment for their supplies, of substitute fruits in excessive quantities. It points out that the contested decision was adopted after the Commission had, at its request, fully reconsidered the situation.

49 The applicant also claims that it retains an interest in seeking the annulment of the contested decision, even if the award of the contract for the benefit of its competitors has been fully implemented (Simmenthal v Commission, paragraph 32).

Findings of the Court

50 The fourth paragraph of Article 173 of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 230 EC), confers on natural or legal persons the right to bring an action for annulment against decisions addressed to them and against decisions which, although in the form of a regulation or a decision addressed to another person, are of direct and individual concern to them.

51 It is settled case-law that persons other than those to whom a decision is addressed may claim to be individually concerned, for the purpose of that provision, only if the decision at issue affects them by reason of certain attributes peculiar to them or by reason of factual circumstances in which they are distinguished from all other persons, and by virtue of those factors distinguishes them individually in the same way as the person addressed (judgment in Case 25/62 Plaumann v Commission [1963] ECR 95; see, for example, judgment in Case T-86/96 Arbeitsgemeinschaft Deutscher Luftfahrt-Unternehmen and Hapag-Lloyd Fluggesellschaft v Commission [1999] ECR II-0000, paragraph 42; and the case-law cited therein).

52 It is common ground in this case that the applicant took part in the bidding for Lots Nos 1 and 2, and that Lot No 1 was awarded to Trento Frutta.

53 Moreover, the Commission does not dispute the fact that its Memorandum No 10663 of 6 March 1996, cited above, contains elements which do not correspond to the conditions laid down in the notice of invitation to tender provided for by Regulation No 228/96, in so far as it provides, inter alia, for the substitution of peaches for apples and oranges as the means of payment for the supplies from Trento Frutta. That memorandum therefore amends the arrangements for payment prescribed for the different lots.

54 The amendment of the arrangements for payment prescribed for the different lots was confirmed by the Decision of 14 June 1996 with regard to all the successful tenderers. Subsequently, the applicant asked the Commission to reconsider that decision. For that purpose, a meeting between the staff of DG VI and the applicant took place on 26 July 1996, following which the applicant sent to the Commission Technical Report No 94 (paragraphs 27 to 28 above).

55 In the light of the new information brought to its attention in this way and of a reconsideration of the situation as a whole, in particular of the level of the price of peaches on the Community market recorded by its staff in mid-August 1996 (see the DG VI working document, Annex 11 to the defence), the Commission adopted the contested Decision of 6 September 1996, laying down new coefficients of equivalence between peaches, on the one hand, and apples and oranges, on the other.

56 Consequently, the contested decision must be regarded as an independent decision, taken following a request from the applicant, on the basis of new information, and it amends the conditions of the invitation to tender in that it provides, with different coefficients of equivalence, for the substitution of peaches for apples and oranges as a means of payment to the successful tenderers in spite of the contacts which took place in the interim between the parties.

57 In those circumstances, it must be held that the applicant is individually concerned by the contested decision. It is concerned, first, in its capacity as unsuccessful tenderer in so far as one of the important conditions of the invitation to tender - that concerning the means of payment for the supplies at issue - was later amended by the Commission. Such a tenderer is not individually concerned merely by the Commission decision which determines the fate, be it favourable or unfavourable, of each of the tenders submitted in answer to the notice of invitation to tender (Simmenthal v Commission, paragraph 25). It also retains an individual interest in ensuring that the conditions of the notice of invitation to tender are complied with at the stage when the award itself is implemented. The fact that the Commission did not point out in the notice of invitation to tender the possibility for successful tenderers to obtain fruit other than those prescribed as payment for their supplies denied the applicant the chance of submitting a tender different from that which it had submitted, and of thus having the same opportunity as Trento Frutta.

58 Second, in the particular circumstances of the case, the applicant is individually concerned by the contested decision because it was adopted after a reconsideration of the situation as a whole, undertaken at the applicant's request and in the light, in particular, of the additional information which it presented to the Commission.

59 The applicant is also directly concerned by the contested decision since the Commission did not leave any margin of discretion to the national authorities in the matter of the methods for implementing that decision (see, for example, the judgment in Joined Cases 41/70, 42/70, 43/70, 44/70 International Fruit Company and Others v Commission [1971] ECR 411, paragraphs 25 to 28).

60 Furthermore, the argument based on the fact that the applicant did not challenge the Decision of 14 June 1996 within the prescribed time-limit must be rejected, since the contested decision cannot be regarded as a measure which is merely confirmatory of that decision. As stated above, the Commission agreed, at the applicant's request, to reconsider the Decision of 14 June 1996, and the contested decision was adopted following that reconsideration. Furthermore, the contested decision lays down different coefficients of equivalence and is based on new evidence. In those circumstances, the applicant's action cannot be declared inadmissible on that basis (see judgments in Case T-82/92 Cortes Jimenez and Others v Commission [1994] ECR-SC II-237, paragraph 14; Case T-331/94 IPK v Commission [1997] ECR II-1665, paragraph 24; Case T-130/96 Aquilino v Council [1998] ECR-SC II-1017, paragraph 34; and Case T-100/96 Vicente-Nuñez v Commission [1998] ECR-SC II-1779, paragraphs 37 to 42).

61 The argument according to which the applicant has no interest in bringing proceedings since the sole effect of annulling the contested decision would be to reinstate the coefficients laid down in the Decision of 14 June 1996, which are less favourable to the applicant, must also be rejected.

62 It should not be presumed, for the purpose of determining whether the present action is admissible, that a judgment annulling the Decision of 6 September 1996 would have the effect merely of reviving the coefficients of equivalence laid down by the Decision of 14 June 1996, having regard, in particular, to the Commission's obligation to take the necessary measures to comply with the present judgment in accordance with Article 176 of the EC Treaty (now Article 233 EC) (see the judgment in Joined Cases 97/86, 99/86, 193/86 and 215/86 Asteris v Commission [1988] ECR 2181, paragraphs 27 to 32).

63 In any event, it is clear from paragraph 32 of Simmenthal v Commission that, even where a decision to award a contract has been fully implemented for the benefit of other competitors, a tenderer retains an interest in the annulment of such a decision; such interest consists either in the tenderer's being properly restored by the Commission to his original position or in prompting the Commission to make suitable amendments in the future to the system of invitations to tender if that system is found to be incompatible with certain legal requirements. That case-law is applicable to the present case, particularly since it is common ground that the operations prescribed by the notice of invitation to tender at issue had not yet been fully implemented at the time when the contested decision was adopted.

64 It follows that the application is admissible.

Substance

65 In support of its claim for the annulment of the Decision of 6 September 1996, the applicant bases its case on seven pleas in law alleging: (1) infringement of Regulation No 228/96 and breach of the principles of transparency and equal treatment; (2) infringement of Regulations Nos 1975/95 and 2009/95; (3) misuse of powers; (4) manifest errors of assessment; (5) infringement of Articles 39 of the EC Treaty (now Article 33 EC) and 40(3) of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 34(3) EC) and of Regulation No 1035/72 of 18 May 1972, cited above; (6) an inadequate statement of reasons; and (7) manifest inappropriateness of the replacement mechanism.

66 The first plea, alleging infringement of Regulation No 228/96 and breach of the principles of transparency and equal treatment, should first be examined.

Arguments of the parties

67 The applicant claims that, by authorising the successful tenderer to withdraw, in payment for the supply, a product different from that prescribed by Regulation No 228/96, the Commission infringed that regulation and was in breach of the principles of transparency and equal treatment.

68 The Commission contends, first, that the aim of the legislation at issue is to supply humanitarian aid to the people of Armenia and Azerbaijan by using products withdrawn from the market by the intervention agencies in order to maintain the prices of agricultural products. In that context, the possibility of replacing the fruit specified in Annex I to Regulation No 228/96 by other fruit withdrawn from the market is apparent from the first and second recitals in the preamble to that regulation, and from Regulations Nos 1975/95 and 2009/95.

69 The first and second recitals in the preamble to Regulation No 228/96 and the second recital in the preamble to Regulation No 1975/95 provide only that the fruit handed over in payment to the successful tenderers is taken from the fruit stocks withdrawn from the market following intervention measures, without stating that that fruit given in payment to the successful tenderers must be expressly referred to in the notice of invitation to tender. In particular, Article 2(2) of Regulation No 1975/95 and Article 2(2) of Regulation No 2009/95 do not require that the fruit withdrawn from the intervention stocks be identical to that which is to be supplied by the successful tenderers, but merely that it must belong `to the same group of products'.

70 Furthermore, such an obligation cannot be reconciled with the real needs of the States receiving the aid at issue. Thus, if one of them needs orange juice and there are not enough oranges withdrawn from the market, it is clear that the successful tenderers would be paid with other fruit. Equally, in payment for the supply of various fruit jams which are the subject-matter of Lots Nos 5 and 6 of Regulation No 228/96, the product to be withdrawn is oranges or apples.

71 The replacement, after the award, of the fruits to be received as payment does not in any way constitute a breach of the principles of equal treatment and transparency in that it had no influence on the course of the tendering procedure. The tenderers all competed under the same conditions, namely those laid down by Regulation No 228/96 and Annex I thereto. Since the replacement of fruit took place after the award, it did not have the slightest influence on the course of the operation.

Findings of the Court

72 In connection with Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the co-ordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682), the Court of Justice held that, when a contracting entity had laid down prescriptive requirements in the contract documents, observance of the principle of equal treatment of tenderers required that all the tenders must comply with them so as to ensure objective comparison of the tenders (judgments in Case C-243/89 Commission v Denmark [1993] ECR I-3353, paragraph 37; and Case C-87/94 Commission v Belgium [1996] ECR I-2043, paragraph 70). In addition, it has been held that the procedure for comparing tenders has to comply at every stage with both the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers and the principle of transparency so as to afford equality of opportunity to all tenderers when formulating their tenders (Commission v Belgium, cited above, paragraph 54).

73 That case-law can be applied to this case. It thus follows that the Commission was obliged to specify clearly in the notice of invitation to tender the subject-matter and the conditions of the tendering procedure, and to comply strictly with the conditions laid down, so as to afford equality of opportunity to all tenderers when formulating their tenders. In particular, the Commission could not subsequently amend the conditions of the tendering procedure, and in particular those relating to the tender to be submitted, in a manner not laid down by the notice of invitation to tender itself, without offending against the principle of transparency.

74 As stated above, the contested decision allows the successful tenderers, namely Trento Frutta and Loma, to take as payment for their supplies products other than those specified in the notice of invitation to tender and, in particular, peaches instead of apples and oranges.

75 Such a substitution is not provided for in the notice of invitation to tender as set out in Regulation No 228/96. It is clear from Annex I to that regulation, interpreted in accordance with Article 15(1) and (2) of Regulation No 2009/95 (see paragraphs 9 to 13 above), that only the products listed, namely, as regards Lots Nos 1, 2 and 5, apples, and, in respect of Lots Nos 3, 4 and 6, oranges, could be withdrawn by the successful tenderers as payment for the supplies.

76 Furthermore, it is clear from Article 6(1)(e)(1) of Regulation No 2009/95 (see paragraph 7 above) that tenders were to be valid only where they indicated the quantity of product requested by the tenderer as payment for the supply of processed products under the conditions laid down in the notice of invitation to tender.

77 The substitution of peaches for apples or oranges as payment for the supplies concerned, and the fixing of the coefficients of equivalence between those fruits therefore constitute a significant amendment of an essential condition of the notice of invitation to tender, namely the arrangements for payment for the products to be supplied.

78 However, contrary to what the Commission contends, none of the provisions it cites, in particular, the first and second recitals in the preamble to Regulation No 228/96 and Article 2(2) of Regulation No 1975/95 (paragraphs 3 and 12 above), authorises such a substitution, even by implication. Neither is substitution provided for in the situation, put forward by the Commission, where the quantities of fruit in the intervention stocks are insufficient and the substitute fruit supplied as payment to the successful tenderers belongs to the `same group of products' as their supplies.

79 Furthermore, the contested decision not only provides for the substitution of peaches for apples and oranges, but also fixes coefficients of equivalence by reference to circumstances arising after the award, namely the level of the prices of the fruit concerned on the market in mid-August 1996 although the taking into consideration of such evidence, available after the award, in order to determine the arrangements for payment applicable to the supplies at issue, is not in any way provided for in the notice of invitation to tender.

80 In addition, the information supplied by the Commission in the course of the proceedings (see Annex 3 to the defence and the Commission's reply to the questions put to it by the Court) does not show that, at the time when the contested decision was adopted, apples were not available in the intervention stocks, so as to prevent the performance of the operations specified in the notice of invitation to tender.

81 Even if there had been such a lack of availability, at the Community level, of apples which could be withdrawn, the fact remains that it was for the Commission to lay down, in the notice of invitation to tender, the precise conditions for any substitution of other fruit for that prescribed as payment for the supplies at issue, in order to comply with the principles of transparency and equal treatment. Failing that, it was for the Commission to initiate a new tendering procedure.

82 It follows from the foregoing that the contested decision infringes the notice of invitation to tender prescribed in Regulation No 228/96 and also the principles of transparency and equal treatment, and that it must therefore be annulled, without its being necessary to rule on the other pleas in law put forward by the applicant.

Case T-106/97

83 The admissibility of the action must be examined.

Arguments of the parties

84 The Commission contends that the action brought on 9 April 1997 was brought after the expiry of the time-limit laid down in the fifth paragraph of Article 173 of the Treaty, and that time began to run on 31 October 1996.

85 The applicant was certainly aware of the content of the Decision of 22 July 1996 at the hearing of 31 October 1996 before the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale, Lazio. At that date (and even 10 days before, that is 21 October 1996, according to AIMA's pleading), AIMA had produced in the case pending before that court Commission Memorandum No 29903 of 23 July 1996 (Annex 11 to the defence in Case T-106/97). That memorandum reiterates the content of the Decision of 22 July 1996 and, in particular, the coefficient of equivalence between apples and nectarines. The text of that decision was even annexed to it.

86 In its application in Case T-191/96 (paragraph 12), lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 25 November 1996, the applicant furthermore claimed to know that on 22 July

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

1996 the Commission had adopted a decision which extended, in relation to the Decision of 14 June 1996, the `possibility of substitution' of fruit. The applicant also showed that it knew the content of the Decision of 22 July 1996 by making express reference, in paragraph 23 of the application in Case T-191/96, to `the fruits in question (apples and oranges, on the one hand, peaches and apricots and nectarines, on the other)'.

87 The fact that the applicant did not request a copy of Memorandum No 29903 of 23 July 1996, cited above, in the context of the proceedings before the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale, Lazio, and that it did not take the trouble to have that document communicated to it, even though it had brought an action against AIMA in respect of the tendering procedure at issue, constitutes grave negligence and cannot be pleaded in justification of its failure to observe the time-limit for bringing proceedings in the present case.

88 Even if the applicant did not in fact have knowledge of the whole text of the Decision of 22 July 1996, it should, in any event, have formally requested it from the Commission (judgment in Case T-12/90 Bayer v Commission [1991] ECR II-219; orders in Case C-102/92 Ferriere Acciaierie Sarde v Commission [1993] ECR I-801, paragraph 17 et seq.; and in Case T-468/93 Frinil v Commission [1994] ECR II-33, paragraph 31 et seq.).

89 The applicant claims that it had knowledge of the text of the Decision of 22 July 1996 only when the Commission submitted its defence in Case T-191/96 on 30 January 1997.

90 At the meeting of 26 July 1996 with the staff of DG VI, the applicant expressly requested information on any decision which might have extended the possibility of substitution of fruit for that specified in the notice of invitation to tender. However, it did not receive any details from the officials present.

91 Although the pleading lodged by AIMA in the proceedings before the Italian administrative court mentioned, in an annex, Memorandum No 29903 of 23 July 1996, cited above, the applicant did not receive a copy of that document and did not request one, taking the view that it was a memorandum analogous to the others, relating to the replacement of apples and oranges by peaches and apricots. Moreover, AIMA's observations contained no reference to the Decision of 22 July 1996. Nor was that decision mentioned at the hearing on 31 October 1996.

92 By letter of 5 September 1997 replying to a request from the applicant, AIMA stated, furthermore, that it could find no trace in its files of `the Commission decision which was adopted on 22 July 1996' (Annex 3 to the reply in Case T-106/97).

Findings of the Court

93 In paragraph 12 of its application in Case T-191/96, the applicant stated that, at the meeting of 26 July 1996 (see paragraph 27 above), it had learned that, by two separate decisions, of 14 June and 22 July 1996 respectively, the Commission had allowed the successful tenderers to withdraw, as payment for the supplies at issue, fruit other than that specified in the notice of invitation to tender. The second of those decisions, which had not been communicated to the applicant, had `again extended the possibility of substitution'.

94 It is thus clear that, on 26 July 1996, the applicant had knowledge of the adoption by the Commission on 22 July 1996 of a decision which extended the possibility of substitution of fruit for apples and oranges laid down by the Decision of 14 June 1996.

95 Next, in its pleading of 21 October 1996 lodged at the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale, Lazio (Annex 4 to the reply in Case T-191/96), AIMA stated:

`It is a fact that the contested conversion parameters between the fruit (apples, oranges, peaches, apricots and nectarines) used as payment for the supplies, to be used for the benefit of Trento

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Frutta and Loma, are derived from Community decisions (see Memoranda No 24700 of 20 June 1996 and No 29903 of 23 July 1996) which AIMA had necessarily to apply, while informing interested parties of them.'

96 That document stated that Commission Memorandum No 29903 of 23 July 1996 was annexed to it. It is not disputed that that memorandum reiterates the content of the Commission Decision of 22 July 1996.

97 The hearing before the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale, Lazio, was held on 31 October 1996.

98 It thus follows that, by 31 October 1996 at the latest, the applicant had knowledge, at the very least, of the fact that the Commission had adopted a decision allowing the substitution of nectarines for the fruit prescribed in payment for the supplies provided by Trento Frutta and Loma, and that the content of that decision was reiterated in Commission Memorandum No 29903 of 23 July 1996.

99 That finding finds support in the fact that, in paragraph 23 of its application in Case T-191/96, lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 25 November 1996, the applicant referred to the possibility of substitution of nectarines for the fruit specified in the notice of invitation to tender.

100 Even if, as it asserts, the applicant did not have knowledge of the whole text of the Decision of 22 July 1996 before 30 January 1997, the date on which the defence was lodged in Case T-191/96, with a copy of that decision annexed to it, it must be borne in mind that, according to the settled case-law of the Court of Justice, it is for a party who has knowledge of a decision concerning it to request the whole text thereof within a reasonable period (order in Ferriere Acciaierie Sarde v Commission, paragraph 18).

101 However, in this case, it has not been established that the applicant asked the Commission to provide it with the full text of the Decision of 22 July 1996, either after the meeting of 26 July 1996, or even after AIMA's pleading had been lodged at the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale, Lazio, on 21 October 1996, or even after the hearing before that court on 31 October 1996.

102 In those circumstances, the applicant is not justified in claiming that the point from which time starts to run for bringing proceedings must be fixed at the date of 30 January 1997. It is clear from the foregoing that a reasonable period for requesting the full text of the Decision of 22 July 1996 had long since elapsed by that date.

103 It follows that the action brought on 9 April 1997 must be held to be out of time and, accordingly, inadmissible.

Judgment

1 By application received at the Court Registry on 29 September 1995, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EC Treaty for a declaration that, by failing to adopt or to communicate to the Commission within the prescribed period the necessary laws, regulations and administrative provisions to comply with Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1, hereinafter "the Directive"), the Hellenic Republic had failed to fulfil its obligations under the EC Treaty.

2 Under the first subparagraph of Article 44(1) of the Directive, Member States were to bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with the Directive before 1 July 1993, and were to inform the Commission thereof forthwith.

3 Since the Commission had not been informed of the measures adopted by the Hellenic Republic to comply with the Directive, on 9 August 1993 it gave the Greek Government formal notice to submit its observations within two months.

4 No response to the letter of formal notice having reached it, on 6 May 1994 the Commission sent the Greek Government a reasoned opinion inviting it to take the necessary measures to comply within two months.

5 No response to the reasoned opinion was forthcoming and the Commission brought the present action.

6 The Greek Government does not dispute that it failed to transpose the Directive into national law within the prescribed period. It nevertheless asks for the application to be dismissed. It submits firstly that in November 1994 a committee to carry out the preparatory legislative work was set up by a decision of the Ministry of the National Economy, in order to transpose the Directive. Secondly, the Ministry of the Environment, Planning and Public Works sent all the public sector bodies concerned the text of the Directive, by means of a ministerial circular of 27 August 1993 containing instructions for the provisional application of the Directive. Finally, that ministry produced a draft presidential decree for the transposition into the national legal order of all the provisions of the Directive.

7 It has consistently been held that mere administrative practices, which by their nature are alterable at will by the administration and are not given the appropriate publicity, cannot be regarded as constituting the proper fulfilment of a Member State' s obligations under the Treaty (see inter alia Case C-242/94 Commission v Spain [1995] ECR I-3031, paragraph 6). The Greek Government' s argument based on the distribution of the ministerial circular cannot therefore be accepted.

8 Since transposition of the Directive did not take place within the prescribed period, the Commission' s application in that respect must be regarded as well founded.

9 Consequently, it must be held that, by failing to adopt within the prescribed period the necessary laws, regulations and administrative provisions to comply with the Directive, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 44(1) of the Directive.

Judgment of the Court (Fifth Chamber)
of 2 May 1996
Commission of the European Communities v Federal Republic of Germany.
Failure of a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Directive 92/50/EEC.
Case C-253/95.

++++

1. Member States ° Obligations ° Implementation of directives ° Failure to fulfil obligations ° Justification ° Not permissible

(EC Treaty, Art. 169)

2. Acts of the institutions ° Directives ° Right of persons affected to rely on directives in the absence of adequate implementing measures ° Effect not releasing Member States from their obligation to implement directives

(EC Treaty, Art. 189, third para.)

1. A Member State may not plead provisions, practices or circumstances existing in its internal legal system in order to justify a failure to comply with the obligations and time-limits laid down in a directive.

2. The effect of the third paragraph of Article 189 of the Treaty is that Community directives must be implemented by appropriate implementing measures taken by the Member States. Only in specific circumstances, in particular where a Member State has failed to take the implementing measures required or has adopted measures which do not conform to a directive, has the Court recognized the right of persons affected thereby to rely in law on a directive as against a defaulting Member State. This minimum guarantee, arising from the binding nature of the obligation imposed on the Member States by the effect of the directives under the third paragraph of Article 189, cannot justify a Member State' s absolving itself from taking in due time implementing measures sufficient to meet the purpose of each directive.

Judgment

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 20 July 1995, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EC Treaty for a declaration that, by failing to adopt the laws, regulations and administrative provisions needed in order to comply with Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) and, in the alternative, by failing to inform the Commission forthwith of the measures taken, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under the third paragraph of Article 189 of the EC Treaty in conjunction with Article 44(1) of that directive.

2 Under the first paragraph of Article 44(1) of the directive, Member States were to bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions needed in order to comply with the directive before 1 July 1993 and to inform the Commission thereof forthwith.

3 Since it had not been notified of the provisions adopted by the Federal Republic of Germany in order to comply with the directive, the Commission gave the German Government formal notice on 9 August 1993 to submit its observations within two months.

4 On 5 November 1993 the German Government informed the Commission that work was in progress to transpose the directive into national law and attached to its reply the draft of the second Law amending the Haushaltsgrundsaetzegesetz (Framework Law on the budget). On 27 December 1993 the Commission was informed that the Law had been adopted on 26 November 1993. That Law, which, according to the German Government, was intended to transpose all the directives in the field of public contracts into national law, was to enter into force on 1 January 1994.

5 On 7 February 1994 the German Government also sent to the Commission two draft Regulations on the application of the framework law on the budget.

6 Finally, on 7 April 1994, the Federal Republic of Germany sent to the Commission at its request the definitive version of the Verordnung ueber die Vergabebestimmungen fuer oeffentliche Auftraege (Regulation on the award of public contracts) and the Verordnung ueber das Nachpruefungsverfahren fuer oeffentliche Auftraege (Regulation on verification of public contracts). Those two regulations entered into force on 1 March 1994.

7 Since examination of those provisions showed that the measures needed in order to ensure the application of the directive to public service contracts had not been taken, the Commission sent the German Government a reasoned opinion on 4 August 1994 calling upon it to adopt the requisite measures in order to comply with that opinion within two months.

8 By letter of 29 September 1994 the German Government stated that the Regulation on the award of public contracts, adopted on the basis of the second Law amending the framework law on the budget, which was intended to transpose all the European Community directives in the field of the award of public contracts into national law, entered into force on 1 March 1994 in respect of supply and works contracts and that the legislative procedure intended to extend it to service contracts was in hand. The German Government further undertook to send to the Commission the amended regulation immediately after its adoption.

9 Since it received no further information, the Commission brought the present action.

10 The German Government does not deny the infringement. It submits, however, that, immediately after the expiry of the time-limit for transposition of the directive into national law, the Federal Ministry of Economic Affairs indicated to the relevant contracting authorities that, as from 1 July 1993, the directive was directly applicable to the award of service contracts.

11 The German Government further submits that the work aimed at bringing about the legislative changes needed in order to transpose the directive into national law is in progress. In this regard it refers to the draft amendment to the Verdingungsordnung fuer Leistungen (Rules applicable to the award of supply contracts) and to the draft rules designed to replace the Verdingungsordnung fuer die Vergabe freiberuflicher Leistungen (Rules applicable to the award of contracts concerning the provision of services by the liberal professions). Likewise, a draft amendment to the Regulation on the award of public contracts which renders both sets of rules legally binding is about to be submitted to the Federal Government. The Laender, however, have not yet approved it.

12 The first point to note is that, according to the settled case-law of the Court, a Member State may not plead provisions, practices or circumstances existing in its internal legal system in order to justify a failure to comply with the obligations and time-limits laid down in a directive (see, in particular, Case C-259/94 Commission v Greece [1995] ECR I-1947, paragraph 5).

13 Secondly, the effect of the third paragraph of Article 189 of the Treaty is that Community directives must be implemented by appropriate implementing measures taken by the Member States. Only in specific circumstances, in particular where a Member State has failed to take the implementing measures required or has adopted measures which do not conform to a directive, has the Court recognized the right of persons affected thereby to rely in law on a directive as against a defaulting Member State. This minimum guarantee, arising from the binding nature of the obligation imposed on the Member States by the effect of directives under the third paragraph of Article 189, cannot justify a Member State absolving itself from taking in due time implementing measures sufficient to meet the purpose of each directive (see, in particular, Case C-433/93 Commission v Germany [1995] ECR I-2303, paragraph 24). The German Government' s argument based on the direct effect of the directive cannot therefore be accepted either.

14 Since the directive has not been transposed into national law within the prescribed period, the Commission' s action in that respect is well founded.

15 It must therefore be held that, by failing to adopt, within the prescribed period, the laws, regulations and administrative provisions needed to comply with the directive, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 44(1) thereof.

Costs

16 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party' s pleadings. The Commission has applied for costs and, since the Federal Republic of Germany has been unsuccessful in its defence, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

Judgment of the Court (Fifth Chamber) of 19 September 1996 Commission of the European Communities v Hellenic Republic. Failure by a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Failure to implement Directive 89/665/EEC within the prescribed period - Review procedures relating to public supply and public works contracts. Case C-236/95.

++++

1. Acts of the institutions ° Directives ° Implementation by the Member States ° Transposition of a directive without legislative action ° Conditions ° Legal certainty guaranteed to individuals ° Inadequacy of case-law securing for individuals, in the absence of legislation, the rights provided for by the directive

(Council Directive 89/665, Art. 2)

2. Acts of the institutions ° Directives ° Implementation by the Member States ° Directive 89/665 ° Obligation for Member States to organize for public contracts a procedure allowing the Commission to intervene in the event of an infringement of Community law ° Possibility for Member States to confer the responsibilities of contracting authorities on private persons ° Implementation unable to be secured by the mere application of Article 5 of the Treaty ° Need for implementing measures

(EC Treaty, Art. 5; Council Directive 89/665, Art. 3)

1. As far as the implementation of directives is concerned, it is particularly important, in order to satisfy the requirement for legal certainty, that individuals should have the benefit of a clear and precise legal situation enabling them to ascertain the full extent of their rights and, where appropriate, to rely on them before the national courts.

This is not the case where, in a Member State, case-law interprets national legislation in accordance with Directive 89/665 on review procedures relating to public contracts and the view is taken that this constitutes an adequate system of interim judicial protection for the purposes of the directive, but that legislation does not transpose correctly the requirements laid down in Article 2 of the directive as regards the power of review bodies in the Member States to take any interim measures with regard to the award of public contracts independently of any prior action.

2. In so far as private persons may be given the responsibilities of contracting authorities in connection with the award of contracts covered by Directive 89/665 on review procedures relating to public contracts, the obligation of bona fide cooperation and assistance to which the Member States are subject under Article 5 of the EC Treaty in order to facilitate the achievement of the Commission' s tasks is not sufficient to secure the implementation of Article 3 of the directive, which organizes the procedure for the intervention of the Commission with the Member State' s competent authorities and the contracting authority in question if it considers that a clear and manifest infringement of Community law has been committed during a procedure for the award of a public contract.

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 20 June 1996,

gives the following

Judgment

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 6 July 1995, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EC Treaty for a declaration that, by not adopting or not notifying to it within the prescribed period the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply fully with Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33, hereinafter "the directive"), the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the EC Treaty and that directive.

2 According to Article 1(1) of the directive, the Member States are to take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards award procedures for public supply and public works contracts, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible where Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law have been infringed. Article 1(3) further provides that the Member States must ensure that the review procedures introduced are available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

3 Under Article 2 of the directive, the bodies responsible for the review procedure must be empowered to take interim measures to suspend a procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority, set aside unlawful decisions and award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

4 In addition, Article 3 of the directive authorizes the Commission to intervene with the competent authorities of the Member State and the contracting authority, if it considers that a clear and manifest infringement has been committed during a procedure for the award of a public contract, so as to ensure that appropriate measures are taken in order rapidly to remedy any alleged infringement.

5 Lastly, under Article 5 of the directive, Member States are to bring into force, before 21 December 1991, the measures necessary to comply with the directive and to communicate to the Commission the texts of the main national laws, regulations and administrative provisions which they adopt in the field governed by the directive.

6 Since it had received no notification of the measures adopted and had no other information suggesting that the Hellenic Republic had fulfilled its obligations under the directive, the Commission sent it a letter before action on 20 May 1992. By letter dated 17 June 1993, the Greek Government informed the Commission that Presidential Decree No 23 of 15 January 1993 had been adopted in order to implement the directive as far as public works contracts were concerned. Since no measure had been adopted in the field of public supply contracts, the Commission delivered a reasoned opinion on 4 July 1994. By letter dated 18 August 1994, the Greek Government informed the Commission that an implementing presidential decree was in preparation. The Commission thereupon decided to bring these proceedings.

7 It should first be observed that, as the Commission made clear at the hearing, the action relates only to the failure to transpose the provisions of the directive on the award of public supply contracts.

8 The Hellenic Republic admits that it failed to adopt within the prescribed period the measures necessary formally to transpose the directive in the field of public supply contracts. It argues nevertheless that the Greek legislation in force on public works and supply contracts, considered together with the provisions of the Code of Civil and Administrative Procedure and the Statutes of the Council of State, more particularly Article 52 of Presidential Decree No 18/89 entitled "Codification of legislative provisions relating to the Council of State", already affords sufficient judicial protection to meet the requirements of the directive, bearing in mind that that protection has been further reinforced by recent case-law of the Council of State. In addition, the Greek Government states that a draft presidential decree was drawn up and notified to the Commission on 22 July 1994 and is now at the stage of final signature. The subsequent delay in adopting the draft decree is attributable to formal and procedural difficulties and to recent changes in the case-law of the judicial division of the Council of State.

9 That argument cannot be accepted.

10 As far as the suspension of procedures for the award of public contracts referred to in Article 2(1)(a) of the directive is concerned, the national legislation referred to and, more specifically, Article 52 of Presidential Decree No 18/89 constitute general provisions on the procedure for the suspension of operation of an administrative measure against which an action for annulment has been brought, and could not suffice in themselves to secure the correct transposition of the directive.

11 The suspension procedure provided for by Article 52 of Presidential Decree No 18/89 expressly covers only applications for annulment brought by legal persons governed by public law, whereas, under Article 1 of the directive, the review procedures introduced by the Member States must be "available... at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement". What is more, Article 52 of the decree in question relates only to procedures for suspension of operation of measures and presupposes the existence of a main action seeking to have the contested administrative measure annulled, whereas, under Article 2 of the directive, the Member States are under a duty more generally to empower their review bodies to take, independently of any prior action, any interim measures "including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract".

12 Admittedly, the Council of State interprets Article 52 of the presidential decree in conformity with the directive and holds that any interested party has the capacity to seek suspension of operation of measures of contracting authorities.

13 However, the Court has consistently held that it is particularly important, in order to satisfy the requirement for legal certainty, that individuals should have the benefit of a clear and precise legal situation enabling them to ascertain the full extent of their rights and, where appropriate, to rely on them before the national courts (see to this effect Case 29/84 Commission v Germany [1985] ECR 1661, paragraph 23, Case 363/85 Commission v Italy [1987] ECR 1733, paragraph 7, and C-59/89 Commission v Germany [1991] ECR I-2607, paragraph 18).

14 Having regard, however, to the wording of Article 52 of the presidential decree, which seems to confine the capacity to bring proceedings to legal persons governed by public law, case-law such as that of the Council of State cannot, in any event, satisfy those requirements of legal certainty.

15 Moreover, the national legislation referred to contains no provision on damages, as provided for in Article 2(1)(c) of the directive, for persons harmed in the event of an infringement of Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

16 Neither does the national legislation mentioned transpose Article 3 of the directive, which organizes the procedure for the intervention of the Commission with the Member State' s competent authorities and the contracting authority in question if it considers that a clear and manifest infringement has been committed during a procedure for the award of a public contract.

17 Private persons and, in particular, undertakings receiving subsidies from public authorities may, in certain circumstances, be given the responsibilities of contracting authorities in connection with the award of contracts covered by the directive. To that extent, the obligation of bona fide cooperation and assistance to which the Member States are subject under Article 5 of the EC Treaty in order to facilitate the achievement of the Commission' s tasks is not sufficient to secure the implementation of Article 3 of the directive. The Member States should therefore implement that provision in order to ensure that it is also complied with by such private persons.

18 Lastly, as regards the formal and procedural difficulties referred to by the Hellenic Republic in order to justify the delay in adopting the draft presidential decree, it should be observed that, as the Court has repeatedly held, a Member State may not plead provisions, practices or circumstances existing in its internal legal system in order to justify a failure to comply with the obligations and time-limits laid down in a directive (see, in particular, Case C-147/94 Commission v Spain [1995] ECR I-1015, paragraph 5, Case C-259/94 Commission v Greece [1995] ECR I-1947, paragraph 5, and Case C-253/95 Commission v Germany [1996] ECR I-0000, paragraph 12).

19 Consequently, it should be held that, by not adopting within the prescribed period the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply fully with the directive, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 5 of that directive.

Costs

20 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the Hellenic Republic has failed in its submissions, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

under that directive and, in particular, Article 44 thereof.

2 Under the first paragraph of Article 44(1) of the directive, Member States were to bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions needed in order to comply with the directive before 1 July 1993 and to inform the Commission thereof forthwith.

3 Since it had not been notified of the provisions adopted by the French Republic in order to comply with the directive, the Commission gave the French Government formal notice on 9 August 1993 to submit its observations within two months.

4 In the absence of a reply, the Commission sent a reasoned opinion to the French Government on 26 September 1994 calling upon it to adopt the requisite measures in order to comply with that opinion within two months.

5 In reply to that reasoned opinion, the French Government informed the Commission that a draft law concerning in particular service contracts had been submitted to the Senate. In the absence of any other information on that legislative procedure, the Commission brought the present action.

6 The French Government does not deny the infringement.

7 However, since private bodies operating in the general interest and under public control are involved, it states that a draft law has been submitted which is intended primarily to extend Law No 91-3 of 3 January 1991 on the transparency and legality of award procedures to service contracts awarded by those bodies. That law, which makes the award of certain contracts subject to rules on publication and competition, at present concerns only works contracts awarded by those bodies. Those procedures are to be extended to service contracts by the adoption of an implementing decree amending Decree No 92-311 of 31 March 1992.

8 The French Government emphasizes that, as regards contracts concluded by the State and local authorities, the directive is to be transposed into national law by means of a decree of the Conseil d' Etat which is at present the subject of final inter-ministerial consultations as to its wording.

9 Since the directive has not been transposed into national law within the prescribed period, the Commission' s action in that respect must be considered to be well founded.

10 It must therefore be held that, by failing to adopt, within the prescribed period, the laws, regulations and administrative provisions needed to comply with the directive, the French Government has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 44(1) thereof.

Costs

11 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party' s pleadings. The Commission has applied for costs and, since the French Republic has been unsuccessful in its defence, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Fifth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Declares that, by failing to adopt, within the prescribed period, the laws, regulations and administrative provisions needed in order to comply with Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 44(1) of that directive;

Judgment of the Court of First Instance (Fourth Chamber)
First Instance (Fourth Chamber)First Instance (Fourth Chamber)1996.
Adia Interim SA v Commission of the European Communities.
Public service contract - Agency staff - Tender vitiated by a calculation error - Statement of reasons for the decision rejecting the tender - No obligation for the contracting authority to contact the tenderer.
Case T-19/95.

++++

1. Acts of the institutions ° Statement of reasons ° Obligation ° Scope ° Decision to reject a tender under the procedure for the award of a public service contract

(EC Treaty, Art. 190; Council Directive 92/50, Art. 12(1))

2. Budget of the European Communities ° Financial Regulation ° Provisions applicable to tendering procedures ° Obligation for an institution to contact a tenderer after the tenders have been opened ° None

(Commission Regulation No 3418/93, Art. 99(h), second para.)

3. Public procurement in the European Communities ° Conclusion of a contract following an invitation to tender ° Discretion of the institutions ° Judicial review ° Limits

1. It follows from Article 12(1) of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, which is applicable by virtue of Article 126 of Regulation No 3418/93 to contracts awarded by Community institutions where the value of the contract in question exceeds the threshold laid down by Article 7(1) of that directive, that an institution fulfils its obligation vis-à-vis eliminated tenderers to state reasons if it first merely informs them immediately of the fact that their tender has been rejected by a mere communication not setting out any reasons and subsequently provides tenderers making an express request to that effect with a reasoned explanation within 15 days.

That manner of proceeding is consonant with the duty to state reasons enshrined in Article 190 of the Treaty, according to which the reasoning followed by the authority which adopted the measure in question must be disclosed in a clear and unequivocal fashion so as, on the one hand, to make the persons concerned aware of the reasons for the measure and thus enable them to defend their rights and, on the other, to enable the Court to exercise its supervisory jurisdiction.

The fact that interested tenderers receive a reasoned decision only if they make an express request to that effect does not restrict their ability to assert their rights before the Court. The period for bringing proceedings laid down in the fifth paragraph of Article 173 of the Treaty does not begin to run until the reasoned decision is notified, provided that the tenderer made his request for a reasoned decision within a reasonable period after he was apprised of the fact that his tender had been rejected.

2. The existence of an obligation to contact a tenderer who made a calculation error cannot be inferred from the fact that the second paragraph of Article 99(h) of Regulation No 3418/93 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of certain provisions of the Financial Regulation, albeit prohibiting any contact between the institution and the tenderer after the tenders have been opened, provides, exceptionally, that the institution may take it upon itself to contact the tenderer "if some clarification is required in connection with a tender, or if obvious clerical errors contained in the tender must be corrected".

Neither may such an obligation be imposed by virtue of the principles of sound administration or equal treatment where the body responsible for examining the tenders detected in one of them a systematic calculation error which could not be described as particularly obvious and whose exact nature and cause it was unable to determine. In such a case, any contact made with the tenderer would involve a risk of a new tender being submitted under the guise of a mere correction, which might give rise to an infringement of the principle of equal treatment, since the other competing undertakings would not have the same opportunity.

3. The institutions have a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of taking a decision to award a contract following an invitation to tender and the Court' s review should be limited to checking that there has been no serious and manifest error.

In Case T-19/95,

Adia Interim SA, a company incorporated under Belgian law, having its registered office in Brussels, represented by Vincent Thiry, of the Liège Bar, Christian Jacobs, Rechtsanwalt, Bremen, Hans Joachim Priess and Klaus Heinemann, Rechtsanwaelte, Cologne, with an address for service in Luxembourg at the Chambers of Tom M. defendant,

APPLICATION for annulment of the Commission decision, communicated to the applicant on 5 December 1994, informing it that the tender which it submitted in response to invitation to tender No 94/21/IX.C.1 on the supply of agency staff had been rejected, and for annulment of the Commission' s decision, communicated to the applicant on 21 December 1994, awarding the contracts in question to the companies Ecco, Gregg and Manpower,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES (Fourth Chamber), composed of: K. Lenaerts, President, P. Lindh and J.D. Cooke, Judges,

Registrar: B. Pastor, Principal Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 14 February 1996,

Judgment

Costs

53 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the applicant has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs in accordance with the form of order sought by the Commission.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Fourth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Dismisses the application;

2. Orders the applicant to pay the costs.

Facts

1 In order to ensure the availability of agency staff, the Commission of the European Communities periodically concludes framework agreements with employment agencies, which it selects on the basis of invitations to tender. In view of the imminent expiry of the framework agreements in force in 1994, the Commission published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities of 13 July 1994 (OJ 1994 S 132, p. 129) an open invitation to tender for the supply of agency staff (open invitation to tender No 94/21/IX.C.1). It appears from point 2 of that invitation to tender that the Commission was proposing to conclude framework agreements with three employment agencies.

2 Point 15 of the invitation to tender specifies the criteria for the award of the contracts as follows:

"° coverage of the different job and language profiles;

° organization, customer service, flexibility;

° price".

3 The price was to be calculated in accordance with the instructions laid down in the specifications. On the basis of the reference pay scales set out by the Commission, tenderers had to establish for each type of service, first, net hourly wages; secondly, gross hourly wages; and thirdly, an hourly billing rate. The latter constituted the tender price.

4 Net and gross hourly wages were to be expressed in Belgian francs, whereas the billing rates had to be expressed in ecus. Gross hourly wages were calculated by applying to the net hourly wages the relevant Belgian social security and tax provisions. In order to convert the gross hourly wages into billing rates, the tenderers had to determine a coefficient reflecting all their costs, their profit margins and a Belgian franc/ecu conversion rate.

5 The applicant company is engaged exclusively in the business of supplying agency staff. It is undisputed that at the material time it was the main supplier of agency staff to the Commission and had always performed its contracts with the Commission to the latter' s satisfaction.

6 On 30 August 1994, the applicant submitted a tender in response to invitation to tender No 94/21/IX.C.1. It is common ground that the tender contained a systematic calculation error.

7 The tenders were opened on 6 October 1994. In order to assess which of them satisfied the formal requirements and the selection criteria, the selection committee allocated 30 points to the criterion of job coverage and language profiles, 30 points to the criterion of organization, customer service and flexibility and 40 points to the criterion of price.

8 It appears from Annex 7(d) to the selection committee' s minutes, which summarize the assessment of the three award criteria, that the applicant was in second place with 48 points out of a possible 60, following the evaluation of the criteria of coverage of job and language profiles, on the one hand, and organization, customer service and flexibility, on the other.

9 In order to evaluate the price criterion, the selection committee used the following formula: it granted maximum points (40) to the lowest tender and then deducted five points from the other tenders depending on the percentage by which they exceeded the lowest tender. Thus tenders up to 5% more expensive than the lowest tender were given 35 points; those between 5 and 10% more expensive 30 points; those between 10 and 15% more expensive 25 points and so on down to a minimum of 10 points. Since the prices proposed by the applicant exceeded the lowest tender by more than 50%, its tender was given only 10 points for the price criterion, and fell from second to tenth position.

10 The three tenders accepted by the Commission each obtained 73 or 74 points. The applicant' s tender received 58 points (28 for the criterion of job coverage and language profiles, 20 for organization, customer service and flexibility and 10 for the price criterion).

11 It is undisputed that the selection committee was aware that there was a calculation error in the applicant' s tender. Its minutes of 3 November 1994 state that "the tender of Adia, although the present main contractor, has obtained a poor mark because the billing rates it gave diverge excessively from the average for the other tenders. The difference ° of more than 50% ° found in Adia' s tender is due to a systematic error in the calculation of the billing rates on the basis of the gross hourly wages."

12 By letter dated 5 December 1994, the Commission informed the applicant that its tender had been rejected in the following terms:

> "Thank you for having taken part in the abovementioned tendering procedure. I regretfully inform you that, following an in-depth comparative study of the tenders and after obtaining the prior opinion of the Advisory Committee on Procurement and Contracts ° CCAM °, the Commission considered that it was unable to accept your proposal."

13 By letter dated 9 December 1994, the applicant asked to be informed of the reasons for which its tender had been rejected.

14 By letter dated 21 December 1994, the Commission answered that request in the following terms:

> "Thank you for your letter of 9 December 1994 asking for information as to the reasons for which your company' s tender was rejected.

The procedure applied by the tender selection committee was as follows:

1. The committee analysed each tender in the same non-discriminatory way. This means in particular that the fact that a particular company had already had a contract with the Commission did not place it at a de facto advantage over the other tenderers.

2. As stated in the specifications, only three tenders were to be accepted, and not six as had previously been the case.

3. 22 tenders were received by the deadline, of which the committee dealing with the opening of tenders found that two were not in order.

4. Two of the 20 remaining tenders did not satisfy the conditions for participating in the tender set out in point 6 of the specification.

5. Six of the 18 tenders satisfying the conditions for participating in the tender did not fulfil all the selection criteria set out in point 7 of the specifications.

6. The twelve tenders selected, which included that of your company, were then assessed on the basis of the three award criteria set out in point 8 of the specification, namely:

° coverage of the different job and language profiles;

° organization, customer service, flexibility;

° price.

7. On the basis of that assessment, the selection committee adopted the tenders which had obtained the most points as being the most economically advantageous ones. These were the tenders of the companies Ecco, Gregg and Manpower.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Accordingly, the outcome of the invitation to tender and the non-acceptance of the tender by your company resulted solely from a strict application of competitive criteria. However, this outcome does not detract from the satisfaction which the Commission has had in working with your company under the previous framework agreement."

Procedure and forms of order sought by the parties

15 It was in those circumstances that the applicant brought these proceedings by application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 7 February 1995.

16 The applicant claims that the Court should:

° annul the Commission' s decision, communicated to it on 5 December 1994, not to accept the tender submitted by the applicant pursuant to invitation to tender No 94/21/IX.C.1;

° annul the Commission' s decision, communicated to it on 21 December 1994, to award the public contract relating to invitation to tender No 94/21/IX.C.1 to the companies Ecco, Gregg and Manpower;

° order the Commission to pay the costs.

17 The Commission claims that the Court should:

° dismiss the first two pleas in the application as unfounded and the third as inadmissible;

° in the alternative, dismiss the application as unfounded in its three pleas;

° order the applicant to pay the costs.

The claim for annulment

18 The applicant raises three pleas in support of its application. The first two pleas, raised in the application, allege breach of the duty to state reasons, on the one hand, and infringement of the principle of equal treatment together with manifest error of assessment, on the other. The third plea, raised in the reply, alleges infringement of the principle of sound administration, of essential procedural requirements and of the second paragraph of Article 99(h) of Commission Regulation (Euratom, ECSC, EC) No 3418/93 of 9 December 1993 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of certain provisions of the Financial Regulation of 21 December 1977 (OJ 1993 L 315, p. 1).

Admissibility

Arguments of the parties

19 The Commission contests the admissibility of the third plea on the ground that it was not raised until the reply and is not based on matters which came to light in the course of the proceedings.

20 The applicant argues that the third plea is based on "matters contained in the defence and in the documents appended thereto".

Findings of the Court

21 The Court points out that, under Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure, no new plea in law may be introduced in the course of proceedings unless it is based on matters of law or of fact which come to light in the course of the procedure.

22 There are two limbs to the third plea. In the first limb, the applicant argues that the invitation to tender published in the Supplement to the Official Journal infringes Article 99 of Regulation No 3418/93 on the ground that it does not contain most of the particulars required by that provision. In the second limb, it argues that the second paragraph of Article 99(h) of Regulation No 3418/93, read in the light of the principle of sound administration, obliged the Commission to contact it in order to clarify the terms of its tender.

23 As far as the first limb of this plea is concerned, the Court finds that the applicant could have had cognizance, before it brought its action, both of the invitation to tender, to which it responded, and of Regulation No 3418/93, which was published in the Official Journal of 16 December 1993 (OJ 1993 L 315). It follows that the first limb of the plea is not based on matters which came to light in the course of the procedure within the meaning of Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure and so must be declared inadmissible.

24 As far as the second limb of the plea is concerned, the Court considers that it should be declared admissible inasmuch as it is based on a relevant matter of fact which came to light in the course of the procedure, namely the fact that the selection committee was aware of the existence of a systematic calculation error in the applicant' s tender. Since, however, in this second limb of the third plea the applicant merely reiterates an argument set out in its second plea, the Court will consider it when it assesses the second plea.

Substance

The first plea, alleging infringement of the duty to state reasons

25 The applicant asserts in the first place that a tenderer participating in a procedure for the award of a public contract organized by a Community institution is entitled to be given, at the very time when it is informed that its tender has been rejected, an individual statement of the reasons for the rejection of its tender. It takes the view that that right flows directly from Article 190 of the EC Treaty such that the Court ought not to apply Article 12(1) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), in conjunction with Article 126 of Regulation No 3418/93, if those provisions have the effect of enabling the institutions to give the reasons for their decisions rejecting tenders a posteriori.

26 The applicant considers that it follows from this that, in order to determine whether the Commission complied with its duty to state the reasons on which its decision was based, the Court should take account only of the reasons set forth in the letter of 5 December 1994 and not of those contained in the letter of 21 December 1994, which was late. Since it is undisputed that the letter of 5 December 1994 contains no reasons whatsoever, the applicant considers that the Court must conclude that there has been an infringement of Article 190 of the Treaty.

27 Secondly, the applicant argues that, in any event, the reasons set out in the letter of 21 December 1994 must be regarded as inadequate, since they do not enable the precise grounds on which its tender was rejected to be identified. While the invitation to tender and the specifications set out three precise award criteria, the applicant considers that the letter of 21 December 1994 makes no reference to these and is based merely on a general reference to "the more economically advantageous" tenders of the three successful companies.

28 The Commission states in response that it is clear from Article 12(1) of Directive 92/50 that it is entitled to give a reasoned decision only to eliminated tenderers who make an express request to that effect. It considers that that provision is applicable in this case by virtue of Article 126 of Regulation No 3418/93, which provides that the Council directives on contracts for public works, supplies and services are to be applicable to the award of contracts by the institutions whenever the amounts involved are greater than the amounts provided for in those directives.

29 Consequently, it considers that it was only the letter of 21 December 1994 which needed to furnish justification for the rejection of the applicant' s tender and that that letter does in fact provide adequate grounds for the contested decision in that it describes the procedure followed, sets forth the criteria applied and mentions the names of the successful tenderers.

° Findings of the Court

30 It is necessary to determine first which duties to give reasons are applicable to the institutions vis-à-vis tenderers eliminated from Community procedures for the award of public contracts.

31 In this connection, the Court observes that Directive 92/50 is applicable in this case by virtue of Article 126 of Regulation No 3418/93, since the value of the contract in question exceeds the threshold laid down by Article 7(1) of that directive. However, it appears from Article 12(1) of Directive 92/50 that the institution concerned fulfils its obligation to state reasons if it first informs eliminated tenderers immediately of the fact that their tender has been rejected by a simple unreasoned communication provided it subsequently, if expressly requested to do so, furnishes them within 15 days with a reasoned explanation.

32 The Court considers that such a manner of proceeding satisfies the purpose of the duty to state reasons enshrined in Article 190 of the Treaty, according to which the reasoning followed by the authority which adopted the measure in question must be disclosed in a clear and unequivocal fashion so as, on the one hand, to make the persons concerned aware of the reasons for the measure and thereby enable them to defend their rights; and, on the other, to enable the Court to exercise its supervisory jurisdiction (Case T-166/94 Koyo Seiko v Council [1995] ECR II-2129, paragraph 103).

33 In this context, it must be emphasized that the fact that interested tenderers receive a reasoned decision only if they make an express request to that effect does not restrict their ability to assert their rights before the Court. The period for bringing proceedings laid down in the fifth paragraph of Article 173 of the Treaty does not in effect begin to run until the reasoned decision is notified, subject to the tenderer having made his request for a reasoned decision within a reasonable time after he was apprised of the rejection of his tender (see Case T-465/93 Consorzio Gruppo di Azione Locale "Murgia Messapica" v Commission [1994] ECR II-361, paragraph 29, and Joined Cases T-432/93, T-433/93 and T-434/93 Socurte and Others v Commission [1994] ECR II-503, paragraph 49).

34 Accordingly, in order to determine whether the Commission complied with its duty to state reasons, the Court takes the view that it is necessary to examine the letter dated 21 December 1994 sent to the applicant in response to its express request for an individual explanation.

35 In this regard, it is clear from that letter that the Commission did provide sufficiently detailed reasons for its rejection of the tender in question, because it confirmed that it satisfied all the formal requirements of the procedure but was considered to be less economically advantageous than the tenders of Ecco, Gregg and Manpower at the stage when the three award criteria were applied.

36 The sufficiency of that reasoning is borne out by the fact that ° as the applicant confirmed at the hearing ° when it was informed that its tender had been rejected in December 1994, it was able immediately to identify the precise reason for its rejection, to wit the presence of a systematic error in the calculation of the price.

37 It follows from the foregoing that the first plea alleging infringement of the obligation to state reasons must be rejected.

The second and third pleas considered together, alleging infringement of the principles of equal treatment and sound administration, the second paragraph of Article 99(h) of Regulation No 3418/93 and manifest error of assessment

° Arguments of the parties

38 The applicant puts forward two separate arguments in support of this plea. First, it argues that, in order to guarantee compliance with the principles of equal treatment and sound administration, the Commission was itself obliged either to correct the error which it had found or to contact the applicant in order to enable it to correct the error. In this context, the applicant avers that it is clear from the documents produced by the Commission during the proceedings that, if the formula "billed hourly rates = gross hourly wages x 2.16 : 39.5" had been correctly applied, it would have obtained at least sufficient points under the price criterion to be classed in joint third place. In addition, it draws the Court' s attention to the wording of Article 99(h) of Regulation No 3418/93, which in its view, confirms that a contracting institution may take it upon itself to contact a tenderer in order to correct obvious clerical errors. Lastly, at the hearing, the applicant based an argument on Article 37 of Directive 92/50, from which it appears that a contracting authority is not entitled to reject a tender which appears abnormally low without requesting particulars in writing on its make-up. It adds moreover that the Commission made a manifest error of assessment in awarding it points for its flexibility and customer service by comparison with the points which it awarded under those heads to Ecco.

39 The Commission responds by stating in the first place that if it had corrected the applicant' s tender, that in itself would have constituted an infringement of the principle of equal treatment. It considers that corrections of clerical errors may be envisaged only in so far as they have no discriminatory effect. However, in view of the key importance played by the tender price in assessing the tender, any correction of the applicant' s tender or any request made to it to submit a new tender would have been bound to infringe the principle of non-discrimination.

40 In so far as the applicant contests the assessment made by the selection committee of its flexibility and its customer service, the Commission contends that it is not for the applicant to substitute its assessment for that of the contracting authority in proceedings relating to legality.

° Findings of the Court

41 It is common ground that the existence of a "systematic error in the calculation of the billing rates on the basis of the gross wages" was adverted to by the Commission at the meeting of its selection committee (see paragraph 11, above).

42 In view of that factor, the applicant claims that, by refraining from contacting it, the Commission infringed the principle of equal treatment in so far as it did not assess the real value of all the tenders submitted to it, but simply compared the value of the applicant' s tender, which it knew to be distorted, with the apparent real value of the other tenders. The applicant adds that, at the same time, the Commission infringed the principle of sound administration and the second paragraph of Article 99(h) of Regulation No 3418/93.

43 In that regard, it should be noted that according to the second paragraph of Article 99(h) of Regulation No 3418/93 any contact between the institution and the tenderer after the tenders have been opened is prohibited save, exceptionally, "if some clarification is required in connection with a tender, or if obvious clerical errors contained in the tender must be corrected". In those cases, the institution may take it upon itself to contact the tenderer.

44 The Court considers that it is clear from the precise terms of that provision that it empowers the institutions to contact tenderers in the exceptional, limited circumstances which it identifies. It follows that that provision cannot be interpreted as imposing a duty on the institutions to contact tenderers.

45 Next, it is necessary to enquire whether, in this case, that power might nevertheless have given rise to a duty on the part of the Commission by virtue of the superior principles of law invoked by the applicant (see paragraph 42, above) having regard to the fact that the calculation error in question was particularly obvious.

46 As to that, the Court considers it sufficient to observe that the systematic calculation error in question was not particularly obvious. Whilst the selection committee succeeded in attributing the error to the "calculation of the billing rates on the basis of the gross hourly wages" (see paragraph 11, above), it was unable for all that to determine, on the basis solely of the applicant' s tender, whether the error was a calculation error made in applying the formula presented by the applicant, as it has maintained before the Court; an error in determining the coefficient for converting the gross hourly wages into billing rates, which, according to the specifications, takes in all the tenderer' s costs, its profit margin and the Belgian franc/ecu conversion rate (see paragraph 4, above); or simply a clerical error.

47 It follows that, even though the selection committee detected the presence of a systematic calculation error, it was unable to ascertain its exact nature or cause. In those circumstances, any contact made by the Commission with the applicant in order to seek out jointly with it the exact nature and cause of the systematic calculation error would have involved a risk that other factors taken into account in order to establish its tender price ° in particular those relating to the calculation of the coefficient encompassing its profit margin ° might have been adjusted, and this would have entailed, contrary to the applicant' s claims, an infringement of the principle of equal treatment to the detriment of the other tenderers, all of whom, in common with the applicant, are under an equal duty to take care in drawing up their tenders.

48 The Court further notes that the applicant has neither shown nor even alleged that the Commission contacted, in the course of the procedure at issue, other tenderers who were in a comparable situation to its own in order to correct any errors in their tenders or to provide additional information. In this connection, the Court observes that it appears from Annexes 7(d) and 9 to the report to the CCAM that the selection committee used, as an assessment criterion, the clarity and precision of the tenders and penalized some tenders because they were insufficiently precise about the quality of the service which the tenderers undertook to provide. Yet, whilst those tenderers were in a situation comparable to that of the applicant in so far as they could have increased the value of their tenders if the Commission had taken it upon itself to contract them in order to obtain explanations, the Court finds that the report to the CCAM and the documents appended thereto do not mention any contact made by the Commission with tenderers, but confirm that the Commission strictly applied the conditions of the tendering procedure.

49 Lastly, the Court considers that the Commission did not commit a manifest error in assessing the applicant' s organizational ability. In this regard, the Court recalls that the Commission has a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender and the Court' s review should be limited to checking that there has been no serious and manifest error (Case 56/77 Agence Européenne d' Interims v Commission [1978] ECR 2215, paragraph 20). In this case, the Court finds, with regard to the points awarded to the applicant for its customer service, that it is undisputed that the applicant' s tender ° unlike that of Ecco ° made no reference to the quality of the customer service which it undertook to provide and hence the Commission made no manifest error of assessment in giving Ecco three points more than the applicant for its customer service. As regards the points awarded to the applicant for flexibility, unlike Ecco' s tender, that of the applicant did not undertake to provide a "contact person" permanently at the Commission' s offices, with the result that the Commission did not make any manifest error of assessment in awarding Ecco two points more than the applicant for flexibility.

50 In addition, the Court would point out that the first and second paragraphs of Article 37 of Directive 92/50, which place the contracting authority under a duty to verify that the terms of the tender are not the outcome of the economy of the method by which the service is provided, the technical solutions chosen, the exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer for the provision of the service or the originality of the service; are concerned with a tender which appears to be abnormally low, whereas the tender at issue in this case is one which appears to be abnormally high.

51 For all of these reasons it follows that the Commission has not infringed the principles of equal treatment and sound administration or the second paragraph of Article 99(h) of Regulation No 3418/93, nor has it committed a manifest error of assessment, and therefore the second and third pleas must be rejected.

52 It follows that the application must be dismissed in its entirety.

Judgment of the Court (Fifth Chamber)
of 28 March 1996
Commission of the European Communities v Federal Republic of Germany.
Failure to fulfil obligations - Public works contracts - Failure to publish a tender notice.
Case C-318/94.

++++

Approximation of laws ° Procedures for the award of public works contracts ° Directive 71/305 ° Derogations from common rules ° Conditions ° Refusal by a body within a Member State, during the procedure provided for under national legislation, to give its approval for a public works project ° Refusal not an unforeseeable event within the meaning of the directive

(Council Directive 71/305, as amended by Directive 89/440, Art. 5(3)(c))

The possibility under Article 9(d) of Directive 71/305 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, in its original version, and under Article 5(3)(c) of the version resulting from the amendment by Directive 89/440 of bypassing the tendering procedure in order to apply the negotiated procedure is available only if a number of conditions are satisfied concurrently, one of which is the occurrence of an unforeseeable event. If one of those conditions is not satisfied, use of the negotiated procedure will not be justified.

The fact that a body in a Member State which must, in the procedure for approval of public works projects provided for under national legislation, approve a project may, before expiry of the period laid down for that purpose, raise objections for reasons which it is entitled to put forward cannot constitute an unforeseeable event.

A Member State whose competent authorities, after deciding not to award a public works contract by open procedure by reason of the delay resulting from the refusal by a body to approve the work plans originally envisaged, award a contract for partial work by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice, will therefore be in breach of its obligations under the directive.

Commission of the European Communities, represented by Hendrik van Lier, Legal Adviser, and, initially, by Angela Bardenhewer, and, subsequently, by Claudia Schmidt, of its Legal Service, acting as Agents, with an address for service in Luxembourg at the office of Carlos Gomez de la Cruz, also of its Legal Service, Wagner Centre, Kirchberg, APPLICATION for a declaration that, the Waterways and Navigation Office, Emden having awarded the public works contract for the dredging of the lower Ems between Papenburg and Oldersum by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682), as amended by Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989 (OJ 1989 L 210, p. 1),

gives the following

Judgment

1 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court on 6 December 1994, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EC Treaty for a declaration that, the Waterways and Navigation Office, Emden having awarded the public works contract for the dredging of the lower Ems between Papenburg and Oldersum by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682), as amended by Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989 (OJ 1989 L 210, p. 1, hereinafter "the Directive").

2 In September 1989, at the request of the town of Papenburg, a plan was drawn up to alter the bed of the lower Ems with a view to making it navigable for "Panama" class vessels with a 6.80 metre draught. The deepening of this section of the Ems river was of major economic significance for the region. Moreover, during 1990, the Meyer-Werft shipyard, the largest employer in the region, contracted to deliver a "Panama" class vessel by 18 February 1992 at the latest. A per diem penalty of USD 80 000 was laid down in the event of failure to comply with that scheduled delivery date. Delivery of the vessel on that date could take place only after completion of this work.

3 Under German legislation, the plans for deepening the lower Ems had to be approved by a procedure requiring, in particular, the agreement of the Weser-Ems Regional Authority. At the end of May 1991, the date envisaged for conclusion of this procedure, the Weser-Ems Regional Authority, which had not previously raised any objection, gave notice that it did not agree to the project on ecological grounds. A decision was then taken to continue the procedure with a view to obtaining approval only of the plans for that part of the project which consisted in temporarily deepening the river bed in order to enable the vessel being built by the Meyer-Werft shipyard to pass through. The plans for this partial project were definitively approved on 15 August 1991.

4 However, on 15 April 1991, the Waterways and Navigation Office, Emden (hereinafter "the Office"), which intended to award the work in accordance with the open procedure, sent a prior information notice concerning the work envisaged which was published in a supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities on 20 April 1991.

5 Given the delay in approving the plans, the Office decided to abandon the open procedure and to award the contract by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice. The contract was awarded on 15 August 1991 pursuant to the latter procedure.

6 By formal notice of 12 November 1991, the Commission instituted Treaty-infringement proceedings against the Federal Republic of Germany under Article 169 of the Treaty on the ground that it had acted in breach of the rules governing the procedure for the award of public works contracts.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

The Commission pointed out that, in this case, the choice of negotiated procedure could not be justified under Article 5(3)(c) of the Directive. In a letter of 6 March 1992, the German Government disputed that contention.

7 In its reasoned opinion of 27 April 1993, the Commission restated its view and called on the German Government to take the measures necessary to comply with the reasoned opinion and, in particular, to suspend the contract in question, as well as any other contract negotiated on the same terms, within two months of notification of the opinion.

8 In its statement of position of 28 September 1993, the German Government stressed that it was imperative for the work to be completed by 18 February 1992, the date on which the vessel was to be delivered, so that it had to be begun by no later than mid-August 1991. In view of the difficulties arising in the procedure for approval of the plans, it was not possible to follow the open procedure, which would have lasted at least 72 days.

9 The Commission took the view that this reply was unsatisfactory and brought the present action.

10 It is necessary to consider whether the Federal Republic of Germany was entitled, on the basis of Article 5(3)(c) of the Directive, to award the contract in question by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice. Article 5(3)(c) provides that:

> "The contracting authorities may award their public works contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice, in the following cases:
>
> (c) in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseen by the contracting authorities in question, the time-limit laid down for the open, restricted or negotiated procedures referred to in paragraph 2 above cannot be kept. The circumstances invoked to justify extreme urgency must not in any event be attributable to the contracting authorities ...".

11 Before Directive 71/305 was amended by Directive 89/440, Article 9 of the earlier directive provided that:

> "Authorities awarding contracts may award their works contracts without applying the provisions of this Directive, except those of Article 10, in the following cases:
>
> ...
> (d) in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought [about] by events unforeseen by the authorities awarding contracts, the time-limit laid down in other procedures cannot be kept...".

12 In so far as Article 5(3)(c) of the Directive reproduces the wording of the former Article 9(d), those provisions must be given the same interpretation.

13 The Court has held in this regard that the provisions of Article 9 of Directive 71/305, which authorize derogations from the rules intended to ensure the effectiveness of the rights conferred by the Treaty in relation to public works contracts, must be interpreted strictly and that the burden of proving the existence of exceptional circumstances justifying a derogation lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances (Case C-57/94 Commission v Italy [1995] ECR I-1249, paragraph 23).

14 The Court has also held that, according to Article 9(d) of Directive 71/305, the derogation for which it provides, namely exemption from the obligation to publish a notice of a call for tenders, is available only if three conditions are fulfilled concurrently. That derogation requires the existence of an unforeseeable event, extreme urgency, rendering the observance of time-limits laid down by other procedures impossible, and, finally, a causal link between the unforeseeable event and the extreme urgency resulting therefrom (Case C-107/92 Commission v Italy [1993] ECR I-4655, paragraph 12). If one of those conditions is not satisfied, use of the negotiated procedure will not be justified.

15 According to the German Government, the event which the contracting authorities could not have foreseen was the totally unexpected refusal by the Weser-Ems Regional Authority to grant its approval following its deliberation.

16 That argument cannot be accepted.

17 It must be stressed that, in order to take account of the public and private interests concerned in procedures for approving public works projects, Member States may confer on natural or legal persons potentially concerned by a project certain rights which the competent authorities must respect.

18 The possibility that a body which must approve a project might, before expiry of the period laid down for this purpose, raise objections for reasons which it is entitled to put forward is, consequently, something which is foreseeable in plan approval procedure.

19 The refusal of the Weser-Ems Regional Authority to approve the project for dredging the lower Ems, thereby obliging the competent authorities to amend that project, cannot therefore be regarded as an event unforeseen by the contracting authorities within the meaning of Article 5(3)(c) of the Directive.

20 It follows from the foregoing, without its being necessary to determine whether the other derogation conditions were satisfied in this case, that, the Waterways and Navigation Office, Emden having awarded the public works contract for the dredging of the lower Ems between Papenburg and Oldersum by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989.

Costs

21 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the Federal Republic of Germany has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Fifth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Declares that, the Waterways and Navigation Office, Emden having awarded the public works contract for the dredging of the lower Ems between Papenburg and Oldersum by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989;

2. Orders the Federal Republic of Germany to pay the costs.

1. Preliminary rulings ° Jurisdiction of the Court ° Limits ° Question obviously irrelevant

(EC Treaty, Art. 177)

2. Approximation of laws ° Procedures for the award of public works contracts ° Directive 71/305 ° Award of contracts ° Abnormally low tenders ° Rejection pursuant to the derogating provisions of the last subparagraph of Article 29(5) ° Conditions ° Definitive award to have been made by 31 December 1992

(Council Directive 71/305, Art. 29(5))

1. In the preliminary rulings procedure provided for in Article 177 of the Treaty, it is for the national courts alone, before which the proceedings are pending and which must assume responsibility for the judgment to be given, to determine, having regard to the particular features of each case, both the need for a preliminary ruling to enable them to give judgment and the relevance of the questions which they refer to the Court. A request for a preliminary ruling from a national court may be rejected only if it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law sought by that court bears no relation to the actual nature of the case or the subject-matter of the main action.

2. The last subparagraph of Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by Article 1(20) of Directive 89/440, which introduces temporary, derogating arrangements constituting an exception to the procedure normally laid down by the Community rules, must be interpreted as meaning that only procedures in which the definitive award was made by 31 December 1992 are entitled to qualify for the derogation provided for in that provision as regards the rejection of abnormally low tenders.

Judgment

1 By order of 31 March 1994, received at the Court on 24 May 1994, the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale del Lazio (Regional Administrative Court, Lazio) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EC Treaty a question on the interpretation of Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971(II), p. 682), as amended by Article 1(20) of Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989 (OJ 1989 L 210, p. 1).

2 The question was raised in proceedings brought by Furlanis Costruzioni Generali (hereinafter "Furlanis") against a decision adopted by Azienda Nazionale Autonoma Strade (hereinafter "ANAS"), a contracting authority governed by public law, in connection with a restricted procedure for the award of a public works contract.

3 Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305, as amended by Article 1(20) of Directive 89/440, lays down the procedure to be followed in the context of the award of public works contracts in the case of tenders which appear to be abnormally low in relation to the transaction. According to the first subparagraph of that provision,

> "If, for a given contract, tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the transaction, before it may reject those tenders the contracting authority shall request, in writing, details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received."

4 A temporary derogation from that rule is set out in the last subparagraph of the provision, according to which

> "However, until the end of 1992, if current national law so permits, the contracting authority may exceptionally, without any discrimination on grounds of nationality, reject tenders which are abnormally low in relation to the transaction, without being obliged to comply with the procedure provided for in the first subparagraph if the number of such tenders for a particular contract is so high that implementation of this procedure would lead to a considerable delay and jeopardize the public interest attaching to the execution of the contract in question. Recourse to this exceptional procedure shall be mentioned in the notice referred to in Article 12(5)."

5 Directive 89/440 was implemented in Italian law by Presidential Decree No 406/91 of 19 December 1991. The sixth paragraph of Article 29 of that decree, which implements the aforementioned derogating provision, provides that, until 31 December 1992, "... the contracting authority may automatically exclude tenders which appear to be abnormally low..., if the number of tenders received exceeds 30. The fact that certain tenders may be excluded and the percentage increase over the average must be mentioned in the contract notice".

6 According to the documents before the Court, by a contract notice dated 28 September 1992 and published in the Italian Official Gazettte of 2 October 1992, ANAS opened a restrictive procedure, pursuant to Article 29 of Presidential Decree No 406/91, for the award of a contract for works on the Ascoli Piceno-Comunanza section of the Piceno-Aprutina road, second lot, second tranche, for a maximum of LIT 36 900 000 000.

7 The contract notice stated that tenders whose percentage reduction (calculated by reference to the basic price fixed for the tendering procedure) exceeded the average percentage for tenders allowed, plus seven points, would be regarded as being abnormally low in relation to the transaction within the meaning of the provision in question.

8 Furlanis submitted a request to participate, accompanied by the requisite documents, following which it received by letter of 12 December 1992 an invitation to participate in the tendering procedure to take place on 4 February 1993. Following that invitation to tender, Furlanis put in a tender. On 4 February 1993, the contracting authority awarded the contract to the Edilvie company, which has since become Itinera CO. GE. SpA (hereinafter "Itinera"). Furlanis was excluded on the ground that its tender had to be regarded as abnormally low on the basis of the criterion laid down in the contract notice.

9 Furlanis contested the decision awarding the works in question to Edilvie before the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale del Lazio. Before that court, Furlanis argued essentially that, both under the Community rules and under the Italian implementing decree, the derogating procedure provided for for abnormally low tenders applied only to award procedures which had become definitive before 31 December 1992 and that the mere publication of the contract notice before that date was not sufficient in order for the derogation to be able to apply.

10 Taking the view that a question of interpretation arose with regard to the date of 31 December 1992 as the latest date for the applicability of the derogating provision in question, the national court stayed the proceedings and referred the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

"Must the provisions of Article 1(20) of Directive 89/440/EEC, amending the earlier Directive 71/305/EEC concerning procedures for the award of public works contracts, be interpreted as meaning that the exception to the procedure for the verification of tenders that appear to be abnormally low in relation to the transaction, which was available only until the end of 1992, relates (a) to tendering procedures actually completed by that date or (b) to tendering procedures commenced before that date?"

Admissibility

11 Itinera questions the relevance and hence the admissibility of the national court' s question on the ground that the content of the Community provision in question could not give rise to any uncertainty as regards its interpretation. In accordance with the general principle that the rules applicable to a procedure, such as that preceding the award of a public contract, are determined by the measure initiating that procedure, the date of 31 December 1992 should be regarded as referring only to the publication of the contract notice.

12 In that regard the Court has consistently held that it is for the national courts alone, before which the proceedings are pending and which must assume responsibility for the judgment to be given, to determine, having regard to the particular features of each case, both the need for a preliminary ruling to enable them to give judgment and the relevance of the questions which they refer to the Court. A request for a preliminary ruling from a national court may be rejected only if it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law sought by that court bears no relation to the actual nature of the case or the subject-matter of the main action (see, most recently, the judgment in Case C-62/93 Supergas [1995] ECR I-0000, paragraph 10). But that is not the case here.

13 Consequently, the Court must consider the national court' s question.

The question referred for a preliminary ruling

14 By its question the national court seeks to establish essentially whether the last subparagraph of Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305, as amended, must be interpreted as meaning that only procedures in which the definitive award was made by 31 December 1992 may qualify for the derogation provided for in that provision or whether all procedures for which a contract notice was published before that date so qualify.

15 Itinera and the Italian Government submit that procedures for which the contract notice was published before 31 December 1992 but in which the definitive award has not yet been made are also covered by the derogating provision in question in so far as the actual course of an award procedure is governed by the rules laid down in the contract notice, which legally has the effect of an act of self-limitation on the part of the contracting authority

16 Furlanis and the Commission argue for their part that, since the provision in question constitutes a derogation, it must be interpreted strictly as covering only award procedures terminated before 31 December 1992.

17 According to the wording of the provision in question, until the end of 1992 the contracting authority may "reject" tenders which are abnormally low in relation to the transaction. Consequently, the terms of the provision relate to the decision by which the contracting authority rules definitively on the tenders submitted to it and not merely to the measure by which the award procedure was initiated.

18 That interpretation is corroborated by the fact that the provision in question is set out in the chapter of the directive entitled "criteria for qualitative selection", which is concerned with the final phase of the award procedure.

19 There are other reasons which militate in favour of its being given a strict interpretation.

20 The Court held in Case 199/85 Commission v Italy [1987] ECR 1039, paragraph 14, that provisions which authorized derogations from the rules of the directive intended to ensure the effectiveness of the rights conferred by the Treaty in the field of public works contracts must be interpreted strictly. This holds good also as regards the provision at issue, which introduces temporary, derogating arrangements constituting an exception to the procedure normally laid down by the Community rules.

21 A further factor favouring a strict interpretation of the provision in question is that the derogating, temporary arrangement in question was introduced, as the Commission has pointed out, at the request of one Member State alone on account of specific difficulties arising in its national system.

22 Accordingly, it should be stated in reply to the question from the national court that the last subparagraph of Article 29(5) of Directive 71/305, as amended by Article 1(20) of Directive 89/440, must be interpreted as meaning that only procedures in which the definitive award was made by 31 December 1992 are entitled to qualify for the derogation provided for in that provision.

Costs

23 The costs incurred by the Italian Government and the Commission of the European Communities, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the proceedings pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber),

in answer to the question referred to it by the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale del Lazio by order of 31 March 1994, hereby rules:

The last subparagraph of Article 29(5) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by Article 1(20) of Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989, must be interpreted as meaning that only procedures in which the definitive award was made by 31 December 1992 are entitled to qualify for the derogation provided for in that provision.

Judgment of the Court (Fifth Chamber)
of 25 April 1996
Commission of the European Communities v Kingdom of Belgium.
Public contracts - Transport sector - Directive 90/531/EEC.
Case C-87/94.

++++

1. Approximation of laws ° Procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors ° Directive 90/531 ° Scope ° Absence of a condition concerning the nationality or seat of tenderers ° Obligation on contracting entities to apply the rules applicable to the type of procedure chosen

(Council Directive 90/531, Art. 4(1) and 15(1))

2. Approximation of laws ° Procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors ° Directive 90/531 ° Award of contracts ° Principle of equal treatment of tenderers and principle of transparency ° Taking into account, after the opening of tenders, amendments made to one of them ° Contract awarded on the basis of figures not corresponding to the prescriptive requirements of the contract documents ° Taking into account variants of the award criteria not mentioned either in the contract documents or in the tender notice ° Breach

(Council Directive 90/531)

1. The procedure laid down by Directive 90/531 on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors must be observed irrespective of the nationality or seat of the tenderers. The obligation, imposed on contracting entities by Article 4(1) of the directive, to apply procedures which are adapted to the provisions of the directive is not subject to any such condition and it is always possible that undertakings established in other Member States may be concerned directly or indirectly by the award of a contract.

Although under Article 15(1) of the directive contracting entities obliged to apply the procedures in the directive do indeed have a degree of choice regarding the procedure to be applied to a contract, once they have issued an invitation to tender under one particular procedure they are required to observe the rules applicable to it, until the contract has been finally awarded.

2. It follows from the terms of Directive 90/531 on the procurement procedures of entitites operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors that the contracting entity' s procedure for comparing tenders has to comply at every stage with both the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers and the principle of transparency.

A Member State which, in the procedure for the award of a public contract by a public undertaking operating a bus service,

° takes into account fuel consumption figures submitted by a tenderer after the opening of tenders, where those figures exceed a limit which the tenderer himself stipulated in his initial tender in regard to any change in fuel consumption figures,

° awards the contract to the same tenderer on the basis of figures which do not correspond to the prescriptive requirements of the contract documents for calculating the notional penalty of the tenderer in question for maintenance costs in respect of engine and gear box replacement,

° takes into account, when comparing tenders for certain lots, the cost-saving features suggested by the same tenderer, without having referred to them in the contract documents or in the tender notice, uses them to offset the financial differences between the tenders in first place and those of the tenderer in question and accepts some of the same tenderer' s tenders as a result of taking those features into account, fails to fulfil that obligation.

APPLICATION for a declaration that, by taking into account, in the procedure for the award of a public contract by the Société Régionale Wallonne du Transport, amendments made to one of the tenders after the opening of those tenders, by admitting to the procedure for the award of the contract a tenderer who did not meet the selection criteria laid down in the contract documents and by accepting a tender which did not meet the criteria for the award of the contract laid down in the contract documents, the Kingdom of Belgium has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 90/531/EEC of 17 September 1990 on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1990 L 297, p. 1) and to comply with the principle of equal treatment, which underlies all the rules on procedures for the award of public contracts,

Judgment

Costs

96 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party' s pleadings. Since the Kingdom of Belgium has been unsuccessful and the Commission has applied for costs, the former must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

hereby:

1. Declares that, by taking into account, in the procedure for the award of a public contract by the Société Régionale Wallonne du Transport, information on fuel consumption submitted by EMI in its supplementary note of 24 August 1993 and, therefore, after the opening of tenders, by awarding the contract to EMI on the basis of figures which did not correspond to the prescriptive requirements of Annex 23 of the special conditions for calculating the notional penalty of EMI for maintenance costs in respect of engine and gear box replacement, by taking into account, when comparing the tenders for Lots Nos 4, 5 and 6, the cost-saving features suggested by EMI without having referred to them in the contract documents or in the tender notice, by using them to offset the financial differences between the tenders in first place and those of EMI placed second, and by accepting some of EMI' s tenders as a result of taking those features into account, the Kingdom of Belgium has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 90/531/EEC of 17 September 1990 on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors;

2. Orders the Kingdom of Belgium to pay the costs.

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 11 March 1994, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EC Treaty for a declaration that, by taking into account, in the procedure for the award of a public contract by the Société Régionale Wallonne du Transport (SRWT), amendments made to one of the tenders after the opening of those tenders, by admitting to the procedure for the award of the contract a tenderer who did not meet the selection criteria laid down in the contract documents and by accepting a tender which did not meet the criteria for the award of the contract laid down in the contract documents, the Kingdom of Belgium has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 90/531/EEC of 17 September 1990 on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1990 L 297, p. 1, hereinafter "the Directive") and to comply with the principle of equal treatment, which underlies all the rules on procedures for the award of public contracts.

The Directive

2 The 32nd and 33rd recitals in the preamble to the Directive state that the rules to be applied by the entities concerned should establish a framework for sound commercial practice and leave a maximum of flexibility and that, as a counterpart for such flexibility and in the interest of mutual confidence, a minimum level of transparency must be ensured.

3 Article 2 of the Directive mentions, as one of the contracting entities to which the Directive applies, public undertakings operating a network providing a public bus service. Under the second subparagraph of Article 2(2)(c) such a network exists where the service is provided under operating conditions laid down by a competent authority of a Member State, such as conditions on the routes to be served, the capacity to be made available or the frequency of the service.

4 Article 4(1) provides that, when awarding supply contracts, the contracting entities are to apply procedures which are adapted to the provisions of the Directive.

5 Article 4(2) states that contracting entities are to ensure that there is no discrimination between different suppliers or contractors.

6 Article 27(2) provides that where the contract is to be awarded to the most economically advantageous tender "... contracting entities shall state in the contract documents or in the tender notice all the criteria they intend to apply to the award, where possible in descending order of importance".

7 Finally, Article 27(3) states:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

"Where the criterion for the award of the contract is that of the most economically advantageous tender, contracting entities may take account of variants which are submitted by a tenderer and meet the minimum specifications required by the contracting entities. Contracting entities shall state in the contract documents the minimum specifications to be respected by the variants and any specific requirements for their presentation. Where variants are not permitted, they shall so indicate in the contract documents."

8 A joint statement by the Council and the Commission concerning Article 15 of the Directive (OJ 1990 L 297, p. 48) provides:

"The Council and the Commission state that in open and restricted procedures all negotiation with candidates or tenderers on fundamental aspects of contracts, variations in which are likely to distort competition, and in particular on prices, shall be ruled out; however, discussions with candidates or tenderers may be held but only for the purpose of clarifying or supplementing the content of their tenders or the requirements of the contracting entities and provided this does not involve discrimination."

The facts

9 By a tender notice published in the supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities of 22 April 1993 (OJ 1993 S 78, p. 76), the SRWT, which is based in Namur (Belgium), issued an invitation to tender for the award, under an open procedure, of a public contract for the supply of 307 standard vehicles. That contract, for an estimated sum of over BFR 2 000 000 000 (excluding VAT) and divided into eight lots, was to be performed over a period of three years.

10 The contract documents consisted of the Cahier des Charges Type No 1 (hereinafter "the general conditions") and the Cahier Spécial des Charges No 545 (hereinafter "the special conditions"), which amended the general conditions in certain respects.

11 Point 20.2 of the special conditions provided that the contract was to be awarded to the most economically advantageous tender. That tender would be selected on the basis of an evaluation of the tenders by reference to the award criteria under headings which are set out in point 59 of the Advocate General' s Opinion. An evaluation was to be made, in particular, of the basic price of the bus, increased by the price of variants taken into account and then adjusted in accordance with the advantages and disadvantages resulting from the application of ten technical assessment criteria (hereinafter "the technical criteria").

12 The SRWT expressly requested potential tenderers to propose certain variants concerning the financial structure of the contract, such as staggered payment terms, lease or hire of the vehicles.

13 As regards the technical criteria, the special conditions laid down, under each heading, a formula enabling the SRWT to allocate for certain features of the buses offered a notional bonus or penalty in "francs fictifs", the amount of which depended on the variables of the formula and was to be added to or deducted from the basic price.

14 After sending the contract documents to the interested parties, the SRWT issued three notices of amendment, dated 30 April, 5 May and 28 May 1993, rectifying and clarifying the contract documents in certain respects. In the second notice the SRWT clarified certain aspects of the contract documents relating to the minimum number of seated places, the desired total number of places, the maximum height of the floor and the formula for calculating one of the notional penalties. Each notice stated that tenderers had to indicate clearly in their tenders that they had received the notices of amendment and that they had taken them into account.

15 By 7 June 1993, the date fixed by the tender notice for both the receipt and the public opening of tenders, the following five companies had submitted tenders: EMI (Aubange), Van Hool (Koningshooikt), Mercedes-Belgium (Brussels), Berkhof (Roeselaere) and Jonckheere (Roeselaere).

16 The SRWT examined those tenders during June and July 1993. A memorandum dated 24 August 1993, drawn up for the meeting of the conseil d' administration on 2 September 1993, recommended the award of Lot No 1 to Jonckheere and Lots Nos 2 to 6 to Van Hool.

17 In the meantime, on 3, 23 and 24 August 1993 EMI had sent to the contracting entity three "supplementary" notes commenting on certain points of its initial tenders, in particular fuel consumption, the frequency of engine and gearbox replacements, and certain aspects of the technical quality of the material offered.

18 After examining those three notes, the technical department of the contracting entity drew up a memorandum on 31 August 1993 stating that EMI' s supplementary notes contained changes to its initial tenders and could not therefore be taken into account. The proposals for the award of contracts in the memorandum drawn up for the meeting on 2 September 1993 should therefore still stand.

19 At the meeting on 2 September 1993 the conseil d' administration took the view that it had insufficient information to adopt a final decision. In particular it was unsure whether it could take EMI' s three supplementary notes into account and decided to ask for a legal opinion on that question from the Walloon Minister of Transport.

20 By letter of 14 September 1993 the Walloon Minister of Transport replied that, as regards most of the points mentioned, no legal problem would be raised by taking into account EMI' s three supplementary notes. He therefore suggested that the file be re-examined in the light of his observations.

21 On 28 September 1993 the SRWT requested EMI to confirm the fuel consumption figures indicated in its supplementary note of 24 August 1993 and also the frequency of the engine and gear box replacements referred to in the supplementary note of 23 August 1993. By letter of 29 September 1993 EMI confirmed that the information it had supplied was correct.

22 Following that confirmation, the SRWT undertook a fresh comparison of the tenders, taking into account the content of the three supplementary notes. A memorandum prepared for the meeting of the conseil d' administation on 6 October 1993 proposed awarding Lot No 1 to Jonckheere and Lots Nos 2 to 6 to EMI.

23 At its meeting on 6 October 1993 the conseil d' administration decided, first, to adopt those proposals and thus award Lot No 1 to Jonckheere and Lots Nos 2 to 6 to EMI and, secondly, to postpone until 1996 an order for 30 vehicles.

24 On the same day, Van Hool applied to the Belgian Conseil d' Etat for an order suspending the operation of that decision under the emergency procedure. That application was dismissed by judgment of 17 November 1993.

25 On 30 November 1993 the Commission, with which Van Hool had lodged a complaint, gave the Kingdom of Belgium formal notice to submit its observations pursuant to Article 169 of the Treaty. By letter of 15 December 1993 the Belgian Government stated that the allegation that it had failed to fulfil its obligations was unfounded. The Commission was not satisfied by that reply and delivered a reasoned opinion to the Belgian Government, requesting it to intervene with the competent authorities to suspend the legal effects of the contract concluded between the SRWT and EMI. In its reply to that opinion, the Belgian Government claimed that the Commission had not proved any failure to fulfil obligations.

26 On 11 March 1994 the Commission brought the present action and applied for interim measures to suspend both SRWT' s decision to award the contract and the measures implementing that decision. That application was dismissed by order of 22 April 1994.

27 By letter of 9 June 1995 the Commission abandoned its second plea, which alleged that the Kingdom of Belgium had accepted tenders from EMI which did not meet the selection criteria laid down in the special conditions.

28 The application, as so amended, seeks a declaration that the Kingdom of Belgium has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Directive and to comply with the principle of equal treatment of tenderers which underlies all the rules on procedures for the award of public contracts, in that, in the procedure for the award of a public contract by the SRWT,

° it took into account amendments made to one of the tenders after the opening of tenders, and

° it accepted a tender which did not meet the criteria for the award of the contract laid down in the contract documents.

29 Before examining those heads of complaint it is necessary to consider the Belgian Government' s claim that the Directive does not apply in the present case.

The applicability of Community law

30 It is not disputed that the SRWT is a public undertaking operating a network providing a public bus service within the meaning of Article 2 of the Directive and that it therefore had to comply with the rules of the Directive, in conformity with Article 4, when it awarded the contract for the supply of the eight lots of buses at the origin of this action.

31 However, since all the tenderers are Belgian companies, the Belgian Government claims that the case concerned a purely internal situation to which Community law did not apply.

32 That argument cannot be accepted.

33 The obligation imposed on contracting entities by Article 4(1) of the Directive is not subject to any condition concerning the nationality or seat of tenderers. Moreover, as the Advocate General has pointed out in point 24 of his Opinion, it is always possible that undertakings established in other Member States may be concerned directly or indirectly by the award of a contract. The procedure laid down by the Directive must therefore be observed irrespective of the nationality or seat of the tenderers.

34 In the course of the procedure the Belgian Government also claimed that the contracting entity was not obliged to award the contract through an open procedure. It could have chosen a negotiated procedure and its conduct would have been in conformity with such a procedure.

35 Suffice it to state that, although under Article 15(1) of the Directive contracting entities obliged to apply the procedures in the Directive do indeed have a degree of choice regarding the procedure to be applied to a contract, once they have issued an invitation to tender under one particular procedure, they are required to observe the rules applicable to it, until the contract has been finally awarded.

The heads of complaint

36 The Commission considers that, by taking into account information submitted to it in EMI' s three supplementary notes concerning, in particular, fuel consumption, the frequency of engine and gear box replacements, and certain aspects of the technical quality of the material offered, EMI breached the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers.

37 As regards fuel consumption, the Commission complains that, when evaluating the tenders, the Kingdom of Belgium took into account the new consumption indicated by EMI to the SRWT after the opening of the tenders, which had been changed from the figure in its initial tenders.

38 As regards the frequency of engine and gear box replacements, the Commission complains that the Kingdom of Belgium took into account information supplied by EMI after the opening of tenders, which amended its initial tenders and also failed to comply with the prescriptive requirements of the contract documents.

39 As regards the technical quality of the material offered, the Commission considers that, when evaluating EMI' s tenders, the SRWT wrongly took into account matters not included amongst the award criteria.

Fuel consumption

40 Point 20.2.2.1 of the special conditions provides:

"20.2.2.1 Fuel consumption

When comparing tenders, a notional advantage equivalent to the value of 6 000 litres of diesel for a standard bus (official price at the date of the opening of tenders) will be awarded for each whole litre per 100 km difference between the fuel consumption guaranteed in the tender (including tolerance) under the test cycle laid down in Annex 10 to these contract documents and the fuel consumption of the vehicle with the highest consumption."

41 Under the conditions laid down in that annex, the test was to be performed with a vehicle loaded with a weight corresponding to the minimum number of passengers.

42 In its original tenders, EMI indicated a fuel consumption of 54 litres per 100 km in respect of Lots Nos 2 to 6. However, in Note No 1 (hereinafter "Note 1") annexed to its tenders EMI claimed that, since consumption of 54 litres per 100 km had been obtained in tests on a vehicle which had not been run in and was not particularly well-tuned, the consumption which would be recorded with a vehicle which was both run in and optimally tuned could be reduced by 5 to 8% in relation to the consumption indicated in its tenders.

43 EMI also confirmed in its initial tenders that it had received the three notices of amendment and that it had taken them into account.

44 The SRWT carried out a first evaluation of the tenders on the basis of the fuel consumption indicated by EMI in its initial tenders, namely 54 litres per 100 km. Since it had the highest fuel consumption of all the tenders submitted for those lots, that consumption was, according to the method of calculation stipulated in the special conditions, to be used as the basis for evaluating the notional advantages of the other tenders. It is clear from Annexes 5 and 6 to the memorandum drawn up for the meeting of 2 September 1993 that in the course of that evaluation EMI' s tenders were not accorded any notional advantage in respect of fuel consumption, whereas all the other tenderers were accorded such advantages, calculated by reference to the consumption indicated by EMI.

45 In its first supplementary note of 3 August 1993, EMI informed the SRWT of its interpretation of the purport of notice of amendment No 2. EMI claimed that, as a consequence of that notice, the total number of places stipulated in the special conditions as an absolute contractual requirement had been waived. That waiver affected the calculation of fuel consumption, since the equal treatment of tenderers logically required that the calculation be made on the basis of maximum authorized weight. It concluded that, for its data to be compared with those of the other tenderers, it was necessary to take into account the consumption indicated in its initial tenders, reduced by 8%.

46 Thereafter, in its supplementary note of 24 August 1993, EMI informed the SRWT, after referring to the contents of Note 1, that it had carried out further tests, this time under optimal conditions, and that these had shown a fuel consumption for its tenders relating to Lots Nos 2 to 6 of 45 litres per 100 km, representing a reduction of 16.7% on the consumption of 54 litres per 100 km. EMI requested the SRWT to take that new consumption into account when evaluating its tenders.

47 The Belgian Government has confirmed that SRWT did take that new consumption into account when awarding the contract to EMI.

48 Since EMI' s new fuel consumption was no longer the highest, the SRWT re-evaluated the notional advantages awarded to all the tenderers. Annexes 1 and 2 to the memorandum drafted for the meeting of 6 October 1993 show that in the second evaluation the notional advantages of tenderers other than EMI were reduced in relation to those awarded on the first evaluation, so that Jonckheere no longer had any notional advantages, whereas EMI' s tenders were awarded an advantage.

49 The Commission considers that SRWT breached the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers by taking into account, when allocating the contract, the data supplied by EMI in its supplementary note of 24 August 1993 which amended, after the opening of tenders, the consumption initially indicated by EMI.

50 The Belgian Government submits, first, that the principle of equality of treatment actually required EMI' s correction of its fuel consumption to be taken into account in the award of the contract, since the other tenderers had indicated already optimized results in their initial tenders. Secondly, it points out that fuel consumption is objective and verifiable; the amendment was therefore not a matter of choice, nor was it made after negotiations with the contracting entity. Finally, the change had no effect on the technical characteristics of the vehicle or its engine and EMI' s initial tenders were not therefore amended.

51 It is to be noted at the outset that in Case C-243/89 Commission v Denmark [1993] ECR I-3353 (the "Storebaelt case"), at paragraph 33, the Court held that the duty to observe the principle of equal treatment of tenderers lies at the heart of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682).

52 As is shown by Article 4(2) the position is the same in the case of the Directive in question here.

53 Furthermore, the 33rd recital in the preamble shows that the Directive aims to ensure a minimum level of transparency in the award of the contracts to which it applies.

54 The procedure for comparing tenders therefore had to comply at every stage with both the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers and the principle of transparency so as to afford equality of opportunity to all tenderers when formulating their tenders.

55 When, as in the present case, a contracting entity opts for an open procedure, such equality of opportunity is ensured by the requirement under Article 16(1)(a) of the Directive for the contracting entity to act in accordance with Annex XII A of the Directive. It must therefore both set a final date for receipt of tenders, so that all tenderers have the same period after publication of the tender notice within which to prepare their tenders, and set the date, hour and place of opening tenders, which also reinforces the transparency of the procedure, since the terms of all the tenders submitted are revealed at the same time.

56 When a contracting entity takes into account an amendment to the initial tenders of only one tenderer, it is clear that that tenderer enjoys an advantage over his competitors, which breaches the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers and impairs the transparency of the procedure.

57 In the present case it is not disputed that, first, the reduction in fuel consumption indicated by EMI in its supplementary note of 24 August 1993 considerably exceeded the limit of 8% referred to by EMI in Note 1 annexed to its initial tenders and, secondly, that in its final comparison of the tenders the SRWT took into account that last figure of consumption.

58 Without it even being necessary to decide whether the SRWT could have taken into account the new consumption indicated by EMI in its supplementary note of 3 August 1993, which was within the 8% limit stipulated in its tender, the fact that that limit was exceeded shows that the new consumption of 45 litres per 100 km constituted an amendment of EMI' s initial tenders. Indeed, in its supplementary notes EMI referred to points in the notices of amendment, which it claimed to have taken into account in its initial tender, and did not explain why its new tests could not have been carried out before the final date for receipt of tenders. It follows that the consumption of 45 litres per 100 km should not on any view have been taken into account.

59 Moreover, the taking into account of those figures placed the other tenderers at a disadvantage by changing the amount of notional advantages resulting from the first comparison of tenders, thus affecting their ranking.

60 It must therefore be held that, by taking into account information on fuel consumption submitted by EMI in its supplementary note of 24 August 1993 and, therefore, after the opening of tenders, the Kingdom of Belgium failed to fulfil its obligations under the Directive.

The frequency of engine and gear box replacements

61 Point 20.2.2.2 of the special conditions provides:

"20.2.2.2 Assembly and dismantling times, price of spare parts

The tenderer shall set out the prices of spare parts and the assembly and dismantling times of the items listed in Annex 23.

In conformity with the table in Annex 23, a notional penalty will be applied automatically to all tenders to take account of maintenance costs."

62 According to the table in Annex 23 a notional penalty was to be imposed in regard to the maintenance costs of only 45 components of the bus. For each component mentioned, that penalty was calculated by reference to a formula in which the variables were the number of identical items of that component in the bus, the dismantling time, the assembly time, the price and the foreseeable number of replacements of the component.

63 However, for the purposes of calculating the notional penalty, Annex 23 of the special conditions asked tenderers to indicate figures for only the first three variables. As regards the foreseeable number of replacements, Annex 23 set out, on the basis of SRWT' s experience, a fixed number for each component, the figures for engine and gear box replacement being two and three respectively. Potential tenderers were therefore not asked to state the foreseeable number of replacements for those two components.

64 In conformity with the terms of Annex 23, EMI did not, when completing the table provided, indicate any proposal regarding the foreseeable number of replacements for the components mentioned. However, in its supplementary note of 23 August 1993 it stressed to the SRWT that provision should be made for only one engine and 1.25 gear boxes when using its buses and that the figures fixed by the SRWT in Annex 23 should not, therefore, be applied to its tenders.

65 The Belgian Government accepts that, when the SRWT calculated the notional penalty for EMI' s tenders, the SRWT used those new figures instead of the figures appearing in the table in Annex 23, whereas when calculating the notional penalties for all other tenders it applied the latter figures.

66 The Commission considers that such conduct infringes the principle of equal treatment of tenderers in two respects. First, by taking the figures in question into account when awarding the contract, the SRWT allowed one of the tenderers to amend the terms of its initial tenders after they had been opened. Secondly, since those new figures did not comply with the prescriptive requirements of the table in Annex 23, the SRWT awarded the contract to a tenderer in disregard of the award criteria it had itself laid down in the special conditions.

67 As regards the first of those complaints, the Commission considers that if, following the observations submitted by EMI, the SRWT believed that, in the light of the tenders lodged, the prescriptive requirements it had laid down were wrong, it could have amended them by offering the other tenderers the same opportunity to depart from them. However, since it gave such an opportunity only to EMI, it breached the principle of equal treatment of tenderers.

68 The Belgian Government considers that EMI did not amend its initial tenders, since the material offered remained precisely the same. All the other tenderers could also have informed the SRWT that the performance of their buses exceeded the requirements of Annex 23. It concludes that, if the SRWT could not take the figures in question into account, it would be precluded from taking into consideration the advantages of vehicles of more recent design.

69 It should be recalled that Annex 23 of the special conditions did not ask tenderers to indicate the frequency of spare part replacements for their buses. On the contrary, the SRWT had fixed a figure for that element in respect of each component in the table. Moreover, in point 20.2.2.2 of the special conditions the SRWT had stated that a notional penalty would be applied to all tenders "in accordance with the table in Annex 23". The figures in that table must therefore be considered to be prescriptive requirements of the special conditions.

70 The Court held in the Storebaelt case, at paragraph 37, that when a contracting entity had laid down prescriptive requirements in the contract documents, observance of the principle of equal treatment of tenderers required that all the tenders must comply with them so as to ensure objective comparison of the tenders.

71 Accordingly, the requirements of Annex 23 continued to be applicable to all the tenders and those tenders had to comply with them. It must therefore be held that EMI was not entitled to "amend" the terms of its initial tenders regarding those requirements and that the SRWT was not entitled to calculate EMI' s notional penalties by reference to its new figures, which did not correspond to the prescriptive requirements of the special conditions.

72 The fact that EMI' s new figures were taken into account necessarily gave it a real advantage when the tenders were compared. According to Annex 23, the figure relating to the frequency of spare part replacements acts, for the purposes of calculating the notional penalty, as a multiplier of the other figures provided by the tenderers relating to costs. As regards EMI' s notional penalty, the SRWT used a figure for the number of replacements which was lower than that laid down in Annex 23 and, therefore, lower than those used in the calculation for the other tenders. The notional penalty for the maintenance of the components in question in EMI' s buses was therefore obtained by using a lower multiplier.

73 Since the SRWT permitted only EMI to disregard the requirements in question, it is not necessary to decide whether the Commission is correct in considering that the SRWT could after opening the tenders have altered the prescriptive requirements fixed by the contract documents, giving all tenderers the same opportunity to disregard those requirements.

74 It must therefore be held with regard to this part of the complaint that, by awarding the contract to EMI on the basis of figures which did not correspond to the prescriptive requirements of Annex 23 of the special conditions for calculating its notional penalty for maintenance costs for engine and gear box replacement, the SRWT infringed the award criteria laid down in the special conditions and also the principle of equal treatment of tenderers. The Kingdom of Belgium therefore failed to fulfil the obligations which the directive imposes on it in that regard.

The technical quality of the material offered

75 In its supplementary note of 3 August 1993 EMI claimed that "the day-to-day running" of the buses it offered "enables significant savings" to be made by the operator. EMI drew up two lists of features of the bus which enabled those savings to be made (hereinafter "the cost-saving features").

76 The first list, entitled "Quantifiable features", concerned the cantilever seats offered, a mechanism for demisting the side windows, and a special modular assembly system. EMI indicated, for each of those features, the financial advantage which would result during the lifetime of each bus, namely BFR 480 000, BFR 240 000 and BFR 100 000 respectively.

77 The second list, entitled "Non-quantifiable features", included eight features which contributed to "cost-savings", although EMI did not evaluate them in its initial tenders or in its supplementary note of 3 August 1993.

78 The Commission contends that the SRWT took those cost-saving features into account when deciding to award the contract to EMI, although they did not appear in the award criteria listed in the tender notice or in the contract documents. Under Article 27(2) of the Directive, which applies in the present case, only the criteria stated in the tender notice or in the contract documents should have been taken into account by the SRWT when awarding the contract. Furthermore, the SRWT took account of those features solely when assessing EMI' s tenders, while for the other tenders it applied strictly the award criteria set out in point 20.2 of the special conditions. That conduct breached, once again, the principle of equal treatment.

79 In the memorandum drawn up for the meeting of 6 October 1993 SRWT' s management referred to all those cost-saving features when recommending the award of Lots Nos 2 to 6 to EMI. It stated, in the reasons for its recommendation in respect of Lot No 2, that the cost-saving features had "a not inconsiderable financial impact", so that they were "likely to have a favourable influence on the vehicle' s operating costs, to an extent greatly exceeding the financial difference resulting solely from the valuation criteria adopted".

80 According to the file, as regards Lots Nos 4, 5 and 6, the comparison of tenders solely on the basis of the award criteria laid down in point 20.2 of the special conditions had led to one of Van Hool' s tenders being placed first, whereas one of EMI' s tenders, even taking into account the figures supplied by it in its supplementary notes regarding fuel consumption and engine and gear box replacements, was placed second. The differences between the best tenders of Van Hool and the second-placed tenders of EMI amounted to BFR 294 799, BFR 471 513 and BFR 185 897 respectively for the three lots. However, after the cost-saving features had been taken into account, that initial ranking was reversed, so that, despite those differences, an EMI tender replaced the Van Hool tender as the tender recommended for those lots.

81 The Belgian Government has formally accepted that all the cost-saving features were taken into account in the decision to award the contract and that this had a decisive influence on the choice of EMI as supplier for Lots Nos 2 to 6.

82 The Belgian Government observes that point 20.2.1 of the special conditions expressly permitted the SRWT to take account of any suggestions, such as the cost-saving features. Moreover, Article 27(3) of the Directive also authorized the SRWT to take account of such suggestions, provided that they met the minimum specifications required.

83 It adds that the cost-saving features, which were in conformity with the minimum specifications in the contract documents, were not evaluated when the tenders were compared, but were taken into account as un-quantified comfort and quality features, leading to the conclusion that, taken as a whole, EMI' s offer was economically the most advantageous. Furthermore, both the tender notice and the special conditions referred to the technical qualities of the material offered as being a criterion of award. It concludes that the SRWT was therefore entitled to take account of the cost-saving features at issue.

84 The Commission accepts that tenderers have the right to submit variants and that those variants may be taken into account by a contracting entity, provided, however, that the principle of equal treatment is observed. It contends that it was not observed in the present case, since the derogation from the criteria laid down in the special conditions resulted in an advantage being granted only to EMI.

85 The Court finds that the cost-saving features were not amongst the award criteria adopted by the SRWT for the award of the contract.

86 Admittedly the headings for the award criteria set out in point 20.2 of the special conditions could be interpreted ° if no regard is had to the subsequent definitions ° as having a wide scope (see, for example, in point 20.2.2.4 of the special conditions, the heading for the seven technical criteria, namely "the technical qualities of the material offered"), so that, as the Belgian Government submits, all the characteristics relating to the technical qualities of the material offered would be relevant when comparing the tenders.

87 However, the SRWT itself defined all the technical criteria using a precise formula set out under each heading (see paragraph 13 of this judgment). Accordingly, the scope of the technical criteria, whatever the wording of the headings, was restricted by the formulas used by the SRWT to define them.

88 The requirement under Article 27(2) of the Directive for the contracting entities to state "in the contract documents or in the tender notice all the criteria they intend to apply to the award, where possible in descending order of importance" is intended precisely to inform potential tenderers of the features to be taken into account in identifying the economically most advantageous offer. All the tenderers are thus aware of the award criteria to be satisfied by their tenders and the relative importance of those criteria. Moreover, that requirement ensures the observance of the principles of equal treatment of tenderers and of transparency.

89 Furthermore, although Article 27(3) of the Directive does indeed enable contracting entities to take account of variants, that provision must be interpreted in the light both of the principles underlying the Directive and of Article 27(2). Accordingly, in order to ensure that a contract is awarded on the basis of criteria known to all the tenderers before the preparation of their tender, a contracting entity can take account of variants as award criteria only in so far as it expressly mentioned them as such in the contract documents or in the tender notice.

90 As regards the Belgian Government' s submissions concerning the taking into account of "suggestions", suffice it to note that Article 27(3) of the Directive recognizes only the taking into account of variants, not suggestions. Moreover, the Directive makes no reference to them as award criteria and, consequently, such suggestions cannot be taken into account by a contracting entity when awarding the contract either.

91 In the present case it is sufficient to find that the principles of equal treatment of tenderers and of transparency of the procedure have not been observed and it is not therefore necessary to decide whether the rule laid down in Article 27(2) of the Directive precludes a contracting entity from changing its award criteria during the course of the procedure, provided that it observes those principles.

92 It is clear that, for Lots Nos 4, 5 and 6, the SRWT applied, in the case of EMI alone, the cost-saving features suggested by EMI to offset the financial differences, amounting to BFR 294

799, BFR 471 513 and BFR 185 897, between the tenders of Van Hool in first place and those of EMI placed second. Even if, as the Belgian Government submits, the SRWT did not allocate a precise value to the cost-saving features, EMI provided it with a list of "Quantifiable features" (see paragraph 76 of this judgment), the total amount of which for each lot (BFR 820 000) more than sufficed to offset those differences.

93 On the other hand, as regards Lots Nos 2 and 3, it is evident from the memorandum drawn up for the meeting of 6 October 1993 that the tenders of EMI at issue were in first place even before the SRWT had taken the cost-saving features into account. The SRWT could not therefore have attached decisive importance to the cost-saving features relating to those lots, since EMI' s tenders were already regarded as the most economically advantageous. This part of the complaint has not therefore been established.

94 It must be concluded that, by taking into account, in its comparison of tenders for Lots Nos 4, 5 and 6, the cost-saving features suggested by EMI without having referred to them in the contract documents or in the tender notice, by using them to offset the financial differences between the tenders in first place and those of EMI placed second and by accepting some of EMI' s tenders as a result of taking those features into account, the Kingdom of Belgium failed to fulfil its obligations under the Directive.

95 Accordingly, the Court finds that

° by taking into account information on fuel consumption submitted by EMI in its supplementary note of 24 August 1993 and, therefore, after the opening of tenders,

° by awarding the contract to EMI on the basis of figures which did not correspond to the prescriptive requirements of Annex 23 of the special conditions for calculating the notional penalty of EMI for maintenance costs in respect of engine and gear box replacement,

° by taking into account, when comparing the tenders for Lots Nos 4, 5 and 6, the cost-saving features suggested by EMI without having referred to them in the contract documents or in the tender notice, by using them to offset the financial differences between the tenders in first place and those of EMI placed second, and by accepting some of EMI' s tenders as a result of taking those features into account, the Kingdom of Belgium has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Directive.

Order of the President of the Court of 22 April 1994 Commission of the European Communities v Kingdom of Belgium. Application for interim measures - Interim measures - Urgency - Balance of interests - Public safety - Public procurement - Transport sector - Council Directive 90/531/EEC. Case C-87/94 R

++++

Application for interim measures ° Interim measures ° Conditions for granting ° Urgency ° Consideration given to the applicant' s failure to display due diligence before lodging an application for interim measures ° Balance of interests at stake ° Public safety ° Application to suspend a decision awarding a public supply contract already in course of performance

(EEC Treaty, Art. 186; Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, Art. 83(2))

The Commission may, in its capacity as guardian of the Treaties, bring proceedings for the adoption of interim measures in parallel with an action against a Member State for failure to fulfil its obligations, in connection with a disputed procedure for the award of a public contract. Failure to comply with a directive in this field constitutes a serious threat to the legality of the Community order, and a subsequent declaration to the effect that the Member State in question has failed to fulfil its obligations, usually after the contract has been performed, cannot reverse the damage suffered by the Community legal order and by all the tenderers whose rights have been impaired.

Since the directives on that subject give precedence at national level to review before conclusion of the contract, the Commission must act at Community level as far as possible before the contract is concluded, or at least inform the Member State concerned, quickly and unambiguously, that it is in the process of reviewing possible infringements of the rules applicable to the contract at issue and that it intends to seek the suspension of the procedure for awarding the contract, or of the contract itself. If, on the basis of that information, the Member State proceeds with the award of the contract or with its performance, it does so at its own risk.

By allowing more than three months to elapse between receiving a complaint alleging irregularities in the procedure for awarding the contract and informing the Member State of its intention to seek suspension of the contract, the Commission did not display the diligence to be expected of a party which subsequently lodged an application for interim measures.

Furthermore, the Member State concerned cannot, in principle, on the basis of the balance of the interests at stake, rely on the risk to which a delay in the performance of the contract would expose users of a public utility when it is that State' s own inaction that has given rise to the situation in question; the Court may, however, in certain circumstances and in cases where the risk involved is serious, consider that it must not itself exacerbate that risk by granting the measure applied for.

defendant,

APPLICATION for the adoption of interim measures suspending the legal consequences of the decision taken on 6 October 1993 by the Société Régionale Wallonne du Transport (Walloon Regional Transport Company) awarding a public contract for the supply of buses to Espace Mobile International SA, and suspending the legal consequences of the contractual links established between those two companies as a result of the decision awarding the contract,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT

makes the following

Order

On those grounds,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT

hereby orders:

1. The application for interim measures is dismissed.

2. Costs are reserved.

Luxembourg, 22 April 1994.

The dispute

A - Procedure

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 11 March 1994, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action before the Court under Article 169 of the EC Treaty for a declaration that:

- by taking into account, in the procedure for the award of a public contract by the Société Régionale Wallonne du Transport (hereinafter "SRWT"), amendments made to one of the tenders after the opening of tenders,

- by admitting to the procedure for awarding the contract a tenderer who did not meet the selection criteria laid down in the contract documents,

- and by accepting a tender which did not meet the criteria for the award of the contract laid down in the contract documents, the Kingdom of Belgium has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 90/531/EEC of 17 September 1990 on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1990 L 297, p. 1), and to comply with the principle of equal treatment, which governs all procedures for the award of public contracts.

2 By a separate document, lodged at the Court Registry on the same date, the applicant made an application for interim measures, pursuant to Article 186 of the Treaty, Article 36 of the Protocol on the Statute of the Court of Justice and Article 83 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, in which it sought an order requiring the Kingdom of Belgium to adopt all necessary measures to suspend the legal consequences of SRWT' s decision of 6 October 1993 awarding the contract, together with all necessary measures to suspend the legal consequences of the contractual links established between SRWT and the company to which the contract was awarded, namely Espace

Mobile International SA (hereinafter "EMI"), pending the Court' s final ruling in the main proceedings.

3 The Kingdom of Belgium lodged its written observations on 30 March 1994. The parties were given the opportunity to submit their oral observations on 14 April 1994.

B - Background

4 SRWT, which is based in Namur (Belgium), put out an invitation to tender with a view to awarding a public contract for the supply, over a period of three years, of eight lots of public transport buses, comprising 307 standard vehicles, for the estimated sum of BFR 2 022 918 000 (excluding VAT). A contract notice was published in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 22 April 1993.

5 By 7 June 1993, the final date indicated in the contract notice, five tenders had been received from EMI (Aubange), Van Hool (Koningshooikt), Mercedes-B Belgium (Brussels), Berkhof (Roeselaere) and Jonckheere (Roeselaere) respectively.

6 During the months of June and July, SRWT examined those tenders. A memorandum was drawn up in preparation for the meeting of the Board of Directors to be held on 2 September 1993. It recommended that the contract for Lot No 1 (37 vehicles) be awarded to Jonckheere, and for Lots Nos 2 to 6 (280 vehicles in all) to Van Hool.

7 On 3, 23 and 24 August 1993, the contracting authority received three additional memoranda from EMI.

8 In those memoranda, EMI amplified its observations, particularly with regard to the following items in its tender:

- memorandum of 3 August: quantity discount; offer of financing; waiver of the price-variation clause with respect to buses ready for delivery during the course of 1994; fuel consumption rates of the vehicles; data required for the evaluation, both quantifiable and non-quantifiable, of the technical quality of the vehicles offered;

- memorandum of 23 August: estimated number of replacement engines and gear-boxes;

- memorandum of 24 August: fuel consumption rates.

9 On 31 August 1993 the contracting authority circulated an internal memorandum which concluded, following an analysis of the three additional memoranda, that they contained amendments to the original tender. It accordingly confirmed that the proposals regarding the award of the lots, set out in the abovementioned memorandum prepared for the Board meeting of 2 September 1993, were justified.

10 On 2 September 1993 the Board of Directors of SRWT took the view that they did not have sufficient information at their disposal to take a final decision and resolved to continue the discussion at a later meeting.

11 In his letter of 14 September 1993, the Walloon Minister for Transport communicated to the managing director of SRWT various observations concerning the tenders submitted by Van Hool and EMI, including the three memoranda mentioned above. He concluded with the suggestion that the company' s Board of Directors undertake a further review of the file, in the light of his observations.

12 On 28 September 1993, SRWT asked EMI to confirm the rates of fuel consumption quoted in the memorandum of 24 August, together with the maximum number of engine and gear-box replacements, as estimated in the memorandum of 23 August. EMI confirmed those details of its tender by letter of 29 September 1993.

13 The management of SRWT drafted a new memorandum comparing the tenders in preparation for the Board meeting on 6 October 1993. That memorandum, which took into consideration the information contained in EMI' s three additional memoranda, proposed that Lot No 1 (37 vehicles) be awarded to Jonckheere and Lots Nos 2 to 6 (reduced to 278 vehicles) to EMI.

14 By a decision of 6 October 1993, the Board of Directors of SRWT decided to postpone the order for 30 buses until 1996, while awarding the contract for Lot No 1 (37 vehicles) worth a total of BFR 212 759 250, excluding VAT, to Jonckheere, and Lots Nos 2 to 6 (278 vehicles) worth a total of BFR 1 797 719 210, excluding VAT, to EMI.

15 On the same day, Van Hool applied to the Belgian Conseil d' Etat for an order suspending the operation of the decision in question under the emergency procedure.

16 By judgment of 7 October 1993, the President of the Sixième Chambre des Référés (Sixth Chamber hearing applications for interim measures) of the Conseil d' Etat ordered provisional suspension of the enforcement of the decision taken on 6 October 1993 by the Board of Directors of SRWT.

17 However, by judgment of 17 December 1993, the Conseil d' Etat failed to confirm that order and dismissed the applications for suspension and for the adoption of interim measures lodged by Van Hool.

18 By letter of the same date, SRWT notified EMI of the order for Lots Nos 2 to 6.

19 On 30 November 1993 the Commission, with whom Van Hool had lodged a complaint, gave the Kingdom of Belgium formal notice to submit its observations, pursuant to Article 169 of the Treaty. The Commission alleged that the Kingdom of Belgium had failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 90/531/EEC or to comply with the principle of equal treatment, which governs all procedures for the award of public contracts.

20 In its observations, which were communicated to the Commission on 15 December 1993, the Kingdom of Belgium claimed that the alleged failure to fulfil its obligations had not been proved.

21 On 8 February 1994, the Commission delivered a reasoned opinion to the Kingdom of Belgium, requesting it to adopt the measures necessary for compliance within a period of ten days, particularly by using its influence with the competent authorities to secure the suspension of the legal consequences of the contract concluded by SRWT and EMI.

22 In its reply of 18 February 1994, the Kingdom of Belgium maintained its point of view.

Grounds

23 According to Article 186 of the Treaty:

"The Court of Justice may in any cases before it prescribe any necessary interim measures."

24 Pursuant to Article 83(2) of the Rules of Procedure, an order for interim measures is conditional upon the existence of circumstances giving rise to urgency and of pleas of fact and law establishing a prima facie case for granting the relief sought. As the Court has consistently held, it also presupposes that the balance of the interests at stake is conducive to granting such relief.

25 Those conditions are cumulative.

26 The urgency of the application must be assessed in relation to the necessity for an order granting interim relief in order to prevent serious and irreparable damage to the party requesting the interim measure.

27 Moreover, the risk of serious and irreparable damage, which is the criterion for assessing urgency, is the first factor to be taken into account in determining the balance of interests.

28 In the present case, it is necessary to consider, overall, whether the conditions with regard to urgency and the balance of interests are satisfied.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

29 The Commission claims that urgency is manifest. Delivery of the 1994 instalment (128 buses out of the total of 278) may begin during April 1994. Thus there is a risk of serious and irreparable damage being caused, in that the award of the contract and especially the first deliveries would confront the Commission, as guardian of the Treaties responsible for ensuring the application of Community law, with a fait accompli, and would pose a serious and immediate threat to the legality of the Community order. The greater the number of deliveries completed, the more difficult it would be to reverse the damage caused. If no interim measures were adopted, the judgment in the main proceedings would, if it upheld the action, be rendered ineffective.

30 According to the Kingdom of Belgium, the condition of urgency is not satisfied where the applicant has been too slow in taking action, or has itself brought about the urgent situation which it seeks to rely upon. That is so in the case of the Commission, which waited for more than five months after the decision awarding the contract was taken before initiating these proceedings. In an action against a Member State for failure to fulfil its obligations, the Commission should, in order to substantiate the existence of serious and irreparable damage, also demonstrate the existence of a special requirement necessitating the adoption of interim measures, such as the need to prevent a breach of Community law before the decision awarding the contract is taken; it cannot confine itself to the general allegation that it has sustained damage in its capacity as guardian of the Treaties, an allegation that falls to be made whenever Community law is infringed by a Member State.

31 It should be noted that failure to comply with a directive applicable to a public contract constitutes a serious threat to the legality of the Community order and that the ensuing declaration by the Court on the basis of Article 169 of the Treaty - usually after the contract has been performed - to the effect that the Member State in question has failed to fulfil its obligations, cannot reverse the damage suffered by the Community legal order and by all the tenderers who were either rejected or deprived of the opportunity to compete effectively in compliance with the principle of equal treatment. The Commission, in its capacity as guardian of the Treaties, may therefore bring proceedings for the adoption of interim measures in parallel with an action against a Member State for failure to fulfil its obligations, in connection with a disputed procedure for the award of a public contract.

32 Furthermore,

- Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), and

- Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (Official Journal 1992 L 76, p. 14), impose an obligation to ensure at national level that decisions which have infringed Community law with respect to the award of public contracts or national rules implementing Community law are reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible; in the present case, Van Hool sought such redress before the Belgian Conseil d' Etat but failed ultimately to secure the suspension applied for.

33 As the Belgian Government has emphasized in the proceedings before the Court, both the travaux préparatoires and the actual provisions of those directives reveal that the Community legislature, aware of the differences between national laws and mindful of the need not to undermine in any way the principle of legal certainty, at first gave precedence to review before conclusion of the contract.

In deciding that the consequences of review for a contract which has already been concluded are determined by national law, and by permitting Member States to limit those consequences to the award of damages to the injured party, the Community legislature acknowledged that a State may refuse at national level to set aside a contract which has already taken effect.

34 In those circumstances, the Commission itself must act at Community level as far as possible before the contract is concluded, or at least inform the Member State concerned, quickly and unambiguously, that it is in the process of reviewing possible infringements of the rules applicable to the contract in issue, and that it intends to seek the suspension either of the procedure for awarding the contract or of the contract entered into. That being so, the Member State may proceed with the award of the contract or with its performance, at its own risk.

35 At the hearing, the parties acknowledged that under the relevant provisions of national law, the contract was deemed to be concluded as a result of the notification of the order to EMI by SRWT on 17 November 1993. At the same time, they also recognized that, contrary to a statement in the defendant' s written observations, the substantive provisions of Belgian law, according to the most recent case-law, do not preclude a public contract which has already been concluded from being set aside.

36 It is common ground that, in principle, the first deliveries of buses were scheduled to take place at the end of April 1994.

37 Thus, on the date that proceedings for interim measures were initiated, the application for relief concerned a contract which had not only been concluded but was already being carried out. The process of obtaining the necessary materials and of manufacturing and assembling the buses called for the implementation of an appropriate plan several months before the first deliveries.

38 After stating in its application in the main action that a complaint from Van Hool had first been laid before it on 6 October 1993, the Commission pointed out orally on 14 April 1994, then in writing on 15 April, that in fact it had been apprized of the matter by letter of 29 October 1993, as recorded in the case-file. In any event, the Commission evinced the intention of seeking the suspension of the contract only in its reasoned opinion of 8 February 1994, that is to say, more than three months after receiving the letter of 29 October 1993 and more than two months after sending its letter of formal notice of 30 November 1993, which did not contain any reference to that point. Therefore, the Commission failed to act in such a way as to make the contracting authority aware as early as possible that it could proceed only at its own risk with the performance of a contract which had been concluded with exceptional speed on the same day - 17 November 1993 - as the decision of the Belgian Conseil d' Etat. Yet, in its complaint of 29 October 1993, Van Hool had stressed in alarmist terms the urgent need for action by the Commission. In those circumstances, the Commission has not displayed the diligence to be expected of a party which has subsequently lodged an application for interim measures.

39 On the question of the balance of interests, the Kingdom of Belgium disputes the Commission' s allegation of serious and irreparable damage by referring to the state of SRWT' s bus fleet. That fleet contains numerous old vehicles, in particular 194 vehicles which were brought into service during 1976, 1977 and 1978. The condition of those vehicles has given rise to urgent requests for replacements from some of SRWT' s regional managers. It is likely to cause problems, even accidents, which could have dramatic consequences for the staff, the passengers and the good name of the company generally. A woman passenger has already been the victim of an accident necessitating hospital treatment: her foot went through the deck of a bus which she had just boarded. Suspension of the contract would entail its immediate termination, followed by the opening of a new procedure for the award of a public contract, which would delay each of the scheduled deliveries by approximately thirteen months.

40 The defendant' s submissions regarding the state of the buses to be replaced are supported by the documents produced. Their condition effectively undermines the safety requirements which should govern all public utilities. However, the defendant has itself contributed significantly to the creation of this state of affairs. While, according to its own recommendations, the normal length of service for the buses to be replaced should have been from ten to twelve years, it did not consider it necessary to ensure the timely replacement of the vehicles, a large number of which have now been in use for 16 to 18 years. What is more, it allowed more than two years to elapse between a request for the replacement of 103 buses whose state of dilapidation was emphasized by the local management concerned, and the publication of the contract notice on 22 April 1993. Thus the Kingdom of Belgium has omitted to ensure that all appropriate measures were taken to avoid endangering the safety of SRWT' s customers and staff, as well as that of other road-users.

41 In principle, such an omission is likely to prevent the balance of interests from tilting in favour of the party in default (see the order of the President of the Court in Case 194/88 R Commission v Italy [1988] ECR 5647, at paragraph 16). However, in the circumstances of the present case and in view of the seriousness of the risk involved, it is likewise incumbent on the Court not to exacerbate that risk.

42 In the light of the foregoing it is clear that the Commission has failed to display the diligence required of a party relying on the urgency of interim measures, and that the balance of interests tilts in favour of the Kingdom of Belgium.

43 In those circumstances, the application for interim measures must be dismissed without there being any need to consider whether the Kingdom of Belgium, in its pleadings and documents adduced in support, has successfully established that the Commission' s ostensibly well-founded submissions as to the existence of a prima facie case are in fact groundless.

Judgment of the Court (Fifth Chamber)
of 4 May 1995
Commission of the European Communities v Hellenic Republic.
Failure of a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Directive 77/62/EEC - Framework agreement for the exclusive supply of dressing material for use in Greek hospitals and by the Greek army.
Case C-79/94.

++++

1. Approximation of laws ° Review procedures in connection with the award of public supply and public works contracts ° Directive 89/665 ° Procedure allowing the Commission to intervene in the event of a clear and manifest breach of the Community rules on the award of contracts ° Procedure unrelated to proceedings for failure to fulfil obligations under Article 169 of the Treaty

(EC Treaty, Art. 169; Council Directive 89/665)

2. Approximation of laws ° Procedures for the award of public supply contracts ° Directive 77/62 ° Scope ° Derogations from common rules ° Conditions

(Council Directive 77/62, as amended, Arts 5(1)(a) and 6(4)(c))

1. The procedure under which the Commission, pursuant to Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, may, if it forms the view that there has been a clear and manifest breach of the Community provisions relating to the award of public contracts, take the matter up with a Member State is a preliminary measure which can neither derogate from nor replace the powers of the Commission under Article 169 of the Treaty, with the result that the manner in which the Commission has employed that procedure is immaterial in deciding on the admissibility of an action for failure to fulfil obligations which it has brought by reason of the breach by the Member State concerned of the Community provisions on the award of public contracts.

2. A Member State cannot bring the conclusion of a public supply contract outside the scope of application of the rules laid down in Directive 77/62 by claiming that the contract in question merely constitutes a framework agreement which is no more than a structure within which numerous contracts are to be awarded, the value of none of which will exceed the threshold laid down in the first indent of Article 5(1)(a) of the directive. Nor can that Member State have recourse to the derogation permitted under Article 6(4)(c) of the directive by arguing that the successful suppliers were the only ones who had expressed an interest in contracting.

Judgment

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 1 March 1994, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EC Treaty for a declaration that, by concluding a framework agreement for the exclusive supply by six Greek textile undertakings of dressing material for use in Greek hospitals and by the Greek army and by failing to publish the relevant notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1), as last amended by Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988 (OJ 1988 L 127, p. 1) ("the directive").

2 By a decree of 19 July 1991, the Greek Ministry for Industry, Energy and Technology ratified the framework agreement which it had signed with six Greek textile undertakings. Under that agreement, all hospitals and health-care units, as well as the Greek army, were required to purchase certain types of dressing material from the above undertakings under the conditions set out in the framework agreement and for a period of three years which could be extended for two further years.

3 It is common ground that no tendering procedure was set in motion for those supplies and that no notice relating to the contract in question was published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

4 By letter of 9 September 1991 the Commission drew the Greek Government' s attention to the fact that such an agreement and the procedure used to conclude it failed to comply with the directive and in particular Article 9 thereof. Since no reply was forthcoming, the Commission, by letter of 14 November 1991, put the Greek Government on notice to take all measures necessary to comply with the directive. The Commission refused to accept the views expressed by the Greek Government in its reply of 8 January 1992 and addressed to it a reasoned opinion requesting it to adopt within two months the measures necessary to comply with the directive.

5 In its letters of 10 December 1992 and 13 February 1993, the Greek Government accepted that it was in breach of the directive. It also declared its intention unilaterally to rescind the agreement before its expiry date and to launch a new call for tenders for the supply of dressing material during 1993. Since these declarations were not acted upon, the Commission brought the present action.

Admissibility

6 The Hellenic Republic contests the admissibility of the present action.

7 It first points out in this connection that, in the letters referred to above, it acknowledged the breach of which the Commission accuses it and undertook to adopt the measures necessary to ensure that Community law would be complied with in future. It contends that in the proceedings which resulted in the judgment in Case 199/85 Commission v Italy [1987] ECR 1039, the Commission treated as sufficient a written undertaking by the Municipality of Milan that it would comply in future with all the provisions of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682). In bringing the present action, it argues, the Commission has thus failed to respect the principle that Member States should be treated in the same way.

8 The Hellenic Republic then goes on to submit that under Article 3(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), the Commission must act prior to conclusion of the contract in question if it forms the view that there has been an infringement of Community provisions relating to the award of public contracts. In the present case, the Commission took action only once the agreement in question was in the course of being performed.

9 That argument cannot be accepted.

10 So far as the alleged breach of the principle of equal treatment is concerned, suffice it to point out that, even assuming that the Commission v Italy case, mentioned above, was comparable to the present case ° which it was not, as the Advocate General has demonstrated at point 17 of his Opinion ° the Commission was not in any event obliged to take the same view in the present case. It may also be observed that if the Commission were always bound to satisfy itself with mere undertakings by Member States binding for the future, this would provide Member States with an easy way of protecting themselves against proceedings under Article 169 of the Treaty for failure to fulfil obligations.

11 With regard to the argument derived from Article 3(1) of Directive 89/665, cited above, it must be pointed out (judgment of 24 January 1995 in Case C-359/93 Commission v Netherlands [1995] ECR I-0000, paragraph 13) that the special procedure provided for by that directive can neither derogate from nor replace the powers of the Commission under Article 169 of the Treaty.

12 In those circumstances, the action must be declared admissible.

Substance

13 Explaining the reasons for its non-compliance with the advertising rules laid down in Article 9 of the directive, the Greek Government states that the framework agreement is no more than a structure within which numerous supply contracts are awarded, the value of none of which exceeds the threshold of ECU 200 000 laid down in the first indent of Article 5(1)(a) of the directive. The Greek Government also states that the dressing material in question could have been supplied only by the six Greek producers which were parties to the framework agreement since no producer established in any other Member State has as yet expressed any interest in this type of contract. For those reasons, the Greek Government argues, the framework agreement was concluded in accordance with the derogation provided for in Article 6(4)(c) of the directive.

14 That argument cannot be accepted.

15 So far as concerns the argument based on the value of the contracts in question, the framework agreement turns into a whole the various contracts which it governs and the total value of those contracts is greater than ECU 200 000. Furthermore, as the Commission has correctly pointed out, any other interpretation of the first indent of Article 5(1)(a) of the directive would allow contract awarders to circumvent the obligations which it imposes.

16 With regard to the Greek Government' s assertion that only the six producers party to the framework agreement could supply the products in question, even if this were proved, this circumstance would not come within the scope of the derogations provided for in Article 6(4) of the directive and, in particular, that under heading (c).

17 It must accordingly be held that there has been a failure to fulfil obligations within the terms of the forms of order sought by the Commission.

Costs

18 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the Hellenic Republic has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Fifth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Declares that, by concluding a framework agreement for the exclusive supply by six Greek textile undertakings of dressing material for use in Greek hospitals and by the Greek army and by failing to publish the relevant notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as last amended by Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988;

2. Orders the Hellenic Republic to pay the costs.

Judgment of the Court of 18 May 1995 Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic. Action for failure to fulfil obligations - Public works contracts - Failure to publish a notice of invitation to tender. Case C-57/94.

++++

1. Actions against Member States for failure to fulfil obligations ° Action dismissed as inadmissible because of inconsistency between the reasoned opinion and the application ° Lodging of a new application without a fresh pre-litigation procedure ° Whether permissible

(EEC Treaty, Art. 169)

2. Approximation of laws ° Procedures for the award of public works contracts ° Directive 71/305 ° Derogations from the common rules ° Strict interpretation ° Existence of exceptional circumstances ° Burden of proof

(Council Directive 71/305, Art. 9(b))

1. Where an action brought under Article 169 of the Treaty has been held inadmissible on the grounds that the Commission' s application was based on an objection that was different from that set out in the reasoned opinion, the Commission may remedy the defects found by the Court by lodging a fresh application on the same facts based on the same objections, pleas in law and arguments as the reasoned opinion originally issued, without having to recommence the entire pre-litigation procedure or issue a complementary reasoned opinion.

2. The provisions of Article 9 of Directive 71/305 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, which authorize derogations from the rules intended to ensure the effectiveness of the rights conferred by the Treaty in connection with public works contracts, must be interpreted strictly. The burden of proving the actual existence of exceptional circumstances justifying a derogation lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances.

In view of the wording of Article 9(b) of the directive, pursuant to which authorities awarding works contracts may do so without applying the provisions of the directive, in particular those providing for publication of an invitation to tender, "when, for technical or artistic reasons or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the works may only be carried out by a particular contractor", a Member State must, in order to justify recourse to a private contract procedure for the works in question, not only establish the existence of technical reasons within the meaning of that provision, but also prove that those technical reasons made it absolutely essential that the contract in question be awarded to a specific undertaking.

Judgment

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 9 February 1994, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EC Treaty for a declaration that, in so far as the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno awarded a private contract for the eleventh and twelfth supplementary reports for the completion of the section of rapid transit highway "Ascoli-Mare" entitled "Stage IV ° Project 5134" and failed to publish a notice of invitation to tender in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682, hereinafter "Directive 71/305").

2 At the beginning of the 1970s, the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno awarded various public works contracts relating to the construction of a rapid transit highway to link the town of Ascoli Piceno to the A 14 motorway and national highway No 16, which runs along the Adriatic coast. The work was divided into four stages.

3 Stage IV was awarded to the undertaking Rozzi Costantino. Twelve supplementary reports were subsequently produced on the work relating to that stage, which involved a substantial prolongation of the route as initially conceived. The work envisaged by those reports was also awarded to Rozzi Costantino. On 21 May 1990 the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno awarded to that undertaking a private contract for work envisaged by the eleventh and twelfth reports for a total amount of LIT 36 250 million.

4 The Commission considered that the award of the public works contracts envisaged in those two reports fell within the scope of Directive 71/305 and was not covered by any of the derogations provided for in Article 9 and that consequently a notice of invitation to tender should have been published in the Official Journal of the European Communities in accordance with the requirements of the directive. Accordingly, by letter of 17 January 1991 the Commission called on the Italian

Government, pursuant to Article 169 of the EEC Treaty, to submit its observations on the alleged infringement within 30 days.

5 Since no reply was received from the Italian Government within that period, the Commission reiterated its views in the reasoned opinion which it sent to the Italian Republic on 1 August 1991, concluding that "in so far as the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno awarded a private contract for the eleventh and twelfth supplementary reports for the completion of the section of rapid transit highway 'Ascoli-Mare' entitled 'Stage IV ° Project 5134' and failed to publish a notice of invitation to tender in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 71/305/EEC". The Commission called on the Italian Republic to comply with the reasoned opinion within two months.

6 By letter of 30 December 1991 the Italian Government sent to the Commission a letter of 31 October 1991 in which the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno provided further information about the contract in question and relied on Article 5(b) of Law No 584 of 8 August 1977, which transposed Article 9(b) of Directive 71/305 into Italian law, to justify the award of the contract at issue to the undertaking Rozzi Costantino.

7 Since the Commission did not regard that communication as a satisfactory response to its reasoned opinion, by application lodged at the Court Registry on 6 July 1992 it brought an action requesting the Court to declare that, by allowing the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno to award a private contract for the eleventh and twelfth supplementary reports for the completion of the section of rapid transit highway "Ascoli-Mare" entitled "Stage IV ° Project 5134" and to fail to publish a notice of invitation to tender in the Official Journal of the European Communities, and by not taking steps to preclude at the outset the legal effects thereof which infringed Community law, the Italian Republic had failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts.

8 Finding that the conclusions in the Commission' s reasoned opinion and the form of order sought in its application to the Court were not the same, by judgment of 12 January 1994 the Court dismissed the application as inadmissible (Case C-296/92 Commission v Italy [1994] ECR I-1) on the ground that the scope of an action brought under Article 169 of the Treaty is delimited by the pre-litigation procedure provided for by that article and that consequently the action cannot be founded on any complaints other than those formulated in the reasoned opinion.

9 Following that judgment the Commission lodged the present application without initiating a fresh pre-litigation procedure.

Admissibility

10 The Italian Government considers that, following the Court' s judgment of 12 January 1994, the Commission should have recommenced the entire pre-litigation procedure laid down in Article 169 of the Treaty, or at the very least have supplemented the reasoned opinion of 1 August 1991 by a further opinion.

11 In that connection the Italian Government claims, first, that the Court did not hold the application in Case C-296/92 inadmissible on the basis of defects affecting the pre-litigation documents or defects affecting the procedural documents taken separately, but rather the necessary functional correlation between the two.

12 That argument is unfounded. The judgment of 12 January 1994 makes it clear that inadmissibility resulted from the fact that inasmuch as it sought a declaration from the Court that the Italian Republic had failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 71/305 by allowing the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno to award the public works contract by way of a private agreement and to fail to publish a notice of invitation to tender in the Official Journal of the European Communities, without taking steps to preclude the effects thereof, the Commission was founding its action on a basis different from that formulated in the reasoned opinion, in which the Commission had complained to the Italian Republic about the conduct of the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno itself.

13 It should, moreover, be pointed out that the facts on which Case C-296/92 was founded and those of the present case are exactly the same. Both cases concern the award by the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno of the contract in question by a private agreement procedure and a failure to publish a notice of invitation to tender in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

14 In the circumstances it must be concluded that in order to remedy the defects found by the Court in its judgment of 12 January 1994 it sufficed for the Commission to submit an application based on the same complaints, pleas in law and arguments as the reasoned opinion of 1 August 1991.

15 The Italian Government observes, secondly, that in its reasoned opinion of 1 August 1991 the Commission claimed that recourse to a private contract procedure was not justified by a situation of extreme urgency as provided for in Article 9(d) of Directive 71/305, whereas in its application the Commission maintains that recourse to that procedure could not be founded on "technical reasons" within the meaning of Article 9(b) of that directive.

16 No argument can be drawn from that fact. As the Advocate General stated in point 12 of his Opinion, the discrepancy pointed out by the Italian Government arose from the fact that the Italian Government did not reply to the letter of formal notice addressed to it by the Commission on 17 January 1991 and only in its belated response to the Commission' s reasoned opinion did it for the first time rely on Article 9(b) of Directive 71/305 to justify the award of the contract by a private agreement procedure.

17 It should, moreover, be noted that, in view of the Italian Government' s failure to adduce any justification within the prescribed period, the Commission would have been entitled to confine itself, both during the pre-litigation procedure and in its application initiating proceedings, to stating that the case did not fall within any of the exceptional circumstances capable of justifying, under Article 9 of Directive 71/305, recourse to a private contract procedure, without examining in detail either circumstance, which, it appeared, given the lack of adequate information, might be relied on in particular.

18 It follows from the foregoing that the action is admissible.

Substance

19 The parties agree that in the circumstances only application of Article 9(b) of Directive 71/305 could justify recourse to a private contract procedure in awarding the contract in question. Pursuant to that provision, authorities awarding works contracts may do so without applying the provisions of the directive, in particular those providing for publication of an invitation to tender in the Official Journal of the European Communities, "when, for technical or artistic reasons or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the works may only be carried out by a particular contractor".

20 The Italian Government contends, first, that even if the term "technical reasons" in Article 9(b) of Directive 71/305 should be interpreted restrictively, that interpretation cannot go so far as to deprive that derogating provision of all practical significance. Thus it argues that "technical reasons" capable of justifying the carrying out of works by a particular contractor should not be construed as the technical capacity of a particular undertaking alone to carry out certain works and considers that objective circumstances and conditions which affect the execution of works in a particular situation may constitute such reasons.

21 The Italian Government maintains, secondly, that in this case "technical reasons" within the meaning of Article 9(b) of Directive 71/305 justified the contract in question being awarded to a particular contractor, namely the undertaking already responsible for carrying out the works in progress. In that connection it refers to the technical interplay between the works in progress and the work involved in the contract at issue. Thus it would have been impossible to complete the work which was the subject of the tenth supplementary report before putting in place part of the structures which were the subject of the eleventh and twelfth reports, to set up two different building sites at the same time because of the shortage of space, and to carry out the work in progress separately from the work at issue, because of the close structural connection of the foundations.

22 The Commission denies that those circumstances can constitute "technical reasons" within the meaning of Article 9(b) of Directive 71/305. For that purpose it refers to a technical opinion given by an independent expert from which it appears, in substance, that the three arguments relied on by the Italian Government express a single technical need, that of planning, coordinating and supervising the works, and that in any event coordination of the timing and siting of the work in progress and the work at issue was required even if all the works were awarded to one undertaking.

23 It follows from the Court' s judgment in Case 199/85 Commission v Italy [1987] ECR 1039, at paragraph 14, that the provisions of Article 9 of Directive 71/305, which authorize derogations from the rules intended to ensure the effectiveness of the rights conferred by the Treaty in connection with public works contracts, must be interpreted strictly and the burden of proving the actual existence of exceptional circumstances justifying a derogation lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances.

24 In view of the wording of Article 9(b) of Directive 71/305, the Italian Government was obliged, in order to justify recourse to a private contract procedure for the works in question, not only to establish the existence of "technical reasons" within the meaning of that provision, but also to prove that those "technical reasons" made it absolutely essential that the contract in question be awarded to the undertaking Rozzi Costantino, which was responsible for the works in progress.

25 Even assuming that the circumstances relied on by the Italian Government could constitute "technical reasons" within the meaning of Article 9(b) of Directive 71/305, it is clear that the Italian Government has not adduced proof that those circumstances made it absolutely essential that the contract at issue be awarded to the undertaking in question.

26 The Italian Government did produce plans relating to the works in question, together with a series of photographs, and, referring to the technical explanations of the chief engineer of the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno itself, pointed to the technical interplay between the work in progress and the work in question.

27 The Italian Government has not, however, convincingly shown, in order to challenge, if necessary by obtaining its own technical report from an independent expert, the findings and conclusions contained in the technical opinion submitted by the Commission, that the difficulties arising from those technical interconnections could not have been surmounted if the works in question had been awarded to an undertaking other than the one already responsible for the works in progress, so that the contract had to be awarded to that undertaking.

28 It follows from the above that the Commission' s action is founded.

Costs

Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the Italian Republic has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

hereby:

1. Declares that, in so far as the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno awarded a private contract for the eleventh and twelfth supplementary reports for the completion of the section of rapid transit highway "Ascoli-Mare" entitled "Stage IV ° Project 5134" and failed to publish a notice of invitation to tender in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts;

Judgment of the Court of 11 August 1995
Commission of the European Communities v Federal Republic of Germany.
Actions against Member States for failure to fulfil obligations - Public works and public supply contracts.
Case C-433/93.

++++

1. Actions against Member States for failure to fulfil obligations ° Examination by the Court as to whether an action is well founded ° Situation to be taken into consideration ° Situation at the expiry of the period set by the reasoned opinion

(EC Treaty, Art. 169)

2. Acts of the institutions ° Directives ° Implementation by Member States ° Transposition of a directive without legislative action ° Conditions ° Existence of a general legal context guaranteeing full application of the directive ° Inadequacy of administrative rules

(EC Treaty, Art. 189, third para.)

3. Acts of the institutions ° Directives ° Right of persons affected to rely on directives in the absence of adequate implementing measures ° Effect not releasing Member States from their obligation to implement directives

(EC Treaty, Art. 189, third para.)

1. In an action brought under Article 169 of the Treaty for a declaration that a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations by not ensuring the correct transposition of a directive, amendments made to national legislation are irrelevant for the purpose of giving judgment on the subject-matter of the action if they have not been implemented before the expiry of the period set by the reasoned opinion.

2. The transposition of a directive into domestic law does not necessarily require that its provisions be incorporated formally and verbatim in express, specific legislation, and a general legal context may, depending on the content of the directive, be adequate for the purpose, provided that it does indeed guarantee the full application of the directive in a sufficiently clear and precise manner so that, where the directive is intended to create rights for individuals, the persons concerned can ascertain the full extent of their rights and, where appropriate, rely on them before national courts.

In the case of rules regarding participation and advertising in directives coordinating procedures for the award of public contracts, the protection which such rules are intended to confer on tenderers against arbitrariness on the part of a contract-awarding authority cannot be effective if a tenderer is not able to rely on those rules as against a contract awarder and, if necessary, to plead their breach before national courts.

Provisions of national law applied as administrative rules, which do not confer any right on individuals capable of being relied on before national courts, do not, for that reason, guarantee the full application of such directives.

3. The effect of the third paragraph of Article 189 of the Treaty is that Community directives must be implemented by appropriate implementing measures taken by the Member States. Only in specific circumstances, in particular where a Member State has failed to take the implementing measures required or has adopted measures which do not conform to a directive, has the Court recognized the right of persons affected thereby to rely in law on a directive as against a defaulting Member State. This minimum guarantee, arising from the binding nature of the obligation imposed on the

1 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of Justice on 3 November 1993, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EC Treaty for a declaration that, by failing to adopt or notify within the prescribed period all the measures necessary to comply with the requirements arising under Council Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988 amending Directive 77/62/EEC relating to the coordination of procedures on the award of public supply contracts and repealing certain provisions of Directive 80/767/EEC (OJ 1988 L 127, p. 1) (hereafter "Directive 88/295") and under Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989 amending Directive 71/305/EEC concerning coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 210, p. 1) (hereafter "Directive 89/440"), the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under the EEC Treaty, now the EC Treaty.

2 Under Article 20 of Directive 88/295 Member States were required to adopt the measures necessary to comply with the directive by 1 January 1989 and forthwith to inform the Commission thereof. Likewise, Article 3 of Directive 89/440 required Member States to transpose that directive into national law no later than one year after its notification, that was to say, by 19 July 1990, and forthwith to inform the Commission thereof.

3 For the purpose of transposing Directive 88/295 in the Federal Republic of Germany, "a" paragraphs were added to the Verdingungsordnung fuer Leistungen ° ausgenommen Bauleistungen ° Teil A (Contracting Rules for the Award of Supply Contracts, with the Exception of Building Contracts, Part A) (hereafter "VOL/A"). The altered text was published under the title "Neufassung der VOL/A, Ausgabe 1990" in the Bundesanzeiger (Federal Gazette) No 45A of 6 March 1990.

4 The provisions of Directive 89/440 were incorporated in the form of "a" paragraphs in the Verdingungsordnung fuer Bauleistungen, Teil A (Contracting Rules for the Award of Building Contracts, Part A) (hereafter "VOB/A"). The text of the VOB/A was published in the Bundesanzeiger No 132 of 19 July 1990.

5 In its two letters of formal notice of 27 February 1992, the Commission contended that Directives 88/295 and 89/440 had not been transposed in accordance with the relevant requirements of Community law. Where a directive was intended to confer subjective rights on individuals, its transposition required the adoption of binding legal provisions enabling the intended beneficiaries to be aware of the full scope of their rights and, if necessary, to rely on those rights before national courts. Transposing a directive by mere administrative practice, which could be altered at any moment, was therefore inadequate.

6 According to the Commission, the Verdingungsordnungen were negotiated by German committees on placing of contracts by tender. These committees, consisting of representatives of local authorities, as well as trade representatives and trade-union representatives, were purely private bodies that did not form part of the public administration. The Verdingungsordnungen were therefore no more than purely private procedural rules which were not binding on contract-awarding authorities. Even assuming that those rules took the form of administrative provisions which heads of administration declared to be applicable to those working under them, they would not amount to legal rules and would not give rise to any subjective rights for individuals outside administrative departments, whereas the directives in question were designed to protect tenderers against arbitrary conduct on the part of the contract-awarding authorities.

7 By letter of 2 July 1992, the German Government forwarded to the Commission the draft legislation intended to amend the Haushaltsgrundsaetzegesetz (Law on the Principles of Budgetary Law) (hereafter "the Budgetary Law") in order to provide a legal basis for the adoption of a regulation relating to provisions governing the award of contracts applicable to public contracts, in which the Verdingungsordnungen were to be incorporated (hereafter referred to as "the budgetary solution").

8 On 3 December 1992, the Commission sent to the Federal Republic of Germany two reasoned opinions setting out once again the arguments contained in the letters of formal notice. The Commission also stated that even if, as the German Government envisaged in the budgetary solution, the Verdingungsordnungen were to become regulatory, the draft legislation would not create subjective rights for tenderers, since the German Government took the view that neither Directive 88/295, Directive 89/440, nor the abovementioned draft legislation was intended to confer any such rights on individuals.

9 By letter of 11 March 1993, the German Government forwarded to the Commission a slightly modified version of the draft legislation amending the Budgetary Law.

10 Since it took the view that transposition of Directives 88/295 and 89/440 by the Verdingungsordnungen did not, even under the budgetary solution, meet the requirements of Community case-law, the Commission instituted the present proceedings.

11 The Zweites Gesetz zur AEnderung des Haushaltsgrundsaetzegesetzes (Second Law amending the Law on the Principles of Budgetary Law), Bundesgesetzblatt 1993, Part I, p. 1928, was adopted on 26 November 1993 and entered into force on 1 January 1994. On this basis the German Government, on 26 January 1994, adopted the Verordnung ueber die Vergabebestimmungen fuer oeffentliche Auftraege ° Vergabeverordnung (Regulation on Provisions for the Award of Public Contracts), Bundesgesetzblatt 1994, Part I, p. 321 (hereafter "the VGV") and the Nachpruefungsverordnung (Regulation on Control Procedures), Bundesgesetzblatt 1994, Part I, p. 324. The German Government takes the view that, by this latter regulation, it has transposed Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33) (hereafter "Directive 89/665"). The Commission was notified of the adoption of those regulations on 7 February 1994.

12 Under Articles 1 and 2 of the VGV, the contract-awarding authorities referred to in Paragraph 57a(1)(1) to (3) of the Budgetary Law are required, when awarding public supply and public works contracts, to apply the rules on the award of public contracts, that is to say the VOL/A, as amended on 3 August 1993 (Bundesanzeiger No 175a of 17 September 1993), and the VOB/A, as amended on 12 November 1992 (Bundesanzeiger No 223a of 27 November 1992).

The subject-matter of the proceedings

13 In their pleadings, the parties dealt essentially with the question whether the measures envisaged and subsequently adopted by the German Government for the purpose of giving effect to the "budgetary solution" properly transposed Directives 88/295 and 89/440 into national law.

14 At the hearing, however, the Commission pointed out that, in the forms of order set out in its application, it was only seeking a declaration that the Federal Republic of Germany had failed to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty in so far as on 3 February 1993, the date on which the period set in the reasoned opinions expired, it had still not correctly transposed Directives 88/295 and 89/440.

15 According to settled case-law (see the judgment in Case C-80/92 Commission v Belgium [1994] ECR I-1019, paragraph 19), amendments made to national legislation are irrelevant for the purpose of giving judgment on the subject-matter of an action for failure to fulfil obligations if they have not been implemented before the expiry of the period set by the reasoned opinion.

16 Consequently, it will be sufficient in these proceedings to examine whether on 3 February 1993 the transposition of Directives 88/295 and 89/440 into the "a" paragraphs of, respectively, the VOL/A, published under the title "Neufassung der VOL/A, Ausgabe 1990" in Bundesanzeiger No 45A of 6 March 1990, and the VOB/A, published in Bundesanzeiger No 132 of 19 July 1990, satisfies the requirements of Community law, and it will be unnecessary to consider the "budgetary solution".

The question whether the action is well founded

17 According to the German Government, the domestic law in force prior to 3 February 1993 already allowed Directives 88/295 and 89/440 to be correctly applied. At federal level and at Land and commune level, contract-awarding authorities were bound to act in compliance with the Verdingungsordnungen as administrative directions.

18 It should first be pointed out that the Court has consistently held (see, in particular, the judgment in Case C-361/88 Commission v Germany [1991] ECR I-2567, paragraph 15) that the transposition of a directive into domestic law does not necessarily require that its provisions be incorporated formally and verbatim in express, specific legislation, and that a general legal context may, depending on the content of the directive, be adequate for the purpose, provided that it does indeed guarantee the full application of the directive in a sufficiently clear and precise manner so that, where the directive is intended to create rights for individuals, the persons concerned can ascertain the full extent of their rights and, where appropriate, rely on them before the national courts.

19 Next, it should be noted that the rules regarding participation and advertising in directives coordinating procedures for the award of public contracts are intended to protect tenderers against arbitrariness on the part of the contract-awarding authority (see the judgment in Case 31/87 Beentjes v Netherlands [1988] ECR 4635, paragraph 42). Such protection cannot be effective if a tenderer is not able to rely on those rules as against the contract awarder and, if necessary, to plead a breach of those rules before national courts.

20 The German Government does not deny that, at the expiry of the period set in the reasoned opinions, the Verdingungsordnungen, which were applied only as administrative rules, did not confer any right on individuals which could be relied on before national courts.

21 The German Government submits here that it was only with the adoption of Directive 89/665 that rules were established to govern the procedure to be followed in actions brought against breaches of Directives 88/295 and 89/440. In any event, according to the German Government, it follows from the case-law on the direct effect of directives that it is open to individuals to rely on them before national courts as against public authorities where the latter have infringed the rules on tendering contained in those directives.

22 The argument based on Directive 89/665 is irrelevant. The German Government has itself acknowledged that the directive was completely transposed into national law only by the abovementioned Nachpruefungsverordnung adopted on 26 January 1994 pursuant to the Budgetary Law.

23 In any event, the adoption of Directive 89/665 has no bearing on the transposition of Directives 88/295 and 89/440. As is clear from the first and second recitals in the preamble to Directive 89/665, this directive is confined to reinforcing existing arrangements at both national and Community levels for ensuring effective application of Community directives on the award of public contracts, in particular at the stage where infringements can still be rectified.

24 Nor can the argument based on the direct effect of Directives 88/295 and 89/440 be accepted. The effect of the third paragraph of Article 189 is that Community directives must be implemented by appropriate implementing measures taken by the Member States. Only in specific circumstances, in particular where a Member State has failed to take the implementing measures required or has adopted measures which do not conform to a directive, has the Court recognized the right of persons affected thereby to rely in law on a directive as against a defaulting Member State. This minimum guarantee, arising from the binding nature of the obligation imposed on the Member States by the effect of the directives under the third paragraph of Article 189, cannot justify a Member State' s absolving itself from taking in due time implementing measures sufficient to meet the purpose of each directive (see, in particular, the judgment in Case 102/79 Commission v Belgium [1980] ECR 1473, paragraph 12).

25 Since the German Government did not properly transpose Directives 88/295 and 89/440 within the period prescribed, the Commission' s claim for a declaration that there has been a failure to fulfil obligations in this regard must be upheld.

26 It must accordingly be held that, by failing to adopt within the prescribed period the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with the requirements arising under Directives 88/295 and 89/440, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under the EC Treaty.

Costs

27 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party' s pleadings. Since the Federal Republic of Germany has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

hereby:

1. Declares that, by failing to adopt within the prescribed period the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with the requirements arising under Council Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988 amending Directive 77/62/EEC relating to the coordination of procedures on the award of public supply contracts and repealing certain provisions of Directive 80/767/EEC and under Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989 amending Directive 71/305/EEC concerning coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under the EC Treaty;

2. Orders the Federal Republic of Germany to pay the costs.

Judgment of the Court
of 26 March 1996
The Queen v H. M. Treasury, ex parte British Telecommunications plc.

Reference for a preliminary ruling - Interpretation of Directive 90/531/EEC - Telecommunications - Transposition into national law - Obligation to pay compensation in the event of incorrect implementation.
Case C-392/93.

++++

1. Approximation of laws ° Procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors ° Directive 90/531 ° Determination of the telecommunications services excluded from its scope ° Power vested in the contracting entities ° Incorrect transposition by a Member State ° Obligation of the State to pay compensation for damage suffered by a contracting entity ° None

(Council Directive 90/531, Art. 8(1))

2. Approximation of laws ° Procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors ° Directive 90/531 ° Scope ° Exclusion of contracts concluded by entities offering their services under competitive conditions ° Verification as a matter of fact and of law ° Criteria

(Council Directive 90/531, Art. 8(1))

3. Community law ° Breach by a Member State ° Implementation of a directive ° Obligation to pay compensation for damage caused to individuals ° Conditions

1. It is not open to a Member State, when transposing into national law Directive 90/531 on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, to determine which telecommunications services are to be excluded from its scope in implementation of Article 8(1), since that power is vested in the contracting entities themselves.

However, where a Member State has itself determined, in transposing that directive into national law, which services of a contracting entity are to be excluded in implementation of Article 8, it is not obliged under Community law to pay that entity compensation for damage suffered by it as a result of the error thus committed.

In the present case, the conditions which must be fulfilled in order for a Member State to incur liability to compensate individuals for damage caused to them as a result of a breach of Community law committed by it in the exercise of legislative functions in which it has a discretion, such as the transposition of a directive, are not wholly met. There has not been a sufficiently serious breach of Community law, since Article 8(1), which has been incorrectly transposed, is imprecisely worded and the interpretation given to it in good faith by the Member State in question, albeit erroneous, was not manifestly contrary to the wording of the directive or to the objective pursued by it.

2. In the light of its wording and purpose, the criterion which Article 8(1) of Directive 90/531 on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors lays down in order to exclude from the scope of the directive certain contracts awarded by entities providing services in the fields in question, namely that "other entities are free to offer the same services in the same geographical area and under substantially the same conditions", is to be verified as a matter of law and of fact, having regard in particular to all the characteristics of the services concerned, the existence of alternative services, price factors, the dominance or otherwise of the contracting entity' s position on the market and any legal constraints.

3. In the case of a breach of Community law for which a Member State, acting in a field in which it has a wide discretion in taking legislative decisions, can be held responsible, Community law confers on injured parties a right to reparation where three conditions are met: the rule of law infringed must be intended to confer rights on individuals; the breach must be sufficiently serious; and there must be a direct causal link between the breach of the obligation resting on the State and the damage sustained by the injured parties.

Those conditions are applicable to the situation in which a Member State incorrectly transposes a Community directive into national law. A restrictive approach to State liability is justified in such a situation, for the reasons already given to justify the strict approach to non-contractual liability of Community institutions or Member States when exercising legislative functions in areas covered by Community law where the institution or State has a wide discretion ° in particular, the concern to ensure that the exercise of those legislative functions is not hindered by the prospect of actions for damages whenever the general interest requires the institutions or Member States to adopt measures which may adversely affect individual interests.

after hearing the oral observations of British Telecommunications plc, represented by G. Barling QC, T. Sharpe and H. Davies, the United Kingdom, represented b y J. Collins, K.P.E. Lasok QC and S. Richards, Barrister, the German Government, represented by E. Roeder, Ministerialrat in the Federal Ministry of Economic Affairs, acting as Agent, the Italian Government, represented by I. Braguglia, Avvocato dello Stato, and the Commission, represented by H. van Lier and D. McIntyre, at the hearing on 26 October 1994, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 28 November 1995,

gives the following

Judgment

Costs

47 The costs incurred by the French, German and Italian Governments and the Commission of the European Communities, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT,

in answer to the questions referred to it by the High Court of Justice, Queen' s Bench Division, Divisional Court, by order of 28 July 1993, hereby rules:

1. It is not open to a Member State, when transposing into national law Council Directive 90/531/EEC of 17 September 1990 on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, to determine which telecommunications services are to be excluded from its scope in implementation of Article 8(1), since that power is vested in the contracting entities themselves.

2. The criterion laid down by Article 8(1) of Directive 90/531, namely that "other entities are free to offer the same services in the same geographical area and under substantially the same conditions", is to be verified as a matter of law and of fact, having regard in particular to all the characteristics of the services concerned, the existence of alternative services, price factors, the dominance or otherwise of the contracting entity' s position on the market and any legal constraints.

3. Community law does not require a Member State which, in transposing Directive 90/531 into national law, has itself determined which services of a contracting entity are to be excluded from its scope in implementation of Article 8, to compensate that entity for any loss suffered by it as a result of the error committed by the State.

1 By order of 28 July 1993, received at the Court on 23 August 1993, the High Co urt of Justice, Queen' s Bench Division, Divisional Court ("the Divisional Court"), referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EEC Treaty four questions on the interpretation of Article 8(1) of Council Directive 90/531/EEC of 17 September 1990 on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 19 90 L 297, p. 1, "the directive").

2 Those questions arose in proceedings brought by British Telecommunications plc ("BT") against the Government of the United Kingdom for annulment of Sched ule 2 to the Utilities Supply and Works Contracts Regulations 1992 ("the 1992 Regulations"), implementing Article 8(1) of the directive.

3 Article 2(2)(d) of the directive provides that relevant activities for the purposes of the directive are to include, in particular, "the provision or operation of public telecommunications networks or the provision of one or more public telecommunications services".

4 According to Article 2(1)(b), the directive is to apply to contracting entities which, "when they are not public authorities or public undertakings, have as one of their activities any of those referred to in paragraph 2 or any combination thereof and operate on the basis of special or exclusive rights granted by a competent authority of a Member State". Article 2(3)(a) further provides that, for the purpose of applying Article 2(1)(b), a contracting entity is to be considered to enjoy special or exclusive rights in particular where, "for the purpose of constructing the networks or facilities referred to in paragraph 2, it may take advantage of a procedure for the expropriation or use of property or may place network equipment on, under or over the public highway".

5 According to Article 2(6), "the contracting entities listed in Annexes I to X shall fulfil the criteria set out above". Annex X, which specifically concerns the "Operation of telecommunications networks or provision of telecommunications services", refers in particular, as regards the United Kingdom, to BT, Mercury Communications Ltd ("Mercury") and the City of Kingston upon Hull ("Hull").

6 Article 8 of the directive provides as follows:

> "1. This directive shall not apply to contracts which contracting entities ... aw ard for purchases intended exclusively to enable them to provide one or more telecommunications services where other entities are free to offer the same services in the same geographical area and under substantially the same conditions.

2. The contracting entities shall notify the Commission at its request of any services they regard as covered by the exclusion referred to in paragraph 1. The Commission may periodically publish the list of services which it considers to be covered by this exclusion, for information, in the Official Journal of the European Communities. In so doing, the Commission shall respect any sensitive commercial aspects the contracting entities may point out when forwarding this information."

7 Lastly, Article 33(1) provides:

> "1. Contracting entities shall keep appropriate information on each contract which shall be sufficient to permit them at a later date to justify decisions taken in connection with:

...

(d) non-application of Titles II, III and IV in accordance with the derogations provided for in Title I."

8 In the United Kingdom, Article 8(1) of the directive has been transposed into national law by Regulation 7(1) of the 1992 Regulations, which provides as follo ws:

> "These Regulations shall not apply to the seeking of offers in relation to a contract by a utility specified in Schedule 2 for the exclusive purpose of enabling it to provide one or more of the public telecommunications services specified in the Part of Schedule 2 in which the utility is specified."

9 Part B of Schedule 2 is set out thus:

> "British Telecommunications plc.

Kingston Communications (Hull) plc.2. All public telecommunications services, other than the following services when they are provided within the geographical area for which the provider is licensed as a public telecommunications operator: basic voice telephony services, basic data transmission services, the provision of private leased circuits and maritime services".

10 Regulation 7(2) further provides:

> "A utility specified in Schedule 2 when requested shall send a report to the Minister for onward transmission to the Commission describing the public telecommunications services provided by it which it considers are services specified in the Part of Schedule 2 in which the utility is specified."

11 BT is a joint stock limited liability company set up on 1 April 1984 under the British Telecommunications Act 1984 ("the 1984 Act"), which transferred to it t he property, together with all rights and obligations, of the former public corporation also known as British Telecommunications, itself the successor, pursuant to the British Telecommunications Act 1981, to the Post Office, which had previously held an exclusive monopoly in the running of telecommunications systems throughout almost the entire national territory.

12 In the field of fixed-link telecommunications services (including fixed-terminal vo ice telephony), the Government granted the necessary licences under the 1984 Act to BT and Mercury. In order to ensure greater competition, the 1984 Act required interconnection of the two networks. BT and Mercury thereby acquired the exclusive right to operate fixed-link telecommunications services until 1990 (the "duopoly" period).

13 The duopoly policy was abandoned in that sector in the early 1990s. Numerous licences were issued by the Government. However, in 1992 BT still controlled 9 0% of telephone business, with Mercury controlling 7% and the new operators o nly 3%. Between 1984 and July 1993 the Government gradually sold off its remaining shareholding in BT.

14 The licence granted to BT for 25 years imposes an obligation to provide voice telephony services throughout the United Kingdom, subject to certain exceptions , to anyone who asks for them, even where demand is insufficient to cover the c osts of providing them (the "universal service obligation"). BT is the only licens ee which is subject to regulation in respect of tariff changes (the "price cap").

15 In transposing Article 8 of the directive into national law, the 1992 Regulations exclude almost all of the operators in the sector concerned, including Mercury, from the obligation to comply therewith as regards contracts for the supply of telecommunications services. Only BT (and Hull, in the area for which it holds a licence) remains subject to the provisions of the directive, albeit solely as regard s basic voice-telephony services, basic data-transmission services, the provision of private leased circuits and maritime services.

16 In its action before the Divisional Court, BT seeks annulment of Schedule 2 to t he 1992 Regulations on the ground that Regulation 7(1) and Schedule 2 implem ent Article 8 of the directive incorrectly. BT claims that the Government should have transposed the criteria laid down in Article 8(1) of the directive rather than proceeded to apply them. By determining, in respect of each contracting entity, which of the services provided meet those criteria, the Government is alleged to have deprived BT of the power conferred on it by the directive to make its own decisions.

17 BT further claims damages for the loss it claims to have suffered as a result of incorrect implementation of the directive, namely the additional expense borne by it in complying with the 1992 Regulations. Furthermore, those regulations have allegedly prevented it from concluding profitable transactions and placed it at a commercial and competitive disadvantage, by subjecting it to the requirement, from which the other operators in the sector are exempt, to publish its procurement plans and contracts in the Official Journal.

18 The Divisional Court has decided to stay the proceedings brought by BT and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

"1. On the proper interpretation of Council Directive 90/531, does it fall within the discretion accorded to a Member State by Article 189 of the Treaty, when implementing Article 8(1) of the directive, itself to identify the telecommunication services provided by each contracting entity in respect of which the exclusion in that article does or does not apply?

2. (a) Do the words 'where other entities are free to offer the same services in the same geographical area and under substantially the same conditions' in Article 8(1) refer only to 'freedom' and to 'conditions' of a legal or regulatory nature?

(b) If the answer to Question 2(a) is in the negative:

(i) what other matters do the words refer to; and

(ii) is a contracting entity' s position in the market for a particular telecommunications service relevant to those matters; and

(iii) if its position is relevant, how is it relevant and, in particular, i n what circumstances may it be conclusive?

(c) Are the answers to questions (ii) and (iii) in subparagraph (b) abov e affected by the fact that the entity is subject to regulatory constraints and, if so, in what respects are they affected?

3. If the answer to Question 1 is in the affirmative:

(a) in the event of a dispute between a contracting entity and the national authorities charged with the implementation of Article 8(1), how is the national court seised with the dispute to ensure that the criteria for the application of the exclusion in Article 8(1) are properly applied and, in particular, must it substitute its own assessment of the application of the exclusion in Article 8(1) for that made by the national authorities charged with the implementation of Article 8(1);

(b) if the national court finds that the definitions of certain telecommunications services, adopted by the national authorities charged with the implementation of Article 8(1) in order to determine whether or not a particular service is or is not covered by the exclusion, are such that it is impossible for the contracting entity to ascertain whether a particular service is or is not so covered, has Directive 90/531 or any general principle of Community law, in particular the requirement of legal certainty, been infringed;

(c) in defining certain telecommunications services is a Member State entitled to adopt definitions based upon descriptions of the technica l means by which a service is provided rather than a description of the service itself?

4. If a Member State has erred in its implementation of Article 8(1) of Cou ncil Directive 90/531, is that Member State liable as a matter of Community law to compensate a contracting entity in damages for loss which it has suffered as a result of that error and, if so, under what conditions does su ch liability arise?"

Question 1

19 By its first question, the Divisional Court seeks in essence to ascertain whether a Member State may, when transposing the directive into national law, determine which telecommunications services are to be excluded from its scope pursuant to Article 8(1), or whether that determination is a matter for the contracting entities themselves.

20 The French, German and Italian Governments and the United Kingdom consider that the directive does not preclude the Member States from determining which of the telecommunications services provided by each contracting entity are covered by the exemption laid down in Article 8(1). In so doing, the Member States specify the content of that provision and permit the exercise of judicial review, which would not otherwise be possible.

21 In addition, the German Government and the United Kingdom consider that it may be particularly necessary to implement Article 8(1) in that way where, as in the present case, there is disagreement between a Member State and a contracting entity as to the scope of the exclusion. The German Government adds that the Member States are in a much better position than the Commission to assess whether competition exists in the telecommunications market as regards a specific service and, consequently, that the determination by those States of the matters covered by Article 8(1) will permit the exercise of more effective control than that exercised by the Commission on the basis of information obtained pursuant to Article 8(2).

22 Lastly, the German Government observes that Articles 8(2) and 33(1)(d) do not support the conclusion that it is for the contracting entities alone to determine which services are to be regarded as excluded. The fact that those provisions require such entities to notify the Commission of services which are excluded, an d to keep appropriate information on each contract to enable them at a later da te to justify non-application of Titles II, III and IV of the directive, does not mean that the Member States cannot be regarded as empowered themselves to determine the scope of the exception laid down in Article 8(1).

23 Those arguments cannot be accepted.

24 Article 8(2) of the directive, like Articles 6(3) and 7(2), provides that contracting entities are to notify the Commission at its request of any services which they regard as excluded under the aforementioned articles. If it were for the Member States to determine the services in question, they would also be obliged to notify the Commission of the services so excluded from the scope of the directive, in order to enable the Commission to accomplish the task assigned to it by those provisions.

25 Since the directive does not impose any such obligation on the Member States, as it does in Article 3(4), it is for the contracting entities alone to determine the services excluded pursuant to Article 8(1).

26 That interpretation is confirmed by the objective of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14), namely to provide adequate legal protection for suppliers or contractors in the event of infringement of Community legislation on public procurement (see, in that regard, the fifth recital in the preamble to Directive 92/13).

27 If the decision to exclude certain services from the scope of the directive were left to the Member States, economic operators would be denied recourse to the legal remedies afforded by Directive 92/13 in the event of infringement by contracting entities of the Community rules on public procurement, in particular the right to claim damages and to apply for injunctive relief, as provided for by Article 2(1), with a view to prevention or termination of any infringement.

28 Lastly, that interpretation makes it possible to ensure equality of treatment between contracting entities and their suppliers, who thereby remain subject to the same rules.

29 The answer to Question 1 must therefore be that it is not open to a Member State, when transposing the directive into national law, to determine which telecommunications services are to be excluded from its scope in implementation of Article 8(1), since that power is vested in the contracting entities themselves.

Question 2

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

30 By its second question, the Divisional Court asks whether the criterion laid down by Article 8(1), namely that "other entities are free to offer the same services in the same geographical area and under substantially the same conditions", is to be verified only as a matter of law or also as a matter of fact. In the latter case, the national court wishes to know which matters are to be taken into account for the purposes of assessing whether, as regards a particular service, real competition exists in the telecommunications market.

31 BT maintains that the criterion laid down in Article 8(1) is fulfilled where there are legal or regulatory provisions guaranteeing, in law, freedom of competition in the sector concerned, so obviating any need to examine whether such competition exists in practice.

32 That interpretation runs counter to the wording and purpose of Article 8(1). The criterion that other contracting entities must be able to offer the same services under substantially the same conditions is couched in general terms in Article 8(1). Moreover, the 13th recital in the preamble states that, to fall outside the scope of the directive, activities of contracting entities must be "directly exposed to competitive forces in markets to which entry is unrestricted".

33 Consequently, the criterion laid down by Article 8(1) is to be interpreted as meaning that other contracting entities must not only be authorized to operate in the market for the services in question, without any legal barrier to entry thereto, but must also be in a position actually to provide the services in question under the same conditions as the contracting entity.

34 In those circumstances, a decision to exclude certain services from the scope of the directive must be taken on an individual basis, having regard in particular to all their characteristics, the existence of alternative services, price factors, the dominance or otherwise of the contracting entity' s position on the market and the existence of any legal constraints.

35 The answer to Question 2 must therefore be that the criterion laid down by Article 8(1) of the directive, namely that "other entities are free to offer the same services in the same geographical area and under substantially the same conditions", is to be verified as a matter of law and of fact, having regard in particular to all the characteristics of the services concerned, the existence of alternative services, price factors, the dominance or otherwise of the contracting entity' s position on the market and any legal constraints.

Question 3

36 In the light of the answer to Question 1, there is no need to reply to Question 3.

Question 4

37 By its fourth question, the Divisional Court seeks to ascertain whether a Member State which, in transposing the directive into national law, has itself determined which services of a contracting entity are to be excluded from its scope pursuant to Article 8, is required by Community law to compensate that undertaking for any loss suffered by it as a result of the error committed by the State.

38 It should be recalled, as a preliminary point, that the principle of State liability for loss and damage caused to individuals as a result of breaches of Community law for which the State can be held responsible is inherent in the system of the Treaty (judgments in Joined Cases C-6/90 and C-9/90 Francovich and Others [1991] ECR I-5357, paragraph 35, and in Joined Cases C-46/93 and C-48/93 Brasserie du Pêcheur and Factortame [1996] ECR I-0000, paragraph 31). It follows that that principle holds good for any case in which a Member State breaches Community law (judgment in Brasserie du Pêcheur and Factortame, cited above, paragraph 32).

39 In the latter judgment the Court also ruled, with regard to a breach of Community law for which a Member State, acting in a field in which it has a wide discretion in taking legislative decisions, can be held responsible, that Community law confers a right to reparation where three conditions are met: the rule of law infringed must be intended to confer rights on individuals; the breach must be sufficiently serious; and there must be a direct causal link between the breach of the obligation resting on the State and the damage sustained by the injured parties (paragraphs 50 and 51).

40 Those same conditions must be applicable to the situation, taken as its hypothesis by the national court, in which a Member State incorrectly transposes a Community directive into national law. A restrictive approach to State liability is justified in such a situation, for the reasons already given by the Court to justify the strict approach to non-contractual liability of Community institutions or Member States when exercising legislative functions in areas covered by Community law where the institution or State has a wide discretion ° in particular, the concern to ensure that the exercise of legislative functions is not hindered by the prospect of actions for damages whenever the general interest requires the institutions or Member States to adopt measures which may adversely affect individual interests (see, in particular, the judgments in Joined Cases 83/76, 94/76, 4/77, 15/77 and 40/77 HNL and Others v Council and Commission [1978] ECR 1209, paragraphs 5 and 6, and in Brasserie du Pêcheur and Factortame, paragraph 45).

41 Whilst it is in principle for the national courts to verify whether or not the conditions governing State liability for a breach of Community law are fulfilled, in the present case the Court has all the necessary information to assess whether the facts amount to a sufficiently serious breach of Community law.

42 According to the case-law of the Court, a breach is sufficiently serious where, in the exercise of its legislative powers, an institution or a Member State has manifestly and gravely disregarded the limits on the exercise of its powers (judgments in HNL and Others v Council and Commission, cited above, paragraph 6, and in Brasserie du Pêcheur and Factortame, paragraph 55). Factors which the competent court may take into consideration include the clarity and precision of the rule breached (judgment in Brasserie du Pêcheur and Factortame, paragraph 56).

43 In the present case, Article 8(1) is imprecisely worded and was reasonably capable of bearing, as well as the construction applied to it by the Court in this judgment, the interpretation given to it by the United Kingdom in good faith and on the basis of arguments which are not entirely devoid of substance (see paragraphs 20 to 22 above). That interpretation, which was also shared by other Member States, was not manifestly contrary to the wording of the directive or to the objective pursued by it.

44 Moreover, no guidance was available to the United Kingdom from case-law of the Court as to the interpretation of the provision at issue, nor did the Commission raise the matter when the 1992 Regulations were adopted.

45 In those circumstances, the fact that a Member State, when transposing the directive into national law, thought it necessary itself to determine which services were to be excluded from its scope in implementation of Article 8, albeit in breach of that provision, cannot be regarded as a sufficiently serious breach of Community law of the kind intended by the Court in its judgment in Brasserie du Pêcheur and Factortame.

46 The answer to Question 4 must therefore be that Community law does not require a Member State which, in transposing the directive into national law, has itself determined which services of a contracting entity are to be excluded from its scope in implementation of Article 8, to compensate that entity for any loss suffered by it as a result of the error committed by the State.

Judgment of the Court of 24 January 1995 Commission of the European Communities v Kingdom of the Netherlands. Tender notices for public supply contracts - Review procedure - Notification - Technical specifications. Case C-359/93.

1. Approximation of laws ° Review procedures in respect of the award of public supply and public works contracts ° Directive 89/665 ° Procedure enabling the Commission to take preventative action where there has been a clear and manifest infringement of Community provisions in the field of public procurement ° Procedure unrelated to actions against Member States for failure to fulfil obligations under Article 169 of the Treaty

(Art. 169, EC Treaty; Council Directive 89/665)

2. Approximation of laws ° Procedures for the award of public supply contracts ° Directive 77/62 ° Information which must be given in tender notices ° Information concerning the opening of tenders ° Use of technical specifications defined by reference to a trade mark ° Condition

(Art. 30, EC Treaty; Council Directive 77/62)

1. The procedure under Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, which enables the Commission, where it considers that a clear and manifest infringement of Community provisions in the field of public procurement has been committed, to take up the matter with a Member State, constitutes a preventative measure which can neither derogate from nor replace the powers of the Commission under Article 169 of the Treaty, so that the way in which the Commission used that procedure is irrelevant in assessing the admissibility of an action against a Member State for failure to fulfil obligations brought by the Commission on account of an infringement by the Member State concerned of Community provisions in the field of public procurement.

2. A Member State fails to fulfil its obligations under Directive 77/62 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts where it:

° fails to indicate in a tender notice the persons authorized to be present at the opening of tenders or the date, time and place of opening, when that information is compulsorily and unconditionally required by the directive in order to enable potential suppliers to discover the identity of their competitors and to check whether they meet the criteria laid down for qualitative selection;

° fails in such notice to add the words "or equivalent" after a technical specification defined by reference to a particular trade mark, when the directive requires them to be added and when failure to do so may impede the flow of imports in intra-Community trade, contrary to Article 30 of the Treaty.

APPLICATION for a declaration that the Kingdom of the Netherlands has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1), as amended by Council Directives 80/767/EEC (OJ 1980 L 215, p. 1) and 88/295/EEC (OJ 1988 L 127, p. 1), and also under Article 30 of the EEC Treaty, composed of: G.C. Rodríguez Iglesias, President, P.J.G. Kapteyn (President of Chamber), G.F. Mancini, C.N. Kakouris, J.L. Murray, D.A.O. Edward (Rapporteur) and G. Hirsch, Judges, Advocate General: G. Tesauro,

THE COURT,

Registrar: R Grass,

having regard to the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 17 November 1994,

gives the following

Judgment

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 16 July 1993, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the Treaty for a declaration that the Kingdom of the Netherlands had failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by Council Directives 80/767/EEC and 88/295/EEC, and also under Article 30 of the EEC Treaty.

2 According to Article 9(5) of Directive 77/62, as amended by Article 9 of Directive 88/295, notices of supply contracts "shall be drawn up in accordance with the models given in Annex III". It is clear from point 7 of part "A. Open procedures" of this Annex that contract notices must contain the following information:

"(a) the persons authorized to be present at the opening of tenders ..."

and

"(b) the date, time and place of this opening... ".

3 Under Article 7(6) of Directive 77/62, as amended by Article 8 of Directive 88/295, unless the technical specifications referred to in Annex II "are justified by the subject of the contract, Member States shall prohibit the introduction into the contractual clauses relating to a given contract of technical specifications which mention goods of a specific make or source or of a particular process and which have the effect of favouring or eliminating certain undertakings or products. In particular, the indication of trade marks, patents, types or specific origin or production shall be prohibited; however, such an indication accompanied by the words 'or equivalent' shall be authorized where the subject of the contract cannot otherwise be described by specifications which are sufficiently precise and fully intelligible to all concerned."

4 Article 3 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts provides as follows:

"(1) The Commission may invoke the procedure for which this article provides when, prior to

a contract being concluded, it considers that a clear and manifest infringement of Community provisions in the field of public procurement has been committed during a contract award procedure falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC and 77/62/EEC.

(2) The Commission shall notify the Member State and the contracting authority concerned of the reasons which have led it to conclude that a clear and manifest infringement has been committed and request its correction.

(3) Within 21 days of receipt of the notification referred to in paragraph 2, the Member State concerned shall communicate to the Commission:

(a) its confirmation that the infringement has been corrected; or

(b) a reasoned submission as to why no correction has been made; or

(c) a notice to the effect that the contract award procedure has been suspended either by the contracting authority on its own initiative or on the basis of the powers specified in Article 2(1)(a)."

5 On 10 December 1991 Nederlands Inkoopcentrum NV, the Netherlands contracting authority, published a tender notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities concerning the supply and maintenance of a meteorological station.

6 That tender notice, which was laid out like the model in Annex III to Directive 77/62, contained no reference to the persons authorized to be present at the opening of the tenders or to the date, time and place of opening.

7 Moreover, the contracting authority' s general terms and conditions stated that the operating system required was the "UNIX", which is the name of a software system developed by Bell Laboratories of ITT (USA) for connecting several computers of different makes.

8 Taking the view that those two points in the notice, namely the failure to publish the information provided for in point 7(a) and (b) of Annex III and the reference in the general terms and conditions to a specific product, were not in keeping with the requirements of Articles 9(5) and 7(6) of Directive 77/62, on Thursday 25 June 1992 the Commission sent a letter to the Permanent Representation of the Netherlands, in accordance with Article 3(1) and (2) of Directive 89/665. It drew the attention of the Netherlands Government to the fact that the letter constituted formal notice for the purposes of Article 169 of the Treaty and that the subsequent communication from the Netherlands Government would be treated as the observations provided for in that article.

9 The Commission' s letter was received on Friday 26 June by the Permanent Representation in Brussels, which forwarded it to the relevant ministry in the Netherlands where it was received on Monday 29 June. That same day, the Commission sent a copy of the letter by fax to the contracting authority, although the agreement awarding the contract had just been signed.

Admissibility

10 In the light of the foregoing, the Netherlands Government raised two objections of inadmissibility. First, the Commission' s conduct did not comply with the requirements of Article 3(1) and (2) of Directive 89/665/EEC, in so far as the Commission was out of time in informing the Member State and the contracting authority of the reasons which led it to conclude that an infringement of Directive 77/62 had been committed, and secondly, since the Commission itself referred to the technical specifications of the UNIX system in a contract notice published after the one at issue in these proceedings, it is not entitled to rely on the alleged infringement, which it has committed as well.

11 With regard to the objection based on the Commission' s conduct, Article 3(1) and (2) of Directive 89/665 provides that where, "prior to a contract being concluded", the Commission considers that a clear and manifest infringement of Community law has been committed during a contract award procedure falling within the scope of Directive 77/62, it is to notify the Member State and the contracting authority concerned of the reasons which have led it to conclude that such an infringement has been committed and request its correction.

12 It is clear from the letter and spirit of Directive 89/665 that it is very much to be preferred, in the interest of all the parties concerned, that the Commission should give notice of its objections to the Member State and the contracting authority as soon as possible before the contract is concluded, thereby giving the Member State and the contracting authority time to answer it, in accordance with Article 3(3) of Directive 89/665, and if necessary to correct the alleged infringement before the contract is awarded.

13 However, that special procedure under Directive 89/665 is a preliminary measure which can neither derogate from nor replace the powers of the Commission under Article 169 of the Treaty. That article gives the Commission discretionary power to bring an action before the Court where it considers that a Member State has failed to fulfil one of its obligations under the Treaty and that the State concerned has not complied with the Commission' s reasoned opinion.

14 Furthermore, a declaration that a State has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 169 does not depend on the existence of a clear and manifest infringement within the meaning of Directive 89/665. Such a declaration is confined to the finding that a Member State has not fulfilled an obligation under Community law and does not in any way prejudge the nature or seriousness of the infringement.

15 The first plea of inadmissibility raised by the Netherlands Government must therefore be rejected.

16 With regard to the objection that the action is inadmissible because the Commission itself referred to the same technical specification, that is to say the UNIX system, in a contract notice published after the one at issue in these proceedings, it should be noted that, even on the assumption that the Commission is subject to the rules laid down by Directive 77/62 and has infringed them, such an infringement cannot justify any which may have been committed by the Netherlands authorities.

17 Accordingly, the second plea of inadmissibility must also be rejected.

Substance

18 The Commission' s first allegation is that the contracting authority failed to indicate in the notice in question the persons authorized to be present at the opening of tenders or the date, time and place of opening, contrary to the requirements of Article 9(5) and point 7 of Annex III to Directive 77/62.

19 The Netherlands Government, which does not dispute the facts, maintains that the information in question is necessary only where the contracting authority intends to restrict the opportunity to attend the opening of tenders, but since opening in this case was public and any interested persons could attend, it was unnecessary to identify them.

20 The first point to note is that the information mentioned in point 7 of Annex III to Directive 77/62 is compulsorily and unconditionally required. As the Advocate General correctly observed at point 8 of his Opinion, that information enables potential suppliers to discover the identity of their competitors and to check whether they meet the criteria laid down for qualitative selection.

21 Furthermore, even when tenders are opened in public, and any interested person may therefore attend, there can be no real opportunity of doing so if the date, time and place are not published.

22 It follows that, by failing to publish the information referred to in point 7 of Annex III to Directive 77/62, the contracting authority has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article

9(5) of the directive.

23 The Commission' s second charge is that, by failing to add the words "or equivalent" after the term UNIX system, the contracting authority has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 7(6) of Directive 77/62 and Article 30 of the Treaty.

24 The Netherlands Government contends that the UNIX system must, in the field of information technology, be regarded as a technical specification generally recognized by traders and that, accordingly, it is unnecessary to add the words "or equivalent".

25 It should be borne in mind that Article 7(6) of Directive 77/62 prohibits the indication of trade marks unless it is accompanied by the words "or equivalent" since the subject-matter of the contract cannot otherwise be described by specifications which are sufficiently precise and fully intelligible to all concerned.

26 The parties agree, however, that the UNIX system is not standardized and that it is the name of a specific make of product.

27 Hence the fact that the term UNIX was not followed by the words "or equivalent" may not only deter economic operators using systems similar to UNIX from taking part in the tendering procedure, but may also impede the flow of imports in intra-Community trade, contrary to Article 30 of the Treaty, by reserving the contract exclusively to suppliers intending to use the system specifically indicated.

28 Accordingly, the contracting authority should have added the words "or equivalent" after the term UNIX, as required by Article 7(6) of Directive 77/62.

29 It follows from the foregoing that, by failing to indicate in the contract notice at issue the persons authorized to be present at the opening of the tenders and the date, time and place of opening, and by introducing into the general terms and conditions a technical specification defined by reference to a product of a specific make, the Kingdom of the Netherlands has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 77/62 and under Article 30 of the Treaty.

Costs

30 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the Kingdom of the Netherlands has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

hereby:

1. Declares that, by failing to indicate in the contract notice at issue the persons authorized to be present at the opening of tenders and the date, time and place of opening, and by introducing into the general terms and conditions a technical specification defined by reference to a product of a specific make, the Kingdom of the Netherlands has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by Council Directives 80/767/EEC and 88/295/EEC, and also under Article 30 of the Treaty;

2. Orders the Kingdom of the Netherlands to pay the costs.

Judgment of the Court
of 28 March 1995
The Queen v Secretary of State for Home Department, ex parte Evans Medical Ltd and Macfarlan Smith Ltd.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: High Court of Justice, Queen's Bench Division - United Kingdom.
Free movement of goods - Importation of a narcotic drug (diamorphine).
Case C-324/93.

1. Free movement of goods ° Quantitative restrictions ° Measures having equivalent effect ° Article 30 of the Treaty ° Scope ° Prohibition of the importation of narcotic drugs covered by the 1961 Single Convention and marketable under it ° Included ° Maintenance of the measure pursuant to Article 234 of the Treaty ° Irrelevant

(EEC Treaty, Arts 30 and 234)

2. Free movement of goods ° Quantitative restrictions ° Measures having equivalent effect ° Article 30 of the Treaty ° Direct effect ° Function of the national court in the light of obligations towards non-member countries resulting from agreements predating the EEC Treaty and irreconcilable with the obligations arising under Article 30 ° Application of the rule of precedence of Article 234

(EEC Treaty, Arts 30 and 234)

3. Free movement of goods ° Derogations ° Article 36 of the Treaty ° Scope ° Measure designed to ensure the survival of an undertaking ° Excluded ° Protection of public health ° Measure designed to guarantee, through a prohibition of imports, the reliability of supplies of narcotic drugs for medical purposes offered by recourse to national production ° Whether permissible ° Conditions

(EEC Treaty, Art. 36)

4. Approximation of laws ° Procedures for awarding public supply contracts ° Directive 77/62 ° Award of contracts ° Most economically advantageous tender ° Criteria ° Reliability of supplies ° Whether permissible ° Conditions

(Council Directive 77/62, Art. 25)

1. Article 30 of the Treaty applies to a national practice prohibiting importation of narcotic drugs covered by the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs and marketable under that convention.

In so far as they are goods taken across a frontier for the purposes of commercial transactions, such drugs are subject to Article 30, whatever the nature of those transactions. The fact that the prohibition of importation may result from an international agreement predating the Treaty or accession by a Member State and that the Member State maintains the measure pursuant to Article 234, despite the fact that it constitutes a barrier, does not remove it from the scope of Article 30, since Article 234 takes effect only if the agreement imposes on a Member State an obligation that is incompatible with the Treaty.

2. Article 30 of the Treaty is to be interpreted as requiring a Member State to ensure that this provision is fully effective by disapplying a national practice contrary to it unless that practice is necessary in order for the Member State concerned to comply with obligations towards non-member countries laid down in an agreement concluded prior to entry into force of the Treaty or to accession by that Member State.

In proceedings for a preliminary ruling, however, it is not for the Court of Justice but for the national court to determine which obligations are imposed by an earlier international agreement on the Member State concerned and to ascertain their ambit so as to be able to determine the extent to which they thwart application of Articles 30 and 36 of the Treaty. In that connection, when an international agreement allows, but does not require, a Member State to adopt a measure which appears to be contrary to Community law, the Member State must refrain from adopting such a measure.

3. A national practice of refusing licences for importation of drugs from another Member State is not covered by the derogation provided for in Article 36 of the Treaty if it is based on the need to safeguard an undertaking' s survival but that derogation may apply to it if protection of the health and life of humans requires a reliable supply of drugs for essential medical purposes to be safeguarded and that objective cannot be achieved as effectively by measures that are less restrictive of intra-Community trade than is an exclusive supply established in favour of national production.

4. Directive 77/62 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by Directive 88/295, is to be interpreted as authorizing the bodies covered by that directive which wish to obtain a narcotic drug for medical purposes, in this case diamorphine, to award the contract on the basis of the tendering undertakings' ability to provide reliable and continuous supplies to the Member State concerned.

Provided that it is clearly indicated as a criterion for the award of a contract, reliability of supplies is one of the criteria which may be taken into account under Article 25 of the directive in order to determine the most economically advantageous tender for a contract for the supply, to the authorities concerned, of the product in question.

Judgment

Costs

51 The costs incurred by the United Kingdom, the French Government, Ireland, the Portuguese Government and the Commission of the European Communities, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT,

in answer to the questions referred to it by the High Court of Justice (Queen' s Bench Division) by order of 23 June 1993, hereby rules:

1. Article 30 of the EEC Treaty applies to a national practice prohibiting importation of narcotic drugs covered by the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs and marketable under that Convention.

2. Article 30 of the EEC Treaty is to be interpreted as requiring a Member State to ensure that this provision is fully effective by disapplying a national practice contrary to it unless that practice is necessary in order for the Member State concerned to comply with obligations towards non-member States laid down in an agreement concluded prior to entry into force of the Treaty or to accession by that Member State.

3. A national practice of refusing licences for importation of drugs from another Member State is not covered by the derogation provided for in Article 36 of the EEC Treaty if it is based on the need to safeguard an undertaking' s survival but that derogation may apply to it if protection of the health and life of humans requires a reliable supply of drugs for essential medical purposes to be safeguarded and that objective cannot be achieved as effectively by measures less restrictive of intra-Community trade.

4. Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by Council Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988, is to be interpreted as authorizing the bodies covered by that directive which wish to obtain diamorphine to award the contract on the basis of the tendering undertakings' ability to provide reliable and continuous supplies to the Member State concerned.

1 By order of 23 June 1993, received at the Court on 25 June 1993, the High Court of Justice (Queen' s Bench Division) referred for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EEC Treaty two questions on the interpretation of Articles 30, 36 and 234 of the EEC Treaty and of Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1), as amended by Council Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988 (OJ 1988 L 127, p. 1) ("the directive").

2 Those questions have arisen in proceedings brought by Evans Medical Ltd ("Evans") and Macfarlan Smith Ltd ("Macfarlan") against the Secretary of State for the Home Department ("the Secretary of State"), supported by Generics (UK) Ltd ("Generics"), in connection with Generics' importation into the United Kingdom of a consignment of diamorphine originating in the Netherlands.

3 Under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 the importation of diamorphine is prohibited unless licensed by the Secretary of State under section 3(2)(b).

4 Diamorphine, which is an opium derivative, is occasionally used as an analgesic in medical treatment. This is particularly so in the United Kingdom since, according to information provided by the national court, 238 of the 241 kilograms of diamorphine used world-wide for medical purposes in 1990 were used in that State.

5 Diamorphine is covered by the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs (United Nations Treaty Series, 520, p. 204) ("the Convention"), which entered into force in the United Kingdom in 1964 and which is also applicable in the other Member States.

6 The Convention provides in particular that the Contracting States are to:

° "take such legislative and administrative measures as may be necessary: ... to limit exclusively to medical and scientific purposes the production, manufacture, export, import, distribution of, trade in, use and possession of drugs" (Article 4(c));

° "require that the trade in and distribution of drugs be under licence except where such trade or distribution is carried out by a State enterprise or State enterprises" (Article 30(1)(a)); and ° "control under licence the import and export of drugs except where such import or export is carried out by a State enterprise or State enterprises" (Article 31(3)(a)).

7 Until 1992, under the policy prevailing at that time in the United Kingdom, the Secretary of State prohibited importation of diamorphine and allowed Macfarlan to have the exclusive right to manufacture the product in powder form from concentrated poppy straw imported from non-member States and Evans to have the exclusive right to process the product (by freezing, dehydration and packaging) for medical use and marketing within the United Kingdom.

8 According to the Secretary of State, this practice was justified by the need to avoid the risk of diamorphine being diverted to illicit trade and to ensure that supplies were reliably maintained in the United Kingdom.

9 In September 1990 the Secretary of State rejected an application by Generics for a licence to import a consignment of diamorphine from the Netherlands. After obtaining leave, Generics brought an action for judicial review of the decision refusing a licence in which it sought a declaration that the decision was contrary to Article 30 of the Treaty and could not be justified under Article 36. In the course of those proceedings the Secretary of State acknowledged that the refusal to grant a licence to Generics was not justified and stated that his decision was being reviewed.

10 By two letters of 17 August 1992 the Secretary of State informed Evans and Macfarlan that he was authorizing Generics to import the consignment of diamorphine as he considered that the policy then in force impeded intra-Community trade and that reliability of supplies could be satisfactorily guaranteed, in full compliance with Community law, through the introduction of a tendering scheme.

11 The applicants in the main proceedings then brought an action before the High Court in which they seek a declaration that the legal reasoning in those letters supporting the grant of a licence and therefore abandonment of the previous policy is vitiated by an error of law so that those decisions must be set aside.

12 They contend that the requirements of the Convention are incompatible with Articles 30 and 36 of the Treaty. They accordingly submit, first, that those Treaty articles are not applicable to trade in narcotic drugs by virtue of Article 234 of the Treaty on the ground that the Convention was concluded prior to the United Kingdom' s accession to the Communities, given that Article 234 of the Treaty provides that: "The rights and obligations arising from agreements concluded before the entry into force of this Treaty between one or more Member States on the one hand, and one or more third countries on the other, shall not be affected by the provisions of this Treaty." Thus, according to the applicants, the Convention requires that the previous arrangements be maintained.

13 Second, the applicants contend that, even if Article 30 of the Treaty were applicable, the Secretary of State could, on the one hand, have relied on Article 36 to justify the refusal to grant an import licence to Generics and, on the other hand, ought to have satisfied himself beforehand that the tendering scheme could be implemented, that it was compatible with the Convention and that it made it possible to ensure continuity of supplies of diamorphine for the National Health Service.

14 Those are the circumstances in which the national court has referred the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

"1. Upon the true construction of Articles 30, 36 and 234 of the EEC Treaty, is a Member State entitled to refuse to issue a licence, required by the law of that Member State, to import from another Member State narcotic drugs either originating in or in free circulation in the second Member State on the ground that

(a) the provisions of Articles 30 to 36 are inapplicable to trade in narcotic drugs within the meaning or ambit of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs concluded at New York on 30 March 1961; and/or

(b) compliance with the Convention would in practice require the arbitrary allocation of quotas between imports and local manufacturers; and/or that the system of controls laid down by the Convention would otherwise be less effective; and/or

(c) (in the circumstances that the Community has failed to adopt any directive or other regime on trade in narcotic drugs such as would enable it to declare itself a 'single territory' under Article 43 of the Single Convention and several Member States that manufacture narcotic drugs prohibit their importation) the importation of narcotic drugs from another Member State would threaten the viability of a sole licensed manufacturer of those drugs in the Member State, and that the reliability of supply of those drugs for essential medical purposes in that Member State would be jeopardized?

2. On the proper interpretation of Council Directive 77/62 of 21 December 1976, OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1, as amended, is a public authority, when charged with the task of purchasing essential pain-relieving drugs for medical use, entitled to take into account the need for reliability and continuity of supply when awarding contracts for the supply of such drugs?"

Appositeness of the questions submitted

15 The Commission submits first that there is no need to reply to the questions submitted since the first question concerns the compatibility with Community law of a practice which has now been discontinued and which consisted in prohibiting imports of diamorphine from other Member States, and since the second question seeks from the Court an interpretation of Community law in relation to a purely hypothetical situation, namely where there is a procedure for obtaining diamorphine within the framework of the directive.

16 It need only be observed here that the Secretary of State reached the view that the national practice of prohibiting imports of diamorphine was contrary to Community law since reliability of supplies to the United Kingdom market could be ensured, in conformity with Community law, within the framework of the directive. The preliminary questions have therefore been submitted in order to enable the national court to determine whether the change in national practice was indeed necessary in order to ensure compliance with Community law. The High Court of Justice will then have to determine, on the basis of the replies to its questions, whether under its own national law the decisions of the Secretary of State must be set aside for error of law.

17 Consequently, the questions submitted by the national court should be answered.

Question 1(a)

18 By this question the national court wishes to know whether Article 30 of the Treaty applies to a national practice prohibiting importation of narcotic drugs covered by the Convention and marketable under it.

19 As the Court found in its judgments in Case 221/81 Wolf v Hauptzollamt Duesseldorf [1982] ECR 3681 and Case 240/81 Einberger v Hauptzollamt Freiburg [1982] ECR 3699, the drugs covered by the Convention are subject, in all the Member States, to a range of measures strictly regulating their importation and marketing so as to ensure that they are used in the Member States only for pharmaceutical or medical purposes, in accordance with the Convention.

20 According to the Court' s case-law, goods taken across a frontier for the purposes of commercial transactions are subject to Article 30 of the Treaty, whatever the nature of those transactions (judgment in Case C-2/90 Commission v Belgium [1992] ECR I-4431, paragraph 26). Since they have those characteristics, the drugs covered by the Convention and marketable under it are subject to Article 30.

21 It is also settled case-law that all measures capable of hindering, directly or indirectly, actually or potentially, intra-Community trade constitute a barrier to trade (judgment in Case 8/74 Procureur du Roi v Dassonville [1974] ECR 837).

22 Under that case-law, a national practice prohibiting imports of drugs is caught by Article 30 of the Treaty since it affects trade in the way described above.

23 The fact that such a measure may have been adopted under an international agreement predating the Treaty or accession by a Member State and that the Member State maintains the measure pursuant to Article 234, despite the fact that it constitutes a barrier, does not remove it from the scope of Article 30, since Article 234 takes effect only if the agreement imposes on a Member State an obligation that is incompatible with the Treaty.

24 The answer to this question must therefore be that Article 30 of the Treaty applies to a national practice prohibiting importation of narcotic drugs covered by the Convention and marketable under it.

Question 1(b)

25 By this question the national court essentially wishes to know whether Article 30 of the Treaty is to be interpreted as meaning that a Member State must give full effect to that provision by disapplying a national practice prohibiting importation of diamorphine where that practice, which proves to be incompatible with the Community rule, is designed to implement an agreement, such as the Convention on Narcotic Drugs, which was concluded by the Member State concerned with other Member States and non-member States prior to entry into force of the Treaty or to that Member State' s accession and compliance with which would require allocation of quotas among the undertakings concerned and introduction of an effective system of controls.

26 It should be noted in this regard that it is settled case-law that Article 30 of the Treaty takes precedence over any contrary measure of national law.

27 However, as the judgment in Case C-158/91 Levy [1993] ECR I-4287 explains, the purpose of the first paragraph of Article 234 of the Treaty is to make clear, in accordance with the principles of international law, that application of the Treaty does not affect the commitment of the Member State concerned to respect the rights of non-member States under an earlier agreement and to comply with its corresponding obligations.

28 Consequently, in order to determine whether a Community rule may be deprived of effect by an earlier international agreement, it is necessary to examine whether that agreement imposes on the Member State concerned obligations whose performance may still be required by non-member States which are parties to it (judgment in Levy, cited above, paragraph 13).

29 However, in proceedings for a preliminary ruling, it is not for this Court but for the national court to determine which obligations are imposed by an earlier international agreement on the Member State concerned and to ascertain their ambit so as to be able to determine the extent to which they thwart application of Articles 30 and 36 of the Treaty (judgment in Levy, cited above, paragraph 21).

30 It is therefore for the national court to examine whether compliance with the Convention in relation to non-member States requires allocation of quotas among the undertakings concerned and whether allowing imports would make it impossible for the Member State to exercise the degree of control required by the Convention.

31 In the course of the proceedings the United Kingdom submitted that the Convention allowed the Contracting States to prohibit imports of narcotic drugs into their territory but did not require them to adopt such a measure.

32 As to that point, when an international agreement allows, but does not require, a Member State to adopt a measure which appears to be contrary to Community law, the Member State must refrain from adopting such a measure.

33 The answer to this question must therefore be that Article 30 of the Treaty is to be interpreted as requiring a Member State to ensure that this provision is fully effective by disapplying a national practice contrary to it unless that practice is necessary in order for the Member State concerned to comply with obligations towards non-member States laid down in an agreement concluded prior to entry into force of the Treaty or to accession by that Member State.

Question 1(c)

34 By this question the national court asks whether a Member State is entitled to refuse a licence for importation of narcotic drugs from another Member State on the ground that importation of such drugs from another Member State threatens the viability of the sole licensed manufacturer in the first State and jeopardizes reliability of supply of diamorphine for medical purposes.

35 Article 36 of the Treaty allows a Member State to maintain or introduce measures prohibiting or restricting trade if those measures are justified on, inter alia, grounds of public morality, public policy, public security or the protection of health and life of humans, and provided that they do not constitute a means of arbitrary discrimination or a disguised restriction on intra-Community trade.

36 It is clear from the Court' s case-law that Article 36 relates to measures of a non-economic nature (judgment in Case 238/82 Duphar and Others v Netherlands [1984] ECR 523). A measure which restricts intra-Community trade cannot therefore be justified by a Member State' s wish to safeguard the survival of an undertaking.

37 On the other hand, the need to ensure that a country has reliable supplies for essential medical purposes may, under Article 36 of the Treaty, justify a barrier to intra-Community trade if that objective is one of protecting the health and life of humans.

38 It must, however, be borne in mind that the derogation provided for in Article 36 cannot apply to national rules or practices if the health and life of humans can be as effectively protected by measures less restrictive of intra-Community trade (see, in particular, the judgment in Case 104/75 De Peijper [1976] ECR 613, paragraph 17).

39 The answer to this question must therefore be that a national practice of refusing licences for importation of drugs from another Member State is not covered by the derogation provided for in Article 36 of the Treaty if it is based on the need to safeguard an undertaking' s survival but that derogation may apply to it if protection of the health and life of humans requires a reliable supply of drugs for essential medical purposes to be safeguarded and that objective cannot be achieved as effectively by measures less restrictive of intra-Community trade.

40 By this question the national court wishes to ascertain whether the bodies covered by the Community legislation applicable to the awarding of public contracts, in particular Directive 77/62, may, when seeking to obtain diamorphine, award the contract on the basis of the ability of the tendering undertakings to guarantee reliability and continuity of supplies in the country.

41 Article 25(1) of Directive 77/62 provides as follows:

"The criteria on which the contracting authority shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) ...

(b) ... , when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract in question: e.g. price, delivery date, running costs, cost-effectiveness, quality, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical merit, after-sales service and technical assistance."

42 According to the judgment of the Court in Case 31/87 Beentjes v Netherlands [1988] ECR 4635, in selecting the most economically advantageous tender contracting authorities may choose the criteria which they intend to apply, but their choice may relate only to criteria designed to identify the most economically advantageous tender.

43 That judgment, which concerns public works contracts, also applies to public supply contracts in so far as there is no difference in this respect between the two types of contract.

44 It follows that reliability of supplies is one of the criteria which may be taken into account under Article 25 of the directive in order to determine the most economically advantageous tender for a contract for the supply, to the authorities concerned, of a product such as that in question in the main proceedings.

45 However, in such a case reliability of supplies must be clearly indicated as a criterion for the award of a contract, in accordance with Article 25(2) of Directive 77/62, which provides that:

> "... , the contracting authorities shall state in the contract documents or in the contract notice all the criteria they intend to apply to the award where possible in descending order of importance."

46 The Portuguese Government, however, submits that the special character of diamorphine, particularly considering the security measures which must be taken in order to prevent any diversion of the product, justifies private contracts with no open or restricted invitations to tender. It bases that view on Article 6(4) of the directive, as amended, which provides as follows:

> "The contracting authorities may award their supply contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice in the following cases:
> ...
>
> (c) when, for technical... reasons,... the goods supplied may be manufactured or delivered only by a particular supplier;
>

47 The French Government, basing its analysis on Article 6(1)(g) of the directive, in its original version, which allows the conclusion of private contracts

> "when supplies are declared secret or when their delivery must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the provisions laid down by law, regulation or administrative action in force in the Member State concerned, or when the protection of the basic interests of that State' s security so requires", reaches the same conclusion.

48 With regard to those arguments the Court recalls that it has held (see, most recently, the judgment in Case C-328/92 Commission v Spain [1994] ECR I-1569, paragraph 15) that Article 6 of the directive, as amended, which authorizes derogations from the rules intended to ensure effectiveness of rights conferred by the Treaty in the public supply contracts sector, must be interpreted strictly.

49 The information provided to the Court does not at this stage warrant the conclusion that the special nature of diamorphine and the security measures to be taken in order to prevent its diversion make it impossible to have an open or restricted invitation to tender. On the contrary, a tenderer' s ability to implement proper security measures could be taken into account as a criterion for the award of a contract, in accordance with Article 25 of the directive.

50 Having regard to those considerations, the reply to the second question must be that Directive 77/62 is to be interpreted as authorizing the bodies covered by that directive which wish to obtain diamorphine to award the contract on the basis of the tendering undertakings' ability to provide reliable and continuous supplies to the Member State concerned.

Judgment of the Court (Fifth Chamber)
of 14 April 1994
Ballast Nedam Groep NV v Belgian State.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Raad van State - Belgium.
Freedom to provide services - Public works contracts - Registration of contractors - Relevant entity.
Case C-389/92.

Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directives 71/304/EEC and 71/305/EEC - Registration of contractors - Application by a holding company not itself carrying out the works but availing itself, for the purpose of proving its standing and competence, of references relating to its subsidiaries - Whether permissible - Conditions - Assessment by the national court

(Council Directives 71/304 and 71/305)

Directive 71/304 concerning the abolition of restrictions on freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts and on the award of public works contracts to contractors acting through agencies or branches and Directive 71/305 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts must be interpreted as meaning that they permit, for the purposes of the assessment of the criteria to be satisfied by a contractor when an application for registration by the dominant legal person of a group is being examined, account to be taken of companies belonging to that group, provided that the legal person in question establishes that it actually has available the resources of those companies which are necessary for carrying out the works.

In a disputed case, it is for the national court to assess, in the light of the factual and legal circumstances before it, whether such proof has been produced.

Judgment

1 By a judgment of 29 September 1992, which was received at the Court on 6 November 1992, the Raad van State, Belgium, referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling pursuant to Article 177 of the EEC Treaty a question concerning the interpretation of Council Directive 71/304/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the abolition of restrictions on freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts and on the award of public works contracts to contractors acting through agencies or branches (Official Journal, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 678) and Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (Official Journal, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682).

2 The question arose in the course of a dispute between Ballast Nedam Groep, a company governed by Netherlands law (hereinafter referred to as "BNG"), and the Belgian State concerning the non-renewal of BNG' s registration as a contractor.

3 In the course of a review of the position of registered contractors provided for by a Royal Decree of 9 August 1982 laying down measures for the application of a Decree-Law of 3 February 1947 organizing the registration of contractors, the Minister for Public Works decided in 1987 not to renew the registration hitherto granted to BNG. The Minister' s decision, which followed an adverse opinion by the Committee for the Registration of Contractors, was taken on the grounds that the company could not be regarded as a works contractor because, as a holding company, it did not itself execute works but, for the purpose of proving its standing and competence, referred to works carried out by its subsidiaries, which were separate legal persons.

4 BNG applied to the Raad van State for the annulment of both the Registration Committee' s opinion and the decision of the Minister for Public Works.

5 The Raad van State considered that the case turned on the interpretation of the Community directives concerning public works contracts and decided to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

> "Do Directive 71/304/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the abolition of restrictions on freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts and on the award of public works contracts to contractors acting through agencies or branches and Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, in particular Articles 1, 6, 21, 23 and 26, permit, in the event of the Belgian rules on the registration of contractors being applied to the dominant legal person within a 'group' governed by Netherlands law, in connection with the assessment of the criteria relating inter alia to technical competence which a contractor must satisfy, account to be taken only of that dominant legal person as a legal entity and not of the 'companies within the group' each of which, having its own legal personality, belongs to that 'group' ?"

6 Directives 71/304 and 71/305 are designed to ensure freedom to provide services in the field of public works contracts. Thus the first of those directives imposes a general duty on Member States to abolish restrictions on access to, participation in and the performance of public works contracts and the second directive provides for coordination of the procedures for the award of public works contracts (see the judgment in Case 76/81 Transporoute [1982] ECR 417, at paragraph 7).

7 In regard to such coordination, Title IV of Directive 71/305 has laid down a number of common rules on the participation of contractors in public works contracts. Amongst those rules are to be found in particular Article 21, which authorizes groups of contractors to submit tenders and Article 28 which, in connection with the drawing up of official lists of recognized contractors, refers to the criteria for qualitative selection defined by Articles 23 to 26, which also specify the manner in which undertakings may furnish proof that they satisfy those criteria (see the judgment in Transporoute, cited above, at paragraph 8).

8 The applicant in the main proceedings and the Commission maintain, in essence, that for the purposes of the assessment of the criteria which must be satisfied by a contractor when an application for registration submitted by the dominant legal person in a group governed by Netherlands law is being examined, those directives permit account to be taken of companies which, while each retaining its own legal personality, belong to the group.

9 In order to reply to the question raised by the national court, consideration must be given to whether a holding company may be precluded from participating in procedures for public works contracts on the ground that it does not itself carry out such works and, if that is not the case, under what conditions it may show that it has the necessary standing and competence to participate.

10 It is clear from the actual wording of Directive 71/304 that public works contracts may be awarded to persons covered by that directive who carry out the work through agencies or branches.

11 Article 21 of Directive 71/305, one of the common rules on participation in contract award procedures, expressly authorizes groups of contractors to submit tenders and the awarding authority may not require such groups to assume a specific legal form before the contract is awarded. Article 16(k) of Directive 71/305, which is one of the common rules for advertising tendering procedures, provides only that, in open procedures, the notice is to lay down the specific legal form which will, if necessary, be assumed by the group of contractors to whom the contract is awarded.

12 Finally, the sole purpose of the criteria for qualitative selection laid down in Articles 23 to 26 of Directive 71/305, to which Article 28 of that directive on official lists of recognized contractors refers, is to define the rules relating to the objective assessment of the standing and, in particular, technical knowledge and ability of contractors. Article 26(e) provides expressly that a statement of the technicians or technical divisions which the contractor can call upon for carrying out the work, whether or not they belong to the firm, may be furnished as proof of such technical knowledge or ability.

13 As the Commission rightly points out, it is clear from all those provisions that not only a natural or legal person who will himself carry out the works but also a person who will have the contract carried out through agencies or branches or will have recourse to technicians or outside technical divisions, or even a group of undertakings, whatever its legal form, may seek to be awarded public works contracts.

14 Moreover, it should be noted that Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989 amending Directive 71/305/EEC (Official Journal 1989 L 210, p. 1), in particular with the aim of defining more precisely what is meant by public works contracts, expressly stated in Article 1 that such contracts have as their object either the execution, or both the execution and design, of works or a work, or "the execution by whatever means of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority". That definition confirms that a contractor who has neither the intention nor the resources to carry out the works himself may participate in a procedure for the award of a public works contract.

15 Accordingly a holding company which does not itself execute works may not, because its subsidiaries which do carry out works are separate legal persons, be precluded on that ground from participation in public works contract procedures.

16 However, it is for the authorities awarding contracts, as Article 20 of Directive 71/305 specifies, to check the suitability of contractors in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing and of technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 25 to 28 of that directive.

17 When, in this connection, a company produces references relating to its subsidiaries in order to prove its economic and financial standing and technical knowledge and ability for the purpose of registration on the official list of recognized undertakings, it must establish that, whatever the nature of its legal link with those subsidiaries, it actually has available to it the resources of the latter which are necessary for carrying out the contracts. It is for the national court to assess, in the light of the factual and legal circumstances before it, whether such proof has been produced in the main proceedings.

18 The reply to the question referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling must therefore be that Council Directive 71/304/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the abolition of restrictions on freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts and on the award of public works contracts to contractors acting through agencies or branches and Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts must be interpreted as meaning that they permit, for the purposes of the assessment of the criteria to be satisfied by a contractor when an application for registration by the dominant legal person of a group is being examined, account to be taken of companies belonging to that group, provided that the legal person in question establishes that it actually has available the resources of those companies which are necessary for carrying out the works. It is for the national court to assess whether such proof has been produced in the main proceedings.

Costs

19 The costs incurred by the Commission of the European Communities, which has submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the proceedings pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Fifth Chamber),

in answer to the question referred to it by the Raad van State, Belgium, by judgment of 29 September 1992, hereby rules:

Council Directive 71/304/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the abolition of restrictions on freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts and on the award of public works contracts to contractors acting through agencies or branches and Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts must be interpreted as meaning that they permit, for the purposes of the assessment of the criteria to be satisfied by a contractor when an application for registration by the dominant legal person of a group is being examined, account to be taken of companies belonging to that group, provided that the legal person in question establishes that it actually has available the resources of those companies which are necessary for carrying out the works. Directive 71/305/CEE - Definition of "public works contracts".

++++

Approximation of laws ° Procedures for the award of public works contracts ° Directive 71/305 ° Scope ° Mixed contract relating both to the performance of works and to the assignment of property ° Performance of the works incidental to the assignment of property ° Exclusion ° Assessment by the national court

(Council Directive 71/305)

A mixed contract relating both to the performance of works and to the assignment of property does not fall within the scope of Directive 71/305 concerning coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts if the performance of the works is merely incidental to the assignment of property.

It is for the national court to determine whether the works are incidental to the main object of the award.

In Case C-331/92, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 9 December 1993,

gives the following

Judgment

1 By order of 10 July 1992, which was received at the Court on 31 July 1992, the Tribunal Superior de Justicia de Canarias referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 177 of the EEC Treaty two questions on the interpretation of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (Official Journal, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682, hereinafter referred to as "Directive 71/305").

2 Those questions arose in proceedings between Gestion Hotelera Internacional and the Comunidad Autonoma de Canarias (Autonomous Community of the Canary Islands, hereinafter referred to as "the Comunidad Autonoma"), the Ayuntamiento de Las Palmas de Gran Canaria (hereinafter referred to as "the Municipality of Las Palmas") and the company Gran Casino de Las Palmas.

3 By a departmental order of the Office of the Presidential Counsellor to the Government of the Canary Islands of 17 July 1989, published in the Boletín Oficial de Canarias of 19 July 1992, two invitations to tender were issued, one of which concerned the award of the final concession for the installation and opening of a gaming establishment on the premises of the Hotel Santa Catalina in Las Palmas and the other of which concerned the use of the hotel installations and the operation of the hotel business. Since the hotel in question was owned by the Municipality of Las Palmas, the second of the invitations to tender was issued by the Government of the Canary Islands on behalf of that municipality pursuant to a cooperation agreement between those two authorities.

4 The conditions of tender relating to the grant of the concession for the opening and installation of the gaming establishment are set out in Annex I to the aforesaid departmental order (hereinafter referred to as "Annex I"). The conditions to be fulfilled by the tenderers include, in Article 2(1)(c) and (i) of that Annex, the following:

> "(c) (their) sole and exclusive object shall consist in the operation of gaming establishments. However, the object of the undertaking may include the right to offer and provide the additional services referred to in Article 2(2) of these conditions of tender.
>
> (i) (the tenderers shall) participate in the invitation to tender relating to the use of the hotel installations and the operation of the hotel business, the conditions of tender in respect of which are set out in Annex II to this order".

5 Article 3(3)(g) of Annex I provides that tenders are to be accompanied by the plans and proposals for the gaming establishment indicating all technical features, including such additional works or works of adaptation as may prove to be necessary.

6 Article 4(3) of Annex I lists the matters which must be brought to the notice of the successful tenderer, such as the games to be authorized, unlimited or restricted access to the casino and the non-transferable nature of the concession. Article 5(2)(b) provides that applications for the concession for the opening and installation of the gaming establishment are to be accompanied by a copy of the municipal authorization to undertake certain works and by a certificate confirming the completion of those works.

7 The conditions of tender relating to the award of the use of the hotel installations and the operation of the hotel business are set out in Annex II to the departmental order (hereinafter referred to as "Annex II") and state in Article 2 that only those undertakings which effectively participate in the invitation to tender for the award of the final concession for the installation and opening of the gaming establishment may tender for the award of that second contract.

8 Article 2(2)(a) of Annex II provides that the successful tenderer must invest at least 1 000 million pesetas in fitting out the hotel and must pay at least 1 000 million pesetas for the use of the entire hotel and casino complex throughout the initial period of validity of the concession. Article 2(2)(b) provides that the successful tenderer is to carry out the necessary works for the renovation, conversion and restoration of the installations so that the hotel and its surroundings can retain their five-star status and can offer the obligatory additional services. Article 3(3) of Annex II states that tenders relating to those works must specify the basic proposals for the works, the budgets for them and the time-limits for their completion.

9 In the proceedings before the national court Gestion Hotelera Internacional, which was the lessee of the hotel at the time of the tender procedure, applied for the annulment of the invitations to tender issued by the Government of the Canary Islands and of the contract which had in the meantime been awarded, by departmental order of 10 January 1990, to the company Gran Casino de Las Palmas. The application for annulment is founded on the fact that, according to the conditions of tender, the successful tenderers were to carry out renovation works to the casino and the hotel and that, consequently, the departmental order containing the invitations to tender should have been published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, in accordance with Directive 71/305.

10 The Tribunal Superior de Justicia de Canarias, uncertain as to the interpretation to be given to the rules of Community law, stayed the proceedings and referred the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

> "1. Is a mixed contract for the performance of works and the assignment of property to be regarded as included in the concept of 'public works contracts' set out in Article 1(a) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971?

2. Are, therefore, 'authorities awarding contracts' which wish to award a contract having those characteristics obliged to publish a notice of that contract in the Official Journal of the European Communities?"

Admissibility

11 The Comunidad Autonoma and the Municipality of Las Palmas do not consider that there was any need for the national court to refer the case to the Court, because Directive 71/305 has been transposed into national law, so that there is no longer any need to refer to it.

12 It should be noted in that regard that, as the Court has consistently held, it is solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought, and which must assume the responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of each case both the need for a preliminary ruling to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the question which it submits to the Court (see in particular the judgment in Case C-127/92 Enderby [1993] ECR I-5535, paragraph 10).

13 Moreover, as the Court has consistently held, the interpretation of a directive may be useful to the national court for the purpose of enabling it to ensure that the statute which implements it in domestic law is interpreted and applied in accordance with the requirements of Community law (see the judgment in Case 111/75 Mazzalai [1976] ECR 657, paragraph 10).

14 It is necessary, therefore, to examine the questions put by the court making the reference.

Substance

Question 1

15 It should be noted, as a preliminary point, that Article 1 of Directive 71/305 defines public works contracts. Subparagraph (a) of that article states that such contracts are "contracts for pecuniary consideration concluded in writing between a contractor (a natural or legal person) and an authority awarding contracts...", which is defined in subparagraph (b) as the State, regional or local authorities and the legal persons governed by public law specified in Annex I to the directive.

16 Furthermore, such contracts must have as their object one of the activities referred to in Article 2 of Council Directive 71/304/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the abolition of restrictions on freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts and on the award of public works contracts to contractors acting through agencies or branches (Official Journal, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 678). The list of professional trade activities annexed to that directive mentions activities relating to construction.

17 In order to provide the court making the reference with the elements of interpretation which will be of use to it for the purpose of giving a decision in the main proceedings, it is necessary, next, to analyse the contract at issue, as described in the documents before the Court.

18 The procedure for the award of the contracts was initiated by the Government of the Canary Islands, which issued two invitations to tender. The first, which concerned a casino, was issued on behalf of the Autonomous Community of the Canary Islands, whilst the second, relating to the operation of a hotel, was issued on behalf of the Municipality of Las Palmas.

19 The awarding authority intended to arrange for the installation of a gaming establishment in the premises of the Hotel Santa Catalina, which was owned by the Municipality. It sought to award that contract to an undertaking which would also assume responsibility for the operation of the hotel business. To that end, Article 2 of Annex II specified that eligibility to participate was to extend only to those undertakings which also submitted tenders for the award of the final concession for the installation and opening of the gaming establishment.

20 In the first place, it is apparent from the cooperation agreement between the Municipality of Las Palmas and the Government of the Canary Islands, as described by the court making the reference, and from Article 2(2)(b) of Annex II, that the successful tenderer would be required to carry out a series of works, not only in the outbuildings of the hotel but also in those of the casino. Those works were to be such as to make the premises suitable for the activities for which they were intended.

21 Secondly, Annex II, which sets out the minimum requirements to be satisfied in order to obtain the concession for the installation and opening of the casino, together with the use of the premises intended for that installation and the operation of the hotel business, required the successful tenderer to carry out the renovation, conversion and restoration works in respect of the hotel installations for a total sum amounting to not less than 1 000 million pesetas.

22 Lastly, the successful tenderer was, pursuant to Article 2(2)(b) of Annex II, to ensure that the hotel retained its five-star status and was able to offer the obligatory additional services. In that regard, Article 3(3)(g) of Annex I imposed on that tenderer the obligation to indicate such additional works or works of adaptation as might prove necessary for the installation of the casino.

23 It follows from the foregoing analysis that the main object of the award of the contracts was, first, the installation and opening of a casino and, secondly, the operation of a hotel business. It is common ground that those contracts, considered as such, do not fall within the scope of Directive 71/305.

24 It is next apparent, first, that the documents mentioned above did not contain any description of the subject-matter of the works to be carried out, either as regards the installation and opening of the casino or as regards the operation of the hotel, secondly, that there was no provision for remuneration for those works and thirdly, that the successful tenderer was not in a position to carry them out itself, by reason of the strict definition of its object in Article 2(1)(c) of Annex I.

25 The question which arises for the national court is whether a mixed contract relating both to the performance of works and to the assignment of property falls within the scope of Directive 71/305.

26 The answer must be that, where the works to be carried out in the hotel and the casino are merely incidental to the main object of the award, the award, taken in its entirety, cannot be characterized as a public works contract within the meaning of Directive 71/305.

27 Corroboration for that interpretation is to be found in Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (Official Journal 1992 L 209, p. 1). According to the sixteenth recital in the preamble to that directive, it follows from Directive 71/305 that, for a contract to be a public works contract, its object must be the achievement of a work and that, in so far as those works are incidental rather than the object of the contract, they do not justify treating the contract as a public works contract.

28 It is for the national court to determine whether the works are incidental to the main object of the award.

29 The answer to the first question must therefore be that a mixed contract relating both to the performance of works and to the assignment of property does not fall within the scope of Directive 71/305 if the performance of the works is merely incidental to the assignment of property.

Question 2

30 In view of the reply given to the first question, there is no need to examine the second question.

Costs

31 The costs incurred by the Spanish Government and the Commission of the European Communities, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the proceedings pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Sixth Chamber),

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Tribunal Superior de Justicia de Canarias, by order of 10 July 1992, hereby rules:

A mixed contract relating both to the performance of works and to the assignment of property does not fall within the scope of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts if the performance of the works is merely incidental to the assignment of property.

Judgment of the Court
of 3 May 1994
Commission of the European Communities v Kingdom of Spain.
Failure to fulfil obligations - Public supply contracts - Pharmaceutical products and specialities.
Case C-328/92.

++++

Approximation of laws ° Procedures for the award of public supply contracts ° Directive 77/62 ° Derogations from common rules ° Strict interpretation ° Existence of exceptional circumstances ° Burden of proof

(Council Directive 77/62, Art. 6(1)(b) and (d))

Article 6(1)(b) and (d) of Directive 77/62 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, which authorize derogations from the rules intended to ensure the effectiveness of rights conferred by the Treaty in that sector, must be interpreted strictly and the burden of proving the actual existence of exceptional circumstances justifying a derogation lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances. They cannot in any way justify general and indiscriminate recourse to the single-tender procedure for all supplies of pharmaceutical products and specialities to social security institutions.

If Article 6(1)(b) is to apply, it is not sufficient for the pharmaceutical products and specialities to be protected by exclusive rights; they must also be capable of being manufactured or delivered only by a particular supplier, a requirement which is satisfied only with respect to those products and specialities for which there is no competition in the market.

With regard to the derogation on the grounds of urgency provided for in Article 6(1)(d), although, having regard to the freedom of doctors to prescribe pharmaceutical products, an urgent need for a particular pharmaceutical speciality may well arise in a hospital pharmacy, that cannot justify systematic recourse to the single-tender procedure for all supplies of pharmaceutical products and specialities to hospitals and, in any event, even if the requirement of urgency were considered to have been satisfied in a particular case, the derogation provided for by that provision may be relied on only if all the conditions it lays down are satisfied cumulatively.

In Case C-328/92,

APPLICATION for a declaration that, by requiring in the basic legislation concerning social security that the administrative authority award public contracts for the supply of pharmaceutical products and specialities to social security institutions by way of a single-tender procedure, and by awarding directly nearly all of those supply contracts without publishing a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for

having regard to the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 8 March 1994,

gives the following

Judgment

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 30 July 1992, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EEC Treaty for a declaration that, by requiring in the basic legislation concerning social security that the administrative authority award public contracts for the supply of pharmaceutical products and specialities to social security institutions by way of a single-tender procedure, and by awarding directly nearly all of those supply contracts without publishing a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (Official Journal 1977 L 13, p. 1).

2 In Spain the award of public contracts is governed by the Ley de Contratos del Estado (Law on State Contracts, hereinafter "the LCE") and the Reglamento General de Contratacion del Estado (General Regulations concerning State Contracts, hereinafter "the RGCE"), as amended, in order to bring them into line with EEC directives, by the Real Decreto Legislativo No 931/86 of 2 May 1986 (BOE No 114 of 13 May 1986, p. 16920) and the Real Decreto No 2528/86 of 28 November 1986 (BOE No 297 of 12 December 1986, p. 40546) respectively. Pursuant to the first final clause of those two decrees, the provisions of the LCE and the RGCE also apply to public contracts awarded by social security bodies.

3 Article 2(3) and (8) of the LCE provide as follows:

> "Notwithstanding the provisions of the previous article, this Law shall not apply to the following contracts and legal acts of the administration:
>
> ...
>
> 3. transactions which the administration effects with private individuals with respect to goods or rights, dealings in which are regulated (' mediatizado') by law, or controlled products (' intervenidos') which are the subject of a monopoly (' estancados') or prohibited (' prohibidos');
>
> 8. contracts expressly excluded by a Law."

4 The purchase of pharmaceutical products and specialities by hospitals within the social security system is governed by Article 107 of the Ley General de la Seguridad Social (General Law on Social Security, hereinafter "the LGSS"), as laid down by Decree No 2065/74 of 30 May 1974 approving the consolidated version of that law (BOE No 174 of 20 July 1974, p. 1482). That provision, entitled "Purchase and distribution of pharmaceutical products and specialities" provides as follows:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

"...

(2) The social security authority shall purchase directly from the centres of production those pharmaceutical products which are to be used in its institutions, whether open or closed, and for that purpose shall select, according to rigorous scientific criteria, the pharmaceutical products necessary for the care provided in those institutions...

(3) In all cases, the distribution of pharmaceutical products intended for use outside the institutions referred to in the previous paragraph shall be carried out through legally established pharmacies, which shall be obliged to carry out such distribution...

(4) The social security authority shall agree with the laboratories and pharmacies, acting through their legal, trade union and trade representatives, the prices and other economic terms governing the purchase of pharmaceutical products and specialities referred to in the previous two paragraphs...".

5 On 5 June 1986, on the basis of Article 107(4) of the LGSS, the State administrative authority entered into an Agreement with Farmaindustria, the national association of pharmaceutical companies, relating to the prices and other terms governing the direct purchase of pharmaceutical specialities intended for use in open or closed social security institutions, and the indirect purchase of such products intended for use outside those institutions (hereinafter "the Agreement").

6 The Commission, which became aware of the Agreement and its legislative basis following a reference to the Court for a preliminary ruling, considered that the scheme for awarding public supply contracts for pharmaceutical products, in the form established by the agreement and the legislation, was contrary to both Directive 77/62 and Article 30 of the Treaty. Since the proceedings for a preliminary ruling were not completed, owing to the withdrawal of the plaintiff in the main proceedings, the Commission initiated against the Kingdom of Spain the procedure provided for in Article 169 of the Treaty, giving formal notice on 6 July 1990 and then, on 18 March 1991, delivering a reasoned opinion to the Spanish Government inviting it to take the necessary measures to comply with that opinion within one month of its receipt. That period was then extended until 18 June 1991.

7 Since the Spanish Government contended in its reply of 17 June 1991 that the Agreement had come to an end on 31 December 1990, the Commission concluded that Directive 77/62 had not been complied with in Spain at least until that date, and, by agreement with the Spanish authorities, decided to monitor the situation from that date and at the same time to carry out an inquiry regarding the situation in that particular sector in the other Member States. Since the inquiries showed, according to the Commission, that during the 1991 financial year and the first few months of 1992 the competent Spanish authorities had not, unlike the authorities of several other Member States, published notices concerning public supply contracts of pharmaceutical products and specialities in the Official Journal of the European Communities (with some exceptions, as in the case of vaccines), the Commission brought this action.

8 First of all it is apparent from the form of order sought in the application, as set out in paragraph 1 of this judgment, that the Commission' s action does not relate either to Article 30 of the Treaty or to the Agreement between the administrative authority and Farmaindustria as such. As the Commission states in its application, its action concerns the statutory procedure for purchasing pharmaceutical products and specialities, as laid down by Article 2 of the LCE in conjunction with Article 107 of the LGSS and as applied by hospitals within the social security system, irrespective of the form and the legal nature of the contract used by the administrative authority for that purpose, and thus irrespective of whether the single-tender procedure for the award of contracts was used during the period for which the Agreement was in force or thereafter.

9 Furthermore, it is not disputed that while the Agreement was in force, and after 1 January 1991 as well, nearly all public contracts for the supply of pharmaceutical products and specialities to social security institutions have been awarded by the single-tender procedure, or that some of those contracts were for an estimated value (net of VAT) of ECU 200 000, which Article 5(1)(a) of Directive 77/62 lays down as a condition for its application.

10 Since Article 107 of the LGSS governs the purchase of pharmaceutical products and specialities by hospitals within the social security system, the relevant provisions of the LCE, and consequently those of Directive 77/62 which the LCE transposes into national law, are, under Article 2(3) of the LCE, inapplicable to supply contracts concluded for that purpose by the competent social security bodies.

11 The Spanish Government does not accept that Directive 77/62 is wholly and unconditionally applicable to supplies of pharmaceutical products and specialities to social security institutions. It contends that the medicinal products market is highly regulated by Community law itself and that the Spanish legislation ultimately complies with the restrictions resulting therefrom. It refers in particular to Council Directive 89/105/EEC of 21 December 1988 relating to the transparency of measures regulating the pricing of medicinal products for human use and their inclusion in the scope of national health insurance systems (Official Journal 1989 L 40, p. 8), the object of which, according to the fifth recital in the preamble thereto, is "to obtain an overall view of national pricing arrangements" and which, according to the Spanish Government, does not affect the relevant national laws.

12 It is sufficient to point out that, in paragraph 10 of its judgment in Case C-71/92 Commission v Spain [1993] ECR I-5923, the Court observed that the only permissible exceptions to the application of Directive 77/62 are those which are expressly and exhaustively mentioned in it.

13 However, Article 2(2) and Article 3 of Directive 77/62, which list the public supply contracts to which that directive does not apply, do not refer to contracts relating to pharmaceutical products and specialities. Moreover, as the Court held in that same judgment (paragraph 11), none of the exceptions authorized by the directive is defined by reference to the type of product in question or the legal rules applicable to it.

14 The Spanish Government also contends that recourse to the single-tender procedure for the award of public contracts for the supply of pharmaceutical products and specialities is justified by Article 6(1)(b) and (d) of Directive 77/62, which provide that the contracting authorities may award their supply contracts without applying the open or restricted procedures referred to in Article 4(1) and (2) and thus without publishing a notice of the contract in the Official Journal of the European Communities, "when... for reasons connected with protection of exclusive rights, the goods supplied may be manufactured or delivered only by a particular supplier", and "in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseeable by the contracting authorities, the time limit laid down in the procedures covered by Article 4(1) and (2) cannot be kept".

15 In that regard, Article 6 of Directive 77/62, which authorizes derogations from rules intended to ensure the effectiveness of rights conferred by the Treaty in the public supply contracts sector, must be interpreted strictly (see the judgment in Commission v Spain, cited above, paragraph 36).

16 Furthermore, the burden of proving the actual existence of exceptional circumstances justifying a derogation lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances (see, with regard to public works contracts, the judgment in Case 199/85 Commission v Italy [1987] ECR 1039, paragraph 14).

17 If Article 6(1)(b) is to apply, it is not sufficient for the pharmaceutical products and specialities in question to be protected by exclusive rights; they must also be capable of being manufactured or delivered only by a particular supplier. Since that requirement is satisfied only with respect to those products and specialities for which there is no competition in the market, Article 6(1)(b) cannot in any way justify general and indiscriminate recourse to the single-tender procedure for all supplies of all pharmaceutical products and specialities.

18 The position is the same with regard to Article 6(1)(d). Admittedly, having regard to the freedom of doctors to prescribe pharmaceutical products, to which the Spanish Government refers, an urgent need for a particular pharmaceutical speciality may well arise in a hospital pharmacy; however, that freedom to prescribe pharmaceutical products cannot justify a priori systematic recourse to the single-tender procedure for all supplies of pharmaceutical products and specialities to hospitals. Moreover, even if the requirement of urgency were considered to have been satisfied in a particular case, Article 6(1)(d) would not necessarily apply. The Court has consistently held that, in order to rely on the derogation provided by that provision, all the conditions it lays down must be satisfied cumulatively (see, with respect to the corresponding provision applicable to public works contracts, the judgment in Case C-24/91 Commission v Spain [1992] ECR I-1989, paragraph 13).

19 It follows from all the foregoing considerations that the Commission' s action is well founded and that a declaration that the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations must be made in the terms sought in the application.

Costs

20 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the Kingdom of Spain has been unsuccessful in its submissions, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

hereby:

1. Declares that, by requiring in the basic legislation concerning social security that the administrative authority award public contracts for the supply of pharmaceutical products and specialities to social security institutions by way of a single-tender procedure, and by awarding directly nearly all of those supply contracts without publishing a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1986 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts;

2. Orders the Kingdom of Spain to pay the costs.

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 6 July 1992, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EEC Treaty for a declaration that, by allowing the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno to award a private contract on 21 May 1990 for the 11th and 12th supplementary reports for the completion of the section of rapid transit highway "Ascoli - Mare", entitled "Stage IV - Project 5134" and to fail to publish a notice of invitation to tender in the Official Journal of the European Communities, and by not taking steps to preclude at the outset the legal effects thereof which infringe Community law, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (Official Journal, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682).

2 At the beginning of the 1970s the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno awarded various public works contracts for the construction of a rapid transit highway to link the town of Ascoli Piceno to the A14 motorway and national highway No 16 which runs along the Adriatic coast. The work was divided into four stages.

3 Stage IV was awarded to the undertaking Rozzi Costantino. Twelve supplementary reports were subsequently carried out on the work relating to this stage which resulted in a substantial extension of the initial path of the road. The work envisaged by those reports was also awarded to Rozzi Costantino. On 21 May 1990 the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno awarded to that undertaking a private contract for work envisaged by the 11th and 12th reports for a total amount of LIT 36 250 million.

4 The Commission considered that the award of the public works contracts envisaged in those two reports fell within the scope of the said Directive 71/305 and did not fall within any of the cases referred to in Article 9 and that consequently a notice of invitation to tender should have been published in the Official Journal of the European Communities in accordance with that directive and by letter of 17 January 1991 it called on the Italian Government, pursuant to Article 169 of the Treaty, to submit its observations on the alleged infringement within 30 days.

5 Having received no reply from the Italian Government within that period the Commission reiterated its views in the reasoned opinion which it sent to the Italian Republic on 1 August 1991 in which it found that "in so far as the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno has awarded a private contract for the construction of a section of rapid transit highway 'Ascoli - Mare' entitled 'Stage IV' , and failed to publish a notice of invitation to tender in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 71/305/EEC". The Commission called on the Italian Republic to comply with that reasoned opinion within two months.

6 By letter of 30 December 1991 the Italian Government forwarded to the Commission a note of 31 October 1991 in which the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno gave some details of the contract in question and relied on Article 5(b) of Law No 584 of 8 August 1977 which transposed into Italian law Article 9(b) of Directive 71/305 to justify the award of the contract at issue to the undertaking Rozzi Costantino.

7 The Commission considered that that letter represented a belated response to its reasoned opinion which was unsatisfactory and therefore brought the present action which seeks, as mentioned in paragraph 1 of this judgment, a declaration that the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 71/305 by allowing without demur the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno to utilize the procedure for the award of a private contract.

8 In its defence the Italian Government merely claims that the obligation incumbent on Member States to ensure that Directive 71/305/EEC is applied is different from the actual obligation to apply that directive which is incumbent on the awarding authorities. It adds that a Member State can be found to have failed to fulfil its supervisory obligation only if the breach of a directive by an awarding authority is clear and manifest to the point that there is no justification for that State not to intervene.

9 In its rejoinder the Italian Government has submitted documents intended to prove the existence as regards the works in question of "technical reasons" within the meaning of Article 9(b) of Directive 71/305 justifying the award of the work in question to a given undertaking and therefore, recourse to the procedure for the award of a private contract. It further maintains first that it had already pleaded Article 9(b) of Directive 71/305 in the course of the pre-litigation procedure and that, secondly, it had not placed further reliance in its defence on those "technical reasons" because in the form of order sought in its application the Commission' s complaint against the Italian Republic related not to the conduct of the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno which was allegedly contrary to Directive 71/305 but to the failure to take steps to prevent such conduct or to remedy its effects.

10 In the written observations which it was permitted to submit in response to the rejoinder, the Commission primarily claims that the technical documents submitted by the Italian Government were "new pleas in law" the introduction of which in the course of proceedings is prohibited by Article 42(2) of the Rules of Procedure. In the alternative the Commission maintains that the technical arguments based on those documents are without foundation.

11 It should be noted first that the Court has consistently held (see in particular Case 76/86 Commission v Germany [1989] ECR 1021, paragraph 8) that the scope of an action brought under Article 169 of the Treaty is delimited by the pre-litigation procedure provided for by that article. Consequently the action cannot be founded on any complaints other than those formulated in the reasoned opinion (see Case C-157/91 Commission v Netherlands [1992] ECR I-5899, paragraph 17).

12 In its reasoned opinion the Commission complained that the Italian Republic had failed to comply with its obligations under Directive 71/305 in so far as the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno had awarded the public works at issue by a private contract and had failed to publish a notice of invitation to tender in the Official Journal of the European Communities. In its application, on the other hand, the Commission asks the Court to declare that the Italian Republic has failed to comply with those obligations by allowing the provincial administration of Ascoli Piceno to act in that way and by not taking steps to preclude the effects thereof.

13 While it is true that each Member State is responsible vis-à-vis the Community for any breach of Community law by one of its bodies it must nevertheless be emphasized that in this case the subject-matter of the action is not a declaration of such a breach and in any event the application is founded on a complaint which is different from that formulated in the reasoned opinion; that difference has given rise to the dispute referred to in paragraphs 9 and 10 of this judgment regarding the presentation by the Italian Government of its defence.

14 Consequently the Commission' s application must be dismissed.

Costs

15 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the Commission has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

Judgment of the Court of 2 August 1993
Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic.
Failure of a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Derogation.
Case C-107/92.

++++

Approximation of laws ° Procedures for the award of public works contracts ° Directive 71/305 ° Derogation from the general rules ° Conditions ° Existence of exceptional circumstances

(Council Directive 71/305, Art. 9(d))

Article 9(d) of Directive 71/305 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts allows, in exceptional circumstances, derogations from the general rules, in particular those concerning advertising. However, such derogations are not available if the authorities awarding contracts have sufficient time to arrange for an accelerated tendering procedure of the kind provided for in Article 15 of the directive.

In Case C-107/92,

Judgment

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 1 April 1992, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EEC Treaty for a declaration that, by failing to send to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities for publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities a contract notice for the construction of an avalanche barrier in the locality of Colle Isarco/Brennero, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682).

2 Title III of the directive includes rules on adequate advertising of invitations to tender to ensure that all interested undertakings in the Community can learn of tendering procedures and, if they so wish, take part in them.

3 According to Article 12 of the directive, notices of tendering procedures are to be sent to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities, which publishes them in the Official Journal of the European Communities not later than nine days after the date of dispatch. The fourth paragraph of Article 12 provides, however, that, under the accelerated procedure provided for in Article 15, the notice will be published not later than five days after the date of dispatch.

4 Under Article 14 of the directive, the time-limits for receipt of requests to participate and for the receipt of tenders which the selected candidates are invited to submit are each not less than 21 days as from, respectively, the date of dispatch of the notice and the date of sending the written invitation to candidates. Article 15 provides, however, that in cases where urgency renders impracticable the time-limits laid down in Article 14, the authority awarding contracts may apply shorter time-limits, namely 12 days as from the date of dispatch of the notice for requests to participate and 10 days as from the written invitation for tenders. That accelerated procedure thus reduces the total duration of the advertising procedure from a minimum of 42 days to a minimum of 22 days.

5 Article 9 of the directive grants exemption from application of the provisions on advertising in a number of cases. More specifically, Article 9(d) provides for an exception "in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought by events unforeseen by the authorities awarding contracts, the time-limit laid down in other procedures cannot be kept".

6 On 18 June 1988, the Bolzano Ufficio del Genio Civile (Civil Engineering Department), a department of the Italian Ministry of Public Works, awarded a public works contract to the Italian undertaking Collini e Rabbiosi SpA for the construction of an avalanche barrier in the Alpe Gallina region near Colle Isarco/Brennero, without prior publication of a notice of an invitation to tender in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

7 Regarding that omission as an infringement of the directive, the Commission, by letter of 24 January 1990, formally called upon the Italian Republic to submit its observations within a month.

8 The Italian Government' s reply of 15 March 1990 to that letter prompted the Commission to send it a reasoned opinion on 13 February 1991. In the absence of any response thereto, the Commission brought this action.

9 The Commission considers that the Italian Government has not demonstrated the existence of extreme urgency resulting from unforeseeable events, as provided for in Article 9(d) of the directive. It states, first, that more than three months elapsed between the presentation to the competent national authorities on 10 June 1988 of the report from the Geological Department of the Ministry of the Environment recommending urgent action and the commencement of the works on 21 September 1988 and that, during that period, the Italian Government could have set in motion the 22-day accelerated procedure provided for by the directive. It also maintains that the last avalanche recorded in the Brenner region, in 1975, could not justify urgent action.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

10 According to the Italian Government, the Commission' s view takes no account of the new situation resulting from the abovementioned geological report regarding the unforeseeable and imminent risk of avalanches in the region. It contends that, in view of the urgency indicated by the report, the Italian authorities considered that the works had to be commenced without fail before the end of autumn 1988, that the administrative procedure therefore had to be completed during the brief period of the three summer months and that, in consequence, compliance with the directive had proved impossible.

11 Reference is made to the Report for the Hearing for a fuller account of the facts, the procedure and the pleas in law and arguments of the parties, which are mentioned or discussed hereinafter only in so far as is necessary for the reasoning of the Court.

12 According to Article 9(d) of the directive, the derogation for which it provides, namely exemption from the obligation to publish a notice of a call for tenders, is available only if three conditions are fulfilled concurrently. That provision requires the existence of an unforeseeable event, extreme urgency rendering the observance of time-limits laid down by other procedures impossible and, finally, a casual link between the unforeseeable event and the extreme urgency resulting therefrom.

13 The sequence of events analysed in detail by the Advocate General in paragraphs 8 and 13 of his Opinion shows that there was nothing to prevent the Italian Government in this case from complying with the time-limits of the accelerated procedure provided for by the directive.

14 Consequently, it must be recognized that, as the Commission claims, the Italian Government has not demonstrated the existence of extreme urgency within the meaning of Article 9(d) of the directive.

15 Therefore, without there being any need to consider whether the other two conditions for the exemption were fulfilled in this case, it must be held that, by failing to send to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities for publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities a contract notice for the construction of an avalanche barrier in the locality of Colle Isarco/Brennero, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the directive.

Costs

16 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the Italian Republic has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

hereby:

1. Declares that, by failing to send to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities for publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities a contract notice for the construction of an avalanche barrier in the locality of Colle Isarco/Brennero, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts;

2. Orders the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

Decree 931/1986 of 2 May 1986 amending the Law on State Contracts (Ley de Contratos del Estado, hereinafter "the LCE", BOE No 114 of 13 May 1986, p. 16920) and by Royal Decree 2528/1986 of 28 November 1986, amending the General Regulation on the Award of State Contracts (Reglamento General de Contratacion del Estado, hereinafter "the RGCE", BOE No 297 of 12 December 1986, p. 40546).

3 The Commission took the view that several provisions of the LCE and the RGCE, together with other provisions capable of affecting the system of public procurement in Spain, contained in the amended version of the local regulations (Royal Legislative Decree 781/1986 of 18 April 1986, BOE No 96 and 97 of 22 and 23 April 1986), the Law of 24 November 1939 on the Organization and Protection of National Industry (Jefatura del Estado, BOE of 15 December 1939, hereinafter "the Law of 24 November 1939") and Royal Decree 946/1978 of 14 April 1978 relating to a procedure for the evaluation and control of pharmaceutical services (BOE No 108 of 8 May 1978, hereinafter "Royal Decree 946/1978") were contrary, as the case may be, to Articles 30 or 59 of the Treaty and/or to Directives 71/305 or 77/62. The Commission therefore initiated against the Kingdom of Spain the procedure provided for in Article 169 of the Treaty and subsequently brought this action before the Court.

4 During the course of the proceedings before the Court, the Commission withdrew that part of its application which related to the Law of 24 November 1939 and to Article 11 of Royal Decree 946/1978 on the ground that they had since been repealed.

5 The provisions of national legislation with regard to which the Court is called upon to give judgment are therefore:

° Article 2, point 3, of the LCE and Article 2, point 3, of the RGCE, which exclude from the field of application of the national rules on public supply contracts, and thus from that of Directive 77/62, certain transactions concluded by the administrative authorities with individuals;

° Article 2, point 8, of the LCE and Article 2, point 8, of the RGCE, which exclude from the field of application of the national rules on public works and supply contracts, and consequently from that of both directives, "contracts for which a law expressly lays down an exception";

° Article 29 bis, paragraph 1, points 1 and 3, of the LCE and Article 93 ter of the RGCE, which exempt certain contracts from the requirement of publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities, laid down in Directive 71/305;

° various provisions of national legislation relating to privately negotiated contracts which are alleged to conflict with the provisions of both directives, namely Article 37, paragraph 1, points 1, 2, 7 and 8 and Article 87, paragraph 4, points 1, 2 and 5 of the LCE, Articles 117 and 247 of the RGCE and Article 120 of the amended text of the local regulations;

° certain provisions of national legislation laying down, in contravention of the terms of both directives and of Article 30 or 59 of the Treaty, the criteria for qualitative selection and the rules for the participation of undertakings in public procurement, namely Article 24, paragraph 1, point 1, Article 25, paragraph 1, points 1 and 3, Article 284, paragraph 5, Article 287, paragraph 2, Article 312, paragraph 2, Article 320, paragraph 3, point 5, and Article 341 of the RGCE;

° finally Article 244 of the RGCE, which lays down certain rules in the technical field which are alleged to be contrary to Article 7 of Directive 77/62.

6 Reference is made to the Report for the Hearing for a fuller account of the facts of the case, the procedure and the pleas in law and arguments of the parties, which are mentioned or discussed hereinafter only in so far as is necessary for the reasoning of the Court.

Article 2, point 3, of the LCE and Article 2, point 3, of the RGCE

7 The Commission considers that by excluding from the national rules on public procurement "transactions effected by the administrative authorities with individuals as regards goods or rights, dealings in which are governed (' mediatizado') by legal provisions, or products controlled (' intervenidos'), subject to a monopoly (' estancados') or prohibited (' prohibidos')", Article 2, point 3, of the LCE and Article 2, point 3, of the RGCE are incompatible with Directive 77/62 in two respects. First, those provisions are so general and their wording so unclear that they give rise to legal uncertainty and do not comply with the requirement that directives must be correctly transposed. Secondly, in breach of the directive, those provisions exclude public supply contracts from its field of application.

8 To demonstrate the compatibility of the contested provisions with Directive 77/62 the Spanish Government contends in the first place that Article 2, point 3, of the LCE and the corresponding provision of the RGCE are reference provisions which can be applied and produce legal consequences only in relation to the legislative provisions to which they refer. Contrary to the Commission' s contention, those provisions serve to increase legal certainty inasmuch as they list exhaustively the contracts excluded from their field of application and require any exclusion to be laid down by law.

9 Those arguments must be rejected.

10 It is apparent from the ninth recital in the preamble to Directive 77/62 that:

> "... provision must be made for exceptional cases where measures concerning the coordination of procedures may not necessarily be applied, but such cases must be expressly limited".

It follows that the only permitted exceptions to the application of Directive 77/62 are those which are exhaustively and expressly mentioned therein.

11 Articles 2(2) and 3 of Directive 77/62, which list the public supply contracts to which it does not apply, do not include those relating to the products referred to in Article 2, point 3, of the LCE and Article 2, point 3, of the RGCE. Moreover, as the Commission has correctly emphasized, none of the exceptions authorized by the directive is defined by reference to the type of, or the legal arrangements relating to, the product concerned, in contrast to the contested provisions of the Spanish legislation.

12 In those circumstances those provisions cannot be regarded as effecting a correct transposition of Directive 77/62 into national law. That finding is confirmed by the fact that the Spanish Government, without citing specific laws, has indicated that, by virtue of the contested provisions, contracts relating to products such as medicinal products, postage stamps, stamped paper, tobacco, electricity and gas are excluded from the application of the rules on public procurement.

13 Secondly, the Spanish Government contends that the contested provisions are justified in the light of other provisions of Community law, in particular Articles 36, 90(2) and 223 of the Treaty.

14 That argument cannot be upheld either.

15 It is true that national rules applicable to trade in certain products, which are compatible with Community law by virtue of the aforementioned provisions of the Treaty, must also be observed in connection with the award of public supply contracts. However, that fact is not such as to justify a priori a general failure to apply the rules relating to the award of such contracts as far as those products are concerned.

16 The Spanish Government contends, in the third place, that the exclusion of certain contracts provided for in Article 2, point 3, of the LCE and the corresponding provision of the RGCE may be justified by Article 6(1)(b) of Directive 77/62, according to which authorities awarding contracts may award their supply contracts without applying the open or restricted procedures referred to in Article 4(1) and (2),

> "when, for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with protection of exclusive rights, the goods supplied may be manufactured or delivered only by a particular supplier".

17 In that respect it is sufficient to note that the contracts covered by that provision, even though they need not be awarded according to the open or restricted procedures, are not excluded from the field of application of the directive but remain subject, in accordance with Article 4(3) thereof, to Article 7 on common rules in the technical field.

18 It follows from the foregoing considerations that the Commission' s complaint with regard to Article 2, point 3, of the LCE and Article 2, point 3, of the RGCE must be regarded as well founded.

Article 2, point 8, of the LCE and Article 2, point 8, of the RGCE

19 The Commission considers that Article 2, point 8, of the LCE and Article 2, point 8, of the RGCE, which exclude from the field of application of the national rules on public procurement "contracts for which a law expressly lays down an exception", constitute a further exclusion of a general nature which is contrary to both Directive 71/305 and Directive 77/62.

20 The Spanish Government contends, on the other hand, that the contested provisions are merely reference provisions which in themselves are not contrary to Community law.

21 That argument cannot be upheld.

22 In the first place, as the Court has stated in paragraph 10 of this judgment, the only permitted exceptions to the application of Directive 77/62 are those exhaustively and expressly mentioned therein. That applies equally to Directive 71/305, the seventh recital in the preamble to which is identical to the ninth recital, previously quoted, in the preamble to Directive 77/62.

23 Moreover it follows that, as the Court has consistently held (see, in particular, the judgment in Case C-131/88 Commission v Germany [1991] ECR I-825, paragraph 6), the transposition of a directive into national law does not necessarily require that its provisions be incorporated formally and verbatim in express specific legislation; a general legal context may, depending on the content of the directive, be adequate for the purpose provided that it does indeed guarantee the full application of the directive in a sufficiently clear and precise manner so that, where the directive is intended to create rights for individuals, the persons concerned may ascertain the full extent of their rights and, where appropriate, rely on them before the national courts. Those requirements of clarity and precision are all the more imperative where, as in this case, exceptions to or derogations from the rules laid down by a directive are to be transposed into national law.

24 In addition, as the Commission has pointed out without being challenged by the Spanish Government, all the exceptions exhaustively and expressly listed by Directives 71/305 and 77/62 have been incorporated in express, specific provisions of the LCE or the RGCE. Consequently a provision allowing other exceptions to be introduced by other laws is likely to create an ambiguous legal situation making it impossible for those concerned to ascertain their rights and obligations without ambiguity.

25 In those circumstances, the general exception laid down in Article 2, point 8, of the LCE and in Article 2, point 8, of the RGCE by reference to other unspecified laws does not constitute a transposition into national law corresponding fully to the requirements of clarity and certainty in legal situations which directives seek to fulfil (see, in particular, the judgment in Case 102/79 Commission v Belgium [1980] ECR 1473, paragraph 11).

26 It follows that the Commission' s complaint with regard to those provisions is also well founded.

Article 29 bis, paragraph 1, points 1 and 3, of the LCE and Article 93 ter of the RGCE

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

27 The Commission claims that Directive 71/305 contains no exception of the kind laid down by Article 29 bis, paragraph 1, points 1 and 3, of the LCE and Article 93 ter of the RGCE, exempting from the requirement of publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities, set out in Article 12 of Directive 71/305, contracts "concerning industrial installations of the mechanical, electrical or energy-producing variety, with the exception of any part of such installations as comes within the sphere of building or civil engineering" and those "concerning excavation, shaft-sinking, dredging and waste disposal works carried out in connection with the extraction of minerals (mining and quarrying industries)". In view of the exhaustive nature of the exceptions laid down, those provisions of national legislation are therefore alleged to be contrary to Directive 71/305.

28 The Spanish Government denies that the contracts in question come within the field of application of Directive 71/305. In that respect it contends in particular that such contracts are not "public works contracts", as defined in Article 1(a) thereof.

29 That point of view must be upheld.

30 It follows from Article 1(a) of Directive 71/305 that "public works contracts" within the meaning of the directive are those "which have as their object one of the activities referred to in Article 2 of the Council Directive" (71/304/EEC) "of 26 July 1971 concerning the abolition of restrictions on freedom to provide services in the field of public works contracts and on the award of public works contracts to contractors acting through agencies or branches" (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 678). According to Article 2(2) of the latter directive, it specifically does not apply to the works mentioned by the contested provisions of the Spanish legislation.

31 However, the Commission argues that the reference to Article 2 of Directive 71/304, contained in Article 1(a) of Directive 71/305, must be regarded as relating exclusively to paragraph 1 of that provision. It takes the view that Directive 71/304, which reaffirms the fundamental principle of the abolition of restrictions on freedom to provide services, laid down in Article 59 of the Treaty, cannot in any event restrict the field of application of Directive 71/305, particularly as, since the expiry of the transitional period, Article 2(2) of Directive 71/304 has had no practical effect by reason of the fact that Article 59 of the Treaty, as the Court has recognized, is directly applicable.

32 That line of argument cannot be upheld either.

33 As the Advocate General states in section 27 of his Opinion, although the prohibition of restrictions on freedom to provide services, laid down by the Treaty, applies in principle to all fields of Community law, it is nevertheless for the Council to supplement that prohibition, which follows directly from the Treaty, with rules coordinating or harmonizing national provisions which do not conflict with the prohibition, and consequently to determine the field of application of such rules.

34 It follows from the foregoing considerations that the Commission' s complaint with regard to Article 29 bis, paragraph 1, points 1 and 3, of the LCE and Article 93 ter of the RGCE must be rejected.

Article 37, paragraph 1, points 1, 2, 7 and 8, and Article 87, paragraph 4, points 1, 2 and 5, of the LCE, Articles 117 and 247 of the RGCE and Article 120 of the amended local regulations

35 The Commission considers that various provisions of Spanish legislation authorizing the award of privately negotiated contracts, that is to say, for public works contracts, Article 37, paragraph 1, points 1, 2, 7 and 8, of the LCE and Article 117, paragraph 1, points 1, 2, 7 and 8, of the RGCE and, for public supply contracts, Article 87, paragraph 4, points 1, 2 and 5 of the LCE, Article 247, paragraph 4, points 1, 2 and 5 of the RGCE and Article 120, paragraph 1, points 1, 2 and 6 of the amended local regulations, are contrary to Article 9 of Directive 71/305 and

Article 6 of Directive 77/62 respectively, on the ground that the cases to which they relate do not correspond, or do not exactly correspond, to those listed by the said provisions of the two directives.

36 It should be stressed first of all that the provisions of Article 9 of Directive 71/305 and of Article 6 of Directive 77/62, which authorize derogations from the rules intended to ensure the effectiveness of the rights conferred by the Treaty in the field of public works and supply contracts, must be strictly interpreted (see, as regards Article 9 of Directive 71/305, the judgment in Case 199/85 Commission v Italy [1987] ECR 1039, paragraph 14). For the same reasons, the abovementioned provisions specifying the cases in which privately negotiated contracts may be concluded must be regarded as exhaustive.

37 It follows from a comparison of the provisions of Spanish legislation at issue with the relevant provisions of the Community directives, made by the Advocate General in sections 37 to 59 of his Opinion, that the Spanish rules either allow the award of privately negotiated contracts in cases not envisaged by the directives or impose for the procedure for privately negotiated contracts conditions less strict than those resulting from the corresponding provisions of the directives.

38 It follows that the Commission' s complaint with regard to the contested provisions of Spanish legislation allowing the award of privately negotiated contracts is well founded.

Article 24, paragraph 1, point 1, and Article 25, paragraph 1, points 1 and 3, of the RGCE

39 The Commission claims that the evidential requirements laid down by Article 25, paragraph 1, points 1 and 3, of the RGCE in order to establish, as required by Article 24, paragraph 1, point 1, thereof, the legal personality and capacity of tenderers to enter into contracts and to assume obligations are not provided for by Directives 71/305 and 77/62 and cannot therefore justify the exclusion of tenderers who do not fulfil them. It takes the view, moreover, that in so far as those provisions apply to works contracts they are also contrary to Article 59 of the Treaty, inasmuch as they apply only to foreign undertakings or impose on them burdens in addition to those which they already bear in their country of origin and which are not justified by any objective in the public interest.

40 The Court considers that this complaint in fact relates only to Article 25, paragraph 1, points 1 and 3, of the RGCE, inasmuch as those provisions prescribe certain methods of attesting the legal capacity of tenderers. Moreover, the Commission expressly conceded at the hearing that it did not deny that the requirement that tenderers should have legal capacity was, in itself, compatible with Community law.

41 With regard to the complaint as thus clarified, it should be pointed out that in its judgment in Case 76/81 Transporoute v Minister of Public Works ([1982] ECR 417, paragraph 9) the Court has already stated that Directive 71/305 does not authorize the Member States to seek references other than those expressly mentioned in the directive except for the purpose of assessing the financial and economic standing of the contractors as provided for in Article 25 thereof. That finding applies by analogy to Directive 77/62, the relevant rules of which correspond in substance to those of Directive 71/305.

42 However, the documentary evidence envisaged in that respect by Article 25, paragraph 1, points 1 and 3, of the RGCE is not intended to establish the financial and economic standing of undertakings, nor does it form part of the evidence production of which may be required by virtue of the other relevant provisions of the two directives.

43 Accordingly the complaint alleging infringement of Directives 71/305 and 77/62 must be held to be well founded and consequently it is unnecessary to inquire whether the contested provisions are also contrary to Article 59 of the Treaty.

Article 284, paragraph 5, of the RGCE

44 The Commission considers that by requiring contractors from other Member States who wish to furnish proof of their capacity by means other than classification in Spain in the official list of recognized contractors referred to in Article 28(1) of Directive 71/305 to produce a certificate issued by the Advisory Committee for Public Contracts to the effect that they have not been classified or that their classification has not been suspended or cancelled, Article 284, paragraph 5, of the RGCE imposes a condition, not envisaged by Directive 71/305 and therefore contrary thereto, upon the contractor' s option to use such means. That condition is also alleged to be contrary to Article 59 of the Treaty in so far as it imposes an administrative burden on the contractors concerned, which deprives of any practical effect the right of such persons to attest their capacity by means other than classification.

45 It should be stressed in the first place that there is nothing in Article 28 of Directive 71/305 to support the view that registration in the official list of contractors recognized in the State in which the contract is to be awarded may be required of contractors established in other Member States. On the contrary, Article 28(3) entitles contractors registered in an official list in any Member State whatever to use such registration, within the limits laid down in that provision, as an alternative means of proving before the awarding authority of another Member State that they satisfy the criteria for qualitative selection listed in Articles 23 to 26 of the directive (see the judgments in Transporoute, previously cited, paragraphs 12 and 13, and in Joined Cases 27 to 29/86 CEI v Association Intercommunale pour les Autoroutes des Ardennes [1987] ECR 3347, paragraph 24). Undertakings therefore have the choice of furnishing proof of their capacity either by such registration or by the means and documents mentioned in Article 23 to 26.

46 Furthermore, Directive 71/305 does not make the exercise of that choice subject to any condition of the type envisaged in Article 284, paragraph 5, of the RGCE and does not mention the certificate referred to by that provision as one of the documents which undertakings intending to furnish proof of their capacity by means other than registration in an official list of recognized contractors may be requested to produce.

47 It follows that the Commission' s complaint alleging infringement of Directive 71/305 must be regarded as well founded and that consequently there is no need to inquire whether the provision at issue is also contrary to Article 59 of the Treaty.

Article 287, paragraph 2, of the RGCE

48 According to the Commission, Article 287, paragraph 2, of the RGCE is contrary to Directive 71/305 and to Article 59 of the Treaty inasmuch as it provides that for the purpose of classification of contractors in Spain, "preference shall be given to an assessment of the personal, material and financial means permanently available to the undertakings on the national territory".

49 It should be emphasized, in the first place, that Article 28(4) of Directive 71/305 provides that "for the registration of contractors of other Member States in such a list" (the official list of recognized contractors) "no further proofs and statements may be required other than those requested of nationals and, in any event, only those provided for under Articles 23 to 26".

50 Secondly, those provisions do not envisage the production of proof or statements relating to the matters referred to in Article 287, paragraph 2, of the RGCE. With regard to Article 26(c) and (d) of Directive 71/305, on which the Spanish Government relies, it is important to note that although that provision makes it possible to require statements of the tools, plant and technical equipment available to the contractor for carrying out the work and of the firm' s average annual manpower and the size of its managerial staff for the past three years, it makes no distinction as to whether or not those items are situated on the territory of the State in which the contract is to be awarded.

51 Hence the complaint alleging infringement of Directive 71/305 must be considered well founded, and there is no need to inquire whether Article 287, paragraph 2, of the RGCE is contrary to Article 59 of the Treaty.

Article 312, paragraph 2, and Article 320, paragraph 3, point 5, of the RGCE

52 As regards Article 312, paragraph 2, of the RGCE, it is sufficient to state that the Spanish Government does not dispute that that provision, which defines the probative value in Spain of classification certificates issued by another Member State, takes no account of the provisions of Article 26(b) and (d) of Directive 71/305 and is therefore contrary to the first subparagraph of Article 28(3) thereof.

53 The same applies to Article 320, paragraph 3, point 5, of the RGCE, which provides that the technical ability of suppliers may be evidenced by product quality certificates issued by Spanish official institutes or agencies. The Spanish Government admits that that provision is contrary to Article 23(1)(e) of Directive 77/62, which permits a requirement that such certificates are to be produced by the person concerned but not that they are to be drawn up by an agency of the State in which the contract is to be awarded.

54 In those circumstances, the complaint relating to Article 312, paragraph 2, and Article 320, paragraph 3, point 5, of the RGCE must be regarded as well founded and consequently there is no need to inquire whether Article 320, paragraph 3, point 5, also conflicts with Article 30 of the Treaty, as the Commission has claimed.

Article 341 of the RGCE

55 The Commission considers that Article 341 of the RGCE, which authorizes the government to exempt contractors who have obtained classification in Spain from giving provisional security in the case of tenders for works contracts, is incompatible with Directive 71/305 and with Article 59 of the Treaty in so far as such an exemption constitutes a financial incentive to obtain classification and has the effect of restricting in practice the right of undertakings to tender without being classified.

56 It should be borne in mind that, as the Court has stated in paragraph 45 of this judgment, Directive 71/305 entitles contractors to furnish proof of their capacity either by the means referred to in Articles 23 to 26 of the directive or by their registration in an official list of recognized contractors, which need not necessarily be that of the State in which the contract is to be awarded. The exercise of that right is impaired by a provision such as Article 341 of the RGCE, which makes it possible to exempt only contractors registered in such a list from giving provisional security.

57 However, the Spanish Government contends that the giving of provisional security fulfils a function comparable to that of the requirement of classification itself, which is to guarantee the performance of the contracts concluded, with the result that exemption cannot be granted to contractors who have furnished proof of their capacity by a method other than classification.

58 That argument cannot be upheld.

59 As the Commission has correctly stated, subparagraphs (d) and (g) of the first paragraph of Article 23 of Directive 71/305, which make it possible to exclude from participation in a contract any contractor who has been guilty of grave professional misconduct or has been guilty of serious misrepresentation with regard to the criteria laid down for qualitative selection, provide the authorities awarding contracts with sufficient means to ensure, with the same effectiveness as classification itself or the threat of its suspension, the performance of the contracts concluded. There is therefore no need to restrict the grant of the exemption in question to those contractors who have furnished proof of their capacity by classification in Spain.

60 It follows from the foregoing considerations that the Commission' s complaint with regard to Article 341 of the RGCE is well founded and there is consequently no need to inquire whether that provision also conflicts with Article 59 of the Treaty.

Article 244 of the RGCE

61 The first point to note is that the Spanish Government has acknowledged that this provision did not correctly transpose into national law the order of preference of the standards by reference to which the technical specifications in public supply contracts are to be defined, as laid down in Article 7(1) of Directive 77/62. The fact invoked by the Spanish Government that that provision was substantially amended by Council Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988 amending Directive 77/62/EEC coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts and repealing certain provisions of Directive 80/767/EEC (OJ 1980 L 127, p. 1), which granted the Kingdom of Spain an additional period for its implementation, is not such as to justify that acknowledged failure to fulfil its obligations. In any event the period prescribed for the transposition of Directive 88/295 into Spanish law expired on 1 March 1992.

62 Furthermore, Article 244, paragraph 2, of the RGCE requires the words "or equivalent" to be included only in the case of references to trade marks, patents or types, whereas Article 7(2) of Directive 77/62 requires the inclusion of those words also in cases in which the technical specifications mention goods of a specific origin or make.

63 In those circumstances the Commission' s complaint relating to Article 244 of the RGCE must be regarded as well founded.

64 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, it must be held in terms of the form of order sought by the Commission that the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directives 71/305 and 77/62, except in so far as concerns the Law of 24 November 1939, Article 11 of Royal Decree 946/1978, Article 29 bis, paragraph 1, points 1 and 3, of the LCE and Article 24, paragraph 1, point 1, and Article 93 ter of the RGCE.

1. Only where a measure is challenged on the basis of serious and convincing evidence of breach of the principle of inalterability of Community measures can the Court accede to a request that it order production of a decision, in the language or languages in which it is binding, authenticated by the signatures of the President and the Executive Secretary, in order to verify that the texts notified conform exactly with the text adopted by the college of Commissioners.

2. Where there is concertation by undertakings regarding the manner in which they intend responding to an invitation to tender, involving the exchange of information regarding, inter alia, the costs of the product concerned, its specific characteristics and a breakdown of the price tenders, having in particular the object and effect of revealing to his competitors the course of conduct which each contractor has decided to adopt or contemplates adopting on the market and being capable of leading to the fixing of certain conditions for the transaction, practical cooperation between contractors is deliberately substituted for the risks of competition and an infringement of Article 85(1) of the Treaty is thereby committed.

3. The joint fixing of the price increases which all the undertakings participating in a tendering procedure will include in their price tenders, and which will be received by the successful undertaking but passed on to a trade organization entrusted with sharing them among all the undertakings that submitted tenders, making it possible to ensure that the contract awarder bears, on a flat-rate basis, the calculation costs incurred by all the participants in the tendering procedure, is caught by the prohibitions laid down in Article 85(1)(a) of the Treaty. First, it constitutes fixing of part of the price and, secondly, it restricts competition between undertakings as regards their calculation costs and, lastly, it leads to a general increase in prices.

4. The prohibitions laid down by Article 85(1) of the Treaty apply to a system of rules operating within a trade organization which, in relation to contracts in tendering procedures, makes it possible, through agreements between the undertakings concerned, after comparison of the prices that they intend proposing, to designate the undertaking offering the lowest price, which will enjoy protection against the risk of submission by its competitors of price tenders adjusted downwards, and will be the only one authorized to negotiate the content of its tender with the contract awarder.

Even if such protection is in fact accorded to the undertaking submitting the best tender from the tenderers' point of view, it is for the party awarding the contract to reach its own conclusion, which may involve subjective preferences on matters such as the reputation of the contractor, his availability and his proximity.

5. A system of rules operating within a trade organization which, as between the undertakings interested in a tendering procedure, organizes the exchange of information and excludes certain forms of competition is caught by the prohibitions contained in Article 85(1) of the Treaty, since its very existence undermines the freedom of contractors to join or not join it, inasmuch as non-membership deprives them of certain advantages afforded by the system and brings them into competition, not with a number of contractors acting independently from each other, but with a number of contractors which have common interests and information and therefore behave in the same way.

6. An agreement which extends over the whole territory of one of the Member States has, by its very nature, the effect of reinforcing compartmentalization of national markets, thereby holding up the economic interpenetration which the Treaty is intended to bring about.

7. For restrictive arrangements to be prohibited by Article 85(1) of the Treaty, it is not necessary for them appreciably to affect trade between Member States but merely to be capable of having that effect. Since a potential effect is sufficient, future development of trade may be taken into account in assessing the effect of the restrictive arrangements on trade between Member States, whether or not it was foreseeable. As regards the appreciable nature of that effect, the more limited the trade the greater is the likelihood that it will be affected by the restrictive arrangements.

8. It is for the Commission, exercising its power under Article 85(3) of the Treaty, to grant exemption from the prohibitions contained in Article 85(1) and to take account of the particular nature of different branches of the economy and the problems peculiar to them.

9. It is for undertakings seeking an exemption under Article 85(3) to establish, on the basis of documentary evidence, that an exemption is justified.

Accordingly, they have no reason to criticize the Commission for failing to put forward alternative solutions or to indicate in what respects it would regard the grant of an exemption as justified.

10. In applying the competition rules, all that is incumbent upon the Commission, by virtue of its obligation to state reasons, is to mention the matters of fact and of law and the considerations which prompted it to take a decision rejecting an application for exemption, and the applicants may not require it to discuss all the matters of fact and law raised by them in the administrative procedure.

11. The review carried out by the Community judicature of the complex economic assessments undertaken by the Commission in the exercise of the discretion conferred on it by Article 85(3) of the Treaty in relation to each of the four conditions laid down therein must be limited to ascertaining whether the procedural rules have been complied with, whether proper reasons have been provided, whether the facts have been accurately stated and whether there has been any manifest error of appraisal or misuse of powers.

12. The principle of subsidiarity did not, before the entry into force of the Treaty on European Union, constitute a general principle of law by reference to which the legality of Community acts should be reviewed. No measure adopted before the entry into force of the second paragraph of Article 3b of the EC Treaty may be reviewed by reference to that provision, since the latter would thereby be endowed with retroactive effect.

13. The prohibition of imposing fines laid down in Article 15(5)(a) of Regulation No 17 applies only in relation to agreements which have actually been notified and not to agreements of which notification is unnecessary by virtue of Article 4(2)(1) of that regulation. Consequently, even if an agreement is covered by Article 4(2) of Council Regulation No 17, the Commission is entitled to impose fines on the undertakings which applied it, since the agreement had not been notified.

14. In order for an infringement of the competition rules to be regarded as having been committed intentionally, it is not necessary for the undertaking to have been aware that it was transgressing the prohibition laid down by those provisions; it is sufficient that it could not have been unaware that the conduct concerned had the object or effect of restricting competition in the Common Market.

15. The general term "infringement" used in Article 15(2) of Regulation No 17 covers, without distinction, agreements, concerted practices and decisions of associations of undertakings and its use indicates that the upper limits for fines laid down in that provision apply in the same way to agreements and concerted practices as to decisions of associations of undertakings. It follows that the upper limit of 10% of the turnover must be calculated by reference to the turnover achieved by each of the undertakings that are parties to the agreements and concerted practices concerned or by all the members of the associations of undertakings, at least where the internal rules of the association empower it to bind its members. The correctness of this analysis is confirmed by the fact that, in determining the amount of the fines, account may be taken inter alia of such influence as the undertaking may have been able to exercise in the market, in particular by reason of its size and economic power, of which its turnover may give an indication. The influence which an association of undertakings may have had on the market depends not on its own "turnover", which reveals neither its size nor its economic power, but rather on the turnover of its members, which gives an indication of its size and economic power.

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES (First Chamber), composed of: R. Schintgen, President of the Chamber, H. Kirschner, B. Vesterdorf, K. Lenaerts and C.W. Bellamy, Judges,

Registrar: H. Jung,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 11 July 1994

gives the following

Judgment

Costs

412 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful parrty is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party' s pleadings. Since the applicants have been unsuccessful, they must be ordered to pay the costs jointly and severally, including the costs of the application for interim measures.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (First Chamber)

hereby:

1. Dismisses the application;

2. Orders the applicants jointly and severally to pay the costs, including those relating to the application for interim measures.

The facts

1 As from 1952, a number of associations of contractors came into being in the Netherlands building market, grouped according to sector or region. They drew up rules for their members with a view to organizing competition.

2 In 1963, those associations set up the Vereniging van Samenwerkende Prijsregelende Organisaties in de Bouwnijverheid (hereinafter "the SPO") whose object, according to Article 3 of its statutes, is "to promote and administer orderly competition, to prevent improper conduct in price tendering and to promote the formation of economically justified prices". To that end, the SPO draws up rules and regulations (hereinafter "the rules" or "the rules and regulations") providing for "institutionalized regulation of prices and competition" and is empowered to impose penalties on contractors affiliated to its member organizations if they breach their obligations under those rules. Implementation of the rules is entrusted to eight executive offices, whose operations are controlled by the SPO. The member associations of the SPO at present number 28 and their total membership exceeds 4 000 building undertakings established in the Netherlands.

3 In 1969, most of the sectoral or regional associations acceded to the SPO.

4 In the period from 1973 to 1979, the various associations undertook standardization of their rules (hereinafter "the previous rules").

5 On 3 June 1980, the Erecode voor Ondernemers in het Bouwbedrijf (Code of honour for contractors in the building industry, hereinafter "Code of Honour") was adopted by the General Assembly of the SPO and made binding on all the contractors belonging to the member associations of the SPO. The Code of Honour provides for a uniform system of penalties for infringements of the rules standardized between 1973 and 1979 and certain material provisions necessary for the application of those rules. The Code of Honour entered into force on 1 October 1980.

6 On 16 August 1985 the Commission sent to the SPO under Article 11 of Council Regulation No 17 of 6 February 1962, First Regulation implementing Articles 85 and 86 of the Treaty (OJ, English Special Edition, 1959-62, p. 87, hereinafter "Regulation No 17") a request for information concerning the participation of foreign undertakings in the SPO.

7 By Ministerial Decree of 2 June 1986, the Netherlands authorities adopted the Uniform Aanbestedingsreglement (uniform rules on tendering, hereinafter "the UAR") laying down the rules for the award of public contracts, which entered into force on 1 November 1986.

8 On 9 October 1986, the General Assembly of the SPO adopted two (Uniforme Prijsregelende Reglementen (Uniform Price-Regulating Rules, hereinafter "UPR rules") laying down the procedural framework for competition between contractors tendering for building works. The first set of UPR rules concerns invitations to tender under the restricted procedure (hereinafter "the UPRR rules") and the second set concerns invitations to tender under the open procedure (hereinafter "the UPRO rules"). The two sets of rules have the same structure and contain precise and detailed provisions concerning the obligations incumbent on undertakings belonging to the SPO and the operating conditions thereof. The UPR rules are themselves supplemented by four regulations and three annexes. All those rules and regulations entered into force on 1 April 1987.

9 By Royal Decree of 29 December 1986 the Netherlands Government declared those rules non-binding, with the exception of those which fulfilled certain conditions. That decree entered into force on 1 April 1987. The UPR rules fulfilled the conditions laid down by the royal decree.

10 On 15 June 1987 the Commission carried out inspections at the SPO under Article 14 of Regulation No 17. In July and November of the same year it did likewise at the Zuid Nederlandse Aannemers Vereniging (hereinafter "the ZNAV"). The purpose of those inspections was to establish whether the SPO rules were liable to affect trade between Member States.

11 On 13 January 1988 the SPO notified the UPR rules and the Code of Honour to the Commission with a view to obtaining a negative clearance or, in the alternative, an exemption under Article 85(3) of the EEC Treaty (hereinafter "the Treaty").

12 On 23 June 1988 the UPR rules were amended. The amendment entered into force on 1 July 1988.

13 On 13 July 1989, the SPO supplemented its notification of 13 January 1988.

14 On 26 July 1989 the municipality of Rotterdam (Netherlands) complained to the Commission concerning certain parts of the SPO' s rules and regulations.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

15 On 7 November 1989 the Commission decided to initiate a procedure against the SPO and sent a statement of objections to it on 5 December 1989.

16 The SPO responded to the statement of objections on 5 April 1990.

17 The administrative hearing provided for by Article 19 of Regulation No 17 was held on 12 June 1990.

18 On 15 March 1991 the SPO entered into discussions with the Commission to examine whether the rules and regulations notified might qualify for an exemption if they were amended. The SPO and the Commission exchanged letters on this matter between 12 April 1991 and 15 January 1992.

19 On 5 February 1992 the Commission adopted the contested decision.

20 On 12 February 1992 a decision dated 5 February 1992 bearing reference number C(92) 66 def. was sent to the applicants. It was notified on 17 February 1992. A passage from that decision was missing and the addresses of various associations of undertakings mentioned in the operative part of the decision were incorrect.

21 On 26 February 1992 a decision dated 5 February 1992 bearing reference number C(92) 66 def. rev. was sent to the applicants (and reached the SPO on 2 March 1992). The text of that decision included the passage missing from the text notified on 17 February 1992 and subsequently added. The errors in the addresses of certain associations of undertakings had also been rectified.

22 In Article 1 of the decision the Commission finds that the statutes of the SPO of 10 December 1963, as subsequently amended, the two sets of UPR rules of 9 October 1986 and the regulations and annexes forming part of them, the previous and similar UPR rules which replaced them and the Code of Honour, except for Article 10 thereof, constituted infringements of Article 85(1) of the Treaty.

23 In Article 2 of its decision, the Commission rejects the application made on 13 January 1988 for an exemption under Article 85(3) of the Treaty in respect of the UPR rules of 9 October 1986 and the Code of Honour.

24 In Article 3(1) and (2) of the decision the Commission requires the SPO and its member organizations to bring to an end immediately the infringements found and to inform the undertakings concerned in writing of the content of the decision and the fact that the infringements have been brought to an end, indicating the practical consequences thereof, such as the freedom of each of such undertakings to withdraw at any time from the said rules and regulations. The SPO and its member organizations were also required to communicate to the Commission, within two months following notification of the decision, the information transmitted to the undertakings in accordance with Article 3(2).

25 In Article 4 of the decision the Commission imposed fines totalling ECU

22 498 000 on the 28 associations concerned.

Procedure

26 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 13 April 1992 the SPO and 28 member associations of it brought an action under the second paragraph of Article 173 of the Treaty seeking a declaration from the Court that Commission Decision 92/204/EEC of 5 February 1992 relating to a proceeding pursuant to Article 85 of the Treaty (IV/31.572 and IV/31.571 ° Building and Construction Industry in the Netherlands OJ 1992 L 92, p. 1) was non-existent or, alternatively, a declaration that it was void.

27 By a separate document received at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on the same day the applicants also applied under Articles 185 and 186 of the Treaty and Article 105(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance for interim measures suspending the operation of the contested decision.

28 The parties presented oral argument on 18 June 1992.

29 On 16 July 1992, the President of the Court of First Instance made an order, the operative part of which is as follows:

1. Operation of Article 3 of the Commission decision relating to a proceeding pursuant to Article 85 of the EEC Treaty (IV/31.572 and IV/ 31.571 ° Building and Construction Industry in the Netherlands) is suspended in so far as it concerns elements of the contested rules and regulations that are not linked to the existence of a concerted practice and an exchange of information between contractors, to the granting of preference or the direct passing on to contract awarders of amounts relating to reimbursements for calculation costs and contributions to trade organizations.

2. The applicants shall communicate to the Commission and the Court of First Instance, not later than 1 October 1992, the measures they have taken to make the system function in conformity with this order.

3. For the rest, the application for suspension of operation is dismissed.

4. Costs are reserved.

30 By letter received at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 14 August 1992 the applicants forwarded to the President of the Court the provisional instructions, applicable since 20 July 1992, which the first applicant had sent to the other applicants in compliance with the order of the President of the Court of First Instance of 16 July 1992.

31 On 27 August 1992 the Netherlands company Dennendael BV sought leave to intervene in support of the defendant pursuant to Article 37 of the Protocol on the Statute (EEC) of the Court of Justice.

32 By order of 12 January 1993 the Court of First Instance granted leave for that company to intervene in support of the defendant.

33 On 21 January 1993 the intervener lodged its statement in intervention.

34 By letter of 17 November 1993 the intervener informed the Court of First Instance that it wished to withdraw its intervention, and the Court took formal note thereof by order of 4 May 1994.

35 Upon hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court of First Instance (First Chamber) decided to open the oral procedure without any preparatory inquiry. However, the Court invited the parties to answer certain questions in writing before the hearing.

36 Following the judgment delivered by the Court of Justice on 15 June 1994 in Case 137/92 P Commission v BASF and Others [1994] ECR I-2555, the Court of First Instance, by order of 27 June 1994, called on the Commission to "produce the decision adopted by the Commission at its sitting of 5 February 1992 relating to a procedure pursuant to Article 85 of the EEC Treaty (IV/31.572 and IV/32.571 ° Building and Construction Industry in the Netherlands) authenticated at that time in the language in which it is binding by the signatures of the President and the Executive Secretary pursuant to the first paragraph of Article 12 of the Commission' s Rules of Procedure as in force at that time" and to forward that document to the Court of First Instance "no later than 6 July 1994".

37 Following that order, by letter of 4 July 1994 the Commission lodged a copy of the Commission decision of 5 February 1992 bearing reference number C(92) 66 def. rev. and the signature of the President of the Commission and of its Secretary General, preceded by the words "the present decision was adopted by the Commission at its 1092nd meeting held in Brussels on 5 February 1992. It comprises 92 pages plus annexes". It also lodged certain other documents.

38 The first of those documents is a letter which counsel for one of the applicants sent to the relevant official of the Directorate-General for Competition (DG IV) on 19 February 1992 indicating that in the decision which had been notified to him something was missing between pages 86 and 87. He asked that official to undertake the necessary checks and take the necessary rectifying measures.

39 The second document is a fax, also dated 19 February 1992, which the official in question sent to an official of the Secretariat General of the Commission, asking him to establish "whether the version of the decision adopted by the Commission and notified to its addressees conforms perfectly with the draft and, if necessary, to take the action needed to ensure that the addressees of the decision are formally apprised of the full text thereof".

40 The third document is a letter of 21 February 1992 sent to the relevant official of DG IV by one of the lawyers for the applicants in which he asks the Commission to notify only to SPO the copies of the rectified version of the decision since the addresses of some of its member organizations were incorrect.

41 The fourth document is a letter from the relevant official of DG IV, also dated 21 February 1992, to counsel for the applicants in which he states that, following a telephone conversation with one of them, the Secretary General was considering different methods of (re-)notification with respect to all the organizations to which the decision was addressed (at their rectified addresses, where appropriate).

42 The parties presented oral argument and answered questions put to them by the Court at the hearing on 11 July 1994. During the hearing, a film concerning the rules and regulations at issue in this case was shown at the request of the applicants and their expert was heard.

Forms of order sought

43 The applicants claim that the Court should:

(i) declare that the Commission' s measure entitled "Commission decision of 5 February 1992 relating to a proceeding pursuant to Article 85 of the EEC Treaty (IV/31.572 and IV/32.571 ° Building and Construction Industry in the Netherlands)" is non-existent;

(ii) in the alternative, annul the Commission decision of 5 February 1992 relating to a proceeding pursuant to Article 85 of the EEC Treaty (IV/31.572 and IV/32.571 ° Building and Construction Industry in the Netherlands);

(iii) take any other measures considered necessary by the Court;

(iv) order the Commission to pay the costs, including those relating to the application for interim measures lodged under Articles 185 and 186 of the EEC Treaty.

The Commission contends that the Court should:

(i) dismiss the applicants' claims;

(ii) order the applicants to pay the costs, including those of the application for interim measures.

Pleas in law and arguments of the parties

44 The applicants seek two orders: primarily, they seek a finding that the contested decision is non-existent or, at least, void for infringement of essential procedural requirements; in the alternative, they seek annulment of that decision.

The principal claim

Arguments of the parties

45 The applicants claim, primarily, that by virtue of the case-law of the Court of First Instance the contested decision is non-existent (judgment in Case T-79/89 and others BASF and Others v Commission [1992] ECR II-315) for breach of the principle of inalterability of measures and lack of competence ° a page having been added thereto without the approval of the college of the Commissioners ° and infringement of the rules on languages, since the college of Commissioners did not adopt the decision only in the language in which it was binding. A passage was missing from Decision No C(92) 66 def. of 5 February 1992 which was sent to the applicants on 12 February 1992 and notified to them on 17 February 1992 and the addresses of various associations of undertakings mentioned in the operative part of the decision were incorrect.

46 On 26 February 1992, a decision dated 5 February 1992 bearing reference number C(92) 66 def. rev. was sent to the applicants (and reached the SPO on 2 March 1992). It included the passage missing from the text notified on 17 February 1992 and subsequently added. The errors in the addresses of various associations of undertakings had also been rectified.

47 The applicants also state that the document bearing reference number C(92) 66 def. was first sent to each of the applicants by letter of 12 February 1992 signed by the Secretary General of the Commission and that it had not been notified until about 17 February. The fact that the text of the contested decision was not available on the day after 5 February 1992 confirms, in their view, that the text notified to the applicants was not the same as that which had been submitted to the college of Commissioners. The fact that the revised document was given a new reference (C(92) 66 def. rev.) supports the same conclusion. Moreover, they maintain, the Commission does not deny that document C(92) 66 def. rev. was never submitted as such to the college of Commissioners.

48 Consequently, the applicants call on the Commission to prove, by means of a certified extract from the minutes of the Commission meeting of 5 February 1992, that it in fact met to consider the Dutch version of the contested decision and that it was that text which it adopted.

49 The Commission replies that the applicants have produced no evidence to show that the principle of the inalterability of measures was infringed after the adoption of the decision. In the absence of such evidence, the decision should be regarded as lawful (see the judgment of the Court of First Instance in Case T-10/89 Hoechst v Commission [1992] ECR II-629, paragraph 375).

50 It contends that the decision was sent to the applicants a second time because a page was missing from the text sent on 12 February 1992 and that, in the case of certain applicants, it had been sent to an address which was no longer correct. The disappearance of one page was attributable to a technical defect in the Commission' s internal electronic mail system which arose after adoption of the decision.

51 The Commission also states that the college of Commissioners did have before it, on 5 February 1992, the text of the draft decision in all the Community languages, including Dutch. That draft was adopted at that meeting.

Findings of the Court

52 The Court finds, first, that it follows from paragraph 52 of the judgment of the Court of Justice in Case C-137/92P, Commission v BASF, cited above, that the gravity of the irregularities complained of by the applicants, which concern the procedure for adoption of the Commission decision, is not so clear that the decision must be regarded as legally non-existent.

53 It follows that the applicants' main claim must be rejected in so far as it seeks a finding that the contested decision is non-existent.

54 However, it is necessary to consider, secondly, whether the irregularities complained of by the applicants might, as they claim in the alternative, be such that the contested decision should be annulled for infringement of the principle of inalterability of measures and of the rules on the use of languages.

55 As regards the inalterability of measures, the Court considers that it is apparent from paragraph 59 of the judgment of the Court in Case C-137/92P that only where a measure is challenged on the basis of serious and convincing evidence of breach of the principle of inalterability of Community measures can the Court accede to a request that it order production of a decision, in the language or languages in which it is binding, authenticated by the signatures of the President and the Executive Secretary, in order to verify that the texts notified conform exactly with the text adopted by the college of Commissioners.

56 In the present case, the Court considered, on the basis of the information available to it at that time, that the fact that the text of the decision notified on 17 February 1992 did not correspond to the text notified on 26 February 1992 constituted, at first sight, serious and convincing evidence that the changes made to the first text had not been adopted by the college of Commissioners. It was for that reason that, on 27 June 1994, it ordered production of the decision adopted by the Commission at its meeting of 5 February 1992, authenticated at that time, in the language in which it is binding, by the signatures of the President and the Executive Secretary pursuant to the first paragraph of Article 12 of the Commission' s Rules of Procedure in force at that time.

57 However, the Court finds that the documents produced by the Commission in response to its order of 27 June 1994 confirm that the difference between the first text notified and the second was attributable to a technical defect in the operation of its electronic mail system which caused the loss of a page and that, consequently, the text notified on 26 February 1992 conformed perfectly with the text adopted by the college of Commissioners at its meeting of 5 February 1992. Indeed, counsel for the applicants informed the Commission on 19 February 1992 that "in the SPO decision, there is something missing between pages 86 and 87. I should be grateful if you would look into this and take the measures necessary to rectify matters. If it is discovered that an error found its way into the text, I should be grateful if you would send an amendment to all the addressees". The addressee of that letter, the relevant official of DG IV, sent a memorandum on the same date to the Secretariat General of the Commission asking that the necessary checks be carried out. According to that memorandum, "I have received from your department the text of the abovementioned decision in the Dutch language. In that document, a passage is missing which was definitely included in the draft submitted to the Commission. May I ask you to check whether the text adopted by the Commission and notified to the addressees of the decision conforms exactly with the draft and, if necessary, to take the action needed to ensure that the addressees are formally apprised of the full text of the decision? Please find enclosed as annex I hereto: the cover page of document C(92) 66 def.[...] pages 86 and 87 of that document. Please find enclosed as annex II hereto: pages 85, 86 and 87 of the draft decision in question (version in the Dutch language, as submitted to the Commission): the passage missing from that document, C(92) 66 def., is clearly indicated".

58 In view of that information, of which the Commission' s interpretation has not been challenged by the applicants, the evidence produced by the applicants can no longer be regarded as serious and convincing.

59 It has thus been established that the text of the decision notified to the applicants on 26 February 1992 is in perfect conformity with the text adopted by the college of Commissioners on 5 February 1992.

60 As regards compliance with the rules on the use of languages, the Court considers that it is clear from the letter sent by the DG IV official to the Secretariat General that the draft decision was submitted to the Commission in its Dutch language version, which is also borne out by the fact that, on 5 February 1992, the operative part of the decision was notified by fax to the applicants in the Dutch language.

61 It follows that there can be no question of any infringement of the rules on the use of languages in this case.

62 The Court also notes that, in response to its order of 27 June 1994, the Commission produced the text of the Commission decision of 5 February 1992 bearing reference number C(92) 66. def. rev. and the signatures of the President of the Commission and its Secretary General preceded by the words "the present decision was adopted by the Commission at its 1092nd meeting held in Brussels on 5 February 1992. It comprises 92 pages plus annexes". At the hearing, the applicants objected to the fact that that document does not give the date on which the signatures of the President and the Secretary General were appended. In his covering letter of 4 July 1994 and at the hearing the Agent for the Commission stated that that document was the text of the decision as adopted by the college of Commissioners on 5 February 1992 and as authenticated at that time. In response to a question from the Court, the Agent for the Commission explained that his statement on that point is borne out by the fact that, when the decision was adopted the Commission had already been alerted to the inferences which the Court might draw from the absence of authentication of its measures since, at that time, the hearing had already been held in Joined Cases T-79/89 and others BASF and Others v Commission, and the Court had already ordered production of the text of the decision at issue in that case, authenticated by the signatures of the President and the Executive Secretary pursuant to the first paragraph of Article 12 of the Commission' s Rules of Procedure in force at that time. The Court notes that the applicants did not object to the explanation given by the Agent for the Commission.

63 On the basis of the aforementioned documents and the information supplied by the Agent for the Commission, the Court finds that the document bearing reference number C(92) 66 def. rev. produced by the Commission is the text of the decision as adopted by the college of Commissioners on 5 February 1992 and as authenticated at that time.

64 It follows that the applicants' main claim must be dismissed.

The alternative claim

65 The applicants base their alternative claim on nine grounds of challenge which may be condensed into five pleas in law. The first plea is that Article 85(1) of the Treaty was infringed by the Commission' s having incorrectly defined the relevant market, misapprehended the scope of the rules and regulations at issue and wrongly considered that they appreciably affected trade between Member States. The second plea alleges infringement of Article 85(3) of the Treaty; the Commission (i) failed to take account of the particular characteristics of the building industry in the Netherlands and reversed the burden of proof; (ii) misunderstood the scope of the rules and regulations at issue in relation to the four preconditions for the grant of an exemption, in particular by refusing to take account of the amendments made by the applicants "in the context of the notification"; and (iii) breached the principles of proportionality and subsidiarity by refusing to grant the requested exemption. The third plea alleges infringement of Articles 4(2)(1) and 15(2) of Regulation No 17 in that the Commission imposed a fine even though the infringement had not been established or, at least, was covered by immunity, and wrongly considered that the infringement had been committed deliberately or negligently and imposed an excessive fine. The fourth plea alleges infringement of Article 190 of the Treaty in that the Commission did not give an adequate statement of reasons regarding either infringement of Article 85(1) of the Treaty or rejection of the application for an exemption under Article 85(3) of the Treaty. The fifth plea alleges breach of the applicants' rights of defence.

First plea: infringement of Article 85(1) of the Treaty

First limb: incorrect definition of the relevant market

Arguments of the parties

66 The applicants state that the Court of First Instance has held that appropriate definition of the relevant market is a necessary precondition for any judgment concerning allegedly anti-competitive behaviour (judgment of the Court of First Instance in Joined Cases T-68, 77 and 78/89 SIV and Others v Commission [1992] ECR II-1403). In the present case, they maintain, the Commission failed to define the relevant product market and geographical market.

67 As regards the product market, they state that the eight sectors of the building industry covered by the rules and regulations at issue do not come within a single product market but constitute at least as many ° if not more ° distinct product markets, in so far as the activities covered by them are not interchangeable from the point of view of either supply or demand.

68 The applicants add that, although they took the view in their notification that the Netherlands building market constitutes a sole and single product market, that was in the context of an application for a negative clearance or exemption for the UPR rules which were introduced in 1987 and were for the first time applicable without distinction to the eight product markets concerned. The context of the contested decision is entirely different since it is directed not only against the 1987 UPR rules but also against the previous rules, which differ for each of the sectors of the building industry. Consequently, the Commission should have drawn a distinction according to the product markets concerned, at least to the extent to which it sought to incriminate the rules applicable before 1 April 1987.

69 As regards the geographical market, they observe that the Commission found in paragraph 23 of the decision that there were various relevant geographical markets within the market to which the rules apply. It thus conceded that the scope of the relevant geographical market may vary according to the sector and the nature of the activities concerned. Since the geographical market for smaller-scale works is more limited, the Commission should have found that all the rules fall outside the scope of Article 85 of the Treaty in so far as they relate to such works since they cannot affect trade between Member States (see below, third limb of the plea).

70 As regards the product market, the Commission replies, first, that the relevant market should not be defined by reference to the substitutability of the products concerned but rather on the basis of the activities actually undertaken by the contractors and the scope of the rules. The UPR rules and the Code of Honour apply without distinction to the various sectors mentioned by the applicants, regardless of the nature, extent or location of the works. That approach is fully in conformity with the views put forward by the applicants in the course of the administrative procedure.

71 The Commission also contends that it is inappropriate to distinguish between the rules prior to 1987 and the UPR rules as regards definition of the relevant product market since the previous rules applicable to the various sectors were standardized between 1973 and 1979 under the aegis of the SPO.

72 As regards the geographical market, the Commission replies that the regular fluctuations in demand, the breadth of activities of large and medium-sized undertakings and the fact that even some small undertakings submit tenders on occasion for works to be undertaken outside the region where they are established show that there are no distinct geographical markets within the construction market to which the incriminated regulations apply. It also states that the applicants did not at any stage of the administrative procedure refer to the existence of different geographical markets or supply information enabling their extent to be defined.

Findings of the Court

73 The Court considers that it is necessary, at the outset, to determine the scope of the Commission' s obligation to define the relevant market before finding an infringement of Articles 85 and 86 of the Treaty.

74 The approach to defining the relevant market differs according to whether Article 85 or Article 86 of the Treaty is to be applied. For the purposes of Article 86, the proper definition of the relevant market is a necessary precondition for any judgment as to allegedly anti-competitive behaviour (judgment of the Court of First Instance in Joined Cases T-68/69, T-77/89 and T-78/89 SIV and Others v Commission, cited above, paragraph 159), since, before an abuse of a dominant position is ascertained, it is necessary to establish the existence of a dominant position in a given market, which presupposes that such a market has already been defined. For the purposes of applying Article 85, the reason for defining the relevant market is to determine whether the agreement, the decision by an association of undertakings or the concerted practice at issue is liable to affect trade between Member States and has as its object or effect the prevention, restriction or distortion of competition within the Common Market.

75 That is why, for the purposes of Article 85, the applicants' objections to the definition of the market adopted by the Commission cannot be seen in isolation from those concerning the impact on trade between Member States and the impairing of competition. The merits of this approach are confirmed by the fact that, in their application for negative clearance or an exemption, the applicants dealt with the issue of definition of the market only in the part concerning effects on trade between Member States.

76 It is important to note that, in treating the building market in the Netherlands as a whole as the relevant market, the Commission merely followed the approach adopted by the applicants in their notification of the UPR rules with a view to obtaining a negative clearance or an exemption and in their reply to the statement of objections. In the administrative procedure, the applicants never claimed that the eight sectors of the construction industry constituted separate markets for the purposes of the Community competition rules or that distinct geographical markets existed. On the contrary, they stated in their notification (p. 19, paragraph 2.2.1.) that Naar het oordeel van de SPO dient als de relevante produktmarkt vanuit een macro-perspectief te worden aangemerkt de markt voor het aannemen van bouwwerken. Slechts die produktmarkt lijkt vanuit kartelrechtelijk oogpunt relevant. Dit is een omvangrijke markt. Weliswaar is het in beginsel (wellicht) mogelijk binnen deze markt talloze marktsegmenten te onderscheiden naar gelang de aard en de omvang van de aan te nemen bouwwerken, doch het is twijfelachtig of dergelijke segmenten zouden kunnen worden aangemerkt als afzonderlijke produktmarkten in het licht van het Europees mededingingsrecht. Zowel de aanbodzijde als de vraagzijde van de betrokken markt heeft een dermate diverse samenstelling, dat het in beginsel onmogelijk lijkt bepaalde submarkten te isoleren, waarop bepaalde categorieen aanbesteders en aannemers bij uitsluiting opereren. Een - noodgedwongen - kunstmatige indeling van de bouwmarkt in submarkten is bovendien niet dienstig voor de beoordeling van de onderhavige mededingingsregelingen, aangezien enerzijds de Erecode van toepassing is op bouwwerken van alle categorieen, terwijl het UPR betrekking heeft op alle werken van de categorieen, genoemd onder nr. 2.1.1..

["According to the SPO, the relevant product market from the macroeconomic point of view is the construction market. Only that product market appears relevant from the point of view of competition law. It is an extensive market. Whilst it may be possible, in principle, to identify within that market innumerable market segments reflecting the nature and size of the constructions to be erected, it is nevertheless doubtful that such segments could be described as separate product markets for the purpose of European competition law. Both supply and demand are so diversified in that market that it would appear, in principle, impossible to isolate submarkets in which only certain categories of contract awarders and contractors operate. A necessarily artificial division of the construction market into submarkets would, moreover, be unhelpful in assessing the competition rules in question, since, first, the Code of Honour applies to all building work and, secondly, the UPR rules cover all works in the categories mentioned in paragraph 2.1.1." (that is to say, all those to which the Commission claims that the UPR rules apply).

77 The Commission properly adopted that definition of the market, since the rules introduced in 1987 apply without distinction to all the eight sectors concerned. In their reply, moreover, the applicants subscribed to that approach regarding the assessment of the UPR rules introduced in 1987.

78 However, they maintain their criticism of the definition of the market as regards the previous rules, asserting that the view adopted by them in the administrative procedure was dictated by the fact that their application for a negative clearance or exemption related to the rules introduced in 1987 whereas the decision also incriminates the previous rules, which were different for each sector.

79 In that connection, it is important to note that, whilst it is true that the considerations set out in the notification related only to the rules introduced in 1987, the statement of objections was directed also against the previous rules. Consequently, the applicants' reply to that statement [see pages 23 to 71 and in particular Title 3: "De relevante markt: de bouwmarkt in Nederland" ("The relevant market: the building market in the Netherlands")], in which they maintained the same view regarding definition of the market, also related to the previous rules.

80 It follows that, in the administrative procedure, the applicants did not consider that a different approach was called for regarding definition of the market in the case of the previous rules.

81 Similarly, the Court considers that the Commission was also right to adopt that definition of the market in relation to the previous rules as well. First, the applicants have not been able to indicate any substantial differences between the previous rules and the rules introduced in 1987 or as between the various sets of previous rules themselves. It must be concluded that the various sets of previous rules applied in the same way to each of the sectors and each of the geographical areas covered by them. Furthermore, the applicants stated at the hearing that all building products were covered throughout the Netherlands by the various sets of previous rules, being covered either by regional rules covering several products, or by rules specific to certain products but extending throughout the territory of the Netherlands.

82 It follows that the Commission was right to adopt the Netherlands building market as the relevant market as regards both the previous rules and the rules introduced in 1987 in order to consider whether they affected trade between the Member States or undermined competition.

83 This limb of the plea must therefore be rejected in so far as it does not overlap with the other two limbs of the plea and must be considered with the latter in all other respects.

Second limb: misapprehension of the content and scope of the contested rules

I ° Overview

Arguments of the parties

84 According to the applicants, it is essential to keep in mind the end purpose of the contested rules when considering their compatibility with Community competition law: to prevent haggling by setting up a binding system under which contractors compete on only one occasion and to improve the transactional structure of the market by attributing to each construction project awarded the design costs to which it gave rise.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

85 They claim that the Commission misapplied Article 85(1) of the Treaty by taking the view that the rules seriously infringed that provision. That misapplication derived from the Commission' s purely theoretical and abstract approach to the manner in which competition must be upheld by that provision, a view which is a priori inimical to any regulation of the market.

86 The Commission replies that, for the purposes of Article 85(1) of the Treaty, all that is important is to establish that there is a restriction of competition ° not whether or not a restriction of competition is acceptable. In answering that question, the Commission analysed the economic and legal context of the infringement. It therefore focused its appraisal on the building market and not on a "standardized market operating ideally". It nevertheless refused to concede that restrictive agreements are inevitable in the building market and considers that undistorted competition provides a specific means of attaining the objectives of the Treaty.

Findings of the Court

87 The Court notes that, according to the decision, the system established by the rules introduced in 1987 may be described as follows. Those rules seek to establish a procedure to be observed by the applicants' members where they intend submitting a price tender for a particular project. According to the applicants, that procedure has a twofold purpose: to combat the haggling in which contracting authorities tend to engage and correct imbalances between supply and demand resulting from a lack of openness on the supply side of the market and the high transaction costs incurred in respect of tenders.

88 To that end, the applicants established physical and human infrastructures in order to apply the procedure introduced by the rules. That procedure, which differs somewhat according to whether invitations to tender are open or restricted or whether or not they are simultaneous, comprises several stages between notification to the appropriate SPO office of the intention to submit a price tender for a particular project and conclusion of the contract between the contract awarder and the successful tenderer.

89 Those stages may be summarized as follows: any contractor who is a member of the applicants must notify the relevant SPO office if he intends submitting a price tender for a particular project, so that that office can apply the rules (decision, paragraph 24).

90 If there are several notifications, the office summons the notifying undertakings to a meeting. They must attend, failing which they are penalized. At the meeting, chaired by an official from the office, certain decisions will be taken either by a majority or unanimously (decision, paragraph 25). The first decision is whether to designate an entitled undertaking, which will be one of the contractors participating in the meeting, who will alone be entitled to have dealings with the contract awarder in order to negotiate the content and price of his tender (decision, paragraphs 26 and 39 to 41). If it is decided that an entitled undertaking will be designated, the meeting goes on to determine the data on the basis of which the various price tenders will be compared. Thus, according to the applicants, the meeting decides whether the invitations for price tenders are or can be rendered comparable and, according to the Commission, whether the price tenders of the various contractors are or can be rendered comparable (decision, paragraph 27). If the answer is affirmative, an entitled undertaking may be designated by the meeting. Before designating the entitled undertaking, the meeting decides on which basis price increases will be defined. Those increases, to be borne by the client, are essentially of two kinds: reimbursements for calculation costs and contributions to the operating costs of the trade organizations, including SPO and its offices (decision, paragraphs 31 to 33). Once that decision has been taken, each contractor indicates his tender figure (referred to as a blank figure) and hands it to the chairman (decision, paragraph 28). That figure does not yet include the price increases. At that time, a contractor may ask the meeting to grant him preference, that is to say to designate him as an entitled undertaking provided that he submits a price tender equal to the lowest blank figure (decision, paragraph 30). The chairman then examines the figures and may disclose them to the participants if the meeting so decides (decision, paragraph 28). After examining the others' figures, each contractor may decide to withdraw his tender, subject to the loss of certain rights (decision, paragraph 29). In principle, the contractor who submitted the lowest blank figure is designated as the entitled undertaking (decision, paragraph 39). Each contractor thereupon adds to his blank figure price increases calculated on the basis previously determined by the meeting. Those increases are the same for each contractor and are intended in particular to cover all the calculation costs of all the participants in the meeting. They will be borne by the client if the latter awards the contract to one of the members of the SPO (decision, paragraphs 31 to 33). The successful tenderer to which they are paid will have to transfer them to the office, which will for the most part repay them to the contractors in respect of calculation costs and to the trade organizations in respect of the contributions payable to them (decision, paragraphs 42 to 46). Finally, the differences between the tender prices of the various contractors may be increased or decreased by the meeting (decision, paragraph 38).

91 If the office receives only one notification for a contract, the latter will be regarded as a private contract and only the notifying undertaking will have the status of entitled undertaking, which means that any member undertakings of the applicants consulted subsequently will be able to submit a tender only with its consent or, in the event of a dispute, that of an arbitration committee (decision, paragraphs 41, 52 and 53). However, it is possible that between the notification from the first contractor and award of the contract to him, the client may consult other contractors who are members of the applicants and whose notifications are received after the contract is awarded. In such cases, the successful tenderer is required to pay the office an amount equal to 3% of the price in respect of price increases (decision, paragraph 60).

92 There are also rules laying down a procedure applicable to tenders by subcontractors which essentially incorporate the provisions applicable to other price tenders, adjusting them to the specific requirements of subcontracting (decision, paragraphs 55 to 59).

93 The Court notes that the decision raises essentially four types of objections against the rules drawn up by the applicants. The first concerns the fact that they establish concertation between contractors involving the exchange of information on the cost components of the contract, the characteristics of the tenders and the prices proposed by each contractor. The second group of objections is directed against the fact that, during such concertation, parts of prices are fixed, the prices proposed are sometimes changed and partial prices are also fixed. The third group of objections relates to the fact that following such concertation, one of the contractors ° the entitled undertaking ° enjoys protection from the other participants in the concertation since the latter lose the right to negotiate their tender with the client. The entitled undertaking also enjoys protection from the other members of the applicants in that, if they are subsequently approached, they will be able to submit a tender only with its consent or that of a committee of contractors, and only then if that tender is lower by a specified percentage than that of the entitled undertaking. The fourth group of objections concerns the fact that the rules confer on the members of the applicants advantages in their competition with third parties.

94 The applicants look at those groups of objections from various angles: they either draw attention to the beneficial effects which the rules have on competition and therefore for consumers, or they challenge the factual basis of the objections, or else they reject the legal characterization of the facts as constituting an infringement of Article 85(1) of the Treaty.

95 The Court finds, first, that the Commission was right to consider the applicants' rules as forming a single whole from which the various components cannot be artifically isolated.

96 The beneficial effects of the rules described by the applicants cannot be taken into consideration for the purposes of Article 85(1) of the Treaty but are pertienent only to the application of the criteria laid down by Article 85(3) of the Treaty. It follows that those various arguments must be examined in the context of the second plea in law.

97 Accordingly, as far as the present plea in law is concerned, it is appropriate only to examine the applicants' arguments concerning the correctness of the facts and the assessment of them under Article 85(1) of the Treaty. The Court will therefore consider in turn the arguments relating to concertation between contractors intending to submit a price tender, concerted fixing of prices or parts of prices, limitation of contractors' freedom to negotiate, and the conduct of the SPO towards non-member contractors.

II ° Concertation between contractors intending to submit a price tender

Arguments of the parties

(1) The obligation to notify the intention to submit a price tender (decision, paragraphs 24 and 79)

98 The applicants, which do not challenge the description of this aspect of the regulations contained in paragraph 24 of the decision, claim that the obligation to notify, and the notification itself, do not, as such, have any significance in competition law. They consider, in particular, that the third subparagraph of paragraph 79 of the decision is misconceived in that it criticizes the fact that the office may, on request, disclose to a notifying undertaking the number of undertakings which have lodged a notification.

99 The Commission replies that the obligation to notify must not be examined per se but as an integral part of the rules. It adds that the information obtained from the notifications enables the notifying undertakings to anticipate the intensity of competition and therefore, indirectly, the foreseeable level of the final tender.

(2) The meetings held in accordance with the UPR rules (decision, paragraphs 25 to 58 and 80 to 92).

(a) Agreement on the principle of designating an entitled undertaking (decision, paragraphs 26 and 80).

100 The applicants contest the statement in paragraph 80 of the decision that the number of cases in which the meeting decides to forgo designation of an entitled undertaking is small and contend that their research shows that an entitled undertaking is appointed only in 39% of cases.

101 The Commission replies that paragraph 80 refers to the number of cases in which the meeting forgoes designation of an entitled undertaking a priori, that is to say before ruling on the comparability of the information concerning the tendering procedure, and not to the number of cases in which, without waiving designation in advance, the meeting does not designate an entitled undertaking, in most cases because it has found that the information relating to the tendering procedure is not comparable.

(b) Comparison of the cost elements of the contract (decision, paragraphs 27 and 81). GROUNDS CONTINUED UNDER DOC.NUM : 692A0029.1

102 The applicants maintain that the decision misstates the nature of the information exchanged at the meeting. That information relates solely to particulars provided by the client awarding the contract. It is necessary to exchange such information to check that the invitations to which the participants in the meeting are responding are comparable and thereby to ensure that there is no comparison of blank figures relating to different invitations to tender. As a result, that exchange of information enhances competition, to the greater satisfaction of contract awarders.

103 They also claim that the information must cover certain tendering conditions where the latter are unreasonable, in order to ensure that the contract awarders do not make contractors bear unforeseeable risks. Without such concertation, contractors would individually be confronted with the following dilemma: either to accept unreasonable conditions ° and therefore experience problems in carrying out the works ° or to make their price tender subject to other conditions ° and therefore leave the way open for a competitor to be chosen. Thus, concertation regarding performance times is possible only if the time-limits set by the contract awarder are unrealistic.

104 The applicants add that the exchange of information prompts contractors to formulate price tenders calculated within narrower limits because the risks are more foreseeable, and ultimately the contract awarders benefit from this.

105 They consider that the criticism of the exchange of information concerning the contract awarder' s requirements is not only incorrect as regards the context of such information but also displays confusion between tendering arrangements and an oligopolistic situation, as a result of which the Commission regards any exchange of information concerning a tendering procedure as contrary to the Treaty.

106 In short, the applicants criticize the Commission for considering that any exchange of information between competitors which is liable to reduce uncertainties in an entirely opaque market in itself constitutes a restriction of competition.

107 The Commission replies that the applicants have given a false impression of the content of the information exchanged. It is impossible to check whether the tenders called for are comparable or may be rendered comparable without knowing how the participants in the meeting intend to react to the invitation to tender. Exchange of information thus relates to particular aspects of the works known only to one or other of the participants, who is thus deprived of a competitive advantage. As a result, competition is not enhanced but curtailed. The Commission has produced a number of reports of contractors' meetings in support of its statements.

108 It adds that it is not for contractors to decide together whether certain conditions in invitations to tender, such as completion times or the dimension of foundations, are unreasonable, still less to lay down their own conditions in concertation where they consider it appropriate to do so.

109 The Commission states that the exchange of information occurring at the meeting is just as damaging to competition as that which takes place between competitors in an oligopolistic market.

(c) Handing over of blank figures (decision, paragraphs 28 and 82)

110 The applicants maintain that the handing over of unalterable blank figures to the chairman of the office does not restrict competition but merely brings forward the time at which competition takes place. Delivery of tender prices to the contract awarder is replaced by delivery of blank figures to the independent chairman of the SPO office concerned. The fact that the blank figures may not be altered after they have been delivered ensures that competition is not distorted but is merely brought forward in order to avoid the practice of successive bargaining.

111 For the Commission, it is not the delivery of unalterable blank figures itself which constitutes an infringement but rather the fact that they have been fixed on the basis of information exchanged at the meeting. It adds that the delivery of blank figures forms an integral part of a procedure which substitutes practical cooperation between contractors for the risks of competition, and must be regarded as such.

(d) Possibility of withdrawal after comparison of prices (decision, paragraphs 29, 83 and 84)

112 The applicants maintain that the possibility of withdrawing after prices have been compared not only involves no restriction of competition but in fact reinforces competition in that it enables contractors to calculate their tenders within narrower limits, since they know that, if they make an error which might lead to economically unjustified prices, they will be able to withdraw their tender. That possibility is, moreover, used only where one of the contractors who handed in a blank figure made an error in calculating his tender.

113 They also state that the comparison of prices carried out after the blank figures have been handed in cannot have an anti-competitive effect since the blank figures can no longer be changed. Moreover, the information obtained from that comparison, such as the price variance between the tender of the entitled undertaking and those of its competitors, cannot be exploited by the entitled undertaking in its negotiations with the contract awarder since the blank figures are definitive.

114 The Commission replies that even if ° and that is not the case ° withdrawal is resorted to only in the event of an error leading to an economically unjustified price, it is not for contractors unilaterally to judge whether a price is economically justified and deprive the contract awarder of an advantageous price tender, particularly where those competing contractors make that judgment after exchanging price information.

115 It adds that the entitled undertaking may use the information available to it regarding the prices quoted by other tenderers in its negotiations with the contract awarder since the difference between its price and those of the others represents the margin within which it is protected, the latter being unable to tender a lower price (see below, in relation to protection of the entitled undertaking). In that context, the comparison of prices also restricts competition.

Findings of the Court

116 The Court finds that the concertation starts with the obligation of the applicants' members to notify the relevant SPO office of their intention to submit a price tender. The Court agrees with the Commission that the fact that the relevant office can disclose to those notifying undertakings which so request the number of undertakings which have lodged a notification may be liable to restrict competition since the notifying undertakings are thereby enabled to anticipate the intensity of competition between them and to modify their conduct accordingly, as well as to obtain information not yet available at that stage to undertakings which are not SPO members.

117 The concertation between contractors objected to in the decision starts only if the meeting does not from beginning waive designation of an entitled undertaking. Otherwise, the participants exchange information. There is thus concertation, even if it leads to the conclusion that the price tenders are not and cannot be rendered comparable, so that an entitled undertaking cannot be designated. In response to the applicants' statement that an entitled undertaking is designated in only 39% of cases, it must be observed, first, that at least in such cases the concertation between contractors condemned in the decision can operate fully and, secondly, that in the other cases the applicants have neither claimed nor proved that the meeting decides from the beginning not to designate an entitled undertaking, thereby rendering any further concertation pointless. The applicants have not therefore succeeded in rebutting the statement contained in paragraph 80 of the decision that "the number of cases in which the meeting of firms decides to forgo such designation, thus allowing undistorted competition to operate, is small". That statement relates to the number of cases in which the meeting decides from the start to forgo designation of an entitled undertaking, whereas the applicants' statement relates to the number of cases in which it has not been possible to designate an entitled undertaking, either because such designation has been decided against from the start or because the price tenders were not comparable and could not be rendered comparable.

118 Where the meeting does not forgo designation of an entitled undertaking from the start, it is in the participants' interest to decide on the basis of what technical and economic data they will compare prices, since an entitled undertaking can be designated only on the basis of comparable price tenders. In that connection, the parties differ as to the nature of the information exchanged in order to assess the comparability of price tenders: the applicants maintain that such information relates exclusively to the contract awarder' s invitation to tender and is exchanged solely in order to establish whether all the participants are relying on the same data. They concede, however, that the information exchanged may also concern the stance which should be taken regarding certain conditions imposed by the contract awarder where those conditions are unreasonable. The Commission contends that the exchange of information goes much further and relates to the manner in which the various contractors intend responding to the invitation to tender.

119 The Court finds, first, that concertation by contractors regarding the manner in which they intend responding to an invitation to tender is incompatible with Article 85(1) of the Treaty, even where the invitation sets unreasonable conditions. It is for each contractor to determine independently what he regards as reasonable or unreasonable and to conduct himself accordingly.

120 It must next be observed that, contrary to the applicants' assertions, the information exchanged does not relate solely to the invitation to tender. It is apparent from Articles 1(b) and 6.2 of the UPRO rules and 6.3 of the UPRR rules, read in conjunction, that that information concerns matters other than the invitation to tender. Indeed, Articles 6.2 and 6.3 of the UPR rules provide:

> "Before the forms containing the PEs (proposed evaluations for execution of the works) are completed, the meeting shall determine, on the basis of the information relating to the invitation to tender supplied by the contract awarding party and all other information relevant to a comparative and objective examination of prices, the data which must be relied on in entering the PE on the form provided for that purpose. It shall also determine, in accordance with the provisions of the present article, the figures and details to be mentioned in the note containing the PE.", whilst Article 1(b) provides that the "information relating to the invitation to tender" are to contain

> "all documents, including the specifications, drawings, invitation to tender, the form for recording the intention to bid, all similar documents and all instructions or notifications relevant to submission of the tender".

This shows that, the "other information relevant to a comparative and objective examination of prices" includes items which do not appear in the information relating to the invitation to tender. Furthermore, the reports of certain meetings of contractors clearly show that at such meetings they discuss the manner in which they intend formulating their tenders, comparing the characteristics of the works which they intend proposing and therefore matters taken into account in the determination of prices. Thus, at a meeting of 14 March 1988, the participants concluded that the tenders were not comparable because one of the contractors had proposed a round silo and the other a square silo (annex 1 to the rejoinder). Apart from the fact that the contractors compare the technical characteristics of the tenders which they propose submitting, they sometimes compare the various components of each of the price tenders. Thus, the report of meeting 040388 concerning a project at Tilburg (Netherlands) shows that one of the contractors participating in the meeting "wil blanken maar geen inzicht geven in samenstelling prijsaanbieding. Prijsvergelijking daarom niet mogelijk. VH stapt kwaad op. Verliest rechten" ["wishes to submit a blank figure but refuses to disclose the composition of his price tender. Comparison of prices is therefore impossible. VH leaves in great anger. Forfeits his rights"]. The statement that "comparison of prices is therefore impossible" indicates that what the applicants call an examination of the comparability of the data relating to a tendering procedure in fact presupposes that the participants in the meeting are prepared to disclose the breakdown of their price tenders to each other.

121 It follows that the Commission has sufficiently established that, at the meetings held by them under their rules, the contractors exchange information relating in particular to the costs of the product concerned, its specific characteristics and a breakdown of the price tenders, although that is information which an independent operator would keep strictly secret as confidential business information (judgment of the Court of First Instance in Case T-7/89 Hercules Chemicals v Commission [1991] ECR II-1711, paragraph 217).

122 It should also be noted that at those meetings the participants exchange price information. Articles 6.4 and 7 of the UPR rules allow disclosure of blank figures to all those present at the meeting. Whilst it is true, as pointed out by the applicants, that in principle such exchange of information occurs at a time when those figures can no longer be altered (but see below, paragraph 157), the applicants cannot justify this by stating that the rules merely change the moment at which competition takes place from the time of submission of tenders to the awarding party to the time of delivery of the blank figures to the chairman of the office and that, consequently, the exchange of information on prices occurs after competition has already taken place. As the applicants indicated at the hearing, the delivery of blank figures does not end competition because negotiations remain possible between the client and the entitled undertaking and between the client and undertakings which did not attend the meeting. However, in the context of such negotiations, the entitled undertaking will possess information relating in particular to the specific characteristics of the product and the price at which the participants in the meeting are authorized to submit a tender or are not prepared to submit a tender where they have withdrawn under Article 10 of the UPR rules, thus depriving the client of an advantageous tender of which he might have been able to secure the performance by court order if it had been submitted to him without any concertation between the contractors.

123 It follows that the Commission was right to consider in its decision (paragraph 81) that such concertation between contractors, having in particular the object and effect of revealing to his competitors the course of conduct which each contractor has decided to adopt or contemplates adopting on the market (judgment of the Court of Justice in Case 40/73 Suiker Unie v Commission [1975] ECR 1663, paragraphs 173 and 174; see also the judgment of the Court of First Instance in the judgment of the Court of First Instance of 17 December 1991, cited above, paragraph 260) and may lead to the fixing of certain conditions for the transaction, means that practical cooperation between contractors is deliberately substituted for the risks of competition (judgment in Case 40/73, cited above, paragraph 191), and therefore constitutes an infringement of Article 85(1) of the Treaty.

III ° The concerted fixing of prices or parts of prices

Arguments of the parties

(1) Price increases in cases of simultaneous tenders (decision, paragraphs 31 to 34, 42 to 46, 86, 87 and 96).

124 The applicants maintain, first, that the system of reimbursement of calculation costs has no adverse effect on competition between contractors since when they deliver their blank figures, each of them is in a position to anticipate the amount of the reimbursement which he will receive, because the latter is, in principle, based on the average of the blank figures presented by the undertakings and that average may be anticipated because the blank figures submitted do not differ greatly. The reimbursement could also be anticipated if it were calculated on another basis. In the context of the UPRR rules, each tenderer can do this by applying the reimbursement tables in force (for smaller-scale works), anticipating the tender put in by each contractor whose reimbursement constitutes a percentage (where a blank figure is not given), or by assuming that he himself will bid lowest (where the amount of the reimbursement is fixed by the person who gave the lowest blank figure). The applicants add that the fact that, in the context of the UPRO rules, reimbursements are paid over annually through the calculation fund does not preclude anticipation of the amount of the payments,

since each contractor can anticipate the number of points which he may earn if he bids lowest and the value of such points, which hardly varies from one year to the next. Finally, reliance on the value of supplies provided or works done by the contract awarding party or by third parties, for calculation of the reimbursement, likewise does not preclude anticipation of the amounts payable, since that value is known or can be estimated approximately.

125 The applicants state, secondly, that the system of reimbursing calculation costs has the purpose and effect of improving the transactional structure of the market by allowing the transaction costs arising from each project to be allocated to that project.

126 The Commission replies, first, that the system of reimbursing calculation costs is detrimental to competition for the reasons set out in the decision. Contrary to the applicants' assertions, the amount to be reimbursed cannot be anticipated with such precision that the system is neutralized because it depends in all cases on factors which cannot be known with sufficient certainty when the blank figures are handed in. Consequently, all contractors tend simply to include the payments in respect of calculation expenses in their price tender without adjusting the tender. That is why the Netherlands authorities describe the reimbursements as "increases". In any event, even if the payments are regularly anticipated, the system nevertheless continues to constitute direct fixing of part of selling prices within the meaning of Article 85(1) of the Treaty.

127 Secondly, the Commission rejects the view that the system of reimbursing calculation costs enhances the efficiency of the market by limiting transaction costs because contract awarders have no right to obtain disclosure of the reimbursements in respect of calculation expenses applied to them.

(2) Price increases in respect of private contracts (decision, paragraphs 60, 61 and 100)

128 The applicants contest paragraph 61 of the decision, according to which the rules give rise to a general increase of 3% in the prices of private contracts because, if the contract awarder contacts other contractors after receiving the tender from the first tenderer and nevertheless awards the contract to the latter after receiving the tenders asked for subsequently, the first tenderer is required to pay a sum equal to a maximum of 3% of the contract value in respect of the price increases provided for by the rules.

129 They maintain that the Commission has confused an obligation to transfer 3% of the price to the SPO office with the obligation to take that 3% into account in the price tender. Moreover, 3% is a maximum figure which is rarely applied. The Commission also failed to take account of the fact that if contractors exercise their right to waive a priori the rights deriving from the status of entitled undertaking, the 3% does not have to be paid in any circumstances and if the contract awarder actually intends concluding the contract with the first contractor consulted and negotiates on an open-budget or team basis, he will be able to establish whether a provision for risk is included in the price and have it cancelled if he awards the contract without approaching other contractors.

130 The applicants also claim that there are two ways for the contractor first approached to make provision for risk in his price tender without the contract price thereby being increased if it is concluded on a private basis. First, he could reserve the right to increase his price tender by a maximum of 3% in the event of the client seeking other tenders subsequently. Secondly, he could, when submitting his tender, inform the contract awarder that it contains a risk provision which could be removed if the contract awarder did not seek other tenders subsequently. In most cases, they maintain, the contractor does not include any risk provision.

131 They state, finally, that the keen competition between contractors and the position of strength on the demand side means, beyond doubt, that the 3% would ultimately be refunded to contract awarders in the event that the risk was provided against but did not subsequently materialize.

132 The Commission replies, first, that it established that contractors are regularly called on to make payments to the office under the 3% rule.

133 It doubts whether contractors have recourse to the possibilities described by the applicants, so as to take account of the risk deriving from the 3% rule, because contractors may, without exposing themselves to any risk, merely include in their price tender a provision covering that 3%.

134 According to the Commission, a contractor who includes such a provision in his tender suffers no competitive disadvantage because the other contractors approached subsequently must do the same, unless outsiders have been invited to bid, which occurs fairly infrequently.

135 What is important, it concludes, is that in the absence of the 3% rule contractors would not have to account in their price tenders for the risk of ultimately having to pay the 3%.

(3) Increases in subcontract prices (decision, paragraphs 55 to 59 and the third subparagraph of paragraph 100)

136 The applicants state that the fact that the main contractor can be made to bear only the tendering costs incurred by the subcontractors who have submitted a price tender to him ° to the exclusion therefore of the costs incurred by the subcontractors who have submitted price tenders to other main contractors ° in no way conflicts with the general philosophy underlying the rules on tendering costs, in that it results in the allocation to each contract-awarding party of the transaction costs arising in connection with the latter' s invitation to tender. A main contractor cannot be answerable for tendering costs for which he is in no way responsible. Moreover, this system of specific allocation makes it possible to ensure that subcontractors who, in connection with the same contract, have submitted tenders to several main contractors cannot receive double, or even triple, reimbursements.

137 They claim, finally, that the Commission has no grounds for saying that the rules on subcontracting lead to a systematic increase of 3% in price tenders in cases where the main contractor seeks to negotiate a price privately. They refer in that connection to their submissions regarding private contracts.

138 The Commission contends that the system established by the rules on subcontracting is incompatible with the general philosophy of the system of reimbursing tendering costs as described by the applicants. Where subcontracting is resorted to, not all the tendering costs arising in connection with a project are attributed to it since the subcontractors of a main contractor who are unsuccessful receive no reimbursement and are therefore forced to include their tendering costs in their general costs. Consequently, in subsequent tendering procedures, the client has to bear not only the payments in respect of calculation costs but also the general costs arising from non-reimbursement of tendering costs incurred in respect of previous contracts.

139 The Commission adds that the system does in fact lead to an increase of 3% in price tenders, as in the case of private contracts.

Findings of the Court

140 First of all, the Court must again point out that the applicants' arguments concerning improvement of the transactional structure of the market are irrelevant in the context of a plea in law relating to infringement of Article 85(1) of the Treaty: those arguments will be considered in connection with the plea concerning infringement of Article 85(3) of the Treaty.

141 The rules provide for two types of price increases to be added uniformly to the price tenders of the various contractors taking part in the meeting, which will therefore be borne by the party awarding the contract. They are, first, the reimbursement of calculation expenses (decision, paragraphs 32, 33, 86 and 87) and, secondly, the contributions to the operating costs of the trade organizations (decision, paragraphs 34 to 37).

142 The applicants' objections relate essentially to the way in which the Commission analysed the former. The price tenders of the various contractors are increased by the same amount, which is deemed to represent the sum of the calculation costs incurred by all the contractors taking part in the meeting. Those price increases are calculated by reference to the scales for the various sectors annexed to the UPR rules. Those scales, which fix the maximum reimbursements, are applied to the average of the blank figures or the estimated value of the project, as the case may be (for further details, see paragraphs 32 and 33 of the decision, which are not objected to by the applicants). The result of that system is that the contract awarder bears, at a standard rate, all the calculation costs to which his invitation to tender has given rise, including therefore the costs of unsuccessful tenderers. Its aim is to induce contract awarders to consider the benefits and disadvantages of inviting a greater or lesser number of contractors to tender. Those price increases, which are included in the price tender, are received by the successful tenderer, which must repay the bulk of them to the office, which then shares them amongst the various contractors and itself. That repayment occurs contract by contract in the case of the UPRR rules and by calendar year in the case of the UPRO rules. Moreover, this price-increase system has its counterpart in the case of private contracts and subcontract arrangements. In such cases, the contractor approached must forearm himself against the risk that the party awarding the contract or the main contractor may approach other contractors and the risk of having in such circumstances to repay a sum representing 3% of the contract to the office in order to cover the calculation costs of the contractors who are approached subsequently but who are unsuccessful (for further details, see paragraphs 55 to 59 of the decision).

143 The applicants, without challenging the decision' s description of the price-increase system, maintain that it does not restrict competition since contractors participating in a tendering procedure can anticipate the amount of the reimbursement which they will receive in respect of their calculation costs. Thus, because of its flat-rate basis, the system is neutral for competition purposes since, knowing that they will receive a reimbursement exceeding the costs incurred, contractors who carry out their calculations most efficiently can reduce their price tender correspondingly. The Commission replies that the possibilities of anticipating the amounts involved are insufficient to neutralize the system and that, in any event, the joint fixing of such reimbursement constitutes fixing of part of the price.

144 The Court notes that the decision essentially criticizes the system of price increases in three respects. It involves, first, fixing of part of the price; secondly, a non-competition clause regarding calculation costs (decision, third subparagraph of paragraph 86); and, thirdly, the system leads to an increase in price levels for contract awarders which invite a large number of contractors to tender and in respect of private contracts and subcontracts (decision, paragraphs 57, 87 and 100).

145 First, it must be pointed out that the applicants have advanced no argument to show that the joint fixing of price increases uniformly applied to the price tenders of the various contractors does not constitute fixing of a part of the price within the meaning of Article 85(1)(a) of the Treaty. The applicants' arguments concerning the possibility of anticipating the amount of price increases are entirely irrelevant in that respect and relate solely to the question whether the price-increase system has the effect of eliminating competition between contractors regarding their calculation costs, which is a separate issue.

146 It follows that the Commission was right to consider that the joint fixing of price increases constitutes fixing of a part of the price prohibited by Article 85(1)(a) of the Treaty.

147 Secondly, as regards the question whether such fixing of a part of the price results in the elimination of competition between contractors in relation to calculation costs, thereby favouring

the least efficient contractors in that respect at the expense of the most efficient, it is ncessary to consider whether, as the applicants claim, the contractors are in a position to anticipate correctly the amount of the reimbursement they will receive in respect of calculation costs and, if so, whether, because of its flat-rate basis, the system is entirely neutral in so far as each contractor can reduce his price tender by an amount equal to the difference between the calculation costs actually incurred and the reimbursement due.

148 On that point it suffices to observe that there is no absolute certainty of being able correctly to anticipate the amount of the reimbursement. Indeed, it is impossible to anticipate the amount with absolute accuracy since the price tender must be calculated at a time when certain parameters essential for such a forecast are still unknown (average of the blank figures, estimated value of the works, lowest price tender).

149 Under the UPRO rules, even minimally accurate forecasts are impossible by reason of the system of paying over compensation annually and the difficulty of predicting the number of points and the value thereof.

150 The case in which the best forecast seems possible is where, under the UPRR rules, the meeting leaves to the contractor who submitted the lowest blank figure the task of defining the price increases. In such cases, each contractor presumes that he will be the lowest bidder and will be able to determine the reimbursement himself. However, in such circumstances, the contractor will have to take account of the risk that he may not be the lowest bidder and that he may have to include in his price tender the amount determined by the lowest bidder, which might exceed or fall short of his own figure for calculation costs. Whilst it is true that each contractor could adjust his blank figure according to the amount of the reimbursement which he himself would determine, the fact remains that, for him to be able correctly to incorporate in his blank figure the amount of the reimbursement finally fixed, he must know the intentions in that regard of all his competitors, each of whom might be the lowest bidder and might therefore be prompted to determine the amount of the reimbursement on the basis of his own calculation costs. However, contractors cannot obtain such information, it being a matter of business secrecy for each of them.

151 A further consequence of this system may be to deprive the contract awarder of the benefit of a given contractor' s greater efficiency regarding calculation costs. Thus, where contractor A, who calculates his costs very efficiently, proposes to fix the amount of compensation at 12 in the event of his being the lowest bidder with his blank figure of 105, whereas contractor B, who is less efficient, proposes to fix them as 20 in the event of his being the lowest bidder with his blank figure of 100, the following situation is liable to arise: B, proving to be the lowest bidder, decides to fix the reimbursement of 20. Consequently, his price bid to the client will be 120, whereas A' s tender will be 125. If competition had operated freely, A would have tendered 117 and B 120. The client thus has B rather than A as the lowest bidder as regards the definitive tender, and at a higher price than he would have obtained following undistorted competition. If A had known that B would fix the amount of the reimbursement at 20, he could have lowered his blank figure from 105 to 97, knowing that his total would still be the 117 which he needed, and would thus become the lowest bidder. However, A could only know the amount at which B would fix his reimbursement after unlawful concertation with B, a result which certainly does not indicate that the system is objectively transparent and allows perfect forecasting of the amount of the reimbursement, as claimed by the applicants.

152 It follows that, in all cases, competition between contractors regarding their calculation costs is restricted by the system of reimbursements for calculation costs and that the client is thus deprived of the benefits of such competition.

153 Thirdly, it is necessary to consider whether the system of reimbursing calculation costs, like the system of contributions to the operating costs of trade organizations, leads to a general increase in prices. In that respect, a distinction must be drawn between three areas: that of simultaneous tenders, that of private contracts and that of subcontracts.

154 As regards the first area, it is indisputable that the system involves a price increase for contract awarders who address their invitation to tender to a large number of contractors since they will have to bear the calculation costs of each of them. Similarly, this system deprives contract awarders of more advantageous tenders than the one from the entitled undertaking whenever the greater efficiency of a contractor regarding calculation costs more than compensates for his lesser efficiency in other spheres and that contractor, unaware of the extent of his greater efficiency, has been unable to pass it on entirely to his blank figure (see above, paragraph 151). Finally, the contribution to the operating costs of the trade organization also leads to a price increase.

155 In the second and third areas, it is common ground that contractors tendering for a private contract or a subcontract are exposed to the risk of having to pay the SPO office a sum representing 3% of the contract price if either the party awarding the contract or the main contractor approaches others with a view to awarding the contract in question. Whilst it is true, as the applicants observe, that it is open to the awarding party or the main contractor to seek to persuade those contractors not to provide against that risk and not to incorporate it in the price, it must nevertheless be concluded that the system, as such, encourages contractors to pass that risk on to their contract awarders and forces the latter to undertake negotiations if they wish to avoid this. It follows that in this area too this system may result in a price increase.

156 It follows from the foregoing that the Commission was right to consider that the price-increase system constitutes fixing of part of the price, restricts competition between contractors regarding calculation costs and leads to an increase of prices which, in the case of the UPR rules, is larger if a contract awarder wishes to obtain competitive bids from a larger number of contractors.

157 The Court also observes that the applicants do not deny that, after the price increases have been added to the blank figures, the tender prices of contractors other than the entitled undertaking may be reduced provided that they do not affect the sequential order of the blank figures, so that the differences between the price tenders forwarded to the party which is to award the contract do not appear excessive. Nor do they deny that price tenders may be increased where preference has been granted in order to place the entitled undertaking in a privileged position or that partial prices or unitary prices may be fixed in order to ensure that the contract awarder does not award part-contracts for the works.

158 Such price manipulations undeniably constitute concerted price fixing within the meaning of Article 85(1)(a) of the Treaty since, as the applicants have repeatedly stated, it remains possible for the contract awarder to award the contract to a contractor other than the lowest bidder.

IV ° Limitation of contractors' and contract awarders' freedom of negotiation

Arguments of the parties

(1) Preference (decision, paragraphs 30 and 85)

159 The applicants maintain that the preference system does not lead to marketing sharing since each tendering procedure must be regarded as an ad hoc market in which the identity of the tenderers is determined by the contract awarder. The contractors cannot share the works amongst themselves since none of them has any guarantee that he will ultimately be in competition with the contractor to which preference has been accorded and therefore be able to receive compensation from the latter.

160 They also state that, in principle, the unanimous agreement of all the participants in the meeting is required for preference to be granted. The granting of preference is thus rare (0.3% of cases in 1988).

161 Finally, the applicants draw attention to the fact that the beneficiary of the preference is required to submit a tender equivalent to the lowest tender, which increases the risks for him, those risks being commensurate with his interest in securing the contract for the project.

162 The Commission replies that the interest which a contractor has in a project must be reflected by the price which he bids and not by the obtaining of a right of preference from his competitors.

163 It states that the granting of preference to one of the tenderers constitutes sharing of the relevant market, since it is the competitors who decide amongst themselves who will be protected against competition from the others.

(2) Protection of the entitled undertaking (decision, paragraphs 39 to 41, 52 to 54 and 93 to 95).

164 The applicants, who do not object to the decision' s theoretical description of the operation of the system, state that the decision takes no account of the objective of the system, which is the prevention of successive bargaining or "playing-off", and incorrectly analyses the system' s practical effects on competition.

165 As regards the prevention of successive bargaining, which occurs where a contract awarder plays off tenders which he has obtained simultaneously or successively from several contractors against each other in order to obtain a price reduction, the applicants state that protection against playing-off is desired by all those active in the market and is essential to combat the risk that economically unjustified prices might emerge where the demand side is stronger than the supply side, to prevent the effectiveness of the transactional structure of the market from being adversely affected by expectations of affecting the first price tenders and to prevent the objectiveness of tendering procedures from being impaired by the fact that, in the course of such bargaining, contract awarders might give priority to subjective preferences rather than to the lowest price. They claim that the system at issue goes no further than is necessary to deal with the problem of playing-off and state that it is less rigorous than national and Community legislation having the same aim.

166 Against that background, the applicants emphasize that protection of the entitled undertaking is the result of an objective procedure leading to automatic designation as the entitled undertaking of the lowest bidder and therefore, far from restricting competition, it merely changes the time at which competition takes place. They also claim that the Commission cannot criticize the rules for preventing the contract awarder from giving priority to considerations other than the price in his negotiations with contractors since the fact that the contract awarder asks for comparable tenders shows his intention to concentrate competition on the price.

167 They consider that the rules on non-simultaneous price tenders and partial price tenders are essential to ensure that the rules on simultaneous price tenders are not evaded by successive price tenders or partial price tenders being played off against each other.

168 As regards the practical consequences of the system, the applicants deny that the system creates a temporary monopoly for the entitled undertaking in respect of a given contract. First, the system does not operate in such a manner that, in the case of simultaneous tenders, the party awarding the contract cannot award it to a tenderer other than the entitled undertaking. Secondly, in the case of non-simultaneous tenders, the system does not prevent contractors tendering after the entitled undertaking from submitting a price tender but makes it conditional, in the case of calls for comparable tenders, either upon consent of the entitled undertaking or that of an ad hoc committee established to check that the tenders are not the result of successive bargaining. Such consent is in fact rarely withheld and cannot be withheld if the new tender is lower by a certain percentage than the tender of the entitled undertaking. That percentage, which differs according to the sector involved, reflects the advantage which might accrue to the contractor submitting the new tender if he was apprised of the old tender. It is clear from Hartelust' s empirical study entitled "Balance of demand and supply on the Netherlands building market during the period 1975-1979" that if the new tenders reflect an invitation which is not comparable to that reflected by the previous tenders relating to the tendering procedure, the entitled undertaking is never protected. Indeed, in the case of non-simultaneous tenders, the system results in protection for the entitled undertaking in only 10.5% of cases.

169 The Commission replies that the system of protection of the entitled undertaking leads not only to protection of contractors against "haggling" and the severely damaging competition which would ensue, but also against all forms of competition since it excludes tenderers other than the entitled undertaking from negotiations with the contracting party or, at least, makes participation in those negotiations subject to consent from the entitled undertaking or a committee of contractors.

170 It considers that the applicants cannot compare the system of protection of the entitled undertaking to the legislative rules applicable in other Member States and those introduced by Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the co-ordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682, hereinafter "Directive 71/305/EEC"). Those rules concern only public contracts and pursue an aim different from that of the rules at issue here since they seek to preserve equality of opportunity for contractors vis-à-vis the public authorities. Moreover, the rules at issue not only limit the freedom of negotiation of the contract awarder, as do the Community and national provisions, but also provide for exchange of information and mutual prior adjustment of price tenders. Finally, the Commission observes that the Netherlands legislation, too, provides a degree of protection for contractors in the negotiations following the submission of price tenders and that the system established by the rules was not therefore as necessary as the applicants claim.

171 The Commission also states that the applicants cannot claim that the protection of the entitled undertaking arises only after competition has taken place. In the case of simultaneous tenders, the procedure in which the entitled undertaking is designated is not as objective as the applicants claim, in particular where the contractors themselves judge the comparability of tenders. The Commission adds that the applicants' arguments are based on the misconception that a contract awarder who obtains several price tenders has, for that very reason, decided that he will base his choice on the price. A contract awarder may legitimately consider it necessary to negotiate with tenderers other than the lowest bidder and there is no justification for his being deprived of that possibility by a unilateral decision by the contractors.

172 In its view, the system of protection of the entitled undertaking is even less justifiable in the case of non-simultaneous price tenders. In such cases, protection of the entitled undertaking operates as soon as the contract awarder decides, after initially receiving only one price tender, to seek another one or others, that is to say at a time when competition has not yet taken place. However, the effect of such protection of the entitled undertaking is that the contractors subsequently invited to participate will be unable, if the call for tenders is comparable with that to which the entitled undertaking responded, to submit their tender to the contract awarder unless it is lower by a specified percentage than that of the entitled undertaking. That percentage exceeds by a considerable margin the percentage needed to protect the first tenderer against use of the content of his tender by subsequent tenderers.

173 The Commission also maintains that the system of fixing partial or unitary prices is entirely unnecessary to protect contractors from haggling since, contrary to the applicants' assertion, it is open to them to make their partial price tenders conditional upon the entirety of the works being awarded to them.

174 It observes that in any event the applicants have admitted that, in 10.5% of cases, the entitled undertaking retains its status thanks to the priority provided for in the rules on non-simultaneous price tenders. According to the Commission, that 10.5% represents those cases in which that status entitled the undertaking in question to prevent the submission of subsequent price tenders lower than its own.

175 The Commission emphasizes, with regard to transparency of the market, that the system established by the applicants renders the market entirely opaque for occasional clients. In such cases, it is the contractors who are in a position of strength in the market, not the reverse.

(3) Subcontracting (decision, paragraphs 55 to 59 and the third subparagraph of paragraph 100)

176 The applicants maintain that the rules on subcontracting are intended to ensure that main contractors do not haggle on the basis of the tenders received by them from different subcontractors. To that end, the general rules were adjusted to the specific nature of subcontracting, by moving from the client-tenderer relationship to the main contractor-subcontractor relationship.

177 The Commission refers to its submissions concerning protection of the entitled undertaking regarding the need to protect subcontractors against the risks of haggling.

Findings of the Court

178 The Court finds, first, that the applicants' arguments to the effect that protection of the entitled undertaking is necessary to avoid haggling, which would lead to ruinous competition, are irrelevant in the context of a plea concerning infringement of Article 85(1) of the Treaty; they will be examined in connection with the plea concerning infringement of Article 85(3) of the Treaty.

179 Where the price tenders of the various participants in the meeting have been adjudged comparable or made comparable by the meeting, the procedure provided for seeks to result in the designation of an entitled undertaking. It is necessary, first, to outline the aim of the protection enjoyed by the entitled undertaking. Only that undertaking is entitled to negotiate its tender with the contract awarder. The other tenderers are deprived of the right to contact the contract awarder to negotiate the price of services or other matters covered by the contract (Article 28 of the UPRR rules and Article 30 of the UPRO rules in conjunction with Article 5(2) of the Code of Honour). They can thus obtain the contract only by accepting it at the price tendered by them and in accordance with the specifications. In the case of non-simultaneous price tenders, protection of the entitled undertaking also extends to subsequent price tenders (Article 28 of the UPRR rules, Article 30 of the UPRO rules and Article 5(3) of the Code of Honour). Contractors approached subsequently by a contract awarder are prohibited from submitting a price without the consent of the entitled undertaking or, in the event of refusal, the consent of an ad hoc committee appointed by the office concerned. That committee can give an affirmative decision only if the price proposed in the subsequent tender falls considerably short (by 2.5% to 10%, according to the sector concerned) of the price tendered by the entitled undertaking. That protection of the entitled undertaking lasts for two to five years (according to the value of the contract concerned).

180 The rules provide for three methods of designating the entitled undertaking. This will either be the lowest bidder at the meeting, or the contractor first approached in the case of non-simultaneous price tenders, or, finally, the contractor designated a priori as such by the meeting in accordance with the preference procedure.

181 As regards simultaneous price tenders where there is no withdrawal or grant of preference, the entitled undertaking is the contractor whose blank figure is lowest. The question arises, however, whether or not that protection, besides coming into being after an anti-competitive exchange of information has taken place and follows the fixing of parts of prices, itself likewise results in

182 The system of protecting the entitled undertaking is intended to grant the contractor who has submitted the lowest blank figure at the meeting (that is to say the lowest price tender from which the price increases have been subtracted) protection of his tender as regards its content and price against negotiations which might take place between the contract awarder and other members of the SPO, both those who took part in the meeting and those who did not, the former being precluded from negotiating their tenders whilst the latter must obtain the consent of the entitled undertaking or an arbitration committee in order to be able to tender. To that end, the contractors taking part in the meeting start by agreeing between themselves the terms on which they will compete. Thus, they determine what should be the content of the various tenders so that they can provide equivalent alternatives for the contract awarder, from which a choice must be made thereafter only on the basis of the price.

183 It must be emphasized that, even if, at the meeting, the judgment as to the comparability of the tenders is as objective as possible, it is unacceptable for contractors unilaterally to substitute their judgment for that of the party awarding the contract, which must legitimately be entitled to bring to bear subjective preferences, such as the reputation of the contractor, his availability and his proximity, and to make a judgment itself, as future user, as to the equivalence, from its own point of view, of the various tenders.

184 In the case of non-simultaneous price tenders, it is important to note that the applicants merely state that it is essential to designate the first contractor approached as the entitled undertaking in order to ensure that the rules on simultaneous price tenders are not evaded, but that they do not deny in that connection that protection is granted without competition having taken place. It follows that the restriction of competition deriving from the protection enjoyed by the entitled undertaking in the case of non-simultaneous invitations to tender is not disputed, but that it will be necessary to consider whether that mechanism, as a necessary complement to the rules on simultaneous invitations to tender, fulfils the prescribed conditions for an exemption to be granted under Article 85(3) of the Treaty (see below, second plea in law).

185 As regards preference, this enables the person concerned to be designated as the entitled undertaking by the participants in the meeting, whatever the blank figure submitted by him, provided that he adopts as his definitive tender figure the lowest blank figure plus the applicable reimbursements. As the Commission points out (decision, paragraph 85), the preference mechanism constitutes a sharing of the market in that it is the participants in the meeting who decide which of them is to benefit from protection as the entitled undertaking at a time when competition has not yet taken effect. By so doing, they share the market amongst themselves to the detriment of the freedom enjoyed by consumers to choose their suppliers (judgment of the Court of Justice in Suiker Unie, cited above, paragraph 180). In that regard, it is of little importance that the participants in the meeting do not compete with each other on a permanent and structured basis because of the specific features of each project. Indeed, there is absolutely no need to inquire into the motives of undertakings which share the market amongst themselves in order to determine whether such sharing of the market is caught by the prohibition laid down in Article 85(1) of the Treaty.

186 It may be true that the machinery for protecting the entitled undertaking does not entirely eliminate the freedom of choice of the contract awarder, who may still award the contract to a participant in the meeting other than the entitled undertaking (but without being able to negotiate his tender) or to another contractor (subject to the consent of the entitled undertaking or an arbitration committee if he is a member of the SPO). It must nevertheless be stated that such freedom of choice is extremely restricted by the protection conferred on the entitled undertaking since the other participants in the meeting can accept the contract only in the form contained in their price tenders. Thus, the contract awarder will be deprived of the right to exercise his preferences regarding content and price within each tender and will therefore be limited to choosing between tenders as a whole. Moreover, his possibility of selecting parts of the tender from the entitled undertaking will be severely limited since that undertaking knows that it is protected and is aware of the extent of the protection available to it in relation to SPO members since it knows the figures tendered by the other participants in the meeting and the scales applicable to non-simultaneous price tenders.

187 It follows that the protection afforded to the entitled undertaking restricts competition, and that it will be necessary to consider in relation to the second plea in law whether that protection, which is intended to safeguard contractors from haggling, should qualify for an exemption under Article 85(3) of the Treaty.

V ° Behaviour of the SPO towards non-participating contractors (decision, paragraphs 49 to 51, 98 and 99)

Arguments of the parties

188 The applicants maintain that contractors are entirely free as to whether or not to join the SPO permanently or to be bound by its rules for a particular contract. No pressure is brought to bear on non-member contractors to join. However, they consider that, in order to ensure that certain contractors do not abuse the system by sometimes being bound by it and sometimes not, it is necessary to provide for penalties. Since the system of rules constitutes a single whole, it is necessary to ensure that no-one takes the benefits without bearing the burdens.

189 They recognize that the SPO offices have contacts with non-member contractors but, they say, these are occasional and cannot in any circumstances be regarded as constituting pressure. At most, certain non-members would from time to time be invited to take part in a meeting.

190 The applicants also reject the statement contained in the second subparagraph of paragraph 99 of the decision that, in order to operate in the Netherlands market, foreign undertakings must enter into an association with a Netherlands undertaking bound by the rules. That statement, they say, is contradicted by the figures produced by them regarding both the number of cooperation contracts signed and the number of contracts obtained by foreign undertakings which have not subscribed to the rules.

191 They concede that, at meetings, efforts are made to determine whether, besides the participants, third parties have also been invited to tender but they claim that that exchange of information does not restrict competition. The information exchanged is of little value and does not enable participants to adjust their conduct accordingly, in particular in determining their blank figure, because the latter is dependent upon other economic factors.

192 The applicants deny that the rules enable SPO members to protect themselves effectively against competition from third parties. In arguing thus the Commission overlooks the fact that the members of the SPO none the less compete with each other and with third parties. They therefore deny that, with regard to the designation of an entitled undertaking or the fixing of reimbursements for calculation costs, the participants act differently according to whether or not external competitors present themselves. In particular, the figure of 80% quoted in paragraph 51 of the decision does not indicate that the participants in the meeting enjoy a greater likelihood of obtaining a contract than non-participants, still less that such greater likelihood is the result of collusion.

193 The applicants conclude that the accusations made by the Commission without having undertaken an inquiry are without foundation. As evidence of this, they state that if non-member contractors were really victims of the behaviour of SPO members, they would either have complained about such conduct or would have become members of the SPO. Moreover, it should not be forgotten that in most cases it is the person awarding the contract who, by issuing a restricted invitation to tender, determines the number and identity of the contractors which will compete for the project under tender.

194 The Commission replies that the system of penalties provided for in the rules may encourage non-members to be bound by the rules more or less permanently, even if the purpose of the system is to avoid abuse of the rules.

195 It observes that the applicants do not deny that the offices contact non-member undertakings and states that its inquiries have established that such contacts are not confined to asking those undertakings to be bound by the rules.

196 The Commission also claims that the freedom to comply or not comply with the rules is somewhat relative as far as foreign undertakings are concerned since in most cases they must operate through the intermediary of cooperation with a Netherlands undertaking to gain entry to the market, as is apparent from a recommendation from the German-Dutch Chamber of Commerce ° and most of the contractors with which cooperation is possible are SPO members. The Commission considers that the figures produced by the applicants are biased since they relate only to formal associations of undertakings.

197 It refers again to the fact that the nature of the information exchanged at meetings places participants at an advantage over outside undertakings, as shown in the decision paragraphs 49 to 51, 98 and 99.

198 The Commission concludes that there is a restriction of competition since each outsider is confronted by the following dilemma: either to take action alone to attack the united front put up by the participants at the meeting or to participate in that united front and thereby restrict its opportunities to compete with other undertakings.

Findings of the Court

199 The Court considers that, quite apart from any occasional pressure brought to bear by the applicants on non-members to join the SPO, the system of rules in itself, conferring as it does on the participating undertakings considerable advantages, particularly in terms of exchange of information and reimbursement of calculation costs, by its very existence constitutes pressure exerted on non-members to join the SPO (see paragraph 98 of the decision).

200 Moreover, by its nature, the system of rules comes closer to attaining its objectives if a large number of undertakings agree to be bound by them. The limitation of transaction costs and the effort to reduce haggling are more effective if the number of cases in which contracts are awarded to non-SPO members is reduced. Accordingly, the award of a contract to a non-member is regarded as a risk against which precautionary measures must be taken by payment of part of the price increases into a guarantee fund intended inter alia to cover that risk (decision, paragraph 43).

201 It follows that the conditions are fulfilled for pressure to be exerted on non-members to join the system. In those circumstances, the mere fact, admitted by the applicants, that the SPO offices contact non-member undertakings may be regarded as constituting pressure.

202 Moreover, it is common ground that the rules enable the meeting to decide a priori not to designate an entitled undertaking (see paragraphs 100, 101 and 117 above) and to apply price increases. Those possibilities enable the participants in the meeting to modify their conduct on the market according to the degree of external competition. They may thus participate in such competition with the advantage that they have, in advance, been reimbursed by the system for calculation costs, so that they are able in specific cases to allocate no calculation costs to the project for which they are competing with undertakings which are not members of the applicants. Similarly, where it is decided from the start not to designate an entitled undertaking, they are, if need be, able to participate in haggling which would bring them up against non-member undertakings and thereby increase the likelihood of one of them securing the contract.

203 It must also be observed that the fact that the applicants' members are constrained to adopt a defensive attitude in concert when confronted with outside competition confirms their interest in increasing their membership and therefore decreasing the number of outside competitors likely to make them give up the advantages of their membership of the applicants.

204 It follows from all the foregoing that the Commission was right to consider that the system of rules introduced in 1987 undermines the freedom of contractors to join or not join it, since non-membership deprives them of certain advantages afforded by the system and brings them into competition, not with a number of contractors acting independently from each other, but with a number of contractors which have common interests and information and therefore behave in the same way.

205 It follows that the rules introduced in 1987 constitute an infringement of Article 85(1) of the Treaty.

206 As regards the previous rules, the Court notes that after finding that they differed from the rules introduced in 1987 in certain essential respects, such as the inclusion of a counter-notification procedure, the possibility of improving and amending prices and a procedure for granting preference, leading to an increase in the prices of all the participants, the Commission took the view in its decision (paragraphs 62 to 65) that the rules introduced in 1987 were, in essence, merely a continuation of the previous rules and that, consequently, its legal assessment of the former also applied mutatis mutandis to the latter (paragraph 114). The Commission also considers (decision, paragraph 138) that, as from 1 October 1980, the various previous rules were sufficiently standardized, since they were approved by the SPO (paragraphs 15, 62 and 138) and were also subject to a standard system of penalties established by the Code of Honour and made binding on SPO members by resolution of its General Assembly with effect from 1 October 1980 (paragraphs 12, 13 and 138).

207 The Court finds that, in response to those statements, the applicants maintain, first, that the regulations introduced in 1987 do not constitute a "continuation of agreements of the same nature concluded earlier" but rather "a departure" from them (application, paragraph 3.14 of the legal submissions) and, secondly, that the SPO never drew up the "Burger- and Utiliteitsbouw Openbaar" UPR rules (governing residential and non-residential construction under the open procedure) which took effect on 1 January 1973 since the various associations continued to apply their own rules individually until 1987 (reply, p. 24).

208 It must be observed, first, that, far from contradicting paragraphs 62 and 65 of the decision, the arguments put forward by the applicants in fact constitute an admission that the Commission' s analysis in those paragraphs is well founded. To show that the rules introduced in 1987 mark a "departure" from the agreements of the same nature concluded previously, they state that those rules no longer include certain possibilities such as "counter-notification" or "improvements" or "price corrections", the first of which, they concede, "was liable to offer the contractors concerned the opportunity to engage in unlawful concertation" and, in the case of the second possibility, that it had been prohibited "because it was applied not only in a disastrous competitive situation but also because, being intended to measure the phenomenon of price compression, that system inevitably incorporated a number of arbitrary factors" (application, paragraph 3.14 of the legal submissions). Thus, by stating that the rules introduced in 1987 are less restrictive of competition than the previous rules and that it is in that respect that they mark a departure from the former, the applicants have indicated that the former are a continuation of the latter.

209 Consequently, the Commission was right to consider that there was continuity between the previous rules and the rules introduced in 1987 and that, in certain respects, the former incorporated restrictions of competition at least as extensive as those contained in the latter.

210 It must be observed, secondly, that, contrary to the view which the applicants appear to take in their reply, the decision does not say that, as from 1 October 1980, the various previous rules were adopted by the SPO. The decision merely states that, as from that date, those regulations had to be approved by the SPO, a statement not contradicted by the applicants, which have merely stated that until 1987 it was the associations which adopted those rules. It must also be observed, as the Commission points out, that in those respects the decision merely repeats the information provided to it by the applicants in the answers which they gave on 19 December 1988 in response to the requests for information sent to them by the Commission (rejoinder, annex 2). Moreover, it is important to note that the applicants have not denied that, as from 25 November 1980, Article 4 of the Besluit Algemene Bepalingen (Decision concerning geneal provisions) required the approval of the SPO for the adoption and implementation of the rules of the various applicants.

211 It must be observed, thirdly, that as from 1 October 1980, the various previous regulations were indeed subject to a system of standard penalties introduced by the Code of Honour and made binding on the SPO members by resolution of its General Assembly as from that date.

212 It follows that, in all the circumstances, it was proper for the decision not to undertake a separate analysis of the content of the previous rules and to consider that they restricted competition at least as much as the rules introduced in 1987, which represented a continuation of them. It is also correctly concluded in the decision that, as from 1 October 1980, the various rules had been sufficiently standardized by the system of SPO approval and the standard system of penalties to be regarded as a cohesive whole.

213 It follows from all the foregoing that the second limb of the first plea in law must be rejected.

Third limb: no effect on trade between Member States

Arguments of the parties

214 The applicants maintain that Article 85 of the Treaty is applicable to agreements limited to the territory of a single Member State only if they appreciably affect trade between Member States. This presupposes, first, that there is trade between the Member States in the market concerned (judgment of the Court of Justice in Case 22/78 Hugin v Commission [1979] ECR 1869) and, secondly, that such trade is adversely and appreciably affected by the agreements in question (judgment of the Court of Justice in Case 320/87 Ottung v Klee & Weilbach and Others [1989] ECR 1177, paragraph 19). In the present case, none of those requirements is met and Article 85 of the Treaty is therefore not applicable.

215 As regards the first requirement, the applicants claim that it is apparent in particular from the study carried out by Mr Hartelust that trade between Member States is almost non-existent in the construction market, in terms both of numbers of sites and of value, and that it is wholly non-existent in specific product markets such as that of demolition or marking. In their reply, they add that the Commission cannot contend, by relying on the judgment of the Court of Justice in Case 19/77 Miller v Commission [1978] ECR 131, that regard must be had not only to existing trade but also to the future development of trade shaped by legislative amendments or other factors. They consider that the legislative amendments referred to by the Commission were unforeseeable when the applicants drew up and applied their respective rules and regulations.

216 As regards the second requirement, the applicants consider, essentially, that in the absence of trade the rules cannot adversely and appreciably affect trade, unless the Commission establishes that the absence of significant trade is attributable to the rules. In the present case, the Commission has not proved this for the simple reason that the absence of trade is attributable to structural factors, such as the limited geographical area of activity of undertakings, high transport costs, the role of the main contractor, problems connected with the diversity of (standardized) specifications, culture, taste, languages, and so forth, and to the fact that it is the party awarding the contract which defines the number and quality of contractors it approaches. Moreover, the Commission has not shown that in the case of each of the previous sets of rules there has been international trade in each product market and in each of the geographical markets covered by those rules separately. The Commission may not here apply the "bundle theory" where this presupposes that the various agreements operate in the same product market and the same geographical market. They consider that they have proved that each sector constitutes a separate market (see above, first limb of the plea). Finally, those rules should be seen in parallel with the Community legislation on public works contracts which, by fixing a threshold of ECU 5 million (which is significantly higher than the threshold of ECU 200 000 fixed by the directive on public supply contracts) indicates that only very large construction projects can give rise to substantial international trade.

217 They also claim that in any event the rules do not have the effect of partitioning the Netherlands market since they apply without distinction to foreign contractors and Dutch contractors, both categories being free to choose whether or not to be bound by them.

218 The applicants deny that the rules reduce recourse to open tendering procedures and thus operate to the detriment of foreign undertakings. Open tendering procedures are no less frequent in the Netherlands than elsewhere and foreigners take no greater part in them than in restricted procedures.

219 Furthermore, they consider that the effects which the rules allegedly have on demand in the Netherlands originating from clients established in other Member States do not come within the concept of trade between Member States within the meaning of Article 85 of the Treaty and that, in any event, the Commission' s reasoning is based on the misconception that the rules bring about a uniform increase of prices in the Netherlands.

220 Finally, the applicants maintain that the thesis of the alleged competitive "advantage" available to Dutch undertakings acting in the market of other Member States, resulting from the rules and more particularly from the system of allocating calculation costs, is disproved by the low profitability of building undertakings in the Netherlands and by the comparison undertaken by PRC BV Management Consultants ("PRC") between, on the one hand, the amount of general costs plus reimbursements in respect of calculation costs in the Netherlands and, on the other, the percentage applied in respect of general costs in four other Member States.

221 The Commission replies by referring to paragraphs 103 to 108 of the decision. It adds that, far from requiring that the regulations oust foreign contractors from the Netherlands market, the consistent case-law of the Court of Justice merely requires that the rules should be capable of appreciably affecting trade between Member States. Consequently, account should be taken not only of present inter-State trade but also of potential inter-State trade (judgment of the Court of Justice in Miller v Commission, cited above).

222 The Commission considers that it is entirely inappropriate to invoke the judgment of the Court of Justice in Hugin v Commission, cited above, since that case was concerned with adverse effects on competition which, far from affecting the entire territory of a Member State, covered only a small part or fell into a category entirely different from that of the present rules. Agreements covering the entire territory of a Member State, as in the present case, are inherently liable to give rise to partitioning of the national market in a manner conflicting with the economic interpenetration which the Treaty is designed to bring about (judgment of the Court of Justice in Case 8/72 Vereniging van Cementhandelaren v Commission [1972] ECR 977). Such agreements result in subdivision of the Common Market into several national markets characterized by artificially differentiated conditions (judgment of the Court of Justice in Case 246/86 Belasco v Commission [1989] ECR 2117). According to the Commission, it has the responsibility not of establishing that the rules oust foreign contractors from the Netherlands building market but rather, as it has demonstrated in the decision, that they radically affect conditions of competition under which foreign contractors must operate, both when they participate in the system and when they submit tenders as outsiders. It adds that that type of effect on trade between Member States was covered by the statement of objections (paragraph 98 et seq.) and by the decision (paragraph 106 et seq.).

223 In the present case, it considers that trade between Member States is limited but exists and that Mr Hartelust' s study is not significant because it takes no account of trade not covered by the rules, does not state whether it covers the minutes of all the meetings held under the rules and covers only a limited period from 1 January 1986 to 1 October 1988.

224 Moreover, it considers that, by means of the system of reimbursements for calculation costs, the rules have the effect of discouraging contract awarders from having recourse to open procedures. However, open procedures are the best way of allowing foreign contractors access to the Netherlands markets since, when they are used, the identity of the tenderers is not determined by the contract awarder. In support of this, the Commission refers to the complaint lodged by the municipality of Rotterdam.

225 The Commission infers from this that the rules are indeed liable to affect trade between Member States. It adds that it is pointless for the applicants to draw distinctions based on periods of time and the unified nature or otherwise of the rules, since the rules applied prior to 1 April 1987 were in even greater conflict with Article 85(1) of the Treaty than the rules at present in force. They had been drawn up and standardized under the auspices or control of the SPO and, as from 1980, were subject to a uniform system of penalties laid down by the Code of Honour. Consequently, it is important to determine not whether, in certain sectors, there was trade between the Member States but whether the rules, seen as a whole, are liable to affect trade between Member States (see above, first limb of the plea).

Findings of the Court

226 The Commission took the view that the rules affected trade between Member States in three different ways: by affecting supply from other Member States (paragraphs 103 to 111 of the decision), demand from other Member States (paragraph 112) and supply from participating undertakings in the other Member States (paragraph 113).

227 It will be recalled, first, that the condition concerning the effect on trade between the Member States, contained in Articles 85 and 86 of the Treaty, is intended to determine the scope of Community law in relation to that of the laws of the Member States (judgment of the Court of Justice in Joined Cases 56 and 58/64 Consten & Grundig v Commission [1966] ECR 299).

228 It is sufficient therefore if one of the three adverse effects on trade between the Member States referred to by the Commission in paragraphs 103 to 113 of the decision is established for Article 85 of the Treaty to be applicable to the rules adopted by the applicants.

229 It should also be borne in mind that it has been consistently held that an agreement which extends over the whole territory of one of the Member States has, by its very nature, the effect of reinforcing compartmentalization of national markets, thereby holding up the economic interpenetration which the Treaty is intended to bring about (judgments of the Court of Justice in Vereniging van Cementhandelaren, cited above, paragraph 29, and Case 42/84 Remia and Others v Commission [1985] ECR 2545, paragraph 22).

230 In the present case, it is undisputed that the rules introduced in 1987 apply throughout the Netherlands. As regards the previous rules, it should be borne in mind that they are similar to each other and that, as a whole, they cover the Netherlands in its entirety and the whole construction market (see paragraph 81 above). Consequently, none of those sets of rules can be considered separately from the others with which they form a whole, particularly since those rules were the subject of standardized penalty procedures imposed by a single association as from 1980. The previous rules must thus be treated in the same way as the rules introduced in 1987 (see above, paragraphs 206 to 212). All those rules are, therefore, inherently liable to affect trade between the Member States since they affect the conditions of competition in the Netherlands by differentiating them artificially from those obtaining in other Member States and thus result in fragmentation of the Common Market.

231 In any event, the Court considers that the Commission was right to find that the rules are liable to have an appreciable impact on supply from other Member States and on supply from participating undertakings in the other Member States.

232 As regards the impact of the rules on supply from other Member States, it must be noted, as the Commission observes, that the applicants themselves stated that the system of reimbursements for calculation costs is intended in particular to encourage contract awarders to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of approaching a larger or smaller number of tenderers since, the transaction costs having become visible, the contract awarder knows that he will have to bear the burden of them. In general, such a system leads to higher transaction costs. In order to attain that objective, the system encourages contract awarders to focus their calls for tenders more narrowly and thus to invite a smaller number of tenderers, causing those seeking to award contracts to bear the calculation costs of all the tenderers they have approached. Since it is possible to limit the number of tenderers approached by contract awarders only under a restricted procedure, the system favours restricted rather than open procedures and, within the category of restricted procedures, those which are most restricted, as indicated in the complaint from the municipality of Rotterdam (paragraphs 19 and 34 of that complaint).

233 The Commission is right to consider that the open procedure provides the best opportunity for foreign contractors to penetrate the Netherlands market.

234 It follows that in that respect the rules are liable to have a direct or indirect effect on supply from the other Member States.

235 As the Commission rightly states, the applicants are not entitled to invoke the limited extent of trade between the Member States in seeking to reject that analysis since they do not contest the figures produced by the Commission in the decision which show that, although limited, there is indeed real trade between Member States. Thus, the applicants do not deny that about 150 undertakings established in other Member States comply, more or less permanently, with the UPR rules. Those undertakings are established mainly in Germany and Belgium and include all the largest German and Belgian undertakings, the others being French, Luxembourg or Italian undertakings. The Court of Justice has held that, for restrictive arrangements to be prohibited by Article 85(1) of the Treaty, it is not necessary for them appreciably to affect trade between Member States but merely to be capable of having that effect (judgment of the Court of Justice in Miller v Commission, cited above, paragraph 15). Since a potential effect is sufficient, future development of trade may be taken into account in assessing the effect of the restrictive arrangements on trade between Member States, whether or not it was foreseeable. Finally, as regards the appreciable nature of that effect, it must be noted, as the Commission observes, that the more limited the trade the greater is the likelihood that it will be affected by the restrictive arrangements.

236 The Court also considers that the applicants may not rely on the threshold of ECU 5 million laid down by Directive 71/305/EEC. As the Commission pointed out in its decision (paragraph 105), the aims pursued by Article 85 of the Treaty and by the directive differ too much for the threshold laid down by the latter to serve as a point of reference for the level at which Article 85 applies.

It should be observed that the legal basis of that directive has no connection with Article 85 of the Treaty and that provision is not mentioned in its preamble. It cannot therefore be contended that the threshold laid down in that directive is to guide the Commission in its application of Article 85 of the Treaty.

237 As regards the impact of the rules on supply from participating undertakings in the other Member States, it is indisputable that, when operating in relation to a given project outside the scope of the rules, as is the case outside the Netherlands, the member undertakings of the applicants enjoy advantages over non-member undertakings.

238 In that regard, the comparison made by the applicants is a general comparison, whereas the advantage available to Netherlands undertakings when operating abroad must be assessed case by case. It is undisputable that the system of allocating calculation costs, including the guarantee fund, enables the applicants' members not to include in their general costs the calculation costs incurred in respect of tenders where they have not been successful, whereas foreign contractors have to include those costs in their general costs. Thus, for a given contract, tendered for outside the Netherlands, the applicants' members have to include in their tender only the calculation costs generated by that contract, whereas the other contractors have to include part of the calculation costs incurred in respect of all the tenders in which they have participated unsuccessfully. Thus, they enjoy an artificial competitive advantage over competing undertakings which carry on the bulk of their business in other Member States. Trade between Member States is thereby affected.

239 The applicants cannot refute the probative force of those factors by referring to the low profit margins of Dutch construction undertakings, which, they claim, is apparent from a comparison between the amount of general costs plus reimbursements for calculation costs in the Netherlands and the percentage applied in respect of general costs in four other Member States. The low profitability of Netherlands undertakings may be attributed to numerous factors other than the system of allocating calculation costs.

240 It follows that the rules are liable appreciably to affect trade between Member States and that this limb of the plea must therefore be dismissed.

241 It follows from all the foregoing that the first plea cannot be upheld.

Second plea: infringement of Article 85(3) of the Treaty

First limb: failure to take account of the characteristics of the market and of the rules concerning the burden of proof

(1) The characteristics of the market

Arguments of the parties

242 The applicants claim that it is apparent from the judgment of the Court of Justice in Case 45/85 Verband der Sachversicherer v Commission [1987] ECR 405, paragraphs 14 and 15, that, although the Community competition rules apply fully to the Netherlands building sector, that certainly does not mean that Community competition law does not enable account to be taken of the particular features of certain areas of economic activity. It is for the Commission, within the scope of its power to grant exemptions under Article 85(3) of the Treaty from the prohibitions laid down in Article 85, to take account of the particular nature of various economic sectors and the of difficulties associated with those sectors. In the present case, they claim, the Commission failed to take account of the particular characteristics of the building sector, such as the fact that it typically comprises small and medium-sized undertakings, and the difficulties peculiar to the sector, which would have justified adoption of the notified rules, which are typically sectoral in character.

243 Among those characteristics, they draw attention in particular to the fact that each contract

awarder defines his product and the product can therefore be used only once, the nature of the building business (there is an asymmetrical relationship between the size of the undertaking and the size of the site; there are problems of continuity and no economies of scale; the fact that, in a single product market, building undertakings are largely interchangeable; and the absence of an access threshold for small-scale operators), the fact that the price of the works must be fixed in advance, that the preparation of a tender involves high transaction costs and, finally, the fact that recourse to tendering procedures as a way of awarding contracts is liable to lead to economically unjustified prices.

244 The applicants maintain that those various characteristics lead to structural imbalances in the market between, on the one hand, the awarder of the building contract, for whom the market is entirely transparent and who is able to determine the identity of the undertakings which will have access to it and has the power to set the various tenders submitted to him against each other and, on the other hand, suppliers for whom the market is not transparent, who depend upon the choice made by awarders of building contracts and who must bear high transaction costs in order to enter the market. This structural imbalance leads to economically unjustified prices and ruinous competition.

245 According to the applicants, that structural imbalance between supply and demand, evidenced by numerous specialized studies, is particularly marked in the Netherlands, first because the main contractor is responsible to the contract awarder for the proper execution of the works, including those executed by subcontractors, and, secondly, because the Netherlands legislation does not contain the same rigorous prohibition as the legislation of other Member States whereby a contract awarder may not "play off" the various contractors one against the other.

246 The applicants claim that the rules at issue are intended solely to correct that structural imbalance, essentially by reducing the transaction costs incurred in respect of tenders and preventing "playing-off". The small profit margins observed in the Netherlands construction market support that analysis. That objective is common to all those involved in the market and the Netherlands authorities themselves, because if the prohibited rules did not exist there would either be severely damaging competition or secret agreements designed to rectify the imbalances.

247 In their reply, the applicants claim that none of the Commission' s allegations concerning the operation of other markets in services or the building market in other Member States is founded on any analysis or investigation carried out by the Commission and that they are therefore unjustified. The Commission has, they claim, merely examined, in microeconomic terms, the extent to which the freedom of action of economic agents is restricted and has treated any restriction of freedom of action as if it were a restriction of competition, whereas it should have examined the rules in macroeconomic terms.

248 The Commission concedes that the characteristics of the construction sector must be taken into account in so far as they determine the economic and legal background against which the contested rules must be examined. However, the effect of those characteristics cannot be to remove those regulations wholly or partly from the scope of Article 85. In those circumstances, an abstract discussion of the characteristics of the market, as engaged in by the applicants, is irrelevant.

249 It contends that the construction sector in the Netherlands does not differ from other service sectors or the building sector in other Member States to such an extent that a considerably different approach should be taken in examining it in the light of Article 85 of the Treaty. Consequently, the fact that the market in the various sectors operates correctly in the absence of rules of the kind declared unlawful entirely undermines the view that the contested rules provide the requisite remedy for structural imbalances in the Netherlands building sector.

250 The Commission also refers to paragraphs 71 to 77 of the decision in which it has already answered the applicants' arguments.

251 It states in particular, in reply to the assertion that recourse to tendering procedures as a method of awarding contracts leads to economically unjustified prices, that there is no economically justified level of prices, since the overall cost price is different for each undertaking and varies according to the circumstances. In certain situations, it would in fact be economically justified to charge prices lower than the average cost in order to amortize fixed costs.

252 Finally, the Commission considers that it is not open to criticism for failing to take account of the macroeconomic aspect of the rules. In order to obtain an exemption, it is incumbent upon the applicants to establish, in particular, that the rules make a specific contribution to improving production or distribution or promoting technical or economic progress. In those circumstances, it is insufficient to invoke macroeconomic progress, which has certainly not been proved to be ascribable to the regulations.

Findings of the Court

253 The Court of Justice has held that it is for the Commission, exercising its power under Article 85(3) of the Treaty, to grant exemption from the prohibitions contained in Article 85(1), to take account of the particular nature of different branches of the economy and the problems peculiar to them (judgment of the Court of Justice in Verband der Sachversicherer, cited above, paragraph 15).

254 In the present case, the applicants object to the Commission' s undertaking a microeconomic analysis of the rules when their aim was to rectify imbalances existing at macroeconomic level between supply and demand as a result of the characteristics of the undertakings operating in that sector and the characteristics of the products involved, and the shortcomings of the Netherlands legislation which imposes responsibility on the main contractor and does not facilitate effective action to counteract "playing-off".

255 The Court finds that, in its decision, the Commission noted the characteristics of the market described by the applicants (paragraphs 71 to 77) but considered that those characteristics did not justify an exemption (paragraphs 115 to 128). Their arguments concerning the characteristics of the market must therefore be taken into account when the Court examines the rejection of the applicant' s application made under Article 85(3) of the Treaty for the rules at issue to be exempted.

256 It must also be pointed out that the Commission was right to refer ° and in so doing was not contradicted by the applicants ° to the fact that no rules similar to those at issue in these proceedings exist either in other service sectors having characteristics similar to those of the construction market or in the building sector in other Member States. The Commission was also right to reject the view, advanced by the applicants, that restrictive agreements are inevitable in the building industry. The assertion that, if an exemption is not granted to a notified agreement, other more restrictive arrangements will emerge, cannot be justification for exemption under Article 85(3) of the Treaty. Similarly, it is unacceptable for undertakings to counteract legislation which they consider excessively favourable to consumers by entering into restrictive arrangements intended to offset the advantages granted to consumers by that legislation, on the pretext that it has created an imbalance detrimental to them.

257 It follows from the foregoing that the applicants' arguments concerning inadequate consideration by the Commission of the characteristics of the market must be rejected to the extent to which they are presented separately in respect of this limb of this plea in law.

(2) The burden of proof

Arguments of the parties

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

258 First, the applicants claim that in view of all the facts which they brought to the Commission' s attention with a view to obtaining an exemption, the Commission was not entitled merely to reject their arguments outright and should have shown that an exemption was not economically justified. Accordingly, in their view, it should in particular have demonstrated that, without the rules, the Netherlands construction market would function better or else it should have indicated what aspects of the rules it considered acceptable.

259 They also maintain that the Commission should have discussed with them the advantages and disadvantages of the rules from the economic point of view instead of rejecting any economic justification outright. In the present case, the Commission did not satisfy its obligation under the case-law to assist actively in the granting of an exemption (judgment of the Court of Justice in Consten & Grundig, cited above).

260 The Commission replies that the Court of Justice has consistently held that it is incumbent first and foremost on the undertakings to convince it, on the basis of documentary evidence, that an exemption is justified. Such cooperation as undertakings may claim from the Commission consists in consideration of the arguments which the undertakings put to it in support of their application for an exemption (see the judgment in Consten & Grundig, cited above, at 347). That cooperation does not mean that the Commission is under any obligation to put forward other solutions. A fortiori the Commission cannot be required to demonstrate that an exemption is not justified or to indicate what it regards as acceptable.

261 The Commission states that the rules form a single whole, as the applicants themselves have repeatedly emphasized. For that reason, it considers that, although certain aspects of the contested rules satisfied the conditions laid down by Article 85(3) of the Treaty, it could not exempt them separately. In those circumstances, there could be no question of a conditional exemption.

Findings of the Court

262 It is settled law that it is for undertakings seeking an exemption under Article 85(3) to establish, on the basis of documentary evidence, that an exemption is justified.

Accordingly, the Commission cannot be criticized for failing to put forward alternative solutions or to indicate in what respects it would regard the grant of an exemption as justified (see the judgment of the Court of Justice in Joined Cases 43 and 63/82 VBVB and VBBB v Commission [1984] ECR 19, paragraph 52). In applying the competition rules, all that is incumbent upon the Commission, by virtue of its obligation to state reasons, is to mention the matters of fact and of law and the considerations which prompted it to take a decision rejecting the application for exemption, and the applicants may not require it to discuss all the matters of fact and law raised by them in the administrative procedure (judgment of the Court of Justice in Remia v Commission, cited above, paragraphs 26 and 44).

263 It follows that it is incumbent on the applicants in this case to establish that the Commission committed an error of law or of fact by refusing to grant it an exemption under Article 85(3) of the Treaty.

264 In that connection, it must be emphasized that in the course of the administrative procedure the applicants stated repeatedly that the rules constituted a cohesive whole which should be granted an exemption as such. Accordingly, the Commission was right to confine itself, in its decision, to considering whether or not the two central elements of the regulations, the specific purpose of which is to correct the alleged macroeconomic imbalances in the market, namely protection of the entitled undertaking and reimbursement of calculation costs, satisfied the four conditions for the grant of an exemption laid down in Article 85(3) of the Treaty.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

265 It follows that the first limb of the second plea in law must be dismissed.

Second limb: failure to observe the conditions for granting an exemption

266 The Court considers that it is appropriate to examine, first, whether the rules contribute to improving production or distribution of products or promoting technical or economic progress, whilst at the same time leaving users a fair share of the resulting profit and, secondly, whether the rules impose on the undertakings concerned restrictions which are not necessary for the attainment of those objectives and whether they enable such undertakings to eliminate competition in respect of a substantial part of the products concerned, in order to establish whether the Commission was right to refuse to grant an exemption, under Article 85(3) of the Treaty, for the rules in question.

267 It must first be borne in mind that the four conditions for granting an exemption under Article 85(3) of the Treaty are cumulative (see in particular the judgment in Consten & Grundig, cited above; and the judgment of the Court of First Instance in Joined Cases T-39/92 and T-40/92 CB and Europay v Commission [1994] ECR II-49, paragraph 110) and that therefore non-fulfilment of only one of those conditions will render it necessary to confirm the decision rejecting the application for exemption. Accordingly, the Court will consider more particularly whether the Commission was right to conclude that the rules did not leave users a fair share of the benefit resulting from the rules and that the restriction of competition imposed by the rules on contractors was not necessary for the attainment of those objectives.

(1) The contribution of the rules to improvement of distribution of products or to promotion of technical or economic progress and the fair share of benefits left to the consumer

268 As regards the contribution of the rules to improved distribution of products or to promotion of technical or economic progress, the applicants state that the contested rules have essentially two objectives: first, to counteract "playing-off" induced by the structural weakness of supply as against demand, which might lead to ruinous competition, and, secondly, to improve the transactional structure of the market by allocating, as far as possible, the transaction costs to the project for which they were incurred. The machinery for reimbursing calculation costs set up for that purpose encourages parties awarding building contracts to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of approaching a greater or lesser number of tenderers and therefore better to target their calls for tenders, and also to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of more or less rigorous wording of the invitation to tender since, once the transaction costs have become visible, the contract awarder knows that he will have to bear them. Such a system, in their view, leads to a lower overall level of transaction costs and a fairer sharing of costs than a system in which the transaction costs imposed by contract awarders on contractors are allocated to the latter' s general costs, which they blindly incorporate in all their prices, with the result that all awarders of contracts have to bear the high transaction costs for which only some of them are responsible. The aims of the rules are common to all those involved in the market and the Netherlands authorities themselves, since in the absence of the prohibited rules there would either be ruinous competition or secret agreements designed to rectify those imbalances.

269 They consider that the Commission committed an error by confining itself to considering the effects of the system of reimbursements of calculation costs in respect of each tendering procedure individually without taking account of the reduction in transaction costs and therefore of prices at macroeconomic level. The need to undertake a macroeconomic analysis is confirmed by scientific studies, which establish, first, that the system does not discourage awarders of contracts from organizing open tendering procedures ° as confirmed by the fact that suspension of the system following the order of the President of the Court of First Instance of 16 July 1992 did not lead to an increase in procedures of that kind ° and, secondly, that general costs, including tendering costs, are in several nearby Member States the same as, or higher than, general costs in the Netherlands, together with the reimbursements for calculation costs and contributions to the operating costs of the trade organizations.

270 According to the applicants, the way in which the Netherlands building market functions is evidence of the real beneficial effects of the rules in question on production and technical and economic progress. The economic analyses show, on a proportionally comparable basis, that the Netherlands building industry operates very effectively and that its productivity is among the fastest growing in Europe, whereas costs, prices and profit margins in the industry are among the lowest in Europe.

271 They maintain that the Commission misunderstood the nature of the mechanisms established by the rules in concluding that they did not satisfy the first condition for the grant of an exemption. They refer to the criticisms made by them in connection with the second limb of the first plea.

272 As regards the fair share of the resultant benefits for consumers, the applicants maintain that the Commission' s misapplication of that condition is apparent from the fact that awarders of building contracts are satisfied with the way the market operates and that the only contract awarder which criticized it (the municipality of Rotterdam) is in favour of adjustments to the rules rather than outright prohibition of them. By its nature, the criterion of a "fair share" is not a "fixed" criterion, so that there are few cases in which positive or negative proof of it could be required. It is precisely from that point of view that the factors just referred to are of particular importance. In their reply, the applicants state that, by contrast perhaps with individuals, large awarders of building contracts are interested not in maximum exploitation of the transactional structure of the market, which would yield them a short-term advantage, but in the existence of a healthy market. That is why they are unanimously in favour of the rules.

273 The applicants maintain that, contrary to the Commission' s view, the PRC study showed that a system of reimbursements of calculation costs is certainly not less effective than a system whereby the costs incurred by an unsuccessful tenderer are charged to his general costs.

274 They also claim that the Commission overlooked the fact that, ultimately, the contract awarder also secures benefits from a tendering system which produces clear and unequivocal results. Moreover, the machinery for preventing tenderers from being played off against one another helps to open up the Netherlands market because it makes it more difficult for contract awarders to favour Dutch contractors at the expense of foreign contractors.

275 The applicants again refer to their submissions regarding the second limb of the first plea.

276 The applicants conclude that their whole analysis is confirmed by the fact that Netherlands contractors have low profit margins, showing that the benefits of their great productivity are fairly shared between contractors and contract awarders.

277 As regards the first condition, the Commission replies that it has already refuted the applicants' arguments concerning the content of the rules in connection with the second limb of the first plea.

278 It states that, having no right to examine the question of reimbursements for calculation costs, the contract awarder is unable, to use the applicants' phrase, "effectively to weigh the advantages and disadvantages" of using one method or another for the award of contracts. Moreover, the scales attached to the UPR rules indicate only maximum levels and do not therefore allow clients to ascertain the extent of the transaction costs actually incurred.

279 The Commission also claims that the reimbursements of calculation costs may encourage contract awarders not to resort to open tendering procedures. In that connection, the fact, referred to by the applicants, that the order of the President of the Court of First Instance of 16 July 1992 did not result in an increased number of open tendering procedures is not significant, in view of the length of the period involved.

280 It also contends, with regard to the redistribution of reimbursements for calculation costs, that the difference between the amounts received by the contract awarder, on the one hand, and those paid over to the other contractors, on the other, results in strengthening of the position of those contractors who have obtained contracts as against those who have not.

281 The Commission adds that the PRC report does not illustrate how the system of reimbursements of calculation costs makes the tendering procedure more efficient, since that report deals with the level of general costs, which is dependent upon so many factors that it is impossible to draw any conclusion from it.

282 Moreover, it observes that the applicants have not shown that the favourable performance of the Netherlands building industry as a whole is attributable to the rules and rejects the view that the rules operate to the satisfaction of all parties concerned. In support of that view, it refers in particular to the complaint lodged by the municipality of Rotterdam and the intervention of Dennendael BV in the present proceedings.

283 As regards the second condition, the Commission considers that the fact that certain contract awarders are in favour of adjustments to the rules rather than outright prohibition of them is not a sufficient basis for stating that that condition is fulfilled. The intervention of Dennendael BV also shows that certain contract awarders are very critical of the rules, which entail substantial and unnecessary increases of costs for them.

284 It adds that the level of profit margins in the Netherlands building sector as a whole is dependent upon so many factors that it is impossible to draw any conclusions from it as to whether a fair share of the alleged benefits accrues to consumers.

285 For the rest, the Commission refers to its answer to the second limb of the first plea.

Findings of the Court

286 In view of the cumulative nature of the four conditions laid down by Article 85(3) of the Treaty for the grant of an exemption, the Court will focus its analysis more particularly on the condition concerning the fair share of benefits for consumers.

287 The arguments of the applicants and of the Commission are on different levels. The applicants base their arguments on a macroeconomic analysis of the advantages which, in their view, may arise from the rules. They consider, referring to macroeconomic analyses such as that carried out by PRC, that the performance of the Netherlands building industry, which charges very low prices and has very narrow profit margins, is evidence of the positive effect of the rules. They consider that that better performance is a consequence of the rules by reason in particular of the fact that the rules make it possible to prevent the formation in the Netherlands of "underground cartels" of the kind found in other Member States of the Community. On the other hand, the Commission' s arguments are in the microeconomic sphere in that they look at the situation through the eyes of individual awarders of building contracts and analyse the effects of the rules on their circumstances. It considers that that microeconomic approach is the only one possible since, unlike the applicants, it categorically rejects the view that underground cartels between contractors are inevitable in the building industry and that the rules have the merit of preventing such cartels. It also considers that the applicants have not successfully proved the existence of a link between the rules and the performance of the Netherlands building industry, in so far as that performance may be attributable to other factors.

288 In view of those differing approaches to the rules, which lead to divergent views as to whether they are eligible for an exemption under Article 85(3) of the Treaty, the review carried out by the Court of the complex economic assessments undertaken by the Commission in the exercise of the discretion conferred on it by Article 85(3) of the Treaty in relation to each of the four conditions laid down therein must, as previously held by the Court of Justice, be limited to ascertaining whether the procedural rules have been complied with, whether proper reasons have been provided, whether the facts have been accurately stated and whether there has been any manifest error of appraisal or misuse of powers (see the judgment of the Court of Justice in Joined Cases 142 and 156/84 BAT and Reynolds v Commission [1987] ECR 4487, paragraph 62, and the judgment of the Court of First Instance in CB and Europay, cited above, paragraph 109).

289 In the present case, the Court must therefore establish whether the facts on which the Commission based its decision to reject the application for exemption are materially correct and whether the Commission committed any manifest error of assessment in rejecting the macroeconomic approach proposed by the applicants and in adopting a microeconomic approach to the rules.

290 In relation to those issues, the Court finds, first, that the Commission was right to consider that it was inappropriate to take as the starting point for analysing the effects of the rules at issue the fact that without them even more serious infringements of Article 85(1) of the Treaty would be committed on the Netherlands building market and that it could reasonably take the view that the formation of underground cartels was not inevitable.

291 The Court finds, secondly, that the Commission was also right to consider that the applicants have not managed to prove, in particular by relying on the macroeconomic studies which they produced, that a causal link exists between the rules and the performance of the Netherlands building industry; if substantiated, that performance might be attributable to numerous other factors. Thus, it is apparent from the first PRC study (application, annex II, p. 13) that hourly productivity is very high in the Netherlands and that building materials are cheaper there than in neighbouring countries. Moreover, it is apparent from the study dated 22 January 1993 (annex 2 to the reply, pp. 22 to 24) that the best way of comparing the efficiency of the organization of the building process is probably to compare the transaction costs with the contractor' s "production costs". However, that study shows that, from that point of view, the Netherlands market is not more efficient than the French market and is less efficient than the Belgian market, and in neither of those markets are there any rules similar to those at issue in the present proceedings.

292 In view of those two factors, the Commission, by taking note of the applicants' statement that, on the basis of the macroeconomic analysis presented by them, the rules had beneficial effects and by weighing their analysis against a microeconomic analysis based on specific examinations, tender by tender, of the practical effects of the rules on competition (decision, paragraphs 76 and 120 to 123), committed no manifest error of assessment.

293 It must be emphasized, in particular, that the correctnes of the Commission' s approach is clear from, inter alia, the fact that the applicants have stated repeatedly that the machinery for protecting the entitled undertaking is intended to prevent prices from reaching an unjustified level, which indicates that the applicants themselves concede that that aspect of the rules is intended to maintain prices at a higher level than would result from competition unaffected by the rules. The benefit of the action to counteract "playing-off", if it is assumed to be lawful, thus accrues to the contractors. Moreover, because of that system, the party having a building contract to award can negotiate only with the entitled undertaking, whereas if the rules did not exist it could have negotiated both with the entitled undertaking and with the other contractors participating in the meeting.

294 The applicants' response that such negotiations would necessarily lead to ruinous competition which would ultimately have adverse repercussions on contract awarders themselves is not right.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

As the Commission observed, it is impossible to distinguish between normal competition and ruinous competition. Potentially, any competition is ruinous for the least efficient undertakings. That is why, by taking action to counteract what they regard as ruinous competition, the applicants necessarily restrict competition and therefore deprive consumers of its benefits.

295 Similarly, the claimed limitation of transaction costs operates almost exclusively to the benefit of the contractors. By ensuring that their costs are borne by the contract awarder in their entirety, the system facilitates reduction of transaction costs which would otherwise have to be borne by the contractors, particularly where they are not awarded a contract. Consequently, a cost is transferred from the supply side to the demand side. Whilst it is true that such a transfer of costs is not entirely without economic justification, in so far as the extent of the transaction costs is linked in particular to the number of contractors invited to tender by the contract awarder, who is thus the only person able to limit them, such a limitation of transaction costs nevertheless presupposes that the contract awarder will limit the number of contractors he consults, which limits his choice and therefore limits competition. Even if that limitation may lead to a decrease in the contract awarder' s transaction costs since he will have to examine a smaller number of tenders, that benefit is limited by comparison with the disadvantages which he must bear and the benefits obtained from that system by contractors.

296 Moreover, the benefit which contract awarders are deemed to derive from the fact that contractors no longer have to incorporate in their general costs the calculation costs which they had to bear in relation to all the contracts not awarded to them offsets the disadvantage of their having to bear the reimbursements for calculation costs only for those of them who regularly award a large number of contracts covered by the rules. A contract awarder who awards contracts only rarely must necessarily pay reimbursements in respect of calculation costs which considerably outweigh any benefit which he might obtain from the fact that, under the system, the successful tenderer was able to reduce his general costs and therefore the amount of his price tender. Moreover, a result of that system is that contract awarders who feel it necessary to approach a large number of contractors must necessarily pay for reimbursements of calculation costs which considerably exceed the costs which they would have had to bear if the system did not exist.

297 The Commission was right to consider that that system leads to fewer open tendering procedures (see paragraph 232 above) and that the period following the order of the President of the Court of First Instance was not of significant length.

298 Consequently, the system of reimbursements of calculation costs, even if conducive to overall reduction of transaction costs in the market, does not allow of that reduction to be shared fairly between contractors and contract awarders.

299 Contrary to the applicants' assertion, their view is not shared by all those in the market place. It is clear from the complaint which it submitted to the Commission that the municipality of Rotterdam opposes maintenance of the system of reimbursement of calculation costs as provided for by the rules. In particular, it insists that the amount of the reimbursements for calculation costs is excessive and that there is no justification for such reimbursements to be calculated not on the basis of the lowest blank figure but by reference to the average of blank figures submitted by the various contractors.

300 It is apparent from all the foregoing that the Commission was right to consider that, particularly by providing for reimbursements of calculation costs to be borne by contract awarders and for protection of the entitled undertaking against negotiations which the party awarding the contract might conduct with other contractors participating in the meeting, the rules do not let consumers have a fair share of such benefits as may accrue from them.

(2) The indispensability of the restrictions and the impossibility of eliminating competition

Arguments of the parties

301 As regards the rules notified, the applicants maintain that the restrictions of competition are essential to attain their objective, namely to counteract "playing-off" and make the transactional structure of the market more efficient. They state that the Commission misapprehended the significance of the system for protecting the entitled undertaking and the system for reimbursing calculation costs, as well as the role of the guarantee fund. They consider it normal that the first system should operate only where tenders are comparable and that paragraph 125 of the decision is therefore incorrect. As regards the system for providing reimbursement, it is precisely its flat rate and comprehensive basis which enables competition to be promoted, unlike a system of reimbursement on an individual basis which, moreover, would be impracticable, contrary to the assertion in paragraph 126 of the decision. The rules on subcontracting likewise provide no support the Commission' s view.

302 The applicants also state that they informed the Commission that they were prepared to discuss with it the need for the various provisions of the rules and that, in that connection, they submitted a number of suggestions for amendments concerning essential aspects of the system. In response to those proposals, the Commission let it be understood that it intended prohibiting the rules in their entirety, thus making any discussion of the indispensability of certain aspects of the rules pointless. By refusing to discuss those proposals, the Commission committed an error of assessment regarding the indispenability of the restrictions of competition found to exist.

303 Rejecting the Commission' s view, they argue that the suggestions for amendments proposed by the SPO can be dealt with in the present proceedings. In view of the circumstances of this case, the Commission' s entire conduct in the administrative procedure should be reviewed by the Court, otherwise the applicants' rights of defence would be infringed. That is the only way of ensuring that the Court reviews the legality of the rejection of the amendments proposed by the SPO since the applicants are unable to institute proceedings under Article 173 of the Treaty against the various administrative letters rejecting those proposals (see the judgment of the Court of First Instance in Case T-116/89 Vereniging Prodifarma and Others v Commission [1990] ECR II-843).

304 The applicants add that, in view of the circumstances of this case, they cannot be criticized for failing to incorporate those amendments in the rules and failing formally to amend the notification in respect of the rules. The consequences of those amendments for the organization of the SPO and its staff were so wide-ranging that it was neither reasonable nor possible to draw up comprehensively amended UPR rules before having obtained the Commission' s approval, at least in respect of their broad outlines. Moreover, the SPO expressly submitted those proposals to the Commission in the context of its notification of 13 January 1988, indicating that it was prepared to amend the rules notified in accordance with the proposals as soon as the Commission gave its go-ahead.

305 They go on to explain how their suggestions for amendments to the rules were capable of satisfying the requirements of Article 85(3) of the Treaty.

306 The applicants conclude that those amendments removed any ° theoretical ° possibility that contractors might distort competition.

307 The Commission replies, with respect to the rules notified, by referring to the content of the decision (paragraphs 124 to 128) and its rebuttal of the second limb of the present plea. It repeats in particular that a system in which all tenderers receive a reimbursement borne by the contract awarder does not contribute to the effectiveness of the tendering procedure. It adds that the payments made by the guarantee fund where the contract is awarded to an outsider provide tenderers that are members of the SPO with a mutual defence against outsiders.

308 It replies, with regard to the suggestions for amendments to the rules which were the subject of consultations with its staff, that those suggestions were not capable of meeting its objections to the rules. It was for that reason that they had been rejected by its officials.

309 The Commission adds that, since the applicants did not make the proposed amendments to the rules and likewise did not amend the notification relating to them, there was no reason for the Commission to examine the amendment proposals in its decision. Consequently, the decision relates solely to the rules as they stood when the decision was adopted and not to the suggestions for amendments made by the applicants. Accordingly, the proposed amendments are entirely irrelevant (see the judgment of the Court of First Instance in Publishers Association, cited above, paragraph 90). By so doing, the Commission did not deprive the applicants of any remedy against the rejection of their proposals for amendments since it would have been sufficient for them to incorporate the amendments in their rules or modify the notification for the Commission to be obliged to give a decision on them, failing which proceedings could be brought against it for failure to act (see the judgment of the Court of First Instance in Case T-23/90 Peugeot v Commission [1991] ECR II-653). Modification of the notification was essential because only agreements actually notified can be the subject of an exemption. It states that the applicants could have confined themselves to amending the notification without immediately implementing the proposed changes, if and to the extent to which their implementation came up against practical difficulties.

Findings of the Court

310 The Court finds ° unnecessarily having regard to the fact that the rules do not let consumers have a fair share of the benefits ° that the restrictions of competition brought about by the rules are likewise not indispensable in order to attain the aims which the applicants claim they have, namely to improve the transactional structure of the market by limiting transaction costs and to counteract "playing-off", which could give rise to ruinous competition. The Commission was right to consider that the serious restrictions of competition which it had found were not indispensable in order to attain the rules' intended objectives.

311 In that connection, it must be observed, first of all, that the fact that the entire process culminating in the designation of an entitled undertaking takes place in the absence of the party having a contract to award does not in any respect seem indispensable for the attainment of the intended objectives. It is the awarding party itself which is best placed to reach a judgment, with the contractors, as to the comparability of their price tenders, so as to ensure that the information exchanged at the meeting does not affect competition, and to ensure that the prices tendered by the various contractors are not altered in order to increase the competitive advantage of some or reduce the competitive disadvantage of others.

312 Secondly, it must be observed that the fact that, under the rules on subcontracting, only subcontractors who have submitted a tender to the main contractor designated as successful tenderer receive reimbursement for calculation costs indicates that the applicants themselves do not consider that it is indispensable, in order to improve the transactional structure of the market, to allocate to each contract awarder all the calculation costs to which his invitation to tender gave rise. Moreover, the applicants have been unable to show that the amount of the reimbursements of calculation costs corresponds overall to the average costs actually incurred by contractors. Against that background, it must be observed that the various bases for the calculation of the reimbursements seem very high, as the municipality of Rotterdam pointed out in its complaint. Moreover, the fact that the scales applied for calculating the reimbursement in respect of calculation costs are maximum values which are not always reached, whereas the contract awarder is not told which scale was applied and has no remedy against application of the maximum scale, shows that the rules do nothing to ensure that the reimbursement of calculation costs does not exceed what is necessary to cover the transaction costs of the various contractors.

313 As regards protection of the entitled undertaking, the Court observes that this takes place following concertation between the contractors wishing to submit tenders, a process from which the contract awarder is excluded and which substitutes joint decisions by the contractors alone for the choice preferred by the contract awarder.

314 It follows from the foregoing that the restrictions of competition contained in the rules notified by the applicants to the Commission are not indispensable for attainment of their intended objectives.

315 It follows that the grounds of challenge advanced by the applicants in that regard must be dismissed.

316 The Court also considers that the Commission was right not to make any finding in its decision concerning the suggestions for amendments proposed by the applicants in their discussions with the Commission between April 1991 and January 1992, since the applicants had neither withdrawn their first notification nor formally notified those amendments to the Commission. Consequently, the Commission was still under an obligation to give a decision on the rules as notified and, in the absence of formal notification, had no power to give a decision on the compatibility of the proposed amendments with Article 85(3) of the Treaty.

317 It follows that the applicants cannot criticize the Commission for adopting a decision only on the rules as notified to it.

318 As the Commission has pointed out, that solution does not mean that the applicants have no way of obtaining a review of the conformity with Article 85(3) of the Treaty of the informal rejection by the Commission of their suggestions for amendments. If the applicants had wished to have that rejection reviewed by the Court, they needed only to make those changes to the rules and re-notify them or amend the notification. If the Commission had failed to give a ruling in response to those notifications, the applicants would have been able to compel it to give a ruling by bringing proceedings for failure to act (judgment of the Court of First Instance in Peugeot v Commission, cited above).

319 Nor can the applicants rely on the fact that immediate modification of the rules would have had excessively far-reaching consequences for their functioning and that they could not therefore undertake such a modification without any guarantee of obtaining an exemption from the Commission. In order for the Commission to be required to give a decision on the proposals for amendments submitted by the applicants, the latter do not necessarily have to bring them into force but need merely adopt them and notify them formally to the Commission.

320 It follows from the foregoing that, having regard to the cumulative nature of the four conditions for an exemption under Article 85(3) of the Treaty, the second limb of the second plea in law put forward by the applicants must be dismissed, it being unnecessary to consider whether the fourth condition is fulfilled.

Third limb: breach of the principles of proportionality and subsidiarity

Arguments of the parties

321 The applicants state that, by refusing to exempt the rules under Article 85(3) of the Treaty, the Commission contravened the principles of proportionality and subsidiarity.

322 As regards the principle of proportionality, they claim that, by refusing to grant an exemption for the rules and by prohibiting them outright, the Commission went further than was necessary to attain the objectives of the Treaty, to such an extent as to achieve a result contrary to those objectives, in view of the characteristics of the sector concerned. In support of that assertion, they refer to the views of the various economic agents in the market, which, they claim, all oppose outright prohibition of the rules. By adhering to an inflexible and abstract view of competition, precluding any measure regulating competition in a market, the Commission breached the principle of proportionality by virtue of which the Commission is required to promote "efficient competition". Furthermore, the Commission breached the principle of proportionality by not even considering the possibility of granting an exemption subject to conditions or an exemption for a limited period, subject to an obligation to draw up reports. The Commission also breached the principle of proportionality by not limiting its action to what is strictly necessary to ensure free access to the Netherlands building market for builders established in other Member States. The Commission should have acted with particular restraint in this case since only one national market is involved, for which the competition policy to be followed is closely linked with planning policy, an area outside the Commission' s purview.

323 As regards the principle of subsidiarity, the applicants claim that by reason of their experience of the Netherlands building market the Netherlands authorities were much better placed than the Commission to apply competition law to the rules at issue. They state that the Netherlands authorities cannot be criticized for failing to take action to uphold competition since they prohibited certain parts of the rules which they considered to be contrary to national competition law.

324 They add, finally, that it is for the Court to penalize breaches of the principle of subsidiarity and that in view of the fact that, according to the Commission itself, that principle existed by implication before being expressly incorporated in the second paragraph of Article 3b of the EC Treaty, the Commission cannot contend that a decision antedating the entry into force of the Treaty on European Union which introduced that provision cannot be reviewed in the light of that principle.

325 The Commission replies that, by the present plea, the applicants are challenging the expediency of the decision and that that plea is misplaced since its assessments in relation to Article 85(1) and (3) are matters of law.

326 As regards breach of the principle of subsidiarity, the Commission contends that, as matters stand at present, the principle of subsidiarity is not one of the general principles of law by reference to which the legality of Community measures antedating the entry into force of the Treaty on European Union must be assessed.

Findings of the Court

327 Since the Court has found that the Commission was right to consider that the notified rules did not fulfil the second and third conditions for the grant of an exemption under Article 85(3) of the Treaty, there can be no question of any breach of the principle of proportionality, particularly since the applicants emphasized, during the administrative procedure and the procedure before the Court, that the rules constitute a single whole from which the various component parts cannot be artificially isolated.

328 Moreover, the arguments put forward by the applicants to challenge the expediency of the decision are, as the Commission points out, based on the ° erroneous ° view that all those active in the market favour maintenance of the rules, whereas both the municipality of Rotterdam and the consumers' organizations have expressed the view that they should be substantially modified in order to qualify for an exemption under Article 85(3) of the Treaty.

329 It follows from the foregoing that the applicants' complaint of breach of the principle of proportionality must be rejected.

330 As regards breach of the principle of subsidiarity, the Court finds that the second paragraph of Article 3b of the EC Treaty had not yet entered into force when the decision was adopted and that it is not to be endowed with retroactive effect.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

331 It must also be noted that, contrary to the applicants' assertion, the principle of subsidiarity did not, before the entry into force of the Treaty on European Union, constitute a general principle of law by reference to which the legality of Community acts should be reviewed.

332 It follows that the applicants' complaint of breach of the principle of subsidiarity must be rejected.

333 It follows from all the foregoing that the applicants' second plea in law, alleging infringement of Article 85(3) of the Treaty, must be dismissed.

Third plea in law: infringement of Articles 4(2)(1) and 15(2) of Regulation No 17

First limb: absence of any infringement and immunity from fines

Arguments of the parties

334 The applicants state that they have demonstrated in connection with their first plea in law that they have not committed any infringement. They consider therefore that, if their plea is upheld, the fine imposed upon them should be cancelled.

335 They also submit that, by considering that the previous rules were subject to the obligation of notification laid down in Article 4(1) of Regulation No 17, the Commission infringed Article 4(2)(1) thereof. Since the rules are decisions of associations of undertakings, the requirement of notification should have been waived because the members of the association concerned all, with one exception (ZNAV), belong to the same Member State, no foreign contractor ever having been a member of any of those associations during the period concerned.

336 The applicants claim, in the alternative, that, if the criterion of participation in the rules should be adopted, as the Commission contends, no foreign contractor was a party to three sets of rules, at least during the period concerned, and that, as regards the others, the Commission has not established that the position was different, still less that it was different as regards the entire period.

337 They maintain that, in view of the applicability of Article 4(2) of Regulation No 17, the Commission had no right to object that previous rules were not notified. Indeed, it was reasonable for the applicants to consider that the lack of notification did not preclude the possibility of an exemption being granted. In order to justify fines under Article 4(2), the Commission should at least have shown that each of the applicants should have been aware for many years that the previous rules could never have qualified for exemptions. In their submission, it has failed to prove this.

338 The Commission first states that it has proved, to the required legal standard, that Article 85(1) of the Treaty has been infringed.

339 As regards the alleged infringement of Article 4(2)(1) of Regulation No 17, it contends that the applicants' arguments are irrelevant in so far as the fines relate to the period from 1 April 1987 to 13 January 1988.

340 The Commission adds that, even if it were assumed that the previous rules did not have to be notified, which, in its view, is not the case, Article 4(2)(1) of Regulation No 17 confers no immunity from fines since the previous rules could never have qualified for an exemption because they incorporated even more serious restrictions of competition than the UPR rules for which an exemption was also refused.

341 The Commission points out, finally, that the possibility of non-notification under Article 4(2)(1) of Regulation No 17 does not imply that no fine may be imposed in respect of the agreement or decision concerned.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Findings of the Court

342 The Court of Justice has held that the prohibition of imposing fines laid down in Article 15(5)(a) of Regulation No 17 applies only in relation to agreements which have actually been notified and not to agreements of which notification is unnecessary by virtue of Article 4(2)(1) of that regulation (judgment of the Court of Justice in Joined Cases 240 to 242, 261, 262, 268 and 269/82 Stichting Sigarettenindustrie and Others v Commission [1985] ECR 3831, paragraphs 73 to 78).

343 Consequently, even if the previous rules were covered by Article 4(2) of Council Regulation No 17, the Commission is entitled to impose fines on the undertakings which applied it, since the agreement had not been notified.

344 The Court also finds that the Commission was right to consider that the rules constituted an infringement of Article 85(1) of the Treaty.

345 It follows that this limb of the plea must be rejected.

Second limb: lack of intent or negligence

Arguments of the parties

346 The applicants observe that the Commission stated in the decision that they had committed infringements "deliberately or, at the very least, through serious negligence", that is to say through what might be termed "intentional negligence". They observe that the amount of the fine was fixed on the basis of that assessment, even though there was no negligence, still less serious negligence. It was incumbent upon the Commission to demonstrate that they knew, or should have known, that the rules fell within the scope of Article 85(1) and could not be exempted under Article 85(3) of the Treaty. They submit that it is apparent from the first two pleas in law that, if there was an infringement, it was not a clear infringement and that failure to be aware of it did not constitute negligence.

347 They claim that various factors contributed to their enduring conviction that the rules were lawful: first, the Netherlands competition authorities always responded actively to the rules and their action was reflected in the Royal Decree of 29 December 1986, by which the UPR rules were again expressly endorsed specifically in relation to competition law; secondly, the specialists and economic agents with an interest in this sphere, who always examined the rules closely, likewise never expressed the slightest doubt as to the compatibility of the rules with Community competition law; certain specialists even expressed the view that the rules did not restrict competition; thirdly, the attitude of the various protagonists in the market, in particular on the demand side, comforted the applicants in their conviction; fourthly, the fact that the Commission raised no objections to the rules before 1987, although it had probably been aware of them for a long period because they were in the public domain and certainly since 1982, because the rules had been the subject of a request for a preliminary ruling from the Court of Justice in Case 34/82 Peters Bauunternehrung v ZNAV [1983] ECR 987, contributed to the applicants' enduring conviction that the rules were in conformity with Community law. The applicants also cite a 1976 report of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) specifically devoted to collusion in the building industry. In that report, of which the Commission could not have been unaware, one of the sets of rules antedating the UPR rules is commented on at length.

348 According to the applicants, the Commission' s allegation that an infringement of extreme gravity had been committed is belied by the fact that it became apparent in the course of the administrative procedure that, for a long period, the Commission itself was not certain whether the European Community rules applied. Moreover, it is apparent from its defence that the Commission itself deliberately deferred commencement of an investigation by first contacting the Netherlands authorities.

349 They add that, in view of the fact that the Commission itself recognizes that the fines were imposed in respect of the previous rules, their reasoning applies with greater force; since the Commission was under an obligation to prove intention or serious negligence on the part of each of the associations responsible for the sectoral or regional rules, whereas those associations could not have been aware that the condition concerning an adverse impact on intra-Community trade was fulfilled since there was practically no international trade either in the geographical markets or in the product markets to which those rules related.

350 The Commission replies that it is immaterial whether or not the applicants' breach of the prohibition laid down in Article 85(1) of the Treaty was deliberate. What is important is whether the applicants knew, or should have known, that the rules restricted competition and might affect intra-Community trade (see the judgment of the Court of Justice in Miller, cited above; the judgment in Joined Cases 32/78, 36/78 to 87/78 BMW and Others v Commission [1979] ECR 2435; the judgment in Joined Cases 96/82 to 102/82, 104/82, 105/82, 108/82 and 110/82 IAZ and Others v Commission [1983] ECR 3369; Stichting Sigarettenindustrie and Others v Commission, cited above; and the judgment of the Court of First Instance in Case T-61/89 Dansk Pelsdyravlerforening v Commission [1992] ECR II-1931, paragraph 157). In the present case, it is difficult to see how the applicants could have been unaware that a system like the one at issue in these proceedings restricted competition.

351 It goes on to reject the various arguments put forward by the applicants to support their denial of serious negligence. First, the applicants wrongly give the impression that the rules were fully approved of by the public authorities in the Netherlands, whereas certain parts of the previous rules were declared non-binding by the 1986 Royal Decree of 29 December 1986 based on Article 10 of the Wet economische mededinging (Law on Economic Competition). Under the scheme of that provision, the fact that rules concerning competition are not declared non-binding implies at most that the public authorities consider that they are not contrary to the public interest. It certainly does not mean that the rules concerned do not restrict competition. Moreover, their effects on trade between Member States play no part in the application of that provision.

352 Secondly, it contends that the two specialists mentioned by the applicants took the view that the rules restricted competition. Moreover, the applicants could not have believed that the rules were not capable of affecting intra-Community trade merely because their application was limited to the territory of the Netherlands (see also in that connection the judgment of the Court of Justice in Stichting Sigarettenindustrie and Others v Commission, cited above, paragraph 65). Even if the Netherlands authorities had in any way given the impression that Article 85 was not applicable to the case, that would not have released the applicants from their responsibility.

353 The Commission states that if the applicants had actually assumed that the rules could qualify for an exemption under Article 85(3) of the Treaty, they would have notified them. However, they did not do so until after the Commission had initiated its investigation.

354 It maintains that, since the previous rules had never been notified to it, the applicants cannot complain of lack of action on its part ° it was not apprised either of the existence or of the content of all the sets of rules, which had never been made public. Since the judgment of the Court of Justice in Peters Bauunternehmung v ZNAV, cited above, was concerned with a question from the Hoge Raad der Nederlanden concerning the interpretation of Article 5(1) of the Brussels Convention in relation to the application of one of the sets of rules at issue, the competition law aspects were not touched upon.

355 The Commission concedes that it sent a request for information to the SPO in 1985 and that, after examining the replies, the Commission agreed with the SPO that it would carry out an investigation in April 1986. It also informed the public authorities in the Netherlands. In April 1986, the Ministry of Economic Affairs asked the Commission not to proceed with the planned investigation or, at least, to defer it because of the imminent adoption of the 1986 Royal Decree. The decree was promulgated on 29 December 1986 and the Commission again informed the Ministry of Economic Affairs, in March 1987, of its intention to carry out an investigation concerning the SPO. The investigation took place in June 1987 and was followed by an inspection at the premises of one of the applicants, in July 1987. In no circumstances could the applicants have taken the Commission' s action to mean that it considered at that time that the contested rules did not fall within the scope of Article 85(1) of the Treaty. It adds that the applicants cannot invoke the fact that it did not exercise its power under Article 15(6) of Regulation No 17 since that provision could have led to the Commission' s imposing heavier fines on them.

Findings of the Court

356 As the Commission points out, it is settled law that, in order for an infringement to be regarded as having been committed intentionally, it is not necessary for the undertaking to have been aware that it was transgressing the prohibition laid down by Article 85 of the Treaty; it is sufficient that it could not have been unaware that the conduct concerned had the object or effect of restricting competition in the Common Market (see the judgment of the Court of Justice in Case C-279/87

Tipp-Ex v Commission [1990] ECR I-262, paragraph 29; see also the judgment of the Court of First Instance in Dansk Pelsdyravlerforening v Commission, cited above, paragraph 157).

357 In the present case, in view of the seriousness of the restrictions of competition resulting both from the rules introduced in 1987 (see above, paragraphs 116 to 123, 140 to 158, 178 to 187 and 199 to 205) and from the previous rules (see above, paragraphs 206 to 212), the applicants could not have been unaware that the agreements to which they were parties restricted competition.

358 Similarly, the applicants could not have been unaware that the rules introduced in 1987 and the previous rules were liable to affect trade between Member States. As associations of undertakings, which in turn were members of an association covering the entirety of the Netherlands, the applicants could not have been unaware that their rules, drawn up by them but approved by the latter association, formed part of a wider framework of rules covering the entire building industry in the Netherlands and that the cumulative effect of those rules was such as to affect trade between Member States (see above, paragraphs 226 to 240). In that connection, it should be noted that the Commission imposed no fine for the period over which the various previous rules were standardized under the auspices of the SPO and were enforced by a uniform penalty system (see above, paragraph 206) or for the period in which the rules introduced in 1987 were not notified to the Commission.

359 In those circumstances, the applicants could have had no doubt that their rules came within the scope of Article 85(1) of the Treaty. The relatively benevolent attitude of the Netherlands authorities regarding the rules should have encouraged the applicants to notify the rules to the Commission with a view to obtaining an exemption under Article 85(3) of the Treaty and enjoying the immunity from fines available only to agreements which have been formally notified.

360 The applicants cannot criticize the Commission for not taking action against the rules at an earlier stage. The fact that the rules were public and had attracted numerous comments in the specialized press cannot place the Commission under any obligation to initiate a procedure under Article 85(1) of the Treaty in the absence of a formal complaint. In that respect too, the applicants' arguments amount to criticizing the Commission for failing to take action earlier whereas the applicants were entitled to notify their rules to the Commission in order to obtain an exemption and immunity from fines.

361 Accordingly, the Commission was right to conclude in paragraph 136 of the decision that the applicants' infringements were committed deliberately or at least through serious negligence and therefore to impose fines.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

362 It follows from all the foregoing that the second limb of the third plea in law must be rejected.

Third limb: excessive fine

Arguments of the parties

363 In the further alternative, the applicants claim that the fines imposed are too high having regard to the seriousness and duration of the infringements and the ceilings laid down in Article 15(2) of Regulation No 17.

364 As regards the matter of seriousness, the applicants maintain that it is clear from all the pleas in law put forward by them that, whilst the Commission may have identified an infringement in the rules drawn up under the auspices of the SPO, that infringement was not as serious as alleged in the decision. In particular, they claim, first, that, this being the first instance of Commission action in the building industry, it should have decided not to impose fines, as it did for the same reason in Decision 92/521/EEC of 27 October 1992 relating to a proceeding undere Article 85 of the EEC Treaty (IV/33.384 and IV/33.378 ° Distribution of package tours during the 1990 World Cup, OJ 1992 L 326, p. 31, paragraph 125). They also consider that the Commission was wrong to treat as an aggravating factor the fact that the rules were not notified until 1988, particularly since, prior to 1987, notification was unnecessary by virtue of Article 4(2)(1) of Regulation No 17. They add that it is impossible, from a reading of the decision, to discover how the Commission took account of the attenuating circumstances which it purports to have considered. In their view, the fact that the fines were set at the upper limit gives the impression that the Commission took no account of attenuating circumstances.

365 As regards the duration of the alleged infringements, they maintain that if the Commission had taken action against the rules earlier, as it should have done since it was aware that they existed, the infringement would have been of shorter duration. The Commission should have taken account of its own inexplicably passive attitude when calculating the fines, the course followed by the Court of Justice in its judgment in Joined Cases 6/73 and 7/73 Istituto Chemioterapico and Commercial Solvents v Commission [1974] ECR 223. Moreover, they maintain that the Commission adduced no evidence and undertook no investigation whatsoever regarding the period from 1980 to 1982, even though it took account of that period in calculating the amount of the fine.

366 The applicants also submit, in their reply, that the previous rules covered by points IV, V, VI and IX in annex 9 to the decision, had already been withdrawn before the period taken into account by the Commission in the contested decision, that is to say before 1980. Their inclusion in the present procedure was therefore improper.

367 As regards the calculation of the fines, the applicants maintain that the Commission exceeded the upper limit of 10% of the turnover achieved in the previous year by the various associations of undertakings and that it failed to differentiate those fines according to the various relevant markets.

368 Finally, comparing the amount of the fine which the Commission imposed on them with the fine imposed in its Decision 88/491/EEC of 26 July 1988 (OJ 1988 L 262, p. 27) in a proceeding pursuant to Article 85 of the Treaty (IV/31.379 - Bloemenveilingen Alsmeer, OJ L 262, p. 27), in a case where rules were observed by more than 4 100 members and the applicability of Article 85 of the Treaty was more obvious than in the present case, the applicants complain that the Commission infringed the principle of equal treatment.

369 The Commission replies by referring, essentially, to paragraphs 136, 140 and 141 of the decision. It states that it did not treat the belated notification as an aggravating factor but indicated why it did not consider that the notification of the rules at issues constituted an attenuating factor, by contrast with the view taken by it in other cases. It adds that the applicants' reasoning overlooks the dissuasive effect that fines must have.

370 As regards the duration of the infringement, it repeats that it was unable to take action earlier because it was unaware of the content of the rules for the reasons set out above and that the applicants' reference to the judgment of the Court of Justice in the Commercial Solvents case is inappropriate. It adds, with regard to the period from 1980 to 1982, that it did not need to undertake a separate investigation because the applicants had not claimed that the situation was any different during that period.

371 The Commission also observes that, by claiming, in their reply, that various sets of previous rules had been withdrawn before 1980, the applicants are putting forward a new plea in law, which must be declared inadmissible pursuant to Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance.

372 It adds, in the alternative, that it is untrue that those rules were withdrawn before 1980, as is apparent from the answers given by the applicants listed under paragraphs 3, 5, 6 and 26 in Article 4 of the decision between 12 and 16 December 1988.

373 The Commission considers that the infringements committed by the applicants display nothing new and that the fact that the decision represented its first intervention in the building industry was no reason for it not to impose a fine, otherwise any undertakings operating in sectors in which no Commission decision had yet been adopted could contravene the competition rules with impunity.

374 As regards the calculation of the fines, the Commission states that the applicants are wrong to consider that the upper limit of the fines must be determined according to their own turnover. It is clear from Article 15(2) of Regulation No 17 that it is the turnover of the members of the applicants which must be taken into account for that purpose. In the present case, the Commission maintains that it kept well within the prescribed upper limits.

375 It considers that the fines cannot be described as high since their total amount represents less than 0.5% of the average annual value of the contracts concerned and therefore they fall considerably short of the fines generally imposed for infringements of this type.

376 Finally, the Commission considers that the applicants' reference to Decision 88/491 of 26 July 1988 in the Bloemenveilingen Alsmeer case is entirely irrelevant in view of the different nature and effects of the two infringements.

Findings of the Court

377 First, examination of the first plea in law shows that the infringement was indeed as serious as stated in the decision. In that connection, it must be emphasized that the fine relates to the previous rules for a period of six-and-a-half years and to the rules introduced in 1987 for nine-and-a-half months. It is important to have regard to the particular seriousness of the restrictions of competition inherent in the previous rules, particularly as regards the concerted action on prices mentioned in paragraph 64 of the decision. Since the Court has upheld that paragraph (see above, paragraphs 206 to 212), it must be taken into account in considering paragraph 140 of the decision, according to which "the concerted action on prices and the assignment of contracts are among the most serious infringements prosecuted, prohibited and penalized by the Commission".

378 It must next be observed that all the attenuating circumstances referred to by the applicants in their pleadings were taken into consideration in determining the amount of the fine, as shown by paragraph 141 of the decision and indicated by the fact that the Commission imposed on the applicants a fine representing ° and the Commission' s figure has not been challenged by the applicants ° only 0.5% of the average annual value of the contracts concerned.

379 It will be observed, however, that, important as they may be, particularly in so far as they relate to the public nature of the rules, those attenuating circumstances must not conceal the fact that the applicants did not exercise their right to notify the rules to the Commission with a view to obtaining a negative clearance or an exemption under Article 85(3) of the Treaty.

380 Furthermore, the applicants cannot criticize the Commission for failing to act earlier, since they had the means of constraining it to do so by notifying the rules to it. The circumstances which gave rise to the judgment of the Court of Justice of 6 March 1974 in the Commercial Solvents case, cited above, differed considerably from those of the present case since, as pointed out by the Commission, in that case it had received a complaint but had not acted upon it immediately. In the present case, the Commission received a complaint from the municipality of Rotterdam only after the applicants had notified the rules. This difference is important in that, where the Commission receives a complaint, it receives details of the conduct complained of, whereas in the present case the Commission received details of the rules only through notification of them.

381 It follows that the applicants' argument must be rejected.

382 As regards the fact that the Commission undertook no investigation in respect of the period 1980 to 1982, the Court upholds the Commission' s objection that the applicants did not claim, either in the administrative procedure or in their pleadings before the Court, that the situation was different during that period.

383 As regards the withdrawal of the previous rules covered by points IV, V, VI and IX in annex 9 to the decision, the Court considers that the plea concerning them is new and must be declared inadmissible under Article 48(2) of its Rules of Procedure.

384 It must also be pointed out that, whilst the Commission was wrong to bring those rules within the scope of the present procedure, it did so as a result of errors made by certain applicants in their answers to the Commission' s requests for information (see the answer of Aannemersvereniging van Boorondernemers en Buizenleggers of 12 December 1988, that of Aannemers Vereniging Haarlem-Bollenstreek of 16 December 1988, that of Aannemersvereniging Veluwe en Zuidelijke IJsselmeerpolders of 15 December 1988 and that of Utrechtse Aannemers Vereniging of 12 December 1988). They cannot therefore raise objections concerning a mistake prompted by their own mistakes.

385 Finally, the Court finds that the applicants are wrong in their assertion that the fine exceeds the upper limit laid down in Article 15(2) of Regulation No 17, namely 10% of the turnover achieved during the preceding business year. It must be borne in mind that the general term "infringement" used in Article 15(2) of Regulation No 17 covers, without distinction, agreements, concerted practices and decisions of associations of undertakings and that its use indicates that the upper limits for fines laid down in that provision apply in the same way to agreements and concerted practices as to decisions of associations of undertakings. It follows that the upper limit of 10% of the turnover must be calculated by reference to the turnover achieved by each of the undertakings that are parties to the agreements and concerted practices concerned or by all the members of the associations of undertakings, at least where the internal rules of the association empower it to bind its members. The correctness of this analysis is confirmed by the fact that, in determining the amount of the fines, account may be taken inter alia of such influence as the undertaking may have been able to exercise in the market, in particular by reason of its size and economic power, of which its turnover may give an indication (judgment of the Court of Justice in Joined Cases 100/80 to 103/80 Musique Diffusion française and Others v Commission [1983] ECR 1825, paragraphs 120 and 121) and of the dissuasive effect which such fines must have (judgment of the Court of First Instance in Case T-12/89 Solvay v Commission [1992] ECR II-907, paragraph 309). The influence which an association of undertakings may have had on the market depends not on its own "turnover", which reveals neither its size nor its economic power, but rather on the turnover of its members which gives an indication of its size and economic power (judgment of the Court of First Instance in CB and Europay, cited above, paragraphs 136 and 137).

386 It must also be emphasized that the applicants cannot rely on the fact that, in Decision 88/491 of 26 July 1988 given in the Bloemenveiligen Alsmeer case, the Commission imposed lower fines since in that case the nature of the infringement and its effects were, as pointed out by the Commission, entirely different.

387 It follows from the foregoing that this limb of the plea must be rejected.

388 Accordingly, the plea in law alleging infringement of Regulation No 17 must be dismissed.

Fourth plea in law: infringement of Article 190 of the Treaty

Arguments of the parties

389 The applicants claim that the Commission infringed its obligation to state the reasons for decisions it adopts. By virtue of that obligation, it should not only have reproduced in its decision the applicants' main defence submissions put forward in the administrative procedure but should also have replied in detail to each of those submissions. According to the judgment of the Court of First Instance in SIV and Others v Commission, cited above, paragraph 159, "even if the Commission is not required to discuss in its decisions all the arguments raised by the undertakings... having regard to the arguments of the applicants... the Commission ought to have examined more fully... in order to show why the conclusions drawn by the applicants were groundless".

390 They maintain that, in the present case, the Commission did not even indicate in its decision the main arguments put forward by them in their answer to the statement of the objections and at the administrative hearing.

391 The applicants also claim, in their reply, that in so far as it refers to the Code of Honour as such, to all the statutes of the SPO, and to all the previous rules, the operative part of the decision is not covered by the statement of the reasons on which it is based. In the case of the Code of Honour, they submit that, in so far as it finds that, with the exception of Article 10 thereof, the Code of Honour, as made binding on the members of the SPO by its decision of 3 June 1980, constitutes an infringement of Article 85(1) of the Treaty, Article 1(2) of the operative part of the contested decision is wider in scope than paragraph 1 of the grounds of the decision, which indicates that the proceeding concerns the SPO decision of 3 June 1980 making the Code of Honour and the annexes thereto binding on the undertakings belonging to its member organizations. Consequently, no reason is stated to support the finding that the Code of Honour as such constitutes an infringement.

392 As regards the statutes of the SPO, the applicants state that, in so far as it finds that the statutes of the SPO of 10 December 1963, as subsequently amended, constitute an infringement of Article 85(1) of the Treaty, Article 1(1) of the operative part of the decision is wider in scope than the grounds of the decision, which relate only to Article 3 of those statutes. However, most of the provisions of those statutes have no bearing on matters of competition and relate exclusively to the internal functioning of the SPO. They maintain that the Commission has confused the statutes of the SPO with the decisions based on them, which prompted the Commission to declare the SPO unlawful as such, without stating any reasons for doing so.

393 Finally, as regards the previous rules, they state that they are considerably more numerous than those mentioned in annex 9 to the decision and that, contrary to the purport of the decision, the "Burger ° & Utiliteitsbouw Openbaar" UPR rules were not drawn up by the SPO but by an individual association of contractors. They also criticize the Commission for making an all-embracing and undifferentiated judgment regarding all the previous rules, without taking account of their differences and specific features. Finally, they state that certain sets of previous rules were withdrawn before 1980.

394 The Commission replies that its decision gives an adequate statement of the reasons on which it is based and that it was under no obligation to produce specialist studies to refute those produced by the applicants, inasmuch as the latter were irrelevant.

395 As regards more particularly the grounds on which the decision rejects the application for exemption lodged by the applicants, it considers that to require it, as the applicants wish, to prove that the rules could not qualify for an exemption would amount to a reversal of the burden of proof.

396 The Commission also contends that the applicants' arguments disputing the finding that the Code of Honour as such, the statutes of the SPO as a whole and the previous rules are unlawful do not appear in that form in the application and are at least in part based on submissions not previously put forward. It considers that they therefore constitute a new plea in law, which must be declared inadmissible pursuant to Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance. In the alternative, it contends that the reference in paragraph 1 of the decision to the decision of 3 June 1980 as the subject-matter of the proceeding, in that it makes the Code of Honour and the annexes thereto binding on the undertakings belonging to the member organizations of the SPO, can refer only to the Code of Honour as such, since the decision of 3 June 1980 has no independent signficance for competition law purposes.

397 As regards the statutes of the SPO, the Commission concedes that only Article 3 thereof raises a problem concerning competition law, the other provisions of those statutes having no independent significance in that regard. However, it considers that, in so far as those other provisions are directed towards enabling the SPO to achieve its objects, as defined in Article 3, they must be covered by the decision. It states that the decision is not intended to declare the SPO unlawful as such but only to the extent to which its object as an association is to restrict competition.

398 As regards the previous rules, the Commission states that it relied on the answers from the applicants to its requests for information in order to determine the number of sets of rules in existence and the role of the SPO in relation to the "Burger- &Utiliteitsbouw Openbaar" UPR rules. It adds that it confined itself to a general reference to the previous rules in its decision because they are more severely restrictive of competition than the UPR rules. Finally, it again states that it is not true that certain sets of previous rules were withdrawn before 1980.

Findings of the Court

399 The Court does not consider that the Commission has infringed the obligation to state the reasons for decisions laid down in Article 190 of the Treaty. The Commission answered all the relevant arguments put forward by the applicants in the administrative procedure, regarding both the application of Article 85(1) of the Treaty and that of Article 85(3).

400 With more particular regard to Article 85(3), the Court considers that the Commission was right to focus its analysis of the contested rules on the protection of entitled undertakings and reimbursements for calculation costs. Those are two central factors conducive to the attainment of the aims pursued by the rules, namely counteracting "playing-off" and limitation of transaction costs. Since the applicants asserted throughout the administrative procedure that the rules formed a single whole and the Commission arrived at the conclusion that the two factors at the heart of that whole could not qualify for an exemption under Article 85(3) of the Treaty, it was no longer necessary for it to examine any advantages which might occasionally arise from any particular provision of the rules at issue.

401 As regards the lack of a statement of reasons for the Commission' s rejection of the suggestions for amendments to the rules proposed by the applicants, suffice it to refer to the reasons given for rejection of the second limb of the second plea, from which it is apparent that the Commission was under no obligation to take a position concerning proposals for amendments which had not been notified to it.

402 Finally, the Court considers that by claiming, in their reply, that the operative part of the decision is not covered by the statement of reasons in so far as they refer to the Code of Honour as such, the statutes of the SPO in their entirety and all the previous rules, the applicants have put forward a new plea in law, which is inadmissible by virtue of Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure. Moreover, it must be borne in mind that the operative part must be read in the light of the statement of the reasons on which it is based and that Article 1(2) of the operative part of the contested decision is not intended to declare the SPO unlawful as such. Similarly, paragraph 1 of the decision, by referring to the "SPO' s decision of 3 June 1980 making binding on the undertakings belonging to its member organizations the Erecode voor ondernemers in het Bouwbedrijf and the annexes thereto" did not refer to the decision of 3 June 1980 as such but to the Code of Honour which was made binding by that decision, and the same applies to the operative part of the contested decision.

403 Finally, the Court considers that the Commission was right to confine itself to a general reference in its decision to the previous rules. It states that the previous rules had the same object as the rules introduced in 1987 and that, in so far as they differed from the latter, they restricted competition at least to the same extent (decision, paragraphs 62 to 65 and 114; see above, paragraphs 206 to 212).

404 It must be observed that, during the administrative procedure, the applicants put forward no specific arguments to show that the previous rules differed in fundamental respects from the rules introduced in 1987 or that they were less restrictive of competition than the latter.

405 Consequently, the Commission was likewise entitled, in dealing with the previous rules, to confine itself to referring essentially to the grounds of the decision concerning the rules introduced in 1987.

406 It follows that this plea in law must be dismissed.

Fifth plea in law: infringement of the rights of the defence

Arguments of the parties

407 In their reply, the applicants claim, essentially, that the Commission infringed the rights of the defence, first by considering that the Code of Honour constituted an infringement of Article 85(1) of the Treaty, whereas the Code of Honour was not, as such, dealt with in the administrative procedure (reply, p. 19) since it related solely to the SPO binding decision of 3 June 1980, making the Code of Honour binding on the members of the associations belonging to the SPO and, secondly, by relying on "leading questions" put to foreign contractors concerning the reasons for their membership of the SPO and concluding as a result, in the decision, that the contested measures affected trade between Member States.

408 The Commission replies that that assertion constitutes a new plea in law which must be declared inadmissible pursuant to Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance. In the alternative, it rejects that assertion.

Findings of the Court

409 The Court considers that the applicants' allegation as to infringement of their rights of defence constitutes a new plea in law which must be declared inadmissible pursuant to Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure and that it is, in any event, unfounded.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

410 It must be emphasized that, at the hearing, the applicants did not contradict the statement made by the Commission in its rejoinder to the effect that its objections to the Code of Honour had been dealt with in paragraphs 18, 33 to 35, 41, 42, 44 and 46 to 48 of the statement of objections. Moreover, the Commission did not rely on the answers to the questions criticized by the applicants in declaring that the measures at issue affected trade between Member States.

411 It follows from all the foregoing that the application must be dismissed.

Judgment of the Court
of 26 April 1994
Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic.
Concession for the lottery computerization system.
Case C-272/91.

1. Freedom of movement for persons - Freedom of establishment - Freedom to provide services - Procedures for the award of public supply contracts - Invitation to tender restricting the right to tender for the concession of the lottery computerization system to bodies controlled by the public sector - Contract not relating to activities connected with the exercise of official authority - Not permissible

(EEC Treaty, Arts 52, 55, first para., and 59; Council Directive 77/62, Arts 17 to 25)

2. Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public supply contracts - Directive 77/62 - Scope - Certain supplies not constituting traditional forms of sales included

(Council Directives 77/62 and 88/295, Art. 2)

1. Article 52 of the Treaty on freedom of establishment and Article 59 of the Treaty on freedom to provide services are infringed where a Member State restricts participation in a contract for the concession of the lottery computerization system to bodies the majority of whose capital is held by the public sector where that contract, which relates to the premises, supplies, installations, maintenance, operation and transmission of data and everything else that is necessary for the conduct of the lottery, does not involve any transfer of responsibility to the concessionaire for the various activities inherent in the lottery with the result that the derogation in the first paragraph of Article 55 of the Treaty regarding activities connected with the exercise of official authority does not apply. Such a practice also constitutes an infringement of Articles 17 to 25 of Directive 77/62 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts.

2. The fact that a contract for the supply of an integrated computerized system for the conduct of the lottery which involves the supply of certain goods to the administration stipulates that the system in question is not to become the property of the administration until the end of the contractual relationship with the successful tenderer and that the "price" for that supply is to take the form of an annual payment in proportion to the revenue does not remove the contract from the scope of Directive 77/62 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts. The fact that Article 2 of Directive 88/295 extended the scope of the directive to contracts such as those for the lease, rental or hire purchase, with or without option to buy, of products is a reflection of the Community legislature' s wish to bring within the scope of the directive the supply of products which do not necessarily become the property of the public administration and for which the consideration is fixed in abstract terms.

APPLICATION for a declaration that, by failing to make known, for the purposes of publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities, first, at the beginning of 1990, an indicative notice setting out the total procurement by product area of which the estimated value was equal to or greater than ECU 750 000 and which the Italian Finance Ministry envisaged awarding during 1990 and secondly, in November 1990, a notice concerning the invitation to tender for the concession of the lottery computerization system and by restricting participation in that contract exclusively to bodies, companies, consortia and groupings a majority of whose capital, considered individually or in aggregate, was publicly owned, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 30, 52 and 59 of the EEC Treaty and Articles 9 and 17 to 25 of Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (Official Journal 1977 L 13, p. 1), as amended by Council Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988 (Official Journal 1988 L 127, p. 1),

Judgment

Costs

37 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs. Since the defendant has been essentially unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

hereby:

1. Declares that, by failing to make known, for the purposes of publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities, first, at the beginning of 1990, an indicative notice setting out the total procurement by product area of which the estimated value was equal to or greater than ECU 750 000 and which the Italian Finance Ministry envisaged awarding in 1990 and secondly, in November 1990, a notice concerning the invitation to tender for the concession of the lottery computerization system, and by restricting participation in that contract exclusively to bodies, companies, consortia and groupings the majority of whose capital, considered individually or in aggregate, was held by the public sector, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 52 and 59 of the EEC Treaty and Articles 9 and 17 to 25 of Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by Council Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988;

2. Dismisses the rest of the application;

3. Orders the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry at 18 October 1991, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 169 of the EEC Treaty for a declaration that, by failing to make known, for the purposes of publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities, first, at the beginning of 1990, an indicative notice setting out the total procurement by product area of which the estimated value was equal to or greater than ECU 750 000 and which the Italian Finance Ministry envisaged awarding during 1990 and secondly, in November 1990, a notice concerning the invitation to tender for the concession of the lottery computerization system and by restricting participation in that contract exclusively to bodies, companies, consortia and groupings a majority of whose capital, considered individually or in aggregate, was publicly owned, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 30, 52 and 59 of the EEC Treaty and Articles 9 and 17 to 25 of Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (Official Journal 1977 L 13, p. 1), as amended by Council Directive 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988 (Official Journal 1988 L 127, p. 1).

2 The background to the dispute is summarized in paragraphs 6 to 16 of the Order of the President of the Court of 31 January 1992 (C-272/91 R, [1992] ECR I-457) on the application for interim relief made by the Commission in connection with this application which ordered the Italian Republic to take the measures necessary to suspend the legal effect of the decree of the Minister for Finance of 14 June 1991 awarding the concession for the lottery computerization system and performance of the contract concluded for that purpose with the consortium Lottomatica.

The complaint of infringement of Articles 52 and 59 of the Treaty

3 The Commission claims that by restricting participation in the contract for the concession for the computerization system for the Italian lottery to "bodies, companies, consortia and groupings the majority of whose capital, considered individually or in aggregate, is held by the public sector" the Italian Republic has failed to comply with its obligations under Articles 52 and 59 of the Treaty.

4 The Commission contends that this is a specific instance of the implementation of the restriction declared unlawful by the Court in Case C-3/88 Commission v Italy [1989] ECR 4035 under which only companies in which all or a majority of the shares are either directly or indirectly in public or State ownership may conclude agreements with the Italian State for the development of data-processing systems for the public authorities.

5 The Italian Government denies the alleged infringement. It maintains that the contracts envisaged by the abovementioned judgment were for the procurement of data-processing systems which were also to be managed by the supplier as a service to the administration; the contract in issue here, on the other hand, relates, according in particular to the technical programme annexed to the special specifications for the invitation to tender at issue, to a concession by which the administration in question entrusts a third party with carrying out an activity relating to official authority, namely part of the powers of organization, checking and certification in connection with the lottery which, under Italian legislation, are strictly confined to the State. Article 55 of the Treaty provides that Articles 52 and 59 do not apply to activities which in Member States are connected with the exercise of official authority.

6 It should be noted that, as the Advocate General showed in points 18 to 23 of his Opinion, the introduction of the computerized system at issue which, according to the invitation to tender relates to the premises, supplies, installations, maintenance, operation and transmission of data and everything else that is necessary for the conduct of the lottery, does not involve any transfer of responsibility to the concessionaire for the various activities inherent in the lottery.

7 First, the lottery collectors continue to be responsible for accepting bets and the function of the concessionaire' s terminal is merely to register, automatically check and transmit the data resulting from the steps taken by the person managing the registration point. The technical programme states that the latter must be able, in the event of a mistake being made, to rectify what has been registered and even to cancel a ticket issued by the terminal.

8 Second, the draws are carried out by the Draw Committees (Commissioni di Estrazione) which are State bodies, like the Area Committees (Commissioni di Zona) which retain responsibility for checking and validating winning tickets.

9 Third, as the Italian Government itself admitted, it is always the public administration which ultimately approves and pays out prizes.

10 Fourth, the fact that the first point of the technical programme states that the tender also relates to "everything else that is necessary for the conduct of the lottery" does not justify the conclusion that the concessionaire takes part in the exercise of public authority but merely signifies that he must operate within the bounds of the concession.

11 Fifth, the Italian Government' s argument that the voluntary payments made by players in the lottery constitute a fiscal charge which entails that the concessionaire is taking part in the exercise of public authority is ill-founded.

12 Accordingly, the services to be provided by the concessionaire of the lottery computerization system, in particular the design of a computerized system and the necessary software and the operation of that system, are no different from the technical services under the agreements for the development of data-processing systems for the public administration at issue in Case C-3/88 Commission v Italy, cited above.

13 Since the activities in question do not therefore fall under the derogation in Article 55 of the Treaty, it must be held that the restriction at issue is contrary to Articles 52 and 59 of the Treaty and the complaint of infringement of those articles must be upheld.

The complaint that Article 30 of the Treaty has been infringed

14 In support of its complaint of infringement of Article 30, in the pre-litigation procedure the Commission merely stated that the restriction at issue reserving the right to tender to bodies, companies, consortia and groupings the majority of whose capital, considered individually or in aggregate, is held by the public sector in fact excludes companies from other Member States which are prevented from offering their computer systems and their software for operating the service covered by the contract. Consequently, the Commission says, the effect of that reservation, like the measure at issue in Case C-21/88 Du Pont de Nemours Italiana v Unità Sanitaria Locale No 2 di Carrara [1990] ECR I-889 whereby a set percentage of public-supply contracts were reserved to companies established in certain regions of the national territory, is that products originating in other Member States suffer discrimination in comparison with products manufactured in the Member State in question, with the result that the normal course of intra-Community trade is hindered.

15 It is to be noted that the Commission did not at that stage set out the reasons for its view that excluding foreign companies from participation in the contract at issue prevented the successful tenderer from using products originating in other Member States in setting up the computerized system in question.

16 According to the Court' s case-law (see, in particular, Case 325/82 Commission v Germany [1984] ECR 777) the letter of formal notice and the reasoned opinion must contain a sufficient statement of reasons to enable the Member State to prepare its defence. For the reasons set out above, that was not done in this case.

17 Consequently, the Court must of its own motion declare the complaint of infringement of Article 30 inadmissible.

The complaints of infringement of Directive 77/62, as amended by Directive 88/295

18 The Commissions claims, first, that the Italian Republic has infringed Article 9 of Directive 77/62 as amended by Directive 88/295 ("the Directive") by failing to make known, for the purposes of publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities, first, at the beginning of 1990, an indicative notice setting out the total procurement by product area of which the estimated value was equal to or greater than ECU 750 000 which the Italian Finance Ministry envisaged awarding in 1990 and, secondly, in November 1990 a notice concerning the invitation to tender for the concession for the lottery computerization system. The Commission further considers that by restricting participation in that latter contract to bodies, companies, consortia and groupings the majority of whose capital, considered individually or in aggregate, is held by the public sector the Italian Republic has also infringed Articles 17 to 25 of the Directive.

19 Article 9(1), (2) and (4) of the Directive provides:

> "1. The contracting authorities listed in Annex I to Directive 80/767/EEC shall make known, as from 1 January 1989, as soon as possible after the beginning of their budgetary year, by means of an indicative notice, the total procurement by product area of which the estimated value, taking into account the provisions of Article 5 of this Directive, is equal [to] or greater than ECU 750 000 and which they envisage awarding during the coming 12 months.

The Council, acting on a proposal from the Commission and after consulting the European Parliament and the Economic and Social Committee, shall decide before 1 March 1990 on the extension of this obligation to the other contracting authorities covered by Article 1.

2. Contracting authorities who wish to award a public supply contract by open, restricted, or, under the conditions laid down in Article 6(3), by negotiated procedure within the meaning of Article 1 shall make known their intention by means of a notice.

4. The notices referred to in paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 shall be sent as rapidly as possible by the most appropriate channels to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities. In the case of the accelerated procedure referred to in Article 12 the notice shall be sent by telex, telegram or facsimile.

(a) The notice referred to in paragraph 1 shall be sent as soon as possible after the beginning of each budgetary year;

(b) the notice referred to in paragraph 3 shall be sent at the latest 48 days after the award of the contract in question."

20 Articles 17 to 25 of the Directive set out the criteria for qualitative selection and for the award of contracts.

21 The Italian Government contends that those provisions are not applicable in this case.

22 It maintains first that the invitation to tender at issue falls outside the scope of the Directive since the contract in question does not relate to the supply of goods for the contracting authorities but concerns the concession by the administration to a third party of an activity which forms part of the exercise of public authority in fiscal matters and is characterized by the absence of any transfer of goods and of any price corresponding to such a transfer.

23 This argument must be rejected.

24 As is clear from paragraphs 7 to 11 of this judgment, the introduction of the computerized system in question does not involve any transfer of responsibilities to the concessionaire in respect of the various operations inherent in the lottery. Moreover, it is common ground that the contract at issue relates to the supply of an integrated computerized system including in particular the supply of certain goods to the administration.

25 Contrary to the position of the Italian Government, it is irrelevant in that connection that the system in question does not become the property of the administration until the end of the contractual relationship with the successful tenderer and that the "price" for that supply takes the form of an annual payment in proportion to the revenue. As the Advocate General rightly stated in point 40 of his Opinion, the fact that Article 2 of Directive 88/295 extended the scope of the Directive to "contracts... involving the purchase, lease, rental or hire purchase, with or without option to buy, of products" is a reflection of the Community legislature' s wish to bring within the scope of the Directive the supply of products which do not necessarily become the property of the public administration and for which the consideration is fixed in abstract terms.
