25 La Commission estime que le caractère suffisant de la motivation doit être apprécié en fonction du contexte de l'acte et de l'ensemble des règles juridiques régissant la matière concernée. Elle affirme que la décision attaquée ne fait que prendre acte et tirer les conséquences de l'existence de règles communautaires qui interdisent qu'une dérogation à la règle d'origine soit accordée ex post et que la signification de l'indication d'une concurrence insuffisante était, dans ce contexte, claire et évidente. Elle considère que, en tout état de cause, on peut attendre des personnes concernées par une décision un certain effort d'interprétation pour résoudre les ambiguïtés que contient la motivation.

26 La Commission soutient, en outre, qu'une motivation dont le début se trouve exprimé dans l'acte attaqué peut être développée et précisée en cours d'instance.

marché si les conditions d'octroi du marché ne sont pas respectées, et trouve sa justification dans l'insuffisance de concurrence.

28 La Commission fait également valoir que l'appel d'offres en cause est un appel d'offres ouvert international qui doit permettre d'assurer une concurrence maximale, sans qu'aucune dérogation à la règle d'origine soit envisagée, sauf dans des circonstances exceptionnelles prévues à l'article 7, paragraphes 2 et 3, du règlement (CE) n° 2112/2005 du Conseil, du 21 novembre 2005, relatif à l'accès à l'aide extérieure de la Communauté (JO L 344, p. 23). Or, eu égard au caractère strict de la règle d'origine inscrite dans l'appel d'offres en question, la dérogation à cette règle octroyée à la seule requérante aurait pu être critiquée par des soumissionnaires potentiels en mesure de satisfaire aux conditions finalement retenues dans l'appel d'offres, mais s'étant abstenus de présenter une offre à défaut de pouvoir respecter la règle de l'origine.

Appréciation du Tribunal

29 Conformément à une jurisprudence constante, la portée de l'obligation de motivation exigée par l'article 253 CE dépend de la nature de l'acte en cause et du contexte dans lequel il a été adopté. La motivation doit faire apparaître de manière claire et non équivoque le raisonnement de l'institution auteur de l'acte, de manière à permettre au juge communautaire d'exercer son contrôle et aux intéressés de connaître les justifications de la décision attaquée (voir arrêts de la Cour du 15 avril 1997, Irish Farmers Association e.a., C–22/94, Rec. p. I–1809, point 39, et du 10 mars 2005, Espagne/Conseil, C–342/03, Rec. p. I–1975, point 54, et la jurisprudence citée).

30 En l'espèce, la décision attaquée se fonde sur l'insuffisance de concurrence pour justifier l'annulation de la procédure de passation du marché. Dans sa lettre du 27 juillet 2006, la Commission a ensuite répondu à la requérante que la décision attaquée était fondée sur l'article 101 du règlement financier.

31 Dans sa défense, la Commission invoque comme motif de l'annulation de la procédure de passation du marché la dérogation à la règle d'origine accordée par ses propres services à la requérante. En outre, dans sa duplique, la Commission se réfère au contexte de l'adoption de la décision attaquée et allègue que la requérante aurait dû en déduire que le grief relatif à l'insuffisance de concurrence était fondé sur la dérogation qui lui avait été accordée dans l'application de la règle d'origine.

32 Si l'on peut attendre des personnes concernées par une décision un certain effort d'interprétation lorsque le sens du texte n'apparaît pas à la première lecture (arrêt du Tribunal du 12 décembre 1996, Rendo e.a./Commission, T–16/91, Rec. p. II–1827, point 46), il convient toutefois de constater que, en l'espèce, la requérante ne pouvait déduire de la notion de « concurrence insuffisante » que la raison pour laquelle la Commission avait décidé d'annuler la procédure de passation du marché était liée à la dérogation à la règle d'origine dont elle avait bénéficié.

33 Les services de la Commission ont accordé d'office cette dérogation à la requérante, avant de lui attribuer le marché. Dans la mesure où la décision attaquée était défavorable à la requérante, contrairement aux décisions antérieures sur la recevabilité de son offre et l'attribution du marché, alors même que le contexte de l'offre de la requérante était identique, il appartenait à la Commission de développer son raisonnement de manière explicite dans la décision attaquée ou dans sa lettre du 27 juillet 2006 (voir, par analogie, arrêt de la Cour du 26 novembre 1975, Groupement des fabricants de papiers peints de Belgique e.a./Commission, 73/74, Rec. p. 1491, point 31). La décision attaquée est donc entachée d'une insuffisance de motivation.

34 Le fait que la Commission ait fourni les raisons de cette décision en cours d'instance ne compense pas l'insuffisance de la motivation initiale de la décision attaquée. En effet, il est de jurisprudence constante que la motivation doit figurer dans le corps même de la décision et qu'elle ne peut être explicitée pour la première fois et a posteriori devant le juge, sauf circonstances exceptionnelles qui, en l'absence de toute urgence, ne sont pas réunies en l'espèce (voir, en ce sens, arrêts du Tribunal du 2 juillet 1992, Dansk Pelsdyravlerforening/Commission, T–61/89, Rec. p. II–1931, point 131, et du 15 septembre 1998, European Night Services e.a./Commission, T–374/94, T–375/94, T–384/94 et T–388/94, Rec. p. II–3141, point 95, et la jurisprudence citée).

36 Il résulte de l'ensemble des considérations qui précèdent que la décision attaquée doit être annulée pour violation des exigences de motivation requises par l'article 253 CE, sans qu'il y ait lieu d'examiner le second moyen d'annulation soulevé par la requérante.

Sur les dépens

37 En vertu de l'article 87, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure, toute partie qui succombe est condamnée aux dépens, s'il est conclu en ce sens. La requérante n'ayant pas conclu à la condamnation de la Commission, il y a lieu de décider que chaque partie supportera ses propres dépens.

Par ces motifs,

LE TRIBUNAL (septième chambre)

déclare et arrête :

1) La décision de la Commission du 14 juillet 2006, portant annulation de la procédure d'appel d'offres EuropeAid/122742/C/SUP/RU, est annulée.

2) La Commission et DC-Hadler Networks SA supporteront leurs propres dépens.

(Case T-264/06)

Language of the case: French

Parties

Applicant: DC-HADLER NETWORKS (Brussels, Belgium) (represented by: L. Muller, lawyer)

Defendant: Commission of the European Communities

Form of order sought

Declare the application admissible and well founded;

annul the contested measure.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicant in the present action took part in the invitation to tender procedure in respect of the project Europe Aid/122742/C/SUP/RE entitled 'Social Integration of the Disabled in Privolzhsky Federal Okrug - Supply of social integration and rehabilitation-related equipment for the disabled and IT and office equipment for the information network', which is part of the Tacis national action Programme 2003. [1] By letter of 20 June 2006, the Commission notified the applicant that its tender had been successful for Lots 1, 2 and 4. However, on 14 July the Commission sent the applicant a letter informing it that the contracting authority had decided to annul the tender procedure and not to sign the contract with it on the basis that there was insufficient competition. In the present action, the applicant seeks the annulment of the decision contained in that letter.

The applicant puts forward two pleas in law in support of its application.

The first plea alleges infringement of an essential procedural requirement in that, according to the applicant, the reasons put forward by the Commission in support of its decision ultimately not to award it the contract cannot be regarded as satisfactory. It maintains that it was only when it requested the Commission to do so, in a letter dated 17 July 2006, that the latter clarified, by letter of 27 July 2006, that its decision was based on Article 101 of Council Regulation No 1605/2002. [2] In the applicant's opinion, it is not possible to ascertain from the reasons put forward by the Commission in support of the contested decision what prompted it to go back on its earlier decision to award the applicant the contract. It submits that that lack of precision in the Commission's reasoning is all the more significant as the Commission resiled from its earlier official position.

The second plea alleges infringement of Article 253 EC. The applicant considers that, by withdrawing the invitation to tender on the ground of insufficient competition, the Commission committed a manifest and serious error by putting forward an imprecise and incomplete set of reasons since, on previous occasions, the applicant has obtained a number of contracts in cases where it was the only tenderer.

Action brought on 12 September 2006 - Germany v Commission

(Case T-258/06)

Language of the case: German

Parties

Applicant: Federal Republic of Germany (represented by: M. Lumma and C. Schulze-Bahr)

Defendant: Commission of the European Communities

Form of order sought

declare null and void the Commission's interpretative communication of 23 June 2006 on the Community law applicable to contract awards not or not fully subject to the provisions of the public procurement directives; and order the defendant to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicant takes issue with the Commission's interpretative communication on the Community law applicable to contract awards not or not fully subject to the provisions of the public procurement directives, which was placed on the Commission's internet website on 24 July 2006 and published in the Official Journal on 1 August 2006 (OJ 2006 C 179, p. 2).

As grounds for its action, the applicant submits that the Commission was not competent to issue the contested communication. It argues in this connection that the contested communication contains new rules on tendering which go beyond the obligations arising under existing Community law. These new rules will have legally binding effects for the Member States. The EC Treaty, however, contains no authorisation which would enable the defendant to adopt such rules. The present case therefore, in the applicant's view, essentially involves an instance of de facto legislation.

The applicant goes on to contend that, by establishing mandatory rules, the defendant has upset the institutional balance existing between the Council, the European Parliament and the Commission.

In conclusion the applicant submits that, even if the Commission were competent to issue the contested communication, the latter would still have to be declared null and void as the principle of legal certainty has been infringed. The defendant ought to have invoked the appropriate legal basis and made express reference to this in the legal measure in question. The Commission thus also breached the duty to state reasons laid down in Article 253 EC.

Form of order sought

- Annulment of the decision of DG TAXUD to evaluate the applicant's bid as not successful and award the contract to the successful contractor;

order DG TAXUD to pay the applicant's legal and other costs and expenses incurred in connection with this application, even if the current application is rejected; order DG TAXUD to pay applicant's damages suffered on account of the tendering procedure in question.

Pleas in law and main arguments

By means of its application, the applicant seeks annulment of DG TAXUD's decision of 19 June 2006, rejecting its bid filed in response to the open Call for Tenders TAXUD/2005/AO-001 for specification, development, maintenance and support of customs IT services relating to projects of the DG-TAXUD "CUST-DEV" (OJ 2005/S 117-115222) and awarding the same Call for Tender to another bidder.

In support of its claims the applicant puts forward that, in the framework of the said tendering procedure, DG TAXUD failed to respect the procedural requirements set out in the Financial Regulation and its Implementing Rules, thus resulting in unequal treatment of tenderers and violation of principles of transparency and sound administration. Moreover, DG TAXUD's decision allegedly contained manifest errors of assessment and according to the applicant, by far exceeded the discretion that European Institutions dispose of when evaluating tenders.

Beschluss

Vorgeschichte des Rechtsstreits

1 Auf die Ausschreibung eines öffentlichen Bauauftrags für ein Projekt betreffend Baumaßnahmen der Ausbildungsstätten in den türkischen Provinzen Siirt und Diyarbakir (EuropeAid/121601/C/W/TR) reichten zwei in der Türkei ansässige Unternehmen, Diy-Mar Insaat Sanayi ve Ticaret Ltd Sirketi und Musa Akar (im Folgenden: Kläger), am 21. Oktober 2005 ihre Bewerbungsunterlagen bei der Delegation der Kommission in der Türkei ein.

2 Nach Abschluss des Vergabeverfahrens erteilte die Kommission der ILCI Ins. San. Ve Tic, AS, mit Entscheidung vom 29. November 2005 den Zuschlag.

3 Mit Schreiben vom 2. Dezember 2005 beantragten die Kläger bei der Kommission die Rücknahme dieser Entscheidung.

4 Die Kommission wies diesen Antrag mit der Entscheidung MK/KS/DELTUR (2005)/SecE/D/1614 (im Folgenden: Entscheidung) ab, die in einem Schreiben vom 23. Dezember 2005 enthalten war, das den Klägern per Telefax vom selben Tag bekannt gegeben wurde.

5 Diese Entscheidung enthielt eine Rechtsbehelfsbelehrung, in der die Kläger darauf hingewiesen wurden, dass sie nach Art. 230 EG innerhalb von zwei Monaten ab dem Datum des Schreibens vor dem Gemeinschaftsgericht Nichtigkeitsklage gegen die Entscheidung über die Zuschlagserteilung erheben könnten.

6 Durch zwei in der Türkei praktizierende Rechtsanwälte haben die Kläger am 21. bzw. 23. Februar 2006 bei der Kanzlei des Gerichts eine englische und eine türkische Fassung einer Klage auf Nichtigerklärung der Entscheidung eingereicht.

7 Mit Schreiben vom 21. März 2006 hat die Kanzlei des Gerichts den Klägern mitgeteilt, dass sie sich für diesen Rechtsstreit von einem Anwalt vertreten lassen müssten, der berechtigt sei, vor einem Gericht eines Mitgliedstaats der Europäischen Union oder eines anderen Vertragsstaats des Abkommens über den Europäischen Wirtschaftsraum (im Folgenden: EWR-Abkommen) aufzutreten, und dass über ihre Klage, so wie sie eingereicht worden sei, nicht verhandelt werden könne.

8 Mit Schreiben vom 23. März 2006, dem eine Vollmacht beigefügt war, hat der in Düsseldorf (Deutschland) zugelassene Rechtsanwalt Ç. Şahin der Kanzlei des Gerichts mitgeteilt, dass die Kläger ihn zu ihrem Vertreter im vorliegenden Verfahren bestimmt hätten.

9 Am 6. April 2006 hat Rechtsanwalt Şahin bei der Kanzlei des Gerichts eine deutsche Übersetzung der am 21. Februar 2006 vorgelegten englischen Fassung der Klage eingereicht.

10 Nachdem die Kanzlei des Gerichts Rechtsanwalt Şahin darauf hingewiesen hatte, dass er die deutsche Fassung der Klage nicht unterschrieben habe, hat er am 26. April 2006 ein neues Exemplar dieser Fassung eingereicht, das mit seiner Unterschrift versehen war.

11 Die vorliegende Klage ist am selben Tag unter der Rechtssachennummer T-129/06 eingetragen worden.

12 Am 16. August 2006 hat die Kommission auf der Grundlage von Art. 114 der Verfahrensordnung des Gerichts eine Einrede der Unzulässigkeit dieser Klage erhoben.

13 Mit am 19. Oktober 2006 eingereichtem Schriftsatz haben die Kläger zu dieser Einrede Stellung genommen.

Anträge der Parteien

14 Die Kläger beantragen,

- die Einrede der Unzulässigkeit zurückzuweisen;
- den Vollzug der Entscheidung auszusetzen;
- die Entscheidung vom 23. Dezember 2005 mit der Nummer MK/KS/DELTUR/(2005)/SecE/D/1614 für nichtig zu erklären;
- ihnen ihre Rechte auf Geltendmachung von Schadensersatzansprüchen vorzubehalten;
- der Kommission die Kosten aufzuerlegen.

15 Die Kommission beantragt,

- die Klage als unzulässig abzuweisen;
- den Klägern die Kosten aufzuerlegen.

Zur Zulässigkeit des Antrags auf Nichtigerklärung

16 Will eine Partei vorab eine Entscheidung des Gerichts über die Zulässigkeit einer Klage herbeiführen, so wird nach Art. 114 der Verfahrensordnung über diesen Antrag mündlich verhandelt, sofern das Gericht nichts anderes bestimmt.

17 Im vorliegenden Fall ist das Gericht in der Lage, aufgrund des Akteninhalts ohne mündliche Verhandlung zu entscheiden.

Vorbringen der Parteien

18 Die Kommission weist darauf hin, dass die Klage einer natürlichen oder juristischen Person auf Nichtigerklärung einer sie unmittelbar und individuell betreffenden Entscheidung gemäß Art. 230 Abs. 5 EG binnen zwei Monaten ab Bekanntgabe dieser Entscheidung an den Kläger erhoben werden müsse.

19 Hier sei die Klagefrist, die zu laufen begonnen habe, als den Klägern am 23. Dezember 2005 die Gründe für die Versagung des Zuschlags mitgeteilt worden seien, am 22. Februar 2006 abgelaufen.

20 Daher sei die Klage verspätet und folglich unzulässig.

21 Die Kläger erwidern, dass die nicht fristgerechte Einreichung der vorliegenden Klageschrift und die dabei begangenen Fehler allein durch die Lücken der in der Entscheidung enthaltenen Rechtsbehelfsbelehrung verursacht worden seien.

24 Aufgrund der fehlerhaften Rechtsbehelfsbelehrung sei somit die Rechtsmittelfrist nicht in Lauf gesetzt worden, so dass ihnen nicht entgegengehalten werden könne, dass die beim Gericht am 26. April 2006 eingetragene Klage verspätet erhoben worden sei.

Würdigung durch das Gericht

25 Nach Art. 19 Abs. 3 und 4 der Satzung des Gerichtshofs, der gemäß deren Art. 53 Abs. 1 auf das Verfahren vor dem Gericht anwendbar ist, kann nur ein Anwalt, der berechtigt ist, vor einem Gericht eines Mitgliedstaats oder eines anderen Vertragsstaats des EWR-Abkommens aufzutreten, Prozesshandlungen vor dem Gericht für andere Parteien als die in Art. 19 Abs. 1 und 2 der Satzung genannten Staaten und die Organe vornehmen.

26 Gemäß Art. 21 Abs. 1 der Satzung des Gerichtshofs, der gemäß deren Art. 53 Abs. 1 auf das Verfahren vor dem Gericht anwendbar ist, muss die Klageschrift u. a. die Stellung des Unterzeichnenden enthalten.

27 Die Klageschrift muss somit von einer Person unterzeichnet sein, die berechtigt ist, den Kläger gemäß Art. 19 der Satzung des Gerichtshofs zu vertreten, wie Art. 43 § 1 Abs. 1 der Verfahrensordnung des Gerichts bestätigt, der verlangt, dass die Urschrift jedes Schriftsatzes vom Bevollmächtigten oder vom Anwalt der Partei unterzeichnet ist.

28 Um die Einhaltung von Art. 19 Abs. 3 und 4 der Satzung des Gerichtshofs zu gewährleisten, muss nach Art. 44 § 3 der Verfahrensordnung des Gerichts der Anwalt, der als Beistand oder Vertreter einer Partei auftritt, bei der Kanzlei eine Bescheinigung hinterlegen, aus der hervorgeht, dass er berechtigt ist, vor einem Gericht eines Mitgliedstaats oder eines anderen Vertragsstaats des EWR-Abkommens aufzutreten.

29 Diese Vorschriften sollen sicherstellen, dass die Verantwortung für die Vornahme und den Inhalt von Prozesshandlungen von einer Person übernommen wird, die berechtigt ist, derartige Handlungen vor den Gemeinschaftsgerichten vorzunehmen, also bei Vertretung der Organe, der Mitgliedstaaten und der anderen Vertragsstaaten des EWR-Abkommens von einem Bevollmächtigten und bei Vertretung der anderen Parteien von einem Anwalt, der berechtigt ist, vor einem Gericht eines Mitgliedstaats oder eines anderen Vertragsstaats des EWR-Abkommens aufzutreten, und der den Rechtsvorschriften und den Standesregeln unterliegt, die für die Ausübung des Anwaltsberufs in diesen Staaten gelten (Beschluss des Gerichts vom 24. Februar 2000, FTA u. a./Rat, T-37/98, Slg. 2000, II-373, Randnrn. 20 bis 25).

30 Somit wäre die Klage nur zulässig gewesen, wenn die Urschrift der Klageschrift die handschriftlich vollzogene Unterschrift eines Rechtsanwalts getragen hätte, der von den Klägern beauftragt und nach den oben genannten Verfahrensvorschriften zu ihrer Vertretung vor dem Gericht berechtigt war.

31 Die Unterzeichnung der Klageschrift durch einen Rechtsanwalt, der berechtigt ist, Prozesshandlungen vor dem Gericht vorzunehmen, ist zudem ein wesentliches Formerfordernis, dessen Nichteinhaltung zur Unzulässigkeit der Klage führt; das Fehlen dieser Unterzeichnung gehört auch nicht zu den Formfehlern, die gemäß

Art. 21 Abs. 2 der Satzung des Gerichtshofs und Artikel 44 § 6 der Verfahrensordnung des Gerichts noch nach Ablauf der für die Klageerhebung vorgeschriebenen Frist behoben werden können (Beschluss FTA u. a./Rat, Randnr. 28).

32 Aus den vorstehenden Erwägungen folgt, dass nur die von Rechtsanwalt Şahin unterzeichnete und am 24. April 2006 bei der Kanzlei des Gerichts eingereichte Fassung der Klageschrift als der Form nach zulässig angesehen werden kann, da nur sie die Erfordernisse gemäß Art. 19 Abs. 3 und 4 und Art. 21 Abs. 1 der Satzung des Gerichtshofs sowie nach Art. 43 § 1 der Verfahrensordnung des Gerichts erfüllt.

33 Daher ist zu prüfen, ob diese Fassung der Klageschrift innerhalb der Klagefrist eingereicht worden ist.

35 Anlage 5 der Klageschrift ist zu entnehmen, wie im Übrigen auch nicht bestritten wird, dass das Formerfordernis der Bekanntgabe mit der Übersendung der Entscheidung an die Kläger per Telefax vom 23. Dezember 2005 erfüllt wurde.

36 Bei einer Maßnahme, die auf diese Art und Weise bekannt zu geben ist, endet die Klagefrist, wenn sie in Kalendermonaten ausgedrückt ist, mit Ablauf des Tages, der in dem durch die Frist bezeichneten Monat dieselbe Zahl trägt wie der Tag, an dem die Frist in Lauf gesetzt worden ist, also der Tag der Bekanntgabe (Beschluss des Gerichtshofs vom 17. Mai 2002, Deutschland/Parlament und Rat, C-406/01, Slg. 2002, I-4561, Randnr. 14).

37 Gerechnet ab Bekanntgabe der Entscheidung am 23. Dezember 2005, ist die in Anwendung von Art. 102 § 2 der Verfahrensordnung um die pauschale Frist von zehn Tagen verlängerte Klagefrist von zwei Monaten, über die die Kläger nach Art. 230 Abs. 5 EG verfügten, am Montag, den 6. März 2006, abgelaufen.

38 Da die Klageschrift erst am 24. April 2006 rechtswirksam eingereicht worden ist, ist die vorliegende Klage als verspätet anzusehen.

Gunsten von den Gemeinschaftsbestimmungen über die Klagefristen, bei denen es sich um zwingendes Recht handelt, abzuweichen, ist ein eng auszulegender Begriff.

41 Die Vorschriften über die Verfahrensfristen unterliegen einer restriktiven Anwendung, die dem Erfordernis der Rechtssicherheit und der Notwendigkeit entspricht, jede Diskriminierung oder willkürliche Behandlung bei der Rechtspflege zu vermeiden (Urteil des Gerichtshofs vom 12. Juli 1984, Ferriera Valsabbia/Kommission, 209/83, Slg. 1984, 3089, Randnr. 14, und Beschluss des Gerichtshofs vom 18. Januar 2005, Zuazaga Meabe/HABM, C-325/03 P, Slg. 2005, I-403, Randnr. 16; Beschluss des Präsidenten des Gerichts vom 28. April 2005, Microsoft/Kommission, T-201/04, Slg. 2005, II-1491, Randnr. 47).

42 Der entschuldbare Irrtum kann sich daher nur auf Ausnahmefälle beziehen, insbesondere auf solche, in denen das betroffene Organ den Irrtum durch ein Verhalten verursacht hat, das für sich genommen oder aber in ausschlaggebendem Maß geeignet war, bei einem gutgläubigen Rechtsbürger, der alle Sorgfalt aufwendet, die von einem Einzelnen mit normalem Kenntnisstand zu verlangen ist, eine verständliche Verwirrung hervorzurufen (Urteil des Gerichts vom 29. Mai 1991, Bayer/Kommission, T-12/90, Slg. 1991, II-219, Randnr. 29, bestätigt im Rechtsmittelverfahren durch Urteil des Gerichtshofs vom 15. Dezember 1994, Bayer/Kommission, C-195/91 P, Slg. 1994, I-5619, Randnrn. 26 bis 28).

45 Infolgedessen ist die Klage wegen Verspätung als unzulässig abzuweisen, ohne dass über die Anträge zu entscheiden ist, die die Kläger neben dem Antrag auf Nichtigerklärung der Entscheidung gestellt haben.

Kosten

46 Nach Art. 87 § 2 der Verfahrensordnung des Gerichts ist die unterliegende Partei auf Antrag zur Tragung der Kosten zu verurteilen. Da die Kläger unterlegen sind, haben sie ihre eigenen Kosten sowie gesamtschuldnerisch gemäß dem Antrag der Kommission deren Kosten zu tragen.

Aus diesen Gründen hat

DAS GERICHT (Vierte Kammer)

beschlossen:

1. Die Klage wird als unzulässig abgewiesen.

2. Die Kläger, Diy-Mar Insaat Sanayi ve Ticaret Ltd Sirketi und Musa Akar, tragen ihre eigenen Kosten und gesamtschuldnerisch die Kosten der Kommission.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicants are contesting the decision of the European Commission Delegation in Turkey of 23 December 2005 which was addressed to the applicants with regard to the call for tenders in respect of the construction of educational establishments in the provinces of Diyarbakir and Siirt.

The applicants submit, inter alia, that their tender was the lowest and that the file in respect thereof was complete and therefore the contract should have been awarded to them. Furthermore, they submit that the contested decision infringes European Union law.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Second Chamber)

28 January 2009 (*)

(Public service contracts – Tendering procedure for full crèche management – Decision to use the services of the Office for Infrastructure and Logistics (OIB) and to abandon a tendering procedure)

In Case T–125/06,

Centro Studi Antonio Manieri Srl, established in Rome (Italy), represented by C. Forte, M. Forte and G. Forte, lawyers, applicant,

Council of the European Union, represented by A. Vitro, P. Mahnic and M. Balta, acting as Agents, defendant,

APPLICATION, first, for annulment of the decision of the Council, made public by letter of its General Secretariat of 16 January 2006, abandoning the tendering procedure 2003/S 209–187862 for the full management of a crèche; second, for annulment of the decision to accept the proposal of the Office for Infrastructure and Logistics (OIB) for the management of those services; and, third, for damages,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES (Second Chamber), composed of I. Pelikánová, President, K. Jürimäe (Rapporteur) and S. Soldevila Fragoso, Judges, Registrar: J. Palacio González, Principal Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 24 June 2008, gives the following

Judgment

Background to the dispute

1 The applicant, Centro Studi Antonio Manieri Srl, is a company which specialises in the management of training activities and organisations.

2 On 2 October 2003, the Council issued a restricted tendering procedure for a service contract entitled ‘B–Brussels: full crèche management 2003/S 209–187862’ (‘the tendering procedure’).

3 The Council notified the applicant, by letter of its General Secretariat of 7 January 2004, that its candidature had been accepted by the evaluation committee and confirmed that the company satisfied the conditions to qualify for the restricted procedure.

4 Initially planned for July 2004, the forwarding of the tendering specifications was twice deferred. It was finally sent to the applicant by letter of 8 December 2004, together with a draft contract. The closing date for submitting tenders was 28 February 2005.

5 At the beginning of 2005, the applicant submitted its tender to the Council. By letter of its General Secretariat of 21 April 2005, the Council acknowledged receipt of the tender.

6 The Council notified the applicant by letter of 20 December 2005 that the date upon which a decision would be taken had been deferred to 16 January 2006.

7 By letter of the General Secretariat of the Council of 16 January 2006, which was faxed to the applicant, the latter was informed of the Council's decisions, first, to abandon the tendering procedure and, second, to entrust the management of the crèche to the Office for Infrastructure and Logistics (OIB) in Brussels. That letter stated as follows:

'[t]he General Secretariat has decided to abandon the invitation to tender in question in accordance with paragraph 4 of the specifications, formulated pursuant to Article 101 of Council Regulation No 1605/2002.

The General Secretariat has given a favourable evaluation of the proposal submitted to it during the second half of 2005 by the OIB …, for the direct educational and administrative management of the crèche, which is intended primarily for the children of officials of the General Secretariat.

In analysing that option, the many advantages it entails have become apparent, particularly as regards the contractual conditions offered to the staff, the economies of scale and the optimisation of the available resources in the context of appropriate interinstitutional cooperation.

8 By letter of 15 February 2006, the applicant asked the Council to provide explanations concerning its letter of 16 January and set out a number of arguments challenging its content.

9 The Council responded to the applicant's questions and arguments by letter of 3 March 2006.

Procedure

10 The applicant brought the present action by fax on 20 March 2006. The original application was sent by post on 17 March 2006 and arrived at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 3 May 2006. A corrigendum to the request for measures of inquiry was lodged on 20 May 2006.

11 By decision of 12 June 2006, the President of the Court of First Instance allocated the case to the Fourth Chamber.

12 The Council lodged its defence on 18 July 2006.

13 The time-limit for lodging the reply was set for 10 October 2006. The reply was sent by post on 6 October 2006 and arrived at the Court Registry on 12 October 2006.

14 On 10 October 2006, the applicant lodged an additional request for the production of documents by way of measures of inquiry.

15 The Council submitted its observations on that request on 23 October 2006.

16 The written procedure concluded with the lodging of the rejoinder on 30 November 2006.

17 By decision of 18 January 2007, the President of the Court of First Instance reallocated the case to the Third Chamber.

18 As the Judge-Rapporteur was unable to sit in the present case, the President of the Court of First Instance reallocated the case to the Second Chamber.

Forms of order sought by the parties

19 The applicant claims that the Court should:

– annul the decision of the General Secretariat of the Council of 16 January 2006 to abandon the tendering procedure;

– annul the favourable evaluation of the OIB's proposal;

– adopt all measures necessary to protect its rights and privileges, including the suspension of the operation of the contract with the OIB;

– assess the damage suffered by the applicant on an equitable basis;

– order the Commission to pay the costs.

20 The Council contends that the Court should:

– declare the action inadmissible on the ground that the application was lodged after the expiry of the maximum period laid down in Article 230 EC;

– in the alternative, declare that the applications for annulment and the claim for damages are unfounded;

– order the applicant to pay the costs.

Admissibility

21 The Council contends that the application and the reply are inadmissible since they were both lodged out of time.

1. Compliance with the time-limit for bringing an action

22 The fifth paragraph of Article 230 EC provides that proceedings for annulment must be instituted within two months of the publication of the measure, or of its notification to the plaintiff, or, in the absence thereof, of the day on which it came to the knowledge of the latter, as the case may be. In accordance with Article 102(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, that period must also be extended by 10 days on account of distance.

23 In the present case, the decision of the Council was sent by letter of its General Secretariat dated 16 January 2006, and addressed to the applicant by fax the following day. At the hearing, the applicant expressly acknowledged that it received that letter on 17 January 2006.

24 Since the letter was received by the applicant on 17 January 2006, the time-limit for instituting proceedings for the annulment of the decision in question, extended by 10 days on account of distance, expired at midnight on 27 March 2006 (dies ad quem).

25 It is clear that a copy of the application was received at the Registry by fax on 20 March 2006 and the original application was subsequently lodged on 3 May 2006.

26 Under Article 43(6) of the Rules of Procedure, 20 March 2006 is deemed to be the date of lodgment for the purpose of compliance with the time-limits for taking steps in proceedings, provided that the signed original of the pleading was lodged at the Registry no later than 10 days thereafter, that is, no later than midnight on 30 March 2006. Given that, in the present case, the signed original application was lodged only on 3 May 2006, 20 March 2006 cannot be deemed to be the date of lodgment for the purposes of compliance with the time-limits for taking steps in proceedings. The only date that can be taken into account for the purpose of determining whether the application was lodged out of time is therefore 3 May 2006. Since that date is after the dies ad quem, the action is out of time and must, in principle, be declared inadmissible.

27 However, it is necessary to examine whether, in the present case, there exist unforeseeable circumstances or force majeure which would permit the Court to derogate from the time-limit in question on the basis of the second paragraph of Article 45 of the Statute of the Court of Justice, applicable to proceedings before the Court of First Instance pursuant to Article 53 of that statute.

28 The concepts of 'force majeure' and 'unforeseeable circumstances' within the meaning of Article 45 of the Statute of the Court of Justice contain both an objective element relating to abnormal circumstances unconnected with the person in question and a subjective element involving the obligation, on that person's part, to guard against the consequences of the abnormal event by taking appropriate steps without making unreasonable sacrifices. In particular, the person concerned must pay close attention to the course of the procedure set in motion and, in particular, demonstrate diligence in order to comply with the prescribed time-limits (Case C-195/91 P Bayer v Commission [1994] ECR I-5619, paragraph 32). Thus, the concept of force majeure does not apply to a situation in which, objectively, a diligent and prudent person would have been able to take the necessary steps before the expiry of the period prescribed for instituting proceedings (Case 209/83 Ferriera Valsabbia v Commission [1984] ECR 3089, paragraph 22, and order of the Court of Justice in Case C-325/03 P Zuazaga Meabe v OHIM [2005] ECR I-403, paragraph 25). It is therefore necessary to examine whether the circumstances relied on by the applicant may be regarded as exceptional circumstances which constitute a case of force majeure.

29 In the present case, the package containing the original signed application was sent by the applicant on 17 March 2006. By sending the original document on that date, the applicant could reasonably expect it to arrive at the Court before the expiry of the limitation period, especially since, in view of the fact that a copy of that document had been sent by fax, that period had been extended to 30 March 2006. The package in question had already reached the offices of the Luxembourg postal service on 21 March 2006, as demonstrated by the postmark on the package. The fact that the postal service kept the package for a period of 42 days (from 21 March to 3 May 2006) clearly constitutes abnormal circumstances unconnected with the applicant, which, for its part, demonstrated diligence in order to comply with the prescribed time-limits by sending the original application well before the expiry of the limitation period and by taking the steps necessary to extend that period in accordance with Article 43(6) of the Rules of Procedure by sending a copy of the application to the Court Registry by fax. Consequently, the fact that the original application was lodged out of time is attributable to a case of force majeure (see, to that effect, Joined Cases 25/65 and 26/65 Simet and Feram v High Authority [1967] ECR 33, p. 43).

30 It follows that, as the expiry of the time-limit is not enforceable against the applicant, pursuant to the second paragraph of Article 45 of the Statute of the Court of Justice, the Council's plea alleging inadmissibility must be rejected.

2. Compliance with the time-limit for lodging the reply

31 The time-limit for lodging the reply was 10 October 2006. Since the reply was received at the Court Registry on 12 October 2006, it was lodged out of time.

32 The original reply was sent from Brussels by post on 6 October 2006. Although the original was sent only four days before the expiry of the time-limit by which it was to be lodged, the applicant failed to avail itself of the possibility provided for in Article 43(6) of the Rules of Procedure to send a copy of the signed original to the Registry by fax or by any other technical means of communication available to the Court of First Instance, which could have extended the time-limit for lodging the reply by an additional period of up to 10 days.

33 In the light of those circumstances, the applicant failed to demonstrate the diligence to be expected of a reasonably prudent applicant in order to comply with the time-limits. On the contrary, it increased the risk that the reply would be delivered to the Court out of time, first, by failing to draw the appropriate conclusions from the problems encountered in lodging the application and, second, by omitting to send a copy of the signed original to the Registry by fax or by any other technical means of communication available to the Court.

34 Such a lack of diligence rules out the existence of a case of force majeure and it is therefore necessary to reject the reply as inadmissible.

The applications for annulment

1. Preliminary observations

35 First of all, it should be pointed out that the applicant asks the Court to annul not only the Council's decision to abandon the tendering procedure but also the Council's favourable evaluation of the OIB's proposal. The Court will examine the application for annulment of the favourable evaluation of the OIB's proposal after examining the application for annulment of the decision to abandon the tendering procedure.

36 Next, it should be observed that, in support of its claims for annulment, the applicant relies on four pleas in law, alleging, first, infringement of Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC; second, misapplication of paragraph 4 of the tendering specifications and infringement of Articles 43 EC and 49 EC and of Articles 89, 97, 98, 100 and 101 of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1) ('the Financial Regulation') and Articles 135 and 147 of Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1) ('the Implementing Regulation'); third, infringement of the obligation to state reasons; and, fourth, misapplication of Article 116 of the Implementing Regulation.

37 Lastly, in each of the four pleas, the applicant has alleged infringement of the principle of transparency and the principle of equal treatment. Consequently, the Court will examine all the applicant's arguments alleging infringement of both those principles after examining the four pleas in law.

2. The application for annulment of the Council's decision to abandon the tendering procedure

The fourth plea in law, alleging misapplication of Article 116 of the Implementing Regulation

Arguments of the parties

38 As regards the ground put forward by the Council in its letter of 3 March 2006 (see paragraph 9 above) that the rules of the Treaty and the Financial Regulation and the general principles of Community law do not apply in the present case since the Council did not act as a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 116(7) of the Implementing Regulation, the applicant does not accept that that provision may be taken into consideration for the purpose of examining the legality of the 'decision of 16 January 2006', given that the provision is not referred to in that decision.

39 In any event, the applicant does not accept that the exception provided for in Article 116(7) of the Implementing Regulation is applicable to the present case.

40 First of all, the applicant takes the view that that exception must be interpreted strictly, in that it is applicable solely to arrangements between departments of the Community institutions. The applicant considers that the OIB does not constitute such a department but, as is apparent from recital 7 in the preamble to Commission Decision 2003/523/EC of 6 November 2002 establishing the OIB in Brussels (OJ 2003 L 183, p. 35), is a European office within the meaning of Article 171 of the Financial Regulation. Moreover, unlike other European offices such as the European Anti-Fraud Office (OLAF) or the European Personnel Selection Office (EPSO), the OIB cannot be attached to the Council. It is not, in fact, an interinstitutional European office within the meaning of Article 174 of the Financial Regulation, since, under Article 6 of Decision 2003/523, it is managed exclusively by members appointed by the Commission.

41 Secondly, it is necessary to apply, by analogy, the case-law according to which provisions governing public procurement are applicable where a contracting authority, such as a regional or local authority, intends to conclude, in writing and for consideration, with an entity which is formally distinct from it and independent of it with regard to decision-making, a contract for the supply of goods. In the present case, given that the OIB is not a department of the Council, which does not have any control over it, it is not possible to plead the inapplicability of the Financial Regulation or Articles 43 EC and 49 EC.

42 Thirdly, it is apparent from recitals 2 and 3 in the preamble to Decision 2005/523 that the OIB was established as an office whose purpose is to manage the externalisation of the non-core activities of the Community administration. Consequently, the internalisation of a department which is already subject to a tendering procedure is inconsistent with its purpose.

43 The Council disputes the applicant's arguments.

Findings of the Court

44 According to Article 88 of the Financial Regulation, '[p]ublic contracts are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing by a contracting authority within the meaning of Articles 104 and 167 [of that regulation], in order to obtain, against payment of a price paid in whole or in part from the budget, the supply of movable or immovable assets, the execution of works or the provision of services'.

45 In order to be classified as a public contract, a contract must be concluded by a 'contracting authority'. Article 116(7) of the Implementing Regulation provides that '[d]epartments of the Community institutions shall be considered to be contracting authorities, save where they conclude between themselves administrative arrangements for the provision of services, the supply of products or the execution of works'.

46 It follows from the two provisions referred to above that the provision of services is outside the ambit of the rules governing public contracts where it forms part of an administrative arrangement concluded between the departments of Community institutions.

47 Contrary to the applicant's submission, the OIB is a department of the Community institutions within the meaning of Article 116(7) of the Implementing Regulation. In accordance with recital 4 in the preamble to Decision 2003/523, '[t]he type of office selected [for the OIB] consists of administrative entities aimed at providing support for the activities of other Commission departments and/or potentially of other Community institutions'. By referring to 'other Commission departments' as being among the recipients of support from the OIB, the Commission has indicated in that recital, impliedly but necessarily, that the OIB is also one of its departments.

48 It follows that the Council was not required to comply with the rules governing public procurement when it decided to have recourse to the services of the OIB. That conclusion cannot be affected by the other arguments put forward by the applicant.

49 First of all, the applicant's arguments that the OIB is, first, attached to the Commission and not to the Council and, second, managed exclusively by the members appointed by the Commission are invalid. The first point to be made is that the exception provided for in Article 116(7) of the Implementing Regulation concerns administrative arrangements between departments of the Community institutions, irrespective of whether such departments belong to the same institution. Secondly, the fact that the OIB is attached to the Directorate-General (DG) for Personnel and Administration of the Commission does not preclude it from being an interinstitutional body, as is clear from recitals 4 and 6 in the preamble to and Article 2(4) of Decision 2003/523. Thirdly, as regards Article 6(1)(g) of Decision 2003/523, that provision expressly states that the Management Committee of the OIB is to include a representative of the other Community institutions. That fact not only contradicts the applicant's claim that the OIB is managed exclusively by members appointed by the Commission but also makes clear the interinstitutional character of the OIB.

50 On the same grounds, it is necessary to reject as invalid the applicant's arguments based on the fact that the OIB is an entity which is formally distinct from the Council and independent of it with regard to decision-making. In any event, the OIB is precluded from being distinct from and independent of the Council by virtue of Article 281 EC. In view of the fact that, under that provision, only the European Community as such has legal personality under the Community institutional system, both the Council and the OIB are part of the same legal person and, consequently, the OIB cannot be regarded as an entity that is distinct from or independent of the Council

51 With regard to the applicant's argument that Article 116(7) of the Implementing Regulation should not be taken into account for the purpose of examining the legality of the 'decision of 16 January 2006', since no reference was made to that provision in the decision, it must be noted that the Council informed the applicant in the letter of 16 January 2006 of its decision to abandon the tendering procedure in view of the decision it had taken to have recourse to the services of the OIB. As regards the decision to abandon the tendering procedure, it is clear that the two provisions on which that decision is based, namely Article 101 of the Financial Regulation and paragraph 4 of the tendering specifications, were duly referred to by the Council in that letter. On the other hand, it is apparent from paragraphs 44 to 48 above that the decision to have recourse to the services of the OIB is an act that is unconnected with the tendering procedure and is of no concern to the applicant. It follows that the fact that no reference was made to Article 116(7) of the Implementing Regulation is irrelevant for the purpose of examining the legality of the decision to abandon the tendering procedure and, accordingly, the argument in question must be rejected as invalid.

52 Finally, with regard to the applicant's argument that the internalisation of the full management of the crèche by the OIB is inconsistent with its purpose, which is to manage the externalisation of the non-core activities of the Community administration, it must be noted that the OIB is not obliged under Decision 2003/523 systematically to use tendering procedures in the performance of its tasks. While, under Article 16 of that decision, it is in fact entitled to use such a procedure, the fact remains that there is no provision which prohibits it from carrying out its task by its own means. In the absence of any formal prohibition, the OIB may therefore decide on a case-by-case basis whether it is necessary to use a tendering procedure.

53 It follows from the foregoing that the conclusion between the Council and the OIB of an arrangement for full crèche management constitutes the conclusion of an administrative arrangement between two departments of the Community institutions for the provision of services to which the rules on public procurement are not applicable.

54 The fourth plea in law must therefore be rejected in its entirety as unfounded.

The third plea, alleging infringement of the 'obligation to state reasons'

Arguments of the parties

55 The applicant disputes that the many advantages put forward by the Council in its letter of 16 January 2006 could justify its decision to have recourse to the services of the OIB, even taking into account the explanations which it provided in its letter of 3 March 2006. Thus, the applicant argues, by the explanations given as regards the advantages represented by the contractual conditions guaranteed to staff, the economies of scale and the optimisation of the available resources, the Council infringed the 'obligation to state reasons'.

56 The Council disputes the applicant's arguments.

Findings of the Court

57 As a preliminary point, in connection with the plea in question, the applicant is confusing infringement of the obligation to state reasons and manifest error of assessment. Although the heading of this plea refers to an infringement of the obligation to state reasons, the arguments put forward in that connection relate, instead, to the errors allegedly made by the Council in assessing the advantages entailed by a decision to have recourse to the services of the OIB.

58 It should be recalled that these are two distinct pleas in law that may be invoked in an application for annulment, The first, which relates to the fact that a statement of reasons is lacking or inadequate, constitutes an infringement of essential procedural requirements for the purposes of Article 253 EC and is a matter of public interest which must be raised by the Community judicature of its own motion (see Case C-166/99 P Commission v Daffix [1997] ECR I-983, paragraph 24, and the case-law cited). On the other hand, the second, which concerns the substantive legality of the decision in question, can be examined by the Community judicature only if it is raised by the applicant.

59 Consequently, it is necessary to rule on the arguments put forward in connection with the third plea by examining first of all those alleging infringement of the obligation to state reasons and, subsequently, those alleging manifest errors of assessment.

60 As regards any infringement of the duty to state reasons, according to established case-law, that duty depends on the type of document at issue and the context in which it was adopted. The statement of reasons must disclose in a clear and unequivocal fashion the reasoning followed by the institution in such a way, first, as to make the persons concerned aware of the reasons for the measure and thus enable them to defend their rights and to verify whether or not the decision is well founded and, secondly, as to permit the Community judicature to exercise its power of review (Case C-350/88 Delacre and Others v Commission [1990] ECR I-395, paragraphs 15 and 16; Case T-217/01 Forum des migrants v Commission [2003] ECR II-1563, paragraph 68; and Case T-195/05 Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission [2007] ECR II-871, paragraph 45).

61 In the circumstances, the letter of 16 January 2006 expressly states that the tendering procedure had been abandoned as a result of the favourable evaluation of the proposal which the OIB had made to the Council. In that letter, the General Secretariat of the Council therefore informed the applicant that, as a result of the decision to entrust the management of the services in question to the OIB on the basis of the latter's proposal, there was no longer any reason to continue with the tendering procedure. It follows that the letter of 16 January 2006 discloses in a clear and unequivocal fashion the reasoning followed by the Council in such a way, first, as to make the applicant aware of the reasons for the measure and thus enable it to defend its rights and to verify whether or not the decision was well founded and, secondly, to enable the Court to exercise its power of review. It follows that, in its decision to abandon the tendering procedure, the Council did not infringe the obligation to state reasons.

62 As regards the existence of any manifest errors of assessment, it must be borne in mind that an institution using the tendering procedure has broad discretion with regard to the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract and that review by the Court must be limited to checking that the rules governing the procedure and statement of reasons are complied with, the facts are correct and there is no manifest error of assessment (see judgment of 12 July 2007 in Case T–250/05 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, not published in the ECR, paragraph 89, and the case–law cited). The applicant has not put forward any facts capable of establishing that the decision to abandon the tendering procedure was vitiated by a manifest error of assessment. With regard to the decision to have recourse to the services of the OIB and, in particular, the supposed advantages to be gained from such a decision, while the Council is of course required to justify its choice to the political authority and internal auditors, it is not required to demonstrate to a participant in a tendering procedure the advantages of the decision to perform the services in question by its own means. Such a decision is a matter of policy and thus within the Council's discretion. It follows that the Court is not required in these proceedings to examine whether the decision to have recourse to the services of the OIB is justified economically and at institutional level.

63 The third plea must therefore be rejected as unfounded.

The second plea, alleging infringement of the Treaty, the Financial Regulation, the Implementing Regulation and the tendering specifications

64 First of all, the applicant submits that paragraph 4 of the tendering specifications can serve as the legal basis for the abandonment of a tendering procedure only if the purpose of such a decision is to instigate a new tendering procedure. As a consequence, the reference to paragraph 4 of the tendering specifications in the Council's decision to abandon the tendering procedure is inconsistent and contradictory and constitutes an error of law.

65 Secondly, the reference to Article 101 of the Financial Regulation in the Council's decision to abandon the tendering procedure is also irrelevant, since that provision requires reasons to be given for such abandonment. In that regard, the reasons are to be found in the decision to entrust the services in question to the OIB. In view of the fact that the OIB did not, unlike the others, participate in the tendering procedure and submitted its offer out of time, that decision does not constitute an abandonment of the tendering procedure. As a consequence, Article 101 of the Financial Regulation was misapplied and Articles 89, 97, 98 and 100 of the Financial Regulation and Articles 135 and 147 of the Implementing Regulation disregarded.

66 Thirdly, although the Council carried out a kind of comparative analysis between the OIB's proposal on the one hand and the proposals submitted by the applicant and other companies which participated in the tendering procedure on the other, it did not request that the OIB participate in the tendering procedure. Accordingly, the procedure chosen by the Council is also vitiated by a breach of the principles of equal treatment and transparency and of Articles 43 EC and 49 EC.

67 The Council disputes the applicant's arguments.

– Findings of the Court

68 First of all, paragraph 4 of the tendering specification states as follows:

'The Secretariat may decide at its sole discretion and without being required to state reasons for its decision:

(a) not to award the contract in respect of which the tendering procedure was launched and to recommence the procedure;

In none of the above cases shall a tenderer, regardless of whether his bid has been accepted or rejected, be entitled to claim any compensation.'

69 While it might be possible on the basis of a textual interpretation of paragraph 4(a) of the tendering specifications to conclude that there was a connection between the Council's decision not to award a contract and the decision to recommence the tendering procedure, the fact remains that such a provision must be interpreted in the light of Article 101 of the Financial Regulation. While paragraph 4(a) of the tendering specifications simply allows the Council the option of instigating a new tendering procedure after deciding not to award the contract in the first procedure, express provision is made in Article 101 of the Financial Regulation for the alternative option of not awarding the contract at all. In fact, that provision states that '[t]he contracting authority may, before the contract is signed, either abandon the procurement or cancel the award procedure ...'. The Court cannot therefore conclude from the wording of paragraph 4(a) of the tendering specifications that the Council did not have the option of abandoning the tendering procedure.

70 It is true that Article 101 of the Financial Regulation, unlike paragraph 4(a) of the tendering specifications, expressly requires the contracting authority to give reasons for its decision to abandon the procurement. However, it has been demonstrated in the examination of the third plea that, in the present case, the Council properly gave reasons for its decision to abandon the tendering procedure. It follows that its decision to abandon the tendering procedure satisfies the requirements laid down in Article 101 of the Financial Regulation.

71 Secondly, with regard to the argument alleging infringement of Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, Articles 89, 97, 98 and 100 of the Financial Regulation and Articles 135 and 147 of the Implementing Regulation, under the first paragraph of Article 21 of the Statute of the Court of Justice, applicable to the Court of First Instance by virtue of the first paragraph of Article 53 of that statute, and under Article 44(1)(c) of the Rules of Procedure, all applications are to contain the subject-matter of the dispute and a brief statement of the pleas in law on which the application is based. According to case-law, that statement must be sufficiently clear and precise to enable the defendant to prepare its defence and the Court to rule on the application, if necessary, without any further information (Case T-387/94 Asia Motor France and Others v Commission [1996] ECR II-961, paragraph 106, and Case T-113/96 Dubois et Fils v Council and Commission [1998] ECR II-125, paragraph 29). In the present case, the applicant has merely referred to infringement of the provisions in question without putting forward any arguments whatsoever in support of its claim. Consequently, in the light of the principles outlined above, the argument must be rejected as inadmissible.

72 In any event, it has already been demonstrated in the examination of the fourth plea that the decision to entrust the services in question to the OIB independently of the tendering procedure was perfectly proper, since the provision of services by the OIB for the Council is not covered by the rules governing public procurement and the issue of infringement of the provisions in question does not therefore arise.

73 It follows that the second plea must be rejected as inadmissible in part and, as for the remainder, unfounded.

The first plea, alleging infringement of Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC

Arguments of the parties

74 The applicant takes the view that, by opting to use a tendering procedure, the Council made the decision to entrust the provision of the services in question within a clearly defined framework and is thus responsible for ensuring that the Treaty, the Financial Regulation and Articles 43 EC and 49 EC are complied with. In those circumstances, the decision to entrust the services at issue to the OIB independently of a tendering procedure is contrary to Articles 43 EC and 49 EC.

75 The applicant also relies on Article 86 EC, which does not permit any derogation from the Treaty provisions as regards the public undertakings of the Member States, and submits that that rule applies a fortiori to the Community institutions.

76 As a consequence, the decision to entrust the provision of the services in question to the OIB without publishing any advertisement or putting it out to competitive tender is contrary to the rules and principles of Community law that have been referred to, which justifies its annulment.

77 The Council does not accept the applicant's arguments.

Findings of the Court

78 With regard, first of all, to the argument alleging infringement of Article 86 EC, it is apparent from Articles 2 and 3 of Decision 2003/523 that the OIB is an office which is responsible for managing the purely internal requirements of the Community and is not at all commercially orientated, so that it cannot be classified as a public undertaking within the meaning of Article 86 EC. Consequently, there can be no question of any kind of infringement of Article 86 EC and the applicant's argument in that regard must therefore be rejected as unfounded.

79 As regards the other arguments put forward by the applicant in connection with the plea under examination, in particular those alleging infringement of Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, the applicant once again merely refers to infringement of those provisions without putting forward any substantive reasoning in that regard. In the light of the principles referred to at paragraph 71 above, those arguments must therefore be disregarded as inadmissible.

80 The first plea must therefore be rejected in its entirety on the basis that it is unfounded in part and, as to the remainder, inadmissible.

– The arguments alleging infringement of the principle of equal treatment

81 According to the applicant, the fact that the Council evaluated the proposal submitted by the OIB independently of the tendering procedure constitutes infringement of the principle of equal treatment.

82 The general principle of equality is one of the fundamental principles of Community law. That principle requires that comparable situations must not be treated differently and that different situations must not be treated in the same way unless such treatment is objectively justified (Case C–304/01 Spain v Commission [2004] ECR I–7655, paragraph 31).

83 Given that, as was established in the examination of the fourth plea, the OIB is a department of the Community institutions, its situation cannot in any way be compared to that of the participants in a tendering procedure. Accordingly, the fact that the Council evaluated the proposal submitted by the OIB independently of the tendering procedure cannot constitute infringement of the principle of equal treatment.

84 The applicant's arguments alleging infringement of the principle of equal treatment must therefore be rejected as unfounded.

– The arguments alleging infringement of the principle of transparency

85 According to the applicant, the Council infringed the principle of transparency by entrusting the services in question to the OIB independently of the tendering procedure.

86 As regard the infringement of that principle, it should be noted that, according to the case–law on public contracts, the contracting institution must comply, at each stage of a tendering procedure, not only with the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers, but also with the principle of transparency (Case C–87/94 Commission v Belgium [1996] ECR I–2043, paragraph 54, and Case T–203/96 Embassy Limousines & Services v Parliament [1998] ECR II–4239, paragraph 85).

87 The principle of transparency implies an obligation upon the contracting authority to publish all precise information concerning the conduct of the entire procedure (see, to that effect, Embassy Limousines & Services v Parliament, paragraph 85).

88 In the circumstances, it is apparent that the applicant was not kept informed, before the letter of 16 January 2006, of the discussions that had begun between the Council and the OIB which concluded in the Council's decision to entrust the management of the crèche to the OIB. According to the information set out in the letter of 16 January 2006, those discussions commenced in the second half of 2005 when the OIB submitted its proposal.

89 However, according to case-law, the objectives of publicity with which the contracting authority must comply under the obligation of transparency are, first, to ensure that all tenderers are afforded equality of opportunity (see, to that effect, Commission v Belgium, paragraphs 54 and 55) and, secondly, to protect the legitimate expectations of the tenderers, who have been encouraged to make irreversible investments in advance (see, to that effect, Embassy Limousines & Services v Parliament, paragraphs 85 and 86).

90 In the present case, the applicant has failed to demonstrate that either of those objectives was compromised. First, since all the tenderers met with the same lack of publicity with regard to the correspondence between the Council and the OIB, it could not have rendered the chances of the applicant and of the other tenderers unequal. Secondly, the applicant has failed to demonstrate – and has not even claimed – that it was encouraged to make investments going beyond the risks inherent in participating in a tendering procedure.

91 Consequently, the applicant's arguments alleging infringement of the principle of transparency must be rejected as unfounded.

3. The application for annulment of the favourable evaluation of the OIB's proposal

92 The application for annulment of the Council's favourable evaluation of the OIB's proposal cannot be declared admissible.

93 The favourable evaluation of the OIB's proposal which preceded the decision to entrust the services in question to that office is an internal act that is unconnected with the tendering procedure, given that, as was established at paragraphs 44 to 48 above, the Council is not required to comply with the rules governing public procurement when it decides to use the services of the OIB.

94 As an internal act that is unconnected with the tendering procedure, the favourable evaluation of the OIB's proposal cannot produce binding legal effects such as to affect the interests of the applicant by bringing about a distinct change in its legal position. It cannot therefore constitute an act against which an action for annulment can be brought under Article 230 EC (see Joined Cases T-10/92 to T-12/92 and T-15/92 Cimenteries CBR and Others v Commission [1992] ECR II-2667, paragraph 28 and the case-law cited) and this application for annulment must therefore be declared inadmissible.

The claim for compensation

Arguments of the parties

95 The applicant seeks compensation for the damage which it allegedly suffered as a result of the Council's conduct, to be assessed by the Court on an equitable basis.

96 The Council contends that that claim is unfounded.

Findings of the Court

97 According to established case-law, in order for the Community to incur non-contractual liability within the meaning of the second paragraph of Article 288 EC on account of the unlawful conduct of its institutions, a number of requirements must be satisfied, namely that the alleged conduct of the institutions is unlawful, that the damage is real and that there is a causal link between the conduct alleged and the damage in question (Case 26/81 Oleifici Mediterranei v EEC [1982] ECR 3057, paragraph 16; Case T-175/94 International Procurement Services v Commission [1996] ECR II-729, paragraph 44; and order of the Court of First Instance of 8 September 2006 in Case T-92/06 Lademporiki and Parousis & Sia v Commission, not published in the ECR, paragraph 10).

98 Moreover, as pointed out at paragraph 71 above, the application must be sufficiently clear and precise to enable the defendant to prepare its defence and the Court to rule on the application.

99 In that regard, according to case-law, in an action for compensation, a claim for any unspecified form of damages is insufficiently concrete and must therefore be regarded as inadmissible (Case 5/71 Zuckerfabrik Schöppenstedt v Council [1971] ECR 975, paragraph 9, and Joined Cases T-79/96, T-260/97 and T-117/98 Camar and Tico v Commission and Council [2000] ECR II-2193, paragraph 181).

100 However, the Court has accepted that, in special circumstances, it was not essential to specify the exact extent of the damage in the application and to state the amount of compensation sought (see, to that effect, Case T-64/89 Automec v Commission [1990] ECR II-367, paragraph 76, and order of the Court of First Instance in Case T-91/05 Sinara Handel v Council and Commission [2007] ECR II-245, paragraph 110). It has also been held that that the applicant had to establish, or at least indicate, the existence of any such circumstances in the application (order of the Court of First Instance in Case T-262/97 Goldstein v Commission [1998] ECR II-2175, paragraph 25).

101 In the present case, the applicant requests that the Court 'assess the damage suffered on an equitable basis'. It is also clear that, in addition to failing to put a figure in its application on the amount of damage it claims to have suffered, the applicant has also failed to furnish the Court with a shred of factual evidence to enable the extent of the damage to be ascertained. It has merely claimed, in abstract and general terms, that it has suffered damage, without giving the least detail of that damage. Moreover, the applicant fails to explain the special circumstances which might justify its inability to carry out even an approximate assessment of the damage it allegedly suffered.

102 The obligation to specify the exact extent of the damage in the application applies all the more so in the present case since it is apparent from Article 101 of the Financial Regulation and the end of paragraph 4(a) of the tendering specifications (see paragraph 68 above) that the contracting authority is not under any obligation to compensate tenderers who have participated in a tendering procedure which has been cancelled. It follows that the charges and expenses incurred by a tenderer in connection with his participation in a tendering procedure cannot in principle constitute damage which is capable of being remedied by an award of damages (Case T-13/96 TEAM v Commission [1998] ECR II-4073, paragraph 71, and Embassy Limousines & Services v Parliament, paragraph 97).

103 Therefore, in the light of the first paragraph of Article 21 of the Statute of the Court of Justice, applicable to the Court of First Instance by virtue of the first paragraph of Article 53 of that statute, and Article 44(1)(c) of the Rules of Procedure, the claim for damages must be rejected as inadmissible.

The application for suspension of the operation of the contract concluded between the Council and the OIB

104 Among the forms of order sought by the applicant is an application for the 'suspension of the operation of the contract concluded with the OIB'.

105 From the procedural point of view, the application has not been made by a separate document in accordance with the requirement laid down in Article 104(3) of the Rules of Procedure. It is simply one of the forms of order sought in the same document as the main application and must therefore be rejected as inadmissible (see Joined Cases T-298/97, T-312/97, T-313/97, T-315/97, T-600/97 to T-607/97, T-1/98, T-3/98 to T-6/98 and T-23/98 Alzetta and Others v Commission [2000] ECR II-2319, paragraph 38 and the case-law cited).

106 The application in question must therefore be rejected as inadmissible.

The application for measures of inquiry

Arguments of the parties

107 The applicant has requested that the Court, by way of measures of inquiry, call upon the Council to provide the following documents:

– the contract concluded between the Council and the OIB;

– all the documents relating to the Council's decision to entrust the services in question to the OIB, in particular the communication prior to 1 August 2005 in which the Council asked the OIB to submit an offer for the management of those services.

108 The Council contends that those documents have no useful purpose in the context of the present case.

Findings of the Court

109 As a preliminary point, according to settled case-law, it is for the Court to appraise the usefulness of measures of inquiry for the purpose of resolving the dispute (Case T-68/99 Toditec v Commission [2001] ECR II–1443, paragraph 40, and Case T–23/03 CAS v Commission [2007] ECR II–289, paragraph 323).

110 Clearly, the production of the documents requested could be justified only if it were accepted that the rules governing public procurement were applicable in the circumstances of the case. In view of the fact that the examination of the claims for annulment has led to the opposite conclusion, the production of the documents in question would no longer serve any useful purpose in the resolution of the present case.

111 In the light of those considerations, the application for measures of inquiry must be rejected.

Costs

112 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the applicant has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs, in accordance with the form of order sought by the Council.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Second Chamber)

hereby:

1. Dismisses the action;

2. Orders Centro Studi Antonio Manieri Srl to pay its own costs as well as the costs incurred by the Council.

Case T-125/06

Centro Studi Antonio Manieri Srl

Council of the European Union

(Public service contracts – Tendering procedure for full crèche management – Decision to use the services of the Office for Infrastructure and Logistics (OIB) and to abandon a tendering procedure)

Summary of the Judgment

1. Procedure – Time-limits for commencing proceedings – Limitation periods

   (Statute of the Court of Justice, Art. 45)

2. Budget of the European Communities – Financial regulation – Provisions applicable to procedures for the award of public contracts – Scope

   (Council Regulation No 1605/2002, Art. 88; Commission Regulation No 2342/2002, Art. 116(7))

3. European Communities' public procurement – Tendering procedure – Duty to comply with the principles of equal treatment of tenderers and transparency

4. European Communities' public procurement – Tendering procedure – Expenses incurred by a tenderer – Right to compensation – None

   (Council Regulation No 1605/2002, Art. 101)

1. The concepts of 'force majeure' and 'unforeseeable circumstances' within the meaning of Article 45 of the Statute of the Court of Justice contain both an objective element relating to abnormal circumstances unconnected with the person in question and a subjective element involving the obligation, on that person's part, to guard against the consequences of the abnormal event by taking appropriate steps without making unreasonable sacrifices. In particular, the person concerned must pay close attention to the course of the procedure set in motion and, in particular, demonstrate diligence in order to comply with the prescribed time-limits. Thus, the concept of force majeure does not apply to a situation in which, objectively, a diligent and prudent person would have been able to take the necessary steps before the expiry of the period prescribed for instituting proceedings.

2. It follows from Article 88 of Regulation No 1605/2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities and Article 116(7) of Regulation No 2342/2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation that the provision of services is outside the ambit of the rules governing public contracts where it forms part of an administrative arrangement concluded between the departments of Community institutions. The Office for Infrastructure and Logistics (OIB) is a department of the Community institutions within the meaning of Article 116(7) of Regulation No 2342/2002. It follows that the Council was not required to comply with the rules governing public procurement when it decided to have recourse to the services of the OIB.

3. The contracting institution must comply, at each stage of a tendering procedure, not only with the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers, but also with the principle of transparency. The principle of transparency implies an obligation upon the contracting authority to publish all precise information concerning the conduct of the entire procedure. However, the objectives of publicity with which the contracting authority must comply under the obligation of transparency are, first, to ensure that all tenderers are afforded equality of opportunity and, secondly, to protect the legitimate expectations of the tenderers, who have been encouraged to make irreversible investments in advance.

4. It is apparent from Article 101 Regulation No 1605/2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities that the contracting authority is not under any obligation to compensate tenderers who have participated in a tendering procedure which has been cancelled. It follows that the charges and expenses incurred by a tenderer in connection with his participation in a tendering procedure cannot in principle constitute damage which is capable of being remedied by an award of damages.

Action brought on 3 May 2006 - Centro Studi A. Manieri v Council of the European Union

(Case T-125/06)

Language of the case: Italian

Parties

Applicant(s): Centro Studi A. Manieri (Rome, Italy) (represented by: Carlo Forte, Mario Forte and Giannicola Forte, lawyers)

Defendant(s): Council of the European Union

Form of order sought

Annul the decision of the General Secretariat of the Council of the European Union of 16 January 2006 to withdraw the restricted invitation to tender UCA-459/03 for full crèche management and, at the same time to accept the proposal of the Office for infrastructure and logistics (OIB) of the European Commission for the supply of the same services;

Assess the damage suffered by the applicant on an equitable basis:

Order the Council to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

This action has been brought against the decision of the Secretary-General of the defendant to withdraw the invitation to tender launched in the autumn of 2003 by contract notice 2003/S 209-187862 by restricted procedure for the full management of a crèche. The reason for the decision is alleged to be the acceptance of a proposal by the Office for infrastructure and logistics (OIB) of the Commission regarding the management of the crèche in question. That proposal was judged to be much more advantageous than the applicant's tender, particularly as regards the contractual conditions offered to the staff, the economies of scale and the optimisation of the available resources.

In support of its claims the applicant relies on pleas of:

Breach of the principles of transparency and equal treatment, in so far as the contested measure, a decision to bring the service which was the subject of the procedure under internal management, was adopted without being advertised or opened up to competition.

Breach of Article 86(1) EC in that it is inconceivable that there should be a system which requires Member States not to maintain in force a national system which allows the award of contracts for public services without competition while the Community institutions are allowed to conduct themselves in such a manner.

Misapplication of the provisions cited as the legal basis of the contested decision: section 4 of the specification and Article 101 of the Financial Regulation, in so far as the withdrawal of the invitation cited by the Council was not intended to recommence the procedure.

Breach of the obligation to state reasons and error of assessment of the facts, as regards the correctness of the criteria supporting the choice of the proposal of the OIB.

Breach of Articles 43 and 49 EC. It is argued on this point that the OIB is not a department of the Council and it does not have any control over it. It follows that it is not possible in the circumstances of this case to rely on the case-law according to which the application of the public procurement procedures is precluded if the control exercised over the concessionaire by the concession-granting public authority is similar to that which the authority exercises over its own departments and if, at the same time, that entity carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority.

ORDER OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

20 July 2006 (*)

(Public procurement – Community tendering procedure – Interim proceedings – Prima facie case – Urgency)

In Case T–114/06 R,

Globe SA, established in Zandhoven (Belgium), represented by A. Abate, lawyer, applicant,

v

Commission of the European Communities, represented by M. Wilderspin and G. Boudot, acting as Agents, defendant,

APPLICATION for suspension of the operation of the Commission's decision to reject the applicant's bid in the tendering procedure for supplies to various countries in Central Asia (EuropeAid/122078/C/S/Multi),

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES makes the following

Order

Facts of the dispute and procedure

1 Globe SA provides specialised services to network operators (gas and electricity) and to the petrochemical industry. Its core activity, surveying, has been extended to include the taking of measurements in three dimensions (by means of a laser scanning process), data conversion (Globe DD) and computer-aided-design (CAD).

2 In the field of gas pipelines, the applicant developed in 2004, from a software programme called 'SIG' ('système d'information géographique', geographical information system), a new version of that software called 'Pipe Guardian' designed to assist managers of such installations in all aspects of their work.

3 On 20 October 2005, the Commission published an invitation to tender for the EuropeAid/122078/C/S/Multi project calling for the supply of a gas pipeline information system to gas companies in Central Asia (Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan). Those contracts are part of the TACIS 2002 programme.

4 The subject of the contract was the integration, configuration, delivery, installation, commissioning and after-sales service, in a single lot, of three pipeline network information systems, as well as the corresponding application programs and the related ancillary services, that is to say training and after-sales service, as defined in the technical specifications set out in the tender.

5 According to Article 1.1 of the Instructions to tenderers, published only in English, a pipeline information system is a data base system intended for the management of all construction and inspection data of a pipeline network and its geographical environment.

6 The Commission points out that although it initiated the invitation to tender itself, it entrusted the drafting of the substantive details of the tender to an outside consulting firm.

7 Section 2 of the Instructions to tenderers laid down the following timetable:

– deadline for requests for any clarifications from the contracting authority: 18 November 2005;

– last date on which clarifications are issued by the contracting authority: 29 November 2005;

– deadline for submission of tenders: 5 December 2005;

– tender opening session: 8 December 2005;

– notification of award to the successful tenderer:16 December 2005;

– signature of the contract 30 December 2005.

8 By letter of 10 November 2005 to the Commission, the applicant asked several questions on various subjects connected with the invitation to tender, of which one concerned the number of toner cartridges required by the specification in the contract documents (75 black toner cartridges and 25 colour toner cartridges). The applicant wished to know, in particular, whether those quantities were specified for each individual printer or for the whole contract.

9 On 14 November 2005, the Commission published Corrigendum No 1, it which it stated that the last date on which clarifications would be issued by the contracting authority was 24 November 2005.

10 On 22 November 2005, the Commission published a series of clarifications, one of which, No 23, concerned the number of toner cartridges involved in the invitation to tender and indicated that the figures of 75 and 25 toner cartridges referred to the number of cartridges required for each printer. The Commission also stated that the number of printers to be supplied under the contract was 16.

11 On 24 November 2005, the Commission published Corrigendum No 2, it which it stated that the precise number of toner cartridges was five black and two colour cartridges per printer.

12 IGN France International (‘IGN’) submitted its tender on 2 December 2005, that is to say, eight days after the publication of Corrigendum No 2. That tender made mention of a total of 1 600 toner cartridges, namely 1 200 black toner cartridges (that is to say, 75 cartridges for each of the 16 printers) and 400 colour toner cartridges (that is to say, 25 cartridges for each of the 16 printers).

13 The applicant’s bid was submitted on 5 December 2005 and took account of Corrigendum No 2.

14 The two other tenderers, Asia Soft and Geomagic, also submitted bids taking account of the information provided by the Commission in Corrigendum No 2.

15 In accordance with Article 20.6 of the Instructions to tenderers, the sole award criterion was to be the price and the contract would be awarded to the lowest compliant tender.

16 The tender opening session was held by the committee for the evaluation of tenders, as planned, on 8 December 2005. It was determined at that time that the bids of the four tenderers were as follows:

– Globe: EUR 545 215;

– IGN: EUR 592 400;

– Asia Soft: EUR 865 143;

– Geomagic: EUR 934 964.

17 The Commission awarded the contract to IGN. The contract was signed by the Commission on 19 December 2005 and by IGN on 30 December 2005 without the applicant being informed.

18 By letters of 6 January 2006 and 3 February 2006, the applicant and its lawyer wrote to the Commission to enquire as to what further steps had been taken in the tendering procedure.

19 By letter of 1 March 2006, the Commission informed the applicant's lawyer:

'... although it is true that at the tender opening session, it was found that Globe's bid was the lowest, it was discovered subsequently that another tenderer's bid was based on the quantities set out in the original publication in the Official Journal rather than on those contained in the corrigendum published on the EuropeAid web site. Since the corrigendum was published at a late stage, leaving very little time for potential tenderers to take note of its contents and because, in an invitation to tender for the supply of equipment, it is not possible to identify the potential tenderers in advance, the evaluation committee decided to take that bid into consideration and make the adjustments necessary to take account of the quantities indicated in the corrigendum published on the internet. As a result of those adjustments (reduction of the quantities and, consequently, reduction in the price), it appeared that Globe's bid was not the lowest. The contract was therefore awarded to [IGN]'.

20 By letter of 2 March 2006 ('the contested decision'), the Commission informed the applicant that its tender was not the least expensive of those tenders which were technically compliant and that the contract had been awarded to IGN for an amount of EUR 531 600.

21 In response to a letter to the Commission of 6 March 2006 from the applicant's lawyer, the Commission forwarded, on 17 March 2006, a copy of the report drawn up by the evaluation committee. In that report, under the heading of technical compliance, the evaluation committee states, in essence, that, at the request of the contracting authority IGN's bid had to be re-calculated to take into account the changed number of toner cartridges, as modified by Corrigendum No 2, and that the bid had been amended to that effect. Under the same heading, the evaluation committee confirmed that the revised bid and the confirmation had been received within 24 hours by e-mail and fax.

22 By an application lodged at the registry of the Court of First Instance on 14 April 2006 the applicant brought an action for the annulment of the contested decision.

23 On the same day, the applicant lodged an application for interim measures in which it seeks, essentially, suspension of the operation of the contested decision by the President of the Court of First Instance and an order for costs against the Commission.

24 On 27 April 2006, the Commission submitted its observations on the application for interim measures. In those observations, it asked the Court to dismiss that application and order the applicant to pay the costs.

25 The parties presented oral argument at the hearing on 16 May 2006.

Law

26 Article 104(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance provides that applications for interim measures must specify the subject matter of the dispute, the circumstances giving rise to urgency as well as the pleas of fact and law prima facie justifying the grant of the provisional measure sought (fumus boni juris). Those conditions are cumulative so that an application for interim measures must be rejected if one of them is absent (order of the President of the Court in Case C–268/96 P(R) SCK and FNK v Commission [1996] ECR I–4971, paragraph 30). In an appropriate case the President has also to weigh up the interests at stake (order of the President of the Court in Case C–445/00 R Austria v Council [2001] ECR I–1461, paragraph 73 and the case-law cited therein).

27 Moreover, in the context of that overall examination, the President enjoys a wide margin of discretion and remains free to determine, in light of the particular features of the case, the way in which those different conditions have to be verified and the order of priority of that examination since there is no rule of Community law imposing on him a predetermined analytical model for assessing the need for an interim decision (order of the President in Case C-149/95 P(R) Commission v Atlantic Container Line and Others [1995] ECR I-2165, paragraph 23).

28 The present application for interim measures must be considered in the light of the principles set out above.

29 Before ruling on the application for interim measures, the subject matter of the application should be made clear. The applicant, in its application, is seeking suspension of the operation of the contested decision.

30 It should be pointed out that a decision relating to the award of a contract to a single tenderer inevitably and inseparably entails a corresponding decision not to award the contract to the other tenderers. It must therefore be held that the formal communication of the result of the tendering procedure to the rejected tenderers does not mean that a decision other than the decision awarding the contract will be adopted for the express purpose of stating a rejection (judgment of the Court of First Instance in Case T-183/00 Strabag Benelux v Council [2003] ECR II-135, paragraph 28).

31 It must therefore be considered that the applicant is seeking suspension of the operation both of the decision not to award it the contract and of the decision to award the contract to IGN.

32 Moreover, it was confirmed at the hearing that the contract was concluded by the Commission on 19 December and by IGN on 30 December, that performance has begun but is not yet completed. The contract is thus the immediate extension of the Commission's decision to award the contract to IGN.

33 However, as was made clear at the hearing, the applicant puts forward claims for damages arising from performance of the contract and is therefore seeking to prevent serious and irreparable damage which would result, in its view, from such performance.

34 It must be considered therefore that the applicant is also seeking suspension of performance of the contract.

1. Prima facie case

Arguments of the parties

The applicant's arguments

35 The applicant puts forward, essentially, four pleas in law in support of its application in the main proceedings which concern the compliance of the bids, infringement of the right to be heard, breach of the Commission's duty to give reasons and of the principle of sound administration.

– The first plea in law

36 In its first plea in law, the applicant claims that the Commission committed three errors of assessment which vitiate the procedure under which the contract was awarded to IGN.

37 In the first place, the applicant argues, on the one hand, that its bid was the lowest and that, consequently, in accordance with Article 20.6 of the Instructions to tenderers, which provided that the sole award criterion was to be the price and that the contract would be awarded to the lowest compliant tender, the Commission should have awarded it the contract and had no discretion in that regard. It considers that in not awarding it the contract, the Commission disregarded its legitimate expectations.

38 On the other hand, the applicant argues that IGN's bid did not comply with the technical specifications contained in the contract documents.

39 Firstly, according to the applicant, the contract documents provided that the printers were to be of type 'A3 max' so as to be able to print on paper of size 297 x 420mm. In its view, the indication 'A3

max' means that the printers should be able to print in that format and that larger sizes (A2, A1, A0) were not required. It adds that in the field concerned, larger formats are sometimes used and that, therefore, 'A3 max' expresses a requirement that it should be possible to print on A3 size paper. The printers offered by IGN are A4 size (210 x 297mm). The applicant claims, therefore, that those printers do not comply with the format called for in the contract documents.

40 Secondly, the applicant claims that the contract documents provide that the print speed of the first page in colour should be 26 seconds whereas, in the case of the printers offered by IGN, it is only 29 seconds.

41 In the applicant's view, those technical differences result in significant price differences between the printers it offered and those offered by IGN, the latter costing EUR 379, whereas the printers offered by the applicant cost EUR 3 719.10. The decision to accept IGN's bid therefore infringed the principle of non-discrimination.

42 Thirdly, the applicant argues, in essence, that the Commission should have rejected IGN's bid since it did not fulfil the requirements of the invitation to tender inasmuch as it was based on the supply of 1 600 cartridges, the number initially set out in the contract documents, and not 112 cartridges, the number finally established by Corrigendum No 2.

43 In the second place, the applicant claims essentially that the Commission granted IGN an extension of the deadline for submission of tenders inasmuch as it permitted IGN to amend and correct its bid after the deadline fixed by the invitation to tender, even though IGN was aware of the prices offered by the other tenderers, having been present, along with them, at the tender opening session.

44 In the third place, the applicant argues, in substance, the Commission permitted IGN to amend its tender contrary to the applicable rules and, in particular, to the provisions of Articles 15, 19.5, 20.3, and 20.4 of the Instructions to tenderers.

– The second plea in law

45 The applicant argues, essentially, that the Commission should have informed it of the reasons why it proposed to invert the order of precedence of the tenders so as to permit it to submit it views in accordance with its right to be heard.

– The third plea in law

46 The applicant claims, in essence, that the statement of the reasons on which the Commission's decision is based is insufficient and contradictory, all the more so as application of the Instructions to tenderers should have led to its being awarded the contract. The decision also does not mention the matters of fact or of law which led the Commission to change the order of tenders fixed by the evaluation committee on 8 December 2005.

– The fourth plea in law

47 The applicant claims that the Commission demonstrated negligence in the context of the procedure for the award of the contract. It considers, essentially, that the time which it took for the Commission to reply to it infringes the Code of good administrative behaviour, which requires the Commission to reply within 15 days from the date of receipt of the request for information.

The Commission's arguments

– The first plea in law

48 On the one hand, the Commission argues that IGN's bid was already the lowest at the time at which it submitted its tender on 2 December 2005. It justifies that claim by pointing out that if the correction of the number of toner cartridges required by the invitation to tender, as set out in Corrigendum No 2, had been carried out by the evaluation committee itself, IGN's bid would have been lower than that of Globe.

49 Consequently, the Commission considers that the applicant has no basis for alleging an infringement of its legitimate expectations having regard to the fact that the evaluation committee had only commenced its consideration of the tenders and had not yet adopted any decision, notwithstanding the fact the committee considered, from the very start, that Globe's bid fulfilled the requirements of the invitation to tender.

50 On the other hand, with regard to the compliance of IGN's tender, the Commission relies on the fact that the expression 'A3 max' was interpreted by the evaluation committee as including the A4 format, the A3 format being an upper threshold beyond which the printers which were required did not need to go.

51 Secondly, the Commission emphasises that the evaluation committee considered that the print time of 26 seconds for the first page in colour laid down in the contract documents was a threshold and that the committee considered that a difference of 3 seconds was not a major technical weakness justifying automatic rejection of IGN's tender.

52 Thirdly, the Commission points out, essentially, that the reason for its invitation to IGN to submit a corrected version of its tender was the late appearance of Corrigendum No 2. The Commission adds that it was not just reasons of equity which led the evaluation committee to adopt that decision, but the fear that if it excluded IGN, that firm might bring an action for annulment or for damages.

– The second plea in law

53 The Commission considers that it has already replied to that plea in its argument concerning the lowest tender and refers back to that argument and it also claims that a period of two months was needed to permit its departments to draw up a reasoned decision in a matter which it considered complex and which, in its view, had encountered technical difficulties during the tendering procedure.

– The third plea in law

54 The Commission argues, in essence, that the contested decision is perfectly clear and it fulfils the requirements of the settled case-law of the Court of Justice and the Court of First Instance to the effect that the extent of the obligation to state reasons, as required by Article 253 EC, depends on the nature of the measure in question and on the context in which it was adopted. The statement of reasons must disclose in a clear and unequivocal fashion the reasoning of the institution which adopted the decision, in such a way as to permit the persons concerned to ascertain the reasons for the measure and thus enable them to defend their rights, and to enable the Community judicature to carry out its review of the measure (judgment of the Court of First Instance in Case T–282/02 Cementbouw Handel & Industrie v Commission [2006] ECR II–319, paragraph 85). It is not necessary for the reasoning to go into all the relevant facts and points of law, since the question whether the statement of reasons meets the requirements of Article 253 EC must be assessed with regard not only to the wording of the measure at issue but also to its context (judgments of the Court of Justice in Case 203/85 Nicolet Instrument [1986] ECR 2049, paragraph 10; Case 240/84 NTN Tokyo Bearing and Others v Council [1987] ECR 1809, paragraph 31; Case 255/84 Nachi Fujikoshi v Council [1987] ECR 1861, paragraph 39; and Case C–76/00 Petrotub and Republica v Council [2003] ECR I–79, paragraph 81).

55 The Commission also points out that it took care, in the first two paragraphs of its letter of 1 March 2006, to explain the reasons which led it to suggest to IGN that it reformulate its tender in accordance with Corrigendum No 2.

– The fourth plea in law

56 The Commission merely states that this plea is unfounded.

Assessment of the President of the Court

57 As a preliminary matter it should be pointed out, first of all, that under Article 89(1) of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1, 'the Financial Regulation') all public contracts financed in whole or in part by the budget have to comply with the principles of transparency, proportionality, equal treatment and non–discrimination. Next, under Article 97(1) of the Financial Regulation the selection criteria for evaluating the capability of candidates or tenderers and the award criteria for evaluating the content of the tenders are to be defined in advance and set out in the call for tender. Finally, it is settled case-law that the award criteria must be formulated, in the contract documents or the contract notice, in such a way as to allow all reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderers to interpret them in the same way (Order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T–447/04 R Capgemini Nederland v Commission [2005] ECR II–257, paragraph 68).

58 It should further be observed, also as a preliminary matter, that, in accordance with settled case-law, the Commission has a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender and the Court's review should be limited to checking that there has been no serious and manifest error (judgment of the Court in Case 56/77 Agence Européenne d'Interims v Commission [1978] ECR 2215, paragraph 20, and judgment of the Court of First Instance in Case T–19/95 Adia Interim v Commission [1996] ECR II–321, paragraph 49).

59 Having formulated those preliminary observations, the President considers that, having regard to the documents in the case concerning this application for interim measures, the applicant's first plea in law is of a serious nature.

60 It is not disputed that at the tender opening session on 8 December 2005, the evaluation committee determined that the bids of the four tenderers were as follows:

– Globe: EUR 545 215;

– IGN: EUR 592 400;

– Asia Soft: EUR 865 143;

– Geomagic: EUR 934 964.

The applicant's bid was thus the lowest at the time that the tenders were opened.

61 However, the Commission claims that IGN's bid was the lowest even at the time that the tenders were opened. In its view, if the evaluation committee had itself corrected the number of toner cartridges required by the invitation to tender, as provided for in Corrigendum No 2, IGN's bid would have been lower than that of the applicant.

62 Clearly, the Commission thereby admits that in the absence of any correction by IGN of its tender, it had not submitted the lowest bid at the time that the tenders were opened.

63 It must therefore be determined whether, prima facie, the Commission was entitled to permit IGN to correct its tender.

64 Article 15 of the Instructions to tenderers provides that no tender was to be altered after 5 December 2005.

65 In addition, Article 19.5 of the Instructions to tenderers provides that in the interests of transparency and equal treatment and without being able to modify their tenders, tenderers may be required, at the written request of the evaluation committee, to provide clarifications within 48 hours. Any such request for clarification must not seek the correction of formal errors or of major 'restrictions' affecting performance of the contract or distorting competition.

66 Article 20.3 of the Instructions to tenderers provides that to facilitate the examination, evaluation and comparison of tenders, the evaluation committee may ask each tenderer for clarification of his tender, including breakdowns of prices. The request for clarification and the response must be in writing only, but no change in the price or substance of the tender may be sought, offered or permitted except as required to confirm the correction of arithmetical errors discovered during the evaluation of tenders.

67 In addition, Article 20.4 of the Instructions to tenderers provides that tenders found to be technically compliant are to be checked for any arithmetical errors in computation and summation. According to that provision, errors will be corrected by the evaluation committee as follows: on the one hand, where there is a discrepancy between amounts in figures and in words, the amount in words will be the amount taken into account. On the other, except for lump-sum contracts, where there is a discrepancy between a unit price and the total amount derived from the multiplication of the unit price and the quantity, the unit price as quoted will be the price taken into account.

68 Although the correction of arithmetical errors is clearly possible under those provisions, that possibility is strictly limited; the provisions in question do not, prima facie, permit a correction that amounts to a modification of the tender.

69 In this case, IGN, at the Commission's request, did not correct arithmetical errors but rectified certain erroneous parameters of its bid, something the Commission does not deny, inasmuch as it admits that the number of toner cartridges mentioned in IGN's original tender was not the number required by Corrigendum No 2.

70 It should also be made clear that the other three tenderers, namely the applicant, Asia Soft and Geomatic, submitted tenders in accordance with the requirement laid down in Corrigendum No 2.

71 The Commission argues that the reason for its invitation to IGN to submit a corrected version of its tender was the late appearance of Corrigendum No 2. The Commission adds that it was not just reasons of equity which led the evaluation committee to adopt that decision, but the fear that if it excluded IGN, that firm might bring an action for annulment or for damages.

72 None the less, the last date initially fixed on which clarifications were to be issued by the contracting authority was 29 November 2005. On 14 November 2005, the Commission published Corrigendum No 1, indicating that the last date on which clarifications would be issued by the contracting authority was 24 November 2005. It should be pointed out that that correction to the time-limit for the publication of clarifications seems to have been made necessary in order to comply with the period of 11 days between the last date on which clarifications were to be issued by the Commission and the deadline for submission of tenders, required by Article 2 and the third paragraph of Article 13 of the Instructions to tenderers. Those articles provide that the last date on which clarifications might be issued constituted the beginning of a period of 11 days during which tenderers could draw up and transmit their bid, knowing that the contract documents would not undergo any further modification.

73 Clarifications were issued on 22 November 2005 and a corrigendum to those clarifications was issued on 24 November 2005. Consequently, the Commission cannot, prima facie, argue that Corrigendum No 2 was issued late, since it was issued within the time-limit fixed by the Commission itself.

74 With regard to whether IGN's tender was compliant, which, according to Article 20.4 of the Instructions to tenderers, was an essential pre-condition if arithmetical errors were to be corrected, the applicant argues that the contract documents specified that the print speed of the first page in colour should be 26 seconds, whereas the printers offered by IGN had a speed of 29 seconds.

75 The Commission claims that the evaluation committee regarded the print time of 26 seconds for the first page in colour, fixed in the contract documents as a threshold. Moreover, it argues that the committee considered that the difference of three seconds did not constitute a major technical weakness justifying an automatic rejection of IGN's tender.

76 Leaving aside the fact that, at first glance, the Commission's line of reasoning concerning the print speed is unconvincing since if the speed was in fact a threshold, the slower a printer was, the more it would fulfil the conditions laid down in the specification in the contract documents, the fact is that those documents specified that the print speed was to be 26 seconds. Furthermore, the latitude to which the Commission refers is not set out expressly in the contract documents and the evaluation committee does not, prima facie, seem to have any legal basis for considering that it was entitled to depart from the technical specifications contained in those documents. Consequently, the compliance of IGN's tender in that regard must be regarded with circumspection since the broad discretion which the Commission enjoys as to the factors to be taken into account when awarding a contract following an invitation to tender does not, prima facie, permit it to depart from the criteria which it has itself strictly defined, as it will otherwise have failed to maintain the equal treatment to which the tenderers are entitled.

77 Moreover, the applicant's arguments concerning the print format required for the printers to be delivered by the successful tenderer can also not be dismissed without further consideration.

78 It is not contested that the printers are to be used, in particular, to print plans of the route followed by gas pipelines and of the areas around them.

79 The applicant argues, essentially, that the reference to 'A3 max' format is a technical specification which requires printers meeting it to be able to print, in the A3 format, geographical plans and maps of areas ranging from 2 to 40 000 kilometres, in accordance with the requirements of Annex TS4.2 of the Instructions to tenderers, whereas printers capable of producing larger formats, such as A2, A1 or even A0, frequently used in cartography, were not required.

80 The Commission argues that the evaluation committee decided unanimously to interpret the expression 'A3 max' as an 'upper threshold' and to consider printers which printed only in A4 format to fulfil the requirements of the contract documents.

81 First of all, it must be determined, on the one hand, whether the expression 'A3 max' was open to interpretation by the evaluation committee if, as the applicant claims, it was a technical specification and, on the other, whether the Commission was entitled to interpret that expression, particularly since the tenderers were not informed of that interpretation.

82 Secondly even supposing that the evaluation committee was entitled to interpret the expression 'A3 max' and that it was not a technical specification which was not subject to interpretation, it should be pointed out that the Commission's interpretation seems, prima facie, unconvincing. According to the Commission's argument to the effect that the A3 format was an upper limit, print formats equal to or smaller than A4 (such as A5 or even smaller formats) would have fulfilled the conditions of the contract documents, even though such formats seem ill adapted to printing geographical plans and maps covering areas from 2 to 40 000 kilometres. If, on the other hand, the evaluation committee's interpretation merely regarded the A4 format as acceptable, to the exclusion of smaller formats, that would imply that the format laid down in the Instructions to tenderers contained not merely an 'upper threshold' ('A3 max') but a lower limit (A4) which was not mentioned therein and which, it would appear, was not made known to the tenderers.

83 In addition, it should be pointed out that the applicant argued in its written pleadings, without being contradicted by the Commission, that the computer programme in question requires the A3 print format.

84 It is not contested that the differences in print format give rise to particularly significant differences in the price of the printers – those offered by IGN cost EUR 379 each whereas those offered by the applicant cost EUR 3 719.10 each – which, if the Commission was right, ought logically to have led the tenderers not to offer printers with the A3 format and to limit themselves to smaller print formats in order to reduce the amount of their tenders.

85 Moreover, it should be pointed out that the total cost of the 16 printers offered by IGN was EUR 6 064, whereas the total cost of the printers offered by the applicant was EUR 59 504, which is a difference of EUR 53 440. If IGN had complied with the A3 print format requirement for the printers it offered, there is every reason to believe that its price would have been increased by approximately the same amount and would then have been considerably above that of the applicant, even after correction of the number of toner cartridges, provided that such correction was possible.

86 Consequently, the question whether the printers chosen by IGN corresponded or not to the technical specifications in the contract documents concerning the print format required require a detailed consideration which it is not for the President to enter into, his role being merely to determine, in the course of considering whether a prima facie case has been made out, that the applicant's arguments are not, prima facie, without any foundation.

87 In the light of the foregoing and having regard to the information at the disposal of the President, the arguments of fact and law put forward by the applicant in the context of its first plea in law give rise to serious doubts as to the lawfulness of the award of the contract to IGN. Under those circumstances, this application cannot be rejected for want of having made a prima facie case, and it must be considered whether the application satisfies the condition relating to urgency (see, to that effect, the order in Austria v Council, cited above at paragraph 26, paragraphs 100 and 101).

2. Urgency

Arguments of the parties

The applicant's arguments

88 Although it accepts that failure to obtain the contract will not jeopardise its existence, the applicant contends that the damage resulting from the loss of the contract cannot be fully compensated for by a money payment and its application is therefore aimed at obtaining compensation in kind.

89 The applicant argues that its core activity, surveying, has gradually been extended to include the taking of measurements in three dimensions (by means of a laser scanning process), data conversion (Globe DD) and computer-aided-design (CAD) and that in the field of gas pipelines, that expertise permitted it to develop a software programme called 'SIG' ('système d'information géographique', geographical information system), designed to assist managers of such installations in all aspects of their work. In 2004, Globe developed a new version of that software called 'Pipe Guardian'.

90 The applicant points out that that software represents a considerable investment and is part of a strategy to internationalise the company, which at the moment, does business essentially in Belgium and the Netherlands. It emphasises that internationalisation is necessary in a highly specialised technology market on which a limited number of traders are present. It points out that there are five traders present worldwide on this market, including the four tenderers.

91 The applicant contends that the commercial progress of its Pipe Guardian software is closely linked to its participation in international invitations to tender and that most potential customers select their new software programmes by way of pre–selections and invitations to tender. One of the most important factors in that process is the submission of a list of representative references. It points out that the Commission itself requires such references before giving consideration to a bid submitted in the context of one of its invitations to tender, in particular in the case of the contract which is the subject of the contested decision, in regard to which the applicant was able to produce references from Shell and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO).

92 Furthermore, the applicant observes, in substance, that, having been set up 16 years ago, it is an operator on the market for whom a contract such as that offered by the Commission would permit it to make itself better known, to compete with other traders in the context of international invitations to tender and to carve out a place on the international market.

93 At the hearing, the applicant also pointed out, in essence, that it considered that, in this case, it had not lost an opportunity to obtain a contract but that it had failed to obtain a contract that it should have been awarded if the rules for making such awards had been complied with by the Commission and consequently, it had also lost the opportunity to obtain references on which it could have relied if the Commission had awarded it the contract. That, in its view, constitutes irreparable damage.

94 According to the applicant, there is also urgency because, before the judgement on the substance of the case is delivered, the contract at issue will have been largely, if not entirely, performed. The judgment in the main proceedings would therefore be ineffective. It relies in that regard on the order of the President of the Court of Justice of 22 April 1994 in Commission v Belgium (Case C–87/94 R [1994] ECR I–1395, paragraph 31), made in the course of an action for failure to fulfil obligations.

95 The Commission argues that Globe has produced no evidence showing that performance of the contract by IGN would cause it damage. The Commission also contends that the damage is not irreparable since the applicant itself estimated its loss at EUR 492 000 in its application in the main proceedings, although it acknowledges that the applicant argued that such compensation would only be an imperfect remedy.

96 It adds that that is all the more true inasmuch as the applicant claims not to have lost an opportunity but the contract itself.

97 It also stated, in essence, at the hearing that although it is true that the applicant lost an opportunity to obtain references, it is accepted that tendering procedures are highly competitive and the fact of not having been awarded the contract is not in any way a negative reflection on the capacities of the disappointed tenderer.

98 Finally, the Commission contends that the applicant's argument to the effect that the contract concluded between the Commission and IGN would be largely performed before the judgment in the main proceedings was delivered is irrelevant in this case. The applicant has based its argument on case-law referring to applications for failure to fulfil obligations. That is a special category of actions which cannot give rise to proceedings for damages before the Community courts. Moreover, the facts at issue in the case which gave rise to the order in Commission v Belgium, mentioned in paragraph 93, above, are not comparable to those in the present case.

99 As regards the condition of urgency, it must be remembered that the purpose of the procedure for interim relief is to guarantee the full effectiveness of the definitive future decision, in order to ensure that there is no lacuna in the legal protection provided by the Court (orders in Case 27/68 R Renckens v Commission [1969] ECR 255; Case C-399/95 R Germany v Commission [1996] ECR I-2441, paragraph 46; Case C-393/96 P(R) Antonissen v Council and Commission [1997] ECR I-441, paragraph 36; and Commission v NALOO, paragraph 52). For the purpose of attaining that objective, urgency must be assessed in the light of the need for an interlocutory order in order to avoid serious and irreparable damage to the party seeking the interim relief (orders in Case C-65/99 P(R) Willeme v Commission [1999] ECR I-1857, paragraph 62, Commission v NALOO, cited above, paragraph 52 and Case C-156/03 P(R) Commission v Laboratoires Servier [2003] ECR I-6575, paragraph 35).

100 The applicant contends that if the contested decisions are annulled and if interim relief is not granted, the contract at issue in the invitation to tender could not be awarded to it or performed by it and it would therefore be deprived of certain benefits in terms of references and access to the international market for the services concerned.

101 It should be pointed out that if the contested decisions were annulled by the Court, the Commission would be required, under the first paragraph of Article 233 EC, to take the necessary measures to comply with the judgment, without prejudice to any obligations resulting from the application of the second paragraph of Article 288 EC (order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-195/05 R Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission [2005] ECR II-0000, paragraph 128).

102 It addition, it should be borne in mind that under Article 233 EC, it is the institution whose act has been declared void which is required to take the necessary measures to comply with the judgment of the Court. It follows that the court which declares the measure void has no jurisdiction to issue directions to the institution whose act has been declared void as to the manner in which it is to comply with the Court's judgment (order of the Court of Justice in Joined Cases C-199/94 P and C-200/94 P Pevasa and Inpesca v Commission [1995] ECR I-3709, paragraph 24) and that the President of the Court of First Instance cannot pre-judge measures which might be adopted as a result of the annulment. The measures necessary in order to comply with a judgment annulling a measure depend not merely on the measure which has been annulled and the scope of the judgment, which is to be assessed on the basis of the grounds which led to it (judgments of the Court of justice in Joined Cases 97/86, 99/86, 193/86 and 215/86 Asteris and Others v Commission [1988] ECR 2181, paragraph 27, and Joined Cases C-442/03 P and C-471/03 P P&O European Ferries (Vizcaya) v Commission [2006] ECR I-4845, paragraph 44) but also on the circumstances of each case, such as the time frame in which the annulment of the contested measure takes place or the interests of third parties.

103 In this case, if the contested decisions were annulled, it would be for the Commission, in the light of the circumstances of the case, to take the measures necessary to provide appropriate protection for the applicant's interests (see, to that effect, the orders in Capgemini Nederland v Commission, cited above at paragraph 57, paragraph 96, and Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission, cited above at paragraph 101, paragraph 130).

104 The President may not therefore pre-judge the measures that the Commission might take to comply with a judgment annulling the contested decisions.

105 None the less, the general principle of the right to full and effective judicial protection means that parties before the courts must be granted interim protection if this is necessary to ensure the full effectiveness of the subsequent definitive judgment, in order to prevent a lacuna in the legal protection afforded by the Community courts (see, to that effect, the order in Renckens v Commission, cited above at paragraph 99; the judgments of the Court of Justice in Case C-213/89 Factortame and Others [1990] ECR I-2433, paragraph 21, and Joined Cases C-143/88 and C-92/89 Zuckerfabrik Süderdithmarschen and Zuckerfabrik Soest [1991] ECR I-1415, paragraphs 16 to 18; and the orders in Germany v Commission, cited above at paragraph 99, paragraph 46, and Austria v Council, cited above at paragraph 26, paragraph 111).

106 It must therefore be considered whether it has been shown with a sufficient degree of probability that the applicant is likely to suffer serious and irreparable damage if the interim relief applied for is not granted (see, to that effect, the order in Commission v NALOO, cited above at paragraph 99, paragraph 53).

107 It must first therefore be considered whether, following a judgment annulling the contested decisions, the fact that the Commission could organise a new tendering procedure would repair the damage caused to the applicant and if the answer to that question is in the negative, to assess whether the applicant could be compensated.

108 With regard to the possibility of the Commission organising a new tendering procedure, it must be pointed out that the Commission awarded the contract to IGN and it was signed in December 2005, without the applicant being informed previously that it had not been awarded the contract. The Commission ultimately informed it of that fact, after several requests, only by letter of 1 March 2006.

109 In addition, in reply to a question at the hearing, the Commission initially indicated that although it could confirm that performance of the contract commenced after it was signed by the parties and that some of the equipment provided for under the contract, such as the printers and toner cartridges, were to be delivered at the end of April 2006, it was unaware of the stage which performance of the contract had reached, then, without any further explanation, it indicated that the equipment provided for under the contract had already been delivered.

110 For its part, the applicant indicated, without being contradicted by the Commission, that the final date fixed by the Commission for provision of the other services under the contract, in particular, the placing in service of the software, was 15 March 2007.

111 Thus, the inevitable conclusion is that the judgment which will close the main proceedings will probably not be delivered until after the contract, or at least, a large part of the contract, has been performed.

112 It is therefore highly unlikely that, following a judgment in which the contested decisions are annulled, which would probably be delivered after performance of the contract has been completed, a new tendering procedure would be organised by the Commission. The damage suffered by the applicant could not therefore be repaired by that means.

113 It must therefore be considered whether, and how, the damage suffered by the applicant could be repaired by an action under Article 235 EC.

114 It should be pointed out the applicant contends that compensation in the form of money damages would make good the loss it has suffered only in a very imperfect way whereas suspension of the contract until the judgment in the main proceedings has been delivered would preserve the possibility of its obtaining compensation in kind, that is to say, in this case, performance of the contract and consequently, the competitive advantages it believes would flow from being awarded such a contract.

115 As the principle that the damage actually suffered must be made good in its entirety is a principle of law upheld by the Community judicature (judgment of the Court of Justice in Joined Cases C-104/89 and C-37/90 Mulder and Others v Council and Commission [2002] ECR I-203, paragraph 227), it must be considered whether the damage which the applicant alleges it has suffered can be made good in its entirety by an equivalent means.

116 The first paragraph of article 101 of Regulation No 1605/2002 provides that '[t]he contracting authority may, before the contract is signed, either abandon the procurement or cancel the award procedure without the candidates or tenderers being entitled to claim any compensation'. Thus, contrary to the applicant's claim, it did not lose a contract but rather an opportunity, and, in this case, a particularly favourable one, to obtain the contract which was the subject of the Community tendering procedure.

117 Although the chances of obtaining the contract were good, it is none the less very difficult, if not impossible, to quantify them and consequently to determine with sufficient accuracy the damage resulting from failure to obtain it. It is settled case-law that damage which, once it has occurred, cannot be quantified with sufficient accuracy is to be regarded as difficult to repair (see, to that effect, the order of the President of the Court of Justice in Joined Cases C–51/90 R and C–55/90 R Comos-Tank and Others v Commission [1990] ECR I–2167, paragraph 31; and the orders of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T–41/97 R Antillian Rice Mills v Council [1997] ECR II–447, paragraph 47, and in Case T–65/98 R Van den Bergh Foods v Commission [1998] ECR II–2641, paragraph 65; see also the order in Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission, cited above at paragraph 101, paragraph 147 and the case-law cited therein).

118 That loss of opportunity may therefore be regarded as difficult to repair in an equivalent form (see, to that effect, the order in Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission, cited above at paragraph 101, paragraph 148).

119 In addition, the applicant contends, in essence, that the loss, properly so called, resulting from the failure to obtain the contract at issue is in addition to the loss of the competitive advantage attached to the award of the contract and that that advantage would have permitted it to enter the international market by allowing it to refer to the contract awarded by the Commission in the context of other invitations to tender.

120 It should be pointed out that, according to the applicant, there are only five traders present worldwide on this market, something which the Commission does not contest. It also does not contest the applicant's claim that references likely to advance the position of tenderers on the market in question constitute an important factor for potential customers of such tenderers.

121 In accordance with paragraph 11.8 of the Instructions to tenderers, references are one of the factors to be taken into account in assessing whether tenders are compliant in the procedure for awarding the contract laid down by the Commission.

122 It should be pointed out that such references represent, however, only one of many criteria taken into account by the Commission in the qualitative selection of service providers (Article 137 of Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1); see also, to that effect, the orders of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T–169/00 R Esedra v Commission [2000] ECR II–2951, paragraph 49, and in Case T–148/04 R TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission [2004] ECR II–3027, paragraph 51).

123 However, in this case, having regard to the extremely limited number of traders on the world market, it cannot be excluded out of hand and without any further consideration that such references could represent a real competitive advantage, something which the Commission does not deny. Moreover, the references are being sought not with a view to obtaining contracts from the Commission – for which they represent only one of many criteria taken into account – , but to obtain contracts from other customers for whom such references could be the determining factor, something which the Commission does not contest either.

124 In this case, having regard to the special circumstances of the contract at issue, which concerns very specific software programmes for which the number of potential customers is relatively limited, and to the extremely limited number of suppliers, the alleged damage appears to be certain or, at least, established with a sufficient degree of probability (order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T–241/00 R Le Canne v Commission [2001] ECR II–37, paragraph 34) and does not appear to be hypothetical and based exclusively on the unpredictable probability of future and uncertain events (see, to that effect, the order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Joined Cases T–195/01 R and T–207/01 R Government of Gibraltar v Commission [2001] ECR

II–3915, paragraph 101 and the case-law cited therein).

125 The fact that the applicant would be able to point to a contract awarded by the Commission of the European Communities in a such a specialised market with such a limited number of suppliers, after being selected by Shell and NATO, could well represent a competitive advantage which could have been of benefit to the applicant if it had been awarded the contract.

126 It should also be noted that by failing to be selected, the applicant was placed at a competitive disadvantage in regard to IGN, which obtained the contract, and could use that fact for competitive purposes, although there are serious grounds for thinking that the contract should not have been awarded to it.

127 It would also be very difficult to quantify the value of that competitive advantage and, consequently, to determine with sufficient accuracy the damage resulting from failure to obtain it or to compensate for it fully and completely by an award of damages (see, to that effect, the order in Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission, cited above at paragraph 101, paragraphs 147 and 148).

128 Clearly, the applicant is therefore fully entitled to argue that damages would constitute only an imperfect remedy for the loss it has suffered.

129 The damage relied on by the applicant could thus be regarded as difficult to repair unless operation of the contested decision was suspended.

130 However, in order to justify interim relief, the damage relied on by the applicant must be serious (order in Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission, cited above at paragraph 101, paragraph 149).

131 The loss of an opportunity to be awarded, or to perform, a public contract is inherent in the exclusion from the tendering procedure at issue and cannot be regarded as constituting, in itself, serious damage independently of a concrete assessment of the specific damage alleged in each case (order in Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission, cited above at paragraph 101, paragraph 150).

132 Consequently, the applicant's loss of the opportunity to obtain and perform the contract at issue will constitute serious damage only if the applicant can prove to the requisite legal standard that it would have obtained a sufficiently significant advantage from the award and performance of the contract concluded on the basis of the invitation to tender (order in Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission, cited above at paragraph 101, paragraph 151).

133 A concrete assessment must therefore be made of the various advantages which would accrue to the applicant from the award and performance of the contract concluded on the basis of the invitation to tender.

134 When the applicant is an undertaking, the seriousness of material damage must be assessed in the light, in particular, of the size of the undertaking (see, to that effect, the order in Comos-Tank and Others v Commission, cited above at paragraph 117, paragraphs 26 and 31; and the order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T–201/04 R Microsoft v Commission [2004] ECR II–4463, paragraph 257). The President considers in this case that documents in the case do not permit him to assess the seriousness of the damage having regard to the size of the undertaking.

135 However, it is possible that the seriousness of the damage should also be assessed on the basis of other criteria, such as the seriousness of the effect on market shares or of the change in the competitive position of the undertaking (see, by analogy, the orders of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T–13/99 R Pfizer Animal Health v Council [1999] ECR II–1961, paragraph 138; Case T–392/02 R Solvay Pharmaceuticals v Council [2003] ECR II–1825, paragraph 107; and Case T–369/03 R Arizona Chemical and Others v Commission [2004] ECR II–205, paragraph 76).

136 As regards, first, financial advantages flowing from performance of the contract, it is clear that failure to perform the contract would deprive the applicant of the income it would have received if the contract had been awarded to it and loss of the opportunity to obtain the income that would have accrued to it under the contract would, having regard to the amounts at stake, seem likely to cause fairly serious damage to the applicant.

137 Secondly, the possibility that the applicant would be able to point to a contract awarded by the Commission of the European Communities in such a specialised market with such a limited number of suppliers could well represent a competitive advantage which could have been of benefit to the applicant if it had been awarded the contract.

138 Even if its precise value is difficult to estimate, the loss of such a competitive advantage is, in the light of the circumstances of the case, likely to cause serious damage to a company such as the applicant which develops very specific software intended for customers who, prima facie, are limited in number, in a highly competitive market in which there is a limited number of suppliers. That is all the more true inasmuch as IGN, one of its direct competitors, could rely, for competitive purposes, on the fact that it had obtained the contract, even though there are good reasons for thinking that it should not have been awarded to it.

139 It must therefore be concluded, in the light of the particular circumstances of the case and the characteristics of the market on which the applicant and IGN do business, that the damage suffered by the applicant may be regarded as serious.

140 Lastly, the urgency which the applicant may consequently invoke must be taken into consideration a fortiori by the President of the Court because, as is apparent from paragraphs 54 to 84 of this order, the arguments of fact and law put forward by the applicant in the context of its first plea in law appear to be of a particularly serious nature (see, to that effect, the order in Austria v Council, cited above at paragraph 26, paragraph 110).

141 Having regard to all those factors, in order to guarantee the full effectiveness of the definitive future decision and, in particular, to preserve the possibility of obtaining compensation in kind, as the applicant has requested and which may well be the only means of making good, at least partially, the damage suffered, the application for suspension of the operation of the contested decision and of performance of the contract must be granted in so far as the balance of interests is in its favour. That is the matter which must now be considered.

3. The balance of interests

The applicant's arguments

142 The applicant contends, essentially, that the balance of interests is in its favour inasmuch as it has been deprived of the income from a contract which should have been awarded to it and IGN cannot claim protection for interests which arise from a measure which must be regarded as unlawful. The applicant also considers that IGN should not enjoy greater protection than is accorded to it, all the more so as proper application of the rules for awarding contracts should have led the Commission to exclude IGN's tender as not fulfilling the conditions laid down in the Instructions to tenderers.

143 It also argues that relief is required by the public interest in ensuring that the procedures followed by the Community institutions in awarding public contracts comply with the principles of legality, transparency, equal treatment, legitimate expectations and sound administration.

144 The Commission contests that line of argument and contends, in substance, that even if it committed a fault for which it is liable towards the applicant, the contract with IGN remains valid since the hopes and legitimate expectations of that company must be protected, in so far as it was entitled to rely on the apparent lawfulness of the decision awarding the contract to it.

145 The Commission also argues that the contract is particularly important for the development of gas pipeline networks in Central Asia and that suspension of performance of the contract for a lengthy period would have a negative effect in the region, in particular, on the Commission's relations with the Kazakh authorities. It considers that the public interest in the timely performance of the contract should take precedence over the applicant's purely private interests, which can be protected by the judgment in the main proceedings. It stated at the hearing that that factor also played a role in the Commission's decision not to terminate the invitation to tender in order to initiate it again later so that there would be no delay in the performance of the contract and, from a budgetary perspective, so that the credits allocated to the contract would not be lost. In its view, that factor should also be taken into account in assessing the applicant's interest in obtaining suspension, at this time, of the performance of the contract.

146 At the hearing, the Commission also pointed out, in essence, that it wished to avoid legal proceedings being brought against it by IGN, which could occur if the contract which it had entered into with that company was suspended.

147 Where, on an application for interim measures, the judge before whom the applicant claims that it will sustain serious and irreparable harm weighs up the various interests involved, he must consider whether the annulment of the contested decision by the court dealing with the main application would make it possible to reverse the situation that would have been brought about in the absence of interim measures and, conversely, whether suspension of the operation of that decision would be such as to prevent its being fully effective in the event of the main application being dismissed (see, to that effect, the order of the President of the Court of Justice in Joined Cases C–182/03 R and C–217/03 R Belgium and Forum 187 v Commission [2003] ECR I–6887, paragraph 142, and the order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Pfizer Animal Health v Council, cited above at paragraph 135, paragraph 167 and the case-law cited therein).

148 Account must be taken, first of all, of the applicant's interest in suspension of the operation of the decision awarding the contract to IGN, secondly, of IGN's interest in performing the contract and thirdly of the public interest, and the Commission's interest, in the performance of the contract.

149 Firstly, the President considers that continued performance of the contract awarded to IGN would cause the applicant to sustain serious and irreparable harm (see paragraphs 104 to 140, above).

150 Secondly, there are serious grounds for believing that IGN's tender did not comply with the specifications laid down in the Instructions to tenderers and should have been rejected by the Commission. Contrary to the latter's contention at the hearing, the lawfulness of the contested decision and the lawfulness of the contract entered into on the basis of it are not separate from each other; if the contested decision is annulled by the Court in the main proceedings and performance of the contract is suspended, the annulment decision could lead the Commission to terminate its contract with IGN.

151 Accordingly, IGN, as the Commission has pointed out, would probably be entitled to sue the Commission for damages arising out of the fault it had committed, bringing their action in the Belgian courts, which, according to the Commission, have jurisdiction under a choice–of–jurisdiction clause in the contract. It must therefore be concluded that IGN's interests could be protected by legal proceedings.

152 Consequently, the balance of interests cannot be in IGN's favour and to the applicant's disadvantage. There are serious grounds for believing that IGN's tender did not comply with the specifications laid down in the invitation to tender, whereas the Commission does not deny that the applicant's tender did comply with those specifications. Under those circumstances, IGN's interest in carrying on with the contract cannot take precedence over the applicant's interest in being awarded that contract, which would be possible, at least in part, if the contract was suspended until judgment has been delivered in the main proceedings.

153 Thirdly, the Commission has not substantiated its claim that further performance of the contract cannot be delayed if good relations are to be maintained with the Kazakh authorities as the Commission has submitted no evidence on that subject to the President.

154 Moreover, the arguments put forward by the Commission at the hearing seem to indicate that it was aware that the award of the contract to IGN could, or would, cause difficulties but that, for budgetary reasons, it preferred not to act on that possibility but to take the risk of being sued subsequently by tenderers whose bids had been improperly rejected.

155 Even supposing that budgetary considerations could justify such a course of action, the Commission has not shown that such considerations which, by its own account, lead it to conclude the contract with IGN before 31 December 2005 so as not to lose the credits available to it for that purpose, are such as to make it impossible to suspend performance of the contract at this point in time.

156 The Commission also cannot rely on its interest in the continued performance of the contract in order to avoid legal action by IGN in support of a claim that the President should refuse to accord judicial protection to the applicant.

157 Accordingly, in the particular circumstances of the present case, the grant of interim measures is justified and adequately meets the need to guarantee effective provisional legal protection to the applicant.

On those grounds,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

hereby orders:

1. The operation of the Commission's decision to award the contract to IGN France international in the tendering procedure for supplies to various countries in Central Asia (EuropeAid/122078/C/S/Multi) and the performance of the contract concluded by the Commission with IGN France international are suspended until the Court of First Instance has ruled on the application in the main proceedings.

2. Costs are reserved.

[1] - OJ C 131, 3.6.2006.

Order of the President of the Court of First Instance of 20 July 2006
Globe SA v Commission of the European Communities. Application for interim measures - Fumus boni juris. Case T-114/06 R.

1. Applications for interim measures - Interim measures - Conditions for granting - Urgency - Prima facie case - Cumulative conditions - Balancing of all the interests involved

(Art. 243 EC; Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, Art. 104(2))

2. Applications for interim measures - Suspension of operation of a measure - Suspension of operation of a decision on public procurement

(Art. 242 EC)

3. Applications for interim measures - Suspension of operation of a measure - Suspension of operation of a decision on public procurement

(Art. 242 EC)

4. Interim proceedings - Suspension of operation of a measure - Suspension of operation of a decision on public procurement

(Art. 242 EC)

1. Article 104(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance provides that applications for interim measures must specify the subject-matter of the dispute, the circumstances giving rise to urgency as well as the pleas of fact and law prima facie justifying the grant of the provisional measure sought (fumus boni juris). Those conditions are cumulative so that an application for interim measures must be rejected if one of them is absent. In an appropriate case the President has also to weigh up the interests at stake. Moreover, in the context of that overall examination, the President enjoys a wide margin of discretion and remains free to determine, in light of the particular features of the case, the way in which those different conditions have to be verified and the order of priority of that examination since there is no rule of Community law imposing on him a predetermined analytical model for assessing the need for an interim decision.

2. Although the President may not pre-judge the measures that the Commission might take to comply with a judgment annulling a decision, the general principle of the right to full and effective judicial protection means that parties before the courts must be granted interim protection if this is necessary to ensure the full effectiveness of the subsequent definitive judgment, in order to prevent a lacuna in the legal protection afforded by the Community courts.

In interim proceedings on the award of a public contract, it must therefore be considered whether, following a judgment annulling a decision, the fact that the Commission could organise a new tendering procedure would repair the damage caused to the applicant and if the answer to that question is in the negative, to assess whether the applicant could be compensated.

3. Where an applicant has lost an opportunity to be awarded a contract which is the subject of a public procurement procedure and it is very difficult or even impossible to quantify and therefore assess with the required accuracy the damage resulting from that loss, that loss may be considered to constitute damage which is very difficult to repair in an equivalent form. That is also the case where it is very difficult, given the circumstances of the case, to quantify the value of a competitive advantage and, consequently, to determine with sufficient accuracy the damage resulting from failure to obtain it.

4. The loss of an opportunity to be awarded, or to perform, a public contract is inherent in the exclusion from the tendering procedure at issue and cannot be regarded as constituting, in itself, serious damage independently of a concrete assessment of the specific damage alleged in each case. Consequently, in the case of a procedure for the award of a public contract, the applicant's loss of the opportunity to obtain and perform the contract at issue will constitute serious damage only if the applicant can prove to the requisite legal standard that it would have obtained a sufficiently significant advantage from the award and performance of the contract concluded on the basis of the invitation to tender.

Although, where the applicant is an undertaking, the seriousness of material damage must be assessed in the light, in particular, of the size of the undertaking, it is possible that the seriousness of the damage should also be assessed on the basis of other criteria, such as the seriousness of the effect on market shares or of the change in the competitive position of the undertaking.

Commission of the European Communities, represented by M. Wilderspin and G. Boudot, acting as Agents, defendant,

APPLICATION for suspension of the operation of the Commission's decision to reject the applicant's bid in the tendering procedure for supplies to various countries in Central Asia (EuropeAid/122078/C/S/Multi),

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

makes the following

Order

On those grounds,

hereby orders:

1. The operation of the Commission's decision to award the contract to IGN France international in the tendering procedure for supplies to various countries in Central Asia (EuropeAid/122078/C/S/Multi) and the performance of the contract concluded by the Commission with IGN France international are suspended until the Court of First Instance has ruled on the application in the main proceedings.

2. Costs are reserved.

Luxembourg, 20 July 2006.

Facts of the dispute and procedure

1. Globe SA provides specialised services to network operators (gas and electricity) and to the petrochemical industry. Its core activity, surveying, has been extended to include the taking of measurements in three dimensions (by means of a laser scanning process), data conversion (Globe DD) and computer-aided-design (CAD).

2. In the field of gas pipelines, the applicant developed in 2004, from a software programme called SIG' (système d'information géographique', geographical information system), a new version of that software called Pipe Guardian' designed to assist managers of such installations in all aspects of their work.

3. On 20 October 2005, the Commission published an invitation to tender for the EuropeAid/122078/C/S/Multi project calling for the supply of a gas pipeline information system to gas companies in Central Asia (Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan). Those contracts are part of the TACIS 2002 programme.

4. The subject of the contract was the integration, configuration, delivery, installation, commissioning and after-sales service, in a single lot, of three pipeline network information systems, as well as the corresponding application programs and the related ancillary services, that is to say training and after-sales service, as defined in the technical specifications set out in the tender.

5. According to Article 1.1 of the Instructions to tenderers, published only in English, a pipeline information system is a data base system intended for the management of all construction and inspection data of a pipeline network and its geographical environment.

6. The Commission points out that although it initiated the invitation to tender itself, it entrusted the drafting of the substantive details of the tender to an outside consulting firm.

7. Section 2 of the Instructions to tenderers laid down the following timetable:

- deadline for requests for any clarifications from the contracting authority: 18 November 2005;

- last date on which clarifications are issued by the contracting authority: 29 November 2005;

- deadline for submission of tenders: 5 December 2005;

- tender opening session: 8 December 2005;

- notification of award to the successful tenderer:16 December 2005;

- signature of the contract 30 December 2005.

8. By letter of 10 November 2005 to the Commission, the applicant asked several questions on various subjects connected with the invitation to tender, of which one concerned the number of toner cartridges required by the specification in the contract documents (75 black toner cartridges and 25 colour toner cartridges). The applicant wished to know, in particular, whether those quantities were specified for each individual printer or for the whole contract.

9. On 14 November 2005, the Commission published Corrigendum No 1, it which it stated that the last date on which clarifications would be issued by the contracting authority was 24 November 2005.

10. On 22 November 2005, the Commission published a series of clarifications, one of which, No 23, concerned the number of toner cartridges involved in the invitation to tender and indicated that the figures of 75 and 25 toner cartridges referred to the number of cartridges required for each printer. The Commission also stated that the number of printers to be supplied under the contract was 16.

11. On 24 November 2005, the Commission published Corrigendum No 2, it which it stated that the precise number of toner cartridges was five black and two colour cartridges per printer.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

12. IGN France International (IGN') submitted its tender on 2 December 2005, that is to say, eight days after the publication of Corrigendum No 2. That tender made mention of a total of 1 600 toner cartridges, namely 1 200 black toner cartridges (that is to say, 75 cartridges for each of the 16 printers) and 400 colour toner cartridges (that is to say, 25 cartridges for each of the 16 printers).

13. The applicant's bid was submitted on 5 December 2005 and took account of Corrigendum No 2.

14. The two other tenderers, Asia Soft and Geomagic, also submitted bids taking account of the information provided by the Commission in Corrigendum No 2.

15. In accordance with Article 20.6 of the Instructions to tenderers, the sole award criterion was to be the price and the contract would be awarded to the lowest compliant tender.

16. The tender opening session was held by the committee for the evaluation of tenders, as planned, on 8 December 2005. It was determined at that time that the bids of the four tenderers were as follows:

- Globe: EUR 545 215;

- IGN: EUR 592 400;

- Asia Soft: EUR 865 143;

- Geomagic: EUR 934 964.

17. The Commission awarded the contract to IGN. The contract was signed by the Commission on 19 December 2005 and by IGN on 30 December 2005 without the applicant being informed.

18. By letters of 6 January 2006 and 3 February 2006, the applicant and its lawyer wrote to the Commission to enquire as to what further steps had been taken in the tendering procedure.

19. By letter of 1 March 2006, the Commission informed the applicant's lawyer:

... although it is true that at the tender opening session, it was found that Globe's bid was the lowest, it was discovered subsequently that another tenderer's bid was based on the quantities set out in the original publication in the Official Journal rather than on those contained in the corrigendum published on the EuropeAid web site. Since the corrigendum was published at a late stage, leaving very little time for potential tenderers to take note of its contents and because, in an invitation to tender for the supply of equipment, it is not possible to identify the potential tenderers in advance, the evaluation committee decided to take that bid into consideration and make the adjustments necessary to take account of the quantities indicated in the corrigendum published on the internet. As a result of those adjustments (reduction of the quantities and, consequently, reduction in the price), it appeared that Globe's bid was not the lowest. The contract was therefore awarded to [IGN]'.

20. By letter of 2 March 2006 (the contested decision'), the Commission informed the applicant that its tender was not the least expensive of those tenders which were technically compliant and that the contract had been awarded to IGN for an amount of EUR 531 600.

21. In response to a letter to the Commission of 6 March 2006 from the applicant's lawyer, the Commission forwarded, on 17 March 2006, a copy of the report drawn up by the evaluation committee. In that report, under the heading of technical compliance, the evaluation committee states, in essence, that, at the request of the contracting authority IGN's bid had to be re-calculated to take into account the changed number of toner cartridges, as modified by Corrigendum No 2, and that the bid had been amended to that effect. Under the same heading, the evaluation committee confirmed that the revised bid and the confirmation had been received within 24 hours by e-mail and fax.

22. By an application lodged at the registry of the Court of First Instance on 14 April 2006 the applicant brought an action for the annulment of the contested decision.

23. On the same day, the applicant lodged an application for interim measures in which it seeks, essentially, suspension of the operation of the contested decision by the President of the Court of First Instance and an order for costs against the Commission.

24. On 27 April 2006, the Commission submitted its observations on the application for interim measures. In those observations, it asked the Court to dismiss that application and order the applicant to pay the costs.

25. The parties presented oral argument at the hearing on 16 May 2006.

Law

26. Article 104(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance provides that applications for interim measures must specify the subject matter of the dispute, the circumstances giving rise to urgency as well as the pleas of fact and law prima facie justifying the grant of the provisional measure sought (fumus boni juris). Those conditions are cumulative so that an application for interim measures must be rejected if one of them is absent (order of the President of the Court in Case C268/96 P(R) SCK and FNK v Commission [1996] ECR I4971, paragraph 30). In an appropriate case the President has also to weigh up the interests at stake (order of the President of the Court in Case C445/00 R Austria v Council [2001] ECR I1461, paragraph 73 and the case-law cited therein).

27. Moreover, in the context of that overall examination, the President enjoys a wide margin of discretion and remains free to determine, in light of the particular features of the case, the way in which those different conditions have to be verified and the order of priority of that examination since there is no rule of Community law imposing on him a predetermined analytical model for assessing the need for an interim decision (order of the President in Case C149/95 P(R) Commission v Atlantic Container Line and Others [1995] ECR I2165, paragraph 23).

28. The present application for interim measures must be considered in the light of the principles set out above.

29. Before ruling on the application for interim measures, the subject matter of the application should be made clear. The applicant, in its application, is seeking suspension of the operation of the contested decision.

30. It should be pointed out that a decision relating to the award of a contract to a single tenderer inevitably and inseparably entails a corresponding decision not to award the contract to the other tenderers. It must therefore be held that the formal communication of the result of the tendering procedure to the rejected tenderers does not mean that a decision other than the decision awarding the contract will be adopted for the express purpose of stating a rejection (judgment of the Court of First Instance in Case T183/00 Strabag Benelux v Council [2003] ECR II135, paragraph 28).

31. It must therefore be considered that the applicant is seeking suspension of the operation both of the decision not to award it the contract and of the decision to award the contract to IGN.

32. Moreover, it was confirmed at the hearing that the contract was concluded by the Commission on 19 December and by IGN on 30 December, that performance has begun but is not yet completed. The contract is thus the immediate extension of the Commission's decision to award the contract to IGN.

33. However, as was made clear at the hearing, the applicant puts forward claims for damages arising from performance of the contract and is therefore seeking to prevent serious and irreparable damage which would result, in its view, from such performance.

34. It must be considered therefore that the applicant is also seeking suspension of performance of the contract.

1. Prima facie case

Arguments of the parties

The applicant's arguments

35. The applicant puts forward, essentially, four pleas in law in support of its application in the main proceedings which concern the compliance of the bids, infringement of the right to be heard, breach of the Commission's duty to give reasons and of the principle of sound administration.

- The first plea in law

36. In its first plea in law, the applicant claims that the Commission committed three errors of assessment which vitiate the procedure under which the contract was awarded to IGN.

37. In the first place, the applicant argues, on the one hand, that its bid was the lowest and that, consequently, in accordance with Article 20.6 of the Instructions to tenderers, which provided that the sole award criterion was to be the price and that the contract would be awarded to the lowest compliant tender, the Commission should have awarded it the contract and had no discretion in that regard. It considers that in not awarding it the contract, the Commission disregarded its legitimate expectations.

38. On the other hand, the applicant argues that IGN's bid did not comply with the technical specifications contained in the contract documents.

39. Firstly, according to the applicant, the contract documents provided that the printers were to be of type A3 max' so as to be able to print on paper of size 297 x 420mm. In its view, the indication A3 max' means that the printers should be able to print in that format and that larger sizes (A2, A1, A0) were not required. It adds that in the field concerned, larger formats are sometimes used and that, therefore, A3 max' expresses a requirement that it should be possible to print on A3 size paper. The printers offered by IGN are A4 size (210 x 297mm). The applicant claims, therefore, that those printers do not comply with the format called for in the contract documents.

40. Secondly, the applicant claims that the contract documents provide that the print speed of the first page in colour should be 26 seconds whereas, in the case of the printers offered by IGN, it is only 29 seconds.

41. In the applicant's view, those technical differences result in significant price differences between the printers it offered and those offered by IGN, the latter costing EUR 379, whereas the printers offered by the applicant cost EUR 3 719.10. The decision to accept IGN's bid therefore infringed the principle of non-discrimination.

42. Thirdly, the applicant argues, in essence, that the Commission should have rejected IGN's bid since it did not fulfil the requirements of the invitation to tender inasmuch as it was based on the supply of 1 600 cartridges, the number initially set out in the contract documents, and not 112 cartridges, the number finally established by Corrigendum No 2.

43. In the second place, the applicant claims essentially that the Commission granted IGN an extension of the deadline for submission of tenders inasmuch as it permitted IGN to amend and correct its bid after the deadline fixed by the invitation to tender, even though IGN was aware of the prices offered by the other tenderers, having been present, along with them, at the tender opening session.

44. In the third place, the applicant argues, in substance, the Commission permitted IGN to amend its tender contrary to the applicable rules and, in particular, to the provisions of Articles 15, 19.5, 20.3, and 20.4 of the Instructions to tenderers.

- The second plea in law

45. The applicant argues, essentially, that the Commission should have informed it of the reasons why it proposed to invert the order of precedence of the tenders so as to permit it to submit it views in accordance with its right to be heard.

- The third plea in law

46. The applicant claims, in essence, that the statement of the reasons on which the Commission's decision is based is insufficient and contradictory, all the more so as application of the Instructions to tenderers should have led to its being awarded the contract. The decision also does not mention the matters of fact or of law which led the Commission to change the order of tenders fixed by the evaluation committee on 8 December 2005.

- The fourth plea in law

47. The applicant claims that the Commission demonstrated negligence in the context of the procedure for the award of the contract. It considers, essentially, that the time which it took for the Commission to reply to it infringes the Code of good administrative behaviour, which requires the Commission to reply within 15 days from the date of receipt of the request for information.

The Commission's arguments

- The first plea in law

48. On the one hand, the Commission argues that IGN's bid was already the lowest at the time at which it submitted its tender on 2 December 2005. It justifies that claim by pointing out that if the correction of the number of toner cartridges required by the invitation to tender, as set out in Corrigendum No 2, had been carried out by the evaluation committee itself, IGN's bid would have been lower than that of Globe.

49. Consequently, the Commission considers that the applicant has no basis for alleging an infringement of its legitimate expectations having regard to the fact that the evaluation committee had only commenced its consideration of the tenders and had not yet adopted any decision, notwithstanding the fact the committee considered, from the very start, that Globe's bid fulfilled the requirements of the invitation to tender.

50. On the other hand, with regard to the compliance of IGN's tender, the Commission relies on the fact that the expression A3 max' was interpreted by the evaluation committee as including the A4 format, the A3 format being an upper threshold beyond which the printers which were required did not need to go.

51. Secondly, the Commission emphasises that the evaluation committee considered that the print time of 26 seconds for the first page in colour laid down in the contract documents was a threshold and that the committee considered that a difference of 3 seconds was not a major technical weakness justifying automatic rejection of IGN's tender.

52. Thirdly, the Commission points out, essentially, that the reason for its invitation to IGN to submit a corrected version of its tender was the late appearance of Corrigendum No 2. The Commission adds that it was not just reasons of equity which led the evaluation committee to adopt that decision, but the fear that if it excluded IGN, that firm might bring an action for annulment or for damages.

- The second plea in law

53. The Commission considers that it has already replied to that plea in its argument concerning the lowest tender and refers back to that argument and it also claims that a period of two months was needed to permit its departments to draw up a reasoned decision in a matter which it considered complex and which, in its view, had encountered technical difficulties during the tendering procedure.

- The third plea in law

54. The Commission argues, in essence, that the contested decision is perfectly clear and it fulfils the requirements of the settled case-law of the Court of Justice and the Court of First Instance to the effect that the extent of the obligation to state reasons, as required by Article 253 EC, depends on the nature of the measure in question and on the context in which it was adopted. The statement of reasons must disclose in a clear and unequivocal fashion the reasoning of the institution which adopted the decision, in such a way as to permit the persons concerned to ascertain the reasons for the measure and thus enable them to defend their rights, and to enable the Community judicature to carry out its review of the measure (judgment of the Court of First Instance in Case T282/02 Cementbouw Handel & Industrie v Commission [2006] ECR II319, paragraph 85). It is not necessary for the reasoning to go into all the relevant facts and points of law, since the question whether the statement of reasons meets the requirements of Article 253 EC must be assessed with regard not only to the wording of the measure at issue but also to its context (judgments of the Court of Justice in Case 203/85 Nicolet Instrument [1986] ECR 2049, paragraph 10; Case 240/84 NTN Tokyo Bearing and Others v Council [1987] ECR 1809, paragraph 31; Case 255/84 Nachi Fujikoshi v Council [1987] ECR 1861, paragraph 39; and Case C76/00 Petrotub and Republica v Council [2003] ECR I79, paragraph 81).

55. The Commission also points out that it took care, in the first two paragraphs of its letter of 1 March 2006, to explain the reasons which led it to suggest to IGN that it reformulate its tender in accordance with Corrigendum No 2.

- The fourth plea in law

56. The Commission merely states that this plea is unfounded.

Assessment of the President of the Court

57. As a preliminary matter it should be pointed out, first of all, that under Article 89(1) of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1, the Financial Regulation') all public contracts financed in whole or in part by the budget have to comply with the principles of transparency, proportionality, equal treatment and nondiscrimination. Next, under Article 97(1) of the Financial Regulation the selection criteria for evaluating the capability of candidates or tenderers and the award criteria for evaluating the content of the tenders are to be defined in advance and set out in the call for tender. Finally, it is settled case-law that the award criteria must be formulated, in the contract documents or the contract notice, in such a way as to allow all reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderers to interpret them in the same way (Order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T447/04 R Capgemini Nederland v Commission [2005] ECR II257, paragraph 68).

58. It should further be observed, also as a preliminary matter, that, in accordance with settled case-law, the Commission has a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender and the Court's review should be limited to checking that there has been no serious and manifest error (judgment of the Court in Case 56/77 Agence Européenne d'Interims v Commission [1978] ECR 2215, paragraph 20, and judgment of the Court of First Instance in Case T19/95 Adia Interim v Commission [1996] ECR II321, paragraph 49).

59. Having formulated those preliminary observations, the President considers that, having regard to the documents in the case concerning this application for interim measures, the applicant's first plea in law is of a serious nature.

60. It is not disputed that at the tender opening session on 8 December 2005, the evaluation committee determined that the bids of the four tenderers were as follows:

- Globe: EUR 545 215;

- IGN: EUR 592 400;

- Asia Soft: EUR 865 143;

- Geomagic: EUR 934 964.

The applicant's bid was thus the lowest at the time that the tenders were opened.

61. However, the Commission claims that IGN's bid was the lowest even at the time that the tenders were opened. In its view, if the evaluation committee had itself corrected the number of toner cartridges required by the invitation to tender, as provided for in Corrigendum No 2, IGN's bid would have been lower than that of the applicant.

62. Clearly, the Commission thereby admits that in the absence of any correction by IGN of its tender, it had not submitted the lowest bid at the time that the tenders were opened.

63. It must therefore be determined whether, prima facie, the Commission was entitled to permit IGN to correct its tender.

64. Article 15 of the Instructions to tenderers provides that no tender was to be altered after 5 December 2005.

65. In addition, Article 19.5 of the Instructions to tenderers provides that in the interests of transparency and equal treatment and without being able to modify their tenders, tenderers may be required, at the written request of the evaluation committee, to provide clarifications within 48 hours. Any such request for clarification must not seek the correction of formal errors or of major restrictions' affecting performance of the contract or distorting competition.

66. Article 20.3 of the Instructions to tenderers provides that to facilitate the examination, evaluation and comparison of tenders, the evaluation committee may ask each tenderer for clarification of his tender, including breakdowns of prices. The request for clarification and the response must be in writing only, but no change in the price or substance of the tender may be sought, offered or permitted except as required to confirm the correction of arithmetical errors discovered during the evaluation of tenders.

67. In addition, Article 20.4 of the Instructions to tenderers provides that tenders found to be technically compliant are to be checked for any arithmetical errors in computation and summation. According to that provision, errors will be corrected by the evaluation committee as follows: on the one hand, where there is a discrepancy between amounts in figures and in words, the amount in words will be the amount taken into account. On the other, except for lump-sum contracts, where there is a discrepancy between a unit price and the total amount derived from the multiplication of the unit price and the quantity, the unit price as quoted will be the price taken into account.

68. Although the correction of arithmetical errors is clearly possible under those provisions, that possibility is strictly limited; the provisions in question do not, prima facie, permit a correction that amounts to a modification of the tender.

69. In this case, IGN, at the Commission's request, did not correct arithmetical errors but rectified certain erroneous parameters of its bid, something the Commission does not deny, inasmuch as it admits that the number of toner cartridges mentioned in IGN's original tender was not the number required by Corrigendum No 2.

70. It should also be made clear that the other three tenderers, namely the applicant, Asia Soft and Geomatic, submitted tenders in accordance with the requirement laid down in Corrigendum No 2.

71. The Commission argues that the reason for its invitation to IGN to submit a corrected version of its tender was the late appearance of Corrigendum No 2. The Commission adds that it was not just reasons of equity which led the evaluation committee to adopt that decision, but the fear that if it excluded IGN, that firm might bring an action for annulment or for damages.

72. None the less, the last date initially fixed on which clarifications were to be issued by the contracting authority was 29 November 2005. On 14 November 2005, the Commission published Corrigendum No 1, indicating that the last date on which clarifications would be issued by the contracting authority was 24 November 2005. It should be pointed out that that correction to the time-limit for the publication of clarifications seems to have been made necessary in order to comply with the period of 11 days between the last date on which clarifications were to be issued by the Commission and the deadline for submission of tenders, required by Article 2 and the third paragraph of Article 13 of the Instructions to tenderers. Those articles provide that the last date on which clarifications might be issued constituted the beginning of a period of 11 days during which tenderers could draw up and transmit their bid, knowing th at the contract documents would not undergo any further modification.

73. Clarifications were issued on 22 November 2005 and a corrigendum to those clarifications was issued on 24 November 2005. Consequently, the Commission cannot, prima facie, argue that Corrigendum No 2 was issued late, since it was issued within the time-limit fixed by the Commission itself.

74. With regard to whether IGN's tender was compliant, which, according to Article 20.4 of the Instructions to tenderers, was an essential pre-condition if arithmetical errors were to be corrected, the applicant argues that the contract documents specified that the print speed of the first page in colour should be 26 seconds, whereas the printers offered by IGN had a speed of 29 seconds.

75. The Commission claims that the evaluation committee regarded the print time of 26 seconds for the first page in colour, fixed in the contract documents as a threshold. Moreover, it argues that the committee considered that the difference of three seconds did not constitute a major technical weakness justifying an automatic rejection of IGN's tender.

76. Leaving aside the fact that, at first glance, the Commission's line of reasoning concerning the print speed is unconvincing since if the speed was in fact a threshold, the slower a printer was, the more it would fulfil the conditions laid down in the specification in the contract documents, the fact is that those documents specified that the print speed was to be 26 seconds. Furthermore, the latitude to which the Commission refers is not set out expressly in the contract documents and the evaluation committee does not, prima facie, seem to have any legal basis for considering that it was entitled to depart from the technical specifications contained in those documents. Consequently, the compliance of IGN's tender in that regard must be regarded with circumspection since the broad discretion which the Commission enjoys as to the factors to be taken into account when awarding a contract following an invitation to tender does not, prima facie, permit it to depart from the criteria which it has itself strictly defined, as it will otherwise have failed to maintain the equal treatment to which the tenderers are entitled.

77. Moreover, the applicant's arguments concerning the print format required for the printers to be delivered by the successful tenderer can also not be dismissed without further consideration.

78. It is not contested that the printers are to be used, in particular, to print plans of the route followed by gas pipelines and of the areas around them.

79. The applicant argues, essentially, that the reference to A3 max' format is a technical specification which requires printers meeting it to be able to print, in the A3 format, geographical plans and maps of areas ranging from 2 to 40 000 kilometres, in accordance with the requirements of Annex TS4.2 of the Instructions to tenderers, whereas printers capable of producing larger formats, such as A2, A1 or even A0, frequently used in cartography, were not required.

80. The Commission argues that the evaluation committee decided unanimously to interpret the expression A3 max' as an upper threshold' and to consider printers which printed only in A4 format to fulfil the requirements of the contract documents.

81. First of all, it must be determined, on the one hand, whether the expression A3 max' was open to interpretation by the evaluation committee if, as the applicant claims, it was a technical specification and, on the other, whether the Commission was entitled to interpret that expression, particularly since the tenderers were not informed of that interpretation.

82. Secondly even supposing that the evaluation committee was entitled to interpret the expression A3 max' and that it was not a technical specification which was not subject to interpretation, it should be pointed out that the Commission's interpretation seems, prima facie, unconvincing. According to the Commission's argument to the effect that the A3 format was an upper limit, print formats equal to or smaller than A4 (such as A5 or even smaller formats) would have fulfilled the conditions of the contract documents, even though such formats seem ill adapted to printing geographical plans and maps covering areas from 2 to 40 000 kilometres. If, on the other hand, the evaluation committee's interpretation merely regarded the A4 format as acceptable, to the exclusion of smaller formats, that would imply that the format laid down in the Instructions to tenderers contained not merely an upper threshold' (A3 max') but a lower limit (A4) which was not mentioned therein and which, it would appear, was not made known to the tenderers.

83. In addition, it should be pointed out that the applicant argued in its written pleadings, without being contradicted by the Commission, that the computer programme in question requires the A3 print format.

84. It is not contested that the differences in print format give rise to particularly significant differences in the price of the printers - those offered by IGN cost EUR 379 each whereas those offered by the applicant cost EUR 3 719.10 each - which, if the Commission was right, ought logically to have led the tenderers not to offer printers with the A3 format and to limit themselves to smaller print formats in order to reduce the amount of their tenders.

85. Moreover, it should be pointed out that the total cost of the 16 printers offered by IGN was EUR 6 064, whereas the total cost of the printers offered by the applicant was EUR 59 504, which is a difference of EUR 53 440. If IGN had complied with the A3 print format requirement for the printers it offered, there is every reason to believe that its price would have been increased by approximately the same amount and would then have been considerably above that of the applicant, even after correction of the number of toner cartridges, provided that such correction was possible.

86. Consequently, the question whether the printers chosen by IGN corresponded or not to the technical specifications in the contract documents concerning the print format required require a detailed consideration which it is not for the President to enter into, his role being merely to determine, in the course of considering whether a prima facie case has been made out, that the applicant's arguments are not, prima facie, without any foundation.

87. In the light of the foregoing and having regard to the information at the disposal of the President, the arguments of fact and law put forward by the applicant in the context of its first plea in law give rise to serious doubts as to the lawfulness of the award of the contract to IGN. Under those circumstances, this application cannot be rejected for want of having made a prima facie case, and it must be considered whether the application satisfies the condition relating to urgency (see, to that effect, the order in Austria v Council , cited above at paragraph 26, paragraphs 100 and 101).

2. Urgency

Arguments of the parties

The applicant's arguments

88. Although it accepts that failure to obtain the contract will not jeopardise its existence, the applicant contends that the damage resulting from the loss of the contract cannot be fully compensated for by a money payment and its application is therefore aimed at obtaining compensation in kind.

89. The applicant argues that its core activity, surveying, has gradually been extended to include the taking of measurements in three dimensions (by means of a laser scanning process), data conversion (Globe DD) and computer-aided-design (CAD) and that in the field of gas pipelines, that expertise permitted it to develop a software programme called SIG' (système d'information géographique', geographical information system), designed to assist managers of such installations in all aspects of their work. In 2004, Globe developed a new version of that software called Pipe Guardian'.

90. The applicant points out that that software represents a considerable investment and is part of a strategy to internationalise the company, which at the moment, does business essentially in Belgium and the Netherlands. It emphasises that internationalisation is necessary in a highly specialised technology market on which a limited number of traders are present. It points out that there are five traders present worldwide on this market, including the four tenderers.

91. The applicant contends that the commercial progress of its Pipe Guardian software is closely linked to its participation in international invitations to tender and that most potential customers select their new software programmes by way of preselections and invitations to tender. One of the most important factors in that process is the submission of a list of representative references. It points out that the Commission itself requires such references before giving consideration to a bid submitted in the context of one of its invitations to tender, in particular in the case of the contract which is the subject of the contested decision, in regard to which the applicant was able to produce references from Shell and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO).

92. Furthermore, the applicant observes, in substance, that, having been set up 16 years ago, it is an operator on the market for whom a contract such as that offered by the Commission would permit it to make itself better known, to compete with other traders in the context of international invitations to tender and to carve out a place on the international market.

93. At the hearing, the applicant also pointed out, in essence, that it considered that, in this case, it had not lost an opportunity to obtain a contract but that it had failed to obtain a contract that it should have been awarded if the rules for making such awards had been complied with by the Commission and consequently, it had also lost the opportunity to obtain references on which it could have relied if the Commission had awarded it the contract. That, in its view, constitutes irreparable damage.

94. According to the applicant, there is also urgency because, before the judgement on the substance of the case is delivered, the contract at issue will have been largely, if not entirely, performed.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

The judgment in the main proceedings would therefore be ineffective. It relies in that regard on the order of the President of the Court of Justice of 22 April 1994 in Commission v Belgium (Case C87/94 R [1994] ECR I1395, paragraph 31), made in the course of an action for failure to fulfil obligations.

The Commission's arguments

95. The Commission argues that Globe has produced no evidence showing that performance of the contract by IGN would cause it damage. The Commission also contends that the damage is not irreparable since the applicant itself estimated its loss at EUR 492 000 in its application in the main proceedings, although it acknowledges that the applicant argued that such compensation would only be an imperfect remedy.

96. It adds that that is all the more true inasmuch as the applicant claims not to have lost an opportunity but the contract itself.

97. It also stated, in essence, at the hearing that although it is true that the applicant lost an opportunity to obtain references, it is accepted that tendering procedures are highly competitive and the fact of not having been awarded the contract is not in any way a negative reflection on the capacities of the disappointed tenderer.

98. Finally, the Commission contends that the applicant's argument to the effect that the contract concluded between the Commission and IGN would be largely performed before the judgment in the main proceedings was delivered is irrelevant in this case. The applicant has based its argument on case-law referring to applications for failure to fulfil obligations. That is a special category of actions which cannot give rise to proceedings for damages before the Community courts. Moreover, the facts at issue in the case which gave rise to the order in Commission v Belgium , mentioned in paragraph 93, above, are not comparable to those in the present case.

99. As regards the condition of urgency, it must be remembered that the purpose of the procedure for interim relief is to guarantee the full effectiveness of the definitive future decision, in order to ensure that there is no lacuna in the legal protection provided by the Court (orders in Case 27/68 R Renckens v Commission [1969] ECR 255; Case C399/95 R Germany v Commission [1996] ECR I2441, paragraph 46; Case C393/96 P(R) Antonissen v Council and Commission [1997] ECR I441, paragraph 36; and Commission v NALOO , paragraph 52). For the purpose of attaining that objective, urgency must be assessed in the light of the need for an interlocutory order in order to avoid serious and irreparable damage to the party seeking the interim relief (orders in Case C65/99 P(R) Willeme v Commission [1999] ECR I1857, paragraph 62, Commission v NALOO , cited above, paragraph 52 and Case C156/03 P(R) Commission v Laboratoires Servier [2003] ECR I6575, paragraph 35).

100. The applicant contends that if the contested decisions are annulled and if interim relief is not granted, the contract at issue in the invitation to tender could not be awarded to it or performed by it and it would therefore be deprived of certain benefits in terms of references and access to the international market for the services concerned.

101. It should be pointed out that if the contested decisions were annulled by the Court, the Commission would be required, under the first paragraph of Article 233 EC, to take the necessary measures to comply with the judgment, without prejudice to any obligations resulting from the application of the second paragraph of Article 288 EC (order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T195/05 R Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission [2005] ECR II0000, paragraph 128).

102. It addition, it should be borne in mind that under Article 233 EC, it is the institution whose act has been declared void which is required to take the necessary measures to comply with the judgment of the Court. It follows that the court which declares the measure void has no jurisdiction to issue directions to the institution whose act has been declared void as to the manner in which it is to comply with the Court's judgment (order of the Court of Justice in Joined Cases C199/94 P and C200/94 P Pevasa and Inpesca v Commission [1995] ECR I3709, paragraph 24) and that the President of the Court of First Instance cannot pre-judge measures which might be adopted as a result of the annulment. The measures necessary in order to comply with a judgment annulling a measure depend not merely on the measure which has been annulled and the scope of the judgment, which is to be assessed on the basis of the grounds which led to it (judgments of the Court of justice in Joined Cases 97/86, 99/86, 193/86 and 215/86 Asteris and Others v Commission [1988] ECR 2181, paragraph 27, and Joined Cases C442/03 P and C471/03 P P & O European Ferries (Vizcaya) v Commission [2006] ECR I4845, paragraph 44) but also on the circumstances of each case, such as the time frame in which the annulment of the contested measure takes place or the interests of third parties.

103. In this case, if the contested decisions were annulled, it would be for the Commission, in the light of the circumstances of the case, to take the measures necessary to provide appropriate protection for the applicant's interests (see, to that effect, the orders in Capgemini Nederland v Commission , cited above at paragraph 57, paragraph 96, and Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission , cited above at paragraph 101, paragraph 130).

104. The President may not therefore pre-judge the measures that the Commission might take to comply with a judgment annulling the contested decisions.

105. None the less, the general principle of the right to full and effective judicial protection means that parties before the courts must be granted interim protection if this is necessary to ensure the full effectiveness of the subsequent definitive judgment, in order to prevent a lacuna in the legal protection afforded by the Community courts (see, to that effect, the order in Renckens v Commission , cited above at paragraph 99; the judgments of the Court of Justice in Case C213/89 Factortame and Others [1990] ECR I2433, paragraph 21, and Joined Cases C143/88 and C92/89 Zuckerfabrik Süderdithmarschen and Zuckerfabrik Soest [1991] ECR I1415, paragraphs 16 to 18; and the orders in Germany v Commission, cited above at paragraph 99, paragraph 46, and Austria v Council , cited above at paragraph 26, paragraph 111).

106. It must therefore be considered whether it has been shown with a sufficient degree of probability that the applicant is likely to suffer serious and irreparable damage if the interim relief applied for is not granted (see, to that effect, the order in Commission v NALOO , cited above at paragraph 99, paragraph 53).

107. It must first therefore be considered whether, following a judgment annulling the contested decisions, the fact that the Commission could organise a new tendering procedure would repair the damage caused to the applicant and if the answer to that question is in the negative, to assess whether the applicant could be compensated.

108. With regard to the possibility of the Commission organising a new tendering procedure, it must be pointed out that the Commission awarded the contract to IGN and it was signed in December 2005, without the applicant being informed previously that it had not been awarded the contract. The Commission ultimately informed it of that fact, after several requests, only by letter of 1 March 2006.

109. In addition, in reply to a question at the hearing, the Commission initially indicated that although it could confirm that performance of the contract commenced after it was signed by the parties and that some of the equipment provided for under the contract, such as the printers and toner cartridges, were to be delivered at the end of April 2006, it was unaware of the stage which performance of the contract had reached, then, without any further explanation, it indicated that the equipment provided for under the contract had already been delivered.

110. For its part, the applicant indicated, without being contradicted by the Commission, that the final date fixed by the Commission for provision of the other services under the contract, in particular, the placing in service of the software, was 15 March 2007.

111. Thus, the inevitable conclusion is that the judgment which will close the main proceedings will probably not be delivered until after the contract, or at least, a large part of the contract, has been performed.

112. It is therefore highly unlikely that, following a judgment in which the contested decisions are annulled, which would probably be delivered after performance of the contract has been completed, a new tendering procedure would be organised by the Commission. The damage suffered by the applicant could not therefore be repaired by that means.

113. It must therefore be considered whether, and how, the damage suffered by the applicant could be repaired by an action under Article 235 EC.

114. It should be pointed out the applicant contends that compensation in the form of money damages would make good the loss it has suffered only in a very imperfect way whereas suspension of the contract until the judgment in the main proceedings has been delivered would preserve the possibility of its obtaining compensation in kind, that is to say, in this case, performance of the contract and consequently, the competitive advantages it believes would flow from being awarded such a contract.

115. As the principle that the damage actually suffered must be made good in its entirety is a principle of law upheld by the Community judicature (judgment of the Court of Justice in Joined Cases C104/89 and C37/90 Mulder and Others v Council and Commission [2002] ECR I203, paragraph 227), it must be considered whether the damage which the applicant alleges it has suffered can be made good in its entirety by an equivalent means.

116. The first paragraph of article 101 of Regulation No 1605/2002 provides that [t]he contracting authority may, before the contract is signed, either abandon the procurement or cancel the award procedure without the candidates or tenderers being entitled to claim any compensation'. Thus, contrary to the applicant's claim, it did not lose a contract but rather an opportunity, and, in this case, a particularly favourable one, to obtain the contract which was the subject of the Community tendering procedure.

117. Although the chances of obtaining the contract were good, it is none the less very difficult, if not impossible, to quantify them and consequently to determine with sufficient accuracy the damage resulting from failure to obtain it. It is settled case-law that damage which, once it has occurred, cannot be quantified with sufficient accuracy is to be regarded as difficult to repair (see, to that effect, the order of the President of the Court of Justice in Joined Cases C51/90 R and C55/90 R Comos-Tank and Others v Commission [1990] ECR I2167, paragraph 31; and the orders of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T41/97 R Antillian Rice Mills v Council [1997] ECR II447, paragraph 47, and in Case T65/98 R Van den Bergh Foods v Commission [1998] ECR II2641, paragraph 65; see also the order in Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission , cited above at paragraph 101, paragraph 147 and the case-law cited therein).

118. That loss of opportunity may therefore be regarded as difficult to repair in an equivalent form (see, to that effect, the order in Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission , cited above at paragraph 101, paragraph 148).

119. In addition, the applicant contends, in essence, that the loss, properly so called, resulting from the failure to obtain the contract at issue is in addition to the loss of the competitive advantage attached to the award of the contract and that that advantage would have permitted it to enter the international market by allowing it to refer to the contract awarded by the Commission in the context of other invitations to tender.

120. It should be pointed out that, according to the applicant, there are only five traders present worldwide on this market, something which the Commission does not contest. It also does not contest the applicant's claim that references likely to advance the position of tenderers on the market in question constitute an important factor for potential customers of such tenderers.

121. In accordance with paragraph 11.8 of the Instructions to tenderers, references are one of the factors to be taken into account in assessing whether tenders are compliant in the procedure for awarding the contract laid down by the Commission.

122. It should be pointed out that such references represent, however, only one of many criteria taken into account by the Commission in the qualitative selection of service providers (Article 137 of Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1); see also, to that effect, the orders of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T169/00 R Esedra v Commission [2000] ECR II2951, paragraph 49, and in Case T148/04 R TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission [2004] ECR II3027, paragraph 51).

123. However, in this case, having regard to the extremely limited number of traders on the world market, it cannot be excluded out of hand and without any further consideration that such references could represent a real competitive advantage, something which the Commission does not deny. Moreover, the references are being sought not with a view to obtaining contracts from the Commission - for which they represent only one of many criteria taken into account - , but to obtain contracts from other customers for whom such references could be the determining factor, something which the Commission does not contest either.

124. In this case, having regard to the special circumstances of the contract at issue, which concerns very specific software programmes for which the number of potential customers is relatively limited, and to the extremely limited number of suppliers, the alleged damage appears to be certain or, at least, established with a sufficient degree of probability (order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T241/00 R Le Canne v Commission [2001] ECR II37, paragraph 34) and does not appear to be hypothetical and based exclusively on the unpredictable probability of future and uncertain events (see, to that effect, the order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Joined Cases T195/01 R and T207/01 R Government of Gibraltar v Commission [2001] ECR II3915, paragraph 101 and the case-law cited therein).

125. The fact that the applicant would be able to point to a contract awarded by the Commission of the European Communities in a such a specialised market with such a limited number of suppliers, after being selected by Shell and NATO, could well represent a competitive advantage which could have been of benefit to the applicant if it had been awarded the contract.

126. It should also be noted that by failing to be selected, the applicant was placed at a competitive disadvantage in regard to IGN, which obtained the contract, and could use that fact for competitive purposes, although there are serious grounds for thinking that the contract should not have been awarded to it.

127. It would also be very difficult to quantify the value of that competitive advantage and, consequently, to determine with sufficient accuracy the damage resulting from failure to obtain it or to compensate for it fully and completely by an award of damages (see, to that effect, the order in Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission , cited above at paragraph 101, paragraphs 147 and 148).

128. Clearly, the applicant is therefore fully entitled to argue that damages would constitute only an imperfect remedy for the loss it has suffered.

129. The damage relied on by the applicant could thus be regarded as difficult to repair unless operation of the contested decision was suspended.

130. However, in order to justify interim relief, the damage relied on by the applicant must be serious (order in Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission , cited above at paragraph 101, paragraph 149).

131. The loss of an opportunity to be awarded, or to perform, a public contract is inherent in the exclusion from the tendering procedure at issue and cannot be regarded as constituting, in itself, serious damage independently of a concrete assessment of the specific damage alleged in each case (order in Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission , cited above at paragraph 101, paragraph 150).

132. Consequently, the applicant's loss of the opportunity to obtain and perform the contract at issue will constitute serious damage only if the applicant can prove to the requisite legal standard that it would have obtained a sufficiently significant advantage from the award and performance of the contract concluded on the basis of the invitation to tender (order in Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission , cited above at paragraph 101, paragraph 151).

133. A concrete assessment must therefore be made of the various advantages which would accrue to the applicant from the award and performance of the contract concluded on the basis of the invitation to tender.

134. When the applicant is an undertaking, the seriousness of material damage must be assessed in the light, in particular, of the size of the undertaking (see, to that effect, the order in Comos-Tank and Others v Commission , cited above at paragraph 117, paragraphs 26 and 31; and the order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T201/04 R Microsoft v Commission [2004] ECR II4463, paragraph 257). The President considers in this case that documents in the case do not permit him to assess the seriousness of the damage having regard to the size of the undertaking.

135. However, it is possible that the seriousness of the damage should also be assessed on the basis of other criteria, such as the seriousness of the effect on market shares or of the change in the competitive position of the undertaking (see, by analogy, the orders of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T13/99 R Pfizer Animal Health v Council [1999] ECR II1961, paragraph 138; Case T392/02 R Solvay Pharmaceuticals v Council [2003] ECR II1825, paragraph 107; and Case T369/03 R Arizona Chemical and Others v Commission [2004] ECR II205, paragraph 76).

136. As regards, first, financial advantages flowing from performance of the contract, it is clear that failure to perform the contract would deprive the applicant of the income it would have received if the contract had been awarded to it and loss of the opportunity to obtain the income that would have accrued to it under the contract would, having regard to the amounts at stake, seem likely to cause fairly serious damage to the applicant.

137. Secondly, the possibility that the applicant would be able to point to a contract awarded by the Commission of the European Communities in such a specialised market with such a limited number of suppliers could well represent a competitive advantage which could have been of benefit to the applicant if it had been awarded the contract.

138. Even if its precise value is difficult to estimate, the loss of such a competitive advantage is, in the light of the circumstances of the case, likely to cause serious damage to a company such as the applicant which develops very specific software intended for customers who, prima facie,

are limited in number, in a highly competitive market in which there is a limited number of suppliers. That is all the more true inasmuch as IGN, one of its direct competitors, could rely, for competitive purposes, on the fact that it had obtained the contract, even though there are good reasons for thinking that it should not have been awarded to it.

139. It must therefore be concluded, in the light of the particular circumstances of the case and the characteristics of the market on which the applicant and IGN do business, that the damage suffered by the applicant may be regarded as serious.

140. Lastly, the urgency which the applicant may consequently invoke must be taken into consideration a fortiori by the President of the Court because, as is apparent from paragraphs 54 to 84 of this order, the arguments of fact and law put forward by the applicant in the context of its first plea in law appear to be of a particularly serious nature (see, to that effect, the order in Austria v Council , cited above at paragraph 26, paragraph 110).

141. Having regard to all those factors, in order to guarantee the full effectiveness of the definitive future decision and, in particular, to preserve the possibility of obtaining compensation in kind, as the applicant has requested and which may well be the only means of making good, at least partially, the damage suffered, the application for suspension of the operation of the contested decision and of performance of the contract must be granted in so far as the balance of interests is in its favour. That is the matter which must now be considered.

3. The balance of interests

The applicant's arguments

142. The applicant contends, essentially, that the balance of interests is in its favour inasmuch as it has been deprived of the income from a contract which should have been awarded to it and IGN cannot claim protection for interests which arise from a measure which must be regarded as unlawful. The applicant also considers that IGN should not enjoy greater protection than is accorded to it, all the more so as proper application of the rules for awarding contracts should have led the Commission to exclude IGN's tender as not fulfilling the conditions laid down in the Instructions to tenderers.

143. It also argues that relief is required by the public interest in ensuring that the procedures followed by the Community institutions in awarding public contracts comply with the principles of legality, transparency, equal treatment, legitimate expectations and sound administration.

144. The Commission contests that line of argument and contends, in substance, that even if it committed a fault for which it is liable towards the applicant, the contract with IGN remains valid since the hopes and legitimate expectations of that company must be protected, in so far as it was entitled to rely on the apparent lawfulness of the decision awarding the contract to it.

145. The Commission also argues that the contract is particularly important for the development of gas pipeline networks in Central Asia and that suspension of performance of the contract for a lengthy period would have a negative effect in the region, in particular, on the Commission's relations with the Kazakh authorities. It considers that the public interest in the timely performance of the contract should take precedence over the applicant's purely private interests, which can be protected by the judgment in the main proceedings. It stated at the hearing that that factor also played a role in the Commission's decision not to terminate the invitation to tender in order to initiate it again later so that there would be no delay in the performance of the contract and, from a budgetary perspective, so that the credits allocated to the contract would not be lost. In its view, that factor should also be taken into account in assessing the applicant's interest in obtaining suspension, at this time, of the performance of the contract.

146. At the hearing, the Commission also pointed out, in essence, that it wished to avoid legal proceedings being brought against it by IGN, which could occur if the contract which it had entered into with that company was suspended.

Assessment of the President of the Court

147. Where, on an application for interim measures, the judge before whom the applicant claims that it will sustain serious and irreparable harm weighs up the various interests involved, he must consider whether the annulment of the contested decision by the court dealing with the main application would make it possible to reverse the situation that would have been brought about in the absence of interim measures and, conversely, whether suspension of the operation of that decision would be such as to prevent its being fully effective in the event of the main application being dismissed (see, to that effect, the order of the President of the Court of Justice in Joined Cases C182/03 R and C 217/03 R Belgium and Forum 187 v Commission [2003] ECR I6887, paragraph 142, and the order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Pfizer Animal Health v Council , cited above at paragraph 135, paragraph 167 and the case-law cited therein).

148. Account must be taken, first of all, of the applicant's interest in suspension of the operation of the decision awarding the contract to IGN, secondly, of IGN's interest in performing the contract and thirdly of the public interest, and the Commission's interest, in the performance of the contract.

149. Firstly, the President considers that continued performance of the contract awarded to IGN would cause the applicant to sustain serious and irreparable harm (see paragraphs 104 to 140, above).

150. Secondly, there are serious grounds for believing that IGN's tender did not comply with the specifications laid down in the Instructions to tenderers and should have been rejected by the Commission. Contrary to the latter's contention at the hearing, the lawfulness of the contested decision and the lawfulness of the contract entered into on the basis of it are not separate from each other; if the contested decision is annulled by the Court in the main proceedings and performance of the contract is suspended, the annulment decision could lead the Commission to terminate its contract with IGN.

151. Accordingly, IGN, as the Commission has pointed out, would probably be entitled to sue the Commission for damages arising out of the fault it had committed, bringing their action in the Belgian courts, which, according to the Commission, have jurisdiction under a choiceofjurisdiction clause in the contract. It must therefore be concluded that IGN's interests could be protected by legal proceedings.

152. Consequently, the balance of interests cannot be in IGN's favour and to the applicant's disadvantage. There are serious grounds for believing that IGN's tender did not comply with the specifications laid down in the invitation to tender, whereas the Commission does not deny that the applicant's tender did comply with those specifications. Under those circumstances, IGN's interest in carrying on with the contract cannot take precedence over the applicant's interest in being awarded that contract, which would be possible, at least in part, if the contract was suspended until judgment has been delivered in the main proceedings.

153. Thirdly, the Commission has not substantiated its claim that further performance of the contract cannot be delayed if good relations are to be maintained with the Kazakh authorities as the Commission has submitted no evidence on that subject to the President.

154. Moreover, the arguments put forward by the Commission at the hearing seem to indicate that it was aware that the award of the contract to IGN could, or would, cause difficulties but that, for budgetary reasons, it preferred not to act on that possibility but to take the risk of being sued subsequently by tenderers whose bids had been improperly rejected.

155. Even supposing that budgetary considerations could justify such a course of action, the Commission has not shown that such considerations which, by its own account, lead it to conclude the contract with IGN before 31 December 2005 so as not to lose the credits available to it for that purpose, are such as to make it impossible to suspend performance of the contract at this point in time.

156. The Commission also cannot rely on its interest in the continued performance of the contract in order to avoid legal action by IGN in support of a claim that the President should refuse to accord judicial protection to the applicant.

157. Accordingly, in the particular circumstances of the present case, the grant of interim measures is justified and adequately meets the need to guarantee effective provisional legal protection to the applicant.

Form of order sought

Annul the European Commission decision contained in the letter of 2 March 2006 from the Procurement Co-ordinator, Directorate D/3 of the EuropeAid Co-operation Office, concerning the project EuropeAid/122078/C/S/Multi, entitled 'Supply of a Pipeline Network Information System to the Central Asia Gas companies (Kazakhstan, Kyrgystan, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan)';

Determine the Commission's non-contractual liability with regard to the adoption of the decision referred to above;

Order the Commission to pay compensation for the loss caused to the applicant assessed at EUR 492 024.00 plus interest for late payment from the date of the judgment's publication;

Order the Commission to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicant took part in the tendering procedure in respect of the project EuropeAid/122078/C/S/Multi, entitled 'Innovation to tender for Supply of a Pipeline Network Information System to the Central Asia Gas companies (Kazakhstan, Kyrgystan, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan)', which is part of the TACIS Programme 2002[1]. By letter of 2 March 2006, the Commission notified the applicant that its tender had been unsuccessful because it was not the lowest and that the contract had been awarded to a competing undertaking. In this action, the applicant seeks annulment of the decision contained in that letter and compensation for the loss which it claims to have sustained as a result of the adoption of the contested decision.

The applicant relies on a number of pleas to dispute that decision.

First of all, it submits that in adopting the contested decision the Commission made major errors of assessment and that it contravened the Instructions to tenderers, rendering null and void the award of the contract to the successful tenderer. Under that plea, the applicant contends that the proposal accepted by the Commission does not comply with the technical specifications in the contract documents. It also criticises the Commission for extending the period for the submission of tenders and for having asked the applicant's competitor to change its tender in the light of the Corrigendum to the tender dossier, after the opening of tenders, which allowed the ultimately successful tenderer to amend its tender so as to make it the best o

defendant,

APPLICATION for annulment of decisions of the Commission of 6 and 27 December 2005 rejecting the tender submitted by the applicant in the framework of the restricted invitation to tender procedure aimed at concluding a framework contract for the delivery, exploitation and maintenance of a secured Trans European communication infrastructure included in the contract 'Secured Trans European Services for Telematics between administrations (s-TESTA)' (lot 1) (2004/S 137-116821) as well as the decision to award the contract to another tenderer,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE FIFTH CHAMBER OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

makes the following

Order

1 By letter lodged at the Court Registry on 24 April 2006, the applicant informed the Court of First Instance, in accordance with Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, that it wishes to discontinue the proceedings and that the parties have come to an agreement in relation to costs, according to which the defendant is to pay the applicant's costs.

2 By letter lodged at the Court Registry on 8 May 2006, the defendant indicated to the Court of First Instance that it has no objection to the request to discontinue the proceedings. As to the matter of costs, the defendant confirmed its acceptance of the fact that the withdrawal of the application for annulment is justified by its conduct and, thus, that the costs of the proceedings will be adjudicated in accordance with the last sentence of the first subparagraph of Article 87(5) of the Rules of Procedure.

3 By order of 2 June 2006, the President of the Court of First Instance ordered the removal of the interim measures proceedings from the register and reserved the decision as to costs for the decision in the main action.

On those grounds,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE FIFTH CHAMBER

hereby orders:

(Case T-9/06)

Language of the case: English

Parties

Applicant: Equant Belgium SA (Brussels, Belgium) [represented by: T. Müller-Ibold, T. Graf, lawyers]

Defendant: Commission of the European Communities

Form of order sought

Annul

(i) the decision of the European Commission dated December 6, 2005 to suspend the signing of the contract identified in the Commission's earlier decision of November 3, 2005 relating to the award of the contract pursuant to the following procurement procedure: "Restricted invitation to tender No ENTR/04/011 - Lot 1 Secured Trans European Services for Telematics between administrations (s-TESTA)";

(ii) the decision of the European Commission dated December 27, 2005 to reject the Offer submitted by Equant/HP in the framework of the Restricted invitation to tender No ENTR/04/011 - Lot 1 "Secured Trans European Services for Telematics between administrations (s-TESTA)" and to tacitly withdraw its decision in favour of Equant/HP dated November 3, 2005; and grant any other relief that the Court considers appropriate in the circumstances; and, in any event; order the Commission to pay Equant's legal costs and other fees and expenses incurred in connection with this application.

(iii) the decision of the European Commission communicated to the Applicant by the same letter of December 27, 2005 to select another tenderer for the award of the contract in the framework of the Restricted invitation to tender No. ENTR/04/011 - Lot 1 "Secured Trans European Services for Telematics between administrations (s-TESTA)";

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicant, in conjunction with another company, submitted an offer to the Commission in the context of a procurement procedure relevant to the Commission's contract notice No. 2004/S 137-116821 "Lot 1 - Secured Trans European Services for Telematics between administrations (s-TESTA)". By letter dated 3 November 2005 the Commission informed the applicant that its joint offer had been selected for the award of the contract. However, by letter dated 6 December 2005 the Commission informed the applicant that it had decided to suspend the signing of the contract, awaiting further examination of the offers. By a further letter, dated 27 December 2005, the Commission informed the applicant that it had decided to reject the applicant's joint offer on the grounds that it did not conform to the tendering specifications and to award the contract to another tenderer.

In support of its application to annul the above decisions, the applicant first of all disputes in detail the Commission's findings that certain components of its offer, more particularly its waiver of one-off installation charges for an initial two-year period, the inclusion of a five-year discount period in preparing prices and its volume discount on the monthly charges for turnkey access points, were contrary to the specifications. The applicant's position is that in identifying an alleged incompatibility the Commission committed a manifest error of assessment and that the contested decisions are unlawful.

The applicant further submits that the Commission breached the principle of transparency by relying on an unsupported interpretation of its tendering specifications and that it breached Regulation 2342/2002 as well as the principles of equality, proportionality and good administration by failing to ask for clarifications or apply less restrictive remedies. The applicant finally alleges that the Commission also violated the principle of legitimate expectations as well as the rights of defence and the duty to state reasons for its decisions.

Arrêt

1 Par sa requête, la Commission des Communautés européennes demande à la Cour de constater que, en raison de la sélection par Dimosia Epicheirisi Ilektrismou AE (Compagnie publique d'électricité, ci-après «DEI»), lors de la phase finale de la procédure d'appel d'offres pour la construction et la mise en service d'une centrale thermoélectrique à Lavrio, de deux entreprises qui ne satisfaisaient pas aux conditions spécifiées dans l'avis de marché et les cahiers des charges, la République hellénique a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de l'article 4, paragraphe 2, de la directive 93/38/CEE du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés dans les secteurs de l'eau, de l'énergie, des transports et des télécommunications (JO L 199, p. 84), ainsi qu'aux principes de transparence et d'égalité de traitement.

«1. La présente directive s'applique aux entités adjudicatrices:

a) qui sont des pouvoirs publics ou des entreprises publiques et qui exercent une des activités visées au paragraphe 2;

2. Les activités relevant du champ d'application de la présente directive sont les suivantes:

a) la mise à disposition ou l'exploitation de réseaux fixes destinés à fournir un service au public dans le domaine de la production, du transport ou de la distribution:

ii) d'électricité

[…]

6. Les entités adjudicatrices énumérées aux annexes I à X répondent aux critères énoncés ci-dessus. […]»

3 Aux termes de l'article 4 de cette directive:

2. Les entités adjudicatrices veillent à ce qu'il n'y ait pas de discrimination entre fournisseurs, entrepreneurs ou prestataires de services.

[…]»

4 L'article 14 de la même directive prévoit:

«1. La présente directive s'applique:

b) aux marchés passés par des entités adjudicatrices qui exercent des activités auxquelles se réfèrent les annexes I, II, VII, VIII et IX, lorsque la valeur estimée hors TVA de ces marchés égale ou dépasse:

iii) l'équivalent en écus de 5 000 000 DTS en ce qui concerne les marchés de travaux;

[…]»

5 L'annexe II de la directive vise la production, le transport ou la distribution d'électricité et mentionne DEI en tant qu'entité adjudicatrice.

Les antécédents et la procédure précontentieuse

6 Le 3 février 2003, DEI a lancé un appel d'offres pour la construction et la mise en service, à Lavrio, d'une centrale thermoélectrique d'une puissance nette de 360 à 400 MW utilisant comme combustible le gaz naturel.

7 Ce projet avait pour objet la conception, l'étude, l'industrialisation, la construction et la mise à l'essai de la centrale (composée d'une turbine à gaz et de ses appareils auxiliaires, d'une chaudière de récupération de chaleur, d'une turbine à vapeur et de ses appareils auxiliaires ainsi que de l'indispensable générateur) dans les usines de construction, le transport et l'entreposage des équipements sur le site du projet, le montage, l'installation et les essais de la centrale sur place, la mise en service de l'équipement et la fourniture de pièces de rechange (en dehors de la turbine à gaz qui devait faire l'objet d'un contrat de maintenance à long terme). Le budget du projet soumis à adjudication était de 190 000 000 euros.

8 L'article 2, paragraphe 4, de l'invitation à soumissionner imposait notamment la condition suivante aux soumissionnaires:

«L'offre portant sur le contrat de maintenance à long terme doit provenir exclusivement du constructeur de la turbine à gaz, ce dernier pouvant, en sa qualité de constructeur, soit participer au groupement ou au consortium qui soumet l'offre relative au projet, soit être le constructeur désigné dans la même offre.»

9 L'article 3, paragraphe 1, point 1, de l'invitation à soumissionner prévoyait:

«Le candidat doit posséder une expérience dans la conception et la gestion de l'exécution de projets (project management), selon la méthode 'clé en main', de centrales thermiques de production électrique».

10 L'article 3, paragraphe 2, in fine, de l'invitation à soumissionner disposait:

11 L'invitation à soumissionner était accompagnée d'un cahier intitulé «Lignes directrices pour le contrat de maintenance à long terme (contrat de maintenance) pour la turbine à gaz et ses annexes» (ci-après les «lignes directrices pour le contrat de maintenance à long terme»), lequel prévoyait notamment:

«Bidder must include in his Offer a proposal coming from the Gas Turbine Manufacturer, for a long term maintenance agreement of the Gas Turbine and the relevant auxiliary equipment (as specific in the List Material and Prices) for twelve years of operation. […]

The Gas Turbine Manufacturer (or his Authorized Agent) shall be here after called 'Maintenance Contractor'.

1. General Terms

1.1. The Maintenance Contract shall be signed by [DEI] and the GT's manufacturer or his Authorized Agent within six months as from the date of signing of the Contract.

Le constructeur de la turbine à gaz (ou son agent autorisé) est dénommé ci-après le 'contractant de maintenance'.

1. Conditions générales

1.1. Le contrat de maintenance sera signé par [DEI] et le constructeur de la turbine à gaz ou son agent autorisé dans un délai de six mois à compter de la date de signature du contrat.

12 Quatre candidats ont participé à la procédure: la société METKA, le consortium AEGEK-AKTOR, la société ALSTOM et la société VA TECH HYDRO. Lors de la phase finale de l'appel d'offres, à savoir à l'ouverture des offres financières, seuls restaient en lice METKA et le consortium AEGEK-AKTOR. Le projet a finalement été attribué à METKA.

13 À la suite d'une plainte émanant d'une entreprise qui, après avoir envisagé de participer à cet appel d'offres, a finalement renoncé à le faire, la Commission a, le 9 juillet 2004, adressé une lettre de mise en demeure concernant ledit appel d'offres à la République hellénique, qui a répondu à cette dernière par lettre du 17 septembre 2004.

14 N'ayant pas été convaincue par cette réponse, la Commission a adressé, le 22 décembre 2004, un avis motivé à cet État membre, dans lequel elle faisait valoir que, par l'admission de deux entreprises qui ne satisfaisaient pas aux conditions spécifiées dans l'invitation à soumissionner, ledit État membre avait manqué à ses obligations découlant de l'article 4, paragraphe 2, de la directive ainsi que des principes d'égalité de traitement et de transparence. La Commission invitait la République hellénique à se conformer à cet avis motivé dans un délai de deux mois à compter de sa réception.

15 La République hellénique ne s'étant pas conformée à cet avis motivé, la Commission a introduit le présent recours.

Sur le recours

Sur le premier grief

Argumentation des parties

16 Le consortium AEGEK-AKTOR est composé des sociétés AEGEK et AKTOR. La Commission soutient qu'AKTOR, n'ayant jamais participé à la construction d'une centrale thermoélectrique, ne possédait pas l'expérience en matière de conception et de gestion de l'exécution de marchés relatifs à des centrales thermoélectriques selon la méthode «clé en main» exigée par l'invitation à soumissionner.

17 Le gouvernement hellénique ne conteste pas cette allégation.

18 Quant à la question de savoir si AEGEK possédait l'expérience stipulée dans l'invitation à soumissionner, la Commission fait valoir que, pour être considéré comme remplissant effectivement cette condition, un candidat au marché devait posséder l'expérience requise, soit en ayant lui-même construit une centrale thermoélectrique «clé en main», soit en ayant participé, en tant que membre d'un consortium, à l'exécution d'un marché en vue de la construction d'une telle centrale, à condition d'avoir été responsable de la conception et de la gestion du projet, à savoir de la coordination de tous les autres membres du consortium. La circonstance qu'AEGEK a participé à un projet similaire en tant que simple membre d'un consortium ne suffirait pas à conférer à celle-ci l'expérience nécessaire.

20 Le gouvernement hellénique rétorque qu'aucune des conditions imposées par l'invitation à soumissionner, telle qu'elle est formulée, ne permet d'inférer l'existence d'une exigence selon laquelle le membre du consortium concerné devrait être le chef de projet, c'est-à-dire le responsable de toute la coordination des autres membres ainsi que de la conception et de l'application du calendrier d'exécution. La Commission imposerait ainsi une condition qui ne figure pas dans l'invitation à soumissionner. Ce gouvernement affirme que l'examen des justificatifs de l'expérience d'AEGEK révèle que cette société a participé à deux autres projets de grande envergure de DEI, comportant des exigences importantes quant à l'administration et à la gestion de marchés. Des représentants de cette société auraient participé sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres participants à l'équipe d'administration qui coordonnait les opérations techniques des membres dudit consortium, préparait et suivait le calendrier d'exécution, et décidait des rectifications nécessaires qu'il convenait d'y apporter. Le gouvernement hellénique en déduit que l'offre d'AEGEK était pleinement étayée du point de vue du critère de l'expérience.

21 Par ailleurs, ledit gouvernement fait valoir que le contrat de consortium relatif à la centrale de Komotini doit être considéré comme confidentiel et que la Commission n'est pas recevable à en faire état dans la présente procédure.

22 Il convient de rappeler qu'il n'est pas nécessaire qu'un critère de sélection, tel que, en l'espèce, celui relatif à l'expérience, soit rempli par chacun des membres d'un consortium soumissionnaire et qu'il suffit que l'un des membres du consortium y satisfasse (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 14 avril 1994, Ballast Nedam Groep, C-389/92, Rec. p. I-1289, point 13, repris, postérieurement à la date des faits en cause dans le présent litige, à l'article 54, paragraphe 6, de la directive 2004/17/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés dans les secteurs de l'eau, de l'énergie, des transports et des services postaux (JO L 134, p. 1).

23 Puisqu'il est constant qu'AKTOR ne satisfaisait pas à ce critère, le présent grief revient à poser la question de savoir s'il était possible de considérer qu'AEGEK y satisfaisait.

24 L'article 3, paragraphe 1, point 1, de l'invitation à soumissionner n'admet pas une simple participation à l'exécution des projets du type visé, mais précise que l'expérience acquise doit porter sur la conception et la gestion de l'exécution de tels projets. Il était donc exigé des candidats qu'ils aient planifié et géré les activités des entreprises participant à l'exécution de projets de ce type.

25 Cette interprétation est confirmée par l'ajout de la précision «project management», en langue anglaise. Il ressort de cet ajout que l'expérience demandée est bien celle acquise dans la gestion de projets en tant que telle.

26 En revanche, l'article 3, paragraphe 1, point 1, de l'invitation à soumissionner ne stipulait pas qu'une telle expérience devait nécessairement avoir été acquise en tant que chef de projet.

27 Conformément à ce texte, il était loisible à l'entité adjudicatrice de prendre en compte l'expérience acquise dans la gestion de projets relatifs à la construction de centrales thermoélectriques selon la méthode «clé en main», que cette expérience ait été acquise ou non en tant que chef de projet.

28 Il convient de reconnaître à l'entité adjudicatrice un certain pouvoir d'appréciation dans l'évaluation des qualifications des soumissionnaires. En l'espèce, la question de savoir quelle est l'expérience que chaque type d'opération a pu procurer à chacun des soumissionnaires ne saurait faire l'objet d'une analyse générique, mais doit être vérifiée eu égard aux caractéristiques de chaque cas particulier.

29 Il ressort du dossier que l'expérience dont se prévalait AEGEK était la suivante: elle aurait participé à la construction, pour DEI, de centrales électriques à Agios Dimitrios et à Komotini, sa participation dans la construction de la dernière de ces centrales se serait élevée à 22 %, ou à 23,61 % abstraction faite des pièces de rechange fournies. En outre, des représentants d'AEGEK auraient fait partie, sur un pied d'égalité, de l'équipe gestionnaire du projet de Komotini qui coordonnait les tâches techniques des différents membres du consortium, préparait le calendrier de mise en œuvre, en assurait le suivi et décidait des corrections nécessaires qui devaient y être apportées.

31 En revanche, la circonstance, si elle est avérée, que des responsables d'une entreprise membre d'un consortium aient participé aux activités de planification et de gestion de l'exécution du marché serait pertinente pour établir que l'entreprise à laquelle ils appartiennent a pu de ce fait acquérir une expérience telle que celle requise par l'invitation à soumissionner en cause.

32 Il convient d'examiner si, en l'espèce, une telle circonstance est établie par les éléments de preuve fournis.

37 La Commission n'ayant pas apporté d'éléments de preuve suffisants à l'appui de son premier grief, il convient de rejeter celui-ci comme non fondé.

Sur le second grief

38 La Commission fait valoir que l'offre de METKA, prévoyant l'installation d'une turbine fabriquée par l'entreprise General Electric, ne comportait pas d'offre relative au contrat de maintenance à long terme provenant directement de cette entreprise. La Commission estime que, dans la mesure où General Electric n'a pas soumis elle-même d'offre de maintenance à long terme, l'offre de METKA aurait dû être rejetée comme non conforme à l'une des conditions obligatoires figurant dans l'invitation à soumissionner.

39 Le gouvernement hellénique souligne que l'article 2, paragraphe 4, de l'invitation à soumissionner exige seulement que l'offre portant sur le contrat de maintenance à long terme «provienne» du constructeur de la turbine, et permet que cette offre soit présentée par une autre entreprise habilitée à cet effet, en l'espèce METKA. L'article 2, paragraphe 4, de l'invitation à soumissionner aurait été respecté. En effet, l'offre de maintenance proviendrait du constructeur désigné dans l'offre relative au projet, cette conclusion n'étant pas susceptible d'être modifiée par la circonstance que l'offre a été présentée par METKA. En effet, l'offre de METKA qui contenait également l'offre relative à la maintenance de la turbine à gaz aurait été soumise à DEI accompagnée d'une lettre d'habilitation de General Electric International Inc., datée du 11 juillet 2003 et rédigée dans les termes suivants:

«Dear Sirs,

With reference to METKA SA participation to the above mentioned tender, we wish to confirm that

a. We in conjunction with GE Energy Parts Inc., have made an offer to METKA to provide parts and services for the maintenance of the General Electric GT and its auxiliaries which are provided by METKA for the Project, and

b. In case METKA is awarded by [DEI] as Contractor for the execution of the said Project, METKA SA is authorized to accept and utilize our offer to sign and execute a Long Term Agreement (Maintenance Agreement) for the GT and its auxiliaries, according to the requirements of the article 2 […] 'Invitation' and […] 'Guide Lines for the Long term Maintenance Agreement (Maintenance Agreement) for the GT and its auxiliaries'.»

Nous référant à la participation de METKA à l'offre mentionnée ci-dessus, nous souhaitons confirmer que:

a. conjointement avec GE Energy Parts Inc., nous avons fait une offre à METKA concernant la fourniture de pièces et de services pour la maintenance de la turbine à gaz General Electric et de ses annexes, qui sont fournis par METKA pour le projet et

b. si METKA est admise par [DEI] comme partie contractante pour l'exécution du projet susmentionné, METKA SA est autorisée à accepter et à utiliser notre offre pour signer et exécuter un contrat à long terme (contrat de maintenance) pour la turbine à gaz et ses annexes, conformément aux prescriptions de l'article 2 […] 'Invitation' et […] 'Lignes directrices pour le contrat de maintenance à long terme (contrat de maintenance) de la turbine à gaz et ses annexes'.»]

40 Il apparaît que l'objet de l'article 2, paragraphe 4, de l'invitation à soumissionner consiste à garantir la maintenance de la turbine à gaz par son constructeur postérieurement à l'achèvement de la construction de la centrale, que ce constructeur soit ou non membre du consortium qui a introduit l'offre retenue.

42 Dans ce contexte, le mot «exclusivement» qui figure dans la disposition en question doit être compris comme indiquant que la responsabilité de la maintenance de la turbine doit reposer sur le seul constructeur et non pas sur des tiers. En revanche, ce mot ne doit pas être interprété comme imposant que la garantie provienne «directement» du constructeur de la turbine. Au vu de l'objet de cette disposition telle qu'elle vient d'être dégagée dans les points précédents du présent arrêt, il est indifférent que l'offre de maintenance provienne directement du constructeur ou qu'elle soit présentée par l'intermédiaire du consortium qui a introduit l'offre relative au projet.

43 Cette interprétation est confirmée par les termes des lignes directrices pour le contrat de maintenance à long terme qui accompagnaient, en l'espèce, l'invitation à soumissionner. Il ressort de ce document que le contrat de maintenance pouvait être signé par l'agent autorisé du constructeur de la turbine à gaz. Il s'ensuit que, a fortiori, l'offre de maintenance dudit constructeur pouvait être présentée par un soumissionnaire agissant en tant qu'agent autorisé de ce dernier.

44 Il en découle que, en l'espèce, il était loisible à l'entité adjudicatrice d'accepter qu'une offre de maintenance émanant du constructeur d'une turbine soit déposée par l'intermédiaire du consortium qui avait désigné ce constructeur dans son offre.

45 En ce qui concerne la lettre de General Electric International Inc. du 11 juillet 2003 transmise par METKA, celle-ci comporte notamment l'affirmation selon laquelle METKA est autorisée à accepter et à utiliser l'offre conjointe de General Electric International Inc. et de GE Energy Parts Inc. pour signer et exécuter un contrat de maintenance à long terme conformément aux prescriptions de l'article 2 de l'invitation à soumissionner et des lignes directrices pour le contrat de maintenance à long terme. Cet engagement paraît suffisamment clair pour permettre à l'entité adjudicatrice, dans l'exercice du pouvoir d'appréciation qu'il convient de lui reconnaître, de considérer les documents soumis par METKA comme constituant une offre de maintenance conforme à l'article 2, paragraphe 4, de l'invitation à soumissionner.

46 Par conséquent, il convient de rejeter le second grief comme non fondé.

Sur les principes de transparence et d'égalité de traitement

47 Le gouvernement hellénique rappelle qu'il ressort d'une jurisprudence constante de la Cour que, lorsque des dispositions générales ou des principes généraux, tels que les principes d'égalité de traitement et de transparence, sont mis en œuvre par la voie de dispositions particulières du droit communautaire (telles que, en l'espèce, l'article 4, paragraphe 2, de la directive 93/38), toute réglementation nationale qui est incompatible avec ces dispositions générales ou principes généraux est également incompatible avec ces dispositions particulières. Il en résulterait que ces dispositions générales ou principes généraux ne peuvent s'appliquer de façon autonome que dans des situations pour lesquelles le droit communautaire ne prévoit pas d'interdiction spécifique.

48 Dès lors, le recours de la Commission visant à faire constater, outre la violation de la directive, celle des principes généraux d'égalité de traitement et de transparence devrait être rejeté comme non fondé en tant qu'il concerne ces deux principes.

50 S'agissant du principe de transparence, il convient de constater que la Commission n'indique pas en quoi les faits reprochés à la République hellénique dans le cadre du présent recours peuvent constituer une violation de ce principe. En effet, la prise en considération d'une offre non conforme à l'invitation à soumissionner est un acte qui peut être considéré sous l'angle de l'égalité de traitement des soumissionnaires, mais qui en soi n'est pas de nature à contrevenir au principe de transparence. À cet égard, la présente affaire doit être distinguée de celle qui est à l'origine de l'arrêt du 25 avril 1996, Commission/Belgique (C-87/94, Rec. p. I-2043, notamment points 54 à 60 et 74), dans la mesure où l'atteinte aux principes de transparence constatée résultait en substance de la prise en compte par le pouvoir adjudicateur d'une modification apportée aux offres initiales de l'un des soumissionnaires. Dans la présente affaire, en revanche, est en cause une condition formelle d'admission d'une offre qui n'est pas susceptible d'altérer la transparence de la procédure de passation du marché.

51 En ce qui concerne le principe d'égalité de traitement, il ressort des points 22 à 37 et 40 à 46 du présent arrêt que les deux griefs reprochés à la République hellénique n'ont pas été établis par la Commission, que ce soit en tant qu'ils sont tirés de la violation de l'article 4, paragraphe 2, de la directive ou de celle du principe général d'égalité de traitement. En tout état de cause, à supposer même que la Cour ait constaté une violation de l'article 4, paragraphe 2, de la directive, il n'y aurait pas lieu de se référer au principe général d'égalité dont cette disposition constitue une expression spécifique (voir, dans ce sens, arrêt du 31 janvier 1991, Commission/France, C-244/89, Rec. p. I-163, point 34).

52 Au vu des considérations qui précèdent, il y a lieu de rejeter le recours de la Commission.

Sur les dépens

53 Aux termes de l'article 69, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure, toute partie qui succombe est condamnée aux dépens, s'il est conclu dans ce sens. La République hellénique ayant conclu à la condamnation de la Commission et cette dernière ayant succombé en ses moyens, il convient de la condamner aux dépens.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (troisième chambre) déclare et arrête:

1) Le recours est rejeté.

2) La Commission des Communautés européennes est condamnée aux dépens.

Action brought on 15 November 2005 by the Commission of the European Communities against the Hellenic Republic

(Case C-399/05)

(Language of the case: Greek)

An action against the Hellenic Republic was brought before the Court of Justice of the European Communities on 15 November 2005 by the Commission of the European Communities, represented by M. Patakia, Commission Legal Adviser, and A.X.P. Lewis, of the Commission's Legal Service, with an address for service in Luxembourg.

The Commission claims that the Court should:

- declare that, because the Dimosia Epikhirisi Ilektrismou (Public Power Corporation; 'DEI') admitted to the final stage of the tender procedure which it had opened for the construction and bringing into operation of a thermal power station in Lavrio two companies which did not meet the relevant conditions in the invitation to tender and the tender documents, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 4(2) of Directive 93/38/EC [1] and under the principles of transparency and of equal treatment of tenderers;

- order the Hellenic Republic to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

- The Commission received a complaint relating to the carrying out of, and in particular to the failure to observe tender conditions in, a DEI tendering procedure for the construction and bringing into operation of a thermal power station in Lavrio.

- In light of the Court of Justice's case-law, the Commission submits that, for reasons of equality and transparency, DEI was obliged to reject the tenders of companies which did not meet conditions that DEI itself laid down in the invitation to tender and in the specification, that is to say possession of experience in the planning and management of turn-key contracts and the offer of maintenance of the gas turbine exclusively by its manufacturer.

- The Commission considers that the content of those conditions is clear and that they should have been observed by DEI however strict they may be, so as to ensure equal treatment not only of the tenderers but also of interested parties who could have taken part in the tender procedure in question had they known that the contracting authority would adhere to conditions other than those which it itself had laid down by means of the invitation to tender.

- Also, in the Commission's submission, the need for swift award of the contracts in question, which is invoked by the Greek authorities, does not justify the failure to observe during the tender procedure conditions which the contracting authority itself laid down.

- The Commission considers that the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 4(2) of Directive 93/38/EC and under the principles of transparency and of equal treatment of tenderers.

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that, owing to the fact that the Presidenza del Consiglio dei Ministri - Dipartimento per la protezione civile - Ufficio del Commissario delegato per l'emergenza rifiuti e la tutela delle acque in Sicilia (i) initiated the procedure for the conclusion of agreements concerning the use of that part of municipal waste produced in the municipalities of the Region of Sicily and remaining after the collection of selected material and (ii) concluded those agreements, without following the procedures laid down by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001, and, in particular, without publishing the appropriate contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities , the Italian Republic failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive, in particular under Articles 11, 15 and 17 thereof;

2. Orders the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

1. By its application, the Commission of the European Communities asks the Court of Justice to declare that, owing to the fact that the Presidenza del Consiglio dei Ministri - Dipartimento per la protezione civile - Ufficio del Commissario delegato per l'emergenza rifiuti e la tutela delle acque in Sicilia (Office of the Prime Minister, Civil Defence Department, Office of the Commissioner for Waste Emergencies and Water Protection in Sicily) (i) initiated the procedure for the conclusion of agreements concerning the use of that part of municipal waste produced in the municipalities of the Region of Sicily and remaining after the collection of selected material and (ii) concluded those agreements, without following the procedures laid down by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended by Commission Directive 2001/78/EC of 13 September 2001 (OJ 2001 L 285, p. 1) (Directive 92/50'), and, in particular, without publishing the appropriate contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities , the Italian Republic failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive, in particular under Articles 11, 15 and 17 thereof.

Legal context

Community legislation

2. Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50 states:

(a) public service contracts shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority...'

3. Article 8 of Directive 92/50 provides:

Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI.'

4. In Title V of Directive 92/50, Article 15(2) provides:

Contracting authorities who wish to award a public service contract by open, restricted or, under the conditions laid down in Article 11, negotiated procedure, shall make known their intention by means of a notice.'

5. Under Article 17 of Directive 92/50:

1. The notices shall be drawn up in accordance with the models set out in Annexes III and IV and shall specify the information requested in those models...

4. The notices referred to in Article 15(2) and (3) shall be published in full in the Official Journal of the European Communities and in the TED data bank in their original language. A summary of the important elements of each notice shall be published in the official languages of the Communities, the text in the original language alone being authentic.

6. Annex I A to Directive 92/50, entitled Services within the meaning of Article 8', includes inter alia Category No 16 Sewage and refuse disposal services; sanitation and similar services' with the CPC reference number 94.

7. Annex III to Directive 92/50 contains inter alia models of prior information notices' and contract notices'.

National legislation

8. Article 4 of Order No 2983 of the Prime Minister of 31 May 1999 (GURI No 132 of 8 June 1999), as amended by Order No 3190 of 22 March 2002 (Order No 2983/99'), provides:

The Commissioner, the President of the Region of Sicily, after hearing the Ministry of the Environment and the Protection of Natural Resources, shall conclude agreements with a duration of up to 20 years concerning the use of that part of municipal waste produced in the municipalities in the Region of Sicily and remaining after the collection of selected material... For that purpose, the Commissioner, the President of the Region of Sicily, shall designate the industrial operators on the basis of transparent public procedures, in derogation from the Community tendering procedures...'

9. The words in derogation from the Community tendering procedures' which appeared in that provision were repealed by Order No 3334 of the Prime Minister of 23 January 2004 (GURI No 26 of 2 February 2004).

The facts of the case and the prelitigation procedure

10. By Order No 670 of 5 August 2002, the President of the Region of Sicily, acting in his capacity as the Commissario delegato per l'emergenza rifiuti e la tutela delle acque in Sicilia (the Commissioner for Waste Emergencies and Water Protection in Sicily, the Commissioner') and pursuant to Article 4 of Order No 2983/99, approved a document entitled Public notice on the conclusion of agreements for the use of that part of municipal waste produced in the Region of Sicily and remaining after the collection of selected material' (the notice at issue'). The notice at issue contains three annexes. Annex A lays down guidelines concerning the use of that part of municipal waste produced in municipalities in the Region of Sicily and remaining after the collection of selected material'. Annex B is entitled Financial plan summary' and Annex C comprises a model agreement for use with the appointed operators (the model agreement').

11. On 7 August 2002, a notice concerning the abovementioned agreements, based on the model notice entitled prior information notice' in Annex III to Directive 92/50, was sent to the Publications Office. Publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities (OJ 2002 S 158, electronic version) subsequently occurred on 16 August 2002.

12. The notice at issue itself was published in the Gazzetta ufficiale della Regione Siciliana (Official Journal of the Region of Sicily) on 9 August 2002.

13. The Commission, having received a complaint regarding that procedure, sent a letter to the Italian authorities on 15 November 2002 requesting information, to which those authorities replied by letter on 2 May 2003.

14. On 17 June 2003, four agreements, which were based in essence on the model agreement, were concluded between the Commissioner and Tifeo Energia Ambiente Soc. coop. arl, Palermo Energia Ambiente Soc. coop. arl, Sicil Power SpA and Platani Energia Ambiente Soc. coop. arl respectively (the agreements at issue').

15. On 17 October 2003, the Commission, in accordance with Article 226 EC, sent a formal notice to the Italian Republic alleging that it had infringed Directive 92/50, in particular Articles 11, 15 and 17 thereof. On 9 July 2004, dissatisfied with the reply of 1 April 2004 which it received to that formal notice, the Commission sent a reasoned opinion to the Italian Republic calling on it to bring an end to the alleged failure to fulfil obligations within a twomonth timelimit.

16. In their reply of 24 September 2004 to that reasoned opinion, the Italian authorities denied the infringement.

17. Not satisfied with this reply, the Commission decided to bring the present action.

The action

Arguments of the parties

18. The Commission maintains that the agreements at issue are public service contracts within the meaning of Article 1 of Directive 92/50 but they were not concluded in compliance with the publicity requirements of that directive. It claims, in particular, that instead of using the contract notice form required by Annex III to that directive for the award of public contracts, the notice published in the Official Journal of the European Communities was based on the prior information' form, which appears in the same annex. Nonnational service providers were moreover discriminated against when compared to national operators who had the benefit of a detailed contract notice published in the Gazetta ufficiale della Regione Siciliana.

19. According to the Commission, the agreements at issue cannot be classified, as the Italian Republic maintains, as service concessions falling outside the scope of Directive 92/50. The operators' remuneration does not lie in their right to exploit for payment their own service by receiving revenue from users, whilst assuming all the risks linked to that exploitation.

20. First, in the present case, the operator's remuneration consists in a royalty directly paid to it by the Commissioner the amount of which is fixed by the agreements at issue in euros per tonne of waste transferred to the operator by the municipalities. The income which the operator is able to derive additionally from the sale of electrical energy produced during the thermal treatment of waste does not constitute a part of its remuneration.

21. Secondly, the operator does not assume the risk connected with the exploitation, in particular since the agreements at issue guarantee it the transfer of a minimum annual quantity of waste whilst providing for the annual adjustment of the amount of the royalty in order to take account of trends in the costs for which it is responsible. Moreover, those agreements provide for an adjustment of the royalty if the annual quantity of waste actually transferred falls below 95% or exceeds 115% of the guaranteed minimum quantity, in order to ensure the economic and financial equilibrium of the operator.

22. The Italian Government maintains, on the contrary, that the agreements at issue constitute, as is clear particularly from the national caselaw, service concessions which are outside the scope of Directive 92/50.

23. First, such contracts are intended to delegate authority for the performance of a service of general interest, the continuity of which the operator is obliged to ensure.

24. Secondly, the services at issue are provided directly to users, namely the body of residents of the municipalities producing the waste, who, having to pay a charge to the municipalities covering both the removal and processing of the waste, ultimately bear the cost of the royalty paid to the operator and thus remunerate it for the services it provides. The Commissioner plays only the role of intermediary in that respect.

25. Thirdly, the requirement to produce energy when processing the waste and, accordingly, the sale of that energy certainly fall within the object and purpose of the agreements at issue. It is, moreover, classically the case that the remuneration of a concession derives not only from the price paid by the user but also from other activities connected with the service provided.

26. Fourthly, having regard to the financial significance of the operator's investment, which is in the region of a billion euros, and to the length of the agreements at issue, namely 20 years, the profits to be made by the operator are uncertain, particularly as a part of them is derived from the sale of energy produced.

27. Fifthly, responsibility for the organisation and management of services thus delegated is exclusively the operator's, the authorities limiting themselves to a simple monitoring role.

28. In the case of service concessions, the necessary transparency may be ensured by all appropriate means, including, as in the present case, publication of a notice in the national daily specialist press.

Findings of the Court

29. It is clear from settled caselaw that service concessions are excluded from the scope of Directive 92/50 (see, inter alia, Case C231/03 Coname [2005] ECR I7287, paragraph 9, and Case C458/03 Parking Brixen [2005] ECR I8585, paragraph 42).

30. The Italian Government having, on various occasions, stressed that it is clear from national caselaw that agreements such as the agreements at issue must be classified as service concessions, it must be noted as a preliminary point that the definition of a public service contract is a matter of Community law, with the result that the classification of the agreements at issue under Italian law is irrelevant for the purpose of determining whether they fall within the scope of Directive 92/50 (see, to that effect, Case C264/03 Commission v France [2005] ECR I8831, paragraph 36, and Case C220/05 Auroux and Others [2007] ECR I0000, paragraph 40).

31. The question whether the agreements at issue should or should not be classed as service concessions must therefore be considered exclusively in the light of Community law.

32. In that respect, it is necessary, first, to point out that the agreements at issue provide for the payment by the Commissioner to the operator of a royalty the amount of which is fixed in euros per tonne of waste transferred by the municipalities concerned to that operator.

33. As the Court has previously held, it follows from the definition in Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50 that a public service contract within the meaning of that directive involves consideration which is paid directly by the contracting authority to the service provider (Parking Brixen , paragraph 39). Accordingly, a royalty of the type for which the agreements at issue provide is capable of characterising a contract as one for pecuniary interest within the meaning of Article 1(a), and accordingly as a public contract (see, as to the payment of a fixed sum per dustbin or container by a town to an enterprise with exclusive responsibility for the collection and treatment of waste, Case C29/04 Commission v Austria [2005] ECR I9705, paragraphs 8 and 32).

34. Secondly, it is clear from the caselaw of the Court of Justice that a service concession exists where the agreed method of remuneration consists in the right of the service provider to exploit for payment his own service and means that he assumes the risk connected with operating the services in question (see Case C324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress [2000] ECR I10745, paragraph 58; the order in Case C358/00 BuchhändlerVereinigung [2002] ECR I4685, paragraphs 27 and 28; and Parking Brixen , paragraph 40).

35. It must be stated that the method of remuneration for which the agreements at issue provide does not consist in the right to exploit for payment the services in question, nor does it involve the assumption by the operator of the risk connected with operating them.

36. Not only is the operator essentially remunerated by the Commissioner by means of a fixed royalty per tonne of waste transferred to it, as pointed out at paragraph 32 of the present judgment, but it is not in dispute that, under the agreements at issue, the Commissioner undertakes, first, that all the municipalities concerned will transfer all of the remaining part of their waste to the operator and, secondly, that a minimum annual quantity of waste will be transferred to it. The agreements at issue provide, moreover, for the adjustment of the amount of the royalty if the annual quantity of waste actually transferred falls below 95% or exceeds 115% of the guaranteed minimum quantity, in order to ensure the economic and financial equilibrium of the operator. They also provide for the annual adjustment of the royalty in the light of trends in the costs of staff, raw materials and maintenance work, and of an economic index. The agreements provide moreover for a renegotiation of the royalty if, owing to a change to the legislative framework, the operator is faced with investment above a certain level in order to comply with the new legislation.

37. Having regard to the foregoing, the agreements at issue must be considered to be public service contracts subject to Directive 92/50 and not service concessions outside the scope of that directive.

38. In addition, none of the arguments put forward by the Italian Government for the purpose of contesting that classification prevails.

39. Concerning, first, the fact that the operators are in a position, over and above the receipt of the agreed royalty, to benefit from the financial returns connected with the sale of electricity produced during the processing of waste, it is necessary to point out that Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50, which defines what is a public contract, refers to contracts for pecuniary interest' and that the pecuniary interest in a contract refers to the consideration paid to the contractor on account of the provision of services designated by the contracting authority (see, to that effect, Auroux and Others , paragraph 45).

40. In the present case, it is evident that the consideration received by the operator in return for the provision of services designated by the Commissioner, namely the processing of transferred waste with energy recovery, consists essentially in the payment of the amount of the royalty by the Commissioner.

41. Even assuming that the income from the sale of electricity could also be regarded as consideration for the services designated by the Commissioner - owing, in particular, to the fact that in the agreements at issue the Commissioner undertakes to facilitate its sale to third parties - the mere fact that the operator would accordingly be able, over and above the remuneration received by way of consideration from the Commissioner, to obtain income incidentally from third parties in consideration for its provision of services is insufficient to prevent the agreements at issue from being classified as public contracts (see, by analogy, Auroux and Others , paragraph 45).

42. Furthermore, the length of the agreements at issue and the significant initial investment which the operator must make in performing them are not conclusive either for the purpose of classifying those agreements, as such characteristics may be present both in public contracts and in service concessions.

43. The same is also true of the fact that the treatment of waste comes within the general interest. In that respect, it should moreover be pointed out that, as is clear from Annex I A to Directive 92/50, [s]ervices within the meaning of Article 8', to which the directive is capable of applying, include the category of [s]ewage and refuse disposal services; sanitation and similar services', which the Court has previously held to cover inter alia services for the collection and treatment of waste (see, to that effect, Commission v Austria , paragraph 32).

44. Nor, finally, is it conclusive, for the purpose of classifying an agreement as a public contract or a service concession, that the services offered by the operator require, where appropriate, a large degree of independence of performance on his part.

45. Since the agreements at issue constitute public service contracts within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50, they could only be concluded in accordance with the provisions of the directive, in particular Articles 11, 15 and 17 thereof. Under those provisions, the contracting authority concerned was inter alia obliged to publish a contract notice which conformed to the model laid down in Annex III to the directive, which it did not do.

46. It follows that the Commission's action must be upheld and that it is necessary to hold that, owing to the fact that the Presidenza del Consiglio dei Ministri - Dipartimento per la protezione civile - Ufficio del Commissario delegato per l'emergenza rifiuti e la tutela delle acque in Sicilia (i) initiated the procedure for the conclusion of agreements concerning the use of that part of municipal waste produced in the municipalities of the Region of Sicily and remaining after the collection of selected material and (ii) concluded those agreements, without following the procedures laid down by Council Directive 92/50 and, in particular, without publishing the appropriate contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities , the Italian Republic failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive, in particular under Articles 11, 15 and 17 thereof.

Costs

47. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission applied for costs and the Italian Republic has been unsuccessful, the latter must be ordered to pay the costs.

Commission of the European Communities

Italian Republic

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations – Public service contracts – Directive 92/50/EEC – Agreements concerning the treatment of municipal waste – Classification – Public contract – Service concession – Advertising measures)

Summary of the Judgment

Approximation of laws – Procedures for the award of public service contracts – Directive 92/50 – Scope

Where an awarding authority of a Member State initiates the procedure for the conclusion of agreements concerning the use of that part of municipal waste produced in the municipalities of a region of that Member State remaining after the collection of selected material, and concludes those agreements without following the procedures laid down by Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by Directive 2001/78, and, in particular, without publishing the appropriate contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities, that Member State fails to fulfil its obligations under that directive, and in particular under Articles 11, 15 and 17 thereof.

The abovementioned agreements, which provide, in particular, for the payment by the awarding authority to the operator of a royalty the amount of which is fixed in euros per tonne of waste transferred by the municipalities concerned to that operator do not establish a method of remuneration consisting in the right to exploit the services in question for payment and involving the assumption by the operator of the risk connected with operating them. Such agreements must therefore be considered to be public service contracts subject to Directive 92/50 and not service concessions outside the scope of that directive, their conclusion being possible only in accordance with the provisions of that directive.

(Language of the case: Italian)

An action against the Italian Republic was brought before the Court of Justice of the European Communities on 20 October 2005 by the Commission of the European Communities, represented by A. Aresu and X. Lewis, acting as Agents, with an address for service in Luxembourg.

The Commission claims that the Court should:

declare that, by reason of the fact that the Presidenza del Consiglio dei Ministri (Prime Minister's Office) - Dipartimento per la protezione civile (Department of Civil Defence) - Ufficio del Commissario delegato (Office of the Deputy Government official) responsible for waste emergency and water protection in Sicily initiated the procedure for the award of contracts for the use of residual municipal waste, remaining after separately collected waste, produced in the municipal areas of the Region of Sicily, and concluded such contracts but failed to apply the procedures laid down by Council Directive 92/50/EEC [1] of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts and, in particular, failed to publish the appropriate contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union, the Italian Republic failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive and, in particular, under Articles 11, 15 and 17 of that directive;

order the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

According to the Commission, an examination of the documents relating to the award of the contracts at issue leads to the conclusion that they are to be classified as public service contracts governed by Directive 92/50/EEC.

It follows that those contracts should have been awarded in compliance with the rules on advertising and participation laid down in Titles III and IV of that directive and, in particular, following publication in the O.J.E.U of the contract notice required by Articles 15 and 17 of the directive and in accordance with the procedures set out in Article 11.

In the present case, the notice published on behalf of the Commissario delegato cannot be regarded as adequately fulfilling the advertising requirements laid down by the above-mentioned provisions. Not only does the model contract notice used for the advertisement refer to what is called the 'prior information' procedure and not to the award of contracts, but, more importantly, the information set out in the notice is clearly inadequate when compared with the information that must be included in accordance with the model contract notice set out in the Annexes to Directive 92/50/EEC, as most recently amended by Directive 2001/78/EC.

Arrêt

1 Par sa requête, la Commission des Communautés européennes demande à la Cour de constater que, la commune de Mantoue (Italie) ayant attribué, directement et sans publication d'un avis de marché spécifique au Journal officiel des Communautés européennes, la gestion, la maintenance et le développement de ses services informatiques à ASI Spa (ci-après «ASI»), la République italienne a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de la directive 92/50/CEE du Conseil, du 18 juin 1992, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de services (JO L 209, p. 1), telle que modifiée par la directive 93/36/CEE du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993 (JO L 199, p. 1, ci-après la «directive 92/50»), notamment des articles 11 et 15, paragraphe 2, de la directive 92/50.

2 Aux termes de l'article 1er, sous a) à f), de la directive 92/50:

«Aux fins de la présente directive:

a) les 'marchés publics de services' sont des contrats à titre onéreux, conclus par écrit entre un prestataire de services et un pouvoir adjudicateur, […];

b) sont considérés comme 'pouvoirs adjudicateurs', l'État, les collectivités territoriales, les organismes de droit public, les associations formées par une ou plusieurs de ces collectivités ou de ces organismes de droit public.

Par 'organisme de droit public', on entend tout organisme:

– créé pour satisfaire spécifiquement des besoins d'intérêt général ayant un caractère autre qu'industriel ou commercial et

et

– dont, soit l'activité est financée majoritairement par l'État, les collectivités territoriales ou d'autres organismes de droit public, soit la gestion est soumise à un contrôle par ces derniers, soit l'organe d'administration, de direction ou de surveillance est composé de membres dont plus de la moitié est désignée par l'État, les collectivités territoriales ou d'autres organismes de droit public.

c) le 'prestataire de services' est toute personne physique ou morale, y inclus un organisme public, qui offre des services. Le prestataire de services qui a présenté une offre est désigné par le mot 'soumissionnaire'; celui qui a sollicité une invitation à participer à une procédure restreinte ou négociée est désigné par le mot 'candidat';

d) les 'procédures ouvertes' sont les procédures nationales dans lesquelles tout prestataire de services intéressé peut présenter une offre;

e) les 'procédures restreintes' sont les procédures nationales dans lesquelles seuls les prestataires de services invités par le pouvoir adjudicateur peuvent présenter une offre;

f) les 'procédures négociées' sont les procédures nationales dans lesquelles les pouvoirs adjudicateurs consultent les prestataires de services de leur choix et négocient les conditions du marché avec un ou plusieurs d'entre eux».

3 Selon l'article 7, paragraphe 1, de cette directive, celle-ci s'applique aux marchés publics de services dont le montant estimé hors taxe sur la valeur ajoutée égale ou dépasse 200 000 euros.

4 L'article 8 de ladite directive prévoit:

6 Aux termes de l'article 15, paragraphe 2, de la directive 92/50, qui figure sous le titre V de cette directive relatif aux règles communes de publicité:

7 L'annexe I A de cette directive vise, sous la catégorie 7, les «[s]ervices informatiques et services connexes».

La procédure précontentieuse

8 Par une convention conclue le 2 décembre 1997, la commune de Mantoue a confié à ASI la gestion, la maintenance et le développement des services informatiques municipaux jusqu'au 31 décembre 2012 (ci-après la «convention»), sans que cette attribution fasse l'objet d'un appel à la concurrence.

9 À la suite d'une plainte, la Commission a adressé, le 20 juin 2001, une lettre demandant à la République italienne des éclaircissements concernant la convention et rappelant les conditions pour qu'un marché public puisse être soustrait à l'application des directives communautaires relatives à la passation de tels marchés. Par une lettre du 26 juin 2001, cet État membre a répondu que les dispositions de la directive 92/50 étaient, en l'espèce, inapplicables.

10 Le 24 octobre 2001, la Commission a adressé une lettre de mise en demeure à la République italienne, à laquelle cette dernière a répondu le 11 février 2002.

11 Après examen des observations présentées par la République italienne, la Commission a, le 27 juin 2002, émis un avis motivé invitant cet État membre à prendre les mesures nécessaires pour se conformer à cet avis dans un délai de deux mois à compter de la réception de celui-ci.

12 La République italienne n'ayant pas répondu audit avis motivé, la Commission a décidé d'introduire le présent recours.

Sur le recours

13 Par ordonnance du président de la Cour du 4 mai 2006, la République de Finlande a été admise à intervenir au soutien des conclusions de la République italienne. Par lettre déposée au greffe de la Cour le 5 septembre 2006, la République de Finlande a informé la Cour qu'elle se désistait de son intervention dans la présente affaire. Par ordonnance du président de la Cour du 2 octobre 2006, la République de Finlande a été radiée comme partie intervenant au litige.

14 À l'appui de son recours, la Commission invoque un seul grief tiré du fait que la convention n'a pas été conclue conformément aux articles 11 et 15, paragraphe 2, de la directive 92/50.

15 À cet égard, la Commission fait valoir que la convention entre dans le champ d'application de la directive 92/50 et que, partant, elle aurait dû être passée conformément, notamment, auxdits articles.

17 Au contraire, la République italienne fait valoir que, au moment de la conclusion de la convention et conformément à la réglementation nationale applicable, le capital d'ASI était entièrement détenu par la commune de Mantoue et d'autres communes limitrophes. Dès lors, la commune de Mantoue aurait eu sur cette société un contrôle structurel et fonctionnel analogue à celui qu'elle exerce sur ses propres services.

22 À cet égard, il y a lieu de rappeler que, selon la jurisprudence constante de la Cour, l'appel à la concurrence, conformément aux directives relatives à la passation des marchés publics, n'est pas obligatoire, même si le cocontractant est une entité juridiquement distincte du pouvoir adjudicateur, lorsque deux conditions sont remplies. D'une part, l'autorité publique, qui est un pouvoir adjudicateur, doit exercer sur l'entité distincte en question un contrôle analogue à celui qu'elle exerce sur ses propres services et, d'autre part, cette entité doit réaliser l'essentiel de son activité avec la ou les collectivités publiques qui la détiennent (voir, notamment, arrêts Teckal, précité, point 50, ainsi que du 8 avril 2008, Commission/Italie, C–337/05, non encore publié au Recueil, point 36 et jurisprudence citée).

24 S'agissant de la première condition, relative au contrôle de l'autorité publique, il ressort de la jurisprudence de la Cour qu'il convient de tenir compte non seulement de l'ensemble des dispositions législatives, mais également des circonstances pertinentes du cas d'espèce. Il doit résulter de cet examen que la société adjudicataire est soumise à un contrôle permettant au pouvoir adjudicateur d'influencer les décisions de cette société. Il doit s'agir d'une possibilité d'influence déterminante tant sur les objectifs stratégiques que sur les décisions importantes de ladite société (voir arrêts du 13 octobre 2005, Parking Brixen, C–458/03, Rec. p. I–8585, point 65, ainsi que du 11 mai 2006, Carbotermo et Consorzio Alisei, C–340/04, Rec. p. I–4137, point 36).

26 Il en résulte que ladite commune avait la faculté d'influencer de manière déterminante tant les objectifs stratégiques que les décisions importantes d'ASI par la désignation des membres des organes de direction de cette société et d'un fonctionnaire communal chargé d'orienter et de contrôler l'action de celle-ci. Ladite faculté suffit à caractériser l'existence d'un pouvoir de contrôle structurel et fonctionnel de la commune de Mantoue sur ladite société analogue à celui qu'elle

exerce sur ses propres services, de sorte que la première condition posée par la Cour au point 50 de l'arrêt Teckal, précité, est remplie.

27 La Commission fait cependant valoir que ladite condition ne pouvait être remplie dès lors que, premièrement, au moment de la conclusion de la convention, deux organismes de droit privé, à savoir TEA Spa et APAM Spa, détenaient des participations dans le capital d'ASI et que, deuxièmement, à supposer même que cette dernière soit une société à capital entièrement public, la participation d'associés privés était explicitement prévue dès sa constitution.

28 Or, s'agissant du premier argument soulevé par la Commission, il suffit de constater que celle-ci n'a pas contesté les informations fournies par la République italienne dans le mémoire en duplique, selon lesquelles les deux sociétés en question étaient elles aussi des entreprises communales.

29 En ce qui concerne le second argument soulevé par la Commission, il y a lieu de relever que la possibilité pour des personnes privées de participer au capital de la société adjudicataire, eu égard notamment à la forme sociale de ladite société, ne suffit pas, en l'absence d'une participation effective de leur part au moment de la conclusion d'une convention telle que celle en cause dans la présente affaire, pour conclure que la première condition, relative au contrôle de l'autorité publique, n'est pas remplie. En effet, pour des raisons de sécurité juridique, l'éventuelle obligation pour le pouvoir adjudicateur de procéder à un appel d'offres public doit être examinée, en principe, au vu des conditions prévalant à la date de l'attribution du marché public en cause (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du 10 novembre 2005, Commission/Autriche, C–29/04, Rec. p. I–9705, point 38).

30 Certes, des circonstances particulières, notamment lorsqu'il apparaît que l'ouverture du capital de l'entité concernée à des associés privés était envisagée dès l'attribution dudit marché public, peuvent requérir la prise en compte d'une participation effective desdits associés intervenue ultérieurement à ladite attribution (voir, en ce sens, arrêt Commission/Autriche, précité, points 38). Toutefois, en l'espèce, force est de constater que la Commission n'est pas parvenue à rapporter la preuve de l'existence de telles circonstances particulières.

32 En outre, dans le cas où plusieurs collectivités détiennent une entreprise, la condition relative à l'activité peut être satisfaite si cette entreprise effectue l'essentiel de son activité non nécessairement avec telle ou telle de ces collectivités, mais avec ces collectivités prises dans leur ensemble. Par conséquent, l'activité à prendre en compte dans le cas d'une entreprise détenue par plusieurs collectivités est celle que cette entreprise réalise avec l'ensemble de ces collectivités (voir arrêt Carbotermo et Consorzio Alisei, précité, points 70 et 71).

34 Partant, la seconde condition posée par la Cour au point 50 de l'arrêt Teckal, précité, est remplie.

35 Dans ces conditions, il convient de considérer que la République italienne a démontré à suffisance de droit que les conditions exigées par la jurisprudence mentionnée au point 22 du présent arrêt sont réunies et que, dès lors, la commune de Mantoue n'était pas tenue de faire appel à la concurrence avant de conclure la convention.

36 En conséquence, le recours de la Commission doit être rejeté comme non fondé.

Sur les dépens

37 En vertu de l'article 69, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure, toute partie qui succombe est condamnée aux dépens, s'il est conclu en ce sens. La République italienne ayant conclu à la condamnation de la Commission et cette dernière ayant succombé en ses moyens, il y a lieu de la condamner aux dépens.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (deuxième chambre) déclare et arrête:

1) Le recours est rejeté.

2) La Commission des Communautés européennes est condamnée aux dépens.

Action brought on 7 October 2005 by the Commission of the European Communities against the Italian Republic

(Language of the case: Italian)

An action against the Italian Republic was brought before the Court of Justice of the European Communities on 7 October 2005 by the Commission of the European Communities, represented by X. Lewis and L. Visaggio, acting as Agents.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

Declare that by virtue of the fact that the Comune di Mantova awarded, directly and without prior publication of the appropriate contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the contract for the management, maintenance and development of the in-house IT services to the company A.S.I. S.p.A., the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 92/50/EEC, in particular Articles 11 and 15(2) thereof;

Order the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

SEQ SJNumPar * MERGEFORMAT 1. Following a complaint, the Commission became aware of the contract concluded on 2 December 1997, by which the Comune di Mantova (municipality of Mantova) awarded, directly and without prior publication of the appropriate contract notice, the contract for the management, maintenance and development of its in-house IT services to a company in which it holds an interest, Azienda Servizi Informativi ('A.S.I.') S.p.A. The award was for a period of 15 years, ending on 31 December 2012.

SEQ SJNumPar * MERGEFORMAT 2. The Commission takes the view that the award to the company A.S.I. S.p.A. of the contract for the Comune di Mantova's IT services constitutes a public service contract subject to the application of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts.[1] For that reason in was necessary in this case to follow the competition procedure in accordance with the provisions of that directive, in particular the publication of the appropriate contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities within the meaning of Article 11 and Article 15(2) of that directive.

SEQ SJNumPar * MERGEFORMAT 3. Moreover, according to the applicant, the Italian authorities did not provide sufficient information to allow it to be considered that, given the overall arrangement of the legal relationships existing between the Comune and the company which received the contract, as well as the activities of that company, the awarding of the contract in question here relates solely to in-house providing and is therefore outside the scope of application of the Community directives governing the award of public contracts.

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (Grand Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that, by adopting a procedure, which has been in existence for a long time and is still followed, of directly awarding to Agusta SpA contracts for the purchase of Agusta and Agusta Bell helicopters to meet the requirements of several military and civilian corps, without any competitive tendering procedure, and, in particular, without complying with the procedures provided for by Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997, and previously, by Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended and supplemented by Council Directives 80/767/EEC of 22 July 1980 and 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under those directives;

2. Orders the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

1. By its application, the Commission of the European Communities is asking the Court to declare that by adopting a procedure, which has been in existence for a long time and is still followed, of directly awarding to Agusta SpA (Agusta') contracts for the purchase of Agusta and Agusta Bell helicopters to meet the requirements of several military and civilian corps of the Italian

State, without any competitive tendering procedure and, in particular, without complying with the procedures provided for by Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1; Directive 93/36'), and previously, by Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1997 L 13, p. 1), as amended and supplemented by Council Directives 80/767/EEC of 22 July 1980 (OJ 1980 L 215, p. 1) and 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988 (OJ 1988 L 127, p. 1; Directive 77/62'), the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under those directives.

Legal framework

2. By its action, the Commission claims a declaration of failure to fulfil obligations under Directive 93/36 and, as regards the period prior to the date on which that directive entered into force, under Directive 77/62. In view of the similarity of the provisions of those directives and in the interests of clarity, reference will be made here to Directive 93/36 alone.

3. The 12th recital in the preamble to Directive 93/36 is in the following terms:

... the negotiated procedure should be considered to be exceptional and therefore applicable only in limited cases'.

4. Article 1 of Directive 93/36 states that, for the purposes of that directive:

(a) public supply contracts are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing involving the purchase, lease rental or hire purchase, with or without option to buy, of products between a supplier (a natural or legal person) and one of the contracting authorities defined in (b) below. The delivery of such products may in addition include siting and installation operations;

(b) contracting authorities shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

(d) open procedures are those national procedures whereby all interested suppliers may submit tenders;

(e) restricted procedures are those national procedures whereby only those suppliers invited by the contracting authorities may submit tenders;

(f) negotiated procedures are those national procedures whereby contracting authorities consult suppliers of their choice and negotiate the terms of the contract with one or more of them.'

5. Under Article 2(1)(b), that directive is not to apply to:

supply contracts which are declared secret or the execution of which must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions in force in the Member States concerned or when the protection of the basic interests of the Member State's security so requires.'

6. Article 3 of the same directive provides:

Without prejudice to Articles 2, 4 and 5(1), this Directive shall apply to all products to which Article 1(a) relates, including those covered by contracts awarded by contracting authorities in the field of defence, except for the products to which Article 296(b) [EC] applies.'

7. Article 5(1)(a) of Directive 93/36 is worded as follows:

(a) Titles II, III and IV and Articles 6 and 7 shall apply to public supply contracts awarded

by:

(i) the contracting authorities referred to in Article 1(b), including contracts awarded by the contracting authorities listed in Annex I in the field of defence in so far as products not covered by Annex II are concerned, where the estimated value net of value-added tax (VAT) is not less than the equivalent in [euros] of 200 000 special drawing rights (SDRs);

(ii) the contracting authorities listed in Annex I whose estimated value net of VAT is not less than the equivalent in [euros] of 130 000 SDRs; in the case of contracting authorities in the field of defence, this shall apply only to contracts involving products covered by Annex II.'

8. Article 6(1) to (3) of the same directive provides:

1. In awarding public supply contracts the contracting authorities shall apply the procedures defined in Article 1(d), (e) and (f), in the cases set out below.

2. The contracting authorities may award their supply contracts by negotiated procedure in the case of irregular tenders in response to an open or restricted procedure or in the case of tenders which are unacceptable under national provisions that are in accordance with provisions of Title IV, in so far as the original terms for the contract are not substantially altered. The contracting authorities shall in these cases publish a tender notice unless they include in such negotiated procedures all the enterprises satisfying the criteria of Articles 20 to 24 which, during the prior open or restricted procedure, have submitted tenders in accordance with the formal requirements of the tendering procedure.

3. The contracting authorities may award their supply contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice, in the following cases:

(c) when, for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with protection of exclusive rights, the products supplied may be manufactured or delivered only by a particular supplier;

...

(e) for additional deliver[ies] by the original supplier which are intended either as a partial replacement of normal supplies or installations or as the extension of existing supplies or installations where a change of supplier would oblige the contracting authority to acquire material having different technical characteristics which would result in incompatibility or disproportionate technical difficulties in operation and maintenance. The length of such contracts as well as that of recurrent contracts may, as a general rule, not exceed three years.'

9. Article 33 of Directive 93/36 is worded as follows:

Directive 77/62/EEC... is hereby repealed, without prejudice to the obligation of the Member States concerning the deadlines for transposition into national law and for application indicated in Annex V.

References to the repealed Directives shall be construed as reference to this Directive and should be read in accordance with the correlation table set out in Annex VI.'

Pre-litigation procedure

10. Since the Commission was unaware of any information pertaining to the organisation of a tendering procedure at Community level for the supply of helicopters to meet the requirements of various corps of the Italian State, it considered that such Agusta and Agusta Bell helicopters had been purchased directly, without any competitive tendering procedure at Community level, in breach of the provisions of Directives 77/62 and 93/36. Accordingly, on 17 October 2003, it sent the Italian

Republic a letter of formal notice, inviting it to present its observations within a period of 21 days from the receipt of that letter.

11. The Italian authorities replied to that letter by fax of 9 December 2003.

12. Since it considered that the Italian authorities had not provided sufficient arguments to refute the observations formulated in the letter of formal notice, and in the absence of further communication from them, the Commission, on 5 February 2004, sent the Italian Republic a reasoned opinion, inviting it to comply therewith within a period of two months from its notification.

13. The Italian authorities replied to that reasoned opinion by three letters of 5 April, 13 May and 27 May 2004.

14. Since it considered that the Italian Republic's arguments in reply to the reasoned opinion were insufficient and finding that it had adopted no measure intended to terminate the impugned practice in awarding public supply contracts, the Commission decided to bring the present action.

The action

Admissibility

Arguments of the parties

15. The Italian Republic pleads that the action is inadmissible on the ground that the Commission made no complaint, in the pre-litigation procedure, about contracts for military supplies. Only civilian supplies were in question. Consequently, there are divergences between, on the one hand, the complaints made in the course of the pre-litigation procedure and, on the other, those formulated in the present action.

16. The Italian Republic submits also that the part of the action covering the supply contracts concluded for the requirements of the Corpo forestale dello Stato (State Forestry Corps) is inadmissible. It is contrary to the principle of no double jeopardy, since the failure to fulfil obligations relating to that category of contracts has already been examined and determined by the Court in Case C525/03 Commission v Italy [2005] ECR I9405.

17. In addition, in its rejoinder, the Italian Republic contends that, having regard to the vague and imprecise character of the facts reported by the Commission both in the letter of formal notice and in the reasoned opinion, the action does not satisfy the requirements of coherence and detail under the case-law, which has gravely affected its rights of defence.

18. The Commission counters that the pre-litigation procedure never concerned military supplies, but concerned civilian supplies for, in particular, the requirements of certain military corps of the Italian State. It points out also that the subject-matter of the proceedings which gave rise to the judgment in Commission v Italy , cited above, differed from that of the present action.

Findings of the Court

19. It is settled case-law that the purpose of the pre-litigation procedure is to give the Member State concerned an opportunity, on the one hand, to comply with its obligations under Community law and, on the other, to avail itself of its right to defend itself against the objections formulated by the Commission (see, among others, Case C-152/98 Commission v Netherlands [2001] ECR I-3463, paragraph 23; Case C-439/99 Commission v Italy [2002] ECR I-305, paragraph 10; and Case C185/00 Commission v Finland [2003] ECR I14189, paragraph 79).

20. The proper conduct of that procedure thus constitutes an essential guarantee required by the EC Treaty in order to protect the rights of the Member State concerned. It is only when that guarantee is observed that the contentious procedure before the Court can enable it to judge whether that State has in fact failed to fulfil the obligations which the Commission alleges it has breached (see, in particular, Case C-145/01 Commission v Italy [2003] ECR I-5581, paragraph 17).

21. It is in the light of that case-law that it is necessary to examine whether the Commission has respected the rights of the defence with regard to the Italian Republic in the pre-litigation procedure.

22. First, as regards the alleged divergences between the complaints made during the pre-litigation procedure and those formulated before the Court, it suffices to state that the reasoned opinion and the application commencing the proceedings, which are in almost identical terms, are based on the same complaints. Therefore, the Italian Republic's argument to show that the complaints raised in the course of the pre-litigation procedure do not correspond to those developed in that application cannot be accepted.

23. Secondly, as regards the alleged lack of clarity and precision in the definition of the complaints made against the Italian Republic in the pre-litigation procedure, it must be observed that, while the reasoned opinion referred to in Article 226 EC must contain a coherent and detailed statement of the reasons which led the Commission to conclude that the State in question has failed to fulfil one of its obligations under the Treaty, the letter of formal notice cannot be subject to such strict requirements of precision, since it cannot, of necessity, contain anything more than an initial brief summary of the complaints (see, in particular, Case 274/83 Commission v Italy [1985] ECR 1077, paragraph 21; Case C279/94 Commission v Italy [1997] ECR I4743, paragraph 15; and Case C221/04 Commission v Spain [2006] ECR I4515, paragraph 36).

24. In this case, the Commission's allegations in the pre-litigation procedure were sufficiently clear to enable the Italian Republic to deploy its defence, as is shown by the course which that part of the procedure took.

25. Thirdly, as regards the alleged breach of the principle of no double jeopardy, Case C525/03 Commission v Italy , cited above, was a case with a completely different subject-matter since, in that instance, the Commission's action concerned an ordinance of the President of the Italian Council of Ministers authorising recourse to negotiated procedures by derogation from Community directives on public supply contracts, and the action was declared inadmissible since that ordinance had ceased to have any effect before the expiry of the period fixed in the reasoned opinion. The subject-matter of the present action is not a re-examination of the legality of the abovementioned ordinance, but concerns a long-standing practice of the Italian State of directly awarding contracts for the purchase of Agusta and Agusta Bell helicopters without any competitive tendering procedure at Community level.

26. Accordingly, the Italian Republic's plea of inadmissibility must be rejected.

Substance

Arguments of the parties

27. In support of its action, the Commission alleges that it has established the existence of a general practice of directly awarding contracts for the purchase of Agusta and Agusta Bell helicopters to cover the requirements of various military and civilian corps of the Italian State.

28. It refers to several contracts concluded in the period 2000 to 2003 with the Corpo dei Vigili del Fuoco (Corps of Fire Brigades), the Carabinieri, the Corpo Forestale dello Stato, the Guardia Costiera (Coastguard), the Guardia di Finanza (Revenue Guard Corps), the Polizia di Stato (State Police) and the Department of Civil Protection in the Presidency of the Council of Ministers. As regards the period prior to the year 2000, the Italian authorities admitted having purchased Agusta and Agusta Bell helicopters without any competitive tendering procedure. The Commission observes finally that the fleets of the State corps concerned are formed exclusively of such helicopters none of which was purchased following a competitive tendering procedure at Community level.

29. Since those contracts satisfy the conditions specified by Directive 93/36, the Commission submits that they should have been the subject of an open or a restricted procedure, in compliance with Article 6 of that directive, but not of a negotiated procedure.

30. The Italian Republic contends, first of all, that the supplies intended for the military corps of the Italian State are covered by Articles 296 EC and 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/36. It submits that those provisions are applicable because the helicopters in question are dual-use items', that is to say, they may serve both military and civilian purposes.

31. That Member State argues next that, because of the technical specificity of the helicopters and of the additional nature of the supplies in question, it could, pursuant to Article 6(3)(c) and (e) of Directive 93/36, use the negotiated procedure.

32. Generally, it points out that its practice does not differ from that implemented in the majority of the Member States which produce helicopters.

33. The Italian Republic argues, finally, that, until the end of the 1990s, the relations of the Italian State with Agusta could be analysed as in-house' relations as referred to in Case C107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I8121.

Findings of the Court

34. At the outset, it is important to note that it is common ground between the parties that the value of the contracts in question exceeded the threshold fixed in Article 5(1)(a) of Directive 93/36, capable of bringing them within the scope of that directive.

35. It must also be stated that the documents concerning the helicopter purchase contracts annexed to the Italian Republic's defence confirm the Commission's view that the purchase of those helicopters using the negotiated procedure was a consistent practice of long standing.

- The in-house' relationship between the Italian State and Agusta

36. According to the Court's settled case-law, a call for tenders, under the directives relating to public procurement, is not compulsory, even if the contracting party is an entity legally distinct from the contracting authority, where two conditions are met. First, the public authority, which is a contracting authority, must exercise over the distinct entity in question a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, second, that entity must carry out the essential part of its activities with the local authority or authorities which control it (see Teckal , cited above, paragraph 50; Case C26/03 Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau [2005] ECR I1, paragraph 49; Case C84/03 Commission v Spain [2005] ECR I139, paragraph 38; Case C29/04 Commission v Austria [2005] ECR I9705, paragraph 34; Case C340/04 Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei [2006] ECR I4137, paragraph 33; and Case C295/05 Asemfo [2007] ECR I2999, paragraph 55).

37. Therefore, it must be examined whether the two conditions required by the case-law mentioned in the preceding paragraph are met with regard to Agusta.

38. As regards the first condition, relating to the public authority's control, it is important to note that the participation, even as a minority, of a private undertaking in the capital of a company in which the contracting authority in question is also a participant excludes in any event the possibility of that contracting authority exercising over that company a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments (see Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau , cited above, paragraph 49).

39. In that regard, as is shown by the study annexed to the defence on the Italian State's shareholdings in EFIM (Ente Partecipazioni e Finanziamento Industrie Manifatturiere), Finmeccanica and Agusta, the latter, which has, since its formation, been a company governed by private law, has, since 1974, always been a private company with government participation, that is to say a company whose capital is held in part by that State and in part by private shareholders.

40. Thus, since Agusta is a company in part open to private capital and therefore meets the criterion stated in paragraph 38 of the present judgment, the Italian State cannot exercise over that company a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments.

41. In such circumstances, and without the necessity of examining whether Agusta carries out the essential part of its activities with the concession-granting public authority, the Italian Republic's argument that there is an in-house' relationship between that company and the Italian State must be rejected.

- The legitimate requirements of national interest

42. It should be noted at the outset that measures adopted by the Member States in connection with the legitimate requirements of national interest are not excluded in their entirety from the application of Community law solely because they are taken in the interests of public security or national defence (see, to that effect, Case C186/01 Dory [2003] ECR I2479, paragraph 30).

43. As the Court has already held, the Treaty provides for derogations applicable in situations which may involve public safety, in particular, in Articles 30 EC, 39 EC, 46 EC, 58 EC, 64 EC, 296 EC and 297 EC, which deal with exceptional and clearly defined cases. It cannot be inferred from those articles that the Treaty contains an inherent general exception excluding all measures taken for reasons of public security from the scope of Community law. The recognition of the existence of such an exception, regardless of the specific requirements laid down by the Treaty, would be liable to impair the binding nature of Community law and its uniform application (see, to that effect, Case 222/84 Johnston [1986] ECR 1651, paragraph 26; Case C273/97 Sirdar [1999] ECR I7403, paragraph 16; Case C285/98 Kreil [2000] ECR I69, paragraph 16; and Dory , cited above, paragraph 31).

44. In that regard, it is for the Member State which seeks to rely on those exceptions to furnish evidence that the exemptions in question do not go beyond the limits of such exceptional cases (see, to that effect, Case C414/97 Commission v Spain [1999] ECR I5585, paragraph 22).

45. In this case, the Italian Republic contends that the purchases of Agusta and Agusta Bell helicopters meet the legitimate requirements of national interest foreseen in Articles 296 EC and 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/36, on the ground that those helicopters are dual-use items, that is to say, they may serve as well for civilian as for military purposes.

46. First, it is important to point out that, under Article 296(1)(b) EC, any Member State may take such measures as it considers necessary for the protection of the essential interests of its security and which are connected with the production of or trade in arms, munitions and war materials, provided, however, that such measures do not alter the conditions of competition in the common market regarding products which are not intended for specifically military purposes.

47. It is clear from the wording of that provision that the products in question must be intended for specifically military purposes. It follows that the purchase of equipment, the use of which for military purposes is hardly certain, must necessarily comply with the rules governing the award of public contracts. The supply of helicopters to military corps for the purpose of civilian use must comply with those same rules.

48. It is established that the helicopters in question, as the Italian Republic admits, are certainly for civilian use and possibly for military use.

49. Consequently, Article 296(1)(b) EC, to which Article 3 of Directive 93/36 refers, cannot properly be invoked by the Italian Republic to justify recourse to the negotiated procedure for the purchase of those helicopters.

50. Secondly, that Member State relies on the confidential nature of the information which is obtained to put the helicopters manufactured by Agusta into production to justify the award of the contracts to that company following the negotiated procedure. In that regard, the Italian Republic cites Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/36.

51. However, the Italian Republic has not stated the reasons for which it submits that the confidentiality of the information communicated for the production of the helicopters manufactured by Agusta would be less well guaranteed were such production entrusted to other companies, be they established in Italy or in other Member States.

52. In that regard, the requirement to impose an obligation of confidentiality in no way prevents the use of a competitive tendering procedure for the award of a contract.

53. Therefore, resort to Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/36 to justify the purchase of the helicopters in question by the negotiated procedure seems to be disproportionate as regards the objective of preventing the disclosure of sensitive information relating to their production. The Italian Republic has not shown that such an objective was unattainable within a competitive tendering procedure such as that specified by the same directive.

54. Consequently, Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/36 cannot properly be invoked by the Italian Republic to justify the use of the negotiated procedure for the purchase of those helicopters.

- The requirement for homogeneity of the fleet of helicopters

55. To justify the use of the negotiated procedure, the Italian Republic also invokes Article 6(3)(c) and (e) of Directive 93/36. It maintains, first, that, having regard to their technical specificity, the manufacture of the helicopters in question could be entrusted only to Agusta and, second, that it was necessary to ensure the interoperability of its fleet of helicopters, in order, particularly, to reduce the logistic, operational and pilot-training costs.

56. As is clear, in particular, from the 12th recital in the preamble to Directive 93/36, the negotiated procedure is exceptional in nature and may be applied only in cases which are set out in an exhaustive list. To that end, Article 6(2) and (3) of Directive 93/36 exhaustively and expressly lists the only exceptions for which recourse to the negotiated procedure is allowed (see, to that effect, as regards Directive 77/62, Case C71/92 Commission v Spain [1993] ECR I5923, paragraph 10; as regards Directive 93/36, see Teckal , paragraph 43, and Case C84/03 Commission v Spain , cited above, paragraph 47).

57. According to settled case-law, the derogations from the rules intended to ensure the effectiveness of the rights conferred by the Treaty in connection with public contracts must be interpreted strictly (see Case C57/94 Commission v Italy [1995] ECR I1249, paragraph 23; Case C318/94 Commission v Germany [1996] ECR I1949, paragraph 13; and Case C394/02 Commission v Greece [2005] ECR I4713, paragraph 33). To prevent Directive 93/36 being deprived of its effectiveness, the Member States cannot, therefore, provide for the use of the negotiated procedure in cases not provided for by that directive, or add new conditions to the cases expressly provided for by the directive in question which make that procedure easier to use (see, to that effect, Case C84/03 Commission v Spain , paragraph 48).

58. In addition, it must be recalled that the burden of proving the existence of exceptional circumstances justifying the derogation from those rules lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances

(see Case 199/85 Commission v Italy [1987] ECR 1039, paragraph 14, and Commission v Greece , cited above, paragraph 33).

59. In this case, the Italian Republic has not discharged the burden of proof as regards the reason for which only helicopters produced by Agusta would be endowed with the requisite technical specificities. In addition, that Member State has confined itself to pointing out the advantages of the interoperability of the helicopters used by its various corps. It has not however demonstrated in what respect a change of supplier would have constrained it to acquire material manufactured according to a different technique likely to result in incompatibility or disproportionate technical difficulties in operation and maintenance.

60. Having regard to all the foregoing, it must be declared that, by adopting a procedure, which has been in existence for a long time and is still followed, of directly awarding to Agusta contracts for the purchase of Agusta and Agusta Bell helicopters to meet the requirements of several military and civilian corps of the Italian State, without any competitive tendering procedure, and, in particular, without complying with the procedures provided for by Directive 93/36 and, previously, by Directive 77/62, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under those directives.

Costs

61. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission has applied for costs and the Italian Republic has been unsuccessful in its submissions, the latter must be ordered to pay the costs.

Language of the case: Italian

Re:

Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Council Directives 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts - Failure to show existence of grounds which may justify recourse by the contracting authority to the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice - Agusta and Agusta Bell helicopters purchased for the requirements of the State Forestry Corps, the Coastguard, the Carabinieri, etc.

Operative part of the judgment

The Court:

Declares that, by adopting a procedure, which has been in existence for a long time and is still followed, of directly awarding to Agusta SpA contracts for the purchase of Agusta and Agusta Bell helicopters to meet the requirements of several military and civilian corps, without any competitive tendering procedure, and, in particular, without complying with the procedures provided for by Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997, and previously, by Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended and supplemented by Council Directives 80/767/EEC of 22 July 1980 and 88/295/EEC of 22 March 1988, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under those directives;

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Mazak delivered on 10 July 2007. Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic. Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Public supply contracts - Directives 77/62/EEC and 93/36/EEC - Award of public contracts without prior publication of a notice - Absence of competitive tendering - Agusta and Agusta Bell helicopters. Case C-337/05.

1. In the present action, brought pursuant to Article 226 EC, the Commission seeks a declaration from the Court that, by adopting a procedure, in existence over a long period and still followed now, of directly awarding to the firm Agusta' contracts for the purchase of helicopters to meet the requirements of several ministries and departments without any tendering procedure, Italy has failed to fulfil its obligations under the directives on coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, namely Council Directive 93/36/EEC (2) and, earlier, Council Directive 77/62/EEC, (3) Council Directive 80/767/EEC (4) and Council Directive 88/295/EEC. (5)

2. Italy contests the alleged infringement and in its defence relies, inter alia, on Article 296(1)(b) EC.

I - Legal framework

A - Community law

3. Directive 93/36 (Directive 93/36' or the Directive') coordinates procedures for the award of public supply contracts and lays down requirements for the award of such contracts.

4. Article 1 of Directive 93/36 provides:

(a) public supply contracts are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing involving the purchase, lease rental or hire purchase, with or without option to buy, of products between a supplier (a natural or legal person) and one of the contracting authorities defined in (b) below. The delivery of such products may in addition include siting and installation operations;

(d) open procedures are those national procedures whereby all interested suppliers may submit tenders;

(e) restricted procedures are those national procedures whereby only those suppliers invited by the contracting authorities may submit tenders;

[f] negotiated procedures are those national procedures whereby contracting authorities consult suppliers of their choice and negotiate the terms of the contract with one or more of them.'

5. Under Article 2(1)(b), the Directive is not to apply to: supply contracts which are declared secret or the execution of which must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions in force in the Member States concerned or when the protection of the basic interests of the Member State's security so requires'.

6. Article 3 of the Directive provides that: [w]ithout prejudice to Articles 2, 4 and 5(1), this Directive shall apply to all products to which Article 1(a) relates, including those covered by contracts awarded by contracting authorities in the field of defence, except for the products to which [Article 296(1)(b) EC] applies.'

7. According to Article 6 of the Directive:

1. In awarding public supply contracts the contracting authorities shall apply the procedures defined in Article 1(d), (e) and (f), in the cases set out below....

3. The contracting authorities may award their supply contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice, in the following cases:

(c) when, for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with protection of exclusive rights, the products supplied may be manufactured or delivered only by a particular supplier;

...

(e) for additional [deliveries] by the original supplier which are intended either as a partial replacement of normal supplies or installations or as the extension of existing supplies or installations where a change of supplier would oblige the contracting authority to acquire material having different technical characteristics which would result in incompatibility or disproportionate technical difficulties in operation and maintenance. The length of such contracts as well as that of recurrent contracts may, as a general rule, not exceed three years.

4. In all other cases, the contracting authorities shall award their supply contracts by the open procedure or by the restricted procedure.'

8. As regards other specific provisions, they will be referred to when I analyse the grounds of the alleged failure to fulfil obligations.

II - Facts, pre-litigation procedure and forms of order sought

A - Facts

9. Following receipt of a complaint, the Commission opened an infringement procedure (No 2002/4194) in relation to Ordinance No 3231 of the President of the Council of Ministers of the Italian Republic of 24 July 2002 concerning aerial forest fire-fighting, which authorised recourse to negotiated procedures by way of derogation from the directives on public supply and service contracts. On the basis of this ordinance, the Corpo Forestale dello Stato (State Forestry Corps) purchased on 28 October 2002 two Agusta Bell AB 412 EP helicopters for approximately EUR 18 millions, by private negotiated contract, by derogation from the statutory provisions listed in Article 4 [of that ordinance]', that is to say in particular from the national legislation transposing Community directives on coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts. The Commission brought an action before the Court pursuant to Article 226 EC which resulted in a judgment in Case C525/03 of 27 October 2005. (6)

10. On the basis of the information received within the framework of the above procedure, the Commission noted that the specific infringement, forming the subject-matter of that procedure was not an isolated incident but was symptomatic of a general practice of directly awarding contracts for the purchase of helicopters manufactured by Agusta' and Agusta Bell' to meet the requirements of various corps of the Italian State, without any tendering procedure. The Commission therefore opened another infringement procedure (No 2003/2158).

11. As regards the Corpo Nazionale dei Vigili del Fuoco (the fire brigade, Ministry of Interior), the Commission noted in particular that the latter directly awarded the following contracts to the company Agusta', without any tendering procedure: (i) on 10 June 2002, a contract to purchase four Agusta Bell AB 412 helicopters for approximately EUR 30.5 millions; (ii) on 23 December 2002, a contract to purchase four Agusta A 109 Power helicopters for approximately EUR 33.6 million; and (iii) on 19 March 2003, a contract for a lease-purchase of four A 109 Power helicopters for approximately EUR 12.8 million. The Commission noted that the Corpo Nazionale dei Vigili del Fuoco's helicopter fleet is essentially composed of Agusta' or Agusta Bell' helicopters.

12. With regard to the Corpo Carabinieri (Ministry of Defence), the information communicated to the Commission indicates that, in the period 2000 to 2002, the Corpo Carabinieri awarded two contracts to Agusta to purchase four helicopters, without any tendering procedure. The Commission noted that the Corpo Carabinieri's helicopter fleet is also essentially composed of Agusta' or Agusta Bell' helicopters.

13. As to the Corpo Forestale dello Stato (Ministry for Agricultural and Forestry Policy), apart from the purchases which formed the subject-matter of Case C525/03, that body is said to have purchased one other Agusta helicopter. Likewise, the Commission noted that the Corpo Forestale's helicopter fleet is essentially composed of Agusta' or Agusta Bell' helicopters.

14. Concerning the Department of Civil Protection, the Commission was informed that it concluded a contract to lease-purchase Agusta' helicopters.

15. As regards the other state corps, the Commission considered - in spite of the fact that it did not have any information as to the specific contracts - that the air fleets of the Guardia Costiera (Coastguard), an emanation of the Corpo delle Capitanerie di Porto (Ministry of Infrastructure and Transport), of the Guardia di Finanza (Revenue Guard Corps, Ministry of Economy and Finance) and of the Polizia di Stato (State Police, Ministry of Interior) were also composed exclusively or predominantly of Agusta' or Agusta Bell' helicopters.

B - Pre-litigation procedure

16. The Commission - not having found any information pertaining to the organisation of a tender at Community level for the purchase of helicopters to meet the requirements of the above-mentioned Italian ministries and departments - considered that the above helicopters manufactured by Agusta' were directly purchased in breach of the procedures laid down in Directive 93/36 and, earlier, in Directive 77/62, Directive 80/767 and Directive 88/295. On 17 October 2003, the Commission sent the Italian Government a letter of formal notice, inviting it to present its observations.

17. The Italian authorities replied by way of a fax from its Permanent Representation to the European Union of 9 December 2003. Considering the Italian authorities' reply unsatisfactory, the Commission sent the Italian Republic a reasoned opinion on 5 February 2004, inviting it to comply with that reasoned opinion within two months of notification thereof.

18. The Italian authorities responded to the reasoned opinion in three letters from the Italian Permanent Representation to the European Union. (7)

19. The Commission considered that the Italian authorities did not provide sufficient arguments to refute the observations formulated in the reasoned opinion and noted that the Italian Republic did not take any measures intended to bring the incriminated practice to an end, and accordingly brought the present action before the Court on 15 September 2005. (8)

20. The Commission claims that the Court should:

1. declare that, since the Italian Government and, in particular, the Ministries of Home Affairs, Defence, Economics and Finance, for Agricultural and Forestry Policy, and for Infrastructure and Transport, and the Department of Civil Protection of the Presidency of the Council of Ministers, have adopted a procedure, which has been in existence for a long time and is still followed, of directly awarding to the firm Agusta contracts for the purchase of helicopters manufactured by Agusta and Agusta Bell to meet the requirements of the military corps of the fire brigade, the Carabinieri, the State Forestry Corps, the Coastguard, the Revenue Guard Corps, the State Police and the Department of Civil Protection, without any tendering procedure, in particular without complying with the procedures provided for by Directive 93/36 and, earlier, by Directive 77/62, Directive 80/767 and Directive 88/295, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the abovementioned directives;

2. order the Italian Republic to pay the costs.'

21. The Italian Republic contends that the action should be dismissed as inadmissible and, in any event, dismissed as unfounded.

22. Both parties submitted oral argument at the hearing which took place on 17 April 2007.

III - Assessment

A - Preliminary remarks

23. It is important to note that the Italian Government does not contest having used the negotiated procedure for the purchase of helicopters for its corps and having directly awarded contracts to Agusta without prior publication of a tender notice at Community level. The discussion in this case therefore focuses on whether Italy could lawfully depart from the Community provisions on public supply contracts. (9) The form of order sought by the Commission refers not only to Directive 93/36 but also to earlier directives, namely Directives 77/62, 80/767 and 88/295. None the less, in view of the similarity of the relevant provisions in these directives, as suggested by the Commission, I consider that for reasons of clarity and simplicity it is sufficient for me to refer henceforth in my analysis solely to Directive 93/36.

B - Admissibility

24. In its defence, the Italian Government disputes the admissibility of the present action.

1. Main arguments of the parties

25. Italy submits that during the course of the pre-litigation procedure the Commission did not refer to military supplies; the only supplies mentioned during that procedure being civil supplies. Moreover, in the framework of the pre-litigation procedure the Commission merely cited a number of contracts concluded in recent years, that is to say in 2002 and 2003, by Corpo dei Vigili del Fuoco, Corpo Forestale and the Carabinieri with Agusta. Therefore, the complaint raised during the pre-litigation procedure does not correspond to the form of order sought in the present application to the Court. In addition, in its rejoinder, Italy contends that having regard to the vague and imprecise character of the facts alleged by the Commission, the action does not satisfy the requirements laid down by the case-law. The Italian Republic submits that this has gravely affected its rights of defence.

26. Finally, the Italian Government contends that the part of the present action relating to the supplies for the Corpo Forestale dello Stato is inadmissible, since these supplies were based on Ordinance No 3231. The principle ne bis in idem would be breached, as that ordinance was already considered by the Court in Case C525/03. (10)

27. The Commission disputes the views of the Italian Republic. It considers that the pre-litigation procedure never concerned military supplies. Rather, it related to civil supplies intended to meet inter alia the needs of certain military corps of the Italian Republic. With regard to the alleged imprecision, the Commission contends that it had always been clear since the letter of formal notice that the subject-matter of the procedure was the practice of directly awarding contracts to Agusta over a long period of time, which was never suspended. The purpose of the procedure was clear to Italy, which could and has defended itself, by producing inter alia a number of annexed documents. In addition, the Commission submits that the procedure which gave rise to Case C525/03 had a different subject-matter from that of the present case.

2. Appraisal

28. According to the Court's settled case-law, the Commission must indicate, in any application made under Article 226 EC, the specific complaints on which the Court is asked to rule and, at the very least in summary form, the legal and factual particulars on which those complaints are based. (11)

29. In this regard, although it is true that the subject-matter of proceedings brought under Article 226 EC is circumscribed by the pre-litigation procedure provided for in that provision and that, consequently, the Commission's reasoned opinion and the application must be based on the same objections, that requirement cannot go so far as to mean that in every case exactly the same wording must be used in both, where the subject-matter of the proceedings has not been extended or altered but simply narrowed. Accordingly, in its application the Commission may clarify its initial grounds of objection provided, however, that it does not alter the subject-matter of the dispute. (12)

30. First of all, I find persuasive the Commission's explanation that the adjective military' refers quite unambiguously to certain corps' of the State, rather than to supplies', as contended by the Italian Government. (13) It is clear from the file before the Court that the Commission's case is only about civil supplies purchased in order to meet the requirements of certain corps of the Italian State, some of which are of a military character and some of a civil character. In fact, a comparison of the reasoned opinion and the application, which are framed in almost identical terms, reveals that they are based on the same objections. In those circumstances, Italy's plea that the complaint raised during the pre-litigation procedure does not correspond to the form of order sought in the present action cannot be upheld.

31. Secondly, as regards the Italian Government's contention that the facts alleged by the Commission were vague and imprecise, in my opinion in the pre-litigation procedure in the present case it was set out clearly why the Commission considered that the Italian Republic had failed to comply with the directives on public supplies. Indeed, in point 14 of the reasoned opinion and point 25 of the letter of formal notice, the Commission stated in unambiguous terms that it had been unable to obtain any information that would confirm that the Italian Government had followed public procurement procedures at Community level in its purchases of helicopters, in conformity with Directive 93/36 but also, previously, Directives 77/62, 80/767 and 88/295. The allegations were thus sufficiently clear for the Italian Government to defend itself.

32. Finally, I consider that the principle ne bis in idem has not been breached in the present proceedings. In my view the subject-matter of Case C525/03 concerned a specific national order (namely Ordinance No 3231) which authorised recourse to negotiated procedures by way of derogation from directives on public supply and service contracts. Indeed that action was held inadmissible on account of the ordinance's temporary validity. A re-examination of the legality of Ordinance No 3231 has not been sought in the present proceedings. Rather the subject-matter of the present case is the alleged practice of directly awarding contracts for the purchase of helicopters to Agusta without any tendering procedure at Community level.

33. It follows from the foregoing that the Italian Government's objection of inadmissibility must be dismissed.

C - Substance

1. The in-house relations with Agusta

34. In order to establish whether Italy actually breached the directives on public supply contracts, I shall first deal with the Italian Government's contention that until the end of the 1990s its relations with Agusta qualified as in-house' relations.

a) Main arguments of the parties

35. Italy submits that the relations with Agusta were in-house' relations and in its defence it traces the development of public participation in Agusta. Although Italy acknowledges that the direct award of contracts by the State to companies in whose capital it participated at the time was difficult to reconcile with the case-law on in-house' transactions, it contends that Agusta's relations with the Italian State had rather the character of what it refers to as auto-production of goods and services' - used by the State and which constituted a fundamental part of the production portfolio of companies with a State participation.

36. The Commission submits that the Italian authorities did not prove that the criteria established by the Court in Teckal were fulfilled in the present case, (14) as Italy confined itself to submitting only vague and imprecise information.

b) Appraisal

37. As the Commission rightly argues, it is important to recall that, according to the Court's settled case-law, a call for tenders, under the directives relating to public procurement, is not compulsory, even if the contracting party is an entity legally distinct from the contracting authority, where two cumulative conditions are met. First, the public authority which is a contracting authority must exercise over the distinct entity in question a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, second, that entity must carry out the essential part of its activities with the local authority or authorities which control it. (15)

38. It was Italy's duty not only to claim the existence of such a relationship between the contracting authorities and Agusta, but also to furnish such evidence as would enable the Court to conclude unequivocally that the above two conditions were met. However, it is apparent from the file before the Court that Italy's claims in this respect are rather inconclusive and are not supported by any relevant documents. Therefore, in the present case, the Italian Government has failed to demonstrate that the two conditions have been met.

39. Moreover, the Court recently clarified that the participation, even as a minority, of a private undertaking in the capital of a company in which the contracting authority in question is also a participant excludes in any event the possibility of that contracting authority exercising over that company a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments. (16)

40. Therefore, in view of the fact pointed out by the Commission that between the 1970s and the 1990s Agusta was never wholly owned by the Italian State, that in itself suffices to exclude the existence of an in-house relationship with Agusta. (17) Moreover, as regards the period since 2000, when a joint-venture Agusta Westland' was created with the British company Westland, the in-house relationship with the Italian State has to be excluded as well.

41. Hence, I shall now consider whether the directives on public supply contracts were indeed breached.

2. The existence of the practice

a) Main arguments of the parties

42. In view of the fact that the public supplies at issue fulfil the conditions laid down by Directive 93/36, in that due to helicopters' high prices the contracts have always largely exceeded the threshold of 130 000 Special Drawing Rights (SDRs), (18) the Commission maintains they should have been subject to an open procedure or to a restricted one, in conformity with Article 6 of the Directive, but not to a negotiated procedure. Therefore, the Commission submits that the infringement of Community law is demonstrated. Since the Italian authorities have explicitly admitted purchasing Agusta helicopters without any tendering procedure on the Community level before 2000, the Commission submits that the practice of directly awarding contracts to Agusta has been pursued after 2000, which is confirmed by the contracts annexed to its application.

43. In essence, as regards the pre-2000 purchases, Italy argues that they qualified as in-house', while with regard to the recent purchases, Italy submits that the direct awarding of contracts is a result of the international security climate following 11 September 2001. Civil helicopters, therefore, must be assimilated to military ones. The purchases were thus exempted from Community law under Article 296 EC.

b) Appraisal

44. The Commission claims that the practice in question was general' and systematic' and alleges infringement of Directive 93/36 and of Directive 77/62 and of the other directives applicable in the meantime. It follows that the practice of systematically awarding contracts directly to Agusta for the purchase of helicopters may well have lasted for some 30 years.

45. The Italian Government does not dispute the above practice. Moreover, in the annexes to its defence Italy actually confirms the Commission's contention in this respect. It follows that Italy has indeed used the negotiated procedure without proceeding to any tendering procedure at Community level. Therefore, it is necessary to analyse whether or not Italy could lawfully derogate from the directive.

46. The twelfth recital in the preamble to Directive 93/36 clearly notes that the negotiated procedure should be considered as exceptional and therefore applicable only in limited cases. To that end, Article 6(2) and (3) of the Directive exhaustively and expressly lists the cases in which the negotiated procedure may be used without prior publication of a tender notice. (19)

47. It should also be borne in mind that derogations from the rules intended to ensure the effectiveness of the rights conferred by the Treaty in connection with public supply contracts must be interpreted strictly. (20) In order not to deprive Directive 93/36 of its effectiveness, Member States cannot, therefore, provide for the use of the negotiated procedure in cases not provided for in that directive, or add new conditions to the cases expressly provided for by that directive which make that procedure easier to use. (21) In addition, the burden of proving the actual existence of exceptional circumstances justifying derogation lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances. (22)

48. It is therefore necessary to examine whether or not Italy meets the requirements expressly covered by the derogations provided for in the Treaty and/or in the directive on which it relies.

3. The legitimate requirements of national interest

a) Main arguments of the parties

49. Italy contends that the purchases of helicopters at issue meet the legitimate requirements of national interest foreseen by Article 296 EC as well as Article 2(1)(b) of the Directive. Italy submits that these provisions are applicable, because the helicopters in question are dual-use goods', that is to say, goods capable of being used for both civil and military purposes.

50. First, the Italian Government takes the view that Article 296 EC covers all the supplies to the military corps of the Italian State. As regards the other corps, it emphasises that since 2001 the supplies for those corps have been progressively included in a specific domain pertaining to State security (or homeland security') and subject to a regime which tends to assimilate them to military supplies. (23) Italy considers that in Leifer , (24) which concerned a derogation from Article 28 EC in relation to dual-use goods, the Court expressly recognised that the Member States have a discretionary power when adopting measures deemed necessary to guarantee their public security, both internal and external.

51. In that regard, Italy refers to the judgment of the Court of First Instance in Fiocchi munizioni v Commission , (25) which states that the regime established by Article 296(1)(b) EC is intended to preserve the freedom of action of the Member States in certain matters affecting national defence and security. Article 296(1)(b) EC confers on the Member States a particularly wide discretion in assessing the needs receiving such protection.

52. Second, Italy maintains that in view of the fact that the helicopters in question can be involved in the fight against terrorism as well as missions protecting public order the derogation under Article 2(1)(b) of the Directive is applicable. It also invokes confidentiality requirements with regard to the purchases of the helicopters.

53. The Commission submits that Italy has not proven in the present case that requirements existed which justified the application of Article 30 EC and the dual-use goods' argument. In addition, with regard to Article 2(1)(b) of the Directive and the argument that the divulgation of elements concerning the purchases at issue would be contrary to Italy's essential interests, the Commission contends that Italy has not specified which elements' they may be. With regard to Article 296 EC, what is in question here is not trade in arms, munitions and war material' but rather purchases of helicopters intended for essentially civil use. Italy has not demonstrated that the situation in the present case constituted a measure necessary to protect its essential interests, such as security, which is an indispensable condition laid down by Article 296 EC. The Commission submits that the helicopters' only certain use is for civil purposes and that their military use remains only potential and uncertain. Therefore Article 296 EC is not applicable. Even on the hypothesis that the supplies in question were of a military character, Article 296 EC would not allow an automatic derogation such as that applied by Italy in the circumstances of the present case. To remove an entire industrial sector from competition procedures in order to protect national security appears neither proportionate nor necessary.

b) Appraisal

54. The Court has held that the only articles in which the Treaty provides for derogations applicable in situations which may affect public security are Articles 30 EC, 39 EC, 46 EC, 58 EC, 64 EC, 296 EC, and 297 EC, which deal with exceptional and clearly defined cases. It cannot be inferred from those articles that the Treaty contains an inherent general exception excluding all measures taken for reasons of public security from the scope of Community law. To recognise the existence of such an exception, regardless of the specific requirements laid down by the Treaty, might impair the binding nature of Community law and its uniform application. (26) Thus, public security may be relied on only if there is a genuine and sufficiently serious threat to a fundamental interest of society. Moreover, those derogations must not be misapplied so as, in fact, to serve purely economic ends. (27)

55. The Court has also held that it is for the Member State which seeks to rely on those exceptions to furnish evidence that the exemptions in question do not go beyond the limits of such cases and that they are necessary for the protection of the essential interests of its security. (28)

56. In its defence, Italy relies in particular on Article 296 EC. The purpose of Article 296 EC is to coordinate as well as balance relations and tensions between the protection of competition in the common market and the protection of Member States' essential interests of security which are connected with the production of or trade in arms, munitions and war material of the Member States, so that the latter are permitted to derogate from Community law, but only under the strict conditions prescribed.

57. As a derogation, this Article must be interpreted strictly.

58. It follows that that derogation, as for example the derogation in Article 30 EC, cannot be considered an automatic and/or blanket exemption which Member States may invoke regardless of the particular circumstances of a given situation. Article 296 EC should be applied by Member States on a case-by-case basis and in a case such as this one each individual procurement contract must be assessed. Under Article 296 EC the measures, which are applied by a Member State and which are connected with the production of or trade in arms, munitions and war material, must be necessary for the protection of the essential interests of its security. In addition, Article 296 EC is subject to the condition that such measures shall not adversely affect the conditions of competition in the common market regarding products which are not intended for specifically military purposes' (emphasis added). Moreover, Article 296 EC is applicable only to products that are enumerated on the list included in a Council Decision of 15 April 1958. (29)

59. In my view, where the application of Article 296 EC by a Member State adversely affects competition in the common market, the Member State in question must prove that the products are intended for specifically military purposes. (30) To my mind, that in itself already precludes dual-use products. (31)

60. The nature of the products on the 1958 list and the explicit reference in Article 296 EC to specifically military purposes' confirms that only the trade in equipment which is designed, developed and produced for specifically military purposes can be exempted from Community rules on competition on the basis of Article 296(1)(b) EC. (32) The requirement that products be destined for specifically military purposes means for example that the supply of a helicopter to the military corps which is intended for civil purposes must comply with the public procurement rules. A fortiori , helicopters supplied to certain civil departments of a Member State which could only hypothetically be used, as Italy claims, for military purposes too, inevitably have to comply with those rules.

61. In the present case, Italy has never contended that all the helicopters in question were purchased for specifically military purposes. Rather, the Italian Government essentially submits that the helicopters in question can also hypothetically be used for military purposes but are, however, used at the same time for civil purposes. It is thus clear from the file before the Court that the helicopters in question were not intended to be used for specifically military purposes. As a result, Italy cannot rely in its defence on Article 296(1)(b) EC.

62. Italy has not attempted to demonstrate that its concerns with regard to confidentiality could not have been adequately resolved pursuant to the procedures laid down in the directive, in particular the restricted procedure mentioned in Article 1(e) thereof. Rather, Italy removed a substantial part of supplies of helicopters to the central administration of the Italian State from the scope of application of the rules on public procurement by systematically awarding contracts directly to Agusta. This practice is clearly disproportionate by reference to the expressed concern of protecting confidentiality. (33)

63. Furthermore, as regards Article 2(1)(b) of the Directive, the fact that the helicopters in question serve for exclusively or primarily civil purposes renders invalid Italy's argument on the necessity to protect the confidentiality of purchases of the helicopters in the case at hand and thus the derogation under that provision is not applicable to the purchases of helicopters which are subject to these proceedings.

4. On homogeneity/interoperability of the fleet

a) Main arguments of the parties

64. Italy submits that owing to the technical specificity of helicopters and to fact that the supplies in question constituted additional deliveries, the Government was entitled to award the contracts by a negotiated procedure, in application of Article 6(3)(c) and (e) of Directive 93/36.

65. The Commission contends that the two exceptions mentioned above are not pertinent in the present case. As regards additional deliveries, the Commission submits that, in addition, the general three-year rule provided for in Article 6(3)(e) of the Directive applied and, in any event, since the previous deliveries were unlawful the additional deliveries were by definition also unlawful.

b) Appraisal

66. It suffices to state that Italy failed to explain and to prove to a sufficient extent what led it to consider that only Agusta helicopters had the required characteristics to justify the purchases under Article 6(3)(c) and (e) of the Directive. Moreover, I agree with the Commission and find that the fact alleged by Italy that other Member States producing helicopters follow the same procedure is not pertinent for the purposes of the present proceedings.

67. It follows that in the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court declare that the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 93/36 and, earlier, under Directives 77/62, 80/767, and 88/295.

IV - Costs

68. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice the Italian Government as the unsuccessful party should be ordered to bear the costs.

V - Conclusion

69. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court:

(1) declare that, since the Italian Government and, in particular, the Ministries of Home Affairs, Defence, Economics and Finance, for Agricultural and Forestry Policy, and for Infrastructure and Transport, and the Department of Civil Protection of the Presidency of the Council of Ministers, have adopted a procedure, which has been in existence for a long time and is still followed, of directly awarding to the firm Agusta' contracts for the purchase of helicopters manufactured by Agusta' and Agusta Bell' to meet the requirements of the military corps of the fire brigade, the Carabinieri, the State Forestry Corps, the Coastguard, the Revenue Guard Corps, the State Police and the Department of Civil Protection, without any tendering procedure, in particular without complying with the procedures provided for by Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, and, earlier, by Council Directive 77/62/EEC, Council Directive 80/767/EEC and Council Directive 88/295/EEC, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the abovementioned directives;

(2) order the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

Action brought on 15 September 2005 by the Commission of the European Communities against the Italian Republic

(Language of the case: Italian)

An action against the Italian Republic was brought before the Court of Justice of the European Communities on 15 September 2005 by the Commission of the European Communities, represented by D. Recchia and X. Lewis, acting as Agents.

The Commission claims that the Court should:

Declare that, since the Italian Government and, in particular, the Ministries of Home Affairs, Defence, Economics and Finance, for Agricultural and Forestry Policy, and for Infrastructure and Transport, and the Department of Civil Protection of the Presidency of the Council of Ministers, have adopted a procedure, which has been in existence for a long time and is still followed, of directly awarding to the firm 'Agusta' contracts for the purchase of helicopters manufactured by 'Agusta' and 'Agusta Bell' to meet the requirements of the military corps of the fire brigade, the Carabinieri, the State Forestry Corps, the Coastguard, the Revenue Guard Corps, the State Police and the Department of Civil Protection, without any tendering procedure, in particular without complying with the procedures provided for by Directive 93/36/EEC [1] and, earlier, by Directive 77/62/EEC, [2] Directive 80/767/EEC [3] and 88/295/EEC, [4] the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the abovementioned directives;

Order the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The Government of the Italian Republic and, in particular, the Ministries of Home Affairs, Defence, Economics and Finance, for Agricultural and Forestry Policy, and for Infrastructure and Transport, and the Department of Civil Protection of the Presidency of the Council of Ministers, have adopted a procedure, which has been in existence for a long time and is still followed, of directly awarding to the firm 'Agusta' contracts for the purchase of helicopters manufactured by 'Agusta' and 'Agusta Bell' to meet the requirements of the military corps of the fire brigade, the Carabinieri, the State Forestry Corps, the Coastguard, the Revenue Guard Corps, the State Police and the Department of Civil Protection, without any tendering procedure, in particular without complying with the procedures provided for by Directive 93/36/EEC and, earlier, by Directive 77/62/EEC, Directive 80/767/EEC and 88/295/EEC, and has thereby failed to fulfil its obligations under the abovementioned directives.

Following receipt of a complaint, the Commission acquired information from which it appears that the Italian Government has operated that procedure for a long time.

The Commission takes the view that that practice is incompatible with the directives on public supply contracts referred to above in so far as none of the conditions to which recourse to the negotiated procedure without publication of a contract notice is subject appears to have been satisfied.

The Commission considers, moreover, that Italy has not shown that the practice in question is justified on the basis of Article 2 of Directive 93/36/EEC, according to which the directive is not to apply to supply contracts which are declared secret or the execution of which must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions in force in the Member States concerned or when the protection of the basic interests of the Member State's security so requires.

2. Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works, supply and service contracts - Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 - Scope

1. Article 86(1) EC, according to which, in the case of public undertakings and undertakings to which Member States grant special or exclusive rights, Member States are not to enact or maintain in force any measure contrary to the rules contained in the Treaty, in particular to those rules provided for in Articles 12 EC and 81 EC to 89 EC inclusive, has no independent effect in the sense that it must be read in conjunction with the relevant rules of the Treaty.

(see paras 39-40)

2. Directives 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, 93/36 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts and 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts do not preclude a body of rules which enables a public undertaking acting as an instrument and technical service of several public authorities, to execute operations without being subject to the regime laid down by those directives, since, first, the public authorities concerned exercise over that undertaking a control similar to that which they exercise over their own departments, and, second, such an undertaking carries out the essential part of its activities with those same authorities.

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby rules:

Council Directives 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts and 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts do not preclude a body of rules such as that governing Tragsa, which enable it, as a public undertaking acting as an instrument and technical service of several public authorities, to execute operations without being subject to the regime laid down by those directives, since, first, the public authorities concerned exercise over that undertaking a control similar to that which they exercise over their own departments, and, second, such an undertaking carries out the essential part of its activities with those same authorities.

1. The reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the question whether, having regard to Article 86(1) EC, a Member State may confer on a public undertaking a legal regime enabling it to carry out operations without being subject to Council Directives 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), and whether those directives preclude such a regime.

2. That reference was made in the course of proceedings between the Asociacion Nacional de Empresas Forestales (National Association of Forestry Undertakings, Asemfo') and the Administracion del Estado (State Administration) over a complaint about the legal regime of Transformacion Agraria SA (Tragsa').

The body of rules governing Tragsa

8. Tragsa's constitution was authorised by Article 1 of Decreto Real (Royal Decree) 379/1977 of 21 January 1977 (BOE No 65 of 17 March 1977, p. 6202).

9. The body of rules governing Tragsa and established by that royal decree was successively amended until the adoption of Ley 66/1997 de Medidis Fiscales Adminstrativas y del Orden Social (Law 66/1997 concerning Fiscal, Administrative and Social Measures) of 30 December 1997 (BOE No 313 of 31 December 1997, p. 38589), as amended by Ley 53/2002 of 30 December 2002 (BOE No 313 of 31 December 2002, p. 46086), and Ley 62/2003 of 30 December 2003 (BOE No 313 of 31 December 2003, p. 46874), (hereinafter Law 66/1997').

10. Under Article 88 of Law 66/1997, entitled Legal status':

1. [Tragsa] is a state company... which provides essential services in the field of rural development and environmental protection, in accordance with the provisions of the present law.

2. The Autonomous Communities may participate in the share capital of Tragsa by means of acquisitions of shares, the disposal of which requires authorisation by the Ministerio de Economía y Hacienda (Ministry of the Treasury), on the proposal of the Ministerio de Agricultura, Pesca y Alimentacion (Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food) and of the Ministerio de Medio Ambiente (Ministry of the Environment).

3. Tragsa's objects are:

(a) The carrying out of all types of actions, works and supplies of services in respect of agriculture, stock-rearing, forestry, rural development, conservation and protection of nature and the environment, of aquaculture and fisheries, as well as the actions necessary for the improvement of the use and of the management of natural resources, in particular, the carrying out of works of conservation and enrichment of the historic Spanish patrimony in the countryside ... ;

(b) the preparation of studies plans and projects and of all types of advice and technical assistance and training in respect of agriculture, forestry, rural development, environmental protection and improvement, aquaculture and fisheries, nature conservation, as well as in respect of the use and management of natural resources;

(c) agricultural activities, stock-rearing, forestry and aquaculture and the marketing of the products thereof, administration and management of farms, mountains, agricultural, forestry environmental and nature protection centres and the management of open spaces and natural resources;

(h) the execution, at the request of third parties, of actions, works, technical assistance, advice and supplies of rural, agricultural, forestry and environmental services within and outside the national territory, directly or through its subsidiaries.

4. As an instrument and technical service of the Administration, Tragsa shall be required to execute exclusively, by itself or through its subsidiaries, the works entrusted to it by the Administracion General del Estado (General Administration of the State), the Autonomous Communities or the public bodies subject to them in matters which come within the company's objects and, in particular, those which are urgent or which are ordered because of declared emergencies.

5. Neither Tragsa nor its subsidiaries may participate in public procurement procedures put in place by the public authorities whose instrument they are. However, in the absence of any tenderer, Tragsa may be entrusted with the execution of the activity which is the subject of the public call for tenders.

6. The value of the major works, projects, studies and supplies undertaken by Tragsa shall be determined by applying to the stages carried out the corresponding tariffs, which must be determined by the competent authority. Those tariffs shall be calculated so as to reflect the actual costs of carrying out the works and their application to the stages carried out shall be sufficient evidence of the investment made or services rendered.

7. Contracts for works, supplies, advice and assistance and services which Tragsa and its subsidiaries conclude with third parties shall remain subject to the provisions of [Law 13/1995], as regards publicity, procurement procedures and the forms thereof, provided that the value of the contracts is equal or superior to those laid down in Articles 135(1), 177(2) and 203(2) of [that law].'

11. Decreto Real 371/1999 of 5 March 1999 laying down the rules governing Tragsa (BOE No 64 of 16 March 1999, p. 10605, Royal Decree 371/1999') specifies the legal, financial and administrative rules governing that company and subsidiaries in their relations with the public authorities in respect of administrative action in or outside national territory, in their capacity as an instrument and technical service of those administrations.

12. Under Article 2 of Royal Decree 371/1999, Tragsa's entire share capital is to be held by persons governed by public law.

13. Article 3 of Royal Decree 371/1999, entitled Legal status', provides:

1. Tragsa and its subsidiaries are an instrument and a technical service of the General Administration of the State and of those of each of the Autonomous Communities concerned.

The various departments or ministries of the Autonomous Communities of the aforementioned public administrations, as well as the bodies subject to them and the entities of any nature which are connected to them for the purposes of carrying out of their plans of action, may entrust Tragsa or its subsidiaries with works and activities necessary to the exercise of their powers and duties, and with complementary or ancillary works and activities in accordance with the regime established by this royal decree.

2. Tragsa and its subsidiaries shall be required to carry out the works and activities with which they are entrusted by the administration. That obligation covers, exclusively, the demands with which they are entrusted as an instrument and technical service in matters which come within its objects.

3. Emergency action decided upon in connection with catastrophes or disasters of any nature which is entrusted to them by the competent authority shall, for Tragsa and its subsidiaries, in addition to being obligatory, be a priority.

In emergencies, in which the public authorities must take immediate action, they shall be able to call directly on Tragsa and its subsidiaries and instruct them to take the action necessary to provide the most effective possible protection for persons and goods and the maintenance of services.

To that end, Tragsa and its subsidiaries shall be integrated into the present arrangements for the prevention of dangers and into action plans and shall be subject to implementing protocols. In that type of situation, they shall mobilise, on demand, all the means at their disposal.

4. In connection with their relationships of collaboration or cooperation with other authorities or bodies governed by public law, the public authorities may suggest the services of Tragsa and its subsidiaries, regarded as their instrument, in order that those other authorities or bodies governed by public law shall use them as their instrument ...

5. ... the functions of organisation, supervision and control concerning Tragsa and its subsidiaries shall be exercised by the Ministerio de Agricultura, Pesca y Alimentacion (Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food) as well as by the Ministerio de Medio Ambiente (Ministry of the Environment).

6. Tragsa's and its subsidiaries' relations with other authorities as an instrument and technical service are instrumental and not contractual in nature. Consequently, they are, in every respect, internal, dependent, and subordinate.'

14. Article 4 of Royal Decree 371/1999, entitled Financial structure', is worded as follows:

1. In accordance with Article 3 of the present royal decree, Tragsa and its subsidiaries shall receive, in return for the works, technical assistance and advice, and for the supplies of goods and services with which they are entrusted, an amount corresponding to the expenses which they have incurred by applying the system of tariffs established by this article...

2. The tariffs shall be calculated and applied by stages of execution and in such a way as to reflect the total actual costs, be they direct or indirect, of executing them.

7. New tariffs, modification of existing tariffs and the procedures, mechanisms and formulae for revising them shall be adopted by each public authority of which Tragsa and its subsidiaries are an instrument and technical service.

15. Finally, Article 5 of Royal Decree 371/1999, entitled Administrative rules for action', provides:

1. Mandatory action which is entrusted to Tragsa or its subsidiaries, shall form the subject, as appropriate, of drafts, memoranda or other technical documents...

2. Before finalising the demand, the competent organs shall approve those documents and follow the mandatory procedures and the technical, legal, budgetary, supervisory and approval formalities in respect of the expense.

3. The demand for each mandatory action shall be formally communicated by the authorities to Tragsa or its subsidiaries, by means of an instruction containing, in addition to the appropriate information, the name of the authority, the period within which the instruction is to be carried out, its value, the budgetary heading corresponding to it and, if appropriate, the annual amounts on which the financing is based and the respective amount relating to it, as well as the director designated for the action to be executed....

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

16. The facts, as set forth in the order for reference, may be summarised as follows.

17. On 23 February 1996, Asemfo lodged a complaint against Tragsa for a declaration that Tragsa was abusing its dominant position in the Spanish forestry works, services and projects market because of non-compliance with the award procedures laid down in Law 13/1995. According to Asemfo, Tragsa's special status enabled it to carry out a large number of works at the direct demand of the Administration, in breach of the principles relating to public procurement and to free competition, which eliminates any competition on the Spanish market. Being a public undertaking for the purposes of Community law, Tragsa could not be entitled, under the pretext of being a technical service of the Administration, to privileged treatment as regards the rules governing public procurement.

18. By decision of the competent authority of 16 October 1997, that complaint was rejected on the ground that Tragsa was a service of the Administration, without any independent decision-making powers and was required to carry out the works demanded of it. Tragsa operating outside the market, its activities do not, therefore, come under the law of competition.

19. Asemfo appealed against that decision before the Tribunal de Defensa de la Competencia (Competition Court). By judgment of 30 March 1998, that court dismissed the appeal, holding that the operations carried out by Tragsa were executed by the Administration itself and that, therefore, there could be no breach of competition law unless that company was acting independently.

20. Asemfo appealed to the Audiencia Nacional (National High Court) which, in its turn, by a judgment of 26 September 2001, upheld the judgment at first instance.

21. Asemfo appealed on a point of law against that judgment to the Tribunal Supremo (Supreme Court) arguing that Tragsa, as a public undertaking, could not be treated as a service of the Administration, which would enable it to derogate from the rules of public procurement, and that the company's legal status, as defined in Article 88 of Ley 66/1997, could not be compatible with Community law.

22. Having held that Tragsa is an instrument' of the Administration and that it confines itself to carrying out the instructions of the public authorities, without being able to refuse them or fix the price of its activities, the Tribunal Supremo has harboured doubts as regards the compatibility of Tragsa's legal status with Community law in the light of the Court's case-law on the application to public undertakings of the provisions of Community law relating to public procurement and free competition.

23. In addition, while recalling that, in Case C-349/97 Spain v Commission [2003] ECR I-3851, the Court held, in respect of Tragsa, that it must be regarded as a means by which the Administration acts directly, the referring court states that, in the case which is now before it, there are factual circumstances which were not considered in that judgment, such as the strong public participation on the agricultural works market, which causes it significant disruption, even if Tragsa's activities are, in law, unconnected to the market, inasmuch as from a legal point of view it is the Administration which acts.

24. Those were the circumstances in which the Tribunal Supremo decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Does Article 86(1) EC permit a Member State of the European Union to grant ex lege to a public undertaking a legal status which allows it to execute public works without being subject to the general rules on the award of public contracts by tender, where there are no special circumstances of urgency or public interest, both below and above the financial threshold laid down by the European Directives in this regard?

(2) Is such a legal regime compatible with the provisions of Council Directives 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC and European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 [(OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1)] and Commission Directive 2001/78 [EC of 13 September 2001 (OJ 2001 L 285, p. 1)] amending the three previous directives - legislation recently recast by European Parliament and Council Directive 2004/18/EC of 31 March 2004 [on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)]?

(3) Are the statements contained in the judgment... in Spain v Commission applicable in any event to Tragsa and its subsidiaries, in the light of the rest of the case-law of the Court regarding public procurement and in view of the fact that the Administration entrusts to Tragsa a large number of works which are not subject to the rules governing free competition, and that this situation might cause considerable distortion of the relevant market?'

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

Admissibility

25. Tragsa, the Spanish Government and the Commission of the European Communities challenge the Court's jurisdiction to give a preliminary ruling on the reference and, relying on several arguments, cast doubt on the admissibility of the questions referred by the national court.

26. First of all, those questions relate only to the evaluation of national measures and, therefore, they do not come within the jurisdiction of the Court,

27. Next, those questions are hypothetical inasmuch as they seek an answer to problems which are not relevant or germane to the outcome of the main proceedings. If the only relevant plea in law invoked by Asemfo were a breach of the rules concerning public procurement, such a breach cannot, by itself, found an allegation that Tragsa abuses a dominant position on the market. In addition, it does not seem that the Court could be persuaded to interpret the directives relating to public procurement for the purposes of national proceedings intended to establish whether that company has abused an allegedly dominant position.

28. Finally, the order of reference contains no information relating to the relevant market or to Tragsa's allegedly dominant position upon it. Nor does it contain any detailed argument on the applicability of Article 86 EC and offers no comment on its application in conjunction with Article 82 EC.

29. It is appropriate in the first place to recall that, according to settled case-law, even though it is true that it is not for the Court to rule on the compatibility of national rules with the provisions of Community law in proceedings brought under Article 234 EC since the interpretation of such rules is a matter for the national courts, the Court does have jurisdiction to supply the latter with all the guidance as to the interpretation of Community law necessary to enable them to rule on the compatibility of such rules with the provisions of Community law (Case C-506/04 Wilson [2006] ECR I-0000, paragraphs 34 and 35, and the case-law there cited).

30. Secondly, under equally settled case-law, in the context of the cooperation between the Court of Justice and the national courts provided for by Article 234 EC, it is solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. Consequently, where questions submitted by national courts concern the interpretation of a provision of Community law, the Court of Justice is bound, in principle, to give a ruling (see, in particular, Case C286/02 Bellio F.lli [2004] ECR I3465, paragraph 27, and Case C217/05 Confederacion Española de Empresarios de Estaciones de Servicio [2006] ECR I0000, paragraphs 16 and 17, and the case-law there cited).

31. Thirdly, it is settled case-law that a reference from a national court may be refused only if it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or to its purpose, or where the problem is hypothetical or the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (Case C-238/05 Asnef-Equifax and Administracion del Estado [2006] ECR I-0000, paragraph 17, and the case-law there cited).

32. Furthermore, the Court has also held that the need to provide an interpretation of Community law which will be of use to the national court makes it necessary that the national court should define the factual and legislative context of the questions it is asking or, at the very least, explain the factual circumstances on which those questions are based (Case C205/05 Nemec [2006] ECR I0000, paragraph 25, and Confederacion Española de Empresarios de Estaciones de Servicio , paragraph 26, and the case-law there cited).

33. In that regard, according to the case-law of the Court, it is essential that the national court should give at the very least some explanation of the reasons for the choice of the Community provisions which it requires to be interpreted and on the link it establishes between those provisions and the national legislation applicable to the dispute (Nemec , paragraph 26, and Joined Cases C-94/04 and C-202/04 Cipolla and Others [2006] ECR I-0000, paragraph 38).

34. In the case in the main proceedings, while it is admittedly true that the Court cannot itself rule on the compatibility of Tragsa's legal status with Community law, there is nothing to prevent it from providing the canons of construction of Community law which will enable the referring court itself to rule on the compatibility of Tragsa's legal status with Community law.

35. In those circumstances, it is necessary to examine whether, in the light of the case-law referred to in paragraphs 31 to 33 of the present judgment, the Court has before it the factual and legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it.

36. As regards the second and third questions, it is important to point out that the order of reference sets out, briefly but precisely, the facts which gave rise to the main proceedings and the relevant provisions of the applicable national law.

37. Indeed, it is clear from that decision that those proceedings arose following a complaint lodged by Asemfo concerning Tragsa's legal status, since the latter can, according to Asemfo, carry out a large number of operations at the direct demand of the Administration, without compliance with the rules in respect of publicity set out in the directives relating to public procurement. In those proceedings, Asemfo maintains also that Tragsa, being a public undertaking, cannot be entitled, under the pretext of being a technical service of the Administration, to privileged treatment as regards the rules governing public procurement.

38. In addition, in connection with the second and third questions, the order of reference sets out, referring to the Court's case-law, first, the reasons for which the national court requests the interpretation of the directives relating to public procurement and, second, the link between the relevant Community legislation and the national legislation applicable to the matter.

39. As regards the first question, which concerns the point whether the body of rules governing Tragsa is contrary to Article 86(1) EC, it is appropriate to point out that, according to that article, in the case of public undertakings and undertakings to which Member States grant special or exclusive rights, Member States are not to enact or maintain in force any measure contrary to the rules contained in the EC Treaty, in particular to those rules provided for in Articles 12 EC and 81 EC to 89 EC inclusive.

40. It follows from the clear terms of Article 86(1) EC that it has no independent effect in the sense that it must be read in conjunction with the relevant rules of the Treaty.

41. It follows from the order of reference that the relevant provision referred to by the national court is Article 86(1) EC in conjunction with Article 82 EC.

42. In that regard, there is no precise information in the order for reference concerning the existence of a dominant position, its unlawful exploitation by Tragsa or the effect of such a position on trade between the Member States.

43. In addition, it seems that, by the first question, the national court refers, in essence, to operations capable of being regarded as public contracts, a premise on which the Court is, in any event, requested to rule in the second question.

44. It follows therefore from the foregoing that, in contrast to the second and third questions, the Court does not have before it the factual and legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the first question.

45. It follows that, whilst the first question must be declared to be inadmissible, the reference for a preliminary ruling is admissible as regards the two other questions.

Substance

The second question

46. By its second question, the referring court asks the Court whether a body of rules such as that governing Tragsa, which enables it to execute operations without being subject to the regime laid down by those directives, is contrary to Directives 93/36 and 93/37.

47. At the outset, it must be stated that, notwithstanding the references made by the national court to Directives 97/52, 2001/78 and 2004/18, in view both of the context and of the date of the facts of the dispute in main proceedings and the nature of Tragsa's activities, as described in Article 88(3) of Ley 66/1997, it is appropriate to examine that second question having regard to the rules set forth in the directives relating to public procurement, namely, Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, which are relevant in this case.

48. In that regard, it must be observed that, according to the definitions given in Article 1(a) of each of the Directives mentioned in the preceding paragraph, a public service, supply or works contract assumes the existence of a contract for pecuniary interest in writing between, first, a service provider, a supplier or a contractor and, second, a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of those directives.

49. In this case it is appropriate to hold , first of all, that, under Article 88(1) and (2) of Ley 66/1997 Tragsa is a State company the share capital of which may also be held by the Autonomous Communities. Article 88(4) and the first subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Royal Decree 371/1999 state that Tragsa is an instrument and a technical service of the General State Administration and of the administration of each of the Autonomous Communities concerned.

50. Next, as is clear from Articles 3(2) to (5), and 4(1), (2) and (7) of Royal Decree 371/1999, Tragsa is required to carry out the orders given it by the General State Administration, the Autonomous

Communities and the public bodies subject t o them, in the areas covered by its company objects, and it is not entitled to fix freely the tariff for its actions.

51. Finally, under Article 3(6) of Royal Decree 371/1999, Tragsa's relations with those public bodies, inasmuch as that company is an instrument and a technical service of those bodies, are not contractual, but in every respect internal, dependent and subordinate.

52. Asemfo submits that the legal relationship which flows from the orders which Tragsa receives, even though it is formally unilateral, reveals in fact, as is clear from the Court's case-law, an indisputable contractual link with the limited partner. Asemfo refers, in that regard, to Case C399/98 Ordine degli Architetti and Others [2001] ECR I-5409. In those circumstances even if Tragsa seems to act on the instructions of the public authorities, it is, in fact, a party contracting with the Administration, so that the rules for public procurement ought to be applied.

53. In that regard, it is appropriate to observe that, in paragraph 205 of the judgment in Spain v Commission , the Court held, in a different context from that of the main proceedings, that being an instrument and technical service of the Spanish Administration, Tragsa is required to implement, itself or using its subsidiaries, only work entrusted to it by General Administration of the State, the Autonomous Communities or the public bodies subject to them.

54. It must be observed that, if, which it is for the referring court to establish, Tragsa has no choice, either as to the acceptance of a demand made by the competent authorities in question, or as to the tariff for its services, the requirement for the application of the directives concerned relating to the existence of a contract is not met.

55. In any event, it is important to recall that, according to the Court's settled case-law, a call for tenders, under the directives relating to public procurement, is not compulsory, even if the contracting party is an entity legally distinct from the contracting authority, where two conditions are met. First, the public authority which is a contracting authority must exercise over the distinct entity in question a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, second, that entity must carry out the essential part of its activities with the local authority or authorities which control it (see Case C107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I8121, paragraph 50; Case C26/03 Stadt Halle and RPL Loclau [2005] ECR I-1 paragraph 49; Case C-84/03 Commission v Spain [2005] ECR I-139, paragraph 38; Case C-29/04 Commission v Austria [2005] ECR I-9705, paragraph 34; and Case C-340/04 Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei [2006] ECR I-4137, paragraph 33).

56. Accordingly, it is appropriate to examine whether the two conditions required by the case-law cited in the preceding paragraph are met in Tragsa's case.

57. As regards the first condition, relating to the public authority's control, it follows from the Court's case-law that the fact that the contracting authority holds, alone or together with other public authorities, all of the share capital in a successful tenderer tends to indicate, generally, that that contracting authority exercises over that company a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments (Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei , paragraph 37).

58. In the case in the main proceedings, it is clear from the case file, but subject to confirmation by the referring court, that 99% of Tragsa's share capital is held by the Spanish State itself and through a holding company and a guarantee fund, and that four Autonomous Communities, each with one share, hold 1% of such capital.

59. In that regard, the argument cannot be accepted that that condition is met only for contracts performed at the demand of the Spanish State, excluding those which are the subject of a demand from the Autonomous Communities as regards which Tragsa must be regarded as a third party.

60. It appears to follow from Article 88(4) of Ley 66/1997 and Articles 3(2) to (6) and 4(1) and (7) of Royal Decree 371/1999 that Tragsa is required to carry out the orders given it by the public authorities, including the Autonomous Communities. It also seems to follow from that national legislation that, as with the Spanish State, in the context of its activities with those Communities, as an instrument and technical service, Tragsa is not free to fix the tariff for its actions and that its relationships with them are not contractual.

61. It seems therefore that Tragsa cannot be regarded as a third party in relation to the Autonomous Communities which hold a part of its capital.

62. As regards the second condition, relating to the fact that the essential part of Tragsa's activities must be carried out with the authority or authorities which own it, it follows from the case-law that, where several authorities control an undertaking, that condition may be met if that undertaking carries out the essential part of its activities, not necessarily with any one of those authorities, but with all of those authorities together (Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei , paragraph 70).

63. In the case in the main proceedings, as is clear from the case-file, Tragsa carries out more than 55% of its activities with the Autonomous Communities and nearly 35% with the State. It thus appears that the essential part of its activities is carried out with the public authorities and bodies which control it.

64. In those circumstances, but subject to confirmation by the referring court, it must be held that the two conditions required by the case-law cited in paragraph 55 of the present judgment are met in this case.

65. It follows from the entirety of the foregoing considerations that the reply to the second question must be that a body of rules such as that governing Tragsa which enables it, as a public undertaking acting as an instrument and technical service of several public authorities, to execute operations without being subject to the regime laid down by those directives, is not contrary to Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, since first, the public authorities concerned exercise over that undertaking a control similar to that which they exercise over their own departments, and, second, such an undertaking carries out the essential part of its activities with those same authorities.

The third question

66. Having regard to the reply given to the second question referred by the national court, there is no need to reply to the third question.

Costs

67. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Geelhoed delivered on 28 September 2006. Asociacion Nacional de Empresas Forestales (Asemfo) v Transformacion Agraria SA (Tragsa) and Administracion del Estado. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Tribunal Supremo - Spain. Reference for a preliminary ruling - Admissibility - Article 86(1) EC - No independent effect - Factors permitting material which enables the Court to give a useful answer to the questions referred - Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC - National legislation enabling a public undertaking to perform operations on the direct instructions of the public authorities without being subject to the general rules for the award of public procurement contracts - Internal management structure - Conditions - The public authority must exercise over a distinct entity a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments - The distinct entity must carry out the essential part of its activities with the public authority or authorities which control it. Case C-295/05.

I - Introduction

1. This case concerns the compatibility with Community law, and in particular with the Community directives governing the award of public contracts (2) and with Articles 12 EC, 43 EC, 46 EC and 86(1) EC, of a national statutory regime for a public undertaking constituted under private law which, under that statutory regime, is an instrument' or executive service of the public authorities, but which may also carry out work for public bodies other than those to which it is subject as an executive service, as well as for private undertakings and organisations. In addition, this legal person may be asked by the competent public authorities to provide services other than those included in its statutory remit.

2. The questions have arisen in connection with a complaint by the Asociacion Nacional de Empresas Forestales (Asemfo') against Empresa de Transformacion Agraria SA (Tragsa'), in which Asemfo accused Tragsa of infringing Spanish competition law by failing to comply with the public procurement procedures laid down in Spanish legislation, which constituted an abuse of its dominant position in the market for forestry works, services and projects. In considering Asemfo's appeal against the decision of the Sala de lo Contencioso-Administrativo (Chamber for Contentious Administrative Proceedings) of the Audiencia Nacional (National High Court), the Spanish Tribunal Supremo (Supreme Court) eventually decided that it needed to refer questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling.

II - Legal framework

A - National legislation

3. In order to have a clear understanding of the practical and legal implications of the questions referred to the Court, a more than usually detailed summary is needed of the extensive and complicated national legislation applicable to Tragsa.

4. Tragsa was set up on 24 May 1977 (3) under Royal Decree 379/1977 of 21 January 1977, which authorised its constitution as a public undertaking. Its legal personality is regulated partly by the general rules that apply to companies governed by private law, and partly by the general rules of law that apply for public undertakings. Its company objects were originally laid down in Article 2 of Royal Decree 379/1977, but were subsequently extended by Royal Decrees 424/1984 of 8 February 1984 and 1422/1985 of 17 July 1985. Today, its principal activities involve the execution of various types of works, installations and studies, the provision of services and the preparation of plans and projects in the field of agriculture and forestry, the protection and improvement of the physical environment, fish farming, fishing and nature conservation.

5. It is to be inferred from Article 88 of Spanish Law 66/1997 of 30 December 1997 concerning fiscal, administrative and social measures that Tragsa is a public company, as defined in Article

6(1)(a) of the General Budget Law, providing essential services in the field of rural development and environmental protection. It is an instrument and technical service of the Administration' which is required to carry out, either itself or using its subsidiaries, any work entrusted to it by the General Administration of the State, the Autonomous Communities or the public bodies subject to them.

6. Ultimately, the legal regime for Tragsa is set out in Royal Decree 371/1999 of 5 May 1999 laying down the regime governing the Land Transformation Company PLC' (Tragsa).

7. Tragsa is required to carry out the works and activities entrusted to it by the Administration. That requirement specifically includes the work it is given as an executive organisation and technical service of the Administration in the areas covered by its company objects (Article 3(2) of Royal Decree 371/1999). In addition, Tragsa is required to give priority to urgent and exceptional work arising from natural disasters and similar events (Article 3(3) of the decree). It cannot refuse the work entrusted to it or negotiate the deadline for completion, and must execute the works assigned in accordance with the instructions it is given (Article 5(3) of the decree).

8. The royal decree classifies Tragsa's relations with the central and decentralised public administrations as instrumental rather than contractual, and they are therefore, for all purposes, internal, dependent and (for Tragsa) subordinate (Article 3(6) of the decree).

9. Under the financial system to which Tragsa is subject, its work is paid according to a system of tariffs laid down in Article 4 of Royal Decree 371/1999. The tariffs are decided by a joint ministerial committee partly on the basis of information supplied by Tragsa on its costs.

10. Tragsa can call on the help of private undertakings in its activities (Article 6 of Royal Decree 371/1999). There are a number of restrictions on such cooperation with private contractors: the work may involve only the processing or manufacturing of movable property, the amounts for which such contracts may be concluded are limited, and the principles of prior public tender (publication and competition) must be observed in the selection of private partners.

11. It should also be pointed out here that Tragsa can also operate as an undertaking company, even vis-à-vis the Administration, without having to retain its capacity as an executive organisation and technical service of the Administration'. In such cases, its activities are governed, pursuant to Article 1 of Royal Decree 371/1999, by the rules which generally apply to commercial undertakings.

12. The administrative context in which Tragsa operates changed significantly in the 1980s as a result of the entry into force of the Spanish Constitution of 1978, when responsibility for agriculture and environmental protection was transferred from the General State Administration to the Autonomous Communities or regions (the Autonomous Communities'). The transfer of administrative powers also necessarily involved the transfer of the resources and instruments needed to enable those powers to be fully exercised. For that reason Tragsa was placed at the disposal of the Autonomous Communities to enable them to exercise their powers even before the EC Treaty came into force for Spain.

13. The transfer of public powers with respect to Tragsa from the General State Administration to the Autonomous Communities took the form of public law agreements which each of the Communities concluded with Tragsa, laying down the rules governing the use of Tragsa as an instrument' of the Autonomous Community concerned. Most of the Autonomous Communities concluded such agreements with Tragsa, although only four became shareholders in it as a company.

14. Under the Spanish laws and regulations in force, however, an Autonomous Community does not need to become a shareholder in Tragsa in order to use its services: Tragsa operates as an instrument' of the Autonomous Communities, so that as a rule it makes no difference whether or not they are shareholders. That is borne out by Law 66/1997, which provides that the regions may, but need not,

15. In order to assess the questions referred to the Court, it is also useful to reproduce a number of other sections of the Spanish legislation on public procurement, which determine the legal framework in which Tragsa operated, and still operates, on the basis of its legal status as a public undertaking.

Article 60 of the Law on Public Procurement, as confirmed by Royal Decree 923/1965 of 8 April 1965, provides as follows:

Only those works which are carried out in the following circumstances may be executed directly by the Administration:

1. Where the Administration has available plant, stocks, facilities or technical or industrial services suitable for the execution of the planned works, in which case use should usually be made of those resources.'

Article 153 of Law 13/1995 of 18 May 1995 on Public Procurement provides as follows:

1. The Administration may carry out works using its own services and its own human or material resources, or in cooperation with private undertakings, in the latter case on condition that the financial interest of the works in question is less than ESP 681 655 208, excluding VAT, where one of the following circumstances occurs:

(a) where the Administration has available plant, stocks, facilities or technical or industrial services suitable for the execution of the planned works, in which case use should usually be made of those resources.'

Article 152 of the revised text of the Law on Public Procurement, confirmed by Royal Decree 2/2000 of 16 June 2000, reads:

1. The Administration may carry out works using its own services and its own staff or material resources, or in cooperation with private undertakings, provided, in the latter case, that the amount of the works in question is lower than EUR 5 923 624, the equivalent of 5 000 000 special drawing rights, where one of the following situations obtains:

(a) where the Administration has at its disposal factories, stocks, workshops or technical or industrial services suitable for the execution of the project works, use should usually be made of that method of execution.'

Article 194 of the Law on Public Procurement provides that:

1. The Administration may manufacture movable property using its own services and its own human or material resources, or in cooperation with private contractors, provided, in the latter case, that the amount of the works in question is lower than the maximum amounts laid down in Article 177(2), where one of the following situations obtains:

(a) where the Administration has available factories, stocks, workshops or technical or industrial services suitable for the execution of the planned works, use should usually be made of that method of execution.'

16. As the referring court explains, the legislation cited in the previous point summarises the various conditions on which the Administration itself is allowed to execute works directly, including the condition that it must have its own resources, as is the case with Tragsa in its activities. That condition is not linked to any other more detailed requirement or circumstance, such as reasons of urgency or public interest, for instance. Those are covered by a separate provision: in the case of the execution of works considered urgent according to the provisions of this Law'. (4) Therefore, the Administration need only have its own services, like Tragsa and its subsidiaries, to be able to entrust to them all types of work or works without any other requirement, the only restriction being the quantitative limit that applies if Tragsa involves private parties in the execution of the services. It would then be a possibility, but not an obligation, for the Administration concerned.

17. Finally, I would point out that Tragsa is itself a contracting authority. That is clear from Article 88(7) of Law 66/1997, as amended by Law 53/2002.

B - Further details of Tragsa's structure and activities

18. In its written observations, the Commission provided a number of details about Tragsa's structure and activities which shed light on the legal and administrative framework described above, and which may be relevant in assessing and answering the questions referred to the Court.

19. At present, the vast majority of the shares in Tragsa - more than 99% - are held directly or indirectly by the Spanish State. Four Autonomous Communities have an almost symbolic share, which combined accounts for less than 1% of Tragsa's share capital.

20. Tragsa's activities have become considerably diversified over time. Apart from the more conventional activities such as designing and constructing infrastructure and other works needed to modernise agricultural production and livestock farming, technologies promoting efficient water use and activities protecting the physical and natural environment as well as the historical and cultural heritage of the countryside have become increasingly important. There are also activities promoting forestry, the protection of fish stocks and fish farming.

21. Tragsa is financed by the payments it receives for its work. In the 2004 financial year, its turnover was EUR 674 million, and its profits after deduction of corporation tax were EUR 22.24 million.

22. More than half the turnover of Tragsa and its subsidiaries (5) comes from work for the Autonomous Communities. That is logical, because the Autonomous Communities exercise most of the public powers in the areas in which this undertaking operates. Around 30% of turnover comes from the Spanish State Administration, around 5% from other public bodies, including local authorities, and 2 to 3.5% from private undertakings.

23. The Commission asserts that it cannot tell from the figures available what proportion of the total turnover comes from Tragsa's activities in its capacity as an instrument and technical service' of the Administration.

24. In order to analyse the questions raised by the Tribunal Supremo more closely, I feel it useful at this stage to make the following points on the basis of the above observations:

In its capacity as an executive organisation for - primarily - the Autonomous Communities, Tragsa, as a legal entity, is almost entirely owned by the Spanish State, which holds more than 99% of its share capital;

As a constitutionally independent executive organisation, Tragsa is entirely subject, when providing services for the General State Administration and the Autonomous Communities, to the orders and instructions given by those administrations in the exercise of their public powers: it is required to accept the work entrusted to it and to carry it out in accordance with the specifications and time periods given and at the tariffs laid down by regulation;

Under the Spanish legislation on public procurement, it is entirely possible for Tragsa to receive contracts from the General State Administration and the Autonomous Communities which have no connection with the exercise of public powers, duties and responsibilities, but which are entrusted to it solely because it is available as a technical service, and which are also carried out by private operators under normal market conditions; (6)

The system of statutory and administrative rules under which Tragsa operates expressly and tacitly allows scope for activities other than those which it carries out as an executive organisation of the General State Administration and the Autonomous Communities. However, the extent of that scope cannot be accurately deduced from the information available, since Tragsa carries out some of its activities through its subsidiaries.

III - Facts, procedure and the questions referred

25. On 23 February 1996 Asemfo lodged a complaint with the Spanish Competition Authority, accusing Tragsa of abusing its dominant position in the Spanish forestry (works, services and projects) market because its public clients did not comply with the award procedures laid down in Ley 13/1995 de Contratos de las Administraciones Publicas (Law 13/1995 on Public Procurement) of 18 May 1995, cited in point 15 above.

According to Asemfo, the constitution governing Tragsa's operations meant that it could carry out a wide range of works at the direct request of the central or decentralised authorities, without a prior invitation to tender. As a result, competition on the market for services and works in the areas of agriculture and forestry in Spain was eliminated.

26. In a decision of 16 October 1997, the Competition Authority dismissed the complaint. It ruled that in that particular case Tragsa operated as an instrument' or executive service of the Administration, without any independent decisionmaking powers, and was required to carry out the works entrusted to it itself. It was therefore a question of relations between contracting authority and contractor within the State Administration itself, and Tragsa's operations had nothing to do with the market or the competition law applicable to private and public undertakings.

27. Asemfo lodged an appeal against that decision before the Tribunal de Defensa de Competencia (Competition Court). By judgment of 30 March 1998, that court dismissed the appeal on the same grounds as the Competition Authority. It emphasised that the activities which Tragsa carried out for the relevant authorities were to be seen as works carried out by those authorities themselves. Only when Tragsa acted independently as a public undertaking could there be any question of a breach of competition law.

28. Asemfo then appealed to the Sala de lo Contencioso-Administrativo of the Audiencia Nacional, which confirmed the Competition Court's decision in a judgment of 26 September 2001.

29. Asemfo finally appealed to the Tribunal Supremo, arguing that Tragsa, in its capacity as a public undertaking, could not be regarded as an instrument' or executive service of the Administration, to which the Community rules on public procurement did not apply, and that the legal regime applicable to Tragsa, as laid down in Article 88 of Law 66/1997 in particular, was not compatible with Community law.

30. The Tribunal Supremo had a number of doubts about the compatibility of Tragsa's legal regime with Community law.

31. It therefore felt it desirable to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Does Article 86(1) EC permit a Member State of the European Union to grant ex lege to a public undertaking a legal status which allows it to execute public works without being subject to the general rules on the award of public contracts by tender, where there are no special circumstances of urgency or public interest, both below and above the financial threshold laid down by the European Directives in this regard?

(2) Is such a legal regime compatible with the provisions of Council Directives 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993, European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October

1997 and Commission Directive 2001/78[/EC] amending the three previous directives - legislation recently recast by European Parliament and Council Directive 2004/18/EC of 31 March 2004?

(3) Are the statements contained in the judgment of the Court of Justice of the European [Communities] of 8 May 2003 in Case C349/97 Spain v Commission applicable in any event to Tragsa and its subsidiaries, in the light of the rest of the case-law of the Court regarding public procurement and in view of the fact that the Administration entrusts to Tragsa a large number of works which are not subject to the rules governing free competition, and that this situation might cause considerable distortion of the relevant market?'

A - Procedure before the Court

32. Asemfo, Tragsa, the Spanish Government, the Lithuanian Government and the Commission have submitted written observations. At the hearing on 15 June 2006, Tragsa, the Spanish Government and the Commission provided further information in support of their positions.

IV - Assessment

A - Preliminary remarks

33. Tragsa, the Spanish Government and the Commission have all to some extent challenged the admissibility of the questions referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling.

34. In my view, given the complexity of the factual and legal situation in Spain, it is not possible to examine the doubts raised concerning the relevance of the questions referred and whether they are necessary to the resolution of the dispute in the main proceedings until the substance of the questions has been addressed in the light of the Court's existing case-law.

35. For that reason, I shall not examine the admissibility of the questions referred until the end of this Opinion.

36. In all the written observations and also at the hearing, detailed consideration was given to the Court's judgments concerning the applicability of Community law to the award of public contracts for supplies and for the execution of works, (7) and in the award of concessions by administrations, (8) in cases where the public authority which is a contracting authority exercises over the contracting entity concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and that entity carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling public authority or authorities. (9)

37. As the Commission rightly pointed out at the hearing, those judgments were delivered in cases where the contracting authorities awarded contracts for pecuniary interest for the supply of goods and/or services to entities over which they exercised more or less extensive control and which carried out most or a significant part of their activities with those authorities.

38. However, the factual and legal situation underlying the questions referred in this case differs in two respects from that of the judgment cited in footnote 7 above:

The Spanish State Administration and the Autonomous Communities are Tragsa's contracting authorities in a strictly hierarchical sense, in that Tragsa cannot refuse the work entrusted to it by the relevant authorities, is wholly bound by the instructions and specifications of those authorities and receives payment for its work which is calculated and determined by regulation. In short, even though its legal personality is governed partly by private and partly by public law, Tragsa has to be characterised as an executive service of the Spanish State Administration and the Autonomous Communities. The contractual element between the contracting authority and the contractor, which always existed in the cases in which the Court delivered the judgments cited above, is entirely absent here; (10)

Although Tragsa currently carries out the essential part of its activities with the Autonomous Communities, the assumption that it is controlled by these territorial entities is problematic, to say the least. Its status under public law is, as is clear from the above summary,(11) entirely or almost entirely determined by Spain's State legislature, while only 4 of the 17 Autonomous Communities have shares in Tragsa on a symbolic scale, together accounting for less than 1% of the total share capital. It may be inferred from this that, as an executive organisation, Tragsa is indeed at the service of the Autonomous Communities, but not necessarily that it is controlled by them.

39. These differences suggest that the questions referred cannot automatically be answered on the basis of the Court judgments cited, although they may, of course, provide significant guidance for interpreting the relevant rules of law by analogy.

40. Below I shall look first in broad terms at the possible questions of Community law that might arise in a legal and organisational context such as that in the main proceedings.

41. I shall then examine, as far as possible using the Court's judgments cited above in footnotes 7 and 8, how the questions referred might be answered.

42. I will consider separately the relevance of Article 86(1) EC in the context of those questions.

43. Finally, I will briefly examine the question of admissibility.

B - The legal and organisational context

44. As I said earlier in point 38 above, Tragsa must be characterised as an instrument' or executive service of Spain's State Administration and, perhaps, of the Autonomous Communities, and must, both as a result of its legal status and because of its ownership - with over 99% of Tragsa's shares owned directly or indirectly by the Spanish State Administration - be regarded as an entity entirely under the control of the Spanish State Administration.

45. The vast majority of its activities, as is clear from its statutory remit, concern work associated with structural improvements in Spanish agriculture and forestry, as well as fishing and fish farming. Over time, these activities have come to include environmental protection and work on maintaining the natural and cultural heritage of the countryside.

46. In addition to these regular' activities, Tragsa is also on standby to be called into action in exceptional circumstances, such as in the event of floods or other similar natural disasters. Tragsa is also sometimes involved in implementing certain sections of the common agricultural policy, as is clear from the Court's judgment in Spain v Commission . (12)

47. The vast majority of those activities must be regarded as practical work carried out as part of the exercise of public responsibility for agricultural structural development in the broad sense, and for the quality of the rural environment.

48. The nature of those activities and the public objectives pursued mean that they can be carried out both by the Administration's own services, by entities that are to some extent independent but under public control, and by private entities contracted by the authorities responsible.

49. In principle, the Member States are free to decide how they organise the performance of activities for which they are publicly responsible, although the Court in the judgments cited earlier ruled that authorities may award public contracts and concessions to their own instruments' without a prior competitive tendering procedure only on strict conditions.

50. As is clear from paragraph 48 of the judgment in Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau , the Court considers that in cases where a public authority which is a contracting authority has the possibility of performing the tasks conferred on it by using its own administrative, technical and other resources, without being obliged to call on outside entities not forming part of its own departments, the Community rules in the field of public procurement do not apply. In such cases, there can be no question of a contract for pecuniary interest concluded with an entity which is legally distinct from the contracting authority.

51. Such a situation appears also to occur in the relationship between the Spanish State Administration and Tragsa. Whether that is also the case in the relationship between the Autonomous Communities and Tragsa, which the Spanish Government and Tragsa appear to take for granted, is one of the questions requiring further analysis at the very least. Can Tragsa automatically be regarded as the Autonomous Communities' own' technical or administrative resource, given that they cannot exercise any powers of control over that resource' under national legislation, nor can they derive such powers from their ownership of shares in it? (13)

52. Whatever the answer to that question may be, the issue of compatibility with primary Community law, and in particular Articles 12 EC, 43 EC and 49 EC, must be assessed. That is, in my opinion, the implication of the recent judgments in Coname and Parking Brixen. (14)

53. However, before I deal with the question whether the Spanish Autonomous Communities, as Tragsa's principals, exercise actual control over that entity, I must first examine what relevance the answer to that question might have in the light of Articles 12 EC, 43 EC, 49 EC and, if appropriate, 86 EC.

54. It is apparent from what I said in point 47 above that the vast majority of the actual activities which Tragsa carries out for the Spanish State Administration do not include activities for the exercise of the Spanish State's official authority. The fact that those activities serve objectives of public policy and public responsibility does not in principle distinguish them from activities carried out by private undertakings contracted by the Administration, such as infrastructure construction works.

55. It follows from this that the first sentence of Article 45 EC in conjunction with Article 55 EC is not applicable. (15) In so far as secondary Community law on public contracts does not apply to them, therefore, the compatibility of Tragsa's operations with Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and, if appropriate, 86 EC must be assessed. (16)

56. Now, does the fact that the Spanish Autonomous Communities can in the broad sense entrust' a considerable proportion of their agricultural structural improvement works to an executive organisation of the Spanish State Administration have actual or potential consequences for freedom of establishment and the free movement of services within the Community? (17)

57. The answer to that question clearly appears to be affirmative, since the result of this arrangement is that a large proportion of the activities in question, which might also be allocated to private operators, are thereby reserved for Tragsa as the State Administration's executive organisation. The market for possible private candidates from elsewhere in the Community is then correspondingly restricted.

58. The fact that the services at issue here are entrusted by one authority (the Autonomous Community) to an executive service (Tragsa) of another authority (the Spanish State Administration), and that not a single element of a contract for pecuniary interest is involved, does not alter the fact that this administrative arrangement has the same effect in economic terms as an arrangement in which one authority entrusts services under contracts for pecuniary interest to an entity which is under the control of another authority.

59. In both arrangements, contracts for the supply of goods, services and public works are removed from competition, with real and potential consequences for the free movement of goods and services and freedom of establishment in the Community market. They should therefore be judged as far as possible by the same measure.

60. The same applies in respect of the requirement that the contracting authority must control the entity or service to which it entrusts works, whether or not by means of a contract for pecuniary interest.

61. In their written and oral statements, Tragsa and the Spanish Government have emphasised above all that Tragsa is an instrument' serving the Spanish State Administration and the Autonomous Communities. That does not alter the fact that Tragsa is more than just an executive service for the Spanish State and the Autonomous Communities. It also acts as a contractor for local authorities, other public bodies and private parties. In that capacity, it competes with other economic operators in order to win contracts.

62. The proportion of its total turnover accounted for by those contracts varies. Paragraph 34 of the Commission's written observations suggests that it fluctuates between 7 and 8.5%. Paragraph 96 of Tragsa's written observations quotes slightly different figures from the Commission's in that the data for two subsidiaries are given separately. In any event, the figures given by the Commission and Tragsa are roughly of the same order of magnitude.

63. Whether it can automatically be concluded from these figures that Tragsa carries out the essential part of its activities with the public authority that controls it - which is the view taken by the Spanish Government and Tragsa itself - is doubtful.

64. First of all, it cannot be concluded from quantitative data for a small number of years that the proportion of the work carried out on a competitive basis for other public bodies and private parties rather than for the Spanish State Administration and the Autonomous Communities will remain less than 10% of the total turnover. In the legal and administrative regime by which Tragsa is governed, there is, at any rate, no provision limiting the extent of such work.

65. Secondly, there is of course still the question of which authority controls Tragsa. If it were solely the Spanish State Administration, from contracts with which Tragsa generates around 30% of its turnover, it would be difficult to argue that it carries out the essential part of its activities with its controlling authority.

66. However, there is a further complication that is legally relevant, to do with the hybrid nature of Tragsa's legal personality.

67. If a legal entity carries out the essential part of its activities as the own' executive service of one or more public authorities and a smaller proportion of its activities on a competitive basis for other public authorities and private clients, the question arises in what capacity it supplies the latter services.

68. Must Tragsa be regarded for the smaller proportion as a legal entity which may be governed by a special constitution, but which competes on the same footing as other private candidates to win contracts from other' public authorities and private parties?

69. Or does Tragsa not rather remain an executive service of the public authorities with which it carries out the essential part of its activities, making its remaining capacity available on the market and thereby absorbing more of the remaining work on the market in the field of agricultural infrastructure and nature conservation?

70. This question is particularly important in that Tragsa's statutory constitution does not appear to require a clear distinction to be drawn for legal and accounting purposes between the two capacities in which it can operate, or at least it does not contain any unambiguous safeguards against possible distortions of competition that could arise on the remaining market as a result of Tragsa's hybrid nature.

71. Thus a situation could arise where private candidates for the type of contracts that Tragsa carries out, which are already excluded from the arrangement in which Tragsa works for the Spanish State Administration and the Autonomous Communities, also miss out on the remaining sub-markets (carrying out work for other public authorities and private parties) because Tragsa starts from an advantageous competitive position as a result of being, if not the only, then at least a privileged candidate on the sizeable closed market for contracts from the State Administration and the Autonomous Communities.

72. The second Teckal criterion, that the entity, concession-holder or independent executive service concerned must carry out the essential part of its activities with its controlling public authority, is therefore not in itself sufficient to prevent real or potential obstacles to the free movement of goods and services and freedom of establishment, or to avoid possible distortion of competition. I shall come back to this later.

73. Finally, a further question arises concerning the provisions of Articles 152 and 194 of the revised text of the Law on Public Procurement. (18)

74. Under those provisions, the Administration may carry out works or produce goods using its own services and its own staff or material resources. If the Administration has appropriate staff and material resources for the purpose, it is as a rule required to do so. If this method of execution is chosen, private undertakings may also be involved without a prior award procedure if the cost of the works in question is lower than a maximum of EUR 5 923 624.

75. Those provisions do not make it a condition that the works in question must be executed or the goods in question produced within the framework of the statutory remit of the executing organisations and services involved.

76. It is naturally for the competent national court to interpret and apply this national legislation. That does not alter the fact, however, that the texts in question appear to create powers and obligations for the administrative authorities in Spain which may conflict with Community law. (19)

77. The provisions of the Spanish legislation in question appear to mean that the various administrative authorities in Spain are freely able, or even in principle required, (20) to use the capacity of their executive services to carry out works or to provide services for purposes other than the statutory duties of those executive services.

78. Where the execution, provision or production of the works, services or goods in question entails costs lower than the statutory maximum, the relevant services may also have recourse to private companies.

79. Without there being any need to interpret the relevant national legislation more closely, it may be concluded that it allows scope for national sub-markets for public contracts to be extensively protected or even shut off. The extent to which this may occur depends on the capacity which the relevant executive services have available. By increasing their capacity and improving their equipment and staffing, it is very easy to bring sizeable sub-markets for public contracts into the exclusive domain of the executive services of the authorities concerned.

80. The fact that private companies can also be involved in the execution of such contracts without a prior award procedure, provided that the costs associated with those contracts do not exceed a certain maximum, increases that risk still further.

81. The fact that Tragsa is prohibited under Article 88(5) of Law 66/1997 from tendering for public contracts from the Spanish State Administration and the Autonomous Communities does not alter the risks presented by the application of Articles 152 and 194 of the Law on Public Procurement, since the purpose of those provisions is precisely to ensure that public contracts are generally not awarded publicly if they can be executed by departments of the Administration.

82. To summarise, the Spanish legislation in question here, in encouraging the Administration not to place public contracts through public award procedures even when that is not justified by the public interest, raises serious doubts as to its compatibility with the Community directives on public procurement. In addition, it accords a privileged position to the Administration's own executive services, which may be considered for public contracts that have no connection whatsoever with any legal or statutory duties. Even though they are de jure instruments of the Administration, they are placed de facto in the position of privileged market operators. The question is very much whether such an arrangement is consistent with the principle laid down in Article 86(1) EC, which prohibits such forms of unequal treatment. (21)

83. Finally, with more direct reference to the legal and factual situation underlying the questions referred, the issue also arises whether the very possibility that Tragsa may, under Article 152 of the Spanish Law on Public Procurement, be entrusted to carry out works and supply services outside its own remit has implications for whether this public undertaking is still able to satisfy the second Teckal criterion, which is that it should carry out the essential part of its activities with the public authority that controls it.

C - Answers to the questions

Questions 1 and 2

84. As I observed earlier in points 38 and 44 of this Opinion, the legal and factual situation in the main proceedings is not one in which a contracting public authority awards a contract for pecuniary interest to an independent entity over which the contracting authority exercises a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments'. In the present case, Tragsa, even though it has a separate legal personality, must be regarded as a service' of the contracting authority. That follows unequivocally from the relevant Spanish legislation.

85. In Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau , (22) the Court specifically ruled that a public authority which is a contracting authority has the possibility of performing the tasks conferred on it in the public interest by using its own administrative, technical and other resources, without being obliged to call on outside entities not forming part of its own departments. In such a case, there can be no question of a contract for pecuniary interest concluded with an entity legally distinct from the contracting authority. There is therefore no need to apply the Community rules in the field of public procurement.

86. In my view, it is apparent from the statutory regime that applies for Tragsa that it must be regarded as an instrument' or executive service of the Spanish State Administration, in any event. In so far as Tragsa carries out, as part of its statutory remit, contracts awarded to it by the Spanish State Administration, the Community rules in the field of public procurement do not apply to it.

87. I infer from the Court's judgments in Coname (23) and Parking Brixen (24) that where the relationship between a contracting public authority and an executive service or entity is not governed by the Community rules on public procurement the general provisions of the Treaty, and in particular the provisions on fundamental freedom of movement and competition, remain applicable.

88. Although the Community rules on public procurement do not apply where a public entity performs the tasks conferred on it in the public interest by using its own administrative, technical and other services, without calling on outside entities, if the entity in question exercises a control over those services which is similar to that which it exercises over its other internal departments, and if the services in question also carry out the essential part of their activities with the public entity that controls them. But those two criteria - known as the Teckal criteria - constitute, however, an exception. They must therefore be interpreted strictly and the burden of proving the existence of exceptional circumstances justifying the derogation lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances. (25)

89. It is apparent from these somewhat paraphrased considerations in Parking Brixen that it must also be examined whether the Teckal criteria can be invoked in respect of Tragsa. That is a matter for the national court, which will have to investigate the legal and factual situation in which Tragsa operates. The Court can provide it with the necessary information which might help it to resolve the dispute in the main proceedings.

90. On second viewing, there is no doubt that the relationship between the Spanish State Administration and the Autonomous Communities on the one hand and Tragsa on the other satisfies the first Teckal criterion:

All of the shares in Tragsa are owned directly or indirectly by the Spanish State and the Autonomous Communities, albeit that only four regions hold shares on a symbolic scale;

Furthermore, the legal framework within which Tragsa operates as an executive service of the Spanish State Administration and the Autonomous Communities for the purpose of agricultural structural policy in the broad sense appears to indicate conclusively that it is operating in that capacity as an instrument' of the public authorities concerned. I refer here in particular to my description of the legal framework in points 4 to 9 of this Opinion.

91. In its more recent judgments, the Court has defined the first Teckal criterion in greater detail, so that in exercising a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments' it must be a case of a power of decisive influence over both strategic objectives and significant decisions of that company'. (26)

92. This more detailed criterion applies not just to the relationship between one public authority and its own' executive service, but also where different public authorities, whether or not acting together, have a joint executive service. (27)

93. It is not unusual for a number of public authorities to establish, for the execution of certain public tasks such as sewage treatment, a partnership which is responsible for managing a joint executive service. Where that joint executive service is constituted in the form of a separate company, the authorities concerned can exercise their decisive influence over both strategic objectives and significant decisions of that company' as shareholders and through representation on the company's board of directors. (28)

94. Where the executive organisation is constituted as an instrument' of the public authorities in the partnership, then by analogy with the requirements applied to control over a shared' independent entity for the execution of public tasks, the control they exercise must be such as to ensure that all the public authorities involved have influence over both strategic objectives and significant decisions' of that entity.

95. In fact, while they cannot influence the strategy and management of their own joint service, nor can the public authorities involved be called to account for their responsibility for that service's actions either. The same also applies to their responsibility for proper compliance with Community law.

96. The Commission is also right when it argues that arrangements in which a number of public authorities use an executive service that is constituted, in terms of power of influence over it, as the instrument' of just one of them are open to abuse. They can mean that public authorities call on - or are invited to call on - an existing executive service of another public authority to execute works and supply services for which they would otherwise have held a public award procedure. As I described in points 57 to 59 above, this can result in substantial sub-markets being removed from the operation of primary and secondary Community law on public procurement.

97. That leads me to conclude, provisionally, that in cases where an executive service acts as an instrument' for various public authorities, the statutory regime that applies to it must ensure that all the contracting public authorities have effective influence over its strategic objectives and significant decisions. It must also specify for the exercise of precisely which public responsibilities the public authorities in question can award contracts to the joint executive service as an instrument'.

This is in order to restrict as far as possible the risk of abuse described in the previous point. (29)

98. From the description of Tragsa's statutory regime in points 4 to 9 above, it appears to be governed entirely or almost entirely by the laws and regulations of the Spanish State Administration. The tariffs for the work which Tragsa carries out for the State Administration and the Autonomous Communities are also laid down by and come under the responsibility of the State Administration. The Autonomous Communities do not appear to have any direct influence. It is true, as Tragsa and the Spanish Government have stressed, that the Autonomous Communities can bring their influence to bear through their contracts, but such control over the design and execution of individual works and projects - which is inherent in any contract which a public authority awards to one of its own services or to an external entity - is not the control intended by the Court when it refers to decisive influence over both the strategic objectives and significant decisions' of, in this case, the Autonomous Communities' own' executive service.

99. I would also point out, for the sake of completeness, that the lack of influence which the Autonomous Communities have on and under Tragsa's statutory regime is by no means compensated for by the influence that they might bring to bear as shareholders in the company, given that only a small minority of the Autonomous Communities have a merely symbolic shareholding in Tragsa.

100. The fact that the statutory regime which governs Tragsa's operations does not give a clear, restrictive definition of the areas in which the Autonomous Communities can give Tragsa work - the general legislation on award procedures in Spain discussed in points 73 to 83 above is relevant here - is a further indication that Tragsa cannot be regarded as a joint executive service for the execution of restrictively defined works and services in the public interest. I have already described earlier the risks of abuse which such an open arrangement entails.

101. I therefore reach the conclusion that, operating under a statutory regime such as that in force, Tragsa cannot be regarded as an instrument' of the Autonomous Communities because they cannot exercise any control over Tragsa's strategic and other significant decisions.

102. Since Tragsa cannot be regarded as an instrument of the Autonomous Communities, the obvious implication is that it is wrong that the contracts given to Tragsa by the Autonomous Communities should not be subject to a public award procedure.

103. The situation is, in principle, different for the tasks entrusted to Tragsa by the Spanish State Administration, of which it can indeed be regarded as an instrument.

104. It is apparent from the analysis of the legal framework within which Tragsa operates in points 61 to 65 of this Opinion that that legal framework does not fulfil the requirements of the second Teckal criterion either.

105. The Court ruled in Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei (30) that the requirement that the local authority must exercise over the person in question a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and that person must carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority or authorities is aimed precisely at preventing distortions of competition.

106. Only where the person controlled carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority or authorities alone can it be justified that that undertaking is not subject to the restrictions of the directives on public procurement, since they are in place to preserve a state of competition which, in that case, no longer has any raison d'être.

107. That implies that the person concerned can be viewed as carrying out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority within the meaning of Teckal only if that undertaking's activities are devoted principally to that authority and any other activities are only of marginal significance.

108. I have established in points 61 to 65 above that Tragsa's activities with public authorities other than the Spanish State Administration and the Autonomous Communities and with private companies have accounted for between 7 and 8.5% of its total turnover in the last three years, and that the legal regime governing it does not place any restrictions on the scale of those activities.

109. Furthermore, if my argument that the Autonomous Communities cannot be regarded as controlling authorities in respect of Tragsa is followed, it must then be concluded that the requirement that the essential part of the activities must be carried out with the controlling authority is not satisfied, given that the activities with the Autonomous Communities account for more than 50% of Tragsa's total turnover.

110. The condition that the essential part of the activities must be carried out with the controlling authority is a necessary requirement in order to prevent distortion of competition on the Community market, as the Court recently emphasised in Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei. (31) However, that condition is not sufficient.

111. Even if Tragsa did carry out the vast majority of its activities with the authority or authorities which control it, it would still be possible for it seriously to distort competition on sub-markets with its remaining activities. As I have already pointed out in points 66 to 72 above, as long as those activities are not kept completely separate in the organisation of this executive service, both for financial and accounting purposes and in terms of personnel and material resources, from the activities which it carries out as an executive service of one or more public authorities, it is in a position to use the advantages that it derives from its public status in competition with other operators in other sub-markets that are still open.

112. It is Tragsa's hybrid nature as part internal executive service working for its controlling authority or the public authorities, and part entity competing for work from other public bodies such as local authorities and from private parties and companies, that makes a more detailed assessment of compatibility with Article 86(1) EC necessary.

113. In accordance with that provision, in the case of public undertakings Member States are neither to enact nor to maintain in force any measure contrary to the rules contained in the Treaty, in particular to those rules provided for in Article 12 EC and Articles 81 EC to 89 EC.

114. Now, if an internal executive service of a public authority seeks work on open sub-markets without adequate and transparent measures being taken to prevent any financial material advantages which that service derives from the fact that it carries out the essential part of its activities as an executive organisation of a public authority from being exploited in the competition on those open sub-markets, then the specific requirements of Article 86(1) EC are not satisfied.

115. That failure to take measures is contrary to Articles 43 EC and 49 EC in particular, since executive services of public authorities which also operate on open national markets can make it more difficult for potential candidates from other Member States to access those markets. (32)

116. The risks which arise, in the light of the prohibition of State aid, from the absence of transparent financial or accounting relations between the State or other public authorities, on the one hand, and public undertakings and companies, on the other, have in the past led the Commission to introduce rules on the basis of Article 86(3) EC. (33)

In the legal and factual situation that lies at the heart of the main proceedings, those risks are at least just as great. The absence of any specific safeguards in the legal regime that applies to Tragsa against open or covert forms of cross-financing between its activities as an executive service of the Administration and as an operator on open sub-markets therefore conflicts with Article 86(1) EC in conjunction with Articles 87 EC and 88 EC.

117. In points 78 to 83 above, I have examined in detail the risks which the application of provisions such as Articles 152 and 194 of the Spanish Law on Public Procurement may present for the sound operation of Community law on public procurement and for the fundamental freedoms of movement and the state of competition on the Community market.

118. Those risks lie in the fact that, if executive services as instruments' or independent entities which are fully controlled by the contracting authorities can also obtain, outside the scope of the competences or field of work laid down in their legal, administrative or private law constitutional regime, contracts from the administrations responsible for them for the provision of services, execution of works or production of goods, simply because they are available, the useful effect of the Community directives on public procurement may be seriously undermined or, where those directives are not applicable, serious obstacles may arise to the movement of goods and services between States and to freedom of establishment, and competition between those executive services or publicly controlled entities and private undertakings on the relevant markets may be seriously distorted. There is only one exception: where compelling public interest requirements provide justification for awarding work directly to an own executive organisation even if that work lies outside its legal or constitutional remit. Examples here would include natural disasters and similar exceptional circumstances, which may require the immediate involvement of all the resources which an administration has available.

119. It is precisely those consequences which the Court sought to prevent with the second Teckal criterion. If that criterion is to be effective, it must be interpreted in such a way that it also prohibits the award to own' executive services or publicly controlled entities of public contracts which lie outside their legal, administrative or constitutional remit.

120. Furthermore, the referring court has, in my view rightly, questioned the compatibility of provisions such as those of Articles 152 and 194 of the current Spanish Law on Public Procurement with Community competition law.

121. Such provisions clearly create a privileged position for own executive services or publicly controlled entities - acting as market operators outside their legal, administrative or constitutional remit - in the award of public contracts, and thus conflict with the provisions of Article 86(1) EC.

122. The purpose of the Tribunal Supremo's third question is obviously to determine whether the Court's judgment in Spain v Commission (34) has implications for the assessment of Tragsa's legal position in the award of public contracts.

123. In that judgment, the Court concluded that an organisation such as Tragsa, which, despite its financial and accounting autonomy, is entirely subject to Spanish State control, must be regarded as one of the national administration's own official departments within the meaning of the first subparagraph of Article 3(5) of Council Regulation (EEC) No 154/75 of 21 January 1975 on the establishment of a register of olive cultivation in the Member States producing olive oil (OJ 1975 L 19, p. 1).

124. As the Commission has rightly observed, that judgment of the Court concerns Tragsa's activities on behalf of the Spanish State in establishing a register of olive cultivation.

125. In answer to the Spanish Government's assertion that for the establishment of that register Tragsa, as an independent entity, had been given a private contract because of the requirements of confidentiality which such an activity had to satisfy, the Court ruled that Tragsa had to be regarded as an own executive organisation forming part of the Administration, to which the case-law developed in Teckal (35) and ARGE (36) applied in principle. The Court took the view that this was confirmed by Article 88(4) of Law 66/1997, (37) in which it is established that Tragsa is required, as an instrument and technical service of the Administration, to carry out, either itself or using its subsidiaries, to the exclusion of third parties, any work entrusted to it by the General Administration of the State, the Autonomous Communities and the public bodies subject to them. (38)

126. I would point out here that the judgment in Spain v Commission primarily concerned whether the Kingdom of Spain was allowed to entrust to Tragsa the establishment of the olive cultivation register without a public award procedure.

127. The Court was not required on that occasion to consider questions such as those referred in the present case. For that reason, that judgment cannot be interpreted as meaning that Tragsa, as an executive service in the field of agricultural structural policy in the broad sense, must be regarded as an instrument of the General Spanish State Administration. That is consistent with my finding in point 103 of this Opinion.

D - Admissibility

128. In the analysis of the Tribunal Supremo's first two questions, it emerged that both the legal regime under which Tragsa operates as an instrument' for, among others, the Autonomous Communities, the authority which that entity has to carry out work for public authorities other than the State Administration and the Autonomous Communities and for private parties and companies, and the rules contained in Articles 152 and 194 of the current Spanish Law may be criticised as being incompatible with the criteria which the Court formulated in paragraph 50 of the judgment in Teckal.

129. That incompatibility has legal implications concerning the applicability of Community directives on public procurement, the supply of services and the execution of works. It may also lead to conflict with Articles 43 EC, 49 EC and 86 EC.

130. The criticism spelled out above is also implied in the form of doubts in the order for reference.

131. The Tribunal Supremo makes its doubts particularly clear in paragraph Four' of the order for reference.

132. I am sure that the Court's answers to the questions referred will, in the light of the doubts expressed, provide the referring court with useful guidance for its decision in the main proceedings.

133. The arguments put forward by Tragsa and the Spanish Government that the legal questions raised by the referring court in its order for reference are new', not relevant in an appeals procedure and therefore hypothetical and inadmissible are not at all convincing, in my view.

134. Firstly, the Court is usually extremely cautious in assessing the purpose and usefulness of the questions referred to it by the national courts in order to reach a decision in the main proceedings. Only where the questions are manifestly hypothetical in nature does the Court deem them inadmissible. (39)

135. From the description of the proceedings before various administrative and judicial authorities in Spain, it appears that the legal regime under which Tragsa operates has always been held to be compatible with the principles of national competition law. The fact that the Tribunal Supremo has also chosen to take account of the principles of Community law on public procurement and competition law is a step which does not in itself in any way render the resulting questions hypothetical.

136. Whether the Tribunal Supremo was authorised under Spanish law to take that step in the proceedings before it is a question which the Tribunal itself, as the highest national court in the present case, must and can answer. (40)

137. Nor can I agree with the Commission's view that the factual and legal information provided in the order for reference is too concise. As has been made clear earlier, it provides sufficient information for a detailed analysis of the questions referred.

138. I have therefore come to the conclusion that the Tribunal Supremo's questions are admissible.

V - Conclusion

139. On the basis of the foregoing findings, I propose that the Court give the following answers to the questions referred by the Tribunal Supremo:

- The Community directives on public contracts for the provision of goods and services and the execution of works do not, in principle, apply to a legal person governed by private law, such as Empresa de Transformacion Agraria SA (Tragsa), which under its legal regime must be regarded as an instrument' of the administration which is required to carry out the work it is given by the relevant public authorities without contracts for pecuniary interest.

- The national rules of law on the subject must ensure that the relevant national authorities control the entity concerned, in the sense that they have a decisive influence over both its strategic objectives and its significant decisions, and ensure that the entity at the same time carries out the essential part of its activities with the public authorities which control it, so that any other activity is marginal.

- The requirement that the relevant public authorities must be able to have a decisive influence over both the entity's strategic objectives and its significant decisions is not satisfied where the public authorities which use the entity as an executive service do not have a direct influence on the content of the legal regime that applies to it, or on the tariffs it may charge for its activities, and further as shareholders in the entity cannot exercise any decisive influence on its decisions.

- The requirement that the entity must carry out the essential part of its activities with the authorities that control it is not satisfied where the legal regime does not restrict the scale of the other activities so that they remain marginal.

- It follows from Article 86(1) EC that an entity which, for the essential part of its activities, acts as an executive service of the relevant public authorities must separate the activities which it carries out for other public authorities and for private persons in a transparent manner, both in terms of organisation and for financial and accounting purposes, from its activities as an instrument of the relevant public authorities.

- It follows from the same provision of the EC Treaty that national administrations may not entrust to a legal person operating as their own executive service contracts for the supply of goods and services or the execution of works, where those contracts have no connection with their public responsibilities or where the performance of those contracts falls outside the statutory remit of the legal person in question. The only exception is where there is objective justification for such work, such as in the case of natural disasters or similar exceptional circumstances.

- The national court must examine whether those conditions are satisfied in the legal and factual situation in the main proceedings.

(2) - In Question 2 the referring court merely refers to Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), as subsequently amended and now incorporated in Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114). However, the description of Tragsa's activities in the relevant Spanish legislation and regulations suggests that those activities may also include the provision of services and the supply of water. The possibility therefore remains that Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) and Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84), now replaced by Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1), may apply to the facts in the main proceedings. For the sake of brevity, I shall always refer in this Opinion to the public procurement directives' in general.

(3) - In its written observations the Commission points out in footnote 3 that an earlier law of 1973 on land reform and development specifically provided for the setting-up of a land-reform undertaking as an instrument for State action in the field of land development. The setting-up of Tragsa stems from the desire to give the Instituto Nacional de Reforma y Desarrollo Agrario (National Institute for Agricultural Reform and Development, IRYDA) legal personality, as is clear from the preamble to Royal Decree 379/1977, which explains that the aim is to carry out... through an undertaking vested with legal personality in the field of private law the works currently entrusted to the Parque de Maquinaria of the Institute, works which cannot be given to private undertakings because they require specialisation, because of the space and time entailed, because it is necessary to complete work schedules which cannot be delayed or because the works are almost or wholly unprofitable in cases in which the Government, because of hurricanes or similar disasters, orders the Institute to take urgent action to help the victims ...'.

(4) - Article 152(1)(d) of the revised text of 2000, which is currently in force.

(5) - The Commission also states that Tragsa has a small number of foreign subsidiaries. At the hearing, however, Tragsa said that those undertakings had already either been wound up, or else had entirely or largely ceased operating.

(6) - Tragsa and the Spanish Government have pointed out that Tragsa is not permitted by law to take part in public tenders for the General State Administration and the Autonomous Communities. Tragsa may only tender in public tendering procedures organised by public authorities other than the General State Administration and the Autonomous Communities.

(7) - In particular, Case C-107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I-8121; Case C-26/03 Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau [2005] ECR I-1; Case C-29/04 Commission v Austria [2005] ECR I-9705; and Case C340/04 Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei [2006] ECR I-4137.

(8) - Relevant judgments here include Case C-231/03 Coname [2005] ECR I-7287; Case C-458/03 Parking Brixen [2005] ECR I-8612; and Case C-410/04 ANAV [2006] ECR I-3303.

(9) - In paragraph 48 of the judgment in Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau (cited in footnote 7), the Court expressly confirms that there is no need to apply the Community rules in the field of public procurement to works entrusted by a public authority to its own administrative, technical and other resources.

(10) - See previous footnote.

(11) - See, in particular, points 4 to 9 and 13 of this Opinion.

(12) - Case C-349/97 [2003] ECR I-3851.

(13) - At the hearing, the Commission discussed this point in great detail, including in the light of the Court's recent judgments in Parking Brixen (cited in footnote 8) and Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei (cited in footnote 7).

(14) - Although those cases concerned the award of concessions by public authorities, which is not regulated in secondary Community law, the principle established in those judgments that if a legal relationship is not governed by secondary Community law its compatibility with primary Community law can always be assessed is also applicable in the present case.

(15) - The Court has always strictly interpreted this derogation as being restricted to activities and interests connected with the exercise of official authority. See Case 2/74 Reyners [1974] ECR 631, confirmed on several occasions since then, including in Case C-283/99 Commission v Italy [2001] ECR I-4363, paragraph 20.

(16) - See on this point the judgments in Coname , Parking Brixen and ANAV (all cited in footnote 8).

(17) - From the earlier overview of the relevant Spanish legislation, particularly in point 13, it might be inferred that the use of Tragsa by the Autonomous Communities as their own' executive organisation is optional. If that were true, then the classification of Tragsa as an instrument' of the Autonomous Communities becomes even more problematic, since the freedom of choice to use an executive organisation of another public entity rather than holding a public award procedure conflicts with the provisions of Community law on public procurement. It is for the national court to determine whether they have that freedom of choice.

(18) - Cited in point 15 of this Opinion.

(19) - On pages 12 and 13 of its order for reference, the Tribunal Supremo is clear about its own doubts here: Problems of compatibility with the general principles of Community law also seem to be raised by the eventuality that the Administration, by participating directly and by making use of the legal authorisation provided in the abovementioned provisions of the successive laws governing public procurement, may take on, through a public company which is given the legal status of an instrument of the Administration itself, so many contracts as to alter the relevant market significantly.'

(20) - It appears from the wording of Articles 152 and 194 of the Spanish Law on Public Procurement that the national legislature at least assumes that contracting authorities will make use of the remaining capacity of their executive services:... in which case use should usually be made of that method of execution'. A more detailed interpretation of this is naturally a matter for the referring court.

(21) - See points 117 to 121 below for a more detailed discussion of this.

(26) - See Parking Brixen (cited in footnote 8), paragraph 65, and Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei (cited in footnote 7), paragraph 36.

(27) - In the judgment in Coname (cited in footnote 8), there was such a joint entity shared by public authorities (Padania), as there was also in the judgment in Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei (cited in footnote 7). The fact that both quantitative and qualitative requirements must be applied is clear both from Coname (ibid.), where a shareholding of 0.97% was not deemed sufficient to provide objective justification, and from Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei , where the control which the controlling public authorities exercised over the board of directors of a company was not deemed sufficient to have decisive influence over both strategic objectives and significant decisions of that company'.

(28) - The existence of a decisive influence over Tragsa cannot be inferred from the public law agreements which the Autonomous Communities have concluded with Tragsa, referred to in point 13 of this Opinion, the text of which was attached by the Commission as an annex to its written observations. However, it is ultimately for the national court to decide on an interpretation here.

(29) - The need for a precise and restrictive description of the tasks and powers of a joint executive organisation is also relevant for the second Teckal criterion. See points 112 to 116 and 117 to 121 below.

(32) - In Coname (cited in footnote 8), the Court stated, albeit in a slightly different context, that the absence of the necessary transparency can constitute an obstacle to the free movement of services and freedom of establishment.

(40) - Only where, in examining the facts on which the main proceedings are based and the relevant national law, the Court's ruling on the questions referred manifestly cannot help to resolve the dispute can the questions referred be held to be inadmissible. See, among others, Case C-132/81 Vlaeminck [1982] ECR 2953, paragraphs 13 and 14, and, more recently, Case C-314/01 Siemens and ARGE Telecom [2004] ECR I-2549, paragraph 37.

THE COURT (Second Chamber), composed of C.W.A. Timmermans (Rapporteur), President of the Chamber, G. Arestis, L. Bay Larsen, R. Schintgen and P. Kris, Judges, Advocate General: P. Mengozzi,

Registrar: L. Hewlett, Principal Administrator, having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 14 September 2006, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 15 February 2007,

Judgment

1. By its application, the Commission of the European Communities asks the Court of Justice to declare that, by reason of the practice of the competent authority with regard to the completion and collation of applications and declarations by cereal producers and others under the integrated administration and control system for the year 2001, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1, Directive 92/50'), particularly Articles 3(2), 7, 11(1) and 15(2) thereof, and the general principle of transparency.

Directive 92/50

2. Under Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50, public service contracts shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority', to the exclusion of the contracts listed in that same provision under (i) to (ix).

3. Article 3(1) and (2) of that directive provides:

1. In awarding public service contracts or in organising design contests, contracting authorities shall apply procedures adapted to the provisions of this Directive.

2. Contracting authorities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between different service providers.'

4. Under Article 7(1)(a) of Directive 92/50:

1. (a) This Directive shall apply to:

- ... public service contracts concerning the services referred to in Annex I B,... awarded by the contracting authorities referred to in Article 1(b), where the estimated net value of value added tax (VAT) is not less than ECU 200 000,

- public service contracts concerning the services referred to in Annex I A ...:

(i) awarded by the contracting authorities listed in Annex I to Directive 93/36/EEC where the estimated value net of VAT is not less than the equivalent in ecus of 130 000 special drawing rights (SDRs);

(ii) awarded by the contracting authorities listed in Article 1(b) other than those referred to in Annex I to Directive 93/36/EEC and where the estimated value net of VAT is not less than the equivalent in ecus of 200 000 SDRs.'

5. Under Article 8 of Directive 92/50, [c]ontracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI'.

6. Article 9 of the directive states:

Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I B shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.'

7. Article 11(1) of the same directive provides that, in awarding public service contracts, contracting authorities are to apply the open, restricted and negotiated procedures defined in Article 1(d), (e) and (f), of that directive.

8. Under Article 15(2) of Directive 92/50:

Contracting authorities who wish to award a public service contract by open, restricted or, under the conditions laid down in Article 11, negotiated procedure, shall make known their intention by means of a notice.'

Regulation (EEC) No 3508/92

9. It is clear from the third and fourth recitals of the preamble to Council Regulation (EEC) No 3508/92 of 27 November 1992 establishing an integrated administration and control system for certain Community aid schemes (OJ 1992 L 355, p. 1), as amended by Council Regulation (EC) No 1593/2000 of 17 July 2000 (OJ 2000 L 182, p. 4, Regulation No 3508/92'), that, as part of the reform of the common agricultural policy and in order to adapt the administration and control mechanisms to the new situation and improve their effectiveness and usefulness, it is necessary to set up a new integrated administration and control system covering the aid schemes for arable crops, beef and veal, sheepmeat and goatmeat (IACS').

10. Article 2 of Regulation No 3508/92 provides:

The [IACS] shall comprise the following elements:

(a) a computerised database;

(b) an identification system for agricultural parcels;

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

(c) a system for the identification and registration of animals;

(d) aid applications;

(e) an integrated control system.'

11. Under Article 3(1) of the regulation:

The computerised database shall record, for each agricultural holding, the data obtained from the aid applications. This database shall in particular allow direct and immediate consultation, through the competent authority of the Member State, of the data relating at least to the previous three consecutive calendar and/or marketing years.'

12. Article 4 of the same regulation provides:

An identification system for agricultural parcels shall be established on the basis of maps or land registry documents or other cartographic references. Use shall be made of computerised geographical information system techniques including preferably aerial or spatial orthoimagery, with an homogenous standard guaranteeing accuracy at least equivalent to cartography at a scale of 1:10 000.'

13. Under Article 6(1) of Regulation No 3508/92:

In order to be eligible under one or more Community schemes governed by this Regulation, each farmer shall submit, for each year, an area aid application indicating:

- agricultural parcels, including areas under forage crops, and agricultural parcels covered by a set-aside measure for arable land and those laid fallow,

- where applicable, any other necessary information provided for either by the Regulations relating to the Community schemes, or by the Member State concerned.'

14. Article 7 of the regulation is worded as follows:

The [IACS] shall cover all aid applications submitted, in particular as regards administrative checks, on-the-spot checks and, if appropriate, verification by aerial or satellite remote sensing.'

The facts giving rise to the dispute and the prelitigation procedure

15. A complaint was made to the Commission concerning the alleged unlawfulness, in the light of Directive 92/50, of a framework agreement and the implementing agreements thereof concerning the provision of certain services in the context of the implementation of the IACS in Greece for the year 2001.

16. The framework agreement was concluded on 20 February 2001 between the Greek Ministry of the Interior, the Civil Service and Decentralisation, the Greek Ministry of Agriculture, the Greek Union of Prefectoral Authorities and the PanHellenic Association of Unions of Agricultural Cooperatives (the framework agreement').

17. The framework agreement concerned coordination by that association of the following services supplied by its members, namely the unions of agricultural cooperatives (the UACs'):

- informing farmers about the adoption of new forms for applications and for declarations relating to agricultural holdings and crops, which will supply data to be added to the new IACS database;

- providing assistance with a view to ensuring that data provided by farmers are entered correctly and in good time using the relevant forms. That service includes, in particular, technical assistance for the identification of cultivated areas on orthophotographs, aerial photographs or topographical maps;

- collecting the forms and sending them in hard copy or electronic format to the competent prefectoral authority.

18. To that effect, the framework agreement provides for the conclusion of implementing agreements between the prefectoral authorities and the UACs at the level of each prefecture. Subsequently, such contracts were actually awarded (the contracts at issue').

19. By letter of 18 December 2002, the Commission gave the Hellenic Republic formal notice to submit its observations on the plea in law alleging that, by awarding the service contracts to the UACs directly and without prior advertising, it had failed to comply with the provisions of Directive 92/50, in particular Article 3(2) thereof, and the principle of nondiscrimination.

20. On 19 December 2003, the Commission, taking the view that the observations submitted in response to its letter by the Hellenic Republic were inadequate, issued a reasoned opinion inviting that Member State to take the measures necessary to comply with the opinion within a period of two months from the date of its notification.

21. The Commission was not convinced by the Hellenic Republic's responses to the reasoned opinion and decided to bring the present proceedings.

Admissibility

22. The Hellenic Republic raises a plea of inadmissibility against the Commission's action, alleging that it does not have a legal interest in bringing the proceedings and that the action is devoid of purpose.

23. In that connection, the Member State claims, first, that it took the necessary measures to bring the alleged failure to fulfil obligations to an end and that it was no longer in existence by the expiry of the period prescribed by the reasoned opinion for compliance, since:

- over the course of 2003, there were no direct awards of contracts for the services at issue and the right to tender was extended to entities other than the UACs;

- by Official Declaration No 5767 of the SecretaryGeneral of the Ministry of Agriculture of 6 November 2003, the Greek authorities undertook to use, if necessary, competitive tendering procedures for the award of the service contracts at issue, provided always that those services fall, wholly or in part, under Annex I A of Directive 92/50'.

24. Secondly, the Hellenic Republic submits that, by the expiry of the period prescribed for it to comply with the reasoned opinion, the alleged failure to fulfil obligations, which concerned the year 2001 only, was no longer in existence and had ceased to have any effects.

25. The Commission contends that a finding of failure to fulfil obligations is necessary because there is no guarantee that Directive 92/50 will be applied effectively and correctly, either in the present dispute concerning the year 2001, or in the future.

26. First, not only is Declaration No 5767 inadequate because it is not legally binding but it is also vague owing to the use of the expression if necessary'.

27. Secondly, the continuing disagreement between the Hellenic Republic and the Commission regarding the unique nature of the contracts at issue, and also as to whether the services concerned are included in Annex I A of Directive 92/50, is far from being theoretical and entails a risk that the Member State will reoffend.

28. Finally, there is no guarantee that Directive 92/50 will be correctly applied in the future since, during the years following 2001, the service contracts in question have also been awarded directly to the UAC.

29. In that regard, it is important to note that, as regards the award of public procurement contracts, the Court has held that an action for failure to fulfil obligations is inadmissible if, when the period prescribed in the reasoned opinion expired, the contract in question had already been completely performed (see Case C-362/90 Commission v Italy [1992] ECR I2353, paragraphs 11 and 13, and Case C394/02 Commission v Greece [2005] ECR I4713, paragraph 18).

30. Accordingly, it is necessary to verify whether, when the period prescribed by the reasoned opinion expired, that is to say, on 19 February 2004, the contracts at issue were, at least partly, still being performed or whether, on the contrary, the assistance work for which they were concluded was at that date already fully completed, so that they had been completely performed.

31. In the present case, the failure to fulfil obligations alleged by the Commission, described expressly in the claims in the application initiating proceedings, concerns the assistance provided by the UACs in the context of the implementation of the IACS solely for the year 2001, as those services are detailed in the contracts at issue concluded, in respect of that same year, for the performance of the framework agreement. At the hearing, the Commission confirmed that its action was limited to the year 2001 alone.

32. The assistance work provided for by the contracts at issue concerns the preparation of aid applications submitted by farmers for the purpose of recording the data they contain on the IACS database in accordance with Article 3(1) of Regulation No 3508/92. Those applications must be submitted annually to enable payments for the year in question to be paid. Therefore, these are, in essence, services related to an annual exercise concluded by the payment of the aid granted.

33. In that connection, it is necessary to state that Article 5(1) of the framework agreement - a provision which also appears in the contracts at issue - provides that they are to enter into force on the day they are signed and expire when all the financial aid has been paid to the farmers who applied for it.

34. The Commission was not able to refute the Hellenic Republic's argument, put forward by its representative at the hearing, that the payment of aid for the year 2001 was made in full in the course of the following year, in other words well before the expiry of the period prescribed by the reasoned opinion.

35. In the absence of indications from the Commission to the contrary, it must accordingly be found that, by the date that the period prescribed by the reasoned opinion expired, the framework agreement and the contracts at issue concerning the performance of that agreement for the year 2001 had already exhausted all their effects.

36. At the hearing, the Commission maintained that, unlike the infringement at issue in Commission v Italy , the failure to fulfil obligations which is the subject of the present action, namely awarding the services of assistance to the UAC directly and without advertising, was repeated in the years following 2001, in other words before the present case was brought.

37. In that connection, it must be observed that the Commission has not succeeded in refuting the Hellenic Republic's submissions that, in those years, those services of assistance were provided under a procedure which was radically different from that followed for the year 2001.

38. In particular, the Commission has not succeeded in calling into question the statement made by the representative of the Hellenic Republic at the hearing on the basis of supporting documents submitted by the Greek Government, in response to a question asked in that regard by the Court, to the effect that, for the years following 2001, the Greek State budget made no provision for payment in consideration of the services of assistance provided by the UACs, since from that point onwards the UACs received a payment from each farmer for the services they provided to him.

39. It follows that, having regard to the evidence presented to the Court, the Commission has not succeeded in demonstrating to the requisite legal standard that the failure to fulfil obligations alleged by the Commission against the Hellenic Republic in respect of the year 2001 recurred in subsequent years.

40. Finally, concerning the Commission's argument to the effect that its action is admissible by virtue of the continuing dispute between it and the Hellenic Republic concerning the interpretation of Directive 92/50 in the light of the specific characteristics of the public contracts at issue, it is sufficient to note that that circumstance alone is not enough to make the action admissible.

41. It follows from all the foregoing that the Commission's application must be dismissed as inadmissible.

Costs

42. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Hellenic Republic has applied for costs to be awarded against the Commission and the latter has been unsuccessful, the Commission must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby:

1. Dismisses the action as inadmissible;

2. Orders the Commission of the European Communities to pay the costs.

[1] - OJ C 193, 6.8.2005.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Mengozzi delivered on 15 February 2007. Commission of the European Communities v Hellenic Republic. Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Directive 92/50/EEC - Public service contracts - Provision of assistance services to farmers for the year 2001 - Regulation (EEC) No 3508/92 - Implementation in Greek of the integrated administration and control system (IACS) - Absence of call for tenders - Application inadmissible. Case C-237/05.

I - Introduction

1. In this case, the European Commission has brought an action before the Court of Justice, pursuant to Article 226 EC, seeking a declaration that, by reason of the practice followed by the competent authorities in regard to the works involved in the completion and collation of applications and declarations by cereal producers and others in the context of the Integrated Administration and Control System (IACS), introduced by Council Regulation (EEC) No 3508/92 of 27 November 1992 establishing an integrated administration and control system for certain Community aid schemes, (2) for the year 2001, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (3) and, in particular, Articles 3(2), 7, 11(1) and 15(2) thereof, as well as the general principle of transparency.

II - Legislative framework

A - Directive 92/50

2. In order to analyse the issues raised in this case, it is necessary briefly to cite a number of the provisions in Titles I to V of Directive 92/50, in the version which was in force at the material time. As we know, Directive 92/50 has been amended several times over the years, and was finally repealed, except for Article 41 thereof, as of 31 January 2006, by Article 82 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts. (4)

3. Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50 defines public service contracts' as contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority', to the exclusion of contracts falling within the scope of Directive 77/62/EEC, (5) Directive 71/305/EEC (6) and Directive 90/531/EEC, (7) contracts relating to services in the sectors listed in Article 1(a)(iii) to (vii) and (ix), as well as employment contracts.

4. According to Article 3(1) of Directive 92/50, [i]n awarding public service contracts (...) contracting authorities shall apply procedures adapted to the provisions of this Directive.' And, according to Article 3(2), [c]ontracting authorities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between different service providers.'

5. According to Article 7(1)(a):

1. (a) This Directive shall apply to:

- ... public service contracts concerning the services referred to in Annex I B, (...) awarded by the contracting authorities referred to in Article 1(b), where the estimated net value of value-added tax (VAT) is not less than ECU 200 000;

- public service contracts concerning the services referred to in Annex I A ...:

(i) awarded by the contracting authorities listed in Annex I to Directive 93/36/EEC where the estimated value net of VAT is not less than the equivalent in ecus of 130 000 special drawing rights (SDRs);

(ii) awarded by the contracting authorities listed in Article 1 (b) other than those referred to in Annex I to Directive 93/36/EEC(8) and where the estimated value net of VAT is not less than the equivalent in ecus of 200 000 SDRs.'

6. Under Article 7(2) of Directive 92/50, for the purposes of calculating the estimated value of the contract, the contracting authority is to include the estimated total remuneration of the service provider, taking account of the provisions of paragraphs 3 to 7, which lay down a number of criteria for determining that figure. More particularly, according to Article 7(3), the selection of the valuation method shall not be used with the intention of avoiding the application of this Directive, nor shall any procurement requirement for a given amount of services be split up with the intention of avoiding the application of this Article.' The first sentence of Article 7(4) indicates which factors must, where appropriate, be taken into account for the purposes of calculating the estimated contract value for certain types of services, including, in particular, insurance services, banking services and other financial services and contracts which involve design. The first and second subparagraphs of Article 7(4) stipulate that [w]here the services are subdivided into several lots, each one the subject of a contract, the value of each lot must be taken into account for the purpose of calculating the amount referred to above' and that [w]here the value of the lots is not less than this amount, the provisions of this Directive shall apply to all lots. Contracting authorities may waive application of paragraph 1 for any lot which has an estimated value net of VAT of less than ECU 80 000, provided that the total value of such lots does not exceed 20% of the total value of all the lots.'

7. For the purposes of applying the rules establishing the award procedures, the directive divides the services forming the subject matter of the contracts into two categories - used also in Annexes I A and I B to the directive - based on a classification system which, in the absence of a Community nomenclature, refers to the CPC (common product classification) nomenclature of the United Nations.

8. According to Articles 8 and 9 of Directive 92/50, contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A are to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI, whereas contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I B are to be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16. Pursuant to Article 10, [c]ontracts which have as their object services listed in both Annexes I A and I B shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI where the value of the services listed in Annex I A is greater than the value of the services listed in Annex I B. Where this is not the case, they shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.'

9. Title III of the directive lays down the rules which the contracting authorities must apply in selecting the procedures for the award of public service contracts, defined in Article 1(d), (e) and (f), to which Article 11(1) refers, that is to say the open, restricted and negotiated procedures. In accordance with Article 11(4), the award of public service contracts is usually made by the open procedure or by the restricted procedure. Article 11(2) lists those cases in which the contracting authorities may use the negotiated procedure, with prior publication of a contract notice, and Article 11(3) lists the cases in which the contracting authority may use the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice. Among those cases, of particular interest for the purposes of this case, is the situation envisaged in Article 11(3)(b) which refers to contracts where for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the services may be provided only by a particular service provider.'

10. Title IV of Directive 92/50, which consists only of Article 14, lays down common rules in the technical field, while Title V contains rules on advertising. In particular, Article 15(2) requires contracting authorities who wish to award a public service contract by open, restricted or, under the conditions laid down in Article 11, negotiated procedure, to make known their intention by means of a notice. Under Article 16(1), contracting authorities who have awarded a public service contract are to send a notice of the results of the award procedure to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities. Those notices are to be published in the conditions laid down in Article 16(2). With reference solely to the public service contracts listed in Annex I B, Article 16(3) provides that the contracting authorities shall indicate in the notice whether they agree on its publication.'

11. Adopted for the purpose of harmonising the administration and control mechanisms which the Member States apply in the crop and livestock sectors, to adapt them to the requirements of the reform of the common agricultural policy and improve their effectiveness and usefulness, Regulation 3508/92 provides for the creation, by each Member State, of an integrated administration and control system (IACS) covering the aid schemes for arable crops, beef and veal, sheepmeat and goatmeat, as well as specific measures for farming in mountain, hill and certain less-favoured areas.

12. Since the services at issue relate to the implementation of the activities involved in putting the IACS into effect in Greece for the year 2001, it may be helpful to cite briefly the provisions of Regulation 3508/92 which define the aims and operation of the system, in the version which was in force at the material time.

13. Under Article 2 of Regulation 3508/92, the IACS comprises the following elements: (a) a computerised data base; (b) an identification system for agricultural parcels; (c) a system for the identification and registration of animals; (d) aid applications; and (e) an integrated control system. According to Article 3(1), the computerised data base is to record, for each agricultural holding, the data obtained from the aid applications.' This data base must, in particular, allow direct and immediate consultation, through the competent authority of the Member State, of the data relating at least to the previous three consecutive calendar and/or marketing years. As regards the system for identifying agricultural parcels, Article 4 stipulates that this is to be established on the basis of maps or land registry documents or other cartographic references. Use shall be made of computerised geographical information system techniques including preferably aerial or spatial orthoimagery, with an homogenous standard guaranteeing accuracy at least equivalent to cartography at a scale of 1:10 000.'

14. Article 6(1) of the regulation provides:

In order to be eligible under one or more Community schemes governed by this Regulation, each farmer shall submit, for each year, an area aid application indicating:

- agricultural parcels, including areas under forage crops, and agricultural parcels covered by a set-aside measure for arable land and those laid fallow;

- where applicable, any other necessary information provided for either by the Regulations relating to the Community schemes, or by the Member State concerned.'

15. A Member State may, however, decide that an area' aid application need contain only changes with respect to the area' aid application submitted for the previous year. According to Article 6(6), [f]or each of the agricultural parcels declared, farmers shall indicate the area and its location which information must enable the parcel to be identified in the alphanumeric identification system for agricultural parcels.'

16. According to Article 7 of the regulation, the integrated control system is to cover all aid applications submitted, in particular as regards administrative checks, on-the-spot checks and, if appropriate, verification by aerial or satellite remote sensing. In particular, the Member State must carry out administrative checks on aid applications (Article 8(1)), and administrative checks are to be supplemented by on-the-spot checks covering a sample of agricultural holdings. For all these checks, the Member State is to draw up a sampling plan (Article 8(2)). Finally, Article 8(5) provides that where the competent authorities of the Member State delegate some aspects of the work to be carried out pursuant to the regulation to specialised agencies or firms, they must retain control over and responsibility for that work.

III - Facts and pre-litigation procedure

17. On 20 February 2001, the Greek Ministry of the Interior, the Greek Ministry of Agriculture, the Union of Prefectoral Authorities (ENAE) and the Pan-Hellenic Association of Unions of Agricultural Cooperatives (PASEGES) entered into a framework agreement concerning the activities involved in implementing the IACS in Greece for the year 2001.

18. On the basis of that framework agreement, PASEGES acted as coordinator between its members, the local unions of agricultural cooperatives (hereinafter: the UACs'), for the purpose of providing assistance to producers of agricultural products in connection with the IACS. In particular, the UACs were supposed to:

- inform farmers about the adoption of the new aid application forms and the declarations relating to the agricultural holdings and crops, which were intended to be entered into the IACS database;

- assist farmers in entering the data in the relevant forms, including by providing technical assistance for the identification of parcels and crops on orthophotographs, aerial photographs or topographical maps;

- collect the forms and send them in hard copy or electronic format to the competent prefectoral authority.

19. The individual prefectoral authorities entered into contracts with the local UACs on the basis of the abovementioned framework agreement.

20. In response to a complaint questioning the compatibility of the abovementioned framework agreement and the related implementing agreements with the provisions of Directive 92/50, the Commission sent the Hellenic Republic, by letter of 10 December 2001, a request for information on both the selection procedure in relation to PASEGES as the authority's co-contractor and on how it had been ensured that the procedure for the award of the implementing agreements was properly publicised.

21. The Hellenic Republic responded on 19 February 2002, explaining that, in the context of the framework agreement, PASEGES merely acted as coordinator between the various UACs, in return for which it received no remuneration, and that the direct allocation to the UACs, on the basis of the implementing agreements, of the activities linked to the implementation of the IACS was compatible with the applicable provisions of Community law.

22. The Commission was not satisfied with this response and, on 18 December 2002, it sent the Greek authorities a letter of formal notice claiming, with reference to the implementing agreements for the framework agreement, that there had been a breach of the provisions of Directive 92/50 and of Article 3(2) thereof, in particular, as well as of the principle of non-discrimination.

23. The Commission basically took the view that, on the basis of the agreements at issue, the local authorities had directly awarded, without prior publication, public service contracts falling within the scope of Directive 92/50.

24. It pointed out that the conclusion of the framework agreement and the related implementing agreements marked a departure from the practice followed for the years preceding 2001, when there had been provision for the conclusion, in respect of each region, of technical assistance agreements with specialist companies, based on competitive tendering procedures.

25. For the purpose of applying the thresholds laid down by Article 7 of Directive 92/50, the Commission took the view that, given the uniform nature of the agreements at issue, they constituted a single contract and that it was, therefore, necessary, in calculating the estimated value of the latter, to take account of the cumulative value of each of the agreements.

26. As regards the nature of the services, the Commission pointed out that, in its letter of 10 December 2001, it had stated that the contract in question concerned two types of service: on the one hand, public administration services, which were covered by Annex I B to Directive 92/50 and, on the other, data processing services, which were included in Annex I A to the directive, and that the value of the services falling into the first category seemed to be higher than that of those falling into the second category, with the result that the contract was gover ned by the provisions of Articles 14 and 16 of the directive. However, as a result of information obtained from the complainant, the Commission cast doubt on that conclusion, speculating that some of the services previously categorised as public administration services ought really to be regarded as topographical services, falling under Annex I A to Directive 92/50. If that supposition were confirmed by further information, which the Greek Government was asked to supply, the total value of the services falling under Annex I A would have been higher than that of the services falling under Annex I B, so that the provisions of Titles III to VI of the directive would apply.

27. The Hellenic Republic responded by letter of 30 January 2003, rejecting all of the complaints.

28. Consequently, on 19 December 2003, the Commission adopted a reasoned opinion in which it concluded that, by reason of the practice followed by the competent authorities in regard to the works involved in the completion and collation of applications and declarations by cereal producers and others in the context of the IACS in respect of 2001, the Hellenic Republic had failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 92/50, and in particular Articles 3(2), 7, 11(1) and 15(2) thereof, as well as the general principle of transparency, and asked the Hellenic Republic to comply with the abovementioned obligations within a period of two months.

IV - Procedure before the Court and arguments of the parties

29. By an application lodged at the registry of the Court on 30 May 2005, the Commission brought the present action.

30. The Commission claims that the Court should:

- declare that, by reason of the practice followed by the competent authorities in regard to the works involved in the completion and collation of applications and declarations by cereal producers and others in the context of the IACS in respect of 2001, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 92/50, and in particular Articles 3(2), 7, 11(1) and 15(2) thereof, and under the general principle of transparency;

- order the Hellenic Republic to pay the costs.

31. The Hellenic Republic claims that the Court should:

- dismiss the application;

- order the Commission to pay the costs.

32. By way of measures of organisation of the procedure, the Greek Government was asked to answer in writing a number of questions put by the Court. It complied with that request within the prescribed time limit.

33. The parties presented oral argument at the hearing of 14 September 2006.

A - Admissibility

1. Arguments of the parties

34. The Greek Government submits, firstly, that it adopted the measures necessary to bring to an end the breach with which it is charged before the deadline which the Commission set in its reasoned opinion had expired. The application is, therefore, inadmissible since it is devoid of purpose. In that connection, the Greek Government claims, on the one hand, that the service contracts at issue were not directly awarded in 2003 and, on the other, that the Greek authorities had undertaken, by official declaration of the Secretary-General of the Ministry of Agriculture of 2003, to use, if necessary, competitive tendering procedures for the award of the service contracts at issue, provided that those services fell, wholly or in part, under Annex I A to Directive 92/50.

35. Secondly, the Greek Government contends that, since the services to be provided under the contracts at issue consist in activities which have to be undertaken on an annual basis, the effects of the infringement at issue were confined to 2001. Consequently, the Commission has no legal interest in bringing proceedings in this case. An interest of that nature cannot be based solely on a difference of opinion between the Commission and the Greek authorities regarding the nature of the services at issue, which has not resulted in specific actions. In addition, the facts relating to the years subsequent to 2001, which the Commission cites in its observations, fall outside the scope of the application and cannot constitute an independent subject of complaint, since the Commission failed to raise them in the pre-litigation procedure. Furthermore, the Commission's account of those facts does not reflect reality. In fact, contrary to the Commission's claims, the services at issue were not awarded to PASEGES for the years subsequent to 2001, but were directly provided by the local authorities, leaving each producer free to apply to the authorities themselves or to private bodies to complete the applications for financial assistance.

36. In response to a written question put by the Court, in which it asked for clarification of the procedures followed by the Greek authorities for the award of service contracts linked to the implementation of the IACS in Greece for the years from 2002 to 2005, the Greek Government confirmed that the Greek authorities had not awarded service contracts for those years. In the context of their activities involving the provision of assistance to farmers, the local authorities had worked with the owners of parcels of land and their trade union bodies. The farmers were free to choose whether to seek the assistance of their UAC or of third parties. Whenever necessary, the authorities had also provided the computerised or cartographic materials needed to complete the application forms to PASEGES or to the UACs considered competent to administer that material. Any natural or legal person requesting it could have had access to that same material, subject to a prior assessment of their capacity to administer it. The Greek Government rejects any claim that a procedure of that kind could be equated with the direct or indirect award of the services linked to the implementation of the IACS. To substantiate its claims, the Greek Government attached to its response to the Court's question a memorandum, of 28 April 2004, concluded with PASEGES and concerning the implementation of the IACS for 2004.

37. Finally, the Greek Government points out that the regulatory background of the IACS was amended subsequent to the material facts and remains in constant evolution. Therefore, according to the Greek Government, the action which the Greek authorities have already taken to adjust their own practices in this area to meet the requirements of Directive 92/50 will, of necessity, have to be re-evaluated once the IACS has assumed its final form.

38. The Commission's response is that the interpretation by the Greek authorities, an interpretation which it believes to be mistaken, of the provisions of Directive 92/50 concerning the nature of the services at issue and the related obligations regarding advertising, as well as the nature of the agreements at issue, has resulted in an application of the national rules which is incompatible with Community law. Far from being merely theoretical, the difference of opinion in that regard between the Commission and the Greek Government involves a real risk of further breaches. Without seeking to extend the subject matter of the application to conduct subsequent to 2001, but merely in order to demonstrate the actual effects of the position adopted by the Greek authorities, the Commission refers to a number of documents annexed to the application, which indicate that PASEGES was directly awarded the contracts at issue for the years subsequent to 2001 also.

2. Assessment

39. The plea of inadmissibility submitted by the Greek Government does not appear to be unfounded.

40. In point of fact, there are a number of precedents in case-law, relating, in particular, to infringement proceedings in the public contracts sector, which support the Greek Government's argument.

41. The judgment of 31 March 1992, in Case C-362/90 Commission v Italy , (9) concerned an action against Italy under Article 226 EC, seeking a declaration of the incompatibility with the provisions of Directive 77/62/EEC of the condition, required for participation in an annual supply contract held by a local health authority, stipulating that 50% of the minimum amount of supplies required to have been made by the tenderers over the preceding three years should have been supplied to public administrative authorities. The contract notices containing that condition had been published in October 1988 and the supply contract consequent on the contract notice had fully exhausted its effects by 31 December 1989, that is to say at a date prior to the expiry of the period the Commission had accorded the respondent Government to comply with the reasoned opinion, which was issued on 27 March 1990. The Italian Government contended that, for this reason, the action was devoid of purpose and should be declared to be inadmissible.

42. In its judgment, the Court held (10) that, in that case, the effects of the contract notice at issue had been exhausted on 31 December 1989, that is to say, before the issue of the reasoned opinion, and that the contract notices for 1990 and 1991, published, respectively, on 4 November 1989, that is to say before the reasoned opinion was issued, and on 3 November 1990, that is to say before the action was brought, no longer contained the condition at issue. The Court further held that the Commission had not acted in good time in order to prevent, by means of procedures available to it, the infringement complained of from producing effects and had not even invoked the existence of circumstances preventing it from concluding the pre-litigation procedure laid down in Article 226 EC before the infringement ceased to exist. The Court concluded, on the basis of those considerations, that the infringement complained of had ceased to exist on expiry of the deadline laid down in the reasoned opinion and that the Commission's application should therefore be dismissed as inadmissible. (11)

43. In subsequent judgments, while rejecting the pleas of inadmissibility raised by the respondent governments, the Court implicitly upheld the solution adopted in the abovementioned judgment in Commission v Italy.

44. In its judgment of 10 April 2003 in Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 Commission v Germany , (12) the Commission complained that the Federal Republic of Germany had infringed the provisions of Directive 92/50 on the occasion of the award by two German municipalities of service contracts concerning the collection of waste water and waste disposal, the minimum period of which was set, in both cases, at 30 years. The German Government submitted that, in this instance, the failure to fulfil obligations consisted of breaches of procedural rules, whose effects were entirely exhausted before the end of the periods laid down in the reasoned opinions, and that the Federal Republic of Germany had acknowledged, before that date, that it had failed to fulfil its obligations. The action ought, therefore, to be dismissed on the ground that the Commission had no legal interest in bringing proceedings.

45. The Court first of all drew attention to the case-law according to which, when the Commission exercises its powers under Article 226 EC, it does not have to show that it has a specific interest in bringing an action, and the Commission alone is competent to determine the act or omission on which such proceedings should be based. The Court confirmed that, on the basis of those powers, the Commission may, therefore, ask the Court for a declaration that there has been a failure to fulfil an obligation, consisting in not having achieved, in a specific case, the result intended by the directive.

46. The Court further pointed out that although Directive 92/50 contains essentially procedural rules, it was nevertheless adopted with a view to eliminating barriers to the freedom to provide services and therefore is intended to protect the interests of traders established in a Member State who wish to offer services to contracting authorities established in another Member State' (13) and that, therefore, the adverse effect on the freedom to provide services arising from the infringement of Directive 92/50 must be found to subsist throughout the entire performance of the contracts concluded in breach thereof'. (14)

47. Consequently, the Court concluded that, since in that particular case, the contracts at issue would have continued to produce effects for decades, it could not be maintained that the alleged breaches of obligations had come to an end before the periods laid down in the reasoned opinions expired. (15) The plea of inadmissibility was, therefore, rejected. (16)

48. In Case C-394/02 Commission v Greece , (17) the Commission sought a declaration by the Court that, by reason of the award by the public electricity company DEI of a contract for the construction of a conveyor-belt system for the thermal electricity generation plant at Megalopolis by means of a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, the Hellenic Republic had failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/38/EEC. In the context of its pleas of inadmissibility, the Greek Government alleged both that the Commission lacked any interest in bringing an action, since the alleged infringement of Community law had, when the period for compliance with the reasoned opinion expired, been fully or at least in large measure completed, and that the action was devoid of purpose, since the contract for works, awarded by DEI as part of the contract notice at issue, had, when the period fixed by the reasoned opinion expired, been almost fully performed, and in actual fact, it was therefore no longer possible to comply with the reasoned opinion.

49. In rejecting the first of the above pleas, the Court basically confined itself to drawing attention to the case-law, according to which, when exercising its powers under Article 226 EC, the Commission does not have to show that there is a specific interest in bringing an action. (18)

50. As regards the second plea, after citing the abovementioned judgment in Commission v Italy , the Court noted that, in that case, the contract concluded between DEI... for the purposes of the contract at issue, was, when the period prescribed by the reasoned opinion expired, in course of performance , since only 85% of the works had been completed. That contract had therefore not been fully performed .' (19) Consequently, the plea was rejected. (20)

51. It should, finally, be pointed out that, recently, (21) relying on grounds largely identical to those which it adopted in the abovementioned judgment in Commission v Italy , cited in point 41 above, the Court declared to be inadmissible an action by which the Commission complained that Italy had authorised, in connection with an ordinance introducing urgent measures for aerial forest fire-fighting on national territory, the award of supply and service contracts which were incompatible with Directives 92/50 and 93/36 and with Article 43 EC and 49 EC. (22) The Court found that the contested ordinance had ceased to produce any legal effect at the expiry date of the state of emergency declared on Italian territory and had been exhausted before the period laid down in the reasoned opinion expired. (23)

52. That judgment also stands out in that, in contrast to the abovementioned judgments in Commission v Germany and Commission v Greece , the Court did not consider the fact that the procedures set under way in accordance with the authorisation contained in the ordinance at issue were still effective to be relevant. (24)

53. The abovementioned case-law provides a number of elements which are useful in assessing the validity of the plea of inadmissibility submitted by the respondent Government in this case.

54. Firstly, it is necessary to point out that there are two earlier cases in which the Court declared the action to be inadmissible on the basis of the finding that the alleged failure to fulfil an obligation had exhausted its effects before the period allowed in the reasoned opinion had expired. In those judgments, moreover, the Court expressed itself in terms which do not permit a distinction to be made between the various types of contract governed by the Community directives.

55. Secondly, it is clear from the abovementioned judgments in Commission v Germany and Commission v Greece that the action cannot be declared to be inadmissible if the alleged breach of the rules on public contracts continues to produce its effects after the period allowed in the reasoned opinion has expired. More particularly, those effects continue to exist so long as the contracts concluded on the basis of the procedures at issue have not been performed in full.

56. In this case, it is clear from the documents before the Court that the contracts at issue were of one year's duration (they related to the implementation of activities connected with the IACS for 2001 only) and that the services which constituted the subject matter of those contracts had been performed in full at the time when the reasoned opinion was adopted on 19 December 2003. (25)

57. As regards the implementation of the IACS for the years subsequent to 2001, the competent authorities followed procedures different from the procedure at issue. In particular, according to information provided by the Greek Government, those procedures no longer provided for any payment to be made, from the authorities' budget, to persons, including the UACs, which assisted farmers in compiling and submitting application forms.

58. Although the Commission has voiced doubts concerning the compatibility of those procedures with the provisions of Directive 92/50, I do not consider it necessary to assess the validity of those allegations for the purpose of determining whether the present action is admissible. In point of fact, as clearly emerges from the forms of order sought in the application itself, and as the Commission specifically acknowledged in its written observations and at the hearing, the current dispute relates solely to the procedure adopted by the Greek authorities to implement the IACS in 2001.

59. Moreover, since the procedures adopted by the Greek authorities for the years subsequent to 2001 clearly differ from the procedure at issue in this case - to such an extent that, on the basis of the information which the Greek Government has supplied, it is hard to imagine that any public works contracts were awarded after 2001 (26) - it does not seem to me to be permissible to rely on those procedures to claim, as the Commission appears to claim, that the failure to fulfil an obligation with which the Greek Government is charged for 2001 was followed, in subsequent years, by conduct which can be defined as a continuing breach.

60. In those circumstances, in accordance with the abovementioned case-law, the action must, in my view, be declared to be inadmissible.

61. As Advocate General Lenz rightly pointed out in his Opinion in the case of Commission v Italy , which I have mentioned several times and which is cited at point 41 above, it is a condition for bringing an action under Article 226 EC that, at the time when the period allowed to the Member

State to comply with the reasoned opinion expires, conduct or a failure should exist, which is attributable to that Member State and which the Commission considers to be incompatible with Community law.

62. That is perfectly clear from the second paragraph of Article 226 EC, according to which, if the Member State concerned does not comply with the reasoned opinion within the period laid down by the Commission, the latter may bring the matter before the Court of Justice. Interpreted a contrario , that provision implies that the Commission is not authorised to bring an action to establish that there has been a breach of Community law, if that breach came to an end before the period laid down in the reasoned opinion expired, at least where the breach was brought to an end because the Member State took measures to comply with the reasoned opinion.

63. No other solution appears to me to be justified, as a rule, if the alleged breach had in any case come to an end when the period laid down in the reasoned opinion expired because it had exhausted all its effects before that date, even though the fact that it was brought to an end was not actually the result of the Member State concerned taking the action the Commission had required. That conclusion is consistent with the objectives of the pre-litigation stage of the procedure under Article 226 EC - which seems to be designed to bring the breach to an end before the matter is referred to the Court -and, more generally, it is consistent with the aims of Treaty infringement proceedings. (27)

64. It is also worth pointing out that, as the Court has stated on many occasions, the purpose of infringement proceedings is objectively to establish whether there has been a breach of Community law. Any recognition by a Member State of a failure to fulfil an obligation, if not followed by measures capable of bringing it to an end within the period laid down in the reasoned opinion, does not preclude a finding of that nature, just as a continuing difference of opinion between the Commission and the Member State concerning the existence of an infringement does not authorise the Commission to bring the matter before the Court if the latter has nonetheless complied with the reasoned opinion. In other words, use of the mechanism provided for under Article 226 EC is not, in my view, justified solely in order to prevent the risk of future infringements or resolve differences of opinion between the Commission and a Member State concerning the compatibility of the latter's conduct with Community law.

65. Nor does it seem to me to be possible to base justification for action by the Commission in relation to an infringement, which has been brought to an end, on the need to obtain a declaration that there has been a failure to fulfil an obligation which may provide the basis for actions which are designed to establish the Member State's liability for harm caused to individuals by that failure. While there is no doubt that a judgment of the Court of Justice declaring the existence of a breach of Community law may make it easier to bring actions for damages against the defaulting State before the national courts, actions under Article 226 EC are not designed to determine the liability of the Member State in question, which will have to be established through the legal channels provided for that purpose in the individual national legal systems; such actions are designed solely to establish objectively whether there has been a failure to fulfil an obligation in the general interest. Furthermore, it should be pointed out that the interest of persons who have suffered harm as a result of a breach of Community law by a Member State in obtaining a declaration that there has been a failure to fulfil an obligation continues to exist even where the State concerned complied with the reasoned opinion within the period laid down by the Commission, without that interest of itself conferring on the Commission the right to bring the matter before the Court to seek a declaration confirming the infringement in question.

66. It should, however, be made clear that while, in principle, the Commission is not authorised to bring proceedings in relation to infringements which have been brought to an end, that does not rule out the possibility of taking action in respect of failures of brief duration, in relation to which, although it has acted swiftly, the Commission did not actually have the time to conclude the pre-litigation procedure before those failures were remedied (28) or in respect of continuing and systematic breaches of Community law. (29)

67. On the basis of all of the above considerations, I therefore consider that the abovementioned case-law should be applied in this case in which, as we have seen, the infringement at issue, which lasted for more than a year, was probably brought to an end before the pre-litigation procedure began and, in any event, before the period accorded to the Hellenic Republic in the reasoned opinion had expired.

68. In the alternative, should the Court reject any argument and hold the action to be admissible, I shall consider below whether the action is well founded as to the merits.

B - Merits

1. The alleged breach of the provisions of Directive 92/50

69. An examination of the first plea submitted by the Commission in support of its action, which is founded on the breach of the provisions of Directive 92/50, necessitates an analysis of both the nature of the agreements at issue and the nature of the services forming the subject matter of those agreements.

a) The nature of the agreements at issue

i) Arguments of the parties

70. According to the Commission, the implementing agreements for the framework agreement, which it considers to be public service contracts within the meaning of Directive 92/50, must, for the purposes of applying the provisions of that directive, be viewed as a whole and not, as the Greek Government submits, separately.

71. The Commission infers that those agreements are unitary in nature from a number of different factors, and, in particular: from the fact that they share the same object, that is to say to carry out activities linked to the implementation of the IACS; from the existence of a framework agreement which uniformly defines the basic components of the individual agreements and globally determines the remuneration to be paid for the services forming the subject matter of those agreements; and from the fact that, by its very nature, the IACS requires uniform and centralised implementing procedures. It follows, according to the Commission, that, in order to determine the estimated cost of the contract in accordance with Article 7 of Directive 92/50, it is necessary to take into account the cumulative value of all of the implementing agreements. Since the figure arrived at on the basis of that calculation will be far in excess of the thresholds laid down in Article 7, the directive will apply to each contract.

72. The respondent Member State submits, in its defence, that the implementing agreements are not uniform in nature. The fact that the contracting parties are not the same, the diversity of the services provided - which vary in nature and scope according to the characteristics of the territory concerned - the different places of implementation and the different value, in economic terms, of each category of services offered, are all elements which differentiate the agreements in question, with the result that they cannot be considered to be unitary agreements.

73. The Hellenic Republic also claims that the figure laid down in the framework agreement, which the Commission used as the basis for calculating the thresholds laid down in Article 7 of Directive 92/50, actually represents the financial cover provided by the Greek authorities for the implementation of the IACS throughout the whole of Greek territory and includes, not only remuneration for the services provided by the UACs, but also sums earmarked to cover the costs of the prefectoral authorities.

74. According to the Greek Government, the value of the contracts at issue must, in fact, be calculated by reference to each agreement in isolation, taking account of the figure corresponding to the remuneration paid for the services provided and excluding the credits allocated to the individual contracting authorities.

ii) Analysis

75. It is first necessary to make clear that it is only in the event that the agreements at issue have to be assessed as a single unit, as the Commission suggests, that the provisions of Directive 92/50 will apply. It appears, in fact, to be common ground among the parties that, if viewed individually, as the Greek Government claims they should be, those agreements do not fall within the thresholds laid down by the directive.

76. According to Article 7(3) of Directive 92/50, [t]he selection of the valuation method [of the estimated cost of the contract] shall not be used with the intention of avoiding the application of this Directive, nor shall any procurement requirement for a given amount of services be split up with the intention of avoiding the application of this Article.'

77. Although there are, in this case, both elements which support the view that the agreements at issue are unitary in nature, as the Commission claims, and elements which suggest the contrary, as the Greek Government contends, I consider that the former should take precedence.

78. The framework agreement which the Greek authorities entered into with PASEGES places all of the agreements at issue in a single legal context and acts as a unifying factor for those agreements. (30) Not only does it define the nature of the services, identify the contracting authorities and the successful tenderers, (31) designate a person responsible for coordinating all of the activities involved in implementing the individual agreements and determine the overall financial cover for the operation, it also furnishes the legislative framework within which the individual agreements are concluded. That agreement is automatically annexed to the agreements entered into at local level (32) and its provisions supplement the content of those agreements on matters for which the latter do not make specific provision. Moreover, it seems to me that the conclusion of the framework agreement of itself demonstrates that the Greek authorities themselves took a unitary view of the various contracts entered into on the basis of that framework agreement.

79. As regards the implementing agreements, it must be pointed out that the Greek State appears as a contracting party in each of those agreements, even though, as the Greek Government points out, the agreements were in fact concluded by the individual prefectoral authorities with the territorially competent UAC and, therefore, actually differ in terms of the particular contracting authorities and successful tenderers. They are largely the same in content as regards the nature of the services forming the subject matter of the contracts, the nature of the obligations entered into by each of the contracting parties and the duration of the agreement. They also relate to the provision of services which are essential for the attainment of a common objective, that is to say the implementation of the IACS throughout the whole of Greek territory for 2001. (33)

80. The fact that, as the Greek Government points out, the economic value of the services provided differs, depending on the requirements linked to the territory of each prefectoral authority, just as the place at which the services are provided differs, does not, however, seem to me to be of critical importance, since it does not change the fact that the agreements at issue have basically the same rationale and object, are of the same duration and have the same purpose.

81. If, then, the implementing agreements have to viewed overall, their value must be considered cumulatively in order to assess the estimated cost of the contract. Since the documents before the Court indicate that some of the implementing agreements, viewed in isolation, have a value close to the thresholds provided for by Directive 92/50, the conclusion must be that if the value of all of the agreements at issue is added together, those thresholds are substantially exceeded.

82. The Greek Government's allegation that the Commission incorrectly used as the basis for calculating the overall value of the contracts the sum laid down in the framework agreement, which includes not only the payment for the services provided by the UACs, but also sums earmarked to cover the costs of the prefectoral authorities, seems to me to be unfounded in fact.

83. There is no evidence to substantiate that allegation, and it is, moreover, contradicted on a reading of the documents in the pre-litigation procedure, which clearly indicate that in calculating the estimated value of those contracts, the Commission did not rely on the abovementioned figure but, in fact, added up the value of each agreement. Moreover, at the hearing, the Commission confirmed that this was the method it had adopted.

84. On the basis of the above considerations, it must be concluded, in agreement with the Commission, that the contracts at issue fall within the scope of Directive 92/50.

b) The nature of the services provided

i) Arguments of the parties

85. The Commission considers that many of the services forming the subject matter of the contracts at issue must be regarded as topographical services' falling within category 12 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50. According to the Commission, that category includes operations involving the use of orthophotographic maps and the identification of agricultural holdings on those maps. Those services can be provided only by professional topographers.

86. Again, according to the Commission, the remaining portion of the services at issue relates, on the one hand, to processing the data which has been collected and entering it in a data base, operations which - the Commission contends - come under category 7, data processing services', of Annex I A to Directive 92/50, and, on the other, the entering of the data collected in the declaration forms, which activity, being a public administration activity, should, in fact, be classified in Annex I B, other services', to the directive.

87. The Commission considers that the value of the services which fall under Annex I A to Directive 92/50 is higher than the value of the services which fall under Annex I B thereto.

88. The Greek Government maintains that the services forming the subject matter of the implementing agreements entirely - or, at least, overwhelmingly - constitute public administration activities, which fall under Annex I B to Directive 92/50.

89. As regards, in particular, the services involved in providing assistance to producers with a view to submitting the applications and declarations, the Greek Government first explains that these involve not only assistance in filling in the forms, but also identifying both the areas under cultivation and those used for stabling. Consequently, the Commission's argument that those services must be classified as topographical services is valid only in relation to the identification of the agricultural parcels.

90. Secondly, the Greek Government contends that the cartographical support equipment needed to make that identification is provided by the ministry of agriculture, and that the prefectoral authorities, the staff of the topographical service and the directorate for agricultural development provide producers with the technical assistance they need for the identification process. The UACs provide their activities of assisting the producers under the supervision of the topographical service and the directorate for agricultural development.

91. Thirdly, the Greek Government points out that since the UACs had access to the data entered in the declarations submitted for 2000, as well as maps indicating the parcels declared for that year, their work in locating the parcels was made easier and basically confined to identifying any differences as compared with the previous year. The respondent Government estimates that, in general, approximately 70% of the parcels declared in a given year remain unchanged in the following year.

92. Fourthly, the Greek Government claims that the activities involved in identifying the agricultural parcels do not require the services of topographers, since they can be carried out by other specialist staff.

93. Finally, in response to a question put by the Court, the Greek Government objects to the classification of the services at issue as topographical services, a classification which, it alleges, the Commission arrived at without undertaking a detailed analysis of the United Nations CPC nomenclature.

ii) Analysis

94. An analysis designed to identify the nature of the services forming the subject matter of the agreements at issue is important for the purpose of determining the rules applicable to the related contracts. If the services fall under Annex I A to Directive 92/50, then, in accordance with Article 8 thereof, the provisions of that directive apply in full; if they do not fall under Annex I A, only Articles 14 and 16 are applicable, in accordance with Article 9 of the directive. If the services in question are regarded as in part covered by Annex I A and in part covered by Annex I B, as suggested - though their views differ - by both the Commission and, in the alternative, by the Greek Government, it is further necessary to assess, for the purposes of applying the rule under Article 10 of Directive 92/50, whether the value of the services included in Annex I A is higher than that of the services which fall under Annex I B or vice versa.

95. That said, it seems to me that the analysis must include an assessment of the content of the agreements at issue. Since they have been concluded in implementation of the framework agreement, the different contracts are largely similar in content, particularly as regards the subject matter of the services the different contracting parties undertake to provide, consequently, that assessment will be made below with reference, by way of illustration, solely to the provisions of the agreement entered into by the Greek State, the prefectoral authority of Corinth and the Corinth UAC.

96. It should first be pointed out that, in defining the subject matter and aims of the agreement, Article 1 thereof sets out that the need to issue an invitation to tender for the services of providing assistance to producers in the context of implementing the IACS is based on a finding that it is impossible for producers independently to identify the areas under cultivation on orthophotographic materials and to collect information on the livestock being raised, and on the lack of adequate assistance from the services of the prefectoral authorities, of specialist staff and the appropriate data processing support and, consequently, the difficulty, in those circumstances, of complying with the time limits laid down for implementing the IACS.

97. Article 2 of the agreement defines the obligations entered into by the different contracting parties and is made up of two parts: part A refers to the activities of identifying the declared areas under cultivation and the livestock and their entry in the special application forms.' Part B concerns activities involving inputting data from the application forms into the ministry's computer to create a computerised data base.'

98. As regards the activities covered in Part A, the UAC undertakes to provide the necessary technical assistance to the producers concerned within the confines of the territorial jurisdiction of the contracting prefectoral authority. For that purpose, it is required to set up two teams, providing five individuals responsible for identifying on orthophotographic maps the areas and stabling facilities which are to be declared for the purpose of filling in the application forms, under the supervision of the topographical service, the veterinary service and the prefectoral authority's directorate for agricultural development, as well as to submit the declarations to the prefectoral authority and make the necessary corrections should mistakes have been made.

99. The Greek State undertakes to make available the cartographical materials for identifying the holdings and the manuscript archives concerning the branded livestock in order to identify them and establish a computerised register. It also undertakes to pay to the UAC, through the offices of the prefectoral authority, a sum in drachma corresponding to the overall amount of the applications drawn up by the UAC, augmented by a sum representing a flat-rate payment for each application.

100. The prefectoral authority undertakes to supply, using the staff of the topographical service, technical assistance to producers covering, in all, 500 of an estimated total of 1 192 claim declarations, with the assistance for the remaining declarations to be provided by the UAC.

101. The activities falling under part B of Article 2 of the agreement consist in entering the data taken from the declarations into a computer program provided by the ministry of agriculture, under the supervision of the prefectoral authority's directorate for agricultural development, in order to establish a definitive data base. Therefore, the Greek State undertakes to provide the software with the instructions for entering the data concerning the holdings and the livestock; to make available the requisite computer connections, to make available to the directorate for agricultural development and the UAC the computer expertise of its own services; and to pay the UAC, through the offices of the prefectoral authority, a sum in drachma corresponding to the overall amount of the applications draw up by the UAC, augmented by a sum of 500 drachma for each application by way of remuneration for entering the data in the relevant computerised data base and a sum of 1 750 drachma for each application by way of remuneration for entering data in the cattle register.

102. Article 3 of the agreement defines the financing procedures. Article 3(b) lays down a sum of 6 554 025 drachma to cover spending on remuneration, in the form of a flat-rate payment per form, for carrying out the activities of identification and preparing the applications and declarations. Article 3(c) lays down a sum of 1 920 500 drachma to cover spending on remuneration, in the form of a flat-rate payment per form, for carrying out the activities involved in processing the data from the applications and declarations.

103. One element of the services which the UACs are asked to provide, which the Commission describes as topographical services', consists, therefore, in identifying, on the basis of cartographic or orthophotograhic materials or aerial photographs provided by the prefectoral authorities, the agricultural holdings under cultivation. Furthermore, it is clear from the wording of Articles 1 and 2 of the agreement concluded between the Greek State, the prefectoral authority of Corinth and the Corinth UAC that those activities are able to be carried out only by specialist staff. It should, finally, be pointed out that those activities are carried out under the supervision of the staff of the prefectoral authority's topographical service.

104. The above elements should now be used to assess the accuracy of the Commission's classification.

105. The Greek Government challenges that classification essentially in relation to the services involved in identifying the agricultural parcels. Furthermore, the breach of the provisions of Directive 92/50, which is cited in the context of the plea under consideration, could arise only if those services can be included under Annex I A to the directive. In point of fact, were that not the case, then, given the marginal economic nature of the services involved in entering data in the authority's data bases, as compared with the other services, it would have to be concluded that, in value terms, the services falling under Annex I B to Directive 92/50 are more significant than those falling under Annex I A, with the result that the rules on publication laid down in the directive would apply in part only.

106. For those reasons, the analysis which follows relates solely to the proper definition of the services involved in identifying the agricultural parcels.

107. It should first be pointed out that the seventh recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50 states that the field of services is best described, for the purpose of application of procedural rules and for monitoring purposes, by subdividing it into categories corresponding to particular positions of a common classification; whereas Annexes I A and I B of this Directive refer to the CPC nomenclature (common product classification) of the United Nations; whereas that nomenclature is likely to be replaced in the future by a Community nomenclature; whereas provision should be made for adapting the CPC nomenclature in Annexes I A and B in consequence.'

108. In its judgment in Tögel , the Court held that it is clear from the seventh recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50 that the reference in Annexes I A and I B to the CPC nomenclature is binding. (34) It follows that in defining the services forming the subject matter of a contract, the Commission must refer to the nomenclature - and the explanatory notes which accompany it - in order to determine whether they fall under Annex I A or Annex I B to the directive.

109. It is not clear from the procedural documents, which the Commission has submitted, on the basis of what information and with reference to exactly which class in the CPC nomenclature the Commission has defined the activities at issue as topographical services.'

110. In response to a written question put by the Court, the Commission has, however, cited reference numbers CPC 86753 and CPC 86721, which constitute subdivisions of CPC 867, listed in category 12 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50.

111. Category 12 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50 covers the following descriptions: [a]rchitectural services; engineering services and integrated engineering services; urban planning and landscape architectural services; related scientific and technical consulting services; technical testing and analysis services.'

112. Number 867 in the provisional CPC nomenclature, to which category 12 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50 refers, concerns architectural services, engineering and other technical services.' Class 8672 covers engineering services' and includes subclass 86721 advisory and consultative engineering services', to which the Commission refers. According to the explanatory note relating to that subclass, it includes preparatory technical feasibility studies and project impact studies.' Cited, by way of example are study of the impact of topography and geology on the design, construction and cost of a ... infrastructure.' The explanatory note further makes clear that the provision of those services is not necessarily linked to a construction project, but may, for example, consist in the appraisal of the structural, mechanical and electrical installations of buildings, of expert testimony in litigation cases, of assistance to government bodies in drafting laws etc.'

113. As regards subclass CPC 86753 [s]urface surveying services' to which the Commission also refers, this belongs to class 8675, services related to scientific and technical consultancy.' According to the explanatory note referring to that subclass, such services consist in [g]athering services of information on the shape, position and/or boundaries of a portion of the earth's surface by different methods including (...) photogrammetric and hydrographic surveying for the purpose of preparing maps. (35)

114. The Greek Government takes the view that services involving the provision of assistance by the UACs, including those relating to the identification of the agricultural parcels on cartographic or other materials, must be classified as pubic administration' services falling within the category of other services' (category 27) of Annex I B to Directive 92/50.

115. The Commission does not appear to me to have adequately clarified whether, and to what extent, the services at issue fall under category 12 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50.

116. While it is true that it is clear from the implementing agreements that the services provided by the UACs in connection with their work in providing assistance in filling in the forms for applications and declarations largely consist in identifying agricultural parcels on the basis of the cartographic materials provided by the competent authorities, the Commission's argument to the effect that, because they involve using specialist staff and are carried out under the supervision of the topographical services, these services must be categorised as topographical services, does not seem to me to be entirely persuasive.

117. In point of fact, it is clear from the explanatory note cited in point 113 above, that the surface surveying' surfaces which fall under CPC subclass 86753, to which the Commission refers, consist in identification activities for the purpose of drawing up maps, whereas, in this case, the parties do not dispute that the services at issue are confined to identifying data on existing cartographic materials. Furthermore, subclass CPC 86721, advisory and consultative engineering services', which the Commission also cites, refers, according to the relevant explanatory note - which is cited in point 112 above - to project feasibility studies or studies relating to a project's topographical impact, or other consultancy activities, which may also not be linked to a construction project, and whose description does not clearly extend to cover technical assistance activities, such as those at issue in this case.

118. It is settled case-law that in an action based on Article 226 EC, it is for the Commission to prove the existence of the alleged infringement and to provide the Court with the information necessary for it to determine whether the infringement is made out, and the Commission may not rely on any presumption for that purpose. (36)

119. In this case, on the basis of the above considerations, it is my view that the Commission has failed to provide sufficient evidence to demonstrate that the services involved in identifying the agricultural parcels at issue may be categorised as falling under category 12 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50 and that, consequently, it has failed to prove one of the conditions establishing the existence of the Treaty infringement with which the Greek Government is charged under the first form of order sought. (37)

120. For the reasons set out above, and without prejudice to the conclusion I have reached concerning the admissibility of the action forming the subject matter of these proceedings, I consider that this plea, which is based on a breach of the provisions of Directive 92/50, must be rejected.

2. The alleged breach of the principle of transparency and the principle of non-discrimination

121. In the alternative, and should the Court consider that the services at issue fall - largely or entirely - under Annex I B to Directive 92/50, the Commission contends that the Greek authorities were, none the less, required to ensure an adequate level of publicity, in the procedure for awarding the contracts at issue, in compliance with the principle of nondiscrimination laid down in Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50. That article is included in the general provisions of Title I of the directive, which also apply to public service contracts falling under Annex I B thereto.

122. The Commission also refers to the Court's more general finding in its judgment in Teleaustria and Telefonadress (38) concerning the application of the principles of non-discrimination and transparency to public service contracts which are not governed by Community directives.

123. In that judgment, as in the abovementioned Coname (39) and Parking Brixen (40) judgments, the Court held that notwithstanding the fact that public service concession contracts are, as Community law stands at present, excluded from the scope of Directive 92/50, the public authorities concluding them are, none the less, bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the EC Treaty, in general, and the principle of non-discrimination on the ground of nationality, in particular. (41) According to the Court, the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality imply, in particular, a duty of transparency to ensure... for the benefit of any potential tenderer,

a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the service concession to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed.' (42)

124. However, the question raised in this case differs in part from those which formed the subject matter of the earlier cases cited above. Whereas the cases which resulted in the Teleaustria , Coname and Parking Brixen judgments related to the award of public services which were not governed by Community directives, the agreements at issue fall within the scope of Directive 92/50, which provides for an advertising regime which differs depending on whether the public service contracts to which it applies have, as their object, services falling under Annex I A or Annex I B to the directive.

125. That issue is the subject of Case C-507/03 Commission v Ireland , which is currently pending before the Grand Chamber of the Court. Advocate General Stix-Hackl delivered her Opinion in that case on 14 September 2006, and has taken the view that the general principles of non-discrimination and transparency also apply in relation to public service contracts falling under Annex I B to Directive 92/50, in relation to those aspects of that contract regime which the directive does not specifically regulate.

126. I endorse the solution which Advocate General Stix-Hackl recommends in her Opinion, and which, basically, reflects the argument advanced by the applicant in this case. I do not, therefore, consider it necessary - bearing in mind also the considerations set out in relation to the admissibility of the action - to analyse this plea further and will, therefore, simply refer to the considerations set out in the abovementioned Opinion.

127. It remains to be considered whether the Greek Government has cited grounds which, in any event, justify excluding the requirements of prior publication in relation to the public service contracts at issue.

128. In challenging the validity of the plea in question, the Greek Government's response has simply been that it has provided an appropriate and sufficient level of advertising of the activities linked to the IACS for 2001, with the result that interested persons had the opportunity to offer their services to farmers, with the latter, in any event, remaining free to choose to whom they would apply in order to obtain assistance in drawing up and submitting the applications and declarations.

129. In response to the first complaint submitted by the Commission, the respondent Government did, however, cite the applicability to the public service contracts at issue of Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50, according to which the award of public service contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice is permitted where for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the services may be provided only by a particular service provider.' The Greek Government cited, in particular, the existence in this case of technical reasons requiring that the contracts at issue be awarded to the UACs.

130. Even supposing that the exception which that provision permits to the rule, according to which contracts to which the provisions of Title III of the directive applies are awarded after prior publication of a contract notice, may be relied upon in connection with this plea - concerning the infringement of the general principles of transparency and non-discrimination and not a breach of the rules on prior publication provided for by directive 92/50 (43) - it does not seem to me that the respondent Member State has adequately proved that, in the case in point, the conditions for that exception to apply were met. Indeed, in that connection, the Greek Government merely refers generally to the existence of technical reasons relating to the subject matter and award of the public service contracts at issue - reasons which, that Government contends, necessitate awarding those contracts to the representatives of farmers in the place where the services are to be provided - without, however, providing further information.

131. In the light of the above considerations, and should the Court not share the Opinion at which I have arrived concerning the admissibility of the action forming the object of these proceedings, I propose to accept this plea concerning the breach of the principles of non-discrimination and transparency and to declare that the conduct with which the Commission has charged the Hellenic Republic in the context of this plea constitutes a failure to fulfil the obligations incumbent upon the Hellenic Republic under the Treaty.

VI - Costs

132. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings.

133. Since I am proposing that the Court should dismiss the action, and since the Hellenic Republic has applied for costs against the Commission, the Commission must be ordered to pay the costs.

VII - Conclusion

134. For all of the reasons set out above, I propose that the Court should declare that:

- the action is inadmissible;

- the Commission is ordered to pay the costs.

(10) - Before reaching that finding, the Court first noted that it follows from the very terms of [the second paragraph of Article 226 EC] that the Commission may bring an action for failure to fulfil obligations before the Court only if the Member State concerned does not comply with the opinion within the period laid down by the Commission for that purpose', and pointed out that the Court has consistently held that the action brought under the second paragraph of Article 226 EC is for a declaration that the State concerned has failed to fulfil an obligation under the Treaty and that it has not put an end to that infringement within the time laid down to that effect by the Commission in its reasoned opinion.' The Court further pointed out that it is settled case-law that the question whether there has been a failure to fulfil obligations must be determined by reference to the situation prevailing in the Member State at the end of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion.

(11) - In that case, the Court largely followed the Opinion of Advocate General Lenz, according to which pursuant to the [second paragraph of Article 226 EC], it is a condition for bringing an action that an infringement of the Treaty should exist after the period laid down in the reasoned opinion.' According to the Advocate General, there is no legal interest in a declaration by the Court of an infringement of the Treaty if the infringement has been terminated before the expiry of that period', that approach being consistent with the ratio of the pre-litigation procedure, which is aimed at bringing about the termination of the Treaty infringement before the proceedings before the Court. Advocate General Lenz acknowledges that exceptions to that rule may arise in cases of seasonal infringements (Case C-240/86) where, because of its purpose and legal nature, the infringement of the Treaty is confined to a limited period (as, for example, in the case of the import and export restrictions introduced on a seasonal basis for the protection of national traders) and where, because of this, the conduct of the procedure prior to the actions for failure to fulfil obligations is made, purely in terms of time, more difficult, if not altogether impossible.' However, since, in that case, it was objectively possible, without any difficulty, to conduct the procedure prior to the bringing of an action for failure to fulfil obligations during the almost 15 months in which the invitation to tender was valid, the Advocate General concluded that the action was inadmissible.

(12) - [2003] ECR I-3609.

(13) - Paragraphs 35 and 36 of the judgment. The Court cited in that connection Case C-19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I-7725, paragraph 32.

(14) - Emphasis added.

(15) - The Court reached a similar conclusion in its judgment in Case C-328/96 Commission v Austria [1999] ECR I-7479, paragraphs 43 to 45, in which the plea of inadmissibility raised by the respondent government was rejected, on the ground that, although Austria had amended - in the way indicated by the Commission and before the reasoned opinion was adopted - all the procedures already under way, any effects contrary to Community law produced by the procedures at issue still subsisted on the date on which the period set in the reasoned opinion expired. Advocate General Alber took the same approach in his Opinion.

(16) - In his opinion, without citing the above judgment in Commission v Italy , Advocate General Geelhoed expresses views which essentially contradict the solution upheld in that judgment (see, in particular, points 47 to 50 and 53 to 57). According to the Advocate General, proceedings for failure to fulfil obligations are intended, not only to put an end to the specific breach but also to bring about a change in the conduct of the defendant State and prevent further breaches. However, the continuing effects of the breach after the deadline imposed by the reasoned opinion represents, for the Advocate General too, the key factor in the solution of that case (see point 57).

(19) - Ibidem , paragraph 19. Emphasis added.

(20) - Advocate General Jacobs had expressed the same view, although he did not adopt quite the same line of argument. According to the Advocate General, in fact, the Commission had an interest in securing a declaration of the alleged failure to fulfil an obligation by the Hellenic Government in that case, since the contract concluded on completion of the tendering procedure at issue was still under way and, therefore, the default continued to produce legal effects. As regards the plea based on the action being devoid of purpose, the Advocate General cited the Court's case-law according to which even where the default has been remedied after the time-limit given in the reasoned opinion has expired, there is still an interest in pursuing the action in order to establish the basis of liability which a Member State may incur, as a result of its default, towards other Member States, the Community or private parties.' The Advocate General added that the same applies whenever the default may no longer be remedied.

(21) - Case C-525/03 Commission v Italy [2005] ECR I-9405. It is interesting, moreover, to note that the judgment was handed down by the Court's second chamber, albeit in a formation different from that which is hearing this case.

(22) - It should be noted that the Court considered the admissibility of the action of its own motion, and declared it to be inadmissible despite the fact that, at the hearing the respondent government stated that it was in favour of admissibility. The Italian Republic did not, moreover, acknowledge the failure to fulfil an obligation with which it was charged.

(23) - Advocate General Jacobs considered that the action was admissible.

(24) - Paragraph 11 of the judgment in Case C-525/03, cited in footnote 21 above. It is true that the forms of order sought in the application related solely to the provisions of the ordinance at issue, however, as Advocate General Jacobs pointed out, the fact that tendering procedures were under way or that the related contracts were in the course of being performed could constitute a factor to be taken into account in assessing whether the effects of the ordinance could be regarded as being completely exhausted at the time when the period laid down in the reasoned opinion expired.

(25) - According to Article 5(1) of the framework agreement, that agreement is to enter into force on the day of its signature and cease to be in force when all of the financial aid has been paid to the farmers who have applied for it. The same provision appears in each of the agreements concluded on the basis of the framework agreement. In the absence of information to the contrary from the Commission, it must be assumed that, as the Greek Government stated at the hearing, the aid had been paid out in full before the period laid down in the reasoned opinion expired.

(26) - According to Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50, public service contracts' means contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority.' It follows from the definition that a public service contract within the meaning of that directive involves consideration which is paid directly by the contracting authority to the service provider (see Case C-458/03 Parking Brixen [2005] ECR I-8612, paragraph 39).

(27) - It is settled case-law that when exercising its powers under Article 226 EC, the Commission's function is to ensure, in the general interest, that the Member States give effect to Community law and to obtain a declaration of any failure to fulfil the obligations deriving therefrom with a view to bringing it to an end (Case C-333/99 Commission v France [2001] ECR I-1025, paragraph 23 and Case C-394/02 , cited in footnote 17 above, paragraphs 14 and 15, as well as the case-law cited therein).

(28) - See, to that effect, Case C-362/90, cited in footnote 9 above.

(29) - See, for example, Case C-236/05 Commission v United Kingdom , [2006] ECR I10819.

(30) - See, to that effect, Case C-79/94 Commission v Greece [1995] ECR I-1071, paragraph 15.

(31) - Although, as the Greek Government points out, in regions in which there are several UACs, the UAC which will be party to the agreement with the local authority will be selected at the time when the implementing agreement is concluded.

(32) - See, for example, the preamble to the implementing agreement concluded between the Greek State, the prefectoral authority of Corinth and the Corinth UAC. The first paragraph in the preamble provides that the framework agreement is an integral part of the agreement.

(33) - Although in a different regulatory context (the question related to a breach of the provisions of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors), the Court has already demonstrated, in the past, that it gives precedence to the criterion of the uniformity of the economic and technical function of public contracts rather than to factors such as the existence of a number of contracting authorities or a number of companies submitting successful tenders (see Case C-16/98 Commission v France [2000] ECR I-8315).

(34) - Case C-76/97 [1998] ECR I-5357, paragraph 37.

(35) - The Commission also points out that, although it has only indicative value, - the table in of equivalence Annex II A to Directive 2004/18/EC, between the headings in the Common Procurement Vocabulary (CPV) and the CPC nomenclature, includes topographical services in category 12 engineering services.'

(36) - See Case C-287/03 Commission v Belgium [2005] ECR I-3761, paragraph 27, and the case-law cited therein.

(43) - The possibility of relying on that is supported by Advocate General Stix-Hackl in her abovementioned Opinion in Case C-507/03, and in the Opinion delivered on the same day in the related case C-532/03 Commission v Ireland , which is also pending before the Grand Chamber of the Court.

Action brought on 30 May 2005 by the Commission of the European Communities against the Hellenic Republic

(Language of the case: Greek)

An action against the Hellenic Republic was brought before the Court of Justice of the European Communities on 30 May 2005 by the Commission of the European Communities, represented by M. Patakia and X. Lewis, with an address for service in Luxembourg.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

Declare that, owing to the practice followed by the competent authorities in regard to the works involved in the completion and collation of claim declarations by cereal producers and others in the context of the Integrated Administration and Control System (IACS) in respect of 2001, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 92/50/EEC, [1] and in particular Articles 3(2), 7, 11(1), and 15(2) thereof, as well as the general principle of transparency.

order the Hellenic Republic to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The Commission received a complaint in relation to the direct award to PASEGES [2] of the programme contract, and its implementing agreements, in relation to the provision of multiple services in connection with the application of the Integrated Administration and Control System (IACS) in respect of 2001.

In light of the Court's case-law, the Commission considers that the Greek authorities ought to have applied the rules of procedural openness laid down by Directive 92/50 in Titles III, IV, V, and VI.

The Commission further considers that the Hellenic Republic, on the one hand, has not substantiated the existence of grounds for derogation under Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50 and, on the other, has wrongly categorised the services in question as coming under Annex 1B to the directive.

In the alternative, the Commission maintains that the Member States are not relieved of the obligation to maintain a certain degree of openness even in regard to services coming under Annex 1B to the directive.

Finally, the Commission considers that, apart from the continuing variance in regard to the interpretation of the relevant provisions of the directive at issue as between the Greek authorities and the Commission, application of the directive in practice has not been secured, contrary to the assertions of the Greek authorities.

Accordingly, the Commission considers that the Hellenic Republic infringed its obligations under Articles 3 (2), 7, 11(1) and 15(2) of Directive 92/50/EEC, as well as the general principle of transparency.

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 15 June 2006, gives the following

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby rules:

1. An agreement by which a first contracting authority entrusts a second contracting authority with the execution of a work constitutes a public works contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive

97/52/EC of 13 October 1997, regardless of whether or not it is anticipated that the first contracting authority is or will become the owner of all or part of that work.

2. In order to determine the value of a contract for the purpose of Article 6 of Directive 93/37, as amended by Directive 97/52, account must be taken of the total value of the works contract from the point of view of a potential tenderer, including not only the total amounts to be paid by the contracting authority but also all the revenue received from third parties.

3. A contracting authority is not exempt from using the procedures for the award of public works contracts laid down in Directive 93/37, as amended by Directive 97/52, on the ground that, in accordance with national law, the agreement may be concluded only with certain legal persons, which themselves have the capacity of contracting authority and which will be obliged, in turn, to apply those procedures to the award of any subsequent contracts.

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1) (the Directive').

2. The reference was made in the course of an action for annulment brought by Mr Auroux and eight other applicants (the applicants in the main proceedings') against the resolution of the Municipal Council of the Commune de Roanne (municipality of Roanne), of 28 October 2002, authorising its mayor to sign a contract with the Société d'équipement du département de la Loire (SEDL') for the construction of a leisure centre in Roanne.

Community law

3. According to the second recital in the preamble to the Directive, the simultaneous attainment of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts awarded in Member States on behalf of the State, or regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law entails not only the abolition of restrictions but also the coordination of national procedures for the award of public works contracts'.

4. It is clear from the sixth recital in the preamble to the Directive that works contracts of less than EUR 5 000 000 may be exempted from competition as provided for under the Directive, and should be exempted from coordination measures.

5. According to the 10th recital in the preamble to the Directive, to ensure development of effective competition in the field of public contracts, it is necessary that contract notices drawn up by the contracting authorities of Member States be advertised throughout the Community'. It goes on to state that the information contained in these notices must enable contractors established in the Community to determine whether the proposed contracts are of interest to them'.

6. Article 1(a) to (d) of the Directive provides:

For the purpose of this Directive:

(a) public works contracts are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a contractor and a contracting authority as defined in (b), which have as their object either the execution, or both the execution and design, of works related to one of the activities referred to in Annex II or a work defined in (c) below, or the execution, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority;

(b) contracting authorities shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

...

(c) a work means the outcome of building or civil engineering works taken as a whole that is sufficient of itself to fulfil an economic and technical function;

(d) public works concession is a contract of the same type as that indicated in (a) except for the fact that the consideration for the works to be carried out consists either solely in the right to exploit the construction or in this right together with payment'.

7. The activities referred to in Annex II' mentioned in Article 1(a) of the Directive are the building and civil engineering works in Class 50 of the general industrial classification of economic activities within the European Communities. The construction of buildings is expressly listed among those activities.

8. Article 6 of the Directive provides:

1. This Directive shall apply to:

(a) public works contracts whose estimated value net of value added tax (VAT) is not less than the equivalent in [euros] of 5 000 000 special drawing rights (SDRs);

(b) public works contracts referred to in Article 2(1) whose estimated value net of VAT is not less than [EUR] 5 000 000.

3. Where a work is subdivided into several lots, each one the subject of a contract, the value of each lot must be taken into account for the purpose of calculating the amounts referred to in paragraph 1. Where the aggregate value of the lots is not less than the amount referred to in paragraph 1, the provisions of that paragraph shall apply to all lots. Contracting authorities shall be permitted to depart from this provision for lots whose estimated value net of VAT is less than [EUR] 1 000 000, provided that the total estimated value of all the lots exempted does not, in consequence, exceed 20% of the total estimated value of all lots.

4. No work or contract may be split up with the intention of avoiding the application of this Directive.

5. When calculating the amounts referred to in paragraph 1 and in Article 7, account shall be taken not only of the amount of the public works contracts but also of the estimated value of the supplies needed to carry out the works [and] made available to the contractor by the contracting authorities.

6. Contracting authorities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between the various contractors.'

National law

9. At the material time, Article L.300-4 of the Code de l'urbanisme (Town Planning Code), as amended by Article 8 of Law No 2000-1208 of 13 December 2000 (JORF of 14 December 2000, p. 19777), provides:

The State, the local authorities or public bodies established by them may entrust the planning and implementation of development projects provided for in this Title to any suitably qualified public or private person.

Where the contract is concluded with a public body, a local semi-public company defined by Law No 83-597 of 7 July 1983, or a semi-public company more than half of whose capital is held by one or more of the following public persons: State, regions, départements , municipalities or groupings thereof, it may take the form of a public development agreement. In that case, the contracting partner may be entrusted with acquisitions by way of expropriation or pre-emption and carrying out any operation or measure relating to development and installation which contributes to the overall project forming the subject of the public development agreement.

The bodies referred to in the preceding paragraph may be entrusted with conducting preliminary studies necessary for the definition of the characteristics of the project under an agency contract requiring them to conclude study contracts for and on behalf of the authority or grouping of authorities.

The provisions of Chapter IV of Title II of Law No 93-122 of 29 January 1993 relating to the prevention of corruption and transparency in economic life and public procedures are not applicable to public development agreements drawn up in accordance with this article.

A public development agreement may lay down the conditions under which the contracting partner is involved with the studies concerning the operation and, in particular, the revision or amendment of a local development plan.'

10. Following the initiation of proceedings by the Commission of the European Communities against the French Republic for failure to fulfil obligations, Article L.300-4 of the Town Planning Code was amended by Law No 2005-809 of 20 July 2005 on development concessions (JORF of 21 July 2005, p. 11833) as follows:

The State and local authorities and public bodies established by them may grant concessions for carrying out the development projects provided for in this Title to any suitably qualified person.

The grant of development concessions shall be made subject by the awarding body to a notice procedure enabling a number of competing tenders to be submitted, in accordance with conditions laid down by decree in the Conseil d'Etat.

The concession holder shall oversee the works and installations forming part of the project which are provided for in the concession and carry out the relevant studies and any tasks necessary for their execution. It may be entrusted by the awarding body with acquiring the assets necessary for implementation of the project, including, where appropriate, by way of expropriation or pre-emption. It shall sell, lease or assign by concession the immovable property located within the area covered by the concession.'

11. Article 11 of Law No 2005-809 provides:

Subject to judicial decisions which have acquired the force of res judicata , the following are declared valid, in so far as their lawfulness is contested on the ground that the appointment of the developer was not preceded by a notice procedure enabling a number of competitive tenders to be submitted:

1. Development concessions, public development agreements and development agreements signed before the publication of this Law'.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

12. By resolution of 28 October 2002, the Municipal Council of the municipality of Roanne authorised its mayor to sign an agreement with SEDL for the construction of a leisure centre (the agreement').

13. The agreement, concluded on 25 November 2002, provides for the development of a leisure centre in successive phases. The first phase consists of the construction of a multiplex cinema and commercial premises intended to be transferred to third parties and works intended to be transferred to the contracting authority, that is to say a car park as well as access roads and public spaces. The later phases, which require the signature of an addendum to the agreement, principally concern the construction of other commercial or service premises and a hotel.

14. According to the preamble to the agreement, the municipality of Roanne seeks, by means of that project, to regenerate a run-down urban area and promote the development of leisure and tourism.

15. Pursuant to Article 2 of the agreement, SEDL is entrusted, inter alia, with acquiring land, organising an architecture and/or engineering competition, having studies carried out, undertaking construction works, drawing up and keeping up to date certain accounting and management documents, procuring funding, putting in place effective measures for the sale of the works, and the overall management and coordination of the project and keeping the municipality of Roanne informed.

16. It is clear from the second paragraph of Article 10 of the agreement that the award of any contracts by SEDL to third parties is subject to the principles of advertising and calling for competition laid down by the Code des marchés publics (Public Procurement Code), pursuant to Article 48.1 of Law No 93-122 of 29 January 1993 (JORF of 30 January 1993).

17. According to the forecast balance sheet annexed to the agreement, the total amount of receipts is estimated at EUR 10 227 103 for the first phase of the project, and at EUR 14 268 341 for the execution of the project in its entirety. Of that total, the sum of EUR 2 925 000 will come from the municipality as consideration for the transfer of the car park. Furthermore, it is estimated that SEDL will receive EUR 8 099 000 as consideration for the transfer of works intended for third parties. Finally, it is stipulated that the municipality of Roanne is to contribute to the financing of all the works to be executed in an amount of EUR 2 443 103 for the first phase and of EUR 3 034 341 for the works as a whole.

18. It is clear from Articles 22 to 25 of the agreement that, on its expiry, SEDL is to draw up a closing balance sheet which is to be approved by the municipality of Roanne. Any excess on that balance sheet is to be paid to the municipality. Furthermore, the municipality automatically becomes owner of all the land and works to be transferred to third parties not yet sold. The municipality of Roanne is also to guarantee the execution of contracts still ongoing, except employment contracts, and will take over the debts contracted by SEDL.

19. By application lodged at the Tribunal administratif de Lyon (Administrative Court, Lyon) on 11 December 2002, the applicants in the main proceedings brought an action for annulment against the resolution of the Municipal Council of 28 October 2002. In that action, they contest the validity of that resolution with respect to both national and Community law. As regards the latter, they argue that the conclusion of the agreement should have been preceded by advertising and a call for competition in accordance with the obligations arising from the Directive.

20. In those circumstances, the Tribunal administratif de Lyon decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Does an agreement under which one contracting authority engages a second contracting authority to carry out a development project for a purpose of general interest, pursuant to which agreement that second contracting authority is to deliver works to the first which are intended to meet its needs, and at the end of which such of the other land and works as have not been disposed of to third parties vest automatically in the first contracting authority, constitute a public works contract within the meaning of Article 1 of [the Directive]?

(2) If the answer to Question 1 is in the affirmative, is it necessary, in assessing the threshold of 5 000 000 [SDRs] imposed by Article 6 of the same directive, to take into account only the price paid in return for the delivery of the works to the contracting authority, or the sum of that price and the contributions paid, even if the latter are only partly allocated to the execution of those works, or the total value of the works, with assets not disposed of at the end of the agreement vesting automatically in the first contracting authority and the latter then pursuing the execution of ongoing contracts and assuming the debts incurred by the second contracting authority?

(3) If the answer to both Questions 1 and 2 is in the affirmative, is the first contracting authority, when entering into such an agreement, not required to follow the procurement procedures laid down in that directive, on the grounds that that agreement can be concluded only with certain legal persons and that those procedures will be applied by the second contracting authority when awarding its public works contracts?'

The admissibility of the questions

21. The municipality of Roanne and the French Government submit, as a preliminary point, that the reference for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible.

22. The municipality of Roanne submits that, by enacting Law No 2005-809, the French legislature retroactively validated public development agreements which were concluded without having been preceded by an advertising procedure and a call for competition. As the national court is obliged to apply French law, and to find that the agreement has been validated by that law, the interpretation of Community law requested is no longer necessary in order to resolve the dispute in the main proceedings.

23. The French Government asserts that the reference for a preliminary ruling wrongly treats the agreement at issue as a development agreement within the meaning of Article L.300-4 of the Town Planning Code, in the version in force at the material time. It submits that it concerns, in reality, merely the construction of buildings. It follows that the question whether an agreement for the implementation of a development project constitutes a public works contract within the meaning of the Directive is inadmissible, since it bears no relation to the purpose and the actual facts of the dispute.

24. It is common ground that both the municipality of Roanne and the French Government plead that the reference for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible based on considerations relating to the interpretation of French law and the classification of the facts forming the basis of the dispute in the main proceedings in the light of that law.

25. The Court has consistently held that the procedure laid down in Article 234 EC is based on a clear separation of functions between national courts and tribunals and the Court of Justice, and the latter is empowered to rule only on the interpretation or the validity of the Community acts referred to in that article. In that context, it is not for the Court to rule on the interpretation of national laws or regulations or to decide whether the referring court's interpretation of them is correct (see, to that effect, Case 27/74 Demag [1974] ECR 1037, paragraph 8; Case C-347/89 Eurim-Pharm [1991] ECR I-1747, paragraph 16; and Case C-246/04 Turn- und Sportunion Waldburg [2006] ECR I-589, paragraph 20).

26. Similarly, it is solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court (see Case C-448/01 EVN and Wienstrom [2003] ECR I-14527, paragraph 74, and Case C-145/03 Keller [2005] ECR I-2529, paragraph 33). Consequently, where the questions submitted concern the interpretation of Community law, the Court is in principle bound to give a ruling.

27. It follows that the pleas of inadmissibility raised by the municipality of Roanne and the French Government must be rejected and the reference for a preliminary ruling be declared admissible.

The first question

28. By its first question, the national court asks essentially whether the agreement constitutes a public works contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of the Directive.

29. The definition in Article 1(a) of the Directive provides that public works contracts are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a contractor and a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b), which have as their object either the execution, or both the execution and design, of works or work defined by the Directive, or the execution, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority.

30. In their written submissions, the municipality of Roanne and the French and Polish Governments argue that the agreement does not correspond to that definition and, therefore, does not constitute a public works contract within the meaning of the Directive.

31. The municipality of Roanne submits that, in the light of its purpose, the agreement does not constitute a public works contract, since, as a public development agreement, its purpose goes beyond that of the execution of works. In accordance with French law, public development agreements concern the overall implementation of all aspects of a town planning project or of certain town planning policies, in particular, the planning of the project, management of the legal and administrative aspects, the acquisition of land by way of expropriation and putting in place procedures for the award of contracts.

32. Similarly, the Polish Government observes that, according to the agreement, SEDL undertakes to implement an investment project which consists of various tasks. It submits, in that regard, that SEDL is not the contractor which will execute the works provided for in the contract, but merely undertakes to prepare and manage a public works contract. Taking the view that the most important aspect of the contract consists in commissioning works and supervising their execution, the Polish Government argues that the agreement should be classified as a public service contract' within the meaning of Article 1 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

33. The French Government submits that the part of the leisure centre which concerns the execution of works which are intended to be sold to third parties does not constitute a public works contract within the meaning of the Directive. It takes the view that precisely because that part is intended for third parties it cannot be regarded as corresponding to the municipality's requirements. It adds that only the construction of the car park on behalf of the municipality of Roanne could, in principle, constitute a public works contract. However, the car park does not fall within the scope of the Directive either, as it will be transferred to the municipality only after it has been constructed in accordance with a special procedure laid down by French law called vente en l'état future d'achèvement', so that it is essentially a simple purchase of real property, the subject-matter of which is not so much the works as the sale of works to be constructed.

34. The Lithuanian and Austrian Governments and the Commission take the view that the agreement is a public works contract within the meaning of Article 1 of the Directive. In particular, the Commission submits that, even if the agreement contains a number of tasks which are supplies of services, its main purpose is the execution of a work which corresponds to the requirements specified by the contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(a) and (c) of the Directive.

35. The arguments put forward by the municipality of Roanne and the French and Polish Governments cannot be accepted.

36. It is true that, in addition to the execution of works, the agreement entrusts SEDL with further tasks which have, as several parties have observed, the character of a supply of services. However, contrary to the municipality of Roanne's submissions, it does not follow from the mere fact the agreement contains elements which go beyond the execution of works that it falls outside the scope of the Directive.

37. It is clear from the case-law of the Court that, where a contract contains elements relating both to a public works contract and another type of public contract, it is the main purpose of the contract which determines which Community directive on public contracts is to be applied in principle (see Case C-331/92 Gestin Hotelera Internacional [1994] ECR I-1329, paragraph 29).

38. As regards the application of that case-law to these proceedings, it should be stated, contrary to the Polish Government's arguments in its written observations, that under the agreement SEDL's commitment is not limited to the administration and organisation of works, but also extends to the execution of the works set out therein. Furthermore, according to settled case-law, in order to be classed as a contractor under a public works contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of the Directive, it is not necessary that a person who enters into a contract with a contracting authority is capable of direct performance using his own resources (see, to that effect, Case C-389/92 Ballast Nedam Groep [1994] ECR I-1289, paragraph 13, and Case C-176/98 Holst Italia [1999] ECR I-8607, paragraph 26). It follows that in order to ascertain whether the main purpose of the agreement is the execution of works it is irrelevant that SEDL does not execute the works itself and that it has them carried out by subcontractors.

39. The argument of the French Government that, by reason of the considerations set out in paragraph 33, the purpose of the agreement cannot be regarded as the execution of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(a) of the Directive must be dismissed.

40. As regards the legal classification by the French Government of the car park, it must be observed that the definition of a public works contract is a matter of Community law. Since Article 1(a) of the Directive makes no express reference to the law of the Member States for the purpose of determining its meaning and scope, the legal classification of the contract in French law is irrelevant for the purpose of determining whether the contract falls within the scope of the Directive (see, by analogy, Case C-264/03 Commission v France [2005] ECR I-8831, paragraph 36).

41. It is clear from Article 1(c) of the Directive that the existence of a work must be determined in relation to the economic or technical function of the result of the works undertaken (see Joined Cases C-187/04 and C-188/04 Commission v Italy , not published in the ECR, paragraph 26). As is apparent from a number of clauses in the agreement, the construction of the leisure centre is intended to accommodate commercial and service activities, so that the agreement must be regarded as fulfilling an economic function.

42. Furthermore, the construction of the leisure centre must be regarded as corresponding to the requirements specified by the municipality of Roanne in the agreement. It must be observed, in that regard, that the work referred to by the agreement is the leisure centre as a whole, including the construction of a multiplex cinema, service premises for leisure activities, a car park and, possibly, a hotel. It is clear from a number of clauses in the agreement that, by the construction of the leisure centre as a whole, the municipality of Roanne seeks to reposition and regenerate the area around the railway station.

43. As regards the other elements covered by the definition of public works contract' laid down in Article 1(a) of the Directive, it must be observed, first, that it is not disputed that the municipality of Roanne, being a local authority, has the capacity of contracting authority' within the meaning of Article 1(b) of the Directive and that a written contract exists.

44. Second, it is common ground that SEDL, as an economic operator active on the market which undertakes to execute works provided for in the agreement, is to be regarded as a contractor within the meaning of the Directive. As was stated in paragraph 38 of this judgment, it is irrelevant in that respect that SEDL uses subcontractors for the design and execution of the works (see, to that effect, Case C-399/98 Ordine degli Architetti and Others [2001] ECR I-5409, paragraph 90).

45. Finally, it is clear that the agreement was concluded for pecuniary interest. The pecuniary interest in a contract refers to the consideration paid to the contractor on account of the execution of works intended for the contracting authority (see, to that effect, Ordine degli Architetti and Others , paragraph 77). Under the terms of the agreement, SEDL is to receive a sum from the municipality of Roanne as consideration for the transfer of the car park. The municipality also undertakes to contribute to the costs of all the works to be executed. Finally, under the agreement, SEDL is entitled to obtain income from third parties as consideration for the sale of the works executed.

46. It is apparent from the examination of the agreement that its main purpose, as the Commission submitted, is the performance of works which, taken as a whole, lead to the execution of a work within the meaning of Article 1(c) of the Directive, that is to say a leisure centre. The service elements provided for in the agreement, such as the acquisition of property, obtaining finances, organising an architecture and/or engineering competition and marketing the buildings, are part of the completion of that work.

47. Having regard to the foregoing, the answer to the first question must be that an agreement by which a first contracting authority entrusts a second contracting authority with the execution of a work constitutes a public works contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of the Directive, regardless of whether or not it is anticipated that the first contracting authority is or will become the owner of all or part of that work.

48. By its second question, the national court asks the Court about the methods for determining the value of the contract at issue, in order to establish whether the threshold laid down in Article 6 of the Directive has been reached.

49. The national court puts forward three possible bases for calculation of that threshold. First, the value of the contract is determined only on the basis of the amounts paid by the contracting authority as consideration for the works which are transferred to it. Second, the value of the contract is constituted by all the sums paid by the contracting authority, that is to say the consideration for the works transferred to it as well as the financial contribution paid in respect of all the works to be executed. Third, the determination of the value of the contract takes account of the total value of the works, including the amounts paid by the contracting authority and those received from third parties as consideration for the works executed on their behalf.

50. It must be observed first of all that, according to the wording of Article 6 of the Directive, its provisions apply to public works contracts whose value reaches the threshold laid down therein. Article 6 does not lay down any rule limiting the amounts to be taken into account in order to determine the value of the contract to the amounts received from the contracting authority.

51. Furthermore, to infer such a rule from Article 6 would be contrary to the spirit and the purpose of the Directive.

52. As is apparent from the 2nd and 10th recitals, the Directive aims to abolish restrictions on freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts in order to open up such contracts to genuine competition (Ordine degli Architetti and Others , paragraph 52). As the 10th recital states, the development of such competition entails the publication at Community level of contract notices containing sufficient information to enable contractors established in the Community to determine whether the proposed contracts are of interest to them. In that regard, the threshold laid down in Article 6 of the Directive serves to ensure that public contracts with a sufficiently high value to justify intra-Community participation are notified to potential tenderers.

53. Since the aim of the procedures for the award of public works contracts laid down in the Directive is precisely to guarantee to potential tenderers established in the European Community access to public contracts of interest to them, it follows that whether the value of a contract reaches the threshold laid down in Article 6 of the Directive should be calculated from the tenderers' perspective.

54. It is clear, in that regard, that, if the value of a contract is constituted by revenue from both the contracting authority and from third parties, the interest of a potential tenderer in such a contract resides in its overall value.

55. Conversely, the argument that only the amounts paid by the contracting authority should be taken into account in the calculation of the value of a contract within the meaning of Article 6 of the Directive would undermine its purpose. The result would be that the contracting authority could award a contract with an overall value exceeding the threshold laid down in Article 6 which might interest other contractors active on the market, without applying the procedures for the award of public works contracts provided for in the Directive.

56. Finally, it must be recalled that, under Article 3 of the Directive, public works concession contracts are subject to the advertising rules laid down by the Directive where the threshold referred to in that provision is reached. Since an essential characteristic of concessions is that the consideration for the works comes either wholly or partly from third parties, it would be contrary to the purpose and scheme which underpin the Directive that, in the context of public works contracts, the amounts coming from third parties were excluded from the calculation of the value of the contract for the purposes of Article 6 of the Directive.

57. Having regard to the foregoing, the answer to the second question must be that, in order to determine the value of a contract for the purpose of Article 6 of the Directive, account must be taken of the total value of the works contract from the point of view of a potential tenderer, including not only the total amounts to be paid by the contracting authority but also all the revenue received from third parties.

The third question

58. By its third question, the national court asks, essentially, whether, in order to conclude an agreement such as that in the main proceedings, a contracting authority is exempt from using the procedures for the award of public works contracts laid down by the Directive on the ground that, in accordance with national law, that agreement may be concluded only with certain legal persons which themselves have the capacity of contracting authority and which will be obliged in turn to apply those procedures in order to award any subsequent contracts.

59. It must be observed, as a preliminary point, that the only permitted exceptions to the application of the Directive are those which are expressly mentioned in it (see, by analogy, Case C-107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I-8121, paragraph 43, and Case C340/04 Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei [2006] ECR I-4137, paragraph 45).

60. The Directive does not contain any provision comparable to that in Article 6 of Directive 92/50, which excludes from its scope public contracts awarded, under certain conditions, to contracting authorities (see, by analogy, Teckal , paragraph 44, and Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei , paragraph 46).

61. It must be observed that Article 11 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114) provides an exception as regards contracting authorities which purchase, inter alia, works from a central purchasing body, as defined in Article 1(10) of that directive. However, that provision is not applicable ratione temporis to the facts in the main proceedings.

62. It follows that a contracting authority is not exempt from using the procedures for the award of public works contracts provided for by the Directive, on the ground that it plans to conclude the contract concerned with a second contracting authority (see, by analogy, Teckal , paragraph 51; Case C-94/99 ARGE [2000] ECR I-11037, paragraph 40; and Case C-26/03 Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau [2005] ECR I-1, paragraph 47). Furthermore, that finding does not affect the obligation on the latter contracting authority to apply in its turn the tendering procedures laid down in the Directive (see, by analogy, Teckal , paragraph 45).

63. It is true that, according to the Court's case-law, a call for competition is not compulsory for contracts concluded between a local authority and a person legally distinct from it, where the local authority exercises over the person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, at the same time, that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling local authority or authorities (see, Teckal , paragraph 50, and Case C-84/03 Commission v Spain [2005] ECR I-139, paragraphs 38 and 39).

64. However, the fact that SEDL is a semi-public company, whose capital includes private funds, prevents the municipality of Roanne from being regarded as exercising a control over it similar to that which it exercises over its own departments. The Court has held that any private capital investment in an undertaking follows considerations proper to private interests and pursues objectives of a different kind from those pursued by a public authority (see Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau , paragraphs 49 and 50). The reasoning adopted by the Court in Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau with respect to public service contracts also applies with respect to public works contracts.

65. According to the submissions of the municipality of Roanne and those of the French and Polish Governments, the effectiveness of the Directive is preserved where, as in the present case, a second contracting authority is obliged to use the procedures for the award of public works contracts laid down by the Directive for any subsequent contract. For the purposes of ensuring effective competition, it is irrelevant whether such a procedure is organised by the first or the second contracting authority.

66. It must be recalled, first of all, that the Directive does not contain any provisions which enable its application to be avoided where a public works contract is concluded between two contracting authorities, even if the second contracting authority is obliged to subcontract the total value of the contract to successive contractors and, for that purpose, to use the procedures for the award of public contracts laid down by the Directive.

67. Furthermore, in this case, it is not stipulated in the agreement that SEDL is obliged to subcontract the whole of the initial contract to successive contractors. Furthermore, as the Advocate General rightly observed in point 72 of her Opinion, where a second contracting authority has recourse to subcontractors, the subject-matter of any successive contract may often represent only part of the overall contract. It may follow that the value of any subsequent contracts awarded by a second contracting authority will be lower than that set out in Article 6(1)(a) of the Directive. Therefore, by setting up a series of successive contracts, the application of the Directive could be avoided.

68. Having regard to the foregoing, the answer to the third question must be that a contracting authority is not exempt from using the procedures for the award of public works contracts laid down in the Directive on the ground that, in accordance with national law, the agreement may be concluded only with certain legal persons, which themselves have the capacity of contracting authority and which will be obliged, in turn, to apply those procedures to the award of any subsequent contracts.

Costs

69. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

Case C-220/05

Jean Auroux and Others
v
Commune de Roanne

(Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Tribunal administratif de Lyon (France))

(Public procurement – Directive 93/37/EEC – Definition of a public works contract – Design and execution of a leisure centre – Public development agreement between a town and a semi-public undertaking without a prior procurement procedure – Calculation of the value of the contract)

I – Introduction

1. In this case, a French court, the Tribunal administratif de Lyon, (2) has referred to the Court a number of questions concerning the interpretation of European procurement law. These questions have arisen in a dispute relating to a leisure centre in the French town of Roanne, the design and execution of which was entrusted to a semi-public urban development company without the prior issue of a call for tenders. The project is characterised in particular by the fact that only certain parts of the proposed leisure centre, once constructed, were intended for the town itself, while other parts were to be disposed of by the urban development company directly to third parties, although the town was to contribute towards their financing, take over those parts not disposed of at the end of the project, and bear the full risk of any losses incurred.

2. Against that background, the referring court first of all wishes to ascertain which provisions of European procurement law may apply at all to such a project, and, in particular, how the term 'public works contract' is to be interpreted. The question has also been raised whether, in the determination of the value of the contract, account is to be taken of the overall volume of the project or whether, in that calculation, regard is to be had only to the price which the contracting authority will pay for those parts of the work which are intended for it, plus any overall financial contribution which it has committed. Finally, it must be clarified whether a procurement procedure can be dispensed with where, under national law, the agreement in question can only be concluded with certain legal persons in the first place, and those persons would themselves have to carry out procurement procedures if they were to award any follow-up contracts.

II – Legal framework

A – Community law

3. Article 1 of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (3) ('Directive 93/37') reads, in extract, as follows:

'For the purposes of this Directive:

(a) "public works contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a contractor and a contracting authority as defined in (b), which have as their object either the execution, or both the execution and design, of works related to to one of the activities referred to in Annex II or a work defined in (c) below, or the execution, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority;

(b) "contracting authorities" shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

A "body governed by public law" means any body:

– established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

– having legal personality, and – financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law;

(c) a "work" means the outcome of building or civil engineering works, taken as a whole, that is sufficient of itself to fulfil an economic and technical function;

...'

4. Article 6 of Directive 93/37, as amended by Directive 97/52, (4) provides as follows:

'1. This Directive shall apply to:

(a) public works contracts whose estimated value net of value-added tax (VAT) is not less than the equivalent in ecus of 5 000 000 special drawing rights (SDRs);

3. Where a work is subdivided into several lots, each one the subject of a contract, the value of each lot must be taken into account for the purpose of calculating the amounts referred to in paragraph 1. Where the aggregate value of the lots is not less than the amount referred to in paragraph 1, the provisions of that paragraph shall apply to all lots. Contracting authorities shall be permitted to depart from this provision for lots whose estimated value net of VAT is less than ECU 1 000 000, provided that the total estimated value of the lots exempted does not, in consequence, exceed 20% of the total estimated value of all lots.

4. No work or contract may be split up with the intention of avoiding the application of this Directive.

5. When calculating the amounts referred to in paragraph 1 and in Article 7, account shall be taken not only of the amount of the public works contracts but also of the estimated value of the supplies needed to carry out the works [and] made available to the contractor by the contracting authorities.

6. Contracting authorities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between the various contractors.'

5. At the time material to this case, the threshold of 5 000 000 SDRs corresponded to a value of EUR 6 242 028. (5)

B – National law

6. In the version of it which was applicable at the time of the facts of the main proceedings, (6) Article L. 300-4 of the French Code de l'urbanisme (7) ('the old Article L. 300-4 of the Code de l'urbanisme') provided:

‘The State, local authorities or public bodies established by them may entrust the planning and implementation of development projects provided for in this Title to any suitably qualified public or private person.

Where the contract is concluded with a public body, a local semi-public company defined by Law No 83-597 of 7 July 1983 or a semi-public company more than half of whose capital is held by one or more of the following public persons: State, regions, départements, municipalities or groupings thereof, it may take the form of a public development agreement. In that case, the contracting partner may be entrusted with making acquisitions by way of expropriation or preemption and carrying out any operation or measure relating to development and installation which contributes towards the overall project forming the subject of the public development agreement.

The bodies referred to in the preceding paragraph may be entrusted with conducting preliminary studies necessary for the definition of the characteristics of the project under an agency contract requiring them to conclude study contracts for and on behalf of the authority or grouping of authorities.

7. After the Commission had brought proceedings against France for failure to fulfil obligations, Article L. 300-4 of the Code de l’urbanisme was amended as follows by Law No 2005-809: (8)

‘The State and local authorities and the public bodies established by them may grant concessions for carrying out the development projects provided for in this Title to any suitably qualified person.

The grant of development concessions shall be subject by the awarding body to a notice procedure enabling a number of competing tenders to be submitted, in accordance with conditions laid down by decree in the Conseil d’Etat.

The concession holder shall oversee the works and installations forming part of the project which are provided for in the concession and carry out the relevant studies and any tasks necessary for their completion. It may be entrusted by the awarding body with acquiring the assets necessary for implementation of the project, including, where appropriate, by way of expropriation or preemption. It shall sell, lease or assign by concession the immovable property located within the area covered by the concession.’

8. Furthermore, Article 11 of Law No 2005-809 provides:

‘Subject to judicial decisions which have acquired the force of res judicata, the following are declared valid, in so far as their lawfulness is contested on the ground that the appointment of the developer was not preceded by a notice procedure enabling a number of competitive tenders to be submitted:

1. Development concessions, public development agreements and development agreements signed before the publication of this Law;

III – Facts and main proceedings

9. In 2002, the French town of Roanne drew up plans to build a leisure centre as an urban development measure. The first phase of the project was to include, inter alia, a multiplex cinema. Provision was also made for the construction of commercial premises, a public car park with some 320 spaces, access roads and public spaces. The construction of further commercial premises and a hotel was envisaged as part of a later phase.

10. Execution of the project was entrusted to Société d’équipement du département de la Loire (SEDL), a semi-public urban development company. To that end, on 25 November 2002, the town of Roanne concluded with SEDL a public development agreement, (9) which the Municipal Council of Roanne had previously authorised the mayor to sign by resolution of 28 October 2002.

11. Under that agreement, SEDL was entrusted, inter alia, with purchasing land, procuring funding, submitting certain accounts, having studies conducted, organising an engineering competition and having the construction works carried out, as well as with coordinating the work and reporting to the town.

12. The agreement concluded also provided that the public car park to be built for the leisure centre, the access roads and the public spaces were to become the property of the town of Roanne. The other works planned, however, were to be disposed of to third parties, the potential income for SEDL, as contractor, from the sale of those assets being estimated at EUR 8 099 000 in total.

13. Under the agreement, the town was to pay EUR 2 925 000 to SEDL as consideration for the public car park. In addition, the town was to make a capital contribution to finance all the facilities to be constructed which was estimated at EUR 2 443 103 for the first phase of the works and at EUR 3 034 341 for the works as a whole. (10) Moreover, the land and buildings which SEDL had not disposed of to third parties at the end of the project were at that point automatically to become the property of the town of Roanne, the town from then on ensuring the performance of contracts still ongoing and taking over the obligations previously entered into by SEDL. The town of Roanne also expressly assumed the full risk of any losses incurred in connection with the project. (11)

14. Before the public development agreement was concluded with SEDL, no public notice or invitation to tender was issued in relation to the project.

15. The claimants in the main proceedings are members of the opposition in the Municipal Council of Roanne. Before the Tribunal administratif de Lyon, they claim that the Municipal Council Resolution of 28 October 2002 should be annulled. They contend inter alia that there has been an infringement of the provisions of European procurement law. They submit that a procurement procedure under Directive 93/37 should have been carried out.

IV – Reference for a preliminary ruling and procedure before the Court

16. By judgment of 7 April 2005, the Tribunal administratif de Lyon stayed the proceedings before it and referred the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Does an agreement under which one contracting authority engages a second contracting authority to carry out a development project for a purpose of general interest, pursuant to which contract that second contracting authority is to deliver works to the first which are intended to meet its needs, and at the end of which such of the other land and works as have not been disposed of to third parties vest automatically in the first contracting authority, constitute a public works contract within the meaning of Article 1 of Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993, as amended?

(2) If the answer to question 1 is in the affirmative, is it necessary, in assessing the threshold of

(Language of the case: French)

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by judgment of the Tribunal Administratif de Lyon of 7 April 2005, received at the Court Registry on 19 May 2005, for a preliminary ruling in the proceedings between Jean Auroux and Others and Commune de Roanne - Intervener: Société d'équipement du département de la Loire, on the following questions:

Does a contract under which one contracting authority engages a second contracting authority to carry out a development project for a purpose of general interest, pursuant to which contract that second contracting authority is to deliver works to the first which are intended to meet its needs, and at the end of which such of the other land and works as have not been disposed of to third parties vest automatically in the first contracting authority, constitute a public works contract within the meaning of Article 1 of Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993, [1] as amended?

If the answer to question 1 is in the affirmative, is it necessary, in assessing the threshold of 500 000 000 special drawing rights imposed by Article 6 of the same directive, to take into account only the price paid in return for the delivery of the works to the contracting authority, or the sum of that price and the contributions paid, even if the latter are only partly allocated to the execution of those works, or the total value of the works, with assets not disposed of at the end of the contract vesting automatically in the first contracting authority and the latter then pursuing the execution of ongoing contracts and assuming the debts incurred by the second contracting authority?

3. If the answer to both questions 1 and 2 is in the affirmative, can the first contracting authority, when entering into such a contract, dispense with the procedures for awarding public works contracts laid down in that directive, on the grounds that that contract can be awarded only to certain legal persons and that those same procedures will be applied by the second contracting authority when awarding its public works contracts?

Ordonnance

1 Par lettre déposée au greffe de la Cour le 7 juillet 2005, la Commission européenne a informé la Cour, conformément à l'article 78 du règlement de procédure, qu'elle se désistait de son recours et a demandé, en application de l'article 69, paragraphe 5, du règlement de procédure, que la République italienne soit condamnée aux dépens.

Action brought on 15 March 2005 by the Commission of the European Communities against the Italian Republic

(Language of the case: Italian)

An action against the Italian Republic was brought before the Court of Justice of the European Communities on 15 March 2005 by the Commission of the European Communities, represented by X. Lewis and A. Aresu, members of the Commission's legal service.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

declare that by adopting Article 44 of Law No 724 of 23 December 1994, amending Article 6(2) of Law No 573 of 24 December 1993 so as to permit the renewal of public service contracts to previous contract-holders, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 11, 15 and 17 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC[1] of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, and Articles 6 and 9 of Council Directive 93/36/EEC[2] of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, and Articles 43 EC and 49 EC;

order the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The Commission has challenged Article 6(2) of Law No 537 of 1993 as amended by Article 44 of Law No 724 of 1994. In particular that provision prohibits the tacit renewal of public contracts for the supply of goods and services but also provides that "within three months of the expiry of the contracts the administration shall ascertain whether it is convenient and in the public interest for those contracts to be renewed and, if so, shall notify the contracting party of its willingness to renew the contract."

The Commission submits that those provisions allow public bodies to award, directly and without any tendering procedure, new service and supply contracts which are thus awarded under procedures which do not comply with Community law. There is an infringement of the principles laid down by Directive 92/50/EEC and 93/36/EEC respectively on public service and supply contracts. Furthermore, those provisions infringe the principles of equality and transparency intended to ensure the freedoms of establishment and the supply of services under Articles 43 EC and 49 EC.

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby rules:

1. The principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency preclude a contracting authority, which has issued an invitation to tender for the supply of medical devices and specified that those devices must comply with the European Pharmacopoeia and bear the CE marking, from rejecting, directly and without following the safeguard procedure provided for in Articles 8 and 18 of Council Directive 93/42/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning medical devices, as amended by Regulation (EC) No 1882/2003 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 September 2003, on grounds of protection of public health, the materials proposed, if they comply with the stated technical requirement. If the contracting authority considers that those materials may jeopardise public health, it is required to inform the competent national authority with a view to setting that safeguard procedure in motion.

2. A contracting authority, which has referred a matter to the competent national authority with a view to setting in motion the safeguard procedure provided for by Articles 8 and 18 of Directive 93/42, as amended by Regulation No 1882/2003, concerning medical devices bearing the CE marking, is required to suspend the tendering procedure until the end of that safeguard procedure, the outcome of that procedure being binding on the contracting authority. If the implementation of such a safeguard procedure gives rise to delays liable to jeopardise the operation of a public hospital and thereby public health, the contracting authority is entitled to take all interim measures required to enable it to procure the materials necessary for the smooth running of that hospital, subject to compliance with the principle of proportionality.

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1) (Directive 93/36'), and Council Directive 93/42/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning medical devices (OJ 1993 L 169, p. 1), as amended by Regulation (EC) No 1882/2003 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 September 2003 (OJ 2003 L 284, p. 1) (Directive 93/42').

2. The reference was made by the Simvoulio tis Epikratias (Greek Council of State) in the context of proceedings between the company Medipac-Kazantzidis AE (Medipac') and VenizelioPananio (PE.S.Y. KRITIS) (VenizelioPananio'), which is the general hospital of Heraklion, concerning an invitation to tender issued by that hospital and to which that company responded.

Community legislation

3. Article 5(1) of Directive 93/36 provides:

(a) Titles II, III and IV and Articles 6 and 7 shall apply to public supply contracts awarded by:

(i) the contracting authorities referred to in Article 1 (b),... where the estimated value net of value-added tax (VAT) is not less than the equivalent in [euros] of 200 000 special drawing rights (SDRs);

(b) This Directive shall apply to public supply contracts for which the estimated value equals or exceeds the threshold concerned at the time of publication of the notice in accordance with Article 9(2);

...

(d) The thresholds laid down in subparagraph (a) and the values of the thresholds expressed in [euros] and in national currencies shall be published in the Official Journal of the European Communities at the beginning of the month of November which follows the revision laid down in the first paragraph of subparagraph (c).'

4. The values of the thresholds provided for by the directives governing public contracts applicable as from 1 January 2002 were published in the Official Journal of the European Communities of 27 November 2001 (OJ 2001 C 332, p. 21). A table in point 1 of that notice shows that 200 000 SDR is equivalent to EUR 249 681.

5. The 3 rd , 5 th , 8 th , 13 th , 17 th and 21 st recitals in the preamble to Directive 93/42 state:

Whereas the national provisions for the safety and health protection of patients, users and, where appropriate, other persons, with regard to the use of medical devices should be harmonised in order to guarantee the free movement of such devices within the internal market;

Whereas medical devices should provide patients, users and third parties with a high level of protection and attain the performance levels attributed to them by the manufacturer; whereas, therefore, the maintenance or improvement of the level of protection attained in the Member States is one of the essential objectives of this Directive;

...

Whereas, in accordance with the principles set out in the Council resolution of 7 May 1985 concerning a new approach to technical harmonisation and standardisation..., rules regarding the design and manufacture of medical devices must be confined to the provisions required to meet the essential requirements; whereas, because they are essential, such requirements should replace the corresponding national provisions; whereas the essential requirements should be applied with discretion to take account of the technological level existing at the time of design and of technical and economic considerations compatible with a high level of protection of health and safety;

...

Whereas, for the purpose of this Directive, a harmonised standard is a technical specification (European standard or harmonisation document) adopted, on a mandate from the Commission, by either [the European Committee for standardisation (CEN) or by the European Committee for Electrotechnical Standardisation (Cenelec)] or both of these bodies in accordance with Council Directive 83/189/EEC of 28 March 1983 laying down a procedure for the provision of information in the field of technical standards and regulations..., and pursuant to the ... [general guidelines on cooperation between the Commission and these two bodies signed on 13 November 1984];... whereas, for specific fields, what already exists in the form of European Pharmacopoeia monographs should be incorporated within the framework of this Directive; whereas, therefore, several European Pharmacopoeia monographs may be considered equal to the abovementioned harmonised standards;

...

Whereas medical devices should, as a general rule, bear the CE mark to indicate their conformity with the provisions of this Directive to enable them to move freely within the Community and to be put into service in accordance with their intended purpose;

...

Whereas the protection of health and the associated controls may be made more effective by means of medical device vigilance systems which are integrated at Community level'.

6. Article 1(1) of Directive 93/42 provides that it is to apply to medical devices and their accessories. For the purposes thereof, accessories are to be treated as medical devices in their own right.

7. Under Article 2 of Directive 93/42, Member States are to take all necessary steps to ensure that medical devices may be placed on the market and/or put into service only if they comply with the requirements laid down in that directive when duly supplied and properly installed, maintained and used in accordance with their intended purpose.

8. Under Article 3 of that directive, medical devices must meet the essential requirements set out in Annex I thereto which apply to them, taking account of their intended purpose.

9. Article 4(1) of Directive 93/42 prohibits Member States from creating any obstacle to the placing on the market or the putting into service within their territory of medical devices bearing the CE marking provided for in Article 17 of that same directive which indicates that they have been the subject of an assessment of their conformity in accordance with the provisions of Article 11 thereof.

10. Under Article 5(1) of Directive 93/42, Member States are to presume compliance with the essential requirements referred to in Article 3 in respect of medical devices which are in conformity with the relevant national standards adopted pursuant to the harmonised standards, the references of which have been published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

11. Article 5(2) provides that, for the purposes of Directive 93/42, reference to harmonised standards also includes the monographs of the European Pharmacopoeia notably on surgical sutures, the references of which have been published in the Official Journal of the European Communities .

12. Article 5(3) of Directive 93/42 refers to Article 6(2) thereof with respect to the procedure to be followed by the Member States where they consider that the harmonised standards do not entirely meet the essential requirements referred to in Article 3 of that directive.

13. Article 8 of that directive, entitled Safeguard clause', reads as follows:

1. Where a Member State ascertains that the devices referred to in Article 4(1) and (2) second indent, when correctly installed, maintained and used for their intended purpose, may jeopardise the health and/or safety of patients, users or, where applicable, other persons, it shall take all appropriate interim measures to withdraw such devices from the market or prohibit or restrict their being placed on the market or put into service. The Member State shall immediately inform the Commission of any such measures, indicating the reasons for its decision and, in particular, whether non-compliance with this Directive is due to:

(a) failure to meet the essential requirements referred to in Article 3;

(b) incorrect application of the standards referred to in Article 5, in so far as it is claimed that the standards have been applied;

(c) shortcomings in the standards themselves.

2. The Commission shall enter into consultation with the parties concerned as soon as possible. Where, after such consultation, the Commission finds that:

- the measures are justified, it shall immediately so inform the Member State which took the initiative and the other Member States; where the decision referred to in paragraph 1 is attributed to shortcomings in the standards, the Commission shall, after consulting the parties concerned, bring the matter before the Committee referred to in Article 6(1) within two months if the Member State which has taken the decision intends to maintain it and shall initiate the procedures referred to in Article 6,

- the measures are unjustified, it shall immediately so inform the Member State which took the initiative and the manufacturer or his authorised representative established within the Community.

3. Where a non-complying device bears the CE marking, the competent Member State shall take appropriate action against whomsoever has affixed the mark and shall inform the Commission and the other Member States thereof.

4. The Commission shall ensure that the Member States are kept informed of the progress and outcome of this procedure.'

14. Article 10 of Directive 93/42 provides:

1. Member States shall take the necessary steps to ensure that any information brought to their knowledge, in accordance with the provisions of this Directive, regarding the incidents mentioned below involving a Class I, IIa, IIb or III device is recorded and evaluated centrally:

(a) any malfunction or deterioration in the characteristics and/or performance of a device, as well as any inadequacy in the labelling or the instructions for use which might lead to or might have led to the death of a patient or user or to a serious deterioration in his state of health;

(b) any technical or medical reason in relation to the characteristics or performance of a device for the reasons referred to in subparagraph (a), leading to systematic recall of devices of the same type by the manufacturer.

2. Where a Member State requires medical practitioners or the medical institutions to inform the competent authorities of any incidents referred to in paragraph 1, it shall take the necessary steps to ensure that the manufacturer of the device concerned, or his authorised representative established in the Community, is also informed of the incident.

3. After carrying out an assessment, if possible together with the manufacturer, Member States shall, without prejudice to Article 8, immediately inform the Commission and the other Member States of the incidents referred to in paragraph 1 for which relevant measures have been taken or are contemplated.'

15. Article 11 of Directive 93/42 governs the procedure for assessing the conformity of medical devices with the requirements of that directive. To that end, as set out in the 15 th recital in the preamble to the directive, medical devices are grouped into four product classes and the tests to which they are subjected are made progressively more stringent based on the vulnerability of the human body and taking account of the potential risks associated with the technical design and manufacture of the devices.

16. Article 14b of that directive provides:

Where a Member State considers, in relation to a given product or group of products, that, in order to ensure protection of health and safety and/or to ensure that public health requirements are observed pursuant to Article 36 of the Treaty, the availability of such products should be prohibited, restricted or subjected to particular requirements, it may take any necessary and justified transitional measures. It shall then inform the Commission and all the other Member States giving the reasons for its decision. The Commission shall, whenever possible, consult the interested parties and the Member States and, where the national measures are justified, adopt necessary Community measures in accordance with the procedure referred to in Article 7(2).'

17. Under Article 17(1) of Directive 93/42, medical devices, other than devices which are custom-made or intended for clinical investigations, considered to meet the essential requirements referred to in Article 3 must bear the CE marking of conformity when they are placed on the market.

18. Under Article 18 of that directive:

Without prejudice to Article 8:

(a) where a Member State establishes that the CE marking has been affixed unduly, the manufacturer or his authorised representative established within the Community shall be obliged to end the infringement under conditions imposed by the Member State;

(b) where non-compliance continues, the Member State must take all appropriate m easures to restrict or prohibit the placing on the market of the product in question or to ensure that it is withdrawn from the market, in accordance with the procedure in Article 8.

I, entitled General requirements':

1. The devices must be designed and manufactured in such a way that, when used under the conditions and for the purposes intended, they will not jeopardise the clinical condition or the safety of patients, or the safety and health of users or, where applicable, other persons, provided that any risks which may be associated with their use constitute acceptable risks when weighed against the benefits to the patient and are compatible with a high level of protection of health and safety.

2. The solutions adopted by the manufacturer for the design and construction of the devices must conform to safety principles, taking account of the generally acknowledged state of the art.

In selecting the most appropriate solutions, the manufacturer must apply the following principles in the following order:

- eliminate or reduce risks as far as possible (inherently safe design and construction),

- where appropriate take adequate protection measures including alarms if necessary, in relation to risks that cannot be eliminated,

- inform users of the residual risks due to any shortcomings of the protection measures adopted.

3. The devices must achieve the performances intended by the manufacturer and be designed, manufactured and packaged in such a way that they are suitable for one or more of the functions referred to in Article 1(2)(a), as specified by the manufacturer.

National rules

20. Joint Ministerial Decree No DI7/ik.2480, making Greek legislation consistent with Council Directive 93/42/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning medical devices, of 19 August 1994 (FEK B' (Greek Official Journal) 679), transposed that directive into Greek law.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

21. By notice No 146/2003 of 8 December 2003, Venizelio-Pananio issued a public invitation to tender, on the basis of lowest price as the award criterion, for the supply of various surgical sutures with a value of EUR 131 500 (including VAT). The notice specified that the sutures had to be certified in accordance with the European Pharmacopoeia and bear the CE marking.

22. Medipac was one of the nine companies which submitted a tender. The materials proposed by Medipac bore the required marking.

23. On 17 March 2004, the committee conducting the tendering procedure issued a recommendation to VenizelioPananio's Administrative Board, reiterating a suggestion from the surgeons of that hospital that the PGA type sutures proposed by Medipac be excluded. According to that recommendation, it had been found that knots done with PGA type materials slipped easily and closed prematurely, that needles frequently twisted or broke and that sutures did not hold sufficiently.

24. By Decision No 108 of 24 March 2004, Venizelio-Pananio's Administrative Board stated that the PGA type sutures proposed by Medipac did not meet the technical specifications for the contract and accordingly rejected its tender.

25. On 5 April 2004, Medipac submitted an appeal against that rejection decision to Venizelio-Pananio's administration. In its appeal, it stated, inter alia, that the technical specifications on which the rejection of its tender was based had not been set out in the invitation to tender, were imprecise to the point of being incomprehensible, did not permit a proper assessment of the requirements relating to the materials to be supplied, and diverged from the technical characteristics for such materials referred to in Directive 93/42. Medipac also maintained that the materials it proposed, which comply with the requirements of the European Pharmacopoeia, did not and could not have the technical imperfections referred to by the hospital. The hospital rejected the appeal by an initial decision of 7 April 2004, which was subsequently repealed and replaced by a second decision adopted on 28 April 2004.

26. An action against that rejection decision has been brought before the Simvoulio tis Epikratias. In its action, Medipac puts forward the same reasons that it had raised in its appeal.

27. In those circumstances, the Simvoulio tis Epikratias decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Whenever tender procedures governed by... Directive 93/36/EEC for the supply of medical devices under Directive 93/42/EEC are conducted under the lowest-price system, is the contracting authority as the purchaser of the relevant goods able, in accordance with Directive 93/42/EEC, interpreted in conjunction with Directive 93/36/EEC, to reject a tender for medical devices which bear the CE marking and have been the subject of a quality check by the competent certification body, as technically unacceptable at the stage of the technical assessment, in reliance upon sound objections relating to their adequacy in terms of quality which are connected with the protection of public health and the specific form of use for which those devices are intended and in view of which objections the devices are considered inappropriate and unfit for that use (with the self-evident precondition that those objections are subject to review of their validity by the court having jurisdiction if there is a dispute as to whether they pertain)?

(2) If the preceding question is answered in the affirmative, is the contracting authority as the purchaser of the relevant goods able, for the foregoing reason, directly to consider medical devices which bear the CE marking unsuitable for the form of use for which they are intended, or must the safeguard clauses first be applied which are contained in Directive 93/42/EEC and the... Joint Ministerial Decree DI7/ik.2480/1994 and which enable the relevant competent authority - which in Greece is the Ministry of Health, Welfare and Social Security acting through the Directorate for Biomedical Technology - to take measures either in accordance with the procedure in Article 8 of the directive, if correctly installed and maintained medical devices may jeopardise the life or safety of patients or users, or under Article 18 of the directive, if it is established that the CE marking has been affixed unduly?

(3) In the light of the answer to the second question, and in the event that the abovementioned safeguard clauses must first be applied, is the contracting authority obliged to await the outcome of the procedure initiated either under Article 8 or under Article 18 of Directive 93/42/EEC and, further, is it bound by that outcome in the sense that it is obliged to procure the article in question even though its use demonstrably gives rise to risks for public health and generally it is unsuitable for the use for which the contracting authority intends it?'

Admissibility of the reference for a preliminary ruling

Arguments of the Austrian Government

28. The Austrian Government considers that the answer to the questions referred by the national court is not liable to help that court adjudicate on the main proceedings and that the reference for a preliminary ruling is accordingly inadmissible. First, those questions relate expressly to the interpretation of Directive 93/36, but the tendering procedure at issue in the main proceedings does not fall within the scope of application of that directive, since the amount of the contract under the invitation to tender is lower than the threshold laid down in Article 5 of that directive.

29. Second, the reference for a preliminary ruling does not contain the information necessary for the Court to be able to answer the questions referred in a manner that will be helpful to the continuation of the main proceedings. The Austrian Government observes that the reference does not state whether the surgical sutures in question really are considered to be dangerous for human health or whether they simply do not meet the qualitative expectations of the surgeons concerned, which is a crucial factor in the assessment of the rights and obligations of the contracting authority.

Findings of the Court

30. Regarding, in the first place, the applicability of Directive 93/36, it is common ground that it applies only to contracts the value of which is equal to or greater than the threshold laid down in Article 5(1) of that directive (see, to that effect, order in Case C59/00 Vestergaard [2001] ECR I-9505, paragraph 19). The file shows that the value of the contract at issue in the main proceedings is EUR 131 500 (including VAT), which is lower than the threshold of application laid down in that directive.

31. In those circumstances, the Court, pursuant to Article 104(5) of its Rules of Procedure, made a written request for clarifications from the national court as to the reasons why it considered that Directive 93/36 was applicable to the contract. That court replied that, for procedural reasons, it was not able to answer such a request. Consequently, the Court decided to hold a hearing, during which the Greek Government confirmed that the value of the contract was lower than the threshold for application of that directive and maintained that the directive did not apply to the main proceedings. The Court accordingly finds that the Austrian Government is correct in arguing that, in those circumstances, an interpretation of Directive 93/36 has no bearing on the outcome of those proceedings.

32. However, a useful reply to the questions referred by the national court calls for the consideration of certain general principles applicable to public procurement.

33. The Court notes that the national court has categorised Venizelio-Pananio as a contracting authority'. That classification is also accepted by the Greek Government, which stated at the hearing that that hospital is a body governed by public law equated with the State. According to settled case-law, even if the value of a contract which is the subject-matter of an invitation to tender does not attain the threshold of application of the directives by which the Community legislature has regulated the field of public procurement, and the contract in question therefore does not fall within the scope of application of those directives, contracting authorities awarding contracts are nevertheless bound to abide by the general principles of Community law, such as the principle of equal treatment and the resulting obligation of transparency (see, to that effect, Case C324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress [2000] ECR I10745, paragraphs 60 and 61; order in Vestergaard , paragraphs 20 and 21; Case C231/03 Coname [2005] ECR I7287, paragraphs 16 and 17, and Case C458/03 Parking Brixen [2005] ECR I8585, paragraphs 46 to 48).

34. Admittedly, the national court does not refer directly in its reference for a preliminary ruling to the general principles of Community law. It is settled case-law, however, that in order to provide a satisfactory answer to a national court which has referred a question to it, the Court may deem it necessary to consider rules of Community law to which the national court has not referred in its reference (Case 35/85 Tissier [1986] ECR 1207, paragraph 9; Case C-315/88 Bagli Pennacchiotti [1990] ECR I-1323, paragraph 10; Case C-107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I8121, paragraph 39, and Telaustria and Telefonadress , paragraph 59).

35. Second, regarding the Austrian Government's line of argument relating to insufficient information on the facts of the main proceedings, the Court notes that the information contained in the reference for a preliminary ruling has been supplemented by the written observations submitted to the Court. Moreover, an audience has been held, which has enabled the Greek and Austrian Governments and the Commission to submit additional observations. The Court is thus sufficiently enlightened to be able to respond to the questions referred.

36. In the light of the foregoing, the Court finds that the reference for a preliminary ruling is admissible and that it is appropriate to reply to the questions referred by the national court.

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

The first and second questions

37. By its first and second questions, which are closely linked and must be examined together, the national court asks, essentially, whether under the general principles of Community law applicable to tendering procedures, a contracting authority which has initiated such a procedure with a view to purchasing medical devices may directly exclude a tender for products for reasons relating to the protection of public health although those products bear the CE marking as required by the specifications of the invitation to tender, or whether that authority is required first to apply the safeguard clauses provided for in Articles 8 and 18 of Directive 93/42.

Observations submitted to the Court

38. With regard to Directive 93/42, Medipac states that Member States may not prohibit, restrict or impede the placing on the market of medical devices which satisfy the provisions of that directive and which bear the CE marking. It maintains, as does the Commission, that a combined reading of Articles 3 and 17 of Directive 93/42 indicates that medical devices bearing that marking satisfy all compliance and safety requirements as laid down in Annex I to that directive. It follows that that directive introduces a presumption of compliance for products bearing the CE marking which may be rebutted only in the context of the safeguard procedure referred to in Articles 8 and 18.

39. Venizelio-Pananio and the Greek and Austrian Governments state that Directive 93/42 is intended to ensure that medical devices offer a high level of protection to patients, users and third parties. They infer therefrom that if a tender for medical devices certified in accordance with that directive is however inadequate from a technical standpoint, a contracting authority is entitled to exclude those devices directly from the tendering procedure. The Austrian Government adds, however, that the contracting authority is bound to inform the competent national authority of that exclusion so that the latter may take appropriate interim measures and commence the procedure provided for in Article 8 of that directive.

40. The Greek Government adds that Directive 93/42 in principle lays down only minimum requirements to be satisfied by a medical device in order to be able to bear the CE marking within the Community. The Austrian Government states that a contracting authority is free to impose qualitative requirements which go beyond the minimum required at Community level.

41. The Court finds as a preliminary point that the file does not show that, in the main proceedings, the contracting authority imposed particular requirements going beyond the minimum required by Community law.

42. It follows from the provisions referred to in paragraphs 5 to 19 of this judgment that Directive 93/42 harmonises the essential requirements to be met by medical devices falling within its scope of application. Once those devices comply with the harmonised standards and are certified in accordance with the procedures provided for by that directive, they must be presumed to comply with those essential requirements and therefore be deemed to be appropriate for the use for which they are intended. Those medical devices must also be allowed to circulate freely throughout the Community.

43. It follows from the Court's settled case-law that the obligations arising from Community directives are binding, inter alia, on bodies or entities which are subject to the authority or control of a public authority or the State (see, to that effect, Case 152/84 Marshall [1986] ECR 723, paragraph 49; Case 103/88 Fratelli Costanzo [1989] ECR 1839, paragraphs 30 and 31; Case C188/89 Foster and Others [1990] ECR I-3313, paragraph 18; order in Case C297/03 Sozialhilfeverband Rohrbach [2005] ECR I4305, paragraph 27). Consequently, the obligation to presume that medical devices which meet the harmonised standards and bear the CE marking comply with the requirements of Directive 93/42 extends to VenizelioPananio in its capacity as a body governed by public law.

44. The Court notes, however, as pointed out by the Advocate General in point 92 of her Opinion, that the presumption of compliance of medical devices may be rebutted. In that respect, Directive 93/42 provides for the implementation of safeguard measures where a finding is made that certain medical devices bearing the CE marking may nevertheless pose risks for patients or users.

45. Article 10 of that directive provides that Member States are to take the necessary steps to ensure that information relating to incidents occurring after the placing on the market of medical devices which may pose a risk for the health of a patient or a user are recorded and evaluated centrally. If, following such an evaluation, Member States take or contemplate taking measures, they must inform the Commission immediately.

46. Article 8(1) of Directive 93/42 requires Member States which have found there to be risks linked to medical devices which have been certified as being in compliance with that directive to take all appropriate interim measures to withdraw those medical devices from the market or prohibit or restrict their being placed on the market or put into service. In those circumstances, the Member State concerned is required by that same provision to notify the Commission immediately of the measures taken, indicating in particular the reasons for the measures. Under Article 8(2) of Directive 93/42, the Commission must in turn examine whether those interim measures are justified and, if so, inform immediately the Member State which initiated such measures and the other Member States.

47. Under Article 8(3) of Directive 93/42, where a medica l device bearing the CE marking nevertheless does not comply with the essential requirements provided for by that directive, the Member State concerned is to take appropriate action and to inform the Commission and the other Member States. Moreover, Article 18 of that same directive provides that where a Member State establishes that the CE marking has been affixed unduly, the manufacturer or his authorised representative established within the Community is to be obliged to end the infringement under conditions imposed by the Member State.

48. It is clear from the wording of Article 8(1) of that directive that the obligations provided for therein are imposed on a body on which the Member State has conferred competence to ascertain the risks which devices which comply with that directive may nevertheless pose for public health and/or safety and to take, where necessary, measures of general application provided for by that article in order to deal with the situation.

49. Since Venizelio-Pananio clearly was not given such competence by the Greek State, it is not entitled to implement on its own the safeguard measures referred to in Article 8 of Directive 93/42. It follows that, once that hospital had doubts as to the technical reliability of the surgical sutures proposed by Medipac, it was required, by virtue of the obligation imposed on it as an entity governed by public law, to assist in the correct application of Directive 93/42, to inform the competent national authority so that the latter could conduct its own checks and, where necessary, implement such safeguard measures. The file shows that in the main proceedings Venizelio-Pananio did refer the question of the appropriateness of the sutures for their intended use to the Greek national body overseeing medicinal products and that the latter confirmed that they complied with the standards in force. That reference was made only on 5 May 2004, however, that is, after the hospital had rejected Medipac's tender. Venizelio-Pananio thus rebutted the presumption of compliance of its own motion, without following the safeguard procedure introduced by the abovementioned directive.

50. However, not only the wording of Article 8 of Directive 93/42 but also the purpose of the harmonisation system established by it preclude a contracting authority from being entitled to reject, outside that safeguard procedure and on grounds of technical inadequacy, medical devices which are certified as being in compliance with the essential requirements provided for by that directive.

51. Directive 93/42, in so far as it amounts to a harmonisation measure adopted pursuant to Article 100a of the EEC Treaty (which became Article 100a of the EC Treaty, itself now, after amendment, Article 95 EC), is intended to promote the free movement of medical devices which have been certified as being in compliance with that directive, precisely by replacing the various measures taken in this field in the Member States, which may amount to an obstacle to that free movement.

52. In that context, the need to reconcile the free movement of those devices with the protection of patients' health implies that, in the event of the emergence of a risk linked to devices which have been certified as being in compliance with Directive 93/42, the Member State concerned must implement the safeguard procedure provided for in Article 8 of that directive; bodies which are not empowered to do so may not themselves decide unilaterally on the action to be taken in such circumstances.

53. Moreover, where proposed products, although bearing the CE marking, give rise to concern on the part of the contracting authority as to patients' health or safety, the principle of equal treatment of tenderers and the obligation of transparency, which apply irrespective of whether Directive 93/36 is applicable, preclude, in order to avoid arbitrariness, the contracting authority from being able itself to reject the tender in question directly and requires it to follow a procedure, such as the safeguard procedure provided for in Article 8 of Directive 93/42, which is such as to ensure objective and independent assessment and checking of the alleged risks.

54. Moreover, that principle and that obligation prohibit the contracting authority from rejecting a tender which satisfies the requirements of the invitation to tender on grounds which are not set out in the tender specifications and which are relied on subsequent to the submission of the tender.

55. In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the first and second questions must be that the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency preclude a contracting authority, which has issued an invitation to tender for the supply of medical devices and specified that those devices must comply with the European Pharmacopoeia and bear the CE marking, from rejecting, directly and without following the safeguard procedure provided for in Articles 8 and 18 of Directive 93/42, on grounds of protection of public health, the materials proposed, if they comply with the stated technical requirement. If the contracting authority considers that those materials may jeopardise public health, it is required to inform the competent national authority with a view to setting that safeguard procedure in motion.

The third question

56. By its third question, the national court asks the Court how the safeguard measures provided for by Directive 93/42 must be implemented by a contracting authority in the context of an ongoing tendering procedure. It asks in particular whether the contracting authority must await the end of the safeguard procedure and whether it is bound by the outcome of that procedure.

57. As evidenced by the answer given to the first and second questions, a contracting authority is entitled to reject a tender for medical devices bearing the CE marking, on grounds of technical inadequacy, only in the context of the safeguard procedure provided for by Directive 93/42.

58. More specifically, a contracting authority's power to reject the tender for medical devices bearing the CE marking on grounds of technical inadequacy is subject to the outcome of the safeguard procedure, namely the Commission's decision establishing, in accordance with Article 8(2) of that directive, that the adoption of measures prohibiting the placing on the market or putting into service

59. It follows that a contracting authority, once it has decided to refer the matter to the competent national authority, is required to suspend the award procedure so as to set in motion the safeguard procedure provided for by Directive 93/42 and to await the end of the latter procedure. The Commission's decision is binding on the contracting authority. If the safeguard procedure were to lead to a finding that those materials do not comply with the requirements of that directive, the measures of general application taken by the Member State would entail the exclusion of those products from the award procedure which was suspended.

60. The suspension of a tendering procedure for the supply of medical devices may, of course, lead to delays liable to give rise to problems in running a hospital such as Venizelio-Pananio. However, as pointed out by the Advocate General in point 118 of her Opinion and pursuant to Article 14b of Directive 93/42, the objective of the protection of public health constitutes an overriding public-interest requirement entitling Member States to derogate from the principle of the free movement of goods provided that the measures taken comply with the principle of proportionality (see Case 120/78 ReweZentral [1979] ECR 649 (Cassis de Dijon '), paragraph 8; Case C270/02 Commission v Italy [2004] ECR I-1559, paragraphs 21 and 22; and Joined Cases C158/04 and C159/04 Alfa Vita Vassilopoulos and Carrefour-Marinopoulos [2006] ECR I-8135, paragraphs 20 to 23).

61. Consequently, in a situation of urgency, a hospital such as Venizelio-Pananio is entitled to take all interim measures required to enable it to procure the medical devices necessary for its operation. In such cases, however, it must be able to show that there is a situation of urgency justifying such a derogation from the principle of free movement of goods and demonstrate that the measures taken are proportionate.

62. In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the third question must be that a contracting authority, which has referred a matter to the competent national authority with a view to setting in motion the safeguard procedure provided for by Articles 8 and 18 of Directive 93/42 concerning medical devices bearing the CE marking, is required to suspend the tendering procedure until the end of that safeguard procedure, the outcome of that procedure being binding on the contracting authority. If the implementation of such a safeguard procedure gives rise to delays liable to jeopardise the operation of a public hospital and thereby public health, the contracting authority is entitled to take all interim measures required to enable it to procure the materials necessary for the smooth running of that hospital, subject to compliance with the principle of proportionality.

Costs

63. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

Operative part of the judgment

The principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency preclude a contracting authority, which has issued an invitation to tender for the supply of medical devices and specified that those devices must comply with the European Pharmacopoeia and bear the CE marking, from rejecting, directly and without following the safeguard procedure provided for in Articles 8 and 18 of Council Directive 93/42/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning medical devices, as amended by Regulation (EC) No 1882/2003 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 September 2003, on grounds of protection of public health, the materials proposed, if they comply with the stated technical requirement. If the contracting authority considers that those materials may jeopardise public health, it is required to inform the competent national authority with a view to setting that safeguard procedure in motion.

A contracting authority, which has referred a matter to the competent national authority with a view to setting in motion the safeguard procedure provided for by Articles 8 and 18 of Directive 93/42, as amended by Regulation No 1882/2003, concerning medical devices bearing the CE marking, is required to suspend the tendering procedure until the end of that safeguard procedure, the outcome of that procedure being binding on the contracting authority. If the implementation of such a safeguard procedure gives rise to delays liable to jeopardise the operation of a public hospital and thereby public health, the contracting authority is entitled to take all interim measures required to enable it to procure the materials necessary for the smooth running of that hospital, subject to compliance with the principle of proportionality.

Toutefois la communication de certains éléments peut être omise dans les cas où elle ferait obstacle à l'application des lois, serait contraire à l'intérêt public, porterait préjudice aux intérêts commerciaux légitimes d'entreprises publiques ou privées ou pourrait nuire à une concurrence loyale entre celles-ci. »

3 L'article 149, paragraphe 3, des modalités d'exécution, dispose :

Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs notifient, en même temps qu'ils informent les candidats ou soumissionnaires évincés du rejet de leur offre, la décision d'attribution à l'attributaire en précisant que la décision notifiée ne constitue pas un engagement de la part du pouvoir adjudicateur concerné.

Les soumissionnaires ou candidats évincés peuvent obtenir des informations complémentaires sur les motifs du rejet, sur demande écrite, par lettre, par télécopie ou par courrier électronique et, pour tout soumissionnaire ayant fait une offre recevable, sur les caractéristiques et avantages relatifs de l'offre retenue ainsi que le nom de l'attributaire, sans préjudice des dispositions de l'article 100, paragraphe 2, deuxième alinéa, du règlement financier. Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs répondent dans un délai maximal de quinze jours de calendrier à compter de la réception de la demande.

« 1. Les institutions refusent l'accès à un document dans le cas où la divulgation porterait atteinte à la protection :

[…]

b) de la vie privée et de l'intégrité de l'individu, notamment en conformité avec la législation communautaire relative à la protection des données à caractère personnel.

6. Si une partie seulement du document demandé est concernée par une ou plusieurs des exceptions susvisées, les autres parties du document sont divulguées.

5 L'article 6 du règlement n° 1049/2001 prévoit :

« 1. Les demandes d'accès aux documents sont formulées sous forme écrite, y compris par des moyens électroniques, dans l'une des langues énumérées à l'article 314 [CE] et de façon suffisamment précise pour permettre à l'institution d'identifier le document. Le demandeur n'est pas obligé de justifier sa demande.

2. Si une demande n'est pas suffisamment précise, l'institution invite le demandeur à la clarifier et assiste celui-ci à cette fin, par exemple en lui donnant des informations sur l'utilisation des registres publics de documents.

3. En cas de demande portant sur un document très long ou sur un très grand nombre de documents, l'institution concernée peut se concerter avec le demandeur de manière informelle afin de trouver un arrangement équitable.

4. Les institutions assistent et informent les citoyens quant aux modalités de dépôt des demandes d'accès aux documents. »

6 L'article 7 du règlement n° 1049/2001, qui établit les modalités du traitement des demandes initiales, énonce ce qui suit :

« 1. Les demandes d'accès aux documents sont traitées avec promptitude. Un accusé de réception est envoyé au demandeur. Dans un délai de quinze jours ouvrables à partir de l'enregistrement de la demande, l'institution soit octroie l'accès au document demandé et le fournit dans le même délai conformément à l'article 10, soit communique au demandeur, dans une réponse écrite, les motifs de son refus total ou partiel et l'informe de son droit de présenter une demande confirmative conformément au paragraphe 2 du présent article.

2. En cas de refus total ou partiel, le demandeur peut adresser, dans un délai de quinze jours ouvrables suivant la réception de la réponse de l'institution, une demande confirmative tendant à ce que celle-ci révise sa position.

3. À titre exceptionnel, par exemple lorsque la demande porte sur un document très long ou sur un très grand nombre de documents, le délai prévu au paragraphe 1 peut, moyennant information préalable du demandeur et motivation circonstanciée, être prolongé de quinze jours ouvrables.

4. L'absence de réponse de l'institution dans le délai requis habilite le demandeur à présenter une demande confirmative. »

7 L'article 8 du règlement n° 1049/2001, relatif au traitement des demandes confirmatives, dispose :

« 1. Les demandes confirmatives sont traitées avec promptitude. Dans un délai de quinze jours ouvrables à partir de l'enregistrement de la demande, l'institution soit octroie l'accès au document demandé et le fournit dans le même délai conformément à l'article 10, soit communique, dans une réponse écrite, les motifs de son refus total ou partiel. Si elle refuse totalement ou partiellement l'accès, l'institution informe le demandeur des voies de recours dont il dispose, à savoir former un recours juridictionnel contre l'institution et/ou présenter une plainte au médiateur, selon les conditions prévues respectivement aux articles 230 [CE] et 195 [CE].

2. À titre exceptionnel, par exemple lorsque la demande porte sur un document très long ou sur un très grand nombre de documents, le délai prévu au paragraphe 1 peut, moyennant information préalable du demandeur et motivation circonstanciée, être prolongé de quinze jours ouvrables.

3. L'absence de réponse de l'institution dans le délai requis est considérée comme une réponse négative et habilite le demandeur à former un recours juridictionnel contre l'institution et/ou à présenter une plainte au médiateur, selon les dispositions pertinentes du traité CE. »

C – Réglementation applicable au maintien des droits des travailleurs en cas de transfert d'entreprises

9 Le champ d'application de la directive 2001/23 est déterminé à l'article 1er de celle-ci, qui prévoit :

« 1. a) La présente directive est applicable à tout transfert d'entreprise, d'établissement ou de partie d'entreprise ou d'établissement à un autre employeur résultant d'une cession conventionnelle ou d'une fusion.

b) Sous réserve du point a) et des dispositions suivantes du présent article, est considéré comme transfert, au sens de la présente directive, celui d'une entité économique maintenant son identité, entendue comme un ensemble organisé de moyens, en vue de la poursuite d'une activité économique, que celle-ci soit essentielle ou accessoire.

10 L'article 1er, paragraphe 1, sous a) et b), de la loi luxembourgeoise du 19 décembre 2003 portant réglementation du maintien des droits des travailleurs en cas de transfert d'entreprises, d'établissements ou de parties d'entreprises ou d'établissements et transposition de la directive 2001/23 (Mém. A 2003, p. 3678, ci-après la « loi du 19 décembre 2003 »), dispose :

« a) La présente loi s'applique à tout transfert d'entreprise, d'établissement ou de partie d'entreprise ou d'établissement résultant notamment d'une cession conventionnelle, d'une fusion, d'une succession, d'une scission, d'une transformation de fonds, ou d'une mise en société.

b) Est considéré comme transfert au sens de la présente loi celui d'une entité économique qui maintient son identité et qui constitue un ensemble organisé de moyens, notamment personnels et matériels, permettant la poursuite d'une activité économique essentielle ou accessoire. »

11 Selon l'article 3, paragraphe 1, premier alinéa, de ladite loi :

« Les droits et obligations qui résultent pour le cédant d'un contrat de travail ou d'une relation de travail existant à la date du transfert sont, du fait de ce transfert, transférés au cessionnaire. »

Antécédents du litige

12 Brink's Security Luxembourg SA (ci-après « Brink's » ou la « requérante »), société dont le siège social est situé au Luxembourg (Luxembourg), était chargée de la surveillance et du gardiennage des immeubles de la Commission des Communautés européennes depuis le milieu des années 70.

13 En 2000, la requérante a conclu avec la Commission un contrat de surveillance et de gardiennage d'immeubles de celle-ci, situés au Luxembourg et relevant de la responsabilité de l'Office pour les infrastructures et la logistique à Luxembourg (OIL), de l'Office des publications de l'Union européenne et du Centre de traduction des organes de l'Union européenne. Ce contrat, qui ne prévoyait pas de reconduction au-delà de la cinquième année, a expiré le 31 décembre 2005.

14 Par un avis de préinformation publié au Supplément au Journal officiel de l'Union européenne du 19 mars 2005 (JO S 56), la Commission a annoncé que la date prévue pour le lancement d'une procédure de passation de marché concernant un contrat de sécurité et de surveillance des immeubles visés au point 13 ci-dessus était le 15 mai 2005.

16 La date limite de présentation des offres a été fixée au 13 octobre 2005. L'ouverture des offres a eu lieu le 18 octobre 2005 et leur évaluation a été effectuée le 11 novembre 2005.

17 Le 30 novembre 2005, la Commission a informé la requérante que le contrat ne lui avait pas été attribué, son offre n'ayant pas obtenu la meilleure note finale lors de l'évaluation qualitative et financière des offres. Dans le même courrier (ci–après la « décision de rejet »), la Commission a informé la requérante qu'elle était en droit d'obtenir des informations complémentaires sur les motifs du rejet de son offre.

18 Par lettre du 1er décembre 2005, la requérante a demandé à la Commission de lui communiquer les motifs du rejet de son offre, les caractéristiques et les avantages relatifs de l'offre retenue ainsi que le nom de l'attributaire du marché.

19 Par lettre du 5 décembre 2005, la Commission a informé la requérante que l'attributaire était Group 4 Falck – Société de surveillance et de sécurité SA, devenue G4S Security Services SA (ci-après « Group 4 Falck » ou l'« intervenante »), et lui a communiqué des éléments de comparaison de l'évaluation de son offre par rapport à l'offre de Group 4 Falck.

21 Par lettre du 7 décembre 2005, la Commission a répondu aux courriers de la requérante du 5 décembre 2005.

22 Par lettre du 8 décembre 2005, la requérante a demandé à la Commission les nom, prénom, grade, ancienneté et affectation des membres du comité d'évaluation des offres ainsi qu'un complément de motivation, estimant que les raisons indiquées par la Commission n'étaient pas suffisantes.

23 Par lettre du 14 décembre 2005, la Commission, invoquant des raisons de confidentialité, de protection de la vie privée et de l'intégrité des personnes, a refusé de fournir les informations demandées par la requérante à propos des membres du comité d'évaluation des offres. La Commission a cependant fourni à la requérante des informations complémentaires concernant les raisons du rejet de son offre.

24 Par lettre du 14 décembre 2005, Group 4 Falck a fait part à la requérante de son intention de recruter une partie de son personnel.

Procédure et conclusions des parties

25 Par requête déposée au greffe du Tribunal le 15 décembre 2005, la requérante a introduit le présent recours.

26 Par acte séparé, déposé au greffe du Tribunal le même jour, la requérante a introduit une demande en référé ainsi qu'une demande de mesures provisoires sur le fondement de l'article 105, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure du Tribunal.

27 Par ordonnance du 16 décembre 2005, le président du Tribunal a ordonné qu'il soit sursis à la signature du contrat en cause dans le cadre de l'appel d'offres jusqu'au prononcé d'une ordonnance statuant sur la demande de mesures provisoires.

28 En conséquence de l'adoption de l'ordonnance mentionnée au point 27 ci-dessus, le contrat en cours entre Brink's et la Commission a été reconduit jusqu'à la date du 31 janvier 2006, afin de garantir la continuité de la surveillance et du gardiennage des bâtiments en cause.

29 Par acte déposé au greffe du Tribunal le 22 décembre 2005, Group 4 Falck a demandé à intervenir dans la présente procédure au soutien des conclusions de la Commission. Le 4 janvier 2006, les parties principales ont déposé leurs observations sur la demande en intervention de Group 4 Falck.

30 Par acte déposé au greffe du Tribunal le 4 janvier 2006, la requérante a introduit une demande de traitement confidentiel de la demande en référé vis-à-vis de Group 4 Falck, à laquelle il a été fait droit. Le 5 janvier 2006, la requérante a déposé au greffe du Tribunal une version non confidentielle de la demande en référé.

31 Par ordonnance du 9 janvier 2006, Group 4 Falck a été admis à intervenir dans la présente affaire.

33 Par ordonnance du 7 février 2006, le président du Tribunal a rejeté la demande de mesures provisoires de la requérante aux motifs qu'elle n'avait pas démontré qu'elle risquait de subir un préjudice grave et irréparable en l'absence des mesures provisoires demandées (T–437/05 R, Rec. p. II–21).

34 Le 12 mai 2006, la requérante a déposé une demande de traitement confidentiel de certaines annexes de la requête. Group 4 Falck n'a pas présenté d'observations sur cette demande.

35 Sur rapport du juge rapporteur, le Tribunal (sixième chambre) a décidé d'ouvrir la procédure orale et, dans le cadre des mesures d'organisation de la procédure prévues à l'article 64 du règlement de procédure, a posé par écrit des questions aux parties, auxquelles celles-ci ont répondu dans le délai imparti.

36 Les parties ont été entendues en leurs plaidoiries et en leurs réponses aux questions du Tribunal lors de l'audience du 20 novembre 2008.

37 Lors de l'audience, Group 4 Falck a demandé au Tribunal de pouvoir produire des courriers qu'elle a échangés avec la Société nationale de certification et d'homologation (ci-après la « SNCH »). La requérante et la Commission ont présenté leurs observations sur cette demande de production de documents.

38 Dans le cadre du présent recours, la requérante conclut à ce qu'il plaise au Tribunal :

– annuler la décision de rejet ;

– annuler la décision d'attribution ;

– annuler la prétendue décision implicite de la Commission par laquelle elle a refusé de retirer la décision de rejet et la décision d'attribution ;

– annuler les deux lettres de réponse de la Commission des 7 et 14 décembre 2005 ;

– octroyer des dommages et intérêts en réparation du préjudice moral et matériel qu'elle a prétendument subi ;

– condamner la Commission aux dépens.

39 La requérante a également demandé au Tribunal, au titre des mesures d'organisation de la procédure, d'enjoindre à la Commission de communiquer les éléments suivants :

– la composition (nom, grade, ancienneté et affectation des membres) du comité d'évaluation des offres ;

– les raisons ayant motivé le décalage entre la date de l'appel d'offres et la date annoncée dans l'avis de préinformation paru au Journal officiel de l'Union européenne ;

– les informations permettant de vérifier que Group 4 Falck exécute le contrat passé avec la Commission dans les conditions prévues par le cahier des charges en ses points 22 et 28.

40 La Commission, soutenue par l'intervenante, conclut à ce qu'il plaise au Tribunal :

– déclarer le recours en annulation non fondé ;

– déclarer le recours en indemnité irrecevable ;

– subsidiairement, déclarer le recours en indemnité non fondé ;

– condamner la requérante aux dépens.

En droit

A – Sur les mesures d'organisation de la procédure

41 En ce qui concerne la demande relative au calendrier de l'appel d'offres, la Commission a indiqué, dans le mémoire en duplique, les raisons ayant motivé le report de la publication de l'avis de marché par rapport à la date annoncée dans l'avis de préinformation. Il n'y a donc plus lieu de statuer sur cette demande devenue sans objet.

42 En ce qui concerne la demande visant à contrôler le respect par Group 4 Falck du critère figurant au point 28 du cahier des charges en tant que condition d'exécution du contrat, il résulte d'une jurisprudence constante que, dans le cadre d'un recours en annulation introduit sur le fondement de l'article 230 CE, la légalité de l'acte attaqué s'apprécie en fonction des éléments de droit et de fait existant à la date où l'acte a été pris (arrêt de la Cour du 7 février 1979, France/Commission, 15/76 et 16/76, Rec. p. 321, point 7 ; arrêt du Tribunal du 22 janvier 1997, Opel Austria/Conseil, T–115/94, Rec. p. II–39, points 87 et 88).

43 Ainsi, des considérations relatives à l'exécution du contrat passé entre Group 4 Falck et la Commission, dans la mesure où elles constituent des circonstances de fait postérieures à l'adoption des actes attaqués, ne peuvent être invoquées au soutien d'un moyen visant à remettre en cause la validité desdits actes.

44 Il résulte de ce qui précède que les demandes de mesures d'organisation de la procédure relatives au calendrier de l'appel d'offres et à l'exécution du contrat par Group 4 Falck doivent être rejetées.

45 Il sera statué sur la demande de communication de la composition du comité d'évaluation lors de l'examen du septième moyen du présent recours en annulation, tiré de la violation du principe de transparence et du droit d'accès aux documents des institutions.

B – Sur la recevabilité du grief tiré du report de la publication de l'avis de marché par rapport à la date annoncée dans l'avis de préinformation

1. Arguments des parties

46 La requérante a présenté, dans son mémoire en réplique, un nouvel argument, tiré du report de la publication de l'avis de marché relatif à l'appel d'offres par rapport à la date annoncée dans l'avis de préinformation. Ce changement de calendrier l'aurait placée dans une situation délicate au regard de la législation sociale luxembourgeoise, compte tenu des délais de préavis prévus par celle-ci en cas de licenciement. Le respect du calendrier initial lui aurait permis d'anticiper les licenciements ou réaffectations consécutifs à l'éventuelle perte du marché.

47 De plus, si le calendrier prévu dans l'avis de préinformation avait été respecté, Group 4 Falck n'aurait pas pu participer à la procédure d'appel d'offres, sous peine de violer l'engagement de ne pas solliciter activement les clients des sociétés cédées pendant une période de six mois à compter de la cession figurant dans la décision de la Commission du 28 mai 2004 (Affaire COMP/M.3396 – GROUP 4 FALCK/SECURICOR) ayant autorisé la fusion entre Group 4 Falck A/S et Securicor plc (ci-après la « décision de la Commission du 28 mai 2004 »).

48 La Commission conteste la recevabilité de cet argument, qu'elle considère comme un moyen nouveau, au regard de l'article 48, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure.

2. Appréciation du Tribunal

49 En vertu de l'article 48, paragraphe 2, premier alinéa, du règlement de procédure, la production de moyens nouveaux en cours d'instance est interdite à moins que ces moyens ne se fondent sur des éléments de droit et de fait qui se sont révélés pendant la procédure.

50 Toutefois, un moyen qui constitue l'ampliation d'un moyen énoncé antérieurement, directement ou implicitement, dans la requête introductive d'instance et qui présente un lien étroit avec celui-ci doit être déclaré recevable (arrêt de la Cour du 14 octobre 1999, Atlanta/Communauté européenne, C–104/97 P, Rec. p. I–6983, point 29 ; arrêt du Tribunal du 8 mars 2007, France Télécom/Commission, T–340/04, Rec. p. II–573, point 164). Par ailleurs, les arguments dont la substance présente un lien étroit avec un moyen énoncé dans la requête introductive d'instance ne peuvent être considérés comme des moyens nouveaux et leur présentation est admise au stade de la réplique ou de l'audience (voir, en ce sens, arrêt de la Cour du 12 juin 1958, Compagnie des hauts fourneaux de Chasse/Haute Autorité, 2/57, Rec. p. 129, 146).

51 En l'espèce, l'argument de la requérante, qui repose sur le report de la publication de l'avis de marché par rapport à la date annoncée dans l'avis de préinformation, n'est fondé sur aucun élément de droit ou de fait qui se serait révélé pendant la procédure.

52 Le grief tiré de la situation délicate dans laquelle ce report aurait placé la requérante au regard de la législation sociale luxembourgeoise applicable aux licenciements est dès lors irrecevable, car il ne constitue pas l'ampliation d'un moyen énoncé antérieurement dans la requête et ne présente pas un lien étroit avec un tel moyen.

53 En revanche, le grief selon lequel le respect du calendrier annoncé dans l'avis de préinformation aurait empêché Group 4 Falck de participer à l'appel d'offres présente un lien étroit avec le quatrième moyen de la requête, tiré de la violation de la décision de la Commission du 28 mai 2004. L'argument tiré du report de publication de l'avis de marché par rapport à la date annoncée dans l'avis de préinformation est donc partiellement recevable, en ce qu'il vient au soutien du quatrième moyen de la requérante, avec lequel il sera en conséquence examiné.

C – Sur le recours en annulation

1. Sur la recevabilité

54 Les conditions de recevabilité d'un recours relevant des fins de non-recevoir d'ordre public (voir ordonnance de la Cour du 7 octobre 1987, D.M./Conseil et CES, 108/86, Rec. p. 3933, point 10, et arrêt du Tribunal du 22 octobre 2008, TV 2/Danmark/Commission, T–309/04, non encore publié au Recueil, point 62, et la jurisprudence citée), il appartient au Tribunal de vérifier d'office si ces conditions sont satisfaites.

a) Sur l'existence d'une décision implicite de refus de la Commission

55 Il résulte de la jurisprudence que, en principe, en l'absence de dispositions expresses fixant un délai à l'expiration duquel une décision implicite est réputée intervenir de la part d'une institution invitée à prendre position et définissant le contenu de cette décision, le seul silence d'une institution ne saurait être assimilé à une décision, sauf à mettre en cause le système des voies de recours institué par le traité (arrêt de la Cour du 9 décembre 2004, Commission/Greencore, C–123/03 P, Rec. p. I–11647, point 45 ; arrêts du Tribunal du 13 décembre 1999, SGA/Commission, T–189/95, T–39/96, T–123/96, Rec. p. II–3587, point 27, et Sodima/Commission, T–190/95, T–45/96, Rec. p. II–3617, point 32).

56 Dans certaines circonstances spécifiques, ce principe peut ne pas trouver application, de sorte que le silence ou l'inaction d'une institution peuvent être exceptionnellement considérés comme ayant valeur de décision implicite de refus (arrêt Commission/Greencore, point 55 supra, point 45).

58 De plus, la requérante n'invoque aucune circonstance spécifique permettant d'assimiler, à titre exceptionnel, le silence de la Commission à une décision implicite de refus.

59 Il résulte de ce qui précède que les conclusions de la requérante sont irrecevables, en ce qu'elles visent à l'annulation de la prétendue décision implicite de refus de la Commission.

b) Sur l'existence d'actes produisant des effets juridiques obligatoires

61 Tel est le cas de la décision d'attribution.

62 Quant aux lettres de la Commission du 30 novembre 2005, du 7 décembre 2005 et du 14 décembre 2005, adressées à la requérante, il convient de s'assurer qu'elles contiennent bien une décision au sens de l'article 230 CE.

63 Selon la jurisprudence, il ne suffit pas qu'une lettre ait été envoyée par une institution communautaire à son destinataire, en réponse à une demande formulée par ce dernier, pour qu'elle puisse être qualifiée de décision au sens de l'article 230 CE, ouvrant ainsi la voie du recours en annulation (ordonnance de la Cour du 27 janvier 1993, Miethke/Parlement, C-25/92, Rec. p. I-473, point 10 ; arrêt du Tribunal du 22 mai 1996, AITEC/Commission, T-277/94, Rec. p. II-351, point 50, et ordonnance du Tribunal du 11 décembre 1998, Scottish Soft Fruit Growers/Commission, T-22/98, Rec. p. II-4219, point 34). La lettre concernée doit en effet comporter des mesures répondant à la définition rappelée au point 60 ci-dessus.

64 En l'espèce, la lettre du 30 novembre 2005, par laquelle la Commission informe la requérante, de manière précise et non équivoque, du rejet de sa candidature, modifie de façon caractérisée la situation juridique de celle-ci et constitue par conséquent une décision attaquable.

65 En revanche, la lettre de la Commission du 7 décembre 2005 indique à la requérante que son service juridique a été saisi de l'une des questions qu'elle a posées dans son précédent courrier, concernant la prétendue violation du principe d'égalité de traitement des soumissionnaires. Elle rejette par ailleurs certains des arguments avancés par la requérante dans ses courriers du 5 décembre 2005 à l'appui d'une demande de réexamen des décisions d'attribution et de rejet, relatifs à la violation de la loi du 19 décembre 2003 transposant la directive 2001/23, ainsi que l'allégation de la requérante selon laquelle la Commission aurait donné instruction à un salarié de Brink's de recueillir les curriculums vitae et les lettres de motivation du personnel de Brink's, en vue d'une transmission de ces documents à Group 4 Falck.

66 Cette lettre n'a qu'un caractère informatif. Elle ne fait en effet qu'informer la requérante que le service juridique de la Commission a été saisi et que celle-ci estime qu'il ne saurait y avoir eu violation de la loi du 19 décembre 2003, et réfuter l'existence d'une quelconque instruction adressée au personnel de Brink's. Elle est dès lors dépourvue d'effets juridiques obligatoires de nature à affecter les intérêts de la requérante, dont elle n'a en rien modifié de façon caractérisée la situation juridique.

67 S'agissant de la lettre de la Commission du 14 décembre 2005, il convient de relever qu'elle comporte deux aspects distincts. Par cette lettre, la Commission, d'une part, informe la requérante de son refus de lui communiquer la composition exacte du comité d'évaluation et, d'autre part, précise la motivation de la décision de rejet.

68 En ce qui concerne le refus de communication de la composition du comité d'évaluation, il convient de rappeler, d'une part, que le règlement n° 1049/2001 s'applique à toute demande d'accès aux documents des institutions formulée par écrit et, d'autre part, que l'article 3, sous a), de ce règlement définit le document comme « tout contenu quel que soit son support (écrit sur support papier ou stocké sous forme électronique, enregistrement sonore, visuel ou audiovisuel) concernant une matière relative aux politiques, activités et décisions relevant de la compétence de l'institution ». La demande de renseignements complémentaires concernant la composition du comité d'évaluation formulée par la requérante dans son courrier du 8 décembre 2005 constitue donc une demande d'accès à un document au titre de l'article 3, sous a), du règlement n° 1049/2001.

69 La procédure d'accès aux documents de la Commission, régie par les articles 6 à 8 du règlement n° 1049/2001 ainsi que par les articles 2 à 4 de l'annexe de la décision 2001/937/CE, CECA, Euratom de la Commission, du 5 décembre 2001, modifiant son règlement intérieur (JO L 345, p. 94), se déroule en deux étapes. Dans un premier temps, le demandeur doit adresser à la Commission une demande initiale d'accès aux documents. En principe, la Commission doit répondre à la demande initiale dans un délai de quinze jours ouvrables à compter de l'enregistrement de ladite demande. Dans un second temps, en cas de refus total ou partiel, le demandeur peut présenter, dans un délai de quinze jours ouvrables suivant la réception de la réponse initiale de la Commission, une demande confirmative auprès du secrétaire général de la Commission, demande à laquelle ce dernier doit, en principe, répondre dans un délai de quinze jours ouvrables à compter de l'enregistrement de ladite demande. En cas de refus total ou partiel, le demandeur peut former un recours juridictionnel contre la Commission ou présenter une plainte au Médiateur européen, selon les conditions prévues respectivement aux articles 230 CE et 195 CE.

70 Selon la jurisprudence, il ressort de l'application combinée des articles 3 et 4 de l'annexe de la décision 2001/937 ainsi que de l'article 8 du règlement n° 1049/2001 que la réponse à la demande initiale ne constitue qu'une première prise de position, conférant au demandeur la possibilité d'inviter le secrétaire général de la Commission à réexaminer la position en cause (voir, en ce sens, arrêts du Tribunal du 6 juillet 2006, Franchet et Byk/Commission, T–391/03 et T–70/04, Rec. p. II–2023, point 47, et du 5 juin 2008, Internationaler Hilfsfonds/Commission, T–141/05, non publié au Recueil, points 56 et 109).

71 Par conséquent, seule la mesure adoptée par le secrétaire général de la Commission, ayant la nature d'une décision et remplaçant intégralement la prise de position précédente, est susceptible de produire des effets juridiques de nature à affecter les intérêts du demandeur et, partant, de faire l'objet d'un recours en annulation en vertu de l'article 230 CE (voir, en ce sens, arrêts Franchet et Byk/Commission, point 70 supra, point 48, et Internationaler Hilfsfonds/Commission, point 70 supra, points 57 et 109).

73 Or, la requérante n'a pas adressé à la Commission de demande confirmative à la suite de cette réponse initiale. Seule la décision du secrétaire général étant susceptible de recours, un tel recours n'est pas, en principe, recevable à l'égard de la lettre du 14 décembre 2005.

74 La lettre de la Commission du 14 décembre 2005 est cependant entachée d'un vice de forme. La Commission a en effet omis d'informer la requérante, comme le lui impose l'article 7, paragraphe 1, du règlement n° 1049/2001, de son droit de présenter une demande confirmative.

75 Cette irrégularité a pour conséquence de rendre recevable, à titre exceptionnel, un recours en annulation contre la demande initiale. S'il en était autrement, la Commission pourrait se soustraire au contrôle du juge communautaire en raison d'un vice de forme qui lui est imputable. Or, il ressort de la jurisprudence que, la Communauté européenne étant une communauté de droit dans laquelle les institutions sont soumises au contrôle de la conformité de leurs actes avec le traité, les modalités procédurales applicables aux recours dont le juge communautaire est saisi doivent être interprétées, dans toute la mesure du possible, d'une manière telle que ces modalités puissent recevoir une application qui contribue à la mise en œuvre de l'objectif de garantir une protection juridictionnelle effective des droits que tirent les justiciables du droit communautaire (voir arrêt de la Cour du 17 juillet 2008, Athinaïki Techniki/Commission, C–521/06 P, non encore publié au Recueil, point 45, et la jurisprudence citée). L'exigence d'un contrôle juridictionnel constitue en effet un principe général de droit communautaire, qui découle des traditions constitutionnelles communes aux États membres et qui a trouvé sa consécration dans les articles 6 et 13 de la convention de sauvegarde des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales (CEDH), signée à Rome le 4 novembre 1950 (arrêts de la Cour du 15 mai 1986, Johnston, 222/84, Rec. p. 1651, point 18 ; du 27 novembre 2001, Commission/Autriche, C–424/99, Rec. p. I–9285, point 45, et du 25 juillet 2002, Unión de Pequeños Agricultores/Conseil, C–50/00 P, Rec. p. I–6677, point 39). Le droit à un recours effectif a, en outre, été réaffirmé par l'article 47 de la charte des droits fondamentaux de l'Union européenne proclamée le 7 décembre 2000 à Nice (JO 2000, C 364, p. 1).

76 Pour le surplus, la lettre du 14 décembre 2005 ne fait que préciser la motivation de la décision de rejet, en fournissant des éléments d'informations complémentaires concernant l'évaluation qualitative des offres. Sur ce point, elle est dépourvue de tout caractère décisionnel et ne constitue pas un acte attaquable au sens de l'article 230 CE.

77 Il résulte de ce qui précède que les conclusions dirigées contre les lettres de la Commission des 7 et 14 décembre 2005 sont irrecevables, hormis en ce qui concerne le refus de communication de la composition du comité d'évaluation.

78 Il y a donc lieu de circonscrire l'objet du présent recours à l'annulation des décisions d'attribution et de rejet ainsi que de la décision de refus de la Commission de communiquer la composition du comité d'évaluation figurant dans la lettre du 14 décembre 2005 et de déclarer irrecevables les conclusions dirigées contre la prétendue décision implicite par laquelle la Commission aurait refusé de retirer les décisions d'attribution et de rejet et contre les deux lettres de réponse de la Commission des 7 et 14 décembre 2005, hormis en ce qui concerne le refus de communication de la composition du comité d'évaluation.

2. Sur le fond

79 La requérante invoque sept moyens à l'appui de son recours en annulation, à savoir la violation du principe d'égalité de traitement du fait que la Commission n'a pas prévu dans le cahier des charges la reprise des contrats de travail des agents affectés par la requérante à l'exécution du contrat de surveillance, la violation des dispositions de la loi du 19 décembre 2003 et de la directive 2001/23 qu'elle transpose, la violation du principe d'égalité de traitement du fait de la détention par l'intervenante d'informations privilégiées, la violation de la décision de la Commission du 28 mai 2004 et des règles de concurrence, la violation de l'obligation de motivation, du principe de transparence et du droit d'accès aux documents des institutions, la violation des règles du marché, du cahier des charges en ce qui concerne l'évaluation du critère relatif à la formation de base de secouriste ou de pompier volontaire et l'existence d'une erreur manifeste d'appréciation, et la violation du principe de transparence et du droit d'accès aux documents des institutions.

80 Il y a lieu de relever, à titre liminaire, que tous les moyens de la requérante à l'exception du septième visent, s'agissant des chefs de conclusions recevables de la requérante, à obtenir l'annulation des décisions d'attribution et de rejet. Le septième moyen est formulé au soutien de la demande d'annulation de la lettre de la Commission du 14 décembre 2005.

81 S'agissant des six premiers moyens visant à l'annulation des décisions d'attribution et de rejet, le Tribunal estime opportun d'examiner d'abord la légalité de la décision d'attribution.

82 Le premier moyen suppose que, à défaut d'applicabilité de la loi du 19 décembre 2003, la Commission aurait dû imposer au nouvel attributaire la reprise de la totalité des contrats de travail des salariés de la requérante en application du principe d'égalité de traitement. Ce moyen présente donc un caractère subsidiaire par rapport au deuxième moyen, de sorte qu'il y a lieu d'examiner en premier lieu le deuxième moyen.

a) Sur le deuxième moyen, tiré de la violation des dispositions de la loi du 19 décembre 2003, transposant la directive 2001/23

83 Le présent moyen se décompose en deux branches tirées, d'une part, de l'irrégularité de l'offre de Group 4 Falck et, d'autre part, de l'illégalité du cahier des charges de la Commission.

Sur la première branche, tirée de l'irrégularité de l'offre de Group 4 Falck

– Arguments des parties

84 La requérante prétend que, si la loi du 19 décembre 2003 et la directive 2001/23 qu'elle transpose s'appliquent à la présente affaire, il en résulte que l'offre de Group 4 Falck est irrégulière pour ne pas avoir comporté l'obligation de reprendre les contrats de travail des agents de Brink's affectés à l'exécution du contrat de surveillance passé avec la Commission.

85 Elle fait valoir que Group 4 Falck a affirmé, dans un courrier du 14 décembre 2005 adressé à la requérante, son intention de ne pas respecter la loi du 19 décembre 2003, puisque Group 4 Falck y explique qu'elle ne serait disposée à engager qu'environ 40 personnes en priorité parmi les anciens salariés de Brink's. Elle souligne que, à la date du 31 mars 2006, Group 4 Falck avait repris 56 des 173 salariés que Brink's avait affectés à la réalisation du marché.

86 Dès lors, la requérante estime que Group 4 Falck a violé la législation luxembourgeoise et la directive 2001/23 qu'elle transpose, en ne reprenant qu'une partie de ses anciens salariés sans maintenir leurs droits. Le refus de la Commission de retirer sa décision d'attribution, en dépit des éléments portés à sa connaissance par la requérante, serait donc illégal.

87 La Commission conteste l'applicabilité de la loi invoquée par la requérante au motif qu'aucun transfert d'entreprise ne serait intervenu en l'espèce. Elle fait valoir à titre subsidiaire que, même si un transfert d'entreprise avait eu lieu, elle ne pouvait pas en avoir connaissance au moment où elle a préparé l'appel d'offres.

88 Group 4 Falck se rallie à la position de la Commission sur la non-applicabilité de la loi du 19 décembre 2003. Elle fait également valoir que, étant donné que la reprise d'une partie essentielle du personnel est une condition déterminante dans la réalisation d'un transfert d'entreprise et que le cahier des charges ne l'imposait pas, la directive 2001/23 ne pouvait pas s'appliquer a priori.

89 Aux termes de l'article 1er, paragraphe 1, sous a), de la directive 2001/23, transposée en droit luxembourgeois par l'article 1er de la loi du 19 décembre 2003 invoquée par la requérante, ladite directive « est applicable à tout transfert d'entreprise, d'établissement ou de partie d'entreprise ou d'établissement à un autre employeur résultant d'une cession conventionnelle ou d'une fusion ».

90 Aux termes du paragraphe 1, sous b), de ce même article, « est considéré comme transfert, au sens de la présente directive, celui d'une entité économique maintenant son identité, entendue comme un ensemble organisé de moyens, en vue de la poursuite d'une activité économique, que celle-ci soit essentielle ou accessoire ».

91 Selon la jurisprudence de la Cour, le critère décisif pour établir l'existence d'un transfert au sens de la directive 2001/23 est de savoir si l'entité en question garde son identité, ce qui résulte notamment de la poursuite effective de l'exploitation ou de sa reprise (voir, par analogie, arrêts de la Cour du 18 mars 1986, Spijkers, 24/85, Rec. p. 1119, points 11 et 12, et du 11 mars 1997, Süzen, C–13/95, Rec. p. I–1259, point 10).

92 La seule circonstance que le service fourni par l'ancien et le nouveau titulaire du marché soit similaire ne permet pas de conclure au transfert d'une entité économique entre les entreprises successives. En effet, une telle entité ne saurait être réduite à l'activité dont elle est chargée. Son identité ressort également d'autres éléments tels que le personnel qui la compose, son encadrement, l'organisation de son travail, ses méthodes d'exploitation ou encore, le cas échéant, les moyens d'exploitation à sa disposition (arrêt de la Cour du 10 décembre 1998, Hidalgo e.a., C–173/96 et C–247/96, Rec. p. I–8237, point 30).

93 Ainsi, dans la mesure où, dans un secteur tel que le gardiennage, dans lequel l'activité repose essentiellement sur la main-d'œuvre, une collectivité de travailleurs que réunit durablement une activité commune peut correspondre à une entité économique, une telle entité est susceptible de maintenir son identité par-delà son transfert quand le nouvel attributaire du marché ne se contente pas de poursuivre l'activité en cause, mais reprend également une partie essentielle, en termes de nombre et de compétence, des effectifs que son prédécesseur affectait préalablement à cette tâche (arrêt Hidalgo e.a., point 92 supra, point 32).

94 Il résulte de ce qui précède que, en l'espèce, l'existence d'un transfert d'entreprise entre l'ancien et le nouveau titulaire du marché dépendait de la reprise éventuelle, par le nouvel attributaire, d'une partie essentielle, en termes de nombre et de compétence, des effectifs que la requérante affectait à l'exécution du contrat. Par conséquent, la Commission ne pouvait, ni lorsqu'elle a publié l'appel d'offres, ni à la date de la décision d'attribution, savoir si les conditions de fait requises pour qu'il y ait un transfert d'entreprise entraînant l'application de la loi du 19 décembre 2003 transposant la directive 2001/23 étaient réunies.

95 Par ailleurs, le courrier du 14 décembre 2005 invoqué par la requérante, dans lequel Group 4 Falck a manifesté sa volonté de recruter 40 personnes supplémentaires en priorité parmi les salariés de Brink's affectés à l'exécution du marché dont elle était titulaire, n'exprime qu'une intention. Celle-ci ne saurait être assimilée à la reprise d'une partie essentielle, en termes de nombre et de compétence, des effectifs (au nombre de 173) que Brink's affectait au marché litigieux, c'est-à-dire à la condition exigée par la jurisprudence pour qu'il y ait transfert d'entreprise (voir, en ce sens, arrêt Hidalgo e.a., point 92 supra, point 32).

96 De plus, cette intention a été exprimée postérieurement à la soumission de l'offre par Group 4 Falck et à la décision d'attribution. Or, dans le cadre d'un recours en annulation fondé sur l'article 230 CE, la légalité de l'acte communautaire concerné doit être appréciée en fonction des éléments de fait et de droit existant à la date où cet acte a été adopté (arrêt France/Commission, point 42 supra, point 7 ; arrêts du Tribunal du 25 juin 1998, British Airways e.a./Commission, T–371/94 et T–394/94, Rec. p. II–2405, point 81, et du 14 janvier 2004, Fleuren Compost/Commission, T–109/01, Rec. p. II–127, point 50) et des éléments d'information dont l'institution auteur de l'acte pouvait disposer au moment où elle l'a arrêté (voir, en ce sens, arrêt de la Cour du 24 septembre 2002, Falck et Acciaierie di Bolzano/Commission, C–74/00 P et C–75/00 P, Rec. p. I–7869, point 168). La requérante ne peut ainsi se prévaloir devant le juge communautaire d'éléments de fait postérieurs à la décision d'attribution ou dont la Commission ne pouvait avoir connaissance lors de l'adoption de celle-ci. Il en va de même de l'allégation de la requérante selon laquelle Group 4 Falck aurait repris, au 31 mars 2006, 56 des 173 salariés qu'elle avait affectés à l'exécution du marché litigieux.

97 Partant, il convient de conclure que les circonstances de fait nécessaires à l'existence d'un transfert d'entreprise n'étaient pas réunies au moment de la soumission de l'offre de Group 4 Falck le 12 octobre 2005, pas plus qu'au moment de la décision d'attribution.

98 Par ailleurs, il n'y a pas lieu de répondre au grief de la requérante portant sur l'illégalité du refus de la Commission de retirer sa décision d'attribution, compte tenu de l'absence de décision implicite de refus et de l'irrecevabilité des conclusions de la requérante tendant à l'annulation des lettres de la Commission des 7 et 14 décembre 2005, sauf en ce qui concerne le refus de communication de la composition du comité d'évaluation.

99 Par conséquent, il y a lieu de considérer que l'argument de la requérante ne saurait prospérer.

100 Il résulte de ce qui précède que la présente branche doit être rejetée.

Sur la deuxième branche, tirée de l'illégalité du cahier des charges de la Commission

– Arguments des parties

101 La requérante reproche à la Commission de ne pas avoir fait figurer dans le cahier des charges remis aux soumissionnaires l'inventaire de ses salariés et les conditions de leur contrat. En l'absence d'un tel inventaire, il aurait été impossible que l'une des offres soumises par les autres soumissionnaires puisse comporter la reprise desdits salariés.

102 La Commission estime que, à supposer même que l'existence d'un transfert d'entreprise soit avérée, il ne pourrait en être déduit une obligation pour le pouvoir adjudicateur d'imposer la reprise des contrats de travail dans le cahier des charges.

103 En vertu des principes de bonne administration et de coopération loyale entre les institutions communautaires et les États membres, les institutions sont tenues de s'assurer que les conditions prévues dans un appel d'offres n'incitent pas les soumissionnaires potentiels à violer la législation nationale applicable à leur activité (voir, en ce sens, arrêt du Tribunal du 6 juillet 2000, AICS/Parlement, T–139/99, Rec. p. II–2849, point 41).

104 En l'espèce, l'absence d'inventaire des salariés de Brink's dans le cahier des charges ne saurait être considérée comme incitant les soumissionnaires ou l'adjudicataire à violer la législation nationale relative au maintien des droits des travailleurs en cas de transfert d'entreprise. La Commission n'a pas imposé dans son cahier des charges de condition qui entraînerait nécessairement la violation de la loi du 19 décembre 2003, en rendant impossible toute reprise des contrats de travail dans l'hypothèse d'un transfert d'entreprise. Les seules conditions du cahier des charges relatives au personnel, à savoir l'exigence d'une expérience professionnelle minimale d'un an, de trois ans ou de cinq ans en fonction de l'emploi occupé et l'exigence selon laquelle au moins 10 % des agents de sécurité doivent posséder une formation de base de secouriste et/ou de pompier volontaire, ne faisaient pas obstacle au respect d'une éventuelle obligation résultant de la loi du 19 décembre 2003 de reprendre les contrats de travail des agents que Brink's affectait à l'exécution du contrat de surveillance.

105 Par ailleurs, le cahier des charges prévoyait expressément que l'attributaire du marché devait être en conformité, à la signature du contrat, avec la réglementation en vigueur au Luxembourg, invitant ainsi les soumissionnaires à s'assurer qu'ils respectaient la législation nationale en vigueur.

106 Il résulte de ce qui précède que le grief formulé par la requérante relatif à l'absence d'inventaire de ses salariés dans le cahier des charges doit être rejeté.

b) Sur le premier moyen, tiré de la violation du principe d'égalité de traitement appliqué aux marchés publics

Arguments des parties

107 Selon la requérante, la Commission, en imposant une ancienneté minimale d'un an, l'aurait placée dans une position défavorable dans la mesure où, étant en charge du marché depuis les années 70, elle emploie un grand nombre de salariés dont l'ancienneté est supérieure à un an, ce qui représente une charge salariale certaine que les autres soumissionnaires n'avaient pas à intégrer dans leurs offres. Si la reprise de la totalité des contrats de travail, avec maintien de leurs droits, des salariés de Brink's affectés au marché litigieux ne s'imposait pas au nouvel attributaire, la Commission aurait donc dû la rendre obligatoire pour éviter une telle rupture du principe d'égalité de traitement.

108 La requérante estime qu'imposer la reprise des contrats de travail n'aurait pas empêché les autres soumissionnaires de proposer des prix inférieurs, en optimisant d'autres aspects de leurs offres.

109 La Commission fait valoir que la condition d'une expérience professionnelle minimale d'un an pour les agents est une exigence réaliste et adaptée à la spécificité de la mission de surveillance de ses locaux, qui a par ailleurs contribué à ouvrir le plus largement possible le marché à la concurrence.

110 Elle ajoute qu'exiger une expérience professionnelle minimale plus élevée, afin de prendre en compte les contraintes salariales qui pèsent sur Brink's, aurait été discriminatoire à l'égard des autres soumissionnaires.

111 La Commission estime par ailleurs qu'elle n'était pas habilitée par le droit luxembourgeois à imposer la reprise des contrats de travail.

112 Aux termes de l'article 89, paragraphe 1, du règlement financier, tous les marchés publics financés totalement ou partiellement par le budget respectent les principes de transparence, de proportionnalité, d'égalité de traitement et de non-discrimination.

113 Ainsi, selon une jurisprudence constante, le pouvoir adjudicateur est tenu, à chaque phase d'une procédure d'appel d'offres, au respect du principe d'égalité de traitement des soumissionnaires et, par voie de conséquence, au respect de l'égalité des chances de tous les soumissionnaires (arrêt de la Cour du 29 avril 2004, Commission/CAS Succhi di Frutta, C-496/99 P, Rec. p. I-3801, point 108 ; arrêts du Tribunal du 17 décembre 1998, Embassy Limousines & Services/Parlement, T-203/96, Rec. p. II-4239, point 85, et du 12 juillet 2007, Evropaïki Dynamiki/Commission, T-250/05, non publié au Recueil, point 45).

115 Quant au principe de transparence, qui en constitue le corollaire, il a essentiellement pour but de garantir l'absence de risque de favoritisme et d'arbitraire de la part du pouvoir adjudicateur. Il implique que toutes les conditions et modalités de la procédure d'attribution soient formulées de manière claire, précise et univoque, dans l'avis de marché ou dans le cahier des charges (arrêt Commission/CAS Succhi di Frutta, point 113 supra, point 111).

116 Dans le même sens, l'article 131, paragraphe 1, premier alinéa, des modalités d'exécution prévoit que « [l]es spécificités techniques doivent permettre l'égalité d'accès des candidats et soumissionnaires et ne pas avoir pour effet de créer des obstacles injustifiés à l'ouverture des marchés à la concurrence ».

117 En l'espèce, la requérante prétend que, en imposant dans le cahier des charges une expérience professionnelle minimale d'un an, l'appel d'offres ne permettrait pas d'assurer l'égalité de traitement des soumissionnaires.

118 Il y a lieu de constater que la condition d'une expérience professionnelle dans le domaine du gardiennage d'un an au minimum pour les agents, prévue au point 21 du cahier des charges, s'applique indistinctement à tous les soumissionnaires.

119 Par ailleurs, cette condition a été énoncée de manière claire, précise et univoque.

120 En outre, l'exigence d'une expérience professionnelle minimale d'un an n'apparaît pas inappropriée au regard des missions de surveillance à accomplir dans le cadre de l'exécution du contrat. Il convient d'observer que, pour les emplois de responsable de site et de chef d'équipe, le cahier des charges exigeait une expérience professionnelle minimale de cinq ans dans le domaine du gardiennage, dont deux ans au minimum dans la responsabilité d'équipes de gardiennage, et une expérience professionnelle minimale de trois ans pour les opérateurs du dispatching de sécurité. Les dispositions du cahier des charges relatives à l'expérience professionnelle des agents dénotent donc l'intention du pouvoir adjudicateur d'adapter les exigences relatives à l'expérience professionnelle aux spécificités de l'emploi à occuper.

121 Au demeurant, la requérante ne conteste pas l'adéquation de l'exigence d'une expérience professionnelle minimale d'un an aux spécificités de la tâche à accomplir.

122 En tout état de cause, la Commission, ainsi qu'elle le souligne, aurait contribué à réduire le nombre de soumissionnaires potentiels en imposant une expérience professionnelle supérieure à un an et aurait par là même restreint le développement d'une concurrence effective sans que cela apparaisse justifié par les nécessités de la mission. Une telle condition aurait constitué un obstacle injustifié à l'ouverture des marchés au sens de l'article 131 des modalités d'exécution.

123 Il y a également lieu de relever que la directive 2001/23, transposée en droit luxembourgeois par la loi du 19 décembre 2003, a un champ d'application déterminé. Il n'appartenait pas à la Commission, dès lors que les conditions d'un transfert d'entreprise n'étaient pas réunies (voir points 89 à 97 ci-dessus), d'imposer la reprise des contrats de travail. En effet, la Commission n'a pas le pouvoir d'obliger une société à transférer ses contrats de travail, ni même à engager des personnes qu'elle n'a pas choisies.

124 Partant, il y lieu de conclure qu'il n'appartenait pas à la Commission, en vertu du principe d'égalité de traitement des soumissionnaires, d'imposer une expérience professionnelle minimale supérieure à un an, ni d'imposer la reprise des agents affectés par Brink's à l'exécution du marché. Le présent moyen doit donc être rejeté.

c) Sur le troisième moyen, tiré de la violation du principe d'égalité de traitement appliqué aux marchés publics, résultant de la détention par Group 4 Falck d'informations privilégiées au moment de la remise de son offre

125 La requérante estime que Group 4 Falck disposait d'informations privilégiées la concernant, qui ont pu l'aider et l'avantager dans la préparation de son offre. Il en résulterait une violation du principe d'égalité de traitement, plus particulièrement de l'égalité de traitement des soumissionnaires.

126 Ces informations essentielles auraient été transmises par Securicor Luxembourg – devenue Brink's – à son ancienne maison mère lors de la fusion entre Group 4 Falck A/S et Securicor, afin de répondre aux demandes d'informations additionnelles formulées par la Commission à la suite de la notification de la concentration. Il s'agirait notamment des chiffres d'affaires par clients et par activités, de données sur les contrats, de listes de clientèle, d'informations sur les personnes de contact ainsi que d'analyses des prix, des coûts, des marges et des bénéfices. À supposer même que la Commission ait pu légitimement ignorer ce fait lors de l'adjudication, elle aurait dû retirer sa décision d'attribution dès lors qu'il avait été porté à sa connaissance par la requérante dans un courrier du 5 décembre 2005.

129 La Commission précise qu'elle n'avait aucune raison de croire, au moment de l'attribution du marché, que l'attributaire disposait de telles informations, un dispositif d'isolement ayant été mis en place à la suite de la décision de la Commission du 28 mai 2004. La requérante n'a pas démontré, selon elle, que Group 4 Falck aurait bénéficié d'informations privilégiées.

130 L'intervenante indique n'avoir jamais obtenu d'informations sur la requérante ou sur le marché litigieux de la part de sa maison mère, Group 4 Falck A/S, ou de la société née de la fusion des deux groupes, la société Group 4 Securicor plc, ni avant ni après la fusion. Elle relève que, en tout état de cause, les informations qui auraient été transmises, selon la requérante, étaient trop générales pour pouvoir présenter une utilité dans le cadre de cette soumission, dans la mesure où n'y figuraient pas des données essentielles telles que le détail des frais (salaires, taux d'absentéisme, frais d'encadrement et de formation) et la marge bénéficiaire concernant le marché en cause. Ces informations seraient en outre anciennes et obsolètes, compte tenu des changements intervenus à la suite de l'intégration de la requérante dans le groupe Brink's Inc. et des différences importantes entre l'appel d'offres et le précédent (redéfinition des catégories d'agents et des missions qui leur sont assignées, obligations nouvelles de formation et contraintes renforcées en ce qui concerne le matériel).

131 Il convient de déterminer si Group 4 Falck détenait des informations confidentielles qui ont pu l'avantager de manière déterminante dans la préparation de son offre. Cela exige qu'il soit établi, d'une part, que des informations essentielles de cette nature ont été transmises par la requérante lors de la notification de la concentration et, d'autre part, que ces informations ont ensuite été communiquées à Group 4 Falck par sa société mère et utilisées par Group 4 Falck lors de la préparation de son offre.

132 La requérante prétend avoir transmis des informations essentielles à son ancienne maison mère, Securicor, dont aurait bénéficié Group 4 Falck. Elle a produit, en annexe à la requête, une série de messages électroniques adressés entre le 5 mars 2004 et le 26 avril 2004 à Securicor, qui comportent notamment des informations relatives au marché du gardiennage au Luxembourg, aux chiffres d'affaires produits par les dix contrats les plus importants de la requérante (au premier rang desquels figure le gardiennage des locaux de la Commission) et à la structure des coûts, directs et indirects, de son activité de gardiennage. Des données sociales, telles que le taux moyen d'arrêts maladie constaté ou l'importance des heures supplémentaires ainsi que le taux de marge relatif à l'activité de gardiennage de la requérante, figurent également parmi les informations transmises.

133 Ces informations, relatives à l'ensemble de l'activité de gardiennage de la requérante et non au marché litigieux, ne sont pas de nature à avoir avantagé le soumissionnaire retenu de manière déterminante, car elles ne permettent pas de calculer avec précision le prix de l'offre de la requérante.

134 La requérante n'apporte par ailleurs aucun élément de preuve au soutien de son affirmation selon laquelle ces informations auraient été transmises à Group 4 Falck par sa société mère et utilisées par Group 4 Falck lors de la préparation de son offre, en violation des déclarations de confidentialité signées par les salariés de Group 4 Falck, en application de la décision de la Commission du 28 mai 2004.

135 Il convient également de relever que la requérante et l'intervenante n'étaient pas les seules entreprises ayant soumissionné. À supposer même que lesdites informations aient été en possession du soumissionnaire retenu, il eût été risqué pour celui-ci de formuler son offre exclusivement par rapport à celle de la requérante, qui n'était que l'une des six soumissionnaires, en se fondant sur des données datant de 2004 et antérieures à la reprise de Securicor Luxembourg – devenue Brink's – par le groupe Brink's, qui pouvait avoir, entre-temps, introduit des changements importants dans la gestion de l'entreprise.

136 Il résulte de ce qui précède que la requérante n'a démontré ni avoir transmis lors de la notification de l'opération de concentration des informations confidentielles de nature à avantager Group 4 Falck dans la préparation de son offre, ni que de telles informations auraient été transmises à Group 4 Falck par sa société mère et utilisées par le soumissionnaire retenu dans le cadre de l'appel d'offres.

137 Le présent moyen doit donc être rejeté.

d) Sur le quatrième moyen, tiré de la violation de la décision de la Commission du 28 mai 2004

Arguments des parties

138 Par le présent moyen, la requérante fait valoir que la décision d'attribution est illégale au motif qu'elle méconnaîtrait la décision de la Commission du 28 mai 2004.

139 La décision de la Commission du 28 mai 2004 aurait autorisé la fusion entre Group 4 Falck A/S et Securicor sous réserve de la cession d'un certain nombre d'actifs, parmi lesquels figurait Securicor Luxembourg, cédée au groupe Brink's. Selon la requérante, l'attribution à Group 4 Falck du marché litigieux antérieurement détenu par Brink's aurait pour effet de permettre à Securicor de récupérer les parts de marchés et les actifs cédés dans le cadre de la fusion. Cette récupération aurait en outre été permise par la détention d'informations confidentielles obtenues par le groupe Group 4 Securicor lors de la notification de la concentration.

140 La Commission conteste toute violation de sa décision du 28 mai 2004, en particulier des engagements pris par Group 4 Falck A/S et Securicor pour obtenir une décision de compatibilité de la concentration avec le marché commun.

141 La Commission souligne que l'engagement 10 figurant dans la décision, selon lequel Group 4 Falck Securicor ne devait pas solliciter activement les clients des sociétés cédées pendant une période de six mois à compter de la cession, n'a pas été violé. La soumission de l'offre de Group 4 Falck aurait en effet eu lieu le 12 octobre 2005, soit postérieurement au délai de six mois suivant la cession, intervenue le 4 mars 2005.

142 Selon l'engagement 9 figurant dans la décision de la Commission du 28 mai 2004, Group 4 Falck aurait été également tenue de ne pas obtenir ou utiliser des informations confidentielles concernant la requérante. Or, selon la Commission, Group 4 Falck n'a pas pu violer cet engagement compte tenu du dispositif d'isolement mis en place lors de l'opération de concentration, comme l'atteste le rapport du mandataire chargé de contrôler le respect des engagements pris. La Commission estime que la requérante n'apporte aucune preuve tendant à démontrer que les engagements pris auraient été violés.

143 La requérante précise, dans le mémoire en réplique, que le dispositif d'isolement n'a été mis en place qu'après l'adoption de la décision de la Commission du 28 mai 2004 et ne vise que les informations transmises à compter de celle-ci, alors que les informations confidentielles concernant le marché litigieux ont été transmises avant cette date.

144 Elle ajoute également que, si le calendrier prévu par l'avis de préinformation avait été respecté, Group 4 Falck n'aurait pas été autorisée à participer à la procédure d'appel d'offres, compte tenu du délai de six mois prévu par l'engagement 10.

145 La Commission souligne que la date de publication de l'avis de marché annoncée dans l'avis de préinformation n'est qu'une estimation, à caractère indicatif. Elle explique que l'élaboration de l'appel d'offres a pris plus de temps qu'initialement prévu, car il concernait différents organes de la Communauté.

146 L'argument de la requérante selon lequel l'attribution du marché litigieux à Group 4 Falck conduirait le groupe issu de la fusion à récupérer les parts de marchés, donc les actifs cédés, doit être écarté. L'objectif de la cession des actifs détenus par Securicor sur le marché du gardiennage au Luxembourg imposée par la décision de la Commission du 28 mai 2004 est d'empêcher que la concentration ne conduise à créer une position dominante sur ce marché. Cette cession n'a pas pour objet d'interdire au groupe issu de la fusion de reconstituer ses parts de marché sur le marché concerné, dès lors que cette reconstitution de ses parts de marché résulte du libre jeu de la concurrence, ce qui est le cas en l'espèce. L'interprétation que la requérante fait de la cession d'actifs imposée par la décision de la Commission du 28 mai 2004 conduirait à fausser le libre jeu de la concurrence, en figeant de manière définitive la part de marché détenue par la filiale du groupe issu de la fusion sur le marché concerné.

147 En ce qui concerne la violation de l'engagement 9 relatif à l'interdiction d'obtenir et d'utiliser des informations confidentielles, il convient de relever que la requérante n'apporte aucun élément de fait ou de preuve au soutien de son affirmation selon laquelle cet engagement aurait été violé.

148 L'engagement 10 de la décision de la Commission du 28 mai 2004 interdisant toute sollicitation active de ses anciens clients (dont la Commission fait partie) par Group 4 Falck durant une période de six mois à compter de la cession, soit jusqu'au 4 septembre 2005, n'a pas davantage été violé. Seule la soumission formelle d'une offre est en effet susceptible d'être considérée comme une sollicitation active, en ce qui concerne un marché faisant l'objet d'un appel d'offres. Or, l'offre de Group 4 Falck a été soumise le 12 octobre 2005, après l'expiration du délai. Ni la demande de Group 4 Falck formulée le 25 mars 2005, visant à être informée de la date à laquelle le cahier des charges serait disponible, ni celle visant à obtenir les spécifications de l'appel d'offres, déposée le 1er septembre 2005, ne peuvent être considérées comme une sollicitation active dans ce contexte.

149 Par ailleurs, l'argument de la requérante fondé sur le décalage entre la publication de l'appel d'offres et la date annoncée dans l'avis de préinformation doit être rejeté. La date annoncée dans cet avis ne constitue en effet qu'une estimation, dépourvue de caractère contraignant pour le pouvoir adjudicateur.

150 Il résulte de ce qui précède que le présent moyen doit être écarté.

e) Sur le cinquième moyen, tiré de la violation de l'obligation de motivation, du principe de transparence et du droit d'accès aux documents des institutions

Arguments des parties

151 Selon la requérante, la Commission a violé l'obligation de motivation prévue par l'article 253 CE, l'article 12, paragraphe 1, de la directive 92/50/CEE du Conseil, du 18 juin 1992, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de services (JO L 209, p. 1), l'article

100, paragraphe 2, du règlement financier et l'article 149, paragraphe 3, des modalités d'exécution.

152 Elle estime que la seule communication des notes respectivement attribuées à Group 4 Falck et à elle-même au titre de chaque critère d'attribution, sans préciser la méthode d'évaluation retenue ni son application pratique, constitue une motivation insuffisante. La requérante rappelle qu'elle a clairement indiqué à la Commission, dans sa lettre du 8 décembre 2005, qu'elle jugeait insuffisante la motivation qu'elle avait fournie.

153 La requérante estime que la réponse fournie par la Commission dans son courrier du 14 décembre 2005, se bornant à lui indiquer que Group 4 Falck avait fourni suffisamment de documents probants, est inacceptable pour une institution astreinte à une obligation de transparence.

154 En outre, la requérante prétend que, en ne lui communiquant pas les documents fournis par Group 4 Falck afin de prouver les informations requises par le cahier des charges, la Commission a violé le droit d'accès aux documents des institutions. De plus, ce refus ne reposerait sur aucun motif légitime. Elle estime que la Commission aurait pu lui communiquer une version anonymisée des documents.

155 La Commission fait valoir qu'elle a suffisamment motivé ses décisions d'attribution et de rejet au regard de la jurisprudence relative à l'étendue de l'obligation de motivation des actes en matière de marchés publics.

156 Elle ajoute que sa motivation étant suffisante, elle n'avait pas à communiquer les documents probants fournis par Group 4 Falck dans le cadre de la soumission de son offre.

157 À titre liminaire, il convient de relever que la requérante a confirmé, en réponse à une question écrite du Tribunal, que, par le présent moyen, en dépit de l'intitulé de celui-ci, elle se limite à invoquer la violation de l'obligation de motivation.

158 Il est de jurisprudence constante que la motivation exigée par l'article 253 CE doit être adaptée à la nature de l'acte en cause et doit faire apparaître de façon claire et non équivoque le raisonnement de l'institution auteur de l'acte, de manière à permettre aux intéressés de connaître les justifications de la mesure prise et à la juridiction compétente d'exercer son contrôle (arrêt de la Cour du 2 avril 1998, Commission/Sytraval et Brink's France, C–367/95 P, Rec. p. I–1719, point 63 ; arrêts du Tribunal du 14 juillet 1995, Koyo Seiko/Conseil, T–166/94, Rec. p. II–2129, point 103, et du 8 mai 1996, Adia Interim/Commission, T–19/95, Rec. p. II–321, point 32).

159 Contrairement à ce que fait valoir la requérante, l'obligation de motivation du rejet de son offre qui incombe à la Commission ne relève pas, en l'espèce, de la directive 92/50. Ainsi qu'il a été rappelé aux points 1 à 3 ci-dessus, le règlement financier et les modalités d'exécution sont les dispositions pertinentes applicables en l'espèce et, plus précisément, l'article 100, paragraphe 2, du règlement financier et l'article 149 des modalités d'exécution, qui régissent l'obligation de motivation qui incombe à l'institution compétente dans le cadre d'une procédure de passation des marchés publics.

160 Or, il résulte de ces dispositions ainsi que d'une jurisprudence constante que le pouvoir adjudicateur satisfait à son obligation de motivation s'il se contente, tout d'abord, d'informer immédiatement les soumissionnaires écartés des motifs du rejet de leur offre et s'il fournit, ensuite, aux soumissionnaires ayant fait une offre recevable et qui en font la demande expresse, les caractéristiques et avantages relatifs de l'offre retenue ainsi que le nom de l'attributaire dans un délai de quinze jours à compter de la réception d'une demande écrite (arrêt du Tribunal du 10 septembre 2008, Evropaïki Dynamiki/Commission, T–465/04, non encore publié au Recueil, point 47, et la jurisprudence citée).

161 Cette façon de procéder est conforme à la finalité de l'obligation de motivation inscrite à l'article 253 CE.

162 Par conséquent, pour déterminer si, en l'espèce, la Commission a respecté son obligation de motivation, il y a lieu d'examiner les décisions d'attribution et de rejet ainsi que les lettres de la Commission des 5, 7 et 14 décembre 2005, envoyées à la requérante en réponse à ses demandes expresses des 1er, 5 et 8 décembre 2005 visant à obtenir des informations supplémentaires sur les décisions d'attribution et de rejet.

163 Dans la décision de rejet, la Commission, conformément à l'article 100, paragraphe 2, du règlement financier, a exposé les motifs pour lesquels l'offre de la requérante avait été rejetée, à savoir que ladite offre n'avait pas obtenu la meilleure note attribuée à l'issue de l'évaluation finale. Elle informait aussi la requérante de la possibilité de demander des renseignements additionnels sur les motifs du rejet de son offre et, cette dernière ayant été recevable, d'obtenir les caractéristiques et avantages relatifs de l'offre retenue ainsi que le nom de l'attributaire du marché.

164 S'agissant des lettres des 5, 7 et 14 décembre 2005, il importe de relever, d'emblée, que la Commission a répondu aux demandes écrites de la requérante des 1er, 5 et 8 décembre 2005 dans le respect du délai maximal de quinze jours de calendrier, à compter de la réception desdites demandes, tel que prévu à l'article 149, paragraphe 3, des modalités d'exécution.

Le cahier des charges prévoyait d'attribuer le marché à l'offre économiquement la plus avantageuse, suivant la méthodologie qui y est détaillée.

L'attributaire du marché relatif à l'appel d'offres […] est la société :

[Group 4 Falck]

[…]

La comparaison de l'évaluation de votre offre par rapport à celle de l'attributaire est détaillée dans le tableau repris ci-dessous :

	Group Falck 4	[Brink's]
Évaluation qualitative	30/30	30/30
Évaluation financière	70/70	68,67/70
Évaluation finale	100/100	98,67/100
RANG	1	2

166 La lettre du 14 décembre 2005, qui contenait plusieurs informations en réponse aux précisions sollicitées par la requérante, indiquait notamment :

« […]

En complément à notre courrier précédent, veuillez trouver ci–après les informations complémentaires à l'évaluation qualitative des offres :

Évaluation qualitative	Group 4 Falck	[Brink's]
Critère 26 : Organisation mise en place pour assurer les prestations objet du contrat	10/10	10/10
Critère 27 : Organisation mise en place – délais de mise en place d'un dispositif efficace lors de diverses manifestations ou événements imprévus ou de toute modification apportée au dispositif de gardiennage	10/10	10/10
Critère 28 : Formation de base de secouriste et/ou de pompier volontaire	10/10	10/10
TOTAL	30/30	30/30

En ce qui concerne les critères 26 et 27, les descriptions fournies, tant par Brink's que par Group 4 Falck, ont été jugées très complètes et très satisfaisantes. Elles méritent dès lors le maximum de points, conformément à la méthodologie détaillée au cahier des charges.

En ce qui concerne le critère 28, Group 4 Falck a fourni suffisamment de documents probants permettant de justifier les 10 points obtenus pour ce critère.

Pour des raisons de confidentialité de l'offre de votre concurrent, il ne nous est pas autorisé de vous en détailler davantage le contenu.

167 Il y a lieu de constater que, en précisant, dans ces lettres, le nom de l'attributaire ainsi que les caractéristiques et les avantages relatifs de l'offre retenue par rapport à celle de la requérante au regard des critères d'attribution déterminés dans le cahier des charges, la Commission a motivé à suffisance de droit le rejet de l'offre de la requérante.

170 Enfin, la requérante ne peut valablement soutenir qu'elle n'a pas été informée par la Commission de la méthode d'évaluation retenue pour chaque critère ainsi que de son application pratique.

172 S'agissant des critères figurant aux points 26 et 27 du cahier des charges, ce dernier décrivait la méthode d'évaluation suivie en rappelant notamment qu'une description très satisfaisante de l'organisation mise en place afin, d'une part, d'assurer de manière optimale les prestations sur les différents sites et, d'autre part, de minimiser les délais de mise en œuvre d'un dispositif efficace lors de diverses manifestations ou événements imprévus ou de toute modification apportée au dispositif de gardiennage conduirait à l'obtention de la note maximale, soit 10 points, pour chacun de ces deux critères. Dans sa lettre du 14 décembre 2005, la Commission a explicité l'application qu'elle a opérée de cette méthode en indiquant à la requérante que les descriptions fournies par Brink's et Group 4 Falck au titre de ces deux critères ont été jugées très satisfaisantes et que le maximum de points leur a donc été attribué, conformément à la méthodologie détaillée dans le cahier des charges.

173 S'agissant du critère figurant au point 28 du cahier des charges, ce dernier précise la méthode d'évaluation retenue, en indiquant que l'offre présentant le pourcentage le plus grand d'agents ayant suivi une formation de base de secouriste ou de pompier volontaire se verrait attribuer le maximum de points, les autres offres se voyant attribuer une note inférieure en proportion de leur écart avec le pourcentage le plus élevé. L'attribution de la note maximale à l'offre de la requérante et à celle du soumissionnaire retenu, portée à la connaissance de la requérante par la lettre du 14 décembre 2005, signifiait dès lors que ces deux entreprises avaient indiqué un pourcentage identique. En conséquence, l'application de la méthode prévue par le cahier des charges n'appelait pas, au titre de l'obligation de motivation, d'explication particulière de la part de la Commission, en sus des précisions données à la requérante en réponse à sa demande d'éclaircissement relative aux documents probants fournis par l'intervenante.

174 S'agissant de l'évaluation financière des offres, le point 29 du cahier des charges précisait que l'offre présentant le prix le plus bas se verrait attribuer le maximum de points, les autres offres obtenant une note inversement proportionnelle. Les notes attribuées à l'offre de la requérante et à celle du soumissionnaire retenu reposent donc sur un raisonnement mathématique dont l'application n'appelait pas d'explication complémentaire de la part de la Commission.

175 Au vu de ces informations, il y a lieu de conclure que la Commission s'est acquittée de son obligation de motivation, telle qu'interprétée par la jurisprudence.

176 Il y a lieu de relever également que la Commission n'était pas tenue de communiquer à la requérante, au titre de la motivation des décisions d'attribution et de rejet, les documents fournis par Group 4 Falck. En effet, l'article 100, paragraphe 2, du règlement financier prévoit uniquement que le pouvoir adjudicateur communique, à la suite d'une demande écrite, les caractéristiques et les avantages relatifs de l'offre retenue ainsi que le nom de l'attributaire.

177 Partant, le présent moyen doit être rejeté, la Commission n'ayant pas violé l'obligation de motivation.

f) Sur le sixième moyen, tiré de la violation des règles du marché, de la méconnaissance du cahier des charges en ce qui concerne l'évaluation du critère qualitatif relatif à la formation de base de secouriste et/ou de pompier volontaire des agents et d'une erreur manifeste d'appréciation

178 La requérante affirme que Group 4 Falk ne disposait pas, lors de la soumission de son offre, ni même au jour du dépôt de la requête, des agents de sécurité nécessaires à l'exécution du marché litigieux. Elle avance que l'intervenante n'a donc pas pu remettre les documents probants exigés par le point 28 du cahier des charges, à savoir les copies des certificats de formation des agents, afin de prouver que 100 % des agents de sécurité concernés disposaient d'une formation de secouriste et/ou de pompier volontaire comme elle l'annonçait dans son offre. Or, selon la requérante, l'indication d'un pourcentage non prouvé entraîne l'irrégularité de l'offre et de la décision lui attribuant le marché. À ce titre, l'offre de Group Falck aurait dû être rejetée.

179 La requérante estime que le pourcentage indiqué par l'intervenante dans son offre aurait dû, pour le moins, être réduit à hauteur du rapport entre le nombre de certificats fournis par Group 4 Falck et ceux produits par la requérante, soit à environ 45 % au lieu de 100 %.

180 La requérante insiste sur le fait que le critère figurant au point 28 du cahier des charges est un critère d'attribution, et non un engagement contractuel, et que le pourcentage annoncé devait être vérifié et vérifiable au jour de la soumission de l'offre.

181 La requérante conteste également, dans le mémoire en réplique et dans ses observations sur le mémoire en intervention, la valeur probante du courrier de la SNCH du 11 octobre 2005. Ce document ne saurait établir, selon elle, que 100 % des agents de sécurité de Group 4 Falck ont bénéficié de la formation requise, car il ne constitue qu'une certification d'un système de gestion de la qualité conforme au référentiel ISO 9001:2000 (ci-après « ISO 9001 ») fondée sur des sondages et donc soumise au risque de l'échantillonnage.

182 La requérante conteste par ailleurs la valeur probante de ce document au motif qu'il ne comporte pas de destinataire et qu'il ne mentionne pas le but exact pour lequel il aurait été établi. Elle estime également que son signataire n'était pas habilité pour engager la SNCH, dont il n'est ni gérant, ni administrateur. Elle affirme que des pressions auraient été exercées par Group 4 Falck sur les auditeurs de la SNCH afin d'obtenir la rédaction de la lettre du 11 octobre 2005.

184 La Commission considère que la notation ne s'effectue pas en fonction du nombre de certificats fournis, mais uniquement au regard du pourcentage indiqué, étant donné notamment que l'adjudicateur ne peut pas déterminer a priori le nombre d'agents nécessaires à l'exécution du contrat.

185 Selon la Commission, les 78 certificats produits par Group 4 Falck prouvent que 100 % des employés que ce soumissionnaire entendait d'ores et déjà affecter au contrat étaient titulaires des formations exigées au moment de l'évaluation de l'offre. L'attestation de la SNCH prouverait quant à elle que 100 % des agents de Group 4 Falck devaient avoir suivi une formation de secouriste et/ou de pompier volontaire au moment de l'exécution du contrat, car elle attesterait qu'une formation est dispensée à chaque nouvel agent engagé.

186 La Commission fait valoir que l'interprétation du critère relatif à la formation des agents défendue par Brink's conduirait à exiger de la part des soumissionnaires qu'ils disposent déjà dans leurs effectifs de la totalité des agents nécessaires pour l'exécution du contrat. Il en résulterait une inégalité de traitement des soumissionnaires, qui destinerait immanquablement le contrat litigieux au contractant sortant.

187 L'intervenante fait valoir que, en fournissant 78 certificats de formation, elle a produit autant de certificats que d'agents visés au point 22 du cahier des charges. Concernant les autres agents susceptibles d'être affectés au marché, et non visés au point 22 du cahier des charges, Group 4 Falck aurait fourni l'attestation de la SNCH prouvant de manière globale leur formation en matière de premiers secours et de lutte contre l'incendie.

188 Selon l'intervenante, l'attestation de la SNCH qu'elle a fournie permet de prouver que le personnel opérationnel se voit dispenser une formation initiale dans les domaines des premiers secours et de la lutte contre l'incendie, conformément à la norme ISO 9001, dont le respect est attesté par un premier certificat, lui-même délivré par la SNCH à la suite de plusieurs procédures d'audit menées auprès de Group 4 Falck.

189 L'intervenante a contesté la recevabilité des nouvelles pièces produites par la requérante dans ses observations sur le mémoire en intervention au regard de l'article 48 du règlement de procédure. À titre subsidiaire, elle a déposé, lors de l'audience, de nouvelles pièces en réponse à celles déposées par la requérante.

– Sur la recevabilité des offres de preuve nouvelles présentées par la requérante et l'intervenante

190 Aux termes de l'article 48, paragraphe 1, du règlement de procédure, les parties peuvent faire des offres de preuve à l'appui de leur argumentation dans la réplique et la duplique, mais doivent alors motiver le retard apporté à la présentation de celles-ci. Cependant, selon la jurisprudence, la preuve contraire et l'ampliation des offres de preuve fournies à la suite d'une preuve contraire de la partie adverse dans son mémoire en défense ne sont pas visées par la règle de forclusion prévue à l'article 48, paragraphe 1, du règlement de procédure. En effet, cette disposition concerne les offres de preuve nouvelles et doit être lue à la lumière de l'article 66, paragraphe 2, dudit règlement, qui prévoit expressément que la preuve contraire et l'ampliation des offres de preuve restent réservées (arrêts de la Cour du 17 décembre 1998, Baustahlgewebe/Commission, C–185/95 P, Rec. p. I–8417, points 71 et 72, et du Tribunal du 12 septembre 2007, Commission/Trends, T–448/04, non publié au Recueil, point 52).

191 En l'espèce, la production par la requérante du courrier électronique de la SNCH du 18 décembre 2006, du courrier électronique du directeur juridique de Brink's du même jour, des attestations testimoniales de ses salariés ayant assisté à la réunion du 6 décembre 2006 ainsi que des pièces K1 à K4, relatives à la norme ISO 9001 et à la SNCH, constitue une offre de preuve contraire visant à répondre aux pièces produites dans le mémoire en intervention par l'intervenante en vue de démontrer la force probante du document du 11 octobre 2005 établi par la SNCH, à savoir les statuts de la SNCH et de la Société nationale de contrôle technique, le règlement grand-ducal du 28 décembre 2001 portant détermination d'un système d'accréditation des organismes de certification et d'inspection ainsi que des laboratoires d'essais et portant création de l'Office luxembourgeois d'accréditation et de surveillance, d'un comité d'accréditation et d'un recueil national des auditeurs qualité et techniques (Mém. A 2002, p. 94), et le certificat ISO 9001 du 14 février 2005 de Group 4 Falck. Elle n'est donc pas visée par la règle de forclusion prévue à l'article 48, paragraphe 1, du règlement de procédure et doit être déclarée recevable.

193 À titre liminaire, il convient de rappeler que la Commission dispose d'un large pouvoir d'appréciation quant aux éléments à prendre en considération en vue de la prise d'une décision de passer un marché sur appel d'offres et que le contrôle du Tribunal doit se limiter à la vérification du respect des règles de procédure et de motivation ainsi que de l'exactitude matérielle des faits, de l'absence d'erreur manifeste d'appréciation et de détournement de pouvoir (voir, en ce sens, arrêt de la Cour du 23 novembre 1978, Agence européenne d'intérims/Commission, 56/77, Rec. p. 2215, point 20 ; arrêts du Tribunal du 24 février 2000, ADT Projekt/Commission, T–145/98, Rec. p. II–387, point 147, et du 6 juillet 2005, TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium/Commission, T–148/04, Rec. p. II–2627, point 47).

194 Les parties donnent des interprétations divergentes du critère figurant au point 28 du cahier des charges. Il convient donc de rappeler le contenu du point 28, avant de préciser le sens de ce critère et, enfin, d'examiner la valeur probante du courrier de la SNCH du 11 octobre 2005.

195 Le point 28 du cahier des charges était ainsi libellé :

« Formation de base de secouriste et/ou de pompier volontaire

Les conditions spécifiques d'exécution des prestations stipulent qu'au minimum 10 % des agents de sécurité doivent être titulaires d'une formation de base de secouriste et/ou de pompier volontaire.

– Veuillez indiquer ici le pourcentage d'agents concernés par ces formations : … %

– Veuillez transmettre des documents probants permettant au pouvoir adjudicateur de vérifier le pourcentage annoncé (copie des certificats).

L'offre présentant le pourcentage maximum se verra attribuer le maximum de points. Les autres offres se verront attribuer une note inversement proportionnelle. »

196 La requérante et l'intervenante ont affirmé que 100 % de leurs agents de sécurité disposaient d'une telle formation et ont obtenu 10 points chacune. La requérante a produit 173 certificats de formation à l'appui de ce pourcentage, tandis que l'intervenante a fourni 78 carnets de formation, correspondant aux salariés qu'elle entendait d'ores et déjà affecter au contrat litigieux et dont les curriculum vitae avaient été transmis en application du point 22 du cahier des charges, ainsi qu'un courrier de la SNCH du 11 octobre 2005 attestant que, dans le cadre de la certification ISO 9001 de Group 4 Falck, une formation initiale dans le domaine des premiers secours et de la lutte incendie est dispensée à tout le personnel, que des plans de formation et de maintien à niveau des connaissances sont disponibles et que des audits réalisés en 2004 et en 2005 font ressortir que les procédures mises en place sont effectivement appliquées.

197 Selon la requérante, seuls les soumissionnaires en mesure de démontrer, comme elle l'a fait elle-même, qu'ils disposent, au jour de l'offre, de tous les agents de sécurité nécessaires à l'exécution du contrat et que la totalité de ces agents bénéficient d'une formation de secouriste et/ou de pompier volontaire étaient en droit d'indiquer un pourcentage de 100 %.

198 Cette interprétation ne saurait être admise. Elle conduirait en effet, comme le souligne la Commission, à une violation du principe d'égalité de traitement entre soumissionnaires, car elle avantagerait le titulaire actuel du marché, seul à disposer de l'ensemble des agents nécessaires. Or, il résulte de la jurisprudence qu'exiger que le soumissionnaire dispose au moment du dépôt de son offre du nombre de préposés requis reviendrait à privilégier le soumissionnaire en place (arrêt TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium/Commission, point 193 supra, point 90). Au surplus, il est impossible pour le pouvoir adjudicateur de déterminer à l'avance le nombre d'agents nécessaires, qui est susceptible de varier d'un soumissionnaire à l'autre en fonction des modalités d'organisation qu'il aura retenues.

199 Le pourcentage figurant au point 28 du cahier des charges doit donc être entendu comme relatif aux agents de sécurité qui seront affectés à l'exécution du contrat. Ce pourcentage devant être prouvé au stade de la soumission de l'offre, il est légitime d'accepter des documents prouvant, d'une part, que le pourcentage annoncé correspond au pourcentage d'agents disposant de la formation requise parmi les agents que le soumissionnaire était déjà tenu d'identifier en vertu du point 22 du cahier des charges et, d'autre part, qu'une politique de formation a été mise en place afin de garantir que chaque nouvel agent recruté disposera de la formation exigée.

200 S'agissant de la valeur probante du courrier de la SNCH du 11 octobre 2005, il y a lieu de relever que la requérante a annexé à ses observations sur le mémoire en intervention un courrier électronique du 18 décembre 2006 de l'auditeur de la SNCH ayant signé la lettre du 11 octobre 2005. Le signataire de ce courrier y précise que la lettre du 11 octobre 2005 ne doit être considérée ni comme un certificat, ni comme une attestation, et qu'elle ne saurait prouver que 100 % du personnel concerné a reçu une formation de secouriste et/ou de pompier volontaire. La portée de la lettre du 11 octobre 2005 se limite par conséquent, selon son signataire, à rappeler que l'existence d'une politique de formation et sa mise en œuvre effective ont été vérifiées et certifiées conformément à la norme ISO 9001.

201 Il convient de constater que la lettre de la SNCH du 11 octobre 2005 n'a pas été interprétée par la Commission, lors de l'évaluation de l'offre du soumissionnaire retenu, comme signifiant que 100 % des agents de Group 4 Falck avaient suivi, au jour de la soumission de l'offre, la formation exigée. Elle a simplement servi à démontrer qu'une politique de formation existait et était effectivement appliquée. Combiné aux 78 certificats de formation attestant que tous les agents que Group 4 Falck entendait d'ores et déjà affecter à l'exécution du marché litigieux disposaient d'une telle formation, cet élément a pu être considéré, à bon droit, comme de nature à prouver que 100 % des agents de sécurité employés par Group 4 Falck disposeront de la formation exigée lors de l'exécution du contrat.

203 Quant à la qualité du signataire, il convient de constater que la Commission n'a pas commis d'erreur manifeste d'appréciation en estimant qu'un auditeur de la SNCH était habilité à délivrer ce type de certificat. Le mandataire de la SNCH, dans un courrier du 27 février 2007 produit par l'intervenante lors de l'audience, a d'ailleurs confirmé que l'auditeur concerné était habilité à signer ce type de document en vertu des délégations de signature accordées aux experts de la SNCH.

204 L'argument de la requérante relatif aux pressions exercées par Group 4 Falck doit également être écarté, car la délivrance d'un courrier attestant que la certification ISO 9001 dont Group 4 Falck fait l'objet inclut l'existence d'une politique de formation, comme le prévoit cette norme, fait partie des services usuels qu'un organisme de certification offre à toute société certifiée par lui, sur simple demande, ainsi que l'a confirmé le mandataire de la SNCH dans le courrier précité du 27 février 2007.

205 À cet égard, il apparaît que le Tribunal a pu utilement se prononcer sur ce grief sur la base des arguments développés au cours de la procédure tant écrite qu'orale et au vu des documents produits. Dans ces conditions, il y a lieu de rejeter la demande d'audition de témoins présentée par la requérante.

206 Il résulte de ce qui précède que le présent moyen doit être écarté.

g) Sur le septième moyen, tiré de la violation du principe de transparence et du droit d'accès aux documents des institutions

207 Le présent moyen se décompose en deux branches, tirées, d'une part, de la violation du droit d'accès aux documents des institutions et, d'autre part, de l'existence d'un conflit d'intérêts s'agissant de l'un des membres du comité d'évaluation.

Sur la première branche, tirée de la violation du droit d'accès aux documents des institutions

– Arguments des parties

208 La requérante estime que, en refusant de lui communiquer la composition exacte du comité d'évaluation, la Commission vide de sa substance le droit d'accès des citoyens aux actes des institutions. Elle ajoute que ce refus ne saurait être justifié par le motif tiré de la protection de la vie privée et de l'intégrité des personnes.

209 Invoquant l'article 4 du règlement n° 1049/2001, la Commission estime que les informations demandées ne peuvent pas être divulguées. Elle prétend que la communication de la composition du comité d'évaluation porterait atteinte à la protection de la vie privée et à l'intégrité des individus.

210 Comme il a été indiqué aux points 72 à 75 ci-dessus, la lettre de la Commission du 14 décembre 2005 visée par le présent moyen, bien que constituant une réponse à une demande initiale, doit être considérée comme un acte susceptible de faire l'objet d'un recours en annulation, compte tenu du vice de forme résultant du défaut d'information relative au droit de présenter une demande confirmative.

211 Il convient donc de déterminer si la Commission a pu fonder sa réponse sur l'exception figurant à l'article 4, paragraphe 1, sous b), du règlement n° 1049/2001, relative à la protection de la vie privée et de l'intégrité de l'individu.

213 Selon une jurisprudence constante, l'examen requis pour le traitement d'une demande d'accès à des documents doit revêtir un caractère concret. En effet, la seule circonstance qu'un document concerne un intérêt protégé par une exception ne saurait suffire à justifier l'application de cette dernière (arrêt du Tribunal du 13 avril 2005, Verein für Konsumenteninformation/Commission, T–2/03, Rec. p. II–1121, point 69 ; voir également, en ce sens, arrêt du Tribunal du 26 avril 2005, Sison/Conseil, T–110/03, T–150/03 et T–405/03, Rec. p. II–1429, point 75). Une telle application ne saurait, en principe, être justifiée que dans l'hypothèse où l'institution a préalablement apprécié si l'accès au document était susceptible de porter concrètement et effectivement atteinte à l'intérêt protégé. En outre, le risque d'atteinte à un intérêt protégé doit, pour pouvoir être invoqué, être raisonnablement prévisible et non purement hypothétique (voir, en ce sens, arrêt de la Cour du 1er juillet 2008, Suède et Turco/Conseil, C–39/05 P et C–52/05 P, non encore publié au Recueil, point 43).

214 Afin de déterminer si l'exception prévue à l'article 4, paragraphe 1, sous b), du règlement n° 1049/2001 s'applique, il y a donc lieu d'examiner si l'accès de la requérante à la composition (nom, grade, ancienneté et affectation des membres) du comité d'évaluation est susceptible de porter concrètement et effectivement atteinte à la protection de la vie privée et de l'intégrité des membres dudit comité.

215 Il convient de constater que les membres du comité d'évaluation ont été nommés en qualité de représentants des services intéressés et non à titre personnel. Dans ces circonstances, la divulgation de la composition du comité d'évaluation ne met pas en jeu la vie privée des personnes concernées.

216 En tout état de cause, la divulgation de cette composition n'est pas susceptible de porter concrètement et effectivement atteinte à la protection de la vie privée et de l'intégrité des personnes concernées. La seule appartenance audit comité, au titre de l'entité que les personnes concernées représentaient, ne constitue pas une telle atteinte et la protection de la vie privée et de l'intégrité des personnes concernées n'est pas compromise.

217 Il n'est donc pas démontré que la communication de la composition du comité d'évaluation aurait été de nature à porter atteinte à la vie privée et à l'intégrité des personnes concernées au sens de l'article 4 du règlement n° 1049/2001.

218 Il y a donc lieu d'annuler la décision de la Commission du 14 décembre 2005 par laquelle elle refuse de communiquer à la requérante la composition du comité d'évaluation.

Sur la deuxième branche, tirée de l'existence d'un conflit d'intérêts concernant l'un des membres du comité d'évaluation

– Arguments des parties

219 La requérante prétend qu'un membre du comité d'évaluation a un lien d'alliance avec un employé de Group 4 Falck et qu'il existe donc un conflit d'intérêts s'agissant de ce membre du comité d'évaluation.

220 La Commission précise que le comité d'évaluation a été composé conformément aux prescriptions de l'article 146 des modalités d'exécution et que ses membres ont signé une déclaration d'absence de conflit d'intérêts et confirmé, en réponse à une question qu'elle leur a posée à la suite de l'allégation de la requérante, n'avoir aucun lien d'alliance avec une personne exerçant une activité professionnelle au sein de Group 4 Falck.

221 Elle ajoute que la requérante n'apporte pas la preuve que l'exercice impartial de ses fonctions par un membre du comité d'évaluation a été compromis par des intérêts économiques ou par tout autre intérêt partagé avec le bénéficiaire.

– Appréciation du Tribunal

222 La requérante affirme que « l'attitude de refus de la Commission ne fait que renforcer [ses] doutes […] quant à un traitement égalitaire de son offre et un examen de celle-ci conforme aux critères du cahier des charges selon les exigences de celui-ci » et que « [c]es doutes ont été renforcés tout dernièrement par la connaissance fortuite d'une information troublante puisqu'il semblerait qu'un des membres de ces comités ait un lien d'alliance avec une personne exerçant son activité professionnelle au sein de l'heureux attributaire du marché ».

223 La requérante, qui recourt à de simples allégations de fait formulées sur un mode purement dubitatif, n'apporte aucun commencement de preuve de nature à mettre en doute l'impartialité des membres du comité d'évaluation. Il y a donc lieu de rejeter ce grief.

224 S'agissant de la demande de mesure d'organisation de la procédure relative à la communication de la composition du comité d'évaluation, il y a lieu de relever que, à supposer même que la mesure demandée ait été prononcée, cette composition ne pourrait être communiquée qu'au Tribunal et non à la requérante, en vertu des dispositions de l'article 67, paragraphe 3, troisième alinéa, du règlement de procédure, aux termes duquel « [l]orsqu'un document dont l'accès a été refusé par une institution communautaire a été produit devant le Tribunal dans le cadre d'un recours portant sur la légalité de ce refus, ce document n'est pas communiqué aux autres parties ». La mesure demandée n'est donc pas de nature à permettre à la requérante d'apporter la démonstration que son allégation relative à l'existence d'un conflit d'intérêts concernant l'un des membres du comité d'évaluation est fondée. Elle n'est pas davantage susceptible d'éclairer le Tribunal, qui ne serait pas en mesure de vérifier l'existence du conflit d'intérêts allégué à partir de la liste des membres du comité d'évaluation, compte tenu de l'imprécision de cette allégation.

226 Il résulte de l'ensemble de ce qui précède que la lettre de la Commission du 14 décembre 2005 doit être annulée en ce qu'elle a refusé la communication de la composition du comité d'évaluation de l'appel d'offres et que les conclusions tendant à l'annulation de la décision d'attribution doivent être rejetées.

227 S'agissant de la demande d'annulation de la décision de rejet, elle ne peut qu'être rejetée par voie de conséquence du rejet de la demande d'annulation de la décision d'attribution, à laquelle elle est étroitement liée (voir, en ce sens, arrêts du Tribunal du 18 avril 2007, Deloitte Business Advisory/Commission, T–195/05, Rec. p. II–871, point 113, et du 12 novembre 2008, Evropaïki Dynamiki/Commission, T–406/06, non publié au Recueil, point 120).

228 Il s'ensuit que le recours en annulation doit être rejeté, sauf en ce qui concerne la demande d'annulation de la lettre de la Commission du 14 décembre 2005 en ce qu'elle a refusé la communication de la composition du comité d'évaluation de l'appel d'offres.

D – Sur le recours en indemnité

1. Sur la recevabilité

a) Arguments des parties

229 La Commission estime que le recours en responsabilité de la requérante est irrecevable dès lors que le recours en annulation est non fondé. Selon elle, une demande en dommages et intérêts fondée sur l'illégalité de l'attribution d'un marché public suppose nécessairement la constatation de l'illégalité de la décision d'attribution.

230 La requérante prétend que le recours en responsabilité est recevable indépendamment du bien-fondé du recours en annulation. Elle estime en effet que des griefs tels que le décalage du calendrier ou le refus de donner accès à certains documents permettent, de manière autonome, d'engager la responsabilité de la Commission.

b) Appréciation du Tribunal

231 Selon une jurisprudence constante, l'action en indemnité fondée sur l'article 288, deuxième alinéa, CE est une voie de recours autonome, ayant sa fonction particulière dans le cadre du système des voies de recours et subordonnée à des conditions d'exercice conçues en vue de son objet spécifique (arrêts de la Cour du 2 décembre 1971, Zuckerfabrik Schöppenstedt/Conseil, 5/71, Rec. p. 975, point 3 ; du 26 février 1986, Krohn/Commission, 175/84, Rec. p. 753, point 26, et du 17 mai 1990, Sonito e.a./Commission, C–87/89, Rec. p. I–1981, point 14). Elle se différencie du recours en annulation en ce qu'elle tend non à la suppression d'une mesure déterminée, mais à la réparation du préjudice causé par une institution (arrêts Zuckerfabrik Schöppenstedt/Conseil, précité, point 3 ; Krohn/Commission, précité, point 32, et Sonito e.a./Commission, précité, point 14). Le principe de l'autonomie du recours en indemnité trouve ainsi sa justification dans le fait qu'un tel recours se singularise par son objet du recours en annulation (arrêts du Tribunal du 24 octobre 2000, Fresh Marine/Commission, T–178/98, Rec. p. II–3331, point 45, et du 21 juin 2006, Danzer/Conseil, T–47/02, Rec. p. II–1779, point 27).

232 Le recours est ouvert à toute personne physique ou morale qui estime avoir subi un dommage du fait de la Communauté. L'action se prescrit par cinq ans à compter de la survenance du dommage.

233 Au vu de ce qui précède, le rejet de la demande d'annulation des décisions d'attribution et de rejet n'entraîne pas, par lui-même, l'irrecevabilité du recours en indemnité (voir, en ce sens et par analogie, ordonnance de la Cour du 21 juin 1993, Van Parijs e.a./Conseil et Commission, C–257/93, Rec. p. I–3335, point 14 ; arrêt du Tribunal du 15 décembre 1994, Unifruit Hellas/Commission, T–489/93, Rec. p. II–1201, point 31). Il convient donc de déclarer le recours en indemnité recevable.

2. Sur le fond

a) Arguments des parties

234 Selon la requérante, le comportement illégal de la Commission, de nature à engager sa responsabilité non contractuelle, résulte de l'annulation nécessaire des décisions de la Commission visées par le recours en annulation. Elle allègue que la Commission, allant au-delà des limites de son pouvoir d'appréciation, a commis une erreur grave et manifeste et un manquement à certaines règles du droit communautaire ainsi qu'aux règles qu'elle s'était fixées elle-même dans la préparation de son cahier des charges.

235 La requérante fait valoir que le préjudice subi consiste en un préjudice commercial substantiel lié à la perte d'un marché important, sans préjudice d'autres dommages, tels que l'éventuelle obligation de procéder à un lourd et coûteux licenciement collectif de ses salariés. Le lien de causalité est, selon elle, manifeste.

236 Dans la requête, la requérante a demandé la réparation de son préjudice à concurrence d'un million d'euros à titre provisionnel. Elle a porté ce montant à 3 191 702,58 euros dans le mémoire en réplique. Ce montant comprend la marge nette de la branche d'activité sur cinq années, soit 3 084 702,58 euros, et une partie des frais de formation engagés pour les 106 agents restés auprès d'elle, destinés à assurer leur reconversion, soit 107 000 euros que la requérante se réserve le droit de moduler en fonction des frais réels engagés. Elle précise qu'elle n'invoque pas, au titre de son préjudice, la perte d'une chance de remporter le marché, mais la réalisation d'un dommage certain. En effet, elle prétend que, sans le comportement illégal de la Commission, elle aurait dû remporter le marché. Le lien de causalité serait donc établi.

237 S'agissant du comportement illégal, la Commission soutient qu'il ressort du caractère non fondé de la requête en annulation qu'elle n'a violé aucune règle de droit communautaire. De plus, à supposer même que la Commission ait eu un comportement illégal, la requérante n'aurait pas démontré l'existence d'une violation suffisamment caractérisée des dispositions invoquées.

238 S'agissant du préjudice, la Commission rappelle que la charge de la preuve pèse sur la requérante. Elle souligne que la Cour refuse d'indemniser le préjudice lié à la perte d'une chance. De plus, et selon les termes mêmes de la requête, le caractère certain du préjudice lié à l'obligation de licencier le personnel de la requérante ferait défaut.

239 La Commission fait valoir que la requérante ne prouve pas l'existence d'un lien de causalité et se contente d'affirmer que ce lien est « manifeste ». Elle soutient que le recours en annulation et le recours en responsabilité extracontractuelle sont deux recours distincts, et que la requérante ne précise pas le fondement sur lequel elle entend engager la responsabilité de la Commission, qui semble se confondre avec sa demande en annulation.

b) Appréciation du Tribunal

240 Il convient de rappeler que, selon une jurisprudence constante, l'engagement de la responsabilité non contractuelle de la Communauté au sens de l'article 288, deuxième alinéa, CE pour comportement illicite de ses organes est subordonné à la réunion d'un ensemble de conditions, à savoir l'illégalité du comportement reproché aux institutions, la réalité du dommage et l'existence d'un lien de causalité entre le comportement allégué et le préjudice invoqué (voir arrêt du Tribunal du 14 décembre 2005, FIAMM et FIAMM Technologies/Conseil et Commission, T–69/00, Rec. p. II–5393, point 85, et la jurisprudence citée).

242 S'agissant du comportement illégal, la jurisprudence exige que soit établie une violation suffisamment caractérisée d'une règle de droit ayant pour objet de conférer des droits aux particuliers (arrêt de la Cour du 4 juillet 2000, Bergaderm et Goupil/Commission, C–352/98 P, Rec. p. I–5291, point 42). Le critère décisif pour considérer qu'une violation du droit communautaire est suffisamment caractérisée est celui de la méconnaissance manifeste et grave, par l'institution communautaire concernée, des limites qui s'imposent à son pouvoir d'appréciation. Lorsque cette institution ne dispose que d'une marge d'appréciation considérablement réduite, voire inexistante, la simple infraction au droit communautaire peut suffire à établir l'existence d'une violation suffisamment caractérisée (arrêt de la Cour du 10 décembre 2002, Commission/Camar et Tico, C–312/00 P, Rec. p. I–11355, point 54 ; arrêt du Tribunal du 12 juillet 2001, Comafrica et Dole Fresh Fruit Europe/Commission, T–198/95, T–171/96, T–230/97, T–174/98 et T–225/99, Rec. p. II–1975, point 134).

244 S'agissant de l'illégalité de la décision de la Commission du 14 décembre 2005 portant rejet de la demande de communication de la composition du comité d'évaluation, il y a lieu de constater que la requérante n'a pas établi l'existence d'un lien de causalité direct entre le refus de communication contesté et le préjudice invoqué, qui résulterait de la perte du marché litigieux.

245 Il s'ensuit que la demande en indemnité doit être rejetée.

Sur les dépens

246 Aux termes de l'article 87, paragraphe 3, premier alinéa, du règlement de procédure, le Tribunal peut répartir les dépens ou décider que chaque partie supporte ses propres dépens si les parties succombent respectivement sur un ou plusieurs chefs.

247 Dans les circonstances de l'espèce, compte tenu du fait que la requérante a succombé en la plupart de ses demandes, il sera fait une juste appréciation de la cause en condamnant la requérante à supporter ses propres dépens ainsi que la moitié de ceux exposés par la Commission et Group 4 Falck, y compris ceux afférents à la procédure de référé.

Par ces motifs,

LE TRIBUNAL (sixième chambre)

déclare et arrête :

1) La décision de la Commission du 14 décembre 2005, portant rejet d'une demande de communication de la composition du comité d'évaluation de l'appel d'offres 16/2005/OIL, est annulée.

2) Le recours en annulation est rejeté pour le surplus.

3) Le recours en indemnité est rejeté.

4) Brink's Security Luxembourg SA supportera, outre ses propres dépens, la moitié des dépens exposés par la Commission des Communautés européennes et par G4S Security Services SA, y compris ceux afférents à la procédure de référé.

5) La Commission supportera la moitié de ses propres dépens.

6) G4S Security Services supportera la moitié de ses propres dépens.

LE PRÉSIDENT DU TRIBUNAL DE PREMIÈRE INSTANCE
DES COMMUNAUTÉS EUROPÉENNES

rend la présente

Ordonnance

Faits et procédure

1 Brink's Security Luxembourg SA (ci-après « Brink's » ou « la requérante ») est une société établie au Luxembourg, active dans le secteur de la surveillance et du gardiennage. Cette société était chargée de la surveillance et du gardiennage des immeubles de la Commission depuis le milieu des années 70.

2 En 2000, la requérante a conclu avec la Commission un contrat de surveillance et de gardiennage d'immeubles de la Commission, situés au Luxembourg, et relevant de l'Office des publications officielles des Communautés européennes et du Centre de traduction des organes de l'Union européenne. Ce contrat a expiré, sans possibilité de reconduction ultérieure, le 31 décembre 2005.

3 Par un avis de marché publié au Journal officiel de l'Union européenne du 1^er^ septembre 2005 (JO

S 168, n° 166735), la Commission (Office infrastructures et logistique Luxembourg) a lancé l'appel d'offres n° 16/2005/OIL pour un contrat de surveillance et de gardiennage des mêmes immeubles que ceux en cause dans le contrat visé au point précédent.

4 La date limite de présentation des offres a été fixée au 13 octobre 2005. L'ouverture des offres a eu lieu le 18 octobre 2005 et leur évaluation a été effectuée le 11 novembre 2005.

5 Le 30 novembre 2005, la Commission a fait savoir à la requérante que le contrat ne lui avait pas été attribué en raison du fait que son offre n'avait pas obtenu la meilleure note finale lors de l'évaluation qualitative et financière des offres. Dans le même courrier, la Commission a informé la requérante qu'elle était en droit d'obtenir des informations complémentaires sur les motifs du rejet de son offre.

6 Par lettre du 1er décembre 2005, la requérante a cherché à exercer ce droit en demandant à la Commission de lui communiquer les motifs du rejet de son offre, les caractéristiques et les avantages relatifs de l'offre retenue ainsi que le nom de l'attributaire.

7 Par lettre du 5 décembre 2005, la Commission a informé la requérante que l'attributaire retenu était Group 4 Falck SA, intervenante dans la présente procédure (ci-après « Group 4 Falck » ou l'« intervenante »), et a exposé les éléments de comparaison pertinents de l'évaluation de l'offre de la requérante par rapport à l'offre de l'attributaire.

9 Par lettre du 7 décembre 2005, la Commission a répondu aux courriers de la requérante du 5 décembre 2005, en confirmant sa position.

11 Par lettre du 14 décembre 2005, la Commission s'est refusée, pour des raisons de confidentialité, à fournir les informations demandées par la requérante à propos des membres des comités de sélection et d'adjudication. La Commission a cependant fourni à la requérante des informations complémentaires concernant les raisons du rejet de l'offre de la requérante.

12 Par lettre du 14 décembre 2005, Group 4 Falck a fait part à la requérante de son intention de recruter une partie de son personnel.

13 Par requête déposée au greffe du Tribunal le 15 décembre 2005, Brink's a introduit un recours au titre de l'article 230, quatrième alinéa, CE visant à l'annulation de la décision adoptée dans le cadre de l'appel d'offres n° 16/2005/OIL et par laquelle la Commission attribuait le marché à Group 4 Falck (ci-après la « décision attaquée au principal »).

14 Par acte séparé déposé au greffe du Tribunal le même jour, Brink's a introduit la présente demande en référé, ainsi qu'une demande de mesures provisoires sur le fondement de l'article 105, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure du Tribunal.

15 Par ordonnance du 16 décembre 2005, le président du Tribunal a ordonné à la Commission de surseoir à la signature du contrat en cause dans l'appel d'offres n° 16/2005/OIL jusqu'au prononcé d'une ordonnance statuant sur la demande de mesures provisoires.

16 En conséquence de l'adoption de l'ordonnance mentionnée au point précédent, le contrat en cours entre Brink's et la Commission a été reconduit jusqu'à la date du 31 janvier 2006, afin de garantir la continuité de la surveillance et du gardiennage des bâtiments en cause.

17 Par acte déposé au greffe du Tribunal le 22 décembre 2005, Group 4 Falck a demandé à intervenir dans la présente procédure au soutien de la Commission. Le 4 janvier 2006, les parties principales ont déposé leurs observations sur la demande en intervention de Group 4 Falck.

18 Par acte déposé au greffe du Tribunal le 4 janvier 2006, la requérante a introduit une demande de traitement confidentiel de la demande en référé vis-à-vis du demandeur en intervention, à laquelle il a été fait droit. Le 5 janvier 2005, la requérante a déposé au greffe du Tribunal une version non confidentielle de la demande en référé.

19 Par ordonnance du 9 janvier 2006, Group 4 Falck a été admise à intervenir dans la présente affaire.

21 Le 24 janvier 2006, les parties ont été entendues lors d'une audition.

Conclusions

22 La requérante demande au juge des référés, sur le fondement de l'article 104 et de l'article 105, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure :

– en premier lieu, et dans l'attente d'une ordonnance se prononçant sur la demande de mesures provisoires :

  – de suspendre l'exécution de la décision attaquée au principal ;

  – d'enjoindre à la Commission de communiquer les certificats joints à l'offre de Group 4 Falck (y compris sous une forme anonyme) ;

  – d'enjoindre à la Commission de ne pas conclure le contrat avec le tiers retenu avant l'expiration d'un délai de cinq jours ouvrables suivant la communication des documents demandés ;

– en deuxième lieu, sans préjudice des mesures énumérées ci-dessus :

  – d'enjoindre à la Commission de ne pas conclure le contrat jusqu'à l'intervention de la décision mettant fin à l'instance au principal ;

  – pour autant que la Commission ait déjà conclu ledit contrat, de suspendre son exécution jusqu'à l'intervention de la décision mettant fin à l'instance au principal ;

– en troisième lieu, de condamner la Commission à payer l'intégralité des dépens liés à la présente demande.

23 La Commission, soutenue par Group 4 Falck, conclut à ce que le président du Tribunal déclare la demande en référé non fondée et condamne la requérante aux dépens.

En droit

24 L'article 104, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure dispose que les demandes de mesures provisoires doivent spécifier l'objet du litige, les circonstances établissant l'urgence ainsi que les moyens de fait et de droit justifiant à première vue (fumus boni juris) l'octroi de la mesure provisoire à laquelle elles concluent. Ces conditions sont cumulatives, de sorte que les mesures provisoires doivent être rejetées dès lors que l'une d'elles fait défaut [ordonnance du président de la Cour du 14 octobre 1996, SCK et FNK/Commission, C–268/96 P(R), Rec. p. I–4971, point 30]. Le juge des référés procède également, le cas échéant, à la mise en balance des intérêts en présence (ordonnance du président de la Cour du 23 février 2001, Autriche/Conseil, C–445/00 R, Rec. p. I–1461, point 73).

25 En outre, dans le cadre de cet examen, le juge des référés dispose d'un large pouvoir d'appréciation et reste libre de déterminer, au regard des particularités de l'espèce, la manière dont ces différentes conditions doivent être vérifiées ainsi que l'ordre de cet examen, dès lors qu'aucune règle de droit communautaire ne lui impose un schéma d'analyse préétabli pour apprécier la nécessité de statuer provisoirement [ordonnance du président de la Cour du 19 juillet 1995, Commission/Atlantic Container Line e.a., C-149/95 P(R), Rec. p. I-2165, point 23].

26 Au regard des circonstances de la présente affaire, il convient de commencer par examiner si la condition relative à l'urgence est remplie.

27 Selon la requérante, l'attribution irrégulière du marché à un prestataire autre qu'elle-même aurait pour effet de lui causer plusieurs préjudices graves et irréparables. La requérante allègue, en premier lieu, une violation de son droit d'accès au dossier ; en deuxième lieu, la perte d'une chance de se voir attribuer et d'exécuter le marché en cause dans la procédure d'appel d'offres ; en troisième lieu, une atteinte irrémédiable de son droit de participer à une procédure régulière d'appel d'offres ; en quatrième lieu, une perte de capital humain et, enfin, en cinquième lieu, une atteinte à sa réputation.

28 En premier lieu, en ce qui concerne la violation de son droit d'accès aux documents, la requérante fait valoir que le refus de la Commission de lui communiquer les pièces justifiant certains éléments de la notation de Group 4 Falck, d'une part, viole son droit à une information complète et transparente sur le déroulement de l'appel d'offres et l'issue de celui-ci et, d'autre part, la prive de la possibilité d'éviter un éventuel recours contentieux inutile.

29 La Commission soutient, en revanche, qu'elle a respecté toutes les obligations légales découlant du règlement (CE, Euratom) n° 1605/2002 du Conseil, du 25 juin 2002, portant règlement financier applicable au budget général des Communautés européennes (JO L 248, p. 1, ci-après le « règlement financier »), et qu'elle n'avait pas d'autres obligations à cet égard.

30 En deuxième lieu, la requérante soutient que l'irrégularité de la procédure aurait entraîné la violation de son droit à participer à une procédure d'appel d'offres non faussée. Le préjudice qui en résulterait pour elle consisterait en la perte d'une chance de se voir attribuer et d'exécuter le marché, ce qui devrait être considéré comme un préjudice grave et irréparable, compte tenu, notamment, de sa taille au Luxembourg et de l'importance du marché par rapport à l'activité de l'entreprise.

31 Selon la Commission, la requérante n'aurait pas démontré le caractère grave du préjudice découlant de la perte de chance invoquée par elle.

32 En troisième lieu, la requérante allègue un préjudice lié au fait qu'elle aurait été privée de manière irrémédiable de son droit à participer à une procédure d'appel d'offres non faussée. Laisser se conclure le contrat sans permettre au préalable à la requérante d'obtenir une information complète sur le déroulement de la procédure en cause la priverait de son droit de réclamer une éventuelle régularisation, ce qui aurait permis d'éviter le présent litige.

33 En réponse, la Commission soutient que, compte tenu de la production de documents ultérieurs sur demande du Tribunal, la requérante a obtenu toutes les informations sur le déroulement de la procédure d'attribution qu'elle était en droit de recevoir.

34 En quatrième lieu, la requérante allègue un préjudice lié à la perte d'un capital humain expérimenté constitué, notamment, des 173 personnes qui étaient spécifiquement affectées à la surveillance des locaux de la Commission.

35 Selon la Commission, le préjudice allégué par Brink's est inhérent à l'exécution du contrat entre la Commission et Brink's, lequel avait été conclu pour une durée limitée et sans possibilité de reconduction. En outre, il s'agirait d'un préjudice financier, qui serait donc susceptible de faire l'objet d'une compensation. En conséquence, il ne saurait être considéré comme irréparable.

36 Enfin, la requérante allègue une atteinte grave et irréparable à sa réputation tenant au fait que, à la suite de la perte du marché, elle serait contrainte de mettre en place le second plan de licenciement collectif au Luxembourg par ordre d'importance. En outre, Brink's allègue que sa réputation serait atteinte par l'éviction même du marché en cause, qui représenterait pour elle un atout indéniable en terme de prestige.

37 Selon la Commission, l'élimination d'un soumissionnaire, en vertu des règles de la soumission, n'a, en soi, rien de préjudiciable.

38 Pour sa part, la partie intervenante, dans ses observations orales, a soutenu les arguments de la Commission invoquant en l'espèce une absence d'urgence.

Appréciation du juge des référés

39 Le caractère urgent d'une demande en référé doit s'apprécier par rapport à la nécessité qu'il y a de statuer provisoirement afin d'éviter qu'un préjudice grave et irréparable ne soit occasionné à la partie qui sollicite la mesure provisoire (ordonnance du président de la Cour du 6 février 1986, Deufil/Commission, 310/85 R, Rec. p. 537, point 15, et ordonnance du président du Tribunal du 30 juin 1999, Pfizer Animal Health/Conseil, T–13/99 R, Rec. p. II–1961, point 134). C'est à cette dernière qu'il appartient d'apporter la preuve qu'elle ne saurait attendre l'issue de la procédure au principal sans avoir à subir un préjudice de cette nature (ordonnance du président de la Cour du 8 mai 1991, Belgique/Commission, C–356/90 R, Rec. p. I–2423, point 23, et ordonnance du président du Tribunal du 15 novembre 2001, Duales System Deutschland/Commission, T–151/01 R, Rec. p. II–3295, point 187).

40 L'imminence du préjudice ne doit pas être établie avec une certitude absolue, mais il suffit, particulièrement lorsque la réalisation du préjudice dépend de la survenance d'un ensemble de facteurs, qu'elle soit prévisible avec un degré de probabilité suffisant. Le requérant demeure cependant tenu de prouver les faits qui sont censés fonder la perspective d'un tel dommage grave et irréparable [ordonnance du président de la Cour du 14 décembre 1999, HFB e.a./Commission, C–335/99 P(R), Rec. p. I–8705, point 67].

41 En l'espèce, Brink's invoque en substance cinq types de préjudices, qui doivent faire l'objet d'un examen séparé.

Sur le préjudice prétendument lié au droit d'accès au dossier

42 En ce qui concerne le préjudice tenant à la prétendue indisponibilité d'une information complète et transparente sur le déroulement de l'appel d'offres et l'issue de celui-ci, ainsi qu'à la possibilité d'éviter un recours contentieux inutile, premièrement, il y a lieu de noter que, dans sa demande, la requérante allègue l'existence d'un préjudice tenant à un manque de clarification, d'une part, des modalités d'attribution du marché à Group 4 Falck et, d'autre part, des moyens à soulever dans le cadre de la présente procédure.

43 Or, quant à la clarification des modalités d'attribution du marché, la requérante n'a pas démontré en quoi consiste le dommage qui lui est prétendument causé, en l'absence de ladite clarification, dans l'attente de l'arrêt au principal. De même, s'agissant de la possibilité d'éviter un recours contentieux inutile, la requérante n'a pas fourni la preuve que le litige, en tant que tel, lui cause un dommage grave et irréparable.

44 Deuxièmement, force est de constater que la Commission, en cours d'instance et sur demande du Tribunal, a produit une version non confidentielle des certificats communiqués par l'intervenante pour se conformer au n° 28 du cahier des charges relatif au marché en cause. Or, lors de la procédure orale, la requérante n'a pas démontré que ces informations n'étaient pas suffisantes pour éclaircir de façon complète et transparente le déroulement de la procédure.

Sur le préjudice prétendument lié à la perte d'une chance de se voir attribuer et d'exécuter le marché en cause 46 La requérante allègue également avoir subi un préjudice grave et irréparable lié au fait que, en raison de l'irrégularité de la procédure et de l'illégalité de la décision attaquée, elle aurait perdu une chance de se voir attribuer le marché en cause et, par voie de conséquence, de tirer les divers bénéfices qui pourraient résulter, le cas échéant, de l'exécution du contrat.

47 Il y a préliminairement lieu de constater que Brink's avait, effectivement, une chance de se voir attribuer le marché en cause. En effet, tout d'abord, l'offre de Brink's a reçu des notations d'évaluation de peu inférieures à celles attribuées à Group 4 Falck, dont la régularité est contestée au principal. Ensuite, Brink's était en principe à même de proposer une offre intéressante, compte tenu de l'expérience acquise durant les années au cours desquelles elle a exécuté le marché. Enfin, aucun élément du dossier, à l'exception de ceux dont la légalité est contestée au principal, ne permet d'exclure que Brink's disposait d'une chance de se voir attribuer et d'exécuter le marché en cause.

48 Il convient donc de vérifier si la perte de cette chance constitue, pour Brink's, un préjudice à la fois grave et irréparable, de nature à justifier l'octroi des mesures provisoires demandées.

49 En effet, même à supposer que la requérante parvienne à démontrer que le préjudice subi en raison de la perte d'une chance de se voir attribuer le marché en cause était irréparable, il convient de constater que, pour justifier l'octroi de mesures provisoires, le préjudice invoqué par le demandeur doit aussi être grave (voir, en ce sens, ordonnances du président du Tribunal du 20 juillet 2000, Esedra/Commission, T-169/00 R, Rec. p. II-2951, point 43 ; du 27 juillet 2004, TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium/Commission, T-148/04 R, non encore publiée au Recueil, point 41, et du 20 septembre 2005, Deloitte Business Advisory/Commission, T-195/05 R, non encore publiée au Recueil, point 149).

50 Or, la perte d'une chance de se voir attribuer et d'exécuter un marché public est inhérente au risque d'exclusion qu'encourt tout soumissionnaire participant à une procédure d'appel d'offres et ne saurait être regardée comme constitutive, en soi, d'un préjudice grave, indépendamment d'une appréciation concrète de la gravité de l'atteinte spécifique alléguée dans chaque cas d'espèce (ordonnance Deloitte Business Advisory/Commission, point 49 supra, point 150).

51 En conséquence, c'est, en l'espèce, à la condition que la requérante parvienne à démontrer à suffisance de droit qu'elle aurait pu retirer des bénéfices suffisamment significatifs de l'attribution et de l'exécution du marché en cause que le fait, pour elle, d'avoir perdu une chance de se voir attribuer et d'exécuter ledit marché constituerait un préjudice grave (voir, en ce sens, ordonnance Deloitte Business Advisory/Commission, point 49 supra, point 151).

52 Il convient donc d'apprécier concrètement les bénéfices qui, selon la requérante, découleraient pour elle de l'attribution et de l'exécution du marché en cause dans le cadre de la procédure d'appel d'offres (voir, en ce sens, ordonnance Deloitte Business Advisory/Commission, point 49 supra, point 152).

53 À cet égard, la requérante s'est bornée à alléguer que l'inexécution du contrat la priverait d'une part conséquente de son activité, ce qui serait de nature à porter atteinte à la poursuite efficace de ses activités.

54 En l'espèce, s'il est évident que l'inexécution de ce contrat priverait la requérante des revenus qu'elle aurait perçus si le marché lui avait été attribué, il convient de rappeler que, lorsque le demandeur est une entreprise, la gravité d'un préjudice d'ordre matériel doit être évaluée au regard, notamment, de la taille de cette entreprise (ordonnance Deloitte Business Advisory/Commission, point 49 supra, point 156 ; voir également, en ce sens, ordonnance du président du Tribunal du 22 décembre 2004, Microsoft/Commission, T-201/04 R, non encore publiée au Recueil, point 257).

55 Or, en l'espèce, la requérante, dans sa demande en référé, a soutenu que le marché en cause représentait un cinquième de son activité au Luxembourg. Dans ses observations orales, la requérante a, en revanche, soutenu que le même marché correspondait au quart de son activité au Luxembourg.

56 D'une part, il y a toutefois lieu de constater que la requérante, indépendamment de ses contradictions quant à la valeur exacte de la perte qu'elle risque de subir, n'a fourni à cet égard qu'une seule évaluation sans en expliquer la réelle portée, par exemple en ce qui concerne la valeur de la perte de bénéfice financier. De plus, même à supposer que la requérante se réfère au rapport existant entre la valeur du contrat passé avec la Commission et son propre chiffre d'affaires en 2005, elle n'a fourni aucun élément de preuve permettant de conclure que l'évaluation avancée par elle reflète bien le dommage qu'elle subirait si le juge des référés ne faisait pas droit à sa demande de mesures provisoires. En particulier, elle n'a pas démontré qu'elle allait perdre toutes les ressources antérieurement affectées à l'exécution du contrat avec la Commission, sans possibilité de les investir, au moins en partie, dans d'autres marchés.

57 D'autre part, même à supposer que le préjudice lié à la perte du marché en cause corresponde à une réduction de 25 % de l'activité commerciale de la requérante, force est de constater que, ainsi que celle-ci l'a confirmé lors de ses observations orales, elle appartient à un groupe de dimension internationale. Or, il ressort du dossier que la valeur de 25 % ne se réfère qu'aux activités de Brink's Security Luxembourg SA au Luxembourg. La requérante n'a pas démontré que, compte tenu du groupe auquel elle appartient, la perte invoquée présente un caractère de gravité suffisant.

58 Dès lors, au regard des éléments présents dans la demande en référé et de ceux exposés lors de l'audition, le juge des référés ne saurait considérer que, pour la requérante, la perte d'une chance de se voir attribuer et d'exécuter le marché en cause constitue un préjudice suffisamment grave pour justifier l'octroi de mesures provisoires.

Sur le préjudice prétendument lié à une atteinte irrémédiable au droit de la requérante à participer à une procédure régulière d'appel d'offres

59 En ce qui concerne l'argument de la requérante selon lequel celle-ci risque de subir un préjudice du fait qu'elle se voit privée de manière irrémédiable de son droit à participer à une procédure d'appel d'offres non faussée, force est de constater que les seules conséquences concrètes, qui, selon la requérante, résultent de l'atteinte à ce droit tiennent dans le fait que « [l]aisser se conclure le contrat sans permettre au préalable à la requérante d'obtenir une information complète sur le déroulement de la procédure en cause la priverait de son droit de réclamer une éventuelle régularisation, permettant ainsi d'éviter l'engagement de recours contentieux ».

60 Or, d'une part, pour autant que la requérante invoque l'impossibilité de procéder à la « régularisation » du contrat, son argumentation ne se distingue pas de celle visant à démontrer l'existence d'un préjudice lié à la perte d'une chance de se voir attribuer le marché, laquelle a déjà été écartée comme ne démontrant pas l'existence d'un préjudice grave et irréparable (voir points 46 à 58 supra).

61 D'autre part, pour autant que la requérante invoque la nécessité d'éviter un recours contentieux, il a déjà été jugé qu'une telle circonstance n'était pas susceptible de démontrer l'existence d'un préjudice grave et irréparable (voir points 42 à 45).

62 En conséquence, la requérante n'a pas établi qu'il était urgent de prononcer des mesures provisoires pour éviter un dommage grave et irréparable lié à une atteinte irrémédiable à son droit à participer à une procédure d'appel d'offres non faussée.

Sur le préjudice prétendument lié à une perte de capital humain

63 En ce qui concerne le préjudice allégué par la requérante et lié à une perte de capital humain expérimenté, force est de constater, ainsi que le fait valoir, à juste titre, la Commission, que Brink's connaissait les conditions du contrat conclu avec la Commission et savait que celui-ci devait expirer le 31 décembre 2005, sans possibilité de reconduction. Le risque pour Brink's de ne pas se voir attribuer le marché lors de la conclusion d'un nouveau contrat est par conséquent inhérent au système de passation des marchés publics.

64 En outre, la requérante ne fournit aucune preuve permettant de démontrer que le préjudice allégué est irréparable et que, dans le cas où elle obtiendrait gain de cause au principal, elle ne pourrait pas reconstituer une équipe de la même qualité, par le biais du recrutement soit du même personnel, soit d'autres personnes aussi qualifiées.

Sur le préjudice prétendument lié à une atteinte à la réputation de la requérante

66 Enfin, la requérante allègue un préjudice quant à sa réputation, lié, d'une part, au fait qu'elle se verra obligée de procéder à un important plan de licenciement collectif et, d'autre part, au fait même de son éviction du marché.

67 Néanmoins, force est de constater que, ainsi que le rappelle à juste titre la Commission, la participation à une soumission publique, par nature hautement compétitive, implique des risques pour tous les participants et que l'élimination d'un soumissionnaire, en vertu des règles de la soumission, n'a, en elle-même, rien de préjudiciable (ordonnance du président de la Cour du 5 août 1983, CMC/Commission, 118/83 R, Rec. p. 2583, point 51, et ordonnance du président du Tribunal du 10 novembre 2004, European Dynamics/Commission, T-303/04 R, non encore publiée au Recueil, point 82).

68 En outre, lorsqu'une entreprise a été illégalement écartée d'une procédure d'appel d'offres, il existe d'autant moins de raisons de penser qu'elle risque de subir une atteinte grave et irréparable à sa réputation que, d'une part, son exclusion est sans lien avec ses compétences et, d'autre part, l'arrêt d'annulation qui s'ensuivra permettra en principe de rétablir une éventuelle atteinte à sa réputation (ordonnance Deloitte Business Advisory/Commission, point 49 supra, point 126).

69 Enfin, en l'espèce, à supposer qu'elle soit effectivement obligée de procéder à un plan de licenciement collectif, il n'est pas démontré que l'éventuel arrêt d'annulation qui s'ensuivra ne permettra pas d'exclure toute responsabilité de la requérante dans le licenciement.

71 Il découle de tout ce qui précède que la requérante n'a pas démontré qu'elle risquait de subir un préjudice grave et irréparable en l'absence de mesures provisoires. En conséquence, sans qu'il soit nécessaire d'examiner la condition relative au fumus boni juris et de mettre en balance les intérêts en présence, la demande en référé doit être rejetée.

Par ces motifs,

LE PRÉSIDENT DU TRIBUNAL

ordonne :

1) La demande de mesures provisoires est rejetée.

2) Les dépens sont réservés.

Action brought on 15 December 2005 - Brink's Security Luxembourg v Commission

(Case T-437/05)

Language of the case: French

Parties

Applicant(s): Brink's Security Luxembourg SA (Luxembourg) (represented by: Christian Point, Lawyer)

Defendant(s): Commission of the European Communities

Form of order sought

The applicant(s) claim(s) that the Court should:

declare the present action admissible and well-founded;

annul the decision not to award the contract, that is, the Commission's unilateral decision not to award the contract to Brink's Security Luxembourg;

annul the decision to award the contract, that is, the Commission's unilateral decision to award the contract to Group 4 Falck Luxembourg;

annul the implicit decision of the Commission to refuse to withdraw its two aforementioned decisions;

annul the Commission's two letters dated respectively 7 and 14 December 2005 replying to the applicant's requests for information pursuant to Article 149(3) of the regulation implementing the Financial Regulation;

order the Commission to pay to the applicant the sum of EUR 1 000 000 by way of damages for the material and non-material harm suffered by reason of the illegality of the decision challenged, that sum being determined ex aequo et bono and on a provisional basis; order the Commission to pay the entire costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The present application seeks, firstly, the annulment of the Commission's decision rejecting the tender submitted by the applicant in call for tenders No 16/2005/OIL (provision of building surveillance and security services) and, secondly, the annulment of the decision awarding the contract to a competitor.

The arguments relied on by the applicant in support of the orders for annulment sought can be categorised, in substance, into seven pleas.

By the first plea the applicant relies on the alleged infringement of the principle of equal treatment and non-discrimination in so far as the Commission imposed a requirement for length of service of one year for the employees of each tenderer to be assigned to the contract which, according to the applicant - the current holder of the contract with long-serving employees - placed it at a disadvantage vis-à-vis the other tenderers, who could recruit people with the minimum experience and have lower wage costs than those of the applicant.

By the second plea, the applicant claims that the Commission infringed the provisions of Directive 2001/23/EC[1]. That plea has two parts: alleged irregularity in the tender accepted by the Commission in that that tender did not guarantee the retention of the applicant's employees nor, moreover, did it ensure that all of their rights would be respected. The applicant alleges that the decision to award taken by the Commission was illegal from the time it was taken since the accepted tender involved the infringement of employment law.

The third plea is based on an alleged infringement of the principle of equal treatment in so far as the successful party, at the time of submission of its tender, had privileged information in relation to the applicant, in particular in relation to turnover by client and activity, contracts and their expiry dates, and analysis of their prices and costs, which had been obtained by reason of the merger with the applicant's former parent company. In the applicant's opinion, this would have allowed its competitor to prepare a more favourable tender compared with that submitted by the applicant itself.

By the fourth plea, the applicant relies on the alleged infringement of the decision of Directorate General IV of the Commission of 28 May 2004[2] and the rules aimed at ensuring undistorted competition in that, by the decision challenged in the present application, the Commission permitted the group to which the successful tenderer selected belonged to recover assets which it was obliged to relinquish at the time of the merger authorised by the decision of 28 May 2004.

The fifth plea is based on the alleged infringement of the obligation to give reasons for the decision, the alleged infringement of the transparency principle and the right of access to documents of the Community institutions. The applicant alleges that the Commission, despite several written requests, send it only a brief explanation, which was limited to comparative tables of the tenders, of the reasons for its decision.

The applicant also relies on the infringement of the rules applying to the award of the contract, a failure to take account of the contract documents and a manifest error of assessment in relation to the analysis and evaluation of the third qualitative award criterion in relation to the basic first-aid and fire fighting training of the security agents. It alleges that it has proof that the tenderer selected by the Commission does not have all of the operatives whom it proposed to assign to the performance of the contract at issue.

By its last plea, the applicant alleges infringement of the principle of transparency and of the right of citizens to access documents of the institutions in so far as the Commission refused it information on the composition of the selection and award committees.

The applicant also seeks, by relying on the principle of extra-contractual liability, compensation for the harm which it claims to have suffered by reason of the illegality of the Commission's conduct in the tender award procedure for the contract at issue.

Judgment

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Second Chamber)

hereby:

1. Dismisses the applications;

2. Orders the applicants to pay the costs, including those relating to the applications for interim measures.

Legal context

1. The award of Commission service contracts in connection with its external actions is governed by the provisions of the second part of Title IV of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1, the Financial Regulation') and the provisions of the second part of Title III of Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1, the Implementing Rules').

2. Under Article 94 of the Financial Regulation, reproduced in point 2.3.3 of the Practical Guide to contract procedures for EC external actions (the Practical Guide'):

Contracts may not be awarded to candidates or tenderers who, during the procurement procedure:

(a) are subject to a conflict of interest,

(b) are guilty of misrepresentation in supplying the information required by the contracting authority as a condition of participation in the contract procedure or fail to supply this information.'

3. Under Article 146(3) of the Implementing Rules:

Requests to participate and tenders which do not satisfy all the essential requirements set out in the supporting documentation for invitations to tender or the specific requirements laid down therein shall be eliminated.

However, the evaluation committee may ask candidates or tenderers to supply additional material or to clarify the supporting documents submitted in connection with the exclusion and selection criteria, within a specified time-limit.'

4. Article 13 of the procurement notice issued in the tendering procedure bearing reference EuropeAid/119860/C/SV/multi-Lot 7' relating to a multiple framework contract to recruit technical assistance for short-term expertise for exclusive benefit of third countries benefiting from European Commission external aid (the call for tenders') stated that no more than one application could be submitted by a natural or legal person (including legal persons within the same legal group), whatever the form of participation (as an individual legal entity or as leader or partner of a consortium submitting an application). In the event that a natural or legal person (including legal persons within the same legal group) submitted more than one application, all applications in which that person (and legal persons within the same legal group) had participated would be excluded.

5. The declaration form to be completed by candidates and tenderers mentioned their obligation to indicate whether or not they belonged to a group or network'.

6. Article 14 of the instructions to tenderers stated that each successful tenderer would be notified in writing. It also provided that, before the contracting authority signed the framework contract with the successful tenderer, the tenderer had to produce additional documents to prove the veracity of his statements. If a tenderer was not able to produce the required documents within a period of 15 calendar days from notification of the award of the contract or if he was found to have supplied false information, it was provided that the award of the contract would be regarded as null and void. In such a case, the contracting authority could award the framework contract to another tenderer or cancel the tendering procedure.

7. Article 16 of the instructions to tenderers provided that tenderers who believed themselves to have been harmed by an error or an irregularity in the course of the tendering procedure could submit a complaint, to which the competent authority had to respond within a period of 90 days.

Background to the dispute

8. By a procurement notice of 9 July 2004 published in the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2004, S 132), the Commission launched the call for tenders.

9. The TEA-CEGOS consortium expressed its interest in participating in the call for tenders. TEA-CEGOS, SA was chosen to be the leader of the consortium with a view to the consortium's participation in the tendering procedure. Services techniques globaux (STG) SA is also a member of the TEA-CEGOS Consortium and provides it with technical and financial management services.

10. In the course of the application to participate phase and in accordance with the requirements set out in the procurement notice, the various members of the TEACEGOS Consortium made statements to the effect that they were not in any of the situations corresponding to the grounds for exclusion listed in point 2.3.3 of the Practical Guide. On 18 August 2004 the Danish Institute for Human Rights (DIHR), a member of the TEA-CEGOS Consortium, sent the Commission a document in which it was stated that the DIHR had its own board of management but was part of a larger structure, the Danish Centre for International Studies and Human Rights (the Centre'), and had as a partner the Danish Institute for International Studies (DIIS), an institute set up by a Danish law of 6 June 2002 which also established the Centre and the DIHR.

11. GHK Consulting Ltd, a company governed by English law, is part of a consortium (the GHK Consortium') bringing together various entities including the DIIS. GHK Consulting, through its GHK International Ltd division, was chosen to be the leader of the GHK Consortium for the tendering procedure. On 29 September 2004, when the applications to participate were submitted, the DIIS stated that it did not belong to a group or network.

12. By email of 17 December 2004 and by letter of 31 December 2004, the TEACEGOS Consortium was invited to participate in the call for tenders for lot 7. During this stage of the tendering procedure the DIHR indicated once again that it was part of a larger structure, the Centre, which included another institute, the DIIS. The GHK Consortium was also invited to tender for lot 7.

13. By letters of 20 May 2005, TEA-CEGOS and GHK International learnt that the tenders submitted by the consortia to which they each belonged had been accepted for lot 7. Those letters stated that the contracts would be sent to the consortia for signature subject to proof that they were not in any of the situations corresponding to the grounds for exclusion listed in point 2.3.3 of the Practical Guide. The applicants sent the Commission the documents that they considered to be relevant in this respect.

14. By a fax of 22 June 2005, the Commission asked TEA-CEGOS to explain the link between the DIHR and the Centre and its possible autonomy vis-à-vis the Centre, and also requested GHK International to provide it with clarification as to the legal status of the DIIS.

15. On 23 June 2005 the TEA-CEGOS Consortium sent the Commission a letter from the DIHR explaining the way it operated. On 24 June 2005 GHK International sent the Commission a fax providing clarification with regard to the DIIS.

16. In response to a further request by the Commission for additional clarification, made by telephone on 27 June 2005, on the same date the TEA-CEGOS Consortium sent the Commission a copy of the Danish law of 6 June 2002 setting up the Centre, together with a memorandum pointing out the relevant parts of the law and the link between the Centre and the DIHR, and a letter from the Centre's head of administration

17. On 14 July 2005 the TEA-CEGOS Consortium also sent the Commission a statement by the Danish Minister for Foreign Affairs in which the Minister affirmed that the DIHR and the DIIS were autonomous entities within the Centre.

18. By letters of 18 July 2005 (the decisions of 18 July 2005'), the Commission informed the TEA-CEGOS Consortium and the GHK Consortium that its decisions to accept their tenders were based on inaccurate information which it had been given during the tendering procedure and that, in the light of new evidence, their applications and their tenders were to be rejected.

19. On 22 and 25 July 2005 the TEA-CEGOS Consortium claimed to the Commission that the DIHR and the DIIS could not be regarded as part of the same legal group within the meaning of Article 13 of the procurement notice, pointing out that from the very beginning of the tendering procedure it had stated that DIHR belonged to the Centre. On 27 July 2005 the Commission acknowledged receipt of the letter of 22 July and stated that its content would be examined in detail.

20. On 25 July 2005 the shortlist of tenderers for lot 7, published on the EuropeAid website, was altered so that it no longer included the two consortia.

21. On 8 September 2005 TEA-CEGOS and STG contacted the Commission, alleging that the decisions of 18 July 2005 were unlawful and therefore calling on it to reverse those decisions as soon as possible. By letter of 13 September 2005, the Commission informed them that a review was in progress and that it had sent the Centre a series of questions and asked it to produce documents to substantiate the answers that it provided.

22. On 14 September 2005 TEA-CEGOS and STG reiterated that they wanted a quick reply regarding the final position adopted by the Commission. On 21 September 2005 the Commission informed them that it was waiting for the Centre to provide certain information that was needed in order to take a decision on the result of the procedure, and undertook to notify them of its decision as soon as possible.

23. By email of 23 September 2005 and by fax of 26 September 2005, the Centre answered the Commission's questions, also sending it a number of documents to substantiate its answers. On 26 September 2005 GHK International sent the Commission a letter in support of the answers provided by the Centre.

24. On 27 September 2005 and 5 October 2005 TEA-CEGOS and STG sent the Commission two letters which, among other things, highlighted the independence of the two institutes. They noted that the only grounds on which award decisions could be withdrawn were those set out in Article 14 of the instructions to tenderers, which referred to point 2.3.3 of the Practical Guide. They added that the TEA-CEGOS Consortium had not failed to provide information or supplied inaccurate information.

25. On 11 October 2005 TEA-CEGOS and STG made an enquiry to the Commission in order to ascertain whether it had adopted a final position on the tendering procedure, asking it not to conclude any contracts at the same time as the award decisions that it would be adopting. The Commission informed them that it was about to adopt a decision.

26. By two decisions sent on 12 October 2005 to the TEA-CEGOS Consortium on the one hand and to the GHK Consortium on the other, the Commission confirmed the decisions of 18 July 2005 and rejected the tenders submitted by those consortia (the contested decisions').

Procedure and forms of order sought

27. By an application lodged with the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 13 October 2005, TEA-CEGOS and STG brought the action in Case T376/05.

28. By separate document registered at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 14 October 2005, TEA-CEGOS and STG submitted an application for interim measures, requesting suspension of the operation of the contested decision in that case and of all the other decisions taken by the Commission in the same call for tenders following that decision. By order of the President of the Court of First Instance of 14 October 2005, the Commission was ordered to suspend the tendering procedure bearing reference EuropeAid/119860/C/SV/multi-Lot 7' pending a final order on the application for interim measures. On account of an agreement reached between the parties on 26 October 2005, in the light of the settlement proposed by the President of the Court of First Instance, acting in his capacity as the judge hearing the application for interim relief, the order of 14 October 2005 was revoked by an order of the President of 13 December 2005. By an order of the President of the Court of First Instance of 11 January 2006, the application for interim measures submitted by TEA-CEGOS and STG was removed from the register of the Court of First Instance, costs being reserved.

29. By an application lodged with the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 20 October 2005, GHK Consulting brought the action in Case T383/05, requesting that the case be decided under an expedited procedure pursuant to Article 76a of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance. On 7 November 2005 the Commission stated that it agreed to that request.

30. By separate document registered at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 20 October 2005, GHK Consulting submitted an application for interim measures, requesting suspension of operation of the decision in that case and of all subsequent decisions with respect to other tenderers and an order of interim measures to suspend the effects of those decisions. By letter lodged with the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 16 December 2005, GHK Consulting informed the Court pursuant to Article 99 of the Rules of Procedure that it was withdrawing its application for interim measures. By order of the President of the Court of First Instance of 11 January 2006, the application for interim measures submitted by GHK Consulting was removed from the register of the Court of First Instance, costs being reserved.

31. By letter lodged with the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 20 October 2005, GHK Consulting submitted a request for Cases T376/05 and T383/05 to be joined. The Commission and TEA-CEGOS and STG stated on 28 October 2005 and 8 November 2005 respectively that they had no objection to the cases being joined.

32. By letter lodged with the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 31 October 2005, GHK Consulting made a request for the language of the case to be changed to French, whilst reserving the right to use English where necessary in the written and oral procedure. On 7 November 2005 the Commission stated that it had no objection to the proposed change of language.

33. By letter lodged with the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 3 November 2005, TEA-CEGOS, STG and GHK Consulting requested that they be given the opportunity to put before the Court, in the main proceedings, the documents requested by the Present of the Court of First Instance at the interim measures hearing. On 4 November 2005 the President of the Second Chamber of the Court of First Instance granted that request, on condition that the documents were sent to the Registry of the Court of First Instance in English by 1 December 2005 at the latest.

34. On 8 November 2005 the Second Chamber of the Court of First Instance decided to grant the application for an expedited procedure in Case T383/05 and to change the language of the case, as requested by GHK Consulting.

35. By order of the President of the Second Chamber of the Court of First Instance of 10 November 2005, Cases T376/05 and T383/05 were joined for the purposes of the written procedure, the oral procedure and the judgment.

36. By letter lodged wi th the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 30 November 2005, the Commission requested that Case T-376/05 be decided under an expedited procedure pursuant to Article 76a of the Rules of Procedure. On 1 December 2005 TEA-CEGOS and STG agreed to that request. On 6 December 2005 the Second Chamber of the Court of First Instance decided to grant the application for an expedited procedure in Case T-376/05.

37. Upon hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court of First Instance decided to open the oral procedure. The parties presented oral argument and answered the questions put to them by the Court at the hearing on 12 January 2006.

38. The applicants claim that the Court of First Instance should:

- annul the contested decisions;

- annul all the other decisions taken by the Commission in the call for tenders following the contested decisions;

- order the Commission to pay the costs.

39. The Commission contends that the Court of First Instance should:

- dismiss the applications;

- order the applicants to pay the costs.

Law

40. The applicants in Case T-376/05 rely on four pleas in law in support of their action. By the first plea, the applicants claim that the Commission infringed Article 13 of the procurement notice and Article 14 of the instructions to tenderers. By the second plea, they assert that the Commission failed to comply with its obligation to state reasons and breached the principle of legal certainty, while moreover committing a manifest error of assessment with regard to the application of Article 13 of the procurement notice. By the third plea, they allege that the Commission breached the principle of good administration and failed to exercise due care. Lastly, by the fourth plea, they claim that the Commission breached the principle of protection of legitimate expectations. Since the second plea to a large extent determines the resolution of the other pleas, it should be examined first.

41. The applicant in Case T-383/05 relies on a single plea in law, alleging misapplication of Article 13 of the procurement notice, and this plea will therefore be examined in connection with the second plea mentioned above.

The second plea, alleging breach of the obligation to state reasons, manifest error of assessment and breach of the principle of legal certainty

Arguments of the parties

42. TEA-CEGOS and STG point out that Article 13 of the procurement notice excludes applications from a natural or legal person' who submits more than one tender for the same lot, including legal persons within the same legal group'. However, no definition of legal group' is given in Community law or in the documents supplied in connection with the call for tenders. In the absence of such a definition, GHK Consulting considers that tenders should be excluded under Article 13 of the procurement notice only where the entities belong to the same group, that is to say where they are controlled by a common parent company or control each other. GHK Consulting claims that in the present case the DIHR and the DIIS are independent, that they have their own statutes and that they each pursue their own specific objectives, and that the Centre was set up to facilitate the administration of the two institutes. Only the management of their administrative services is shared in so far as they are managed by the Centre, which receives remuneration for the services provided. In addition, TEA-CEGOS and STG claim that the Commission committed a manifest error of assessment in failing to take account of the fact that each of the institutes had its own assets.

43. TEA-CEGOS and STG consider that the Commission changed its interpretation of the concept of legal group' since, in the decisions of 18 July 2005, it stated, for the first time, that the criterion of independence was no longer relevant and that it was sufficient for the DIHR to form part of the Centre structurally, an approach confirmed in the contested decisions, thus breaching the principle of legal certainty.

44. TEA-CEGOS and STG state that the objective of Article 13 of the procurement notice is to prevent conflicts of interest between persons who, directly or indirectly, might compete several times for a single contract and therefore find themselves in competition for the framework contract or, later, for specific contracts. Thus, if the DIHR and the DIIS were not independent from the Centre and had to be given the Centre's prior approval to conclude a contract, a conflict of interest could exist between them. In the present case, TEA-CEGOS and STG consider that the conduct of each entity may be imputed only to that entity and not to third parties, with the result that the Centre and the two institutes cannot constitute a single economic entity (Case T325/01 DaimlerChrysler v Commission [2005] ECR II0000, paragraphs 218 and 219). The Commission cannot therefore take the view, as it did in the present case, that because the two institutes belong to the Centre effective competition between them in the implementation of the framework contract is precluded. In the event that an examination of a conflict of interest is not required by the provisions of Article 13 of the procurement notice, TEA-CEGOS and STG consider that that article must be manifestly disproportionate and inappropriate in relation to the objective being pursued, namely to prevent conflicts of interest between tenderers.

45. The Commission acknowledges that there is no definition of legal group' in Article 13 of the procurement notice. However, that concept is general and can cover a variety of situations, with the Commission making an assessment in the specific case in order to decide on the existence of a legal group. It states that Article 13 of the procurement notice reproduces a more general provision of the Financial Regulation, namely Article 94, which expressly provides for the exclusion of candidates who are subject to a conflict of interest. In the present case, according to the Commission, the fact that the two institutes belong to the Centre makes effective competition between them difficult, since they have similar areas of expertise and their fields of competence may overlap. Moreover, Article 13 is sufficiently clear in that it prohibits membership of the same legal group, thereby introducing a structural criterion.

46. The Commission considers that the applicants' claims alleging breach of the principle of legal certainty and breach of the obligation to state reasons are not well founded.

47. First, as regards the complaint alleging a failure to state reasons, it should be stated that the reasons for which the Commission rejected the applicants' tenders can be clearly seen from the grounds of the contested decisions.

48. According to consistent case-law, the scope of the obligation to state reasons depends on the nature of the measure at issue and the context in which it was adopted. The statement of reasons must disclose in a clear and unequivocal fashion the reasoning followed by the institution, so as to enable the persons concerned to ascertain the reasons for the measure so that they can defend their rights and ascertain whether or not the measure is well founded, and so as to enable the Community judicature to exercise its power of review (Case C350/88 Delacre and Others v Commission [1990] ECR I395, paragraphs 15 and 16, and Case T217/01 Forum des migrants v Commission [2003] ECR II1563, paragraph 68).

49. In the present case, the contested decisions expressly mention that the tenders submitted by the two consortia infringed Article 13 of the procurement notice because the DIIS and the DIHR belonged to the same legal group, the evidence which enabled the Commission to make this finding also being set out in those decisions. In addition, it should be stressed that the contested decisions were adopted following a thorough review by the Commission, after the decisions of 18 July 2005 and after hearing the views of the applicants. The applicants were therefore aware of the Commission's questions as to the nature of the link between the two institutes and the Centre. In these circumstances, this complaint cannot be upheld.

50. Second, as regards the complaint alleging the manifest error of assessment affecting the contested decisions, it should be noted that the Commission has a broad discretion with regard to the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender, and review by the Court must be limited to checking that the rules governing the procedure and statement of reasons are complied with, the facts are correct and there is no manifest error of assessment or misuse of powers (Case T145/98 ADT Projekt v Commission [2000] ECR II387, paragraph 147, and Case T169 Esedra v Commission [2002] ECR II609, paragraph 95).

51. The Court observes that Article 13 of the procurement notice prohibited entities within the same legal group from participating in the same call for tenders, for example as members of consortia, in order to prevent the risk of a conflict of interest or of distorted competition between the tenderers. As a result of that prohibition, the validity of a tender was dependent on compliance with Article 13 of the procurement notice, since the Commission has a broad discretion in determining both the content and the application of the rules applicable to the award of a contract following a call for tenders. Therefore, the article applies even where an infringement of the article is detected only at an advanced stage of the tendering procedure.

52. In the light of the foregoing, it must be determined in the present case whether the Commission committed a manifest error of assessment in taking the view that the DIIS and the DIHR belonged to the same legal group. To that end, it should be noted that in the absence of a definition of the concept of legal group in legislation or in case-law, laying down the criteria applying to such a group, the Commission was required to conduct an examination of each individual case, taking into account all the relevant factors, in order to decide whether the conditions for the application of Article 13 of the procurement notice had been met.

53. Consequently, in order to recognise the existence of a legal group in the present case, the Commission had to determine whether the entities in question were structurally linked to the Centre, since this factor was liable to give rise to a risk of a conflict of interest or of distorted competition between the tenderers, although other factors could support the examination of structural links, such as those relating to the degree of independence of the entities in question which are described by the parties as functional criteria'.

54. In the present case, it can be seen from the contested decisions that the Commission found that the DIIS and the DIHR legally formed part of the Centre and therefore belonged to the same structure. It inferred from the Danish law of 6 June 2002 and from the statutes of the Centre and those of the institutes that the DIIS and the DIHR did not constitute legal entities distinct from the Centre and noted that the Centre was among other things responsible for the common administration of the two institutes, which were, moreover, represented on the Centre's board of management.

55. First, as regards the question whether institutes belong to the Centre structurally, it is apparent from the documents before the Court, and more specifically Paragraph 1(2) of the Danish Law of 6 June 2002, that the Centre is composed of two autonomous entities, the DIIS and the DIHR, and that the two institutes and the Centre share the same premises.

56. As regards the administration of the two institutes, as the Commission observed in the contested decisions, Article 2 of the Centre's statutes provides that the Centre shall provide joint administration concerning finance, staff administration, management, joint services and the joint library'. Thus, administrative services, such as payment of salaries and management of invoices, are provided by the Centre, which receives specific remuneration from the two institutes for the services provided, and the Centre is also responsible for receiving payments made to the institutes.

57. Furthermore, as the Commission also pointed out in the contested decisions, there is a link between the institutes and the Centre's board of management, since certain board members are appointed by the DIIS and the DIHR (Paragraph 5(3) of the Danish Law of 6 June 2002). An exchange of views on the commercial strategies to be pursued by the two institutes may therefore take place at this high level of the structure. This link is reinforced by the fact, also apparent from the papers before the Court, that the Centre's board of management discusses operational forecasts for the two institutes.

58. In the light of the foregoing, the two institutes must be regarded as structurally forming part of the same legal group. Consequently, the Commission did not commit a manifest error of assessment in applying Article 13 of the procurement notice, since the fact that the institutes belonged to the Centre structurally was sufficient evidence of a risk of distorted competition between the tenderers, or even a conflict of interest. It must also be stated that consideration of factors relating to the functional criterion does not call into question the Commission's assessment in this regard.

59. Second, as regards the functional criterion, namely the institutes' independence from the Centre, the Court notes that the institutes' financial autonomy is relatively limited by the influence of the Centre. As is apparent from the papers before the Court, the DIIS and the DIHR are financed in part by public funds granted to the Centre, which must divide them on the basis of an 80% share for the DIIS and 20% for the DIHR. In addition, Articles 4 and 15 of the DIIS's statutes provide that the DIIS is under the auspices of the [Centre]' and that the accounts of the institute, as an entity of the [Centre], shall be audited by the Rigsrevisor'. Similarly, the DIHR's accounts must be approved by the Centre's board of management.

60. As regards the institutes' decision-making autonomy, the applicants highlight the fact that the institutes' boards of management are autonomous from the Centre. However, this claim is not sufficient to rebut the finding that the DIIS and the DIHR belong to the same legal group, since such a situation does not necessarily preclude decision-making autonomy for different legal entities coexisting within the same group.

61. As regards the applicants' argument that the Commission failed to take into consideration the fact that the institutes had distinct assets, the Court notes that the applicants have not been able to provide conclusive evidence to show that in the contested decisions the Commission wrongly took the view that the institutes' assets belonged to the Centre. Furthermore, the fact that the Commission did not consider the institutes to have legal personality does not constitute a manifest error of assessment resulting in a misapplication of Article 13 of the procurement notice. First, it should be noted that the contested decisions are not in any way based on the absence of legal personality, since no mention is made of that factor in the decisions. Second, as the Commission proves satisfactorily in its written submissions, even if the institutes had their own legal personality, the fact that the DIIS and the DIHR belonged to the Centre justified the application of Article 13 of the procurement notice.

62. Consequently, the Commission did not commit a manifest error of assessment in basing its position principally on a structural criterion. The fact that it was able initially to request information relating to the functional criterion and then used the structural criterion cannot affect this finding, since the Commission undertook a thorough examination of the facts of the case before applying Article 13 of the procurement notice.

63. The complaint that the Commission breached the principle of legal certainty by deciding to opt for a structural criterion is therefore unfounded. In addition, the removal of Article 13 of the procurement notice from subsequent tender notices is irrelevant to the outcome of the present case, since the lawfulness of the individual measure contested must be assessed on the basis of the elements of fact and of law existing at the time when the measure was adopted (Joined Cases 15/76 and 16/76 France v Commission [1979] ECR 321, paragraph 7; Case C449/98 P IECC v Commission [2001] ECR I3875, paragraph 87; and Joined Cases T177/94 and T377/94 Altmann and Others v Commission [1996] ECR II2041, paragraph 119).

64. As regards the allegedly disproportionate and inappropriate nature of Article 13 of the procurement notice, the applicants stated at the hearing that the scope of Article 13 of the procurement notice was too broad and was capable of covering situations where no conflict of interest could result from an entity belonging structurally to another. It should be considered in this regard that, in view of the broad discretion enjoyed by the Commission and the need to lay down clear, understandable rules in the procurement notice in advance, the Commission did not manifestly misuse its power in deciding on the content of Article 13 of the procurement notice and in applying it to the applicants' tenders. In particular, it did not exceed the limits of that power in stipulating in Article 13 that if legal persons belonged to the same legal group, they would be excluded from the tendering procedure.

65. The Court notes, for the sake of completeness, that in Joined Cases C21/03 and C34/03 Fabricom [2005] ECR I1559, paragraph 36, the Court of Justice held that a candidate or tenderer cannot automatically be excluded from a tendering procedure without having the opportunity to comment on the reasons justifying such exclusion.

66. In the present case, in exercising its broad discretion the Commission gave the applicants several opportunities to offer a detailed explanation of the link between the two institutes and the Centre before concluding that the two institutes belonged structurally to the same legal group and applying Article 13 of the procurement notice. Thus, it was finally decided to exclude the applicants from the tendering procedure only after they had the opportunity to express their point of view regarding the links between the DIIS and the DIHR. Consequently, the Commission did not automatically apply the provisions laid down in Article 13 of the procurement notice. The facts of the present case are therefore different from those of the Fabricom case. As a result, the applicants' argument regarding the disproportionate or inappropriate nature of Article 13 of the procurement notice must be rejected.

67. In the light of the foregoing, since the DIIS and the DIHR belong to the Centre structurally, the Commission did not commit a manifest error of assessment and did not breach the principle of legal certainty in taking the view that the two institutes were part of the same legal group and in applying Article 13 of the procurement notice. The second plea must therefore be rejected.

The first plea, alleging infringement of Article 13 of the procurement notice and Article 14 of the instructions to tenderers

Arguments of the parties

68. TEA-CEGOS and STG state that under Article 14 of the instructions to tenderers the signing of the framework contract with the successful tenderer was subject to the production of additional documents to prove the correctness of the statements made by the tenderer during the tendering procedure. Consequently, the decision to award the contract should have been declared null and void only if the successful tenderer had not been able to produce those documents or had communicated inaccurate information during the tendering procedure.

69. They stress that in the present case, in accordance with the request made in the letter of 20 May 2005 (see paragraph 13 above), the TEA-CEGOS Consortium communicated the required documents within the period of 15 calendar days and did not provide any wrong information, since the fact that the DIHR belonged to the Centre was mentioned from the initial application to participate. Consequently, TEA-CEGOS and STG claim that the required evidence was duly provided in accordance with Article 14 of the instructions to tenderers. In addition, TEACEGOS and STG consider that Article 13 of the procurement notice could not be applicable once an award decision had been taken. The only grounds on which the award decision could have been withdrawn were those set out in Article

14 of the instructions to tenderers, which refer to point 2.3.3 of the Practical Guide.

70. The Commission contests the arguments put forward by the applicants. In its view, the letters of 20 May 2005 cannot be treated as decisions definitively awarding the contract to the applicants, since the award was dependent on the submission of documents showing that the applicants were not in a situation corresponding to the grounds for exclusion. The Commission considers that the documents supplied disclosed that the applicants failed to comply with Article 13 of the procurement notice.

Findings of the Court

71. It should be noted that the decisions of 20 May 2005 expressly stated that the signing of the framework contract was subject to evidence being provided by the applicants that they were not in any of the situations corresponding to the grounds for exclusion set out in point 2.3.3 of the Practical Guide. In addition, it is apparent from the actual wording of Article 14 of the instructions to tenderers that it was for the successful candidates to prove the truth of their statements. Consequently, the award of the contract was dependent on the submission of evidence capable of proving the veracity of the information supplied by the applicants when they submitted their tenders and on the Commission verifying that Article 13 of the procurement notice had been complied with.

72. As has already been pointed out (paragraph 51 above), the validity of any tender was dependent on compliance with Article 13 and the Commission could apply that article at an advanced stage of the procedure, at the very least until the evidence mentioned in the preceding paragraph had been examined. Consequently, the applicants' argument that Article 13 of the procurement notice could not apply once an award decision had been taken is unfounded.

73. The first plea must therefore be rejected.

The third plea, alleging breach of the principle of good administration and failure to exercise due care

Arguments of the parties

74. TEA-CEGOS and STG state that the Commission had been aware from the initial application to participate that the DIHR belonged to the Centre. If the Commission had questions as to the extent to which the DIHR belonged to the Centre, it should have asked the TEA-CEGOS Consortium during the tendering procedure and not after it had decided to award it the contract. By failing to do so, the Commission breached the principle of good administration. It should also have answered the letters sent by the TEA-CEGOS Consortium on 22 and 25 July 2005, which it did only after being requested to do so by TEA-CEGOS. In their view, the carelessness with which the Commission acted, an attitude reflected in the contradictory information on its website relating to the successful tenderers for lot 7, should therefore be condemned.

75. The Commission notes that, while it is true that the DIHR had pointed out the link with the DIIS, the DIIS had not made any such statement. Consequently, the computer system set up for the administrative procedure was not able to detect a possible infringement of Article 13 of the procurement notice. Having been alerted by a third party to the existence of a link between the DIHR and the DIIS, the Commission reacted by asking the applicants about this point. The Commission cannot therefore be accused of any failure to exercise due care. The Commission also claims that it responded quickly to the requests made by the applicants on 22 and 25 July 2005, as early as 27 July 2005, when it informed them, among other things, that it would take their comments into consideration and would notify them as soon as possible of the action it intended to take.

Findings of the Court

76. According to settled case-law, the guarantees conferred by the Community legal order in administrative proceedings include, in particular, the principle of good administration, involving the duty of the competent institution to examine carefully and impartially all the relevant aspects of the individual case (Case C269/90 Technische Universität München [1991] ECR I5469, paragraph 14; Case T44/90 La Cinq v Commission [1992] ECR II1, paragraph 86; and Case T70/99 Alpharma v Council [2002] ECR II3495, paragraph 182). Furthermore, the Commission is bound to ensure, at each stage of a tendering procedure, compliance with the principle of equal treatment and, thereby, equality of opportunity for all the tenderers (see, to that effect, Case C496/99 P Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta [2004] ECR I3801, paragraph 108, and ADT Projekt v Commission , paragraph 164).

77. In the present case, on 20 May 2005 the Commission informed the applicants that their tenders had been accepted for lot 7 on the condition that the applicants produced documents to prove that they were not in any of the situations corresponding to the grounds for exclusion set out in point 2.3.3 of the Practical Guide.

78. The DIHR indicated that it belonged to the Centre when the TEA-CEGOS Consortium applied to participate, and also mentioned that one of its partners was the DIIS. The DIIS stated that it did not belong to any group or network. However, if the DIIS really considered that it did not belong to any legal group, in view of the information required in the declaration form, it should at the very least have notified the Commission that it had links with the Centre and was therefore part of a network, since the Centre's statutes expressly provide that the DIIS is one of its entities.

79. Although the DIIS's statement was inaccurate, it should be noted that the technical tender submitted by the GHK Consortium indicated the names of the various members of the Consortium and that the DIIS was the third name mentioned there. Consequently, the Commission could have realised that the DIIS's statement was not accurate. However, the fact that the Commission realised that the institutes belonged to the Centre only at an advanced stage of the procedure has no bearing on the outcome of the present case, since, even at that stage, the tender submitted by the GHK Consortium had to be excluded in accordance with Article 13 of the procurement notice.

80. Whatever the case, the inherent complexity of the range of information submitted in tendering procedures can explain why the Commission realised that the institutes belonged to the Centre only once the two tenders had been conditionally accepted. It was only at this stage of the procedure that the applicants were required to produce documents to prove the veracity of their initial statements. It follows that the Commission did not breach the principle of good administration by failing to raise the question whether the institutes belonged to the Centre until after the tender submitted by the GHK Consortium had been conditionally accepted.

81. With regard to the way the Commission conducted the tendering procedure, it is clear that as early as 22 June 2005 the Commission asked TEA-CEGOS to explain the link between the DIHR and the Centre and asked GHK International to provide it with clarification as to the legal status of the DIIS. Further to the information supplied by TEA-CEGOS, on 27 June 2005, before adopting the decision of 18 July 2005, the Commission asked it to provide supplementary information. In addition, it is apparent from the facts that between 18 July and 12 October 2005 the Commission was in constant contact with the applicants and, among other things, informed them that it was reviewing the evidence submitted and would notify them as soon as possible of the final position it adopted. Furthermore, the Commission endeavoured to answer the applicants' questions promptly, in particular by informing TEA-CEGOS' lawyers of the state of the procedure as early as 13 September 2005, after those lawyers expressed a desire to find out about this on 8 September 2005.

82. As regards the contradictory information allegedly circulated on the EuropeAid website, it should be stated that the names of the successful tenderers mentioned on that website were those that had been conditionally accepted by the Commission. It was therefore logical for the applicants' names to appear there, since it became clear and unequivocal that the DIIS and the DIHR belonged to the Centre only when the applicants were required to prove the veracity of their statements, in this case following the decisions of 20 May 2005. Once the decisions of 18 July 2005 had been adopted, the applicants' names were removed from the website, with effect from 25 July 2005.

83. In the light of the foregoing, the applicants have not shown that the Commission breached the principle of good administration and failed to exercise due care, with the result that their complaints are in any event unfounded. The third plea must therefore be rejected.

The fourth plea, alleging the retroactive withdrawal of the contested decisions and breach of the principle of protection of legitimate expectations

Arguments of the parties

84. TEA-CEGOS and STG take the view that the decision contested by them annuls the decision of 20 May 2005 awarding the contract to the TEA-CEGOS Consortium, which in fact constitutes retroactive withdrawal of an administrative act. It follows from settled case-law that the retroactive withdrawal of a favourable decision is subject to very strict conditions (Case 54/77 Herpels v Commission [1978] ECR 585, paragraph 38). They also state that, according to settled case-law, while it must be acknowledged that any Community institution which finds that a measure which it has just adopted is tainted by illegality has the right to withdraw it within a reasonable period, with retroactive effect, that right may be restricted by the need to fulfil the legitimate expectations of a beneficiary of the measure, who has been led to rely on its lawfulness (Case C90/95 P de Compte v Parliament [1997] ECR I1999, paragraph 35).

85. TEA-CEGOS and STG claim that in the present case the initial decision is not unlawful and should not therefore have been withdrawn. Even if that decision were unlawful, which is not the case in their view, its withdrawal could have been decided only if the conditions laid down for that purpose by the abovementioned case-law were satisfied. However, the Commission's request for explanation as to the links between the DIHR and the Centre was not made until 22 June 2005, even though it had had the DIHR's statement since October 2004. It was not until almost two months after the favourable decision of 20 May 2005 that the decision was withdrawn. The TEA-CEGOS Consortium also took care to answer the Commission's questions as set out in its fax of 22 June 2005. However, the decision contested by it was based on grounds which did not correspond with those questions. Consequently, TEA-CEGOS and STG consider that they could legitimately take the view that the evidence communicated to the Commission was not called into question and could not form the basis for a decision altering the award of the contract. They therefore take the view that they could rely on the lawfulness of the decision of 20 May 2005 and claim that the decision should be upheld. In these circumstances, regard was not had to their legitimate expectations or to the conditions under which an administrative act may be withdrawn.

86. The Commission points out that the letters of 20 May 2005 stated that the applicants' application would be accepted on the condition that they produced the documents required under Article 14 of the instructions to tenderers. It therefore considers that those letters did not contain a decision, but simply information regarding the Commission's conditional intention to accept the applicants' tenders. It adds that, since the applicants were not able to produce evidence that the two institutes satisfied the requirements laid down in Article 13 of the procurement notice, they could not be awarded the contract in any case.

Findings of the Court

87. First, it should be noted that the retroactive withdrawal of a favourable decision is generally subject to very strict conditions (Herpels v Commission , paragraph 38). According to settled case-law, while it must be acknowledged that any Community institution which finds that a measure which it has just adopted is tainted by illegality has the right to withdraw it within a reasonable period, with retroactive effect, that right may be restricted by the need to fulfil the legitimate expectations of a beneficiary of the measure, who has been led to rely on its lawfulness (Case 14/81 Alpha Steel v Commission [1992] ECR 749, paragraphs 10 to 12; Case 15/85 Consorzio Cooperative d'Abruzzo v Commission [1987] ECR 1005, paragraphs 12 to 17; Case C248/89 Cargill v Commission [1991] ECR I2987, paragraph 20; Case C365/89 Cargill [1991] ECR I3045, paragraph 18; and de Compte v Parliament , paragraph 35).

88. Second, it must be recalled that, according to settled case-law, the right to rely on the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations, which is one of the fundamental principles of the Community, extends to any individual in a situation where the Community authorities, by giving him precise assurances, have caused him to entertain legitimate expectations. Such assurances, in whatever form they are given, are precise, unconditional and consistent information from authorised and reliable sources (Joined Cases T66/96 and T221/97 Mellett v Court of Justice [1998] ECRSC IIA449 and II1305, paragraphs 104 and 107). However, a person may not plead breach of the principle unless he has been given precise assurances by the administration (Case T290/97 Mehibas Dordtselaan v Commission [2000] ECR II15, paragraph 59, and Case T273/01 Innova Privat-Akademie v Commission [2003] ECR II1093, paragraph 26).

89. In the present case, first, as regards the applicants' argument relating to the withdrawal of an administrative act, it should be noted that the decisions of 20 May 2005 were conditional acts. The signing of the framework contract for lot 7, provided for by the contested decisions, was subject to the condition that the applicants produced evidence that they were not in any of the situations corresponding to the grounds for exclusion provided for in point 2.3.3 of the Practical Guide. In these circumstances, it is apparent that the applicants were not awarded the contract, not as a result of the withdrawal of a decision awarding them that contract, but because they did not meet the conditions to which such a decision was subject. Consequently, the applicants' argument on this point is irrelevant.

90. Second, as regards the breach of the principle of protection of legitimate expectations claimed by TEACEGOS and STG, the decisions of 20 May 2005 did not contain precise assurances as to the fact that the framework contract would be signed under any circumstances, and could not therefore cause the applicants to entertain legitimate expectations to that effect, since they expressly stated that the signing of the framework contract was subject to the applicants producing evidence that they were not in any of the situations corresponding to the grounds for exclusion provided for in point 2.3.3 of the Practical Guide. It follows that the arguments put forward by the applicants relating to the breach of the principle of protection of legitimate expectations are unfounded.

91. The fourth plea must therefore be rejected as unfounded. It follows that the present applications must be dismissed.

Costs

92. Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the applicants have been unsuccessful, they must be ordered to pay the costs, including those relating to the applications for interim measures.

Commission of the European Communities

(Public contracts – Community tendering procedure – Recruitment of technical assistance for short-term expertise for exclusive benefit of third countries benefiting from external aid – Rejection of tenders)

Summary of the Judgment

1. European Communities' public procurement – Conclusion of a contract following a call for tenders

2. European Communities' public procurement – Tendering procedure

3. Community law – Principles – Protection of legitimate expectations – Conditions

1. The Commission has a broad discretion with regard to the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender, and review by the Court of First Instance must be limited to checking that the rules governing the procedure and statement of reasons are complied with, the facts are correct and there is no manifest error of assessment or misuse of powers.

(see para. 50)

2. Where the procurement notice issued in a tendering procedure contains a provision prohibiting entities within the same legal group from participating in the same calls for tenders, in the absence of a definition of the concept of legal group in legislation or in case-law, laying down the criteria applying to such a group, the Commission is required to conduct an examination of each individual case, taking into account all the relevant factors, in order to decide whether the conditions governing the application of that provision have been met. Consequently, in order to recognise the existence of a legal group, the Commission has to determine whether the entities in question are structurally linked, since this factor is liable to give rise to a risk of a conflict of interest or of distorted competition between the tenderers, although other factors can support the examination of structural links, such as those relating to the degree of independence of the entities in question.

(see paras 51-53)

3. The right to rely on the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations, which is one of the fundamental principles of the Community, extends to any individual in a situation where the Community authorities, by giving him precise assurances, have caused him to entertain legitimate expectations. Such assurances, in whatever form they are given, are precise, unconditional and consistent information from authorised and reliable sources. However, a person may not plead breach of the principle unless he has been given precise assurances by the administration.

Decisions of the Commission on successful tenders, taken in connection with the tendering procedure and expressly stating that the signing of the framework contract is subject to the persons concerned producing evidence that they are not in any of the situations corresponding to the grounds for exclusion from the tendering procedure, cannot be regarded as thereby containing precise assurances as to the fact that the framework contract will be signed under any circumstances, and cannot therefore cause the entities in question to entertain legitimate expectations to that effect.

Notice for the OJ

Action brought on 13 October 2005 - Tea-Cegos and STG v Commission

(Case T-376/05)

Language of the case: French

Parties:

Applicant(s): TEA-CEGOS (Madrid, Spain) and Services Techniques Globaux (STG) (Brussels, Belgium) (represented by: G.Vandersanden and L. Levi, lawyers)

Defendant(s): Commission of the European Communities

Form of order sought

The applicant(s) claim(s) that the Court should:

- annul the decision of 12 October 2005 rejecting the candidature and bid of the TEA-CEGOS consortium and withdrawing the decision awarding the framework contract to the TEA-CEGOS consortium under the call for tenders EuropeAid -2/119860/C-LOT No 7;

- annul all the other decisions taken by the defendant under that call for tenders following the decision of 12 October 2005 and, in particular, the award decisions and the contracts concluded by the Commission implementing those decisions;

- order the Commission to pay all the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicants in these proceedings are members of the consortium constituted for the purposes of the call for tenders 'EuropeAid/119860/C/SV/MULTI' launched by the defendant. It tendered for lot No 7 'Culture, Governance and Home Affairs'.

On 20 May 2004, the consortium was informed by post that its candidature had been accepted. By letter of 18 July 2005, the defendant informed it that it considered it necessary to review its decision awarding it the framework contract, and justified that change by the fact that the decision in question had been taken on the basis of inaccurate information communicated during the procedure. On 12 October 2005, the Commission took a decision confirming rejection of the applicant's candidature and bid on the basis of the exclusion clause provided for in Article 13 of the contract notice.[1] To justify its decision, it relied on the fact that one of the members of the consortium was part of another group, one of the members of which was taking part in another candidature for the same contract. That is the contested decision.

In support of their action for annulment, the applicants rely on several pleas in law.

By the first, they claim that the defendant was in breach of the contractual documents inasmuch as it misapplied Article 13 of the contract notice and Article 14 of the instructions to tenderers. The applicants claim that Article 13 of the contract notice was not applicable when an award decision had already been taken. They also submit that they did not fail to communicate the documents requested by the defendant or supply false information, so the conditions for applying Article 14 of the instructions to tenderers, which would alone justify the decision awarding the contract being challenged at that stage of the procedure, had not been fulfilled.

Secondly, the applicants claim that the defendant made a manifest error of assessment of the concept of 'legal group' in Article 13 of the contract notice, by taking into account only the structural criterion and excluding application of the test of conflict of interest between candidates in the same call for tenders. In the applicants' opinion, the defendant's assessment is such as to undermine the principles of legal certainty. The applicants also rely on a plea alleging breach of the duty to state reasons.

The third plea raised by the applicants relates to the alleged breach of the principle of good administration and a failure to take steps. The applicants claim that, where there is uncertainty, the defendant ought to have informed the consortium within a reasonable time, and questioned them during the tendering procedure and not after its decision awarding the contract, which would have made it possible to save the costs associated with their participation in the later stages of the procedure.

By the final plea, the applicants submit that regard was not had to their legitimate expectations and also rely on the theory of retrait des actes adminstratifs (cancellation of administrative acts). They claim that, in this case, the decision awarding the contract was not unlawful and, accordingly, could not be withdrawn by the defendant.

Language of the case: English

Parties

Applicant(s): ASTEC Global Consultancy Limited (Dublin, Ireland) [represented by: B. O'Connor, solicitor and I. Carreño, lawyer]

Defendant(s): Commission of the European Communities

Form of order sought

Annul the European Commission's Decision of 25 July 2005 (Reference no. AIDCO/F3/ACH D (2005) 19574), rejecting the applicant's application to participate in Lot 3 of the Commission procurement procedure EuropeAid//119860/C/SV multi;

order the Commission to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicant, acting as consortium leader, applied on 15 April 2005 for Lot 3 of the Framework contract in the context of a re-launch of the Commission procurement procedure EuropeAid//119860/C/SV/multi. One of the other members of the applicant's consortium was Austroconsult Ges.m.b.H. That company was also a partner in another consortium applying for the same lot. On 31 May 2005 Austroconsult formally withdrew from that other consortium.

By the contested Decision the Commission refused to short-list the applicant's application on the grounds that it did not comply with the Procurement Notice since Austroconsult was also present in another application.

In support of its request to annul the contested Decision the applicant contends that the Commission infringed essential procedural requirements in procurement procedures, since any conflict of interest due to Austroconsult's participation in two consortiums had been resolved by its withdrawal from the other consortium. In the same context, the applicant alleges in the alternative that Austroconsult could not have been considered a valid member of the other consortium, since its formal letter in the application package was not dated.

The applicant further alleges that the Commission infringed the principles of equal treatment, sound administration and due diligence, as it failed to investigate Austroconsult's withdrawal from the other consortium, if it had doubts about it, and failed to inform the applicant of its concerns. The applicant considers that its exclusion without any further clarification was disproportionate and in violation of good administration.

Finally, the applicant alleges that by establishing a short-list of only six candidates and continuing the tender procedure, the Commission has infringed the rules set down in the tender notice requiring a minimum of eight candidates. It also considers that it has been discriminated against, in that in the original launch and in the first re-launch of the tender procedure, in both of which the applicant had been successful, the rule requiring a short list of at least eight candidates had been observed, contrary to what has been the case at the second re-launch, from which the applicant was excluded.

Law

1 The award of service contracts by the Commission is subject to the provisions of Title V of Part One of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1; 'the Financial Regulation') and to the provisions of Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1; 'the implementing rules'). Those provisions are based on the relevant Community directives and, in particular, as regards service contracts, on Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended by Directive 97/52/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1), and replaced by Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004

2 According to Article 89(1) of the Financial Regulation:

'All public contracts financed in whole or in part by the budget shall comply with the principles of transparency, proportionality, equal treatment and non-discrimination.'

3 As Article 97(2) of the Financial Regulation states, a contract may be awarded by the best-value-for-money procedure.

4 Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation provides that:

'The contracting authority shall notify all candidates or tenderers whose applications or tenders are rejected of the grounds on which the decision was taken, and all tenderers whose tenders are admissible and who make a request in writing of the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the tenderer to whom the contract is awarded.

However, certain details need not be disclosed where disclosure would hinder application of the law, would be contrary to the public interest or would harm the legitimate business interests of public or private undertakings or could distort fair competition between those undertakings.'

5 Under Article 135(1) of the implementing rules:

'The contracting authorities shall draw up clear and non-discriminatory selection criteria.'

6 Finally, Article 149(2) of the implementing rules, in the version which applies to the facts of this case, provides as follows:

'The contracting authority shall, within not more than fifteen calendar days from the date on which a written request is received, communicate the information provided for in Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation.'

Facts giving rise to the dispute

7 The applicant is a company governed by Greek law, active in the area of information technology and communications.

8 By a contract notice of 19 November 2004, published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2004 S 226) under reference 2004/S 226 194443, the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities launched a call for tenders for the provision of services in relation to the collection, production and dissemination of electronic publications, in particular the Supplement to the Official Journal ('the call for tenders').

9 The call for tenders concerned the provision of a number of services, including online access to the European public procurement database TED (Tenders Electronic Daily) for public procurement notices published on a daily basis in the Supplement to the Official Journal and offline access to that supplement on CD–ROM or DVD–ROM for subscribers wishing to have a hard copy.

10 Annex I to the draft contract, annexed to the call for tenders, specified the days and times by which the CD-ROM had to be delivered to the Publications Office in Luxembourg (Luxembourg). Thus, for a layout available at 15.00 on Mondays and Thursdays, the contractor had to deliver the CD–ROM on Tuesdays and Fridays respectively by 17.00 at the latest. Annex I to the draft contract also provided that tenderers had to submit an offer including, as an alternative to delivery of the CD–ROM to the Publications Office, its direct dispatch by post to subscribers on Tuesdays and Fridays respectively by 22.00 at the latest. According to the draft contract, meeting those delivery times was the prime objective.

11 By fax of 24 December 2004, the applicant indicated to the Publications Office that, according to its own research, only one company, Technicolor Srl, established in Luxembourg, could comply with the deadlines referred to in the call for tenders for delivery of the CD–ROM and that that company had an exclusivity agreement with the incumbent contractor, Euroscript Srl. The applicant requested the Publications Office to ensure equal conditions of competition for all the tenderers.

12 By letter of 4 January 2005, the Publications Office replied that several companies were able to meet the terms and conditions of the call for tenders and that those terms and conditions did not create any obstacles to competition.

13 By fax of the same date, the applicant reiterated its assertions and requested the Publications Office to indicate to it the companies capable of producing the CD-ROM and complying with the delivery deadlines set out in the call for tenders.

14 By letter of 6 January 2005, the Publications Office informed the applicant that it was not in a position to provide any further information regarding the economic operators capable of fulfilling the requirements of the call for tenders.

15 On 11 January 2005, the applicant, in a consortium with Sofware AG, submitted a tender in response to the call for tenders. The Publications Office also received three other tenders, two of which were rejected at the selection stage.

16 On 10 February 2005, the applicant sent the Publications Office samples of the CD-ROM holders.

17 By letter and fax of 17 February 2005, the Publications Office requested the applicant, in the context of the evaluation of its tender, to provide it inter alia with a schedule complying with the deadlines referred to in the call for tenders and a detailed action plan to ensure production, delivery and/or dispatch of the CD-ROM within the deadlines.

18 On 21 February 2005, the applicant sent a fax to the Publications Office in which it replied to those requests.

19 By letter and fax of 15 April 2005, the Publications Office informed the applicant that its tender had been rejected at the award stage, since it had not achieved the necessary quality score, and that the contract would be awarded to the Eutis consortium, comprising the Euroscript and Intrasoft companies, whose tender had been considered to be the most economically advantageous ('the contested decision'). The Publications Office added that the applicant could request in writing additional information on the grounds for the rejection of its tender.

20 On the same day, the applicant sent a letter and a fax to the Publications Office requesting it to communicate to the applicant the names of any of the successful tenderer's partners and subcontractors, the scores awarded in respect of each criterion for its technical offer and that of the successful tenderer, a copy of the Evaluation Committee report, and a comparison of the financial offers of the applicant and the successful tenderer.

21 By letter of 19 April 2005, the Publications Office replied, indicating the name of the successful tenderer and that of its subcontractor, DocData, and the scores awarded in respect of each criterion for the applicant's technical offer and that of the successful tenderer, in the form of tables. According to those tables, the applicant obtained, at the award stage, a total of 60.6 points out of 120 whilst Eutis obtained a total of 100.4 points. The table relating to the applicant also contained six 'general comments taking into account the awarding criteria and price' which stated inter alia that the tender contained 'no information with regard to the CD-ROM' and that the 'daily production d[id] not seem realisable according to provided information on the procedures'. The letter from the Publications Office also stated that Eutis' financial offer was EUR 5 784 684.54 and the applicant's was EUR 4 973 140.

22 By fax of 27 April 2005, the applicant set out a number of objections to the contested decision, in particular in so far as concerned the results of the technical evaluation.

23 By letter of 13 May 2005, the Publications Office advised the applicant that it was taking account of certain complaints raised by it and that, consequently, it was suspending the signing of the contract in order to conduct a supplementary examination.

24 By letter of 3 June 2005, the Publications Office informed the applicant that the supplementary examination had confirmed the outcome presented in its letter of 15 April 2005 and that it had decided to proceed with the signing of the contract. The conclusions of that examination were summarised in a note internal to the Publications Office, but were not recorded formally.

25 Also on 3 June 2005, the applicant requested the Publications Office to communicate to it the results of the supplementary examination and the answers to the questions raised in its letter of 27 April 2005. It also asked the Publications Office not to proceed with the signing of the contract before those requests had been satisfied.

26 The applicant had not received any response to those requests by the date on which this action was brought.

Procedure and forms of order sought

27 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 24 June 2005, the applicant brought the present action.

28 Upon hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court of First Instance (Fourth Chamber) decided to open the oral procedure and, by way of measures of organisation of procedure provided for in Article 64 of its Rules of Procedure, requested the Commission to produce Annex II to the draft contract annexed to the call for tenders. The Court also requested the parties to reply to written questions. The parties complied with those requests within the prescribed period.

29 The parties presented oral argument and answered the questions put by the Court at the hearing on 1 March 2007. At that hearing, the applicant submitted written comments concerning the extract of the Evaluation Committee report and the Publications Office's internal note drawn up in the context of the supplementary examination of its tender, as annexed to the Commission's rejoinder. In those written comments it claims, principally, that the Publications Office's internal note should be removed from the file.

30 The Commission made written submissions in response to the applicant's comments and the oral procedure was closed on 21 March 2007.

31 The applicant claims that the Court should:

– annul the contested decision;

– order the Publications Office to pay all the costs, even if the action is dismissed.

32 The Commission contends that the Court should:

– dismiss the action;

– order the applicant to pay the costs.

Law

The application for annulment

33 The applicant relies on three pleas in support of its application for annulment: (i) impairment of free competition and breach of the principle of equal treatment, (ii) manifest errors of assessment by the Publications Office in the evaluation of the applicant's tender, (iii) infringement of the obligation to state reasons and lack of transparency.

34 The Court considers it appropriate to start by considering the first plea, then the third plea and, finally, the second plea.

The first plea: impairment of free competition and breach of the principle of equal treatment

– Arguments of the parties

35 The applicant claims that it informed the Publications Office of problems connected with the call for tenders, relating in particular to the fact that only CD-ROM producers located within a range of approximately two hours from Luxembourg by road were in a position to supply the quantity requested within the time-limit imposed and, consequently, that the tenderers were obliged to produce the CD-ROM at the premises of those few companies having a production site in that area. The Publications Office failed to take any action to investigate that situation, remedy it, and subsequently inform the tenderers concerned.

36 Thus, the Publications Office could have, first, annulled or modified the call for tenders in relation to the deadlines for delivering the CD-ROM to Luxembourg or, second, allowed contractors to propose production in more distant areas and subsequently send the CD-ROM directly to end customers. The Publications Office therefore failed to ensure that free competition would be observed throughout the tendering procedure, which led it to the view that only one tender fulfilled the technical evaluation criteria, that of the incumbent contractor, although the project is of average technical complexity – the only noteworthy features being the large quantity of CD-ROMs (about 8 000) to be manufactured and the very strict deadlines for delivery to the premises of the Publications Office.

37 Referring to the case-law, the applicant also states that the Publications Office did not ensure equal treatment between tenderers at every stage of the contract award procedure.

38 In addition, the financial offer of the selected tenderer is extremely high. The procedure implemented therefore failed to offer the best value for money.

39 In its reply, the applicant adds that it understands the need for strict deadlines as regards the project in question. In this respect, the option consisting of direct dispatch of the CD-ROM from the production site to the final recipients could have resulted in fair competition between the tenderers. However, the Publications Office imposed delivery of the CD-ROM to its premises in Luxembourg.

40 The Commission states, as a preliminary point, that it has broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender and the Court's review should be limited to checking that there has been no serious and manifest error.

41 It then states that the Publications Office was under an obligation to publish public procurement notices sent by the contracting authorities within the time-limits laid down in Article 36(3) of, and Annex VIII to, Directive 2004/18. Since the CD-ROM is the only hard copy version of the Supplement to the Official Journal, it was necessary to fix the same deadlines for delivery of the CD-ROM and for publication of notices on the internet in order not to discriminate against readers of the Supplement to the Official Journal without access to the internet.

42 Moreover, the applicant admits in its application that a number of manufacturers could be chosen as partners. Consequently, the conditions laid down in the call for tenders could have been complied with in any event. The applicant also admits that the call for tenders gave tenderers the option to submit alternative offers providing for direct dispatch to end users.

43 Lastly, other tenderers chose companies in different Member States (France, Belgium, the Netherlands) for the production of the CD-ROM. This shows that the claims of discrimination are not well founded.

– Findings of the Court

44 Under Article 89(1) of the Financial Regulation, all public contracts financed in whole or in part by the budget are to comply with the principles of transparency, proportionality, equal treatment and non-discrimination.

45 Thus, according to settled case-law, the Commission is required to ensure at each stage of a tendering procedure equal treatment and, thereby, equality of opportunity for all the tenderers (Case C-496/99 P Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta [2004] ECR I-3801, paragraph 108; Case T-203/96 Embassy Limousines & Services v Parliament [1998] ECR II-4239, paragraph 85; and Case T-160/03 AFCon Management Consultants and Others v Commission [2005] ECR II-981, paragraph 75).

46 Furthermore, a system of undistorted competition, as laid down in the Treaty, can be guaranteed only if equality of opportunity is secured as between the various economic operators (Case C-202/88 France v Commission [1991] ECR I-1223, paragraph 51, and Case C-462/99 Connect Austria [2003] ECR I-5197, paragraph 83).

47 In the present case, it is apparent from the oral argument at the hearing that the process for distributing the CD-ROM to subscribers consists of three stages. The first consists of preparing the call for tenders following the dispatch by the contracting authorities of the Member States and the Community institutions or bodies of documents which must be published; the second of the validation and editing of the call for tenders and the third of the production proper and delivery of the CD-ROM to the Publications Office in Luxembourg or its dispatch by post to end users. This dispute concerns only the third stage, which was the subject of the disputed call for tenders. For that third stage, the tenderer entrusts the technical part of the production of the CD-ROM to a manufacturer.

48 The applicant claims, first, that the call for tenders did not ensure free competition and equal treatment between tenderers in that the deadlines for delivery of the CD-ROM to the Publications Office in Luxembourg were too short.

49 In that respect, it must be pointed out that the call for tenders did provide for very strict deadlines for delivery of the CD-ROM. Thus, for a layout available at 15.00 on Mondays and Thursdays, the contractor had to deliver the CD-ROM to the Publications Office on Tuesdays and Fridays respectively by 17.00 at the latest. The contractor therefore had 26 hours in total, whilst production alone of the CD-ROM requires 12 to 20 hours according to the applicant, which was not contradicted on that point by the Commission at the hearing.

50 The applicant does not however adduce evidence that those deadlines were set with the aim of benefiting the incumbent contractor to the detriment of all the other tenderers.

51 First of all, the applicant does not dispute the need for short deadlines, as provided for in Article 36 (3) of Directive 2004/18, in order that subscribers have access to the CD-ROM at the same time as contract notices are published on the internet.

52 Next, the Court notes that applicant's argument relating to the number of specialised manufacturers capable of complying with the deadlines provided for in the call for tenders is imprecise. In its letter of 24 December 2004, reproduced in its application, the applicant claims that only one company, namely Technicolor, established in Luxembourg and having an exclusivity agreement with Euroscript Srl, could manufacture the CD-ROM within the deadlines provided for in the call for tenders. Next, the applicant refers, in its application, to CD-ROM manufacturers located within 2 hours of Luxembourg by road, which meant, according to the applicant, that tenderers were obliged to produce the CD-ROM at the 'premises of those few companies having a production site in that area'. Lastly, in its reply, the applicant submits that, apart from Technicolor, one other manufacturer was capable of complying with the deadlines provided for, namely DocData, whose production site is in Langres (France).

53 It is apparent from the replies to the written questions put by the Court, by way of measures of organisation of procedure, that Euroscript had chosen, for the call for tenders, two of DocData's production sites, in Langres and in Tillburg (Netherlands). Since Euroscript was the successful tenderer, those sites must be regarded as satisfying the conditions as to deadlines laid down by the call for tenders, which the applicant did not dispute at the hearing. Furthermore, the two other tenderers opted for sites which were also different: Wellen (Belgium) and Uden (Netherlands).

54 It is apparent from those findings that several manufacturers other than Technicolor were capable of satisfying the conditions as to deadlines laid down by the call for tenders.

55 Moreover, the applicant does not adduce any facts or evidence in support of its claim that Technicolor had an exclusivity agreement with Euroscript.

56 The applicant asserts, secondly, that the Publications Office required delivery of the CD-ROM to Luxembourg although the call for tenders also provided for another option, the direct dispatch of the CD-ROM by post to subscribers.

57 In that respect, it is sufficient to observe that this is merely an assertion on the part of the applicant and it is not able to establish or, at the very least, submit evidence substantiating its claims.

58 In addition, the applicant does not explain how the Publications Office could, at the stage of the examination of the tenders, refuse the option of direct dispatch by post even though that was expressly provided for in the call for tenders.

59 Lastly, the fact that only one tenderer managed to offer a service achieving the quality score required by the call for tenders does not mean, in itself, that the call for tenders was discriminatory.

60 It is apparent from the foregoing that the applicant has failed to demonstrate that the Publications Office impaired free competition and infringed the principle of equal treatment between tenderers.

61 The first plea must therefore be rejected.

The third plea: infringement of the obligation to state reasons and lack of transparency

– Arguments of the parties

62 The applicant claims that the contested decision is vitiated by failure to provide an adequate statement of reasons. By failing to reply to the applicant's questions raised within the time-limits or to provide clarifications repeatedly requested in writing, the Publications Office did not make it possible to assess the legality of its acts. Thus, the Evaluation Committee fails to explain why a tender that was EUR 1 600 000 higher than the applicant's could be considered more advantageous. In addition, the Publications Office did not reply to the questions put by the applicant in its letter of 27 April 2005.

63 Moreover, according in particular to Article 253 EC, Article 100 of the Financial Regulation and Article 148(3) of Regulation No 2342/2002, the contracting authority is required to give reasons for its decision to reject the tender of a participant when requested, within a period of 15 days. In that respect, the Publications Office did not sufficiently elaborate on the characteristics and relative advantages of the tender of the successful tenderer. The insufficient reasoning given in the contested decision therefore makes review by the Court difficult.

64 The applicant also observes, in its reply, that Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1261/2005 of 20 July 2005 amending Regulation No 2342/2002 (OJ 2005 L 201, p. 3) supplemented Article 149 of Regulation No 2342/2002 with a view to limiting the discretionary power of the Community institutions in relation to notification of the grounds for rejecting a tender. The Publications Office has thus misinterpreted its obligation to state reasons for its decisions.

65 The Commission submits that the Publications Office more than fulfilled its duty to state reasons. By its letter of 15 April 2005 the Publications Office first of all informed the applicant that its tender had not been selected on the ground that it had not achieved the necessary quality score and that, if it made a written request, the tenderer would be informed in more detail of the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the tenderer to whom the contract had been awarded.

66 The applicant requested additional information on the same day and the Publications Office then sent the tables concerning the technical evaluation in which details of the applicant's own tender and those of the successful tender, were shown, as well as the name of the successful tenderer and its subcontractor. Thus, the applicant was clearly in a position to know the reasons why its tender had been rejected.

67 Moreover, the statement of reasons is not intended to present the unsuccessful tenderer with an opportunity to demand that the evaluation procedure be recommenced, nor is it intended to impose a burden on the Commission to prove the legality of its decision. The Commission's obligation is simply to give reasons for its decisions and it is then for the applicant to show that those reasons reveal a manifest error.

– Findings of the Court

68 In accordance with Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation and Article 149(2) of the implementing rules, the Publications Office was required to notify the applicant of the grounds for rejecting its tender and, since its tender was admissible, the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the tenderer to whom the contract was awarded, within not more than fifteen calendar days from the date on which a written request was received.

69 Such a manner of proceeding satisfies the purpose of the duty to state reasons laid down in Article 253 EC, according to which the reasoning followed by the authority which adopted the measure must be disclosed in a clear and unequivocal fashion so as, on the one hand, to make the persons concerned aware of the reasons for the measure and thereby enable them to defend their rights and, on the other, to enable the Court to exercise its power of review (see, to that effect, Case T–166/94 Koyo Seiko v Council [1995] ECR II–2129, paragraph 103, and Case T–19/95 Adia Interim v Commission [1996] ECR II–321, paragraph 32).

70 It must be stated at the outset that Annex II to the draft contract, relating to the 'special terms and conditions' provided, in paragraph 5.3 thereof, that the contract would be awarded to the tenderer submitting the most economically advantageous bid, on the basis of two award criteria: first, the quality of the production process, assessed according to six specific criteria under which it was possible to obtain 120 points and, second, the assessment of the financial terms. Once the quality of the tenders had been assessed, companies which obtained the minimum score of 80 points in total and half of the possible points for each of the criteria would be classified according to the price proposed and the contract would be awarded to the lowest tender.

71 In the present case, the Publications Office first of all informed the applicant, by letter of 15 April 2005, that its tender had been unsuccessful in the call for tenders. That letter contained two standard phrases concerning the evaluation stage: 'the tender did not achieve the necessary quality score' and 'the tender is not the most economically advantageous'. The Publications Office put a cross in the box opposite the first phrase. In that letter, the Publications Office added that the contract would be concluded with the Eutis consortium, whose tender had been considered to be the most economically advantageous, and that the applicant could obtain additional information on the grounds for the rejection of its tender.

72 In response to a written request by the applicant, also dated 15 April 2005, the Publications Office notified it, by letter of 19 April 2005, of the name of the successful tenderer and that of its subcontractor and the scores awarded in respect of each criterion for its technical offer and that of the successful tenderer, in the form of tables. The table relating to the applicant's tender indicates that it obtained scores lower than the average possible score in respect of two of the evaluation criteria: 10.9 out of 25 as regards the fourth criterion 'Quality of the proposed procedures and organisation to carry out the project (development and operation)' and 13 out of 30 in respect of the sixth criterion 'Quality of the outline of the proposed technical components (hardware, software and netware) for the TED website and its related services'. Furthermore, the table shows that the applicant obtained a total of 60.6 points out of 120.

73 That table was accompanied by six general comments: 'methodology not well adapted'; 'certain technical specifications are not taken into account'; 'no information with regard to the CD–ROM'; 'daily production does not seem realisable according to provided information on the procedures'; 'the resources proposed for production are not appropriate'; 'the offer does not meet the characteristics required in the specifications'.

74 At the same time, the table concerning the Eutis consortium indicated that it had obtained the average in respect of each of the award criteria, in particular 21.4 points for the fourth criterion and 25.1 points for the sixth criterion. Furthermore, the Eutis consortium obtained a total of 100.4 points.

75 Consequently, the Publications Office gave a sufficiently detailed statement of the reasons for which it had rejected the applicant's tender and explained the characteristics and relative advantages of that of the successful tenderer (see, to that effect and by analogy, Case T–169/00 Esedra v Commission [2002] ECR II–609, paragraphs 187 to 193; Case T–183/00 Strabag Benelux v Council [2003] ECR II–135, paragraphs 54 to 59; and Case T–4/01 Renco v Council [2003] ECR II–171, paragraphs 89 to 97). The applicant could immediately identify the precise reasons for the rejection of its tender, namely that it did not achieve the necessary quality score for two of the award criteria and for the overall quality of its tender. It could also compare, for each of the award criteria, its results with those of the successful tenderer. Moreover, the general comments gave details on the aspects of its tender which were considered to be unsatisfactory by the Publications Office.

76 Such reasoning therefore enables the applicant to defend its rights and the Court to exercise its power of review.

77 As regards the argument based on the entry into force of Commission Regulation No 1261/2005, which supplemented Article 149 of the implementing rules by adding a paragraph 3, it is sufficient to note that that regulation was not applicable at the material time. In any event, the applicant merely cites the text of Article 149(3), without stating how the Publications Office failed to comply with those new provisions.

78 Lastly, as regards the correspondence exchanged during the tendering procedure, it must be stated that the Publications Office did not reply in detail to all of the applicant's letters, in particular that of 27 April 2005. However, the Publications Office cannot be criticised for that, since, having provided reasons for the contested decision in accordance with Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation, it was not required to reply. Moreover, that fact cannot call in question, of itself, the legality of the contested decision (see, to that effect and by analogy, Case T–30/04 Sena v EASA [2005] ECR-SC I–A–113 and II–519, paragraph 95).

79 It follows from the foregoing that the third plea must be rejected.

The second plea: manifest errors of assessment by the Publications Office in the evaluation of the applicant's tender

– Arguments of the parties

80 The applicant claims that the Evaluation Committee made several manifest errors of assessment.

81 First of all, as regards the price proposed by the applicant, the Evaluation Committee referred to a total amount of EUR 4 973 140, which is lower than that of the tender of the selected tenderer, which amounted to EUR 5 784 684.54. In the applicant's submission, the price mentioned in its tender was, in actual fact, only EUR 4 177 748.

82 The applicant states, next, that the Evaluation Committee report refers to 'general comments taking into account the awarding criteria and price', which indicates that price was indeed taken into consideration, even if the Publications Office states, in the contested decision, that the applicant's tender was rejected on the ground that it had not achieved the necessary quality score. In its reply, the applicant adds that since the envelope containing the financial offer is opened at the beginning of the evaluation procedure, the Publications Office knew from the start the price proposed by each tenderer. The applicant is therefore convinced that the tenderers' price offers were taken into account by the Publications Office.

83 The applicant also asserts that the arguments put forward by the Evaluation Committee in order to reject its tender are vague and inaccurate. The Evaluation Committee thus made another manifest error of assessment by taking the view that the 'daily production d[id] not seem realisable'. The applicant used the quotations of professional CD–ROM manufacturers, one of which has worked with the incumbent contractor for a number of years, including at the time of the call for tenders. The Publications Office cannot argue that that manufacturer is in a position to deliver the daily production in association with the incumbent contractor, but is incapable of doing the same when working with the applicant.

84 Nor can the Evaluation Committee claim that the tender contained 'no information with regard to the CD–ROM'. The applicant's tender includes the same manufacturer as that chosen until then by the incumbent contractor. In addition, in its technical offer, its letter of 10 February 2005 and its fax of 21 February 2005, the applicant provided all the necessary information with regard to the CD–ROM.

85 The Commission states that, under the special terms and conditions provided for by the call for tenders, the contract is to be awarded to the most economically advantageous tender on the basis of two criteria: the quality of the production process and the assessment of the financial terms. Only the tenders which have been awarded the minimum score of 80 points in total and at least half of the possible points for each evaluation criterion in respect of the quality of the production process will be the subject of a financial evaluation. Since the applicant did not succeed in overcoming the quality hurdle, its arguments relating to price are irrelevant.

86 The Commission concedes that the formulation 'general comments taking into account the awarding criteria and price', used in its letter of 19 April 2005, is imprecise and may have led to confusion. Nevertheless, that formulation gives no support to the applicant's allegation, since its tender was not the subject of a financial evaluation. The aim of the general comments made in its letter of 19 April 2005 was simply to provide the applicant with further details as regards the reasons for which its tender did not meet all the requirements of the Technical Specifications. Those comments should be read in conjunction with the table concerning the evaluation of the quality criteria.

87 In its rejoinder, the Commission recognises that its letter of 19 April 2005 mentions by error the price of EUR 4 973 140 in relation to the applicant's tender, but that error did not have any impact on the evaluation process. The price proposed in the applicant's tender does not moreover appear in the Evaluation Committee report. Further, the supplementary examination of its tender confirms the Evaluation Committee's conclusion that it did not meet all the quality criteria.

88 Finally, the Commission states that the tenders were opened in compliance with Article 145 of Regulation No 2342/2002 by the Opening Committee, the composition of which is not the same as the Evaluation Committee's.

– Findings of the Court

89 As a preliminary point, it should be recalled that the Commission has broad discretion with regard to the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender, and that review by the Court must be limited to checking that the rules governing the procedure and statement of reasons are complied with, the facts are correct and there is no manifest error of assessment or misuse of powers (Case 56/77 Agence européenne d'intérims v Commission [1978] ECR 2215, paragraph 20; Case T–145/98 ADT Projekt v Commission [2000] ECR II–387, paragraph 147, and Case T–148/04 TQ3Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission [2005] ECR II–2627, paragraph 47).

90 It should also be noted that, according to Article 97(2) of the Financial Regulation, a contract may be awarded by the best-value-for-money procedure.

91 In the present case, the applicant, who does not challenge the two award criteria or the criteria relating to the quality of the production process selected for the call for tenders, claims that the Publications Office made several manifest errors of assessment in the evaluation of its tender.

92 First, the Evaluation Committee proceeded on the basis of a total price of EUR 4 973 140, although the price which appears in the applicant's tender documents is in actual fact EUR 4 177 748. In addition, according to the applicant, the table concerning the evaluation of its tender, annexed to the letter of 19 April 2005, contains the heading 'General comments taking into account the awarding criteria and price', which indicates that its price was indeed taken into account in the evaluation of its tender.

93 In that respect, it must be stated, first of all, that the Publications Office's letter of 19 April 2005 mistakenly mentions the price of EUR 4 973 140 as regards the applicant's tender, which the Commission concedes in its rejoinder.

94 However, whether it is a clerical error or an incorrect evaluation of the price proposed by the applicant, such an error is, in the present case, of no consequence.

95 It must be recalled that the applicant's tender obtained a total of 60.6 points and less than half of the points for two of the criteria relating to the quality of the production process. Consequently, pursuant to the rules laid down by Annex II to the draft contract, the applicant's tender was rejected at the stage of the examination of the quality of the production process. There is therefore no need to examine the price of the tender, as the extract of the Evaluation Committee report produced by the Commission confirms.

96 The fact that the table relating to the applicant contains the heading 'General comments taking into account the awarding criteria and price' cannot call in question such a finding, since the Publications Office followed the evaluation procedure laid down by the call for tenders.

97 Consequently, the price of the applicant's tender, although stated incorrectly by the Publications Office, had no influence on the decision to award the contract to another tenderer.

98 Moreover, the applicant claims that the Publications Office was aware, right from the start of the tendering procedure, of the price proposed by each tenderer.

99 In that regard, it is sufficient to observe that that is a mere assertion on the part of the applicant, who does not adduce any facts or evidence in support of its claim.

100 Consequently, the applicant has not demonstrated that the Publications Office made a manifest error of assessment as regards the price of its tender.

101 Second, the applicant refers to the general comment, which appears in the table concerning the evaluation of the applicant's offer, that 'daily production does not seem realisable according to provided information on the procedures'. In its submission, the Publications Office cannot argue that one of the manufacturers is in a position to deliver the daily production in association with the incumbent contractor, but is incapable of doing the same when working with it.

102 However, there again, the applicant does not put forward any specific facts or evidence to warrant the conclusion that the Publications Office made a manifest error of assessment in relation to its tender as regards daily production.

103 Third, the Publications Office is alleged to have made another error of assessment by also stating, among the general comments annexed to the table concerning the evaluation of its tender, that that tender contained 'no information with regard to the CD-ROM'. In support of its argument, the applicant relies on various aspects of its tender and its letters of 10 and 21 February 2005. The applicant claims that it is clear from those documents that it provided the Publications Office with various information relating to the CD-ROM.

104 At the hearing, the Commission stated that that general comment concerned the fourth criterion, relating to the 'quality of the proposed procedures and organisation to carry out the project'.

105 Consequently, it must be stated that the comment at issue is, at the very least, imprecise and that it gave rise to confusion regarding the Evaluation Committee's assessment of the applicant's tender.

106 However, such imprecision does not suffice to warrant the conclusion that the Publications Office made a manifest error of assessment. The table contains other general comments which are not disputed on a reasoned basis by the applicant. Furthermore, the applicant has not put forward any argument showing that the scores awarded in respect of each of the award criteria for its tender were erroneous.

107 The second plea must therefore be rejected as unfounded.

The request relating to the Publications Office's internal note drawn up in the context of the supplementary examination of its tender 108 The Commission produces, in Annex II to its rejoinder, the Publications Office's internal note, drawn up in the context of the supplementary examination carried out in response to the applicant's letter of 27 April 2005.

109 In its written comments presented at the hearing, the applicant requests, principally, that that note not be taken into account by the Court for the purposes of the examination of the legality of the contested decision.

110 In that respect, it must observed that that document, which is neither dated nor signed, postdates, according to the Commission, the contested decision and does not replace the Evaluation Committee's earlier assessment.

111 Consequently, the Court considers that the applicant's request should be allowed.

The request for production of the Evaluation Committee report

112 The applicant requests, in its plea alleging infringement of the obligation to state reasons and lack of transparency, that the Publications Office produce a full copy of the Evaluation Committee report. It states, in its reply, that, in the case of a request for access to documents, where the institution in question refuses such access, it must demonstrate in each individual case, on the basis of the information at its disposal, that the documents to which access is sought do indeed fall within the exceptions listed in Regulation (EC) No 1049/2001 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 30 May 2001 regarding public access to European Parliament, Council and Commission documents (OJ 2001 L 145, p. 43).

113 It must be pointed out, first of all, that the Publications Office was not required to communicate to the applicant, as part of the statement of reasons for the contested decision, the Evaluation Committee report. Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation provides only that, following a request in writing, the contracting authority is to notify those concerned of the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the tenderer to whom the contract is awarded.

114 Next, assuming that the applicant's request must be understood as a request for access to documents, it must be held that the applicant did not comply with the procedure, provided for in Article 6 et seq. of Regulation No 1049/2001, for applying for access to the Evaluation Committee report before bringing an action before the Court in the event of a refusal, which renders such a request inadmissible.

115 Lastly, the Commission has produced, in an annex to its rejoinder, an extract from the Evaluation Committee report concerning the applicant, in a non-confidential version.

116 In the circumstances, the Court considers that there is no need to order the Commission to produce the Evaluation Committee Report in its entirety.

117 In light of all the foregoing the application must be dismissed in its entirety.

Costs

Arguments of the parties

118 The applicant asks that the Publications Office be ordered to pay all the costs, even if the application is dismissed. It claims that the insufficient grounds given for the contested decision did not allow it fully to evaluate its chances of challenging that decision and therefore forced it to bring the present action in order to preserve its rights.

119 The Commission submits that the applicant's purported reasons are non-existent.

Findings of the Court

120 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings.

121 In the present case, it has been held that the third plea, alleging infringement of the obligation to state reasons and lack of transparency, was unfounded. The applicant's claim must therefore be dismissed.

122 Since the applicant has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs, in accordance with the form of order sought by the Commission.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Fourth Chamber)

hereby

1. Dismisses the action;

2. Orders Evropaiki Dynamiki – Proigmena Systimata Tilepikinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE to pay the costs.

Legal context

1. The award of Commission service contracts must comply with the provisions of Title V of Part One of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1: the Financial Regulation') and the provisions of Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of Regulation No 1605/2002 (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1; the detailed implementing rules').

2. Under Article 94 of the Financial Regulation:

Contracts may not be awarded to candidates or tenderers who, during the procurement procedure:

(a) are subject to a conflict of interest...'

3. Article 138 of the detailed implementing rules provides:

1. Contracts shall be awarded in one of the following two ways:

(a) under the automatic award procedure, in which case the contract is awarded to the tender which, while being in order and satisfying the conditions laid down, quotes the lowest price;

(b) under the best-value-for-money procedure.'

2. The tender offering the best value for money shall be the one with the best price-quality ratio, taking into account criteria justified by the subject of the contract such as the price quoted, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, running costs, profitability, completion or delivery times, after-sales service and technical assistance.

4. Under Article 146(3) of the detailed implementing rules:

Requests to participate and tenders which do not satisfy all the essential requirements set out in the supporting documentation for invitations to tender or the specific requirements laid down therein shall be eliminated.

However, the evaluation committee may ask candidates or tenderers to supply additional material or to clarify the supporting documents submitted in connection with the exclusion and selection criteria, within a specified time-limit.

5. Article 147(3) of the detailed implementing rules provides:

The contracting authority shall... take its decision giving at least the following:

(a) the name and address of the contracting authority, and the subject and value of the contract or of the framework contract;

(b) the names of the candidates or tenderers rejected and the reasons for their rejection;

(c) the names of the candidates or tenderers to be examined and the reasons for their selection;

(d) the reasons for the rejection of tenders found to be abnormally low;

(e) the names of the candidates or contractor selected and the reasons for that choice by reference to the selection and award criteria announced in advance and, if known, the proportion of the contract or the framework contract which the contractor intends to subcontract to third parties;

(g) where appropriate, the reasons why the contracting authority has decided not to award a contract.'

Facts and procedure

6. On 14 December 2004, the Commission published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2004 S 243) a contract notice for the award of a framework contract entitled evaluation framework contract covering the policy areas of DG Health and Consumer Protection, Lot 1 (public health) - call for tenders SANCO/2004/01/141' (that framework contract and the award procedure for the framework contract are hereinafter referred to, respectively, as the framework contract' and the tendering procedure').

7. According to Sections 7.1.3 and 7.1.4 of the specifications relating to the tendering procedure, the framework contract relates in particular to the evaluation of the programme of Community action in the field of public health established by Decision No 1786/2002/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 23 September 2002 adopting a programme of Community action in the field of public health (2003-08) (OJ 2002 L 271, p. 1).

8. The specifications divide the tasks to be carried out under the framework contract into two main tasks. The first task (Main Task 1') is to conduct studies and to provide services intended to assist in the design and preparation of Community programmes or policies, their ex ante assessment and the organisation of evaluation activities'. The second task (Main Task 2') is to carry out mid-term, final and ex post evaluations of programmes, policies and other activities.

9. The framework contract must allow specific contracts to be concluded in accordance with the Commission's needs. In addition, it must be concluded in principle for a period of 24 months and may be renewed for two further periods of 12 months.

10. The specifications also set out several grounds for the exclusion of tenderers. One of those grounds reproduces Article 94 of the Financial Regulation:

Contracts may not be awarded to candidates or tenderers who, during the procurement procedure:

(a) are subject to a conflict of interest...'

11. With a view to tendering for the contract in question, Deloitte Business Advisory NV (the applicant') joined forces with the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, the Nederlandse Organisatie voor toegepast-natuurwetenschappelijk onderzoek (Netherlands Organisation for Applied Scientific Research, TNO) and the Istituto superiore di sanità (Italian National Health Institute). Those four entities formed the European Public Health Evaluation Task Force (Euphet). Euphet proposed using certain experts from other institutions where necessary.

12. On 10 February 2005, Euphet submitted a tender to the Commission under the tendering procedure. Euphet's tender includes a paragraph with the heading Independence', which reads as follows:

Euphet understands and accepts that none of the evaluation organisations or their staff should have the slightest existing or potential conflict of interest in the performance of their task under the framework contract. We confirm that all the participants in Euphet are entirely independent of the Commission and that we do not foresee any risk in this regard at present. Furthermore, we undertake to conduct a detailed prior check in connection with each specific contract in order to ensure that the teams we propose are composed of members who are able to work in complete independence and to provide an objective and independent external assessment. If, in the course of execution of the projects, the slightest problem should arise which could have a bearing on this key principle, we would notify the Commission immediately and work with it to seek to rectify the situation.'

13. By a letter of 22 April 2005 (the decision rejecting the tender'), the Commission informed the applicant that the evaluation committee for the contract had found there to be risks of conflicts of interest within Euphet. In the decision rejecting the tender, the Commission notes that certain of Euphet's members and partners hold grant contracts in SANCO's area of activities' (health and consumer protection) and thus have a significant involvement in the implementation of the programme of Community action in the field of public health. The Commission therefore considers that in view of the considerable risk of [a conflict of interest], a detailed specific explanation would have been needed to give an adequate understanding of the way in which the matter of [conflicts of interest] could be resolved and the associated risks eliminated'. In those circumstances, in the view of the Commission, the proposed approach is not adequate and the tenderer has not provided a satisfactory guarantee that the [conflicts of interest] will be eliminated'.

14. In the decision rejecting the tender, the Commission nevertheless adds that it will not sign the framework contract with the successful tenderer until a period of two weeks has passed.

15. By a letter dated 3 May 2005, Euphet contested the Commission's position and inter alia requested it to respond by 4 May 2005, failing which it would refer the matter to the Court of First Instance.

16. By a fax of 4 May 2005, the Commission acknowledged receipt of the letter from Euphet and stated:

Because we need more time to examine the questions raised in your letter, we will not proceed with the signing of the contract for a further period of 15 days from the date on which this letter was sent.'

17. By a fax of 19 May 2005, the Commission responded to the arguments put forward by the applicant in its letter of 3 May 2005.

18. By a fax of the same date, the applicant lodged an action for annulment before the Court of First Instance by which it contests the legality of the decision rejecting the tender and of the decision to award the contract to another tenderer (the award decision').

19. On the same date, the applicant submitted an application for interim measures in which it claims essentially that the President of the Court of First Instance, acting in his capacity as the judge hearing the application for interim relief, should:

- order the suspension of the operation of the decision rejecting the tender and of the award decision;

- prohibit the Commission from informing the successful tenderer of the award decision and from signing the relevant contract, on pain of a periodic penalty payment of EUR 2.5 million;

- order the Commission to pay the costs.

20. In its application for interim measures, the applicant also asks the President of the Court of First Instance to prohibit the defendant, as a precautionary measure and if possible before ruling on the application for suspension of operation, from informing the successful tenderer of the award decision and from signing the framework contract until the Court of First Instance has ruled on the main action, on pain of a periodic penalty payment of EUR 2.5 million for each infringement.

21. By letter of 23 May 2005, the Commission informed the Court that the contract covered by the procedure bearing reference SANCO/2004/01/041 had not yet been signed. In the same letter, the Commission stated that the framework contract had been sent to the selected tenderer to be signed with a reply deadline of 1 June 2005 and, in accordance with the applicable procedures, that contract would be signed by the Commission's authorised representative after it had been returned by the other party, without a deadline having been set for that purpose.

22. On 26 May 2005, on the basis of Article 105(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, the President of the Court of First Instance ordered the Commission not to sign the framework contract until an order had been made on the application for interim measures.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

23. On 30 May 2005, the Commission submitted observations on the application for interim measures in which it contended that the application should be dismissed and that the applicant should be ordered to pay the costs.

24. At the invitation of the President of the Court of First Instance, the applicant responded to those observations on 13 June 2005. The Commission in turn responded to these new observations on 23 June 2005.

Law

25. Article 104(2) of the Rules of Procedure provides that applications for interim measures must state the subject-matter of the proceedings, the circumstances giving rise to urgency and the pleas of fact and law establishing a prima facie case for the interim measures applied for. Those conditions are cumulative so that an application for interim measures must be rejected if one of them is absent (order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C-268/96 P(R) SCK and FNK v Commission [1996] ECR I-4971, paragraph 30). In an appropriate case, the President has also to weigh up the interests at stake (order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C-445/00 R Austria v Council [2001] ECR I-1461, paragraph 73).

26. Moreover, in the context of that overall examination the judge hearing the application enjoys a wide margin of discretion and remains free to determine, in the light of the particular features of the case, the way in which those different conditions have to be verified and the order of priority of that examination since there is no rule of Community law imposing on him a predetermined analytical model for assessing the need for an interim decision (order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C-149/95 P(R) Commission v Atlantic Container Line and Others [1995] ECR I-2165, paragraph 23).

27. It is in the light of those considerations that the present application for interim measures falls to be examined.

1. Arguments of the parties

Admissibility of the application for interim measures

28. In its observations of 30 May 2005, the Commission states that it informed the successful tenderer in the tendering procedure that its tender had been selected by a letter of 22 April 2005. The Commission therefore takes the view that the applicant's request for an order prohibiting the Commission from informing the successful tenderer of the award decision is devoid of purpose.

Prima facie case

Arguments of the applicant

29. The applicant relies on two pleas in support of its main application.

- The first plea

30. In its first plea, the applicant claims essentially that Euphet's exclusion from the tendering procedure by the Commission infringes Article 94 of the Financial Regulation, the provisions of the tender documents, the principle of protection of legitimate expectations, the general obligation to state reasons and Articles 147(3) and 138 of the detailed implementing rules.

31. First of all, the applicant takes the view that it is unlawful to exclude it from the tendering procedure solely because its proposal for resolving any conflicts of interest does not provide a satisfactory guarantee.

32. In the applicant's view, the notion of conflict of interest is not defined either in the call for tenders or in Article 94 of the Financial Regulation. On the other hand, in the decision rejecting the tender, the Commission defined the notion of conflict of interest by reference to the draft framework contract. However, according to that draft, a conflict of interest and, a fortiori, a simple risk of a conflict do not in themselves constitute a ground for exclusion.

33. In addition, none of the tender documents provide for a specific ground for exclusion in respect of a tenderer one or more of whose members have an involvement in current projects in the areas of health and consumer protection. Moreover, neither Article 94 of the Financial Regulation nor the case-law of the Court of Justice justifies such a ground for exclusion.

34. Furthermore, as far as risks of conflicts of interest are concerned, it is sufficient for the tenderer to undertake to notify the Commission and, if appropriate, to take the necessary measures. The proposal made by Euphet in this regard (paragraph 12 above) was adequate, since the applicant went as far as proposing a prior check with reference to the nature and the subject of the specific contracts to be concluded. No more can be expected of Euphet, since the content of the specific contracts to be concluded is not yet known.

35. In the applicant's view, any conflict of interest can arise only when specific contracts are concluded. Furthermore, Community case-law has confirmed that it is unlawful to exclude a tenderer in an abstract manner without any specific check on the resolution of a conflict of interest (judgments in Joined Cases C-21/03 and C-34/03 Fabricom [2005] ECR I-1559, and in Case T-160/03 AFCon Management Consultants and Others v Commission [2005] ECR II-981, paragraphs 75 to 78).

36. In its observations of 13 June 2005, the applicant adds that the acceptance by the Commission that a tenderer subject to a conflict of interest during the performance of the framework contract may continue to perform the contract provided it takes adequate measures, whilst such an option is not open to a tenderer subject to a conflict of interest prior to the award of the contract, which can take identical measures, constitutes a breach of the principle of equality as set out in Articles 89(1) and 99 of the Financial Regulation.

37. Lastly, in the alternative, the applicant states that the tender notice requires only a minimum of seven experts, whereas its tender contains 65 curricula vitae, including 45 from persons who do not have links with the institutions which, according to the Commission, are subject to a conflict of interest. Furthermore, the 20 people who do have links with those organisations could still be assigned to evaluation cases without any risk of conflicts. As regards the Commission's claim that the experts in question are those who hold the highest qualifications, even if all these people were subject to a conflict of interest for a certain task, there would be a sufficient number of other high-level experts to carry out the task.

38. Secondly, in the applicant's view, where the evaluation committee intends to eliminate a tenderer, it must at the very least allow it to submit its observations, which did not occur in the present case.

39. Thirdly, by rejecting a way to resolve conflicts of interest that had already been accepted by other Commission directorates-general, the Commission departed from its earlier practice and breached the principle of protection of legitimate expectations.

40. Fourthly, the decision rejecting the tender does not contain an adequate statement of reasons, in particular in so far as it fails to explain the reasons why Euphet's proposal is inadequate. The statement of reasons for the decision is also incorrect in so far as Euphet did not remain silent about the specific experience of some of its members and did take account of the resolution of conflicts of interest provided for in the draft framework contract. Because of this failure to state reasons, the decision rejecting the tender infringes Article 147(3) of the detailed implementing rules.

41. Fifthly, the Commission may not award the contract to a third party without infringing Article 138 of the detailed implementing rules when it has wrongly rejected Euphet's tender. The applicant does not contest the fact that, if its tender had been deemed admissible, the contract would not necessarily have been awarded to it. However, it considers that, in view of the experience and the competence of the team it proposed, Euphet's tender could only be awarded a high score.

- The second plea

42. In its second plea, the applicant claims that by failing to ask Euphet to submit additional information, the Commission infringed Article 146(3) of the detailed implementing rules, the Court's case-law on public procurement (judgment in Fabricom , cited in paragraph 35 above) and the principle of protection of legitimate expectations.

43. Furthermore, in so far as the Commission gave other tenderers the opportunity to submit additional information in connection with the contract in question, it acted in contravention of the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination set out in Articles 89(1) and 99 of the Financial Regulation.

44. The applicant acknowledges that the Commission is not required under Article 94 of the Financial Regulation and Article 146(3) of the detailed implementing rules to request additional information from tenderers. Nevertheless it states that the Commission gave that opportunity to some tenderers in other procedures, and also in the tendering procedure at issue. The applicant asks the Commission to produce the correspondence exchanged on this subject and the minutes of the tendering opening session.

45. It also follows from the judgment in Fabricom , cited in paragraph 35 above, that, in the event of a potential conflict of interest, the contracting authority may not automatically exclude the tenderer in question, but must always examine the matter on the basis of the specific circumstances of the case, which means that the tenderer must be able to show that a conflict of interest is impossible. In the applicant's view, the Commission could not conduct the required specific assessment without requesting additional information from Euphet. On the one hand, the Commission did not carry out any checks on the basis of the specific circumstances of the case, since such an assessment would have had to have been made for each specific contract. On the other hand, the Commission could not claim either that its specific assessment related to the framework contract since, according to the Commission itself, the applicant's proposal for a posteriori corrective measures was formulated in very general terms.

Arguments of the Commission

46. The Commission contests the arguments put forward by the applicant in support of the existence of a prima facie case.

- The first plea

47. The Commission considers, first of all, that in accordance with the wording of Section 9.1.3 of the specifications, which reproduces Article 94 of the detailed implementing rules word for word, the existence of a conflict of interest prior to the award of the contract is a ground for exclusion. In the view of the Commission, even though the curricula vitae of several of Euphet's partners reveal their involvement in the implementation of the programme of Community action in the field of public health, the applicant did not see reason to notify the Commission of a risk of a conflict of interest.

48. As regards the a priori' corrective mechanism proposed by the applicant to reduce the risk of a conflict of interest, the Commission takes the view that the passage in question in the applicant's tender is formulated too generally.

49. Moreover, contrary to the applicant's assertions, the evaluation committee did in fact specifically verify the existence of a conflict of interest with reference to the applicant's tender and the nature of the contract to be awarded, since a conflict can arise in respect of mid-term and ex post evaluations and in respect of ex ante evaluations.

50. With regard to the applicant's argument that Euphet's offer contained 45 curricula vitae of people who have no links with the Commission, the latter points out that the experts put forward do not all have the same specific weight and that the applicant's tender presented all the partners and experts as a coherent team.

51. Secondly, as regards the Commission's alleged obligation to consult the applicant, the Commission considers that it must comply with that obligation only where it intends to impose administrative or financial penalties pursuant to Article 96 of the Financial Regulation.

52. Thirdly, with regard to the alleged breach of the principle of protection of legitimate expectations by the Commission, the applicant does not substantiate its claims that in identical circumstances in the past other Commission departments had reached opposite conclusions to those reached in the present case.

53. Fourthly, in the decision rejecting the tender, the Commission clearly explained the reasons why it considered that the applicant was subject to a conflict of interest.

54. Fifthly, the Commission did not infringe Article 138 of the Financial Regulation because acceptance of Euphet's tender for the selection and award stages did not necessarily mean that it should be awarded the contract.

- The second plea

55. The Commission considers that the second plea should also be rejected.

56. First of all, the Commission points out that it does not have any obligation to consult a tenderer before eliminating it from an award procedure.

57. Secondly, the applicant does not make clear in what way the failure to request additional information constitutes a departure from the Commission's alleged practice in identical cases. As regards the applicant's claims that the Commission breached the principle of equal treatment by allowing certain tenderers to submit evidence that their documents had been sent within the prescribed period, the Commission states that in fact it merely conducted a substantive verification of a mandatory deadline, which is not comparable to the applicant's situation.

58. Thirdly, the applicant's reference to the judgment in Fabricom , cited in paragraph 35 above, is irrelevant because in the present case the Commission specifically verified whether a conflict of interest existed on the basis of the information in the tender and in the light of the nature of the contract to be awarded.

59. Fourthly, the Commission points out that, after the tenders were opened, none of the tenderers was sent a request for additional information or a request for clarification concerning a supposed conflict of interest.

Urgency

Arguments of the applicant

60. In support of its view that it is a matter of urgency that the interim measures applied for be ordered, the applicant claims that, once the contested contract is concluded between the defendant and the successful tenderer, Euphet will no longer have any opportunity to carry out the task effectively. In practice, it will be impossible for it to obtain the annulment of the framework contract after it has been concluded. In addition, in the applicant's view, given the final date for the performance of the contract, which is set for the end of 2006, if interim measures are not adopted, the contract will already have been performed, at least to a large extent, when the Court's judgment is delivered.

61. On account of the considerable value of the contract, the honour and prestige attached to it, and the experience that the applicant could gain if it performed the contract, effective performance of the contract would offer it much more satisfactory reparation than compensation.

62. In its observations of 13 June 2005, the applicant states in this respect that the fact that it was not awarded the contract and, further, that its tender was deemed inadmissible will be seen by its clients as a sign of incompetence. In so far as the Commission claims that award procedures involve risks for tenderers with the result that the loss of a contract cannot therefore be regarded as damage, the applicant considers that such an argument is valid only if a tenderer is rightly eliminated. In the present case, the applicant considers that it had a prospect of being selected.

63. In addition, the harm to the applicant's reputation and the failure to gain experience as a result of the non-performance of the contract cannot be quantified financially.

64. In its observations of 13 June 2005, the applicant states lastly that its application cannot be regarded as insufficiently urgent merely on the ground that it may subsequently be awarded damages. Such a position is incompatible with the ratio legis of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

65. In the applicant's view, the ratio legis of Directive 89/665 is to make it possible for tenderers eliminated from a tendering procedure to perform the contract in question themselves. The applicant's position is confirmed by the Court's case-law (judgment in Case C-81/98 Alcatel Austria and Others [1999] ECR I7671). The applicant concedes that the provisions of Directive 89/665 apply only to Member States. However, in its view, it is clearly contrary to the principle of protection of legitimate expectations, the principle of equality and Article 2 EC for the Community institutions to fail to comply with the substance of those provisions.

Arguments of the Commission

66. The Commission considers that the applicant has not shown that it is a matter of urgency to order interim measures.

67. First of all, in the Commission's view, if the Court were to find the action for annulment to be well founded, it would have to take the necessary measures to ensure that the applicant's interests are protected, which could consist in the cancellation of the already partially performed contract and the launch of a new procedure, whilst such measures may be combined, if necessary, with the payment of compensation (orders of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T169/00 R Esedra v Commission [2000] ECR II2951, paragraph 51, in Case T-148/04 R TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission [2004] ECR II3027, paragraph 55, and in Case T-303/04 R European Dynamics v Commission [2004] ECR II-3889, paragraph 83).

68. The applicant has not referred to any circumstance which could prevent its interests being safeguarded in this way.

69. Secondly, in its observations of 23 June 2005, the Commission refutes the applicant's arguments according to which a judgment annulling an act can be given only once the contract is being performed. In the view of the Commission, the applicant is confusing the performance of the framework contract with the carrying-out of the specific mid-term assessment provided for in Article 12 of Decision No 1786/2002.

70. Thirdly, in so far as the applicant alleges pecuniary damage, the Commission points out that it cannot be regarded as irreparable or even difficult to repair, because compensation can subsequently be awarded (order in Esedra v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 43). The applicant does not show either how it might suffer damage liable to jeopardise its existence or to change its position on the market irreversibly.

71. Fourthly, as regards the non-pecuniary damage alleged by the applicant, the Commission points out that participation in a public tender procedure, by nature highly competitive, involves risks for all the participants and the elimination of a tenderer under the tender rules is not in itself in any way prejudicial (order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case 118/83 R CMC v Commission [1983] ECR 2583, paragraph 51; orders in Esedra v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 48, and in European Dynamics v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 82). Furthermore, the applicant has not established how the dismissal of its application would harm its reputation and deprive it of experience, less still the effect that such damage would have on it.

72. Fifthly, with regard to the ratio legis of Directive 89/665, the Commission points out that, if its application for interim measures is to be granted, the applicant must show that all the relevant conditions under Article 104(2) of the Rules of Procedure and case-law are satisfied. The Commission adds that it is not subject to Directive 89/665 and that the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC and Articles 242 EC and 243 EC guarantee effective protection against acts by Community institutions. Lastly, as regards the reference made by the applicant to the judgment in Alcatel Austria and Others , cited in paragraph 65 above, it fails to understand that the application for interim measures may be granted only if it satisfies the relevant conditions.

Balance of interests

Arguments of the applicant

73. In its observations of 13 June 2005, the applicant claims that the Commission does not make clear the nature of the damage that it would suffer if an interim measure were ordered.

74. The applicant adds that Decision No 1786/2002 does not provide for any penalty in the event of late performance of the evaluation provided for in Article 12 thereof. In any case, the Commission could revoke the contested decisions and take the applicant's tender into consideration, as it is authorised to do under Article 101 of the Financial Regulation. Moreover, the Commission commonly fails to respect the prescribed deadlines for the performance of evaluation contracts like those at issue.

75. Lastly, account should be taken of the Commission's responsibility for any delay in the performance of the contract.

Arguments of the Commission

76. The Commission considers that the balance of the interests at stake is in favour of the dismissal of the application. The Commission is required under Article 12 of Decision No 1786/2002 to have a mid-term external assessment of the implementation of the programme of Community action in the field of public health conducted by the end of 2006.

77. In addition, the Commission considers that a suspension would prejudice the main action since the successful tenderer's tender would no longer be valid on the date when the judgment in the main action is delivered and the team proposed by it would no longer be available.

2. Findings of the President

78. Since the written observations of the parties contain all the information necessary to adjudicate on the application for interim measures, it is not necessary to hear oral argument from them.

Admissibility of some heads of claims in the application for interim measures

79. In its application, the applicant claims inter alia that the President should prohibit the Commission from informing the successful tenderer of the award decision.

80. In its observations of 2 June 2005, the Commission stated, without being contradicted by the applicant or by any of the documents in the file, that it had already informed the successful tenderer that its tender had been selected by letter of 22 April 2005.

81. Consequently, the applicant's request for an order prohibiting the Commission from giving such information was devoid of purpose from the moment it was lodged. It must therefore be rejected as inadmissible (see, to that effect, the order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-125/05 R Umwelt- und Ingenieurtechnik Dresden v Commission [2005] ECR II-1901, paragraph 36).

The other heads of claim in the application for interim measures

82. In the present case, it is necessary first to examine whether the condition relating to the existence of a prima facie case is satisfied.

Prima facie case

- The first plea

83. In its first plea, the applicant claims essentially that Euphet's exclusion from the tendering procedure by the Commission infringes Article 94 of the Financial Regulation, the provisions of the tender documents, the principle of protection of legitimate expectations, the general obligation to state reasons and Articles 147(3) and 138 of the detailed implementing rules.

84. First of all, it is appropriate to examine the applicant's arguments according to which the Commission infringed Article 94 of the Financial Regulation and the provisions of the tender documents.

85. In this respect, it should be noted that the Commission justified the decision rejecting the tender by the existence of a major risk' of a conflict of interest which, in its view, could not be resolved satisfactorily by the guarantees offered by Euphet.

86. As the applicant stresses, Article II.3.1 of the draft framework contract, which was annexed to the specifications, provides for a mechanism for resolving conflicts of interest to which the successful tenderer might be subject. However, on the one hand, it cannot be ruled out, prima facie, that that provision might govern conflicts of interest arising during the performance of the framework contract and not from the stage of the tendering procedure. On the other hand, prima facie, that provision cannot in any event preclude the application of Article 94 of the Financial Regulation.

87. Article 94 of the Financial Regulation provides for the exclusion of tenderers who during the procurement procedure' are subject to a conflict of interest'. In this regard, the President considers that it cannot be ruled out, prima facie, that the expression subject to a conflict of interest' includes the risks of conflicts of interest present from the stage of the procurement procedure which may affect the performance of the contract.

88. In such a situation, the question nevertheless arises as to the degree of certainty needed to justify exclusion from the tendering procedure and the discretion enjoyed by the Commission in establishing a risk of a conflict of interest. The President considers that it is for the Court of First Instance to answer these questions and that the applicant's arguments cannot therefore, at this stage, be rejected as unfounded.

89. Nevertheless, at this stage, and in the light of the arguments put forward in the interlocutory proceedings, doubts must be raised as to whether the Commission committed an error in establishing a risk of a conflict of interest in respect of an institution which receives Community grants in the field of public health and is subsequently required to participate in the evaluation of Community policy in that field. It is clear, prima facie, that such an institution is placed in a position that is at least capable of affecting its objectivity.

90. In the present case, it can be seen from Sections 7.1.3 and 7.1.4 of the tender specifications that the framework contract relates inter alia to certain evaluations of the programme of Community action in the field of public health. In addition, the decision rejecting the tender states that, in the opinion of the Commission, the grants received by certain of Euphet's members give rise to a major risk of a conflict of interest.

91. In the light of the foregoing, and at this stage, doubts must therefore be raised as to whether the Commission committed an error of assessment in considering that, for certain members of Euphet, receipt of grants in the field of public health gave rise to a major risk of a conflict of interest justifying exclusion from the tendering procedure.

92. Furthermore, in the light of the arguments made in the interlocutory proceedings, it is not apparent that the Commission refrained from conducting a specific examination of the risk of a conflict of interest established vis-à-vis Euphet, in particular because it did not know the precise nature of the specific contracts to be concluded. First of all, the decision rejecting the tender makes reference to the programme of Community action in the field of public health, the evaluation of which is precisely one of the subjects of the framework contract. However, it is not apparent at this stage that the Commission failed to conduct a specific examination of the risk of a conflict of interest identified by it having regard to the subject of the contract. Secondly, because of the grants received by certain members of Euphet, serious doubts could be cast, prima facie, on their objectivity. Consequently, at this stage, doubts must be raised as to the need to know the detailed content of the specific contracts to be concluded in order to establish the existence of a major risk of a conflict of interest.

93. The President nevertheless considers that this question must be examined in detail in the main proceedings.

94. Similarly, there are, prima facie, reasons to doubt whether the applicant may rely effectively on the judgments in Fabricom , cited in paragraph 35 above, and AFCon Management Consultants and Others v Commission , cited in paragraph 35 above.

95. First of all, in Fabricom , cited in paragraph 35 above, the Court held essentially that the Community directives relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public contracts preclude a rule which states that any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with a public contract for works, supplies or services is not permitted to apply to participate in or to submit a tender for a public contract for those works, supplies or services where that person has not been given an opportunity to prove that, in the circumstances of the case, the experience which he has acquired was not capable of distorting competition.

96. However, at this stage, it has not been clearly shown that the applicant has not been able to prove, in connection with its tender, that the grants received by some of the experts which Euphet intends to use were irrelevant.

97. Secondly, with regard to the applicant's reference to the judgment in AFCon Management Consultants and Others v Commission , cited in paragraph 35 above, it should be noted that, in that judgment, the Court of First Instance held essentially that after the discovery of a conflict of interest between a tenderer and a member of the evaluation committee, the Commission must act with due diligence and on the basis of all the relevant information when adopting its decision on the outcome of the procedure and that the Commission has some discretion to determine the measures which must be taken (paragraphs 75 and 77). In the light of the circumstances of that case, the Court found that the Commission had made an error of assessment in failing to investigate the relations between a tenderer and a member of the evaluation committee.

98. However, at this stage, doubts must be raised as to whether it is possible usefully to compare the facts of the present case with those that gave rise to the judgment in AFCon Management Consultants and Others v Commission , cited in paragraph 35 above. In the present case, unlike the facts which gave rise to that judgment, there is no reason to think, prima facie, that Euphet's exclusion caused unequal treatment. All the tenderers were, prima facie, in the same position as regards providing proof in their respective tenders that there was no conflict of interest.

99. The President nevertheless considers that this question must be examined in detail in the main proceedings.

100. Lastly, also in the light of the arguments made in the application for interim measures, doubts must be raised as to whether the tender submitted by Euphet allowed any risk of a conflict of interest to be eliminated.

101. First of all, it does not appear at this stage that the Commission manifestly committed an error in considering that the guarantees offered by Euphet were inadequate. As the Commission points out, the proposal for a corrective measure was formulated in general terms and made no specific reference to the risk of a conflict of interest identified by the Commission. Furthermore, in the interlocutory proceedings, the applicant does not cite any passages of its tender where it states that it was aware and took into consideration the specific risk identified by the Commission in the decision rejecting the tender. Quite the opposite, Euphet states in its tender that all the participants in Euphet are entirely independent of the Commission' and that it does not foresee any risk in this regard at present'.

102. Second, it is true, as the applicant notes, that not all the experts proposed in its tender come from institutions subject to the risk of a conflict of interest identified by the Commission. At this stage, however, it is not apparent that the Commission was required to regard that element as sufficient grounds to rule out any risk of a conflict of interest, in particular in the light of the links and respective roles of the members of Euphet. In this respect, as the Commission points out, it can be seen inter alia from Euphet's tender that each of its members is represented on a contract committee' which is responsible for managing and supervising Euphet's evaluation services.

103. For similar substantive reasons, doubts must also be raised as to whether the Commission must consider that the members of an institution subject to a conflict of interest are not themselves personally subject to that conflict. There is every reason to assume that there is a community of professional interests between an expert and the institution employing him. However, at this stage, the applicant does not provide evidence or arguments to reverse this presumption.

104. Third, doubts must also be raised as to whether the rejection of the applicant's tender constitutes a breach of the principle of equality as set out in Articles 89(1) and 99 of the Financial Regulation, because a tenderer subject to a conflict of interest during the performance of the framework contract would be allowed to perform the contract provided it takes adequate measures. As has already been observed (paragraphs 100 to 103), it is not apparent, at this stage, that the Commission committed an error in considering that Euphet's tender was not adequate, from the stage of the tendering procedure, for preventing a risk of a conflict of interest. Prima facie, the applicant cannot therefore claim that it is in a comparable situation to a tenderer subject to a conflict of interest arising only during the performance of the framework contract.

105. Consequently, whilst the applicant's arguments require several assessments to be made in the main proceedings and cannot therefore be regarded, at this stage, as unfounded, doubts must nevertheless be raised as to whether the Commission infringed Article 94 of the Financial Regulation or the provisions of the tender documents.

106. Second, as regards the alleged obligation on the part of the evaluation committee to consult a tenderer before eliminating its tender, in this plea the applicant does not rely on any legal basis imposing such a duty on the Commission. In so far as the applicant relies implicitly on the principle of the rights of the defence, it should be noted that respect for the rights of the defence is, in all proceedings initiated against a person which are liable to culminate in a measure adversely affecting tha t person, a fundamental principle of Community law which must be guaranteed even in the absence of any rules governing the proceedings in question. That principle requires that the addressees of decisions which significantly affect their interests should be placed in a position in which they may effectively make known their views (Case C-32/95 P Commission v Lisrestal and Others [1996] ECR I5373, paragraph 21). However, in the present case, the applicant does not, prima facie, put forward any arguments to show that the tendering procedure is initiated against it.

107. Thirdly, as regards the Commission's alleged breach of the principle of protection of legitimate expectations on account of its rejection of a way of resolving conflicts of interest, it has already accepted, prima facie, that the applicant does not, at this stage, describe an earlier practice that can satisfactorily justify such expectations.

108. Fourthly, doubts must be raised at this stage as to the existence of the failure to state reasons for the decision rejecting the tender claimed by the applicant. According to settled case-law, the scope of the obligation to state reasons must be appropriate to the act at issue and the context in which it was adopted. The statement of reasons must disclose in a clear and unequivocal fashion the reasoning followed by the institution in such a way as to enable the persons concerned to ascertain the reasons for the measure so that they can defend their rights and ascertain whether or not the measure is well founded and to enable the competent Community Court to exercise its power of review (Case C-367/95 P Commission v Sytraval and Brink's France [1998] ECR I1719, paragraph 63; Joined Cases T-228/99 and T-233/99 Westdeutsche Landesbank Girozentrale v Commission [2003] ECR II435, paragraph 278; and Case T-109/01 Fleuren Compost v Commission [2004] ECR II-127, paragraph 119).

109. The reason stated for the decision rejecting the tender is the existence of a risk of a conflict of interest connected, first, with the grants received by certain members of Euphet and certain experts which it might use to perform the framework contract and, secondly, the inadequate guarantees provided by Euphet in this regard.

110. As regards the allegedly erroneous nature of the reason stating that Euphet failed to acknowledge the involvement of certain experts in the implementation of the programme of Community action in the field of public health, the applicant does not mention any passage in its tender where it specifically acknowledged, or even merely suggested, that certain experts whom it intended to use received Community grants in that field.

111. Fifthly, as regards the Commission's alleged infringement of Article 138 of the detailed implementing rules, by that plea the applicant seems to claim essentially that its unlawful exclusion results in the contract being awarded to a tenderer whose tender does not offer the best value for money. However, at this stage, assuming that Euphet's tender was accepted in the tendering procedure, it appears that it would not necessarily have been selected by the Commission.

- The second plea

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

112. In its second plea, the applicant claims essentially that by failing to ask Euphet to submit additional information, the Commission infringed Article 146(3) of the detailed implementing rules, the Court's case-law on public procurement (judgment in Fabricom , cited in paragraph 35 above), the principle of protection of legitimate expectations, the principle of equal treatment and Articles 89(1) and 99 of the Financial Regulation.

113. First of all, at this stage, serious doubts must be raised as to whether the Commission infringed Article 146(3) of the detailed implementing rules. As the applicant itself recognises, that provision simply offers the Commission a discretionary option.

114. Secondly, at this stage, doubts must also be raised as to whether the applicant may rely effectively on the judgment in Fabricom , cited in paragraph 35 above, in order to show that the Commission could not conduct a specific assessment of the potential conflict of interest without requesting additional information from it.

115. First of all, the applicant does not clearly show, at this stage, that the Commission could not conduct a specific examination of the risk of a conflict of interest established vis-à-vis Euphet without knowing the precise nature of the specific contracts to be concluded. As has already been observed in the examination of the first plea (paragraph 92 above), it is not apparent at this stage that the Commission failed to conduct a specific examination of a risk of a conflict of interest having regard to the subject of the framework contract. It is not apparent either, at this stage, that that examination was insufficient to establish the existence of a major risk of a conflict of interest and that it was also necessary to know the precise nature of the specific contracts to be concluded.

116. Second, prima facie, the fact that, in the Commission's view, the terms of the corrective measure proposed by Euphet were too general does not mean that it could not conduct a specific examination of Euphet's situation with regard to conflicts of interest. The general nature of the terms of the tender submitted by Euphet is precisely one of the criteria assessed by the Commission in the decision rejecting the tender in order to reach the conclusion that the Euphet's proposed corrective measure, as set out in its tender, is not adequate for resolving the risk of a conflict of interest identified by the Commission.

117. The President nevertheless considers that this question must be examined in detail in the main proceedings.

118. Third, in so far as the applicant claims a breach of the principle of protection of legitimate expectations, the e-mails annexed to its observations of 13 June 2005 concern only one tendering procedure and do not, at this stage, give proof of the existence of a consistent practice on the part of the Commission whereby it asks tenderers for additional information.

119. Fourth, the applicant does not clearly demonstrate, at this stage, that the Commission's request for additional information from other tenderers constitutes a breach of the principle of equal treatment or an infringement of Articles 89(1) and 99 of the Financial Regulation.

120. According to the Commission's observations, those tenderers were invited to prove the date of submission of their respective tenders because the postmarks on the envelopes containing those tenders were illegible. However, doubts must be raised at this stage as to whether the applicant is in a similar position to those tenderers. Unlike the tenderers in those cases, the defects noted by the Commission in Euphet's tender could not, prima facie, be attributed to circumstances outside its control, but to intrinsic shortcomings in its tender.

121. The President nevertheless considers that this question must be examined in detail in the main proceedings.

122. In the light of the arguments put forward in the interlocutory proceedings, doubts must be raised on several points of the applicant's arguments. Its arguments must nevertheless be examined in detail in the main proceedings.

123. Without prejudice to the Court's position in the main proceedings, the applicant's arguments cannot therefore, at this stage, be rejected as entirely without foundation. The condition relating to a prima facie case is therefore satisfied.

Urgency

124. According to settled case-law, the urgency of an application for interim measures must be assessed on the basis of the need for an interlocutory order in order to prevent serious and irreparable damage being caused to the party requesting the interim measure. That party must prove that it cannot wait for the outcome of the main proceedings without having to suffer damage of this kind (orders in Esedra v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 43, and in TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 41).

125. In the present case, the applicant's argument consists essentially of two parts where, on the one hand, the applicant's exclusion from the tendering procedure harms its reputation and, on the other, the absence of interim measures will, if the contested decisions are annulled, prevent it from being awarded and then performing the contract covered by the tendering procedure and, as a result, from deriving certain benefits in terms of prestige, experience and revenue. Those two parts should be considered in turn.

126. First of all, the applicant claims that its exclusion from the tendering procedure harms its reputation. In that regard, the Commission rightly points out that participation in a public tender procedure, by nature highly competitive, involves risks for all the participants and the elimination of a tenderer under the tender rules is not in itself in any way prejudicial (orders in CMC v Commission , cited in paragraph 71 above, paragraph 51, and in European Dynamics v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 82). Furthermore, the applicant's argument that this case-law does not apply where the tenderer has been unlawfully eliminated cannot be accepted. The case-law in question concerns cases where, like the applicant in the present case, the applicants were contesting the lawfulness of the act(s) contested in the main proceedings. In addition, where an undertaking has been unlawfully eliminated from a tendering procedure, there is even less reason to believe that it is liable to suffer serious and irreparable harm to its reputation, since its exclusion is unconnected with its competences and the subsequent annulling judgment will in principle allow any harm to its reputation to be made good.

127. Second, the applicant claims that, if the contested decisions are annulled and interim measures are not adopted, it will no longer be possible for it to be awarded the contract covered by the tendering procedure and then to perform the contract and, as a result, to derive certain benefits in terms of prestige, experience and revenue.

128. It should be noted in that regard that if the contested decisions were annulled by the Court, it would be for the Commission, under the first paragraph of Article 233 EC, to take the necessary measures to comply with the judgment, without prejudice to the obligations stemming from the application of the second paragraph of Article 288 EC.

129. It should also be noted that, under Article 233 EC, it is the institution whose act has been declared void that is required to take the necessary measures to comply with the Court's judgment. It follows that the Court hearing annulment proceedings is not competent to indicate to the institution whose act has been declared void the manner in which its ruling is to be complied with (order of the Court of Justice in Joined Cases C-199/94 P and C-200/94 P Pevasa and Inpesca v Commission [1995] ECR I3709, paragraph 24) and that the judge hearing the application for interim measures may not prejudice the measures that might be taken following any annulling judgment. The manner in which an annulling judgment is complied with depends not only on the annulled provision and the scope of the judgment, which is to be assessed with reference to its grounds (Joined Cases 97/86, 99/86, 193/86 and 215/86 Asteris and Others v Commission [1988] ECR 2181, paragraph 27, and Joined Cases T305/94 to T307/94, T313/94 to T316/94, T318/94, T325/94, T328/94, T329/94 and T335/94 Limburgse Vinyl Maatschappij and Others v Commission [1999] ECR II931, paragraph 184), but also on the specific circumstances of each case, such as the time within which the contested act is annulled or third-party interests.

130. In the present case, if the contested decisions were annulled, the Commission would therefore have to adopt the necessary measures for ensuring appropriate protection of the applicant's interests, having regard to the specific circumstances of this case (see, to that effect, the orders of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T108/94 R Candiotte v Council [1994] ECR II249, paragraph 27, and in Case T447/04 R Capgemini Nederland v Commission [2005] ECR II-257, paragraph 96).

131. It is not therefore for the President to prejudice measures which might be taken by the Commission in order to comply with any annulment judgment.

132. Nevertheless, the general principle of the right to full and effective judicial protection requires that interim protection be available to individuals, if it is necessary for the full effectiveness of the definitive future decision, in order to ensure that there is no lacuna in the legal protection afforded by the Community Courts (see, to that effect, the order of the President of the First Chamber of the Court of Justice in Case 27/68 R Renckens v Commission [1969] ECR 274, 276; judgments in Case C-213/89 Factortame and Others [1990] ECR I2433, paragraph 21, and in Joined Cases C-143/88 and C-92/89 Zuckerfabrik Süderdithmarschen and Zuckerfabrik Soest [1991] ECR I415, paragraphs 16 to 18; orders of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C-399/95 R Germany v Commission [1996] ECR I2441, paragraph 46, and in Austria v Council , cited in paragraph 25 above, paragraph 111).

133. It is therefore necessary to examine whether it is proven, with a sufficient degree of probability, that the applicant is likely to suffer serious and irreparable damage if the interim measures applied for are not adopted (see, to that effect, the order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C-180/01 P(R) Commission v NALOO [2001] ECR I5737, paragraph 53).

134. In the present case, ignoring the issue of the conflict of interest identified by the Commission, which is contested by the applicant and is the subject of the main proceedings, it must be held that Euphet had an opportunity to be awarded the contract covered by the tendering procedure. First of all, it is clear from the documents before the Court that Euphet was excluded from the tendering procedure irrespective of the value for money of its tender and solely because the tender showed that there was a risk of a conflict of interest. Second, nothing in the file suggests that Euphet did not have an opportunity to be awarded and to perform the contract in question, irrespective of the risk of a conflict of interest identified by the Commission.

135. However, because of its exclusion from the tendering procedure, Euphet lost its opportunity to be awarded the contract and, consequently, to derive the various financial and non-financial benefits that might result from the performance of the framework contract. It should therefore be examined whether, following an annulment judgment, the possibility of the Commission organising a new tendering procedure would allow such damage to be repaired and, if that is not the case, it should be assessed whether the applicant could be compensated accordingly.

136. As regards the possibility of the Commission organising a new tendering procedure, it should be stated that, even if Euphet could be restored under competitive conditions comparable to those that applied in the tendering procedure in question, it is highly likely that the subject of the new procedure organised by the Commission will be different from the subject of the first procedure.

137. Under Sections 7.1.3 and 7.1.4 of the specifications, the framework contract relates inter alia to an evaluation of the programme of Community action in the field of public health established by Decision No 1786/2002. Article 12(3) of that decision provides that an external assessment must be conducted by the end of the fourth year of the programme', that is 31 December 2006.

138. Consequently, even though the Commission rightly stresses that the framework contract does not necessarily concern just that evaluation, it is highly likely that, if interim measures are not adopted, at least some of the services to be provided under the framework contract will have been completed when the Court delivers its decision in the main proceedings.

139. Therefore, even if the Commission decides to or is required to organise a new call for tenders in order to comply with an annulment judgment, if Euphet can be restored under competitive conditions similar to those that applied in the tendering procedure in question, and if Euphet's tender is accepted by the Commission, it is unlikely that Euphet will in practice still have an opportunity to carry out all the services that it would have performed if it had been declared the successful tenderer at the outset.

140. In the circumstances of this case, it is therefore unlikely that the possibility of the Commission organising a new tendering procedure would in itself make it possible to preserve the opportunity that the applicant had to be awarded and to perform the contract covered by the tendering procedure and, as a result, to derive the various benefits that might have resulted.

141. However, as was held above (paragraph 135), account should also be taken of the possibility that, if the contested decisions are annulled in the main proceedings, the Commission could compensate the applicant for any damage suffered and that, if the Commission chose not to award such compensation, the applicant could bring an action for damages on the basis of Article 288 EC. If any damage suffered by the applicant can subsequently be compensated, it cannot be regarded as irreparable (see, to that effect, the orders in Esedra v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 44, and in TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 43).

142. In the present case, the Commission claims in its observations that, if the contested decisions are annulled, the applicant's interests could be adequately protected inter alia through the payment of compensation. However, the file does not contain anything to guarantee, with a sufficient degree of certainty, that, if the contested decisions were annulled, the Commission would compensate the applicant without an action for damages being brought.

143. Account must therefore be taken of the possibility of the applicant bringing an action under Article 288 EC.

144. According to settled case-law, the damage for which compensation is sought in an action under Article 288 EC must be real and certain (see, to that effect, Case T-54/96 Oleifici Italiani and Fratelli Rubino v Commission [1998] ECR II3377, paragraph 66, and Case T-231/97 New Europe Consulting and Brown v Commission [1999] ECR II2403, paragraph 29).

145. In the present case, as has already been held (paragraph 134 above), it must be regarded as established that Euphet had an opportunity to be awarded and to perform the contract covered by the tendering procedure. Therefore, the damage suffered by the applicant, consisting in the loss of that opportunity, must, at this stage and in the light of the evidence and arguments submitted in the interlocutory proceedings, be regarded as real and certain within the meaning of the case-law mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

146. However, it must be stated that that opportunity is very difficult to quantify. On the one hand, Euphet's tender was excluded at a very early stage in the procedure and the evaluation committee did not deliver an opinion regarding its economic value. On the other hand, even if that tender had been evaluated by the evaluation committee, the contracting authority would not be bound by its proposal and would have a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract (see, to that effect, Case T-13/96 TEAM v Commission [1998] ECR II4073, paragraph 76, and AFCon Management Consultants and Others v Commission , cited in paragraph 35 above, paragraph 113).

147. It is therefore very difficult, or even impossible, to quantify that opportunity and therefore to evaluate the damage resulting from its loss. According to settled case-law, damage, which once it has been suffered cannot be quantified, may be regarded as irreparable (see, to that effect, the order of the President of the Court of Justice in Joined Cases C51/90 R and C59/90 R Comos Tank and Others v Commission [1990] ECR I2167, paragraph 31; orders of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T41/97 R Antillean Rice Mills v Council [1997] ECR II447, paragraph 47, and in Case T-65/98 R Van den Bergh Foods v Commission [1998] ECR II2641, paragraph 65).

148. The loss of that opportunity may therefore be regarded as constituting irreparable damage.

149. However, in order to justify the grant of interim measures, the damage claimed by the applicant must be serious (see, to that effect, the orders in Esedra v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 43, and in TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 41).

150. The loss of an opportunity to be awarded and to perform a public contract forms an integral part of exclusion from the tendering procedure in question and cannot be regarded as constituting in itself serious damage, whether or not a specific assessment is made of the seriousness and irreparability of the precise prejudice alleged in each case considered (see, by analogy, the order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-237/99 R BP Nederland and Others v Commission [2000] ECR II3849, paragraph 52).

151. Therefore, in the present case, the applicant's loss of an opportunity to be awarded and to perform the contract in the tendering procedure would constitute serious damage if it has shown satisfactorily that it would have been able to derive sufficiently sizeable benefits from the award and performance of that contract.

152. It is therefore necessary to make a specific assessment of the various benefits that, according to the applicant, it would derive from the award and performance of the contract covered by the tendering procedure.

153. First of all, the applicant claims that the performance of the framework contract would have brought it major benefits in terms of experience and prestige. However, in this respect, its claims are too general, too vague and too unsubstantiated to establish satisfactorily the likelihood and, a fortiori, the significance of those benefits. As regards the honour and prestige attached to the performance of the tasks to be carried out, the applicant pleads the value of the framework contract, the subject, the duration, the international and large-scale nature of the task' and the fact that it assembled a team of 65 people to perform the contract. Nevertheless, in the absence of more specific evidence allowing an assessment of the effects of performance of the framework contract, in particular on its customers, its prestige and its experience, these claims alone are too vague to prove satisfactorily the likelihood and, a fortiori, the significance of those benefits.

154. Second, as regards the financial benefits attached to the performance of the framework contract, their existence is clearly established. It is obvious therefore that non-performance of the contract would deprive the applicant of revenue that it would have received if it had been awarded the contract. The applicant is therefore liable to suffer irreparable damage linked to the loss of an opportunity to receive that revenue.

155. With regard to the seriousness of that loss, it should be noted that, having regard to its subject-matter, the framework contract concerns tasks with a considerable value. It can be seen from the specifications that the successful tenderer will be assigned three to five tasks each year and that, for the first year, the value of the remunerable services is EUR 1 million.

156. However, where the applicant is an undertaking, the seriousness of material damage must be assessed inter alia in the light of the size of that undertaking (see, to that effect, the order in Comos Tank and Others v Commission , cited in paragraph 147 above, paragraphs 26 and 31, and the order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-201/04 R Microsoft v Commission [2004] ECR II-4463, paragraph 257).

157. In the present case, it must be stated that the applicant does not produce evidence or arguments to show that, in the light of its size in particular, the loss that it is liable to suffer would be sufficiently serious to justify the grant of interim measures.

158. For example, it can be seen from an annex to the tender submitted by Euphet that the applicant realised a turnover of more than EUR 27 million in 2004. Furthermore, the information provided in Euphet's tender seeks to highlight the size of the group to which the applicant is linked. In that tender, it is stated that the group in question employs the services of almost 130 000 people throughout the world, approximately 20 000 of whom work within the European Union.

159. Consequently, in the light of the evidence and arguments contained in the application for interim measures, the President cannot take the view that the applicant's loss of an opportunity to receive revenue from the performance of the framework contract would be sufficiently serious to justify the grant of interim measures.

160. The condition relating to urgency cannot therefore be regarded as satisfied.

161. Lastly, it should be noted that the balance of interests is in any case in favour of not ordering interim measures.

162. As has already been noted, if interim measures are not adopted, the applicant is liable to suffer damage linked to the loss of an opportunity to receive revenue from the performance of the framework contract.

163. However, if the interim measures applied for were ordered, the Commission would be unable to conclude the framework contract. It is clear from recital 44 in the preamble to Decision No 1786/2002 that the evaluations of the programme of Community action in the field of public health are intended, where appropriate, to adjust or modify that programme. The performance of these evaluations therefore fulfils an important general interest.

164. Account must also be taken of the interest of the tenderer which was successful at the end of the tendering procedure and which, in the event of suspension, would be unable to perform the contract which it has been awarded.

165. Lastly, as can be seen from the examination of the prima facie case (paragraphs 83 to 123 above), it is not particularly strong, in the light of the evidence and arguments presented in the interlocutory proceedings, and is not capable of tipping the balance of interests in favour of the grant of interim measures.

166. Therefore, in the light of the foregoing, the balance of the interests at stake is in favour of not granting the interim measures applied for.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

167. Consequently, without it being necessary to give a ruling on the applicant's request for the correspondence exchanged between the Commission and the other tenderers to be lodged with the Registry, the application for interim measures must be dismissed.

Judgment of the Court of First Instance (Fourth Chamber)
First Instance (Fourth Chamber)First Instance (Fourth Chamber)2007. Deloitte Business Advisory NV v Commission of the European Communities. Public service contracts - Call for tenders for programme evaluation activities and other activities in the public health sector - Rejection of a tender - Conflict of interest. Case T-195/05.

1. Budget of the European Communities - Financial Regulation - Provisions applicable to tendering procedures

(Council Regulation No 1605/2002, Art. 94)

2. Budget of the European Communities - Financial Regulation - Provisions applicable to tendering procedures

(Commission Regulation No 2342/2002, Art. 146(3), second subpara.)

1. Article 94 of Regulation No 1605/2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities applies - according to the provisions of that regulation - to all public contracts financed in whole or in part by the Community budget. Thus no distinction is made according to whether the procurement procedure in question relates to a framework contract or another type of contract.

However, that provision permits exclusion of a tenderer from a procurement procedure only if the situation of conflict of interest to which it refers is real and not hypothetical. That does not mean that a risk of conflict of interest is not sufficient to exclude a tender. In principle, it is only when the contract is performed that a conflict of interest can become real. Before conclusion of the contract, a conflict of interest can be only potential and Article 94 of the Financial Regulation therefore implies an assessment in terms of risk. That risk must actually be found to exist, following a specific assessment of the tender and the tenderer's situation, for that tenderer to be excluded from the procedure. The mere possibility of a conflict of interest cannot suffice for that purpose.

It follows that, in the procedure for the award of a framework contract, account must be taken of the fact that specific contracts, award of which will give rise to a check that there is no risk of conflict of interest, must come into being before the successful tenderer for the framework contract is entrusted with the performance of specific tasks. Thus, in such a case, the risk that a conflict of interest will in fact arise can be considered only where there are material circumstances placing the tenderer in a position where it is unable to avoid the risk of bias in the performance of the majority of the tasks under the framework contract.

2. The second subparagraph of Article 146(3) of Regulation No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation gives the evaluation committee the option of requesting from tenderers additional information concerning the supporting documents submitted in relation to the exclusion and selection criteria. It follows that that provision cannot be interpreted as imposing a duty on the evaluation committee to request such information from tenderers.

ACTION for annulment, firstly, of the Commission's decision rejecting the tender from Euphet for the public procurement contract Evaluation Framework Contract covering the policy areas of [the Directorate-General for] Health and Consumer Protection, Lot 1 (Public Health) - call for tenders SANCO/2004/01/041' and, secondly, of the Commission's decision awarding that contract to a third party,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES (Fourth Chamber), composed of H. Legal, President, I. Wiszniewska-Biaecka and E. Moavero Milanesi, Judges, Registrar: J. Plingers, Administrator, having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 11 October 2006,

gives the following

Judgment

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Fourth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Dismisses the action.

2. Orders the applicant, Deloitte Business Advisory NV, to pay the costs, including those of the application for interim measures.

Legal framework

1. The award of service contracts by the Commission is governed by Title V of Part One of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1; the Financial Regulation') and Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1; the Implementing Rules').

2. Pursuant to Article 89(1) of the Financial Regulation:

All public contracts financed in whole or in part by the budget shall comply with the principles of transparency, proportionality, equal treatment and non-discrimination.'

3. Under Article 94 of the Financial Regulation:

Contracts may not be awarded to candidates or tenderers who, during the procurement procedure:

(a) are subject to a conflict of interest;

...'

4. Under Article 99 of the Financial Regulation:

While the procurement procedure is under way, all contacts between the contracting authority and candidates or tenderers must satisfy conditions ensuring transparency and equal treatment. They may not lead to amendment of the conditions of the contract or the terms of the original tender.'

5. Article 138 of the Implementing Rules provides:

1. Contracts shall be awarded in one of the following two ways:

(a) under the automatic award procedure, in which case the contract is awarded to the tender which, while being in order and satisfying the conditions laid down, quotes the lowest price;

(b) under the best-value-for-money procedure.

2. The tender offering the best value for money shall be the one with the best price-quality ratio, taking into account criteria justified by the subject of the contract such as the price quoted, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, running costs, profitability completion or delivery times, after-sales service and technical assistance.

6. Pursuant to Article 146(3) of the Implementing Rules:

Requests to participate and tenders which do not satisfy all the essential requirements set out in the supporting documentation for invitations to tender or the specific requirements laid down therein shall be eliminated.

However, the evaluation committee may ask candidates or tenderers to supply additional material or to clarify the supporting documents submitted in connection with the exclusion and selection criteria, within a specified time-limit...'

7. Article 147(3) of the Implementing Rules states:

The contracting authority shall then take its decision giving at least the following:

(a) the name and address of the contracting authority, and the subject and value of the contract or of the framework contract;

(b) the names of the candidates or tenderers rejected and the reasons for their rejection;

(c) the names of the candidates or tenderers to be examined and the reasons for their selection;

(d) the reasons for the rejection of tenders found to be abnormally low;

(e) the names of the candidates or contractor selected and the reasons for that choice by reference to the selection and award criteria announced in advance and, if known, the proportion of the contract or the framework contract which the contractor intends to subcontract to third parties;

(f) in the case of negotiated procedures, the circumstances referred to in Articles 126, 127, 242, 244, 246 and 247 which justify their use;

(g) where appropriate, the reasons why the contracting authority has decided not to award a contract.'

8. Article 148(3) of the Implementing Rules provides:

If, after the tenders have been opened, some clarification is required in connection with a tender, or if obvious clerical errors in the tender must be corrected, the contracting authority may contact the tenderer, although such contact may not lead to any alteration of the terms of the tender.'

Background to the dispute

9. On 14 December 2004, the Commission published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2004 S 243) a contract notice for the award of a framework contract entitled Evaluation framework contract covering the policy areas of [the Directorate-General for] Health and Consumer Protection, Lot 1 (public health) - invitation to tender Sanco/2004/01/141' (the framework contract').

10. It is clear from sections 7.1.3 and 7.1.4 of the specifications relating to the tendering procedure (the specifications') that the framework contract is to relate in particular to the evaluation of the programme of Community action in the field of public health established by Decision No 1786/2002/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 23 September 2002 adopting a programme of Community action in the field of public health (2003-2008) (OJ 2002 L 271, p. 1).

11. The specifications divide the tasks to be carried out under the framework contract into two main tasks. The first task (main task 1') is to conduct studies and to provide services intended to assist in the design and preparation of Community programmes or policies, their ex-ante assessment and the organisation of evaluation activities'. The second task (main task 2') is to carry out mid-term, final and ex-post evaluations of programmes, policies and other activities. According to the specifications, the framework contract must allow specific contracts to be concluded in accordance with the Commission's needs. It must be concluded in principle for a period of 24 months with the possibility of renewal for two further periods of 12 months each.

12. The specifications also set out several grounds for the exclusion of tenderers.

13. One of those grounds, set out in section 9.1.3 of the specifications, which reproduces Article 94 of the Financial Regulation, is formulated as follows:

Contracts may not be awarded to candidates or tenderers who, during the procurement procedure:

(a) are subject to a conflict of interest...'

14. With a view to tendering for the contract in question, Deloitte Business Advisory NV formed a consortium with the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, the Nederlandse Organisatie voor toegepast-natuurwetenschappelijk onderzoek (Netherlands Organisation for Applied Scientific Research, TNO) and the Istituto superiore di sanità (National Health Institute, Italy) for the evaluation of European public health (European Public Health Evaluation Task Force; Euphet'), assisted by other bodies such as the Karolinska Institutet (a Swedish medical research and education centre). The applicant acts as the legal representative of that group.

15. On 10 February 2005 Euphet submitted a tender to the Commission under the tendering procedure. Euphet's tender includes a paragraph with the heading Independence', which reads as follows:

Euphet understands and accepts that none of the evaluation organisations or their staff should have the slightest existing or potential conflict of interest in the performance of their task under the framework contract. We confirm that all the participants in Euphet are entirely independent of the Commission and that we do not foresee any risk in this regard at present. Furthermore, we undertake to conduct a detailed prior check in connection with each specific contract in order to ensure that the teams we propose are composed of members who are able to work in complete independence and to provide an objective and independent external assessment. If, in the course of execution of the projects, the slightest problem should arise which could have a bearing on this key principle, we would notify the Commission immediately and work with it to seek to rectify the situation.'

16. By a letter of 22 April 2005, the Commission informed Euphet that its tender had been rejected since the evaluation committee for the contract had found there to be risks of conflicts of interest within Euphet. In the decision rejecting the tender, the Commission noted as follows:

The evaluation committee examined the offers concerning possible Conflict of Interest... The definition of [conflict of interest] is provided in the draft contract that was included in the tender documentation. This definition reads:

The Contractor shall take all necessary measures to prevent any situation that could compromise

the impartial and objective performance of the Contract. Such conflict of interests could arise in particular as a result of economic interest, political or national affinity, family or emotional ties, or any other relevant connection or shared interest.

In the context of an evaluation contract, a case of [conflict of interest] could take place if the tenderer is being, or has been, involved in the implementation of the subject to be evaluated. This situation could involve the evaluator assessing his/her own work, and there is a great risk that the conflict of interest affects the objectivity - which is a crucial factor for an evaluation - of the evaluator. It is also being stressed in the Specifications of the Tender that objectivity has to be ensured in evaluations.

The following information was found concerning the Euphet main and supporting partners' involvement in... activities [of the Directorate-General for health and consumer protection (SANCO)].

- London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine (LSHTM) has a large number of grant contracts (14 listed) with SANCO.

- TNO has a large number of grant contracts with SANCO/Public Health.

- Istituto Superiore di Sanita (ISS) has one grant contract with SANCO/Public Health and another one is planned to be signed in the coming months.

- Karolinska Institutet (KI) has a large number of grant contracts with SANCO/Public Health.

The evaluation committee concluded that Euphet does not acknowledge the fact that a number of the consortium partners have a large involvement in the implementation of the Public Health programme. Considering the great risk of [conflict of interest], a detailed and concrete explanation would have been required to provide a sufficient level of understanding of how the [conflict of interest] issue should be addressed and the risks should be eliminated. However, the approach proposed is not sufficient, and no satisfactory assurance is provided by the tenderer that [conflict of interest] could be avoided.'

17. In the decision rejecting the tender, however, the Commission adds that it would not be signing the framework contract with the successful tenderer until a period of two weeks had passed.

18. By a letter dated 3 May 2005, Euphet contested the Commission's position and, inter alia, asked it to respond by 4 May 2005, failing which it would bring the matter before the Court of First Instance.

19. By a fax of 4 May 2005, the Commission acknowledged receipt of the letter from Euphet and stated:

Because we need more time to examine the questions raised in your letter, we will not proceed with the signing of the contract for a further period of 15 days from the date on which this letter was sent.'

20. By a fax of 19 May 2005, the Commission replied that it was maintaining its position and rejecting the tender submitted by Euphet.

Procedure and forms of order sought

21. By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 19 May 2005, the applicant brought the present action.

22. By a separate document lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on the same day, the applicant made an application for interim measures, seeking, on the one hand, suspension of execution of the decision rejecting the tender and the decision awarding the contract to another tenderer (the award decision') and, on the other, an order preventing the Commission, firstly, from notifying the award decision to the successful tenderer and, secondly, from signing the relevant contract, on pain of a fine of EUR 2.5 million.

23. By order of 26 May 2005, the President of the Court of First Instance ordered the Commission not to sign the framework contract until a final order had been made on the application for interim measures.

24. By order of 20 September 2005, the President of the Court of First Instance dismissed the application for interim measures.

25. Upon hearing the Report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court of First Instance (Fourth Chamber) decided to open the oral procedure.

26. The parties presented oral argument and their answers to the questions put by the Court at the hearing on 11 October 2006.

27. The applicant claims that the Court should:

- declare the action well founded;

- annul the decision rejecting the tender;

- annul the award decision;

- order the Commission to pay the costs.

28. The Commission contends that the Court should:

- declare the applicant's application unfounded and dismiss the action;

- order the applicant to pay the costs.

Law

29. In support of its action, the applicant raises, in essence, two pleas in law, alleging, respectively, that Euphet was unlawfully excluded from the tender procedure on grounds of a risk of conflict of interest and that it was unlawfully deprived of the possibility of supplying additional information with regard to the conflict of interest.

The first plea in law, alleging the unlawful exclusion of Euphet from the tender procedure on grounds of a risk of conflict of interest

30. The applicant's arguments seek to show, in essence, firstly, the lack of reasoning in the decision rejecting the tender with regard to the existence of a conflict of interest, secondly, the lack of a conflict of interest and, thirdly, infringement of the principle of protection of legitimate expectations and of Article 138 of the Implementing Rules.

Breach of the duty to give reasons concerning the existence of a conflict of interest

- Arguments of the parties

31. In the context of the first part of its first plea, alleging breach of the general duty to give reasons and of Article 147(3) of the Implementing Rules, the applicant submits that the decision rejecting the tender is based on incorrect and insufficient reasons with regard to the existence of a conflict of interest.

32. The reasons given by the Commission for its decision rejecting the tender are incorrect since the evaluation committee - certain extracts of whose report are set out in the present judgment - concluded wrongly that Euphet did not acknowledge the fact that a number of the consortium partners are greatly involved in the implementation of the Public Health programme. Euphet's tender clearly stated that certain Euphet partners were involved in ongoing activities for the DG Health and Consumer Protection'.

33. The Commission's reasons for its decision rejecting the tender are also incorrect, since at no time did it state why the course of action suggested by Euphet was inadequate and why it offered no satisfactory assurance that all conflicts of interest could be avoided. Moreover, according to the applicant, although the invitation to tender required a minimum of seven experts, Euphet's tender included 65 curricula vitae, 45 of which were of persons who had nothing to do with the organisations named by the Commission, and therefore Euphet would always have been capable of carrying out the different tasks without there being a conflict of interest. The 20 persons connected to organisations named by the Commission would be faced with a conflict of interest only if they carried out activities of type D for main task 2, which has many aspects, thus enabling them to work on a number of evaluation files without any risk of conflict of interest. Since the conditions for selection were particularly stringent, Euphet had tried to gather a large number of experts who were likely to have experience in the activities of the DG Health and Consumer Protection'. Accordingly, a necessary and sufficient condition would have been to propose a way of resolving conflicts of interest, which is a condition that Euphet would have met in the present case.

34. As subsidiary points, the applicant observes that the fact that one or more Euphet partners had received grants from the Commission is not such as to cast doubt on their objectivity in all circumstances. The applicant also notes that the Commission raises that point, and the fact that several of the experts engaged have received grants from the DG Health and Consumer Protection', for the first time in its defence.

35. It is for the Commission to show concrete proof that a particular tenderer has a conflict of interest, and if such a risk could justify the exclusion of a tenderer - which is not the case here - the Commission ought to state that clearly in the invitation to tender, so that tenderers so forewarned can take that risk into account when forming their teams.

36. The Commission disputes, firstly, the allegation that the decision rejecting the tender is based on incorrect reasons, maintaining that it was fully entitled to hold that Euphet did not acknowledge the fact that a number of Euphet partners were greatly involved in the implementation of the Public Health programme in question in the present case. Although the curricula vitae of some of the partners in Euphet disclosed their involvement in the implementation of the programme of Community action in the public health sector, Euphet did not see the need to notify the Commission of a potential risk of conflicts of interest, and stated as follows:

We confirm that all the participants in Euphet are entirely independent of the Commission and that we do not foresee any risk in this regard at present.'

37. Furthermore, that ground for exclusion - exclusion for conflict of interest - which is set out in Article 94 of the Financial Regulation and reproduced in section 9.1.3 of the specifications, was - by choice - drafted in wide terms by the Commission, since the assessment as to whether there is a conflict of interest requires a concrete examination by the adjudicating authority on the basis of the documents in the file.

38. The Commission further takes the view that it gave sufficient explanation of the reasons for its finding that there was a conflict of interest with regard to Euphet. It adds that its letter of 19 May 2005 was not a statement of reasons a posteriori but a response to the arguments raised in the detailed letter from Euphet's lawyers of 3 May 2005. Accordingly, Euphet has sufficient knowledge of the reasons for the decision rejecting the tender.

39. Finally, the Commission rejects the applicant's assertion that it would still have been possible to carry out certain evaluation tasks without risk of conflict of interest, since the tender included

65 curricula vitae, 45 of which were of persons who have no connection with the Euphet partners in respect of which the Commission had found a conflict of interest. The experts proposed by Euphet did not all carry the same specific weight and, in its tender, Euphet classified its experts according to their experience in the areas of Evaluation' and Public Health'. On that basis a points system was established on a scale from A to D. Analysis of the qualifications of the experts proposed by Euphet shows that most of those given the highest points - and, it may be supposed, those who play the most important role in the actual performance of the evaluation tasks - are connected with organisations which received large subsidies from the Commission for carrying out work relating to the Community public health programme. Each partner in the consortium is also a member of the contract committee which oversees performance of the contract. Furthermore, the applicant has tried to create a homogeneous team and it is rather implausible that those organisations or experts would be excluded from carrying out certain tasks, irrespective of the consequences that that would have for the quality of the work to be done.

40. Moreover, the Commission refutes the argument that it should have made express mention of the risk of a conflict of interest' as a specific ground for exclusion in the specifications, thus depriving Euphet of the opportunity to take that risk into consideration.

41. Firstly, the grounds for exclusion are exhaustively laid down in Articles 93 and 94 of the Financial Regulation; the possibility of conflict of interest is mentioned in Article 94 and repeated word for word in the specifications.

42. Secondly, Euphet was perfectly aware of the problem of conflicts of interest when it drafted its tender since it stated therein: Euphet understands and accepts that none of the evaluation organisations or their staff should have the slightest existing or potential conflict of interest in the performance of their task under the framework contract'. Aware of the fact that the risk of conflict of interest - not merely actual but also potential - was incompatible with performance of the evaluation tasks under the framework contract, Euphet nevertheless asserted in its tender:

We confirm that all the participants in Euphet are entirely independent of the Commission and that we do not foresee any risk in this regard at present.'

43. Thirdly, the applicant accepted, in its reply, that there was a problem of conflict of interest where organisations participate in the evaluation of a Community policy in the context of which they have received subsidies, stating that it is clear that a partner or an expert employed by that partner cannot participate in the evaluation of a file in the context of which that partner has itself received a subsidy'. In that regard, the Commission points out that all the partners in the consortium in question, as well as a number of the experts called upon, received subsidies from the DG for Health and Consumer Protection' for carrying out certain actions in implementation of the Community public health programme.

- Findings of the Court

44. As a preliminary point, it should be noted that the arguments alleging incorrect and insufficient reasons for the decision rejecting the tender amount essentially to a single argument alleging an error of assessment by the Commission and the unfounded nature of the decision rejecting the tender. Accordingly, those questions require not an analysis of the Commission's duty to give reasons, but an in-depth analysis of the substance of the decision rejecting the tender, and will therefore be dealt with in the analysis of the second part of this plea. The arguments set out above will be analysed in the context of the first part of the plea only to the extent that they can truly be understood as alleging infringement of the duty to give reasons.

45. In that regard, it should be noted that, according to established case-law, the duty to give reasons depends on the type of document at issue and on the context in which it was adopted. The statement of reasons must disclose in a clear and unequivocal fashion the reasoning followed by the institution in such a way, firstly, as to make the persons concerned aware of the reasons for the measure and thus enable them to defend their rights and to verify whether or not the decision is well founded and, secondly, to permit the Community Court to exercise its supervisory jurisdiction (Case C350/88 Delacre and Others v Commission [1990] ECR I395, paragraphs 15 and 16, and Case T217/01 Forum des migrants v Commission [2003] ECR II1563, paragraph 68).

46. In the present case, the decision rejecting the tender expressly states that Euphet's tender was rejected because of the existence of a conflict of interest connected, on the one hand, to the subsidies received by the main members of Euphet and, on the other, to the inadequacy of the safeguards offered by Euphet in that regard.

47. The decision rejecting the tender therefore states clearly and unequivocally the Commission's reasoning, thus, firstly, making the persons concerned aware of the reasons for the measure so that they are able to defend their rights and verify whether or not the decision is well founded and, secondly, permitting the Court to exercise its supervisory jurisdiction.

48. It follows that the applicant's argument alleging lack of reasoning for the decision rejecting the tender cannot be accepted. Accordingly, the first part of the first plea must be rejected.

The absence of conflict of interest

- Arguments of the parties

49. In the context of the second part of the first plea, the applicant alleges that the Commission infringed Article 94 of the Financial Regulation and the provisions of the tendering procedure.

50. Firstly, Euphet could not be excluded from the procurement procedure merely because of the existence of a risk of a conflict of interest. Section 9.1.3 of the specifications does indeed provide that the contract cannot be awarded to candidates or tenderers likely to find themselves in a situation of conflict of interest during the procedure for award of the contract, but the concept of conflict of interest is not defined either in the invitation to tender or in Article 94 of the Financial Regulation.

51. Under Article II.3.1 of the framework contract, a simple conflict of interest and, a fortiori, a risk of a conflict of interest do not in themselves constitute a ground for exclusion. It is sufficient for the party involved to take the measures necessary to avoid any conflict of interest or its consequences. Furthermore, that article lays down a procedure for resolving conflicts of interest likely to arise during the performance of contracts. The Commission therefore foresaw the risk of conflicts of interest in the context of the contract; it follows that the existence of such a risk cannot justify exclusion.

52. The applicant adds that Euphet's suggested approach greatly exceeded the requirements of the draft framework contract in that it proposed not only an ex-post solution - that is to say during performance of each specific contract - but also an ex-ante check, that is to say with effect from the stage at which the application file is drawn up, depending on the nature and the subject of the specific contracts. Such an approach enables the maximum reduction of the risk of a conflict of interest arising in the performance of a specific task. The independence of Euphet's staff was thus guaranteed in the letter of 10 February 2005 accompanying the tender, sent by Euphet to the Commission.

53. The applicant claims that the Commission could not require more of Euphet, all the more so because, at the date of lodging of the application, the exact content of the specific contracts was not known. Accordingly, the Commission could not exclude Euphet without acquiring detailed knowledge of the contents of the specific contracts to be concluded. If the Commission wished to have the option of excluding a tenderer on grounds of a risk of conflict of interest, it should have stated that in the specifications.

54. Furthermore, none of the invitation to tender documents provides - by way of a specific ground for exclusion - for the exclusion of a tenderer of which one or more members are involved in ongoing projects for the DG Health and Consumer Protection', and such a ground for exclusion could not be applied since it was neither mentioned in Article 94 of the Financial Regulation nor laid down in case-law.

55. In addition, the applicant submits that it is necessary to distinguish - as did the President of the Court of First Instance in his order of 20 September 2005 -between a case where the tenderers are subject to a conflict of interest during the procurement procedure', which justifies their exclusion pursuant to Article 94 of the Financial Regulation, and a case where there is potential risk of a conflict of interest, as relied upon by the Commission in the present case to justify exclusion. Basing its argument on paragraph 88 of that order, the applicant takes the view that it is for the Court to ascertain the degree of certainty needed to justify exclusion from the tendering procedure and to determine the discretion enjoyed by the Commission for the purposes of establishing a risk of a conflict of interest. The Commission cannot and must not exclude a tenderer before an actual conflict of interest is found.

56. Secondly, the applicant claims that the Commission did not carry out a specific check of Euphet's tender.

57. In that regard, it refers to case-law, according to which it is unlawful to exclude a tenderer in an abstract manner without any specific check on the resolution of a conflict of interest (Joined Cases C21/03 and C34/03 Fabricom [2005] ECR I1559 and Case T160/03 AFCon Management Consultants and Others v Commission [2005] ECR II981, paragraphs 75 to 78).

58. The Commission disputes the argument that Euphet was excluded from the tendering procedure on the sole ground that there was a risk of conflict of interest.

59. Firstly, it submits that the provisions of Article 94 of the Financial Regulation, reproduced in section 9.1.3 of the specifications, provide for the exclusion of tenderers who during the procurement procedure' are subject to a conflict of interest'. Those provisions relate inter alia to risks of conflicts of interest which exist at the stage of the procurement procedure and may affect its implementation. The existence of a conflict of interest even before the award of the contract accordingly constitutes a ground for rejection of the tender. That is not the case where a conflict of interest which did not exist when the contract was awarded arises during performance of the contract. In the latter situation, a contractual provision is laid down to remove any conflict of interest. An actual risk of conflict of interest already present at the stage of award of the contract is a legitimate ground for exclusion from the contract pursuant to Article 94 of the Financial Regulation. A finding that there is a serious risk of a conflict of interest in the future' (when the contract is performed) is an actual' conflict of interest in the context of award of the contract.

60. Next, although the invitation to tender does not require tenderers to include proposals for measures to correct conflicts of interest in their tender from the outset, that omission is explained by the very fact that a finding of conflict of interest even before award of the contract entails exclusion of the tender concerned, pursuant to section 9.1.3 of the specifications and Article 94 of the Financial Regulation.

61. Finally, a risk of conflict of interest, so far as Euphet is concerned, requires no prior knowledge of the precise content of the specific contracts following the framework contract. It is sufficient to note that, having regard to the subject-matter of the framework contract itself, Euphet's objectivity and impartiality in the performance of the tasks to be entrusted to it may seriously be doubted.

62. With regard to the argument alleging lack of a specific check of Euphet's tender, the Commission responds that, in the present case, the evaluation committee specifically checked whether there was a conflict of interest. On making that check, it found that all the partners in the consortium, as well as a number of experts called upon, received subsidies from DG Health and Consumer Protection' for carrying out certain actions in implementation of the Community public health programme. The participation of those organisations in the carrying out of the evaluation could require them, in the context of an intermediary or ex-post evaluation, to assess their own work, which would compromise their objectivity and impartiality. Moreover, in the context of an ex-ante evaluation, there is also a risk of conflict of interest since organisations regularly receiving subsidies under certain programmes are in a position to affect the development and later direction of those programmes.

63. The Commission rejects the theory that there can be conflict of interest only at the stage of intermediary and ex-post evaluations of individual programmes. Since the ex-ante evaluations are intended to support and guide the future policy of the Commission on public health matters, organisations regularly receiving subsidies would be inclined to put their own interests first when setting out the basic outlines of a future action programme.

- Findings of the Court

64. The reasons for the decision rejecting Euphet's tender were the risk of conflict of interest on the part of the tenderer, the tenderer's failure to acknowledge the existence of such a risk and the absence, in the tender, of concrete proposals for the removal of that risk. Thus, firstly, it must be determined, on the one hand, whether the Commission was correct to base its refusal of the tender submitted by Euphet on the existence of a risk of conflict of interest and, on the other, whether it was indeed the existence of that risk which led the Commission to adopt the decision rejecting the tender. Subsequently, it must be considered whether the Commission was justified in taking the view that the risk of conflict of interest alleged actually existed in the present case.

65. The legal basis for the decision rejecting the tender is to be found in Article 94 of the Financial Regulation, reproduced in section 9.1.3 of the specifications, which provides for the exclusion - from the award of contracts - of tenderers who during the award procedure' are subject to a conflict of interest'. Moreover, the decision rejecting the tender suggests as a definition of conflict of interest the terms of Article II.3.1 of the framework contract, which provides: The Contractor shall take all necessary measures to prevent any situation that could compromise the impartial and objective performance of the Contract. Such conflict of interest could arise in particular as a result of economic interest, political or national affinity, family or emotional ties, or any other relevant connection or shared interest'. Article II.3.1 also provides that the Contractor shall ensure that his staff, board and directors are not placed in a situation which could give rise to conflict of interests'.

66. Article 94 of the Financial Regulation applies - according to the provisions of that regulation - to all public contracts financed in whole or in part by the Community budget. Thus no distinction is made according to whether the procurement procedure in question relates to a framework contract or another type of contract.

67. However, Article 94 of the Financial Regulation permits exclusion of a tenderer from a procurement procedure only if the situation of conflict of interest to which it refers is real and not hypothetical. That does not mean that a risk of conflict of interest is not sufficient to exclude a tender. In principle, it is only when the contract is performed that a conflict of interest can become real. Before conclusion of the contract, a conflict of interest can be only potential and Article 94 of the Financial Regulation therefore implies an assessment in terms of risk. That risk must actually be found to exist, following a specific assessment of the tender and the tenderer's situation, for that tenderer to be excluded from the procedure. The mere possibility of a conflict of interest cannot suffice for that purpose.

68. It follows that, in the procedure for the award of a framework contract, account must be taken of the fact that specific contracts, award of which will give rise to a check that there is no risk of conflict of interest, must come into being before the successful tenderer for the framework contract is entrusted with the performance of specific tasks. Thus, in such a case, the risk that a conflict of interest will in fact arise can be considered only where there are material circumstances placing the tenderer in a position where it is unable to avoid the risk of bias in the performance of the majority of the tasks under the framework contract.

69. In the present case, the decision rejecting the tender could rightly be related to a situation of conflict of interest that was real and not hypothetical and it is that situation which led the Commission to adopt that decision.

70. As stated in paragraph 16 above, the decision rejecting the tender shows that the main partners in Euphet are involved in activities of the DG Health and Consumer Protection', particularly since they hold a large number of subsidy contracts in that area and that of public health, whereas Euphet does not acknowledge that its members are involved in the implementation of the public health programme.

71. The Commission has also stated, without being contradicted on the point, that the majority of the most experienced experts proposed by Euphet are connected with organisations which have received large subsidies from the Commission for carrying out work relating to the Community public health programme.

72. By concluding, on that basis, in the decision rejecting the tender and in the confirmatory letter of 19 May 2005, that there was a risk of conflict of interest, classified as great', the Commission thus took the view that a situation of conflict of interest already existed in principle at the stage of the procedure for the award of the contract, even if that conflict had not yet materialised in terms of its consequences.

73. It follows that the Commission correctly assessed Euphet's tender on the basis of the provisions of Article 94 of the Financial Regulation and of section 9.1.3 of the specifications. Accordingly, the applicant's argument that criteria extraneous to those provisions were taken into account in rejecting its tender cannot be accepted.

74. The applicant's arguments to the contrary are not such as to cast doubt on that conclusion.

75. The argument that Article II.3.1 of the framework contract applies only to conflicts of interest arising during performance of the framework contract and not to those at the stage of the procurement procedure is irrelevant, since the conflict of interest in the present case existed at the stage of award of the contract, thus justifying the exclusion of the tender pursuant to Article 94 of the Financial Regulation and section 9.1.3 of the specifications. For the same reason, the applicant submits in vain that the proposed course of action for resolving conflicts of interest exceeded the requirements of the framework contract in so far as it entailed an ex-ante check, that is to say, with effect from the stage of drawing up of the application file, with reference to the nature and the subject of the specific contracts.

76. In the same way, contrary to the applicant's assertion, since the subject-matter of the framework contract was expressly defined, the Commission was entitled to find that, because of the subsidies received, serious doubts could be cast on the objectivity of the main partners in Euphet as early as the time when the tender was lodged, the reason being, as stated in the decision rejecting the tender, that that situation could require the evaluator to assess his own work, thus creating a conflict of interest.

77. Next, with regard to whether the Commission was in fact justified in finding that there was a situation of conflict of interest in the present case involving Euphet and in taking the view that Euphet did not recognise such a risk, it must be noted that, as stated in paragraph 70 above, the Commission states in the decision rejecting the tender - without being contradicted by the applicant on that point - that the evaluation committee found that the main partners in Euphet have a number, indeed a large number, of subsidy contracts with DG Health and Consumer Protection', particularly in the area of public health. Having regard to the subject-matter of the framework contract, namely evaluation... covering the policy areas of DG Health and Consumer Protection... (public health)', the Commission was correct to take the view, at the stage of the procedure to award the contract, that there was a conflict of interest which could compromise the impartial and objective performance of the framework contract by Euphet. Furthermore, the Commission points out in the decision rejecting the tender that Euphet's tender specified that Euphet understands and accepts that none of the evaluation organisations or their staff should have the slightest existing or potential conflict of interest in the performance of their task under the framework contract. We confirm that all the participants in Euphet are entirely independent of the Commission and that we do not foresee any risk in this regard at present'. Accordingly, it must be held that the Commission was also correct to infer from that in the decision rejecting the tender that Euphet [did] not acknowledge the fact that a number of the consortium partners [had] a large involvement in the implementation of the Public Health programme' and that, considering the great risk of [conflict of interest], a detailed and concrete explanation would have been required to provide a sufficient level of understanding of how the [conflict of interest] issue should be addressed and the risks should be eliminated'.

78. It follows from the foregoing that the Commission was right to take the view that, pursuant to Article 94 of the Financial Regulation and section 9.1.3 of the specifications, it was necessary to exclude Euphet's tender from the award of the contract.

79. The applicant's argument that it is unlawful to exclude a tenderer in an abstract manner without any specific check of its tender, and in particular of its proposal for resolving conflicts of interest, is unfounded.

80. It follows from the foregoing findings that in the present case the Commission did carry out a specific check on the tender submitted by Euphet before deciding to exclude it from the contract. Moreover, the alleged lack of examination of the proposal for resolving conflicts of interest is irrelevant, since the Commission was required to reject Euphet's tender, because of the conflict of interest, pursuant to Article 94 of the Financial Regulation and section 9.1.3 of the specifications.

81. In the light of the foregoing, the applicant's argument relating to the lack of conflict of interest cannot be accepted and the second part of the first plea must be rejected.

Breach of the principle of protection of legitimate expectations and of Article 138 of the Implementing Rules

- Arguments of the parties

82. In the context of the third part of its first plea, the applicant submits that the proposal made by Euphet for resolving conflicts of interest had previously been accepted by the Commission, even if by other Directorates-General. Since the Commission has departed from its earlier practice, it has breached the principle of protection of legitimate expectations.

83. The applicant adds that, if the Commission awards the contract to a third party after wrongfully rejecting Euphet's tender, it will infringe Article 138 of the Implementing Rules.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

84. The Commission contends that the applicant does not provide sufficient evidence in support of its allegation of breach of the principle of protection of legitimate expectations.

85. The Commission also disputes that the award of the contract to a third party constitutes infringement of Article 138 of the Implementing Rules. That provision merely distinguishes between the two possible ways of awarding the contract, that is to say by adjudication or by award to the most economically advantageous tender. Acceptance of Euphet's tender for the selection and award stages did not necessarily mean that it would be awarded the contract.

- Findings of the Court

86. In accordance with established case-law, the right to rely on the principle of protection of legitimate expectations, which is one of the fundamental principles of the Community, extends to any individual who is in a situation in which it is clear that the Community administration has, by giving him precise assurances, led him to entertain reasonable expectations. Such assurances include, irrespective of the form in which they are given, precise, unconditional and consistent information coming from authorised and reliable sources (Joined Cases T66/96 and T221/97 Mellett v Court of Justice [1998] ECRSC IA449 and II1305, paragraphs 104 and 107).

87. In the present case, without otherwise substantiating its assertions in that regard, the applicant merely refers to the position adopted by the Commission in other procurement procedures. Such facts, even if proven, do not constitute precise assurances given by the institution and, accordingly, cannot form the basis of legitimate expectations as to the Commission's acceptance of the procedure proposed by Euphet in the context of the contract in question.

88. The applicant's allegation that the unlawful exclusion of Euphet led to the award of the contract to a tenderer whose tender was not the most economically advantageous is ineffective since, having regard to the existence of the conflict of interest found in Euphet's case (see paragraphs 77 and 78 above), the Commission was required to reject its tender.

89. The applicant's argument cannot therefore be accepted. Accordingly, the third part of the first plea must be rejected.

90. In the light of the foregoing considerations, the first plea in law must be rejected in its entirety.

The second plea in law, alleging that Euphet was unlawfully deprived of the opportunity of supplying additional information with regard to the conflict of interest

91. In the context of its second plea, the applicant essentially alleges breach by the Commission of its duty to request additional information before rejecting the tender, which follows from Article 146(3) of the Implementing Rules, of the principle of protection of legitimate expectations and the principle of equal treatment.

Arguments of the parties

92. According to the applicant, the Commission could not reject Euphet's tender without giving it the opportunity of defending its position and the evaluation committee should at least have allowed it to submit its observations on that question.

93. Firstly, the applicant complains that the Commission did not ask Euphet to supply additional information in relation to the problem of conflict of interest, contrary to Article 146(3) of the Implementing Rules.

94. Secondly, the applicant claims breach of the principle of protection of legitimate expectations and asserts - referring in that regard to an exchange of e-mails between the Commission and a tenderer - that it is the Commission's practice to ask candidates or tenderers for additional information where that is necessary. That practice is, furthermore, confirmed by the case-law of the Court of Justice on public procurement matters, inter alia by the judgment in Fabricom , paragraph 57 supra. By failing to ask for additional information, the Commission departed from an established practice confirmed by case-law and breached the principle of protection of legitimate expectations. Moreover, in other circumstances, the Commission gave a tenderer at risk of exclusion the opportunity of defending itself. Furthermore, the applicant does not know of any other case where a tenderer was excluded on the basis of a risk of conflict of interest. If the Commission could not show that such cases exist, it would be impossible for it to provide for such exclusion without infringing the principle of protection of legitimate expectations.

95. Thirdly, alleging in that regard breach of the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination laid down in Articles 89(1) and 99 of the Financial Regulation, the applicant raises the question whether the Commission, in the context of the invitation to tender in question, offered other tenderers the possibility of supplying additional information. The applicant submits that the Commission's argument is contradictory in that, on the one hand, it asserts, in its defence, that after the opening of the tenders, no request for additional information was made to any tenderer', but, on the other, states in its rejoinder lodged on 24 June 2005 in the proceedings for interim relief brought before the President of the Court of First Instance, that it had asked certain tenderers to show that their tenders were sent within the time-limit prescribed, a request made after the Commission had opened the tenders or, at least, after the closing date for their receipt. The applicant takes the view that, if information was requested from those tenderers whilst the opportunity was not given to Euphet to defend its position or to give its point of view on the risk of conflict of interest, the Commission was in breach of the principle of equal treatment between the tenderers.

96. The Commission argues that it is obliged to consult the tenderer only where it intends to impose administrative or financial penalties, such as exclusion from future contracts or subsidies, pursuant to Article 96 of the Financial Regulation and not when it excludes that tenderer from the award of a particular contract pursuant to Article 94 of the Financial Regulation.

97. In that regard, firstly, the Commission points out that Article 146(3) of the Implementing Rules does not impose any duty on it to ask a tenderer for more details regarding the supporting documents submitted. In any event, pursuant to Article 99 of the Financial Regulation and Article 148(3) of the Implementing Rules, contact between the Commission and tenderers cannot lead to amendment of the terms of a tender.

98. Secondly, the Commission disputes that there is a general practice of systematically requesting additional information from a tenderer before excluding it on the ground of conflict of interest. Furthermore, the exchange of e-mails with the Commission produced by the applicant, concerning a different award procedure, related to a request for additional information regarding certain elements of the tender, and in no way shows that the Commission has the standard practice of obtaining additional information from tenderers before rejecting their tenders on the basis of one of the criteria for exclusion set out in the Financial Regulation.

99. In that regard, the applicant's reference to Fabricom , paragraph 57 supra, is irrelevant, since in that judgment the Court of Justice censured Belgian legislation which automatically precludes from participation in a public procurement contract a person who has been instructed to carry out preparatory work in connection with that contract or an undertaking connected to such a person, whereas in the present case Euphet was not prevented by the Commission from taking part in the award procedure. Initially, Euphet submitted a tender in respect of which the Commission subsequently carried out checks for the existence of a conflict of interest on the basis of information included in that tender and in the light of the type of contract to be awarded. The tender was therefore rejected because there was such a conflict of interest. The applicant's argument, consisting in the assertion that Euphet was the victim of automatic exclusion since a concrete assessment of the existence of a conflict of interest was possible only after award of the contract - and, more particularly, at the time when a specific contract is concluded in performance of the framework contract - is incompatible with Article 94 of the Financial Regulation. That article permits exclusion from the award of a contract of candidates or tenderers who, even before award of the contract, are involved in a conflict of interest.

100. Thirdly, the Commission points out that, after the opening of the tenders, no tenderer was asked to supply information regarding a potential conflict of interest. With regard to the alleged contradiction in its argument, the Commission contends that it did indeed invite some tenderers to prove that their tenders were sent within the time-limit because the postmarks on the envelopes containing those tenders were illegible. However, the applicant's position is not comparable to the position of those tenderers. As the President of the Court of First Instance held in his order in Case T195/05 R Deloitte Business Advisory v Commission [2005] ECR II3485, paragraph 120, the illegible postmarks on the envelopes containing those tenders cannot be assimilated to intrinsic shortcomings in the tender itself.

Findings of the Court

101. Firstly, regarding whether the Commission ought to have invited Euphet to supply additional information on the conflict of interest problem, it should be recalled that the first subparagraph of Article 146(3) of the Implementing Rules provides that requests to participate and tenders which do not satisfy all the essential requirements set out in the supporting documentation for invitations to tender or the specific requirements laid down therein are to be eliminated. However, in accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 146(3), the evaluation committee may ask candidates or tenderers to supply additional material or to clarify the supporting documents submitted in connection with the exclusion and selection criteria, within the time-limit specified by it.

102. It is clear from its very wording that the second subparagraph of Article 146(3) of the Implementing Rules gives the evaluation committee the option of requesting from tenderers additional information concerning the supporting documents submitted in relation to the exclusion and selection criteria. It follows that that provision cannot be interpreted as imposing a duty on the evaluation committee to request such information from tenderers (see, to that effect and by analogy, Case T19/95 Adia Interim v Commission [1996] ECR II321, paragraph 44).

103. Accordingly, in the present case, the Commission was right to decide to exclude Euphet's tender from the procedure for award of the contract by reason of a conflict of interest within the meaning of Article 94 of the Financial Regulation and section 9.1.3 of the specifications, without being required to request additional information pursuant to the second subparagraph of Article 146(3) of the Implementing Rules.

104. Secondly, with regard to the alleged infringement of the principle of protection of legitimate expectations, it is appropriate to recall that, in accordance with established case-law cited in paragraph 86 above, no party may allege infringement of the principle of protection of legitimate expectations without having been given precise assurances by the administration.

105. In the present case, the applicant bases its argument on a standard practice of the Commission - confirmed, moreover, by case-law - which consists in systematically requesting additional information from a tenderer before excluding it.

106. As it is, the documents submitted by the applicant concern a single invitation to tender to which it responded, that is to say, invitation to tender PO/200462/B3 relating to Ex-ante evaluation of the activities of the TV, radio services and studios Unit'. What is more, the request for additional information made in that case by the evaluation committee related, on the one hand, to the question whether Deloitte's presence in the whole of the European continent in 300 cities [confirmed] its ability to cover the operations under the contract in all the Member States of the EU' and, on the other, to the fact that the Commission had not received attestations of good performance', and not to a risk of conflict of interest.

107. Furthermore, the applicant does not submit any concrete proof showing that the Commission gave Euphet a precise assurance that it would receive from the evaluation committee a request for additional information on the question of a risk of conflict of interest and on the satisfactory nature of the response given by Euphet to that question.

108. In those circumstances, the applicant cannot claim infringement of the principle of protection of legitimate expectations.

109. That finding is not affected by the applicant's reference to the judgment in Fabricom , paragraph 57 supra, which deals with a legal question and a factual situation which are not analogous to the dispute before the Court of First Instance in the present case.

110. Thirdly, the applicant's argument alleging infringement of the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination in that the Commission requested information from other tenderers whilst Euphet did not have the opportunity of defending its position or even of putting forward its point of view on the risk of a conflict of interest must be dismissed. The principle of equal treatment requires that comparable situations must not be treated differently and that different situations must not be treated in the same way unless such treatment is objectively justified (Fabricom , paragraph 27). The tenderer whose tender is contained in an envelope with an illegible postmark is not in a situation comparable to that of a tenderer whose tender is incomplete since, in the first case, the defect noted by the Commission is attributable to factors outside the tenderer's control, whereas, in the second, the defect noted is intrinsic to the tender. The rejection of Euphet's tender does not, therefore, infringe the principle of equal treatment.

111. Accordingly, it has not been established that the Commission infringed the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination set out in Articles 89 and 99 of the Financial Regulation.

112. The second plea in law must therefore be rejected and, consequently, the arguments seeking annulment of the decision rejecting the tender must be dismissed.

113. The application for annulment of the decision awarding the contract to a third party must be dismissed as a consequence of the dismissal of the application for annulment of the preceding decision with which it is closely connected.

114. It follows that the action must be dismissed in its entirety.

Costs

115. Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings.

116. In the present case, since the applicant has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs, including those of the application for interim measures.

Legal context

1. The award of Commission service contracts must comply with the provisions of Title V of Part One of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1: the Financial Regulation') and the provisions of Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of Regulation No 1605/2002 (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1; the detailed implementing rules').

2. Under Article 94 of the Financial Regulation:

Contracts may not be awarded to candidates or tenderers who, during the procurement procedure:

(a) are subject to a conflict of interest...'

3. Article 138 of the detailed implementing rules provides:

1. Contracts shall be awarded in one of the following two ways:

(a) under the automatic award procedure, in which case the contract is awarded to the tender which, while being in order and satisfying the conditions laid down, quotes the lowest price;

(b) under the best-value-for-money procedure.'

2. The tender offering the best value for money shall be the one with the best price-quality ratio, taking into account criteria justified by the subject of the contract such as the price quoted, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, running costs, profitability, completion or delivery times, after-sales service and technical assistance.

4. Under Article 146(3) of the detailed implementing rules:

Requests to participate and tenders which do not satisfy all the essential requirements set out in the supporting documentation for invitations to tender or the specific requirements laid down therein shall be eliminated.

However, the evaluation committee may ask candidates or tenderers to supply additional material or to clarify the supporting documents submitted in connection with the exclusion and selection criteria, within a specified time-limit.

5. Article 147(3) of the detailed implementing rules provides:

The contracting authority shall... take its decision giving at least the following:

(a) the name and address of the contracting authority, and the subject and value of the contract or of the framework contract;

(b) the names of the candidates or tenderers rejected and the reasons for their rejection;

(c) the names of the candidates or tenderers to be examined and the reasons for their selection;

(d) the reasons for the rejection of tenders found to be abnormally low;

(e) the names of the candidates or contractor selected and the reasons for that choice by reference to the selection and award criteria announced in advance and, if known, the proportion of the contract or the framework contract which the contractor intends to subcontract to third parties;

(g) where appropriate, the reasons why the contracting authority has decided not to award a contract.'

Facts and procedure

6. On 14 December 2004, the Commission published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2004 S 243) a contract notice for the award of a framework contract entitled evaluation framework contract covering the policy areas of DG Health and Consumer Protection, Lot 1 (public health) - call for tenders SANCO/2004/01/141' (that framework contract and the award procedure for the framework contract are hereinafter referred to, respectively, as the framework contract' and the tendering procedure').

7. According to Sections 7.1.3 and 7.1.4 of the specifications relating to the tendering procedure, the framework contract relates in particular to the evaluation of the programme of Community action in the field of public health established by Decision No 1786/2002/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 23 September 2002 adopting a programme of Community action in the field of public health (2003-08) (OJ 2002 L 271, p. 1).

8. The specifications divide the tasks to be carried out under the framework contract into two main tasks. The first task (Main Task 1') is to conduct studies and to provide services intended to assist in the design and preparation of Community programmes or policies, their ex ante assessment and the organisation of evaluation activities'. The second task (Main Task 2') is to carry out mid-term, final and ex post evaluations of programmes, policies and other activities.

9. The framework contract must allow specific contracts to be concluded in accordance with the Commission's needs. In addition, it must be concluded in principle for a period of 24 months and may be renewed for two further periods of 12 months.

10. The specifications also set out several grounds for the exclusion of tenderers. One of those grounds reproduces Article 94 of the Financial Regulation:

Contracts may not be awarded to candidates or tenderers who, during the procurement procedure:

(a) are subject to a conflict of interest...'

11. With a view to tendering for the contract in question, Deloitte Business Advisory NV (the applicant') joined forces with the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, the Nederlandse Organisatie voor toegepast-natuurwetenschappelijk onderzoek (Netherlands Organisation for Applied Scientific Research, TNO) and the Istituto superiore di sanità (Italian National Health Institute). Those four entities formed the European Public Health Evaluation Task Force (Euphet). Euphet proposed using certain experts from other institutions where necessary.

12. On 10 February 2005, Euphet submitted a tender to the Commission under the tendering procedure. Euphet's tender includes a paragraph with the heading Independence', which reads as follows:

Euphet understands and accepts that none of the evaluation organisations or their staff should have the slightest existing or potential conflict of interest in the performance of their task under the framework contract. We confirm that all the participants in Euphet are entirely independent of the Commission and that we do not foresee any risk in this regard at present. Furthermore, we undertake to conduct a detailed prior check in connection with each specific contract in order to ensure that the teams we propose are composed of members who are able to work in complete independence and to provide an objective and independent external assessment. If, in the course of execution of the projects, the slightest problem should arise which could have a bearing on this key principle, we would notify the Commission immediately and work with it to seek to rectify the situation.'

13. By a letter of 22 April 2005 (the decision rejecting the tender'), the Commission informed the applicant that the evaluation committee for the contract had found there to be risks of conflicts of interest within Euphet. In the decision rejecting the tender, the Commission notes that certain of Euphet's members and partners hold grant contracts in SANCO's area of activities' (health and consumer protection) and thus have a significant involvement in the implementation of the programme of Community action in the field of public health. The Commission therefore considers that in view of the considerable risk of [a conflict of interest], a detailed specific explanation would have been needed to give an adequate understanding of the way in which the matter of [conflicts of interest] could be resolved and the associated risks eliminated'. In those circumstances, in the view of the Commission, the proposed approach is not adequate and the tenderer has not provided a satisfactory guarantee that the [conflicts of interest] will be eliminated'.

14. In the decision rejecting the tender, the Commission nevertheless adds that it will not sign the framework contract with the successful tenderer until a period of two weeks has passed.

15. By a letter dated 3 May 2005, Euphet contested the Commission's position and inter alia requested it to respond by 4 May 2005, failing which it would refer the matter to the Court of First Instance.

16. By a fax of 4 May 2005, the Commission acknowledged receipt of the letter from Euphet and stated:

Because we need more time to examine the questions raised in your letter, we will not proceed with the signing of the contract for a further period of 15 days from the date on which this letter was sent.'

17. By a fax of 19 May 2005, the Commission responded to the arguments put forward by the applicant in its letter of 3 May 2005.

18. By a fax of the same date, the applicant lodged an action for annulment before the Court of First Instance by which it contests the legality of the decision rejecting the tender and of the decision to award the contract to another tenderer (the award decision').

19. On the same date, the applicant submitted an application for interim measures in which it claims essentially that the President of the Court of First Instance, acting in his capacity as the judge hearing the application for interim relief, should:

- order the suspension of the operation of the decision rejecting the tender and of the award decision;

- prohibit the Commission from informing the successful tenderer of the award decision and from signing the relevant contract, on pain of a periodic penalty payment of EUR 2.5 million;

- order the Commission to pay the costs.

20. In its application for interim measures, the applicant also asks the President of the Court of First Instance to prohibit the defendant, as a precautionary measure and if possible before ruling on the application for suspension of operation, from informing the successful tenderer of the award decision and from signing the framework contract until the Court of First Instance has ruled on the main action, on pain of a periodic penalty payment of EUR 2.5 million for each infringement.

21. By letter of 23 May 2005, the Commission informed the Court that the contract covered by the procedure bearing reference SANCO/2004/01/041 had not yet been signed. In the same letter, the Commission stated that the framework contract had been sent to the selected tenderer to be signed with a reply deadline of 1 June 2005 and, in accordance with the applicable procedures, that contract would be signed by the Commission's authorised representative after it had been returned by the other party, without a deadline having been set for that purpose.

22. On 26 May 2005, on the basis of Article 105(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, the President of the Court of First Instance ordered the Commission not to sign the framework contract until an order had been made on the application for interim measures.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

23. On 30 May 2005, the Commission submitted observations on the application for interim measures in which it contended that the application should be dismissed and that the applicant should be ordered to pay the costs.

24. At the invitation of the President of the Court of First Instance, the applicant responded to those observations on 13 June 2005. The Commission in turn responded to these new observations on 23 June 2005.

Law

25. Article 104(2) of the Rules of Procedure provides that applications for interim measures must state the subject-matter of the proceedings, the circumstances giving rise to urgency and the pleas of fact and law establishing a prima facie case for the interim measures applied for. Those conditions are cumulative so that an application for interim measures must be rejected if one of them is absent (order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C-268/96 P(R) SCK and FNK v Commission [1996] ECR I-4971, paragraph 30). In an appropriate case, the President has also to weigh up the interests at stake (order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C-445/00 R Austria v Council [2001] ECR I-1461, paragraph 73).

26. Moreover, in the context of that overall examination the judge hearing the application enjoys a wide margin of discretion and remains free to determine, in the light of the particular features of the case, the way in which those different conditions have to be verified and the order of priority of that examination since there is no rule of Community law imposing on him a predetermined analytical model for assessing the need for an interim decision (order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C-149/95 P(R) Commission v Atlantic Container Line and Others [1995] ECR I-2165, paragraph 23).

27. It is in the light of those considerations that the present application for interim measures falls to be examined.

1. Arguments of the parties

Admissibility of the application for interim measures

28. In its observations of 30 May 2005, the Commission states that it informed the successful tenderer in the tendering procedure that its tender had been selected by a letter of 22 April 2005. The Commission therefore takes the view that the applicant's request for an order prohibiting the Commission from informing the successful tenderer of the award decision is devoid of purpose.

Prima facie case

Arguments of the applicant

29. The applicant relies on two pleas in support of its main application.

- The first plea

30. In its first plea, the applicant claims essentially that Euphet's exclusion from the tendering procedure by the Commission infringes Article 94 of the Financial Regulation, the provisions of the tender documents, the principle of protection of legitimate expectations, the general obligation to state reasons and Articles 147(3) and 138 of the detailed implementing rules.

31. First of all, the applicant takes the view that it is unlawful to exclude it from the tendering procedure solely because its proposal for resolving any conflicts of interest does not provide a satisfactory guarantee.

32. In the applicant's view, the notion of conflict of interest is not defined either in the call for tenders or in Article 94 of the Financial Regulation. On the other hand, in the decision rejecting the tender, the Commission defined the notion of conflict of interest by reference to the draft framework contract. However, according to that draft, a conflict of interest and, a fortiori, a simple risk of a conflict do not in themselves constitute a ground for exclusion.

33. In addition, none of the tender documents provide for a specific ground for exclusion in respect of a tenderer one or more of whose members have an involvement in current projects in the areas of health and consumer protection. Moreover, neither Article 94 of the Financial Regulation nor the case-law of the Court of Justice justifies such a ground for exclusion.

34. Furthermore, as far as risks of conflicts of interest are concerned, it is sufficient for the tenderer to undertake to notify the Commission and, if appropriate, to take the necessary measures. The proposal made by Euphet in this regard (paragraph 12 above) was adequate, since the applicant went as far as proposing a prior check with reference to the nature and the subject of the specific contracts to be concluded. No more can be expected of Euphet, since the content of the specific contracts to be concluded is not yet known.

35. In the applicant's view, any conflict of interest can arise only when specific contracts are concluded. Furthermore, Community case-law has confirmed that it is unlawful to exclude a tenderer in an abstract manner without any specific check on the resolution of a conflict of interest (judgments in Joined Cases C-21/03 and C-34/03 Fabricom [2005] ECR I-1559, and in Case T-160/03 AFCon Management Consultants and Others v Commission [2005] ECR II-981, paragraphs 75 to 78).

36. In its observations of 13 June 2005, the applicant adds that the acceptance by the Commission that a tenderer subject to a conflict of interest during the performance of the framework contract may continue to perform the contract provided it takes adequate measures, whilst such an option is not open to a tenderer subject to a conflict of interest prior to the award of the contract, which can take identical measures, constitutes a breach of the principle of equality as set out in Articles 89(1) and 99 of the Financial Regulation.

37. Lastly, in the alternative, the applicant states that the tender notice requires only a minimum of seven experts, whereas its tender contains 65 curricula vitae, including 45 from persons who do not have links with the institutions which, according to the Commission, are subject to a conflict of interest. Furthermore, the 20 people who do have links with those organisations could still be assigned to evaluation cases without any risk of conflicts. As regards the Commission's claim that the experts in question are those who hold the highest qualifications, even if all these people were subject to a conflict of interest for a certain task, there would be a sufficient number of other high-level experts to carry out the task.

38. Secondly, in the applicant's view, where the evaluation committee intends to eliminate a tenderer, it must at the very least allow it to submit its observations, which did not occur in the present case.

39. Thirdly, by rejecting a way to resolve conflicts of interest that had already been accepted by other Commission directorates-general, the Commission departed from its earlier practice and breached the principle of protection of legitimate expectations.

40. Fourthly, the decision rejecting the tender does not contain an adequate statement of reasons, in particular in so far as it fails to explain the reasons why Euphet's proposal is inadequate. The statement of reasons for the decision is also incorrect in so far as Euphet did not remain silent about the specific experience of some of its members and did take account of the resolution of conflicts of interest provided for in the draft framework contract. Because of this failure to state reasons, the decision rejecting the tender infringes Article 147(3) of the detailed implementing rules.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

41. Fifthly, the Commission may not award the contract to a third party without infringing Article 138 of the detailed implementing rules when it has wrongly rejected Euphet's tender. The applicant does not contest the fact that, if its tender had been deemed admissible, the contract would not necessarily have been awarded to it. However, it considers that, in view of the experience and the competence of the team it proposed, Euphet's tender could only be awarded a high score.

- The second plea

42. In its second plea, the applicant claims that by failing to ask Euphet to submit additional information, the Commission infringed Article 146(3) of the detailed implementing rules, the Court's case-law on public procurement (judgment in Fabricom , cited in paragraph 35 above) and the principle of protection of legitimate expectations.

43. Furthermore, in so far as the Commission gave other tenderers the opportunity to submit additional information in connection with the contract in question, it acted in contravention of the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination set out in Articles 89(1) and 99 of the Financial Regulation.

44. The applicant acknowledges that the Commission is not required under Article 94 of the Financial Regulation and Article 146(3) of the detailed implementing rules to request additional information from tenderers. Nevertheless it states that the Commission gave that opportunity to some tenderers in other procedures, and also in the tendering procedure at issue. The applicant asks the Commission to produce the correspondence exchanged on this subject and the minutes of the tendering opening session.

45. It also follows from the judgment in Fabricom , cited in paragraph 35 above, that, in the event of a potential conflict of interest, the contracting authority may not automatically exclude the tenderer in question, but must always examine the matter on the basis of the specific circumstances of the case, which means that the tenderer must be able to show that a conflict of interest is impossible. In the applicant's view, the Commission could not conduct the required specific assessment without requesting additional information from Euphet. On the one hand, the Commission did not carry out any checks on the basis of the specific circumstances of the case, since such an assessment would have had to have been made for each specific contract. On the other hand, the Commission could not claim either that its specific assessment related to the framework contract since, according to the Commission itself, the applicant's proposal for a posteriori corrective measures was formulated in very general terms.

Arguments of the Commission

46. The Commission contests the arguments put forward by the applicant in support of the existence of a prima facie case.

- The first plea

47. The Commission considers, first of all, that in accordance with the wording of Section 9.1.3 of the specifications, which reproduces Article 94 of the detailed implementing rules word for word, the existence of a conflict of interest prior to the award of the contract is a ground for exclusion. In the view of the Commission, even though the curricula vitae of several of Euphet's partners reveal their involvement in the implementation of the programme of Community action in the field of public health, the applicant did not see reason to notify the Commission of a risk of a conflict of interest.

48. As regards the a priori' corrective mechanism proposed by the applicant to reduce the risk of a conflict of interest, the Commission takes the view that the passage in question in the applicant's tender is formulated too generally.

49. Moreover, contrary to the applicant's assertions, the evaluation committee did in fact specifically verify the existence of a conflict of interest with reference to the applicant's tender and the nature of the contract to be awarded, since a conflict can arise in respect of mid-term and ex post evaluations and in respect of ex ante evaluations.

50. With regard to the applicant's argument that Euphet's offer contained 45 curricula vitae of people who have no links with the Commission, the latter points out that the experts put forward do not all have the same specific weight and that the applicant's tender presented all the partners and experts as a coherent team.

51. Secondly, as regards the Commission's alleged obligation to consult the applicant, the Commission considers that it must comply with that obligation only where it intends to impose administrative or financial penalties pursuant to Article 96 of the Financial Regulation.

52. Thirdly, with regard to the alleged breach of the principle of protection of legitimate expectations by the Commission, the applicant does not substantiate its claims that in identical circumstances in the past other Commission departments had reached opposite conclusions to those reached in the present case.

53. Fourthly, in the decision rejecting the tender, the Commission clearly explained the reasons why it considered that the applicant was subject to a conflict of interest.

54. Fifthly, the Commission did not infringe Article 138 of the Financial Regulation because acceptance of Euphet's tender for the selection and award stages did not necessarily mean that it should be awarded the contract.

- The second plea

55. The Commission considers that the second plea should also be rejected.

56. First of all, the Commission points out that it does not have any obligation to consult a tenderer before eliminating it from an award procedure.

57. Secondly, the applicant does not make clear in what way the failure to request additional information constitutes a departure from the Commission's alleged practice in identical cases. As regards the applicant's claims that the Commission breached the principle of equal treatment by allowing certain tenderers to submit evidence that their documents had been sent within the prescribed period, the Commission states that in fact it merely conducted a substantive verification of a mandatory deadline, which is not comparable to the applicant's situation.

58. Thirdly, the applicant's reference to the judgment in Fabricom , cited in paragraph 35 above, is irrelevant because in the present case the Commission specifically verified whether a conflict of interest existed on the basis of the information in the tender and in the light of the nature of the contract to be awarded.

59. Fourthly, the Commission points out that, after the tenders were opened, none of the tenderers was sent a request for additional information or a request for clarification concerning a supposed conflict of interest.

Urgency

Arguments of the applicant

60. In support of its view that it is a matter of urgency that the interim measures applied for be ordered, the applicant claims that, once the contested contract is concluded between the defendant and the successful tenderer, Euphet will no longer have any opportunity to carry out the task effectively. In practice, it will be impossible for it to obtain the annulment of the framework contract after it has been concluded. In addition, in the applicant's view, given the final date for the performance of the contract, which is set for the end of 2006, if interim measures are not adopted, the contract will already have been performed, at least to a large extent, when the Court's judgment is delivered.

61. On account of the considerable value of the contract, the honour and prestige attached to it, and the experience that the applicant could gain if it performed the contract, effective performance of the contract would offer it much more satisfactory reparation than compensation.

62. In its observations of 13 June 2005, the applicant states in this respect that the fact that it was not awarded the contract and, further, that its tender was deemed inadmissible will be seen by its clients as a sign of incompetence. In so far as the Commission claims that award procedures involve risks for tenderers with the result that the loss of a contract cannot therefore be regarded as damage, the applicant considers that such an argument is valid only if a tenderer is rightly eliminated. In the present case, the applicant considers that it had a prospect of being selected.

63. In addition, the harm to the applicant's reputation and the failure to gain experience as a result of the non-performance of the contract cannot be quantified financially.

64. In its observations of 13 June 2005, the applicant states lastly that its application cannot be regarded as insufficiently urgent merely on the ground that it may subsequently be awarded damages. Such a position is incompatible with the ratio legis of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

65. In the applicant's view, the ratio legis of Directive 89/665 is to make it possible for tenderers eliminated from a tendering procedure to perform the contract in question themselves. The applicant's position is confirmed by the Court's case-law (judgment in Case C-81/98 Alcatel Austria and Others [1999] ECR I7671). The applicant concedes that the provisions of Directive 89/665 apply only to Member States. However, in its view, it is clearly contrary to the principle of protection of legitimate expectations, the principle of equality and Article 2 EC for the Community institutions to fail to comply with the substance of those provisions.

Arguments of the Commission

66. The Commission considers that the applicant has not shown that it is a matter of urgency to order interim measures.

67. First of all, in the Commission's view, if the Court were to find the action for annulment to be well founded, it would have to take the necessary measures to ensure that the applicant's interests are protected, which could consist in the cancellation of the already partially performed contract and the launch of a new procedure, whilst such measures may be combined, if necessary, with the payment of compensation (orders of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T169/00 R Esedra v Commission [2000] ECR II2951, paragraph 51, in Case T-148/04 R TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission [2004] ECR II3027, paragraph 55, and in Case T-303/04 R European Dynamics v Commission [2004] ECR II-3889, paragraph 83).

68. The applicant has not referred to any circumstance which could prevent its interests being safeguarded in this way.

69. Secondly, in its observations of 23 June 2005, the Commission refutes the applicant's arguments according to which a judgment annulling an act can be given only once the contract is being performed. In the view of the Commission, the applicant is confusing the performance of the framework contract with the carrying-out of the specific mid-term assessment provided for in Article 12 of Decision No 1786/2002.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

70. Thirdly, in so far as the applicant alleges pecuniary damage, the Commission points out that it cannot be regarded as irreparable or even difficult to repair, because compensation can subsequently be awarded (order in Esedra v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 43). The applicant does not show either how it might suffer damage liable to jeopardise its existence or to change its position on the market irreversibly.

71. Fourthly, as regards the non-pecuniary damage alleged by the applicant, the Commission points out that participation in a public tender procedure, by nature highly competitive, involves risks for all the participants and the elimination of a tenderer under the tender rules is not in itself in any way prejudicial (order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case 118/83 R CMC v Commission [1983] ECR 2583, paragraph 51; orders in Esedra v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 48, and in European Dynamics v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 82). Furthermore, the applicant has not established how the dismissal of its application would harm its reputation and deprive it of experience, less still the effect that such damage would have on it.

72. Fifthly, with regard to the ratio legis of Directive 89/665, the Commission points out that, if its application for interim measures is to be granted, the applicant must show that all the relevant conditions under Article 104(2) of the Rules of Procedure and case-law are satisfied. The Commission adds that it is not subject to Directive 89/665 and that the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC and Articles 242 EC and 243 EC guarantee effective protection against acts by Community institutions. Lastly, as regards the reference made by the applicant to the judgment in Alcatel Austria and Others , cited in paragraph 65 above, it fails to understand that the application for interim measures may be granted only if it satisfies the relevant conditions.

Balance of interests

Arguments of the applicant

73. In its observations of 13 June 2005, the applicant claims that the Commission does not make clear the nature of the damage that it would suffer if an interim measure were ordered.

74. The applicant adds that Decision No 1786/2002 does not provide for any penalty in the event of late performance of the evaluation provided for in Article 12 thereof. In any case, the Commission could revoke the contested decisions and take the applicant's tender into consideration, as it is authorised to do under Article 101 of the Financial Regulation. Moreover, the Commission commonly fails to respect the prescribed deadlines for the performance of evaluation contracts like those at issue.

75. Lastly, account should be taken of the Commission's responsibility for any delay in the performance of the contract.

Arguments of the Commission

76. The Commission considers that the balance of the interests at stake is in favour of the dismissal of the application. The Commission is required under Article 12 of Decision No 1786/2002 to have a mid-term external assessment of the implementation of the programme of Community action in the field of public health conducted by the end of 2006.

77. In addition, the Commission considers that a suspension would prejudice the main action since the successful tenderer's tender would no longer be valid on the date when the judgment in the main action is delivered and the team proposed by it would no longer be available.

2. Findings of the President

78. Since the written observations of the parties contain all the information necessary to adjudicate on the application for interim measures, it is not necessary to hear oral argument from them.

Admissibility of some heads of claims in the application for interim measures

79. In its application, the applicant claims inter alia that the President should prohibit the Commission from informing the successful tenderer of the award decision.

80. In its observations of 2 June 2005, the Commission stated, without being contradicted by the applicant or by any of the documents in the file, that it had already informed the successful tenderer that its tender had been selected by letter of 22 April 2005.

81. Consequently, the applicant's request for an order prohibiting the Commission from giving such information was devoid of purpose from the moment it was lodged. It must therefore be rejected as inadmissible (see, to that effect, the order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-125/05 R Umwelt- und Ingenieurtechnik Dresden v Commission [2005] ECR II-1901, paragraph 36).

The other heads of claim in the application for interim measures

82. In the present case, it is necessary first to examine whether the condition relating to the existence of a prima facie case is satisfied.

Prima facie case

- The first plea

83. In its first plea, the applicant claims essentially that Euphet's exclusion from the tendering procedure by the Commission infringes Article 94 of the Financial Regulation, the provisions of the tender documents, the principle of protection of legitimate expectations, the general obligation to state reasons and Articles 147(3) and 138 of the detailed implementing rules.

84. First of all, it is appropriate to examine the applicant's arguments according to which the Commission infringed Article 94 of the Financial Regulation and the provisions of the tender documents.

85. In this respect, it should be noted that the Commission justified the decision rejecting the tender by the existence of a major risk' of a conflict of interest which, in its view, could not be resolved satisfactorily by the guarantees offered by Euphet.

86. As the applicant stresses, Article II.3.1 of the draft framework contract, which was annexed to the specifications, provides for a mechanism for resolving conflicts of interest to which the successful tenderer might be subject. However, on the one hand, it cannot be ruled out, prima facie, that that provision might govern conflicts of interest arising during the performance of the framework contract and not from the stage of the tendering procedure. On the other hand, prima facie, that provision cannot in any event preclude the application of Article 94 of the Financial Regulation.

87. Article 94 of the Financial Regulation provides for the exclusion of tenderers who during the procurement procedure' are subject to a conflict of interest'. In this regard, the President considers that it cannot be ruled out, prima facie, that the expression subject to a conflict of interest' includes the risks of conflicts of interest present from the stage of the procurement procedure which may affect the performance of the contract.

88. In such a situation, the question nevertheless arises as to the degree of certainty needed to justify exclusion from the tendering procedure and the discretion enjoyed by the Commission in establishing a risk of a conflict of interest. The President considers that it is for the Court of First Instance to answer these questions and that the applicant's arguments cannot therefore, at this stage, be rejected as unfounded.

89. Nevertheless, at this stage, and in the light of the arguments put forward in the interlocutory proceedings, doubts must be raised as to whether the Commission committed an error in establishing a risk of a conflict of interest in respect of an institution which receives Community grants in the field of public health and is subsequently required to participate in the evaluation of Community policy in that field. It is clear, prima facie, that such an institution is placed in a position that is at least capable of affecting its objectivity.

90. In the present case, it can be seen from Sections 7.1.3 and 7.1.4 of the tender specifications that the framework contract relates inter alia to certain evaluations of the programme of Community action in the field of public health. In addition, the decision rejecting the tender states that, in the opinion of the Commission, the grants received by certain of Euphet's members give rise to a major risk of a conflict of interest.

91. In the light of the foregoing, and at this stage, doubts must therefore be raised as to whether the Commission committed an error of assessment in considering that, for certain members of Euphet, receipt of grants in the field of public health gave rise to a major risk of a conflict of interest justifying exclusion from the tendering procedure.

92. Furthermore, in the light of the arguments made in the interlocutory proceedings, it is not apparent that the Commission refrained from conducting a specific examination of the risk of a conflict of interest established vis-à-vis Euphet, in particular because it did not know the precise nature of the specific contracts to be concluded. First of all, the decision rejecting the tender makes reference to the programme of Community action in the field of public health, the evaluation of which is precisely one of the subjects of the framework contract. However, it is not apparent at this stage that the Commission failed to conduct a specific examination of the risk of a conflict of interest identified by it having regard to the subject of the contract. Secondly, because of the grants received by certain members of Euphet, serious doubts could be cast, prima facie, on their objectivity. Consequently, at this stage, doubts must be raised as to the need to know the detailed content of the specific contracts to be concluded in order to establish the existence of a major risk of a conflict of interest.

93. The President nevertheless considers that this question must be examined in detail in the main proceedings.

94. Similarly, there are, prima facie, reasons to doubt whether the applicant may rely effectively on the judgments in Fabricom , cited in paragraph 35 above, and AFCon Management Consultants and Others v Commission , cited in paragraph 35 above.

95. First of all, in Fabricom , cited in paragraph 35 above, the Court held essentially that the Community directives relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public contracts preclude a rule which states that any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with a public contract for works, supplies or services is not permitted to apply to participate in or to submit a tender for a public contract for those works, supplies or services where that person has not been given an opportunity to prove that, in the circumstances of the case, the experience which he has acquired was not capable of distorting competition.

96. However, at this stage, it has not been clearly shown that the applicant has not been able to prove, in connection with its tender, that the grants received by some of the experts which Euphet intends to use were irrelevant.

97. Secondly, with regard to the applicant's reference to the judgment in AFCon Management Consultants and Others v Commission , cited in paragraph 35 above, it should be noted that, in that judgment, the Court of First Instance held essentially that after the discovery of a conflict of interest between a tenderer and a member of the evaluation committee, the Commission must act with due diligence and on the basis of all the relevant information when adopting its decision on the outcome of the procedure and that the Commission has some discretion to determine the measures which must be taken (paragraphs 75 and 77). In the light of the circumstances of that case, the Court found that the Commission had made an error of assessment in failing to investigate the relations between a tenderer and a member of the evaluation committee.

98. However, at this stage, doubts must be raised as to whether it is possible usefully to compare the facts of the present case with those that gave rise to the judgment in AFCon Management Consultants and Others v Commission , cited in paragraph 35 above. In the present case, unlike the facts which gave rise to that judgment, there is no reason to think, prima facie, that Euphet's exclusion caused unequal treatment. All the tenderers were, prima facie, in the same position as regards providing proof in their respective tenders that there was no conflict of interest.

99. The President nevertheless considers that this question must be examined in detail in the main proceedings.

100. Lastly, also in the light of the arguments made in the application for interim measures, doubts must be raised as to whether the tender submitted by Euphet allowed any risk of a conflict of interest to be eliminated.

101. First of all, it does not appear at this stage that the Commission manifestly committed an error in considering that the guarantees offered by Euphet were inadequate. As the Commission points out, the proposal for a corrective measure was formulated in general terms and made no specific reference to the risk of a conflict of interest identified by the Commission. Furthermore, in the interlocutory proceedings, the applicant does not cite any passages of its tender where it states that it was aware and took into consideration the specific risk identified by the Commission in the decision rejecting the tender. Quite the opposite, Euphet states in its tender that all the participants in Euphet are entirely independent of the Commission' and that it does not foresee any risk in this regard at present'.

102. Second, it is true, as the applicant notes, that not all the experts proposed in its tender come from institutions subject to the risk of a conflict of interest identified by the Commission. At this stage, however, it is not apparent that the Commission was required to regard that element as sufficient grounds to rule out any risk of a conflict of interest, in particular in the light of the links and respective roles of the members of Euphet. In this respect, as the Commission points out, it can be seen inter alia from Euphet's tender that each of its members is represented on a contract committee' which is responsible for managing and supervising Euphet's evaluation services.

103. For similar substantive reasons, doubts must also be raised as to whether the Commission must consider that the members of an institution subject to a conflict of interest are not themselves personally subject to that conflict. There is every reason to assume that there is a community of professional interests between an expert and the institution employing him. However, at this stage, the applicant does not provide evidence or arguments to reverse this presumption.

104. Third, doubts must also be raised as to whether the rejection of the applicant's tender constitutes a breach of the principle of equality as set out in Articles 89(1) and 99 of the Financial Regulation, because a tenderer subject to a conflict of interest during the performance of the framework contract would be allowed to perform the contract provided it takes adequate measures. As has already been observed (paragraphs 100 to 103), it is not apparent, at this stage, that the Commission committed an error in considering that Euphet's tender was not adequate, from the stage of the tendering procedure, for preventing a risk of a conflict of interest. Prima facie, the applicant cannot therefore claim that it is in a comparable situation to a tenderer subject to a conflict of interest arising only during the performance of the framework contract.

105. Consequently, whilst the applicant's arguments require several assessments to be made in the main proceedings and cannot therefore be regarded, at this stage, as unfounded, doubts must nevertheless be raised as to whether the Commission infringed Article 94 of the Financial Regulation or the provisions of the tender documents.

106. Second, as regards the alleged obligation on the part of the evaluation committee to consult a tenderer before eliminating its tender, in this plea the applicant does not rely on any legal basis imposing such a duty on the Commission. In so far as the applicant relies implicitly on the principle of the rights of the defence, it should be noted that respect for the rights of the defence is, in all proceedings initiated against a person which are liable to culminate in a measure adversely affecting tha t person, a fundamental principle of Community law which must be guaranteed even in the absence of any rules governing the proceedings in question. That principle requires that the addressees of decisions which significantly affect their interests should be placed in a position in which they may effectively make known their views (Case C-32/95 P Commission v Lisrestal and Others [1996] ECR I5373, paragraph 21). However, in the present case, the applicant does not, prima facie, put forward any arguments to show that the tendering procedure is initiated against it.

107. Thirdly, as regards the Commission's alleged breach of the principle of protection of legitimate expectations on account of its rejection of a way of resolving conflicts of interest, it has already accepted, prima facie, that the applicant does not, at this stage, describe an earlier practice that can satisfactorily justify such expectations.

108. Fourthly, doubts must be raised at this stage as to the existence of the failure to state reasons for the decision rejecting the tender claimed by the applicant. According to settled case-law, the scope of the obligation to state reasons must be appropriate to the act at issue and the context in which it was adopted. The statement of reasons must disclose in a clear and unequivocal fashion the reasoning followed by the institution in such a way as to enable the persons concerned to ascertain the reasons for the measure so that they can defend their rights and ascertain whether or not the measure is well founded and to enable the competent Community Court to exercise its power of review (Case C-367/95 P Commission v Sytraval and Brink's France [1998] ECR I1719, paragraph 63; Joined Cases T-228/99 and T-233/99 Westdeutsche Landesbank Girozentrale v Commission [2003] ECR II435, paragraph 278; and Case T-109/01 Fleuren Compost v Commission [2004] ECR II-127, paragraph 119).

109. The reason stated for the decision rejecting the tender is the existence of a risk of a conflict of interest connected, first, with the grants received by certain members of Euphet and certain experts which it might use to perform the framework contract and, secondly, the inadequate guarantees provided by Euphet in this regard.

110. As regards the allegedly erroneous nature of the reason stating that Euphet failed to acknowledge the involvement of certain experts in the implementation of the programme of Community action in the field of public health, the applicant does not mention any passage in its tender where it specifically acknowledged, or even merely suggested, that certain experts whom it intended to use received Community grants in that field.

111. Fifthly, as regards the Commission's alleged infringement of Article 138 of the detailed implementing rules, by that plea the applicant seems to claim essentially that its unlawful exclusion results in the contract being awarded to a tenderer whose tender does not offer the best value for money. However, at this stage, assuming that Euphet's tender was accepted in the tendering procedure, it appears that it would not necessarily have been selected by the Commission.

- The second plea

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

112. In its second plea, the applicant claims essentially that by failing to ask Euphet to submit additional information, the Commission infringed Article 146(3) of the detailed implementing rules, the Court's case-law on public procurement (judgment in Fabricom , cited in paragraph 35 above), the principle of protection of legitimate expectations, the principle of equal treatment and Articles 89(1) and 99 of the Financial Regulation.

113. First of all, at this stage, serious doubts must be raised as to whether the Commission infringed Article 146(3) of the detailed implementing rules. As the applicant itself recognises, that provision simply offers the Commission a discretionary option.

114. Secondly, at this stage, doubts must also be raised as to whether the applicant may rely effectively on the judgment in Fabricom , cited in paragraph 35 above, in order to show that the Commission could not conduct a specific assessment of the potential conflict of interest without requesting additional information from it.

115. First of all, the applicant does not clearly show, at this stage, that the Commission could not conduct a specific examination of the risk of a conflict of interest established vis-à-vis Euphet without knowing the precise nature of the specific contracts to be concluded. As has already been observed in the examination of the first plea (paragraph 92 above), it is not apparent at this stage that the Commission failed to conduct a specific examination of a risk of a conflict of interest having regard to the subject of the framework contract. It is not apparent either, at this stage, that that examination was insufficient to establish the existence of a major risk of a conflict of interest and that it was also necessary to know the precise nature of the specific contracts to be concluded.

116. Second, prima facie, the fact that, in the Commission's view, the terms of the corrective measure proposed by Euphet were too general does not mean that it could not conduct a specific examination of Euphet's situation with regard to conflicts of interest. The general nature of the terms of the tender submitted by Euphet is precisely one of the criteria assessed by the Commission in the decision rejecting the tender in order to reach the conclusion that the Euphet's proposed corrective measure, as set out in its tender, is not adequate for resolving the risk of a conflict of interest identified by the Commission.

117. The President nevertheless considers that this question must be examined in detail in the main proceedings.

118. Third, in so far as the applicant claims a breach of the principle of protection of legitimate expectations, the e-mails annexed to its observations of 13 June 2005 concern only one tendering procedure and do not, at this stage, give proof of the existence of a consistent practice on the part of the Commission whereby it asks tenderers for additional information.

119. Fourth, the applicant does not clearly demonstrate, at this stage, that the Commission's request for additional information from other tenderers constitutes a breach of the principle of equal treatment or an infringement of Articles 89(1) and 99 of the Financial Regulation.

120. According to the Commission's observations, those tenderers were invited to prove the date of submission of their respective tenders because the postmarks on the envelopes containing those tenders were illegible. However, doubts must be raised at this stage as to whether the applicant is in a similar position to those tenderers. Unlike the tenderers in those cases, the defects noted by the Commission in Euphet's tender could not, prima facie, be attributed to circumstances outside its control, but to intrinsic shortcomings in its tender.

121. The President nevertheless considers that this question must be examined in detail in the main proceedings.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

122. In the light of the arguments put forward in the interlocutory proceedings, doubts must be raised on several points of the applicant's arguments. Its arguments must nevertheless be examined in detail in the main proceedings.

123. Without prejudice to the Court's position in the main proceedings, the applicant's arguments cannot therefore, at this stage, be rejected as entirely without foundation. The condition relating to a prima facie case is therefore satisfied.

Urgency

124. According to settled case-law, the urgency of an application for interim measures must be assessed on the basis of the need for an interlocutory order in order to prevent serious and irreparable damage being caused to the party requesting the interim measure. That party must prove that it cannot wait for the outcome of the main proceedings without having to suffer damage of this kind (orders in Esedra v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 43, and in TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 41).

125. In the present case, the applicant's argument consists essentially of two parts where, on the one hand, the applicant's exclusion from the tendering procedure harms its reputation and, on the other, the absence of interim measures will, if the contested decisions are annulled, prevent it from being awarded and then performing the contract covered by the tendering procedure and, as a result, from deriving certain benefits in terms of prestige, experience and revenue. Those two parts should be considered in turn.

126. First of all, the applicant claims that its exclusion from the tendering procedure harms its reputation. In that regard, the Commission rightly points out that participation in a public tender procedure, by nature highly competitive, involves risks for all the participants and the elimination of a tenderer under the tender rules is not in itself in any way prejudicial (orders in CMC v Commission , cited in paragraph 71 above, paragraph 51, and in European Dynamics v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 82). Furthermore, the applicant's argument that this case-law does not apply where the tenderer has been unlawfully eliminated cannot be accepted. The case-law in question concerns cases where, like the applicant in the present case, the applicants were contesting the lawfulness of the act(s) contested in the main proceedings. In addition, where an undertaking has been unlawfully eliminated from a tendering procedure, there is even less reason to believe that it is liable to suffer serious and irreparable harm to its reputation, since its exclusion is unconnected with its competences and the subsequent annulling judgment will in principle allow any harm to its reputation to be made good.

127. Second, the applicant claims that, if the contested decisions are annulled and interim measures are not adopted, it will no longer be possible for it to be awarded the contract covered by the tendering procedure and then to perform the contract and, as a result, to derive certain benefits in terms of prestige, experience and revenue.

128. It should be noted in that regard that if the contested decisions were annulled by the Court, it would be for the Commission, under the first paragraph of Article 233 EC, to take the necessary measures to comply with the judgment, without prejudice to the obligations stemming from the application of the second paragraph of Article 288 EC.

129. It should also be noted that, under Article 233 EC, it is the institution whose act has been declared void that is required to take the necessary measures to comply with the Court's judgment. It follows that the Court hearing annulment proceedings is not competent to indicate to the institution whose act has been declared void the manner in which its ruling is to be complied with (order of the Court of Justice in Joined Cases C-199/94 P and C-200/94 P Pevasa and Inpesca v Commission [1995] ECR I3709, paragraph 24) and that the judge hearing the application for interim measures may not prejudice the measures that might be taken following any annulling judgment. The manner in which an annulling judgment is complied with depends not only on the annulled provision and the scope of the judgment, which is to be assessed with reference to its grounds (Joined Cases 97/86, 99/86, 193/86 and 215/86 Asteris and Others v Commission [1988] ECR 2181, paragraph 27, and Joined Cases T305/94 to T307/94, T313/94 to T316/94, T318/94, T325/94, T328/94, T329/94 and T335/94 Limburgse Vinyl Maatschappij and Others v Commission [1999] ECR II931, paragraph 184), but also on the specific circumstances of each case, such as the time within which the contested act is annulled or third-party interests.

130. In the present case, if the contested decisions were annulled, the Commission would therefore have to adopt the necessary measures for ensuring appropriate protection of the applicant's interests, having regard to the specific circumstances of this case (see, to that effect, the orders of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T108/94 R Candiotte v Council [1994] ECR II249, paragraph 27, and in Case T447/04 R Capgemini Nederland v Commission [2005] ECR II-257, paragraph 96).

131. It is not therefore for the President to prejudice measures which might be taken by the Commission in order to comply with any annulment judgment.

132. Nevertheless, the general principle of the right to full and effective judicial protection requires that interim protection be available to individuals, if it is necessary for the full effectiveness of the definitive future decision, in order to ensure that there is no lacuna in the legal protection afforded by the Community Courts (see, to that effect, the order of the President of the First Chamber of the Court of Justice in Case 27/68 R Renckens v Commission [1969] ECR 274, 276; judgments in Case C-213/89 Factortame and Others [1990] ECR I2433, paragraph 21, and in Joined Cases C-143/88 and C-92/89 Zuckerfabrik Süderdithmarschen and Zuckerfabrik Soest [1991] ECR I415, paragraphs 16 to 18; orders of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C-399/95 R Germany v Commission [1996] ECR I2441, paragraph 46, and in Austria v Council , cited in paragraph 25 above, paragraph 111).

133. It is therefore necessary to examine whether it is proven, with a sufficient degree of probability, that the applicant is likely to suffer serious and irreparable damage if the interim measures applied for are not adopted (see, to that effect, the order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C-180/01 P(R) Commission v NALOO [2001] ECR I5737, paragraph 53).

134. In the present case, ignoring the issue of the conflict of interest identified by the Commission, which is contested by the applicant and is the subject of the main proceedings, it must be held that Euphet had an opportunity to be awarded the contract covered by the tendering procedure. First of all, it is clear from the documents before the Court that Euphet was excluded from the tendering procedure irrespective of the value for money of its tender and solely because the tender showed that there was a risk of a conflict of interest. Second, nothing in the file suggests that Euphet did not have an opportunity to be awarded and to perform the contract in question, irrespective of the risk of a conflict of interest identified by the Commission.

135. However, because of its exclusion from the tendering procedure, Euphet lost its opportunity to be awarded the contract and, consequently, to derive the various financial and non-financial benefits that might result from the performance of the framework contract. It should therefore be examined whether, following an annulment judgment, the possibility of the Commission organising a new tendering procedure would allow such damage to be repaired and, if that is not the case, it should be assessed whether the applicant could be compensated accordingly.

136. As regards the possibility of the Commission organising a new tendering procedure, it should be stated that, even if Euphet could be restored under competitive conditions comparable to those that applied in the tendering procedure in question, it is highly likely that the subject of the new procedure organised by the Commission will be different from the subject of the first procedure.

137. Under Sections 7.1.3 and 7.1.4 of the specifications, the framework contract relates inter alia to an evaluation of the programme of Community action in the field of public health established by Decision No 1786/2002. Article 12(3) of that decision provides that an external assessment must be conducted by the end of the fourth year of the programme', that is 31 December 2006.

138. Consequently, even though the Commission rightly stresses that the framework contract does not necessarily concern just that evaluation, it is highly likely that, if interim measures are not adopted, at least some of the services to be provided under the framework contract will have been completed when the Court delivers its decision in the main proceedings.

139. Therefore, even if the Commission decides to or is required to organise a new call for tenders in order to comply with an annulment judgment, if Euphet can be restored under competitive conditions similar to those that applied in the tendering procedure in question, and if Euphet's tender is accepted by the Commission, it is unlikely that Euphet will in practice still have an opportunity to carry out all the services that it would have performed if it had been declared the successful tenderer at the outset.

140. In the circumstances of this case, it is therefore unlikely that the possibility of the Commission organising a new tendering procedure would in itself make it possible to preserve the opportunity that the applicant had to be awarded and to perform the contract covered by the tendering procedure and, as a result, to derive the various benefits that might have resulted.

141. However, as was held above (paragraph 135), account should also be taken of the possibility that, if the contested decisions are annulled in the main proceedings, the Commission could compensate the applicant for any damage suffered and that, if the Commission chose not to award such compensation, the applicant could bring an action for damages on the basis of Article 288 EC. If any damage suffered by the applicant can subsequently be compensated, it cannot be regarded as irreparable (see, to that effect, the orders in Esedra v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 44, and in TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 43).

142. In the present case, the Commission claims in its observations that, if the contested decisions are annulled, the applicant's interests could be adequately protected inter alia through the payment of compensation. However, the file does not contain anything to guarantee, with a sufficient degree of certainty, that, if the contested decisions were annulled, the Commission would compensate the applicant without an action for damages being brought.

143. Account must therefore be taken of the possibility of the applicant bringing an action under Article 288 EC.

144. According to settled case-law, the damage for which compensation is sought in an action under Article 288 EC must be real and certain (see, to that effect, Case T-54/96 Oleifici Italiani and Fratelli Rubino v Commission [1998] ECR II3377, paragraph 66, and Case T-231/97 New Europe Consulting and Brown v Commission [1999] ECR II2403, paragraph 29).

145. In the present case, as has already been held (paragraph 134 above), it must be regarded as established that Euphet had an opportunity to be awarded and to perform the contract covered by the tendering procedure. Therefore, the damage suffered by the applicant, consisting in the loss of that opportunity, must, at this stage and in the light of the evidence and arguments submitted in the interlocutory proceedings, be regarded as real and certain within the meaning of the case-law mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

146. However, it must be stated that that opportunity is very difficult to quantify. On the one hand, Euphet's tender was excluded at a very early stage in the procedure and the evaluation committee did not deliver an opinion regarding its economic value. On the other hand, even if that tender had been evaluated by the evaluation committee, the contracting authority would not be bound by its proposal and would have a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract (see, to that effect, Case T-13/96 TEAM v Commission [1998] ECR II4073, paragraph 76, and AFCon Management Consultants and Others v Commission , cited in paragraph 35 above, paragraph 113).

147. It is therefore very difficult, or even impossible, to quantify that opportunity and therefore to evaluate the damage resulting from its loss. According to settled case-law, damage, which once it has been suffered cannot be quantified, may be regarded as irreparable (see, to that effect, the order of the President of the Court of Justice in Joined Cases C51/90 R and C59/90 R Comos Tank and Others v Commission [1990] ECR I2167, paragraph 31; orders of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T41/97 R Antillean Rice Mills v Council [1997] ECR II447, paragraph 47, and in Case T-65/98 R Van den Bergh Foods v Commission [1998] ECR II2641, paragraph 65).

148. The loss of that opportunity may therefore be regarded as constituting irreparable damage.

149. However, in order to justify the grant of interim measures, the damage claimed by the applicant must be serious (see, to that effect, the orders in Esedra v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 43, and in TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission , cited in paragraph 67 above, paragraph 41).

150. The loss of an opportunity to be awarded and to perform a public contract forms an integral part of exclusion from the tendering procedure in question and cannot be regarded as constituting in itself serious damage, whether or not a specific assessment is made of the seriousness and irreparability of the precise prejudice alleged in each case considered (see, by analogy, the order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-237/99 R BP Nederland and Others v Commission [2000] ECR II3849, paragraph 52).

151. Therefore, in the present case, the applicant's loss of an opportunity to be awarded and to perform the contract in the tendering procedure would constitute serious damage if it has shown satisfactorily that it would have been able to derive sufficiently sizeable benefits from the award and performance of that contract.

152. It is therefore necessary to make a specific assessment of the various benefits that, according to the applicant, it would derive from the award and performance of the contract covered by the tendering procedure.

153. First of all, the applicant claims that the performance of the framework contract would have brought it major benefits in terms of experience and prestige. However, in this respect, its claims are too general, too vague and too unsubstantiated to establish satisfactorily the likelihood and, a fortiori, the significance of those benefits. As regards the honour and prestige attached to the performance of the tasks to be carried out, the applicant pleads the value of the framework contract, the subject, the duration, the international and large-scale nature of the task' and the fact that it assembled a team of 65 people to perform the contract. Nevertheless, in the absence of more specific evidence allowing an assessment of the effects of performance of the framework contract, in particular on its customers, its prestige and its experience, these claims alone are too vague to prove satisfactorily the likelihood and, a fortiori, the significance of those benefits.

154. Second, as regards the financial benefits attached to the performance of the framework contract, their existence is clearly established. It is obvious therefore that non-performance of the contract would deprive the applicant of revenue that it would have received if it had been awarded the contract. The applicant is therefore liable to suffer irreparable damage linked to the loss of an opportunity to receive that revenue.

155. With regard to the seriousness of that loss, it should be noted that, having regard to its subject-matter, the framework contract concerns tasks with a considerable value. It can be seen from the specifications that the successful tenderer will be assigned three to five tasks each year and that, for the first year, the value of the remunerable services is EUR 1 million.

156. However, where the applicant is an undertaking, the seriousness of material damage must be assessed inter alia in the light of the size of that undertaking (see, to that effect, the order in Comos Tank and Others v Commission , cited in paragraph 147 above, paragraphs 26 and 31, and the order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-201/04 R Microsoft v Commission [2004] ECR II-4463, paragraph 257).

157. In the present case, it must be stated that the applicant does not produce evidence or arguments to show that, in the light of its size in particular, the loss that it is liable to suffer would be sufficiently serious to justify the grant of interim measures.

158. For example, it can be seen from an annex to the tender submitted by Euphet that the applicant realised a turnover of more than EUR 27 million in 2004. Furthermore, the information provided in Euphet's tender seeks to highlight the size of the group to which the applicant is linked. In that tender, it is stated that the group in question employs the services of almost 130 000 people throughout the world, approximately 20 000 of whom work within the European Union.

159. Consequently, in the light of the evidence and arguments contained in the application for interim measures, the President cannot take the view that the applicant's loss of an opportunity to receive revenue from the performance of the framework contract would be sufficiently serious to justify the grant of interim measures.

160. The condition relating to urgency cannot therefore be regarded as satisfied.

161. Lastly, it should be noted that the balance of interests is in any case in favour of not ordering interim measures.

162. As has already been noted, if interim measures are not adopted, the applicant is liable to suffer damage linked to the loss of an opportunity to receive revenue from the performance of the framework contract.

163. However, if the interim measures applied for were ordered, the Commission would be unable to conclude the framework contract. It is clear from recital 44 in the preamble to Decision No 1786/2002 that the evaluations of the programme of Community action in the field of public health are intended, where appropriate, to adjust or modify that programme. The performance of these evaluations therefore fulfils an important general interest.

164. Account must also be taken of the interest of the tenderer which was successful at the end of the tendering procedure and which, in the event of suspension, would be unable to perform the contract which it has been awarded.

165. Lastly, as can be seen from the examination of the prima facie case (paragraphs 83 to 123 above), it is not particularly strong, in the light of the evidence and arguments presented in the interlocutory proceedings, and is not capable of tipping the balance of interests in favour of the grant of interim measures.

166. Therefore, in the light of the foregoing, the balance of the interests at stake is in favour of not granting the interim measures applied for.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

167. Consequently, without it being necessary to give a ruling on the applicant's request for the correspondence exchanged between the Commission and the other tenderers to be lodged with the Registry, the application for interim measures must be dismissed.

Action brought on 19 May 2005 by N.V. Deloitte Business Advisory against the Commission of the European Communities

(Case T-195/05)

(Language of the case: Dutch)

An action against the Commission of the European Communities was brought before the Court of First Instance of the European Communities on 19 May 2005 by N.V. Deloitte Business Advisory, Brussels, represented by Dirk Van Heuven, Steve Ronse and Sofie Logie, with an address for service in Luxembourg.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

annul the contested decisions;

order the defendant to pay all the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicant, which was in a consortium with other undertakings, submitted a tender, under the name EUPHET, in response to the invitation to tender for the 'Sanco Evaluation Framework Contract, Lot 1 (Public Health) - tender No SANCO/2004/01/041', issued by the European Commission. In the application, the applicant seeks annulment of the European Commission's decision not to select EUPHET for the contract, as well as annulment of the award decision, not served on and unknown to the applicant, by which the contract was awarded to a third party.

In support of its application, the applicant pleads infringement of Article 94 of Regulation No 1605/2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities [1] and infringement of Articles 138 and 147(3) of Regulation No 2342/2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of Regulation No 1605/2002. [2] The applicant also pleads breach of the tender documents, of the general duty to state reasons and of the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations.

According to the applicant, the reason stated for exclusion, namely that the proposal for measures to prevent a conflict of interest was inadequate and did not provide a sufficient guarantee, is completely unlawful and in breach of the contract documents. The applicant maintains that it is sufficient that the contractor undertake, by signing the draft contract, to inform the Commission immediately of any conflict of interest and to take the necessary steps to resolve such conflict as soon as possible. The applicant also states that it proposed measures which went further than what was required.

The applicant further claims that it was not at any time invited to supply additional information. According to the applicant, that constitutes an infringement of Article 146(3) of Regulation No 2342/2002, a breach of the principle of the protection of legitimate expectations, of the principle of the right to be treated fairly and of the principle of non-discrimination, as well as an infringement of Articles 89(1) and 99 of Regulation No 1605/2002.

2 - OJ C 115, 14.5.2005.

Order of the President of the Court of First Instance of 2 June 2005 Umwelt- und Ingenieurtechnik GmbH Dresden v Commission of the European Communities. Application for interim measures. Case T-125/05 R.

Applications for interim measures - Suspension of operation of a measure - Interim measures - Conditions for granting - Urgency - Serious and irreparable damage - Burden of proof - Financial loss

(Arts 242 EC and 243 EC; Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, Art. 104(2))

The urgency of an application for the adoption of interim measures must be assessed in the light of the extent to which an interlocutory order is necessary to avoid serious and irreparable damage to the party seeking the adoption of the interim measure. It is for that party to prove that he cannot await the conclusion of the main action without suffering damage of that kind.

In that regard, financial loss, such as that which might arise in the event of exclusion from a tendering procedure, cannot, save in exceptional circumstances, be regarded as irreparable, or even as being reparable only with difficulty, if it can ultimately be the subject of financial compensation.

(see paras 38-39, 42)

In Case T-125/05 R,

Umwelt- und Ingenieurtechnik GmbH Dresden, established in Dresden (Germany), represented by H. Robl, lawyer, applicant,

v

Commission of the European Communities, represented by M. Wilderspin and S. Fries, acting as Agents, with an address for service in Luxembourg, defendant,

ACTION for suspension of implementation of the decisions of the Commission not to award the applicant Lot No 2 of the EuropeAid/119151/D/S/UA contract called Plan Improvement Project for South Ukraine NPP' and to award the lot to another company and, alternatively, for an order for other interim measures,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

makes the following

Order

Background to the dispute

1. Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 99/2000 of 29 December 1999 concerning the provision of assistance to the partner States in Eastern Europe and Central Asia (OJ 2000 L 12, p. 1) provides in particular for the financing of nuclear safety programmes in those States.

2. An annual action programme in the field of nuclear safety was established for the year 2001 in the context of Regulation No 99/2000. In that context a tendering procedure was launched for a public procurement contract entitled Plan Improvement Project for South Ukraine NPP'. Lot No 2 of that contract related to the supply of an expert system for collection and processing of data concerning the control of water quality in a nuclear power station in South Ukraine.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

3. In response to that tendering procedure, published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 19 June 2004 (OJ 2004 S 119), three tenders, including that of the applicant, were submitted within the time-limit.

4. On 4 October 2004, the tenders submitted were made public in the presence of the tenderers.

5. The committee in charge of the technical evaluation of the tenders (the evaluation committee') proceeded to the examination of the different tenders received and checked that they complied with the administrative and technical specifications.

6. The evaluation committee requested the applicant to clarify several elements of its tender by letters of 6, 8 and 12 October 2004 respectively, to which the applicant replied by letters of 7, 12 and 14 October 2004 respectively.

7. Taking the view that the explanations provided by the applicant on two technical aspects (Clarification No 9' and Clarification No 13') were insufficient, the committee did not accept the applicant's tender. The prices proposed by the applicant were therefore not compared with those of the other tenderers.

8. The contract was awarded to the company All Trade, whose tender was the most advantageous of those submitted.

9. The award was notified to All Trade and the required steps were taken for the signature of the contract. The contract was concluded directly between Energoatom, the beneficiary of the project, and the successful tenderer. It was signed on 20 December 2004.

10. By letter of 23 December 2004, received by the applicant on 10 January 2004, the Commission informed the applicant that it had not been awarded the contract having regard to the fact that its offer did not comply with the technical requirements (the first decision'). In addition, that letter informed the applicant that the contract had been awarded to All Trade (the second decision').

11. By letter of 14 January 2005 to the Commission, the applicant disputed the reasons given for those two decisions.

12. By letter of 31 January 2005, the Commission replied to the complaints made by the applicant.

Procedure and forms of orders sought by the parties

13. By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 18 March 2005, the applicant brought an action for annulment under the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC of the first and second decisions (together the contested decisions').

14. By a separate document, lodged at the Registry of the Court on 21 March 2005 pursuant to Article 104 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance and Articles 242 EC and 243 EC, the applicant brought the present application for interim relief in which it claims

- suspension of the execution of the contested decisions until the Court rules on the main action;

- in the alternative, an order for the necessary interim measures to prevent implementation of the challenged decisions from becoming a fait accompli to the detriment of the applicant and, in particular, to prevent the defendant:

- firstly, awarding the contested contract to All Trade;

- secondly, drawing up the contract stipulated in paragraph 21 of the call for tenders and submitting it to All Trade for signature, or taking any other measure for awarding or implementing the contract.

15. In its written observations lodged at the Registry of the Court on 11 April 2005, the Commission contended that the application should be dismissed as unfounded.

Law

16. Under, first, the combined provisions of Articles 242 EC and 243 EC and, secondly, Article 225(1) EC, the Court of First Instance can, if it considers that the circumstances require, order the suspension of a measure challenged before it or order necessary provisional measures.

17. Article 104(2) of the Rules of Procedure provides that requests for interim measures must state the subject-matter of the proceedings, the circumstances giving rise to urgency and the pleas of fact and law establishing a prima facie case (fumus boni juris) for the interim measures applied for. Those conditions are cumulative, so that an application for interim measures must be dismissed if any one of them is absent (Order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C268/96 P(R) SCK and FNK v Commission [1996] ECR I-4971, paragraph 30).

18. Having regard to the contents of the file, the President considers that it contains all the information necessary in order to rule on the current request for provisional measures without the need for an oral hearing.

Arguments of the parties

Prima facie case

19. In relation to the first decision the applicant maintains that the Commission infringed the principle of non-discrimination. That principle is of fundamental importance in the context of public contracts and Article 89(1) of the Financial Regulation is a particular expression of it.

20. First, contrary to what is stated in the Commission's letters of 23 December 2004 and 31 January 2005, the applicant's tender was in conformity with the technical specifications stated in the call for tenders, namely, those mentioned, firstly, in section 2.2.6 of the specifications and, secondly, in sections 2.3.1 and 2.3.4 of those technical specifications. Moreover, contrary to what is claimed by the Commission, the detailed explanations and the additional information provided to the Commission were not inadequate.

21. The applicant adds that the technical reservations set out in the letters of 23 December 2004 and 31 January 2005 have nothing to do with the Commission's previous requests for clarification.

22. In relation to the second decision the applicant maintains that the Commission's finding in relation to the financial assessment is manifestly in error.

23. In the award notice for the supply contract, All Trade is mentioned as holding a contract to the value of EUR 3 423 658, which corresponded to the price of the offer, including all extras and services. According to the applicant, the statements in relation to the prices of offers mentioned in the Commission's letter of 31 January 2005 are not correct.

24. According to the applicant, the Commission's reference to paragraph 1.3 of the instructions to tenderers is incorrect. Paragraph 1.3 in substance provides that, in the context of the evaluation of offers, only the base price of tenders was to be taken into consideration to the exclusion of the unit price and the overall price of spare parts, except if those latter two prices differed substantially from one offer to another. According to the applicant, that was precisely the case in this instance.

25. The applicant considers that All Trade in all likelihood proposed a higher number of spare parts, with the consequence that the overall price of the tender had to be higher by more than 300 000 euros. According to the applicant, the Commission failed in its obligation under paragraph 1.3 of the instructions to tenderers to take that circumstance into consideration.

26. The applicant also maintains that All Trade possesses neither the qualifications nor the references required. According to the applicant, All Trade clearly proposed a product with a high risk of failure. The award of Lot No 2 to All Trade therefore raised serious doubts from a technical, commercial, personnel and financial viewpoint as to the guarantee that the envisaged service, the subject of the contract, could be carried out with the required competence and in the required time frame.

27. In that regard, the applicant adds, firstly, that All Trade's company capital is not in line with the value of the contract, secondly, that All Trade clearly wants to carry out the contract by itself, with the help of three collaborators and, thirdly, that All Trade's references relate only to a project in Armenia in a contract the value of which is less that one million euros and which was carried out nearly two years ago.

28. In reply, the Commission maintains that the application for annulment in the main proceedings is manifestly unfounded.

29. The Commission recalls that it is established case-law that it enjoys a broad margin of assessment with regard to the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender. Review by the Community Courts is therefore limited to checking compliance with the applicable procedural rules and the duty to give reasons, the correctness of the facts found and that there is no manifest error of assessment or misuse of powers (Case T-211/02 Tideland Signal v Commission [2002] ECR II3781, paragraph 33).

30. In this case the invitation to tender procedure was carried out in conformity with the applicable provisions. The decision to reject the applicant's offer was, moreover, reasoned. The reasons given in that regard were of a technical nature. When assessing those arguments the Commission relied on the opinion of experts, in this case, the evaluation committee. The Commission concludes from this that no manifest error of assessment or abuse of power has been demonstrated by the applicant and that there is nothing to suggest that they exist.

Urgency and the balance of interests

31. The applicant maintains that, if the orders sought are not made, the decisions at issue will take effect. This fait accompli' will definitively affect the applicant's legal position and will do irreversible harm to its rights.

32. For its part the Commission maintains that the applicant has not proven that it cannot await the outcome of the main proceedings without suffering serious and irreparable damage.

33. The Commission further argues that it is settled case-law that pecuniary damage cannot, in principle, except in exceptional circumstances, be regarded as irreparable, or even reparable only with difficulty, if it may be the subject of subsequent compensation (Orders of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-169/00 R Esedra v Commission [2000] ECR II2951, paragraph 45; Case T-181/02 R Neue Erba Lautex v Commission [2002] ECR II5081, paragraph 84, and Case T-148/04 R TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission [2004] II3027, paragraph 46).

34. In any event, the applicant's interests should not prevail, firstly, over those of the tenderer with which the contract was signed and, secondly, over the interest of the safety of nuclear installations.

Findings of the President of the Court of First Instance

35. In its application, the applicant in essence requests the President of the Court of First Instance to prohibit the defendant, firstly, from awarding the contract at issue to All Trade and, secondly, from drawing up the contract envisaged at paragraph 21 of the invitation to tender file and offering it for signature by All Trade. It also requests the suspension of the decision not to award it Lot No 2 of the contract at issue and to suspend the execution of any contract signed with All Trade.

36. The Commission has stated, without being contradicted by the applicant, or by any of the documents on the file, that the contract between All Trade and Energoatom was signed on 23 December 2004. For that reason, the application for interim relief, in so far as it aims to avoid the award of the contract to All Trade and the signature of the contract, has been devoid of purpose since it was lodged. This head of claim is therefore inadmissible.

37. In relation to the head of claim seeking to obtain suspension of the execution of the decision not to award the contract to the applicant and the execution of the contract made with All Trade, the President of the Court of First Instance considers that, without there being any need to rule on the conformity of the application with the requirements of Article 104(2) of the Rules of Proc edure, as interpreted by the Community judicature (Orders of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-306/01 R Aden and Others v Council and Commission [2002] ECR II2387, paragraph 52, and Case T-303/04 R European Dynamics v Commission [2004] ECR II-3889, paragraphs 63 and 64), it is appropriate to examine whether the condition for urgency is fulfilled.

38. In that regard, according to well-established case-law, the urgency of an application for the adoption of interim measures must be assessed in the light of the extent to which an interlocutory order is necessary to avoid serious and irreparable damage to the party seeking the adoption of the interim measure (Order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case 310/85 R Deufil v Commission [1986] ECR 537, paragraph 15, and Order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-13/99 R Pfizer Animal Health v Council [1999] ECR II1961, paragraph 134).

39. The party seeking the suspension of the operation of the contested decision must provide proof that he cannot await the conclusion of the main action without suffering prejudice of that nature (Order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C-356/90 R Belgium v Commission [1991] ECR I2423, paragraph 23, and Order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-151/01 R Duales System Deutschland v Commission [2001] ECR II3295, paragraph 187).

40. In this case, the applicant limits itself to stating, without more, that the appeal does not have suspensive effect and therefore it must be feared that, in the context of the decision process at issue, the decision in favour of All Trade challenged... would take effect' and that this would create a fait accompli and would definitively affect the applicant's legal position'.

41. The applicant does not give any reasons as to why it cannot wait for the request for annulment to be decided and adduces no proof of such serious and irreparable damage.

42. In so far as the applicant can be understood as arguing that the damage alleged concerns the fact that its non-selection has caused financial loss, it suffices to recall that damage of such a kind cannot, save in exceptional circumstances, be regarded as irreparable, or even as being reparable only with difficulty, if it can ultimately be the subject of financial compensation (Orders in Esedra v Commission , cited above, paragraph 45, Neue Erba Lautex v Commission , cited above, paragraph 84, and TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission , cited above, paragraph 46).

43. In these circumstances it must be concluded that, since the condition regarding urgency is not satisfied, the present application must be dismissed without the need to consider whether the other conditions for the grant of interim measures are satisfied.

On those grounds,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

hereby orders:

1. The application for interim measures is dismissed.

2. Costs are reserved.

Notice for the OJ

Action brought on 18 March 2005 by Umwelt- und Ingenieurtechnik GmbH Dresden against the Commission of the European Communities

(Case T-125/05)

Language of the case: German

An action against the Commission of the European Communities was brought before the Court of First Instance of the European Communities on 18 March 2005 by Umwelt- und Ingenieurtechnik GmbH Dresden, Dresden (Germany), represented by H. Robl, lawyer.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

- annul the decision of 23 December 2004 refusing to award a contract to the applicant;

- annul the decision of 23 December 2004 awarding a contract to All Trade S.r.l;

- order the defendant to pay the costs of the proceedings.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicant challenges the decision of the Commission of 23 December 2004 not to award the applicant Public Contract No AIDCO/A6/FP/co/2004/D/45370, Contract No 90-127 in the tender procedure 'Plan Improvement Project for South Ukraine NPP,' concerning a measure to introduce an intelligent control system for water quality in the nuclear power station in South Ukraine. The applicant also challenges the simultaneous decision to award this contract to the competitor All Trade S.r.l.

The applicant argues that the Commission:

- erroneously assessed that the applicant's tender did not comply with point 2.2.6 of the technical specification, although all of the services offered by the applicant fully satisfied the specification and this was confirmed by references,

- erroneously stated that the applicant did not comply with points 2.3.1 and 2.3.4 of the technical specification due to insufficient explanations and information, although the applicant's explanations were both extensive and exhaustive, and

- breached the duty to provide clarification and exceeded its discretion.

The applicant contends further that in assessing the price, the Commission incorrectly, and in breach of the requirements of paragraph 1.3 of the instructions to tenders based its decision solely on the basic tender price and thus, in spite of their relevance, the pricing of spare parts and maintenance costs were not taken into consideration.

Finally, the applicant submits that the competitor All Trade S.r.l. does not provide any guarantee, either by its expertise or financial standing or by its technical experience, that it will successfully carry out the project in question.

APPLICATION for: (1) annulment of the Commission decision not to short-list the applicant in the tendering procedure concerning the provision of technical assistance to improve the information and communication technology system (ICT) in the State Institute of Statistics of the Republic of Turkey, and (2) annulment of the decisions rejecting the applicant's request for review of the decision not to short-list it,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES (Third Chamber), composed of M. Jaeger, J. Azizi and E. Cremona, Judges,

Registrar: E. Coulon,

makes the following

Order

Legal background

1 The award of contracts by the Commission in the course of its external actions is subject to the provisions of Part II, Title IV, Chapter 3, of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1) ('the Financial Regulation') and the provisions of Part II, Title III, Chapter 3, of Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1) ('the implementing rules').

2 According to Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation:

'The contracting authority shall notify all candidates or tenderers whose applications or tenders are rejected on the grounds on which the decision was taken, and all tenderers whose tenders are admissible and who make a request in writing of the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the tenderer to whom the contract is awarded.

However, certain details need not be disclosed where disclosure would hinder application of the law, would be contrary to the public interest or would harm the legitimate business interests of public or private undertakings or could distort fair competition between those undertakings.'

3 Article 149 of the implementing rules, in the version applicable to the facts in this case, provides as follows:

'1. The contracting authorities shall as soon as possible inform candidates and tenderers of decisions reached concerning the award of the contract, including the grounds for any decision not to award a contract for which there has been competitive tendering or to recommence the procedure.

2. The contracting authority shall, within not more than fifteen calendar days from the date on which a written request is received, communicate the information provided for in Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation.'

Facts at the origin of the dispute

4 By contract notice of 24 September 2004 published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities (OJ 2004 S 187), the Commission, acting through its delegation in Turkey, issued an international restricted call for tenders under the reference EuropeAid/117579/C/SV/TR for a contract entitled 'Technical Assistance to improve the Information and Communication Technology (ICT) System in the State Institute of Statistics (SIS) of [the Republic of] Turkey – Upgrading the Statistical System of [the Republic of] Turkey (USST)'.

5 On 27 October 2004, Evropaiki Dinamiki, in consortium with the German company CCGIS Christl & Stamm GbR and the Department of Statistics of the Middle Eastern Technical University of Turkey, applied to be short-listed in respect of that call for tenders.

6 By fax of 2 December 2004, the Commission Delegation in Turkey ('the Delegation') informed the applicant that it had not been included on the short-list of candidates invited to submit a detailed tender, on the ground that it did not satisfy the criterion of technical capacity.

7 By letter of 8 December 2004, complaining that it had not been short-listed, the applicant informed the Delegation that it was clear from the documents supplied that, with its partners, it had the experience required by the contract notice concerned. It therefore asked the Delegation to reconsider its decision and include the consortium in the list of selected companies, so that it could participate in the final stage.

8 By letter dated 13 December 2004, faxed to the applicant on 22 December 2004 ('the letter of 13 December 2004'), the Head of Section, Financial Management and Procurement, at the Delegation replied in the following terms:

'With reference to your fax dated 8 December 2004 … , I would like to inform you that I have taken due note of your complaint regarding the short-listing of the above tender.

While the proceedings of the short-listing committee are confidential, I would like to inform you that all committee members read your references very carefully and in detail. The selection was done taking into consideration only the selection criteria mentioned at point 7 of the Procurement Notice. All the applications received were then compared to each other in order to finalise a final ranking and 8 applicants were short-listed.

Even though the references you presented were impressive the committee unanimously believed that in your application was not evident the fulfilment of the criterion related to the minimum number of areas (six out of ten listed) requested in the Procurement Notice while in the references of the firms short-listed the criterion was clearly fulfilled.'

9 By letter of 23 December 2004, sent by fax and registered post, to the Delegation and to the Commission's Directorate-General (DG) for Enlargement, the applicant insisted that the projects conducted by the consortium to which it belonged, and described in its application to participate in the call for tenders, satisfied all the required criteria and called on the Commission to comply with the provisions of Council Regulation (EC) No 1488/96 of 23 July 1996 on financial and technical measures to accompany (MEDA) the reform of economic and social structures in the framework of the Euro-Mediterranean partnership (OJ 1996 L 189, p. 1), and apply the provisions of the Financial Regulation concerning the applicant's right of appeal.

10 By fax of 24 December 2004, the Head of Section, Financial Management and Procurement, informed the applicant that it would receive a reply to its letter of 23 December 2004 within three weeks. In particular, it stated as follows:

'I have taken due note of your explanations on the issue and I would like to assure you that I would do all I can to clarify it. Since we shall be looking into the matter more closely, you will receive our reply within three weeks.'

11 On 10 January 2005, the applicant sent a letter, transmitted first by fax, to the Delegation and to DG Enlargement, in which it repeated in essence that its consortium was in a better position and had more references which suited the subject-matter of the call for tenders than other short-listed consortia. It also repeated the assertion that among the subject areas referred to in the 'terms of reference of the call for tenders' was the need to link the Turkish authorities with the 'Stadium' and 'Statel' applications of Eurostat (Statistical Office of the European Communities), both previously developed by the applicant.

12 On 14 and 20 January 2005, the applicant sent to the Delegation, with copies to DG Enlargement, two letters in which it expressed its wish to obtain a response within the time–limits given. In particular, in the fax of 20 January 2005, the applicant, complaining that it had not yet received a reply to its letter of 23 December 2004, informed the Delegation of its intention, despite the rejection of its application, to submit a tender before the expiry date stipulated by the contracting authority, namely 7 February 2005.

13 By letter of 24 January 2005, the Head of the Delegation informed the applicant that since the short-listing procedures had been duly applied, there was no justification for re-examining the decision concerning the short-list. In particular, having briefly set out the working methods of the short-list panel, it stated that all the members of that panel had taken the view that, in spite of the very technical descriptions provided by the applicant about its experience, the number of references to the areas required by the contract notice was not sufficient.

14 On 7 February 2005, after repeating its criticisms in respect of the decision to reject its application, the applicant informed the Commission of its intention to participate in one of the pre-selected consortia and announced that it would bring legal proceedings.

Procedure and forms of order sought

15 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 22 February 2005, the applicant brought these proceedings.

16 The applicant claims that the Court of First Instance should:

– annul the Commission's decision, contained in the letter of 2 December 2004, not to shortlist the applicant, and to short-list other candidates;

– annul the Commission's decision contained in the letter of 13 December 2004 refusing its request for review of the decision of 2 December 2004, as well as that contained in the letter of 24 January 2005; – order the Commission to pay the costs, even if the present application is dismissed.

17 By separate document, registered at the Court of First Instance on 26 May 2005, the Commission raised a plea of inadmissibility in accordance with Article 114(1) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance.

18 The Commission contends that the Court of First Instance should:

– dismiss the application as inadmissible;

– order the applicant to pay the costs.

19 The applicant submitted its observations on that plea of inadmissibility on 11 July 2005.

20 The applicant claims there that the Court of First Instance should:

– dismiss the plea of inadmissibility;

– proceed with the examination of the case.

Law

21 Under Article 114(1) of the Rules of Procedure, if a party so requests, the Court may give a ruling on admissibility without going into the substance of the case. In accordance with Article 114(3), the remainder of the proceedings is to be oral, unless the Court decides that the information in the file is sufficient to enable it to rule on the application made by the defendant and that there is no need to open the oral procedure.

Arguments of the parties

22 The Commission takes the view that the action is inadmissible. For that purpose it relies in the first place on the argument that the action for annulment brought by the applicant against the decision contained in the letter of 2 December 2004 is out of time. The date on which the application was lodged at the Court Registry, 22 February 2005, is after the expiry of the period of two months and ten days available to the applicant for bringing such proceedings. Since that decision was sent by fax on 2 December 2004, and received by the applicant on the same day, the period for bringing an action against that decision expired on 14 February 2005.

23 The Commission recalls, first of all, that, according to settled case-law, in order for a letter to constitute a notification for the purpose of Article 230 EC, it must be precise, unequivocal and contain a reasoned decision of the Commission (order in Case C-12/90 Infortec v Commission [1990] ECR I-4265, paragraph 9). In this case the letter satisfies those criteria, since it clearly informed the applicant that its application had been rejected and provided a reason for that. The letter concerned is, therefore, sufficiently detailed to constitute a decision enabling the applicant to ascertain its precise content in order to exercise its right to bring proceedings.

24 Second, as regards the application for annulment of the reiteration of its position, which is the subject of the letter of 13 December 2004, the Commission submits that that letter merely confirmed the contents of the initial decision of 2 December 2004. Therefore, the second letter cannot be regarded as a new decision, since neither the information on the file nor the letter itself indicates that the case was reconsidered before the letter was sent to the applicant. It cannot constitute a decision as it simply informs the applicant that the Commission did not intend to reconsider its decision concerning the short-list.

25 In that regard, the defendant recalls that, according to settled case-law, a measure constitutes a decision which may be the subject of an action for annulment under Article 230 EC if it produces legal effects which are binding on, and capable of affecting the interests of, the applicant, by bringing about a distinct change in his legal position (Case 60/81 IBM v Commission [1981] ECR 2639, paragraph 9, and Joined Cases C-68/94 and C-30/95 France and Others v Commission [1998] ECR I-1375, paragraph 62). The letter of 13 December 2004 merely confirmed the Commission's decision and thus did not bring about a distinct change in the applicant's legal position. Therefore, in accordance with the case-law of the Court of Justice, that letter cannot be the subject of an action for annulment (Case C-199/91 Foyer culturel du Sart-Tilman v Commission [1993] ECR I-2667, paragraph 23).

26 The Commission adds that, even if the Court of First Instance considered that the letter concerned constituted a decision, as a confirmatory decision it does not have the effect of laying down a fresh time-limit (Joined Cases 166/86 and 220/86 Irish Cement v Commission [1988] ECR 6473, paragraph 16; order in Infortec v Commission, paragraph 10; and Case C-480/93 P Zunis Holding and Others v Commission [1996] ECR I-1, paragraph 14). In that regard, the defendant refers to the case-law according to which, where an applicant allows the time-limit for bringing an action against a decision unequivocally laying down a measure with legal effects affecting his interests and binding on him to expire, he cannot start time running again by asking the institution to reconsider its decision and by bringing an action against the refusal confirming the decision previously taken (Case T–514/93 Cobrecaf and Others v Commission [1995] ECR II-621, paragraph 44).

27 In its observations on the plea of inadmissibility, the applicant challenges the Commission's arguments.

28 It states, by way of a preliminary, that the contested decisions are those contained in the three letters from the Commission, that is, the letters of 2 and 13 December 2004 and 24 January 2005.

29 The applicant submits that in its plea of inadmissibility the Commission failed to refer to the letter of 24 December 2004 and the letter of 24 January 2005. The latter one contradicts, in particular, the Commission's argument that the letters sent after that of 2 December 2004 were not based on any new factors and did not lead to a re-examination of the decision contained in it.

30 According to the applicant, several factors lead to that conclusion. In particular, the fact that, in the letter of 24 December 2004, the Head of Section, Financial Management and Procurement, stated expressly that it was necessary to take a closer look at the problem, and indicated that the applicant would receive a reply within an exceptional period of three weeks, is evidence that the case was, in fact, reconsidered by the Delegation. Furthermore, that corresponds to what the applicant understood from the telephone conversations it had with the officials handling the case. In the same way, the statement 'I have taken due note of your explanations …' contained in that letter shows clearly that new information had been submitted to the Delegation by the applicant.

31 In any event, the letters of 24 December 2004 and 24 January 2005 constitute the Commission's response to the applicant's request for re-examination of its bid set out in the letter of 23 December 2004. Consequently, the decision contained in the letter of 24 January 2005, signed by the Head of the Delegation, must be regarded as a new decision, producing legal effects and capable of being challenged in accordance with Article 230 EC. It follows that the application was lodged within the time-limits, since the period in which to bring an action against the decision of 24 January 2005 expired only on 3 April 2005.

32 Moreover, the fact that the letter concerned was signed by the Head of the Delegation, and not by the official responsible for the tender procedure, implies that he had re-examined the file, since he had not been involved previously in the tender evaluation procedure, and that therefore he must necessarily have requested explanations, a copy of the file and the reports of the Evaluation Committee.

33 According to the applicant, the letter of 24 January 2005 must therefore be regarded as the act whereby the Commission notified its definitive decision, and not as confirmation of a prior act (Case 44/81 Germany v Commission [1982] ECR 1855, paragraph 12).

34 Furthermore, the applicant takes the view that, when a Community institution enters into discussions with a third party regarding the legality of its acts, as in this case, by declaring directly that it will re-examine its position, and requests an additional period within which to examine the arguments of that third party, it would be contrary to the principle of good faith for the institution to rely on the time-limit for bringing an action, as against the third party, immediately or shortly after giving him a definitive answer.

35 In that regard, the applicant recalls that it had to wait a month (from 24 December 2004 until 24 January 2005), at the Commission's specific request, before receiving the definitive decision rejecting its request for re-examination. Therefore, if the objection of inadmissibility were to be accepted, that would mean that the applicant had only 20 days within which to bring an action, instead of the two months provided for by Article 230 EC.

Findings of the Court

36 The plea alleging an absolute bar to proceeding raised by the Commission is divided into two parts, alleging, first, that the action is out of time as regards the first decision challenged, namely the letter of 2 December 2004, and, second, that the decision allegedly contained in the letter of 13 December 2004 does not constitute a challengeable act because it does not produce legal effects capable of affecting the applicant's interests by bringing about a distinct change in its position. In any event, that letter should be regarded as being merely a confirmation of the decision contained in the letter of 2 December 2004 to reject the applicant's application. However, the defendant does not explicitly define its position with respect to the letter sent by the Head of the Delegation on 24 January 2005.

37 Therefore, it is appropriate to determine whether, as the defendant claims, the letter of 2 December 2004 must be regarded as a 'notification within the meaning of Article 230 EC'.

38 In that regard, it must be recalled, first of all, that, according to Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation, the contracting authority is to notify all candidates whose applications are rejected of the grounds on which the decision was taken, and, under Article 149 of the implementing rules, it must as soon as possible inform candidates of decisions reached concerning the award of the contract.

39 In this case, it must be observed that the Delegation informed the applicant that its application had been rejected by a standard letter, the model for which is in Annex B8 of the Finance Guide for the external actions financed from the General Budget of the EC, sent by fax on 2 December 2004. The Delegation had ticked the box indicating that the application did not satisfy the criterion of technical capacity and that it was inferior to that of the applications which were accepted and stated, furthermore, that, out of 19 applications received following the publication of the contract notice, it had short-listed eight of them. As was stated in Article 21(3) of the contract notice, concerning the candidate's technical capacity, the latter had to demonstrate 'at least one project/reference of the execution of 6 of the 10 assignments listed under point 7 [of the contract notice] within the last three years', relating to the description of the contract.

40 By that letter, the Commission did, therefore, notify the applicant in a sufficiently precise and unequivocal manner of its definitive decision to reject the application at issue and stated the reasons for that, in accordance with the provisions of the Financial Regulation and the implementing rules mentioned above. Furthermore, it is clear from the words used by the applicant in its letter of 8 December 2004, and the correspondence subsequently exchanged between it and the Delegation, that it had indeed identified the reasons for the decision to reject its application. There is no other possible explanation for the arguments set out in that letter as regards the fact that the decision to reject the application did not take account of all the projects and references set out in sections 5 and 6 of the application form with reference to the list of areas of technical assistance set out in point 7 of the contract notice.

41 Contrary to the applicant's submissions, there is no doubt, therefore, that the letter at issue constitutes an act which brought about a distinct and immediate change in its legal position and which should, if necessary, have been challenged within the period provided for that purpose. Under the fifth paragraph of Article 230 EC, the period within which to institute an action for annulment is two months from the notification of the decision to the applicant, which in this case was 2 December 2004, and an additional 10 days on account of distance as provided for in Article 102(2) of the Rules of Procedure. The period for instituting an action for annulment against that decision therefore expired on 14 February 2005. Since the application was lodged on 22 February 2005, the action was brought out of time.

42 The applicant's argument that that letter did not contain a definitive decision, as evidenced, it argues, by the fact that after it was sent discussions with the Delegation continued and the latter sent the applicant a further three letters, does not alter that assessment. The fact that the applicant and the Delegation were in contact after the letter of 2 December 2004 was sent and that the Delegation sent other letters in response to issues raised by the applicant does nothing to alter the manifestly binding and definitive nature of that letter.

43 Furthermore, the applicant's reasoning is contradicted by its letter of 23 December 2004, in which it explicitly requested the Delegation to provide it with assurances as regards its right of appeal, which shows that it was perfectly aware of the fact that the decision of 2 December 2004 was an act adversely affecting it. The only uncertainty on the part of the applicant related to remedies, as is clear from the passage in the letter where it states the following:

'In case our legitimate appeal is rejected we do not feel that we will enjoy sufficient protection if we bring this issue before the Turkish courts. As an EU taxpayer we respectfully ask the European Commission to protect our rights arising from the EU public procurement legislation. In particular, we would like to ask that in case we are not immediately included in the short list, we have the appeal rights as specified by the EU public procurement legislation and the Financial Regulation.'

44 Furthermore, it must be held, in that regard, that it was for the applicant alone to decide whether to bring an action for annulment and not to allow the mandatory time-limit of two months provided for for that purpose to expire. Therefore, no importance can be attached to the correspondence exchanged between the applicant and the Delegation after the decision to reject its application.

45 As regards the decisions supposedly contained in the letters from the Delegation of 13 December 2004 and 24 January 2005, it is appropriate to determine whether the latter merely confirmed therein the decision to reject the applicant's application without taking into consideration any new factor capable of producing binding legal effects capable of affecting the applicant's interests.

46 It should be remembered, in that regard, that according to settled case-law, actions for annulment brought against decisions which merely confirm earlier decisions which have not been contested within the time-limits are inadmissible (see, to that effect, the order of 7 December 2004 in Case C-521/03 P Internationaler Hilfsfonds v Commission, not published in the ECR, paragraph 41; Case T-275/94 CB v Commission [1995] ECR II-2169, paragraph 27; order in Case T-235/95 Goldstein v Commission [1998] ECR II-523, paragraph 41; order in Case T–84/97 BEUC v Commission [1998] ECR II-795, paragraph 52; and order in Case T–127/01 Ripa di Meana v Parliament [2002] ECR II-3005, paragraph 25). A decision is regarded as merely confirmatory of a previous decision if it contains no new factor as compared with a previous measure and was not preceded by a re–examination of the circumstances of the person to whom that measure was addressed (Case 54/77 Herpels v Commission [1978] ECR 585, paragraph 14; order in BEUC v Commission, paragraph 52; Case T-186/98 Inpesca v Commission [2001] ECR II–557, paragraph 44; and order in Internationaler Hilfsfonds v Commission, paragraph 47).

47 The applicant submits in its observations on the plea of inadmissibility that the third decision contested, that is, the decision supposedly contained in the letter of 24 January 2005, constitutes the response of the Delegation to its letter of 23 December 2004, in which it had challenged the Evaluation Committee's decision not to include the applicant in the short-list and requested a re-examination of its application. That decision was adopted after a re-examination of the file and should therefore be regarded as a new decision producing legal effects and thus capable of being challenged, in accordance with Article 230 EC. The applicant argues essentially that the letter at issue must be regarded as the act by which the Commission notified its definitive decision, and not as the confirmation of a previous act.

48 In that regard, it is clear, as the case-law indicates, that whether a measure is confirmatory cannot be determined solely with reference to its content as compared with that of the previous decision which it confirms, but must also be appraised in the light of the nature of the request to which it constitutes a reply (see, to that effect, Inpesca v Commission, paragraph 45 and the case-law cited, and the order in Case T-308/02 SGL Carbon v Commission [2004] ECR II-1363, paragraph 52).

49 In particular, it is clear from that case-law that, if the measure constitutes the reply to a request in which substantial new facts are relied on, and whereby the administration is asked to reconsider its previous decision, that measure cannot be regarded as merely confirmatory, since it constitutes a decision taken on the basis of those facts and thus contains a new factor as compared with the previous decision. The existence of substantial new facts may justify the submission of a request for reconsideration of a previous decision which has become definitive. Conversely, if the request for reconsideration is not based on substantial new facts, an action against the decision refusing to reconsider it must be declared inadmissible (see, to that effect, Inpesca v Commission, paragraph 49, and the order in SGL Carbon v Commission, paragraph 54).

50 It must be observed that, in this case, the evidence relied on by the applicant in support of its request for re-examination of the decision to reject its application in no way constitutes substantial new facts. In the letter of 23 December 2004, the applicant merely challenges the letter of 13 December 2004 which it had just received in which the Delegation repeated the grounds which were the basis of the decision to reject its application. It simply inserted a table in which it matched the areas of technical assistance set out in point 7 of the contract notice with the references mentioned in its application form, numbered in the same way as the latter.

51 Likewise, it cannot be held that the letter of 13 December 2004, sent by the Delegation in response to the applicant's letter of 8 December 2004, in which the applicant had already set out its objections as to the reasons which were the basis of the rejection of its application, is based on new factors and was preceded by a re-examination of the applicant's situation.

52 In that letter, the Delegation essentially merely restated its position, as already set out in its decision of 2 December 2004. It states, in particular, that the selection was made solely on the basis of the criteria mentioned in point 7 of the contract notice and that all the applications received were then compared in order to determine the eight applicants to be short-listed. In the final paragraph, the Delegation states, finally, that the applicant's application did not satisfy the criterion relating to the minimum number of references (six out of the ten listed) to projects in the contract notice, whereas that criterion was fulfilled by the candidates selected.

53 The same is true as regards the note of 24 January 2005, in which the Head of Delegation merely repeated what the Head of Section, Financial Management and Procurement had stated in the letter of 13 December 2004.

54 It must be held, therefore, that none of the information contained in those two letters constitutes a new factor of such a kind as to confer on them the character of new decisions adversely affecting the applicant. Furthermore, there is nothing either in the file submitted to the Court of First Instance or in the final contested letter to indicate that the sending of that letter was preceded by a re-examination of the applicant's application (see, to that effect, the order in Case T-372/02 Internationaler Hilfsfonds v Commission [2003] ECR II-4389, paragraph 44). Moreover, the statement of reasons contained in those two letters is substantially the same as that contained in the first contested letter.

55 It must also be observed that according to settled case-law, where an applicant allows the time-limit for bringing an action against a decision unequivocally laying down a measure with legal effects affecting his interests and binding on him to expire, he cannot start time running again by asking the institution to reconsider its decision and by bringing an action against the refusal confirming the decision previously taken (Cobrecaf and Others v Commission, paragraph 44; see also, to that effect, the order in Case C-250/90 Control Union v Commission [1991] ECR I-3585, paragraph 14).

56 Finally, as regards the applicant's claim that it is clear from the letter sent to it by the Delegation that the latter had assured the applicant that its application would be re-examined and that it would reply within three weeks to the applicant's request for re-examination, the applicant's allegation that the conduct of the Commission was such as to give rise to pardonable confusion on its part as to the definitive nature of the letter of 2 December 2004 is unfounded, since the terms of that letter clearly disclose both the Delegation's decision to reject its application and the reasons for the decision.

57 In any event, even if the conduct of the Commission, assuming it were established, caused the application to be lodged out of time that would not have made the action admissible by derogation from the rules governing the time-limits for initiating proceedings. Such conduct could not have led the applicant to make an excusable error, that is to say, one which the Community judicature accepts as permitting a derogation from the rules governing time-limits for initiating proceedings. The concept of excusable error, the direct source of which is a concern for observance of the principles of legal certainty and the protection of legitimate expectations, can, according to settled case-law, concern only exceptional circumstances in which, in particular, the conduct of the institution concerned was, either alone or to a decisive extent, such as to give rise to pardonable confusion in the mind of a party acting in good faith and exercising all the diligence required of a normally prudent person (Case T-12/90 Bayer v Commission [1991] ECR II-219, paragraphs 28 and 29, confirmed on appeal in Case C-195/91 P Bayer v Commission [1994] ECR I-5619, paragraph 26).

58 Although such may be the case where the commencement of an action out of time is caused by the provision, by the institution concerned, of wrong information creating pardonable confusion in the mind of a party acting in the manner mentioned above, it cannot be the case where, as here, the party cannot harbour any doubt that the measure notified to it is in the nature of a decision (see, to that effect, the order in Case T-218/01 Laboratoire Monique Rémy v Commission [2002] ECR II–2139, paragraph 30, and the Opinion of Advocate General Tizzano in Case C–193/01 P Pitsiorlas v Counciland ECB [2003] ECR I-4837, I-4839, paragraph 20).

59 In any event, it must be observed that, in this case, the applicant has not established or even alleged the existence of excusable error.

60 In the light of all of the foregoing considerations, it must be held that, as the letters of 13 December 2004 and 24 January 2005 do not contain any new factor as regards the decision contained in the letter of 2 December 2004 and there was no re-examination of the applicant's position, those letters are merely decisions confirming the decision of 2 December 2004. Consequently, since the latter was not challenged within a period of two months from the date of its notification to the applicant and an additional 10 days on account of distance as referred to in Article 102(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the action must be dismissed as inadmissible.

Costs

61 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. As the applicant has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs, in accordance with the forms of order sought by the defendant.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Third Chamber)

hereby orders:

1. The action is dismissed as inadmissible.

2. The applicant shall pay the costs.

Action brought on 22 February 2005 by European Dynamics S.A. against the Commission of the European Communities

(Case T-106/05)

Language of the case: English

An action against the Commission of the European Communities was brought before the Court of First Instance of the European Communities on 22 February 2005 by European Dynamics S.A., established in Athens (Greece), represented by N. Kostakopoulos, lawyer.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

- annul the Commission's decision not to short-list the applicant's application, filed in response to the International Restricted Tender EuropeAid/117579/C/SV/TR for the "Technical Assistance to improve the Information and Communication Technology System in the State Institute of Statistics of Turkey - Upgrading the Statistical System of Turkey"1 and to short-list other candidates;

- annul the decision to reject the applicant's request to review its decision communicated to the applicant by the Commission's letter dated 13 December 2004;

- order the Commission to pay the applicant's legal and other costs and expenses incurred in connection with this application, even if the current application is rejected.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicant company filed an application in response to the Commission's International Restricted Tender EuropeAid/117579/C/SV/TR for the "Technical Assistance to improve the Information and Communication Technology System in the State Institute of Statistics of Turkey - Upgrading the Statistical System of Turkey". By the contested decision the applicant's application was not short-listed.

In support of its application to annul the contested decision the applicant contends that the defendant violated Regulation 1488/1996, the Financial Regulation2 and the regulation applying it, as well as Directive 92/503 by using evaluation criteria, that were not well specified in the call for tenders. According to the applicant, if the Commission intended to proceed to a comparative analysis of the candidates' capacities, as it appears to have done, then it should have noted so in the call for tenders.

The applicant also claims that the defendant committed manifest errors of appreciation in the evaluation of the bid it had submitted. The applicant contests the Commission's assessment of its technical capacity.

The applicant finally submits that the Commission failed to provide adequate reasons for its decision, in violation of Article 253 EC.

Action brought on 28 February 2005 by CEGELEC SA against European Parliament

(Case T-104/05)

Language of the case : French

An action against the European Parliament was brought before the Court of First Instance of the European Communities on 28 February 2005 by CEGELEC SA, whose registered office is in Brussels, represented by André Delvaux and Véronique Bertrand, lawyers.

The applicant claims that the Court of First Instance should:

- declare the action for annulment admissible;

- annul the decision of 15 December 2004, by which the European Parliament rejected the tender submitted by CEGELEC SA and awarded to GROUP 4 Technology SA the three components making up the contract for the supply and commissioning of video surveillance systems for the three main workplaces of the European Parliament, which was the subject of a contract notice published in Official Journal of the European Union S 61 of 26 March 2004, and for which the reasons were notified to CEGELEC SA by letter of 16 December 2004;

- order the European Parliament to pay the costs.

Please in law and main arguments

The applicant seeks annulment of the Parliament's decision to reject the applicant's tender in the call-for-tenders procedure concerning the provision of video surveillance systems at the European Parliament's three main workplaces and to award the contract to another tenderer.

In support of its application, the applicant describes a number of alleged infringements of the tendering conditions and of Regulations Nos 1605/2002 1 and 2432/2002 2 and of Directives 92/50 3, 93/36 4 and 2004/18 5, which consist more particularly of:

- inadequate statement of the reasons for the contested decision notified to the applicant;

- failure to apply the rules for awards of contract and the weighting system provided for in the tendering specifications;

- the fact that, in the light of its size, the tender accepted was not in conformity with the obligation to submit a tender in writing in one of the official languages of the Union;

- the fact that the Parliament, in breach of the principle of equal treatment for tenderers, awarded the contract on the basis of cameras which had not been demonstrated at the 'photos-tests' session;

- the alleged belatedness of the tender that was accepted.

THE GENERAL COURT (Third Chamber), composed of J. Azizi, President, E. Cremona (Rapporteur) and S. Frimodt Nielsen, Judges, Registrar: C. Kantza, Administrator, having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 20 January 2009,

gives the following

Judgment

Legal context

1 The European Maritime Safety Agency (EMSA) was established by Regulation (EC) No 1406/2002 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 27 June 2002 (OJ 2002 L 208, p. 1). Its task is to ensure a high, uniform and efficient level of maritime safety and of prevention of pollution caused by ships in the European Union.

2 Pursuant to Article 5(1) of that regulation, EMSA is a body of the Community and has legal personality.

3 Article 8 of Regulation No 1406/2002 provides:

‘1. The contractual liability of [EMSA] shall be governed by the law applicable to the contract in question.

2. The Court of Justice shall have jurisdiction to give judgment pursuant to any arbitration clause contained in a contract concluded by [EMSA].

3. In the case of non-contractual liability, [EMSA] shall, in accordance with the general principles common to the laws of the Member States, make good any damage caused by its departments or by its servants in the performance of their duties.

4. The Court of Justice shall have jurisdiction in disputes relating to the compensation for damage referred to in paragraph 3.

5. The personal liability of its servants towards [EMSA] shall be governed by the provisions laid down in the Staff Regulations or Conditions of employment applicable to them.’

4 Article 185(1) of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1) (‘the Financial Regulation’) provides:

‘The Commission shall adopt a framework financial regulation for the bodies set up by the Communities and having legal personality which actually receive grants charged to the budget. The financial rules of these bodies may not depart from the framework regulation except where their specific operating needs so require and with the Commission’s prior consent.’

5 Article 74 of Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2343/2002 of 23 December 2002 on the framework financial regulation for the bodies referred to in Article 185 of the Financial Regulation (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 72), in the version applicable at the material time, states:

‘As regards procurement, the relevant provisions of the general Financial Regulation and the detailed rules for implementing that Regulation shall apply.’

6 That provision is repeated in Article 74 of the EMSA financial regulation adopted by its Administrative Board on 3 July 2003.

7 The award of service contracts by the bodies referred to in Article 185 of the Financial Regulation is, accordingly, subject to the provisions of Title V of Part One of the Financial Regulation and to the provisions of Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1) (‘the implementing rules’). Those provisions are based on the relevant directives, in particular, with regard to service contracts, on Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended.

8 Under Article 89(1) of the Financial Regulation:

‘All public contracts financed in whole or in part by the budget shall comply with the principles of transparency, proportionality, equal treatment and non-discrimination.’

9 Article 97 of the Financial Regulation, in the version applicable at the material time, states:

‘1. The selection criteria for evaluating the capability of candidates or tenderers and the award criteria for evaluating the content of the tenders shall be defined in advance and set out in the call for tender.

2. Contracts may be awarded by the automatic award procedure or by the best-value-for-money procedure.’

10 In that regard, Article 138 of the implementing rules, in the version applicable at the material time, states:

2. The tender offering the best value for money shall be the one with the best price-quality ratio, taking into account criteria justified by the subject of the contract such as the price quoted, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, running costs, profitability, completion or delivery times, after-sales service and technical assistance.

3. The contracting authority shall specify, in the contract notice or in the [tender] specifications, the weighting it will apply to each of the criteria for determining best value for money.

The weighting applied to price in relation to the other criteria must not result in the neutralisation of price in the choice of contractor.

If, in exceptional cases, weighting is technically impossible, particularly on account of the subject of the contract, the contracting authority shall merely specify the decreasing order of importance in which the criteria are to be applied.'

11 Article 98 of the Financial Regulation provides:

'1. The arrangements for submitting tenders shall ensure that there is genuine competition and that the contents of tenders remain confidential until they are all opened simultaneously.

3. With the exception of the contracts involving small amounts ..., applications and tenders shall be opened by an opening board appointed for this purpose. Any tender or application declared by the board not to satisfy the conditions laid down shall be rejected.

4. All applications or tenders declared by the opening board to satisfy the conditions laid down shall be evaluated, on the basis of the selection and award criteria laid down in the documents relating to the call for tenders, by a committee appointed for this purpose with a view to proposing to whom the contract should be awarded.'

12 In the version applicable at the material time, Article 143(2) of the implementing rules provided:

'Tenderers may submit tenders:

(a) by post, for which purposes the invitation to tender documents shall specify that the relevant date is to be the date of despatch by registered post, as evidenced by the postmark; or

(b) by hand-delivery to the premises of the institution by the tenderer in person or by an agent, including courier service; for which purposes the invitation to tender documents shall specify, in addition to the information referred to in point (a) of Article 130(2), the department to which tenders are to be delivered against a signed and dated receipt.'

13 Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation provides:

'The contracting authority shall notify all candidates or tenderers whose applications or tenders are rejected of the grounds on which the decision was taken, and all tenderers whose tenders are admissible and who make a request in writing of the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the tenderer to whom the contract is awarded.

However, certain details need not be disclosed where disclosure would hinder application of the law, would be contrary to the public interest or would harm the legitimate business interests of public or private undertakings or could distort fair competition between those undertakings.'

14 In that regard, Article 149 of the implementing rules, in the version applicable at the material time, states:

'1. The contracting authorities shall as soon as possible inform candidates and tenderers of decisions reached concerning the award of the contract, including the grounds for any decision not to award a contract for which there has been competitive tendering or to recommence the procedure.

2. The contracting authority shall, within not more than fifteen calendar days from the date on which a written request is received, communicate the information provided for in Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation.'

Background to the dispute

15 The applicant, Evropaïki Dynamiki – Proigmena Systimata Tilepikoinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE, is a company established under Greek law, active in the field of information technology and communications.

16 The present case concerns two calls for tender, relating to 'SafeSeaNet validation and further development', under reference EMSA C–1/01/04–2004 ('call for tenders C–1/01/04'), and to 'specification and development of a marine casualty database, network and management system (marine casualty information platform)', under reference EMSA C–2/06/04 ('call for tenders C–2/06/04').

1. Tendering procedure EMSA C-1/01/04

17 By a contract notice of 1 July 2004 published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2004 S 126), EMSA launched call for tenders C-1/01/04. The time-limit for submitting tenders was 9 August 2004.

18 Point 13 of the tender specifications, entitled 'Criteria for the award of the contract', is worded as follows:

'… The contract will be awarded to the tenderer who submits the most economically advantageous bid, as assessed on the basis of the following factors:

(a) Technical evaluation criteria in their order of importance as weighted by percentage:

1. Proposed methodology for the project – this includes the detailed proposals of how the project would be carried out including milestones and deliverables (as defined in [point] 3 [of the tender specifications]). (40%)

2. Understanding of the specifications in terms of reference and the succinct presentation of that understanding. (20%)

3. Quality of the operational services (Helpdesk). (10%)

(b) Total price. (30%)

Only bids that have reached a total score of a minimum of 70% and a minimum score of 60% for each criteri[on] will be taken into consideration for awarding the contract.

19 With regard to the first of those three award criteria, point 3 of the tender specifications, entitled 'Reports and documents to be submitted', provided that tenders were to include detailed information regarding the project implementation structure, each work package was to be clearly defined, and the project implementation structure was to include (as a minimum) the following: horizontal activities (point 3.1); a description of the project management team and responsibilities (point 3.2); quality control (point 3.3); deliverables on project management level (point 3.4); work package description and relations (point 3.5); and other relevant information concerning the submission of reports (point 3.6).

20 On 1 July 2004, the invitation to tender and the tender specifications were sent to the applicant.

21 The applicant claims that it sent to EMSA, by fax of 31 July 2004, a request for additional information. It claims to have repeated that request by fax of 1 August 2004.

22 By email of 2 August 2004, EMSA informed the applicant that the fax of 1 August 2004, containing that request for information, had been received incomplete and asked it to resend its questions by email, which the applicant did that same day. In that email, the applicant stated that it had tried to send the fax on 31 July 2004 and again on 1 August 2004, but that there seemed to have been a problem in transmitting the fax. It therefore asked that its request be dealt with, since the last day for submitting such requests, namely Saturday, 31 July 2004, was not a working day.

23 By email of 3 August 2004, EMSA informed the applicant that its questions would not be answered on account of their late submission, in accordance with point 8 of the invitation to tender. By email of the same day, the applicant pointed out once more that it had tried in vain to send that request for information on the days indicated and that, in any event, since the deadline for submitting questions was Saturday, 31 July 2004, it should have been extended to the next working day, namely, Monday 2 August 2004.

24 On 9 August 2004, the applicant submitted its tender.

25 By letter of 6 December 2004, EMSA informed the applicant that its tender had not been selected because its price/quality ratio was worse than that of the successful tender.

26 By fax of 7 December 2004, the applicant asked EMSA for the name of the successful tenderer, the characteristics and relative advantages and the scores given under each award criterion to both the applicant's tender and that of the successful tenderer, a copy of the evaluation committee report and a comparison between its financial offer and that of the successful tenderer.

27 By letter dated 16 December 2004, which the applicant states it did not receive until 7 January 2005, EMSA informed the applicant of the scores achieved by its tender under each award criterion, as well as the total score of the successful tender. With regard to the latter's characteristics, EMSA stated as follows:

'clear approach in terms of methodology to be used for managing the whole project. The description of the tasks is realistic (well completed with tables indicating the effort and resources affected, Gantt diagram and breakdown of tasks); the number of man days offered is sufficient; deliverables have been assigned per type of task; good understanding of the project and good approach in the management plan; the proposed Service Level Agreement complies with the requirements of the project.'

28 On 5 January 2005, the applicant sent a fax to EMSA stating that it had not been informed about the outcome of the contract award process in respect of the two calls for tender within the time-limits imposed by the Financial Regulation. It also complained that EMSA had proceeded to the signature of contracts with the selected tenderers and published this information in the Official Journal.

29 EMSA replied, by letter and fax of 7 January 2005, attaching a copy of its letter of 16 December 2004.

30 By fax of 18 January 2005, the applicant pointed out that it had received the letter from EMSA dated 16 December 2004 late. It also complained that EMSA had infringed the Financial Regulation in that it had failed to answer the applicant's request for information within the time-limit, had not informed the applicant of the name of the successful tenderer, the amount of its financial offer, or the technical evaluation of its tender in comparison to the applicant's own, and had decided to proceed to signature of the contract. Furthermore, it asserted that the reference made by EMSA, in its letter of 16 December 2004, to the score given to the applicant's tender by the evaluation committee for each award criterion was not detailed and did not include reasons for its decision. Finally, the applicant requested a number of clarifications with regard to the evaluation committee's assessment.

31 By fax of 9 February 2005, EMSA replied to the applicant, informing it of the name of the successful tenderer and stating that the applicant had already received the result of the tender evaluation and that more detailed information, such as financial and commercial details of the successful tenderer, would harm that party's legitimate interests and could therefore not be disclosed.

2. Tendering procedure EMSA C-2/06/04

32 By a contract notice of 3 July 2004, published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2004 S 128), EMSA launched call for tenders C–2/06/04. The time-limit for submitting tenders was 9 August 2004.

33 Point 13 of the tender specifications, entitled 'Criteria for the award of the contract', reads as follows:

'... The contract will be awarded to the tenderer who submits the most economically advantageous bid, as assessed on the basis of the following factors as weighted by percentage:

(a) Technical evaluation criteria: 70% in total

Technical criteria in their order of importance – proposed methodology – this must include detailed proposals of how the work as a whole would be carried out and by whom (named individuals) including key milestones and deliverables (40%)

– understanding of the specification in the terms of reference and a succinct presentation of that understanding, and previous experience with comparable work (20%)

– quality of proposed tools, programs and modules (10%)

(b) Total price: (30%)

Only bids that have reached a total score of a minimum of 70% and a minimum score of 60% for each criteri[on] will be taken into consideration for awarding the contract.'

34 On 9 July 2004, the invitation to tender and the tender specifications were sent to the applicant.

35 By email of 26 July 2004, sent to all undertakings which had shown an interest in the call for tenders, the EMSA project officer responsible supplied a certain amount of additional information concerning the call for tenders in question.

36 As stated in paragraph 21 above, the applicant claims that it sent, by fax of 31 July 2004, a request for additional information also in respect of this call for tenders. It claims to have repeated that request on 1 August 2004.

37 On 2 August 2004, EMSA received that request for information by email. In that email, the applicant claims that it had tried to send the attached documents on 31 July 2004 and again on 1 August 2004 but that there had been a transmission problem with the fax. The applicant thus asked that the attached requests be considered, since the last day for their submission, namely Saturday, 31 July 2004, was not a working day.

38 By email of 3 August 2004 in response to requests for clarification of certain points in the tender specifications, EMSA sent to the applicant and to the other interested companies additional information concerning call for tenders C–2/06/04.

39 On 5 August 2004, EMSA informed the applicant that it would not reply to its questions because of their late submission, in accordance with point 8 of the invitation to tender.

40 On 9 August 2004, the applicant submitted a tender in respect of call for tenders C–2/06/04.

41 On 25 August 2004, the tender opening board – composed of four persons and appointed by EMSA on 16 July 2004 – opened the tenders, noting, in particular, that the tender submitted by SSPA Sweden AB ('SSPA'), received on 10 August 2004, namely one day after the deadline for the submission of tenders, required written confirmation of when it was despatched, since the envelope containing it did not bear any postmark.

42 On 26 August 2004, the president of the opening board sent a letter to SSPA, asking it to supply proof that the tender had been submitted within the deadline and by the method specified in the invitation to tender.

43 On examination of the documents produced by SSPA, the opening board decided, on 21 September 2004, to accept the tender submitted by that company.

44 By letter of 30 November 2004, which the applicant states it did not receive until 13 December 2004, EMSA informed it that its tender had not been selected because the price/quality ratio was worse than that of the successful tender.

45 On 7 December 2004, the applicant sent a fax to EMSA, which stated as its subject and referred to call for tenders C-1/01/04, requesting EMSA, inter alia, to inform it of whether its tender in respect of call for tenders C–2/06/04 had been accepted or rejected and to send it the same information as that requested for the first call for tenders.

46 By fax of 5 January 2005, the applicant indicated to EMSA that it had not received any information about the outcome of the two calls for tender within the time-limit imposed by the Financial Regulation. The applicant also complained about the fact that EMSA had proceeded to the signature of contracts with the successful tenderers and published this information in the Official Journal.

47 EMSA replied by letter of 6 January 2005, also sent by fax on 7 January 2005, giving the scores achieved by the applicant's tender, as well as the total score of the successful tender and a copy of the contract award notice published in the Official Journal containing the name of the successful tenderer. With regard to the characteristics of the successful tender, EMSA stated as follows:

'[t]he offer of the successful bidder reflected relevant expertise and was presented as a well-prepared proposal. The tasks and the role of the project leader were reasonably described. The team leader would supervise a team with a high degree of relevant expertise from prior projects which perfectly match the tendered project. A very good understanding of the project has been proven. The proposed tools have already been successfully applied and are compatible with the IT frame of EMSA.'

48 In response to that letter, the applicant sent a fax to EMSA on 18 January 2005 in which it complained that EMSA had infringed the Financial Regulation, because it had failed to answer the applicant's request for information within the time-limit imposed, had failed to communicate to the applicant the name of the successful tenderer, the amount of its financial offer, or the technical evaluation of its tender in comparison to the applicant's own, and had decided to proceed to signature of the contract. Finally, it requested a number of clarifications concerning the evaluation committee's assessment.

49 EMSA replied to the applicant by letter of 9 February 2005, stating that the applicant had already received the relevant information and that more detailed information, such as certain financial and commercial details of the successful tenderer, would harm that party's legitimate interests and could therefore not be disclosed.

Procedure and forms of order sought by the parties

50 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 14 February 2005, the applicant brought the present action.

51 Acting upon a report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court (Third Chamber) decided to open the oral procedure and, by way of the measures of organisation of procedure provided for in Article 64 of its Rules of Procedure, requested the parties to produce certain documents and EMSA to reply in writing to a question. The parties complied with those requests within the time-limit set.

52 The parties presented oral argument and their answers to the Court's questions at the hearing on 20 January 2009.

53 The applicant claims that the Court should:

– annul EMSA's decisions not to accept its tenders and to award the contracts to the successful tenderers;

– annul all of EMSA's subsequent decisions relating to the calls for tender at issue;

– order EMSA to pay the costs, even if the application is dismissed.

54 EMSA contends that the Court should:

– declare the action inadmissible or, in the alternative, dismiss it as unfounded;

– order the applicant to pay the costs.

Admissibility

55 Without formally raising an objection of inadmissibility, EMSA has put forward two pleas of inadmissibility, alleging that the Court does not have jurisdiction to hear an action brought on the basis of Article 230 EC against an act of EMSA and alleging the formal irregularity of the application. First of all, the Court will examine the first plea of inadmissibility.

1. The jurisdiction of the Court to hear an action brought on the basis of Article 230 EC against an act of EMSA

Arguments of the parties

56 EMSA submits that its acts, because of its status, are not subject to review pursuant to Article 230 EC. Since that article does not contain any explicit or implicit reference to acts of European Union agencies or bodies other than the institutions mentioned therein, the Court cannot review the legality of those acts. In its submission, Case 294/83 Les Verts v Parliament [1986] ECR 1339, 'Les Verts', is not applicable in this case, since it concerned review by the Courts of a decision of an institution and not of an agency.

57 Article 8 of Regulation No 1406/2002, by providing only for the jurisdiction of the Court of Justice in disputes relating to the contractual and non-contractual liability of EMSA, confirms, a contrario, that neither the General Court nor the Court of Justice has jurisdiction to review the legality of its acts. In addition, given that that provision refers only to the Court of Justice, it must be inferred that if any court has jurisdiction to give a ruling, it ought to be the Court of Justice and not the General Court.

58 The inadmissibility of an application for annulment of a decision taken by an agency is, moreover, confirmed by Case C–160/03 Spain v Eurojust [2005] ECR I–2077, paragraphs 35 to 37 and 40, and by the order in Case T–148/97 Keeling v OHIM [1998] ECR II–2217.

59 Since that judgment and that order introduce a double test in order to determine whether Article 230 EC applies – namely a reference to the body in that article and the lack of effective review by the Courts –, that would mean that both conditions must be satisfied and, in the present case, EMSA does not satisfy the first, since it is not referred to in Article 230 EC. In addition, even if each of those conditions were sufficient in itself, the second would not be satisfied, since Article 8 of Regulation No 1406/2002 provides for review by the Courts but limits its scope to disputes relating to the contractual and non-contractual liability of EMSA.

60 The applicant contests that plea of inadmissibility.

Findings of the Court

61 At the outset, it must be noted that agencies established on the basis of secondary legislation, such as EMSA, are not included in the list of institutions in the first paragraph of Article 230 EC.

62 It should also be noted that Article 8 of Regulation No 1406/2002 provides that the Court of Justice is to have jurisdiction in disputes relating to compensation for damage in the case of EMSA's non-contractual liability, and to give judgment pursuant to any arbitration clause contained in a contract concluded by EMSA. However, that regulation does not provide that the Court of Justice has jurisdiction to give judgment on actions for annulment against other decisions adopted by EMSA.

63 Nevertheless, those considerations do not preclude the Court from reviewing the legality of those acts of EMSA which are not referred to in Article 8 of Regulation No 1406/2002.

64 As the Court observed in Case T–411/06 Sogelma v EAR [2008] ECR II–2771, paragraph 36, referring to Les Verts, paragraph 56 above, the European Community is a community based on the rule of law and the Treaty has established a complete system of legal remedies and procedures designed to permit the Court of Justice to review the legality of measures adopted by the institutions. The general scheme of the Treaty is to make a direct action available against all measures adopted by the institutions which are intended to have legal effects. On that basis, the Court of Justice accordingly concluded, in Les Verts, paragraph 56 above, that an action for annulment could be brought against measures of the European Parliament intended to have legal effects vis-à-vis third parties, even though the provision of the Treaty on actions for annulment, in the version then in force, referred only to acts of the Council and the Commission. The Court of Justice held that an interpretation of that provision which excluded measures adopted by the European Parliament from those which can be contested would have led to a result contrary both to the spirit of the Treaty as expressed in Article 164 of the EC Treaty (now Article 220 EC) and to its general scheme (see, to that effect, Les Verts, paragraph 56 above, paragraphs 23 to 25).

65 The general principle to be elicited from that judgment is that any act adopted by a body such as EMSA, which is intended to have legal effects vis-à-vis third parties, must be amenable to review by the Courts.

66 It is true that Les Verts, paragraph 56 above, refers only to the institutions, while EMSA, as noted in paragraph 61 above, is not one of the institutions referred to in Article 230 EC. Nevertheless, the situation of such bodies, endowed with the power to adopt acts intended to have legal effects vis-à-vis third parties – which is without any doubt the case where, in public procurement procedures, those bodies adopt decisions rejecting the tender of one tenderer and awarding the contract to another tenderer – is identical to the situation which gave rise to the judgment in Les Verts, paragraph 56 above. It cannot therefore be acceptable, in a community based on the rule of law, that such acts escape all review by the Courts (see, to that effect, Sogelma v EAR, paragraph 64 above, paragraph 37).

67 It follows that decisions which are adopted by EMSA in public procurement procedures and are intended to have legal effects vis-à-vis third parties are acts open to challenge.

68 That conclusion is not called into question by the case-law cited by EMSA in support of its argument concerning the inadmissibility of the action.

69 With regard to Spain v Eurojust, paragraph 58 above, it is true that the Court of Justice held in that case that the acts contested were not included in the list of acts the legality of which it may review under Article 230 EC (paragraph 37 of that judgment). However, in the following paragraph of that judgment, the Court observed that Article 41 EU, applicable to that case, did not provide that Article 230 EC is to apply to the provisions on police and judicial cooperation in criminal matters in Title VI of the Treaty on European Union, the jurisdiction of the Court of Justice in such matters being defined in Article 35 EU, to which Article 46(b) EU refers. Furthermore, as regards the right to effective judicial protection, the Court of Justice also held, in paragraphs 41 and 42 of that judgment, that the acts contested in that case were not exempt from all review by the Courts (see, to that effect, Sogelma v EAR, paragraph 64 above, paragraph 45).

70 In the order in Keeling v OHIM, paragraph 58 above, the General Court similarly did not confine itself to stating, in paragraph 32, that the Office for Harmonisation in the Internal Market (Trade Marks and Designs) (OHIM) was not one of the institutions of the Community listed in Article 4 of the EC Treaty (now Article 7 EC) and was not mentioned in the first paragraph of Article 173 of the EC Treaty (now Article 230 EC), but also found, in paragraph 33, that other remedies were potentially available against the contested decision of the President of OHIM, mentioning, inter alia, Article 179 of the EC Treaty (now Article 236 EC). That order therefore does not preclude an action lying under Article 230 EC against a decision of a body not mentioned in that article (see, to that effect, Sogelma v EAR, paragraph 64 above, paragraph 46).

71 The case-law relied on by EMSA does not therefore call into question the finding that an act of such a body which is intended to have legal effects vis-à-vis third parties is not exempt from review by the Courts.

72 Moreover, that solution cannot be called into question by the interpretation of Sogelma v EAR, paragraph 64 above, relied on by EMSA at the hearing, to the effect that its situation is different from that of the European Agency for Reconstruction (EAR), since that agency was made responsible by the Commission, in connection with the implementation of Community assistance to Serbia and Montenegro, for preparing and evaluating invitations to tender and awarding contracts. It follows, EMSA argued, that decisions which the Commission would have taken itself, if it had not delegated its powers, could not cease to be subject to review by the Courts solely because the Commission had delegated its powers to the EAR, if a legal vacuum was not to be created.

73 EMSA's interpretation disregards the terms of paragraphs 39 and 40 of Sogelma v EAR, paragraph 64 above, from which it is apparent that the argument based on the nature of the power on the basis of which the EAR acts is referred to by the Court for the sake of completeness and is intended only to reinforce the conclusion reached in paragraph 37 of that judgment, in which the Court states the general principle that any act of a Community body intended to produce legal effects vis-à-vis third parties must be open to review by the Courts. Moreover, contrary to EMSA's submissions, the identical risk of creating a legal vacuum would exist in the present case, if it were necessary to consider that the acts in question are exempt from review by the Courts.

74 Finally, with regard to EMSA's argument that it is possible to deduce from Article 8 of Regulation No 1406/2002 – which refers only to the Court of Justice – that if any court has jurisdiction to hear the present case, it ought to be the Court of Justice, not the General Court, it is sufficient to note that the words 'Court of Justice' are used here generically to designate the institution which now includes the Court of Justice, the General Court and a specialised court, the European Union Civil Service Tribunal. Consequently, the reference in Article 8 of Regulation No 1406/2002 to the 'Court of Justice' must be taken to be a reference to that institution and not to one of the courts of which it is composed (see, to that effect and by analogy, Case C–294/02 Commission v AMI Semiconductor Belgium and Others [2005] ECR I–2175, paragraph 49).

75 Thus the effect of the first paragraph of Article 230 EC, as interpreted in the light of Les Verts, paragraph 56 above (paragraphs 23 to 25), and of Sogelma v EAR, paragraph 64 above (paragraphs 36 and 37), is that the present action is admissible. Moreover, that solution is confirmed by the first paragraph of Article 263 TFEU, pursuant to which the Court of Justice of the European Union has jurisdiction to review the legality of acts of bodies, offices or agencies of the Union intended to produce legal effects vis-à-vis third parties. Consequently, the first plea of inadmissibility raised by EMSA must be rejected.

2. The exceptio obscuri libelli

Arguments of the parties

76 By its plea alleging that the application is unclear, EMSA submits, in essence, that the applicant fails to specify which plea is applicable to which call for tenders and, accordingly, that the application, which confuses the two calls for tender, does not contain a sufficiently clear and precise summary of the pleas relied on, in breach of the Statute of the Court of Justice, the Rules of Procedure of the General Court and the relevant case-law.

77 The applicant disputes that assertion.

Findings of the Court

78 Under the first paragraph of Article 21 of the Statute of the Court of Justice, applicable to proceedings before the General Court by virtue of the first paragraph of Article 53 thereof, and under Article 44(1)(c) of the Rules of Procedure of the General Court, an application must set out the subject-matter of the proceedings and a summary of the pleas in law on which it is based. The information given must be sufficiently clear and precise to enable the defendant to prepare his defence and the Court to exercise its review, if necessary without other supporting information. In order to ensure legal certainty and the sound administration of justice, if an action is to be admissible the essential facts and law on which it is based must be apparent from the text of the application itself, at the very least summarily, provided that the statement is coherent and intelligible (see, to that effect, Case T–387/94 Asia Motor France and Others v Commission [1996] ECR II–961, paragraphs 106 and 107; Case T–210/00 Biret et Cie v Council [2002] ECR II–47, paragraph 34; and Case T–209/01 Honeywell v Commission [2005] ECR II–5527, paragraphs 55 and 56, and the case-law cited).

79 In the present case, the application satisfies the requirements laid down in the Rules of Procedure, since it enables both the defendant and the Court to identify the EMSA conduct complained of and the facts and circumstances which gave rise to the dispute. Furthermore, it is apparent from the documents before the Court that EMSA was able to organise its defence as necessary and to develop detailed arguments in response to each complaint raised by the applicant.

80 The plea alleging the formal irregularity of the application must, therefore, be rejected.

Substance

81 The applicant raises four pleas in law in support of its claims for annulment. The first alleges breach of the principles of good faith, good administration and diligence. The second alleges infringement of the Financial Regulation, the implementing rules and Directive 92/50. The third alleges manifest errors of assessment by EMSA. The fourth alleges lack of relevant information and failure to state reasons. In addition, following the lodging by EMSA, as annexes to its defence, of the administrative files relating to the two tendering procedures at issue, the applicant put forward, at the stage of the reply, an ad hoc series of complaints, in support of the pleas set out in its application, concerning a number of alleged breaches which are claimed to be apparent from those administrative files and, with regard to tendering procedure C-2/06/04, a separate plea in law alleging non-compliance of the tender submitted by the successful tenderer with the arrangements for submitting tenders set out in point 2 of the invitation to tender. The Court will first examine the claim for annulment of the decisions taken by EMSA in connection with tendering procedure C-2/06/04.

1. The claim for annulment of the decisions taken by EMSA in connection with tendering procedure C-2/06/04

The plea alleging non-compliance of the tender submitted by the successful tenderer

Arguments of the parties

82 In its reply, the applicant puts forward a new plea in law, alleging that the tender of the successful tenderer should not have been considered to have satisfied point 2(a) of the invitation to tender C–2/06/04. It is apparent from the file that the successful tenderer, not having any proof of the despatch of its tender, merely supplied ex post facto a certification letter from an official of the Swedish post office stating that the item had indeed been despatched on time. In the applicant's submission, a letter from a postal employee cannot replace 'the stamp of the post office' and 'act as proof'; accordingly it cannot constitute sufficient proof. Acceptance of such an irregularity can, according to the applicant, create a dangerous precedent and create uncertainty with regard to compliance with deadlines in public procurement.

83 EMSA counters that the purpose of point 2(a) of the invitation to tender at issue was to have a means of checking that all tenderers had delivered their tenders before the deadline. The decision of the evaluation committee to accept an alternative means of proof was, accordingly, reasonable, since in this case the post office, contrary to its normal practice, had not postmarked the item.

Findings of the Court

84 As a preliminary point, it must be noted that the plea alleging that the tender submitted by the successful tenderer in respect of call for tenders C–2/06/04 did not comply with the arrangements for lodging tenders set out in point 2 of the invitation to tender, raised by the applicant in its reply, constitutes a new plea. Nevertheless, it can be admitted on the basis of Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure since it is based on matters of law or of fact which came to light in the course of the procedure, namely the written record of the tender opening board in relation to that call for tenders, which EMSA put before the Court as an annex to its defence.

85 According to settled case-law, the contracting authority is required to ensure at each stage of a tendering procedure equal treatment and, thereby, equality of opportunity for all the tenderers (see, to that effect, Case C–496/99 P Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta [2004] ECR I–3801, paragraph 108; see also, to that effect, judgments of 12 July 2007 in Case T–250/05 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, not published in the ECR, paragraph 45, and the case-law cited, and of 12 March 2008 in Case T–332/03 European Service Network v Commission, not published in the ECR, paragraph 122). A system of undistorted competition, as laid down in the Treaty, can be guaranteed only if equality of opportunity is secured as between the various economic operators (Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, paragraph 46).

86 It should also be borne in mind that, under Article 98(1) of the Financial Regulation, '[t]he arrangements for submitting tenders shall ensure that there is genuine competition and that the contents of tenders remain confidential until they are all opened simultaneously'.

87 In the present case, the contract notice had fixed 9 August 2004 as the closing date for lodging tenders. Furthermore, the invitation to tender – which, pursuant to Article 130(2)(a) of the implementing rules, must at least specify 'the rules governing the lodging and presentation of tenders, including in particular the closing date and time for submission' – stated, in point 2, that tenders could be submitted either by registered mail to the address given and posted not later than 9 August 2004 (the stamp of the post office acting as proof), or by hand-delivery to the address given, made not later than 16:00 on 9 August 2004, submission of the tender being attested, in that case, by a signed and dated receipt issued by an official of EMSA. The invitation to tender also stated that any type of delivery other than registered mail, including delivery by 'private courier services', would be considered 'hand delivery'.

88 Those arrangements for communication comply with Article 143(2) of the implementing rules, cited in paragraph 12 above, under which 'tenderers may submit tenders … by post, for which purposes the invitation to tender documents shall specify that the relevant date is to be the date of despatch by registered post, as evidenced by the postmark, or … by hand-delivery to the premises of the institution by the tenderer in person or by an agent, including courier service, for which purposes the invitation to tender documents shall specify … the department to which tenders are to be delivered against a signed and dated receipt'. In that regard, it should be noted that, under Article 2 (9) of Directive 97/67/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 15 December 1997 on common rules for the development of the internal market of Community postal services and the improvement of quality of service (OJ 1998 L 15, p. 14), a 'registered item' means a service providing a flat-rate guarantee against risks of loss, theft or damage and supplying the sender, where appropriate upon request, with proof of the handing in of the postal item and/or of its delivery to the addressee.

89 Moreover, also under point 2 of the invitation to tender, non-compliance with those formal conditions was to entail rejection of the tenders at the opening session.

90 According to a first written record drafted by the tender opening board on 25 August 2004, SSPA's tender – namely that which was subsequently accepted – was not submitted with proof of despatch and, if it was to be declared to have satisfied the conditions laid down, it was therefore necessary for the tenderer to produce written confirmation of despatch. It is apparent from a second written record, dated 21 September 2004, that, in response to a letter from the tender opening board requesting it to produce that written confirmation, SSPA sent EMSA a certification letter from an employee of the Swedish post office confirming that the tender had been despatched in time. The tender opening board therefore considered SSPA's tender to have satisfied the conditions laid down.

91 The documents annexed to the second written record were produced for the file by EMSA in response to a measure of organisation of procedure ordered by the Court. They include copies of the envelopes containing the tender sent by SSPA, as received by EMSA, copies of the correspondence between them and copies of the receipt of the post office in Gothenburg dated 6 August 2004 and of the declaration signed by an employee of that post office dated 2 September 2004 confirming, in essence, that the envelope deemed to contain the tender in question had indeed been despatched by that post office on 6 August 2004.

92 In the first place, it is apparent from those documents that SSPA's tender reached EMSA on 10 August 2004, that is to say a day after the deadline for submission of tenders, and that there was no post office stamp, either of despatch or receipt, on the envelopes containing that tender.

93 In the second place, although EMSA stated, in the letter sent to SSPA on 26 August 2004, that 'the envelope did neither carry any indication that it was submitted in the form of post office registered mail, nor did it carry any date of submission to the post office', and asked SSPA to provide it with 'any further proof that [the tender had been submitted to EMSA] within the deadline and in the form asked for in [the] invitation to tender', SSPA sent it a mere receipt from a post office in Gothenburg.

94 In that regard, the argument put forward by EMSA at the hearing, that that receipt proves that the letter was logged – which can be equated, more or less, to its being registered – cannot succeed. Firstly, such a receipt cannot in any way be equated to a formal receipt for handing in a registered item, which, irrespective of whether the envelope is postmarked, is, as a general rule, issued to the sender as proof that the postal item has been handed in, as set out in paragraph 88 above. The receipt from Gothenburg does not bear the name of the sender, the name of the addressee, or even the destination of the item or anything else to show that it related to the despatch of a registered item. Furthermore, it is apparent from the file that EMSA considered another tenderer's bid to have satisfied the requirements laid down solely upon production by that tenderer, of its own initiative, of a formal receipt indicating the date on which the registered item was sent and a digital code linking it to the envelope containing that tender, although the tender had initially been excluded on the ground that the envelope containing it was stamped only with the date of receipt. Secondly, contrary to the suggestion made by EMSA at the hearing, it is clear from the file that it was not the receipt from Gothenburg which, finally, induced it to consider SSPA's tender to have satisfied the requirements laid down, but the declaration of the employee of the Swedish post office, whereas, in the case of the abovementioned tenderer, EMSA considered the formal receipt which that tenderer submitted after learning that its tender had been rejected to be sufficient proof.

95 In the third place, the declaration by the employee of the post office in Gothenburg states: 'I hereby certify …, after having examined the attached copy of the receipt … along with the photocopy of the delivered envelope, that this envelope was mailed from the above named post office on Friday, 6th August, 2004'. The employee of the Swedish post office thus declared that he had despatched the envelope deemed to contain SSPA's tender on 6 August 2004, firstly, without however explaining why there was no post office stamp on that envelope and, secondly, omitting to indicate whether the item had been sent by registered mail. When asked at the hearing about that point, EMSA was unable to show that the item had been sent by registered mail.

96 There is, therefore, nothing in the file to show that SSPA's tender was submitted by registered mail.

97 Accordingly, the question arises whether SSPA's tender ought to have been, first, opened by the tender opening board and, subsequently, examined by the evaluation committee, even though it was received at EMSA on the day after the closing date for the submission of tenders.

98 In that regard, it should be borne in mind that the closing date and time for receipt of tenders were fixed, in the contract notice, on 9 August 2004 at 16:00. It is clear from point 2 of the invitation to tender that, as a general rule, tenders were to reach EMSA no later than the date and time stated above, whether they were tenders submitted by hand delivery or tenders delivered by private courier services, the only exception to that rule being tenders sent by post office registered mail, which had to be posted no later than 9 August 2004 – although receipt could be later – the stamp of the post office acting as proof of the date of posting. It follows that, as an exception, the possibility of having tenders arrive after the closing date and time fixed, as a rule, for their receipt must be interpreted strictly.

99 It should next be observed that point 2(a) of the invitation to tender sets out two distinct formal conditions to be met by a tenderer intending to submit its tender by post, which are the closing date for posting the tender and the fact that it must be sent by registered mail. Those conditions, although complementary, are of independent significance in the assessment of whether a tender has been submitted in compliance with the provisions in the invitation to tender documents and Article 143 of the implementing rules.

100 Compliance with those two conditions – the importance of which had been expressly pointed out by EMSA in the letter sent to SSPA on 26 August 2004 – must, accordingly, be checked by the contracting authority, more specifically by the tender opening board, before it goes on to open the tenders and, subsequently, to examine them. In that regard, the tender opening board does not have any discretion: once it has been found that a tender received after the closing date was not sent in accordance with the requirements under the invitation to tender and the implementing rules, the board can only reject that tender, as pointed out in paragraph 86 above.

101 Moreover, the stage of opening the tenders – the rules for conduct of which are set out in Article 145 of the implementing rules – is characterised precisely by its formal nature and is intended to enable a board, made up of at least three persons, to assess and ensure compliance with the rules concerning, in particular, the arrangements for submission of the tenders, having regard to the importance of those rules in public procurement procedures. The members of the board are to initial, in particular, the documents proving the date and time of despatch of each tender and sign the written record of the opening of the tenders received, which is to identify those tenders which satisfy the requirements and those which do not, and which is to give the grounds on which tenders were rejected for non-compliance, by reference to the methods of submitting tenders referred to in Article 143 of the implementing rules. These are, therefore, formalities compliance with which is essential for the purposes of public procurement procedures.

102 In the light of the foregoing considerations and of the principle of equal treatment of tenderers, compliance with which must, as set out in paragraph 85 above, be ensured at each stage of a tendering procedure, the tender submitted by SSPA in the present case should not have been opened or accepted by the tender opening board since, in the absence of a post office stamp as evidence and of proof that it was sent by registered mail, it should have been deemed to have reached EMSA on the date of its receipt, namely 10 August 2004, that is to say, out of time. It follows that the opening board was wrong to open SSPA's tender and, subsequently, that the evaluation committee was wrong to evaluate it and rank it in first place.

103 According to settled case-law, a procedural defect leads to the annulment in whole or in part of a decision only if it is shown that, but for that defect, the administrative procedure could have had a different outcome and, consequently, the contested decision might have been different (see, to that effect, Case T-345/03 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission [2008] ECR II-341, paragraph 147, and European Service Network v Commission, paragraph 85 above, paragraph 130, and the case-law cited).

104 In the present case, if SSPA's tender had not been taken into consideration by EMSA because of its non-compliance by reference to the methods for submission referred to in point 2 of the invitation to tender and in Article 143 of the implementing rules, the administrative procedure would clearly have had a different outcome, since SSPA's tender would not have been evaluated by the evaluation committee and the award decision, which is based inter alia on a comparative examination of the tenders, would clearly have been different.

105 Furthermore, in the light of the fact that, in the present case, only two undertakings exceeded the minimum threshold indicated in point 13.1(b) of the tender specifications, if SSPA's tender had been rejected when the tenders were opened, only one tender would have remained on conclusion of the procurement procedure for the contract in question. In those circumstances, the contracting authority – since it was no longer in a position to compare the prices or the other characteristics of various tenders in order to award the contract to the most economically advantageous – would not have been required to award the contract to the only tenderer judged to be suitable (see, to that effect and by analogy, Case C-27/98 Fracasso and Leitschutz [1999] ECR I-5697, paragraphs 31 to 33). Moreover, that consideration does not allow the possibility to be ruled out that EMSA, as it accepted at the hearing in reply to a question put to that effect by the Court, could have cancelled the contract in question and launched a fresh call for tenders. As a consequence, it is sufficiently demonstrated that, but for that defect, the administrative procedure could have had a different outcome.

106 Accordingly, EMSA's decision to award the contract to the successful tenderer must be annulled in that it infringed Article 143 of the implementing rules and point 2 of the invitation to tender, without its being necessary to rule on the other pleas in law relied on by the applicant in connection with call for tenders C-2/06/04.

107 Thus, the Court will pursue its examination of the pleas and arguments raised by the applicant only in as much as they are relied on against EMSA's decisions to reject the applicant's tender and to award the contract to another tenderer on conclusion of the procedure in respect of call for tenders C-1/01/04.

2. The claim for annulment of the decisions taken by EMSA in connection with tendering procedure C-1/01/04

108 As set out in paragraph 81 above, the applicant raises four pleas in law in support of its claim for annulment, alleging, firstly, breach of the principles of good faith, good administration and diligence, secondly, infringement of the Financial Regulation, the implementing rules and Directive 92/50, thirdly, manifest errors of assessment and, fourthly, lack of relevant information and failure to state reasons. The Court considers it appropriate to examine first the first plea, then the second, then the fourth and finally the third.

The first plea in law, alleging breach of the principles of good faith, good administration and diligence

Arguments of the parties

109 According to the applicant, by acting with significant delay, and by failing to provide adequate answers to the questions raised by the tenderers before the submission of their tenders, EMSA has infringed the principles of good faith, good administration and diligence, which, in accordance with case-law, can constitute a ground for annulment of the decision if that decision would have been different had the breach not occurred.

110 The applicant points out that it sent questions which EMSA refused to answer, arguing that they had not been submitted in time, that is to say, before 31 July 2004. In that regard, it insists that it tried unsuccessfully to send those questions by fax on 31 July 2004 and that they were not received by EMSA, probably because its fax machine was not functioning correctly, a fact allegedly acknowledged by EMSA in its email of 2 August 2004. In addition, the applicant points out that the questions were finally received by EMSA on Sunday, 1 August 2004. In any event, given that the period for submission of a request for additional information expired on a Saturday, EMSA should have extended the deadline until the first working day thereafter, namely Monday, 2 August 2004. By refusing to answer the applicant's questions, EMSA not only infringed the principles of good faith, good administration and diligence, but also prevented the applicant from submitting a more competitive tender.

111 Finally, the applicant states that, contrary to what EMSA implies, it never tried to obtain information that the other tenderers would not have had, given, it claims, that all replies to requests for additional information are communicated to all tenderers. In that regard, it points out that the contracting authority is required to reply to requests for additional information where the tender specifications are unclear.

112 At the hearing, the applicant claimed, in addition, for the first time, that EMSA had infringed Article 141 of the implementing rules since, in the invitation to tender, it fixed a deadline for making requests for additional information which was shorter than that laid down in Article 141.

113 EMSA disputes the applicant's arguments.

Findings of the Court

114 The applicant complains that EMSA, firstly, acted with significant delay and, secondly, failed to give adequate replies to the requests for additional information from the tenderers. It then adds that, on 31 July 2004, it put questions seeking clarification on points of the calls for tender which were allegedly unclear, which EMSA refused to answer.

115 First of all, the Court finds not only that the applicant has failed in any way to substantiate its assertion that EMSA acted tardily and failed to give adequate replies to the tenderers' requests, but also that it has failed to state either to which replies it refers or the reasons for which they should be considered inadequate. It follows that, despite its rather vague wording, this plea must be understood, in essence, as a complaint by the applicant that EMSA failed to answer its questions although they were submitted in time and that, for that reason, it was prevented from submitting a tender which was more competitive both technically and financially.

116 In that regard, in the first place, it should be noted that the applicant has not substantiated its assertions. Although it refers to its numerous attempts to send the requests for information both on Saturday, 31 July and on Sunday, 1 August 2004, it has not produced any transmission reports which could prove either transmission (complete or incomplete) of those documents to EMSA, or an error in their transmission. Nor has the applicant stated how that alleged irregularity could have affected the decision to award the contract.

117 In the second place, under point 8 of the invitation to tender, additional information could be requested in writing at the latest 10 days before the deadline for submission of tenders. Contrary to the applicant's claim, that point of the invitation to tender can only be interpreted as meaning that the day for submission of tenders must not be taken into account in calculating that period. Since that deadline was fixed, under point 2 of the invitation to tender, as 9 August 2004, the period for submission of requests for additional information must therefore have expired on Friday, 30 July 2004 and not, as the applicant claims, on Saturday, 31 July 2004.

118 As EMSA rightly points out, the applicant – as it acknowledges in its pleadings – tried to send its request for additional information from Saturday, 31 July 2004, thus after expiry of the period set for its submission. Since that request was submitted out of time, EMSA was right in not replying to it, if indeed it received it.

119 Finally, with regard to the alleged breach of Article 141(2) of the implementing rules, the Court notes that that plea was raised for the first time during the oral procedure. Under the first subparagraph of Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure, no new plea in law may be introduced in the course of proceedings unless it is based on matters of law or of fact which come to light in the course of the procedure. However, a submission or argument which may be regarded as amplifying a plea made previously, whether directly or by implication, in the original application, and which is closely connected therewith does not constitute a new plea in law within the meaning of Article 48 (2) of the Rules of Procedure (see, to that effect, Case T–40/01 Scan Office Design v Commission [2002] ECR II–5043, paragraph 96, and Case T–495/04 Belfass v Council [2008] ECR II–781, paragraph 87).

120 In the present case, the submission alleging breach of Article 141(2) of the implementing rules, made by the applicant at the hearing, cannot be regarded either, on the one hand, as a complaint based on matters of law or of fact which have come to light in the course of the written procedure, since it is based on an alleged illegality which was capable of being known and pleaded when the action was commenced, or, on the other, as amplifying a plea made previously, since it was only during the oral procedure that the applicant mentioned the legal rule allegedly infringed and the ground for annulment thus invoked had not been referred to, either directly or by implication, in the application initiating proceedings, since the present submission alleges breach of the principles of good faith, good administration and diligence (see, to that effect, Case 108/81 Amylum v Council [1982] ECR 3107, paragraph 25). Moreover, the applicant puts forward no matters of law or of fact which came to light in the course of the procedure and on which that complaint could be based. It follows that the complaint is inadmissible as out of time under the first subparagraph of Article 48 (2) of the Rules of Procedure.

121 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the first plea in law, so far as tendering procedure C–1/01/04 is concerned, must be rejected as unfounded.

The second plea in law, alleging breach of the Financial Regulation, the implementing rules and Directive 92/50

Arguments of the parties

122 By this plea, the applicant submits, in essence, that EMSA infringed the Financial Regulation, the implementing rules and Directive 92/50 by using vague criteria that were not correctly specified in the call for tenders. Furthermore, it asserts, at the stage of the reply, that, by deciding to subdivide the award criteria into sub-criteria, the evaluation committee not only openly accepted that those criteria were not well defined and needed to be clarified and/or replaced, which was also acknowledged by EMSA in its defence, but also infringed the Financial Regulation.

123 In addition, the applicant argues that certain elements of the call for tenders, such as the real duration of the contract, the number of Member States that had already implemented the applications, the role of specific technicians (help desk), the content and the duration of their services, and so on, which were necessary in order to submit a competitive tender, were also given in vague terms, in breach of Article 97(1) of the Financial Regulation and of Article 17(1) of Directive 92/50. In support of its argument, it refers to institutional calls for tender in which the documentation was more complete and clearer.

124 Finally, the applicant complains that, in its letter of 16 December 2004, EMSA refused to provide it with the name of the successful tenderer, because of the provisions on public procurement, although some weeks later the same official who had signed the letter called the applicant and proposed a meeting in person in order to explain the result of the tendering procedure, which the applicant refused.

125 EMSA disputes the applicant's arguments.

Findings of the Court

126 As a preliminary point, the applicant is incorrect to plead breach of Article 17 of Directive 92/50. Under Article 105 of the Financial Regulation, from 1 January 2003 – the date on which that regulation entered into force – the directives on the coordination of procedures for the award of public supply, service and works contracts are applicable to contracts awarded by the institutions, offices and agencies on their own account only in respect of questions relating to the thresholds which determine the publication arrangements, the choice of procedures and the corresponding time-limits. It follows that, in the present case, which concerns a public service contract awarded by an agency, in this case EMSA, the applicant's complaint concerning the award criteria for the contract at issue must be examined, as under the rules applicable to the institutions, solely in the light of the provisions of the Financial Regulation and the implementing rules.

127 In that regard, it should be noted that Article 97(1) of the Financial Regulation imposes on the contracting authority the obligation of defining the award criteria in advance and setting them out in the call for tenders. That obligation, which is to ensure an appropriate level of advertising for the criteria and the conditions governing each contract, is set out in more detail in Article 138 of the implementing rules.

– The complaint that the award criteria are vague

128 With regard to the applicant's complaint that EMSA infringed the Financial Regulation and the implementing rules, in that it used criteria which were not correctly defined in the call for tenders, it must be recalled, first of all, that the method used to award the contract at issue was the best-value-for-money procedure, in accordance with Article 97(2) of the Financial Regulation and Article 138(1) of the implementing rules (see point 13 of the tender specifications, cited in paragraph 18 above).

129 When a contract is awarded by the best-value-for-money procedure, the contracting authority must define in the tender specifications the award criteria enabling evaluation of the content of tenders. In addition, those criteria must, in accordance with Article 138(2) of the implementing rules, be justified by the subject of the contract. In accordance with Article 138(3) thereof, the contracting authority must also specify, in the contract notice or in the tender specifications, the weighting it will apply to each of the criteria for determining best value for money. Those provisions seek to ensure compliance with the principles of equal treatment and of transparency at the stage of evaluation of the tenders with a view to award of the contract (see, to that effect and by analogy, Case 31/87 Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635, paragraphs 21 and 22; Case C–470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I–11617, paragraphs 90 to 92; see also, to that effect, judgment of 12 November 2008 in Case T–406/06 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, not published in the ECR, paragraph 85, and the case-law cited).

130 The aim of those provisions is, accordingly, to allow all reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderers to interpret the award criteria in the same way (see, to that effect and by analogy, Case C–19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I–7725, paragraph 42) and, consequently, to have equal opportunity in formulating the terms of their tenders (see, to that effect and by analogy, Universale-Bau and Others, paragraph 129 above, paragraph 93).

131 Although it is true that the criteria which contracting authorities may apply are not listed exhaustively in Article 138(2) of the implementing rules and that that provision therefore leaves it open to contracting authorities to select the criteria on which they propose to base their award of the contract, their choice is nevertheless limited to criteria aimed at identifying the tender which is economically the most advantageous (see, to that effect and by analogy, Case C–532/06 Lianakis and Others [2008] ECR I–251, paragraph 29, and the case-law cited; see also, to that effect, Case T–4/01 Renco v Council [2003] ECR II–171, paragraph 66, and Case T–183/00 Strabag Benelux v Council [2003] ECR II–135, paragraphs 73 and 74).

132 In addition, the criteria used by the contracting authority to identify the most economically advantageous tender must not necessarily be either quantitative or related solely to prices. Even if award criteria which are not expressed in quantitative terms are included in the tendering documents, they can be applied objectively and uniformly in order to compare the tenders and are clearly relevant for identifying the most economically advantageous tender (see, to that effect, Renco v Council, paragraph 131 above, paragraphs 67 and 68).

133 In the present case, EMSA indicated, in point IV.2 of the contract notice and in point 13 of the tender specifications, the award criteria which it intended to apply with a view to awarding the contract to the most economically advantageous tender, namely, on the one hand, three qualitative criteria with the weighting which it intended to give to each of those criteria and, on the other, one quantitative criterion, that is to say, the total price of the tender with its weighting on the tender as a whole.

134 The three quality criteria, and their respective weighting, are set out as follows:

'1. Proposed methodology for the project – this includes the detailed proposals of how the project would be carried out including milestones and deliverables (as defined in [point] 3 [of the tender specifications]). (40%)

2. Understanding of the specifications in terms of reference and the succinct presentation of that understanding. (20%)

3. Quality of the operational services (Helpdesk). (10%)'.

135 The applicant confines itself to pleading that those criteria are vague, raising the question of how EMSA could evaluate objectively the quality of the tenders in respect of each of them. It does not put forward any evidence in support of its assertions to support the view that, in defining those criteria, EMSA disregarded the principles of transparency, equal treatment and non-discrimination.

136 In that regard, it should be noted that the quality criteria at issue, such as the proposed organisation and methodology for the supply of the services, a good understanding of the specifications in the terms of reference and the quality of the services requested, read in context, namely in the light of the details set out in point 3 of the tender specifications (see paragraph 19 above), can be conditions for the proper supply of the services to be provided and therefore the value of the tenders in themselves. Accordingly, they are relevant criteria for the identification of the economically most advantageous tender. Furthermore, as recalled in paragraph 132 above, the mere fact that those criteria are not quantitative is not sufficient to permit a deduction that the contracting authority has not applied them objectively and uniformly (see, to that effect, Renco v Council, paragraph 131 above, paragraphs 67 and 68). Finally, EMSA indicated, in accordance with the applicable provisions, the relative weighting given to each of those quality criteria by means of percentages, thus informing tenderers of the importance which it intended to give to each criterion in the comparative evaluation of the tenders.

137 There is nothing in the file, contrary to the applicant's claim, to indicate that EMSA exceeded the limits which stem from the abovementioned legislation in the choice and definition of the award criteria used to identify the economically most advantageous tender.

138 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the conclusion must be that the applicant has failed sufficiently to show that EMSA failed to meet its obligation to define in the call for tenders the award criteria in accordance with the principles of transparency, equal treatment and non-discrimination.

139 That conclusion cannot be called into question by the applicant's assertion relating to the terms in which other institutions have drafted call for tender documents in connection with other public procurement procedures.

140 In that regard, by granting to contracting authorities the power freely to choose the contract award criteria which they intend to apply, the legislature sought to enable them to take into consideration the nature, subject and specific features particular to each contract in choosing and formulating the award criteria. The formulation of the award criteria chosen by certain institutions in the context of other public procurement procedures cannot, accordingly, be usefully relied on by the applicant to demonstrate the vagueness of the award criteria applied in the present case. Reference to the tender documents of other public procurement procedures does not constitute either relevant or sufficient evidence for that purpose.

141 Finally, with regard to the argument that the evaluation committee, by deciding to subdivide them into sub-criteria, openly accepted that the award criteria chosen were not well defined and needed to be clarified and/or replaced, it must be observed that, irrespective of whether, in the present case, there was such a subdivision of the criteria, the existence of sub-criteria for a principal criterion in no way shows that the principal criteria are vague.

142 Accordingly, the complaint that the award criteria are vague must be rejected as unfounded.

– The complaint that certain elements of the call for tenders are vague

143 With regard to the argument that certain elements of the call for tenders are vague, it must be borne in mind that, as set out in paragraph 78 above, the application must contain the subject-matter of the proceedings and a summary of the pleas in law on which it is based. This information must be sufficiently clear and precise to enable the defendant to prepare its defence and the Court to rule on the action, if necessary without other supporting information. However, in the present case, the applicant merely refers to an alleged breach of the Financial Regulation resulting from the vagueness of certain elements of the call for tenders without putting forward any argument in support of its claim and, above all, without stating to which call for tenders it is referring. Consequently, in the light of the abovementioned principles, the argument must be rejected as inadmissible.

– The complaint that subdivision of one of the award criteria into sub-criteria was unlawful 144 As a preliminary comment, it must be noted that, although this complaint was raised by the applicant at the stage of the reply, it can nevertheless be admitted on the basis of Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure, since it is based on matters of law or of fact which came to light in the course of the procedure, namely the report to the authorising officer of 19 November 2004 and the technical evaluation sheets, which EMSA put before the Court as annexes to its defence.

145 As set out in paragraph 129 above, under Article 97 of the Financial Regulation and Article 138(3) of the implementing rules, when a contract is awarded by the best-value-for-money procedure, the contracting authority must indicate, in the tender specifications or in the contract notice, the award criteria applicable and their weighting.

146 Those provisions, read in the light of the principles of equal treatment of economic operators and of transparency, referred to in Article 89(1) of the Financial Regulation, require that potential tenderers be aware of all the features to be taken into account by the contracting authority in identifying the economically most advantageous tender and their relative importance when they prepare their tenders (see, to that effect and by analogy, Case C–331/04 ATI EAC e Viaggi di Maio and Others [2005] ECR I–10109, paragraph 24, and Lianakis and Others, paragraph 131 above, paragraph 36).

147 It follows that a contracting authority cannot apply sub-criteria for award criteria which it has not previously brought to the tenderers' attention (see, to that effect and by analogy, Lianakis and Others, paragraph 131 above, paragraph 38).

148 In accordance with settled case-law, it is, none the less, possible for a contracting authority, after expiry of the period for submission of tenders, to determine weighting coefficients for sub-criteria of award criteria previously established, on three conditions, namely that that ex post determination, firstly, does not alter the criteria for the award of the contract set out in the contract documents or the contract notice; secondly, does not contain elements which, if they had been known at the time the tenders were prepared, could have affected that preparation; and, thirdly, was not adopted on the basis of matters likely to give rise to discrimination against one of the tenderers (see, to that effect and by analogy, ATI EAC e Viaggi di Maio and Others, paragraph 146 above, paragraph 32, and Lianakis and Others, paragraph 131 above, paragraphs 42 and 43).

149 In the present case, it should be borne in mind that point 13.1 of the tender specifications stated, as the first award criterion, the 'proposed methodology for the project', and that that was to include 'detailed proposals of how the project would be carried out', including milestones and deliverables as defined in point 3 of the tender specifications. The tender specifications allotted to this criterion 40 points out of 100.

150 In accordance with point 3 of the tender specifications, tenderers were to include in their tenders detailed information regarding the project implementation structure, each work package was to be clearly defined, and the project implementation structure was to include as a minimum certain information (see paragraph 19 above). This was to include, in particular, horizontal activities (point 3.1), a description of the project management team and responsibilities (point 3.2), deliverables on project management (point 3.4), and work package description and relations (point 3.5). In particular, point 3.2, concerning the description of the project management team, states that tenderers were to 'clearly define in the offer the exact services and … provide detailed information in respect of response time [and] provide with their offer detailed curriculum vitae of each staff member responsible for carrying out the work, including his or her educational background, degrees and diplomas, professional experience, research work, publications and linguistic skills'. In point 3.4, concerning deliverables on project management, it is stated in addition that tenderers were to provide in their tenders a detailed description regarding the requirements set out in that point, and the Gantt planning diagram for the project. Finally, point 3.5 states that a total overview was to be given of the 'man days' and 'man days cost' for each work package.

151 It is apparent from the report to the authorising office of 19 November 2004 that the evaluation committee had agreed to break down the first criterion concerning the proposed methodology for the project (which was to include detailed proposals of how the project would be carried out, and milestones and deliverables, as defined in point 3 of the tender specifications), into two sub-criteria: 'repartition of tasks, manpower offered of quality and man-days (roadmap) – 20%; deliverables – 20%'.

152 Contrary to what the applicant claims, the evaluation committee did not subdivide that award criterion into sub-criteria which had not previously been brought to the tenderers' attention. Those sub-criteria correspond, essentially, to the description of the first criterion, concerning methodology, as specified in point 13.1 of the tender specifications, read in the light of point 3 thereof (see paragraphs 149 and 150 above). Accordingly, the evaluation committee merely weighted the 40 points available for the first award criterion by dividing them fairly between those sub-criteria.

153 In the light of those considerations, it must be determined whether, in providing for such weighting, the evaluation committee infringed the Financial Regulation and its implementing rules.

154 It is apparent from the case-law cited in paragraph 148 above that a contracting authority cannot infringe the Financial Regulation or the implementing rules when it divides among the subheadings of an award criterion which are defined in advance the number of points allotted to that criterion when the tender specifications were prepared, provided that that division does not alter the award criteria defined in the tender specifications or the contract notice, does not contain elements which, if they had been known at the time the tenders were prepared, could have affected that preparation, and was not adopted on the basis of matters likely to give rise to discrimination against one of the tenderers.

155 In the present case, the applicant, by merely referring generically to the fact that the contracting authority subdivided a criterion into two sub-criteria, has not shown that the decision of the contracting authority to make such a division led to an alteration of the contract award criteria previously defined in the tender documents, or that it contained elements which could have affected the preparation of the tenders, or that it gave rise to discrimination against the applicant or one of the tenderers.

156 In the light of those considerations, that complaint must be rejected as unfounded.

157 With regard, finally, to the complaint that, in substance, the name of the successful tenderer was communicated late – since, instead of being communicated by EMSA, in accordance with Article 100 (2) of the Financial Regulation, within 15 days of the applicant's request, it was revealed only some weeks later, by means of the contract award notice published in the Official Journal, annexed to EMSA's letter of 6 January 2005 –, it must be held that that delay, although it is to be deplored and cannot be justified, has not, however, restricted the applicant's opportunity to assert its rights before the Court and thus cannot, by itself, lead to the annulment of the contested decision (see, to that effect and by analogy, judgment of 10 September 2008 in Case T–465/04 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, not published in the ECR, paragraph 52). Moreover, the applicant does not state what effect that fact could have on the legality of the award decision or the concrete effect which it may have had on its rights of defence.

158 In the light of all the foregoing, the conclusion must be that the second plea in law, as regards tendering procedure C–1/01/04, must be rejected in its entirety.

The fourth plea in law, alleging breach of the duty to give reasons and lack of relevant information

Arguments of the parties

159 The applicant submits that EMSA's decision to reject its tender and award the contract to another tenderer is vitiated by a lack of sufficient reasoning.

160 Firstly, it complains that, by failing to reply to the applicant's timely questions and provide clarifications repeatedly requested in writing, EMSA denied the applicant the possibility of assessing the legality of its acts.

161 Secondly, it submits that EMSA did not provide it with all the information requested regarding the grounds on which its tender was rejected. In that regard, it recalls that, in accordance with Article

253 EC and Article 8 of Directive 92/50, the contracting authority has the duty to give sufficient reasons for its decision to reject a tender when the tenderer asks the reasons for the rejection, within 15 days of that request.

162 In the present case, EMSA failed clearly to explain the reasons for which it rejected the applicant's tender, and merely provided it – after a significant delay and only further to a reminder – with a small amount of information which did not comply with the provisions of the Financial Regulation or the case-law on public procurement. It also failed to make any reference to the characteristics and comparative advantages of the successful tender, thus denying the applicant the possibility of effectively commenting upon the choice made and countering it, and of seeking legal redress.

163 In support of its argument, the applicant produces, as an example, a copy of an evaluation committee report, concerning a different public procurement procedure, which was sent to it by a Directorate General of the Commission. A simple comparison between that document and EMSA's letter of 16 December 2004 is sufficient to show that the latter does not satisfy the duty to state reasons imposed by the legislation and case-law on public procurement.

164 Next, the applicant refutes EMSA's argument that only the decision not to state reasons can be annulled by the Court and not the contested decisions themselves. Following such an argument would mean that the contracting authorities can take arbitrary decisions, without giving reasons, and proceed to sign contracts.

165 EMSA disputes the applicant's arguments.

Findings of the Court

166 First of all, by its first complaint, the applicant seeks to criticise EMSA's refusal to debate with it the merits of its tender by comparison with those of the successful tender. In that regard, it is sufficient to recall that no contracting authority is obliged, on the basis of its duty to state reasons for a decision rejecting a tender, to enter into such a debate (see, to that effect, judgment of 1 July 2008 in Case T–211/07 AWWW v EFILWC, not published in the ECR, paragraph 43). Moreover, that fact cannot call in question, of itself, the legality of the decision (Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, paragraph 85 above, paragraph 78). Accordingly, the applicant cannot criticise EMSA for failing in its duty to state reasons because it refused to answer the questions and requests for clarification which the applicant had put to it after having received the letter of 16 December 2004.

167 With regard to the second complaint, concerning breach of the obligation to state reasons, in the narrow sense, alleged by the applicant, in that EMSA declined to send it the information requested on the grounds for the rejection of its tender, it must be stated that, in the context of a public procurement procedure such as that at issue, the legislative provisions which determine the content of the contracting authority's obligation to state reasons to tenderers whose tenders have not been successful are Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation and Article 149 of the implementing rules, and not the provisions of Directive 92/50, as the applicant claims (see paragraph 126 above).

168 It is clear from the abovementioned articles that, in public procurement matters, the contracting authority fulfils its duty to state reasons if it confines itself, first of all, to notifying immediately all tenderers whose tenders are rejected of the grounds on which the decision was taken and subsequently informs tenderers whose tenders were admissible and who make an express request of the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the tenderer to whom the contract was awarded, within 15 calendar days of the date on which a written request is received (see Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, paragraph 85 above, paragraph 68, and Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, paragraph 157 above, paragraph 47, and the case-law cited).

169 That manner of proceeding satisfies the purpose of the duty to state reasons enshrined in Article 253 EC, according to which the reasoning followed by the authority which adopted the measure in question must be disclosed in a clear and unequivocal fashion so as, on the one hand, to make the persons concerned aware of the reasons for the measure and thereby enable them to assert their rights; and, on the other, to enable the Court to exercise its supervisory jurisdiction (see Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, paragraph 157 above, paragraph 48, and the case-law cited).

170 It should be added that compliance with the duty to state reasons must be assessed in the light of the information available to the applicant at the time the application was brought (Strabag Benelux v Council, paragraph 131 above, paragraph 58; Renco v Council, paragraph 131 above, paragraph 96, and Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, paragraph 129 above, paragraph 50).

171 In addition, it is necessary to note that the requirements to be satisfied by the statement of reasons depend on the circumstances of each case, in particular the content of the measure, the nature of the reasons given and the interest which the addressees of the measure, or other parties to whom it is of direct and individual concern, may have in obtaining explanations (see Case C-367/95 P Commission v Sytraval and Brink's France [1998] ECR I-1719, paragraph 63, and the case-law cited).

172 In the present case, it should finally be borne in mind that the tender specifications set out, in point 13.1, three award criteria, entitled, respectively, 'Proposed methodology for the project' – which refers expressly to point 3 of the tender specifications, indicating a certain amount of detailed information to be provided by tenderers (see paragraph 19 above) –, 'Understanding of the specifications in terms of reference' and 'Quality of the operational services'. A system of points was established for evaluation of the tenders in respect of each of those three award criteria. A minimum threshold of points (60%) was also laid down for each criterion and an overall minimum of 70% was required. Only those tenders which attained the minimum thresholds of points were to be taken into account for awarding the contract.

173 Accordingly, in order to determine whether EMSA satisfied the requirement for a statement of reasons laid down in the Financial Regulation and the implementing rules, its letter of 6 December 2004 and that of 16 December 2004, sent in reply to the applicant's express request of 7 December 2004 for additional information on the award of the contract at issue and the rejection of its tender, must be examined.

174 In that regard, the Court finds that the letter of 6 December 2004 informed the applicant that its tender had not been successful at the award stage on the ground that its price/quality ratio was worse than that of the successful tender. In that letter, EMSA also informed the applicant that it could request additional information on the grounds for rejection of its tender, the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the tenderer to whom the contract had been awarded, which the applicant did by fax of 7 December 2004.

175 With regard to EMSA's letter of 16 December 2004, it should be observed, at the outset, that the applicant states that it received it only on 7 January 2005, as an annex to the fax sent by EMSA on that date, further to a fax from the applicant of 5 January 2005 in which it complained that it had not received any communication regarding the award of the contract at issue. In that regard, the Court has no reason to doubt that EMSA did in fact send that letter on 16 December 2004 – a fact that, moreover, the applicant does not expressly dispute – and considers that EMSA was not required by any provision governing the procurement procedure at issue to comply with formalities for sending that type of communication which allowed it to check whether it was actually received by tenderers, although it is regrettable that it did not consider it to be appropriate to choose means of communication which might have enabled it to make such a check (see, to that effect, order of 19 October 2007 in Case T-69/05 Evropaïki Dynamiki v EFSA, not published in the ECR, paragraph 56). In any event, that delay did not limit the applicant's opportunity to assert its rights before the Court and cannot, by itself, lead to the annulment of the contested decision. It is apparent from the file that the applicant made use of all the information contained in that letter in bringing the present action.

176 Next, it must be noted that, in that letter, EMSA indicated the number of points awarded to the applicant's tender for each award criterion and the final result concerning the price/quality ratio of its tender, which was 68.89 points out of 100, while that of the successful tender was 79.33 points out of 100. As regards the successful tender, the letter, the contents of which are cited in paragraph 27 above, includes a detailed analysis of that tender.

177 It is apparent from the file that the information on the methodology to be used for managing the project, the description of the tasks, the number of man-days proposed and the deliverables is related to the evaluation of the successful tender on the basis of the first criterion, while the information on the understanding of the project and the proposed service level agreement is related to the second and third award criteria respectively.

178 Furthermore, that information must be read in the light of point 3 of the tender specifications, which lists a number of items to be detailed in the tender, including, inter alia, the resources allocated, the Gantt diagram, the breakdown of tasks, the number of man-days proposed and the deliverables, defined by type of task (see paragraph 150 above). Since the applicant has an in-depth knowledge of the tender specifications, as the drafting of its tender shows, it was, accordingly, in a position to deduce the relative advantages of the successful tender.

179 In the light of all that information and of the statements on the number of points awarded to its tender for each criterion, the applicant was in a position not only to identify the weak points in its tender and, thereby, the reasons for its rejection, namely that it did not attain the level of quality necessary in respect of two of the award criteria, but also to compare the overall result of the assessment of its tender (68.69 points out of 100) with that of the successful tenderer (79.33 points out of 100) (see, to that effect, Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, paragraph 85 above, paragraph 75, and the case-law cited).

180 In addition, it is clear from all the information provided in that letter that the applicant's tender not only had failed to obtain the minimum number of points required for the first ('proposed methodology for the project') and third ('quality of the operational services') award criteria, but had not even attained the overall minimum required of 70 points out of 100, when, under the tender specifications, only those tenders which attained the minimum threshold of points required were to be taken into account for awarding the contract at issue.

181 In the light of all the foregoing, it must be concluded that that statement of reasons enabled the applicant to assert its rights before the Court and the Court to exercise its review of legality with regard to the decision to reject the tender. Accordingly, the present plea, so far as tendering procedure C–1/01/04 is concerned, must be rejected as unfounded.

The third plea in law, alleging manifest errors of assessment by EMSA

Arguments of the parties

182 In its application, the applicant submits that EMSA made a manifest error of assessment in that it did not correctly and objectively evaluate the quality of the applicant's tender and found that it was inferior to that of the successful tenderer.

183 In addition, it argues that, since EMSA did not follow a predetermined and objective methodology, known to the tenderers, it is obvious that the decision of the evaluation committee was based on incorrect assumptions.

184 At the stage of the reply, the applicant challenges, firstly, EMSA's assertion that defining the methodology of evaluation could have favoured certain tenderers. According to the applicant, a clear methodology does not affect the rights of tenderers but, on the contrary, allows them to produce the best-value-for-money tender and enables the Court to exercise its review. Moreover, the very fact that the evaluation committee subdivided the award criteria into sub-criteria confirms that the criteria were not sufficiently defined.

185 In addition, the applicant raises complaints concerning the evaluation committee documents produced to the Court by EMSA as annexes to its defence.

186 In that regard, it claims, the subdivision of the first award criterion into two sub-criteria by the evaluation committee led that committee to focus on two particular aspects of the call for tenders which were not known to the tenderers before submission of their tenders.

187 With regard to the evaluation report, firstly, the applicant submits that although it is apparent from that report that the successful tender contained 'minor errors', the applicant cannot comment on the importance of those errors since the report did not specify their nature. Secondly, the evaluation of the weak points of the applicant's tender was formulated in vague terms and the comments were too generic.

188 The applicant also criticises certain specific comments in the evaluation sheets completed by each evaluator. With regard to the successful tender, it points out the contradiction between the statement of one of the evaluators that the successful tender contained 'minor errors' in the field of 'the flow of information to be handled by the SafeSeaNet system and … the type of information supported' and the statement that those errors did not have 'a direct impact on their understanding of the specifications'. It also highlights the fact that, according to one of the evaluators, the successful tenderer had good experience in dealing with maritime projects although experience was not amongst the evaluation criteria.

189 It also challenges certain of the evaluators' comments with regard to the evaluation of its own tender. This relates, more particularly, with regard to award criterion 1(a), to the first evaluator's comment that the figure of 833.5 man-days of work is, excluding the Help Desk, over-estimated, and to the comments of the second and third evaluators relating, respectively, to the lack of clarity of the Gantt diagram, the lack of distinction between phase A and phase B of that diagram and the excessive duration of the analysis and design phase. According to the applicant, its tender stated clearly that, apart from the dedicated resources for the Help Desk, the project team would rely on the services of specialised engineers, included in the 833.5 man-days. Moreover, its tender clearly detailed the operation of the Help Desk, its clear methodology, the IT platform used, the management of cases, and use of the required Service Level Agreement. By failing to take account of that information, the evaluators therefore made a manifest error of assessment.

190 A second manifest error of assessment was made by the evaluators in taking the view that the 'analysis and design' phase described in the applicant's tender was too long. The applicant points out in that regard that, since the tender specifications required a web-orientated application, it was necessary to develop an SSN application based on an iterative model, on the basis of the principles of UML (Unified Modelling Language), in accordance with the methodology followed by all the institutions and the entire market. It therefore devoted 105 pages of its tender to an explanation of the 'software development methodology', of which a large part explained in detail the principles of UML. Accordingly, the evaluators made a further manifest error of assessment, since they did not correctly evaluate the applicant's tender or take into account the fact that the applicable methodology was UML.

191 Furthermore, with regard to the lack of clarity of the Gantt diagram, the applicant points out that the use of UML and an iterative approach for the process explains its Gantt diagram. In particular, as explained in detail in the section of its tender dealing with the 'take-over methodology', the takeover phase was to last one month and the validation task would have started at the same time as the take-over task. Accordingly, three months were more than enough for the validation. During that period, the applicant would also be involved in 'analysis and design' work, taking advantage of the feedback from the validation phase. According to the applicant, the implementation phase would also commence at the same time. During the first two months the applicant's team would have focussed on preparatory work, to organise the implementation environment. That is a standard approach which could not be regarded as abnormal by the evaluators, who therefore made a further manifest error of assessment.

192 Finally, with regard, in the applicant's tender, to the lack of distinction between phases A and B in the Gantt diagram, again noted by the evaluators, the applicant points out that it was the tender specifications which stated that the two phases were connected and were to be regarded as a single project. In that regard also a manifest error of assessment was made by the evaluators.

193 With regard to award criterion 1(b), the applicant challenges the comments of the first, second and third evaluators relating, respectively, to the lack of any concrete methodology, the lack of precision about technical meetings and the lack of clarity on the deliverables. In that regard, it submits that its tender indicated all the meetings which were to take place, gave a clear list of the deliverables and detailed the methodology which it proposed to use for each of the aspects of the call for tenders and the methodology and approach used for each of the projects to be carried out. Accordingly, it is clear that the evaluators made another manifest error of assessment.

194 Finally, with regard to the third award criterion, the applicant points out that, according to the first evaluator, the Help Desk activity was not defined in terms of functionality and there was no concrete proposal on the organisation and management of the Help Desk, while the second evaluator took the view that the number of man-days for the Help Desk and Member State support was not sufficient and there was no clear methodology for the management of incoming calls or for the procedures to minimise intervention time. In that regard, the applicant argues that it was clear from its tender that the Help Desk service relied on the services of some of the 833.5 man-days – which figure was considered overestimated by the evaluation committee – and that, moreover, the tender contained a clear description of the methodology, based on state-of-the-art procedures and advanced IT tools to handle the process.

195 EMSA disputes the applicant's arguments.

Findings of the Court

196 It is settled case-law that the contracting authority has a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following a call for tenders, and that the Court's review must be limited to verifying that there has been no serious and manifest error (Case 56/77 Agence européenne d'intérims v Commission [1978] ECR 2215, paragraph 20; Case T-148/04 TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission [2005] ECR II-2627, paragraph 47; and Belfass v Council, paragraph 119 above, paragraph 63).

197 In the present case, the arguments put forward by the applicant in its written submissions, in order to show the existence of manifest errors of assessment, are based, essentially, on three main factors.

198 Firstly, it refers to the lack of predetermined and objective methodology, known to the tenderers, in order to arrive at the final ranking. It also refers to the fact that the tenderers were not aware of the subdivision of the criteria into sub-criteria and the alleged generic and abstract nature of the award criteria, and concludes that the evaluation of the tenders must have been subjective and based on incorrect assumptions.

199 However, the fact remains that the applicant has merely made general assertions, neither supported nor corroborated by any evidence at all. By that line of argument, the applicant is trying, in essence, to reintroduce in the context of the present plea the arguments already put forward in respect of the second plea, which has been rejected by the Court. Furthermore, the applicant in no way demonstrates how all the alleged failures on the part of the contracting authority to which it refers led that authority to make incorrect assumptions and a subjective evaluation of the tenders. In any event, the methodology used by the evaluation committee for the final ranking of the tenders was predetermined and specified in point IV.2 of the contract notice and point 13 of the tender specifications, in which EMSA indicated the criteria on the basis of which tenders were to be selected, and the weighting to be given to each of those criteria.

200 Accordingly, the conclusion must be that that first category of arguments cannot support the present plea.

201 Secondly, the applicant challenges the assessment of the successful tender made by the evaluation committee in its final report, in that, despite the existence of minor errors found in that tender, the committee did not state the nature of those errors.

202 In that regard, the Court notes that the abovementioned comment of the evaluation committee relates to the second award criterion and is worded as follows: '[p]roposers show a good understanding of the project, despite minor errors in their SafeSeaNet diagram'. Such a comment is not capable, of itself, of revealing an error or even an inherent contradiction. The contracting authority is fully entitled to take the view that a tender, although containing errors regarded as minor, shows a good understanding of the project. In any event, the applicant has not shown that the comment is incorrect or, even less, that that allegedly incorrect comment led to a manifest error of assessment in the evaluation of the successful tender.

203 Thirdly, the arguments put forward by the applicant to challenge the specific comments on its tender, set out in the technical evaluation sheets completed by each evaluator in respect of award criteria 1(a), 1(b) and 3 of the call for tenders at issue (see paragraphs 188 to 194 above), are ineffective.

204 The evaluation committee, composed of at least three persons, is appointed by the authorising officer and responsible for giving an advisory opinion, in accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 146(1) of the implementing rules. It is the committee which draws up the written record of the evaluation, signed by all its members, which contains, inter alia, the names of the tenderers rejected and the reasons for the rejection of their tenders, and the name of the contractor proposed and the reasons for that choice. The definitive decision on award of the contract is taken subsequently by the contracting authority in accordance with Article 147(3) of the implementing rules.

205 It follows that the technical evaluation sheets, intended to collect evaluations made by various evaluators, whose points of view can, clearly, diverge, do not have any independent legal effect. Consequently, in the present case, those evaluation sheets taken individually cannot be used by the applicant to base arguments on any contradictions between the evaluation contained in one or other of them, since all of those evaluations were consolidated by the tender evaluation committee, which thus adopted its final position, which remains, moreover, an advisory opinion vis-à-vis the contracting authority.

206 The decision of that committee as to the proposal of the future contractor and the reasons for that choice can only be collective, since each committee member's evaluation is absorbed into the final report. Accordingly, it is clear that any argument seeking to prove that there was a manifest error of assessment can, where appropriate, be directed only against the evaluation report adopted by the evaluation committee and only in the event that the final decision of the contracting authority is in fact based on that report.

207 In any event, in the present case, the applicant has not shown whether and in what way those comments made individually by the evaluators in the technical evaluation sheets are reflected in the final report of the evaluation committee and brought about a manifest error of assessment of its tender on the part of the contracting authority. In that regard, it should, at the very least, have explained in what way the allegedly incorrect comments affected the score obtained by its tender in respect of the first and third award criteria, which are those for which its tender did not obtain the minimum number of points required by the tender specifications and the only ones in respect of which it has complained. It is sufficient to note that the applicant has not given such an explanation.

208 In the light of those considerations, that complaint must also be rejected.

209 The conclusion must therefore be that the applicant has failed to show the existence of manifest errors of assessment, supposedly made by the contracting authority, either in the evaluation of the successful tender or in the evaluation of its own tender.

210 The third plea in law, so far as tendering procedure C–1/01/04 is concerned, must therefore be rejected in its entirety as unfounded.

3. The claim for annulment of EMSA's subsequent decisions

211 In its second head of claim, the applicant requests that the Court annul all EMSA's subsequent decisions relating to the calls for tender at issue.

212 In that regard, as has already been stated in paragraph 78 above, an application must set out the subject-matter of the proceedings and a summary of the pleas in law on which it is based. The information given must be sufficiently clear and precise to enable the defendant to prepare his defence and the Court to exercise its review. In order to ensure legal certainty and the sound administration of justice, the essential facts and law on which it is based must be apparent from the text of the application itself, at the very least summarily, provided that the statement is coherent and intelligible.

213 In the present case, the applicant does not state which measures are concerned by its second head of claim and does not put forward any arguments in support of its claim.

214 Consequently, the second head of claim must be dismissed as inadmissible.

The request for measures of inquiry

215 The applicant requests the Court, in essence, to ask EMSA to supply a copy of the report of the evaluation committee and the relevant related documentation.

216 Since EMSA has put before the Court, as annexes to its defence, the documents requested by the applicant and since the applicant has made no other observations in that regard, there is no longer any need to adjudicate on this request.

Costs

217 Under Article 87(3) of the Rules of Procedure, where each party succeeds on some and fails on other heads, the Court may order that the costs be shared or that each party bear its own costs. In the circumstances of the present case, the Court considers, on a fair assessment of the matter, that each party should bear its own costs.

On those grounds,

THE GENERAL COURT (Third Chamber)

hereby:

1. Annuls the decision of the European Maritime Safety Agency (EMSA) to award the contract to the successful tenderer in tendering procedure 'EMSA C–2/06/04';

2. Dismisses the action as to the remainder;

3. Orders each party to bear its own costs.

Notice for the OJ

Action brought on 14 February 2005 by European Dynamics S.A. against the European Maritime Safety Agency

(Case T-70/05)

Language of the case: English

An action against the European Maritime Safety Agency was brought before the Court of First Instance of the European Communities on 14 February 2005 by European Dynamics S.A., established in Athens (Greece), represented by N. Korogiannakis, lawyer.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

- annul the decision of EMSA, to evaluate the applicant's bid as not successful and award the contract to the successful contractor;

- annul all subsequent decisions of EMSA related to the Tenders under examination in the current application;

- order EMSA to pay the applicant's legal costs and other costs and expenses incurred in connection with the application, even if the application is rejected.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicant company filed bids in response to EMSA's calls for tenders EMSA C-1/0104-20041 and EMSA C.2/06/042 for the SafeSeaNet Validation and further development and for the marine casualty database, network and management system. By the contested decisions the applicant's bids were rejected and the contracts awarded to another bidder.

In support of its application to annul the contested decisions the applicant claims first of all that the defendant agency violated the principles of good faith and good administration by acting with significant delay and failing to offer adequate answers to the tenderers' requests before the submission of the bids. The defendant refused to answer the applicant's questions, on the grounds that they had not been submitted in time, even though it had accepted indirectly that technical problems under its own control prevented the questions from being received. The applicant considers that had the defendant answered its questions timely and with diligence, it would have been able to submit a more competitive offer.

The applicant further contends that the defendant violated the Financial Regulation3 as well as Article 17 (1) of Directive 92/504 by using evaluation criteria, especially the tenderers' prior experience, that were neither specified nor included in the call for tenders.

The applicant also claims that the defendant committed a manifest error of appreciation in considering that the successful bidder's offer was superior to that of the applicant. In this respect, the applicant contends that no predetermined objective methodology was used to evaluate its offer, that on the contrary the criteria used left room for subjective evaluation and that, finally, there were no clear and objective metrics.

The applicant finally submits that the defendant failed to provide pertinent information and state adequate reasons for its acts by not replying to the applicant's legitimate and timely questions.

Judgment

Legal context

1 The award of Commission service contracts is governed by the provisions of Title V of Part One of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the Financial Regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1, 'the Financial Regulation') and by the provisions of Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1, 'the Implementing Rules'). Those provisions are based on the Community directives on the subject, in particular, in the case of public service contracts, Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended.

2 Article 89(1) of the Financial Regulation provides:

'All public contracts financed in whole or in part by the budget shall comply with the principles of transparency, proportionality, equal treatment and non–discrimination.'

3 Article 97 of the Financial Regulation, in the version applicable at the material time, states:

'1. The selection criteria for evaluating the capability of candidates or tenderers and the award criteria for evaluating the content of the tenders shall be defined in advance and set out in the call for tender.

2. Contracts may be awarded by the automatic award procedure or by the best–value-for-money procedure.'

4 Article 100 of the Financial Regulation provides:

'1. The authorising officer shall decide to whom the contract is to be awarded, in compliance with the selection and award criteria laid down in advance in the documents relating to the call for tenders and the procurement rules.

2. The contracting authority shall notify all candidates or tenderers whose applications or tenders are rejected of the grounds on which the decision was taken, and all tenderers whose tenders are admissible and who make a request in writing of the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the tenderer to whom the contract is awarded.

However, certain details need not be disclosed where disclosure would hinder application of the law, would be contrary to the public interest or would harm the legitimate business interests of public or private undertakings or could distort fair competition between those undertakings.'

5 Article 130(3) of the Implementing Rules, in the version applicable at the material time, states:

'The specifications shall at least:

(a) specify the exclusion and selection criteria applying to the contract …;

(b) specify the award criteria and their relative weighting, if this is not specified in the contract notice;

…'.

6 Article 135(1) of the Implementing Rules provides:

'The contracting authorities shall draw up clear and non-discriminatory selection criteria.'

7 Article 138 of the Implementing Rules, in the version applicable at the material time, provides:

'1. Contracts shall be awarded in one of the following two ways:

(a) under the automatic award procedure, in which case the contract is awarded to the tender which, while being in order and satisfying the conditions laid down, quotes the lowest price;

(b) under the best-value-for-money procedure.

2. The tender offering the best value for money shall be the one with the best price-quality ratio, taking into account criteria justified by the subject of the contract such as the price quoted, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, running costs, profitability completion or delivery times, after-sales service and technical assistance.

3. The contracting authority shall specify, in the contract notice or in the specifications, the weighting it will apply to each of the criteria for determining best value for money.

8 Article 148 of the Implementing Rules provides:

'1. Contact between the contracting authority and tenderers during the contract award procedure may take place, by way of exception, under the conditions set out in paragraphs 2 and 3.

2. Before the closing date for the submission of tenders, in respect of the additional documents and information referred to in Article 141, the contracting authority may:

(a) at the instance of tenderers, communicate additional information solely for the purpose of clarifying the nature of the contract, such information to be communicated on the same date to all tenderers who have asked for the specifications;

…'.

9 Article 149(2) of the Implementing Rules provides:

'The contracting authority shall, within not more than 15 calendar days from the date on which a written request is received, communicate the information provided for in Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation.'

Background to the dispute

10 The applicant, Evropaïki Dinamiki – Proigmena Sistimata Tilepikinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE, is a company incorporated under Greek law, active in the area of information technology and communications.

11 By a contract notice of 24 March 2004, published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2004, S 59) under reference 2004/S 59–050031, the Commission issued a call for tenders relating to development maintenance and support services for financial information systems of the Directorate-General for Agriculture (DG AGRI). The outcome of that tender process was to be the signing of a framework contract for a period of 36 months, renewable for a period of 12 months.

12 Section 7.4 of the tender specifications of the call for tenders at issue, relating to subcontracting, is worded as follows:

'The contractor … shall none the less remain bound by his obligations to the Commission under the contract. …

In the case of a tender offer incorporating subcontracting, the information required below under sections 8.2.1 "administrative information", 8.2.2 "information for assessment of exclusion criteria" and 8.2.3 "information for assessment of selection criteria" must be provided for all proposed subcontractors.'

13 Section 8 of the tender specifications defines the information which the tenderers' bids must contain:

'8.1. Presentation of the offer

8.2. Technical dossier

8.2.1. Administrative information

This information requirement applies to all members of a Consortium, and to any possible subcontractors named in the offer or who might be proposed to be used during the time period of the expected contract.

8.2.2. Information for assessment of exclusion criteria

This information requirement applies to all members of a Consortium and to any possible subcontractors named in the offer or who might be proposed to be used during the time period of the expected contract.

8.2.3. Information for assessment of selection criteria

This information requirement applies to all members of a Consortium and to any possible subcontractors named in the offer or who might be proposed to be used during the time period of the expected contract.

8.2.3.1. Economic and financial Situation

8.2.3.2. Technical Capacities

8.2.4. Information for assessment of award criteria

8.3. Financial proposal – price schedule

…'.

14 Section 9 of the tender specifications, relating to the evaluation of tenders and award of the contract, is worded as follows:

'9. Evaluation of tenders and award of the contract

9.1. Exclusion of tendering parties

Tendering parties shall be excluded from participation if:

Tendering parties shall be excluded from the award of the contract if:

In the case of joint tenders (consortium) or subcontractors, these exclusion criteria will be applied to all the individual organisations proposed by the tenderer.

The exclusion decision will be assessed on the basis of the information supplied by the tenderer. All Tenderers (either a single entity, all members of a joint offer or all subcontractors) must therefore supply the information requested in accordance with the requirements of 8.2.2. above, on which the exclusion decision will be assessed.

9.2. Selection of tendering parties – selection criteria

Tendering parties' capacity will be assessed in the light of the criteria below.

9.2.1. Economic and financial standing

[Selection criterion] Tendering parties must demonstrate that they have been financially sound during the last three years.

The selection decision will be assessed on the basis of the information supplied by the tenderer in accordance with the requirements of 8.2.3.1 above and, where applicable, of other information that the Commission may judge relevant.

9.2.2. Professional and technical capacities

[Selection criterion 1] Tendering parties must possess at least three years' experience of direct relevance to the activities concerned or to the provision of the services and products covered by this invitation to tender.

[Selection criterion 2] Tendering parties must demonstrate that they have the skills and human resources and the technical and organisational ability needed to provide the services and products required.

[Selection criterion 3] Tendering parties must demonstrate that they have the level of infrastructure adequacy required for the successful provision of the required services.

[Selection criterion 4] If relying on the capacities of other entities, tendering parties must demonstrate that they have at their disposal the resources necessary for the performance of the contract by providing a written undertaking from such entities to place such resources at [their] disposal.

The selection decision will be assessed on the basis of the information supplied by the tenderer in accordance with the requirements of 8.2.3.2 above and, where applicable, of other information that the Commission may judge relevant.

9.3. Evaluation of tenders – award criteria

The Commission will award the contract after comparing the tenders in the light of the following criteria:

9.3.1. Award criteria

– Quality of the tenderer's proposal in terms of completeness, clarity and concision, relevance of information and documentation provided, lack of ambiguity (20%);

– The proposed methodology and the organisation of the services to cover the needs of the Commission/DG AGRI; in particular, the measures proposed to ensure the timely availability of adequate resources for the proposed skills, and an effective and efficient project management and communication with the DG AGRI (40%);

– The quality control of the delivered services and the guarantees offered to respect the proposal (40%).

The assessment of each individual quality criterion should be at least 50% of the maximum scoring set for that criterion. Those offers which will not receive these minimum scorings shall be rejected.

The overall assessment (sum of points for all criteria) should be at least 65 points out of 100. Those offers which will not receive this minimum overall scoring shall be rejected, even if they received the minimum scoring for each individual criterion.

9.3.2. Price criteria

9.4. Award of the contract

The contract will be awarded to the tender with the highest Performance/Price ratio (best value-for-money procedure) …'.

15 Moreover, it is clear from section 9.1.2 of the draft framework contract that, in the case of subcontractors, the contractor remains bound by its obligations to the Commission under the contract and has exclusive responsibility for the due performance of the contract.

16 On 25 March 2004 the applicant expressed its interest in taking part in the call for tenders in question and asked to be sent the contract tender documents. Those documents were sent to the applicant on 30 March 2004.

17 By registered post of 14 April 2004 the applicant sent to the Commission an initial request for clarification in respect of some of the specifications in the tender documents.

18 On 16 April 2004 the applicant sent to the Commission a second and third request for additional clarification relating to the selection and award criteria set out in the tender specifications.

19 The Commission replied to those requests by letter of 20 April 2004.

20 On the same day, in the light of the Commission's response, the applicant requested additional clarification.

21 The Commission replied to that request by letter of 21 April 2004.

22 On the same day, the applicant sent to the Commission a fresh request for clarification.

23 The Commission replied to the applicant's final request by e-mail on 22 April 2004, stating that it could not answer the questions put to it because they had arrived after the date fixed for that purpose in section 7.6 of the tender specifications, namely six days before the closing date for submission of tenders.

24 On 26 April 2004, the deadline for receipt of tenders, the applicant, in consortium with Software AG Belgium SA ('Software'), submitted a proposal in the tendering procedure at issue.

25 The 12 tenders received by DG AGRI were examined by an evaluation committee set up for that purpose and comprising 6 officials from four Directorates General of the Commission. The contract was awarded on the criterion of which offer was the best value for money. The evaluation committee checked that the tenders submitted satisfied the exclusion and selection criteria and then declared the 12 tenders to be eligible for the award phase. Of the 12 tenders, only 2, which did not obtain the minimal total score of 65 points required by the tender specifications, were eliminated. The results of the evaluation as regards the applicant's tender and that of the successful tenderer, showing the points awarded on each quality criterion, and the weighted prices of each of those tenders, can be presented as follows:

Tenderer	Weighted price (EUR)	Points out of 100	Points/price (rounded to four decimal places)	Rank

European Dynamics	381.40	74.33	0.1949	4
IBM	393.03	90.70	0.2308	1

26 By letter of 23 November 2004, sent on 30 November 2004, the Commission informed the applicant of the result of the evaluation of its tender and of the fact that it had not been successful in so far as it 'did not achieve the highest quality/price ratio according to which the [contract] was awarded'.

27 By fax and registered letter of 2 December 2004 the applicant asked the Commission to provide it, within 15 calendar days from receipt of its request, with the following information:

– the identity of the successful tenderer, and of any partners or subcontractors and, where appropriate, the percentage of the market to be allocated to it or them;

– the score awarded on each award criterion concerning the applicant's technical offer and that of the successful tenderer;

– the content of the evaluation committee report;

– information as to how the applicant's offer compared with that of the successful tenderer and, in particular, the scores awarded to the applicant's financial offer and that of the successful tenderer.

28 By letter in response of 10 December 2004, sent on 13 December 2004, the Commission informed the applicant that the successful tenderer was IBM Belgium SA ('IBM'), and that ARHS Developments SA was the subcontractor. The Commission annexed an extract from the evaluation committee report relating to the applicant's offer and that of the successful tenderer, while stating that, in order to protect the legitimate business interests of other tenderers, it was not possible to send to it a complete copy of that report, which contained information relating to other tenders which had been submitted but had been unsuccessful. The annexed extract from the evaluation committee report indicated the points obtained by the applicant and the successful tenderer on each of the quality criteria in the light of which the tenders had been assessed. The annexed extract also contained the general observations of the evaluation committee arising from comparison of the applicant's tender with that of the successful tenderer, in the following terms :

'[The applicant's offer is a] good but rather general offer, more a collection of best practices than tailored to the specific aspects of DG AGRI addressed by the tendering specifications (notably, the guarantees offered to cope with the business aspects of financial systems)'.

29 As regards the successful tender, the evaluation committee considered that it was a 'very good offer, concise and clear' and that it covered well 'both technical and business aspects'. The committee added:

'The offer conveys the assurance of the ability of the tenderer to cope successfully with the challenges in the field of financial [IT systems] at DG AGRI'.

30 By fax and registered letter of 29 December 2004 the applicant requested from the Commission more precise information as to why its tender had been rejected and the contract awarded to another tenderer. The applicant also set out certain comments and objections on the process of evaluation of its tender and of that of the successful tenderer, in the light of the quality criteria, and taking account of the information given by the Commission in its letter of 10 December 2004.

31 By fax and registered letter of 30 December 2004 the applicant sent to the Commission certain information on the financial standing of ARHS Developments which it had obtained through market research conducted in the interim. The applicant asked the Commission to open an investigation to check and confirm that information and, if appropriate, to take it into consideration in the tendering procedure at issue.

32 By letter of 13 January 2005 the Commission informed the applicant that it acknowledged receipt of its letters of 29 and 30 December 2004, while adding that the questions raised needed to be examined carefully and that a reply would be provided within the following six weeks.

33 By letter dated 26 January 2005, sent on 7 February 2005, the Commission replied to those letters. The applicant acknowledged receipt on 9 February 2005.

Procedure and forms of order sought by the parties

34 The applicant brought this action by application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 2 February 2005.

35 Upon hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court (Third Chamber) decided to open the oral procedure and, as measures of organisation of procedure provided for in Article 64 of its Rules of Procedure, asked the Commission to provide it with certain information and to produce certain documents, including, in particular, the evaluation Committee report and the bid of the successful tenderer. The Commission acceded to this request in part, stating that it was not able to produce a non-confidential version of the bid of the successful tenderer within the period stipulated.

36 The parties set out their arguments and replied to questions put by the Court at the hearing on 16 May 2007. The Court asked the Commission to produce the non-confidential version of the bid of the successful tenderer and set a new time-limit of 28 May 2007.

37 By letter of 25 May 2007, the Commission requested an extension of that period. The Court upheld that request and granted a further extension until 12 June 2007. A non-confidential version of the bid of the successful tenderer was placed on the case-file by the Commission on 12 June 2007. The applicant submitted its written observations on that document on 2 July 2007. After the Commission had set out in writing its views on the applicant's observations, the oral procedure was closed on 19 July 2007.

38 The applicant claims that the Court should:

– annul the Commission's decision to reject its tender and to award the contract to the successful contractor ('the contested decision');

– order the Commission to pay the costs, even if the application is rejected.

39 The Commission contends that the Court should:

– dismiss the action;

– order the applicant to pay the costs.

Law

40 The applicant relies on four pleas in law in support of its action. The first plea in law alleges an infringement of Article 97(1) of the Financial Regulation and of Article 17(1) of Directive 92/50. The basis of the second plea in law is manifest error of assessment. The third plea in law alleges failure to provide pertinent information and infringement of the obligation to state reasons. The fourth plea in law is based on infringement of the principles of diligence and good administration.

The first plea in law: infringement of Article 97(1) of the Financial Regulation and Article 17(1) of Directive 92/50

Arguments of the parties

41 The applicant complains that the Commission infringed Article 97(1) of the Financial Regulation and Article 17(1) of Directive 92/50 by using selection criteria which were not well specified and not clearly stated in the call for tenders at issue.

42 The applicant also takes issue with the vagueness of the three qualitative award criteria set out in section 9.3.1 of the specifications (see paragraph 14 above). The fact that those criteria were unspecific and lacked clarity misled the tenderers and obliged the evaluation committee to take a subjective decision when evaluating the submitted tenders.

43 According to the applicant, several examples of tendering documents sent to tenderers in the course of other tendering procedures initiated by the Commission, in which the technical specifications were set out clearly and comprehensively and the work requested was detailed effectively, demonstrate that the tender specifications in this case are among the least complete and the most vague that the applicant has ever seen.

44 The Commission rejects the applicant's arguments and contends, first, that the applicant has no interest in challenging the alleged vagueness of the selection criteria, since the applicant was selected for the tender procedure because it satisfied those criteria.

45 Secondly, as regards the award criteria, the Commission first states that the contracting authority is free to choose those criteria. It then contends that the award criteria, in this case, were defined in advance and set out in a sufficiently clear and objective manner in the tender specifications.

Findings of the Court

46 First, the applicant alleges infringement of Article 17(1) of Directive 92/50. However, under Article 105 of the Financial Regulation, as from 1 January 2003 that directive, relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, applies to public contracts awarded by the institutions of the Communities on their own account only as regards questions relating to the thresholds determining publication arrangements, choice of procedures and corresponding time-limits.

47 It follows that in the present case, which concerns a public services contract awarded by the Commission, the question whether the contracting authority has complied with its obligation to define and set out in advance in the call for tenders the selection criteria for evaluating the capability of tenderers, and the award criteria for evaluating the content of their tenders, must be examined in the light of the provisions of the Financial Regulation and the Implementing Rules.

48 Article 97(1) of the Financial Regulation imposes on the contracting authority the obligation to define and set out in advance in the call for tenders both the selection criteria and the award criteria. Furthermore, that obligation, which involves ensuring that the criteria and conditions governing each contract are sufficiently advertised, is defined further in Articles 135 to 137 of the Implementing Rules, in respect of selection criteria, and in Article 138 of the Implementing Rules, in respect of award criteria.

49 Those provisions are intended to ensure respect for the principles of equal treatment and transparency, enshrined in Article 89 of the Financial Regulation, at all stages of the procedure for the award of public contracts, in particular the stage of selection of the tenderers and that of selection of tenders for the award of the contract (see, to that effect and by analogy, Case 31/87 Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635, paragraphs 21 and 22, and Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others[2002] ECR I-11617, paragraphs 90 to 92).

50 The purpose of those provisions is none other than to allow all reasonably well informed and normally diligent tenderers to interpret both the selection criteria and the award criteria in the same way (see, to that effect and by analogy, Case C-19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I-7725, paragraph 42) and consequently, to have equality of opportunity in formulating the terms of their applications to participate or of their tenders (see, to that effect, as regards the stage of selecting candidates, Universale-Bau and Others, cited in paragraph 49 above, paragraph 93, and, as regards the stage of comparing tenders, Case C-87/94 Commission v Belgium [1996] ECR I-2043, paragraph 54).

51 Moreover, while it cannot be excluded that the operation of checking the suitability of contractors to provide the services which are the subject of the public contract to be awarded (selection of tenderers) and that of awarding the contract (selection of tenders) may take place simultaneously, it remains the case that those two operations are governed by different rules (see, by analogy, Beentjes, cited in paragraph 49 above, paragraphs 15 and 16, and Case C-315/01 GAT [2003] ECR I-6351, paragraphs 59 and 60).

52 The complaint concerning (i) the alleged vagueness of the specifications on the selection of tenderers, and (ii) the alleged vagueness and subjectivity of the award criteria, must be examined in the light of the foregoing considerations.

– The vagueness of the specifications contained in the tender documents on the selection of tenderers

53 First, as is clear from the documents before the Court and as has been pointed out by the Commission, without objection from the applicant, the applicant passed the stage of selection of tenderers, since it was permitted to lodge a tender.

54 In those circumstances, even if the complaint as to the vagueness of the specifications relating to the phase of selection of tenderers were well founded, the applicant has not demonstrated any interest in challenging those specifications, as the Commission correctly points out, inasmuch as the applicant passed that stage.

55 Consequently, this complaint must be rejected as inoperative.

– The vagueness and subjectivity of the award criteria

56 It must be pointed out that, in accordance with Article 97(2) of the Financial Regulation and Article 138 (1) of the Implementing Rules, the contract was awarded, in this case, to the tender offering the best value for money (section 9.4 of the tender specifications, see paragraph 14 above).

57 It must further be borne in mind that, in order to ensure observance of the principles of transparency, equal treatment and non-discrimination at the stage of selection of tenders for the award of a contract, Article 97(1) of the Financial Regulation imposes on the contracting authority, when the contract is to be awarded by the best-value-for-money procedure, the obligation to define and set out in the tender specifications the award criteria for evaluating the content of the tenders. Those criteria must, in accordance with Article 138(2) of the Implementing Rules, be justified by the subject of the contract. Under Article 138(3), the contracting authority must also specify, in the contract notice or in the tender specifications, the weighting which it will apply to each of the chosen criteria for determining which tender offers the best value for money.

58 None the less, those provisions leave to the contracting authority the choice of the award criteria on which tenders will be evaluated. However, the aim of the award criteria which the contracting authority intends to adopt must, in all cases, be to identify the tender which offers the best value for money (see, to that effect, Case T-4/01 Renco v Council [2003] ECR II-171, paragraph 65, and Case T-183/00 StrabagBenelux v Council [2003] ECR II-135, paragraphs 73 and 74).

59 Furthermore, the criteria adopted by the contracting authority in order to identify the tender which offers the best value for money need not necessarily be quantitative or related solely to prices. Even if award criteria which are not expressed in quantitative terms are included in the tender specifications, they may be applied objectively and uniformly in order to compare the tenders and are clearly relevant for identifying the most economically advantageous tender (see, to that effect, Renco v Council, cited in paragraph 58 above, paragraphs 67 and 68).

60 In this case, it is clear that the Commission referred in section 9.3 of the tender specifications to the award criteria which it intended to adopt for awarding the contract to the tender which offered the best value for money, namely, on the one hand, three qualitative criteria (section 9.3.1 of the tender specifications, see paragraph 14 above) and the relative weighting which it intended to apply to each of those criteria and, on the other hand, one quantitative criterion which, in essence, involved determining the total cost of the tender by adding together the weightings of several unit prices (section 9.3.2 of the tender specifications, see paragraph 14 above).

61 It is useful to recall, at this point, that the three qualitative criteria challenged by the applicant, and their weighting, were worded as follows:

– ‘quality of the tenderer’s proposal in terms of completeness, clarity and concision, relevance of information and documentation provided, lack of ambiguity (20%);

– the proposed methodology and the organisation of the services to cover the needs of the Commission/DG AGRI; in particular, the measures proposed to ensure the timely availability of adequate resources for the proposed skills, and an effective and efficient project management and communication with the DG AGRI (40%);

– the quality control of the delivered services and the guarantees offered to respect the proposal (40%)’.

62 The applicant does no more than claim that those criteria are vague, questioning how the Commission could objectively evaluate the quality of tenders with regard to each of those criteria. The applicant offers no evidence in support of its allegation from which it can be determined that, when defining those criteria, the Commission disregarded its obligation to observe the principles of transparency, equal treatment and non-discrimination.

63 The Court considers that there is nothing in the documents before it to justify any criticism that the Commission exceeded the limits stemming from the abovementioned legislative provisions, as they have been interpreted in the case–law cited (see paragraphs 58 and 59 above), when it chose and defined the award criteria intended to identify the tender offering the best value for money.

64 It must be pointed out that the qualitative criteria at issue are criteria which are relevant to identifying the tender which offers the best value for money, given that the various factors taken into consideration by the Commission when defining them, such as the organisation and methodology intended for provision of the services, and the timely availability of skills and material and personal resources, may, unquestionably, affect the proper provision of the services covered by the contract to be awarded and, therefore, the value of the tender itself.

65 Furthermore, it is obvious that the principal function of the three qualitative award criteria challenged by the applicant is to check that the tender of each candidate is capable of ensuring, first, a provision of services of the quality required and suited to the needs and organisation of DG AGRI in terms of the timely availability of human and material resources and, secondly, the existence of appropriate mechanisms to monitor the effective provision of those services, including a project management team capable of ensuring communication with the recipient of the service. The Court finds that those award criteria, although they are not quantitative, unlike the criterion relating to the total cost of the tender in section 9.3.2 of the tender specifications, are not vague and subjective inasmuch as they may be applied in an objective, concrete and uniform manner by the contracting authority.

66 In addition, the Commission indicated, in accordance with the applicable provisions, the relative weighting attributed to each of the quality criteria by means of percentages, thereby informing the tenderers of the importance that the Commission intended to attach to each criterion when making the comparative evaluation of the tenders.

67 In the light of the foregoing, it must be concluded that the applicant has not established to the requisite legal standard that the Commission failed to fulfil its obligation to define and set out the award criteria in the tender specifications in accordance with the principles of transparency, equal treatment and non-discrimination.

68 Consequently, the complaint that the award criteria were vague and subjective must be rejected as being unfounded.

69 That conclusion cannot be invalidated by the applicant’s claims relating to the terms in which the Commission has drafted the tendering documents in other public procurement procedures.

70 It must, in that regard, be borne in mind that the Community legislature has conferred on the Commission the discretion to choose freely the criteria for awarding a contract which it intends to adopt, but that that discretion is not absolute. In accordance with the provisions of the Financial Regulation and the Implementing Rules, the award criteria chosen by the Commission must be defined and set out in advance in the tendering documents, have the aim of identifying the tender offering the best value for money, and be justified by the subject-matter of the contract. In addition, when exercising that discretion, the Commission must respect the principles of transparency, equal treatment and non-discrimination.

71 In conferring that discretion to choose freely the criteria for awarding the contract, the aim of the Community legislature was to enable the Commission to take into consideration the nature, subject-matter and specific features of each contract when choosing and formulating the award criteria. Consequently, the terms of the award criteria chosen by the Commission in other procurement procedures cannot be relied on by the applicant for the purpose of demonstrating that the award criteria in this case are vague and subjective. Reference to the tender documents in other procurement procedures is not evidence which is either relevant or sufficient for that purpose.

72 In the light of all of the foregoing, the plea in law which alleges an infringement of Article 97(1) of the Financial Regulation must be rejected in its entirety.

The second plea in law: manifest error of assessment

Arguments of the parties

73 The applicant claims that the Commission, by accepting the tender submitted jointly by IBM and ARHS Developments, committed a manifest error of assessment. The applicant challenges the general remarks made by the evaluation committee in its report and considers that its own tender was neither correctly nor objectively evaluated when compared with that of the successful tenderer.

74 First, the applicant makes the observation that the consortium formed by IBM and ARHS Developments, whose tender was successful, did not satisfy the selection criterion linked to economic and financial capacity, because the overall financial position of the latter company, which suffered losses in the tax years 2003 and 2004, was negative. The criterion in section 9.2.1 of the tender specifications requiring financial soundness for the previous three years, which had to be complied with by all members of a consortium and by all possible subcontractors, was, accordingly, not fulfilled.

75 The applicant also criticises the Commission for not, in those circumstances, requesting that IBM provide a guarantee on behalf of ARHS Developments, as the Commission had done in a procurement procedure launched by the Taxation and Customs Union Directorate-General (DG TAXUD) to which ARHS Developments had also submitted a tender in a consortium with IBM. The applicant states in that regard that, unlike the present case, it was not a requirement of the tender specifications in the procedure launched by DG TAXUD that the exclusion criteria and the selection criteria should be satisfied by all of the members of a consortium or by subcontractors.

76 Secondly, the applicant cannot understand the Commission's choice in accepting the tender of the consortium formed by ARHS Developments and IBM. While the latter has the advantage of international recognition, it has only limited experience in the provision of services to the Commission. The same is true of its partner, ARHS Developments, which has almost no experience in this field, quite apart from the fact that it has a limited number of employees. By contrast, the applicant and Software, with which it submitted a tender as a consortium, are both regular suppliers of IT services to the European institutions. Furthermore, Software has a staff of 3 000 employees.

77 The applicant also claims that the working relations maintained in the past by the founder of ARHS Developments with DG AGRI in the provision of IT services was not a criterion which could have been taken into account by the evaluation committee.

78 Thirdly, the applicant complains that the Commission did not, when evaluating the tenders, follow a methodology which was precise and known to the tenderers. Fourthly, the applicant criticises the Commission for not taking into account the fact that its tender was financially more advantageous than that of the successful tenderer.

79 The Commission rejects the applicant's arguments, and refers to its broad discretion as to the factors to be taken into consideration when a decision to award a contract following a call for tenders is made.

80 It observes that, contrary to the applicant's assertion, ARHS Developments is a subcontractor and not a member of a consortium. In the case of subcontracting, it is clear from sections 7.4 and 9.1.2 of the tender specifications that the contractor remains solely and entirely responsible for performance of the contract awarded. For that reason, contrary to what was decided in the DG TAXUD procurement procedure, in which IBM and ARHS Developments were both members of a consortium and, therefore, jointly responsible if the contract was awarded to them, the Commission did not deem it necessary, in the tendering procedure at issue in the present case, that the tendering company, IBM, should provide a guarantee on behalf of the company which was a subcontractor, ARHS Developments.

81 The Commission refers to the wording of section 9.2 of the tender specifications in support of its point that satisfaction of the criterion of financial soundness did not have to be established by each of the members of a consortium or by each of the subcontractors proposed by the tenderer. According to the Commission, it is enough to demonstrate that the members of a consortium or the tenderer and its subcontractor(s) jointly offer an adequate financial capacity. Accordingly, a tender can be rejected because of the financial position of one single member of the consortium or one of the subcontractors only when that position is such as to affect the financial capacity of the other members of the consortium or of the principal partner (in the case of subcontractors) to perform the contract.

Findings of the Court

82 It is clear from settled case-law that the Commission enjoys a broad margin of assessment with regard to the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender, and that review by the Community Courts is limited to checking compliance with the applicable procedural rules and with the duty to give reasons, the correctness of the facts found and that there is no manifest error of assessment or misuse of powers (Case 56/77 Agence européenne d'intérims v Commission [1978] ECR 2215, paragraph 20; Case T–145/98 ADT Projekt v Commission [2000] ECR II–387, paragraph 147, and Case T–148/04 TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission [2005] ECR II–2627, paragraph 47).

83 What must be determined therefore is whether, in this case, the Commission committed a manifest error of assessment in the award of the contract by selecting a tender other than that of the consortium of which the applicant was a member, regard being had to the broad discretion enjoyed by the Commission when awarding a contract following an invitation to tender.

– The selection criterion relating to the economic and financial capacity of the successful tenderer

84 It is appropriate to examine the applicant's argument that the Commission, in taking the view that the consortium formed by IBM and ARHS Developments satisfied the selection criterion relating to economic and financial capacity, even though the overall financial position of ARHS Developments was negative, committed a manifest error of assessment.

85 In essence the question is whether, as is claimed by the applicant, the tender specifications in this case required compliance with the selection criterion relating to economic and financial capacity by all of the parties which submitted a joint tender as members of a consortium or as subcontractors. It must also be determined whether the reply to that question is dependent on the legal nature of the links between the parties which decided to jointly submit their tender, whether those are links characteristic of those between members of a consortium or links characteristic of subcontracting.

86 First of all, it is useful to recall the content of the provisions of the tender specifications relating to the information which must, when a tender is submitted, be supplied to the contracting authority to allow examination of compliance with the exclusion and selection criteria, namely sections 8.2.2 and 8.2.3 of the specifications (see paragraph 13 above). That information must be provided by each of the members of a consortium, where the tender is submitted by a consortium, or by each of the subcontractors proposed at the time of submission of the tender or in the future, in the case where the tenderer envisages making use of subcontractors.

87 In addition, as regards information for the selection criterion relating to economic and financial capacity, section 8.2.3.1 of the specifications states that, where a company has been operating for less than three years, proof must be furnished that its financial standing is adequate.

88 Next, as regards the provisions concerning the assessment of compliance with the exclusion criteria, it is clear that section 9.1 of the specifications states that '[i]n the case of joint tenders (consortium) or subcontractors, these exclusion criteria will be applied to all the individual organisations proposed by the tenderer', and that the decision to exclude a tenderer will be taken on the basis of the information which all the tenderers, either a single entity or all members of a joint offer as members of consortium or as subcontractors, have to supply in accordance with the requirements of section 8.2.2 of the specifications.

89 Lastly, as regards the provisions of the specifications concerning the assessment of compliance with the selection criteria, namely section 9.2.1 on examination of economic and financial standing, and section 9.2.2 corresponding to professional and technical capacity, it is clear that those provisions merely state that the decision relating to selection of tenderers will be taken on the basis of the information supplied by the tenderers in accordance with the requirements of sections 8.2.3.1 and 8.2.3.2 of the specifications and, where applicable, on the basis of other information which the Commission may judge to be relevant. However, it is noteworthy that those provisions do not, unlike the provisions on exclusion criteria, state that, in the case of joint tenders (consortium) or subcontractors, those selection criteria will be applied to all the organisations in the tenderer's proposal.

90 The applicant's reliance on the provisions referred to above does not therefore support its claim that, in this case, both IBM and ARHS Developments, which jointly submitted the successful tender, were required individually to demonstrate a sound economic and financial capacity for the previous three years, irrespective, furthermore, of the legal nature of the links between them.

91 That conclusion cannot be invalidated by the fact that, under section 8.2.3 of the specifications, the information relating to economic and financial capacity there referred to must be supplied by all parties submitting the joint tender. There is no provision in the tender specifications which specifies how that information must be used by the contracting authority when assessing compliance with the selection criteria, in particular the criterion concerning the economic and financial capacity of the tenderer.

92 It follows that, in this case, the Commission was at liberty, by reason of its broad discretion as regards the factors to be taken into consideration when a public contract is awarded, to make an overall assessment of the information provided by each of the two companies which jointly submitted the successful tender and to conclude that, taken together and regard being had to the fact that they were in some respects interdependent, those companies jointly possessed the economic and financial capacity necessary to satisfy the relevant selection criterion. Contrary to what is claimed by the applicant, there is no provision of the specifications in this case from which it can be inferred that the Commission was obliged to examine separately the economic and financial capacity of each of the two companies which jointly submitted their tender and to conclude that those two companies individually satisfied the relevant selection criterion.

93 In any event, having regard to the legal nature of the links between IBM and ARHS Developments, the Commission was entitled to refrain from establishing that ARHS Developments had complied with the selection criterion relating to economic and financial capacity. In fact, as is clear from the non-confidential version of the successful candidate's tender placed on the case-file by the Commission (pages 18, 29 and 35), the legal status of that company is, in the context of the call for tenders at issue, that of a subcontractor, and not that of a member of a consortium as is claimed by the applicant.

94 As is correctly observed by the Commission, the legal links characteristic of a subcontracting relationship differ from those which characterise the relationship of members of a consortium inasmuch as, in the case of subcontracting, the sole party responsible for the proper performance of the contract is the tenderer to which the contract has been awarded, not the subcontractor. In the present case, it was laid down in sections 7.3 and 7.4 of the specifications, and in Article 9.1.2 of the draft framework contract, that, in the case of subcontracting, the contractor was to remain solely responsible for the due performance of the contract. IBM remained, therefore, ultimately solely responsible for the due performance of the contract.

95 Moreover, since ARHS Developments had been operating in the market for less than three years, it was obliged, in accordance with section 8.2.3.1 of the specifications, only to demonstrate that it possessed, at the time of lodging its tender and for the purposes of performance of the contract, adequate financial standing. It is clear from the non-confidential version of the tender of the successful tenderer (pages 57 and 58) that ARHS Developments, operating in the market since 2003, submitted the information required for assessment of the selection criterion relating to economic and financial capacity in a detailed and objective manner, and that information, moreover, has not been directly disputed by the applicant.

96 In those circumstances, the Commission could reasonably form the view, without exceeding the limits set on the exercise of its broad discretion in awarding a contract, that examination of the economic and financial capacity of the two companies which jointly submitted the successful tender justified the conclusion that the selection criterion relating to economic and financial capacity had been satisfied. In addition, taking account of the role in the tender reserved to IBM and its financial soundness, which is moreover undisputed by the applicant, the Commission was also justified in forming the view that the fact that the overall financial situation of ARHS Developments was negative was not such as to place in question the economic and financial capacity required by the tender specifications.

97 In addition, and to the extent to which it is evident that ARHS Developments was a subcontractor of IBM, it is not possible to accept the applicant's argument which seeks to demonstrate that the Commission treated differently two similar situations and, consequently, infringed the principle of equal treatment and non-discrimination in the exercise of its broad discretion, inasmuch as, in this case, by contrast to what the Commission had done in the DG TAXUD procurement procedure, it did not require the provision of a guarantee covering ARHS Developments.

98 As the applicant rightly acknowledges, in the last-mentioned procurement procedure, IBM and ARHS Developments submitted their tender jointly in the form of a consortium. That is not the position here. In the instant case, it has been established that ARHS Developments was the subcontractor of the tendering company, IBM, which, under the provisions of the specifications and of the draft framework contract, was solely responsible for performance of the contract. In the case of a consortium, as a general rule all its members are bound to the contract and jointly and severally responsible for its due performance, which explains why DG TAXUD requested a guarantee from IBM, given that the overall financial situation of the other tendering member of the consortium, ARHS Developments, was negative. It follows that, contrary to what is claimed by the applicant, since the situations are not similar, the Commission was entitled to treat them differently, and, consequently, the Court cannot hold that there was any infringement of the principle of equal treatment.

99 In the light of all of the foregoing, it must be concluded that the applicant has not established that, in taking the view that the successful tenderer satisfied the selection criterion relating to economic and financial capacity, notwithstanding the fact that the overall financial situation of the company operating as subcontractor, ARHS Developments, was negative, the Commission committed a manifest error of assessment.

– The evaluation of the applicant's tender and its comparison with that of the successful tenderer

100 It is also clear that the applicant cannot rely on its greater experience in the field of providing IT services for the European institutions, nor on a larger number of employees, in order to establish that the Commission did not correctly assess its tender when comparing it with the successful tender, and that it thereby committed a manifest error of assessment.

101 In accordance with settled case-law, the quality of tenders must be assessed on the basis of the tenders themselves and not either on the basis of the experience acquired by the tenderers with the contracting authority in connection with previous contracts or on the basis of selection criteria (such as the technical and professional capacity of tenderers) which were already checked at the selection phase and which cannot be taken into account again for the purpose of comparing the tenders (Case T-169/00 Esedra v Commission [2002] ECR II-609, paragraph 158, and TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission, cited in paragraph 82 above, paragraph 86; see also, to that effect, Beentjes, cited in paragraph 49 above, paragraph 15).

102 In this case, it is clear from section 9.3.1 of the specifications that the award criteria are three in number (see paragraph 14 above), and that the past experience of tenderers in the field of providing IT services to the Commission is not among them. The applicant's experience therefore cannot preclude the successful candidate's tender from being treated as a tender capable of ensuring a quality of service superior to that of the applicant and adequately satisfying the award criteria concerned.

103 The same is true of the applicant's assertion concerning the number of its employees. There is nothing to prevent the Commission from judging a lesser number of employees to be sufficient, not to say justified, without impairing the expected quality of the services (see, to that effect, TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission, cited in paragraph 82 above, paragraph 89). Moreover, the applicant has in no way demonstrated that the lower number of employees made available by the successful tenderer might affect the quality of the service here being provided.

104 Furthermore, as stated by the Commission, the past acquisition of significant experience in the field of providing IT services to the European institutions and, more specifically, to the Commission, cannot under any circumstances be taken into account by the contracting authority when selecting tenders if the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination are to be respected.

105 It follows that the conduct of the contracting authority, when in this case it did not take into account the experience acquired by the applicant in the past in providing IT services to the Commission, far from constituting a manifest error of assessment, was consistent with the limits imposed by those general principles of law on the exercise of its broad discretion and was in accordance with the relevant provisions of the specifications.

106 As regards the applicant's assertion that the Commission took into account the experience acquired in the past by the founder of ARHS Developments with DG AGRI, the Court considers that this argument must be dismissed. First, the applicant offers no evidence in support of its assertion. Secondly, it is clear from the evaluation committee report that the committee relied on the three objective award criteria in relation to quality stated in section 9.3.1 of the specifications, and within the general observations no reference is made to the alleged earlier experience of the founder of ARHS Developments with DG AGRI.

107 Consequently, the Court finds that the Commission conducted the public procurement procedure at issue with the required impartiality and objectivity, that being ensured, moreover, by the fact that the evaluation committee was composed of members of four different services of the Commission. The applicant's claim intended to establish that the Commission did not assess its tender either correctly or objectively must therefore, in the absence of sufficient evidence, be rejected.

– The financial evaluation of the applicant's tender and the methodology used in evaluating the tenders

108 As regards the applicant's claim that its tender was in financial terms a lower bid than that of the successful candidate, that fact is of no relevance, because in this case the contract had to be awarded, in accordance with the tender specifications, on the basis of the criterion of the best quality/price ratio, and not only on the basis of the criterion of price.

109 In addition, while it is true that the financial tender of the consortium to which the applicant belonged was lower than that of the successful tenderer, it remains the case that, as is clear from the results of the evaluation of tenders to be found in the evaluation committee report (section 5.5), the applicant's tender was not, in financial terms at any rate, the lowest bid among the tenders submitted, since it was ranked merely in fourth position in relation to price.

110 It follows that the applicant is not entitled to argue that there was a manifest error of assessment by relying on the fact that its tender was, in financial terms, a lower bid than that of the successful tenderer.

111 The same is true of the applicant's claim concerning the methodology used by the Commission when evaluating the tenders. On this point, leaving aside the fact that that claim is unsupported, the Court observes that, contrary to what is maintained by the applicant, the methodology employed by the Commission when making a final ranking of the tenders was defined in advance and set out in section 9.3 of the specifications (see paragraph 14 above), where, in an adequately detailed manner, the contracting authority set out the criteria in the light of which selection of tenders was to be carried out, as well as the weighting to be attributed to each of those criteria.

– The discrepancy in award criteria referred to in the evaluation committee report 112 Lastly, as regards the discrepancy, referred to by the applicant at the hearing, between the award criteria set out in section 5.2 of the non-confidential version of the evaluation committee report and those mentioned in section 5.4 of that report, it is clear that that typographical error, acknowledged as such by the Commission, although regrettable, is of no relevance, since, as is clear from the results of the evaluation of the tenders, the evaluation committee applied the three qualitative award criteria which had been defined in advance and set out in the tender specifications in accordance with the requirements of the legislation.

113 Consequently, in the light of all the foregoing, it must be concluded that, since the applicant has not succeeded in establishing to the requisite legal standard that the Commission committed a manifest error of assessment, this plea in law must be rejected as being unfounded.

The third plea in law: infringement of the obligation to state reasons and failure to provide pertinent information

Arguments of the parties

114 The applicant claims that the contested decision is vitiated by the failure to provide an adequate statement of reasons.

115 First, the applicant complains that the Commission deprived it of the possibility of assessing the legality of the Commission's acts by failing both to reply in time to the applicant's questions and to provide the clarification repeatedly requested in writing.

116 Secondly, the applicant claims that the Commission did not provide it with all the information requested on the grounds for rejection of its tender. In this context the applicant states that, in accordance with Article 253 EC and Article 8 of Directive 92/50, the contracting authority is obliged to give sufficient reasons for its decision to reject the tender of a participant when the latter request the reasons for that rejection, and must do so within 15 days following that request.

117 In this case, the applicant contends, the Commission did not explain clearly the reasons why it rejected the applicant's tender and failed to make any reference to the characteristics and comparative advantages of the successful tenderer, thereby depriving the applicant of the possibility of commenting meaningfully on the choice made and of challenging it, and also of the possibility of obtaining legal redress.

118 The Commission considers that it has complied in full with the requirements to state reasons which stem from Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation. The Commission therefore rejects the applicant's arguments seeking to establish the contrary.

Findings of the Court

119 As a preliminary point, the complaint put forward by the applicant, criticising the fact that the Commission omitted both to reply within the time-limits to the requests submitted to it by the applicant and to provide the clarification which was sought several times in writing by the applicant, does not fall within the scope of an analysis of the Commission's obligation to state reasons, but within an analysis of the infringement of the principles of diligence and good administration as alleged by the applicant under its fourth and final plea in law. Consequently, this complaint will be examined only in the context of that plea in law (see paragraphs 142 to 150 below).

120 As regards the infringement, claimed by the applicant, of the obligation to state reasons as such, in that the Commission failed to communicate to it all the information requested on the reasons for rejection of its tender, it must be pointed out that, contrary to what is maintained by the applicant, the obligation on a contracting authority to state reasons for the rejection of a candidate's tender does not, in this case, come within the scope of Directive 92/50. As stated in paragraphs 47 and 48 above, the relevant provisions which are applicable in this case are the Financial Regulation and the Implementing Rules and, more specifically, Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation and Article 149 of the Implementing Rules, which govern the obligation to state reasons incumbent on the competent institution in the context of a public procurement procedure.

121 It is clear from those provisions, and from settled case-law, that the Commission fulfils its obligation to state reasons if it confines itself, first, to informing unsuccessful tenderers immediately of the reasons for the rejection of their tenders and then subsequently, if expressly requested to do so, provides to all tenderers who have made an admissible tender the characteristics and relative advantages of the tender selected as well as the name of the successful tenderer, within a period of 15 days from the date on which a written request is received (see, to that effect, Case T–19/95 Adia Interim v Commission [1996] ECR II–321, paragraph 31, and Strabag Benelux v Council cited in paragraph 58 above, paragraph 54).

122 That manner of proceeding satisfies the purpose of the duty to state reasons enshrined in Article 253 EC, according to which the reasoning followed by the authority which adopted the measure in question must be disclosed in a clear and unequivocal fashion so as, on the one hand, to make the persons concerned aware of the reasons for the measure taken and thereby enable them to assert their rights, and, on the other, to enable the Court to exercise its supervisory jurisdiction (see Adia Interim v Commission, cited in paragraph 121 above, paragraph 32 and case–law cited; Strabag Benelux v Council, cited in paragraph 58 above, paragraph 55; and Renco v Council, cited in paragraph 58 above, paragraph 93).

123 Consequently, in order to determine whether, in this case, the Commission fulfilled its obligation to state reasons, the Court considers it necessary to examine the contested decision and also the letter of 10 December 2004, sent to the applicant in reply to its express request of 2 December 2004 seeking to obtain additional information on the decision to award the contract in question and on the rejection of its tender.

– The statement of reasons contained in the contested decision and in the letter of 10 December 2004

124 In the contested decision, the Commission confined itself, in accordance with Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation, to disclosing the reasons why the applicant's tender had been rejected, namely the fact that that tender did not offer the best value for money, the criterion on which the contract had been awarded. The Commission also informed the applicant of the possibility of requesting additional information on the reasons for the rejection of its tender.

125 As regards the letter of 10 December 2004 (see paragraph 28 above), it is necessary to observe, at the outset, that the Commission's reply to the applicant's written request of 2 December 2004 complied with the maximum period of 15 calendar days, from the date of receipt of that request, as laid down in Article 149(2) of the Implementing Rules.

126 The letter of 10 December 2004, which provided information on several points in reply to the applicant's request for detailed explanations, was worded as follows:

'(1) The successful tenderer is IBM … with subcontractor Aris Developments …

The tender specifications did not require the percentage of the contract to be allocated to subcontractors.

(2) [Points allocated on each of the three quality criteria to the successful tender and to that of the applicant:]

Tendering Party	QC 1 out of 20	QC 2 out of 40	QC 3 out of 40	Total out of 100
European Dynamics	14,51	30,08	29,75	74,33
IBM	18,20	36,33	36,17	90,70

(3) For the reasons mentioned in the introductory letter [protection of the legitimate business interests of the tendering parties], it is not possible to provide a copy of the evaluation report to you. I can, however, give you an extract from the minutes of the Evaluation Committee comparing your offer [the applicant's tender] to the winning offer:

European Dynamics	Good but rather general offer, more a collection of best practices than tailored to the specific aspects of DG AGRI addressed by the tendering specifications (notably, the guarantees offered to cope with the business aspects of financial systems)
IBM	Very good offer, concise and clear. Covers both technical and business aspects well. The offer conveys the assurance of the ability of the tenderer to cope successfully with the challenges in the field of financial IS [IT systems] at DG AGRI

(4) As explained in the tender specifications, there is no score awarded to the financial offers. The award has been done using the best quality/price ratio.

Tendering party	Weighted Price (EUR)	Points out of 100	Points/price (rounded to 4 decimals)	Rank
European Dynamics	381,40	74,33	0,1949	4

127 It is clear that, in that letter, the Commission stated to the requisite legal standard the reasons for the rejection of the applicant's tender, by specifying the name of the candidate to which the contract had been awarded and that of its subcontractor, and also the advantages of the successful tender by comparison with that of the applicant in the light of the three qualitative award criteria established by the tender specifications. Indeed, the second table enabled the applicant to compare directly, on each qualitative criterion, the points which had been awarded to it with those obtained by the successful tenderer. In addition, the last table showed the result of the quality/price ratio calculation, for both the applicant's tender and the successful tender, thereby enabling the applicant to identify immediately the reasons why its tender had not been chosen, namely the fact that it offered less value for money than that of the successful tenderer, because the latter offered a better quality/price ratio (see, to that effect, Esedra v Commission, cited in paragraph 101 above, paragraph 192; Strabag Benelux v Council, cited in paragraph 58 above, paragraph 57; cited in and Renco v Council, cited in paragraph 58 above, paragraph 95).

128 Furthermore, the letter of 10 December 2004 also revealed that the applicant's tender had not been ranked, on any of the three qualitative criteria set out in the tender specifications, ahead of the successful tender. In addition, in the last table, it was indicated that, in the final ranking, the applicant's tender was placed in fourth position.

129 Moreover, the general observations concerning the comparison of the applicant's tender with that of the successful tenderer gave details of the factors in its tender which the Commission considered to be unsatisfactory.

130 Having regard to all of that information, it must be concluded that the Commission properly fulfilled its obligation to state reasons, as interpreted by the case-law, inasmuch as its letter of 10 December 2004 satisfied the requirements laid down by Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation and Article 149(2) of the Implementing Rules.

– The brevity of the evaluation committee report

131 Furthermore, the applicant's claim that the evaluation committee report is relatively brief cannot invalidate the finding that the statement of reasons was sufficient.

132 While it is true that the evaluation committee report appears succinct, it remains the case that the information which it contains was sufficient to satisfy the obligation to state reasons in the terms laid down by the Community legislature and the case-law, since that information enabled both the applicant to assert its rights before the Court and the Court to exercise its supervisory jurisdiction. Indeed, the applicant, in its written pleadings, relied on information drawn from the extracts from the evaluation committee report which had been sent to it in the letter of 10 December 2004.

133 It follows that, while regrettable, the fact that the evaluation committee report was succinct, none the less cannot invalidate the conclusion that the Commission satisfactorily fulfilled, to the requisite legal standard, its obligation to state reasons.

134 Nevertheless, it is appropriate to point out that the principle of transparency which informs every public procurement procedure requires that particular care is taken, when a candidate's tender is rejected, with the statement of reasons, and that is a consequence of the broad discretion enjoyed by the institutions in public procurement. It would be desirable, accordingly, that the contracting authority should ensure that any evaluation committee report issued in a tendering procedure be as substantial as possible, setting out in detail the reasoning which led to the proposal to award the contract to one specific tender and to reject, consequently, the tenders of other candidates. The fact that, as the Commission stated at the hearing, 'a lot of work is done behind the scenes' cannot release the contracting authority from the obligation, in conformity with the principle of transparency and the safeguards which limit its broad discretion, to take pains to ensure that all the factors on which it has based its decision are revealed.

135 For the same reasons, the Court considers that that it would be equally desirable that the institution concerned systematically should send to tenderers which have made a written request, within the meaning of Article 100(2) of the Financial Regulation and Article 149(2) of the Implementing Rules, a copy of the evaluation committee report from which, if necessary, confidential information has been removed.

– The Commission's letter of 26 January 2005, sent on 7 February 2005

136 Lastly, the sufficiency of the statement of reasons is not brought into question by the fact that in the letter dated 26 January 2005, and posted on 7 February 2005, the Commission provided, at the applicant's express request, an even more detailed explanation concerning the evaluation of the applicant's tender and the grounds for its rejection (see, to that effect, Strabag Benelux v Council, cited in paragraph 58 above, paragraph 57). After all, since the Commission had, to the requisite legal standard and in accordance with Article 100(2) of Financial Regulation and Article 149(2) of the Implementing Rules, stated the reasons for its decision to reject the applicant's tender and to award the contract to the successful tenderer, the Commission was not under any obligation to reply to the applicant's requests of 29 and 30 December 2004. Since that letter was sent to the applicant after the date on which the present action was brought by the applicant, it cannot be taken into consideration for the examination of this plea in law relating to the infringement of the obligation to state reasons. On the other hand, the Court considers that the letter must be examined under the fourth plea in law, which alleges infringement of the principles of diligence and good administration (see paragraphs 151 to 159 below).

137 Having regard to all of the foregoing, the third plea in law alleging an infringement of the obligation to state reasons must be rejected as being unfounded, since the applicant, on the basis of the information concerning the grounds for the rejection of its tender which were sent to it by the Commission, was in a position to assert its rights before the Court and the Court has been able to exercise its supervisory jurisdiction in respect of the legality of the contested decision.

The fourth plea in law: infringement of the principles of diligence and good administration

Arguments of the parties

138 First, the applicant claims that the Commission infringed the principles of good administration and diligence, by acting with significant delay and by failing to provide adequate answers to the applicant's requests to it for clarification of certain specifications in the tender documents prior to the submission of its tender. The Commission, it argues, thereby prevented it from submitting a more specific tender, on the assumption, which is not accepted, that the tender which the applicant did submit was not specific.

139 Secondly, the applicant repeats its criticism that the Commission failed both to reply to the questions sent to it within the time-limits and to provide the clarification which the applicant had requested several times in writing. It submits that the Commission, although acknowledging receipt on 13 January 2005 of its letter of 30 December 2004, did not reply to it until 7 February 2005, that is to say, after expiry of the period for bringing this action, on 2 February 2005.

140 The Commission rejects the applicant's arguments and contends that it replied promptly and comprehensively to each of the applicant's requests for information.

141 As regards the letter sent on 7 February 2005, the Commission considers that that letter was not essential in order for the applicant to be aware of the grounds for the rejection of its tender. The Commission also disputes that that letter was sent after the expiry of the period for bringing this action. On the contrary, the contested decision, dated 23 November 2004, was, it claims, sent by recorded delivery on 1 December 2004. Accordingly, the two-month period for bringing proceedings, extended on account of distance by a period of 10 days, expired on 11 February 2005. The letter posted on 7 February 2005 was received by the applicant before that date, namely 9 February 2005.

Findings of the Court

142 This plea in law can be divided into two parts. In the first part, the applicant claims that the Commission failed to send to it the information relating to certain specifications contained in the tender documents which it had requested from the Commission before submitting its tender. In the second part, the applicant claims that the Commission replied to its requests of 29 and 30 December 2004, following rejection of its tender, only by letter dated 26 January 2005 and posted on 7 February 2005, and thus after the expiry of the period for bringing this action, thereby depriving the applicant of the possibility of assessing the legality of the Commission's acts.

– The first part of the fourth plea in law

143 So far as concerns the requests for information sent by the applicant to the Commission before it submitted its tender, it must be borne in mind that, in accordance with Article 148(1) and (2)(a) of the Implementing Rules, contacts between contracting authorities and tenderers are permitted by way of exception during the contract award procedure. Accordingly, before the closing date for the submission of tenders, the contracting authority may, at the instance of tenderers, provide additional information solely for the purpose of clarifying the nature of the contract, such information to be communicated on the same date to all tenderers which have asked for the tender specifications.

144 It is clear from the actual terms of Article 148(1) and (2)(a) of the Implementing Rules that contacts between the contracting authority and tenderers before the lodging of tenders may take place only by way of exception.

145 Furthermore, it is clear that that provision confers on the contracting authority the option of replying to requests for additional information sent to it by tenderers. Accordingly, contrary to what the applicant appears to maintain, that provision cannot be interpreted as imposing on the contracting authority an obligation to reply to such requests.

146 Consequently, it must be held that the Commission was not obliged to reply to requests for additional information sent by the applicant prior to the lodging of its tender.

147 However, it is clear from the documents before the Court that the Commission provided the information which was requested on several occasions by the applicant and, on each occasion, did so within a reasonable period of time.

148 In that regard it must be observed, first, that the applicant sent to the Commission four successive requests for additional information on 14, 16, 20 and 21 April 2004. All of those requests related to the content of the tender specifications and sought clarification on many different specifications within them. More specifically, those four requests contained a total of 46 questions.

149 Next, it must be noted that the Commission replied promptly to each of those requests. Thus, as regards the applicant's requests of 14 and 16 April 2004, the Commission replied to some questions in those requests within four working days, namely on 20 April 2004. On 21 April 2004, the Commission replied equally promptly to the applicant's request of 20 April 2004. The same is true of the request for information dated 21 April 2004, to which the Commission replied by letter on 22 April 2004, while correctly informing the applicant that it was not possible to reply as regards the additional information sought because of the lateness of the applicant's request. In fact, the applicant's request of 21 April 2004 was outwith the date laid down for questions in the tender specifications, namely at least six days before the closing date for submission of tenders, which had been set for 26 April 2004.

150 In the light of the foregoing, it must be concluded that the applicant's claim that the Commission did not reply either promptly or adequately to its requests for additional information has no basis in fact or in law. The Court considers that the Commission, by endeavouring to respond quickly to the applicant's requests, demonstrated a level of diligence characteristic of good administration, the more so when, as noted above, the Community legislature has placed no obligation on the Commission to reply. Consequently, the infringement of the principles of diligence and good administration claimed by the applicant has not been established.

– The second part of the fourth plea in law

151 The infringement of the principles of diligence and good administration claimed by the applicant is in actual fact bound up with the claim that the Commission, because it did not reply to the applicant's requests of 29 and 30 December 2004 within a reasonable time, is partly responsible for the present dispute and has thereby forced the applicant to bring this action.

152 It must be recalled that the need to act within a reasonable time in conducting administrative proceedings is a component of the general Community law principle of good administration which is incumbent on all Community institutions throughout such proceedings (Case T–394/03 Angeletti v Commission [2006] ECR II–000, paragraph 162).

153 The reasonableness of a period must be assessed, furthermore, in relation to the particular circumstances of each case and, in particular, the background of each case, the various procedural stages which the Commission must follow and the complexity of the case (Case T–347/03 Branco v Commission [2005] ECR II–2555, paragraph 114; see also, as regards examination of a complaint relating to State aid, Case T–395/04 Air One v Commission [2006] ECR II–1343, paragraph 61 and the case-law cited).

154 That is the context in which it is appropriate to assess the reasonableness of the period of approximately five weeks which elapsed between the applicant's requests of 29 and 30 December 2004 and the posting of the Commission's reply on 7 February 2005.

155 It is to be noted in this regard that the information sought by the applicant in those requests related, essentially, to the general observations in the evaluation committee report, and to the results of the comparison of its tender with that of the successful tenderer. However, at the time of the applicant's requests of 29 and 30 December 2004, the phase of evaluation of tenders had already been completed, and the decision to award the contract to a tenderer other than the applicant had also been taken. In those circumstances, it is clear that the Commission was in possession of the information requested by the applicant, relating to the tender evaluation phase, at the moment when those requests were sent to it, if not before, namely on the date on which the Commission notified the applicant, by letter of 10 December 2004, of the reasons for rejecting its tender.

156 That being the case, there was nothing to prevent the Commission conveying that information when it sent its letter on 10 December 2004, or at the very least doing so in a period shorter than five weeks, since no particular steps had to be taken in order to reply to the applicant's requests. It must, furthermore, be noted that the letter in question, although it bears the date of 26 January 2005, was not posted until 7 February 2005. The Commission therefore allowed another 12 days to elapse before posting it to the applicant, while fully aware that the period for bringing proceedings was very close to expiry. Consequently, it must be concluded that, since the period of almost five weeks which elapsed between those requests and the reply of the Commission by the letter posted on 7 February 2005 was not justified by the circumstances of this case, the Commission failed in its duty of diligence and good administration.

157 However, it does not, in this case, necessarily follow from the establishment of such an infringement either that the contested decision was unlawful or that the decision should be annulled, since the delay in the Commission's replying to the applicant's requests did not, contrary to what the applicant claims, affect its rights of defence in relation to the contested decision.

158 As has been established in paragraphs 127 to 130 above, the letter of 10 December 2004 contained all the information required to enable the applicant duly to assert its rights before the Court and to enable the Court to exercise its supervisory jurisdiction on legality. The more detailed explanations provided to the applicant by the letter sent on 7 February 2005 are not such as to affect that assessment.

159 Having regard to all of the foregoing, the Court finds that the fact, regrettable as it may be, that the Commission replied to the applicant's requests of 29 and 30 December 2004 with a significant delay, but in any event before expiry of the period for bringing proceedings laid down in Article 230 EC, did not restrict the applicant's ability to assert its rights before the Court in the form of this action and is, consequently, not such as to entail annulment of the contested decision.

Costs

160 The applicant requests that the Commission should be ordered to pay the whole costs, even if the application is rejected.

161 The applicant claims that the Commission, by failing to provide a timely and sufficient statement of reasons, did not allow it to assess its chances of contesting the decision and therefore forced it to bring this action in order to preserve its rights. The applicant is critical of the fact that the information contained in the letter posted on 7 February 2005, which was extremely important as to the exact reasons why its tender was rejected, reached it only after the expiry of the deadline for the bringing of this action.

162 The Commission takes the view that there is no basis for the applicant's claims. The letter posted on 7 February 2005 reached the applicant before the final date for the bringing of this action. The Commission does not accept that the information contained in that letter was indispensable to knowledge of the reasons which led to rejection of the applicant's tender, given that those reasons had been set out previously in the contested decision and in the letter of 10 December 2004.

163 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. The first subparagraph of Article 87(3) of those Rules further provides that the Court may order that the costs be shared or that each party should bear its own costs where each party succeeds on some and fails on other heads, or where the circumstances are exceptional.

164 In this case, the applicant has failed on its claim for annulment. However, the Court's examination has established that the Commission failed to comply with its duty of diligence and with the principle of good administration by replying with a significant delay to the applicant's requests of 29 and 30 December 2004 and, consequently, that the Commission may have contributed to the present dispute.

165 In those circumstances, the Court considers that an equitable assessment of the matter is to decide that the Commission, in addition to its own costs, should pay one fifth of the costs of the applicant.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Third Chamber)

hereby orders:

1. The action is dismissed as being unfounded.

2. The Commission shall bear its own costs and shall pay one fifth of the costs incurred by Evropaïki Dinamiki – Proigmena Sistimata Tilepikinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE.

3. Evropaïki Dinamiki shall bear four fifths of its costs.

Notice for the OJ

Action brought on 2 February 2005 by European Dynamics S.A. against the Commission of the European Communities

(Case T-59/05)

Language of the case: English

An action against the Commission of the European Communities was brought before the Court of First Instance of the European Communities on 2 February 2005 by European Dynamics S.A., established in Athens (Greece), represented by N. Korogiannakis, lawyer.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

- annul the decision of the Commission (DG Agriculture), to evaluate the applicant's bid as not successful and award the contract to the successful contractor;

- order the Commission to pay the applicant's legal costs and other costs and expenses incurred in connection with the application, even if the application is rejected.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicant company filed a bid in response to the Commission's call for tenders AGRI-2004-S4FA-I3-01 for the provision of information system development, maintenance and support services for the DG Agriculture Financial Information Systems1. By the contested decision this bid was rejected and the contract awarded to another bidder.

In support of its application for annulment of that decision the applicant claims first of all the Commission violated the Financial Regulation2 as well as Article 17 (1) of Directive 92/503 by using evaluation criteria that were extremely vague. The applicant further contends that the Commission failed, in response to the applicant's questions, to explain in a clear and objective manner what precisely was requested of the tenderers.

The applicant further considers that the Commission committed manifest errors of appreciation in its evaluation of the applicant's tender. In this respect the applicant contends that the Evaluation Committee did not correctly evaluate the offers, failing to take into account that contrary to the applicant both members of the successful consortium had extremely limited experience. The applicant also maintains that its own bid was more advantageous.

The applicant also invokes a violation, by the Commission, of its obligation, under Article 253 EC, to state reasons and a failure to provide pertinent information requested by the applicant on the grounds for the rejection of its bid. The applicant also submits that the Commission violated the principle of good administration and diligence by acting with significant delay and by not offering adequate answers to the applicant's requests for information prior to the submission of the bids.

Judgment

Legal context

1 The award of service contracts of the Commission of the European Communities is subject to the provisions of Title V of Part One of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 1605/2002 of 25 June 2002 on the financial regulation applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 2002 L 248, p. 1, 'the financial regulation') and the provisions of Commission Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2342/2002 of 23 December 2002 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of the financial regulation (OJ 2002 L 357, p. 1; 'the implementing rules'), in the versions applicable to the facts of the case.

Background to the dispute

I – Computerising the movement and surveillance of excisable products (EMCS)

2 On 16 June 2003, the European Parliament and the Council of the European Union adopted Decision No 1152/2003/EC on computerising the movement and surveillance of excisable products (OJ 2003 L 162, p. 5), in which they stated that it was necessary to have a computerised system for monitoring the movement of excisable goods (EMCS), such as would allow Member States to obtain real-time information on those movements and to carry out the requisite checks (recital 3 of Decision No 1152/2003).

3 Article 1 of Decision No 1152/2003 thus provides for the establishment of the EMCS.

4 Furthermore, Article 3(2) of Decision No 1152/2003 provides:

'The Commission shall ensure that in work on the Community components of the computerised system every attention is paid to re-using as much of the NCTS [new computerised transit system] as possible and ensuring that the computerised system is compatible with, and, if technically possible, integrated into, the NCTS with the objective of creating an integrated computer system for the surveillance both of intra-Community movements of excisable goods and of movements of excisable goods and goods subject to other duties and charges coming from or going to third countries.'

5 The file shows that the EMCS was to be introduced in four stages between 2002 and 2009 (stage 0 in parallel to stages 1, 2 and 3).

6 Stage 0 was to be an intermediary phase prior to the actual setting up of the EMCS. During that stage, the existing computer systems used in the excise duty sector were to be kept in place and supported up until the moment of their integration into the EMCS at a time when the latter had become operational. Stage 0 was to take place in parallel to the other stages of the EMCS and to end once the EMCS started working. The tasks during stage 0 were to be carried out by the contractor for the public contract Fiscalis Information Technology Systems, specification, development, maintenance and support (FITS–DEV).

7 Stage 1 was to comprise the setting up of the EMCS and the definition of its specifications. Those specifications were to be produced by the contractor for public contract EMCS System Specifications (ESS) ('the ESS contract'). The work of that contractor was to be finished by the middle of 2005.

8 Finally, stages 2 and 3 were to be development and implementation stages and were to be linked to the activities of the contractor for the public contract called 'Specification, development, maintenance and support of telematic systems to control the movement of products subject to excise duty within the European Community under the excise-duty suspension arrangements (EMCS–DEV)-(TAXUD/2004/AO-004)' ('the contract at issue').

II – Award of the contract at issue

9 By a contract notice of 20 July 2004, published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2004, S 139), the Commission's Directorate-General for Taxation and Customs Union ('Taxation and Customs Union DG' or 'the contracting authority') issued an open call for tenders for the contract at issue. The contract was to be awarded to the most economically advantageous tender, that is to say the one presenting the best price-quality ratio. The time-limit for receipt of tenders was 31 August 2004.

10 Point 10 of the specifications annexed to the invitation to tender defines the criteria for the award of the contract as follows:

'10. Award criteria

The contract will be awarded based on the economically most advantageous tender. The following criteria will be taken into account when assessing tenders:

(1) Quality of the proposed solution:

1. – Fitness of the proposed strategy to perform the tasks of the contract (40/100)

2. – Fitness of the proposed methods, tools, quality environment and quality procedures to perform the tasks (30/100)

3. Fitness of the proposed team organisation to perform the tasks (20/100)

4. – Structure, clarity and level of completeness of the proposal (10/100)

The price component will be further evaluated for the tenders which have reached a global quality score of 60% across all the quality criteria and minimal scores (50%) for each of the quality criteria.

(2) Price

The offer presenting the best value for money will be identified in the following way:

– The offer with the best technical score will receive a quality indicator of 100 points. The remaining offers will receive lower quality indicators in proportion to their technical scores;

– the offer found to be the cheapest will receive a price indicator of 100 points. The remaining offers will receive higher price indicators in proportion to their prices.

A quality/price ratio will be calculated for each offer by dividing the quality indicator by the price indicator. The highest result will go to the offer presenting the best value for money.'

11 By fax of 27 August 2004, the applicant, Evropaïki Dynamiki – Proigmena Systimata Tilepikoinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE, a company incorporated under Greek law active in the area of information and communications technology, expressed reservations regarding the procedure for the award of the contract at issue, based on a potential lack of objectivity of the call for tenders to the advantage of tenderers which had already been suppliers to the Taxation and Customs Union DG, a lack of clear specifications in the call for tenders and a lack of precise and objective criteria for the evaluation of tenderers. By the same fax, it also asked the contracting authority to extend the deadline for the submission of tenders until it had remedied the abovementioned problems.

12 On 31 August 2004, the applicant in consortium with the French company Steria SA submitted its tender ('the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender').

13 By letter of 3 September 2004, the contracting authority expressed the opinion that the reservations in the applicant's fax of 27 August 2004 were unfounded and refused to grant its request for extension of the deadline for the submission of tenders.

14 In response to the abovementioned letter of 3 September 2004, the applicant, by fax of 6 September 2004, submitted reservations regarding the compliance of the tendering procedure with Article 92 of the financial regulation and Article 131(1) and (2) of the implementing rules.

15 By letter of 5 October 2004, the contracting authority replied that the conditions of Article 92 of the financial regulation and Article 131(1) and (2) of the implementing rules had been complied with.

16 The opening of the tenders took place on 8 September 2004. Five tenders were received and all of them were declared admissible. One of the tenders was eliminated at the exclusion stage. Another was eliminated at the quality evaluation stage. Only three tenders, including that of the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium, were compared in terms of the price-quality ratio.

17 The evaluation committee proposed awarding the contract to Intrasoft International SA ('Intrasoft'), whose tender presented the best price-quality ratio. It decided to rank the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender third.

18 The evaluation committee's proposal was endorsed by the contracting authority which, by decision of 18 November 2004, awarded the contract at issue.

19 The result of the tendering procedure was communicated to the applicant by letter of 18 November

2004. The letter stated that '[the applicant's] tender has not been selected for award, because following the assessment of the tenders selected and in the light of the award criteria specified in the terms of reference, it does not represent the best offer in terms of quality and price'.

20 By registered letter and fax of 22 November 2004, the applicant requested the following information and documents from the contracting authority: the name of the successful tenderer and, in case the successful tenderer had a partner (or partners), or a subcontractor (or subcontractors), their names and the percentage of the contract to be allocated to the partner(s)/subcontractor(s); the scores awarded to the applicant's technical offer and to that of the successful tenderer for each award criterion; a copy of the evaluation committee report; how the applicant's financial offer compared with that of the successful tenderer and, more particularly, the scores attributed to each of those two tenders. By fax of 8 December 2004, the applicant repeated its request.

21 In reply, the contracting authority, by letter of 10 December 2004, provided the applicant with an extract from the report of the evaluation committee. That extract contains, among other things, comments by the committee on the tenders of Intrasoft and the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium concerning each of the award criteria for the contract at issue. Those comments are as follows:

'A. Intrasoft …

Overall comment
An excellent offer, demonstrating a profound understanding of the issues involved with an extremely well thought out and detailed project management approach. The level of detail, the careful approach to analysing potential problems and the attention paid to quality management issues contributes to the overall quality of this offer. The only weakness is a lack of architectural analysis, which nevertheless does not detract greatly from the overall quality of the offer. The offer is based on a solid comprehension of the excise domain and its political and organisational environment in the Commission and the Member States. Methods and team organisation are of a very high quality and show that they will be able to cope with the scope of the task, including [by displaying] the necessary flexibility. As a result, this proposal appears perfectly adequate to assume the responsibility for the project.
Criteria "Fitness of the proposed strategy to perform the tasks of the contract"
This company has an outstanding comprehension of the EMCS business problems to be solved, a clear understanding of how the project components fit together. The offer presents a comprehensive and in depth description of their strategy, implementation approach, and very detailed work packages description. Their vision and strategy is supported by a very detailed and sound project plan. There is a good analysis of the possibility of re-use of NCTS components. The offer presents an exhaustive requirements tracking matrix that shows their deep understanding of the project purposes and their adherence to the "high level" requirements defined in the terms of reference of the call for tender. The offer proposes a nice set of quality indicators covering all activities, to complement the ones proposed in the terms of reference. A small weakness of the offer is the lack of deep analysis of architectural issues (robustness, scalability and performance).
Criteria "Fitness of the proposed methods, tools, quality environment and quality procedures to perform the tasks"
Extremely detailed description of the methods and tools proposed. General approach combining RUP [Rational Unified Process] for the specification phase followed by TEMPO for the development phase shows a good understanding of the differences between the two stages in Commission-Member State collaborative developments.

The quality assurance approach is extremely well thought out, proposing quality indicators for both process and product, derived from “key evaluation topics”. The tenderer has a good understanding of the principles of COSMIC FFP [footnote omitted], although the description is a bit theoretical, as their offer lacks pragmatic implementation (e.g. does not specify the tools to be used). Although the development infrastructure is very well defined, the security provisions in the tender’s premises are overlooked.
Criteria “Fitness of the proposed team organisation to perform the tasks”
The team structure and the organisation are extremely well defined, along with lines of reporting, extensive profiles identification (23 in total) and description, full matrix of skills per profile. The team composition is well balanced between manager profiles, business experts, business analysts, developers, designers, helpdesk operators etc. The roles and responsibilities within the team are very well described. The sizing of the team (around 60 people) is sound and consistent with the volume of activities to be performed. Their offer guarantees low turnover by maintaining it to around 80% of team personnel, avoiding them being removed to work on other projects.
Criteria “Structure, clarity and level of completeness of the proposal”
The proposal is complete and comprehensive in its treatment of all project activities. The overall presentation is well structured, rich in explanatory diagrams. Information is easy to find and to read as it is written in a comprehensive language. The offer only lacks a table of acronyms.

B. [Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria]

Overall comment
Whilst this offer contains some interesting proposals concerning architecture, the proposal is too generic: the description of the specification and development process does not show much emphasis on the specificity of the [implementation of the] EMCS project. The offer’s proposed methodology is a good collection of best practices and literature about computerisation system development. However, again, the specific issues of the EMCS development are dealt with in a very generic fashion and the proposed analysis is not very complete. The description of the team organisation is good, but does not indicate that there is an understanding of the necessity of strong end user support during the specification activities of the [implementation of the] EMCS project. The offer contains some inconsistencies, and this casts some doubt on the reliability of the proposal.
Criteria “Fitness of the proposed strategy to perform the tasks of the contract”
The tenderer has included a review of the EMCS technical architecture, made an interesting proposal concerning the architecture (e.g. the use of Web services), made initial attempts to propose technical solutions, and a proposal for setting up the infrastructure. The offer presents a detailed list of work packages with relevant order, request, planning, delivery/acceptance mechanism, and quality indicators. However, the overall approach is extremely generic with few close examinations of EMCS specific issues. The proposed strategy is a bit simplistic with many excerpts from external sources (e.g. large excerpts from IBM Rational RUP documentation) without showing how that documentation fits in the project.

The offer shows some lack of understanding of the terms of reference as the proposal makes reference to activities that have already been completed, or will be completed by the time the contract will come into force, or are proposing architecture elements that would not fit the EMCS environment in terms of performance or scalability. The offer presents some inconsistencies, and in particular in the planning: for instance, some development activities are starting even before the start of the specifications.
Criteria “Fitness of the proposed methods, tools, quality environment and quality procedures to perform the tasks”
The methods proposed are generally well presented. The offer presents an accurate description of the IT development infrastructure and a good description of its relevant security aspects. There are lots of textbook-like references to architecture, standards, IT tools and infrastructure components (e.g. XML, X509, J2EE), accompanied by a few hundred pages of manuals and brochures from HP, Oracle, CISCO, etc., but often without any justification or connection made to EMCS objectives. The offer presents a detailed description of Cosmic FFP, but the tools proposed for estimates (Calico and Costar) are only suitable for estimates based on the Cocomo II methodology, which is incoherent (see section 4.1.3.5.1). RUP is considered throughout their offer as “the” project management methodology but their software proposal for the development environment does not list any IBM-Rational licence.
Criteria “Fitness of the proposed team organisation to perform the tasks”
Good description of team organisation, showing understanding of the evolution of the team composition as the project proceeds from specification to development to production, to handover, including security, testing, and helpdesk. Interactions in the team organisation are well described. The sizing of the team, with a pool of 67 team members, is adequate. Although customs and excise experience is identified in their offer as a must in terms of skills, in practice, their proposal does not show such competences.
Criteria “Structure, Clarity and level of completeness of the proposal”
The presentation of the offer is clear. Its structure and overview is good. However, the overwhelmingly generic material and the low level of details lower the readability of the offer.’

22 The extract from the evaluation committee's report sent to the applicant also contains a comparative evaluation table concerning the quality of the tenders from the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium and Intrasoft and a comparative evaluation table for the price-quality ratio of the two tenders. 23 By registered letter and fax of 30 December 2004, the applicant submitted its observations on the extract from the evaluation committee's report communicated to it and repeated its view that the procedure for the award of the contract at issue was contrary to the financial regulation and to the applicable legislation.

24 By letter of 14 January 2005, the contracting authority indicated that it was closely examining the points raised by the applicant in its letter of 30 December 2004 and that the applicant would receive a detailed reply as soon as possible.

25 By letter of 17 February 2005, the contracting authority replied to the applicant's observations set out in its letter of 30 December 2004.

26 The award notice for the contract at issue was published on 2 March 2005 in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2005, S 43).

Procedure and forms of order sought by the parties

27 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court on 28 January 2005, the applicant brought the present action.

28 By letter of 30 October 2006, the Court, by way of measures of organisation of procedure, asked the applicant to reply in writing to questions concerning the admissibility of the action. The applicant complied with that request within the time allowed.

29 Upon hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court (Third Chamber) decided to open the oral procedure.

30 By letter of 3 February 2009, the Court, by way of measures of organisation of procedure, asked the parties to reply in writing to certain questions. By the same letter, the Court also asked the Commission to submit certain documents. The parties complied with those requests within the time allowed.

31 By letter of 2 March 2009, the Court, by way of measures of organisation of procedure, asked each party to submit its written observations on the replies given by the other party to the written questions put by the Court in the letter of 3 February 2009. The parties complied with those requests within the time allowed.

32 The parties presented oral argument and replied to the questions put by the Court at the hearing which took place on 17 March 2009.

33 The applicant claims that the Court should:

– annul the decision of the Commission not to choose its tender and to award the contract to the successful tenderer;

– order the Commission to pay the costs, even if the application is dismissed.

34 The Commission contends that the Court should:

– dismiss the action as unfounded;

– order the applicant to pay the costs.

Law

I – Admissibility

A – Arguments of the parties

35 Without formally raising an objection of inadmissibility, the Commission draws the Court's attention to the fact that Steria, the other member of the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium, has not challenged the decision of the contracting authority not to choose the tender submitted by that consortium and to award the contract at issue to another tenderer and that, furthermore, it was not clear from the application that that decision was being challenged by the applicant on behalf of Steria. The Commission therefore observes that the applicant is challenging that decision only on its own behalf.

36 In its reply, the applicant responds that, as leader of the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium and the member fully responsible for preparing and drafting the tender, it has standing to act and that no Community legislation or case-law requires all members of a consortium of tenderers to challenge a contested decision to award a contract. Furthermore, the applicant set out those arguments in its written responses to the Court's questions (see paragraph 28 above).

37 The Commission did not challenge the position of the applicant as set out above.

B – Findings of the Court

38 The Court considers it appropriate in the present case to examine whether the applicant has standing to bring an action against the contracting authority's decision, communicated to it by letter of 8 November 2004, not to choose the tender submitted by the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium and, consequently, to award the contract at issue to another tenderer ('the contested decision').

39 Under the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC, '[a]ny natural or legal person may, under the same conditions, institute proceedings against a decision addressed to that person or against a decision which, although in the form of a regulation or a decision addressed to another person, is of direct and individual concern to the former'.

40 In the present case, even though the contested decision is formally addressed to the tenderer, that is to say the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium, the fact remains that, as the applicant stated in its written replies to the Court's questions (see paragraph 28 above), which were not contested by the Commission and which the Court has no reason to doubt, the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium has never had legal personality. Consequently, from the point of view of Article 230 EC, given that its members remained visible in that ad hoc structure, the two undertakings at issue must both be considered to be addressees of the contested decision. Therefore, the applicant was entitled, as addressee of the contested decision, to challenge that decision in accordance with the conditions laid down by Article 230 EC.

41 It follows that the applicant's action is admissible.

II – Substance

42 In support of its action for annulment, the applicant puts forward five pleas in law. The first plea alleges breach of the principles of non-discrimination and freedom of competition. The second plea alleges infringement of the provisions of the financial regulation, the implementing rules, Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) and Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114). The third plea alleges that there is a manifest error of assessment in the contracting authority's evaluation of the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender. The fourth plea alleges a lack of relevant information and reasoning. The fifth plea alleges breach of the principle of sound administration and diligence.

43 The Court considers it appropriate to start by examining the first plea, then the second, then the fifth, then the fourth and finally the third. That order is dictated by the fact that the first, second and fifth pleas concern the award procedure for the contract at issue, whereas the fourth and third pleas concern the contested decision itself.

A – The first plea: breach of the principles of non-discrimination and freedom of competition

1. Arguments of the parties

44 The applicant submits that the Commission infringed the principles of non-discrimination and freedom of competition among tenderers by not making available to the applicant – despite a request to that effect from the applicant before the deadline for the submission of tenders – two types of technical information that were necessary for the formulation of tenders for the contract at issue, namely, first, the exact specifications for the EMCS and, second, technical information relating to existing computer applications linked to the EMCS and, more specifically, the source-code for the NCTS. That alleged omission on the part of the Commission benefited tenderers which were previous or current contractors for the Taxation and Customs Union DG, or which had links to such contractors, and which therefore had exclusive access to the abovementioned information. Those tenderers, including the successful tenderer, were thus able to submit tenders that were more competitive than that of the applicant, both technically and financially.

45 As regards, first, the specifications for the EMCS, the applicant emphasises that they were not yet available at the time of the procurement procedure for the contract at issue, but that they were being prepared by another contractor under a separate contract. The applicant submits that the Commission fails to explain how a tenderer could adequately fulfil the objectives and the requirements of a computer system for which it had not received detailed specifications and wonders how its tender could have been 'better' than that of the incumbent contractor, which was the only one to have access to such specifications.

46 As regards, second, the NCTS source-code, the applicant emphasises that the Commission refused to grant it access for no valid reason and despite its request to that effect. By contrast, the successful tenderer had access to that source-code, since it was the Commission's contractor for the NCTS and was, for that reason, able to submit a tender that was more competitive than the applicant's tender.

47 In order to show the importance of the NCTS source-code for the formulation of tenders for the contract at issue, the applicant points to the following aspects.

48 First, the applicant refers to Article 3(2) of Decision No 1152/2003, which suggests that the contractor for the contract at issue re-use as much as possible the NCTS, the aim being to create an integrated computer system for intra-Community movement of excisable goods. The applicant interprets the content of that article to mean that the decision requires the re-use, by the contractor for the contract at issue, of the NCTS source-code and its architecture.

49 Second, the applicant refers to the description of work package No 7.1 in the technical annex to the tender specifications, where the NCTS source-code was mentioned.

50 Third, the applicant refers to the comments made by the evaluation committee in respect of the tender submitted by the successful tenderer, according to which that tender contained a good analysis of the possibility of re-using the components of the NCTS. The applicant submits that the term 'components' in that instance 'clearly' refers 'to various blocks of source-code'.

51 Fourth, regarding the financial offer, the applicant, in order to show that it was necessary to know the NCTS source-code for the pricing of its tender, claims that the Commission asked tenderers to mention in their offers not only unit prices, as the Commission claims, but also and more importantly a budget and a total price for the supply of the EMCS and all associated services. That requirement on the part of the Commission required tenderers to evaluate with precision the scope and the complexity of the project, which in turn required knowledge of the source-code. The fact that the applicant did not know the source-code forced it to raise the price of its offer in order to incorporate the risks resulting from that lack of knowledge. By contrast, the successful tenderer, which knew that code, was able to submit an offer that was more competitive, requiring only 50% of the budget made available for the contract at issue.

52 Finally, the applicant submits that, in the context of the call for tenders for another contract (a contract for the specification, development, maintenance and support of customs IT systems for the Taxation and Customs Union DG's IT systems (CUST–DEV) (TAXUD/2005/AO–001)), launched not long after the call for tenders for the contract at issue and for which the Taxation and Customs Union DG was also the contracting authority, the NCTS source-code was made available to tenderers. The applicant is therefore asking the Commission to explain that difference in treatment. Furthermore, at the hearing, the applicant submitted that the present case was similar to Case T–345/03 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission [2008] ECR II–341, in which the Court accepted the applicant's plea alleging that there had been a breach of the principle of equal treatment of tenderers and thus annulled the contract award decision adopted by the Commission.

53 The Commission contests the applicant's arguments.

2. Findings of the Court

54 According to Article 89(1) of the financial regulation, all public contracts financed in whole or in part by the budget are to comply with the principles of transparency, proportionality, equal treatment and non-discrimination.

55 Therefore, according to consistent case-law, the contracting authority is required to ensure at each stage of a tendering procedure that the principle of equal treatment and, thereby, equality of opportunity for all the tenderers is observed (Case C-496/99 P Commission v CASSucchi di Frutta [2004] ECR I-3801, paragraph 108; Case T-203/96 Embassy Limousines& Services v Parliament [1998] ECR II-4239, paragraph 85; and Case T-160/03 AFCon Management Consultants and Others v Commission [2005] ECR II-981, paragraph 75).

56 Under the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers, the aim of which is to promote the development of healthy and effective competition between undertakings taking part in a public procurement procedure, all tenderers must be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders, which therefore implies that the tenders of all competitors must be subject to the same conditions (see, to that effect, Case C-19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I-7725, paragraph 34, and Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraph 93).

57 The case-law also shows that the principle of equal treatment implies an obligation of transparency so that it is possible to verify that that principle has been complied with (Case C-92/00 HI [2002] ECR I-5553, paragraph 45, and Universale-Bau and Others, paragraph 56 above, paragraph 91).

58 That principle of transparency is essentially intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority. It implies that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract notice or tendering specifications (Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta, paragraph 55 above, paragraph 111).

59 The principle of transparency therefore implies that all technical information relevant for the purpose of a sound understanding of the contract notice or the tendering specifications must be made available as soon as possible to all the undertakings taking part in a public procurement procedure in order, first, to enable all reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderers to understand their precise scope and to interpret them in the same manner and, secondly, to enable the contracting authority actually to verify whether the tenderers' bids meet the criteria of the contract in question (Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, paragraph 52 above, paragraph 145).

60 In the present case, the applicant criticises the Commission for not providing it with two types of technical information, which, according to the applicant, were necessary for the formulation of tenders and which were, moreover, available to other tenderers. In the light of the case-law cited in paragraphs 55 to 58 above, that alleged omission on the part of the Commission, if it were proven, would prejudice the equality of opportunity between tenderers as well as the principle of transparency as a corollary to the principle of equal treatment.

61 As the Court held in Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, paragraph 52 above (paragraph 147), such an undermining of equality of opportunity and the principle of transparency, assuming that it were proved, would constitute a defect in the pre-litigation procedure adversely affecting the right of the parties concerned to information. That procedural defect could lead to the annulment of the decision in question only if it were shown that, but for that defect, the administrative procedure could have had a different outcome if the applicant had had access to the information in question and if there was even a small chance that the applicant could have brought about a different outcome to the administrative procedure (see Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, paragraph 52 above, paragraph 147 and the case-law cited).

62 Therefore, it is appropriate to examine, first, whether there was a disparity in respect of information in the present case, in the sense that, in the context of the call for tenders, information which the applicant claims not to have had was available to some tenderers, including the successful tenderer. If such a disparity was found to have existed, it would then be appropriate to examine, second, whether the relevant information was useful for the purpose of the formulation of the tenders. Only if that had been the case would the tenderer with access to that information have had an advantage to the detriment of the other tenderers. It would be appropriate to examine, third, whether the alleged disparity in respect of useful information was the result of a procedural defect brought about by the Commission. If there was such a defect, it would be appropriate to examine, fourth, whether, but for that defect, the tendering procedure could have had a different outcome. From that point of view, such a defect can constitute an infringement of the equality of opportunity of tenderers only in so far as the explanations provided by the applicant demonstrate, in a plausible and sufficiently detailed manner, that the procedure could have had a different outcome as far as it was concerned (see, to that effect, Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, paragraph 52 above, paragraphs 148 and 149).

63 That reasoning applies to each of the two types of technical information that the applicant claims were not made available to it, namely the specifications for the EMCS (first part of the plea) and the NCTS source-code (second part of the plea).

a) The first part of the plea, concerning the non-availability of the specifications for the EMCS

64 The applicant submits, essentially, that the non-availability of the exact specifications for the EMCS, at the time of the procurement procedure, created an advantage for tenderers that were already providing services to the Taxation and Customs Union DG – including the successful tenderer – and which, for that reason, were already aware of the said specifications. Therefore, those tenderers were in a position to submit tenders that were more precise and, accordingly, more competitive than the applicant's tender.

65 As was pointed out in paragraph 62 above, it is appropriate to examine first whether, in the present case, there was a disparity in respect of information in that the specifications for the EMCS were available to some tenderers, including the successful tenderer, but not to the applicant.

66 The tender specifications for the contract at issue (see paragraph 7 above) show that the project for the setting up of the EMCS, of which the contract at issue was to be a part, provided for a stage 1 during which the contractor for the ESS contract was to define the specifications for the EMCS. The Commission explained that they were 'high level' specifications for the EMCS. The abovementioned tender specifications also state that the contractor for the ESS contract was to draw up those specifications before and, in part, in parallel to the drawing up of specifications by the contractor for the contract at issue. The Commission explained that the specifications prepared under the contract at issue relate to the application of the EMCS ('application-related specifications'), as opposed to the 'high level' specifications for that system, prepared under the ESS contract. Finally, the abovementioned tender specifications make it clear that the contractor for the ESS contract was to finalise its work by the middle of 2005.

67 The applicant's arguments show that its complaint concerns the alleged failure to communicate to tenderers the 'high level' specifications for the EMCS.

68 In addition, the Commission has contended, without being contradicted by the applicant, that the contractor for the ESS contract, namely Siemens, had begun to work on the specifications for the EMCS in June 2004 (and that it had finished in April 2005), whereas the call for tenders for the contract at issue was published in July 2004 and the deadline for the submission of tenders was 31 August 2004. Therefore, in the light of the Commission's argument, which was not contested by the applicant, it must be found that only three months elapsed between the start of Siemens' work on the specifications for the EMCS and the deadline for the submission of tenders for the contract at issue, which means that, while the call for tenders remained open, there were no specifications for the EMCS that were actually usable and of which knowledge could have been to the advantage of a tenderer with access to those specifications.

69 Finally, both the applicant and the Commission stated that Siemens, contractor for the ESS contract, had also submitted a tender for the contract at issue.

70 The following conclusions are to be drawn from the abovementioned information.

71 First, it appears that no tenderer – including the successful tenderer – could have had more information regarding the specifications for the EMCS than the applicant, since those specifications did not exist, or were at an embryonic stage. Therefore, it has not been shown that there was a disparity of information which would have led to an infringement of the principle of equal treatment of tenderers.

72 Second, the fact that the specifications for the EMCS did not exist when the tendering procedure for the contract at issue was launched was not the result of a procedural defect on the part of the Commission, but resulted from the actual planning for the setting up of the EMCS, which envisaged that those specifications would be drawn up under an ESS contract that was separate from the contract at issue and preceded it.

73 Third, even if Siemens managed, under the ESS contract for which it was the contractor, to draw up specifications capable of being used for the formulation of tenders for the contract at issue, it is apparent that that was not decisive since Siemens' tender, submitted for the contract at issue, was not successful. Furthermore, the fact that Siemens submitted a tender for the contract at issue and, therefore, entered into direct competition with the successful tenderer for the award of the contract at issue suggests that Siemens did not share with that tenderer its alleged knowledge of the specifications for the EMCS. Hence, there is no basis for claiming that any tenderer benefited from any sort of privileged access to the said specifications.

74 Given that the applicant has not shown that some tenderers, including the successful tenderer, had more information regarding the specifications for the EMCS than the applicant itself, it should be concluded that, as regards that type of technical information, there was no unequal treatment of tenderers. Accordingly, the first part of this plea in law must be rejected.

b) The second part of the plea, concerning the failure to communicate the NCTS source-code

75 The applicant submits, essentially, that the refusal by the contracting authority to communicate to it the NCTS source-code created an advantage for the successful tenderer, which was also the contractor for the Commission when the NCTS was set up and did, for that reason, inevitably have access to the source code. Since it had that information, the successful tenderer was able to submit a tender that was more competitive than that of the applicant, both technically and financially.

Disparity in information to the benefit of the successful tenderer

76 The Commission does not contest the fact that the NCTS source-code was available to the contracting authority before the date on which the tendering procedure for the contract at issue was launched and that it did not communicate it to tenderers. It contends that it considered it to be of no use for the formulation of the tenders.

77 It is also not disputed that the successful tenderer knew the NCTS source-code when it prepared its tender, given that it was the contractor for the Taxation and Customs Union DG for the NCTS.

78 It follows that, when the tendering procedure for the contract at issue was launched and until the deadline for the submission of tenders, technical information that had been denied to the applicant was available to the successful tenderer, because it was the contractor for the Taxation and Customs Union DG for the NCTS.

The usefulness of the NCTS source-code for the formulation of the tenders

79 In order for the disparity in information established to represent an advantage to the benefit of the successful tenderer in the preparation of its tender, it is further necessary to show that the relevant information was useful for the development of tenders for the contract at issue, in the sense that not having that information could be to the detriment of the tender in terms of quality and the financial offer.

80 In the present case, and in the light of the arguments submitted by the parties, the usefulness of the NCTS source-code for the formulation of tenders for the contract at issue must be assessed. Two preliminary observations are called for.

81 First of all, as the arguments of the parties show, the source-code is a set of instructions written in a computer programming language that permits creation of a computer programme. The arguments also show that the source-code is one of the first pieces of material to be produced in the entire software life-cycle.

82 Further, the Commission explained at the hearing, without being contradicted by the applicant, that there are clear differences between the NCTS and the EMCS, in so far as the NCTS concerned the customs sector whereas the EMCS related to the excise duty sector. In the context of the NCTS, the main users are customs officials, while in the context of the EMCS, the main users are economic operators. It follows that the 'targets' of the two systems are different and, therefore, that the two systems do not have the same function.

83 In the first place, the applicant, in support of its claim concerning the usefulness of access to the NCTS source-code, refers to Article 3(2) of Decision No 1152/2003, quoted in paragraph 4 above.

84 In this respect, it is appropriate to point out that Decision No 1152/2003 constitutes the legal basis for the setting up of the EMCS and that Article 3(2) of that decision defines the relationship between the EMCS and the NCTS. The Commission's task was to ensure the integration, if technically possible, of the EMCS into the NCTS, with the objective of creating an integrated computer system to monitor the intra-Community movements of excisable goods. It was in order to accomplish that mission that it had been entrusted with by the Community legislature that the Commission launched the tendering procedure for the contract at issue. In the context of that procedure, the Commission, as contracting authority, took the view that the expression 're-using as much of the NCTS as possible' in Article 3(2) of the decision did not mean that tenderers had to be given the NCTS source-code for the purposes of formulating their tenders. The Commission communicated that 'message' to tenderers in the documentation relating to the tendering procedure at issue.

85 In this respect, the Commission refers, in particular, to paragraph 4.2.1 of the management plan for the setting up of the EMCS – entitled 'The EMCS development based on NCTS experience' –, which was distributed to tenderers and thus also to the applicant; the description in that plan of the 'NCTS experience' to be taken into account for the development of the EMCS does not refer to the NCTS source-code or, a fortiori, to the need to have access to it in order to formulate a tender. Furthermore, in clarification No 46, provided as part of the award procedure for the contract at issue, the contracting authority explained that, once the contract had been awarded, '[the duty of] the Contractor [for the contract at issue will be] to propose and [the Taxation and Customs Union DG's] to decide how much of the NCTS applications' architecture and source-code will be reused' and that that 'information [namely the NCTS source-code] will only be available to the successful Tenderer'.

86 Consequently, the applicant cannot in the present case invoke Article 3(2) of Decision No 1152/2003 in support of its claim concerning the usefulness of access to the NCTS source-code, since the contracting authority incorporated that article's requirement to 're-us[e] as much of the NCTS as possible' in the call for tenders at issue in concrete terms and in a transparent manner in such a way that it was not necessary for tenderers to have access to that source-code in order to be able to formulate their tenders.

87 In the second place, the applicant invokes, in support of its claim, the description of work package No 7.1 in the technical annex to the tender specifications. That description is worded as follows:

'Work package 7.1.: Application development

This work package covers development and maintenance of the Centrally Developed Applications (CDA), Test Applications and Central Service applications (e.g. the MCC, ETA, SETA, CS/RD and CS/MIS).

The applications developed will take as much inspiration as possible from the architecture and even the source code of the NCTS applications:

88 The description of that work package does indeed mention the NCTS source-code. However, that description does not show that the said source-code is useful for the preparation of tenders, as the applicant claims, but shows that the source-code will be useful for the work that will have to be carried out at a stage following the award of the contract at issue, namely during the performance of that contract by the successful tenderer.

89 Furthermore, that information emerges clearly from the abovementioned clarification No 46 (see paragraph 85 above).

90 It follows that both the description of work package No 7.1 and, above all, clarification No 46, far from showing the usefulness of the NCTS source-code for the formulation of tenders for the contract at issue, show that the 'message' that the contracting authority wanted to communicate to tenderers was, first, that that code was not relevant to the formulation of tenders, but that it would become so only at the later stage of the performance of the contract at issue by the successful tenderer and, second, that it would be for the contracting authority to decide how much of the NCTS source-code would be reused. Furthermore, at the hearing, the Commission revealed that, in the end, the contracting authority had decided not to use a single line of the NCTS source-code for the development of the project to set up the EMCS.

91 Consequently, the applicant's argument relating to the reference in the description of work package No 7.1 to the NCTS source-code cannot be accepted.

92 In the third place, the same is true for the applicant's argument concerning a specific comment made by the evaluation committee about the tender submitted by the successful tenderer (see paragraph 50 above). The applicant provides no evidence to show that the expression 'components of the NCTS', which the evaluation committee used, is a reference to the components of the NCTS source-code. In this respect, the tender documents for the contract at issue show that the contracting authority provided tenderers with a certain number of reference documents regarding the NCTS which, as the Commission rightly claimed, cover a vast range of subjects, from methodology to quality assurance procedures, from system specifications to test procedures, and from the functional description of NCTS applications to the specifications of central operations. It must therefore be considered that the evaluation committee, when it referred to the possibility of re-using 'components of the NCTS', was alluding to the possibility of re-using the elements of the NCTS that are mentioned in the documents made available to tenderers. In any event, the applicant does not provide any demonstration or evidence that could undermine this analysis.

93 In the fourth place, the applicant also does not demonstrate the usefulness of access to the NCTS source-code for the pricing of tenders. It is recalled that the applicant submits, in essence, that that pricing required tenderers to make precise estimates as to the size and the complexity of the project, which required knowledge of the source-code. Lack of access to the source-code made it impossible for the applicant to estimate precisely the size and the complexity of the project, forcing it, essentially, to raise the price of its tender.

94 That argument from the applicant cannot be upheld.

95 First, the NCTS source-code was not necessary in order to estimate the size and the complexity of the project for the setting up of the EMCS. In fact, as previously stated, the NCTS and the EMCS are different from each other (see paragraph 82 above) and the contracting authority clearly communicated to tenderers – and thus to the applicant – that the NCTS source-code was not relevant for the formulation of tenders (see paragraph 90 above).

96 Further, as the Commission contended and as the applicant conceded at the hearing, as regards the activities whose pricing allegedly depended on an estimate of the size and the complexity of the project, the contracting authority, having itself determined the number of days which were to be devoted to carrying out those activities, merely asked tenderers to quote unit prices expressed in daily rates for each staff profile required (namely developer, programmer and analyst). In order to arrive at the price of the tender, those unit prices were to be multiplied by the number of days determined by the contracting authority. By determining the number of days required for carrying out the abovementioned activities, the contracting authority itself estimated the scale of the work to be done, thus liberating tenderers from the need to undertake that task and focusing competition among tenderers on the daily rates proposed for each necessary staff profile. The applicant has not shown that lack of knowledge of the NCTS source-code had any sort of impact on the daily rate quoted for its staff.

97 It follows that it has not been shown that access to the NCTS source-code would have been useful for the purposes of pricing the applicant's offer.

98 Finally, the applicant's argument relating to the usefulness of access to the NCTS source-code is not supported by Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, paragraph 52 above. Unlike the present case, in which the computer system under the contract at issue – the EMCS – is different from the system whose source-code was not provided – the NCTS – (see paragraph 82 above), the case cited by the applicant related to a computer system – the Cordis system – which was merely a new version of the same Cordis system for which the source-code had not been provided (Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, paragraph 52 above, paragraph 7). Since the present case concerns the usefulness of the NCTS source-code, no analogy may be drawn between the present case and Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, paragraph 52 above.

99 The same is true for the applicant's argument concerning the CUST–DEV contract (see paragraph 52 above). In this respect, the Commission stated in the observations it submitted in response to the Court's letter of 2 March 2009 (see paragraph 31 above) that the CUST–DEV contract concerned computer applications in the customs sector, which is also the relevant sector for the NCTS, and that it was therefore right to provide tenderers with the source-code of that system. By contrast, that was not the case for the contract at issue, which concerns computer applications in the excise duty sector, in other words, a sector other than customs. The applicant did not contest the Commission's claim at the hearing and the Court has no reason to doubt it.

100 In the light of the above reasoning, the conclusion must be that the usefulness of the NCTS source-code for the formulation of tenders in connection with the award of the contract at issue has not been demonstrated. Consequently, the second part of the applicant's plea in law must be rejected.

101 It follows that the present plea in law must be rejected in its entirety.

B – The second plea: infringement of the financial regulation, the implementing rules, and Directives 92/50 and 2004/18

1. Arguments of the parties

102 The applicant claims that the award criteria for the contract at issue are not sufficiently specific and quantifiable and, consequently, were not capable of being examined objectively by the evaluation committee. That failure on the part of the contracting authority constitutes an infringement of Article 97(1) of the financial regulation, Article 138 of the implementing rules, Article 17(1) of Directive 92/50 and the provisions of Directive 2004/18.

103 The Commission contests the applicant's arguments.

2. Findings of the Court

104 By way of a preliminary point, it must be noted that, pursuant to Article 105 of the financial regulation, from 1 January 2003 onwards – the date of entry into force of the regulation – the directives relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public supply, service and works contracts do not apply to public contracts awarded by the Community institutions on their own behalf except as regards questions concerning the thresholds which determine publication arrangements, the choice of procedures and corresponding time-limits. It follows that the applicant's complaint against the award criteria for the contract at issue must be examined solely in the light of the provisions of the financial regulation and the implementing rules.

105 In addition, it must be recalled that, in accordance with Article 97(2) of the financial regulation and Article 138(1)(b) of the implementing rules, the contract at issue had to be awarded to the most economically advantageous tender.

106 It must, next, be recalled that, in order to ensure that the principles of transparency, equal treatment and non-discrimination are observed at the stage at which tenders are selected with a view to awarding a contract, Article 97(1) of the financial regulation imposes on the contracting authority, where the contract is awarded to the most economically advantageous tender, the obligation to define and set out in the call for tenders the award criteria for evaluating the content of tenders. Those criteria must, in accordance with Article 138(2) of the implementing rules, be justified by the subject of the contract. According to Article 138(3), the contracting authority must also specify, in the contract notice or in the tender specifications, the weighting it will apply to each of the criteria for determining the best value for money.

107 Nevertheless, those provisions leave it to the contracting authority to choose the award criteria in the light of which tenders will be assessed. However, the award criteria which the contracting authority proposes to use must, in any event, be aimed at identifying the offer which is economically the most advantageous (see, to that effect, Case T–4/01 Renco v Council [2003] ECR II–171, paragraph 66, and Case T–183/00 Strabag Benelux v Council [2003] ECR II–135, paragraph 74).

108 In addition, the criteria used by the contracting authority to identify the most economically advantageous tender do not necessarily have to be quantitative or related solely to the price. Even if award criteria that are not expressed in quantitative terms are included in the tender specifications, they can be applied objectively and uniformly in order to compare tenders and are clearly relevant for identifying the most economically advantageous tender (see, to that effect, Renco v Council, paragraph 107 above, paragraphs 67 and 68).

109 In the present case, it must be recalled first that the award criteria for the contract at issue appear both in the contract notice (paragraph IV 2) and in the specifications annexed to the invitation to tender. Therefore, the condition of publicity laid down in Article 97(1) of the financial regulation has been fulfilled.

110 Further, it should be recalled that the award criteria, described as vague and subjective by the applicant, read as follows:

'1. Quality of the proposed solution:

– Fitness of the proposed strategy to perform the tasks of the contract (40/100);

– fitness of the proposed methods, tools, quality environment and quality procedures to perform the tasks (30/100);

– fitness of the proposed team organisation to perform the tasks (20/100);

– structure, clarity and level of completeness of the proposal (10/100).'

111 It must therefore be held that the applicant, far from substantiating its argument that those criteria are vague and subjective, finds itself contradicted by the clear terms of those criteria. In particular, the applicant puts forward no evidence to support its claims which would allow for a finding that, when the contracting authority defined those criteria, it failed to have regard to its obligation to observe the principles of transparency and equal treatment of tenderers. On the contrary, the applicant in effect repeats the argument it put forward in the context of the first plea, concerning the alleged lack of an exact description of the services required and of the specific requirements of the work to be done.

112 A review of the abovementioned criteria shows that they focus on the following elements: the strategy proposed by the tenderers (first criterion), the methods, tools, quality environment and quality procedures proposed by the tenderers (second criterion), the proposed team organisation (third criterion), and the structure, clarity and level of completeness of the tender (fourth criterion). The applicant does not explain, or show, why those criteria are not justified by the subject of the contract at issue. Furthermore, there is no reason to doubt that those criteria are relevant to identifying the most economically advantageous tender, since those criteria are guaranteed to affect the quality of the services provided under the contract at issue and, therefore, the value of the tender itself.

113 Although those criteria are not quantitative, that fact alone cannot be taken to mean that the contracting authority did not apply them objectively and uniformly (see, to that effect, Renco v Council, paragraph 107 above, paragraphs 67 and 68). It should be noted that, in the present case, the applicant has submitted no evidence to that effect.

114 Finally, for the sake of completeness, it should be observed that the contracting authority specified, in accordance with the applicable provisions, the relative weighting it would apply to each of the award criteria, thus informing tenderers of the importance it intended to attach to each criterion when it came to the comparative evaluation of the tenders.

115 It follows from the foregoing that the applicant has not shown that the contracting authority failed to fulfil its obligation to define, in the call for tenders, the award criteria in compliance with the regulatory framework and the principles laid down in the case-law as set out in paragraphs 104 to 108 above.

116 It follows from all the foregoing that the second plea in law must be rejected.

C – The fifth plea: breach of the principles of sound administration and diligence

1. Arguments of the parties

117 The applicant claims, in essence, that the Commission infringed the principles of sound administration and diligence by failing to respond promptly and adequately to the applicant's fax of 27 August 2004, in which the applicant expressed its reservations regarding the call for tenders, in particular with regard to the principle of non-discrimination.

118 The Commission contests the applicant's arguments.

2. Findings of the Court

119 In accordance with the general principle of sound administration, which also encompasses the duty of care, a Community institution must observe reasonable time-limits in conducting administrative proceedings and behave diligently in its relations with the public (Case C-47/07 P Masdar (UK) v Commission [2008] ECR I-9761, paragraph 92, and Case T-394/03 Angeletti v Commission [2006] ECR-SC I-A-2-95 and II-A-2-441, paragraph 162).

120 In addition, as regards the award of Community public contracts, contact between the contracting authority, on the one hand, and potential tenderers or tenderers, on the other hand, is regulated by Articles 141 and 148 of the implementing rules.

121 Article 141 of the implementing rules provides:

'1. Provided that the request was made in good time before the deadline for submission of tenders, the specifications and additional documents shall be sent, within six calendar days of the receipt of the request, to all economic operators who have requested the specifications or expressed interest in submitting a tender.

2. Provided it has been requested in good time, additional information relating to the specifications shall be supplied simultaneously to all economic operators who have requested the specifications or expressed interest in submitting a tender no later than six days before the deadline for the receipt of tenders or, in the case of requests for information received less than eight calendar days before the deadline for receipt of tenders, as soon as possible after receipt of the request.

122 Furthermore, Article 148 of the implementing rules provides:

'1. Contact between the contracting authority and tenderers during the contract award procedure may take place, by way of exception, under the conditions set out in paragraphs 2 and 3.

2. Before the closing date for the submission of tenders, in respect of the additional documents and information referred to in Article 141, the contracting authority may:

(a) at the instance of tenderers, communicate additional information solely for the purpose of clarifying the nature of the contract, such information to be communicated on the same date to all tenderers who have asked for the specifications;

123 Therefore, the provisions cited above show that contact between the contracting authority, on the one hand, and potential tenderers or tenderers, on the other hand, before the deadline for submission of tenders, is permitted in so far as it is for the purpose of obtaining 'additional information' relating to the specifications (Article 141(2) of the implementing rules) and 'additional information' in respect of the additional documents and information referred to in Article 141 and 'solely for the purpose of clarifying the nature of the contract' (Article 148(2)(a) of the implementing rules).

124 As regards the 'additional information' referred to in Article 141(2) of the implementing rules, the contracting authority is required to provide it to the potential tenderers within the time-limits laid down in that article. As regards the 'additional information' referred to in Article 148(2)(a) of the implementing rules, the contracting authority has the right to communicate it to the tenderers, but is not under an obligation to do so.

125 In the present case, it must be held that the fax of 27 August 2004 to which the applicant refers does not contain a request for the information referred to by the abovementioned provisions of the implementing rules. As previously stated (see paragraph 11 above), in that fax, the applicant expressed reservations regarding the procedure for the award of the contract at issue, based on a potential lack of objectivity of the call for tenders to the advantage of tenderers which had already been suppliers to the Taxation and Customs Union DG, a lack of clear specifications in the call for tenders and a lack of precise and objective criteria for the evaluation of tenderers. By way of the same fax, the applicant also asked the Taxation and Customs Union DG to extend the deadline for the submission of tenders until it had remedied the abovementioned problems. It follows that the Commission was not required to reply to that letter. It did reply none the less, in a manner that was both prompt and adequate, by letter of 3 September 2004, expressing the view that the applicant's reservations were unfounded and refusing to grant its request to extend the deadline for the submission of tenders (see paragraph 13 above). Therefore, there is no doubt that the defendant acted diligently, in the spirit of sound administration, all the more so because, as stated above, the legislature had not imposed any obligation on it to provide a response in the present case. It follows that the Commission's follow-up to the applicant's fax of 27 August 2004 does not in any way infringe the principles of sound administration and diligence.

126 For the sake of completeness, it should be noted that the applicant did not contest the Commission's claim that the contracting authority had replied quickly to all the questions put by tenderers about the tender specifications, most of which had been asked by the applicant.

127 In the light of the foregoing, this plea must be rejected as unfounded.

D – The fourth plea: lack of relevant information and failure to state reasons

1. Arguments of the parties

128 The applicant argues that the contested decision is vitiated by the fact that the Taxation and Customs Union DG did not give a sufficient statement of reasons for its acts. The plea is based on two complaints.

129 First, the Taxation and Customs Union DG did not provide the applicant with all the information requested concerning the grounds for the rejection of its tender, contrary to Article 253 EC and Article 8 of Directive 92/50. That DG did not set out clearly the reasons why it rejected the applicant's tender and made no reference to the characteristics and comparative advantages of the successful tender, thereby denying the applicant the possibility of effectively commenting on the choice made, and any possibility of seeking legal redress. The applicant adds that the Taxation and Customs Union DG did not invoke any reason of public policy or commercial secret to justify its refusal to provide the evaluation report which the Commission normally sends to all tenderers in such cases, in accordance with Article 12(2) of Directive 92/50. According to the applicant, an insufficient statement of reasons, such as that in the present case, makes the Court's review of the contested decision extremely difficult, if not impossible.

130 Secondly, in the reply, the applicant points to the non-compliance with the 15-day time-limit for providing tenderers with extracts from the evaluation committee's report, contrary to the financial regulation and the legislation on public contracts. That non-compliance and the complete lack of reasons concerning certain aspects of the contested decision caused the applicant difficulties in bringing its action before the Court.

131 The Commission contends that this plea should be rejected.

2. Findings of the Court

132 It must be noted, as a preliminary point, that the legislative provisions which determine the content of the obligation to state reasons which a contracting authority has towards unsuccessful tenderers in a public procurement procedure are Article 100(2) of the financial regulation and Article 149 of the implementing rules, and not the provisions of Directive 92/50, as alleged by the applicant (see paragraph 104 above).

133 It follows from those articles that, in the field of public procurement, a contracting authority fulfils its obligation to state reasons if it confines itself first to informing unsuccessful tenderers immediately of the reasons for the rejection of their respective tenders and then subsequently, if expressly requested to do so, provides to all tenderers who have submitted an admissible tender the characteristics and relative advantages of the tender selected as well as the name of the successful tenderer, within a period of 15 calendar days from the date on which a written request is received (see judgment of 12 July 2007 in Case T–250/05 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, not published in the ECR, paragraph 68, and judgment of 10 September 2008 in Case T–465/04 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, not published in the ECR, paragraph 47 and case-law cited).

134 Such a manner of proceeding satisfies the purpose of the duty to state reasons laid down in Article 253 EC, according to which the reasoning followed by the authority which adopted the measure in question must be disclosed in a clear and unequivocal fashion so as to enable, on the one hand, the persons concerned to be aware of the reasons for the measure in order to assert their rights, and, on the other, the Court to exercise its review (see, to that effect, Case T–19/95 Adia interim v Commission [1996] ECR II–321, paragraph 32; Case T–169/00 Esedra v Commission [2002] ECR II–609, paragraph 190; Strabag Benelux v Council, paragraph 107 above, paragraph 55; and Case T–250/05 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, paragraph 133 above, paragraph 69).

135 Moreover, compliance with the duty to state reasons must be assessed in the light of the information available to the applicant at the time when the action is brought (Strabag Benelux v Council, paragraph 107 above, paragraph 58, and Renco v Council, paragraph 107 above, paragraph 96).

136 It follows that, in order to determine whether the Commission fulfilled its duty to state reasons in the present case, it is necessary to examine the letters of 18 November 2004 and 10 December 2004 sent by it to the applicant before the present action was brought.

137 The letter of 18 November 2004 informs the applicant that its tender (submitted with Steria as part of the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender) was unsuccessful. It states that that tender was not chosen because, in the light of the award criteria, it did not represent the best tender in terms of quality and price. That letter adds that the applicant could obtain further information on the grounds for the rejection of its tender and that, if it made a request in writing, it could be informed of the characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender and the name of the successful tenderer. Lastly, the letter states that certain details of the successful tender would not be disclosed if that disclosure would hinder application of the law, would be contrary to the public interest or would harm the legitimate business interests of public or private undertakings or could distort fair competition between those undertakings. It follows that that letter, although somewhat formulaic in nature, is drafted in accordance with Article 100(2) of the financial regulation.

138 The letter of 10 December 2004, from the Commission to the applicant, provides the latter with an extract from the evaluation committee's report. That letter was sent in response to a written request from the applicant dated 22 November 2004, repeated on 8 December 2004.

139 The extract from the evaluation committee's report refers to the name of the successful tenderer. It also contains the evaluation committee's detailed comments on the successful tender and the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender in respect of each of the award criteria (see paragraph 21 above). That extract also contains a table with the points awarded to each of the two tenders in respect of each of the award criteria, and a table showing the respective prices of the two tenders and the comparative evaluation of the price-quality ratio (see paragraph 22 above).

140 Accordingly, the Court finds that, by communicating to the applicant, first, the essential grounds for the rejection of the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender, and then the aforementioned extract from the evaluation committee's report, the Commission stated to the requisite legal standard the reasons why the applicant's tender was rejected, in accordance with Article 100(2) of the financial regulation and Article 149(2) of the implementing rules. It should be noted that that extract refers to the name of the successful tenderer and, through the comments of the evaluation committee and the two abovementioned tables, the 'characteristics and relative advantages of the successful tender'. The letter of 18 November 2004 and that extract, provided with the letter of 10 December 2004, thus enabled the applicant to identify immediately the reasons why its tender had not been selected, that is, because it was less advantageous economically than that of the successful tenderer, which offered a better price-quality ratio.

141 As regards, finally, the applicant's complaint regarding non-compliance with the 15-day time-limit for providing it with extracts from the evaluation committee's report, it must, in fact, be noted that that extract was sent to it by letter of 10 December 2004 and thus reached it at least 18 calendar days after its written request, sent to the Commission by fax and by registered letter on 22 November 2004. Although it is to be regretted, that slight delay has not, however, in any way restricted the possibility for the applicant to assert its rights before the Court and cannot therefore, by itself, lead to the annulment of the contested decision. It is clear from the documents before the Court that the applicant has used all the information contained in that extract in order to bring the present action (see, to that effect, Case T-465/04 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, paragraph 133 above, paragraph 52).

142 Having regard to the foregoing, it must be concluded that the statement of reasons provided in the contested decision enabled the applicant to assert its rights and the Court to exercise its review. Accordingly, the present plea must be rejected.

E – The third plea: manifest errors of assessment in the contracting authority's evaluation of the applicant's tender

1. Arguments of the parties

143 The applicant submits that the Taxation and Customs Union DG made a manifest error of assessment by failing to evaluate correctly and objectively the quality of the applicant's tender and by deciding that that tender was inferior to that submitted by the successful tenderer.

144 In the context of this plea, the applicant argues first that, since the Taxation and Customs Union DG did not follow an objective and predetermined methodology known to the tenderers in order to arrive at the final ranking, it is obvious that the decision of the evaluation committee was based on incorrect assumptions.

145 Second, the applicant argues that the general nature of the criteria used and the tenderers' lack of knowledge of the exact nature of the contractual task to be performed led to a subjective evaluation of the value of the tenders.

146 Finally, the applicant criticises specific comments made by the evaluation committee, which show that its evaluation of the applicant's tender contained manifest errors of assessment.

147 The Commission contests the applicant's arguments.

2. Findings of the Court

148 According to consistent case-law, the contracting authority enjoys a broad margin of assessment with regard to the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender, and review by the Court must be limited to checking compliance with the procedural rules and the duty to give reasons, the correctness of the facts found and that there is no manifest error of assessment or misuse of powers (Case T-211/02 Tideland Signal v Commission [2002] ECR II-3781, paragraph 33, and Case T-148/04 TQ3 Travel Solutions Belgium v Commission [2005] ECR II-2627, paragraph 47; see also, to that effect, Case 56/77 Agence européenne d'intérims v Commission [1978] ECR 2215, paragraph 20).

149 In the present case, it should be noted that the applicant bases its argument, in essence, on two factors in order to show that the contracting authority made a manifest error of assessment.

150 In the first place, the applicant claims that the Taxation and Customs Union DG did not follow an objective and predetermined methodology known to the tenderers in order to arrive at the final ranking. It also refers to the alleged lack of knowledge on the part of the tenderers of the nature of the contractual tasks to be performed and the allegedly general nature of the award criteria and concludes from this that the evaluation of the tenders must have been subjective and based on incorrect assumptions.

151 It must be held that the applicant confines itself to general assertions that are unsubstantiated and not supported by any evidence. Its argument is a repetition of the argument put forward in the context of the first and second pleas, which have been rejected by the Court. Furthermore, the applicant does not show in any way how all these alleged shortcomings on the part of the contracting authority led it to make incorrect assumptions and evaluate the tenders subjectively. Therefore, it must be concluded that that argument cannot support the present plea in law.

152 In the second place, the applicant contests specific comments made by the evaluation committee on the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender.

153 First, the applicant contests the evaluation committee's comment that '[t]he offer shows some lack of understanding of the Terms of Reference as the proposal makes reference to activities that have already been completed, or will be completed by the time the contract will come into force'. The applicant contests the merits of that comment, which it describes as subjective and unfair, and submits, in essence, that, if there was a misunderstanding, that misunderstanding was due to the fact that the applicant had been invited to submit a tender for a project for which the specifications were unknown. The applicant claims, furthermore, that in any event the comment is vague and that it is impossible to argue against it.

154 The abovementioned comment of the evaluation committee relates to the first award criterion for the contract at issue, namely that of 'fitness of the proposed strategy to perform the tasks of the contract'. As regards that award criterion, the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender was given a score of 23.2/40 whereas the successful tender received a score of 35.1/40.

155 It must be held that, once more, in the context of its criticism of the abovementioned comment, the applicant reiterates the arguments it put forward in the context of its first plea, which has been rejected by the Court. Furthermore, by simply making statements, the applicant does not show in any way the merits of its claim that the comment quoted above is subjective, unfair and vague. It follows that the applicant's criticism in respect of the abovementioned comment of the evaluation committee does not show that that comment was wrong and, even less, that there was a manifest error of assessment in respect of its tender.

156 Second, the applicant contests the evaluation committee's comment that '[t]he offer presents some inconsistencies, and in particular in the planning: for instance, some development activities are starting even before the start of the specifications'. The applicant, in its response to a written question from the Court, stated that a careful review of the Gantt diagrams included in its tender showed that, contrary to the evaluation committee's comment, it had envisaged that, save for some justified exceptions, development activities would start after the activities related to the specifications.

157 The abovementioned comment of the evaluation committee, which is contested by the applicant, also concerns the first award criterion for the contract at issue.

158 The Court, having examined the Gantt diagrams submitted by the applicant and taking into account the answers provided by the parties to the questions put by the Court at the hearing, finds that the diagrams do in fact give the impression that the applicant envisaged, in its planning of the project for the contract at issue, that at least some development activities would commence before the corresponding specification activities, thus showing that the evaluation committee's comment was well founded. Admittedly, the applicant, in essence, claimed at the hearing that any misunderstanding which might arise from reading the Gantt diagrams was due to the fact that those diagrams, as lodged before the Court and also included as part of the tender, were presented in A4 format, which meant that some information – which was necessary to understand the planning of the project in the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender – was not visible. The applicant has claimed that it had also included as part of its tender the same Gantt diagrams, but in A3 format, which made the relevant information concerning the planning of the project visible and show that the evaluation committee's comment was unfounded. However, irrespective of their alleged importance, the Gantt diagrams in A3 format were not available to the Court.

159 In any event, even assuming that this argument presented by the applicant is well founded, it must be noted that it relates to the first award criterion for the contract at issue. As the tables set out in paragraph 22 above show, even if, in respect of that award criterion, the applicant's tender had been given maximum points, namely 40/40, the applicant could not have been awarded the contract, taking into account the number of points its tender received in respect of the other three award criteria.

160 In those circumstances, it must be concluded that the applicant has not shown that the comment in question made by the evaluation committee was incorrect and that, in any event, it has not shown at all that that allegedly incorrect comment reflects a manifest error of assessment in the evaluation of its tender.

161 Third, the applicant contests the following comment by the evaluation committee:

'The offer presents a detailed description of Cosmic FFP, but the tools proposed for estimates (Calico and Costar) are only suitable for estimates based on the Cocomo II methodology, which is incoherent (see section 4.1.3.5.1 [of the tender]).'

162 That comment relates to the second award criterion for the contract at issue, namely 'fitness of the proposed methods, tools, quality environment and quality procedures to perform the tasks'. As regards that award criterion, the applicant's tender received a score of 16.7/30 whereas the successful tender received a score of 24.5/30.

163 The Commission explained in its written pleadings and at the hearing that the inconsistency noted by the evaluation committee consisted in the fact that, while the applicant in its tender described the tools it intended to use to support the Cocomo method, which the call for tenders did not ask for, it did not provide any information regarding the infrastructure to support the Cosmic FFP method, which was the method required by the tender specifications. Furthermore, the applicant did not explain the link between the two methods, Cocomo and Cosmic FFP, mentioned in its tender or the link between the Cocomo method, which it mentioned in its tender for no apparent reason, and the system that is the subject of the contract at issue.

164 In its reply to a written question put by the Court, the applicant submitted that the reference in its tender to the Cocomo method should not be considered to be an inconsistency and that the reason why it had not proposed specific tools for the Cosmic FFP methodology lay in the fact that such specific tools were not necessary. The successful tenderer, for its part, also did not propose such tools in its tender.

165 It should be noted, first, that the tender specifications for the contract at issue do in fact require use of the Cosmic FFP system to provide estimates relating, in essence, to the effort required to carry out certain computer activities related to the contract at issue. A review of section 4.1.3.5.1 of the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender also shows that it refers very briefly and in general terms to the Cocomo method and the Calico and Costar tools. Finally, it should be noted that the evaluation committee criticised not only the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium, but also the successful tenderer for not specifying the tools that would be used within the framework of the Cosmic FFP system.

166 The Court finds that the applicant does not put forward a single argument to establish that those factual elements, which are not contested, mean that the evaluation committee's comment set out in paragraph 161 above was incorrect or, a fortiori, support the finding that that comment led the contracting authority, in that regard, to make a manifestly incorrect assessment of the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender, especially since the score given to that tender in respect of the second award criterion for the contract at issue, far from being based on that analysis alone, was also based on the evaluation committee's other, corresponding comments (see, to that effect, Case T-250/05 Evropaïki Dynamiki v Commission, paragraph 133 above, paragraph 106).

167 Fourth, the applicant contests the evaluation committee's comment that 'RUP [was] considered throughout [the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's] offer as "the" project management methodology, [even though its] software proposal for the development environment does not list any IBM-Rational licence'. That comment also relates to the second award criterion for the contract at issue.

168 The Commission explained in its written pleadings and at the hearing that, by that comment, the evaluation committee had pointed to an inconsistency in the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender that consisted in the tender referring to RUP on several occasions as 'the' methodology to follow, but failing to state whether the consortium had a licence for the IBM-Rational software, which was required for that method, thus leaving open the question of who would pay for using that software, the applicant or the contracting authority.

169 According to the applicant, the abovementioned comment was liable to mislead the contracting authority and is also irrelevant. The necessary licences had to be paid for by the applicant and there was thus no reason to refer to that matter at all in the tender, since the call for tenders did not require it. According to the applicant, it was obvious that it would use products covered by a licence to carry out its work.

170 It suffices, in this respect, to state that the applicant's argument is of a general nature and not supported by any evidence. It is therefore not capable of showing that the abovementioned comment by the evaluation committee was incorrect or, even less, that the contracting authority made a manifest error of assessment.

171 Fifth, the applicant contests the relevance of the evaluation committee's comment that '[a]lthough customs and excise experience is identified in [the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender] as a must in terms of skills, in practice, their proposal does not show such competences'. That comment relates to the third award criterion for the contract at issue, namely 'fitness of the proposed team organisation to perform the tasks'. The score given to the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender in respect of that award criterion was 14.5/20 whereas the successful tender received a score of 17.6/20.

172 In the first place, the applicant submits that the abovementioned comment is not well founded, since the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium had experience in the area of customs and excise and that experience was described in the tender. In the second place, the applicant states that there was no reason to include detailed information on that area in the tender, since the call for tenders did not ask for it and the tender specifications did not require that such 'competence' be offered. Finally, the applicant claims that the fact that the alleged lack of experience of the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium in the area of customs and excise was being used to justify a mediocre evaluation of its tender constitutes an infringement of the call for tenders, since the call for tenders does not list that experience as an evaluation criterion.

173 The applicant's criticism relates both to the relevance of the evaluation committee's comment and to its merits.

174 As regards the relevance of the comment, the Court notes that, even though the tender specifications did not require tenderers to have customs and excise experience, the evaluation committee simply wanted to emphasise, with that comment, that there was an inconsistency in the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender. That inconsistency consisted in the fact that, while the consortium stated that the tenderer, in order to be successful, had to have customs and excise experience, its tender did not however show that it had such experience. Contrary to the applicant's claim, such a comment from the evaluation committee helped to clarify matters for the contracting authority.

175 As regards the merits of the comment, the Commission explained that that comment was made in relation to section 6.3.1 of the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender, which stated that the business analysts in the proposed team had 'proven experience in the area of excise/tax/customs in the EU'. According to the Commission, the evaluation committee took the view that the curricula vitae submitted by the applicant for the business analysts did not show that experience. The applicant was not able to refute those explanations given by the Commission. In those circumstances, the Court finds that it has not been shown that the comment in question made by the evaluation committee was incorrect.

176 Finally, it should be noted that the applicant contests the evaluation committee's comment relating to the second award criterion, which criticises the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender for including textbook-like references to, in particular, the architecture and IT tools used, without any justification or connection made to the objectives of the EMCS. The applicant also refutes the evaluation committee's comment relating to the fourth award criterion, concerning the allegedly general nature of the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender. However, the Court finds that, again, the applicant puts forward mere assertions, argues in a general manner and does not adduce any supporting evidence. Consequently, those complaints must be rejected.

177 For the sake of completeness, the Court considers it important to emphasise that the applicant's approach, which is to criticise certain specific comments made by the evaluation committee, is ineffective, since the applicant does not show in any way how those allegedly incorrect comments were likely to bring about a manifest error of assessment of the Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender. In this respect, the applicant should explain, above all, how the allegedly incorrect comment affects the score given to its tender. The applicant did not provide such an explanation.

178 Having regard to the foregoing, the conclusion must be that the applicant has not shown that the contracting authority made manifest errors of assessment in the evaluation of Evropaïki Dynamiki-Steria consortium's tender. Consequently, the present plea in law must be rejected.

179 It follows that the action must therefore be dismissed.

Costs

180 The applicant has asked the Court to order the Commission to pay all costs, even if the application is dismissed. The applicant claims that as a result of the Taxation and Customs Union DG's failure to provide it in good time with sufficient reasons, it was not able fully to evaluate its chances of challenging the contested decision and was thus forced to bring the present action to preserve its rights.

181 The Commission submits that that request has no basis in Community law.

182 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings.

183 Furthermore, Article 87(3) of those rules provides:

'Where each party succeeds on some and fails on other heads, or where the circumstances are exceptional, the Court may order that the costs be shared or that each party bear its own costs.

The Court … may order a party, even if successful, to pay costs which it considers that party to have unreasonably or vexatiously caused the opposite party to incur.'

184 In the present case, it has been found, inter alia, that the fourth plea, alleging a lack of relevant information and failure to state reasons, was unfounded. Furthermore, there is no other reason for the Court to deviate from the rule in Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure. Consequently, the applicant's request must be rejected.

185 Since the applicant has been entirely unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs in accordance with the form of order sought by the Commission.

On those grounds,

THE GENERAL COURT (Third Chamber)

hereby:

1. Dismisses the action;

2. Orders Evropaïki Dynamiki – Proigmena Systimata Tilepikoinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE to bear its own costs and to pay those incurred by the European Commission.

Action brought on 28 January 2005 by European Dynamics SA against the Commission of the European Communities

(Case T-50/05)

Language of the case: English

An action against the Commission of the European Communities was brought before the Court of First Instance of the European Communities on 28 January 2005 by European Dynamics SA, established in Athens (Greece), represented by N. Korogiannakis, lawyer.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

- annul the decision of the Commission (DG TAXUD), to evaluate the applicant's bid as not successful and award the contract to the successful contractor;

- order the Commission to pay the applicant's legal costs and other costs and expenses incurred in connection with the application, even if the application is rejected.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The applicant company filed a bid in response to the Commission's call for tenders TAXUD/2004/AO-004 for the specification, development, maintenance and support of telematic systems to control the movements of products subject to excise duty within the European Community. By the contested decision this bid was rejected and the contract awarded to another bidder.

In support of its application for annulment of that decision the applicant claims first of all that the Commission violated the principle of non-discrimination and of free competition. The unavailability of exact specifications for the EMCS system prevented tenderers from presenting their expertise in a targeted manner in the specific areas that were important for the project. The access to privileged information by the previous and current contractors constituted a major and exclusive advantage for them. The applicant claims that its timely request for equal access rights to such applications and documentation should have been accepted. According to the applicant, even though the Commission had the opportunity to remedy this situation it did not take appropriate measures to do so.

The applicant further submits that the Commission violated Article 97 (1) of the Financial Regulation1 as well as Article 17 (1) of Directive 92/502 by using evaluation criteria that were extremely vague and were not accompanied by clear quantifiable parameters.

The applicant further considers that the Commission committed manifest errors of appreciation in its evaluation of the applicant's tender. In this respect the applicant contends that any deficiencies of its bid were due to the Commission's failure to communicate critical elements required by the applicant in order to prepare its bid. The applicant further contests each of the statements contained in the report of the Evaluation Committee.

The applicant also invokes a violation, by the Commission, of its obligation, under Article 253 EC, to state reasons and a failure to provide pertinent information requested by the applicant on the grounds for the rejection of its bid. The applicant also submits that the Commission violated the principle of good administration and diligence by acting with significant delay and by not offering adequate answers to the applicant's requests for information prior to the submission of the bids.

Reference for a preliminary ruling by the Hoge Raad der Nederlanden by decision of that court of 26 November 2004 in the case of Heintz van Landewyck SARL against Staatssecretaris van Financiën)

(Case C-494/04)

(2005/C 45/28)

(Language of the case: Dutch)

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by order of the Hoge Raad der Nederlanden (Supreme Court of the Netherlands) of 26 November 2004 received at the Court Registry on1 December 2004, for a preliminary ruling in the case of Heintz van Landewyck SARL against Staatssecretaris van Financiën on the following questions:

1. Must the Excise Duty Directive ([1]) be interpreted as requiring the Member States to enact a statutory provision under which they must reimburse or offset amounts by way of excise duty due or paid at the time excise labels are requested in a case in which the requesting party (the holder of an authorisation to operate a tax warehouse) has not used, nor will be able to use, labels which disappeared before they were affixed to products subject to excise duty, and third parties cannot have made and will not be able to make lawful use of the labels even though it cannot be ruled out that they have used, or will use, the labels by affixing them to tobacco products which have been put on the market in an irregular manner?

2 (a) Must the Sixth Directive, ([2]) and in particular Article 27(1) and (5) thereof, be interpreted as meaning that the fact that the Netherlands Government notified the Commission at a date later than that laid down in Article 27(5) of the Sixth Directive, as amended by the Ninth Directive, that it wished to maintain the special procedure for charging tax on tobacco products means that if an individual invokes the failure to observe the time-limit, after the date when notification was in fact made, this special procedure for charging tax must be disapplied also after the making of the notification?

(b) If the answer to Question 2(a) is in the negative, must the Sixth Directive, and in particular Article 27(1) and (5) thereof, be interpreted as meaning that the special procedure for charging tax on tobacco products laid down in Article 28 of the Wet op de Omzetbelasting must be disapplied on the grounds that it is incompatible with the conditions laid down by the abovementioned provisions of the directive?

(c) If the answer to Question 2(b) is in the negative, must the Sixth Directive, and in particular Article 27(1) and (5) thereof, be interpreted as meaning that failure to reimburse turnover tax in circumstances such as those referred to in Question 1 is contrary thereto?

Action brought on 7 December 2004 by the Commission of the European Communities against the Federal Republic of Germany

(Case C-503/04)

(2005/C 45/29)

(Language of the case: German)

An action against the Federal Republic of Germany was brought before the Court of Justice of the European Communities on 7 December 2004 by the Commission of the European Communities, represented by Bernhard Schima, acting as Agent, with an address for service in Luxembourg.

The Commission of the European Communities claims that the Court should:

1. Declare that the Federal Republic of Germany has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 228(1) of the Treaty establishing the European Community inasmuch as it has not taken the necessary measures to comply with the judgment of the European Court of Justice of 10 April 2003 in Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 Commission v Germany ([1]) regarding the award of a contract for the collection of waste water by the Municipality of Bockhorn and of a contract for waste disposal by the City of Braunschweig;

2. Order the Federal Republic of Germany to pay to the Commission's own resources account of the European Community a daily penalty payment

Dans l'affaire C-424/04, ayant pour objet un recours en manquement au titre de l'article 226 CE, introduit le 4 octobre 2004

Commission des Communautés européennes, représentée par MM. K. Wiedner et B. Stromsky, en qualité d'agents, ayant élu domicile à Luxembourg, partie requérante,

contre

République française, représentée par MM. G. de Bergues et D. Petrausch, en qualité d'agents, ayant élu domicile à Luxembourg, partie défenderesse,

LE PRÉSIDENT DE LA COUR,

l'avocat général, M. A. Tizzano, entendu,

rend la présente

Ordonnance

1 Par lettre déposée au greffe de la Cour le 17 mars 2005, la Commission des Communautés européennes a informé la Cour, conformément à l'article 78 du règlement de procédure, qu'elle se désistait de son recours et a demandé, en application de l'article 69, paragraphe 5, du règlement de procédure, que la République française soit condamnée aux dépens.

2 Par lettre déposée au greffe de la Cour le 20 avril 2005, la partie défenderesse considère que ce n'est pas son attitude qui justifie le désistement de la Commission et demande que celle-ci soit condamnée aux dépens.

3 Aux termes de l'article 69, paragraphe 5, premier alinéa, du règlement de procédure, la partie qui se désiste est condamnée aux dépens, s'il est conclu en ce sens par l'autre partie dans ses observations sur le désistement. Toutefois, à la demande de la partie qui se désiste, les dépens sont supportés par l'autre partie, si cela apparaît justifié par l'attitude de cette dernière.

4 Eu égard aux circonstances particulières en l'espèce, la Cour estime qu'il convient de compenser les dépens.

Par ces motifs, le président de la Cour ordonne:

1) L'affaire C-424/04 est radiée du registre de la Cour.

2) La Commission des Communautés européennes et la République française supporteront chacune leurs propres dépens de l'instance au principal.

Action brought on 4 October 2004 by the Commission of the European Communities against the French Republic

(Case C-424/04)

An action against the French Republic was brought before the Court of Justice of the European Communities on 4 October 2004 by the Commission of the European Communities, represented by K. Wiedner and B. Stromsky, acting as Agents, with an address for service in Luxembourg.

The Commission claims that the Court should:

1. declare that, by failing to provide for an obligation on contracting authorities to ensure genuine competition by the presence of a minimum of five tenderers in restricted procedures, even where no range is prescribed, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 19(2) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993, [1] Article 27(2) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 [2] and Article 22(2) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993; [3]

2. declare that, by excluding from the scope of the French Code of Public Procurement contracts concerning loans or financial undertakings, whether intended to cover financing or liquidity requirements, not connected with real property transactions, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 1(a)(vii) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 and Article 1(4)(c)(iv) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993; [4]

3. declare that, by providing that public contracts concerning

- legal services,

- social and health services,

- recreational, cultural and sports services,

- educational services and occupational qualification and integration services are to be subject, as regards their award, only to the obligations relating to the definition of services by reference to standards where they exist, and to the sending of an award notice, without expressly specifying that the rules and principles of the Treaty are to be complied with, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations flowing from compliance with the principles and rules of the Treaty (Article 49), and in particular the principle of equal treatment and the principle of transparency of which adequate publicity is the corollary;

4. order the French Republic to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The French Code of Public Procurement is incompatible in certain respects with the rules and principles of the EC Treaty and the Community directives relating to public procurement.

First, by failing to provide for an obligation on the contracting authority to ensure the presence of a minimum of five tenderers where no range is prescribed, the French Republic is in breach of the obligation in the Community directives to ensure genuine competition in certain restricted procedures for the award of public contracts.

The French Republic is also in breach of its obligations by excluding from the scope of the French Code of Public Procurement contracts concerning loans or financial undertakings, whether intended to cover financing or liquidity requirements, not connected with real property transactions. Those contracts relate to the provision of services and thus fall within the scope of the directives. Nor may they be regarded as covered by the exception concerning securities and other financial instruments.

Finally, the exclusion of certain service contracts from the scope of the obligation to ensure an adequate degree of publicity constitutes a breach of the principle of non-discrimination as laid down in Article 49 EC and of the principle of transparency.

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that, by adopting:

- Article 2(1) of Law No 109 of 11 February 1994 - Framework Law on public works (legge quadro in materia di lavori pubblici), as amended by Law No 166 of 1 August 2002, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, and Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997;

- Article 2(5) of Law No 109/1994 as amended, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 93/37 as amended; and

- Articles 27(2) and 28(4) of Law No 109/1994 as amended, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 92/50 and Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors;

2. Dismisses the action as to the remainder;

3. Orders the Commission of the European Communities and the Italian Republic to bear their own costs;

4. Orders the French Republic, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Republic of Finland to bear their own costs.

1. By its action, the Commission of the European Communities seeks a declaration from the Court that, by adopting the provisions contained in:

- Articles 2(1) and (5), 17(12), 27(2), 30(6a), 37b and 37c(1) of Law No 109 of 11 February 1994 - Framework Law on public works (legge quadro in materia di lavori pubblici) (Ordinary Supplement to the GURI No 41 of 19 February 1994), as amended by Law No 166 of 1 August 2002 (Ordinary Supplement to the GURI No 181 of 3 August 2002) (Law No 109/1994'),

- Article 28(4) of Law No 109/1994, read in conjunction with Article 188 of Presidential Decree No 554 of 21 December 1999 implementing the Framework Law on public works of 11 February 1994 (No 109) and its successive amendments (regolamento di attuazione della legge quadro in materia di lavori pubblici 11 febbraio 1994, n. 109, e successive modificazioni) (Ordinary Supplement to the GURI No 98 of 28 April 2000) (DPR No 554/1999'), and Article 3(3) of Legislative Decree No 157 of 17 March 1995 implementing Directive 92/50/EEC on public service contracts (attuazione della direttiva 92/50/CEE in materia di appalti pubblici di servizi) (Ordinary Supplement to the GURI No 104 of 6 May 1995) (Legislative Decree No 157/1995'), the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1) (Directive 93/37'), Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84), and Articles 43 EC and 49 EC and the principles of transparency and equal treatment which are the corollary to them.

Legal background

Community law

2. Directives 92/50, 93/36, 93/37 and 93/38 were adopted in pursuance of the establishment of the internal market, defined as an area without internal frontiers in which the free movement of goods, persons, services and capital is ensured. The directives sought to eliminate practices that restrict competition in general and participation in public contracts by other Member States' nationals, in order to implement inter alia the freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services enshrined in Articles 43 EC and 49 EC respectively.

3. The 16th recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50 states that public service contracts may from time to time include some works, and that it results from Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the co-ordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682) that, for a contract to be a public works contract, its object must be the achievement of a work. In so far as those works are ancillary rather than the object of the contract, they do not justify treating the contract as a public works contract.

4. It is clear from Article 8 of Directive 92/50 that public contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A to that directive are to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI thereof. Title III concerns the choice of award procedures and rules governing design contests.

5. Category No 12 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50 mentions, inter alia, architectural services; engineering services; urban planning and landscape architectural services; related scientific and technical consulting services; and technical testing and analysis services.

6. According to Article 15 of Directive 93/38, contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex XVI A thereto are to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III, IV and V. Title IV concerns procedures for the award of contracts.

7. Category No 12 of Annex XVI A is identical to Category No 12 in Annex I A to Directive 92/50.

8. Under Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37, public works contracts are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a contractor and a contracting authority as defined in [Article 1(b)], which have as their object either the execution, or both the execution and design, of works related to one of the activities referred to in Annex II or a work defined in [Article 1(c)], or the execution, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority'.

9. Article 6(1) of Directive 93/37 sets out its scope with regard to the estimated value of the various public works contracts covered. It is clear from Article 6(3) that where a work is subdivided into several lots, each one the subject of a contract, the value of each lot must be taken into account for the purpose of calculating the amount referred to in Article 6(1) and, where the aggregate value of the lots is not less than that amount, the provisions of Article 6(1) are to apply in principle to all lots.

National law

10. Public works contracts are regulated by Law No 109/1994, implemented by DPR No 554/1999.

11. According to Article 2(1) of Law No 109/1994, public works, if they are awarded by the persons referred to in Article 2(2), are defined as construction, demolition, restoration, restructuring, refurbishment and maintenance of works and installations. Article 2(1) extends the scope of Law No 109/1994 to mixed works, supply and service contracts and to supply or service contracts which include ancillary works the estimated value of which exceeds 50% of the total value of the relevant contract.

12. Article 3(3) of Legislative Decree No 157/1995 provides that, in the case of mixed works and of service contracts and of service contracts which include ancillary works, the provisions of Law No 109/1994 are applicable if the works represent more than 50% of the total value of the relevant contract.

13. Article 2(5) of Law No 109/1994 excludes from the Law's scope works carried out directly by private persons which are set off against contributions payable in respect of building permits and works arising from the obligations set out Article 28(5) of Law No 1150 of 17 August 1942 on town planning (legge urbanistica) (GURI No 244 of 16 October 1942), as amended (Law No 1150/1942').

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Article 2(5) also excludes from the Law's scope works which are analogous to those mentioned above. Article 2(5) states that if the value of the works, assessed individually, exceeds the Community threshold the contract must be awarded by the private person in accordance with the procedures prescribed by Directive 93/37.

14. In that regard, it is apparent from Articles 1 and 31 of Law No 1150/1942, and from Articles 3 and 11 of Law No 10 of 28 January 1977 laying down rules on the suitability of land for development (norme in materia di edificabilità dei suoli) (GURI No 27 of 29 January 1977) as amended (Law No 10/1977'), that the holder of a permit may execute infrastructure works himself and offset the whole or part of the cost against the charges due.

15. In addition to public works contracts, Law No 109/1994 regulates certain public service contracts.

16. Thus, Article 17(12) of Law No 109/1994 authorises the awarding entities to award public service contracts for the design and supervision of works the estimated value of which is less than EUR 100 000, through the person responsible for the procedure, to persons referred to in Article 17(1)(d) to (g) who are trusted by the awarding entities, after verifying the professional experience and professional capacity of the persons selected and stating reasons for that choice.

17. Under Article 27(2) of Law No 109/1994, if the contracting authorities cannot assume responsibility for the supervision of the works, they must entrust the supervision, in the following order, to other public authorities, to the project designer for the purposes of Article 17(4) of the Law, or to other persons selected pursuant to the procedures prescribed by national legislation transposing the relevant Community provisions.

18. Under Article 28(4) of Law No 109/1994, testing is to be entrusted to one, two or three highly qualified technicians expert in the particular field concerned, by reference to the type, complexity and value of the works. The technicians are to be selected by the contracting authorities from their own organisations unless a lack of staff is established and certified by the person responsible for the procedure.

19. Article 30(6a) of Law No 109/1994 offers the same possibility as regards inspection which is generally entrusted to the technical departments of the awarding entities or to the supervisory bodies referred to in Article 30(6a)(a).

20. Furthermore, it is apparent from Article 188(1), (3), (8), (9), (11), (12) and (13) of DPR No 554/1999 that within 30 days from the completion of the works, or from the date of handing over of the works where testing is on-going, the awarding entity is to entrust the inspection of the works to its staff, by reference to the type, category, complexity and value of the works and on the basis of pre-established criteria.

21. If the staff do not meet the requirements stipulated, external specialists included in lists drawn up by the Ministry of Public Works and by the regions and autonomous provinces are to be called upon.

22. In the absence of such lists, the awarding entities may, in their discretion, award the inspection of works to persons who possess, in any event, the requisite qualifications and satisfy the requisite conditions.

23. Articles 37a to 37c of Law No 109/1994 govern the award of contracts for public works financed wholly or partly by private persons.

24. Article 37a permits private persons to submit proposals for public works or works in the public interest to the awarding entities and to conclude the corresponding contracts providing for the financing and management of those works.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

25. Article 37b sets out the procedure for selecting the promoter. It provides that the contracting authorities are to evaluate the feasibility of the proposals submitted having regard to various aspects: construction, town planning, environment, quality of the design, functionality, the use to which the works will be put, public access, the return, management and maintenance costs, the duration of the concession, time-limits for carrying out the works, the applicable charges and the method for updating them, the economic value of the plans, and the content of the draft agreement. The contracting authorities must establish that no factors exist which would preclude the proposals from being carried out and, after examining and comparing the latter and hearing representations from any promoters who so request, they are to indicate whether a proposal is in the public interest.

26. In that case, under Article 37c of Law No 109/1994, a restricted procedure is opened in order to obtain two further offers. The concession is then awarded under a negotiated procedure in which the proposal of the promoter initially selected and the other offers are examined. During the course of the procedure, the promoter may adapt his proposal to the offer considered by the contracting authority to be the most suitable. If he does so he will be awarded the concession.

Pre-litigation procedure

27. Having received complaints about the effects of Law No 109/1994 in its original version, the Commission monitored the procedure for the adoption of the draft law intended to amend it.

28. Following the adoption of Law No 166 of 1 August 2002 amending Law No 109/1994, the Commission sent a letter of formal notice to the Italian Republic on 19 December 2002 stating that, in its view, a number of provisions of Law No 109/1994 were still incompatible with Community law.

29. By letter of 26 June 2003, the Italian Republic agreed with most of the objections put forward by the Commission and informed it of its consequent intention to amend the legislation in force.

30. However, as the Italian Republic failed to make the amendments indicated, on 15 October 2003 the Commission sent the Italian Republic a reasoned opinion calling on it to take the measures necessary to comply with that opinion within two months of its notification.

31. Taking the view that the position adopted by the Italian Republic in a letter of 22 April 2004 was unsatisfactory, the Commission brought the present proceedings pursuant to the second paragraph of Article 226 EC.

32. By order of the President of the Court of 6 April 2005, the French Republic, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Republic of Finland were granted leave to intervene in support of the form of order sought by the Italian Republic. Only the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Republic of Finland submitted statements in intervention.

The action

33. This action is based on six complaints.

The first complaint

34. The first complaint concerns the rules on mixed contracts as set out in Law No 109/1994.

35. It is clear from Article 2(1) of Law No 109/1994, which is intended to define the notion of public works, that the Law covers the construction, demolition, restoration, restructuring, refurbishment and maintenance of works and installations where they are awarded by the persons referred to in Article 2(2). Article 2(1) states that mixed works, supply and services contracts and supply or service contracts which include ancillary works, are subject to the provisions of Law No 109/1994 if the works represent more than 50% of the total value of the relevant contract.

36. Likewise, Article 3(3) of Legislative Decree No 157/1995 provides that, in the case of mixed works and service contracts and service contracts which include ancillary works, the provisions of Law No 109/1994 are applicable if the works represent more than 50% of the total value of the relevant contract.

Arguments of the parties

37. The Commission submits that the legal rules applicable to mixed contracts must depend on the main purpose of the contract as determined inter alia, but not exclusively, by the value of the various matters covered by the contract.

38. In that connection, the Commission claims that, by making those contracts in which the works are the most important element from an economic point of view but are nevertheless incidental to the other matters covered by the contract subject to the rules on public works contracts, the Italian legislation has the effect of removing many service and supply contracts the estimated value of which exceeds the thresholds for the application of Directives 92/50 and 93/36 but which is less than that for Directive 93/37 from the application of the relevant Community legislation.

39. The Italian Republic replies that pending the amendment of the national legislation concerned, undertaken in response to the Commission's objections, the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transport adopted Circular No 2316 of 18 December 2003 laying down rules for mixed public works, supply and service contracts (disciplina dei contratti misti negli appalti pubblici di lavori, forniture e servizi) (GURI No 79 of 3 April 2004, p. 26), by which the contracting authorities were called on to comply with the principle that, when dealing with a mixed contract, its main purpose must be taken into account in determining the applicable legislation, so that the economic aspect would no longer be predominant in that respect.

40. Law No 62 of 18 April 2005 laying down measures for the implementation of obligations arising from Italy's membership of the European Communities - Community Law 2004 (dispozioni per l'adempimento di obblighi derivanti dall'apparteneza dell'Italia alle Comunità europee, Legge comunitaria 2004) (Ordinary Supplement to the GURI No 96 of 27 April 2005) (Community Law 2004') ratified that approach.

41. The Republic of Finland takes the view that the economic value is a decisive factor in determining the main purpose of the contract, and such an approach should be excluded only in exceptional circumstances, namely where use of the criterion of economic value is intended to prevent the application of Community law.

Findings of the Court

42. According to settled case-law, the question whether a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations must be determined by reference to the situation obtaining in the Member State at the end of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion (see, inter alia, Case C-114/02 Commission v France [2003] ECR I-3783, paragraph 9, and Case C-433/03 Commission v Germany [2005] ECR I-6985, paragraph 32).

43. The adoption of laws, regulations or administrative provisions after the date on which that period expired cannot be taken into account.

44. Accordingly it is with regard to the legislation in force on 15 December 2003, the date on which the two month period prescribed in the reasoned opinion of 15 October 2003 expired, that it must be decided whether the Italian Republic committed the infringement alleged in this complaint, given that at that date neither the circular referred to in paragraph 39 of this judgment nor the national legislation cited in paragraph 40 had been adopted.

45. Public works contracts' as defined in Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37 means contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a contractor and a contracting authority as defined in Article 1(b), which have as their object either the execution, or both the execution and design, of works related to one of the activities referred to in Annex II to Directive 93/37 or a work defined in Article 1(c), or the execution, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority.

46. Furthermore, it follows from the 16th recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50, read in conjunction with Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37, that a contract may be regarded as a public works contract only if its object corresponds to the definition given in the preceding paragraph and that works that are ancillary rather than the object of the contract do not justify treating the contract as a public works contract.

47. It is, moreover, clear from the case-law of the Court that, where a contract contains both elements relating to a public works contract and elements relating to another type of contract, it is the main purpose of the contract that determines which Community directive on public procurement is to be applied in principle (see Case C-220/05 Auroux and Others [2007] ECR I-385, paragraph 37).

48. In particular, therefore, the scope of Directive 93/37 is linked to the main purpose of the contract, which must be determined in an objective examination of the entire transaction to which the contract relates.

49. The assessment must be made in the light of the essential obligations which predominate and which, as such, characterise the transaction, as opposed to those which are only ancillary or supplementary in nature and are required by the very purpose of the contract; the value of the various matters covered by the contract is, in that regard, just one criterion among others to be taken into account for the purposes of the assessment.

50. It may be inferred from the foregoing that, as the Advocate General has indicated in points 38 and 74 of his Opinion, the value of the works cannot, without infringing the requirements of Directive 93/37, constitute the sole criterion capable of resulting in the application of Law No 109/1994 to a mixed contract, where those works are only ancillary.

51. The rule laid down in Article 2(1) of Law No 109/1994 also fails to comply with the requirements in Directives 92/50 and 93/36, in so far as its application may result in certain mixed contracts falling outside the procedures provided for in those directives, namely those contracts where the works, although ancillary, represent more than 50% of the total value and the total value is below the threshold set by Directive 93/37 even though it reaches the thresholds adopted in Directives 92/50 and 93/36.

52. Therefore, it must be held that, by adopting Article 2(1) of Law No 109/1994, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37.

The second complaint

53. The second complaint relates to the direct award of works or a work to the holder of a building permit or an approved estate plan if their value is below the threshold for the application of Directive 93/37.

54. Under Article 2(5) of Law No 109/1994, works carried out directly by private persons which are set off against contributions payable in respect of building permits, works arising from the obligations set out in Article 28(5) of Law No 1150/1942 and works which are analogous to the two preceding categories are not covered by Law No 109/1994. Article 2(5) states, however, that if the value of the works, assessed individually, exceeds the thresholds laid down by the applicable Community rules, the contract must be awarded in accordance with the procedures prescribed by Directive 93/37.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

55. It is also clear from Articles 1 and 31 of Law No 1150/1942 and Articles 3 and 11 of Law No 10/1977 that the holder of a permit may carry out infrastructure works himself and offset the whole or part of the cost against the charges due.

Arguments of the parties

56. The Commission claims, first, that the provisions of Law No 109/1994, read together with the relevant provisions of Law No 1150/1942 and Law No 10/1977, enable works or a work which constitute public works contracts within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37 to be awarded directly to the holder of a building permit or approved site plan without any guarantee, by way of express provisions, that the principles of transparency and equal treatment that are enshrined in the EC Treaty and must be observed even if the estimated value of the contract is below the threshold for application of the directive will be applied.

57. Second, the Commission submits that, in order to determine whether that threshold has been reached, the total value of the works and/or work covered by the agreement concluded between the private person and the authority must be calculated, as they must be regarded as separate lots in one single contract. The fact that, under national law, the tender procedures are applicable only if the agreement concerns works whose estimated value, taken individually, exceeds the threshold for the application of the relevant Community rules therefore amounts to a failure to comply with the requirements of Directive 93/37, through the exclusion from the scope of the national provisions transposing those requirements contracts the total value of which is higher than the threshold because the amounts corresponding to each of the matters involved in those contracts are insufficient.

58. According to the Italian Republic, as regards infrastructure works with a value less than the threshold for application of the Community rules and which are executed by the holder of a building permit or approved estate plan, it is unnecessary at the transposition stage to refer specifically to the rules of the Treaty on advertising and competition and the relevant case-law of the Court interpreting them.

59. Second, the Italian Republic draws attention to the specific features of the town planning sector in which estate owners take the place of local authorities and to the characteristics of the development agreements concluded between local authorities and estate owners.

60. Such agreements simply require the local authority concerned to issue building permits, the estate owner being responsible for undertaking the infrastructure works in the area concerned on the basis of proposals that the local authority reserves the right to approve.

61. The fact that the same estate owner has been entrusted with the execution of various works which by their very nature differ from each other does not mean that there is an obligation to aggregate the works for the purpose of applying Directive 93/37 simply because he is the owner of the land concerned. The Italian Republic submits, in that connection, that in Case C-399/98 Ordine degli Architetti and Others [2001] ECR I5409 the Court gave a ruling on a situation different from the one in the present case, in so far as it concerned the achievement of works which were clearly a single unit.

62. According to the Kingdom of the Netherlands, public contracts with a value below the threshold laid down by the relevant directives are not covered by the principle of transparency. It adds that the directives themselves expressly provide for a number of derogations, as the Community legislature chose in those situations to give priority to interests other than transparency.

63. The Republic of Finland submits that while contracts the value of which is lower than the thresholds set by those directives are thereby excluded from the scope of the directives, they are subject as a matter of law to the provisions of the Treaty relating to the free movement of goods and services and freedom of establishment.

64. Accordingly, national law should not impose specific requirements relating to advertising or inviting competing bids with respect to those contracts.

Findings of the Court

65. First of all, the Community legislature expressly made a policy choice to exclude contracts under a certain threshold from the advertising regime which it introduced and therefore did not impose any specific obligation with respect to them.

66. Furthermore, where it is established that such a contract is of certain cross-border interest, the award, in the absence of any transparency, of that contract to an undertaking located in the same Member State as the contracting authority amounts to a difference in treatment to the detriment of undertakings which might be interested in the contract but which are located in other Member States. Unless it is justified by objective circumstances, such a difference in treatment, which, by excluding all undertakings located in another Member State, operates mainly to the detriment of the latter undertakings, amounts to indirect discrimination on the basis of nationality, prohibited under Articles 43 EC and 49 EC (see, to that effect, as regards Directive 92/50, Case C507/03 Commission v Ireland [2007] ECR I0000, paragraphs 30 and 31 and the case-law cited).

67. Since, as the Advocate General has observed, in point 56 of his Opinion, under Article 249 EC directives are binding as to the result to be achieved upon each Member State to which they are addressed and since the Community legislature excluded certain contracts from the scope of Directive 93/37, in particular by laying down thresholds, the Member States are not required to adopt, in the legislation transposing that directive, provisions recalling the obligation to comply with Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, which is applicable only in the circumstances set out in paragraph 66 of this judgment.

68. The fact that the Italian legislature did not adopt such provisions with respect to public contracts for infrastructure works executed by the holder of a building permit or an approved estate plan the value of which is below the threshold for application of Directive 93/37, for cases where the existence of a certain cross-border interest is established, does not call into question the applicability of Articles 43 EC and 49 EC to those contracts.

69. Therefore, the second complaint, in so far as it is based on the infringement of fundamental rules of the Treaty, must be dismissed.

70. Second, as regards the scope of Article 2(5) of Law No 109/1994 in the light of the requirements of Directive 93/37, according to settled caselaw the fact that a provision of national law allowing direct execution by the holder of a building permit or an approved estate plan of infrastructure works which offset the whole or part of the contribution payable in respect of the permit forms part of a set of urban development regulations which are of a special nature and pursue a specific aim that is separate from Directive 93/37 is not sufficient to exclude the direct execution of works from the scope of the directive when the elements needed to bring it within the scope of the directive are present (see Ordine degli Architetti and Others , paragraph 66).

71. Such execution must therefore be subject to the procedures provided for in Directive 93/37 where it satisfies the conditions contained therein for classification of a public works contract and, in particular, where the contractual element required in Article 1(a) thereof is present and the value of the work is equal to or higher than the threshold laid down in Article 6(1).

72. Furthermore, it is clear from Article 6(3) of Directive 93/37 that, where a work is subdivided into several lots, each one the subject of a contract, the value of each lot must be taken into account for the purpose of calculating the amount referred to in Article 6(1) which determine whether or not the directive is applicable to all the lots. In addition, under Article 6(4), no work or contract may be split up with the intention of avoiding the application of the directive.

73. Therefore, as the Advocate General has stated in point 88 of his Opinion, if the agreement concluded between a private person who is the owner of development land and the municipal authority satisfies the criteria for the definition of a public works contract' within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37, which are set out in paragraph 45 of this judgment, the estimated value which must in principle be taken into account in order to ascertain whether the threshold set by the directive is attained and whether, therefore, the award of the contract must comply with the rules on advertising laid down therein, may be calculated solely by reference to the total value of the various works, by adding together the value of the various lots.

74. By providing for an award procedure which complies with the requirements of Directive 93/37 only where the estimated value of each of those lots, taken individually, exceeds the threshold for application of the directive, Italian law infringes the directive.

75. It is clear from the foregoing that Article 2(5) of Law No 109/1994 fails to comply with the requirements of Directive 93/37 by improperly limiting use of the procedures established by the directive.

The third complaint

76. The third complaint concerns the award of the design, supervision and inspection of works in the context of public service contracts the value of which is below the threshold for the application of the relevant Community provisions.

77. According to Articles 17(12) and 30(6a) of Law No 109/1994, public service contracts for the design and supervision of works and inspection of the works, the estimated value of which is below the threshold for the application of Directive 92/50, may be awarded to persons trusted by the awarding entity.

Arguments of the parties

78. The Commission criticises those provisions, which allow the use of a method of awarding the public service contracts concerned that excludes any form of advertising, on the ground that, although those contracts do not fall within the scope of Directive 92/50, they remain subject to the rules of the Treaty on the freedom to provide services and freedom of establishment as well as to the principles of non-discrimination, equal treatment, proportionality and transparency.

79. The Italian Republic submits that any rule of secondary legislation must be interpreted on the basis of the general principles of the Treaty and that any interpretation which deviates from them would be unlawful. In any event, any unlawfulness can only arise from an incorrect application of the rule to a particular case. Therefore, when transposing Community law, there cannot be a requirement to refer specifically to the provisions of the Treaty.

80. It adds that a ministerial circular drew the attention of contracting authorities to the requirement to comply with the general principles of non-discrimination, equal treatment and transparency and that, in any event, direct award of the contracts concerned to trusted persons may take place only after their professional experience and professional capacity have been checked.

Findings of the Court

81. It is settled caselaw, as stated in paragraph 66 of this judgment, that public service contracts falling outside the scope of Directive 92/50 which have been shown to be of certain cross-border interest remain subject to the fundamental freedoms laid down by the Treaty in the circumstances specified in the case-law set out in that paragraph.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

82. Since the obligations arising from primary law that relate to equal treatment and transparency are therefore automatically applicable to those contracts - which are nevertheless excluded from the scope of Directive 92/50 on account of their value - in so far as the conditions laid down by that case-law are satisfied, there is no requirement for the national legislation transposing the directive to recall them expressly.

83. Therefore, the third complaint must be dismissed.

The fourth and fifth complaints

84. The fourth complaint concerns the provisions of Article 27(2) of Law No 109/1994, according to which, if the contracting authorities are unable to carry out the supervision of works which is as a rule the responsibility of their technical departments, those activities are entrusted to the project designer within the meaning of Article 17(4) thereof.

85. The fifth complaint relates to the award of testing and of inspection tasks in respect of public works, as governed by Article 28(4) of Law No 109/1994 and Article 188 of DPR No 554/1999. It is clear from a combined reading of those provisions that although those tasks are, as a rule, the responsibility of the technical departments of the contracting authorities, where a lack of staff has been established and certified by the person responsible for the procedure the authority may award the tasks to third parties featured on lists drawn up for that purpose by the Ministry of Public Works, without using the procedures relating to the opening of contracts up to competition.

Arguments of the parties

86. In the Commission's view, since Articles 27(2) and 28(4) of Law No 109/1994 allow the public service contracts concerned to be directly awarded without competition, they infringe, depending on the value of those contracts, either Directives 92/50 and 93/38 or Articles 43 EC and 49 EC.

87. The Italian Republic replies that it took formal notice of the criticisms made by the Commission and, as a result, it has amended its legislation by adopting Community Law 2004.

Findings of the Court

88. It must be noted as a preliminary point that, in accordance with the case-law set out in paragraph 42 of this judgment, only the national legislation in force on 15 December 2003 may be taken into account in assessing the complaints made by the Commission.

89. It must be observed, in the first place, that the only permitted exceptions to the application of Directives 92/50 and 93/38 are those which are exhaustively and expressly mentioned therein (see, by way of analogy, Case C-107/98 Teckal [1999] I8121, paragraph 43, and Case C-340/04 Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei [2006] ECR I-4137, paragraph 45).

90. As the Advocate General has noted, in point 101 of his Opinion, supervision and the inspection of works are included in Category No 12 of both Annex I A to Directive 92/50 and Annex XVI A to Directive 93/38.

91. It is clear, first, from Article 8 of Directive 92/50 that contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A are to be awarded in particular in accordance with the provisions of Title III of that directive which concerns the choice of award procedures and, second, from Article 15 of Directive 93/38 that supply and works contracts and contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex XVI A are to be awarded in accordance with, inter alia, the provisions of Title IV of Directive 93/38, relating to award procedures.

92. Therefore, in so far as contracts for the supervision of works must be awarded in accordance with the rules laid down by Directives 92/50 and 93/38, the direct award to the project designer, as resulting from Article 27(2) of Law No 109/1994, infringes those directives as regards contracts which, having regard to their value, fall within the scope of the directives.

93. Likewise, in so far as contracts for inspection works must be awarded in accordance with the rules laid down by Directives 92/50 and 93/38, the award to third parties in the circumstances set out in Article 28(4) of Law No 109/1994 and Article 188 of DPR No 554/1999 infringes those directives as far as concerns the contracts included in their scope.

94. In the second place, in the case of contracts in respect of which the value of the services concerned is below the threshold for application of Directives 92/50 and 93/38, as stated in paragraphs 68 and 82 of this judgment the absence from the applicable national provisions of any express reference to the application of the obligations arising from the Treaty does not mean that there is no need to comply with the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency when awarding those contracts in so far as the conditions laid down by the case-law recalled in paragraph 66 of this judgment are satisfied.

95. Therefore, the fourth and fifth pleas must be dismissed in so far as they refer to the infringement of Articles 43 EC and 49 EC but are well founded as to the remainder.

The sixth complaint

96. The sixth complaint concerns Articles 37a to 37c of Law No 109/1994, pursuant to which the authorities may allow the execution by third parties of public works which can be exploited commercially, in accordance with a specific award procedure. During the first stage, third parties are invited to submit, as promoters, proposals for the award of concessions, in respect of which the costs are assumed wholly or in part by the promoters. Once the proposals submitted have been evaluated, those considered to be in the public interest are selected in a second stage, in the course of which, with respect to each proposal selected, a restricted tender procedure is opened with a view to selecting two further offers.

97. A negotiated procedure is then opened by the contracting authority with the promoter and the other third parties who have submitted the two best offers in the tender procedure, the promoter having the opportunity to adapt his proposal to the offer considered most suitable by the contracting authority.

Arguments of the parties

98. The Commission submits that those rules are liable to constitute an infringement of the principle of equal treatment.

99. It takes the view that the rules for opening the concession up to competition favour the promoter as compared with all the other potential tenderers for two reasons.

100. First, the promoter is automatically invited to take part in the negotiated procedure for the award of the concession, irrespective of any comparison between his proposal and the offers submitted by the participants in the previous tendering procedure.

101. Second, the promoter has the opportunity to amend his proposal during the negotiated procedure in order to adapt it to the tender considered by the contracting authority to be the most suitable. In reality, that advantage amounts to the recognition of a right of priority for the promoter in the award of the concession.

102. The Italian Republic states that Community Law 2004, mentioned in paragraph 40 of this judgment, took account of the Commission's objections.

Findings of the Court

103. It is clear from Article 38(1)(c) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice and from the case-law relating to that provision, that an application must state the subject-matter of the proceedings and a summary of the pleas in law on which the application is based, and that that statement must be sufficiently clear and precise to enable the defendant to prepare his defence and the Court to rule on the application. It is therefore necessary for the essential points of law and of fact on which a case is based to be indicated coherently and intelligibly in the application itself and for the heads of claim to be set out unambiguously so that the Court does not rule ultra petita or indeed fail to rule on an objection (Case C-195/04 Commission v Finland [2007] ECR I3351, paragraph 22).

104. In this case, the Commission's application does not satisfy those requirements so far as the present complaint is concerned.

105. By its application, the Commission seeks a declaration that the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil obligations under Directives 92/50, 93/36, 93/37 and 93/38 and Articles 43 EC and 49 EC. In the sixth complaint, it fails to state precisely which of those directives and/or provisions of the Treaty the Italian Republic is supposed to have infringed by allegedly infringing the principle of equal treatment.

106. Moreover, as far as concerns Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, those articles do not lay down a general obligation of equal treatment but contain, as is clear from the case-law cited in paragraph 66 of this judgment, a prohibition on discrimination on the basis of nationality. The Commission does not give any particulars regarding the existence of such discrimination in this complaint.

107. Therefore, the sixth complaint must be declared inadmissible.

108. Having regard to all the foregoing considerations, it must be held that, by adopting:

- Article 2(1) of Law No 109/1994, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37;

- Article 2(5) of Law No 109/1994, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 93/37; and

- Articles 27(2) and 28(4) of Law No 109/1994, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directives 92/50 and 93/38.

Costs

109. Under Article 69(3) of the Rules of Procedure, the Court may order that the costs be shared or decide that each party is to bear its own costs where each party succeeds on some and fails on other heads. Since the Commission has been partly unsuccessful with respect to the second, fourth and fifth complaints, unsuccessful with respect to the third complaint and the sixth complaint has been declared inadmissible, and the Italian Republic has been unsuccessful on the first complaint and partly unsuccessful with respect to the second, fourth and fifth complaints, each party is to bear its own costs.

110. Under Article 69(4) of the Rules of Procedure, the Member States which have intervened in the proceedings are to bear their own costs.

Case C-412/04

Commission of the European Communities

v

Italian Republic

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil its obligations – Public works, supply and service contracts – Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC, 93/37/EEC and 93/38/EEC – Transparency – Equal treatment – Contracts excluded from the scope of those directives on account of their value)

Summary of the Judgment

1. Actions for failure to fulfil obligations – Examination of merits by the Court – Situation to be taken into consideration – Situation on expiry of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion

   (Art. 226 EC)

2. Approximation of laws – Procedures for the award of public services, supply and works contracts – Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 – Determination according to the main purpose of the contract – Mixed works, supply and service contracts – Supply or service contracts including ancillary works

   (Council Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37)

3. Approximation of laws – Procedures for the award of public works contracts – Directive 93/37 – Award of contracts

   (Arts 43 EC and 49 EC; Council Directive 93/37)

4. Approximation of laws – Procedures for the award of public works contracts – Directive 93/37 – Scope

   (Council Directive 93/37, Art. 6(1) and (3))

5. Approximation of laws – Procedures for the award of public service contracts and contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors – Directives 92/50 and 93/38 – Award of contracts

   (Council Directives 92/50 and 93/38)

6. Procedure – Application initiating proceedings – Formal requirements

   (Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, Art. 38(1)(c))

1. The question whether a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations must be determined by reference to the situation obtaining in the Member State at the end of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion. In that connection, the adoption of laws, regulations or administrative provisions after the date on which that period expired cannot be taken into account.

(see paras 42-43)

2. A Member State which makes mixed works, supply and service contracts and supply or service contracts which include ancillary works if the works represent more than 50% of the total value of the relevant contract subject to the national rules on public works contracts fails to fulfil its obligations under Directive 92/50 coordinating procedures for the award of public service contracts, Directive 93/36 coordinating the procedures for the award of public supply contracts and Directive 93/37 coordinating the procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by Directive 97/52.

Where a contract contains both elements relating to a public works contract and elements relating to another type of contract, it is the main purpose of the contract that determines which Community directive on public procurement is to be applied in principle. In particular, therefore, the scope of Directive 93/37 is linked to the main purpose of the contract, which must be determined in an objective examination of the entire transaction to which the contract relates. The assessment must be made in the light of the essential obligations which predominate and which, as such, characterise the transaction, as opposed to those which are only ancillary or supplementary in nature and are required by the very purpose of the contract; the value of the various matters covered by the contract is, in that regard, just one criterion among others to be taken into account for the purposes of the assessment. Therefore, the value of the works cannot constitute the sole criterion capable of resulting in the application of the rules on public works contracts to a mixed contract, where those works are only ancillary, without infringing the requirements of Directive 93/97.

Furthermore, such national rules also fail to comply with the requirements of Directives 92/50 and 93/36, in so far as its application may result in certain mixed contracts falling outside the procedures provided for in those directives, namely those contracts where the works, although ancillary, represent more than 50% of the total value and the total value is below the threshold set by Directive 93/37 even though it reaches the thresholds adopted in Directives 92/50 and 93/36.

3. The Community legislature expressly made a policy choice to exclude contracts under a certain threshold from the advertising regime which it introduced and therefore did not impose any specific obligation with respect to them. Where it is established that such a contract is of certain cross-border interest, the award, in the absence of any transparency, of that contract to an undertaking located in the same Member State as the contracting authority amounts to a difference in treatment to the detriment of undertakings which might be interested in the contract but which are located in other Member States. Unless it is justified by objective circumstances, such a difference in treatment, which, by excluding all undertakings located in another Member State, operates mainly to the detriment of the latter undertakings, amounts to indirect discrimination on the basis of nationality, prohibited under Articles 43 EC and 49 EC.

Since, under Article 249 EC, directives are binding as to the result to be achieved upon each Member State to which they are addressed and since the Community legislature excluded certain contracts from the scope of Directive 93/37, in particular by laying down thresholds, the Member States are not required to adopt, in the legislation transposing that directive, provisions recalling the obligation to comply with Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, which is applicable only in the circumstances cited above. The fact that the national legislature did not adopt such provisions with respect to public contracts for infrastructure works executed by the holder of a building permit or an approved estate plan the value of which is below the threshold for application of Directive 93/37, for cases where the existence of a certain cross-border interest is established, does not call into question the applicability of Articles 43 EC and 49 EC to those contracts.

(see paras 65-68)

4. A Member State which authorises the direct award of works or a work to the holder of a building permit or an approved estate plan by providing for an award procedure which complies with the requirements of Directive 93/37 only, where the works are divided into several lots, if the estimated value of each of those lots, taken individually, exceeds the threshold for the application of the directive fails to fulfil its obligations under Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public words contracts, as amended by Directive 97/52.

The fact that a provision of national law allowing direct execution by the holder of a building permit or an approved estate plan of infrastructure works which offset the whole or part of the contribution payable in respect of the permit forms part of a set of urban development regulations which are of a special nature and pursue a specific aim that is separate from Directive 93/37 is not sufficient to exclude the direct execution of works from the scope of the directive when the elements needed to bring it within the scope of the directive are present. Such execution must therefore be subject to the procedures provided for in Directive 93/37 where it satisfies the conditions contained therein for classification of a public works contract and, in particular, where the contractual element required in Article 1(a) thereof is present and the value of the work is equal to or higher than the threshold laid down in Article 6(1).

Furthermore, it is clear from Article 6(3) of Directive 93/37 that, where a work is subdivided into several lots, each one the subject of a contract, the value of each lot must be taken into account for the purpose of calculating the amount referred to in Article 6(1), which determines whether or not the directive is applicable to all the lots. In addition, under Article 6(4), no work or contract may be split up with the intention of avoiding the application of the directive. Therefore, if the agreement concluded between a private person who is the owner of development land and the municipal authority satisfies the criteria for the definition of a 'public works contract' within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37, the estimated value which must in principle be taken into account in order to ascertain whether the threshold set by the directive is attained and whether, therefore, the award of the contract must comply with the rules on advertising laid down therein, may be calculated solely by reference to the total value of the various works, by adding together the value of the various lots.

5. A Member State which allows, first, the supervision of works which is as a rule the responsibility of the technical departments of the contracting authorities, to the project designer and, second, the award of testing and of inspection tasks in respect of public works, to third parties featured on lists drawn up for that purpose by the Ministry of Public Works, without using the procedures relating to the opening of contracts up to competition fails to fulfil its obligations under Directive 92/50 on public service contracts and Directive 93/38 coordinating the procurement procedures for entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors.

The only permitted exceptions to the application of Directives 92/50 and 93/38 are those which are exhaustively and expressly mentioned therein. Supervision and the inspection of works are included in Category No 12 of both Annex I A to Directive 92/50 and Annex XVI A to Directive 93/38. It is clear, first, from Article 8 of Directive 92/50 that contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A are to be awarded in particular in accordance with the provisions of Title III of that directive which concerns the choice of award procedures and, second, from Article 15 of Directive 93/38 that supply and works contracts and contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex XVI A are to be awarded in accordance with, inter alia, the provisions of Title IV of Directive 93/38, relating to award procedures. Therefore, in so far as contracts for the supervision of works must be awarded in accordance with the rules laid down by Directives 92/50 and 93/38, the direct award to the project designer infringes those directives as regards contracts which, having regard to their value, fall within the scope of the directives. Likewise, in so far as contracts for inspection works must be awarded in accordance with the rules laid down by Directives 92/50 and 93/38, the award to third parties infringes those directives as regards the contracts included in their scope.

6. It is clear from Article 38(1)(c) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice and from the case-law relating to that provision, that an application must state the subject-matter of the proceedings and a summary of the pleas in law on which the application is based, and that that statement must be sufficiently clear and precise to enable the defendant to prepare his defence and the Court to rule on the application. It is therefore necessary for the essential points of law and of fact on which a case is based to be indicated coherently and intelligibly in the application itself and for the heads of claim to be set out unambiguously so that the Court does not rule ultra petita or indeed fail to rule on an objection.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
RUIZ-JARABO COLOMER delivered on 8 November 2006 1

Case C-412/04

Commission of the European Communities
v
Italian Republic

(Public procurement – Criteria for the application of Community rules to mixed contracts – Application of the principles of transparency and equal treatment to contracts excluded on grounds of value – Award of contracts for urban development works; of contracts for the design, supervision and inspection of works the value of which is below the Community thresholds; of contracts for the supervision and inspection of works; and of public works contracts to private promoters)

I – Introduction

1. The Commission has brought an action under Article 226 EC, seeking a declaration from the Court of Justice that Italy has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 43 EC and 49 EC and under the Council Directives concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992), (2) public supply contracts (93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993), (3) and public works contracts (93/37/EEC, also of 14 June 1993), (4) and coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (93/38/EEC, also of 14 June 1993) ('the Directives'). (5)

2. The Commission claims that the infringement is entailed by Articles 2(1) and (5), 17(12), 27 (2), 28(4), 30(6a), 37b, and 37c(1) of Law No 109 of 11 February 1994, Legge quadro in materia di lavori pubblici (Framework Law on public contracts). (6) It alleges that it consists specifically in: (1) the exclusion of mixed contracts from Law No 109/94 if the ancillary works represent more than 50 % of the price; (2) the award of contracts directly to the holder of a building permit or development plan in cases where the works do not exceed the financial thresholds provided for in Directive 93/37; (3) the procedure for awarding contracts for the design, supervision and inspection of works the value of which is below the Community thresholds; (4) the award of contracts for the supervision of works to the project designer when neither the contracting authority nor any other public authority is able to perform that role; (5) the method of awarding inspection contracts to third parties; and (6) the system of awarding contracts for privately financed works.

3. Those complaints raise two issues of general interest which need to be discussed in more detail; first, the criteria for determining whether the Community provisions on procurement must apply to mixed contracts, and, second, the application of the principles of transparency and equal treatment to the award of contracts whose value is lower than the thresholds set in the Directives.

II – The legal framework

A – The Community legislation

1. The EC Treaty

4. The first paragraph of Article 43 EC provides: 'Within the framework of the provisions set out below, restrictions on the freedom of establishment of nationals of a Member State in the territory of another Member State shall be prohibited. Such prohibition shall also apply to restrictions on the setting-up of agencies, branches or subsidiaries by nationals of any Member State established in the territory of any Member State'.

5. The first paragraph of Article 49 EC provides: 'Within the framework of the provisions set out below, restrictions on freedom to provide services within the Community shall be prohibited in respect of nationals of Member States who are established in a State of the Community other than that of the person for whom the services are intended'.

2. The Directives on public contracts

6. Directives 92/50, 93/36, 93/37 and 93/38 were adopted in order to provide simultaneously for the application to the field of public contracts of the principles of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services enshrined in Articles 43 EC and 49 EC. Of all the provisions included in those Directives, the most notable are the ones which define the scope of each Directive by setting different thresholds for the exclusion of works with values below the amounts set (Article 7 of Directive 92/50, Article 5 of Directive 93/36, Article 6 of Directive 93/37 and Article 14 of Directive 93/38).

7. I will refer to other specific provisions as I analyse the grounds of failure to fulfil obligations.

B – The Italian legislation

8. The Directives were transposed into Italian law by Law No 109/94, which was amended by Article 7 of Law No 166 of 1 August 2002. (7)

1. Mixed contracts

9. Article 2(1) of Law No 109/94, which delimits the scope of the Law, defines public works as construction, demolition, restoration, restructuring, refurbishment and maintenance, and provides that the Law applies to mixed works, supply and service contracts and to supply and service contracts which include ancillary works the value of which exceeds 50% of the total value of the contract.

10. Article 3(3) of Legislative Decree No 157 of 17 March 1995 (8) lays down the same provision for mixed works and service contracts and for service contracts which include ancillary works.

2. Urban development works

11. Article 2(5) of Law No 109/94 excludes from the scope of the Law: a) works carried out directly by private persons which are set off against fees payable in respect of building permits; b) works arising from the obligations laid down in Article 28(5) of Law No 1150 of 17 August 1942; (9) and c) works which are analogous to the foregoing. If the value, which is assessed individually where there are a number of works, exceeds the Community thresholds, the contract must be awarded in accordance with Directive 93/37.

12. In that regard, it is apparent from Articles 1 and 31 of Law No 1150/42, and from Articles 3 and 11 of Law No 10 of 28 January 1977, (10) that the holder of a building permit may carry out urban development works himself and offset the whole or part of the cost against the urban development fees due.

3. Contracts for the design, supervision and inspection of works the value of which is below the Community thresholds

13. Under Article 17(12) of Law No 109/94, the competent authorities may award contracts for the design and supervision of works with a value of less than EUR 100 000 to the persons referred to in subparagraph (1)(d), (e), (f) and (g), after verifying the experience and professional capacity of the person selected and stating reasons for the choice.

14. In addition, under Article 30(6a) of Law No 109/94, responsibility for the inspection of works falls to the technical departments of the tendering entities or to the supervisory bodies referred to in Article 30(6a)(a) or, where the value is below the Community thresholds, to persons trusted by the awarding authority.

4. The supervision of works

15. Under Article 27(2) of Law No 109/94, provided that the contracting authority does not, in the cases referred to in Article 17(4), assume responsibility for the supervision of works, that authority must award the contract for supervision services, in the following order, to (1) other public authorities; (2) the project designer, in accordance with Article 17(4); or (3) other persons who have been pre-selected pursuant to national rules.

5. Inspection services

16. Under Article 28(4) of Law No 109/94, contracts for inspection services are awarded to one, two or three highly qualified experts in the particular field concerned, by reference to the type, complexity and value of the works, who are selected from the contracting authority's own experts unless it is established and certified that none of those experts satisfy the aforesaid requirements.

17. Those provisions must be read in conjunction with Article 188 of Presidential Decree No 554 of 21 December 1999, (11) which adds to Law No 109/94. It appears from paragraphs 1, 3, 8, 9, 11, 12 and 13 of Article 188 that, within 30 days of the conclusion of the works, the contracting authority must award the contract for inspection of the works to its staff, by reference to the type, category, complexity and value of the works and certain other pre-established criteria. If no one meets the requirements stipulated, the authority must use the services of external experts included in lists held by the Ministero dei Lavori Pubblici (Ministry of Public Works) and by the regional and provincial governments, from which the authority must select a person who meets the conditions stated and who has been qualified for at least 10 years – in the case of structural works or works with a value equal to or in excess of five million euros – or for at least five years – in the case of works with a the value of below one million euros. In addition, the contracting authority must make that person subject to a number of restrictions. In the absence of such lists, the contracting authority is entitled to award the contract on a discretionary basis to whoever satisfies the requirements laid down.

6. Privately financed works

18. Articles 37a, 37b and 37c of Law No 109/94 govern the award of contracts for public works financed wholly or partly by private persons.

19. Article 37a permits such persons to submit proposals for public works and works in the public interest, and to conclude the relevant contracts, under which they assume the financing and management of those works. To that end, the contracting authority is required to publish an indicative notice sufficiently in advance.

20. Article 37b sets out the procedure for selection of the promoter. First, the proposals are evaluated, having regard to the construction, the planning, the environment, the quality of the design, its functional nature, its objective, its accessibility to users, the return, the management and maintenance costs, the duration of the concession, the time-limits for carrying out the works, the charges, the system for inspecting the works, and the economic value of the plans. Having established that no factors exist which would preclude the execution of the works and after hearing representations from any promoters who so request, it is decided whether any of the proposals is in the public interest, in which case Article 37c(1) provides for a restricted procedure to obtain two further offers. The concession is awarded under a negotiated procedure in which the promoter's proposal competes with the other two proposals, subject to the special rule, laid down at the end of Article 37c, that the award may be made to the promoter who, during the course of the procedure, adapts his proposal to the amendments suggested by the contracting authority .

III – The pre-litigation procedure

21. After receiving a number of complaints regarding the effects of Law No 109/94 and obtaining details of the proposed amendments to that Law, on 12 April 2002 the Commission wrote to the Italian authorities stating that a number of provisions were incompatible with Community law.

22. In a letter dated 17 June 2002 and at a meeting held in Rome on 23 July 2002, Italy indicated its willingness to amend Law No 109/94 in the manner requested.

23. Following the adoption of the amendments under Law No 166/2002, the Commission took the view that certain provisions of that Law conflicted with Community law and, on 19 December 2002, the Commission sent a letter of formal notice. Unconvinced by the reply to that letter, the Commission sent a reasoned opinion on 15 October 2003 and then brought an action before the Court under Article 226 EC seeking a declaration that Italy has failed to fulfil its obligations.

IV – The procedure before the Court

24. In the application, which was received at the Court registry on 24 September 2004, the Commission seeks a declaration that, 'by adopting Articles 2(1), 17(12), 27(2), 30(6a), 37b and 37c (1) of Law No 109 of 11 February 1994, as most recently amended by Article 7 of Law No 166 of 1 August 2002; Article 2(5) of Law No 109/94, as most recently amended by Law No 166/2002, to be read in conjunction with Law No 1150 of 1942 and Law No 10 of 1977, as amended and supplemented; Article 28(4) of Law No 109/94, to be read in conjunction with Article 188 of Presidential Decree No 554 of 21 December 1999 and Article 7 of Law No 166/2002, and Article 3(3) of Legislative Decree No 157 of 17 March 1995, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directives 93/37/EEC, 93/36/EEC, 92/50/EEC and 93/38/EEC, Articles 43 and 49 EC and the principles of transparency and equal treatment to which they give expression'. The Commission also claims that the defendant must be ordered to pay the costs.

25. In the defence, lodged on 16 December 2004, Italy seeks the dismissal of the Commission's action and, in the alternative, the approval of the amendments made to the Italian legislation criticised in the reasoned opinion, together with the dismissal of the complaint relating to Article 2 (5) of Law No 109/94.

26. The reply was lodged on 26 January 2005 and the rejoinder was lodged on 16 March 2005.

27. By order of 6 April 2004, the President of the Court granted leave for the Netherlands (which submitted a statement in intervention on 14 July 2005) and Finland (which submitted a statement in intervention on 18 July 2005) to intervene in support of Italy, (12) which lodged a response to the statements in intervention on 14 September 2005.

28. On conclusion of the written stage of the proceedings, since none of the parties requested a hearing, the case became ready for the preparation of this Opinion on 11 July 2006.

V – Mixed contracts

29. Freedom of contract allows new contractual forms to emerge, which combine elements from different standard contracts (13) and which aim to attain more effectively the objectives proposed by the parties.

30. There are numerous possible combinations, depending on the extent of the contractual obligation concerned, (14) because a single legal transaction may encompass several different transactions, a contract may have more than one object and, in that connection, each object may relate to a different activity.

31. The main difficulty lies in selecting the relevant provisions, which give rise to certain effects such as the application of more rigorous procedures or the exclusion of certain tenderers.

32. The selection may be based on the combination criterion, by using provisions from different sources in different parts of the same contract, on the absorption criterion, complying with the contractual rules to which the predominant element belongs. (15)

33. The first criterion emphasises the specific nature of each type but the extensive practical difficulties it entails mean that it is not normally used, except, for example, in contracts which, behind a unitary structural appearance, combine a number of different contractual types.

34. The second criterion is generally used in more complex situations, such as the ones which are specifically referred to in the Directives and are based on the object of the contract:

– A contract which covers products and services where the value of the services exceeds that of the products is governed by Directive 92/50. (16)

– A contract which covers products, where the supply of those products entails, as an incidental matter, siting and installation operations, is governed by Directive 93/36. (17)

– A contract which covers services and includes ancillary works is governed by Directive 92/50. (18)

– A contract which covers a public works concession must comply with the advertising rules specifically laid down in Directive 93/37. (19)

35. In addition, Directive 92/50 provides that, where contracts cover services listed in both Annex I A and Annex I B, the value of those services determines which provisions must be applied to the award of the contracts (20) (Article 10). (21) Directive 93/38 contains a similar provision (Article 17).

36. However, the alternatives referred to do not exhaust all the possibilities so that, in the light of the lacunae in the Directives, which, moreover, do not set out a common framework for all contracts, (22) the legislatures of the Member States must adopt provisions applicable to the other types of mixed contracts, for which purpose they have a wide margin of discretion, subject to the Directives and the Treaty.

37. It is important to point out that the Directives are founded on the concept of the main object of the contract, and, where there is more than one object or a number of activities are combined, on the object or activity with the highest financial value. It is possible to determine the material scope of the Directives by taking both those factors into account.

38. The main object of the contract is framed as the essential element around which the contract is centred. (23) Thus, in Gestión Hotelera Internacional, (24) in relation to a contract for the assignment of property and also the performance of works, (25) the Court held that it was inappropriate to treat those works as the main object of the contract when they were incidental in nature, although that was a factor which must be determined by the national court (paragraphs 26 to 29). That judgment must be qualified, however, because the classification of operations or works as ancillary (sixteenth recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50 and Article 1(a), in fine, of Directive 93/36) does not convert that quality into the one that defines the system. Accordingly, the judgment must be construed as meaning that ancillary contractual obligations may not be used to identify the applicable provisions, which must be determined in accordance with the prevalence criterion. (26)

39. The value of the contract is framed as an impartial criterion which is useful when it comes to selecting the predominant object or activity, having regard to its primary function which is to determine whether or not contracts are covered by the Directives. In that connection, the Court held in Teckal, (27) on the basis of an a contrario interpretation of Article 2 of Directive 92/50, that a contract for products and services is governed by the provisions on products if the value of those items exceeds that of the services (paragraph 38), a finding upheld in Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei (28) (paragraphs 31 and 47).

VI – The Community principles in relation to excluded contracts

A – The action for failure to fulfil obligations on the grounds of infringement of the Community principles

40. It is clear from Article 10 EC that membership of the Community entails two obligations for the Member States. One of those obligations is positive and requires the Member States to take 'all appropriate measures, whether general or particular, to ensure fulfilment of the obligations arising' out of the Treaty or 'resulting from action taken by the institutions', while the other is negative and requires Member States 'to abstain from any measure which could jeopardise the attainment of the objectives' pursued. Under Articles 226 EC and 227 EC, the Commission and the Member States may bring the matter before the Court where they consider that another Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations.

41. Accordingly, the action for an infringement of Community law has a wide material scope because it does not apply only to secondary law where directives provide a rich source of such proceedings.

42. Those considerations explain why the application does not contain any submissions concerning the infringement by the Italian legislation of specific provisions of the Directives on public contracts and focuses instead on the claim that the Italian legislation breaches the Community principles enshrined in Articles 43 EC and 49 EC.

43. In other words, since the legal provisions governing public contracts vary depending on whether the national implementing measures define those contracts in such a way that they fall within the scope of the Directives, the Commission bases its complaint on the absence of an express provision requiring compliance with the principles of transparency and equal treatment when awarding contracts which are excluded on the grounds of their value.

B – The principles of transparency and equal treatment in relation to excluded contracts

44. In previous Opinions I have argued that the development of open competition in the field of public contracts will be achieved if those who wish to be awarded public contracts participate on an equal footing without any unjustified discrimination whatsoever, and that it is not sufficient for the procedure to be governed by objective criteria because the principle of transparency must also apply. (29)

45. The Court has already considered the effect of the principles of transparency and equal treatment on the award of contracts which, on account of their value, are excluded from the scope of the Directives and, consequently, from that of national implementing provisions.

46. In Teleaustria and Telefonadress, (30) the Court held that, where contracts are excluded from the scope of Directive 93/38, 'the contracting entities concluding them are, none the less, bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the Treaty, in general, and the principle of non-discrimination on the ground of nationality, in particular' (paragraph 60). In accordance with the judgment in Unitron Scandinavia and 3–S, (31) the principle of transparency 'implies … an obligation of transparency' in order to ensure that it is observed (paragraph 31) and, in accordance with Teleaustria and Telefonadress, that obligation of transparency ensures, 'for the benefit of any potential tenderer, a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the services market to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed' (paragraph 62). Therefore, as the Court declared in Parking Brixen, (32) a complete lack of any call for competition 'does not comply with the requirements of Articles 43 EC and 49 EC any more than with the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency' (paragraph 50), although, in Coname, (33) the Court pointed out that transparency does not imply an obligation to 'hold an invitation to tender' (paragraph 21).

47. Those findings, which have since been upheld, (34) are therefore based on the distinction between contracts which fall within the scope of the Directives and must be governed by the procedures laid down therein, and contracts which do not fall within the scope of those Directives and are subject only to the fundamental principles. (35)

C – The scope of the obligation to comply with the principles of transparency and equal treatment

48. Having established that contracts which are excluded from the specific provisions must be awarded in accordance with the principles of transparency and equal treatment, it is necessary to define that obligation and establish whether it must be enshrined in legislation.

49. The Court did not dispel that uncertainty in Coname, despite the detailed analysis undertaken by Advocate General Stix-Hackl in the Opinion in that case. However, there are a number of cases pending in which the debate may be rekindled. (36)

50. Unlike those cases, which concern specific contracts, the present case is broader in scope and requires an examination of the Directives and of the Treaty.

1. Reference to the Directives

51. The Court made clear in Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau (37) that the principal objective of the Community rules in the field of public procurement is, in addition to the free movement of goods and services, the opening-up to undistorted competition in all the Member States (paragraph 44). (38)

52. However, an analysis of the Directives reveals the absence of a complete body of law at Community level, (39) because, first, the Directives essentially govern procurement, although they also have an effect on other stages, such as performance of the contract; second, the Directives exclude certain contracts; and, finally, the Directives do not contain any general provisions with which the excluded contracts are required to comply.

53. The restriction of the scope of the Directives to the preparatory stages, the procedure and the methods of awarding contracts, as indicated by their titles, is justified by the fact that those are the stages which affect the free movement of goods, freedom of establishment, freedom to provide services, and the principles derived from those freedoms.

54. It is also possible to explain the exclusion of certain contracts on the grounds that they have a sensitive object, such as contracts which are secret or are subject to stringent security measures; that they fall within the scope of other directives, such as telecommunications contracts; or that they have a modest value.

55. However, it is more difficult to understand why none of the Community legislation on public procurement contains stipulations concerning equal opportunities, the prohibition of discrimination, transparency and advertising, subject to the necessary exclusions, (40) because such stipulations would benefit the aims of the Community without creating insuperable difficulties.

56. The legislatures of the Member States have the power to fill that gap but they are not required to introduce rules which have not even been adopted in secondary legislation. It is therefore important to recall that Article 249 EC provides that '[a] directive shall be binding, as to the result to be achieved, upon each Member State to which it is addressed, but shall leave to the national authorities the choice of form and methods', from which it follows that, while transposition must extend to the whole of a directive, it nevertheless extends to the directive alone.

57. Accordingly, as Community law currently stands, neither the objective, the subject-matter, nor the effectiveness of the Directives require that legislation adopted by the Member States in relation to contracts excluded from the scope of the Directives must refer expressly to the principles on which the latter are founded.

2. Reference to the Treaty

58. In Commission v Italy, (41) the Court found that Articles 43 EC and 49 EC embody specific instances of the principle of equal treatment (paragraph 8), which, as the Court held in Commission v Belgium, (42) means that all tenderers must have equality of opportunity when they formulate their tenders, irrespective of their nationality (paragraphs 33 and 54).

59. The publication of a call for tenders is the key element from the point of view of the principles laid down in the Treaty, which, however, does not contain any guidance which might indicate the manner in which notices must be published. The Court has not intervened in this matter, except to offer minimal guidance. Thus, as concerns the case-law already cited, the Court held in Parking Brixen that '[i]t is for the concession-granting public authority to evaluate, subject to review by the competent courts, the appropriateness of the detailed arrangements of the call for competition to the particularities of the public service concession in question' but a complete lack of any call for tenders is incompatible with the principles of the Treaty (paragraph 50, which cites paragraphs 61 and 62 of the judgment in Teleaustria and Telefonadress), (43) an approach which may be applied to any type of contract.

60. In Coname, the Court analysed the direct award by an Italian local authority of the service covering the maintenance, operation and monitoring of the methane gas network, and held that regard must be had to the principles referred to. Since the contract concerned did not fall within the scope of any of the Directives, the Court applied primary law (paragraph 16), and pointed out that infringement of the principle of transparency amounted to indirect discrimination contrary to Articles

43 EC and 49 EC (paragraphs 17 to 19), which was justified by 'special circumstances, such as a very modest economic interest at stake', so that 'it could reasonably be maintained that an undertaking located' in another Member State 'would have no interest in the concession at issue and that the effects on the fundamental freedoms concerned should therefore be regarded as too uncertain and indirect to warrant the conclusion that they may have been infringed' (paragraph 20).

61. In a wider context, in the Opinion in Coname, Advocate General Stix-Hackl expressed uncertainty as to whether the fundamental freedoms require uniform rules for all awards (point 70), and proposed a simplified set of rules which assesses the different categories on the basis of their relevance to the internal market (point 75 et seq).

62. From the foregoing I conclude, first of all, that regard must always be had to the principles of equal treatment and transparency as laid down in the Treaty, without the need for provisions of secondary law or national law calling for observance those principles; (44) and, second, that the degree of publication of a call for tenders is currently a matter for each Member State, subject to certain restrictions.

D – Corollary

63. In the light of the analysis carried out, it is my view that neither the Directives nor the Treaty require the Member States expressly to lay down general provisions for excluded contracts, concerning the application of the principles of equal treatment and transparency or publicity which are essential to free competition. Any action by the Member States in that regard would be voluntary rather than the result of an obligation arising from membership of the Union.

64. To conclude otherwise would give rise to the significant practical difficulties set out in the Coname Opinion, such as the choice of the means of publication and the minimum content of the notice (points 96 and 97), because the Directives make a distinction based on the financial value of the activities concerned. Such an approach would also be contrary to case-law which, in the Coname judgment, allows direct awards in certain situations without the need to hold an invitation to tender (point 21).

65. In any event, it remains possible to monitor observance of those principles by individual acts as was the case in, for example, in the Parking Brixen and Coname judgments. (45)

VII – Examination of the grounds of failure to fulfil obligations

A – Preliminary point

66. At the beginning of this Opinion, I stated that the Commission complains that Italy has failed to fulfil its obligations in the field of public contracts by excluding certain procurement procedures from the rules and provisions of Community law, essentially in two ways; first, by providing that the value of ancillary works is the sole criterion for determining whether mixed contracts fall within the scope of the Community legislation; and, second, by failing to provide that the principles of transparency and equal treatment enshrined in Articles 43 EC and 49 EC must be observed in the award of contracts whose value is below the thresholds laid down in the Directives.

67. Although the defendant Government specifically contests the claim that the provisions of Italian law governing works carried out by private persons which are deductible from urban development fees are incompatible with Community law, it submits that the other infringements detailed by the plaintiff were rectified as a result of the amendments introduced by Law No 62/2005 of 18 April, Legge comunitaria 2004. (46)

68. Suffice it to recall the case-law of the Court to the effect that the question whether a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations must be determined by reference to the situation prevailing in the Member State at the end of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion and the Court cannot take account of any subsequent changes. (47)

69. Accordingly, in the case before the Court, regard must be had to the legislation in force at the end of the two-month period allowed in the reasoned opinion of 15 October 2003, but not to any legislation adopted subsequently.

B – Definition of mixed contracts

70. Mixed works, supply and service contracts and mixed supply and service contracts which include ancillary works must comply with the Italian implementing legislation if those works constitute more than 50% of the price (Article 2(1) of Law No 109/94 and, similarly, Article 3(3) of Legislative Decree No 157/95). The financial evaluation of a component of that type of contract is, therefore, the exclusive criterion for application of the Law.

71. The Commission cites the Gestión Hotelera Internacional judgment in support of its contention that application of the Community provisions must be determined by reference to the principal object of the contract as defined, inter alia and not exclusively, by the financial value of the activities concerned because to do otherwise would lead to the exclusion of mixed contracts with a value in excess of the thresholds laid down in Directives 92/50 and 93/36 but, simply because the works, although ancillary, constitute the predominant component of the price, below the thresholds fixed in Directive 93/37.

72. The defendant cites a circular from the Ministero delle Infrastrutture e dei Trasporti (Ministry of Infrastructure and Transport) (48) and the amendment of Law No 109/94 as evidence that, in mixed contracts, the value of ancillary works is not taken into account, with the result that the financial aspect is also the predominant, albeit not the only, criterion for the purpose of selecting the applicable legislation.

73. In my opinion, for the reasons set out, the amendments cited cannot be taken into account. Furthermore, as the Commission states in the reply, a circular lacks the authority to override a legal provision and is not sufficient evidence to deny the existence of an infringement, because, as the Court has held, '[m]ere administrative practices, which by their nature are alterable at will by the authorities and are not given appropriate publicity, cannot be regarded as constituting the proper fulfilment of a Member State's obligations flowing from Community law'. (49)

74. It is clear from those considerations that the Directives preclude the value of the works from being, in all cases, the criterion which determines the legal provisions applicable to mixed contracts because, otherwise, contracts whose primary purpose is services or supply might be excluded from the scope of the Community legislation merely by reason of the lower value of their primary obligations.

75. The Directives refer to the object of the contract but do not confuse it with either the aim or the activities entailed, (50) even though the latter define the object. In addition, where there is more than one object, the Directives classify them by reference to the value of the activities concerned, because the Directives define their scope in terms of easily ascertainable financial amounts.

76. It is not appropriate to carry out an a contrario interpretation or, as the Italian provisions do, to have regard to the value of ancillary works, and, for the reasons stated, I consider that the claim of infringement is well-founded.

C – Urban development works

77. Works carried out by private persons (a) which are deductible from charges arising from building permits, (b) which require the assumption of certain legal obligations, and (c) which are analogous to the works in the first two categories, are not required to comply with Law No 109/94. However, if the value of the activities, assessed on an individual basis, exceeds the Community thresholds, such contracts are awarded in accordance with Directive 93/37 (Article 2(5) of the Law No 109/94).

78. The Commission claims, first, that those provisions, in conjunction with Law No 1150/42 and Law No 10/77, allow for a contract to be awarded directly to the holder of a building permit or development plan but fail to uphold the principles of transparency and equal treatment enshrined in the EC Treaty, principles which must be observed even if the value of the contract is below the Community thresholds. Second, the Commission submits that the determination of whether the threshold has been attained must take account of all the activities covered by the contract, rather than just one of them.

79. The Italian Government strenuously denies that the Italian legislation gives rise to the infringement complained of. First, it has lodged a circular from the Ministero delle Infrastrutture e dei Trasporti (51) and a circular from the Dipartimento per le Politiche Comunitarie (Department of Community Policy attached to the aforementioned ministry), (52) which give details of the provisions adopted to ensure compliance with the Community legislation. Second, the Italian Government describes as excessive the requirement that there must be a reference to the relevant provisions of the Treaty and to the case-law of the Court in the implementing provisions. Third, the Italian Government points to the special nature of urban development works where the builder acts in place of the local authority. Finally, the Italian Government disputes the interpretation of the judgment in Ordine degli Architetti and Others (53) cited by the Commission, because, in the opinion of the Italian Government, it did not analyse the different types of works executed by the private person concerned as the agent of the contracting authority.

1. The principles of transparency and equal treatment

80. For the reasons stated, the complaint to the effect that national provisions do not contain a general reference to the obligation to comply with the principles of transparency and equality cannot be upheld. The flexible nature of those principles means that the assessment as to whether they have been infringed must be based on the circumstances of each award of a contract.

81. Accordingly, Italy has not committed the alleged infringement.

2. The scope of the Italian legislation

82. The other complaint in the application concerning the award of works contracts to the holder of a building permit or development plan relates to the fact that the procurement procedures concerned must be followed in all cases where an agreement between a contracting authority and a private person covers works whose value, assessed individually, is in excess of the Community thresholds.

83. The Commission claims that that rule is contrary to Directive 93/37, because it leads to the exclusion of contracts whose total value exceeds the thresholds, on the grounds that the individual cost of each component operation is below that threshold.

84. As I have pointed out, the Italian Government draws attention to the special nature of urban development works and the characteristics of the contested procurement procedure but fails to take account of the fact that the procedure at issue in the present proceedings must be assessed pursuant to the Directives on public contracts. Placing the emphasis on one legal sphere – the national one – while ignoring the other sphere – the Community one – causes the situation to become distorted. Moreover, as I have already observed, in Ordine degli Architetti and Others, the Court held that the special nature of urban development works is not sufficient to exclude the application of the Directives (paragraph 66).

85. Article 1 of Directive 93/37 provides definitions of 'public works contracts' (paragraph (a)) (54) and 'a work' (paragraph (c)); (55) Article 6(3) of that Directive provides for the case where a work is subdivided into several lots, each one the subject of a contract; while Article 6(4) prohibits a work or a contract from being split up in order to avoid the application of the Directive. (56)

86. Thus, those provisions supply definitions and rules which must be interpreted in accordance with Community law, (57) and that is appropriate context in which to view the judgment in Ordine degli Architetti and Others, pursuant to which Directive 93/37 must be applied to cases where 'the holder of a building permit or approved development plan' executes 'infrastructure works directly, by way of total or partial set-off against the contribution payable in respect of the grant of the permit … where the value of that work is the same as or exceeds the ceiling fixed by the Directive'.

87. However, that judgment must be qualified because public works which entail urban development works may be executed directly by the contracting authority or by a third party in accordance with the law or an agreement, in which case there is a contract governed by Community law (58) and the holder of a building permit or development plan, acting as the alter ego of the contracting authority, (59) is bound by the same requirements of publicity and competition. (60)

88. In addition, Directive 93/37 defines the term 'a work', the existence of which, pursuant to the judgment in Commission v France, (61) must be assessed in the light of the economic and technical function of the result of the works concerned (paragraph 36). The total value obtained, where appropriate, by adding together lots, determines whether the Community provisions apply and, as I have already indicated, the particular features of urban development works cannot serve as objective grounds to justify splitting up a contract.

89. It is clear from the foregoing considerations that urban development works which are subject to Directive 93/37 must also comply with the rules laid down in that directive governing the calculation of the value of contracts. Provisions such as Article 2(5) of Law No 109/94, which alter those rules by stipulating a single general criterion which has the detrimental effect of circumventing the Community provisions and precluding, on objective grounds relating to the value of the works, the undertakings of other Member States from submitting tenders in public procurement procedures in which they wish to participate, cannot therefore be upheld. (62)

90. Article 2(5) of Italian Law No 109/94 accordingly infringes Directive 93/37.

D – The award of contracts for the design, supervision and inspection of works the value of which is below the Community thresholds

91. Under Law No 109/94, contracts for the design, supervision and inspection of works the value of which is below the thresholds set in the Directives may be awarded to persons trusted by the contracting authority (Articles 17(12) and 30(6a)).

92. The Commission claims that the principles of non-discrimination, equal treatment, proportionality and transparency must also be applied to contracts which do not fall within the scope of the Directives and that those principles are infringed where the procurement procedure is not advertised at all, an infringement which is not remedied by the requirement to confirm the experience and professional capacity of the person selected and to state reasons for the selection.

93. The defendant cites the amendment of Law No 109/94, which inserts a specific reference to the Community principles, and repeats its previous assertion that the references to the Treaty and the case-law of the Court required by the plaintiff are unreasonable.

94. Since the arguments raised in connection with this complaint are similar to the ones put forward concerning Article 2(5) of Law No 109/94, it is advisable to settle the matter in the same way, that is, by holding that Community law does not currently require that the obligation to observe the Community principles in the case of excluded contracts must be explicitly enshrined in legislation governing the award of those contracts, subject always to the right to scrutinise each procedure and to bring an action for infringement of the principles before national courts or the Court of Justice.

95. Therefore, it is appropriate to find that Articles 17(12) and 30(6a) of Law No 109/94 do not constitute the infringement of Community law complained of in the present proceedings.

E – The award of contracts for the supervision of works

96. The contracting authority is responsible for the supervision of works but where neither that authority nor other public authorities are able to carry out that task, it is awarded to the project designer (Article 27(2) of Law No 109/94).

97. The Commission complains that the general nature of that provision infringes Directives 92/50 and 93/38, the aim of which is to ensure publicity and competition in procurement procedures for supervision services both where the Community thresholds are exceeded, because the Directives so provide, and where those thresholds are not reached, in accordance with the principles of the Treaty.

98. The Italian Government draws attention to the difficulties which its system avoids but adds that, with a view to addressing the complaints put forward, it has amended Law No 109/94 by introducing a number of safeguards which provide that the contracting authority may only award the contract to the project designer if it indicates as much in the tender notice, and that the value of the supervision services must have been calculated in the budget.

99. Identical considerations to the ones already set out with regard to the previous complaints are relevant to the application of the principles of transparency and equal treatment to contracts for the supervision of works whose value does not exceed the Community thresholds, because the same factors are involved. In that connection, the infringement complained of by the Commission cannot be upheld.

100. A different solution must apply to contracts which, by reason of their value, are subject to procurement procedures because the Community provisions are precise in that regard. In those cases, there must be strict compliance with all the provisions, however convenient it may be not to hold a call for competition, because Article 11(1) of Directive 92/50 and Article 4(1) of Directive 93/38 make it absolutely clear that contracts must be awarded in accordance with the procedures defined therein (open, restricted and negotiated), (63) with the result that, as the case-law has made clear, only the exceptions provided for are permitted. (64)

101. Contracts for the supervision of works are included in category 12 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50 and of Annex XVI A to Directive 93/38, from which it follows that those contracts must be awarded in accordance with the procedures laid down in those Directives.

102. For all the reasons stated, it is clear that Article 27(2) of Law No 109/94 infringes Directives 92/50 and 93/38.

F – The award of contracts for inspection services

103. Inspection services are carried out by the departments of the contracting authority but, where it is established and certified that there are no qualified staff (Article 28(4) of Law No 109/94), the contract is awarded to third parties included in the lists held by the public authorities (Article 188 of Presidential Decree No 554/99).

104. The complaint put forward by the Commission in that connection repeats the claim, set out in section VII E of this Opinion, that the procedures laid down in Directives 92/50 and 93/38 must be applied where the value of the contract exceeds the relevant thresholds and that the principles laid down in the Treaty must be respected in all other cases.

105. The Italian Government cites the future repeal of the regulatory provisions (specifically, of Article 188(8) to (11) of Presidential Decree No 554/99). (65)

106. That expression by the Italian Government of its good intentions in the fullness of time notwithstanding, this complaint must be resolved in the same way as the preceding one. Accordingly, the claim concerning Article 43 EC and Article 49 EC cannot be upheld, while, on the other hand, contracts for inspection services, which are included in category 12 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50 and of Annex XVI A to Directive 93/38, must be awarded in accordance with the Directives.

107. For all the reasons stated, Article 28(4) of Law No 109/94, in conjunction with Article 188 of Presidential Decree No 554/99, is incompatible with Directives 92/50 and 93/38.

G – Privately financed works

108. Contracting authorities allow third parties to execute public works which may be exploited commercially. In the first stage of the procedure, the authorities publish a notice inviting private persons, who then acquire the status of promoters, to submit proposals for the award of concessions under which those persons assume all or part of the costs and, by way of consideration, undertake to operate the concession. Once the proposals submitted have been evaluated, those which are in the public interest are chosen in the second stage when, in the case of each proposal chosen, a restricted procedure is commenced with a view to selecting two further offers. Those offers are used as points of reference in the negotiated procedure which leads to the award of the concession and favours the promoter who is able to adapt his proposal to the specifications of the contracting authority (Articles 37a, 37b and 37c of Law No 109/94).

109. The Commission complains, first, that the procedure described constitutes an infringement by Italy of the principle of equal treatment, since the promoter obtains two advantages in the procedure vis-à-vis the other competitors, even where his original proposal is not as suitable, because he participates automatically in the procedure and has priority in the selection process. It would be possible to excuse the infringement if all the participants were aware of those advantages and of the selection criteria, but it is not obligatory to state those matters in the initial notice. Second, the Commission complains that, since the notice has only been compulsory with effect from 18 August 2002, the date on which Law No 166/2002 entered into force, procedures which have already been held lead to outcomes which are incompatible with the general Community provisions.

110. The defendant contends that both complaints have been addressed in the amendment of Law No 109/94, which provides that the notice must state the advantages of the promoter, and refers to a regulatory provision governing procedures which were already underway on 31 January 2004 and in which the notices did not contain that statement.

111. Although the Italian Government does not dispute the claims advanced in the application, the burden of proving the alleged infringement falls on the Commission and it must do so without relying on any presumption, (66) although, once sufficient evidence has been adduced, the Member State concerned must challenge that evidence in substance and in detail. (67)

112. The two claims appear to be well-founded in principle. In the case of the first claim, because, as the Commission states, the national legislation accords to the promoter of the works certain advantages which the other candidates do not receive and are unable to do anything about. In that connection, the Court held in Commission v Belgium that, when a contracting entity takes into account an amendment to the initial tenders of only one tenderer, that tenderer enjoys an advantage over his competitors, which breaches the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers and impairs the transparency of the procedure (paragraph 56). Furthermore, the Commission cites a number of specific cases where the notice failed to state the advantages or stipulate the objective selection criteria. (68)

113. The second claim appears to be founded on the grounds that the subsequent correction of defects in the situation giving rise to the infringement is insufficient from a temporal point of view.

114. Further to the considerations set out in the foregoing points, it is appropriate to uphold the claim that Articles 37b and 37c(1) of Law No 109/94 infringe the principle of equal treatment enshrined in Articles 43 EC and 49 EC.

H – Conlusion

115. It may be concluded from the foregoing that:

– Article 2(1) of Law No 109/94 is incompatible with Directives 92/50, 93/36, 93/37 and 93/38;

– Article 2(5) of Law No 109/94, in conjunction with Laws No 1150/1942 and No 10/1977, infringes Directive 93/37;

– Article 27(2) of Law No 109/94 infringes Directives 92/50 and 93/38;

– Article 28(4) of Law No 109/94, in conjunction with Article 188 of Presidential Decree No 554/99, infringes Directives 92/50 and 93/38; and – Articles 37b and 37c(1) of Law No 109/94 are incompatible with Articles 43 EC and 49 EC.

116. However, Article 2(5), Article 17(12), Article 27(2), and Article 30(6a) of Law No 109/94 do not infringe Articles 43 EC and 49 EC.

VIII – Costs

117. Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice provides that the unsuccessful party must be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the other party's pleadings. In accordance with Article 69(3) of the Rules of Procedure, where the claims are upheld in part, the Court may order that the costs be shared or that each party bear his own costs.

118. In view of the fact that the Commission and the Italian Republic have each applied for costs to be awarded against the other, and since I propose that the action be allowed in part, Italy should bear half the costs of the Commission which should, in turn, bear half the costs of that Member State.

119. Pursuant to the first paragraph of Article 69(4) of the Rules of Procedure, the Member States which have intervened in these proceedings must bear their own costs.

IX – Conclusion

120. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court of Justice:

(1) declare that, by adopting Articles 37b and 37c(1) of Law No 109/1994 of 11 February 1994, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Articles 43 EC and 49 EC; that, by adopting Article 2(1) of Law No 109 of 11 February 1994, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directives 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992, and 93/36/EEC, 93/37/EEC and 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993, relating, respectively, to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts, public works contracts, and the procurement procedures in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors; that, by adopting Article 2(5) of Law No 109/94, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 93/37; and that, by adopting Articles 27(2) and 28(4) of Law No 109/94, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directives 92/50 and 93/38;

(2) dismiss the remainder of action;

(3) order the Italian Republic to pay half the Commission's costs;

(4) order the Commission to pay half the Italian Republic's costs;

(5) order the Republic of Finland and the Kingdom of the Netherlands to bear their own costs.

In the judgment in that case, the Court pointed out that Directive 92/50 supplies an unequivocal test for the determination of the regime applicable to a contract composed of several services, based on their value (paragraph 52), and dismissed the view that regard should be had to the main object of the contract (paragraph 49).

24 – Case C-331/92 [1994] ECR I-1329.

25 – In point 19 of the Opinion in the case, Advocate General Lenz stated that the question referred for a preliminary ruling concerned the award of a concession to open and operate a casino, and a concession to operate a hotel, which required an obligation to be entered into for carrying out conversion work.

26 – Greco, G., 'Contratti "misti" e appalti comunitari', Rivista italiana di diritto pubblico comunitario, 1994, p. 1265, argues that the prevalence criterion is more suited to identifying the provisions applicable to the majority of mixed contracts because the criterion of ancillary obligations is often inadequate.

30 – Case C-324/98 [2000] ECR I-10745. The judgment principally addressed the question whether, in the light of its specific object, namely 'the production and publication of printed and electronically accessible lists of telephone subscribers (telephone directories)' (paragraph 19), the contract at issue in the proceedings fell within the scope of Directive 93/38 rather than that of Directive 92/50 (paragraphs 31 to 40).

35 – See in that regard, the Order of the Court in Case C-59/00 Vestergaard [2001] ECR I-9505, paragraphs 19 to 21.

36 – Case C-507/03 Commission v Ireland and Case C-532/03 Commission v Ireland, which concern the complaint that service contracts were awarded without publication of a prior notice. Advocate General Stix-Hackl delivered the Opinions in both cases on 14 September 2006. Also, Case C–195/04 Commission v Finland, in which the hearing was held on 8 June and the infringement relates to the award of a contract for institutional kitchen equipment.

37 – Case C-26/03 [2005] ECR I-1.

38 – Although those rules also fulfil other objectives, such as protecting the financial interests of the contracting authority by enabling price screening. See García-Trevijano Garnica, J.A., 'Disposiciones comunes a los contratos administrativos. En especial, el precio y su revisión', *Derecho de los contratos públicos. 39 – Millett, T., 'Les marchés publics en droit communautaire', Revue du Marché commun et de l'Union européenne, no 452, October-November 2001, p. 630. Piñar Mañas, J.L. notes, in the collective work Comentario a la Ley de contratos de las administraciones públicas, 2nd ed., Civitas, Madrid, 2004, p. 79, that, nevertheless, the Directives are creating 'a move towards a common system of procurement'.

40 – Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 requires contracting authorities to 'treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily' and to act 'in a transparent way', while Articles 4 to 6 set out rules governing all public contracts and relating to 'economic operators', 'conditions relating to agreements concluded within the World Trade Organisation', and 'confidentiality'. However, Article 7 provides that those articles, like the other provisions of the Directive, apply only to public contracts 'which are not excluded'.

42 – Case C-87/94 [1996] ECR I-2043.

43 – In point 43 of the Opinion in that case, Advocate General Fennelly states that 'substantive compliance with the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality requires that the award of concessions respect a minimum degree of publicity and transparency' but does not require 'the awarding entity to apply by analogy the provisions of the most relevant … directives'.

44 – However, the Italian legislature included a reference to those principles in the 2005 amendment, which I will discuss below.

55 – '[T]he outcome of building or civil engineering works taken as a whole that is sufficient of itself to fulfil an economic and technical function'.

56 – Similar provisions are contained in Article 7 of the Directive, Article 5 of Directive 93/36, Article 14 of Directive 93/38 and Article 9 of Directive 2004/18, concerning the Methods for calculating the estimated value of public contracts, framework agreements and dynamic purchasing systems.

58 – In the Opinion in Ordine degli Architetti and Others, Advocate General Léger correctly states that an essential element of the contractual relationship is missing where 'a party called on to carry out development works is simply identified by law' (point 68).

59 – Fernández Rodríguez, T.R., 'La sentencia del TJCE de 12 de julio de 2001 (asunto "proyecto Scala 2001") y su impacto en el ordenamiento urbanístico español', Documentación Administrativa, nos 261-262, September 2001-April 2002, p. 23.

60 – Huelin Martínez de Velasco, J., op. cit., p. 28.

61 – Case C-16/98 [2000] ECR I-8315. Although in that case the Court analysed Directive

93/38, the findings concerning analogous provisions may be applied to Directive 93/37.

62 – See the judgment in Commission v France, cited in footnote 61, in particular points 38 to 47. In the Opinion in that case, Advocate General Jacobs put forward the view that a series of operations to be carried out within a specified period on a group of networks having a shared economic and technical function must itself be regarded as intended to fulfil a shared economic and technical function (point 72). That view may be applied to urban development works, as may the finding of the Court in the judgment in Case C-385/02 Commission v Italy [2004] ECR I-8121 to the effect that 'merely to state that a package of works is complex and difficult is not sufficient to establish that it can only be entrusted to one contractor' (paragraph 21).

63 – Also, Article 6(1) of Directive 93/36 and Article 7(1) of Directive 93/37.

64 – Judgments in Case C-71/92 Commission v Spain [1993] ECR I–5923, paragraph 10; Teckal, paragraph 43; and Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei, point 45.

65 – In the rejoinder the defendant contends that, in judgment No 302/03 (paragraph 5.1), the Corte Constituzionale (Constitutional Court) held that Article 188(8) to (10) of the Decree is unconstitutional.

66 – Judgments in Case 96/81 Commission v Netherlands [1982] ECR 1791, paragraph 6; Case C–408/97 Commission v Netherlands [2000] ECR I-6417, point 15; and Case C-494/01 Commission v Ireland [2005] ECR I-3331, paragraph 41.

Notice for the OJ

Action brought on 24 September 2004 by the Commission of the European Communities against the Italian Republic

(Case C-412/04)

An action against the Italian Republic was brought before the Court of Justice of the European Communities on 24 September 2004 by the Commission of the European Communities, represented by Klaus Wiedner and Giuseppe Bambara, acting as Agents.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

- declare that, by adopting Articles 2(1), 17(12), 27(2), 30(6a), 37b and 37c(1) of Law No 109 of 11 February 1994, as most recently amended by Article 7 of Law No 166 of 1 August 2002; Article 2(5) of Law No 109/94, as most recently amended by Law No 166/2002, to be read in conjunction with Law No 1150 of 1942 and Law No 10 of 1977, as amended and supplemented; Article 28(4) of Law No 109/94, to be read in conjunction with Article 188 of Presidential Decree No 554 of 21 December 1999 and Article 7 of Law No 166/2002, and Article 3(3) of Legislative Decree No 157 of 17 March 1995, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directives 93/37/EEC[1], 93/36/EEC[2], 92/50/EEC[3] and 93/38/EEC[4], Articles 43 and 49 EC and the principles of transparency and equal treatment to which they give expression;

- Order the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments:

The Commission notes that, by making those contracts in which the works component is prevalent from the economic point of view but is clearly ancillary to other services subject to the rules on public works contracts, Article 2(1) of Law No 109/94 and Article 3(3) of Legislative Decree No 157 of 17 March 1995 have the effect of removing numerous public service and supply contracts from the purview of the relevant Community legislation, specifically Directives 92/50/EEC and 93/36/EEC.

Since the thresholds for the application of those directives are appreciably lower than those for the application of Directive 93/37/EEC, the effect of the provisions in question is to enable mixed service and works contracts, supply and works contracts or supply, works and service contracts to be awarded in breach of the procedures laid down by Directives 92/50/EEC and 93/36/EEC where the value exceeds the threshold for application of those directives but does not exceed that for public works contracts under Directive 93/37/EEC on the sole ground that, although ancillary, the works component is prevalent from the economic point of view. From that perspective, the provisions in question constitute an infringement of Directives 92/50/EEC and 93/36/EEC.

Rules governing works carried out by private persons which are deductible from urbanisation taxes

The Commission considers that, in so far as it excludes the duty to comply with the procedures laid down by Directive 93/37/EEC in cases of contracts between private persons and the State relating to a number of works, each of which falls below the threshold for the application of that directive, but whose aggregate value exceeds that threshold, Article 2(5) of Law No 109/94 infringes Directive 93/37/EEC, read in conjunction with Laws No 1150 of 1942 and No 10 of 1977, as subsequently amended and supplemented, which allows contracts for urbanisation works to be awarded directly to the holder of a building permission or development plan.

Rules governing the award of contracts for the design and supervision of works the value of which is below the Community thresholds

The Commission notes that Articles 17 and 30 of Law No 109/94, which permit the awarding authorities to award such contracts on the basis of trust without complying with any requirement concerning advertising, must be regarded as infringing the principle of transparency set out in Article 49 EC. Furthermore, reliance upon a procedure to ascertain the experience and capacity of suppliers is, in the absence of minimum advertising requirements intended to ensure a level playing field of competition between all persons potentially interested in supplying the services, insufficient in itself to ensure compliance with the principle of transparency.

Rules governing the award of contracts for the supervision of works

The Commission submits that, in so far as it allows the direct award, without any form of competition, of contracts for services for the supervision of works to the professional practitioner responsible for their design, Article 27(2) of Law No 109/94, having regard to the value of the services awarded and the rules applicable, infringes Directives 92/50/EEC and 93/38/EEC and Articles 43 and 49 EC.

Rules governing the award of contracts for inspection services

The Commission considers that the mechanism laid down by Article 28 of Law No 109/94, which permits the direct selection of inspectors by the awarding authorities otherwise than in accordance with their own rules, without provision either for the publication of a tender notice or other forms of direct advertising such as to enable all potential interested suppliers to compete for the award of contracts for inspection services, infringes Directives 92/50/EEC and 93/38/EEC and the principle of transparency as set out in Articles 43 and 49 EC, having regard to the value of those services and the rules applicable.

Rules governing project finance

Article 37a et seq. of Law No 109/94 govern so called "project finance", which is intended to enable public works to be carried out on the basis of proposals submitted by persons independent of the State, referred to as "promoters", by the award of a works concession.

The Commission notes that those rules governing the competitive procedure for the award of the concession give the promoter two advantages over all other potential competitors. First, from the procedural point of view, the promoter is automatically invited to participate in the negotiated procedure for the award of the concession, without any comparison being made between his offer and that of other participants in the earlier tendering procedure. Therefore, even if in that tendering procedure there were more than two offers better than that submitted by the original promoter, the negotiated procedure will nevertheless proceed only as between the two best offers and the promoter. Second, from the substantive point of view, the provision enabling the promoter to amend his offer in the course of the negotiated procedure so as to match that found to be the most suitable by the awarding authority amounts in substance to the promoter being accorded a right of pre-emption for the award of the concession.

The Commission submits that the grant of those advantages to the promoter and not to other potential concessionaires infringes the principle of equal treatment.

LE PRÉSIDENT DE LA COUR,

Les demandes de décision préjudicielle portent sur l'interprétation de l'article 30, paragraphe 4, de la directive 93/37/CEE du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux (JO L 199, p. 54).

Ces demandes ont été présentées dans le cadre de trois procédures en référé introduites par les sociétés de droit hellénique Michaniki AE (C-363/04 et C-364/04) et Tholos AE (C-365/04) contre l'Ypourgos Dimosion Ergon (le ministre des Travaux publics), par lesquelles les sociétés demanderesses sollicitent plus particulièrement le sursis à l'application, dans le contexte de différentes procédures de passation de marchés publics, de certaines clauses des avis d'adjudication, au motif que ces dernières seraient contraires aux exigences du droit communautaire en ce qui concerne la détermination et la vérification des offres anormalement basses.

Dans ses trois décisions de renvoi le Symvoulio tis Epikrateias (Epitropi anastolon) [Conseil d'État (commission des suspensions)] a demandé à la Cour de soumettre les renvois préjudiciels à une procédure accélérée, en application de l'article 104 bis, premier alinéa, de son règlement de procédure.

Il résulte de cette dernière disposition que, à la demande de la juridiction nationale, le président de la Cour peut exceptionnellement, sur proposition du juge rapporteur, l'avocat général entendu, décider de soumettre un renvoi préjudiciel à une procédure accélérée dérogeant aux dispositions du règlement de procédure, lorsque les circonstances invoquées établissent l'urgence extraordinaire de statuer sur la question posée à titre préjudiciel.

5

Elle ajoute que l'application de la procédure accélérée dans les présentes affaires est également justifiée par la circonstance que, par ordonnance de référé du 22 mars 2004, le président de la quatrième chambre du Symvoulio tis Epikrateias a ordonné au pouvoir adjudicateur de ne pas attribuer les marchés en cause avant que la commission des suspensions n'ait statué sur les demandes en référé.

Toutefois, force est de constater que le fait que les demandes de décision préjudicielle sont formulées dans le cadre d'une procédure en référé n'est pas, à lui seul, de nature à établir l'existence d'une urgence extraordinaire au sens de l'article 104 bis, premier alinéa, du règlement de procédure.

8
De manière analogue, la circonstance que, en l'occurrence, l'attribution des marchés publics en cause soit suspendue jusqu'à ce qu'il ait été statué sur les demandes en référé n'est pas non plus, à elle seule, susceptible de justifier l'application de ladite disposition. En tout état de cause, il ressort des décisions de renvoi que la commission des suspensions du Symvoulio tis Epikrateias a elle-même jugé insuffisante l'affirmation de l'État hellénique selon laquelle les avis d'adjudication litigieux se rapporteraient à des «travaux extrêmement importants pour l'infrastructure du pays», au motif qu'aucune précision n'avait été fournie à l'appui de cette allégation.

Dans ces conditions, il y a lieu de conclure que les circonstances invoquées par la juridiction de renvoi ne sont pas susceptibles d'établir l'existence d'une urgence extraordinaire dans les affaires au principal.

10
Partant, la demande de la juridiction de renvoi de soumettre les présentes affaires à une procédure accélérée ne saurait être accueillie.

Par ces motifs, le Président de la Cour ordonne:

La demande visant à soumettre les affaires C-363/04, C-364/04 et C-365/04 à la procédure accélérée prévue à l'article 104 bis, premier alinéa, du règlement de procédure est rejetée.

Notice for the OJ

Reference for a preliminary ruling by the Simvoulio tis Epikratias - by order of that court of 29 July 2004 in the case of Mikaniki AE against the Ministry of Culture and against the intervening joint venture entitled 'J& P - AVAX AE - ARXITEX ATE - YETEM AE'

(Case C-362/04)

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by order of the Simvoulio tis Epikratias (Council of State, 4th Section, Greece) of 29 July 2004, received at the Court Registry on 20 August 2004, for a preliminary ruling in the case of Mikaniki AE against the Ministry of Culture and against the intervening joint venture entitled 'J & P - AVAX AE - ARXITEX ATE - YETEM AE' on the following questions:

(1) Must Article 30(4) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) be interpreted as meaning that, in the case of a tendering procedure such as that described in the grounds hereof (offers not accompanied by a justificatory report, indicating the specific discount percentages applied to each group of prices and verification as to whether discounts are at a normal level), the contracting authority is required to give a specific content to the document in which it requests a bidder to provide explanations concerning an offer which has been adjudged abnormally low in regard to a threshold determined by application of a mathematical method having characteristics analogous to those of the mathematical method described in the grounds of this order?

(2) If the reply to the first question is affirmative, is it sufficient, in order to satisfy the requirements of the abovementioned provision of Directive 93/37/EEC, for the document to mention the specific discount offered by the tenderer for one or more groups of prices adjudged by the contracting authority to be problematic or must the latter also indicate the reasons why it regards such discount as problematic by providing a reasoned appraisal concerning the maximum cost for carrying out the relevant works?

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Council Directive 93/36

/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts precludes the direct award of a public supply and service contract, the main value of which lies in supply, to a joint stock company whose Board of Directors has ample managerial powers which it may exercise independently and whose share capital is, at present, held entirely by another joint stock company whose majority shareholder is, in turn, the contracting authority.

2. Article 13 of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors must not be applied in the assessment of the requirement relating to the inapplicability of Directive 93/36

, according to which the undertaking to which a supply contract was awarded directly must carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority.

3. In order to determine whether an undertaking carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority, for the purpose of deciding on the applicability of Directive 93/36

, account must be taken of all the activities which that undertaking carries out on the basis of an award made by the contracting authority, regardless of who pays for those activities, whether it be the contracting authority itself or the user of the services provided; the territory where the activities are carried out is irrelevant.

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Council Directive 93/36

/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1).

2. The reference was made in the context of proceedings between the companies Carbotermo SpA (Carbotermo') and Consorzio Alisei, on the one hand, and the Comune di Busto Arsizio (municipality of Busto Arsizio) and the company AGESP SpA (AGESP'), on the other, concerning the award to that company of a contract for the supply of fuel and for the maintenance, modification and upgrading of the heating installations in that municipality's buildings to comply with the relevant regulations.

Legal framework

Community legislation

3. Article 1(a) and (b) of Directive 93/36

provides inter alia:

For the purposes of this Directive:

(a) public supply contracts are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing involving the purchase, lease rental or hire purchase, with or without option to buy, of products between a supplier (a natural or legal person) and one of the contracting authorities defined in (b) below. The delivery of such products may in addition include siting and installation operations;

(b) contracting authorities shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public

law.

A body governed by public law means any body:

- established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character,

and

- having legal personality,

and

- financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law;

...'

4. Article 6 of that same directive provides:

1. In awarding public supply contracts the contracting authorities shall apply the [open procedures, restricted procedures and negotiated procedures] in the cases set out below.

2. The contracting authorities may award their supply contracts by negotiated procedure in the case of...

3. The contracting authorities may award their supply contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice, in the following cases:

...

4. In all other cases, the contracting authorities shall award their supply contracts by the open procedure or by the restricted procedure.'

5. Article 1(3) of Council Directive 93/38

/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84) provides inter alia:

For the purpose of this Directive:

...

(3) affiliated undertaking shall mean any undertaking the annual accounts of which are consolidated with those of the contracting entity in accordance with the requirements of the seventh Council Directive 83/349/EEC of 13 June 1983, based on Article 54(3)(g) of the EEC Treaty on consolidated accounts [OJ 1983 L 193, p. 1] or, in the case of entities not subject to that Directive, any undertaking over which the contracting entity may exercise, directly or indirectly, a dominant influence within the meaning of paragraph 2, or which may exercise a dominant influence over the contracting entity or which, in common with the contracting entity, is subject to the dominant influence of another undertaking by virtue of ownership, financial participation, or the rules which govern it.'

6. Article 13 of the same directive provides:

1. This Directive shall not apply to service contracts which:

(a) a contracting entity awards to an affiliated undertaking;

(b) are awarded by a joint venture formed by a number of contracting entities for the purpose of carrying out a relevant activity within the meaning of Article 2(2) to one of those contracting entities or to an undertaking which is affiliated with one of these contracting entities, provided that at least 80% of the average turnover of that undertaking with respect to services arising within the Community for the preceding three years derives from the provision of such services to undertakings with which it is affiliated.

Where more than one undertaking affiliated with the contracting entity provides the same service or similar services, the total turnover deriving from the provision of services by those undertakings shall be taken into account.

2. The contracting entities shall notify to the Commission, at its request, the following information regarding the application of the provisions of paragraph 1:

- the names of the undertakings concerned,

- the nature and value of the service contracts involved,

- such proof as may be deemed necessary by the Commission that the relationship between the undertaking to which the contracts are awarded and the contracting entity is in conformity with the requirements of this Article.'

Italian law

7. By judgment No 5316 of 18 September 2003, the Consiglio di Stato held that a local authority was entitled to award a supply contract to a supplier without issuing a call for tenders in cases where the local authority exercised over the supplier a control similar to that which it exercised over its own departments and the supplier carried out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

8. Carbotermo in an undertaking which specialises in energy supply and heating management for public and private sector customers.

9. Consorzio Alisei is an undertaking which supplies energy products and air-conditioning and heating services for use in buildings.

10. AGESP Holding SpA (AGESP Holding') is a joint stock company which was created following the restructuring, decided upon on 24 September 1997, of the Azienda per la Gestione dei Servizi Pubblici, a special undertaking of the Comune di Busto Arsizio. Some 99.98% of AGESP Holding's share capital is currently held by the Comune di Busto Arsizio. The other shareholders are the municipalities of Castellanza, Dairago, Fagnano Olona, Gorla Minore, Marnate and Olgiate Olona, each of which hold one share.

11. According to Article 2 of its statutes, AGESP Holding's mission includes the management of public utility services in the gas, water, environmental services, transport, parking areas, public pools, pharmacies, electricity and heating, funeral services and road signage sectors.

12. Article 6 of those statutes provides that:

... the majority of the shares is reserved for the Comune di Busto Arsizio.

...

Other than the Comune di Busto Arsizio, the following may take up shareholdings in the joint stock company: other local authorities (provinces, municipalities and their associations), economic and financial establishments, territorial and category associations, and private citizens who also wish to pursue the mission as laid down in the statutes....'

13. Article 7 of the same statutes provides:

No private shareholder may hold more than 10% of the total share capital of the company.'

14. According to Article 18 of AGESP Holding's statutes, it is to be managed by a Board of Directors.

15. According to Article 26 of those statutes:

The Board of Directors shall be vested with the broadest possible scope of powers for the ordinary and extraordinary management of the company, and shall have the power to take any action it deems necessary to implement and achieve the mission of the company, with the sole exception being acts which are formally reserved to the Assembly by law or by these statutes....'

16. AGESP is a joint stock company which was established on 12 July 2000 by AGESP Holding, which currently holds 100% of the share capital.

17. According to Article 3 of its statutes, in the amended version, which expanded the mission of the company and was produced before the national court, AGESP's mission covers public utility services in the gas, water, environmental services, transport, parking areas, electricity, heating, air-conditioning, IT, telecommunications, subsoil management and lighting sectors, and also the provision of various services for related companies.

18. Article 7 of AGESP's statutes provides:

No shareholder, except for the majority shareholder AGESP Holding, may hold more than one tenth of the total share capital of the company ... .'

19. According to Article 17 of those statutes, AGESP is to be managed by a Board.

20. In that connection, Article 19 of the same statutes provides:

The Board shall be vested with the broadest possible scope of powers, without limitation, for the ordinary and extraordinary management of the company.'

21. On 22 September 2003, the Comune di Busto Arsizio published a call for tenders for the supply of fuel and for the maintenance, modification and upgrading of the heating installations in that municipality's buildings to comply with the relevant regulations. The contract, worth an estimated EUR 8 450 000 plus value added tax (VAT), covered the supply of fuel (four fifths diesel oil and one fifth methane) for EUR 5 700 000, maintenance of the heating installations for EUR 1 000 000, and upgrading and modification of those installations to comply with the relevant regulations for EUR 1 750 000.

22. Carbotermo submitted a tender on 22 November 2003. Consorzio Alisei drew up a tender but did not submit it within the prescribed time-limit.

23. On 21 November 2003, the Comune di Busto Arsizio decided, in the light of judgment No 5316 of the Consiglio di Stato referred to in paragraph 7 of this judgment, to suspend the call for tenders procedure until 10 December 2003.

24. By decision of 10 December 2003, the Comune di Busto Arsizio withdrew the call for tenders, reserving the right to award the contract directly to AGESP at a later time.

25. By decision of 18 December 2003, the Comune di Busto Arsizio awarded the contract in question directly to AGESP. The reasons given for the decision were that AGESP met the conditions laid down in the Community and national courts' case-law regarding the award of public procurement contracts without calls for tenders, namely that the local authority exercises over the entity which received the contract a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and that that entity carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority. The preamble in the introduction to that decision states, first, that a relationship of dependency between AGESP and the Comune di Busto Arsizio results from the fact that the latter holds 99.98% of the share capital of AGESP Holding, which holds 100% of the share capital of AGESP. It states, second, that most of AGESP's turnover is derived from activities entrusted to it pursuant to contracts obtained directly from the Comune di Busto Arsizio.

26. By a notice of 23 January 2004, AGESP issued a call for tenders as part of an expedited procedure for the supply of the diesel oil in question and awarded that contract to the undertaking Pezzoli Petroli Srl on 27 February 2004. On 28 April, 18 May, 30 June and 2 September 2004, AGESP awarded contracts to other undertakings for methane processing, technical upgrading, compliance upgrading and the installation of a remote-control monitoring and management system for the heating installations in various municipal buildings. Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei were not among the successful tenderers for those contracts.

27. Carbotermo and Consorzio Alisei brought actions against the decisions to suspend the call for tenders and to award the contract in question to AGESP before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Lombardia.

28. Before that court, the two undertakings stated that the conditions for non-applicability of Directive 93/36 were not met in the present case. First, AGESP is not controlled by the Comune di Busto Arsizio because the latter holds its shares in AGESP only through a holding company in which it is a 99.98% shareholder and AGESP retains the full autonomy of a joint stock company under private law. Second, AGESP does not carry out the essential part of its activities for the Comune di Busto Arsizio because it achieves much less than 80% of its turnover with that municipality, a criterion which must be retained by analogy with Article 13 of Directive 93/38

29. The Comune di Busto Arsizio and AGESP replied that the direct award of the contract was permitted in the present case because AGESP was controlled by the Comune di Busto Arsizio by virtue of the latter's shareholding in the former and because AGESP carried out the essential part of its activities with that municipality. In that connection, AGESP stated that more than 28% of its turnover within the territory of the Comune di Busto Arsizio could be attributed to services provided directly to the municipality and that its turnover in the territory of the municipality accounted for 65.59% of its total turnover.

30. In those circumstances, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale della Lombardia decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Is the direct award of a contract for the supply of fuel for heating appliances in buildings owned by or within the competence of the Municipality, and relating to operation, supervision and maintenance (the main value of which lies in supply), to a joint stock company whose capital is, at present, held entirely by another joint stock company, of which the awarding Municipality is, for its part, the major shareholder (with 99.98% of the shares), or to a company (AGESP) in which a direct holding is owned not by the public authority but by another company (AGESP Holding), 99.98% of whose capital is presently owned by the public administration, compatible with Directive 93/36

(2) Must the requirement that the undertaking to which the supply contract is awarded directly

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority be ascertained by applying Article 13 of Directive 93/38... and can it be concluded that it has been satisfied where that undertaking derives the majority of its turnover from the controlling public authority or, alternatively, in the territory of that authority?'

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

The first question

31. The Court has held previously that, if a public procurement contract relates both to products within the meaning of Directive 93/36 and to services within the meaning of Council Directive 92/50

/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), it will fall within the scope of Directive 93/36

if the value of the products covered by the contract exceeds that of the services (Case C-107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I8121, paragraph 38). A contract such as that at issue in the main proceedings, where the value of the products covered by the contract exceeds that of the services, therefore falls within the scope of Directive 93/36

, as the national court, moreover, has already found.

32. For there to be a contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 93/36

, there must have been an agreement between two separate persons (Teckal , paragraph 49).

33. In accordance with Article 1(a) of that directive, it is, in principle, sufficient if the contract was concluded between, on the one hand, a local authority and, on the other, a person legally distinct from that local authority. The position can be otherwise only in the case where the local authority exercises over the person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, at the same time, that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling local authority or authorities (Teckal , paragraph 50).

34. It is apparent from the order for reference and the evidence in the case-file that, at present, the contracting authority holds 99.98% of the share capital in AGESP Holding, with the remaining 0.02% being held by other local authorities. According to AGESP Holding's statutes, private shareholders may acquire holdings in that company, on two conditions: first, the majority of the shares are reserved for the Comune di Busto Arsizio; second, no private shareholder may hold more than one tenth of the share capital of that company.

35. At present, AGESP Holding holds 100% of the share capital in AGESP. According to the latter's statutes, private shareholders may acquire holdings in it subject to only one condition, namely that, with the exception of AGESP Holding, no shareholder may hold more than one tenth of the share capital of that company.

36. In order to determine whether the contracting authority exercises a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, it is necessary to take account of all the legislative provisions and relevant circumstances. It must follow from that examination that the successful tenderer is subject to a control enabling the contracting authority to influence that company's decisions. It must be a case of a power of decisive influence over both strategic objectives and significant decisions of that company (see Case C-458/03 Parking Brixen [2005] ECR I0000, paragraph 65).

37. The fact that the contracting authority holds, alone or together with other public authorities,

all of the share capital in a successful tenderer tends to indicate, without being decisive, that that contracting authority exercises over that company a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, as contemplated in paragraph 50 of Teckal.

38. It is apparent from the case-file that the statutes of AGESP Holding and AGESP confer on the Board of Directors of each of those companies the broadest possible powers for the ordinary and extraordinary management of the company. Those statutes do not reserve for the Comune di Busto Arsizio any control or specific voting powers for restricting the freedom of action conferred on those Boards of Directors. The control exercised by the Comune di Busto Arsizio over those two companies can be described as consisting essentially of the latitude conferred by company law on the majority of the shareholders, which places considerable limits on its power to influence the decisions of those companies.

39. Moreover, any influence which the Comune di Busto Arsizio might have on AGESP's decisions is through a holding company. The intervention of such an intermediary may, depending on the circumstances of the case, weaken any control possibly exercised by the contracting authority over a joint stock company merely because it holds shares in that company.

40. It follows that, in such circumstances, subject to their being verified by a court adjudicating on the substance in the main proceedings, the contracting authority does not exercise over the successful tenderer for the public procurement contract at issue here a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments.

41. Article 6 of Directive 93/36

requires contracting authorities who conclude public procurement contracts to use the open procedure or the restricted procedure unless the contract falls within one of the exceptions listed exhaustively in Article 6(2) and (3). The order for reference does not indicate that the public supply contract at issue in the main proceedings falls within one of those exceptions.

42. It follows that Directive 93/36 does not allow for the direct award of a public procurement contract in circumstances such as those in the main proceedings.

43. In response to that finding, the Italian Government states that the fact that AGESP must use a public tendering procedure to purchase the diesel oil in question shows that the Comune di Busto Arsizio, AGESP Holding and AGESP must be regarded as constituting together a body governed by public law' within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36 and required to conclude public supply contracts in accordance with the relevant Community and national legislation.

44. That argument cannot be accepted. First, the Comune di Busto Arsizio qualifies as a local authority and not a body governed by public law within the meaning of that provision. Second, the Comune di Busto Arsizio, AGESP Holding and AGESP each have distinct legal personalities.

45. Moreover, as the Court stated in paragraph 43 of Teckal , the only permitted exceptions to the application of Directive 93/36 are those which are exhaustively and expressly mentioned therein.

46. Directive 93/36

does not contain any provision comparable to Article 6 of Directive 92/50

, which excludes from its scope of application public contracts awarded, under certain conditions, to contracting authorities (Teckal , paragraph 44).

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

47. Accordingly, the answer to the first question must be that Directive 93/36

precludes the direct award of a public supply and service contract, the main value of which lies in supply, to a joint stock company whose Board of Directors has ample managerial powers which it may exercise independently and whose share capital is, at present, held entirely by another joint stock company whose majority shareholder is, in turn, the contracting authority.

The second question

48. The second question comprises two parts.

49. First, the national court asks whether it is necessary to apply Article 13 of Directive 93/38 to assess the requirement that the undertaking to which a supply contract was directly awarded must carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority. Second, it asks whether that requirement may be regarded as being fulfilled when such an undertaking carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority or when it carries out the essential part of its activities in the territory of that authority.

First part of the second question

50. The order for reference indicates that the contract at issue in the main proceedings falls within the scope of Directive 93/36

51. The issue is thus whether the exception provided for in Article 13 of Directive 93/38 should be applied by analogy in the scope of application of Directive 93/36

52. The exception provided for in Article 13 relates only to service contracts and does not include supply contracts.

53. Article 13 of Directive 93/38

covers entities, particularly joint ventures and undertakings whose annual accounts are consolidated and whose methods of operating are different from those of the contracting authorities covered by Directive 93/36

54. That article, moreover, contains a mechanism for notifying the Commission, which cannot be transposed to Directive 93/36 because there is no legal basis for doing so.

55. As exceptions must be interpreted restrictively, the Court does not find it appropriate to extend the application of Article 13 of Directive 93/38 to the scope of application of Directive 93/36

56. This finding is supported by the fact that, during the reform of the public procurement directives in 2004, the Community legislature, whilst maintaining that exception in Article 23 of Directive 2004/17

/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1), chose not to incorporate an analogous exception in Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), which replaced Directive 93/36

57. In the light of all of the foregoing, the answer to the first part of the second question must be that Article 13 of Directive 93/38 must not be applied in the assessment of the requirement relating to the inapplicability of Directive 93/36

, according to which the undertaking to which a supply contract was awarded directly must carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority.

Second part of the second question

58. It should be borne in mind that the principal objective of the Community rules in the field of public procurement is the free movement of services and the opening-up to undistorted competition in all the Member States (see, to that effect, Case C26/03 Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau [2005] ECR I-1, paragraph 44).

59. The conditions laid down in Teckal for a finding that Directive 93/36 is inapplicable to the contracts concluded between a local authority and a person legally distinct from it, according to which the local authority must exercise over the person in question a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and that person must carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority or authorities, are aimed precisely at preventing distortions of competition.

60. The requirement that the person in question must carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority or authorities is aimed precisely at ensuring that Directive 93/36 remains applicable in the event that an undertaking controlled by one or more authorities is active in the market and therefore likely to be in competition with other undertakings.

61. An undertaking is not necessarily deprived of freedom of action merely because the decisions concerning it are controlled by the controlling authority, if it can still carry out a large part of its economic activities with other operators.

62. It is still necessary that that undertaking's services be intended mostly for that authority alone. Within such limits, it appears justified that that undertaking is not subject to the restrictions of Directive 93/36

, since they are in place to preserve a state of competition which, in that case, no longer has any raison d'être.

63. In applying those principles, the undertaking in question can be viewed as carrying out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority within the meaning of Teckal only if that undertaking's activities are devoted principally to that authority and any other activities are only of marginal significance.

64. In order to determine if that is the case, the competent court must take into account all the facts of the case, both qualitative and quantitative.

65. As to the issue of whether it is necessary to take into account in that context only the turnover achieved with the supervisory authority or that achieved within its territory, it should be held that the decisive turnover is that which the undertaking in question achieves pursuant to decisions to award contracts taken by the supervisory authority, including the turnover achieved with users in the implementation of such decisions.

66. The activities of a successful undertaking which must be taken into account are all those activities which that undertaking carries out as part of a contract awarded by the contracting authority, regardless of who the beneficiary is: the contracting authority itself or the user of the services.

67. It is also irrelevant who pays the undertaking in question, whether it be the controlling authority or third-party users of the services provided under concessions or other legal relationships established by that authority. The issue of in which territory those services are provided is also irrelevant.

68. If, in the main proceedings, the share capital of the successful undertaking is held indirectly by several authorities, it may be relevant to consider whether the activities to be taken into account are those which the successful undertaking carries out with all of the controlling authorities or only the activities carried out with the authority which in the present case acts as the contracting authority.

69. It should be borne in mind in this connection that the Court has stated that the legally distinct person in question must carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling local authority or authorities' (Teckal , paragraph 50). It thus envisaged the possibility that the exception provided for could apply not only in cases where a single authority controls such a legal person, but also where several authorities do so.

70. Where several authorities control an undertaking, the condition relating to the essential part of its activities may be met if that undertaking carries out the essential part of its activities, not necessarily with one of those authorities, but with all of those authorities together.

71. Accordingly, the activities to be taken into account in the case of an undertaking controlled by one or more authorities are those which that undertaking carries out with all of those authorities together.

72. It follows from the foregoing that the answer to the second part of the second question must be that, in order to determine whether an undertaking carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority, for the purpose of deciding on the applicability of Directive 93/36

, account must be taken of all the activities which that undertaking carries out on the basis of an award made by the contracting authority, regardless of who pays for those activities, whether it be the contracting authority itself or the user of the services provided; the territory where the activities are carried out is irrelevant.

Costs

73. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

(demande de décision préjudicielle, introduite par Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia)

«Directive 93/36/CEE — Marchés publics de fournitures — Attribution sans appel d'offres — Attribution du marché à une entreprise dans laquelle le pouvoir adjudicateur détient une participation»

Sommaire de l'arrêt

1. Rapprochement des législations — Procédures de passation des marchés publics de fournitures — Directive 93/36 — Champ d'application

   (Directive du Conseil 93/36)

2. Rapprochement des législations — Procédures de passation des marchés publics de fournitures — Directive 93/36 — Champ d'application

   (Directives du Conseil 93/36 et 93/38, art. 13)

3. Rapprochement des législations — Procédures de passation des marchés publics de fournitures — Directive 93/36 — Champ d'application

   (Directive du Conseil 93/36)

1. La directive 93/36, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de fournitures, s'oppose à l'attribution directe d'un marché de fournitures et de services, dans lequel la valeur des fournitures est prépondérante, à une société par actions dont le conseil d'administration possède d'amples pouvoirs de gestion qu'il peut exercer de manière autonome et dont le capital est, dans l'état actuel des choses, intégralement détenu par une autre société par actions dont l'actionnaire majoritaire est, à son tour, le pouvoir adjudicateur.

   N'est en effet pas remplie dans de telles circonstances la condition relative à l'inapplicabilité de la directive 93/36, selon laquelle le pouvoir adjudicateur exerce sur la société adjudicataire du marché public en cause un contrôle analogue à celui qu'il exerce sur ses propres services.

   Pour apprécier cette condition, il convient de tenir compte de l'ensemble des dispositions législatives et des circonstances pertinentes. Il doit résulter de cet examen que la société adjudicataire est soumise à un contrôle permettant au pouvoir adjudicateur d'influencer les décisions de ladite société. Il doit s'agir d'une possibilité d'influence déterminante tant sur les objectifs stratégiques que sur les décisions.

   Tel n'est pas le cas lorsque le contrôle exercé par le pouvoir adjudicateur se résume pour l'essentiel à la latitude que le droit des sociétés reconnaît à la majorité des associés, ce qui limite de manière considérable son pouvoir d'influencer les décisions de ces sociétés. En outre, lorsque l'influence éventuelle du pouvoir adjudicateur s'exerce par l'intermédiaire d'une société holding, l'intervention d'un tel intermédiaire peut affaiblir le contrôle éventuellement exercé par le pouvoir adjudicateur sur une société par actions du simple fait de participer à son capital.

(cf. points 36, 38-40, 47, disp. 1)

2. Pour apprécier la condition relative à l'inapplicabilité de la directive 93/36, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de fournitures, selon laquelle l'entreprise à laquelle un marché de fournitures a été directement attribué doit réaliser l'essentiel de son activité avec la collectivité qui la détient, il ne faut pas appliquer l'article 13 de la directive 93/38, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés dans les secteurs de l'eau, de l'énergie, des transports et des télécommunications, qui prévoit que ladite directive ne s'applique pas aux marchés de services passés auprès d'une entreprise liée lorsque 80 % au moins du chiffre d'affaires moyen que cette entreprise a réalisé dans la Communauté au cours des trois dernières années en matière de services provient de la fourniture de ces services aux entreprises auxquelles elle est liée. Cette condition n'est remplie que si l'activité de cette entreprise est consacrée principalement à la collectivité qui la détient ou aux collectivités qui la détiennent, toute autre activité ne revêtant qu'un caractère marginal.

(cf. points 57, 63, 70, disp. 2)

3. Pour apprécier si une entreprise réalise l'essentiel de son activité avec la collectivité qui la détient, aux fins de décider de l'applicabilité de la directive 93/36, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de fournitures, il convient de tenir compte de toutes les activités que cette entreprise réalise sur la base d'une attribution faite par le pouvoir adjudicateur et ce, indépendamment de savoir qui rémunère cette activité, qu'il s'agisse du pouvoir adjudicateur lui-même ou de l'usager des prestations fournies, le territoire où l'activité est exercée étant sans pertinence.

Reference for a preliminary ruling - Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale della Lombardia (Italy) - Interpretation of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and of Article 13 of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84) - Direct award of a contract for the supply and management of fuel and heating for heating appliances in buildings belonging to a municipality - Award to a company the shares of which are held by another company in which the municipality is a majority shareholder

Operative part of the judgment

The Court rules:

1. Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts precludes the direct award of a public supply and service contract, the main value of which lies in supply, to a joint stock company whose Board of Directors has ample managerial powers which it may exercise independently and whose share capital is, at present, held entirely by another joint stock company whose majority shareholder is, in turn, the contracting authority.

2. Article 13 of Council HYPERLINK "javascript:OpenURL(('DocNumber|lg=en|type_doc=Directive|an_doc=1993|nu_doc=38'),'CELEX');" Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors must not be applied in the assessment of the requirement relating to the inapplicability of Directive 93/36, according to which the undertaking to which a supply contract was awarded directly must carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority.

3. In order to determine whether an undertaking carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority, for the purpose of deciding on the applicability of Directive 93/36, account must be taken of all the activities which that undertaking carries out on the basis of an award made by the contracting authority, regardless of who pays for those activities, whether it be the contracting authority itself or the user of the services provided; the territory where the activities are carried out is irrelevant.

Opinion of Advocate General Stix-Hackl delivered on 12 January 2006. Carbotermo SpA and Consorzio Alisei v Comune di Busto Arsizio and AGESP SpA. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia - Italy. Directive 93/36/EEC - Public supply contracts - Award of contract without a call for tenders - Award of the contract to an undertaking in which the contracting authority has a shareholding. Case C-340/04.

I - Introduction

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the circumstances under which the award of a public contract is to be regarded as a quasi-in-house' procurement procedure which, as such, does not fall within the scope of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public service contracts (2) (Directive 93/36'). It is therefore another case concerning the interpretation and application of the criteria developed in the judgment in Teckal (3) and - at least to some extent - clarified in Stadt Halle. (4)

2. It is also another in a list of cases - some of which have already been decided (5) - concerning energy supply or waste disposal contracts awarded by Italian municipalities.

II - Legal framework: Community law

3. Article 1 of Directive 93/36 lays down basic rules concerning the scope of the directive.

4. Article 1, opening phrase and paragraph (a), reads:

For the purposes of this Directive:

(a) public supply contracts are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing involving the purchase, lease rental or hire purchase, with or without option to buy, of products between a supplier (a natural or legal person) and one of the contracting authorities defined in (b) below. The delivery of such products may in addition include siting and installation operations'.

5. In paragraphs 49 and 50 of the judgment in Teckal , the Court of Justice laid down principles for excluding certain procedures from the scope of the directives:

49 As to whether there is a contract, the national court must determine whether there has been an agreement between two separate persons.

50 In that regard, in accordance with Article 1(a) of Directive 93/36, it is, in principle, sufficient if the contract was concluded between, on the one hand, a local authority and, on the other, a person legally distinct from that local authority. The position can be otherwise only in the case where the local authority exercises over the person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, at the same time, that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling local authority or authorities.'

6. The Court clarified the first of those two conditions in its judgments in Stadt Halle (6) and Parking Brixen. (7)

7. Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (8) (Directive 93/38') contains a provision, since amended by Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors, (9) concerning the award of contracts to undertakings with some form of close connection with the contracting entity.

8. Article 13(1) of Directive 93/38 provides:

1. This Directive shall not apply to service contracts which:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

(a) a contracting entity awards to an affiliated undertaking;

(b) are awarded by a joint venture formed by a number of contracting entities for the purpose of carrying out a relevant activity within the meaning of Article 2(2) to one of those contracting entities or to an undertaking which is affiliated with one of these contracting entities, provided that at least 80% of the average turnover of that undertaking with respect to services arising within the Community for the preceding three years derives from the provision of such services to undertakings with which it is affiliated.

Where more than one undertaking affiliated with the contracting entity provides the same service or similar services, the total turnover deriving from the provision of services by those undertakings shall be taken into account'.

III - Facts and main proceedings

9. On 22 September 2003, the Municipality of Busto Arsizio issued a call for tenders to supply energy for, and to maintain, modify and technically upgrade, the heating appliances in the municipal buildings (the value of the contract, EUR 8 450 000 + VAT, was broken down into EUR 5 700 000 for the supply of fuel - 4/5 diesel oil and 1/5 methane -, EUR 1 000 000 for maintenance, and EUR 1 175 000 for upgrading and modification to comply with the relevant rules).

10. By municipal council resolution No 804 of 21 November 2003, the Municipality of Busto Arsizio (the Municipality') ordered that the tender procedure be suspended until 10 December 2003, pending a decision, if any, to award the contract directly. The claimant Carbotermo SpA (Carbotermo') submitted its tender on 22 November 2003. Consorzio Alisei (Alisei') did prepare a technical tender but did not submit it within the original deadline of 24 November 2003, having been informed by the Municipality, on 21 November 2003, that the tender procedure had been suspended until 10 December 2003, and, subsequently, that the call for tenders had been withdrawn.

11. By resolution No 857 of 10 December 2003, the Municipality withdrew the call for tenders and reserved the right subsequently to award the contract directly to AGESP SpA (AGESP').

12. AGESP is wholly controlled by AGESP Holding SpA, (10) it too a public company limited by shares, 99.98% of whose capital is owned by the Municipality. (11) The remaining shares are held by a number of adjoining municipalities in the same province.

13. On 18 December 2003, the contract in question was awarded directly to AGESP.

14. Carbotermo and Alisei brought actions against those resolutions before the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale (Regional Administrative Court) della Lombardia (Italy), which joined the two cases and, by order of 27 May 2004, received on 9 August 2004, referred the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Is the direct award of a contract for the supply of fuel for heating appliances in buildings owned by or within the competence of the Municipality, and relating to operation, supervision and maintenance (the main value of which lies in supply), to a joint stock company whose capital is, at present, held entirely by another joint stock company, of which the awarding Municipality is, for its part, the major shareholder (with 99.98% of the shares), or to a company (AGESP) in which a direct holding is owned not by the public authority but by another company (AGESP Holding), 99.98% of whose capital is presently owned by the public administration, compatible with Directive 93/36/EEC?

(2) Must the requirement that the undertaking to which the supply contract is awarded directly carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority be ascertained by applying Article 13 of Directive 93/38/EEC and can it be concluded that it has been satisfied where that undertaking derives the majority of its turnover from the controlling public authority or, alternatively, in the territory of that authority?'

IV - The questions referred

15. In essence, the two questions concern the two cumulative conditions under which certain quasi-in-house procurement procedures do not fall within the scope of Directive 93/36 (the Teckal exception' or Teckal criteria'): control similar to that which the contracting entity exercises over one of its own departments; and activities carried out essentially for the controlling contracting entity. If those conditions are met, the provisions of the directive, such as compliance with certain rules of procurement procedure, will not be applicable.

16. For the sake of clarity, it should be stressed that it is the old legislation, that is to say not the new legislative package', which is relevant to these proceedings.

V - Preliminary remark

17. This case, like those before it, shows that the Teckal criteria comprise a number of imprecise concepts which have raised a raft of legal questions and caused numerous problems of differentiation. In the light of that experience, the question arises as to how the Court of Justice can best clarify the law and thus secure legal certainty for the persons concerned. One possibility would be for the Court not only to refine its case-law in relation to specific circumstances but also to clarify it in a more general way than it has done previously. Another solution would be to eliminate the uncertainties created by the Teckal exception by conducting a comprehensive revision of the case-law. Through its judgment in Teckal in November 1999, the Court opened the way for exceptions to the directive. How wide that opening is, however, is still unclear.

18. This case in particular shows that the situation described above also has an impact on national supreme courts, such as the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) (Italy). Thus, according to the order for reference, the principles relating to quasi-in-house procurement established by the Consiglio di Stato are based on a decision of the Court of Justice. (12) However, according to the national court, the question whether that case-law is consistent with the Court's own case-law does not need to be resolved in this case. In any event, the main proceedings here, like other cases in other Member States, show that the case-law of the Court manifestly does not contain any clear guidance for the relevant economic sectors and courts of the Member States.

19. In order to give the Court a choice of more than one alternative, I shall, despite the misgivings I have expressed, clarify the Teckal exception in a more general fashion. That way, the Court can always choose the other option.

VI - First criterion: control similar to that which the contracting entity exercises over one of its own departments

20. This case exhibits a number of specific characteristics which, taken together, set it apart from other cases concerning public-private partnerships' (PPPs') which are pending before, or have already been decided by, the Court.

21. The documents before the Court show that, in this instance, in contrast to the procurement at issue in Stadt Halle , there is no shareholding by private undertakings. Furthermore, the legal structure in question here, that is to say a public company limited by shares, is different from that in Stadt Halle. For its part, the contract in this case, unlike in Parking Brixen (13) or Teckal , was not awarded to a subsidiary but to a sub-subsidiary of the local authority.

A - Legal assessment of indirect shareholdings

22. As in Stadt Halle , the first characteristic of the procedure at issue in this case has to do with the fact that the contract was not awarded directly to the entity in which the local authority has a direct shareholding.

23. In this connection, the question is whether the Teckal criteria are also applicable in principle to situations in which there is an indirect shareholding, that is to say whether the procurement directives also exclude procedures in which the public authority for which the service is provided has an interest in the entity concerned only through another company.

24. Both the Commission and the Polish Government reject such an interpretation outright on grounds of principle.

25. The case-law of the Court of Justice does not provide any clear guidance in this regard. This remains the case following the judgment in Parking Brixen.

26. In support of the argument that the Teckal criteria are also applicable in principle to cases of indirect shareholdings is the fact that, in Stadt Halle , the Court of Justice actually carried out an examination of those shareholdings to determine whether the conditions for the two Teckal criteria had been fulfilled. This could be interpreted as tacit recognition of that principle.

27. On the other hand, the wording of the judgment in Stadt Halle appears to point more in the other direction. Thus, paragraph 49 reads: ... where that entity carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling public authority or authorities'. It could be inferred from this that the services have to be exchanged directly between the public contracting authority as shareholder and the entity whose shares are owned by the public contracting authority.

28. However, since that wording refers expressly to the second criterion, that is to say that concerning the essential part of the supplier's activities, it could of course be concluded that the judgment in Teckal does not contain any express finding on whether it is possible for indirect shareholdings too to be capable of satisfying the first criterion.

29. On the other hand, the fact that Teckal concerned a situation involving a number of public entities and that the Court implicitly recognised such situations by introducing the Teckal criteria' indicates that indirect shareholdings are also capable in principle of falling within the scope of those criteria. The condition for this, however, is that the control criterion must be fulfilled at all levels of participation.

30. According to the judgment in Parking Brixen , the important point in relation to the control criterion is that there should be a power of decisive influence over both strategic objectives and significant decisions'. All the legal provisions and relevant circumstances must be taken into account in this regard. (14) That such influence should also be exercised in fact, does not, however, seem to be necessary, according to that judgment.

B - Legal assessment of public-public undertakings

1. Principle

31. The facts of the main proceedings exhibit a further characteristic that distinguishes them from the situation at issue in Stadt Halle . This case does not concern a semi-public entity, but an entity, or more precisely its parent company, in which no private undertakings hold shares. This is not apparent from the order for reference itself, but from the other documents before the Court. Furthermore, the shares owned by other parties amount to only 0.02% of the capital. Since those residual shares are held by other municipalities, i.e. public bodies, the entity in question is a public-public undertaking or a public-public partnership'.

32. If the circumstances of this case are compared with the Court's previous case-law, the following picture emerges. On the one hand, there is a fundamental difference between this case and Stadt

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Halle , which concerned a semi-public entity; on the other hand, there is a clear parallel with Teckal , which concerned a public-public entity. In the latter case, the entity which was to perform the procurement contract, namely AGAC, did have its own legal personality but had been set up by a number of municipalities.

33. Further support for the application of the Teckal exception to public-public entities, in addition to the judgment in Teckal , as already explained, is the fact that, in the judgment in Stadt Halle , (15) the deciding factor for the Court was that private undertakings pursue different interests from local authorities.

34. However, this case is concerned only with the participation of municipalities and not with the interests of private parties. Since municipalities pursue objectives in the public interest, it could be assumed, at least on first sight, that the control criterion, even on a strict reading of it, is satisfied. That is certainly the case if the condition in respect of identity of interests (16) is understood as meaning that such identity obtains automatically in the absence of private interests. Of course, the possibility cannot be discounted, and is confirmed by their activities as economic operators, that local authorities may represent a variety of interests. In such cases there is no longer identity of interests.

35. Also, finally, it should not be overlooked in this regard that Teckal concerned an azienda municipalizzata' (municipal undertaking) and not, as in this case, a public company limited by shares. The significance of the legal structure will be discussed later.

36. On the other hand, the question of how public-public entities are to be treated must also be answered in the light of the principle of interpretation expressly confirmed in the judgment in Stadt Halle , which states that any exception to the obligation to apply the Community rules must be interpreted strictly. (17)

37. However, even in Stadt Halle , which did not concern the participation of more than one shareholder, the Court confirmed that the Teckal exception is applicable in principle to entities with more than one shareholder. This is evident from the fact that the Court (18) not only reiterated the Teckal exception word for word, but also pointed out that, in Teckal , the entity was owned by public authorities'. The Court therefore used the plural in that judgment not only in relation to the second criterion of the Teckal exception.

38. It therefore follows that even entities which have more than one shareholder are in principle capable of falling within the scope of the exception.

39. However, for it to be possible to apply the Teckal exception in this case, it would be necessary to go one step further, because these proceedings also involve an indirect shareholding. In my opinion, the applicability of the Teckal exception to a situation such as this as well cannot be ruled out a priori in a general, abstract manner.

40. Here too, it must be examined in concreto whether the control criterion is satisfied. Regard is to be had in this respect to the criterion established by the Court in Parking Brixen. This requires that the controlled entity should enjoy only a certain degree of independence, (19) that is to say vis-à-vis its shareholders. (20)

41. Since, in this case, the possibility of private participation is provided for in the statutes, it must be examined, with regard to the control criterion, whether a future opening-up of the share capital to private investors has any legal significance.

42. As far as opening up the share capital to private investors is concerned, a distinction could be drawn according to whether private participation is merely possible in law or is mandatory in law. In the first case, a further distinction could be drawn according to whether or not that possibility was in fact subsequently taken up - cases in which the share capital has already been opened up, as in Stadt Halle , are automatically excluded in this regard.

43. In this connection, the Commission has taken the view that even the potential participation of private parties, as provided for, for example, in the statutes of a capital company, indicates that the control criterion is not satisfied.

44. There are, in the first place, a number of fundamental considerations which argue against that extreme view taken by the Commission. If that were the case, the legal classification of PPP projects would depend purely on potential future developments. Whether these then actually materialised would, however, be irrelevant. In terms of the regime operated by the public procurement directives, this is a new approach. Moreover, under the law of the Member State concerned, it might even be illegal for the statutes to prohibit the transfer of shares to private parties.

45. On the other hand, however, the principle of protection against circumvention which underpins the public procurement directives requires that certain events occurring after the transfer of tasks, that is to say after the contract has been awarded, must none the less be taken into account. This applies in particular to cases in which the share capital had not been opened up at the time when the contract was awarded, but specific plans for this to proceed were already in place.

46. The question is whether the judgment in Parking Brixen alters that assessment at all. The fact that, in that case, in contrast to this one, the opening-up of the company to other capital was obligatory and represented only one of five essential characteristics taken into account in the assessment would indicate not. (21) It is none the less true that this still does not rule out the possibility that even the potential opening-up of the share capital may mean - albeit only when considered in conjunction with other specific characteristics of the situation in the main proceedings - that the minimum degree of control is not satisfied in that situation. It is therefore necessary to examine those other specific characteristics and their significance from the point of view of control.

47. Regard must also be had in this connection to the situation which gave rise to an action for failure to fulfil obligations brought against the Republic of Austria (22) and the recent legal assessment made by the Court of Justice in that matter.

48. Commission v Austria concerned the transfer of responsibility for waste disposal by the town of Mödling to a Gesellschaft mit beschränkter Haftung (private company limited by shares), that is to say by a municipality to a wholly-owned subsidiary. Some two weeks after the transfer of that task, the municipality decided to transfer 49% of the shares to a private undertaking. The sale took place a further two weeks or so later. The company began to carry out the activity which had been transferred a further few weeks after that.

49. In its judgment in that case, the Court held that all the stages in the course of events had to be taken into account as a whole and in the light of their objectives, and could not be assessed in isolation. (23) This indicates that developments which occur after the transfer of tasks must likewise be taken into account, as the Court also expressly held in that judgment. (24) That case, however, unlike this one, concerned developments which had actually occurred, the act of opening up the company to private participation having already been carried out. At the time when the overall course of events was assessed, the opening-up was a fait accompli.

50. In contrast, the documents in this case do not make it clear whether, and, if so, when, any shares were transferred to private parties or whether any plans to that effect were in place. From that point of view, neither the judgment in Parking Brixen nor the judgment in Commission v Austria provides a clear indication that the mere possibility that a company may be opened up to private persons is sufficient.

51. It can thus be assumed that the existing case-law does not in principle exclude the award of contracts to public-public entities from the Teckal exception. It is therefore necessary now to set out the conditions which such procedures must satisfy.

2. The individual conditions

52. The conditions under which the award of contracts to public-public entities is capable of falling within the scope of the Teckal exception concern the relationship between the entity concerned and the public authorities which directly or indirectly own the shareholding.

53. First of all, the argument put forward during the proceedings that the Teckal exception covers only inter-organic or inter-organisational delegations' or divisions of the organisational apparatus of a local authority must be rejected. There is nothing in the case-law of the Court to indicate that the Teckal exception is restricted to such categories of entity.

54. In general, and in particular in the judgment in Parking Brixen , the Court of Justice adopts a material rather than a formal approach to such matters. The decisive factor, therefore, as I shall demonstrate in more detail at length, is the embodiment of the relationship between the parties concerned. In particular, regard is had in this respect to general, abstract provisions, such as national company law, and the material embodiment of the relationship, such as, for example, the statutes of the entity concerned. (25)

55. In this case, unlike in Stadt Halle , the entity which is to provide the service is not a private company limited by shares under German law but a public company limited by shares under Italian law (SpA).

56. In this instance, the relevant provisions of the Codice civile (Italian Civil Code) (C.C.') are applicable.

57. There is also a difference in regard to the entity at issue in Teckal . While that case related to an undertaking in the form of an azienda municipalizzata', this case actually concerns an entity, AGESP, which, although originally operating as a municipal undertaking, was converted to a public company limited by shares by Resolution No 148 of 24 September 1997.

58. Under Italian law, as under other legal systems, public companies limited by shares in principle have greater autonomy than private companies limited by shares.

59. In my view, an abstract examination of the possibilities open to shareholders under the C.C. for exerting influence over public companies limited by shares and the possibilities open to the latter for influencing their subsidiaries is not sufficient. As I have already said, what matters is more the material embodiment of the relationship between grandparent' and parent company, and that between parent company and subsidiary. (26)

60. Consequently, the fact that the undertaking concerned is in the form of a public company limited by shares, under Italian law for example, does not matter per se. Moreover, this is also clear from the judgment in Parking Brixen , which likewise concerned a public company limited by shares under Italian law. The mere fact that the Court of Justice did not consider that circumstance to be sufficient to support the conclusion that the company was independent, and that there was therefore no control, indicates that the organisation of that undertaking as an Italian public company limited by shares does not in itself preclude adequate control.

61. However, the conversion of a dedicated [municipal] undertaking into a public company limited by shares is at least one of several factors which must be taken into account in the assessment of independence. (27)

62. As regards the examination of the material embodiment of the relationship, it is the specific

powers of the respective shareholders that count, rather then whether those powers are exercised in practice. (28) The Court of Justice has since confirmed that view in Parking Brixen , in which it examined the statutes of the public company limited by shares in that case. (29)

63. Furthermore, the rights of control enjoyed by the shareholder(s) must extend not only to procurement decisions in general or the specific procurement decision in particular, (30) but also to the running of the business as a whole.

64. With respect to the means of control, regard is usually had to rights to give instructions, supervisory powers and rights to make appointments. The guiding principle in this regard must be that what is conclusive is the power of influence and not, therefore, legislative provisions alone. (31)

65. Finally, we must also consider the argument put forward during the proceedings to the effect that the assessment of a procurement procedure and the application of the Teckal exception depend on the conduct of the parties concerned, that is to say the controlling entity and the controlled entity, during the procurement procedure itself.

66. It could thus be concluded from the conduct of the parties involved in the procurement procedure, in particular that of the public-public entity, that the latter is independent of the contracting body.

67. In these proceedings, the focus in this regard has essentially been centred on the content of the contract. In particular, it has been said that the penalty laid down in the contract for failure to achieve certain objectives is to be regarded as an indication of AGESP's autonomy.

68. Since the control criterion relates to influence over the running of the business as a whole, the conduct of the entity at issue within a particular procurement procedure cannot be decisive. If that were the case, the same entity could fall within the scope of the Teckal exception in one procurement procedure but not in another. However, there is nothing in the case-law of the Court to support a view which would have such an outcome. On the contrary, the Court classifies the relationship, and thus determines compliance with the control criterion, by reference to the circumstances of the persons concerned.

69. The examination as to whether the general, abstract provisions of national law and the material embodiment of the relationship in the statutes of the company concerned, in this case Article 19 in particular, do in fact ensure an adequate degree of control involves an assessment of a specific situation. However, in accordance with the provisions on jurisdiction in Article 234 EC, such an assessment and the interpretation of national law are matters not for the Court of Justice but for the national court.

C - Interim conclusion

70. The criterion of control similar to that which the contracting authority exercises over one of its own departments is also capable in principle of being satisfied in the case of public-public undertakings. It is for the national court to assess the facts of the main proceedings. In this case, it has to take the following factors into account:

- the interests of the shareholders;

- the conversion of the azienda municipalizzata' into a public company limited by shares;

- the fact that there is non-mandatory provision for the company to be opened up to other capital, but this has not been put into effect;

- the possibility for AGESP to set up establishments even abroad;

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

- the extent of the power of influence over the appointment of members of the board of directors and the running of the business;

- the powers of the board of directors of AGESP; and

- the fact that the Municipality has an indirect shareholding in AGESP through AGESP Holding.

71. The Court could of course, in this case - as in Stadt Halle and Parking Brixen -, itself make a definitive assessment of a situation such as that in the main proceedings. Since the factors for consideration set out above are largely the same as those in Parking Brixen , (32) with the addition of the indirect shareholding, it may be concluded, on the basis of the existing case-law - which many consider to be too strict -, that the first criterion, that is to say adequate control similar to that which the contracting authority exercises over one of its own departments, is not satisfied in the circumstances of the main proceedings.

72. If, on the other hand, the Court were to take the opportunity to clarify its existing case-law to the effect that at least some public-public partnerships are capable of satisfying the control criterion, and came to the conclusion that this is also the case in the main proceedings, the Court would afford itself the further opportunity to clarify - for the first time - the second Teckal criterion, in other words that concerning the essential part of the supplier's activities.

VII - Second criterion: the supplier must carry out the essential part of its activities for the controlling contracting entity

73. In contrast to the first Teckal criterion, the Court has not, since that judgment, delivered a decision which clarifies the second Teckal criterion. These proceedings now offer the Court the opportunity to do so.

74. Moreover, the main proceedings concern a situation involving an almost 100% shareholding at the first level, i.e. between the Municipality and AGESP Holding, and a 100% shareholding at the second level, i.e. between AGESP Holding and AGESP.

75. Like Stadt Halle , this case too concerns an indirect shareholding. It is therefore necessary to examine whether the activities of a sub-subsidiary' for its grandparent' are in principle also capable in certain circumstances of satisfying the second Teckal criterion.

A - The working hypothesis

76. Since, in its judgment in Stadt Halle , the Court did not need to give further consideration to the interpretation of the second criterion, in view of its chosen interpretation of the first criterion, it is only logical that I should repeat at this point the view on this issue which I expressed in my Opinion in Stadt Halle.

77. The second criterion established in Teckal , concerning the essential part of the supplier's activities, concerns a certain minimum proportion of the overall activities carried out by the controlled entity. It is therefore necessary to determine the volume of activities carried out overall and the volume of those carried out for the shareholder in the broad sense.

78. It must be pointed out in this connection, however, that the fact that the term shareholder' is not to be interpreted too strictly does not for that matter support the conclusion that activities carried out for the shareholder also include those performed for third parties which the shareholder would otherwise have to carry out itself. In practice, this exception applies primarily to services in the general economic interest and, as far as this case is concerned, to municipalities (local authorities) with an obligation to provide certain services for certain persons.

79. It must also be made clear that the activities to be taken into account are those actually carried out and not those which may be carried out under the law or under an undertaking's statutes,

or those which the controlled entity has an obligation to carry out. (33)

80. The central question is what proportion marks the threshold for satisfying the second Teckal criterion. There are various views on this. They extend from over 50%, through significantly', predominantly' and almost exclusively', to exclusively'.

81. The approach to establishing the threshold is not only positive, in the sense that it involves determining the volume of services provided for the shareholder, but also negative. The negative approach would be based on a calculation of the proportion of services provided for persons other than the shareholder. The latter view can be found in the Opinion of Advocate General Léger in ARGE. He considered that the Directive is applicable if that entity carries out the essential part of its activity with operators or local authorities other than those of which the contracting authority is made up'. (34) However, in view of the positive approach adopted with respect to the second criterion in Teckal , the negative approach will not be pursued any further here.

82. The passage cited from the Opinion of Advocate General Léger none the less raises another important issue, which must be taken into account in determining the proportion of services provided for the shareholder.

83. That issue is whether the second Teckal criterion can be assessed in quantitative terms alone or whether qualitative factors must also be taken into consideration. The wording and spirit of the exception, which, moreover, contains no indication as to how the activities are to be assessed, indicate that the latter is the case. The authentic language version of the relevant passage in the judgment in Teckal , that is to say the Italian, likewise does not preclude an additional or alternative qualitative assessment (la parte piu importante dell propria attività').

84. Furthermore, the judgment in Teckal likewise does not contain any indication of how the proportion of services provided for the shareholder is to be calculated. It is not therefore axiomatic that turnover alone is decisive.

85. In my view, the national court must therefore determine the essential part of the supplier's activities' by reference to quantitative and qualitative factors.

86. It should be recalled at this point that Opinions are authentic in the original language chosen by the Advocate General. In this regard, the Opinion of Advocate General Léger presents the following picture. On the one hand, he talks about the quasi-exclusivité' (almost all') of the services provided, whereas the German text reads sämtliche Dienstleistungen' (all services'). (35) On the other hand, he relies on the version of the second Teckal criterion contained in the language of the case, Italian, and refers to en grande partie' (largely'), which, in German, is rendered as im Wesentlichen' (essentially'), (36) or to la plus grande partie de leur activité' (den größten Teil ihrer Tätigkeit') (the biggest part of their activities'). (37)

87. For the sake of greater clarity, however, legal commentators apply the 80% criterion laid down in Article 13 of Directive 93/38, even in the context of proceedings before the Court. The reason they give for doing so is that that criterion is objective' or appropriate'.

88. It must be pointed out in this respect that a different fixed percentage might be equally objective or appropriate. As some of the interested parties in these preliminary ruling proceedings have pointed out, I made it clear in my Opinion in Stadt Halle that the rigidity of a fixed percentage may also be an obstacle to an appropriate solution. Moreover, a fixed percentage permits only quantitative factors to be taken into account.

89. The arguments against the transposability of the 80% criterion laid down in Article 13 of Directive 93/38 are, first, that this is a provision creating an exception in a directive applicable only to certain sectors. The Community legislature intended that percentage to be confined to Directive

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

93/38. While the basic principle may also be applicable in practice outside those sectors, the decisive fact remains that such a provision was not included in the directive applicable in this case.

90. Secondly, to find in favour of the transposability of the 80% threshold is to disregard the fact that Article 13 of Directive 93/38 applies only to services. As an exception, its application to the supply of goods within the sectors concerned is by definition prohibited. Such an extension to the supply of goods came about only with the amendments introduced as part of the legislative package in this field. (38)

91. Thirdly, even when the directives were amended in the legislative package, the legislature retained the 80% threshold only for the sectors concerned, and refrained from transposing it to the so-called classic' directive. At the time of those amendments, however, the second Teckal criterion was already well-known and, furthermore, was the subject of discussions during the legislative procedure.

92. Fourthly, there is yet a further reason why Article 13 of Directive 93/38 should not be relied on. Paragraph 2 of that article requires the contracting entity to provide the Commission, at its request, with certain information. That provision acts as the procedural counterbalance to the exception provided for in Article 13. In the case of the Teckal exception, however, the Court followed a different route.

93. Fifthly, the mere fact that the Court of Justice did not define the second Teckal criterion by reference to Directive 93/38, of which it was certainly aware, would in itself be sufficient to preclude transposability. Instead, the Court, in derogation from Article 13, confined itself to two material conditions, the abovementioned two Teckal criteria. Those conditions, however, precisely because of the lack of a procedural rule comparable with that in Article 13, must be interpreted strictly.

94. All in all, therefore, it is appropriate to adhere to the view that the 80% threshold deriving from Directive 93/38 is not a suitable criterion for assessing whether the supplier carries out the essential part of its activities for the controlling contracting authority. (39)

B - Further development of the above proposition in the light of recent case-law

95. As a condition for applying an exception, the criterion concerning the essential part of a supplier's activities must be interpreted strictly. The Court has confirmed this, in so far as it held, in paragraph 63 of the judgment in Parking Brixen :

[s]ince it is a matter of a derogation from the general rules of Community law, the two conditions stated in the preceding paragraph must be interpreted strictly and the burden of proving the existence of exceptional circumstances justifying the derogation to those rules lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances.'

96. Those requirements must be satisfied in this case too.

97. I continue to take the view - as previously expressed in my Opinion in Stadt Halle - that the essential part of a supplier's activities' must be determined by reference not only to quantitative criteria but also to qualitative factors. (40)(41)

98. With respect to the qualitative factors, it would have to be ascertained how and for whom the controlled entity in question carries out its activities. It makes a difference in this regard whether a market for the activities carried on by the entity actually exists in the first place, and whether the entity offers on the market some of the services which it provides for persons other than the controlling authority. (42)

99. However, this must not be taken to mean that the services provided by the entity in question

must also be in demand from persons other than public institutions. For, even if a product or service is in demand from only public consumers , this does not in itself mean that there is no market. There may be other suppliers. Consequently, the qualitative assessment would depend not only on the relationship between the supplier and the controlling entity, but also, and fully in keeping with the competitive objectives of the procurement legislation, on the supplier's economic position on the market. The situation would thus be similar to that in cases where the directives permit a negotiated procedure without competitive tender, that is to say where only one economic operator is capable of performing the contract. (43)

100. It is also necessary, in principle, to clarify whether the activity actually carried out is alone relevant, or whether account must also be taken of the purpose of the entity, such as the objects provided for in its statutes, that is to say every activity the entity could ever pursue. However, although reliance on the purpose of an entity is not unknown in procurement law, such an approach would make it even more difficult to assess whether a supplier carries out the essential part of its activities for the contracting authority, because it is impossible to supply reliable, up-to-date information on potential - indefinite, future - activities.

101. A further question is whether account should be taken of only some of the entity's activities or of all of them. Thus, the criterion concerning the essential part of a supplier's activities could also be understood as meaning that regard is to be had only to that type of activity which is carried out for both the controlling entity and other contracting bodies, such as energy supplies, for example, other activities carried out by the entity, such as waste disposal, being left out of account and the relative proportion of the sector-specific activities being alone decisive.

102. However, in my view, the mere fact that we are dealing with an exception to the rules of the directive argues against such an interpretation of the second Teckal criterion. For this could lead to an increase in the number of procedures covered by the exception in cases where the criterion concerning the essential part of a supplier's activities is satisfied in relation to a particular type of activity but not in relation to all the activities carried out by the entity.

103. As the wording of the judgment in Teckal and the facts of the proceedings suggest, the criterion concerning the essential part of a supplier's activities can be satisfied not only where the activities carried out for one shareholder exceed the essential part' threshold, but also by adding together all the services provided for all the shareholders and comparing that figure with the totality of the activities carried out.

104. In paragraph 50 of the judgment in Teckal , the Court also used the plural in relation to the second criterion, holding that:

... [t]he position can be otherwise only in the case where the local authority exercises over the person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, at the same time, that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling local authority or authorities.' (44)

105. If that wording is taken literally, it is not only the services provided for the controlling entity, that is to say the Municipality of Busto Arsizio, which are relevant. Services provided for the other shareholders could also be taken into account.

106. As regards the quantitative factors, turnover cannot be the only consideration. Other business indicators surely have to be taken into account as well. Thus, as the second question states, the proportion of total income derived from activities carried out for shareholders can, in principle, also be taken into account. However, determination of the proportion of total income derived from activities for shareholders is subject to the same principle that applies when determining the proportion of total turnover derived from such activities, that is to say that it is not sufficient for the income from those activities simply to exceed other income. It should be noted that these are both only quantitative indicators.

107. Finally, the Court has not made it clear, in connection with the criterion concerning the essential part of a supplier's activities, at what point in time that condition must be satisfied or what period of time is relevant for making the assessment.

108. Under the scheme of the procurement directives, this would be the point at which the awarding authority acts, that is to say, in this case, the point at which it transfers the relevant task. This, however, gives only a snapshot of the situation, unless, as we have already seen - in Article 13 of Directive 93/38 -, account is taken of a longer period.

109. Since AGESP provides services not only directly for the Municipality, but also in many cases directly for third parties within the Municipality, and, more specifically, for business and residential consumers, the further question arises whether, and, if so, under what conditions, services which are not provided directly for the Municipality must also be regarded as services for the Municipality, that is to say for the controlling entity within the meaning of the second Teckal criterion.

110. At this point, the vagueness of the second Teckal criterion and the corresponding lack of legal clarity for the entities concerned become apparent once again. For the sake of legal certainty, some clarification should therefore be provided.

111. For the question has been raised in this regard whether the deciding factor is the area in which the services are provided. On that proposition, only services in the area of the Municipality of Busto Arsizio would be relevant in the main proceedings. A satisfactory territorial reference is at least a suitable criterion for classification. This has to do with the fact that such a point of reference also plays an essential role in the determination of the jurisdiction of public bodies, and in particular municipalities. The view that only services for persons resident in the Municipality are to be included would certainly be too restrictive. It would , however, be possible also to include services which, although provided outside the Municipality, none the less benefit persons from within the Municipality, perhaps because the service is not offered by the authority itself - for reasons of cost, for example - but is provided by an entity in which several municipalities and/or one or more regions have shareholdings.

112. It must also be emphasised that, for the purposes of classification as an activity for the Municipality, it does not matter who is charged for the service or who pays for it. In fact, in the case of services of general economic interest provided in the form of concessions, at least part of the payment typically comes from the users of the service. I am thinking in particular in this regard of the concessions, included in the directives, concerning the construction of motorways for which a toll is charged. More significant in the everyday life of the Municipality are, above all, transport services, energy supplies, waste disposal and the construction and, where appropriate, operation of educational and leisure facilities or car parks. In cases such as these, however, consideration would have to be given first of all to whether these are service concessions, to which the rules laid down in the directives are for that very reason not applicable.

113. The Court should clarify the second Teckal criterion by laying down the conditions under which services for third parties are also included. Regard must be had first and foremost to the nature of the relationship between the third parties and the controlling entity, that is to say, in this case, the Municipality. Classification as an activity carried out for the Municipality is appropriate in particular in cases where the Municipality has an obligation to provide a service for third parties. This does not necessarily have to be an obligation to provide a service arising under public law, such as the relevant regional laws, for example. Obligations under private law, such as those arising under a contract between private persons and the Municipality, could also, conceivably, count as such. It should further be made clear whether contractual relations between third parties and the entity providing the service are likewise relevant. Here too, the determinative factor should be that, in addition to the actual provision of the service, there must also be a legal relationship between the Municipality and the entity providing the service.

114. In any event, the view that any service for the population of the local authority in question, that is to say, in this case, the Municipality of Busto Arsizio, is to be included must be rejected. For then, all other services to private persons, notwithstanding that they do not involve a relationship with the Municipality, would also be included, because the nature of the commercial activity would in that event be irrelevant. For example, if an entity not only supplied energy or provided waste disposal services, but also sold certain goods, such as heating equipment or refuse containers, the latter activities would also be included, even though they relate to goods which any consumer can also obtain from other sources. The effect of an interpretation based solely on the status of the third party consumer would be to include any service to consumers merely because the consumers are resident in the Municipality.

115. Taking everything into consideration, it must therefore be concluded that regard is to be had not only to the status of the third party consumer but also to the substance of the commercial activity.

C - Interim conclusion

116. The criterion to the effect that the controlled entity must carry out the essential part of its activities for the local authority or authorities which hold(s) its shares is also capable of being satisfied in the case of public-public undertakings and in the case of an indirect shareholding. In this connection, certain services provided for third parties should also be classified as being performed for the controlling entity.

117. In this case, the national court must take into account a number of factors in this regard, which include the income derived from activities carried out for the shareholders, but not the 80% criterion laid down in Article 13 of Directive 93/38.

VIII - Conclusion

118. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court answer the questions referred as follows:

Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public service contracts is to be interpreted as precluding the direct award of a contract in a procedure such as that in the main proceedings, unless the following conditions are fulfilled:

First, the local authority must exercise over the other entity a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments. The national court should examine the following factors in this regard:

- the interests of the shareholders;

- the conversion of the azienda municipalizzata' into a public company limited by shares;

- the fact that there is non-mandatory provision for the company to be opened up to other capital, but this has not been put into effect;

- the possibility for AGESP to set up establishments even abroad;

- the extent of the power of influence over the appointment of members of the board of directors and running of the business;

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

- the powers of the board of directors of AGESP; and

- the fact that the Municipality has an indirect shareholding in AGESP through AGESP Holding.

Secondly, that entity must also have carried out the essential part of its activities for the local authority or authorities which hold(s) its shares. In this regard, the national court must take into account the factors referred to in points 76 to 115, which include the income derived from activities carried out for the shareholders, but not the 80% criterion laid down in Article 13 of Directive 93/38/EEC.

SEQ CHAPTER \h \r 1Reference for a preliminary ruling by the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale della Lombardia (Sezione Terza) by order of 27 May 2004 in the case Carbotermo SpA against Comune di Busto Arsizio

(third party: AGESP s.p.a.)

(Case C-340/04)

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by order of 27 May 2004 of the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale della Lombardia, which was received at the Court Registry on 9 August 2004, for a preliminary ruling in the case of Carbotermo SpA against Comune di Busto Arsizio (third party: AGESP s.p.a.) on the following questions:

(1) Is the direct award of a contract for the supply of fuel for heating appliances in buildings owned by or within the competence of the Municipality, and relating to operation, supervision and maintenance (the main value of which lies in supply), to a joint stock company whose capital is, at present, held entirely by another joint stock company, of which the awarding Municipality is, for its part, the major shareholder (with 99.98% of the shares), or to a company (AGESP) in which a direct holding is owned not by the public authority but by another company (AGESP Holding), 99.98% of whose capital is presently owned by the public administration, compatible with Directive 93/36/EEC [1]?

(2) Must the requirement that the undertaking to which the supply contract is awarded directly carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority be ascertained by applying Article 13 of Directive 93/38/EC and can it be concluded that it has been satisfied where that undertaking derives the majority of its turnover from the controlling public authority or, alternatively, in the territory of that authority?

(Council Directives 92/50, Art. 36 and 93/38, Art. 34)

Article 36 of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts and Article 34 of Directive 93/38 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors must be interpreted as meaning that Community law does not preclude a jury from attaching specific weight to the subheadings of an award criterion which are defined in advance, by dividing among those headings the points awarded for that criterion by the contracting authority when the contract documents were prepared, provided that that decision :

- does not alter the criteria for the award of the contract set out in the contract documents;

- does not contain elements which, if they had been known at the time the tenders were prepared, could have affected that preparation;

- was not adopted on the basis of matters likely to give rise to discrimination against one of the tenderers.

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 36 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts and Article 34 of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors must be interpreted as meaning that Community law does not preclude a jury from attaching specific weight to the subheadings of an award criterion which are defined in advance, by dividing among those headings the points awarded for that criterion by the contracting authority when the contract documents or the contract notice were prepared, provided that that decision:

- does not alter the criteria for the award of the contract set out in the contract documents or the contract notice;

- does not contain elements which, if they had been known at the time the tenders were prepared, could have affected that preparation;

- was not adopted on the basis of matters likely to give rise to discrimination against one of the tenderers.

1. The reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 36 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) and Article 34 of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84).

2. The reference was made in the course of proceedings brought by ATI EAC Srl e Viaggi di Maio Snc and those two companies individually against ACTV Venezia SpA (ACTV'), the Province di Venezia and the Commune di Venezia over the award of a contract for public passenger transport services.

Legal context

3. Article 36 of Directive 92/50, headed Criteria for the award of contracts', reads as follows:

1. ... the criteria on which the contracting authority shall base the award of contracts may be:

(a) where the award is made to the economically most advantageous tender, various criteria relating to the contract: for example, quality, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical assistance and after-sales service, delivery date, delivery period or period of completion, price; or

(b) ...

2. Where the contract is to be awarded to the economically most advantageous tender, the contracting authority shall state in the contract documents or in the tender notice the award criteria which it intends to apply, where possible in descending order of importance.'

4. Under Article 34 of Directive 93/38:

1. ... the criteria on which the contracting entities shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) the most economically advantageous tender, involving various criteria depending on the contract in question, such as: delivery or completion date, running costs, cost-effectiveness, quality, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical merit, after-sales service and technical assistance, commitments with regard to spare parts, security of supplies and price; or

(b) ...

2. In the case referred to in paragraph 1(a), contracting entities shall state in the contract documents or in the tender notice all the criteria which they intend to apply to the award, where possible in descending order of importance.'

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

5. On 6 April 2002 ACTV published in the Official Journal of the European Communities a notice concerning a public contract for passenger transport in three lots. The dispute in the main proceedings concerns Lot No 1 relating to the urban transport service for the town of Mestre for the period from 16 June 2002 to 31 December 2003.

6. In that tender notice it was stated, under the heading Award Criteria', that ACTV had decided to award the contract to the bidder submitting the economically most advantageous tender.

7. The applicants in the main proceedings applied to participate in the award procedure. By letter of 7 May 2002, ACTV invited them to submit a bid for Lot No 1. The conditions of participation (disciplinare di gara', hereinafter the contract documents') attached to that letter laid down the following four award criteria on the basis of which the economically most advantageous tender was to be determined:

1. cost per kilometre for the services mentioned in Annexes A, B and C to the contract documents:

- max. 60 points allocated on the basis of the ratio:...

2. cost per kilometre for services in addition to those mentioned in Annexes A, B and C to the contract documents:

- max. 10 points allocated on the basis of the ratio:...

3. organisational procedures and support structures used in carrying out the service, as they appear in the document referred to in paragraph 3(10)(6) of the terms and conditions:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

- max. 25 points allocated by ACTV at its absolute discretion.

4. possession of a certificate of conformity...: 5 points.'

8. As regards the third and fourth criteria for the award of the contract, the contract documents provided in paragraph 3(10)(6) that the tender papers must contain a descriptive account of the organisation and of the logistical and support structures to be used in the management of the services which are the subject-matter of the contract, if it is awarded; that account had to include at least the following information:

- depots and/or areas where buses can be parked, owned by or available to the undertaking, within the territory of the Provincia di Venezia ...;

- procedures for supervising the service supplied and number of employees supervising the service itself;

- number of drivers on the route and kind of licence held;

- number of places of business owned by or available to the undertaking (other than depots) within the territory of the Provincia di Venezia ...;

- number of employees engaged in organising drivers' shifts'.

9. Subsequently, on 29 May 2002, that is to say, after expiry of the period prescribed for the submission of tenders and before the envelopes were opened, when it already had a list of the names of the undertakings which had put in a tender for the lot at issue in the main proceedings, the jury, in its report No 1, weighted the 25 points available to be awarded for the third criterion by dividing them into five subheadings corresponding to each of the indications to be given in the report included in the tender submitted by the bidders. The number of points to be awarded for each of the subheadings was broken down as follows: eight, seven and six points for the first, second and third subheadings respectively and two points for each of the fourth and fifth subheadings.

10. On 30 May 2002, having rejected one of the tenders submitted, the jury proceeded to examine those from the applicants in the main proceedings and from ATI La Linea SpA-CSSA (La Linea'). The latter, with 86.53 points, was awarded the contract, the applicants in the main proceedings having obtained 83.5 points.

11. Taking the view that La Linea was awarded the contract solely as a result of the weighting ex post facto of the number of points liable to be awarded for the third criterion, the applicants in the main proceedings contested the measures and decisions taken by the jury before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale on the basis, inter alia, of a plea of breach of Article 36(2) of Directive 92/50.

12. The Tribunale amministrative regionale dismissed the action, finding, inter alia, that the award criteria and the matters to be taken into account for the purposes of awarding the contract at issue in the main proceedings were indicated in the contract documents.

13. The applicants in the main proceedings appealed against that judgment to the Consiglio di Stato, which decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

1. Is it lawful to interpret [Article 36 of Directive 92/50 and Article 34 of Directive 93/38] as a flexible rule allowing the contracting authority, where the award is to be made on the basis of the economically most advantageous tender, to fix the criteria in a general way in the tender notice or the contract documents, leaving it to the jury to specify or supplement those criteria, if need be, provided always that such specifying or supplementing is carried out before the packets containing the tenders have been opened and that such action introduces nothing new in relation to the criteria fixed in the tender notice or, on the contrary, must that provision be interpreted as a rigid rule requiring the contracting authority to determine, analytically, the criteria for the award of the contract in the tender notice or the contract documents, before the prequalification stage or the invitation to tender, and as meaning that the jury may not subsequently in any way do anything to specify or supplement those criteria or to create subheadings or sub-marking, since for reasons of transparency every piece of information concerning the criteria for the award must appear in the notice or contract documents?

In consequence is the traditional line of interpretation followed in the past in the Consiglio di Stato's case-law, which permits the jury to take action to supplement those criteria before the packets containing the tenders are opened, lawful in the light of Community law?

2. Is it lawful, in the light of that provision loosely interpreted having regard to the adverbial phrase where possible, for the contracting authority to adopt terms and conditions for the tender that provide, with regard to one of the criteria for the award (in this instance, the organisational and support procedures), with reference to a complex series of criteria for which the tender notice did not allocate individual points, so that they were in that sense in part indeterminate, that the points should be allocated at the absolute discretion of the contracting authority, or does not that provision in any case require that the criteria should as a general rule be formulated absolutely definitively, which is not compatible with the fact that those criteria were not allocated separate points in the notice; if it is lawful, because the provision is considered to be flexible and because it is not essential to give points to every item, is it permissible, where the tender notice does not give express power to the jury, for the latter to specify or supplement the criteria (simply by allocating individual importance and relative weight to every single item that the notice intended to be assessed by the overall allocation of a maximum of 25 points), or is it not on the contrary necessary to apply the conditions of the tender literally, allocating the points on an overall assessment of the various and complex matters taken into consideration by the lex specialis?

3. In any case, is it lawful, in the light of that provision, to give the jury which is to assess the tenders, regardless of the manner in which criteria have been formulated in the tender notice, in a procedure for an award on the basis of the economically most advantageous tender, the power, but only in respect of the complexity of the matters to be assessed, to restrict its own actions in a general way, by specifying the parameters for the application of the criteria previously determined in the tender notice, and may such power held by the jury be exercised by creating subheadings, sub-points, or simply by setting more specific criteria for the application of the criteria laid down generally in the notice or the contract documents, before of course the envelopes have been opened?'

The application for reopening of the oral procedure

14. By a document lodged at the Registry of the Court of Justice on 19 September 2005, ACTV requested the Court of Justice to order the reopening of the oral procedure under Article 61 of the Rules of Procedure.

15. In support of its application, ACTV essentially argued that, in his Opinion, the Advocate General did not answer the main questions asked by the referring court. For that reason and to aid understanding of the questions referred in the light of the specific nature of the dispute in the main proceedings, it wished to submit further observations.

16. In that regard, it should be recalled that the Court may of its own motion, on a proposal from the Advocate General or at the request of the parties, order that the oral procedure be reopened, in accordance with Article 61 of the Rules of Procedure, if it considers that it lacks sufficient information, or that the case must be dealt with on the basis of an argument which has not been debated between the parties (see order of 4 February 2000 in Case C-17/98 Emesa Sugar [2000] ECR I-665, paragraph 18, and Case C-147/02 Alabaster [2004] ECR I-3101, paragraph 35).

17. In the present case, the Court, having heard the Advocate General, takes the view that it had all the information necessary to answer the questions referred and that that information had been debated before it. Consequently, the application to reopen the oral procedure must be rejected.

The questions

18. As a preliminary point, it must be observed, as the referring court pointed out, that, by the decision at issue in the main proceedings, the jury simply decided how the 25 points allocated for the third award criterion had to be distributed among the five subheadings in the contract documents.

19. Accordingly, the questions referred should be understood to relate essentially to the question whether Article 36 of Directive 92/50 and Article 34 of Directive 93/38 must be interpreted as meaning that Community law precludes a jury from attaching specific weight to the subheadings of an award criterion which are defined in advance, by dividing among those subheadings the points awarded for that criterion by the contracting authority when the contract documents or the contract notice were prepared.

20. First, as the Austrian Government rightly observed, the provisions of Article 36 of Directive 92/50 and Article 34 of Directive 93/38 cannot be applied simultaneously to the same set of facts. However, the provisions cited in the questions referred for a preliminary ruling have substantially the same wording (see Case C-513/99 Concordia Bus Finland [2002] ECR I-7213, paragraph 91). Therefore, the Court can give a proper answer to the question as reformulated without there being any need for it to rule as to which of the two directives is applicable in the case in the main proceedings.

21. Next, it must be observed that the award criteria defined by a contracting authority must be linked to the subject-matter of the contract, may not confer an unrestricted freedom of choice on the authority, must be expressly mentioned in the contract documents or the tender notice, and must comply with the fundamental principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency (see Concordia Bus , cited above, paragraph 64).

22. In the present case, it must be observed, in particular, that the duty to observe the principle of equal treatment lies at the very heart of the public procurement directives (see Concordia Bus Finland , paragraph 81) and that tenderers must be in a position of equality both when they formulate their tenders and when those tenders are being assessed (see Case C-19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I7725, paragraph 34).

23. It must also be observed that, in accordance with Article 36 of Directive 92/50 and Article 34 of Directive 93/38, all such criteria must be expressly mentioned in the contract documents or the tender notice, where possible in descending order of importance, so that operators are in a position to be aware of their existence and scope (see Concordia Bus Finland , paragraph 62).

24. Similarly, in order to ensure respect for the principles of equal treatment and transparency, it is important that potential tenderers are aware of all the features to be taken into account by the contracting authority in identifying the economically most advantageous offer, and, if possible, their relative importance, when they prepare their tenders (see, to that effect, Case C-87/94 Commission v Belgium [1996] ECR I-2043, paragraph 88, and Case C470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraph 98).

25. Finally, it is for the national court to assess, in the light of these rules and principles, whether, in the case in the main proceedings, the jury infringed Community law by applying a weighting to the various subheadings of the third criterion for the award of the contract.

26. In that regard, it must be determined first whether, in the light of all the relevant facts of the case in the main proceedings, the decision applying such weighting altered the criteria for the award of the contract set out in the contract documents or the contract notice.

27. If it did the decision would be contrary to Community law.

28. Second, it must be determined whether the decision contains elements which, if they had been known at the time the tenders were prepared, could have affected that preparation.

29. If it did the decision would be contrary to Community law.
