Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997, and, more particularly, Article 3(2) thereof, Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by Directive 97/52, and, more particularly, Article 5(7) thereof, Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by Directive 97/52, and, more particularly, Article 6(6) thereof, and also Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 98/4/EC of 16 February 1998, and, more particularly, Article 4(2) thereof, preclude a rule such as that laid down in Article 25 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999 amending the Royal Decree of 10 January 1996 on public works, supply and service contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, and Article 32 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999 amending the Royal Decree of 8 January 1996 on public works, supply and service contracts and on the award of public contracts, whereby a person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with a public works, supplies or services contract is not permitted to apply to participate in or to submit a tender for those works, supplies or services and where that person is not given the opportunity to prove that, in the circumstances of the case, the experience which he has acquired was not capable of distorting competition.

2. Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts and, more particularly, Articles 2(1)(a) and 5 thereof, and Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors and, more particularly, Articles 1 and 2 thereof, preclude the contracting entity from refusing, until the end of the procedure for the examination of tenders, to allow an undertaking connected with any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with works, supplies or services to participate in the procedure or to submit a tender, even though, when questioned on that point by the awarding authority, that undertaking states that it has not thereby obtained an unfair advantage capable of distorting the normal conditions of competition.

[1] - OJ C 55 of 08.03.2003. OJ C 70 OF 22.03.2003.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Léger delivered on 11 November 2004. Fabricom SA v Belgian State. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Conseil d'Etat - Belgium. Public procurement - Works, supplies and services - Water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Prohibition on participation in a procedure of submission of a tender by a person who has contributed to the development of the works, supplies or services concerned. Joined cases C-21/03 and C-34/03.

1. Does the fact that a person has been involved in the preparatory work for a public contract preclude him, and the undertaking connected to him, from participating in that contract? Is such a rule, which seeks to prevent a person from being able to gain an advantage from the fact that he has participated in the preparations for a public contract and which would place him in a situation contrary to free competition in the procedure for the award of that contract, proportionate to the objective which it seeks to attain? These are essentially the questions which the Conseil d'Etat (Council of State) (Belgium) refers to the Court in these joined cases.

I - Legal background

A - Community legislation

2. Community substantive law on the procedure for the award of public contracts consists of Directive 97/52/EC amending Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts respectively (2) and Directive 98/4/EC amending Directive 93/38/EEC coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors. (3)

3. These two directives (4) take account of the necessary amendments which were made following the conclusion by the European Community of the agreement on public contracts within the framework of the World Trade Organisation (the WTO'). (5) Under Article VI(4) thereof:

Entities shall not seek or accept, in a manner which would have the effect of precluding competition, advice which may be used in the preparation of specifications for a specific procurement from a firm that may have a commercial interest in the procurement.'

4. These directives opened up the award of public contracts within the Community to competition and at the same time coordinated the procedures for awarding them. The main objectives of these directives are to ensure that the award of public contracts, both generally and in specific sectors, is transparent and observes the principle of free competition. (6)

5. Thus, Directive 89/665/EEC (7) (the review directive') was adopted in the field of public contracts. It governs the review procedures in this field. The aim is to ensure that decisions taken by contracting entities in breach of Community law on public contracts may be reviewed appropriately and rapidly.

B - National legislation

6. The directives were transposed into Belgian law by the Law of 24 December 1993 on public procurement and certain contracts for works, supplies and services. (8)

7. Article 32 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999 (9) amends Article 78 of the Royal Decree of 8 January 1996 on the public procurement of works, supplies and services and on public works concessions. Article 26 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999 amends Article 65 of the Royal Decree of 10 January 1996 on the public procurement of works, supplies and services in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors. The two provisions lay down in an identical manner, one, an absolute prohibition on tendering for a public contract by persons who have been responsible for the research, testing, study or development of works, supplies or services and, two, a prohibition on tendering by any undertaking connected (10) to a person who has been responsible for preparatory work in connection with the public contract in question. However, the undertaking may reverse this presumption by providing information showing that its dominant influence has not affected the contract.

II - Main proceedings and questions referred to the Court

A - Case C-21/03

8. Fabricom SA (Fabricom') is an undertaking which covers all works in the sector of transport of energy and fluids. It is regularly required to submit tenders for public contracts, particularly in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors.

9. By an application brought before the Conseil d'Etat on 25 June 1999, Fabricom seeks annulment of Article 26 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999. It asserts that this provision is contrary to the principle of equality between tenderers, the principle of the effectiveness of a judicial review as guaranteed by the review directive, the principle of proportionality, freedom of trade and industry and also to respect for the right to property as guaranteed by Article 1 of Protocol No 1 to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. The Belgian State disputes these assertions.

10. Taking the view that the resolution of the case before it requires an interpretation of certain provisions of the directives concerning public contracts, the Conseil d'Etat decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following three questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling pursuant to Article 234 EC:

1. Do Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors [OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84], and in particular Article 4(2) thereof, and Directive 98/4/EC of 16 February 1998 of the European Parliament and of the Council amending Directive 93/38EEC, in conjunction with the principle of proportionality, freedom of trade and industry and respect for the right to property guaranteed in particular by Protocol No 1 of 20 March 1952 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, preclude any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with a public contract for works, supplies or services from being permitted to apply to participate in or to submit a tender for that contract where that person has not been given an opportunity to prove that, in the circumstances of the case, the experience which he has acquired was not capable of distorting competition?

2. Would the answer to the preceding question be different if those directives, considered in conjunction with that principle, freedom and right, were interpreted as referring only to private undertakings or to undertakings which have provided services for valuable consideration?

3. May Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, and in particular Articles 1 and 2 thereof, be interpreted as meaning that a contracting entity may refuse, up to the end of procedure for the examination of tenders, to allow an undertaking connected to any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with supplies or services to participate in the procedure or to submit a tender, even though, when questioned on that point by the awarding authority, the undertaking states that it has not thereby obtained an unfair advantage capable of distorting the normal conditions of competition?'

B - Case C-34/03

11. Fabricom also seeks, by an application brought before the Conseil d'Etat on 8 June 1999, annulment of Article 32 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999. The arguments put forward by Fabricom and the Belgian State are essentially the same as those set out in Case C-21/03.

12. In that case too the Conseil d'Etat decided to apply Article 234 EC, to stay proceedings and to refer the following three questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

1. Do Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, and in particular Article 3(2) thereof [OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1], Council Directive 93/36/EC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts [OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1], and in particular Article 5(7) thereof, Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts [OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54], in particular Article 6(6) thereof and Directive 97/52/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 October 1997 amending Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC concerning procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts, in particular Articles 2(1)(b) and 3(1)(b) thereof, in conjunction with the principle of proportionality, freedom of trade and industry and respect for the right to property guaranteed in particular by Protocol No 1 of 20 March 1952 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, preclude any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with a public contract for works, supplies or services from being permitted to apply to participate in or to submit a tender for that contract where that person has not been given an opportunity to prove that, in the circumstances of the case, the experience which he has acquired was not capable of distorting competition?

2. Would the answer to the preceding question be different if those directives, considered in conjunction with that principle, freedom and right, were interpreted as referring only to private undertakings or to undertakings which have provided services for valuable consideration?

3. May Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, and in particular Articles 2(1)(a) and 5 thereof, be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may refuse, up to the end of the procedure for the examination of tenders, to allow an undertaking connected to any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with supplies or services to participate in the procedure or to submit a tender, even though, when questioned on that point by the awarding authority, the undertaking states that it has not thereby obtained an unfair advantage capable of distorting the normal conditions of competition?'

13. By order of 4 March 2003, the President of the Court decided to join the two cases, on account of the objective connection between them.

III - Analysis

14. Since the three questions referred by the Conseil d'Etat are similar in the two cases referred to the Court, I propose to consider each of the questions relating to Case C-34/03 in turn. I shall indicate whether it appears that the solution adopted must be different as regards the specific sectors concerned in Case C-21/03.

15. The first and second questions referred by the national court are so closely connected that it would appear appropriate to consider them together. I shall therefore answer the first and second questions together and then answer the third.

16. It must be borne in mind at the outset that, although the Court may not, in a procedure under Article 234 EC, rule upon the compatibility of provisions of domestic law with Community law or interpret domestic legislation or regulations, it does have jurisdiction to supply the national court with a ruling on the interpretation of Community law so as to enable that court to determine whether such compatibility exists in order to decide the case before it. (11)

A - First and second questions: exclusion from the tendering procedure of a person who participates in the preparatory stages of a public contract

17. By its first question, the Conseil d'Etat seeks to ascertain whether the directives on public contracts prevent any person who has participated in the preparatory stages of a public contract from being precluded from submitting a tender for that public contract where that person has not been given an opportunity to prove that that circumstance has not distorted competition between the tenderers for that public contract. As regards the second question, the Conseil d'Etat asks the Court whether its answer to the first question differs according to whether or not the directives refer only to private persons or persons providing services for valuable consideration.

1. Arguments of the parties

18. The plaintiff in the main proceedings, Fabricom, contends that Articles 26 and 32 of the Royal Decree of 25 March 1999 (the provisions of Belgian law') are contrary to Community law, (12) and, in particular, that they are contrary to the principle of non-discrimination laid down in the directives on public contracts and also to the caselaw established in Telaustria and Telefonadress , (13) which also underlies this principle. As Fabricom points out, non-discrimination is applicable to all tenderers, including those who have participated in the preparatory stage of the contract. The latter should be excluded from participating in a public contract only if it appears clearly and specifically that by such participation alone they have gained an advantage which distorts normal competition.

19. Thus, in Fabricom's submission, the irrebuttable presumption set out in the provisions at issue has an effect which is disproportionate to the objective which they pursue, namely to ensure fair competition between tenderers. Fabricom cites the case-law of the Court, (14) according to which Community law precludes a particular tender being eliminated as a matter of course and on the basis of a criterion which is applied automatically. (15)

20. Fabricom is supported by the Austrian and Finnish Governments, which point out in their observations that the exclusion of an undertaking in the particular case of participation in preparatory works must be preceded by a full and differentiated examination of the kind of preparatory works concerned, in particular as regards access to the contract specifications. Exclusion is possible only if the undertaking has obtained, through its preparatory activity, specific information relating to the contract which gives it a competitive advantage.

21. On the other hand, the Commission contends that the provisions of Belgian law seek to avoid possible discrimination and a competitive advantage to the person who has participated in the preparatory works when he submits his tender for the same contract. If the person who carries out the preparatory work could also be the successful tenderer, he might steer the preparation of the public contract in a direction favourable to him.

2. Analysis

22. Several judgments of the Court have already established the principles which, in Community law, govern the selection of tenderers for public contracts. (16) As I have already mentioned, the directives on public contracts, each of which covers a specific field, aim to promote the development of effective competition. (17) The implementation and the attainment of that objective can be effective only if the economic operators participating in the public contract are able to do so on an equal footing, without any discrimination whatsoever.

23. Consequently, Advocate General Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer rightly observed in the joined cases of

Lombardini and Mantovani (18) that to this end, a system based on objectivity at all levels, in terms of both substance and form, is indispensable. Firstly, by setting objective criteria for participation in the tender and award of contracts. Secondly, by making provision for open procedures in which transparency is the norm.'

24. It is common ground that the directives on public contracts contain no specific provisions governing inability to participate in public tendering procedures. In particular, the directives contain no provisions to the effect that a person may not participate in a tender for a public contract where he has previously participated in the planning of the contract concerned.

25. It is also common ground that general principles, such as free competition, equal treatment and non-discrimination, are applicable to the award of public contracts. Consequently, it is not possible to discriminate between tenderers at any stage of the public contract award procedure.

26. Therefore we must see whether the directives on public contracts and the general principles of Community law allow a person who has participated in a contract to be excluded from submitting a tender for that contract. To that end, I shall examine, in accordance with methods of interpretation employed by the Court, (19) the wording, scheme and objectives of the directives on public contracts in order to reply to the national court.

27. Directives 92/50, (20) 93/36 (21) and 93/37, (22) as amended by Directive 97/52, and also Directive 93/38, (23) as amended by Directive 98/4, all establish in one of their initial provisions the rule that the contracting authorities must ensure that there is no discrimination between tenderers. (24)

28. Furthermore, the 10th recital in the preamble to Directive 97/52 and the 13th recital in the preamble to Directive 98/4 state that contracting authorities may request advice for the purpose of drawing up public contracts, provided that that does not distort competition. (25) It is interesting to note that these are the terms of the agreement on public contacts concluded within the framework of the WTO.

29. Thus, as Community law currently stands and as regards technical advice for the preparation of a public contract, there is nothing in the provisions of the directives on public contracts to preclude contracting entities from seeking or accepting advice which may be used in the preparation of specifications for a specific procurement by a person who may submit a tender. Community law precludes such action only where it has the effect of harming effective competition. (26)

30. This brief account of the provisions of the directive relating to the principles governing the procedures for the award of public contracts prompts me to make the following observations. First, it is clear from a textual interpretation that the directives allow the contracting authorities to seek advice from various sources for the preparation of a public contract, provided that such advice does not harm competition. However, the directives do not provide that the participation of a person in the preparatory stage of the public contract is incompatible with the subsequent submission of a tender for the same contract.

31. It is appropriate, at this stage, to interpret these articles of the directives on public contracts in the light of the other provisions contained in these directives and also of the general principles of Community law and fundamental rights. In particular, it is appropriate to examine them in the light of the other provisions which lay down objective participation and award criteria.

32. Although the directives do not provide for the possibility of eliminating, on grounds of ineligibility, a potential tenderer who has participated in the preparatory work, they do set out a list of criteria for selecting possible candidates for the award of a contract. When transposing the directives on public contracts, the Member States may lay down in the list of criteria other grounds for rejecting an application, provided that this is done in order to attain the objective pursued by the directive.

33. The references now contained in the directives on public contracts concerning the possibility for the contracting authorities to seek or accept advice which may be used in the preparation of specifications for a specific contract are not aimed at predetermining the persons eligible to compete for that public contract. I share the Commission's view that these provisions do not have as their objective to extend the possibilities of seeking or accepting advice in connection with the preparation of specifications for a public contract but to prevent such action from resulting in harm to fair competition. These references therefore express a distrust of a person who is involved both in the process of preparing the specifications for the public contract and in the award stage.

34. As we know, the directives standardise the procedures for awarding public contracts in order to ensure effective competition in this field. As I observed in the textual and structural interpretation of the directives, the directives do not cover all the details of the contract award procedures but leave the Member States a margin of discretion in implementing them. The Court has had occasion to state (27) that the directives on public contracts therefore do not lay down a uniform and exhaustive body of Community rules and that within the framework of the common rules which they contain, the Member States remain free to maintain or adopt substantive and procedural rules in regard to public works contracts on condition that they comply with all the relevant provisions of Community law. (28)

35. Therefore, in the present case this freedom of the Member States continues to be delimited, first, by the objectives of the directives on public contracts and, second, by the general principles of Community law. It is apparent from the Court's case-law that the basic rules of the EC Treaty and the general principles of Community law may also define the extent of the obligations on the Member States in situations falling within the scope of the directives but in respect of which no obligation is specifically provided for. Accordingly, the Court added that the principle of equal treatment, which lies at the heart of the directives concerning the award of public contracts, implies an obligation of transparency in order to enable verification that it has been complied with. (29)

36. That is why, as regards the ground on which a person may be ineligible to tender for a public contract, as the directives make no specific provision, the Member States may adopt rules which have the effect of safeguarding the objectives established by the directives. This can be the case, for example, as regards the ineligibility of a person who has participated in the preparation of a public contract to submit a tender. Such exclusion seeks to safeguard the principal objective of effective competition. However, does such a rule preserve the principle of non-discrimination also laid down by the directive? The rule thereby established also has the effect of eliminating certain tenderers.

37. In its judgment in Commission v Denmark , (30) the Court held that the duty to observe the principle of equal treatment lies at the very heart of the directives on public contracts. Accordingly, the system whereby tenderers apply on an equal footing, which must underlie the award of public contracts, means that any person who wishes to be awarded a public contract must know beforehand what he must or must not do in order to be awarded it. Specifically, if participation in the preparatory work for a public contract has the effect of excluding the participating person who would wish to tender for that public contract, every potential tenderer must be aware of these consequences and be free to decide to participate in the preparatory stage or to submit a tender for that public contract. (31)

38. Consequently, account must be taken both of the aim of guaranteeing effective competition and of compliance with the principle of equality between tenderers. However, the Court has consistently held that the principal objective of the Community legislation cannot be compromised. In this case, it is necessary to consider whether the principal objective of these directives is safeguarded by a law such as that at issue and, if so, whether the law runs counter to the principle of equal treatment which is connected to the application of these directives. Therefore, the question is whether the national legislation does what is necessary to ensure that the objective of the directives is implemented in a proper and proportionate manner.

39. I share the Commission's view (32) that in order to prevent conflicts of interest the rule on ineligibility at issue does in fact contribute to fair competition between potential tenderers and prevents the contracting authorities from discriminating between them. Such a provision would appear to be an appropriate means of attaining the objective laid down by the directives on public contracts.

40. Finally, it has to be considered whether that ineligibility is proportionate to the objective pursued by these directives. I believe that it is.

41. First, it should be reiterated that everyone is free to decide whether to take part in the preparatory stage of a public contract or to submit a tender for it. Depending on the interests concerned, a choice will be made to participate in one or the other stage of the public tender. I should also point out that this ineligibility is limited solely to the individual tender concerned.

42. The ineligibility rule seeks to prevent a situation in which competition is distorted from arising on account of the information held by a tenderer as a result of his participation in the preparation of that contract. It is virtually impossible to envisage any means of ensuring that the information and experience acquired during the preparatory stage will not operate to the advantage of the person concerned when he submits a tender. The knowledge acquired is for the most part subjective and difficult to identify, sometimes even for the person in question. (33)

43. Thus, in the interests of legal certainty, and above all in the interests of transparency, which is the fundamental principle of the directives on public contracts, it is necessary to prevent any possibility of a privileged position which would distort competition.

44. From that point of view, a measure which lays down an ineligibility rule such as that contained in Belgian law is consistent with the general principles of Community law and corresponds to an objective of general interest. (34)

45. By its second question the national court asks the Court whether a different answer must be given if the directives on public contracts are to be interpreted as prohibiting from tendering for a public contract only private persons who have been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with the subject-matter of that contract and also persons who have provided services for valuable consideration.

46. I agree with all the interveners who expressed a view on this question before the Court that there is nothing to justify discrimination against private undertakings or undertakings which have supplied services for valuable consideration by comparison with the public undertakings with which they are competing for the same public contracts. In the past the Court's case-law has established that European law concerning public contracts applies in the same way irrespective of whether a public contract is awarded to a private person or to a person in which the public authorities have an interest. (35) In my view, this also applies to the condition relating to ineligibility.

47. The content of the directive concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts, in conjunction with the principle of proportionality, freedom of trade and industry and respect for the right to property, does not preclude a national rule which provides that any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with services, supplies or works is automatically deprived of the opportunity to submit an application to participate in or a tender for those contracts. It is irrelevant whether it is a private or a public person who participated in the preparatory work.

B - Third question: time of exclusion of the tendering undertaking connected to the person participating in the preparatory work

48. By its last question, the Conseil d'Etat asks the Court whether the review directive (36) precludes the contracting authority or contracting entity from refusing, up to the end of the procedure for examination of tenders, to permit an undertaking connected to any person who has been instructed to carry out research or experiments in connection with the preparatory work for the public contract to participate in the procedure or to submit a tender, although when questioned in that regard by the contracting authority that undertaking states that it has thereby obtained no unfair advantage capable of distorting the normal conditions of competition.

49. The parties agree that the review directive precludes the contracting authority from refusing, up to the end of the procedure for examination of tenders, to allow the participation of an undertaking which, when questioned, states that it has obtained no unfair advantage capable of distorting the normal conditions of competition. I share this view.

50. As we have already seen, the provisions of the national legislation at issue provide that any undertaking connected to a person who has been instructed to carry out preparatory work in connection with the public contract in question may reverse the presumption that it has a competitive advantage by pr oviding information on which it may be established that dominant influence has not affected the contract. However, the awarding authority is not subject to any timelimits and may at any time, and thus up to the end of the award procedure, eliminate the undertaking on account of the unfair advantage which it is presumed to have gained, if the evidence provided by the undertaking is deemed insufficient. (37)

51. In such a situation, a connected undertaking is unable to obtain a declaration by a court, if necessary, that in the particular case the presumption of exclusion equivalent to a reduction in competition is inapplicable, before the contract is awarded. However, it follows from the review directive and the Court's case-law that the Member States must ensure remedies whereby the procedure or decision to award the contract by the contracting authority can be suspended. (38) Therefore, it follows that the decision to exclude a connected undertaking must be notified before the decision awarding the public contract and such advance notice must be sufficient to enable that undertaking, if it considers it appropriate, to bring an action and have the exclusion decision annulled if the relevant conditions are met.

52. By allowing the decision to be taken to eliminate a connected undertaking which would wish to tender up to the end of the procedure for examination of the tenders, in such a manner that a review can be sought only at a stage where the infringements can no longer be rectified, as the public contract has been awarded in the meantime, and at a stage where the applicant is only able to obtain damages, the provisions of Belgian law compromise the effectiveness of the review directive.

53. This is why I consider that Council Directive 89/665/EEC on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts precludes a national rule which allows the contracting entity to exclude, up to the end of the procedure for examination of tenders, an undertaking connected to any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with works, supplies or services from participating in the procedure or submitting a tender, although the undertaking states that it has not obtained an unfair advantage capable of distorting the normal conditions of competition.

54. In my view, the arguments expounded in connection with the questions in Case C-34/03 may be transposed to the identical questions in Case C-21/03, which relate to the directive concerning certain specific sectors such as water, energy, transport and telecommunications.

IV - Conclusion

55. I therefore propose that the Court answer the first and second questions referred by the national court as follows:

(1) European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997, amending Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts respectively and Directive 98/4/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 February 1998 amending Directive 93/38/EEC coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, in conjunction with the principle of proportionality, freedom of trade and industry and respect for the law of property, does not preclude a national rule which provides that any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with works, supplies or services is systematically denied the opportunity to submit an application to participate in or a tender for those contracts. It is irrelevant whether the person who participated in the preparatory work is a private or a public person.

(2) Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts and Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors preclude a national rule which allows the contracting entity to refuse, up to the end of the procedure for examination of tenders, to allow an undertaking connected to any person who has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with the works, supplies or services to participate in the procedure or to submit a tender, even though the undertaking states that it has obtained no unfair advantage capable of distorting the normal conditions of competition.

Notice for the OJ

Reference for a preliminary ruling by the Conseil d'Etat, Section d'Administration by judgment of that Court of 27 December 2002 in the case of La Société Anonyme Fabricom against l'Etat Belge

(Case C-34/03)

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by judgment of the Conseil d'Etat, Section d'Administration (Council of State, Administrative Section) of 27 December 2002, received at the Court Registry on 29 January 2003, for a preliminary ruling in the case of La Société Anonyme Fabricom against l'Etat Belge (the Belgian State) on the following questions:

1.Do Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts[1], and in particular Article 3(2) thereof, Council Directive 93/36/EC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts[2], and in particular Article 5(7) thereof, Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts[3], in particular Article 6(6) thereof, and Article 97/52/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 October 1997 amending Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC concerning procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts[4], in particular Articles 2(1(b) and 3(1)(b) thereof, in conjunction with the principle of proportionality, freedom of trade and industry and respect for the law of property guaranteed in particular by the protocol of 20 March 1992 to the Convention for the Protection of Human rights and Fundamental Freedoms, preclude the barring of the submission of an application to participate in or a tender for a public contract for works, supplies or services by any person who has been responsible for research, testing, study or development in respect of those works, supplies or services where that person has not been given an opportunity to prove that, in the circumstances of the case, the experience he has acquired could not distort competition?

2.Would the answer to the preceding question be different if the abovementioned directives, considered in conjunction with the same principle, freedom and law, were interpreted as covering only private undertakings or undertakings which had supplied gratuitous services?

3.Can Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, and in particular Articles 2(1)(a) and 5 thereof, be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may exclude, up to the end of the process of evaluation of the tenders, from participation in the procedure or submission of a tender, an undertaking connected to any person who has been responsible for research, testing, study or development in respect of the works, supplies or services, although when questioned in that regard by the contracting authority that undertaking declares that it has gained therefrom no unfair advantage of a nature such as to distort the normal conditions of competition?

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCEOF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES (Third Chamber), composed of M. Jaeger, President, J. Azizi and E. Cremona, Judges, Registrar: C. Kristensen, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 13 July 2006,

gives the following

Judgment

Legal context

1 Until 31 December 2002, the award of public service contracts by the Commission was governed by the provisions of Section 1 (Articles 56 to 64 bis) of Title IV of the Financial Regulation of 21 December 1977 applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 1977 L 356, p. 1), as amended by Council Regulation (EC, ECSC, Euratom) No 2673/99 of 13 December 1999 (OJ 1999 L 326, p. 1), which came into force on 1 January 2000 ('the Financial Regulation').

2 According to Article 56 of the Financial Regulation:

'When concluding contracts for which the amount involved is equal to or greater than the threshold provided for by the Council directives on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works, supplies and service contracts, each institution shall comply with the same obligations as are imposed upon bodies in the Member States by those directives.

The implementing measures provided for in Article 139 shall include appropriate provisions to that end.'

3 Article 139 of the Financial Regulation provides as follows:

'In consultation with the European Parliament and the Council and after the other institutions have delivered their opinions, the Commission shall adopt implementing measures for this Financial Regulation.'

4 Pursuant to Article 139 of the Financial Regulation, the Commission adopted Regulation (Euratom, ECSC, EC) No 3418/93 of 9 December 1993 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of certain provisions of the Financial Regulation (OJ 1993 L 315, p. 1) ('the Implementing Rules'). Articles 97 to 105 and 126 to 129 of the Implementing Rules apply to the award of public service contracts.

5 In particular, Article 126 of the Implementing Rules provides as follows:

'The Council directives on public works, supplies and services shall be applicable to the award of contracts by the institutions whenever the amounts involved are equal to or greater than the amounts provided for in those directives.'

6 Article 3(2) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended by Directive 97/52/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 October 1997, also amending Directives 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public supply contracts and public works contracts respectively (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1), provides as follows:

'Contracting authorities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between different service providers.'

Background to the dispute

I – CORDIS

7 The present case concerns the general call for tenders ENTR/02/55 relating to the development and provision of the new version of services in support of the Community Research and Development Information Service (CORDIS) ('the call for tenders at issue'). CORDIS is an informatics tool which enables framework programmes for European research to be implemented. It is the principal publishing and communication service for prospective or existing participants and for other groups with an interest in a framework programme for European research. It consists of a multi-purpose platform which can be adapted to the user's needs, a portal for those involved in European research and innovation and a tool for the dissemination of information to the public.

8 As of 1998, all the support services for CORDIS were supplied by a single contractor, namely Intrasoft International SA ('the existing contractor').

9 The adoption of the Sixth Framework Programme of the European Community for research, technological development and demonstration activities contributing to the creation of the European Research Area and to innovation (2002-2006) by Decision No 1513/2002/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 27 June 2002 (OJ 2002 L 232, p. 1) marked the beginning of a new phase in the implementation of CORDIS. For that new phase, the Commission decided to launch a call for tenders and to divide the project in question in the present case into five lots.

II – The call for tenders at issue, the successful tenderer and the award of the contested contract

10 On 13 February 2002, the prior information notice for the invitation to tender at issue was published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities (OJ S 31). A prior information notice modifying it was published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities of 7 August 2002 (OJ S 152).

11 On 20 November 2002, the contract notice for Lots 1 to 3 was published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities (OJ S 225).

12 Volume A of the tendering specifications for the call for tenders at issue, entitled 'the general part', ('Volume A of the tendering specifications') states, inter alia, as follows:

'Preamble

This is Volume A, the general part of the tendering specifications, applicable to all 5 lots.

For the specific parts, please refer to:

...

Lot 2 – Development

(development and maintenance of the technical infrastructure of all services)

1.3 Start date and duration of the contract

The contracts are expected to be signed in June 2003 and to start on the 1st of July 2003.

The first three months of the contracts are the "running-in phase" of the contracts.

Running-in serves the purpose to enable [sic] non-incumbent contractors to familiarise [themselves] with the CORDIS service. The previous contract specifies a "handover". New contractors will thus be able to access the service operations in order to prepare themselves for takeover of the services ... [at] the latest by the end of the running-in phase.

The running-in is not paid [sic].

It is not excluded, subject to the approval of the CPO and subject to the agreement of the existing contractor, that parts or all of the service are already taken over during the running-in phase (for payment of services taken over during the running-in phase, see point 1.7).

1.7 Payment

Payment for each lot shall be made within the delay [sic] fixed by the Commission's internal regulations for payment as follows:

– in [the] case that parts or all of the service are taken over by the new Contractor during the running-in phase (see 1.3), the new Contractor will be paid as of the date of successful takeover for the parts of the service taken over; ...

...

3.3 Evaluation of offers – award criteria

The contract will be awarded to the most cost-effective offer ("best value for money"), on the basis of the following award criteria:

– the qualitative award criteria

– the price

The first step in the assessment procedure is to evaluate the selected tender(s) according to the following qualitative award criteria and the corresponding weighting of each criterion.

Criterion	Qualitative award criteria	Weighting (max. points) for Lots 1, 2, 4, 5	Weighting (max. points) for Lot 3
1	Technical merit, conformity with the technical terms of reference and how these are addressed; proposed technical approach (functional completeness, compliance with technical requirements, appropriateness of proposed technology)	35	...
2	Quality of proposed methodology (working methods aiming at effectiveness, usability, security and confidentiality; service reliability / availability / recovery / maintenance; adopting best practices)	25	...
3	Creativity, degree of innovation (value of original ideas on how to innovate the service)	20	...
4	Quality of proposed schedule, contract management and control (proposed arrangements for the production of deliverables on time, and to ensure that the objectives and deadlines are met and quality is guaranteed)	20	...
5 ... (only for Lot 3)	...	...	...
	Total points	100	...

4. Technical specifications

Executive summary

There could be up to five independent Contractors to run the CORDIS service. These are specialising [sic] in the following way:

Lot 2 will assure [sic] the development of the technical infrastructure used by the other lots and the Commission, such as the Common Production System (CPS), the Web Content Management System (WCMS), the Information Dissemination System (IDS) with all its components (WWW server(s), FTP server(s), BBS, eMail server, firewall, LAN, WAN, broadband Internet access, etc.). Lot 2 will also develop new tools and features, some of which [are] for experimental purposes(s). Lot 2 will bring the know-how and the service-application software, whereas each other lot – and the Commission – will provide the underlying building blocks, i.e. hardware and software system(s), like [sic] database management system, router etc.

13 Volume B of the tendering specifications for the call for tenders at issue, entitled 'Lot 2 Development' ('Volume B of the tendering specifications') sets out the specifications for Lot 2. It provides, inter alia, as follows:

'6.2.1 Technical and functional evolution of the system architecture and processes

The following specifications – on the basis of the current state of CORDIS as of June 2002 and the predictable near future – concentrate on describing objectives and basic requirements of what is needed for the continuation and evolution of CORDIS. As far as the how is concerned, only minimal requirements are set out in these specifications. The Tenderer/Contractor will provide full information on how those requirements will be met.

6.2.3.3 Indexing, Specific Views and Taxonomies

The ability to present content using predefined profiles to reach targeted user communities and constituencies. Advanced meta-structure and tagging techniques would need to be applied to content objects. There exists the possibility to make use of available products to implement, for example, taxonomy building, but these should have long-term application and be consistent [compatible] with the CORDIS architecture.

6.8 Hand-over to the next Contractor

The Contractor will hand over to the next Contractor – respectively to the Commission, where the latter requests for them [sic] – all relevant objects, like [sic] requirements and design specifications, release plans, source code, procedures, test plans, migration plans, results, including full documentation in whatsoever form (paper and electronic). Also, the product licences, which have been acquired and/or taken over from the previous Contractor(s), will be orderly transferred [sic] to the next Contractor or to the Commission.'

14 On the same day, the Commission provided the prospective tenderers with a CD–ROM containing information on the computer equipment and the software in use at that time ('CD 1').

15 On 20 December 2002, the Commission provided the prospective tenderers with a second CD-ROM containing additional technical information ('CD 2').

16 At the end of December 2002, the Commission acquired a software product known as 'Autonomy', which is a contextual search tool enabling the final users of CORDIS to carry out targeted searches in the CORDIS data bases as well as multilingual terminological searches.

17 On 7 January 2003, an information day open to all prospective tenderers was organised by the Commission, as provided for in point 1.6 of Volume A of the tendering specifications.

18 On 5 February 2003, the Commission published on a temporary website specifically dedicated to the call for tenders at issue a list reiterating all the existing computer equipment and all the software in use at that time ('the asset list').

19 On 18 February 2003, the Commission also published on that site a document entitled 'Superquest – Implementation of Release 6 and beyond'. That document, which is dated 6 February 2003 and is called a 'draft', was drawn up by the existing contractor. It contained technical specifications for implementing the Autonomy software as well as a recommendation to acquire it.

20 On 9 March 2003, the applicant, Evropaïki Dynamiki – Proigmena Systimata Tilepikoinonion Pliroforikis kai Tilematikis AE, in consortium with a Belgian company, submitted a tender for Lot 2 of the project ('the contested contract').

21 The deadline for the submission of tenders laid down in the tendering specifications was set for 19 March 2003.

22 The tenders were opened on 26 March and 1 April 2003.

23 The Evaluation Committee met on several occasions between 27 March and 19 June 2003.

24 On 19 June 2003, the Evaluation Committee produced a report which included, inter alia, as regards the applicant's tender, the following comments:

Criteria	Comments	Points
1. Technical merit, conformity with the technical terms of reference …	Proposed technical platform based on J2EE (following FP6, eEurope etc), based on top of NCA but little detail on how NCA will be developed and maintained. Good generic justification of J2EE and associated benefits. WCMS proposal dependent on EC choice; assumes functions delivered by chosen WCMS. Search etc functionality assumptions based on Autonomy, mostly descriptive and including material copied from CORDIS Release 6 user requirements available from CFT2002 website. … … Generally, the understanding of the requirements and the necessary technology is well covered and encourages high marks. However, there is too much unnecessary detail and redundant material and a lack of concrete proposals. Too many 'will be considered' and 'solutions will be provided' with no substance.	21.6/35
2. Quality of proposed methodology …	… … … Good but generic mention of design patterns and software reuse. … …	14.8/25
3. Creativity, degree of innovation …	… … …	12.8/20
4. Quality of proposed schedule, contract management and control …	… … … … … …	12.8/20

25 The Evaluation Committee finally proposed that the tender of the Belgian company Trasys should be accepted for the contested contract. It based its decision on the results of a qualitative and financial evaluation of the applicant and Trasys, which were set out as follows:

	Qualitative aw points

Name			1 (3
Applicant	21.6	14.8	12
Trasys	25.6	16.2	14

Name	Total price (€)	Points – quality	Ratio – Value for money
Applicant	6 095 001.16	62.0	10.17
Trasys	5 543 392.07	69.6	12.56

26 On 6 July 2003, the Commission decided to accept the Evaluation Committee's recommendation and to award the contested contract to Trasys ('the successful tenderer'). The successful tenderer stated in its tender that, subject to how the work under the contested contract progressed, at least 35% of it would be subcontracted to the existing contractor.

27 By letter of 1 August 2003, the Commission informed the applicant that its tender had not been accepted.

Procedure and forms of order sought by the parties

28 The applicant brought the present action by application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 30 September 2003.

29 The applicant claims that the Court should:

– annul the decision of the Commission to evaluate its tender as unsatisfactory;

– order the Commission to re-evaluate its tender;

– order the Commission to pay the costs.

30 The defendant contends that the Court should:

– dismiss the application;

– order the applicant to pay the costs.

31 By letter lodged at the Court Registry on 16 September 2004, the applicant sought leave to reply to the rejoinder in writing.

32 On 26 October 2004, the Court informed the applicant of its decision to refuse such leave.

33 Upon hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court of First Instance decided to open the oral procedure and, by way of measures of organisation of procedure provided for by Article 64 of its Rules of Procedure, it requested the parties, by letter of 20 June 2006, to reply in writing to additional questions.

34 By letters lodged at the Court Registry on 30 June 2006, the parties replied to the written questions of the Court.

35 The parties presented oral argument and answered the questions put to them by the Court at the hearing on 13 July 2006.

36 By letter of 24 July 2006, the applicant provided additional explanations of its oral submissions.

37 On 14 September 2006, the Court decided to reopen the oral procedure.

38 By letters of 15 September 2006, the Court requested the applicant to produce in writing the calculation which it had carried out in the course of the hearing and to explain each of its separate stages.

39 The applicant replied to that request by letter lodged on 26 September 2006.

40 By letter lodged on 22 November 2006, the Commission set out its observations on the applicant's written response.

41 On 6 December 2006, the Court decided to close the oral procedure.

Law

I – Scope of the application for annulment

42 By the first head of claim in its application, the applicant seeks annulment of the Commission's decision to evaluate its tender as unsatisfactory. By its second head of claim, the applicant seeks an order that the Commission re-evaluate its tender.

43 As regards the first head of claim, it must be noted that the Commission did not decide that the applicant's tender was unsatisfactory.

44 Moreover, by writing on the copy of the decision to award the contested contract which was submitted to the Court as an annex to the application the words 'contested measure', the applicant itself indicated that it considered that measure to be the subject of its application for annulment.

45 As a consequence, the first head of claim seeks annulment of the decision to award the contested contract to a tenderer other than the applicant, whose tender was considered to be better ('the contested decision').

46 As regards the second head of claim, it is settled case-law that the Community judicature is not entitled, when exercising judicial review of legality, to issue directions to the institutions; rather, it is for the administration concerned to adopt the necessary measures to implement a judgment given in proceedings for annulment (Case T-67/94 Ladbroke Racing v Commission [1998] ECR II-1, paragraph 200, and Joined Cases T-374/94, T-375/94, T–384/94 and T–388/94 EuropeanNight Services and Others v Commission [1998] ECR II–3141, paragraph 53).

47 Accordingly, the applicant's second head of claim must be rejected as inadmissible in so far as it seeks an order that directions be issued to the Commission.

II – The application for annulment of the contested decision

A – Pleas in law

48 In support of its action for annulment, the applicant puts forward four pleas in law, which are divided into a number of parts.

49 By its first plea, the applicant submits that the Commission failed, first, to communicate the information requested by the applicant and, second, to give sufficient reasons for its decisions. In particular, first of all, it considers that the Commission responded to a request for information made during the tendering procedure only after the closing date for submitting tenders. Secondly, the applicant considers that the Commission failed to provide it with full extracts of an alleged favourable recommendation made to the Advisory Committee on Procurement and Contracts in respect of its tender and that of the successful tenderer. Thirdly, the applicant considers that the Commission failed to make available to it information on the names of the successful tenderer's subcontractors. Fourthly, the applicant claims that an additional committee, not provided for in the Implementing Rules, participated in the evaluation of the tenders. By its second plea, the applicant submits that the Commission infringed the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers laid down in Article 126 of the Implementing Rules and in Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50, first of all, by laying down a requirement in the tendering specifications for an unpaid running-in phase and, secondly, by failing to make available to all prospective tenderers various relevant technical information from the beginning of the tendering procedure. By its third plea, the applicant maintains that the Commission committed manifest errors in the assessment of its tender and in the assessment of the successful tenderer's tender. Lastly, in its reply, the applicant submits that the Commission failed to define clear and objective evaluation rules for the call for tenders at issue.

50 The Court considers that it is appropriate to examine at the outset the second plea since the applicant claims that the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers was infringed from the beginning of the tendering procedure.

B – The second plea, alleging infringement of the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers

51 The second plea is based, first, on the requirement for an unpaid three-month running-in phase and, second, on the lack of access to certain technical information.

1. The first part of the second plea, concerning the requirement for an unpaid three-month running-in phase

a) Arguments of the parties

52 The applicant submits that the Commission infringed the general prohibition of discrimination as between tenderers, which is recognised as a general principle of Community law and is laid down in Article 56 of the Financial Regulation and in Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50. It claims that the requirement for an unpaid running-in period imposes a financial burden on all potential tenderers, with the exception of the existing contractor, which enjoys an equivalent advantage since it alone does not need to include in its financial offer the cost of three months' unpaid running-in activities.

53 The applicant submits that the fact that the existing contractor is a member of a 'consortium' with the successful tenderer, which was selected for the contested contract as a result of its lower financial offer, enabled the latter to enjoy a financial advantage which is contrary to the principle of the equal treatment as between tenderers.

54 The applicant is of the opinion that its tender would have obtained a higher ranking if its price/quality ratio had been calculated by disregarding the costs relating to the running-in phase. In that regard, the applicant submits that the costs of the running-in phase must be deducted from the cost of its tender.

55 Lastly, the applicant challenges the fifth paragraph of point 1.3 of Volume A of the tendering specifications. It is of the view that that provision makes it possible for the existing contractor to refuse to allow the new contractor to take over the services before the end of the three-month running-in period.

56 The defendant points out, first of all, that the successful tenderer and the existing contractor are not one and the same. The successful tenderer was simply to subcontract to the existing contractor and is, therefore, a new contractor for the contested contract.

57 The defendant considers, next, that the requirement for an unpaid running-in phase does not, of itself, constitute an infringement of the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers. It is obvious that, in order to take over such an important contract as the contract at issue, the new contractor could not be expected to be fully operational from the very first day. Since the running-in phase would, for each new contractor, be an acclimatisation phase, there would be no payment for that phase.

58 Consequently, the defendant rejects the argument that the successful tenderer benefited unduly from certain financial advantages.

59 With regard to the applicant's claim that the take-over of the services during the running-in phase was dependent on the goodwill of the existing contractor, the defendant submits that the earlier contract concluded with the existing contractor imposed an obligation to prepare in a timely fashion for the takeover of the services by the new contractor. Furthermore, the existing contractor was obliged to cooperate fully with the new contractor.

b) Findings of the Court

(i) Preliminary remarks

60 As has been recognised by established case-law, in accordance with the principle of equal treatment, comparable situations must not be treated differently and different situations must not be treated in the same way (Joined Cases 117/76 and 16/77 Ruckdeschel and Others [1977] ECR 1753, paragraph 7, and Case 106/83 Sermide [1984] ECR 4209, paragraph 28).

61 In the field of public procurement, the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers assumes a very particular importance. Indeed, it is apparent from the well-established case-law of the Court of Justice that the contracting authority is required to comply with the principle that tenderers should be treated equally (Joined Cases C-285/99 and C–286/99 Lombardini and Mantovani [2001] ECR I-9233, paragraph 37, and Case C–315/01 GAT [2003] ECR I–6351, paragraph 73).

62 It is necessary to consider the first part of the second plea in the light of the principles set out above.

(ii) The alleged infringement of the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers

(1) General observations

63 It is to be recalled, first of all, that the applicant complains that the Commission failed to adhere to the principle of equal treatment by reason of the requirement in the tendering specifications for an unpaid running-in phase.

64 In the light of the case-law (see Case T-160/03 AFConManagement Consultants and Others v Commission [2005] ECR II–981, paragraph 75 and the case-law cited), according to the applicant, the Commission undermined the equality of opportunity that should be enjoyed by all tenderers.

(2) Whether the requirement for an unpaid running-in phase is discriminatory

General observations

65 The applicant maintains that the Commission failed to adhere to the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers, as laid down in Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50 and in Article 126 of the Implementing Rules.

66 It must be noted in that regard that, according to point 1.7 of Volume A of the tendering specifications, the requirement for an unpaid running-in phase is applicable without distinction to all tenders.

67 The question therefore arises as to whether the requirement in the tendering specifications for an unpaid running-in phase is, by its nature, discriminatory.

Whether the requirement for an unpaid running-in phase entails an inherent advantage for the existing contractor and a tenderer connected to that party by virtue of a subcontract

68 The requirement for a running-in phase enabling the new contractor to become familiar with the earlier version of the technology which it is required to replace seeks to ensure that the quality of the services to be provided is maintained at a high level during that phase. It must be noted that this is a phase during which, on the one hand, the provision of the services in question is still remunerated on the basis of the contract concluded with the existing contractor and, on the other hand, the new contractor is not yet in a position fully to guarantee the quality of services required for the application of the new version of the technology. Thus, the provision for a running-in phase is in the interest of the new contractor itself, since it enables that party in a timely fashion to become fully acquainted with technology with which it will be required to work at a time when it can provide only limited services. In view of the foregoing considerations, the fact that such a phase is unpaid is not, therefore, as such, discriminatory.

69 Nevertheless, according to the applicant, in the present case it is the specific situation in which the existing contractor is placed after the publication of the tendering specifications providing for an unpaid running-in phase, namely that it is envisaged that that party will be the subcontractor of one of the tenderers for the contested contract, which makes such a requirement discriminatory.

70 In that regard, it should be pointed out that the fact that an advantage may be conferred upon an existing contractor by a running-in phase is not the consequence of any conduct on the part of the contracting authority. Unless such a contractor were automatically excluded from any new call for tenders or, indeed, were forbidden from having part of the contract subcontracted to it, it is inevitable that an advantage will be conferred upon the existing contractor or the tenderer connected to that party by virtue of a subcontract, since it is inherent in any situation in which a contracting authority decides to initiate a tendering procedure for the award of a contract which has been performed, up to that point, by a single contractor. That fact constitutes, in effect, an 'inherent de facto advantage'.

71 The Court of Justice recently held that Directive 92/50 and the other directives concerning the award of public contracts precluded a national rule whereby a tenderer which has been instructed to carry out research, experiments, studies or development in connection with public works, supplies or services is not permitted to apply to submit a tender for those works, supplies or services and where that tenderer is not given the opportunity to prove that, in the circumstances of the case, the experience which it has thus acquired was not capable of distorting competition (Joined Cases C–21/03 and C–34/03 Fabricom [2005] ECR I–1559, paragraph 36).

72 If, according to that judgment, even the exceptional knowledge acquired by a tenderer as a result of work directly connected with the preparation of the tendering procedure in question by the contracting authority itself could not therefore lead to it automatically being excluded from that procedure, there must therefore be even less ground for excluding that tenderer from participating where such exceptional knowledge derives solely from the fact that it participated in the preparation of the call for tenders in collaboration with the contracting authority.

Whether the advantage inherent in the requirement for an unpaid running-in phase should be neutralised 73 It also follows from the case-law cited at paragraph 71 above that the principle that tenderers should be treated equally does not place any obligation upon the contracting authority to neutralise absolutely all the advantages enjoyed by a tenderer where the existing contractor is a subcontractor of that party.

74 To accept that it is necessary to neutralise in all respects the advantages enjoyed by an existing contractor or a tenderer connected to that party by virtue of a subcontract would, moreover, have consequences that are contrary to the interests of the service of the contracting institution in that such neutralisation would entail additional cost and effort for that institution.

75 Nevertheless, in order to comply with the principle of equal treatment in this particular situation, a balance must be struck between the interests involved.

76 Thus, in order to protect as far as possible the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers and to avoid consequences that are contrary to the interests of the service of the contracting institution, the potential advantages of the existing contractor or a tenderer connected to that party by virtue of a subcontract must none the less be neutralised, but only to the extent that it is technically easy to effect such neutralisation, where it is economically acceptable and where it does not infringe the rights of the existing contractor or the said tenderer.

77 With regard to the balancing of the interests concerned from an economic point of view, it must be recalled that the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers derives from the provisions in Section 1 (Articles 56 to 64 bis) of Title IV of the Financial Regulation. Article 2 of the Financial Regulation, which is one of the articles laying down the general principles in that regulation, states that '[t]he budget appropriations shall be used in accordance with the principles of economy and sound financial management'. Moreover, according to Article 248(2) EC, sound financial management constitutes a general rule of Community organisation laid down by the Treaty and the Court of Auditors of the European Communities ensures that that rule is complied with.

78 As is apparent from paragraph 68 above, in the present case, not only is the provision of the services in question during the running-in phase remunerated on the basis of the contract concluded with the existing contractor but also the new contractor is not yet at that stage in a position fully to guarantee the quality of the services required for the application of the new version of CORDIS. Moreover, the running-in phase not only ensures the optimum attainment of the quality objectives set out in the call for tenders but also affords the new contractor itself the opportunity for a period of acclimatisation.

79 Accordingly, given, first, that the rights of the existing contractor are not infringed and, secondly, that double payment for the running-in phase would be contrary to one of the principle objectives of the law governing the award of public contracts, which seeks, inter alia, to facilitate the acquisition of the service required in the most economic manner possible, it would be unreasonable, for the purposes of the performance of the contract in question, to waive the requirement for an unpaid running-in phase on the sole ground that one of the prospective tenderers may possibly be connected to the existing contractor by virtue of a subcontract.

80 It must therefore be concluded that, in the present case, the fact that a tenderer connected to the existing contractor by virtue of a subcontract may enjoy an advantage does not require the contracting authority to waive the requirement for an unpaid running-in phase in the tendering specifications in order to avoid an infringement of the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers.

(3) Whether it is possible to refuse to allow the new contractor to take over the services before the end of the three-month running-in period

81 As regards the claim that it is possible to refuse to allow the new contractor to take over the services before the expiry of the three-month running-in period, it must be noted that, according to point 1.3 of Volume A of the tendering specifications, '[i]t is not excluded, subject to the approval of the CPO and subject to the agreement of the existing contractor, that parts or all of the service are already taken over during the running-in phase'. Moreover, according to point 1.7 of Volume A of the tendering specifications, 'in [the] case that parts or all of the service are taken over by the new Contractor during the running-in phase (see 1.3), the new Contractor will be paid as of the date of successful takeover for the parts of the service taken over'.

82 The words 'subject to … the agreement of the existing contractor' must be understood in the light of all the conditions governing the takeover of the CORDIS support services and, in particular, those in the earlier contract concluded between the Commission and the existing contractor.

83 With regard to the take over of the CORDIS support services by the new contractor, it follows from point 3.2.1.2 of Annex II to the earlier contract, as amended by the second addendum, that the existing contractor was under an obligation to prepare for and contribute to a complete, timely and smooth takeover by the next contractors and to cooperate fully with the next contractors in order to achieve continuing high standards of quality for CORDIS support services during the takeover phase.

84 Therefore, short of contravening its contractual obligations, the existing contractor was, if necessary, under an obligation to comply with the requirements of any shortening of the three-month running-in phase, pursuant to its obligation of active cooperation.

85 Lastly, the applicant has failed to demonstrate how, from an economic standpoint, the existing contractor had any interest in hindering an early takeover of the CORDIS support services by a new contractor, given that the existing contractor did not, in any event, lose the right to be remunerated up to the end of its own contract.

86 It must therefore be concluded from the foregoing that the fifth paragraph of point 1.3 of Volume A of the tendering specifications does not permit the existing contractor to refuse to allow the new contractor to take over the CORDIS support services before the expiry of the three-month running-in period.

87 The argument put forward by the applicant in this regard must therefore be rejected.

88 In the light of the foregoing, the first part of the second plea in law must be rejected.

2. The second part of the second plea, relating to the failure to make available to all prospective tenderers various relevant technical information from the beginning of the tendering procedure

89 The applicant complains that the Commission failed to make available to all prospective tenderers two categories of relevant technical information, namely, first, information on the acquisition of the Autonomy software by the Commission and, second, information on the technical specifications and the source code for CORDIS.

a) Arguments of the parties

(i) Access to information on the acquisition of the Autonomy software

90 The applicant submits that the Commission failed to communicate in good time information on the acquisition of the Autonomy software to all prospective tenderers.

91 The tendering specifications and background technical documents made available to the prospective tenderers did not make any reference to the fact that, by acquiring the Autonomy software, a solution had in fact already been found to numerous technical problems encountered with CORDIS.

92 The applicant is of the view that the Autonomy software is the 'corner–stone' of CORDIS. It states that it is an intelligent operating system enabling operations to be automated for all forms of information used to conduct communication and business today. The core technology provides a platform for the automatic categorisation, hyper-linking, retrieval and profiling of unstructured information, making possible the automatic delivery of large volumes of personalised information.

93 The applicant explains that Lot 1 was concerned with the gathering and preparation of information and recommendations to the Commission on services for final users. A tender for Lot 1 could, therefore, state that there was a need for additional search software which, when a personal search is made, is able to make a distinction between certain information contained in CORDIS, such as the English word 'bank', meaning both 'bank' as an institution and 'river bank'. One of the aims of the contested contract was to find such solutions.

94 The applicant concludes from this that the lack of information on the acquisition of the Autonomy software at the beginning of the tendering procedure obliged it to redesign its whole technical architecture and to review the members of its team, since the introduction of the Autonomy software had an impact on a great number of other features.

95 By contrast, the successful tenderer, supported by its intended subcontractor, which was the existing contractor, was able to devote all its resources to preparing the best possible technical offer, using its privileged information.

96 The applicant disputes the Commission's contentions that it was open to the use of a better taxonomy system than that offered by the Autonomy software. According to the applicant, such an approach is contradictory in that it could lead to a situation in which the successful tenderer for Lot 1 based its proposal on the use of the Autonomy software and the successful tenderer for the contested contract proposed a solution based on a different taxonomy tool. Moreover, it is unlikely that the Commission, having spent a few hundred thousand euros on the Autonomy software, would take the risk that, at the conclusion of the tendering procedure in question, a tool other than that software would be chosen.

97 In the main, the defendant agrees with the applicant's descriptions of the functionality of the Autonomy software and the purpose of Lot 1 and the contested contract.

98 However, the defendant disputes the claim that its acquisition of the Autonomy software obliged the tenderers to review the architecture of the CORDIS system, given that that systematic classification tool does not form part of that architecture.

99 The defendant considers that the acquisition of the Autonomy software did not necessitate any change in the tendering specifications. It states that it remained open to any proposal for the acquisition of a taxonomy system that was better than that offered by the Autonomy software and to any other new ideas. Referring, in particular, to point 6.2.3.3 of Volume B of the tendering specifications, headed 'Indexing, Specific Views and Taxonomies', the Commission explains that the tenderers for the contested contract were obliged only to propose solutions which would enable complex searches to be carried out in CORDIS. Since the Autonomy software was on the market, the applicant could have included in its bid a proposal that that software or any other tool of that kind should be used. Thus, the second-placed tenderer submitted a very high–quality bid by proposing another system, which was 'innovative' as regards indexing and taxonomy.

100 At the hearing, in response to a question from the Court, the defendant stated that it had published, on a website specifically dedicated to the call for tenders at issue, information on the Autonomy software in response to a request from tenderers and did so with the sole aim of ensuring transparency.

(ii) Access to documentation on the technical architecture and source code for CORDIS

101 The applicant considers that the Commission failed to adhere to the principle that tenderers should be treated equally in that the successful tenderer enjoyed exclusive access to certain technical information and was thus able to submit a much more competitive bid than that of all the other tenderers, obliging the latter to submit higher financial offers.

102 The applicant states that the existing contractor had exclusive access to technical information as to the actual status of the project and, in particular, the CORDIS source code. The applicant submits that no relevant up to date technical information was communicated to the other tenderers, notwithstanding the fact that such information was available. The only useful information communicated to the prospective tenderers was a document describing the technical design specifications for the application which was in place and actually used by the Commission at the time of the call for tenders in question, as well as the detailed and well–documented source code for the application.

103 With regard to CD 1 and CD 2 and the asset list provided to the potential tenderers, the applicant submits that that technical information related only to the earlier version of CORDIS. That information covered only the period from May 2002 and consisted essentially of bulk statistical data and extremely limited and poor quality technical information, which was therefore outdated, obsolete or of limited value. Lastly, at the hearing, the applicant referred to the fact that, on CD 2, the pages containing the two diagrams of the design for the CORDIS architecture, namely 'Three-tier architecture' and 'Internet Application Server Architecture', were inadequate.

104 As regards the asset list, the applicant states that a majority of software programmes are machine-specific. A tenderer for the contested contract must therefore describe the applications proposed in a language and with a source code that is specific to those machines. It does not consider the asset list to be clear. Indeed, on the basis of the asset list, it was not possible to determine where the specific programmes for the machines available were to be found. In particular, it was not possible to determine which applications were hosted in which machines, nor the manner in which they were hosted.

105 As regards the importance of the source code for tenders for the contested contract, the applicant explains that a well–documented source code is the 'corner-stone' of any project relating to information technology. In the present case, if the source code is not known, CORDIS is a 'black box'. The applicant states that a tenderer must envisage a number of options, without ever being able to exhaust all of them, in order to attempt properly to address all possible situations which it may face in the implementation phase. Moreover, it considers that if, in spite of all of this, it is successful, it must bear a significant cost in analysing thousands of lines of unknown source codes and in producing the missing analysis and documentation.

106 The applicant adds that it is necessary to know the source code in order to calculate the tender price. The calculation of bids for contracts in the field of new technology, where an existing application is being taken over, is greatly facilitated by the use of specialist cost-calculating software, such as the software known as 'Cocomo2' (COnstructive-COst-MOdel). The number of source code lines constitutes the basic input for use of the Cocomo2 software. In fact, in order to use Cocomo2 software, the first information to be input is the estimated number of lines of source code.

107 With regard to the defendant's argument that its intention was to foster creativity, the applicant states that, in order to be able to design future projects, it was essential to have very precise and detailed knowledge of the earlier version of CORDIS. It submits that, even if a tenderer were very creative, it would fail if it had to prepare its bid on the basis of incorrect assumptions and incorrect guidelines.

108 The defendant maintains that the successful tenderer did not have privileged access to relevant information. That is demonstrated by the fact that the successful tenderer estimated more staff days than the applicant.

109 The defendant states that, during the tendering procedure, it made every effort to provide comprehensive information on the version of CORDIS in use. It points out that tasks were set in Volumes A and B of the tendering specifications. Additional information was provided at the Information Day held on 7 January 2003 and on the website specifically dedicated to the call for tenders in question.

110 With regard to the content of CD 1 and CD 2, the defendant states that CD 1 contained the specifications for the CORDIS architecture, in the version in use up to the end of the tendering procedure, as well as a special navigation tool designed to facilitate use of CD 1 by the tenderers. CD 2 contained the technical design specifications for CORDIS, test reports, conceptual diagrams of the CORDIS architecture, details of the applications, test plans and a user's guide, including a document for each data base. With regard to the two missing conceptual diagrams of the CORDIS architecture, that is, 'Three-tier Architecture' and 'Internet Application Server Architecture' (see paragraph 103 above), the defendant explains that these were not in fact visible. However, those architectures were described in the text and are standard information technology concepts which are not particular to the CORDIS system. The defendant also points out that it was informed of the fact that the two diagrams were not visible only on 14 March 2003, that is, on the Friday afternoon before the deadline for submitting tenders (19 March 2003). It made the missing diagrams available to the tenderers at midday on Tuesday 18 March 2003.

111 As regards the source code, the defendant expressly acknowledges that it was not made available to the tenderers. It states that the source code was neither necessary nor pertinent for the purposes of bidding and evaluation, nor, in particular, for cost calculations. The source code became relevant only at the point at which the services were to be handed over. That is why point 6.8 of Volume B of the tendering specifications provides that the existing contractor is to hand over to the new contractor all relevant objects, including, inter alia, the source code.

112 At the hearing, in response to questions from the Court, the defendant stated that, in its view, there was no particular reason, such as the protection of intellectual property rights, which could have prevented it from making the source code available to the prospective tenderers.

113 As regards the asset list, the defendant states that tenderers for the contested contract were not supposed to receive the bulk of the hardware and software available for the CORDIS project, since the bulk of such equipment was intended for Lot 3. It explains that, for the purpose of preparing tenders for future support services for CORDIS, taking account of the existing equipment was not necessarily the best solution, since some of the hardware is out of date. It was therefore provided in the tendering specifications that it was at the discretion of the tenderers to make alternative proposals.

114 In response to a question put by the Court at the hearing as to the reason for which the Commission had not made available all the technical information at the beginning of the tendering procedure, the Commission explained that, when the call for tenders was launched, the explanatory documents, in particular the asset list, were not yet ready. It therefore made those technical documents available to prospective tenderers only gradually as the preparatory work progressed. The defendant points out that the tendering procedure lasted four months, instead of the usual 36 days, and the prospective tenderers thus had sufficient time to adapt their bids in accordance with the new information. The defendant adds that the tendering specifications clearly state that provision would be made for missing information to be made available on the website specifically dedicated to the call for tenders in question at a later stage.

(iii) The impact on the applicant's bid of the fact that the applicant was not aware, or was aware only belatedly, of the acquisition of the Autonomy software, as well as the CORDIS technical architecture and source code

(1) The impact of the contested conduct of the Commission on the quality of the applicant's bid

115 In its argument concerning the alleged manifest errors of the Commission in its assessment of its bid and that of the successful tenderer (the third plea), the applicant disputes a number of allegedly negative comments in the Evaluation Committee's report on its bid.

116 The applicant submits that it is apparent from a number of negative comments made in the Evaluation Committee's report (see paragraph 24 above) that the missing technical information to which it was granted belated access had a negative impact on the assessment of the quality of its bid. With regard to the first award criterion, it refers to the first, second, third and sixth comments and, with regard to the second award criterion, to the fourth comment.

117 As regards the first award criterion and the first comment, the applicant considers essentially that, while some technical elements were succinctly described, that is simply because the accessible technical information was insufficiently detailed in that area. As regards the second comment, the applicant states that, since it did not have access to the information which was available to the existing contractor, it was obliged to 'develop lengthy scenarios' to cover all theoretically possible structures and practices. With regard to the third comment, it maintains that, while its bid was considered to be too descriptive as regards search and functionality assumptions, that is because the prospective tenderers had been made aware of the fundamental role of the Autonomy software in the CORDIS technical platform only at a very late stage. As regards the sixth comment, the applicant considers that, while its bid was considered to contain too much unnecessary detail and redundant material and to be lacking in concrete proposals, that is because its bid was based on the need to maintain in operation an existing information system, for which all the tenderers, with the exception of the existing contractor, did not have the full picture.

118 As regards the second award criterion and the fourth comment, the applicant submits that more CORDIS-specific discussion was not possible as that would have required more information on how CORDIS operated at that time. Only a tenderer with access to recent internal information could therefore have taken the risk of making firm statements in that regard.

119 The defendant disputes the assertion that the successful tenderer obtained higher marks as a result of its privileged access to information and material. In that regard, the defendant puts forward a number of examples to illustrate the weakness of the applicant's arguments.

120 With regard to the first award criterion, the Commission explains, in particular, that when the successful tenderer's bid was evaluated, it was criticised as being a technical proposal based on the existing system and lacking a fresh approach.

121 With regard to the second award criterion (fourth comment), the defendant refers, in particular, to point 6.2.1 of Volume B of the tendering specifications for the contested contract, according to which the tenderers were required only to describe the basic requirements of what is needed for the continuation and evolution of CORDIS and which stated that, as far as 'how' was concerned, the minimal requirements were set out in the tendering specifications.

(2) The impact of the contested conduct of the Commission on the price of the applicant's bid

122 In response to a written question by the Court, the applicant stated that, as information was missing or sent belatedly by the Commission during the tendering procedure, its bid was subject to a risk factor in the range of 25 to 30%. The risk factor as regards that information was broken down as follows:

– data base: 7%

– Autonomy software: 7%

– source code: 5%

– technical design specifications (logical design of the software) and documentation: 11%.

123 At the hearing, the applicant explained that it did those calculations using Cocomo2 software. In response to a question put by the Court, it clarified the purpose of the Cocomo2 software and how it functions.

124 Thus, Cocomo2 is based on a mathematical formula which takes as input the lines of source code and makes it possible to calculate the effort required to do any work based on them. The corresponding equation contains 22 parameters that represent equivalent real-life factors which influence the effort required to write a programme or implement any task related to a software application. The 5 parameters representing multiple-cost drivers are called 'Effort Multipliers' (EM) and the 17 parameters of additional costs are called 'Scale Factors' (SF).

125 Moreover, for each parameter, that model provides six possible ratings as well as detailed instructions for choosing the appropriate rating. The following ratings can thus be attributed to each parameter, depending on the case: 'Very Low', 'Low', 'Nominal', 'High', 'Very High' and 'Extra High'.

For each of those ratings, there is a corresponding value expressed in points. The number of points decreases in proportion to the rating given – i.e. the higher the rating attributed to the parameter, the lower the number of points will be.

126 The estimated effort for a project with a source code of a given size is expressed in person/months (PM) and is evaluated according to the following formula (A and B being constants):

$$PM = A \times size\ \ of\ \ code\ source^{E} \times \prod_{i=1}^{n} ME$$

$$E = B + 0{,}01 \times \sum_{j=1}^{5} FE$$

127 According to the applicant, in the case of the call for tenders at issue, it can be assumed that the 22 parameters will be evaluated in the same manner for each of the tenderers, regardless of their prior knowledge of CORDIS and the material available in the call for tenders at issue, with the exception of the two parameters representing, first, knowledge of the design of the application that is to be developed and, second, the environment used by the application, namely the 'PREC parameter', relating to the degree of familiarity, and the 'AEXP parameter', relating to experience of the application. The 'PREC parameter' is one of the 17 SF. The 'AEXP parameter' is one of the 5 EM.

128 According to the applicant, the formula set out at paragraph 126 above can be applied twice in order to calculate the impact in the two following cases:

– in the case of a tenderer who is very familiar with the earlier version of CORDIS, assuming that the rating 'Very High' will therefore be attributed for both the PREC and the AEXP parameters;

– in the case of a tenderer who has a very limited knowledge of the earlier version of CORDIS, assuming that the rating 'Very Low' will therefore be attributed for both the PREC and the AEXP parameters.

129 According to the applicant, by taking, for the purpose of that calculation, a source code estimated at 5 000 lines, the result will be an estimated effort of 15.4 PM for the bid of the tenderer in the first situation and an estimated effort of 25.9 PM for the bid of the tenderer in the second situation. That means that the estimated effort for the applicant would be approximately 40% higher than that in the case of a tenderer who is very familiar with all the technical information and the source code for the earlier version of CORDIS. The applicant also submits that, even if, for the purpose of the comparison, parameters corresponding to the ratings 'High' and 'Low', or indeed 'High' and 'Very Low', were to be substituted, there would still be a difference of 30%.

130 The defendant considers, first, that the calculations made using Cocomo2 software should be undertaken by an independent expert appointed for that purpose.

131 The defendant states that the applicant's decision as to the ratings to be attributed to the PREC and AEPX parameters was subjective. The defendant points out that, in the tender documentation, the applicant presented itself as an organisation with great experience in the field of information technology and communication, whereas now, in putting forward the risk factor created by the alleged lack of technical information, it presents itself as a tenderer with below average knowledge in that field.

132 The defendant doubts whether the basis on which the applicant gives itself a 'Very Low' rating score for the PREC and AEXP parameters is justified. It states that, for the purpose of the calculation using the Cocomo2 software, the applicant should have used the 'Nominal' rating for those parameters.

133 The defendant also disputes the 'Very High' rating score given by the applicant to the successful tenderer. In so doing, the applicant disregards the fact that the successful tenderer is not totally familiar with the CORDIS system either, even allowing for the fact that part of the contested contract was to be subcontracted to the existing contractor.

134 With regard, first, to the PREC parameter, the defendant explains that it deals with the following matters: the understanding of the undertaking in question of product objectives, experience of working with related software systems, the concurrent development of associated new hardware and operational procedures and the need for innovative data processing architecture (algorithms). The defendant doubts whether the applicant can properly categorise itself as 'Very Low' in respect of all those matters. That would mean that it has a 'general' understanding of the product objectives, 'moderate experience' and 'extensive need' for concurrent development and 'considerable need' for innovative data processing algorithms.

135 With regard, secondly, to the AEXP parameter, the defendant explains that the applicant once again gives itself a 'Very Low' score rating, which indicates less than two months' experience of the application concerned. The applicant thus claims that it is not at all familiar with the kind of project with which the call for tenders at issue is concerned and that its team has very limited experience of that kind of application.

136 The defendant is of the view, secondly, that the applicant has failed to explain the breakdown of the 30% risk factor into a number of elements relating, respectively, to the data bases (7%), the Autonomy software (7%), the source code (5%) and the technical design specifications (11%).

137 The Commission considers that the 11% increase in respect of person/day costs attributed to the alleged failure to communicate the technical specifications must be discounted, since those technical specifications were indeed made available to the applicant. Moreover, the fact that the two diagrams of the CORDIS architecture were not visible on CD 2 does not amount to a risk factor of 11%.

138 The defendant also disputes the 7% increase in costs attributed to the fact, as alleged, that it became aware only belatedly of the acquisition of the Autonomy software, given that that software is well known on the market.

139 Finally, the defendant questions whether the source code warrants only a 5% risk factor, when, in its view, the applicant's whole contention was that the failure to provide the technical design specifications (to which it gives an 11% rating) and the source code was a very serious matter.

b) Findings of the Court

(i) Preliminary remarks

140 By maintaining that the Commission granted access to certain essential information only to the successful tenderer, the applicant claims that the Commission failed to adhere to the principle that there should be no discrimination as between tenderers.

141 First of all, it is to be borne in mind that the principle of equal treatment is of particular importance in the field of public procurement (see paragraphs 60 to 61 above). In the context of such a procedure, the Commission is required to ensure, at each stage of the procedure, equal treatment and, thereby, equality of opportunity for all the tenderers (see AFCon Management Consultants and Others v Commission, paragraph 75 and the case-law cited).

142 The case-law demonstrates that the principle of equal treatment implies in particular an obligation of transparency so that it is possible to verify that that principle has been complied with (Case C-92/00 HI [2002] ECR I–5553, paragraph 45, and Case C–470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I–11617, paragraph 91).

143 Under the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers, the aim of which is to promote the development of healthy and effective competition between undertakings taking part in a public procurement procedure, all tenderers must be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their tenders, which therefore implies that the tenders of all competitors must be subject to the same conditions (see, to that effect, Case C–19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I–7725, paragraph 34, and Universale-Bau and Others, paragraph 93).

144 The principle of transparency, which is its corollary, is essentially intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority. It implies that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the notice or tendering specifications (Case C-496/99 P Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta [2004] ECR I-3801, paragraphs 109 to 111).

145 The principle of transparency therefore also implies that all technical information relevant for the purpose of a sound understanding of the contract notice or the tendering specifications must be made available as soon as possible to all the undertakings taking part in a public procurement procedure in order, first, to enable all reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderers to understand their precise scope and to interpret them in the same manner and, secondly, to enable the contracting authority actually to verify whether the tenderers' bids meet the criteria of the contract in question.

(ii) The alleged unequal treatment by comparison with the successful tenderer as regards access to certain technical information

(1) General observations

146 First of all, the applicant complains that the Commission failed to adhere to the principle of equal treatment because of an alleged delay in making certain technical information available to the tenderers, with the exception of the successful tenderer. In the light of the case-law cited at paragraphs 60 and 61 and at paragraphs 141 to 144 above, the Commission undermined the equality of opportunity of all the tenderers as well as the principle of transparency, which is the corollary of the principle of equal treatment.

147 Next, even on the assumption that it were correct, such an undermining of equality of opportunity and the principle of transparency would constitute a defect in the pre-litigation procedure adversely affecting the right of the parties concerned to information. According to settled case-law, a procedural defect can lead to the annulment of the decision in question only if it is shown that, but for that defect, the administrative procedure could have had a different outcome if the applicant had had access to the information in question from the beginning of that procedure and if there was even a small chance that the applicant could have brought about a different outcome to the administrative procedure (see Case C-194/99 P Thyssen Stahl v Commission [2003] ECR I-10821, paragraph 31 and the case-law cited, and Joined Cases T-191/98 and T-212/98 to T-214/98 Atlantic Container Line and Others v Commission [2003] ECR II-3275, paragraphs 340 and 430).

148 In that connection, the Court will examine, first of all, whether the unequal treatment alleged, consisting in a delay in providing the tenderers other than the successful tenderer with certain technical information, constitutes, as such, a procedural defect in that information that was in fact necessary for the preparation of the tenders was not made available to all the tenderers as soon as possible.

149 If such a defect is established, the Court will then examine whether, but for that defect, the procedure could have had a different outcome. From that point of view, such a defect can constitute an infringement of the equality of opportunity of tenderers only in so far as the explanations provided by the applicant demonstrate, in a plausible and sufficiently detailed manner, that the procedure could have had a different outcome as far as it was concerned.

(2) The late provision by the Commission of certain technical information

150 The Court notes, first of all, that the successful tenderer was fully aware of all the technical specifications for the CORDIS data bases as well as for the Autonomy software before the opening of the tendering procedure, given that its subcontractor, which, according to the tender submitted, was to carry out at least 35% of the proposed tasks, was the existing contractor at the time when the tendering procedure was opened.

151 Moreover, it is not disputed that the Commission had at its disposal technical specifications for the CORDIS data bases before the opening of the tendering procedure, namely at the end of November 2002.

152 Nor does the defendant dispute the fact that it made the technical specifications for the CORDIS data bases available to all the prospective tenderers only gradually during the tendering procedure.

153 In fact, the Commission only made available part of the technical specifications for the CORIDS data bases one month after the tendering procedure had opened, on 20 December 2002, on CD 2, and only published further technical information, in the asset list, on 5 February 2003, that is, only six weeks before the deadline for submitting tenders expired.

154 The justification put forward by the defendant, namely that it had not yet prepared all the information at the beginning of the tendering procedure, must be rejected since, in order to ensure that all prospective tenderers enjoyed equality of opportunity, it could have waited until it was in a position to make all the information in question available to all prospective tenderers in order to launch that tendering procedure.

155 The Court finds, next, that, given that its intended subcontractor for the performance of part of the contested contract was the incumbent contractor at the time of the opening of the tendering procedure, the successful tenderer was in a position, from the beginning of the tendering procedure, to have full knowledge of how the Autonomy software operated, since a trial version had been installed in the version of CORDIS in operation at that time. Moreover, the intended subcontractor of the successful tenderer was also involved in the preparation for the acquisition of the Autonomy software by the Commission, which took place during the tendering procedure. It is thus highly likely that the successful tenderer was fully aware of that acquisition from the outset.

156 The defendant does not dispute that the other tenderers were informed of that acquisition only via the publication of the document entitled ‘Superquest – Implementation of Release 6 and beyond’ on 18 February 2002, that is, only a month before the deadline for submitting tenders expired.

157 Therefore, the Court finds that the Commission made available to all the prospective tenderers information on the technical specifications for the CORDIS data bases and information on the acquisition of the Autonomy software only gradually during the tendering procedure, whereas the successful tenderer had that information from the beginning of that procedure, since it was provided that it would subcontract part of the contested contract to the existing contractor.

(3) Whether it is necessary to neutralise the advantages enjoyed by the successful tenderer

158 What is to be borne in mind in this regard are the considerations relating to the examination as to whether it is discriminatory to lay down a requirement for an unpaid running-in phase in the tendering specifications (see paragraphs 68 to 80 above), in which it was stated that the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers requires that the potential advantages that may be enjoyed by the existing contractor or the tenderer connected to that party by virtue of a subcontract must be neutralised only to the extent that it is not necessary for such advantages to be maintained, that is to say, where it is easy to effect such neutralisation, where it is economically acceptable and where it does not infringe the rights of the existing contractor or the said tenderer.

159 In the present case, the Commission had full information on the technical specifications for the CORDIS data bases at its disposal from the beginning of the tendering procedure in question. It could therefore easily have made it available to all the tenderers in the form of an annex to the tendering specifications. Moreover, it is clear that it could also have easily informed all the prospective tenderers, without incurring additional costs, of the acquisition of the Autonomy software immediately after it had taken place, namely at the end of December 2002. Lastly, it must be noted that the defendant expressly acknowledges that there was no particular reason, such as the protection of intellectual property rights, which could have prevented it from making the source code available to third parties.

160 It follows from the foregoing that, in the present case, in accordance with the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers, the advantages enjoyed by the existing contractor or by the successful tenderer must be neutralised. Consequently, it is apparent that the unequal treatment consisting in a delay in making certain technical information available to the tenderers, with the exception of the successful tenderer, constitutes a procedural defect.

161 It is therefore necessary to examine whether, but for that defect, the tendering procedure in question could have had a different outcome.

(iii) The relevance to the bids for the contested contract of the information belatedly made available by the Commission

162 If it were established that the information belatedly provided to the tenderers other than the successful tenderer was irrelevant for the purpose of preparing bids for the contested contract, a delay in communicating that information would not, in any event, represent an advantage for the successful tenderer and would not therefore constitute a procedural defect amounting to an infringement of the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers, as the applicant claims.

(1) The relevance of the information on the acquisition of the Autonomy software

163 With regard to the relevance of the information on the acquisition of the Autonomy software, the Court notes, first of all, that it is apparent from the parties' common descriptions that that software is a complex classification tool enabling final users to carry out searches in a number of contexts and, in particular, in a number of languages.

164 Secondly, it is clear from the description of the contested contract at point 4 of Volume A of the tendering specifications that tenderers for that contract were required in their bids to submit proposals which could ensure the development of the technical infrastructure used by the contractors for the other lots and the Commission, such as, for example, 'the Web Content Management System', and that the successful tenderer for the contested contract was also required to 'develop new tools and features, some of which [are] for experimental purposes'.

165 Thirdly, account must be taken of the fact that, according to point 6.2.3.3 of Volume B of the tendering specifications, headed 'Indexing, Specific Views and Taxonomies', there exists for the tenderers for the contested contract 'the possibility to make use of available products to implement, for example, "taxonomy building", but these should have long-term application and be consistent with the CORDIS architecture'.

166 It is apparent from the description of the tasks to be carried out by a tenderer for the contested contract and from point 6.2.3.3 of Volume B of the tendering specifications that the tenderers for the contested contract were free to propose any complex taxonomy software available on the market, including the Autonomy software.

167 It follows that the simple fact that the Commission purchased the Autonomy software during the tendering procedure did not lead it to evaluate a bid proposing a different complex research tool less favourably.

168 For the sake of completeness, that finding is also supported by the fact that the evaluation report states, with regard to the first award criterion, that the bid submitted by the second-placed tenderer for the contested contract was considered by the Evaluation Committee to be of very high quality, that tenderer having proposed another system, which was 'innovative' as regards indexing and taxonomy, which demonstrates that, in that regard, the Commission adhered to the relevant conditions laid down in the tendering specifications.

169 It follows that, throughout the tendering procedure, the knowledge that the Commission had acquired the Autonomy software could not have had any significance for the purpose of evaluating the bids.

170 In the light of the foregoing, the Court considers, with regard to the information on the acquisition of the Autonomy software, that the applicant has failed to demonstrate sufficiently how knowledge of the acquisition of the Autonomy software by the Commission could have constituted an advantage of any kind for the successful tenderer in bidding for the contested contract.

(2) The relevance of the information contained in the documentation on the CORDIS technical architecture and source code

171 First, as regards the allegedly incomplete documentation on the CORDIS technical architecture, the Court notes that the defendant does not dispute that the general purpose of the technical information on CD 1 and CD 2 was to supplement that already included in the tendering specifications.

172 Secondly, with regard to the asset list, the Court considers that the applicant explained convincingly, and in such a manner that the Commission has not been able to counter its assertions, that knowledge of the materials and software used at that time could have assisted in the preparation of the applications to be provided by a tenderer for the contested contract, since such a tenderer had to ensure, first, the interoperability of the new hardware and existing hardware and, second, that the new applications functioned with the existing hardware.

173 It follows that knowledge of the technical information made available belatedly by the Commission and contained on CD 1 and CD 2 as well as in the asset list could have constituted added value for tenders for the contested contract.

174 As regards the source code, point 4 of Volume A of the tendering specifications requires tenderers for the contested contract to put forward in their bids proposals which could ensure the development of the technical infrastructure used by the contractors for the other lots and the Commission, 'such as … the Web Content Management System' and 'the Information Dissemination System', and requires the successful tenderer for the contested contract to 'also develop new tools and features'. It is therefore apparent that prior knowledge of the basic technical information referred to in the above paragraphs represented an advantage for the purpose of drafting a tender. In fact, the management and dissemination of complex data to be provided by a contractor for Lot 1 of CORDIS are generally carried out by special application software.

175 There is therefore no doubt that full knowledge of the source code for the management and dissemination applications of the earlier version of CORDIS was necessary for the purpose of the development of new tools and features which could be integrated into the new version of CORDIS.

176 Moreover, the applicant has demonstrated convincingly that, in order to use the calculation model on which the Cocomo2 software is based – that software frequently being used to calculate the effort required to carry out a given project in the field of new technology – it is necessary to estimate the number of lines of source code for the project, and the defendant has not put forward any facts capable of countering that assertion.

177 Consequently, knowledge of the source code for the earlier version of CORDIS would clearly have been necessary in order for it to be possible to base the calculations for the source code for the new version on a reasonable estimate.

178 The Court therefore concludes that the fact that the existing contractor and the successful tenderer had exclusive knowledge of the technical architecture of CORDIS, of the hardware and software used at the time and, especially, of the source code was liable to confer upon that tenderer, at least in part, an unjustified advantage at the opening of the tendering procedure.

179 Accordingly, given that the defendant does not dispute that the technical information belatedly made available to the prospective tenderers could have constituted added value for the bids for the contested contract, it cannot be precluded that the contested conduct on the part of the Commission may have given rise to an advantage for the existing contractor and the successful tenderer in tendering for the contested contract.

180 Therefore, by failing to communicate certain technical information as soon as possible to all the tenderers, the Commission committed a breach of procedure by disregarding the applicant's right to be informed.

181 It is therefore necessary to determine whether that breach of procedure undermined the equality of opportunity of the tenderers in that, but for that breach, the tendering procedure at issue might have resulted in the contested contract being awarded to the applicant.

182 However, that would not be the case if, in spite of the fact that the Commission failed to provide all the tenderers from the beginning of the tendering procedure with all the technical information on the earlier version of CORDIS, it were to be established that the information thus withheld was irrelevant for the purpose of the applicant's bid.

(iv) The relevance to the applicant's bid of the information belatedly made available by the Commission for the applicant's bid

(1) The effect of the delay in making certain technical information available on the quality of the applicant's bid

183 In the light of the foregoing, the Court considers that the delay in communicating the technical information in question could potentially have entailed for all the tenderers, with the exception of the successful tenderer, wasted efforts and a waste of time, which could therefore have had an effect on the quality of the applicant's bid.

184 Notwithstanding that finding in principle, it must be noted that, in the present case, even full knowledge of the information in question could not, in any event, have had a decisive impact on the overall assessment of the applicant's bid.

185 First of all, the applicant submits that knowledge of that information would have improved, in particular, the value of its bid in terms of quality, in the light primarily of the first award criterion (technical merit) (see paragraph 117 above). It must be recalled that point 3.3 of Volume A of the tendering specifications provides that the maximum number of points that could be awarded under that criterion was 35 and that the applicant's bid was awarded 21.6 points.

186 Secondly, the applicant submits that the fourth comment on the second award criterion ('good but generic mention of design patterns and software reuse') is negative and that that is due to the fact that information on how CORDIS operated at that time was lacking. That assertion is too vague, given that it is apparent from point 6.2.1 of Volume B of the tendering specification that, with regard to the contested contract, the tenderers were required only to describe the basic requirements for the technical and functional development of the new version of CORDIS. Moreover, it is clear that that comment is only one of the six comments made in the assessment of the second award criterion, for which a maximum of 25 points can be awarded, 14.8 points being awarded to the applicant's bid.

187 In that regard, it is apparent from the table in the Evaluation Committee's report that the formula used to establish the most cost-effective offer for the purpose of point 3.3 of Volume A of the tendering specifications and to calculate the price-quality ratio of the various bids was as follows:

188 By applying that formula to the bid tendered by the applicant, that is, by inserting the total price of the applicant's bid (EUR 6 095 001.16) and, first, the maximum number of points attainable under the first award criterion (35) and, second, the number of points the applicant's bid was actually awarded under criteria Nos 2 to 4, namely 14.8, 12.8 and 12.8 points respectively (see paragraph 24 above), the following ratio is given:

$$\frac{(35+14.8+12.8+12.8) \times 1000000}{6\,09500116} = 12.37$$

189 Given that the successful tenderer obtained a price-quality ratio of 12.56, the calculation demonstrates that, even if the applicant had been able, from the beginning of the tendering procedure, to prepare its bid in full knowledge of the technical information which it was lacking or which was made available to it only belatedly, and even if, as a result of that, it had obtained the maximum number of points under the first qualitative criterion (namely 35 points), the price-quality ratio of its bid would, in any event, have been lower than that of the successful tenderer, as the price of the applicant's bid was relatively high.

190 The Court therefore finds that it is clear that, however much it might be criticised, the Commission's conduct could in any event, in the present case, have had any impact on the award of the contested contract to the successful tenderer only to the extent that the price of the applicant's bid was actually affected by the late provision of the technical information.

(2) The effect of the delay in making certain technical information available on the price of the applicant's bid

191 Having regard to the overall effect of the belated communication of the technical information in question, the Court asked the applicant to demonstrate how, in its view, the contested conduct on the part of the Commission had placed the applicant at a disadvantage in determining the price of its bid.

192 In response to that question, the applicant submitted calculations made using Cocomo2 software. That software enables an estimate to be given of the effort required in developing a computer project, which is expressed in PM.

193 It is clear that the defendant does not dispute that the calculation method thus used is a genuine method which is well established in the market.

194 On the contrary, far from calling into question the genuine nature of the Cocomo2 software, the defendant simply disputes the manner in which the applicant applied that software. Thus, it merely challenges, first, the ratings attributed to the PREC and AEXP parameters on which the applicant bases its calculations to demonstrate that its bid would have been 30% lower if it had had full knowledge, from the beginning of the tendering procedure, of all the technical information that was missing or communicated belatedly and, second, the specific break-down of the risk factor into a number of elements relating, respectively, to the data bases, the Autonomy software, the source code and the technical design specifications and documentation.

195 With regard, first of all, to the ratings attributed to the parameters which the applicant used to make its calculations, it is apparent that, in so far as the defendant's argument seeks to challenge those ratings, the defendant fails to have regard to the reason for which those calculations were undertaken.

196 In fact, the purpose of the calculations made using the Cocomo2 software is not to make a direct comparison between the applicant's bid and that of the successful tenderer. On the contrary, they demonstrate the difference between the price actually submitted by the applicant and the price which the applicant would probably have been able to offer if it had had full knowledge of the technical information that was missing or communicated belatedly.

197 For the purposes of that comparison in the abstract, the applicant correctly attributes the rating 'Very High' to the PREC and AEXP parameters in order to calculate in PM, first of all, the effort required for the hypothetical bid of a tenderer which had all the relevant technical information available to it from the beginning of the tendering procedure.

198 Moreover, with regard to the parameters for calculating the price actually bid by the applicant, it is clear that, even if, as the defendant proposes, the rating 'Nominal' is attributed to the PREC and AEXP parameters, on the basis of a calculation made using the standard Cocomo2 software formula (see paragraph 126 above), the result will be a value of approximately 19.8 PM for the hypothetical bid envisaged by the applicant. Such a result thus shows a difference in estimated effort of at least 22% between a bid submitted by a tenderer with full knowledge of all the necessary information and the bid of a tenderer with only average knowledge.

199 Consequently, the defendant's objections are not capable of affecting the applicant's argument that the lack of certain technical information or the delay in making it available resulted in a considerable increase in the price of its bid.

200 Secondly, with regard to the specific break-down of the risk factor into a number of elements relating, respectively, to the technical architecture, the CORDIS source code and the acquisition of the Autonomy software (see paragraph 122 above), the question to be decided is whether unequal treatment of the tenderers by the Commission could have had a significant effect on the applicant's bid. The break-down of the price increase factor is irrelevant in that context.

201 In fact, the calculations made by the applicant using the Cocomo2 software are essentially based on the general rating (ranging from 'Very Low' to 'Nominal') given to knowledge of the technical data of the earlier version of CORDIS, expressed by the PREC and AEXP parameters, the break-down according to different technical information being totally irrelevant. As a consequence, the defendant's objections in that regard must be rejected.

202 It is also to be recalled that the present examination is concerned with the effects of the procedural defect consisting in the delay in making available certain technical information that was necessary for the preparation of the tenders. As was held at paragraph 149 above, such a defect constitutes an infringement of the equality of opportunity of tenderers in so far as, but for that defect, the procedure could have had a different outcome for the applicant. Accordingly, there is no need to show that the contested contract would definitely have been awarded to the applicant. It is sufficient for the applicant to demonstrate that, but for that infringement, it would have had the chance of securing the contested contract.

203 In the light of the calculations made using the Cocomo2 software put forward by the applicant, the Court considers that it is credibly established that the lack of information available to the prospective tenderers on the documentation relating to the CORDIS technical architecture and source code could have had a considerable negative impact on the price bid by the applicant by depriving it of the chance of securing the contested contract.

204 In the light of the foregoing, it must be concluded that the Commission infringed the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers by failing to make available to all the prospective tenderers from the beginning of the tendering procedure the documentation relating to the CORDIS technical architecture and source code and that that infringement could thus have affected the award of the contested contract.

205 The second part of the second plea must therefore be upheld.

206 Consequently, without there being any need to examine the other pleas put forward by the applicant, the contested decision must be annulled, pursuant to Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50 and Article 126 of the Implementing Rules, on the ground that it infringed the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers.

Costs

207 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs, if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the defendant has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Third Chamber)

hereby:

1. Annuls the decision of the Commission of 16 July 2003 to award the contract which is the subject of the call for tenders ENTR/02/55 – CORDIS Lot 2;

2. Orders the Commission to pay the costs.

Action brought on 30 September 2003 by European Dynamics S.A. against the Commission of the European Communities

(Case T-345/03)

Language of the case: English

An action against the Commission of the European Communities was brought before the Court of First Instance of the European Communities on 30 September 2003 by European Dynamics S.A., Athens, (Greece), represented by S. Pappas, lawyer.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

listnum "WP List 1" \l 1annul the Commission's (ENTERPRISE DIRECTORATE GENERAL) decision to evaluate European Dynamics' tender as not successful; listnum "WP List 1" \l 1order the Commission (ENTERPRISE DIRECTORATE GENERAL) to re-evaluate the tender submitted by European Dynamics; listnum "WP List 1" \l 1order the Commission to pay European Dynamics' legal and other fees and expenses incurred in connection with this Application.

Pleas in law and main arguments:

The object of the present case is the annulment of the Decision of the European Commission to reject the applicants bid, filed in response to the Call of Tender ENTR/02/055 - CORDIS for the "Development and Provision of Services in support of the Community R&D Information Service (CORDIS)" Lot 2 "Development" (OJ 2002/S 225-178776). This Decision concluded that the TRASYS/Intrasoft International Consortium bid was superior to that of the applicant.

CORDIS, the European Commission's research and development information service, is an informatics tool offering practical information on the European research programs and funding opportunities, facilitating research results take up and and technology transfers, hosting services on European innovation, covering all research and innovation related news developments and providing a central access to European and National contact points

In support of its conclusions, the applicant submits that:

- The violation of the principles of transparency and non-discrimination, in as much as the provisions on non-paid running-in periods seriously restrict competition by favouring the incumbent contractor since it has been given major financial advantages by the contracting authority unilateral, which allowed it to submit an offer significantly cheaper that any other competitor. Besides, the time-limit for providing information about the role of Autonomy in CORDIS (Enterprise Directorate General addresses such information just four weeks before the tender submission deadline) has given a big advantage to the TRASYS/Intrasoft consortium in relation to other Lot 2 tenderers. Additionally, ensuring the call for tender procedure, all bidders -except the incumbent contractor - were prevented from having access to a number of highly critical technical information on the actual status of the CORDIS projects and particularly on the CORDIS DATABASE SERVICE. Moreover, the Commission declined to communicate to all tenderers significant and useful details on the HW/SW, scripts, technology and processes currently in use for operating the CORDIS database services, while, at the same time, it asked the tenderers to specify what part of that "unknown" equipment is to be taken over, whilst all this information was fully available to TRASYS/Intrasoft right from the beginning.

- The Commission's assessments are based on wrong or unfounded assumptions. Contrary to what has been stated by the Commission, the proposed platform by the applicant was explained in great detail. Concretely, the Commission wrongly assumed that the Service Delivery Framework was not ITIL and that there was no mention of Prince2. All other assessments are not supported by the data of the file.

The applicant also invokes a violation of the duty of motivation of the legal acts.

Cadre juridique

I – Réglementation en vigueur jusqu'au 31 décembre 2002

1 Au cours de la période antérieure au 31 décembre 2002, la passation des marchés publics de services de la Commission était régie par les dispositions de la section 1 (articles 56 à 64 bis) du titre IV du règlement financier, du 21 décembre 1977, applicable au budget général des Communautés européennes (JO L 356, p. 1), tel qu'il a été modifié par le règlement (CE, CECA, Euratom) n° 2673/99 du Conseil, du 13 décembre 1999 (JO L 326, p. 1), lequel est entré en vigueur le 1^er^ janvier 2000 (ci-après le « règlement financier I »).

2 Selon l'article 56 du règlement financier I :

À cette fin, les modalités d'exécution prévues à l'article 139 comportent les dispositions appropriées. »

3 L'article 139 du règlement financier I prévoit :

4 En vertu de l'article 139 du règlement financier I, la Commission a adopté le règlement (Euratom, CECA, CE) n° 3418/93, du 9 décembre 1993, portant modalités d'exécution de certaines dispositions du règlement financier (JO L 315, p. 1, ci-après les « modalités d'exécution I »). Les articles 97 à 105 et 126 à 129 des modalités d'exécution I s'appliquent à la passation de marchés publics de services.

5 En particulier, l'article 126 des modalités d'exécution I dispose :

II – Réglementation en vigueur à partir du 1er janvier 2003

7 Depuis le 1er janvier 2003, la passation des marchés publics de services de la Commission est régie par les dispositions du titre V (articles 88 à 107) du règlement (CE, Euratom) n° 1605/2002 du Conseil, du 25 juin 2002, portant règlement financier applicable au budget général des Communautés européennes (JO L 248, p. 1, ci-après le « règlement financier II »).

8 Selon l'article 89, paragraphe 1, du règlement financier II :

9 Selon l'article 99 du règlement financier II :

11 L'article 148, paragraphe 3, des modalités d'exécution II dispose :

« Après l'ouverture des offres, dans le cas où une offre donnerait lieu à des demandes d'éclaircissement ou s'il s'agit de corriger des erreurs matérielles manifestes dans la rédaction de l'offre, le pouvoir adjudicateur peut prendre l'initiative d'un contact avec le soumissionnaire, ce contact ne pouvant conduire à une modification des termes de l'offre. »

Antécédents du litige

I – CORDIS

12 La présente affaire concerne l'appel d'offres général ENTR/02/55, relatif au développement et à la mise à disposition de la nouvelle version des services d'appui pour le service d'information sur la recherche et le développement communautaires (CORDIS) (ci-après l'« appel d'offres en cause »). CORDIS est un outil informatique permettant d'assurer l'exécution des programmes-cadres de recherche européens. Il constitue le principal service de publication et de communication pour des participants potentiels et actuels ainsi que pour d'autres groupes ayant un intérêt dans un programme-cadre de recherche européen. Il se compose d'une plate-forme à buts multiples s'adaptant aux besoins des utilisateurs, d'un portail offert aux acteurs de la recherche et de l'innovation européennes ainsi que d'un outil de diffusion d'informations au public.

13 Depuis l'année 1998, la fourniture de l'ensemble des services d'appui pour CORDIS était assurée par un seul contractant, à savoir Intrasoft International SA.

14 L'adoption du sixième programme-cadre de la Communauté européenne pour des actions de recherche, de développement technologique et de démonstration contribuant à la réalisation de l'espace européen de la recherche et à l'innovation (2002-2006), par la décision n° 1513/2002/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 27 juin 2002 (JO L 232, p. 1), est à l'origine d'une nouvelle phase dans la mise en oeuvre de CORDIS. Pour cette nouvelle phase, la Commission a décidé de lancer un appel d'offres et de diviser le projet en cause dans la présente affaire en cinq lots.

15 Pour la passation du marché relatif à la nouvelle version des services d'appui pour CORDIS, une procédure d'appel d'offres ouverte a été choisie.

17 Le 20 novembre 2002, l'avis de marché a été publié pour les lots n^{os} 1 à 3 au Supplément au Journal officiel des Communautés européennes (JO S 225).

18 Le volume A du cahier des charges de l'appel d'offres en cause, intitulé « Généralités » (ci-après le « volume A du cahier des charges ») prévoit, notamment :

« Préambule

Il s'agit du [v]olume A, contenant les généralités du cahier des charges, applicable aux [cinq] lots.

1.3. Date de lancement et durée du contrat

Les contrats devraient être signés en juin 2003 et démarrer le 1er juillet 2003.

Les trois premiers mois des contrats constituent la 'phase de rodage'.

Le rodage permet aux nouveaux contractants de se familiariser avec le service CORDIS. Le contrat précédent prévoit un 'passage de relais'. Les nouveaux contractants pourront ainsi accéder aux opérations du service afin de se préparer à la reprise du service, au plus tard à la fin de la période de rodage.

Le rodage n'est pas rémunéré.

Il n'est pas exclu, sous réserve d'approbation par le responsable de projet de la Commission et d'accord du contractant en place, de reprendre déjà des parties ou l'ensemble du service au cours de la phase de rodage (pour la rémunération des services repris pendant la phase de rodage : voir point 1.7).

La Commission se réserve le droit de ne pas renouveler le(s) contrat(s).

Par la présente clause, le contractant offre à la Commission la possibilité de prolonger ce contrat dans les mêmes conditions pour une période supplémentaire d'un maximum de 24 mois. Une telle extension se fera, sur demande de la Commission, par un amendement au contrat.

3.2.2. Compétence technique et professionnelle

La capacité des prestataires des services à exécuter le contrat sera évaluée plus particulièrement sur la base de leurs qualifications, de leur efficacité, de leur expérience et de leur fiabilité.

Il est à noter que tous les soumissionnaires et, le cas échéant, les membres concernés du consortium sont tenus de fournir la preuve qu'ils répondent à ces exigences par les moyens suivants :

a) indication du nombre de personnes par profil employées à titre permanent au cours des [trois] dernières années – de même que pour le personnel temporaire – ainsi que de leurs titres d'études et de leurs qualifications professionnelles et/ou ceux des cadres de l'entreprise et, en particulier, du ou des responsables de la prestation de services ; la qualité de l'équipe, les membres qui la composent, s'ils travaillent à temps complet ou partiel, leur formation en matière de développement personnel et l'assurance qualité correspondante ; les CV doivent être groupés par profil – suivant l'ordre adopté dans le tableau de scénario complet défini pour chaque lot ;

3.3. Évaluation des offres – Critères d'attribution

Le marché sera attribué à l'offre qui présentera le rapport coût-efficacité le plus avantageux. Les critères d'attribution suivants seront appliqués :

– critères d'attribution qualitatifs ;

– prix.

Dans un premier temps, l'offre retenue sera évaluée en fonction des critères d'attribution qualitatifs ci-dessous et du coefficient de pondération de chaque critère.

Critère	Critères d'attribution qualitatifs	Pondération (nombre maximal de points) pour les lots n^{os} 1 à 5	Pondération (nombre maximal de points) pour le lot n° 3
1	Valeur technique, conformité avec le cahier des charges et réponses aux spécifications ; approche technique proposée (exhaustivité fonctionnelle, respect des exigences techniques, adéquation des technologies proposées)	35	[…]

2	Qualité de la méthodologie proposée (méthodes de travail visant à l'efficacité, l'exploitabilité, la sécurité et la confidentialité ; fiabilité / disponibilité / récupération / maintenance du service ; adoption des meilleures pratiques)	25	[…]
3	Créativité, degré d'innovation (valeur des idées originales sur la manière d'apporter des innovations au service)	20	[…]
4	Qualité du calendrier proposé, de la gestion des contrats et du contrôle (dispositions proposées pour fournir à temps les produits requis et pour assurer le respect des objectifs, des délais et de la qualité)	20	[…]
5 […] (uniquement pour le lot n° 3)	[…]	[…]	[…]
	Total des points	100	[…]

Les offres n'obtenant pas au minimum 50 % des points par critère et au minimum 60 % du total des points, soit 60 points, ne seront pas prises en compte pour l'attribution du marché.

L'évaluation en fonction des critères d'attribution ci-dessus ne tient compte d'aucun service optionnel. Ces derniers seront pris en considération à part, ultérieurement, uniquement dans l'offre retenue pour chaque lot.

Critères d'attribution
	Le prix, tel que défini dans le scénario complet pour chaque lot couvrant 48 mois d'activité, sans tenir compte du coût des options.

Il convient de noter que l'évaluation des offres sera axée sur la qualité des services proposés ; aussi les soumissionnaires doivent-ils fournir une offre détaillée pour tous les aspects abordés par le présent cahier des charges, de manière à obtenir le plus de points possible. Le fait de se limiter à reprendre les exigences exposées dans le présent cahier des charges sans entrer dans les détails ou sans proposer de valeur ajoutée ne permettra d'obtenir qu'un total très médiocre. En outre, si certains points essentiels du présent cahier des charges ne sont pas expressément abordés dans l'offre, la Commission pourra décider soit d'attribuer la note de zéro pour les critères d'attribution qualitatifs concernés, soit d'exclure l'offre de la procédure d'évaluation pour non-respect du cahier des charges.

La Commission se réserve le droit – tout en n'étant pas tenue de le faire – d'exclure les offres qui dépassent le budget indicatif, comme il est mentionné dans le présent appel d'offres.

4. Spécifications techniques

19 Le volume B du cahier des charges de l'appel d'offres en cause, intitulé « Lot 1 – Contenu » (ci-après le « volume B du cahier des charges ») prévoit les spécifications pour le lot n° 1.

20 Comme il avait été prévu au point 1.6 du volume A du cahier des charges, un site Internet temporaire, spécialement consacré à l'appel d'offres en cause et auquel les soumissionnaires potentiels pouvaient se connecter, a été établi.

21 Le 22 novembre 2002, la Commission a transmis aux soumissionnaires potentiels un CD-ROM, qui contenait des informations techniques sur le projet en tant que tel (ci-après le « CD 1 »).

22 Le 20 décembre 2002, la Commission a transmis aux soumissionnaires potentiels un second CD-ROM contenant des informations techniques, dont des spécifications techniques supplémentaires, des tests et des guides pour l'utilisateur (ci-après le « CD 2 »).

23 À la fin du mois de décembre 2002, la Commission a acquis un logiciel, dénommé « Autonomy », qui constitue un outil de recherche contextuelle permettant aux utilisateurs finaux de CORDIS de faire des recherches ciblées dans les bases de données de CORDIS ainsi que des recherches terminologiques multilingues.

24 Le 7 janvier 2003, une journée d'information ouverte à tous les soumissionnaires potentiels a été organisée par la Commission, comme cela avait été prévu au point 1.6 du volume A du cahier des charges.

25 Le 23 janvier 2003, à la suite d'une question posée par l'un des soumissionnaires potentiels sur le site Internet visé au point 20 ci-dessus, la Commission a révélé, sur ce site, l'acquisition du logiciel Autonomy.

26 Le 5 février 2003, la Commission a publié, sur le même site Internet, un document daté du 4 février 2003, intitulé « CORDIS Hardware and Software Inventory List » (ci-après la « liste d'inventaire »). La liste d'inventaire récapitulait tout le matériel informatique et tous les logiciels en place exploités à cette époque.

27 Le 18 février 2003, la Commission a en outre publié, sur ledit site, un document intitulé « Superquest – Implementation and Release 6 and beyond ». Ce document, daté du 6 février 2003 et intitulé « Projet », avait été rédigé par le contractant en place, Intrasoft International. Ledit document contenait des spécifications techniques pour la mise en œuvre du logiciel Autonomy. Il contenait également l'information selon laquelle une version d'essai du logiciel Autonomy était déjà utilisée, depuis le 20 septembre 2002, dans la version en vigueur de CORDIS. Enfin, le même document contenait la recommandation d'acquérir ledit logiciel.

28 La date limite arrêtée pour la soumission des offres prévue dans le cahier des charges était fixée au 19 mars 2003.

29 European Service Network (ESN) SA, la requérante, comptait parmi les soumissionnaires pour le lot n° 1 du projet (ci-après le « marché litigieux ») et a soumissionné au nom de cinq partenaires dont elle était la porte-parole.

30 Les 26 mars et 1er avril 2003, le comité d'évaluation des offres s'est réuni. Il a proposé de retenir l'offre d'Intrasoft International pour le marché litigieux. Ledit comité s'est fondé sur les résultats d'une évaluation qualitative et financière des offres de la requérante et d'Intrasoft International, se présentant comme suit :

Nom	Critères d'attribution qualitatifs/points
		n° 1 (35)	n° 2 (25)	n° 3 (20)	n° 4 (20)	Total (100)
Requérante	29,4	19,5	16,6	14,0	79,4
Intrasoft International	28	20	12,4	16,4	76,8

Nom	Prix total pour 48 mois (euros)	Points qualité	Rapport qualité-prix
Requérante	21 198 870,00	79,4	3,75
Intrasoft International	16 515 312,00	76,8	4,65

31 Le 16 juillet 2003, les propositions du comité d'évaluation ont été entérinées par décision de l'ordonnateur compétent et le marché litigieux a ainsi été attribué à Intrasoft International (ci-après le « soumissionnaire retenu »).

32 Le 1er août 2003, un courrier a été envoyé par la Commission à la requérante afin de l'informer que son offre n'avait pas été retenue.

33 Par lettres à la Commission des 5, 8, 11, 20 et 22 août 2003, la requérante a contesté la procédure d'appel d'offres en cause et a posé une série de questions auxquelles une réponse a été donnée par la Commission le 2 septembre 2003. Enfin, la requérante a encore demandé des éclaircissements à la Commission par la lettre du 4 septembre 2003 et la Commission lui a répondu le 22 septembre 2003.

34 Le 28 janvier 2004, la Commission et le soumissionnaire retenu ont conclu le contrat ayant pour objet le marché litigieux. Ce contrat a pris effet au 1er février 2004.

Procédure et conclusions des parties

35 Par requête déposée au greffe du Tribunal le 29 septembre 2003, la requérante a introduit le présent recours.

36 La requérante conclut, dans sa requête, à ce qu'il plaise au Tribunal :

– annuler le marché litigieux ;

– lui réserver tous autres droits, voies, moyens et actions, et notamment la condamnation de la défenderesse à des dommages-intérêts en rapport avec le préjudice subi ;

– condamner la défenderesse aux dépens.

37 La défenderesse conclut à ce qu'il plaise au Tribunal :

– rejeter le recours en annulation comme non fondé ;

– déclarer la demande de dommages-intérêts manifestement irrecevable ;

– condamner la requérante aux dépens.

38 Lors de l'audience, la requérante a précisé que, par son recours, elle visait l'annulation de la décision d'attribution du marché litigieux telle que celle-ci lui avait été communiquée par la lettre du 1er août 2003 (ci-après la « décision attaquée »).

39 Dans sa réplique, la requérante a demandé à ce qu'il plaise au Tribunal faire droit aux conclusions contenues dans la requête et, pour autant que de besoin seulement, ordonner que la Commission aura à verser aux débats le contrat ayant pour objet le marché litigieux, les rapports d'évaluation des cinq lots du projet en cause ainsi que l'enregistrement et la transcription de la réunion d'information du 7 janvier 2003.

40 Par lettre du 6 juillet 2004, la requérante a demandé, sur le fondement de l'article 64, paragraphe 4, du règlement de procédure du Tribunal, de pouvoir répondre, par écrit, à la duplique.

41 Par lettre du 26 juillet 2004, le Tribunal a informé la requérante de sa décision de ne pas donner suite à cette demande à ce stade de la procédure.

42 Par lettre du 6 octobre 2004, la requérante a, de nouveau, demandé de pouvoir répondre, par écrit, à la duplique.

43 Par lettre du 29 octobre 2004, le Tribunal a informé la requérante de sa décision de ne pas donner suite à cette demande à ce stade de la procédure.

44 Par lettre du 29 février 2005, la requérante a redemandé de pouvoir répondre, par écrit, à la duplique.

45 Le 22 mars 2005, le Tribunal a informé la requérante, en se référant à sa lettre du 29 octobre 2004, qu'elle serait informée ultérieurement de la suite de la procédure.

46 Sur rapport du juge rapporteur, le Tribunal a décidé d'ouvrir la procédure orale et, au titre des mesures d'organisation de la procédure prévues à l'article 64 du règlement de procédure, il a demandé aux parties, par lettre du 9 juin 2006, de répondre, par écrit, à plusieurs questions.

48 Par lettres du 29 juin 2006, les parties ont répondu aux questions posées les 9 et 20 juin 2006.

49 Les parties ont été entendues en leurs plaidoiries et en leurs réponses aux questions posées par le Tribunal à l'audience du 13 juillet 2006.

En droit

I – Sur la représentation de Ring consortium par la requérante dans le cadre du présent recours

A – Arguments des parties

50 La défenderesse relève que la requérante omet d'indiquer dans la requête à quel titre elle agit. En particulier, elle n'indique pas dans la requête si elle intente le présent recours pour son propre compte ou pour le compte de la société momentanée de droit belge dénommée « Ring consortium », dont elle ferait partie et qui se serait portée soumissionnaire pour le marché litigieux.

51 La requérante déclare que le recours est introduit en son nom propre. Ainsi qu'il serait précisé dans leur offre, les partenaires de la requérante n'auraient envisagé de constituer avec celle-ci une société momentanée dénommée « Ring consortium » et d'en confier la gestion à la requérante qu'en cas de sélection de leur offre par la Commission.

52 À l'audience, les deux parties ont déclaré de façon concordante que, même au vu de l'arrêt de la Cour du 8 septembre 2005, Espace Trianon et Sofibail (C–129/04, Rec. p. I–7805), elles ne voient pas d'éléments pouvant entraîner l'irrecevabilité du recours dans la présente affaire.

B – Appréciation du Tribunal

53 Le Tribunal constate que la défenderesse n'a pas contesté l'affirmation de la requérante selon laquelle ni au moment de la soumission de l'offre par la requérante, ni par après, la requérante et ses partenaires n'ont constitué une société ou une société momentanée au nom de laquelle la requérante aurait pu agir.

54 Dès lors qu'il n'est pas établi que Ring consortium a été légalement constituée, il y a lieu d'estimer que l'offre a été soumise en tant qu'offre conjointe au sens du point 2.3.1 du volume A du cahier des charges.

56 Le Tribunal constate, par ailleurs, que la lettre du 1er août 2003, par laquelle la Commission a informé ces soumissionnaires que leur offre n'avait pas été retenue et à laquelle la décision attaquée était annexée, a été adressée uniquement à la requérante.

57 Enfin, la requérante a déclaré expressément n'avoir introduit le présent recours qu'en son propre nom.

58 Au vu de ce qui précède, il y a lieu de constater que la requérante agit uniquement en son propre nom.

II – Sur la demande d'annulation de la décision attaquée

59 Au soutien de son recours en annulation, la requérante invoque, en substance, quatre moyens. Le premier est tiré des avantages financiers ayant été accordés uniquement au soumissionnaire retenu. Le deuxième est tiré de l'accès exclusif du soumissionnaire retenu à certaines informations essentielles. Le troisième est tiré de la non-conformité des critères de l'adjudication à ceux décrits dans le cahier des charges. Le quatrième est tiré de l'application discriminatoire des critères d'attribution du marché publiés au cahier des charges.

A – Sur le premier moyen, tiré des avantages financiers accordés exclusivement au soumissionnaire retenu

60 La requérante estime que, premièrement, en subordonnant la reprise des services d'appui pour CORDIS à une période de rodage non rémunérée dans le cahier des charges et, deuxièmement, en imposant l'inclusion dans les offres de provisions substantielles pour l'acquisition des outils nécessaires au fonctionnement des bases de données de CORDIS, dont un certain nombre étaient déjà en place dans les services exploités par son contractant au moment de l'appel d'offres en cause, le soumissionnaire retenu, la Commission a donné un avantage financier à celui-ci.

1. Sur la première branche, tirée de l'exigence d'une phase de rodage non rémunérée d'une durée obligatoire de trois mois

a) Arguments des parties

61 La requérante affirme que la Commission a imposé aux seuls nouveaux contractants potentiels, une période de rodage non rémunérée et obligatoire de trois mois. En revanche, le soumissionnaire retenu qui était le contractant en place au moment de l'appel d'offres en cause n'aurait pas eu besoin d'inclure dans son offre des coûts comparables.

62 La requérante estime que, pour tous les candidats, les offres financières intègrent nécessairement 24 mois payés en plus de l'amortissement des 3 mois non rémunérés correspondant à la phase de rodage, à l'exception du soumissionnaire retenu, contractant en place, qui n'avait pas besoin d'amortir le coût correspondant à la phase de rodage non rémunérée et qui pouvait donc soumettre une offre moins disante.

64 En réponse à une question du Tribunal à l'audience, la requérante a expliqué que, dans son principe, elle ne contestait pas l'exigence d'une phase de rodage. Elle aurait pu accepter une période de rodage, mais pas d'une durée obligatoire de trois mois.

65 Quant à l'affirmation de la défenderesse selon laquelle l'ancien contrat conclu entre la Commission et le soumissionnaire retenu, contractant en place à l'époque, stipulait l'obligation pour ce dernier de collaborer avec un nouveau contractant à la reprise des services d'appui pour CORDIS, la requérante fait valoir que les soumissionnaires n'avaient pas connaissance du régime contractuel auquel le contractant en place était soumis.

66 De plus, la requérante met en doute le fait que le contrat, signé avec le soumissionnaire retenu au mois de janvier 2004 et ayant pris effet au 1er février 2004, prévoie les mêmes obligations quant à la mise en œuvre de la période de rodage.

67 La défenderesse estime que l'allégation d'une discrimination financière résultant de l'exigence d'une période de rodage repose sur une méconnaissance des termes du cahier des charges en ce qui concerne la phase de rodage. Elle souligne que la reprise du service avant l'échéance de la phase de rodage ne dépend pas du bon vouloir du contractant en place. La défenderesse invoque l'obligation de collaboration du contractant en place avec le nouveau contractant à la reprise des services d'appui pour CORDIS. Elle explique que cette obligation figure dans l'ancien contrat avec le contractant en place, dont des extraits ont été fournis au Tribunal et dont les soumissionnaires potentiels avaient été informés lors de la journée d'information du 7 janvier 2003.

68 Enfin, la défenderesse affirme, en mettant à la disposition du Tribunal une copie des passages pertinents du nouveau contrat signé entre elle et le soumissionnaire retenu le 28 janvier 2004, que ledit contrat est conforme au modèle de contrat annexé au cahier des charges.

b) Appréciation du Tribunal

Observations liminaires

69 La requérante estime, premièrement, que, en imposant une période de rodage d'une durée obligatoire de trois mois dans le cahier des charges, la défenderesse a violé le principe d'égalité de traitement prévu à l'article 126 des modalités d'exécution I et à l'article 3, paragraphe 2, de la directive 92/50.

70 La requérante affirme, deuxièmement, que, en ne prévoyant pas des dispositions équivalentes à celles du cahier des charges quant à la mise en œuvre d'une période de rodage dans le nouveau contrat conclu avec le soumissionnaire retenu, la défenderesse a violé le principe d'égalité de traitement prévu à l'article 89, paragraphe 1, du règlement financier II, lequel est, selon elle, applicable en l'espèce.

73 Il convient d'apprécier les deux branches du premier moyen à la lumière des principes énoncés ci-dessus.

Sur l'exigence dans le cahier des charges d'une phase de rodage non rémunérée d'une prétendue durée obligatoire de trois mois

74 Tout d'abord, il y a lieu de relever que l'exigence d'une phase de rodage non rémunérée est, selon le point 1.7 du volume A du cahier des charges, indistinctement applicable à toutes les offres.

75 Ensuite, il y a lieu de constater que la requérante ne conteste pas, dans son principe, l'exigence d'une phase de rodage non rémunérée, mais uniquement sa prétendue durée obligatoire de trois mois.

76 À cet égard, il convient de rappeler que le point 1.3 du volume A du cahier des charges prévoit que les trois premiers mois des contrats constituent la « phase de rodage » et qu'il n'est pas exclu, sous réserve de l'approbation par le responsable de projet de la Commission et de l'accord du contractant en place, de reprendre des parties ou l'ensemble du service au cours de la phase de rodage. En outre, selon le point 1.7 du volume A du cahier des charges, dans le cas où le nouveau contractant reprend des parties ou l'ensemble du service pendant la phase de rodage, ce prestataire sera rémunéré à partir de la date de reprise effective des parties du service.

77 À la lumière de ces dispositions, le Tribunal estime que le cahier des charges ne prévoyait pas une phase de rodage d'une durée obligatoire de trois mois. En effet, les passages des points 1.3 et 1.7 du cahier des charges mentionnés au point précédent excluent – sauf à les priver de leur sens et de tout effet utile – qu'il puisse être considéré que la durée de trois mois de la phase de rodage présente un caractère obligatoire.

78 Ce constat n'est pas infirmé par l'argumentation de la requérante qui se fonde sur le passage « sous réserve […] d'accord du contractant en place » pour en conclure que l'abrègement de la phase de rodage ainsi que le payement des services d'appui pour CORDIS repris avant le délai de trois mois dépendent, selon le cahier des charges, du bon vouloir du contractant en place.

79 En effet, le Tribunal relève à cet égard que le passage « sous réserve […] d'accord du contractant en place » doit être compris dans l'ensemble du déroulement d'une reprise des services d'appui pour CORDIS en général et notamment d'une reprise de l'ancien contrat conclu entre la Commission et le contractant en place à l'époque.

80 Or, en ce qui concerne le déroulement d'une reprise des services d'appui pour CORDIS par un nouveau contractant, il découle du point 3.2.1.2 de l'annexe II de l'ancien contrat, tel qu'il a été modifié par l'addendum n° 2, que le contractant en place était obligé de préparer et de contribuer à une reprise complète, à temps et en douceur par les prochains contractants ainsi que de coopérer entièrement avec le prochain contractant pour assurer une continuité dans le haut standard de qualité des services d'appui pour CORDIS, durant la phase de reprise.

81 Partant, sauf à contrevenir à ses obligations contractuelles, le contractant en place était, le cas échéant, dans l'obligation de se conformer aux exigences d'un éventuel abrégement de la phase de rodage de trois mois au titre de son obligation de coopération active.

82 Le seul fait que les soumissionnaires autres que le soumissionnaire retenu, contractant en place à l'époque, n'ont été informés de ladite clause de l'ancien contrat que lors de la journée d'information du 7 janvier 2003 ne saurait constituer une violation du principe d'égalité de traitement des soumissionnaires. En effet, dès lors que le cahier des charges prévoyait la possibilité d'une durée abrégée de la phase de rodage, celle-ci était en tout état de cause garantie par le cahier des charges et était, le cas échéant, exigible sur la base de celui-ci. Partant, l'information des autres soumissionnaires, le 7 janvier 2003, du fait que l'ancien contrat du soumissionnaire retenu était, par ailleurs, parfaitement conforme à cet engagement de la Commission, n'a aucune incidence sur le caractère non discriminatoire des dispositions pertinentes du cahier des charges.

83 Enfin, la requérante n'a pas démontré en quoi, d'un point de vue économique, le contractant en place avait intérêt à faire obstacle à la reprise anticipée des services d'appui pour CORDIS par un nouveau contractant, compte tenu du fait que le contractant en place ne perdait, en tout état de cause, pas son droit à être rémunéré jusqu'à la fin de son propre contrat.

84 Dès lors, il y a lieu de conclure de ce qui précède que le cahier des charges n'exige pas la prestation de services non rémunérés durant une phase de rodage d'une durée obligatoire de trois mois. Par conséquent, l'argumentation avancée par la requérante à cet égard doit être rejetée.

85 Partant, la première branche du premier grief tirée de la violation du principe d'égalité de traitement, au motif qu'il serait prévu dans le cahier des charges une phase de rodage non rémunérée d'une durée obligatoire de trois mois, n'est pas fondée.

Sur la reprise dans le contrat ayant pour objet le marché litigieux d'une phase de rodage non rémunérée d'une prétendue durée obligatoire de trois mois

86 En ce qui concerne la reprise, dans le contrat ayant pour objet le marché litigieux et finalement conclu entre le soumissionnaire retenu et la Commission, de l'exigence d'une phase de rodage non rémunérée prévue aux points 1.3 et 1.7 du volume A du cahier des charges, le Tribunal constate que le point 1.3 dudit contrat reprend presque littéralement les passages pertinents du cahier des charges. Par conséquent, ce contrat est conforme au modèle de contrat annexé au cahier des charges.

87 Il résulte de l'ensemble des considérations qui précèdent que la première branche du premier grief, tirée de la violation du principe d'égalité de traitement, au motif qu'il serait prévu dans le cahier des charges une phase de rodage non rémunérée d'une durée obligatoire de trois mois, n'est pas fondée.

2. Sur la deuxième branche, tirée de l'obligation d'inclure des provisions substantielles dans les offres pour l'acquisition des outils nécessaires au fonctionnement des bases de données de CORDIS

a) Arguments des parties

88 La requérante affirme que la Commission a exigé de tous les soumissionnaires l'inclusion de provisions substantielles dans leur offre pour l'acquisition de tous les outils nécessaires au fonctionnement des bases de données de CORDIS. De plus, la Commission aurait refusé de fournir le moindre détail à cet égard. Ainsi, dans les faits, seuls les soumissionnaires autres que le soumissionnaire retenu auraient été obligés d'inclure dans leur offre de telles provisions pour l'acquisition de ces outils, et ce même si, par après, cela devait s'avérer inutile.

89 À la suite d'une question écrite posée par le Tribunal, la défenderesse a mis à la disposition du Tribunal des extraits pertinents de l'ancien contrat conclu avec le soumissionnaire retenu, contractant en place à l'époque.

b) Appréciation du Tribunal

90 S'agissant de la prétendue obligation d'inclure dans les offres des provisions substantielles pour l'acquisition des outils nécessaires au fonctionnement des bases de données de CORDIS, le Tribunal constate que la requérante n'a pas été en mesure, même après une question précise à cet égard au cours de l'audience, d'indiquer quel passage du cahier des charges contenait, selon elle, ladite prétendue obligation.

91 De plus, il ressort du point 3.2.1.2 de l'ancien contrat conclu entre la Commission et le soumissionnaire retenu, contractant en place à l'époque, que « [d]evront être remis tous les hardwares, logiciels et autres équipements capitaux payés par la Commission en conformité avec ce contrat, y compris la documentation pertinente ».

92 Il en résulte que, selon ledit contrat, le contractant en place était tenu de remettre à la Commission et, par conséquent, au nouveau contractant tous les équipements ayant été antérieurement payés par celle-ci.

93 Partant, la procédure n'a révélé aucun élément susceptible de démontrer qu'un nouveau contractant était obligé d'acquérir les outils nécessaires au fonctionnement des bases de données de CORDIS.

95 Au vu de ce qui précède, c'est donc à tort que la requérante prétend que la Commission a violé le principe de l'égalité de traitement en accordant certains avantages financiers au soumissionnaire retenu.

96 Partant, le premier moyen doit être rejeté.

B – Sur le deuxième moyen, tiré de l'accès exclusif du soumissionnaire retenu à certaines informations essentielles

97 Le moyen tiré de l'accès exclusif du soumissionnaire retenu à certaines informations essentielles concerne deux catégories d'informations, soit, d'une part, les informations relatives à l'acquisition du logiciel Autonomy par la Commission et, d'autre part, les informations relatives aux spécifications techniques des bases de données de CORDIS.

1. Arguments des parties

a) Sur l'accès aux informations relatives à l'acquisition du logiciel Autonomy

98 Alors que l'acquisition du logiciel Autonomy avait déjà eu lieu en décembre 2002, la requérante dénonce le fait pour la Commission de n'avoir révélé l'acquisition de la licence d'utilisation du logiciel Autonomy que trois mois après la publication de l'appel d'offres en cause, deux mois après l'acquisition de ladite licence et seulement un mois avant la date de clôture fixée pour le dépôt des soumissions. Les CD 1 et CD 2 comportant des renseignements sur l'appel d'offres en cause ne contiendraient pas non plus d'indications sur le logiciel Autonomy en lui-même.

99 La requérante souligne que le soumissionnaire retenu a eu un accès privilégié à tous les détails de ce logiciel et qu'il avait même utilisé une version d'essai du logiciel Autonomy dans la version de CORDIS en vigueur à l'époque. La requérante prétend qu'il a ainsi eu l'avantage de ne pas perdre de temps dans une recherche des solutions alternatives et qu'il avait ainsi pu concentrer tous ses efforts sur l'élaboration d'une offre techniquement centrée sur des bases de données de CORDIS fonctionnant avec le logiciel Autonomy.

100 La requérante évoque, à ce propos, le cahier des charges qui prévoit que toutes les opérations dans le cadre de CORDIS sont à effectuer manuellement. L'acquisition du logiciel Autonomy aurait cependant éliminé de très nombreux points faibles de CORDIS qui seraient énumérés dans le cahier des charges. Par conséquent, le fait de disposer du logiciel Autonomy aurait fondamentalement modifié l'environnement et les possibilités du soumissionnaire retenu pour la préparation de son offre en ce qui concerne une nouvelle version des services d'appui pour CORDIS.

101 La requérante prétend que la défenderesse méconnaît la nature réelle du logiciel Autonomy. En se fondant sur plusieurs extraits du site Internet de l'entreprise Autonomy ainsi que sur plusieurs pages du document intitulé « Superquest – Implementation and Release 6 and beyond », elle explique son idée de la fonctionnalité du logiciel Autonomy.

102 La requérante cite des extraits des pages 22, 29, 31, 32, 62, 73, 83 et 96 du volume B du cahier des charges ainsi que des extraits des pages 21 et 23 du volume A de celui-ci. La requérante estime qu'il en résulte que la connaissance de l'acquisition du logiciel Autonomy était d'une grande importance pour un soumissionnaire au marché litigieux.

103 La requérante explique que, en ce qui concerne le marché litigieux, il s'agit de rassembler, de créer, de traiter des informations qui doivent alimenter CORDIS ainsi que de classifier toutes ces informations. Le logiciel Autonomy serait le système gérant le contenu de CORDIS. La requérante fait valoir ainsi que, après avoir été informée de l'acquisition du logiciel Autonomy par la Commission, elle a dû restructurer 80 % du projet d'offre qu'elle avait déjà élaboré.

106 Enfin, la requérante réfute l'argumentation de la défenderesse selon laquelle la qualité supérieure de l'offre technique de la requérante démontre que le cahier des charges n'exigeait pas des soumissionnaires d'intégrer dans leur offre l'utilisation d'un système de recherche contextuelle, et a fortiori l'utilisation d'un logiciel spécifique tel que le logiciel Autonomy. La Commission aurait démontré elle-même que si elle avait « neutralisé », dans l'offre du soumissionnaire retenu, les passages reposant sur des informations auxquelles ce dernier avait eu un accès exclusif au lieu de les valoriser, le résultat d'évaluation de son offre obtenue par le soumissionnaire retenu aurait été sensiblement réduit.

108 Elle précise que l'objet du marché litigieux, défini dans le volume B du cahier des charges, correspond au rassemblement de certaines informations – essentiellement les contacts avec les directions générales (DG) de la Commission « de la famille 'recherche' » – relatives à la création de certaines informations ainsi qu'au traitement et à la classification de toutes ces informations dans les bases de données afin que ces informations puissent être publiées sur un site Internet consacré au projet en cause.

b) Sur l'accès aux informations relatives aux spécifications techniques des bases de données de CORDIS

114 La requérante affirme que la liste d'inventaire diffusée par la Commission ne contient pas d'informations utiles pour les soumissionnaires au marché litigieux, car les informations qu'elle contient ne concernent que le lot n° 3. La requérante affirme que la distribution de ladite liste était une manœuvre dilatoire tendant à induire en erreur les concurrents du soumissionnaire retenu.

c) Sur l'impact de la prise de connaissance tardive par la requérante de certaines informations essentielles sur le contenu de son offre

119 En réponse à une question du Tribunal, la requérante a précisé que, dans la mesure où les informations qui lui ont été transmises par la Commission l'ont été au fur et à mesure du déroulement de la procédure d'appel d'offres, elle n'avait disposé que d'un mois pour élaborer son offre initiale. Étant donné que l'organisation des procédures informatiques envisagées en aurait été bouleversée, le calcul du prix de son offre n'aurait pu être opéré que de manière approximative. La requérante n'aurait notamment pas disposé de suffisamment de temps pour déterminer toutes les conséquences de l'acquisition du logiciel Autonomy. Elle explique que, dans l'incertitude, la marge de sécurité a été évaluée trop largement, ce qui a nui à la compétitivité de son offre en ce qui concerne le prix. La requérante aurait ainsi dû intégrer dans son offre une prime de risque de 15 à 20 %.

120 Au cours de l'audience, le Tribunal a interrogé la requérante sur sa méthode de calcul de la prime de risque de 15 à 20 %. Elle a répondu qu'il s'avérait difficile d'aller plus loin dans la démonstration arithmétique, car il lui faudrait reconstituer les calculs de son offre dont la préparation avait déjà commencé dès le premier semestre de 2002. Malheureusement, certaines des personnes chargées de la préparation de son offre à l'époque auraient quitté la société entre-temps. De plus, elle a ajouté que les projets de son offre avaient été élaborés à partir de certaines données ou suppositions qui avaient évolué avec le temps.

121 La défenderesse conteste l'affirmation de la requérante selon laquelle celle-ci a dû prendre des dispositions dans son offre financière pour faire face aux défaillances du cahier des charges. La défenderesse estime que la requérante se montre incapable d'identifier ou de quantifier les coûts afférents aux prétendus efforts inutiles dont les coûts auraient été intégrés dans son offre.

2. Appréciation du Tribunal

a) Remarque liminaire

122 Le Tribunal rappelle l'importance particulière du principe d'égalité de traitement en matière de passation de marchés publics (voir points 71 et 72 ci-dessus). En effet, dans le cadre d'une telle procédure, la Commission est tenue de veiller, à chaque phase de la procédure, au respect de l'égalité de traitement et, par voie de conséquence, à l'égalité de chances de tous les soumissionnaires (voir arrêt du Tribunal du 17 mars 2005, AFCon Management Consultants e.a./Commission, T–160/03, Rec. p. II–981, point 75, et la jurisprudence citée).

123 En soutenant que la Commission a donné l'accès à certaines informations essentielles exclusivement au soumissionnaire retenu, la requérante fait valoir que cette dernière a violé le principe de non-discrimination des soumissionnaires.

124 Il ressort de la jurisprudence que le principe d'égalité de traitement implique une obligation de transparence afin de permettre de vérifier son respect (arrêts de la Cour du 18 juin 2002, HI, C–92/00, Rec. p. I–5553, point 45, et du 12 décembre 2002, Universale-Bau e.a., C–470/99, Rec. p. I–11617, point 91).

128 Il convient d'apprécier le deuxième moyen à la lumière des principes énoncés ci-dessus.

b) Sur la prétendue inégalité de traitement de la requérante par rapport au soumissionnaire retenu en ce qui concerne l'accès à certaines informations essentielles

Généralités

129 Tout d'abord, il y a lieu de rappeler que la requérante reproche à la Commission d'avoir enfreint le principe d'égalité de traitement en raison d'un prétendu retard dans la mise à la disposition, aux soumissionnaires autres que le soumissionnaire retenu, contractant en place à l'époque, de certaines informations techniques. Eu égard à la jurisprudence citée aux points 71 et 72 ci-dessus ainsi qu'aux points 124 à 126 ci-dessus, la Commission aurait porté atteinte à l'égalité des chances de l'ensemble des soumissionnaires ainsi qu'au principe de transparence en tant que corollaire du principe d'égalité de traitement.

130 Ensuite, il y a lieu de constater que, à la supposer avérée, une telle atteinte à l'égalité des chances et au principe de transparence constituerait une irrégularité de la procédure précontentieuse portant atteinte au droit à l'information des parties concernées. Or, conformément à une jurisprudence constante, une irrégularité procédurale ne peut entraîner l'annulation de la décision en cause que s'il est établi que, en l'absence de cette irrégularité, la procédure administrative aurait pu aboutir à un résultat différent dans l'hypothèse où la requérante aurait eu accès aux informations en question dès le début de la procédure et s'il existait, à cet égard, une chance – même réduite – que la requérante eût pu faire aboutir la procédure administrative à un résultat différent (voir arrêt de la Cour du 2 octobre 2003, Thyssen Stahl/Commission, C–194/99 P, Rec. p. I–10821, point 31, et la jurisprudence citée, et arrêt du Tribunal du 30 septembre 2003, Atlantic Container Line e.a./Commission, T–191/98 et T–212/98 à T–214/98, Rec. p. II–3275, points 340 et 430).

131 À cet égard, le Tribunal examinera, tout d'abord, si l'inégalité de traitement alléguée consistant en un retard dans la transmission de certaines informations techniques aux soumissionnaires autres que le soumissionnaire retenu constitue, en tant que telle, une irrégularité de la procédure en ce que des informations effectivement utiles à l'élaboration des offres n'auraient pas été mises, dès que possible, à la disposition de l'ensemble des soumissionnaires.

132 Dans le cas où une telle irrégularité serait établie, le Tribunal examinera, ensuite, si, en l'absence de celle-ci, la procédure aurait pu aboutir à un résultat différent. Dans cette perspective, une telle irrégularité ne saurait constituer une violation de l'égalité des chances des soumissionnaires que dans la mesure où il résulte de façon plausible et suffisamment circonstanciée des explications fournies par la requérante que le résultat de la procédure aurait pu être différent à son égard.

Sur le caractère tardif de la mise à disposition, par la Commission, de certaines informations techniques

133 Le Tribunal constate, tout d'abord, que le soumissionnaire retenu avait, avant l'ouverture de la procédure d'appel d'offres, pleine connaissance de toutes les spécifications techniques des bases de données de CORDIS, puisqu'il était le contractant en place à l'époque.

134 D'ailleurs, il n'est pas contesté que la Commission disposait des spécifications techniques des bases de données de CORDIS dès avant l'ouverture de la procédure d'appel d'offres, à savoir à la fin de novembre 2002.

135 La défenderesse ne conteste pas non plus qu'elle n'a mis à la disposition de tous les soumissionnaires potentiels les spécifications techniques des bases de données de CORDIS que progressivement au cours de la procédure d'appel d'offres.

136 En effet, la Commission n'a fourni une partie des spécifications techniques des bases de données de CORDIS qu'un mois après l'ouverture de la procédure d'appel d'offres, le 20 décembre 2002, à travers le CD 2, et elle n'a publié d'autres informations techniques que le 5 février 2003, à travers la liste d'inventaire, soit seulement six semaines avant l'expiration du délai prévu pour la soumission des offres.

137 La justification fournie par la défenderesse, selon laquelle elle n'avait pas encore préparé toutes les informations au début de la procédure d'appel d'offres, doit être rejetée dès lors que, afin que tous les soumissionnaires potentiels disposent des mêmes chances, elle aurait pu attendre d'être en mesure de mettre toutes les informations pertinentes à la disposition de l'ensemble des soumissionnaires potentiels pour entamer ladite procédure d'appel d'offres.

138 Le Tribunal constate, ensuite, que le soumissionnaire retenu a pu, dès le début de la procédure d'appel d'offres, avoir pleine connaissance du fonctionnement du logiciel Autonomy grâce à l'installation d'une version d'essai dans la version de CORDIS en vigueur à l'époque. En outre, le soumissionnaire retenu a également préparé l'acquisition du logiciel Autonomy pour la Commission, acquisition qui a eu lieu au cours de la procédure d'appel d'offres. Ainsi, il est fort probable que le soumissionnaire retenu ait été pleinement informé de ladite acquisition dès son origine.

139 Par ailleurs, la défenderesse ne conteste pas que les autres soumissionnaires ont seulement été informés de ladite acquisition par le biais de la publication du document intitulé « Superquest – Implementation and Release 6 and beyond », le 18 février 2002, soit uniquement un mois avant l'expiration du délai prévu pour la soumission des offres.

140 Partant, le Tribunal relève que la Commission n'a mis à la disposition de l'ensemble des soumissionnaires potentiels les informations relatives aux spécifications techniques des bases de données de CORDIS ainsi que les informations relatives à son acquisition du logiciel Autonomy qu'au fur et à mesure de la procédure d'appel d'offres, alors que le soumissionnaire retenu disposait de ces informations dès le début de ladite procédure d'appel d'offres, compte tenu du fait qu'il était le contractant en place.

141 Le fait que tous les soumissionnaires, à l'exception du soumissionnaire retenu, contractant en place, n'ont disposé de certaines informations qu'au fur et à mesure de la procédure d'appel d'offres semble, à première vue, indiquer que la Commission a pu éventuellement violer, au début de la procédure, à savoir le 20 novembre 2002, le principe d'égalité de traitement des soumissionnaires potentiels prévu à l'article 126 des modalités d'exécution I et à l'article 3, paragraphe 2, de la directive 92/50, en vigueur à l'époque.

142 Cependant, il convient de prendre en considération le fait que la connaissance exclusive par le soumissionnaire retenu de certaines informations n'a pas été la conséquence d'un comportement critiquable du pouvoir adjudicateur. Un tel avantage est inhérent – et donc inévitable – à toute situation où un pouvoir adjudicateur se décide à déclencher une procédure d'appel d'offres pour la passation d'un marché qui a été exécuté, jusque-là, par un seul contractant. Cette circonstance constitue en quelque sorte un « avantage de facto inhérent ».

143 À cet égard, le Tribunal rappelle que la Cour a jugé que la directive 92/50 ainsi que les autres directives relatives à la passation des marchés publics s'opposaient à une règle nationale selon laquelle n'était pas admise la remise d'une offre pour un marché public de travaux, de fournitures ou de services par un soumissionnaire qui avait été chargé de la recherche, de l'expérimentation, de l'étude ou du développement de ces travaux, de ces fournitures ou de ces services, sans que lui soit laissée la possibilité de faire la preuve que, dans les circonstances de l'espèce, l'expérience qu'il avait ainsi acquise n'avait pu fausser la concurrence (arrêt de la Cour du 3 mars 2005, Fabricom, C–21/03 et C–34/03, Rec. p. I–1559, point 36).

149 Quant à la mise en balance des intérêts en cause d'un point de vue économique, le Tribunal rappelle que le principe d'égalité de traitement entre les soumissionnaires résulte des dispositions de la section 1 (articles 56 à 64 bis) du titre IV du règlement financier I, applicable lors de la publication de l'avis de l'appel d'offres en cause. Or, l'article 2 du règlement financier I, qui fait partie de ceux consacrant les principes généraux dans ledit règlement, énonce que « [l]es crédits budgétaires doivent être utilisés conformément à des principes d'économie et de bonne gestion financière ». D'ailleurs, selon l'article 248, paragraphe 2, CE, la bonne gestion financière constitue une règle générale de l'organisation communautaire reconnue par le traité, dont la Cour des comptes des Communautés européennes s'assure du respect.

150 En conséquence, quant à la régularité de la procédure d'appel d'offres en cause, il y a lieu de relever, que, en l'espèce, dès lors que la Commission disposait des informations complètes sur les spécifications techniques des bases de données de CORDIS dès le début de ladite procédure, il lui était aisément possible de les mettre à la disposition de tous les soumissionnaires sous la forme d'une annexe au cahier des charges. Force est de constater, en outre, qu'il était également facile d'informer l'ensemble des soumissionnaires potentiels de l'acquisition du logiciel Autonomy immédiatement après qu'elle ait eu lieu, à savoir à la fin de décembre 2002.

Sur la pertinence des informations mises à disposition tardivement par la Commission pour les offres concernant le marché litigieux 151 Le Tribunal rappelle que, s'il s'avérait que les informations soumises tardivement par la Commission aux soumissionnaires autres que le soumissionnaire retenu n'étaient pas pertinentes pour l'élaboration des offres concernant le marché litigieux, un retard dans leur communication ne représenterait, en tout état de cause, pas un avantage pour le soumissionnaire retenu, contractant en place à l'époque, et ne serait donc pas constitutif d'un vice de procédure constituant une violation du principe d'égalité de traitement des soumissionnaires, ainsi que l'a affirmé la requérante.

152 S'agissant de la pertinence des informations relatives à l'acquisition du logiciel Autonomy, le Tribunal constate qu'il découle de la description du marché litigieux figurant dans le résumé effectué au point 4 du volume A du cahier des charges ainsi que des explications fournies par la défenderesse données au Tribunal au cours de l'audience que les soumissionnaires pour le marché litigieux ne devaient soumettre que des données ayant vocation à former le contenu de la nouvelle version des services d'appui pour CORDIS. Cela n'englobe pas nécessairement des fonctions d'interrogation dudit contenu par des utilisateurs finaux de la nouvelle version de CORDIS.

154 Il s'ensuit que le simple fait que la Commission avait acheté, au cours de la procédure d'appel d'offres, le logiciel Autonomy ne l'a pas conduite à évaluer de façon moins favorable une offre proposant un outil de recherche différent.

155 À titre surabondant, ce constat est d'ailleurs confirmé par la circonstance que, lors de l'appréciation du critère d'attribution n° 1, le comité d'évaluation a considéré, d'une part, que l'offre de la requérante était « excellente » en ce qui concerne la « présentation de la classification sous le gestionnaire de contenu » et, d'autre part, que l'offre du soumissionnaire retenu était « bien décrite et prometteuse » en ce qui concerne la « classification et l'approche d'indexation (par exemple Autonomy en ce qui concerne la recherche et le renvoi) ». Ces qualifications démontrent que le comité d'évaluation a estimé les offres de la requérante et du soumissionnaire retenu équivalentes en ce qui concerne les outils de classification proposés. Par conséquent, la connaissance, tout au long de la procédure d'appel d'offres, de l'acquisition du logiciel Autonomy par la Commission n'a pas pu avoir une quelconque importance dans l'évaluation des offres de la requérante et du soumissionnaire retenu.

156 Étant donné que le cahier des charges n'impose pas l'utilisation d'un outil de classification spécifique, notamment pas celle du logiciel Autonomy, le Tribunal estime que le grief tiré de la mise à disposition tardive des informations relatives à l'acquisition du logiciel Autonomy ne paraît pas être suffisamment étayé pour rendre plausible le fait que la connaissance de l'acquisition du logiciel Autonomy par la Commission aurait pu constituer un avantage pour le soumissionnaire retenu, contractant en place, quant à une soumission pour le marché litigieux.

– Sur la pertinence des informations relatives aux spécifications techniques des bases de données de CORDIS

158 À cet égard, il y a lieu de constater que, dans la mesure où la requérante admet l'absence d'utilité des informations relatives aux spécifications techniques des bases de données de CORDIS pour l'élaboration des offres, elle ne saurait se prévaloir du caractère tardif de leur communication par la Commission. En effet, la requérante reconnaît ainsi que les spécifications techniques soumises tardivement aux soumissionnaires potentiels n'étaient pas pertinentes pour l'élaboration d'une offre pour le marché litigieux.

159 Ensuite, pour autant que l'argumentation de la requérante tende à dénoncer la prétendue absence de communication d'une autre catégorie d'informations techniques, à savoir des informations complémentaires aux informations fournies tardivement aux soumissionnaires potentiels, force est de constater qu'elle n'a pas été en mesure de préciser de quelles informations précises il s'agissait et en quoi leur absence de communication aurait constitué un avantage pour le soumissionnaire retenu.

161 Le Tribunal estime que la défenderesse admet ainsi que les informations techniques communiquées tardivement aux soumissionnaires auraient pu constituer une valeur ajoutée pour toutes les offres concernant les services d'appui pour CORDIS, y compris les offres pour le marché litigieux.

162 Partant, le Tribunal constate qu'il n'est pas exclu que les informations relatives aux spécifications techniques des bases de données de CORDIS, auxquelles le soumissionnaire retenu a eu un temps exclusivement accès en tant que contractant en place à l'époque aient pu constituer, au moins partiellement, un avantage injustifié d'un des soumissionnaires potentiels.

163 Par conséquent, étant donné que la défenderesse admet que les spécifications techniques mises tardivement à la disposition des soumissionnaires aient pu constituer une valeur ajoutée pour les offres concernant le marché litigieux, le Tribunal considère qu'il n'est pas exclu que le comportement contesté de la Commission ait pu constituer un avantage pour le contractant en place quant à une soumission pour le marché litigieux.

164 Dès lors, en ne communiquant pas, dès que possible, certaines spécifications techniques à l'ensemble des soumissionnaires, la Commission a commis une irrégularité procédurale en méconnaissant le droit d'être informé de la requérante.

165 Partant, il y a lieu de vérifier si cette irrégularité a porté atteinte à l'égalité des chances des soumissionnaires, en ce que, en l'absence de cette irrégularité, la procédure d'appel d'offres en cause aurait pu éventuellement aboutir à une attribution du marché litigieux à la requérante.

166 Tel ne serait cependant pas le cas si, malgré le fait que la Commission n'a pas informé tous les soumissionnaires, dès le début de la procédure d'appel d'offres, de la totalité des spécifications techniques de l'ancienne version de CORDIS, il s'avérait que les informations ainsi retenues n'avaient pas été pertinentes pour l'offre de la requérante.

Sur la pertinence des informations mises à disposition tardivement par la Commission pour l'offre de la requérante

– Sur l'influence du retard dans la mise à disposition de certaines informations techniques sur la qualité de l'offre de la requérante

167 À la lumière de ce qui précède, le Tribunal estime probable que, ainsi que la requérante l'a affirmé, le retard dans la communication des informations visées aux points 133 à 140 ci-dessus ait pu avoir occasionné pour l'ensemble des soumissionnaires, à l'exception du soumissionnaire retenu, d'éventuels efforts inutiles et une perte de temps et que cela a pu influer sur la qualité de leurs offres.

168 Nonobstant ce constat de principe, il y a lieu de relever que, dans le cas d'espèce, en tout état de cause, même la pleine connaissance des informations en cause n'aurait pas eu une influence décisive sur l'appréciation d'ensemble de l'offre de la requérante.

169 Quant à l'influence sur la qualité de son offre du retard dans la mise à disposition par la Commission des informations techniques, la requérante fait valoir que la connaissance desdites informations aurait amélioré la valeur qualitative de son offre au regard des critères d'attribution n^{os} 1 à 3 décrits au cahier des charges.

170 À cet égard, le Tribunal relève que, ainsi qu'il ressort du tableau figurant au point 3.3 du volume A du cahier des charges, le nombre maximal de points pouvant être obtenus au titre desdits critères était de 80 (soit 35 + 25 + 20 points).

171 Il ressort du tableau figurant dans le rapport du comité d'évaluation que la formule mathématique utilisée afin de déterminer le « rapport coût-efficacité le plus avantageux » au sens du point 3.3 du volume A du cahier des charges et de calculer le rapport qualité-prix des différentes offres a été la suivante :

Image not found

172 Par application de ladite formule à l'offre soumise par la requérante, c'est-à-dire en y insérant le prix total dont était assortie l'offre de la requérante (21 198 879 euros), ainsi que l'addition, d'une part, du maximum de points pouvant être atteints au titre des critères n^{os} 1 à 3 (à savoir les critères correspondant aux éléments pour lesquels la qualité de l'offre de la requérante avait prétendument été altérée par la communication tardive par la Commission des informations techniques) et, d'autre part, des 14 points que l'offre de la requérante a effectivement obtenus au titre du critère n° 4 (voir point 30 ci-dessus), on parvient au rapport suivant :

173 Étant donné que le soumissionnaire retenu a obtenu un rapport-prix de 4,65, ce calcul démontre que, même si la requérante avait pu, dès le début de la procédure d'appel d'offres, élaborer son offre en pleine connaissance des informations techniques qui ne lui ont été communiquées que tardivement, et même si, à la suite de cela, elle avait obtenu le maximum de points au titre des critères qualitatifs n^{os} 1 à 3 (c'est-à-dire 80 points) ainsi que les 14 points obtenus au titre du critère n° 4, le rapport qualité-prix de son offre aurait été, en tout état de cause, moins bon que celui du soumissionnaire retenu, car le prix de l'offre de la requérante était relativement élevé.

– Sur l'influence du retard dans la mise à disposition de certaines informations techniques sur le prix de l'offre de la requérante

175 Le Tribunal note que la requérante n'a pas été en mesure, même à posteriori, d'exposer de façon précise le degré d'influence des efforts prétendument inutiles sur la détermination du prix de son offre. Elle se borne à affirmer de façon laconique que, si elle avait su qu'il était inutile de déployer de tels efforts, le prix de son offre aurait été de 10 à 15 % plus bas. Or, même en réponse aux questions précises posées à cet égard par le Tribunal au cours de l'audience, la requérante n'a pas été en mesure de soumettre au Tribunal le moindre élément permettant d'étayer cette affirmation.

177 Au vu de ce qui précède, le Tribunal considère que, s'il est vrai que la Commission a commis une irrégularité procédurale en ne communiquant pas à tous les soumissionnaires, dès le début de la procédure d'appel d'offres, la totalité des informations techniques relatives à l'ancienne version de CORDIS, cette irrégularité procédurale n'a pu, en l'espèce, conduire à un résultat différent de la procédure, étant donné qu'il est exclu que le comportement contesté de la Commission ait eu une influence décisive sur la qualité de l'offre de la requérante et que celle-ci n'a pas donné le moindre élément permettant de démontrer de façon plausible que ledit comportement de la Commission a effectivement conduit à une augmentation du prix de l'offre de la requérante et, par conséquent, que celle-ci aurait violé le principe d'égalité des chances au détriment de la requérante.

178 Partant, le deuxième moyen doit être rejeté.

C – Sur le troisième moyen, tiré de la non-conformité des critères de l'adjudication à ceux décrits dans le cahier des charges

1. Arguments des parties

179 La requérante estime que la Commission a modifié les critères d'attribution en accordant la même pondération au prix et à la qualité des offres au lieu d'utiliser une formule qui aurait fait primer la qualité sur le prix.

180 La requérante affirme qu'il aurait suffi d'accorder une pondération de 65 % à la qualité des offres pour que son offre soit retenue.

181 La pondération, retenue en l'espèce, à la fois pour la qualité et pour le prix des offres, l'a été, selon la requérante, en contradiction avec le point 3.3 du volume A du cahier des charges, aux termes duquel « [i]l convient de noter que l'évaluation des offres sera axée sur la qualité des services proposés ».

182 De plus, la requérante soutient que la Commission utilise régulièrement des formules accordant une importance différente à la qualité et au prix.

183 Enfin, la requérante affirme, en citant également des témoins, qu'un représentant de la Commission a confirmé, à la suite d'une question posée à cet égard au cours de la journée d'information du 7 janvier 2003, la prévalence des critères qualitatifs.

184 La défenderesse estime que la requérante se fonde sur une phrase du point 3.3 du volume A du cahier des charges, qui ne saurait être sortie de son contexte. En effet, la formulation invoquée par la requérante devrait être comprise uniquement à la lumière des seuils qualitatifs fixés.

185 La défenderesse constate que, même si une autre pondération que celle retenue avait été appliquée pour déterminer le « rapport coût-efficacité le plus avantageux », en tout état de cause, le résultat de l'évaluation comparative des offres de la requérante et du soumissionnaire retenu aurait été identique.

2. Appréciation du Tribunal

186 En ce qui concerne les critères d'attribution appliqués, il convient d'analyser les passages pertinents du volume A du cahier des charges, notamment le point 3.3 de celui-ci.

187 Le point 3.3 du cahier des charges est intitulé « Évaluation des offres – Critères d'attribution ». Ce point débute par une description générale des critères d'attribution, comme suit :

– critères d'attribution qualitatifs ;

– prix. »

188 Ensuite, le texte précise la première phase de la procédure d'évaluation, dans les termes suivants (non souligné dans l'original) :

190 Ces passages concernant l'évaluation des offres en fonction des critères d'attribution qualitatifs sont suivis d'un encadré, intitulé de façon très générale « Critères d'attribution » et ne contenant que la phrase suivante (souligné dans l'original) :

191 C'est à la suite de cet encadré qu'un avant-dernier alinéa débute par la phrase sur laquelle se fonde la requérante. Cet alinéa se lit comme suit dans son ensemble :

192 Il y a lieu de relever qu'il ressort de l'économie de la présentation du point 3.3 du cahier des charges que l'évaluation comparative doit se faire, en principe, en deux phases :

– Tout d'abord, dans une première phase, il y a lieu de déterminer de façon chiffrée, pour chaque offre, grâce à l'attribution de points de pondération, le degré d'aptitude qualitative de l'offre. Dès lors qu'un minimum de points de qualité est requis, les critères d'attribution qualitatifs jouent le rôle d'une condicio sine qua non pour l'attribution finale du marché.

– Ensuite, dans une seconde phase, le facteur « prix » sera mis en relation avec le facteur « qualité » précédemment calculé, sans que le mode exact de calcul du rapport qualité-prix n'apparaisse dans le point 3.3.

193 Dès lors, force est de constater que les critères d'attribution qualitatifs jouent déjà, en tant que tels, un rôle primordial pour la présélection des offres susceptibles d'être retenues, c'est-à-dire avant même que la qualité d'une offre soit évaluée en rapport avec son prix.

194 Quant à l'interprétation de l'ensemble du point 3.3 du volume A du cahier des charges, le Tribunal relève que ledit point du cahier des charges n'est pas clairement structuré. Cependant, il n'en découle pas que la Commission serait obligée d'utiliser, pour l'évaluation des offres, une formule qui ferait primer la qualité sur le prix.

197 D'ailleurs, le Tribunal constate qu'une relation entre la qualité et le prix différente de celle qui a été retenue en l'espèce n'aurait pas pu changer le résultat de l'évaluation finale. En effet, une relation entre la qualité et le prix se traduit, en termes mathématiques, toujours par une fraction. Si l'on établit une relation d'ordre de grandeur entre deux fractions, celle-ci n'est aucunement modifiée par la multiplication de chacune des deux fractions par le même facteur, quel que soit le facteur choisi (règle du maintien de la relation d'ordre) :

198 Enfin, en ce qui concerne la prétendue confirmation d'une prévalence des critères qualitatifs dans l'évaluation des offres, au cours de la journée d'information du 7 janvier 2003, le Tribunal estime que cette affirmation de la requérante, même à la supposer avérée, ne saurait entacher la décision attaquée d'une quelconque illégalité.

199 En effet, à supposer même qu'il puisse être prouvé que les représentants de la Commission aient confirmé une prévalence des critères qualitatifs dans l'évaluation des offres, une telle déclaration n'aurait pas pu modifier le contenu du cahier des charges en tant que cadre juridique contraignant.

200 En effet, il résulte de la seconde phrase de l'article 99 du règlement financier II ainsi que de l'article 148, paragraphe 3, des modalités d'exécution II, en vigueur au moment de la journée d'information du 7 janvier 2003, qu'aucun contact avec les soumissionnaires potentiels ne peut conduire à une modification des termes de l'offre, notamment ceux du cahier des charges, lequel, dans le cas d'espèce, précise au point 3.3 que le marché sera attribué à l'offre qui présentera « le rapport coût-efficacité le plus avantageux ».

201 Partant, le Tribunal relève que la Commission, en accordant, dans le cadre de la dernière phase de la procédure d'adjudication, une même pondération au prix et à la qualité, n'a pas modifié les critères d'adjudication décrits au point 3.3 du cahier des charges.

202 Au vu de ce qui précède, le troisième moyen doit donc être rejeté.

D – Sur le quatrième moyen, tiré de l'application discriminatoire des critères d'attribution publiés au cahier des charges

1. Arguments des parties

203 La requérante affirme que la Commission n'a pas sélectionné l'offre qui présentait le meilleur rapport qualité-prix en utilisant le critère d'attribution n° 4, publié au point 3.3 du volume A du cahier des charges, pour atteindre l'objectif recherché. Ainsi, la Commission aurait utilisé les critères publiés de façon incomplète, donc de façon discriminatoire, et aurait avantagé le soumissionnaire retenu.

204 La requérante soutient que la Commission a évalué son offre financière pratiquement exclusivement par journées d'experts et qu'elle a omis d'apprécier la quantité et la qualité des ressources humaines. La requérante souligne que 90 % du marché litigieux consiste à mettre du personnel à la disposition de la Commission. Or, le critère n° 4 imposerait à la Commission d'examiner son offre sous cet angle également et surtout les équipes d'experts ainsi proposées.

207 En se référant au point 2.3.2, sous f), du volume A du cahier des charges, la requérante constate qu'il y est explicitement demandé aux candidats d'insérer les curriculum vitae des experts proposés pour la réalisation du projet dans leur offre technique, c'est-à-dire dans la partie de l'offre qui fera l'objet d'une évaluation de la qualité, par opposition au point 2.3.1 du volume A du cahier des charges, intitulé « Informations administratives », lequel fait l'objet du processus de sélection.

208 De plus, en se référant, en particulier, aux points 4.3.2.3 et 4.3.2.4 du volume A du cahier des charges, la requérante conteste le fait que la Commission ait pu évaluer de manière objective et transparente si les candidats avaient, effectivement, en conformité notamment avec le point 4.3.2.4 du volume A du cahier des charges, proposé du personnel d'une qualité adéquate pour les tâches en cause en termes de qualifications et d'expérience appropriées et si nécessaire pour assurer un niveau adéquat de formation afin d'offrir un service de haute qualité pour chacune des tâches spécifiées, la Commission n'ayant pas soumis leurs curriculum vitae aux critères d'évaluation.

209 Selon la défenderesse, l'argumentation de la requérante est fondée sur une confusion entre les phases de sélection et d'attribution d'un marché public.

210 La défenderesse affirme que, en examinant les capacités du personnel proposé par les soumissionnaires uniquement dans le cadre de la phase de sélection des soumissionnaires, elle a agi en conformité avec les critères de sélection annoncés dans le cahier des charges et dans le respect de la distinction de principe qui y est opérée entre la phase de sélection des soumissionnaires et celle d'attribution du marché.

2. Appréciation du Tribunal

215 À cet égard, tout d'abord, le Tribunal relève qu'il y a lieu de rejeter l'argument de la requérante fondé sur des extraits du point 2 du volume A du cahier des charges, intitulé « Forme et contenu de l'offre ».

216 En effet, il ressort directement de l'intitulé des points du cahier des charges invoqués par la requérante, à savoir le point 2.2 (Soumission de l'offre) et le point 2.3 (Structure de l'offre), lequel inclut notamment le point 2.3.2 (Proposition technique) et le point 2.3.2, sous f), concernant l'exigence de preuve de la qualification du personnel spécialisé proposé, que ces passages du cahier des charges ne prévoient que des exigences purement formelles. Les passages invoqués par la requérante ne se réfèrent en aucun cas aux critères qualitatifs définis pour l'attribution de marché.

218 Le troisième alinéa de l'introduction du point 3 du volume A du cahier des charges énonce :

– Exclusion de certains soumissionnaires conformément à l'article 29 de la directive 92/50 [...]

– Sélection de soumissionnaires par la vérification :

  – de leur compétences professionnelles et techniques,

  – de leur capacité économique et financière.

– Évaluation des offres : comparaison sur la base des critères d'attribution. »

219 Le processus de l'attribution du marché contient donc deux phases de présélection des soumissionnaires et une phase de comparaison des offres sur la base des critères qualitatifs.

223 Après ces deux phases de présélection s'effectue l'évaluation comparative des offres restantes avec pour objectif de choisir l'offre présentant « le rapport coût-efficacité le plus avantageux », tel que prévu au point 3.3 du volume A, premier alinéa du cahier des charges.

produits requis et pour assurer le respect des objectifs, des délais et de la qualité) ».

225 Le Tribunal estime dès lors que la Commission a pris en considération, en parfaite conformité avec le point 3.2 du volume A du cahier des charges, l'expérience et la qualification du personnel présenté par la requérante dans le cadre de la seconde phase de présélection des soumissionnaires.

226 Le reproche de la requérante, selon lequel la Commission aurait dû apprécier la quantité et la qualité des ressources humaines offertes au cours de l'évaluation qualitative, doit être rejeté, dès lors que le cahier des charges n'exige pas que la Commission prenne en considération l'expérience et la qualification du personnel présenté par la requérante en dehors du contexte de la seconde phase de présélection des soumissionnaires.

227 Partant, la Commission n'a pas utilisé de façon discriminatoire les critères d'adjudication publiés dans le cahier des charges.

III – Sur le deuxième chef de conclusions

233 Il découle de ce qui précède que les quatre moyens formulés à l'appui du premier chef de conclusions ne sont pas fondés et que le deuxième chef de conclusions est irrecevable.

234 Partant, le recours doit être rejeté dans son ensemble.

235 Aux termes de l'article 87, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure, toute partie qui succombe est condamnée aux dépens, s'il est conclu en ce sens. La requérante ayant succombé, il y a lieu de la condamner aux dépens, conformément aux conclusions de la Commission.

Par ces motifs,

LE TRIBUNAL (troisième chambre)

déclare et arrête :

1) Le recours est rejeté.

2) European Service Network (ESN) SA est condamnée aux dépens

Action brought on 29 September 2003 by European Service Network against the Commission of the European Communities

(Case T-332/03)

Language of the case: French

An action against the Commission of the European Communities was brought before the Court of First Instance of the European Communities on 29 September 2003 by European Service Network, established in Brussels, represented by René Steichen, lawyer, with an address for service in Luxembourg.

The applicant claims that the Court should:

(annul Invitation to tender ENTR/02/055 (CORDIS (Lot 1;

(order the Commission to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments:

The applicant submitted a tender pursuant to lot 1 of Invitation to tender ENTR/02/055 (CORDIS. The applicant was not successful.

The applicant contests the award of the contract to the successful tenderer. According to the applicant, the Commission did not comply with the principle of equal treatment of tenderers or the rule of transparency in the tendering procedure.

The applicant claims, first, that the successful tenderer received favourable financial treatment, to the detriment of the other tenderers. The applicant also alleges that the successful tenderer had privileged access to essential information. The applicant alleges in particular that the other tenderers did not have access to certain essential technical information on the current status of the database for the CORDIS project.

The applicant also submits that the criteria used in the award of the tender do not conform to those laid down in the contract documents and that the Commission applied in a discriminatory manner the criteria published in the contract documents for the selection of the tender giving the best quality/price ratio.

Registrar: D. Christensen, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 6 July 2004,

gives the following

Judgment

AFCon Management Consultants ('AFCon') is a consultancy company specialising in agricultural projects in countries whose economies are in transition. Mr Mc Mullin and Mr O'Grady are the directors, shareholders and founding members of the company (together with AFCon 'the applicants').

On 28 May 1999, the Commission launched a restrictive tender procedure within the Tacis programme for the supply of technical assistance services, entitled 'Agricultural Extension Services in South Russia' reference FDRUS 9902 ('the tender at issue').

On 29 July 1999, the evaluation committee drew up a list of ten companies from the 21 firms which had expressed interest in that call for tenders. The ten companies were then invited to submit a tender.

4
On 16 and 17 December 1999, the evaluation committee met to evaluate the eight tenders received ('the first evaluation'). The committee considered the tender of the GFA – Gesellschaft für Agrarprojekte mbH ('GFA-Agrar') and Stoas Agri-projects Foundation ('Stoas') consortium to be the best. AFCon's tender came in second place.

5
The Commission subsequently discovered that a conflict of interests existed as between a member of the evaluation committee and the GFA-Agrar and Stoas consortium ('GFA'). That member, Mr A, was employed by Agriment International BV, a subsidiary of Stoas. The Commission ended its association with Mr A and informed him that it would no longer require his services.

Because of that conflict of interests, the Commission, on 3 March 2000, decided to cancel the first evaluation and to appoint a committee of new members to carry out a second evaluation. The Commission informed the tenderers of that decision by letter of 28 March 2000.

On 15 and 16 May 2000, the evaluation committee carried out a second tender evaluation ('the second evaluation'). At the end of that evaluation, GFA's tender was ranked first. GFA's technical proposal scored 72.69 % (third place); its financial proposal was EUR 2 131 870 (first place). AFCon's tender was ranked second with a technical proposal scoring 75.32 % (first place) and a financial proposal of EUR 2 499 750 (sixth place).

In August 2000, the Commission awarded the tender to GFA. It informed AFCon of that by letter of 17 August 2000.

9
On 9 October 2000, AFCon complained to the Commission that the tender procedure had been mismanaged. It maintained that GFA's financial proposal was below the market rate. The Commission rejected that complaint on 9 November 2000.

10
By letters of 18 December 2000 and 31 January 2001, AFCon alleged that GFA had infringed the tendering rules. By letter of 28 February 2001, the Commission rejected that allegation.

11
By letter of 15 March 2001, AFCon repeated that GFA's proposal was in breach of the procedure for the award of Tacis contracts. The Commission did not reply to that letter.

12
On 15 May 2001, AFCon made a complaint to the European Ombudsman. According to that complaint:

– GFA's financial proposal was in breach of the tendering rules (first complaint);

– having discovered a conflict of interests, the Commission failed to take the measures required by the rules governing the award of contracts (second complaint);

– the Commission infringed the tendering rules by allowing the successful tenderer to replace the majority of its long-term experts by other persons within weeks of the signature of the contract (third complaint).

In his decision of 22 April 2002 (Decision 834/2001/GG), the Ombudsman held that only the first complaint was well founded. In that regard he stated:

'It is good administrative practice in tender procedures for the administration to adhere to the rules established for these procedures. … By allowing tenderers to include experts' fees under reimbursable items in the present case, the Commission failed to comply with the rules applicable to the tender and the aim pursued by these rules. This constitutes an instance of maladministration.'

As regards the second and third complaints, the Ombudsman concluded that there was no maladministration on the part of the Commission.

15
By letter of 25 May 2002, AFCon claimed that the Commission should pay it the following amounts by way of compensation for harm suffered as a result of not having been awarded the contract:

– loss of profit: EUR 624 937

– loss of ‘project profile’: EUR 600 000

– loss of ‘professional development’: EUR 150 000.

17
By letter of 13 September 2002, AFCon requested the Commission to send it a number of documents pertaining to the procedure for the award of the tender at issue. The Commission acceded to that request on 3 October 2002, other than in respect of the evaluation committee’s evaluation reports and minutes and competitors’ bids, which fell under the exceptions provided for, respectively, in the second subparagraph of Article 4(3) and Article 4(1)(b) of Regulation (EC) No 1049/2001 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 30 May 2001 regarding public access to European Parliament, Council and Commission documents (OJ 2001 L 145, p. 43).

18
By letter of 11 October 2002, AFCon made a confirmatory application under Regulation No 1049/2001. It requested access to various documents relating to the tendering procedure at issue.

19
By letter of 22 November 2002, the Commission granted access to certain documents and, as to the remainder, upheld its refusal to provide the documents requested.

20
At the same time, in a letter of 4 September 2002 sent to Mr Byrne, Member of the Commission, the Irish Minister of State for European Affairs, Mr D. Roche, expressed support for AFCon and asked the Commission to find a solution to the dispute with AFCon.

21
By letters of 10 October and 4 November 2002, the Commission restated its position on the legality of the tender procedure at issue.

22
On 15 November 2002, Mr B. Crowley, a member of the European Parliament, put a written question (3365/02) to the Commission about the award of the contract at issue. Mr Patten, a member of the Commission, replied to it on 23 December 2002. Mr Crowley subsequently sent a letter to Mr Patten, to which the latter responded on 3 April 2003.

23
By letter of 18 February 2003, Mr Roche wrote a second time to Mr Byrne in support of AFCon. By letter of 8 April 2003, Mr Byrne restated the Commission’s position.

Procedure

By application lodged at the Court Registry on 12 May 2003, the applicants brought the present action.

25
Upon hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court (Fifth Chamber) decided to open the oral procedure and, as measures of organisation of procedure as provided for in Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, put questions in writing to the parties and asked the Commission to produce certain documents. The parties complied with those requests within the prescribed time-limits.

26
The parties submitted oral argument and answered the questions put by the Court at the hearing on 6 July 2004.

Forms of order sought

The applicants claim that the Court should:

– order the Commission to pay damages in respect of the loss suffered as a result of the breach of the tendering procedure for the Tacis FDRUS 9902 project, plus compensatory interest, from the date on which the loss materialised;

– order the Commission to pay interest on the damages from the date of judgment;

– order the Commission to produce certain documents relating to the procedure for evaluating the tenders;

– order the Commission to pay the costs.

28 The Commission contends that the Court should:

– dismiss the application;

– order the applicants to pay the costs.

Law

A – The request for measures of inquiry

29 The applicants have asked the Court to order the Commission, under Article 65(b) of the Rules of Procedure, to produce certain documents relating to the tender procedure and, if necessary, to hear witnesses.

30 The Court, in the context of measures of organisation of procedure, requested the Commission, inter alia, to produce information concerning the tenderers' bids and the documentation relating to the first and second evaluations. Those requests coincide in the main with the applicants' requests for measures of inquiry. Therefore, the Court finds that the information in the documents before it is sufficient for it to give judgment in the proceedings without ordering the production of further documents or the hearing of witnesses.

B – The claim for compensation

31 Community law recognises a right to reparation where three conditions are met: the rule of law infringed must be intended to confer rights on individuals; the breach must be sufficiently serious; and there must be a direct causal link between the breach of the obligation resting on the author of the act and the damage sustained by the injured parties (Joined Cases C-46/93 and C-48/93 Brasserie du Pêcheur and Factortame [1996] ECR I-1029, paragraph 51; and Case C-352/98 P Bergaderm and Goupil v Commission [2000] ECR I-5291, paragraphs 41 and 42).

32 It is necessary to ascertain whether the applicants have established that the various conditions were met in this instance.

1. The unlawfulness of the Commission's conduct

33 The applicants claim, in essence, that there are three irregularities. First, GFA's bid did not comply with the rules of the tender at issue. Second, the Commission took account of unlawful criteria in the evaluation. Third, the Commission did not take the requisite measures once it had discovered there to be a conflict of interests.

a) The lawfulness of GFA's tender

34 The applicants submit that GFA's bid failed to comply with the rules of the tender at issue. Those rules include:

– instructions to tenderers (European Commission, SCR(E) Tacis, version of 22 June 1999), in particular point C.2.1;

– guidelines for the preparation of the technical and financial proposal (European Commission, SCR(E) Tacis, January 1999 version) ('the guidelines'), in particular, the provisions relating to the preparation of Annexes B ('Organisation and methods') and D ('Breakdown of prices for Tacis contracts');

– terms of reference for the tender at issue (European Commission, 'Technical assistance to economic reform in the food and agriculture sector, Terms of reference for a project: Russia "Agricultural extension services in South Russia – Farm extension project"', of 4 June 1999).

In the applicants' submission, it is clear from those rules that the financial proposal must correspond to the technical proposal and show the remuneration of the persons responsible for training activities in the heading attributed to that purpose.

36
Those rules are unambiguous. They are intended to place all tenders on an equal footing in order that a comparison may be made. The rules were confirmed by the Commission's practice in a similar project which was contemporaneous with the project in question (FDRUS 9901).

37
GFA infringed those rules because:

– the number of man-days given in its technical proposal is higher than the number referred to in its financial proposal;

– in its financial proposal, GFA allocated a part of the remuneration for persons responsible for training to the heading 'reimbursable expenses', which is normally reserved for the reimbursement of costs relating to training activities 'such as flights, per diem for trainees, registration fees etc.'.

GFA thus succeeded in reducing the amount of its financial proposal. The differences between the two proposals are as follows:

Technical Proposal	Financial Proposal	Difference
2 687 man-days (EU experts)	2 200 man-days (EU experts)	(487) man-days
4 615 man-days (local experts)	2 250 man-days (local experts)	(2 365) man-days
5 300 man-days (support staff)	3 500 man-days (support staff)	(1 800) man-days
Total 12 602 man-days	7 950 man-days	(4 652) man-days

Those differences were allocated to reimbursable expenses.

39
The applicants submit that the Ombudsman, in substance, endorsed their argument when he found that the fact that the Commission had allowed GFA, in breach of the relevant tender rules, to include training fees as expenses within the heading restricted to reimbursable items constituted an instance of maladministration.

40
Finally, the applicants submit that their criticisms were borne out by the difficulties which the Commission encountered while GFA was performing the contract.

41
The applicants conclude from those matters that the Commission, in failing to exclude GFA on account of the irregularities, infringed the principles of equal treatment, of proportionality and of legitimate expectations.

42
The Commission contends that the way in which GFA presented its tender was not unlawful, since:

– the rules on which the applicants rely are not legally binding; they do not unequivocally prescribe how experts' fees are to be presented in the financial proposal;

– Article 117 of the Financial Regulation of 21 December 1997 applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 1977 L 356, p. 1), as amended by Council Regulation (EC, ECSC, Euratom) No 2548/98 of 23 November 1998 (OJ 1998 L 320, p. 1; 'the Financial Regulation'), and Council Regulation (Euratom, EC) No 1279/96 of 25 June 1996 concerning the provision of assistance to economic reform and recovery in the New Independent States and Mongolia (OJ 1996 L 165, p. 1) (Article 7 and Annex III) contain no specific rules on the allocation of training fees to the heading reserved for reimbursable expenses;

– the Commission does not have an established practice in this regard and therefore the applicants cannot rely on an infringement of the principle of legitimate expectations;

– since the allocation of training fees to reimbursable expenses was not specifically prohibited, GFA could perfectly well use that method;

– GFA's presentation of its tender did not distort any comparison of the tenders, since the evaluators were in a position to take into account in their comparative assessment the fact that the trainers' fees had been treated as reimbursable expenses;

– the Ombudsman's finding is not decisive;

– circumstances subsequent to the award of the tender, in particular the performance of the contract, are irrelevant.

Findings of the Court

Point C.2.1 of the instructions to tenderers provides:

'Breakdown of prices should be prepared in accordance with the format of Annex D of the draft contract and prices must be expressed in euros. Tenders in any other currency or an incorrect presentation of the breakdown of prices may lead to the rejection of the tender.'

Annex D to the guidelines contains an introductory section which sets out the method to be followed in presenting the tender. It also includes a form consisting of a table intended for the tenderers' data. The table contains the following four main headings:

'1.
Fees, including

a) Western experts

b) Local experts

c) Support staff

Per diem

3.
Direct expenses

4.
Reimbursable expenses'.

According to the guidelines:

'The following notes are provided to assist tenderers in the preparation of Annex D (financial breakdown). … Where these guidelines are not followed, the tenderer is advised to justify deviations through an explanatory note. …

4. … The figures given in Annex D (for each category or individual expert) should exactly reflect the figures in the time allocation chart (time spent on the project for each expert) submitted as part of Annex B (summary input of staff).'

The Commission thus stated clearly and unequivocally that there was to be an 'exact' correspondence between the data in Annex B and those in Annex D, with any inconsistencies to be justified by an explanatory note.

The principle that the financial proposal and the technical proposal should tally is also mentioned in the explanatory notes preceding the form in Annex B to the guidelines, which state:

'Important: Above summary must be consistent with the input given in the breakdown of remuneration – Annex D.'

48
In order to ascertain whether GFA's tender complied with those provisions, it must be borne in mind that, as regards the 'training' section, GFA's technical proposal (Annex A) gave the following figures:

Table 1

Input (man-days)	Technical assistance	Training Replication Dissemination	Total
EU experts	2 200	487	2 687

Local experts	2 250	2 365	4 615
Support staff	3 500	1 800	5 300
Total	7 950	4 652	12 602

49
In the financial proposal (Annex D) GFA put forward the following figures under the heading ‘A. Fees’:

	Input (man-days)	Amount EUR
EU experts	2 200	821 000
Local experts	2 250	58 750
Support staff	3 500	61 250
Total	7 950	941 000

The number of man-days (7 950) is 4 652 lower than the figure given in the technical proposal (12 602).

51
However, it is clear from the actual terms of GFA’s financial proposal that that difference arises because those 4 652 man-days have been treated as reimbursable expenses.

52
GFA’s financial proposal restates, in a footnote and an accompanying explanatory note, the data given in the technical proposal, which have been set out above (Table 1). That note explains that the difference between the two proposals arises because of the treatment of the costs of the fees of the staff responsible for training, replication and dissemination. GFA’s financial proposal also contains a table giving a detailed description of all the reimbursable expenses relating to those activities. It is clear from that table that in total 4 652 man-days were thus included as reimbursable expenses with a total value of EUR 282 425. Contrary to the applicants’ contention, the difference between the financial proposal and the technical proposal is therefore purely formal and it does not impede an effective comparison of the various tenderers’ bids.

Furthermore, GFA’s financial proposal included, in compliance with the terms of reference, supplies to the value of EUR 500 000 for training and EUR 200 000 for activities relating to replication and dissemination.

54
Consequently, the Court must reject the complaints that the Commission acted unlawfully in failing to reject GFA’s tender because of the alleged disparities between the technical proposal and the financial proposal.

b) The use of unlawful criteria in the evaluation

55
The applicants complain that the Commission allowed the evaluators to take account, in the second evaluation, of AFCon’s previous experience on Tacis projects, in breach of the applicable rules. Point 3 of Annex III to Regulation No 1279/96, and point 3 of Annex IV to Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 99/2000 of 29 December 1999 concerning the provision of assistance to the partner States in Eastern Europe and Central Asia (OJ 2000 L 12, p. 1), provide that ‘specific experience of the tenderer in Tacis shall not be taken into account’ in the evaluation of tenders. By virtue of those provisions, the tender is evaluated solely ‘on the basis of a weighing of technical quality against price[; t]he weighing of the two criteria shall be announced in each invitation to tender, [and t]he technical evaluation shall be carried out according, in particular, to the following criteria: organisation, time schedule, methods and plan of work proposed for providing the services, the qualifications, experience, skills of the staff proposed for the provision of the services and the use made of local companies or experts, their integration into the project, and their contribution to the sustainability of the project results’.

56
In this instance, one of the members of the committee which conducted the second evaluation, Mr G. Rea, thought that the existing advisory centres established by Mr Mc Mullin and AFCon in the Tacis project FDRUS 9405 ‘Support to individually operated farms in Russia’, between 1996 and 1998, were not operational at the time of the interview and were not providing technical advice. That statement, which was incorrect, influenced the other evaluators.

57
Having obtained, pursuant to measures of organisation of procedure, disclosure of various documents relating to the work of the evaluation committee, the applicants claimed at the hearing that one of the evaluators, Ms K. Karttunen, specifically mentioned in her report that she had taken into account the fact that AFCon had no experience in other projects in Russia.

58
The Commission denies that there was any irregularity whatsoever. It acknowledges that it is required, under Annex III, point 3, of Regulation No 1279/96, not to take into account the experience of the tenderers in other Tacis projects.

59
In this instance, the evaluation committee heard each tenderer in connection with its technical proposal. No general list of questions was prepared for that purpose; the interviews differed from one tenderer to the other. During the interview Mr Mc Mullin had an opportunity to rebut any statement detrimental to AFCon.

The complaints relating to the consideration of AFCon's experience in earlier projects funded by the Tacis programme are not sufficiently established.

61
The documentation relating to the evaluation of the tenders, produced to the Court following measures of organisation of procedure, does not establish that the members of the evaluation committee included in the criteria for evaluating the tenders the earlier experience of the tenderers in respect of projects financed by the Tacis programme. It is clear from the documents headed 'Detailed Technical Evaluation per Tenderer' that the evaluation committee took as its basis eight objective criteria relating to the experts' experience, the project's approach and the involvement of local experts. Moreover, the evaluators' note relating to the evaluation of AFCon's tender does not contain any negative appraisal about an alleged lack of experience or difficulties previously encountered in the implementation of Tacis programme projects. Thus, the members of the evaluation committee noted, as one of the strong points of AFCon's tender, the strength of the team leader and his experience in the region covered by the project. Among the weak points, the members of the evaluation committee noted, in particular, that the team leader had only limited Russian language skills and that, in general, the tender seemed too ambitious and, in some respects, too rigid.

As regards the arguments relating to the comments which Mr Rea is alleged to have made, it must be stated that in his final report he did not make any remarks at all about any difficulties which AFCon had encountered in previous projects.

63
Likewise, the report of the external evaluator, Ms Karttunen, to which the applicants referred at the hearing, contains no negative comments about AFCon's earlier experience in Tacis programme projects. That report drew attention, in particular, to the experience gained in Russia by the team leader whilst stating that in the interview 'he was not transparent regarding the current situation of the existing Farm Advisory Centres in the project area'.

Consequently, it is sufficient to state that the applicants have not established that the Commission relied on a negative assessment of AFCon's experience in earlier Tacis-programme projects when evaluating AFCon's tender. Therefore, the complaints relating to the unlawfulness of the criteria used in evaluating AFCon's tender must be rejected.

c) The consequences of the conflict of interests

65
The applicants complain that the Commission failed to draw conclusions from the conflict of interests between a member of the evaluation committee, Mr A, and one of the tenderers, GFA. They submit, in essence, that the Commission did not act with due diligence once it had discovered that there was a conflict of interests and that it should not have allowed GFA to take part in the next stage of the tendering procedure.

66
As regards the first of those criticisms, the applicants maintain that the Commission did not use its discretion in a responsible manner when it refused to consider taking disciplinary action with regard to both Mr A and GFA. The Commission did not consider excluding GFA even though it had been informed by the Chairman of the evaluation committee of the links between GFA and one of the members of the evaluation committee. They are also in doubt as to whether the Commission tried to find out if GFA knew that Mr A was a member of the evaluation committee. Having analysed all the documentation relating to the tendering procedure, which was provided to them following the measures of organisation of procedure ordered by the Court, the applicants stated at the hearing that there was no evidence from which it could be concluded that the Commission had even asked itself whether disciplinary measures should be taken with regard to GFA.

67
The applicant's second criticism is that the Commission failed to comply with its obligation to manage Tacis-funded projects properly by failing to sanction GFA and by allowing the consortium to take part in the second evaluation. The fact that Mr A was employed full-time by one of the members of the GFA consortium should have prompted the Commission to exclude both the committee member concerned and the relevant tenderer.

68
The Commission contends that it acted lawfully and did not stray beyond the limits of its broad discretion.

In the absence of any evidence establishing that GFA sought to use Mr A's presence on the evaluation committee to influence the procedure for the award of the contract, the Commission contends that there is no rule which would have allowed it to exclude or sanction GFA. Indeed, Article 114(1) of the Financial Regulation provides:

'Participation in tendering procedures shall be open on equal terms to all natural and legal persons coming within the scope of application of the Treaties and to all natural and legal persons in the recipient State.'

Therefore, GFA could easily have challenged, as a breach of Article 114(1) of the Financial Regulation, any decision to exclude it from the tender at issue. Furthermore, the Commission contends that by reason of the proportionality principle it can exclude an undertaking from a tender procedure only in exceptional circumstances.

71
The conflict of interests was solely attributable to the evaluator. He infringed Article 12(4) of the General Regulations for Tenders and the Award of Service Contracts financed from Phare/Tacis funds. He was not connected to GFA but to one of the firms in the consortium. Since GFA had no authority over the evaluator, the conflict of interests could not be imputed to GFA.

72
What is more, the exclusion of GFA would have unduly advantaged AFCon, in breach of the principle of equal treatment.

73
Having excluded Mr A from its proceedings, the evaluation committee did not select AFCon. Although the Beneficiary Representative for the tender at issue was in favour of recommending that AFCon be awarded the contract, the three other members were against such an outcome.

The fact that a person who helps to evaluate and select tenders for a public contract has the contract awarded to him is highly questionable and constitutes a chargeable offence under the criminal law of several Member States, regard being had to the principle of equal treatment in the award of public contracts, the concern for sound financial management of Community funds and the prevention of fraud (Case T-277/97 Ismeri Europa v Court of Auditors [1999] ECR II-1825, paragraph 112).

After the discovery of a conflict of interests between a member of the evaluation committee and one of the tenderers, the Commission must act with due diligence and on the basis of all the relevant information when formulating and adopting its decision on the outcome of the procedure for the award of the tender at issue. That obligation derives in particular from the principles of sound administration and equal treatment (see, by analogy, Case T-231/97 New Europe Consulting and Brown v Commission [1999] ECR II-2403, paragraph 41). The Commission is required to ensure at each stage of a tendering procedure equal treatment and, thereby, equality of opportunity for all the tenderers (see, to that effect, Case C-496/99 P Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta [2004] ECR I-0000, paragraph 108, and Case T-145/98 ADT Projekt v Commission [2000] ECR II-387, paragraph 164).

It is necessary to examine whether, in this instance, the Commission acted in accordance with that obligation.

77
In that regard, where a conflict of interests between one of the tenderers and a member of the committee responsible for evaluating the tenders comes to light, the Commission has some discretion to determine the measures which must be taken in respect of the conduct of the subsequent stages of the procedure for the award of the tender.

78
It is not disputed that, once it had been put on notice by the Chairman of the Evaluation Committee, the Commission did not investigate the links between Mr A and GFA in order to satisfy itself that GFA did not seek to influence the evaluation committee's proceedings. The Commission confirmed at the hearing that there was no evidence suggesting that GFA sought to influence the proceedings, using one of its employees sitting on the evaluation committee as an intermediary. In response to the Court's questions, the Commission none the less stated that it had taken no measures of inquiry in order to ascertain whether GFA and Mr A had collaborated during the tendering procedure. The Commission insisted on the fact that, in the absence of anything giving it grounds for suspecting there to have been fraud, there was no reason to investigate GFA's role.

Given the circumstances of the present case, such an assessment is manifestly incorrect. Since it had failed to investigate whether there was any collusion between GFA and Mr A, the Commission in fact had no grounds for ruling out, with any reasonable degree of certainty, the possibility that GFA had sought to influence the tendering procedure. Rather, a number of objective and consistent factors should have led the Commission to take particular care and to consider the possibility that there was collusion between GFA and Mr A. Those factors reasonably gave grounds for forming the view that the conflict of interests could have arisen not merely as the result of a combination of circumstances but as the result of a fraudulent intention.

In the first place, it is necessary to stress the seriousness of the terms in which the Chairman of the evaluation committee criticised the questionable nature of the first evaluation. He proposed in a note of 4 January 2000 that the evaluation should be cancelled and that a further evaluation should take place before a committee with a different membership. The Chairman of the evaluation committee had, in particular, drawn attention to the 'highly questionable' nature of the results of the first evaluation owing to the fact that Mr A was then working 'as team leader in a Dutch Government sponsored project in Ukraine being implemented by Agriment International, a member of Stoas Holding Group'.

In addition to that conflict of interests, the Chairman of the evaluation committee also pointed out that there were signs that Mr A had, in fact, sought to give preferential treatment to GFA to the detriment of the other tenderers. The note stated that 'Mr A [had] placed the companies that the other three evaluators [had] ranked either first or second in fourth or fifth position'. He added that '[t]aking these issues together, there are significant suspicions of a "Conflict of Interest" and resulting preferential markings for the GFA/Stoas partnership'.

82
The Chairman of the evaluation committee had also stated that GFA's financial proposal of EUR 2.13 million 'was significantly below those of the first and second companies' and that 'such a low offer could be interpreted as a form of dumping'. It is thus clear from the statements and findings of the Chairman of the evaluation committee that the questionable nature of GFA's tender derived not only from the conflict of interests resulting from the presence of an employee of the consortium on the committee but also from the fact that its financial proposal was abnormally low.

83
In the second place, the circumstances were such as to give reasonable grounds for doubting that the conflict of interests in which Mr A found himself arose purely by chance or could be attributed exclusively to his negligence.

84
To start with, Mr A had failed to tell the Commission of his activities within the Stoas Group. Thus, when he applied for the post of external evaluator and in the course of the evaluation committee's subsequent work, Mr A did not disclose that he was carrying out managerial tasks for the Stoas Group in connection with an agricultural assistance project (see the note of 4 January 2000). The relevance of such information for the purposes of Mr A's appointment as an evaluator was particularly obvious given that the tender FDRUS 9902 concerned agricultural assistance services showing certain similarities with those for which Mr A was responsible in Ukraine.

Further, Mr A, far from merely failing to disclose his activities within the Stoas Group, expressly stated that he was not linked, directly or indirectly, with any of the tenderers, either individually or in their capacity as members of a consortium. It is evident that on 16 December 1999 Mr A had signed a declaration of impartiality, in which he stated:

'I have no direct or indirect links with any of the Tenderers, whether individuals or members of a consortium, who have replied to the Tender Dossier, nor with any of the sub-contractors proposed. I confirm that, should I discover during the course of evaluation that such a link exists, I will declare this immediately and resign from the Evaluation Committee. I understand that if such a link is known to me and I have neglected to declare it, the European Commission may decide to cancel the Tendering in question and I may be exposed to liabilities.'

Finally, the questionable nature of the foregoing matters is reinforced by the fact that, once Mr A had begun to examine GFA's tender, he could not claim to be unaware that he was in a situation which was incompatible with his undertaking to be impartial. The tender made it clear that Stoas was one of the members of the GFA consortium. Moreover, during the evaluation interview in which Mr A took part, GFA was represented by, inter alia, the director of the division responsible for the Stoas Group's international activities, Mr B. Although he was thus face to face with a person with a highly responsible position in the group which was employing him, Mr A, in breach of the terms of his declaration of impartiality set out above, failed to disclose his links with the group and to resign from the evaluation committee.

87
In the third place, particular importance must be attached to the fact that the seriousness of the situation gave reasonable grounds for suspecting that there might be collusion between Mr A and GFA.

First, it is reasonable to be in doubt as to the lawfulness of GFA's conduct. As was stated above, GFA was represented during the evaluation interview by the director of the division responsible for the Stoas Group's international activities, to which Mr A was answerable. According to GFA's tender, the division for which Mr B was responsible consisted of just 25 people and the Commission could therefore reasonably assume that Mr B knew Mr A. Those facts should have prompted the Commission to ask itself why Mr B did not disclose the links which he had with one of the members of the evaluation committee.

Second, Mr A was appointed by the Commission as an external expert at the beginning of September 1999, at a time when GFA had not yet submitted its tender. Although Mr A had not taken part in drawing up the terms of reference, it was conceivable that during the two months between his appointment as external evaluator and the date of submission of tenders he had been in contact with representatives of the GFA consortium. On that point, the Commission acknowledged at the hearing that if such contacts had taken place, it would then have been obliged to exclude GFA from the procedure for the award of the tender at issue. The Commission did not, however, attempt to question Mr A on this point.

It follows from the foregoing that the Commission, in failing to investigate the relations between Mr A and the GFA consortium, made a manifest error of assessment. In infringing the principle of sound administration in that way, the Commission also violated the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers, which requires it to examine each tender impartially and objectively in the light of the requirements and general principles governing the tendering procedure, in order to ensure that all the tenderers are afforded the same opportunities.

91
The principle of equal treatment prohibits comparable situations from being treated differently and different situations from being treated alike, unless such treatment is objectively justified. In this instance, there were serious doubts as to the lawfulness of GFA's tender. As long as those doubts subsisted, the consortium's situation was different from that of all the other tenderers. By failing to open an inquiry aimed at putting an end to that situation, the Commission treated GFA in the same way as all the other tenderers, even though such treatment was not objectively justified. In infringing the principle of equal treatment in that way, the Commission violated a rule of law whose purpose is to confer rights on individuals.

However, since it has been established that the Commission failed to act with due diligence to take the steps needed to continue with the tendering procedure, the legality of the decision not to exclude GFA from the remainder of the procedure cannot be assessed. Whether the decision is lawful is directly dependent on the result of the inquiry which the Commission should have undertaken in order to satisfy itself that there was no collusion. Since the factual aspects of the case-file do not support a finding of such collusion, the Court must reject the complaints by which the applicants seek to show that the Commission should have excluded GFA from the tendering procedure.

As regards whether the illegality found is such as to cause the Community to incur liability, it is necessary to bear in mind that the decisive test for finding that a breach of Community law is sufficiently serious is whether the Community institution concerned manifestly and gravely disregarded the limits on its discretion (see Brasserie du Pêcheur and Factortame, cited above, paragraph 55, and Bergaderm and Goupil v Commission, cited above, paragraph 43). The Court therefore holds that, on account of the abovementioned circumstances of the conflict of interests and of the risk of fraud which it entails, the Commission's omission is of a manifest and serious nature and is thus such as to cause the Community to incur liability.

2. Damage and the causal connection

The applicants point to a number of heads of damage, namely:

– loss sustained in the tender procedure;

– loss of profit;

– loss of 'profile';

– harm to AFCon's reputation and that of its directors, Mr Mc Mullin and Mr O'Grady.

a) Compensation for the harm corresponding to the losses sustained in the tender procedure

The applicants claim compensation for damage corresponding to the losses sustained as a result of their taking part in the tender procedure. This entails the costs which AFCon incurred to no effect when it submitted its tender and the costs relating to the complaints made to the Commission and the Ombudsman. Those losses consist of the remuneration of the staff employed in developing the project and of all the travel and subsistence expenses incurred as a consequence. On the basis of the unit costs indicated in AFCon's financial proposal, the applicants calculate that damage at EUR 82 570.

The Commission challenges those claims. It contends that, if AFCon had been awarded the contract, the costs reimbursement of which is sought would still have necessarily been incurred. Consequently, the Commission cannot be liable for such losses.

A distinction must be drawn between the loss represented by the costs and expenses incurred, on the one hand, in taking part in the tender procedure and, on the other, in challenging the legality of that procedure.

– Costs relating to the submission of AFCon's tender

It must be borne in mind that economic operators must bear the economic risks inherent in their activities, regard being had to the circumstances of each particular case. As regards a tendering procedure, those economic risks include, in particular, the costs relating to preparation of the tender. The expenses thus incurred therefore remain the responsibility of the undertaking which chose to take part in the procedure, since the opportunity to compete for a contract does not involve any certainty as to the outcome of the procedure. In accordance with that principle, Article 24 of the General Regulations for Tenders and the Award of Service Contracts financed from Phare/Tacis Funds provides that in the event of closure or annulment of a tendering procedure, the tenderers are not entitled to compensation. It follows that the charges and expenses incurred by a tenderer in connection with his participation in a tendering procedure cannot in principle constitute damage which is capable of being remedied by an award of damages. However, the provision in question cannot, without potentially undermining the principles of legal certainty and of protection of legitimate expectations, apply in cases where an infringement of Community law in the conduct of the tendering procedure has affected a tenderer's chances of being awarded the contract (Case T-203/96 Embassy Limousines & Services v Parliament [1998] ECR II-4239, paragraphs 75 and 97, and Case T-13/96 TEAM v Commission [1998] ECR II-4073, paragraphs 70 to 72).

In this instance, the applicants have established that there was a breach of Community law in the way the tendering procedure was conducted. That breach fundamentally undermined the tendering procedure and affected AFCon's chances of securing the tender at issue.

100
If the Commission had conducted an inquiry into the links between GFA and Mr A, it is possible that it would have concluded that there was collusion such as to warrant the exclusion of GFA from the remainder of the tendering procedure. In that regard, it is noteworthy that the Commission actually acknowledged, at the hearing, that if an inquiry had produced such a result, it would have then been obliged to penalise GFA by excluding it from the procedure.

101
In taking the decision to proceed with the tendering procedure without holding an inquiry, the Commission evaluated GFA's tender and awarded the contract to it even though there were a number of signs all of which suggested that there might have been collusion with a member of the evaluation committee. In acting in that way and failing to satisfy itself that GFA's participation entailed no irregularities, the Commission allowed GFA to remain in contention and accordingly undermined AFCon's chances of being awarded the contract.

It is true that any tenderer who participates in a tendering procedure must, as a general rule, accept the risk that he will remain liable for the costs associated with submission of his tender in the event of the contract being awarded to one of his competitors. However, that risk is accepted on the presumption inherent in any call for tenders that the Commission will act impartially in accordance with the principles set out at paragraph 90 above in order to ensure equal treatment as between the tenderers. By allowing GFA to take part in spite of the signs mentioned above and by failing to open an inquiry, the Commission disregarded that presumption and directly prejudiced AFCon's chances. Consequently, AFCon must be compensated for the loss relating to the costs incurred in participating in the procedure.

As regards quantum, the applicants assess their loss at EUR 31 070: in respect of costs incurred in a reconnaissance trip to south Russia (EUR 8 800), the time and costs entailed in preparing the tender (EUR 14 950) as well travel costs to Brussels in order to attend the two evaluation interviews (EUR 7 320). Since that estimate is not excessive, the loss sustained by AFCon in respect of costs relating to submission of its tender must be set at EUR 31 070.

– Costs incurred in challenging the legality of the tendering procedure

It must be held that this loss is present, real and certain and flows directly from the unlawfulness of the conduct for which the Commission is criticised. The applicants have maintained that this head of damages amounts to EUR

51 500, an amount made up of the following elements:

– resources allocated to the various complaints and proceedings other than this action instigated by AFCon following the award of the tender at issue to GFA (EUR 26 500);

– expenses for travel and meetings in Russia, Ireland and Belgium with contacts, politicians and lawyers (EUR 25 000).

In relation to the expenses connected with travelling, meetings and lawyers, the applicants have adduced neither any material allowing the Court to verify that those expenses constitute loss for which reparation may be granted nor any evidence capable of substantiating their estimate. In the absence of proof, these expenses therefore cannot be taken into account when quantifying the loss sustained.

106
There are two aspects to the estimate of the resources employed in the various complaints AFCon made to the Commission and the Ombudsman.

107
The first concerns the number of fee days which AFCon spent defending its interests in order to challenge the legality of the tendering procedure. For the period between AFCon being notified of the award of the contract on 17 August 2000 and the final occasion on which Irish Minister of State for European Affairs contacted a member of the Commission to express support for AFCon in February 2003 that number is calculated at 28 fee-days. The daily rate of fees is set at EUR 500 by reference to the rate applied by AFCon in its financial proposal. That estimate does not appear excessive. Consequently, the loss sustained by AFCon and attributable to the time thus spent in defending its interests must be set at EUR 14 000.

The second aspect concerns research costs amounting to EUR 12 500. However, the applicants have not produced any material showing exactly what those costs covered or any documentation substantiating the amount claimed. Therefore, the claim in respect of the research allegedly carried out cannot be allowed.

109
Consequently, the Commission must be ordered to pay AFCon EUR 14 000 as compensation for the loss sustained on account of costs incurred by AFCon in defending its interests.

b) Compensation for loss of profit

110
As loss of profit, the applicants claim 25% of the value of AFCon's financial proposal, EUR 741 591. That amount corresponds to the profit margin which AFCon would have obtained if the contract had been awarded to it.

111
The Commission reserves its position on this calculation in the absence of any supporting evidence from AFCon.

112
The damage claimed in respect of loss of profit presupposes that AFCon was entitled to be awarded the contract. Even if the Commission had investigated the links between Mr A and GFA and had concluded that there was collusion such as to warrant GFA's exclusion from the procedure, AFCon would not have been certain of securing the contract.

113
The contracting authority is not bound by the evaluation committee's proposal but has a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract (TEAM v Commission, cited above, paragraph 76). It is true that the applicants have cited in this regard the Court of Auditors' Special Report No 16/2000 on tendering procedures for service contracts under the Phare and Tacis programmes, together with the Commission's responses (OJ 2000 C 350, p. 1), from which it appears that out of 120 contracts entered into under those programmes the Commission followed the evaluation committee's recommendation on 117 occasions. However, it cannot be concluded from those statistics that in this case the contract would definitely have been awarded to AFCon if GFA had been excluded from the procedure.

Therefore, the damage represented by AFCon's loss of profit is not real and certain but conjectural. Therefore it cannot be the subject of compensation.

c) Compensation for loss of 'profile'

115
The applicants claim that the award of the contract in question would have permitted AFCon to take part in other calls for tenders. After the tender procedure at issue, AFCon's business began to collapse. The award of the tender at issue to GFA harmed both AFCon's reputation and its business.

116
AFCon was automatically excluded from tendering in subsequent calls for tenders. From 2002, new rules on eligibility prevented AFCon from tendering, since the rules required tenderers to have an annual turnover and experience which AFCon no longer had.

117
The applicants provisionally estimate their loss of 'profile' at EUR 600 000.

118
The Commission disputes those assertions, which it contends are not substantiated.

119
The harm in respect of which reparation is sought is founded on the contention that the award of the tender at issue to GFA subsequently brought about a reduction in AFCon's activity to the point that it was, de facto, excluded from tendering for projects comparable to the one at issue in this case. That contention is not substantiated.

120
Consequently, the Commission cannot incur liability for that head of damage.

d) Compensation for the harm to AFCon's reputation and that of its directors

121
The applicants maintain that AFCon's reputation was harmed by the fact of not having been awarded the contract and by the unlawful manner in which the tendering procedure was conducted.

122
The Commission discredited AFCon's technical and professional expertise. Its decision not to award the contract to AFCon has had wide-reaching repercussions, since, having been excluded from 27 tender procedures, AFCon has taken the decision not to tender for Phare and Tacis projects any more.

123
The applicants submit that those failures coincide with AFCon's complaints in relation to the FDRUS 9902 project. They state that they have evidence showing that AFCon has been 'blacklisted'. This head of damage is estimated at EUR 600 000 euros.

124
The applicants maintain that the harm to AFCon's reputation also affects Mr Mc Mullin's reputation and that of Mr O'Grady. They estimate this head of damage at EUR 75 000 per person.

125
The Commission submits that the applicants' claims are not substantiated. Any number of reasons other than the fact that GFA was awarded the tender at issue can explain AFCon's lack of success. It denies that a 'blacklist' exists. It also denies that it has caused any harm to Mr Mc Mullin's reputation or to that of Mr O'Grady.

It must be stated that the applicants have not proved that a blacklist exists or that any comments or practices detrimental to AFCon's reputation may be attributed to the Commission. Therefore, the harm alleged cannot be regarded as present, real and certain.

127
The claims relating to the harm which was allegedly caused to the reputations of Mr Mc Mullin and Mr O'Grady must be rejected on the same grounds.

e) Interest

Arguments of the parties

128
The applicants claim that the Court should increase the damages awarded by compensatory interest at a rate of 8% per annum, the rate currently applying in Ireland.

129
The applicants also claim that the Commission should be ordered to pay default interest, at the same rate, from the date of judgment in this action.

130
As regards the calculation of compensatory interest, such interest should start to run from the first day of the month following the month in which AFCon last took steps prior to commencing proceedings. Since that was during February 2003, the starting point must be fixed at 1 March 2003.

131
It is clear from the annexes to the application that, in their assessment of the harm they claim to have suffered, the applicants did not ask for compound interest. Therefore, in order to establish the amount which the Commission is to pay, simple interest must be applied.

132
The rate of compensatory interest must be calculated on the basis of the rate fixed by the European Central Bank for its principal refinancing operations, in force during the period concerned, increased by two percentage points, namely an annual rate of 4%. As at the date of delivery of this judgment, the Commission's debt to AFCon amounts to EUR 48 605, including interest.

133
To that sum must be added default interest from delivery of this judgment until full payment. The rate of default interest to be applied is calculated on the basis of the rate fixed by the European Central Bank for its principal refinancing operations, in force during the period concerned, increased by two percentage points. The amount of interest is to be calculated on the basis of compound interest.

Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the other party's pleadings. Since the Commission has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs in accordance with the form of order sought by the applicants.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Fifth Chamber)

1.
Orders the Commission to pay AFCon the sum of EUR 48 605, together with interest thereon from delivery of this judgment until full payment. The rate of interest to be applied is to be calculated on the basis of the European Central Bank's rate for its main refinancing operations, in force during the period concerned, plus two percentage points. The amount of interest is to be calculated on the basis of compound interest;

2.
Dismisses the application as to the remainder;

3.
Orders the Commission to pay the costs.

Judgment of the Court of First Instance (Fifth Chamber)
First Instance (Fifth Chamber)First Instance (Fifth Chamber)2005. AFCon Management Consultants, Patrick Mc Mullin and Seamus O'Grady v Commission of the European Communities. Tacis Programme - Invitation to tender - Irregularities in the tendering procedure - Action for damages. Case T-160/03.

1. Non-contractual liability - Conditions - Unlawfulness - Damage - Causal link

(Art. 288, second para., EC)

2. European Communities' public procurement - Award of a contract as a result of an invitation to tender - Authority of the institutions with respect to the conduct of the tendering procedure - Conflict of interests between a tenderer and a member of the committee for the evaluation of the tenders - Commission's discretion - Limits - Infringement of the principles of sound administration and equal treatment - Incurring of Community liability

(Art. 288 EC)

3. European Communities' public procurement - Tendering procedure - Expenses incurred by a tenderer - Right to compensation - None - Exception - Infringement of Community law

1. Community law recognises a right to reparation where three conditions are met: the rule of law infringed must be intended to confer rights on individuals; the breach must be sufficiently serious; and there must be a direct causal link between the breach of the obligation resting on the author of the act and the damage sustained by the injured parties.

2. In accordance with the principles of sound administration and equal treatment, the Commission must, as far as concerns public procurement, after the discovery of a conflict of interests between a member of the evaluation committee and one of the tenderers, act with due diligence and on the basis of all the relevant information when formulating and adopting its decision on the outcome of the procedure for the award of the tender at issue. The Commission is required to ensure at each stage of a tendering procedure equal treatment and, thereby, equality of opportunity for all the tenderers.

In that regard, it has some discretion as regards the measures to be taken in respect of the conduct of the procedure. However, where it does not investigate whether there is any collusion between one of the tenderers and a member of the evaluation committee, the Commission exceeds that discretion and manifestly and gravely disregards the limits on that discretion. Therefore, it commits an unlawful act which is liable to cause the Community to incur liability.

3. Economic operators must bear the economic risks inherent in their activities which, as regards a tendering procedure, include, in particular, the costs relating to preparation of the tender. The expenses thus incurred therefore remain the responsibility of the undertaking which chose to take part in the procedure, since the opportunity to compete for a contract does not involve any certainty as to the outcome of the procedure. It follows that the charges and expenses incurred by a tenderer in connection with his participation in a tendering procedure cannot in principle constitute damage which is capable of being remedied by an award of damages.

However, Article 24 of the General Regulations for Tenders and the Award of Service Contracts financed from Phare/Tacis Funds cannot, without potentially undermining the principles of legal certainty and of protection of legitimate expectations, apply in cases where an infringement of Community law in the conduct of the tendering procedure has affected a tenderer's chances of being awarded the contract. Where the tenderer's chances have been prejudiced, he must be compensated for the loss relating to the costs incurred in participating in the procedure.

Costs

134. Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the other party's pleadings. 3. Orders the Commission to pay the costs.

Facts

1. AFCon Management Consultants (AFCon') is a consultancy company specialising in agricultural projects in countries whose economies are in transition. Mr Mc Mullin and Mr O'Grady are the directors, shareholders and founding members of the company (together with AFCon the applicants').

2. On 28 May 1999, the Commission launched a restrictive tender procedure within the Tacis programme for the supply of technical assistance services, entitled Agricultural Extension Services in South Russia' reference FDRUS 9902 (the tender at issue').

3. On 29 July 1999, the evaluation committee drew up a list of ten companies from the 21 firms which had expressed interest in that call for tenders. The ten companies were then invited to submit a tender.

4. On 16 and 17 December 1999, the evaluation committee met to evaluate the eight tenders received (the first evaluation'). The committee considered the tender of the GFA - Gesellschaft für Agrarprojekte mbH (GFA-Agrar') and Stoas Agri-projects Foundation (Stoas') consortium to be the best. AFCon's tender came in second place.

5. The Commission subsequently discovered that a conflict of interests existed as between a member of the evaluation committee and the GFA-Agrar and Stoas consortium (GFA'). That member, Mr A, was employed by Agriment International BV, a subsidiary of Stoas. The Commission ended its association with Mr A and informed him that it would no longer require his services.

6. Because of that conflict of interests, the Commission, on 3 March 2000, decided to cancel the first evaluation and to appoint a committee of new members to carry out a second evaluation. The Commission informed the tenderers of that decision by letter of 28 March 2000.

7. On 15 and 16 May 2000, the evaluation committee carried out a second tender evaluation (the second evaluation'). At the end of that evaluation, GFA's tender was ranked first. GFA's technical proposal scored 72.69 % (third place); its financial proposal was EUR 2 131 870 (first place). AFCon's tender was ranked second with a technical proposal scoring 75.32 % (first place) and a financial proposal of EUR 2 499 750 (sixth place).

8. In August 2000, the Commission awarded the tender to GFA. It informed AFCon of that by letter of 17 August 2000.

9. On 9 October 2000, AFCon complained to the Commission that the tender procedure had been mismanaged. It maintained that GFA's financial proposal was below the market rate. The Commission rejected that complaint on 9 November 2000.

10. By letters of 18 December 2000 and 31 January 2001, AFCon alleged that GFA had infringed the tendering rules. By letter of 28 February 2001, the Commission rejected that allegation.

11. By letter of 15 March 2001, AFCon repeated that GFA's proposal was in breach of the procedure for the award of Tacis contracts. The Commission did not reply to that letter.

12. On 15 May 2001, AFCon made a complaint to the European Ombudsman. According to that complaint:

- GFA's financial proposal was in breach of the tendering rules (first complaint);

- having discovered a conflict of interests, the Commission failed to take the measures required by the rules governing the award of contracts (second complaint);

- the Commission infringed the tendering rules by allowing the successful tenderer to replace the majority of its long-term experts by other persons within weeks of the signature of the contract

(third complaint).

13. In his decision of 22 April 2002 (Decision 834/2001/GG), the Ombudsman held that only the first complaint was well founded. In that regard he stated:

It is good administrative practice in tender procedures for the administration to adhere to the rules established for these procedures. ... By allowing tenderers to include experts' fees under reimbursable items in the present case, the Commission failed to comply with the rules applicable to the tender and the aim pursued by these rules. This constitutes an instance of maladministration.'

14. As regards the second and third complaints, the Ombudsman concluded that there was no maladministration on the part of the Commission.

15. By letter of 25 May 2002, AFCon claimed that the Commission should pay it the following amounts by way of compensation for harm suffered as a result of not having been awarded the contract:

- loss of profit: EUR 624 937

- loss of project profile': EUR 600 000

- loss of professional development': EUR 150 000.

16. The Commission rejected that claim by letter of 25 July 2002.

17. By letter of 13 September 2002, AFCon requested the Commission to send it a number of documents pertaining to the procedure for the award of the tender at issue. The Commission acceded to that request on 3 October 2002, other than in respect of the evaluation committee's evaluation reports and minutes and competitors' bids, which fell under the exceptions provided for, respectively, in the second subparagraph of Article 4(3) and Article 4(1)(b) of Regulation (EC) No 1049/2001 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 30 May 2001 regarding public access to European Parliament, Council and Commission documents (OJ 2001 L 145, p. 43).

18. By letter of 11 October 2002, AFCon made a confirmatory application under Regulation No 1049/2001. It requested access to various documents relating to the tendering procedure at issue.

19. By letter of 22 November 2002, the Commission granted access to certain documents and, as to the remainder, upheld its refusal to provide the documents requested.

20. At the same time, in a letter of 4 September 2002 sent to Mr Byrne, Member of the Commission, the Irish Minister of State for European Affairs, Mr D. Roche, expressed support for AFCon and asked the Commission to find a solution to the dispute with AFCon.

21. By letters of 10 October and 4 November 2002, the Commission restated its position on the legality of the tender procedure at issue.

22. On 15 November 2002, Mr B. Crowley, a member of the European Parliament, put a written question (3365/02) to the Commission about the award of the contract at issue. Mr Patten, a member of the Commission, replied to it on 23 December 2002. Mr Crowley subsequently sent a letter to Mr Patten, to which the latter responded on 3 April 2003.

23. By letter of 18 February 2003, Mr Roche wrote a second time to Mr Byrne in support of AFCon. By letter of 8 April 2003, Mr Byrne restated the Commission's position.

Procedure

24. By application lodged at the Court Registry on 12 May 2003, the applicants brought the present action.

25. Upon hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court (Fifth Chamber) decided to open the oral procedure and, as measures of organisation of procedure as provided for in Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, put questions in writing to the parties and asked the Commission to produce certain documents. The parties complied with those requests within the prescribed time-limits.

26. The parties submitted oral argument and answered the questions put by the Court at the hearing on 6 July 2004.

Forms of order sought

27. The applicants claim that the Court should:

- order the Commission to pay damages in respect of the loss suffered as a result of the breach of the tendering procedure for the Tacis FDRUS 9902 project, plus compensatory interest, from the date on which the loss materialised;

- order the Commission to pay interest on the damages from the date of judgment;

- order the Commission to produce certain documents relating to the procedure for evaluating the tenders;

- order the Commission to pay the costs.

28. The Commission contends that the Court should:

- dismiss the application;

- order the applicants to pay the costs.

Law

A - The request for measures of inquiry

29. The applicants have asked the Court to order the Commission, under Article 65(b) of the Rules of Procedure, to produce certain documents relating to the tender procedure and, if necessary, to hear witnesses.

30. The Court, in the context of measures of organisation of procedure, requested the Commission, inter alia, to produce information concerning the tenderers' bids and the documentation relating to the first and second evaluations. Those requests coincide in the main with the applicants' requests for measures of inquiry. Therefore, the Court finds that the information in the documents before it is sufficient for it to give judgment in the proceedings without ordering the production of further documents or the hearing of witnesses.

B - The claim for compensation

31. Community law recognises a right to reparation where three conditions are met: the rule of law infringed must be intended to confer rights on individuals; the breach must be sufficiently serious; and there must be a direct causal link between the breach of the obligation resting on the author of the act and the damage sustained by the injured parties (Joined Cases C-46/93 and C-48/93 Brasserie du Pêcheur and Factortame [1996] ECR I-1029, paragraph 51; and Case C352/98 P Bergaderm and Goupil v Commission [2000] ECR I-5291, paragraphs 41 and 42).

32. It is necessary to ascertain whether the applicants have established that the various conditions were met in this instance.

1. The unlawfulness of the Commission's conduct

33. The applicants claim, in essence, that there are three irregularities. First, GFA's bid did not comply with the rules of the tender at issue. Second, the Commission took account of unlawful criteria in the evaluation. Third, the Commission did not take the requisite measures once it had discovered there to be a conflict of interests.

a) The lawfulness of GFA's tender

Arguments of the parties

34. The applicants submit that GFA's bid failed to comply with the rules of the tender at issue. Those rules include:

- instructions to tenderers (European Commission, SCR(E) Tacis, version of 22 June 1999), in particular point C.2.1;

- guidelines for the preparation of the technical and financial proposal (European Commission, SCR(E) Tacis, January 1999 version) (the guidelines'), in particular, the provisions relating to the preparation of Annexes B (Organisation and methods') and D (Breakdown of prices for Tacis contracts');

- terms of reference for the tender at issue (European Commission, Technical assistance to economic reform in the food and agriculture sector, Terms of reference for a project: Russia Agricultural extension services in South Russia - Farm extension project', of 4 June 1999).

35. In the applicants' submission, it is clear from those rules that the financial proposal must correspond to the technical proposal and show the remuneration of the persons responsible for training activities in the heading attributed to that purpose.

36. Those rules are unambiguous. They are intended to place all tenders on an equal footing in order that a comparison may be made. The rules were confirmed by the Commission's practice in a similar project which was contemporaneous with the project in question (FDRUS 9901).

37. GFA infringed those rules because:

- the number of man-days given in its technical proposal is higher than the number referred to in its financial proposal;

- in its financial proposal, GFA allocated a part of the remuneration for persons responsible for training to the heading reimbursable expenses', which is normally reserved for the reimbursement of costs relating to training activities such as flights, per diem for trainees, registration fees etc.'.

38. GFA thus succeeded in reducing the amount of its financial proposal. The differences between the two proposals are as follows:

Those differences were allocated to reimbursable expenses.

39. The applicants submit that the Ombudsman, in substance, endorsed their argument when he found that the fact that the Commission had allowed GFA, in breach of the relevant tender rules, to include training fees as expenses within the heading restricted to reimbursable items constituted an instance of maladministration.

40. Finally, the applicants submit that their criticisms were borne out by the difficulties which the Commission encountered while GFA was performing the contract.

41. The applicants conclude from those matters that the Commission, in failing to exclude GFA on account of the irregularities, infringed the principles of equal treatment, of proportionality and of legitimate expectations.

42. The Commission contends that the way in which GFA presented its tender was not unlawful, since:

- the rules on which the applicants rely are not legally binding; they do not unequivocally prescribe how experts' fees are to be presented in the financial proposal;

- Article 117 of the Financial Regulation of 21 December 1997 applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 1977 L 356, p. 1), as amended by Council Regulation (EC, ECSC, Euratom) No 2548/98 of 23 November 1998 (OJ 1998 L 320, p. 1; the Financial Regulation'), and Council Regulation (Euratom, EC) No 1279/96 of 25 June 1996 concerning the provision of assistance to economic reform and recovery in the New Independent States and Mongolia (OJ 1996 L 165, p. 1) (Article 7 and Annex III) contain no specific rules on the allocation of training fees to the heading reserved for reimbursable expenses;

- the Commission does not have an established practice in this regard and therefore the applicants cannot rely on an infringement of the principle of legitimate expectations;

- since the allocation of training fees to reimbursable expenses was not specifically prohibited, GFA could perfectly well use that method;

- GFA's presentation of its tender did not distort any comparison of the tenders, since the evaluators were in a position to take into account in their comparative assessment the fact that the trainers' fees had been treated as reimbursable expenses;

- the Ombudsman's finding is not decisive;

- circumstances subsequent to the award of the tender, in particular the performance of the contract, are irrelevant.

Findings of the Court

43. Point C.2.1 of the instructions to tenderers provides:

Breakdown of prices should be prepared in accordance with the format of Annex D of the draft contract and prices must be expressed in euros. Tenders in any other currency or an incorrect presentation of the breakdown of prices may lead to the rejection of the tender.'

44. Annex D to the guidelines contains an introductory section which sets out the method to be followed in presenting the tender. It also includes a form consisting of a table intended for the tenderers' data. The table contains the following four main headings:

1. Fees, including

a) Western experts

b) Local experts

c) Support staff

2. Per diem

3. Direct expenses

4. Reimbursable expenses'.

45. According to the guidelines:

The following notes are provided to assist tenderers in the preparation of Annex D (financial breakdown).... Where these guidelines are not followed, the tenderer is advised to justify deviations through an explanatory note....

4. ... The figures given in Annex D (for each category or individual expert) should exactly reflect the figures in the time allocation chart (time spent on the project for each expert) submitted as part of Annex B (summary input of staff).'

46. The Commission thus stated clearly and unequivocally that there was to be an exact' correspondence between the data in Annex B and those in Annex D, with any inconsistencies to be justified by an explanatory note.

47. The principle that the financial proposal and the technical proposal should tally is also mentioned in the explanatory notes preceding the form in Annex B to the guidelines, which state:

Important: Above summary must be consistent with the input given in the breakdown of remuneration - Annex D.'

48. In order to ascertain whether GFA's tender complied with those provisions, it must be borne in mind that, as regards the training' section, GFA's technical proposal (Annex A) gave the following figures:

>lt>3

49. In the financial proposal (Annex D) GFA put forward the following figures under the heading A. Fees':

50. The number of man-days (7 950) is 4 652 lower than the figure given in the technical proposal (12 602).

51. However, it is clear from the actual terms of GFA's financial proposal that that difference arises because those 4 652 man-days have been treated as reimbursable expenses.

52. GFA's financial proposal restates, in a footnote and an accompanying explanatory note, the data given in the technical proposal, which have been set out above (Table 1). That note explains that the difference between the two proposals arises because of the treatment of the costs of the fees of the staff responsible for training, replication and dissemination. GFA's financial proposal also contains a table giving a detailed description of all the reimbursable expenses relating to those activities. It is clear from that table that in total 4 652 man-days were thus included as reimbursable expenses with a total value of EUR 282 425. Contrary to the applicants' contention, the difference between the financial proposal and the technical proposal is therefore purely formal and it does not impede an effective comparison of the various tenderers' bids.

53. Furthermore, GFA's financial proposal included, in compliance with the terms of reference, supplies to the value of EUR 500 000 for training and EUR 200 000 for activities relating to replication and dissemination.

54. Consequently, the Court must reject the complaints that the Commission acted unlawfully in failing to reject GFA's tender because of the alleged disparities between the technical proposal and the financial proposal.

b) The use of unlawful criteria in the evaluation

Arguments of the parties

55. The applicants complain that the Commission allowed the evaluators to take account, in the second evaluation, of AFCon's previous experience on Tacis projects, in breach of the applicable rules. Point 3 of Annex III to Regulation No 1279/96, and point 3 of Annex IV to Council Regulation

(EC, Euratom) No 99/2000 of 29 December 1999 concerning the provision of assistance to the partner States in Eastern Europe and Central Asia (OJ 2000 L 12, p. 1), provide that specific experience of the tenderer in Tacis shall not be taken into account' in the evaluation of tenders. By virtue of those provisions, the tender is evaluated solely on the basis of a weighing of technical quality against price[; t]he weighing of the two criteria shall be announced in each invitation to tender, [and t]he technical evaluation shall be carried out according, in particular, to the following criteria: organisation, time schedule, methods and plan of work proposed for providing the services, the qualifications, experience, skills of the staff proposed for the provision of the services and the use made of local companies or experts, their integration into the project, and their contribution to the sustainability of the project results'.

56. In this instance, one of the members of the committee which conducted the second evaluation, Mr G. Rea, thought that the existing advisory centres established by Mr Mc Mullin and AFCon in the Tacis project FDRUS 9405 Support to individually operated farms in Russia', between 1996 and 1998, were not operational at the time of the interview and were not providing technical advice. That statement, which was incorrect, influenced the other evaluators.

57. Having obtained, pursuant to measures of organisation of procedure, disclosure of various documents relating to the work of the evaluation committee, the applicants claimed at the hearing that one of the evaluators, Ms K. Karttunen, specifically mentioned in her report that she had taken into account the fact that AFCon had no experience in other projects in Russia.

58. The Commission denies that there was any irregularity whatsoever. It acknowledges that it is required, under Annex III, point 3, of Regulation No 1279/96, not to take into account the experience of the tenderers in other Tacis projects.

59. In this instance, the evaluation committee heard each tenderer in connection with its technical proposal. No general list of questions was prepared for that purpose; the interviews differed from one tenderer to the other. During the interview Mr Mc Mullin had an opportunity to rebut any statement detrimental to AFCon.

Findings of the Court

60. The complaints relating to the consideration of AFCon's experience in earlier projects funded by the Tacis programme are not sufficiently established.

61. The documentation relating to the evaluation of the tenders, produced to the Court following measures of organisation of procedure, does not establish that the members of the evaluation committee included in the criteria for evaluating the tenders the earlier experience of the tenderers in respect of projects financed by the Tacis programme. It is clear from the documents headed Detailed Technical Evaluation per Tenderer' that the evaluation committee took as its basis eight objective criteria relating to the experts' experience, the project's approach and the involvement of local experts. Moreover, the evaluators' note relating to the evaluation of AFCon's tender does not contain any negative appraisal about an alleged lack of experience or difficulties previously encountered in the implementation of Tacis programme projects. Thus, the members of the evaluation committee noted, as one of the strong points of AFCon's tender, the strength of the team leader and his experience in the region covered by the project. Among the weak points, the members of the evaluation committee noted, in particular, that the team leader had only limited Russian language skills and that, in general, the tender seemed too ambitious and, in some respects, too rigid.

62. As regards the arguments relating to the comments which Mr Rea is alleged to have made, it must be stated that in his final report he did not make any remarks at all about any difficulties which AFCon had encountered in previous projects.

63. Likewise, the report of the external evaluator, Ms Karttunen, to which the applicants referred at the hearing, contains no negative comments about AFCon's earlier experience in Tacis programme projects. That report drew attention, in particular, to the experience gained in Russia by the team leader whilst stating that in the interview he was not transparent regarding the current situation of the existing Farm Advisory Centres in the project area'.

64. Consequently, it is sufficient to state that the applicants have not established that the Commission relied on a negative assessment of AFCon's experience in earlier Tacis-programme projects when evaluating AFCon's tender. Therefore, the complaints relating to the unlawfulness of the criteria used in evaluating AFCon's tender must be rejected.

c) The consequences of the conflict of interests

65. The applicants complain that the Commission failed to draw conclusions from the conflict of interests between a member of the evaluation committee, Mr A, and one of the tenderers, GFA. They submit, in essence, that the Commission did not act with due diligence once it had discovered that there was a conflict of interests and that it should not have allowed GFA to take part in the next stage of the tendering procedure.

66. As regards the first of those criticisms, the applicants maintain that the Commission did not use its discretion in a responsible manner when it refused to consider taking disciplinary action with regard to both Mr A and GFA. The Commission did not consider excluding GFA even though it had been informed by the Chairman of the evaluation committee of the links between GFA and one of the members of the evaluation committee. They are also in doubt as to whether the Commission tried to find out if GFA knew that Mr A was a member of the evaluation committee. Having analysed all the documentation relating to the tendering procedure, which was provided to them following the measures of organisation of procedure ordered by the Court, the applicants stated at the hearing that there was no evidence from which it could be concluded that the Commission had even asked itself whether disciplinary measures should be taken with regard to GFA.

67. The applicant's second criticism is that the Commission failed to comply with its obligation to manage Tacis-funded projects properly by failing to sanction GFA and by allowing the consortium to take part in the second evaluation. The fact that Mr A was employed full-time by one of the members of the GFA consortium should have prompted the Commission to exclude both the committee member concerned and the relevant tenderer.

68. The Commission contends that it acted lawfully and did not stray beyond the limits of its broad discretion.

69. In the absence of any evidence establishing that GFA sought to use Mr A's presence on the evaluation committee to influence the procedure for the award of the contract, the Commission contends that there is no rule which would have allowed it to exclude or sanction GFA. Indeed, Article 114(1) of the Financial Regulation provides:

Participation in tendering procedures shall be open on equal terms to all natural and legal persons coming within the scope of application of the Treaties and to all natural and legal persons in the recipient State.'

70. Therefore, GFA could easily have challenged, as a breach of Article 114(1) of the Financial Regulation, any decision to exclude it from the tender at issue. Furthermore, the Commission contends that by reason of the proportionality principle it can exclude an undertaking from a tender procedure only in exceptional circumstances.

71. The conflict of interests was solely attributable to the evaluator. He infringed Article 12(4) of the General Regulations for Tenders and the Award of Service Contracts financed from Phare/Tacis funds. He was not connected to GFA but to one of the firms in the consortium. Since GFA had no authority over the evaluator, the conflict of interests could not be imputed to GFA.

72. What is more, the exclusion of GFA would have unduly advantaged AFCon, in breach of the principle of equal treatment.

73. Having excluded Mr A from its proceedings, the evaluation committee did not select AFCon. Although the Beneficiary Representative for the tender at issue was in favour of recommending that AFCon be awarded the contract, the three other members were against such an outcome.

Findings of the Court

74. The fact that a person who helps to evaluate and select tenders for a public contract has the contract awarded to him is highly questionable and constitutes a chargeable offence under the criminal law of several Member States, regard being had to the principle of equal treatment in the award of public contracts, the concern for sound financial management of Community funds and the prevention of fraud (Case T277/97 Ismeri Europa v Court of Auditors [1999] ECR II-1825, paragraph 112).

75. After the discovery of a conflict of interests between a member of the evaluation committee and one of the tenderers, the Commission must act with due diligence and on the basis of all the relevant information when formulating and adopting its decision on the outcome of the procedure for the award of the tender at issue. That obligation derives in particular from the principles of sound administration and equal treatment (see, by analogy, Case T231/97 New Europe Consulting and Brown v Commission [1999] ECR II-2403, paragraph 41). The Commission is required to ensure at each stage of a tendering procedure equal treatment and, thereby, equality of opportunity for all the tenderers (see, to that effect, Case C496/99 P Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta [2004] ECR I0000, paragraph 108, and Case T145/98 ADT Projekt v Commission [2000] ECR II387, paragraph 164).

76. It is necessary to examine whether, in this instance, the Commission acted in accordance with that obligation.

77. In that regard, where a conflict of interests between one of the tenderers and a member of the committee responsible for evaluating the tenders comes to light, the Commission has some discretion to determine the measures which must be taken in respect of the conduct of the subsequent stages of the procedure for the award of the tender.

78. It is not disputed that, once it had been put on notice by the Chairman of the Evaluation Committee, the Commission did not investigate the links between Mr A and GFA in order to satisfy itself that GFA did not seek to influence the evaluation committee's proceedings. The Commission confirmed at the hearing that there was no evidence suggesting that GFA sought to influence the proceedings, using one of its employees sitting on the evaluation committee as an intermediary. In response to the Court's questions, the Commission none the less stated that it had taken no measures of inquiry in order to ascertain whether GFA and Mr A had collaborated during the tendering procedure. The Commission insisted on the fact that, in the absence of anything giving it grounds for suspecting there to have been fraud, there was no reason to investigate GFA's role.

79. Given the circumstances of the present case, such an assessment is manifestly incorrect. Since it had failed to investigate whether there was any collusion between GFA and Mr A, the Commission in fact had no grounds for ruling out, with any reasonable degree of certainty, the possibility that GFA had sought to influence the tendering procedure. Rather, a number of objective and consistent factors should have led the Commission to take particular care and to consider the possibility that there was collusion between GFA and Mr A. Those factors reasonably gave grounds for forming the view that the conflict of interests could have arisen not merely as the result of a combination of circumstances but as the result of a fraudulent intention.

80. In the first place, it is necessary to stress the seriousness of the terms in which the Chairman of the evaluation committee criticised the questionable nature of the first evaluation. He proposed in a note of 4 January 2000 that the evaluation should be cancelled and that a further evaluation should take place before a committee with a different membership. The Chairman of the evaluation committee had, in particular, drawn attention to the highly questionable' nature of the results of the first evaluation owing to the fact that Mr A was then working as team leader in a Dutch Government sponsored project in Ukraine being implemented by Agriment International, a member of Stoas Holding Group'.

81. In addition to that conflict of interests, the Chairman of the evaluation committee also pointed out that there were signs that Mr A had, in fact, sought to give preferential treatment to GFA to the detriment of the other tenderers. The note stated that Mr A [had] placed the companies that the other three evaluators [had] ranked either first or second in fourth or fifth position'. He added that [t]aking these issues together, there are significant suspicions of a Conflict of Interest and resulting preferential markings for the GFA/Stoas partnership'.

82. The Chairman of the evaluation committee had also stated that GFA's financial proposal of EUR 2.13 million was significantly below those of the first and second companies' and that such a low offer could be interpreted as a form of dumping'. It is thus clear from the statements and findings of the Chairman of the evaluation committee that the questionable nature of GFA's tender derived not only from the conflict of interests resulting from the presence of an employee of the consortium on the committee but also from the fact that its financial proposal was abnormally low.

83. In the second place, the circumstances were such as to give reasonable grounds for doubting that the conflict of interests in which Mr A found himself arose purely by chance or could be attributed exclusively to his negligence.

84. To start with, Mr A had failed to tell the Commission of his activities within the Stoas Group. Thus, when he applied for the post of external evaluator and in the course of the evaluation committee's subsequent work, Mr A did not disclose that he was carrying out managerial tasks for the Stoas Group in connection with an agricultural assistance project (see the note of 4 January 2000). The relevance of such information for the purposes of Mr A's appointment as an evaluator was particularly obvious given that the tender FDRUS 9902 concerned agricultural assistance services showing certain similarities with those for which Mr A was responsible in Ukraine.

85. Further, Mr A, far from merely failing to disclose his activities within the Stoas Group, expressly stated that he was not linked, directly or indirectly, with any of the tenderers, either individually or in their capacity as members of a consortium. It is evident that on 16 December 1999 Mr A had signed a declaration of impartiality, in which he stated:

I have no direct or indirect links with any of the Tenderers, whether individuals or members of a consortium, who have replied to the Tender Dossier, nor with any of the sub-contractors proposed. I confirm that, should I discover during the course of evaluation that such a link exists, I will declare this immediately and resign from the Evaluation Committee. I understand that if such a link is known to me and I have neglected to declare it, the European Commission may decide to cancel the Tendering in question and I may be exposed to liabilities.'

86. Finally, the questionable nature of the foregoing matters is reinforced by the fact that, once Mr A had begun to examine GFA's tender, he could not claim to be unaware that he was in a situation which was incompatible with his undertaking to be impartial. The tender made it clear that Stoas was one of the members of the GFA consortium. Moreover, during the evaluation interview in which

Mr A took part, GFA was represented by, inter alia, the director of the division responsible for the Stoas Group's international activities, Mr B. Although he was thus face to face with a person with a highly responsible position in the group which was employing him, Mr A, in breach of the terms of his declaration of impartiality set out above, failed to disclose his links with the group and to resign from the evaluation committee.

87. In the third place, particular importance must be attached to the fact that the seriousness of the situation gave reasonable grounds for suspecting that there might be collusion between Mr A and GFA.

88. First, it is reasonable to be in doubt as to the lawfulness of GFA's conduct. As was stated above, GFA was represented during the evaluation interview by the director of the division responsible for the Stoas Group's international activities, to which Mr A was answerable. According to GFA's tender, the division for which Mr B was responsible consisted of just 25 people and the Commission could therefore reasonably assume that Mr B knew Mr A. Those facts should have prompted the Commission to ask itself why Mr B did not disclose the links which he had with one of the members of the evaluation committee.

89. Second, Mr A was appointed by the Commission as an external expert at the beginning of September 1999, at a time when GFA had not yet submitted its tender. Although Mr A had not taken part in drawing up the terms of reference, it was conceivable that during the two months between his appointment as external evaluator and the date of submission of tenders he had been in contact with representatives of the GFA consortium. On that point, the Commission acknowledged at the hearing that if such contacts had taken place, it would then have been obliged to exclude GFA from the procedure for the award of the tender at issue. The Commission did not, however, attempt to question Mr A on this point.

90. It follows from the foregoing that the Commission, in failing to investigate the relations between Mr A and the GFA consortium, made a manifest error of assessment. In infringing the principle of sound administration in that way, the Commission also violated the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers, which requires it to examine each tender impartially and objectively in the light of the requirements and general principles governing the tendering procedure, in order to ensure that all the tenderers are afforded the same opportunities.

91. The principle of equal treatment prohibits comparable situations from being treated differently and different situations from being treated alike, unless such treatment is objectively justified. In this instance, there were serious doubts as to the lawfulness of GFA's tender. As long as those doubts subsisted, the consortium's situation was different from that of all the other tenderers. By failing to open an inquiry aimed at putting an end to that situation, the Commission treated GFA in the same way as all the other tenderers, even though such treatment was not objectively justified. In infringing the principle of equal treatment in that way, the Commission violated a rule of law whose purpose is to confer rights on individuals.

92. However, since it has been established that the Commission failed to act with due diligence to take the steps needed to continue with the tendering procedure, the legality of the decision not to exclude GFA from the remainder of the procedure cannot be assessed. Whether the decision is lawful is directly dependent on the result of the inquiry which the Commission should have undertaken in order to satisfy itself that there was no collusion. Since the factual aspects of the case-file do not support a finding of such collusion, the Court must reject the complaints by which the applicants seek to show that the Commission should have excluded GFA from the tendering procedure.

93. As regards whether the illegality found is such as to cause the Community to incur liability, it is necessary to bear in mind that the decisive test for finding that a breach of Community law is sufficiently serious is whether the Community institution concerned manifestly and gravely disregarded the limits on its discretion (see Brasserie du Pêcheur and Factortame , cited above, paragraph 55, and Bergaderm and Goupil v Commission , cited above, paragraph 43). The Court therefore holds that, on account of the abovementioned circumstances of the conflict of interests and of the risk of fraud which it entails, the Commission's omission is of a manifest and serious nature and is thus such as to cause the Community to incur liability.

2. Damage and the causal connection

94. The applicants point to a number of heads of damage, namely:

- loss sustained in the tender procedure;

- loss of profit;

- loss of profile';

- harm to AFCon's reputation and that of its directors, Mr Mc Mullin and Mr O'Grady.

a) Compensation for the harm corresponding to the losses sustained in the tender procedure

95. The applicants claim compensation for damage corresponding to the losses sustained as a result of their taking part in the tender procedure. This entails the costs which AFCon incurred to no effect when it submitted its tender and the costs relating to the complaints made to the Commission and the Ombudsman. Those losses consist of the remuneration of the staff employed in developing the project and of all the travel and subsistence expenses incurred as a consequence. On the basis of the unit costs indicated in AFCon's financial proposal, the applicants calculate that damage at EUR 82 570.

96. The Commission challenges those claims. It contends that, if AFCon had been awarded the contract, the costs reimbursement of which is sought would still have necessarily been incurred. Consequently, the Commission cannot be liable for such losses.

Findings of the Court

97. A distinction must be drawn between the loss represented by the costs and expenses incurred, on the one hand, in taking part in the tender procedure and, on the other, in challenging the legality of that procedure.

- Costs relating to the submission of AFCon's tender

98. It must be borne in mind that economic operators must bear the economic risks inherent in their activities, regard being had to the circumstances of each particular case. As regards a tendering procedure, those economic risks include, in particular, the costs relating to preparation of the tender. The expenses thus incurred therefore remain the responsibility of the undertaking which chose to take part in the procedure, since the opportunity to compete for a contract does not involve any certainty as to the outcome of the procedure. In accordance with that principle, Article 24 of the General Regulations for Tenders and the Award of Service Contracts financed from Phare/Tacis Funds provides that in the event of closure or annulment of a tendering procedure, the tenderers are not entitled to compensation. It follows that the charges and expenses incurred by a tenderer in connection with his participation in a tendering procedure cannot in principle constitute damage which is capable of being remedied by an award of damages. However, the provision in question cannot, without potentially undermining the principles of legal certainty and of protection of legitimate expectations, apply in cases where an infringement of Community law in the conduct of the tendering procedure has affected a tenderer's chances of being awarded the contract (Case T203/96 Embassy

Limousines & Services v Parliament [1998] ECR II4239, paragraphs 75 and 97, and Case T13/96 TEAM v Commission [1998] ECR II4073, paragraphs 70 to 72).

99. In this instance, the applicants have established that there was a breach of Community law in the way the tendering procedure was conducted. That breach fundamentally undermined the tendering procedure and affected AFCon's chances of securing the tender at issue.

100. If the Commission had conducted an inquiry into the links between GFA and Mr A, it is possible that it would have concluded that there was collusion such as to warrant the exclusion of GFA from the remainder of the tendering procedure. In that regard, it is noteworthy that the Commission actually acknowledged, at the hearing, that if an inquiry had produced such a result, it would have then been obliged to penalise GFA by excluding it from the procedure.

101. In taking the decision to proceed with the tendering procedure without holding an inquiry, the Commission evaluated GFA's tender and awarded the contract to it even though there were a number of signs all of which suggested that there might have been collusion with a member of the evaluation committee. In acting in that way and failing to satisfy itself that GFA's participation entailed no irregularities, the Commission allowed GFA to remain in contention and accordingly undermined AFCon's chances of being awarded the contract.

102. It is true that any tenderer who participates in a tendering procedure must, as a general rule, accept the risk that he will remain liable for the costs associated with submission of his tender in the event of the contract being awarded to one of his competitors. However, that risk is accepted on the presumption inherent in any call for tenders that the Commission will act impartially in accordance with the principles set out at paragraph 90 above in order to ensure equal treatment as between the tenderers. By allowing GFA to take part in spite of the signs mentioned above and by failing to open an inquiry, the Commission disregarded that presumption and directly prejudiced AFCon's chances. Consequently, AFCon must be compensated for the loss relating to the costs incurred in participating in the procedure.

103. As regards quantum, the applicants assess their loss at EUR 31 070: in respect of costs incurred in a reconnaissance trip to south Russia (EUR 8 800), the time and costs entailed in preparing the tender (EUR 14 950) as well travel costs to Brussels in order to attend the two evaluation interviews (EUR 7 320). Since that estimate is not excessive, the loss sustained by AFCon in respect of costs relating to submission of its tender must be set at EUR 31 070.

- Costs incurred in challenging the legality of the tendering procedure

104. It must be held that this loss is present, real and certain and flows directly from the unlawfulness of the conduct for which the Commission is criticised. The applicants have maintained that this head of damages amounts to EUR 51 500, an amount made up of the following elements:

- resources allocated to the various complaints and proceedings other than this action instigated by AFCon following the award of the tender at issue to GFA (EUR 26 500);

- expenses for travel and meetings in Russia, Ireland and Belgium with contacts, politicians and lawyers (EUR 25 000).

105. In relation to the expenses connected with travelling, meetings and lawyers, the applicants have adduced neither any material allowing the Court to verify that those expenses constitute loss for which reparation may be granted nor any evidence capable of substantiating their estimate. In the absence of proof, these expenses therefore cannot be taken into account when quantifying the loss sustained.

106. There are two aspects to the estimate of the resources employed in the various complaints AFCon made to the Commission and the Ombudsman.

107. The first concerns the number of fee days which AFCon spent defending its interests in order to challenge the legality of the tendering procedure. For the period between AFCon being notified of the award of the contract on 17 August 2000 and the final occasion on which Irish Minister of State for European Affairs contacted a member of the Commission to express support for AFCon in February 2003 that number is calculated at 28 fee-days. The daily rate of fees is set at EUR 500 by reference to the rate applied by AFCon in its financial proposal. That estimate does not appear excessive. Consequently, the loss sustained by AFCon and attributable to the time thus spent in defending its interests must be set at EUR 14 000.

108. The second aspect concerns research costs amounting to EUR 12 500. However, the applicants have not produced any material showing exactly what those costs covered or any documentation substantiating the amount claimed. Therefore, the claim in respect of the research allegedly carried out cannot be allowed.

109. Consequently, the Commission must be ordered to pay AFCon EUR 14 000 as compensation for the loss sustained on account of costs incurred by AFCon in defending its interests.

b) Compensation for loss of profit

Arguments of the parties

110. As loss of profit, the applicants claim 25% of the value of AFCon's financial proposal, EUR 741 591. That amount corresponds to the profit margin which AFCon would have obtained if the contract had been awarded to it.

111. The Commission reserves its position on this calculation in the absence of any supporting evidence from AFCon.

Findings of the Court

112. The damage claimed in respect of loss of profit presupposes that AFCon was entitled to be awarded the contract. Even if the Commission had investigated the links between Mr A and GFA and had concluded that there was collusion such as to warrant GFA's exclusion from the procedure, AFCon would not have been certain of securing the contract.

113. The contracting authority is not bound by the evaluation committee's proposal but has a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract (TEAM v Commission , cited above, paragraph 76). It is true that the applicants have cited in this regard the Court of Auditors' Special Report No 16/2000 on tendering procedures for service contracts under the Phare and Tacis programmes, together with the Commission's responses (OJ 2000 C 350, p. 1), from which it appears that out of 120 contracts entered into under those programmes the Commission followed the evaluation committee's recommendation on 117 occasions. However, it cannot be concluded from those statistics that in this case the contract would definitely have been awarded to AFCon if GFA had been excluded from the procedure.

114. Therefore, the damage represented by AFCon's loss of profit is not real and certain but conjectural. Therefore it cannot be the subject of compensation.

c) Compensation for loss of profile'

Arguments of the parties

115. The applicants claim that the award of the contract in question would have permitted AFCon to take part in other calls for tenders. After the tender procedure at issue, AFCon's business began to collapse. The award of the tender at issue to GFA harmed both AFCon's reputation and its business.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

116. AFCon was automatically excluded from tendering in subsequent calls for tenders. From 2002, new rules on eligibility prevented AFCon from tendering, since the rules required tenderers to have an annual turnover and experience which AFCon no longer had.

117. The applicants provisionally estimate their loss of profile' at EUR 600 000.

118. The Commission disputes those assertions, which it contends are not substantiated.

Findings of the Court

119. The harm in respect of which reparation is sought is founded on the contention that the award of the tender at issue to GFA subsequently brought about a reduction in AFCon's activity to the point that it was, de facto , excluded from tendering for projects comparable to the one at issue in this case. That contention is not substantiated.

120. Consequently, the Commission cannot incur liability for that head of damage.

d) Compensation for the harm to AFCon's reputation and that of its directors

Arguments of the parties

121. The applicants maintain that AFCon's reputation was harmed by the fact of not having been awarded the contract and by the unlawful manner in which the tendering procedure was conducted.

122. The Commission discredited AFCon's technical and professional expertise. Its decision not to award the contract to AFCon has had wide-reaching repercussions, since, having been excluded from 27 tender procedures, AFCon has taken the decision not to tender for Phare and Tacis projects any more.

123. The applicants submit that those failures coincide with AFCon's complaints in relation to the FDRUS 9902 project. They state that they have evidence showing that AFCon has been blacklisted'. This head of damage is estimated at EUR 600 000 euros.

124. The applicants maintain that the harm to AFCon's reputation also affects Mr Mc Mullin's reputation and that of Mr O'Grady. They estimate this head of damage at EUR 75 000 per person.

125. The Commission submits that the applicants' claims are not substantiated. Any number of reasons other than the fact that GFA was awarded the tender at issue can explain AFCon's lack of success. It denies that a blacklist' exists. It also denies that it has caused any harm to Mr Mc Mullin's reputation or to that of Mr O'Grady.

Findings of the Court

126. It must be stated that the applicants have not proved that a blacklist exists or that any comments or practices detrimental to AFCon's reputation may be attributed to the Commission. Therefore, the harm alleged cannot be regarded as present, real and certain.

127. The claims relating to the harm which was allegedly caused to the reputations of Mr Mc Mullin and Mr O'Grady must be rejected on the same grounds.

e) Interest

Arguments of the parties

128. The applicants claim that the Court should increase the damages awarded by compensatory interest at a rate of 8% per annum, the rate currently applying in Ireland.

129. The applicants also claim that the Commission should be ordered to pay default interest, at the same rate, from the date of judgment in this action.

Findings of the Court

130. As regards the calculation of compensatory interest, such interest should start to run from the first day of the month following the month in which AFCon last took steps prior to commencing proceedings. Since that was during February 2003, the starting point must be fixed at 1 March 2003.

131. It is clear from the annexes to the application that, in their assessment of the harm they claim to have suffered, the applicants did not ask for compound interest. Therefore, in order to establish the amount which the Commission is to pay, simple interest must be applied.

132. The rate of compensatory interest must be calculated on the basis of the rate fixed by the European Central Bank for its principal refinancing operations, in force during the period concerned, increased by two percentage points, namely an annual rate of 4%. As at the date of delivery of this judgment, the Commission's debt to AFCon amounts to EUR 48 605, including interest.

133. To that sum must be added default interest from delivery of this judgment until full payment. The rate of default interest to be applied is calculated on the basis of the rate fixed by the European Central Bank for its principal refinancing operations, in force during the period concerned, increased by two percentage points. The amount of interest is to be calculated on the basis of compound interest.

Action brought on 15 November 2002 by the Commission of the European Communities against the Hellenic Republic

An action against the Hellenic Republic was brought before the Court of Justice of the European Communities on 15 November 2002 by the Commission of the European Communities, represented by Michel Nolin and Minas Konstantinidis, of its Legal Service, with an address for service in Luxembourg.

The Commission claims that the Court should:

(declare that, as a result of the direct award by the municipality of Serres of the contract "Renewal of the town of Serres: framework of investigative study models and pilot realisation programme" without tenders first being invited, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the provisions of Directive 92/50/EEC [1] (Article 8 et seq.) which require a tender procedure to be carried out and lay down the tender procedure for the award of public service contracts; (order the Hellenic Republic to pay the costs.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The provisions of Directive 92/50 govern the choice of procedures for the award of public service contracts and lay down common rules in the field of design contests and in the technical field. Those provisions apply to contracts whose estimated value is equal to or exceeds a specified threshold.

According to the Commission, the contract "Renewal of the town of Serres: framework of investigative study models and pilot realisation programme" is a public service contract falling within the directive given its subject-matter and value. Nevertheless, the contract was not put out to tender but was awarded directly by the municipality of Serres to the Aristotle University of Thessaloniki.

The Commission further maintains that in the present case neither the exception in Article 6 of the directive (contract with an entity which is itself a contracting authority within the meaning of the directive) nor the exception in Article 1(a)(ix) is applicable.

Judgment of the Court (First Chamber)
of 2 June 2005
Commission of the European Communities v Hellenic Republic. Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Directive 93/38/EEC - Public procurement in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Contract for the construction of a conveyor-belt system for the thermal-electricity generation plant at Megalopolis - Failure to publish a contract notice - Technical reasons - Unforeseeable event - Extreme urgency. Case C-394/02.

1. Actions for failure to fulfil obligations - Right of the Commission to bring proceedings - Exercise of that right not dependent on a specific interest in bringing an action

(Art. 226 EC)

2. Actions for failure to fulfil obligations - Pre-litigation procedure - Subject-matter - Reasoned opinion - Content

(Art. 226 EC)

3. Approximation of laws - Review procedures in respect of the award of public supply and public works contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Directives 89/665 and 92/13 - Procedure enabling the Commission to take preventive action where there has been a clear and manifest infringement of the Community rules on public procurement - Unrelated to the infringement procedure under Article 226 EC

(Art. 226 EC; Council Directives 89/665, Art. 3, and 92/13, Art. 8)

4. Approximation of laws - Procurement procedures in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Directive 93/38 - Derogations from common rules - Conditions - Strict interpretation - Burden of proof

1. When exercising its powers under Article 226 EC, the Commission does not have to show that there is a specific interest in bringing an action. The Commission's function is to ensure, in the general interest, that the Member States give effect to Community law and to obtain a declaration of any failure to fulfil the obligations deriving therefrom with a view to bringing it to an end. Article 226 EC is not therefore intended to protect that institution's own rights. It is for the Commission alone to decide whether or not it is appropriate to bring proceedings against a Member State for a declaration that it has failed to fulfil its obligations, and, depending on the circumstances, because of what conduct or omission those proceedings should be brought.

2. While, within the framework of an action for failure to fulfil obligations, the reasoned opinion must contain a cogent and detailed exposition of the reasons which led the Commission to the conclusion that the Member State concerned had failed to fulfil one of its obligations under the Treaty, the Commission is not, however, obliged to set out in that opinion the steps to be taken to remedy the infringement complained of.

The purpose of the prelitigation procedure is to define the subjectmatter of the action for failure to fulfil obligations in order to give the Member State an opportunity to comply with its obligations under Community law and to avail itself of its right to defend itself against the complaints made by the Commission.

Consequently, it is only where the Commission intends to make failure to adopt measures to enable the infringement complained of to be remedied the subjectmatter of its action for failure to fulfil obligations that it has to specify those measures in the reasoned opinion.

3. The procedure for direct intervention established by Article 8 of Directive 92/13 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, and by Article 3 of Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, under which the Commission may, if it considers that a clear and manifest infringement of Community provisions in the field of public procurement has been committed, take up the matter with a Member State, is a preventive measure which can neither derogate from nor replace the powers of the Commission under Article 226 EC, with the result that the fact that the Commission used or did not use that procedure is irrelevant where it is a matter of deciding on the admissibility of infringement proceedings. Thus, the choice between the two procedures is within its discretion.

4. The provisions of Article 20(2)(c) and (d) of Directive 93/38 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, which in certain cases authorise contracting entities to use a procedure without prior call for competition, must, as derogations from the rules relating to procedures for the award of public procurement contracts, be interpreted strictly. Also, the burden of proof lies on the party seeking to rely on them.

As regards, first of all, Article 20(2)(c) of that directive, its application is subject to two cumulative conditions, namely, first, that there are technical reasons connected to the works which are the subjectmatter of the contract and, second, that those technical reasons make it absolutely necessary to award that contract to a particular contractor.

As regards, secondly, the derogation under Article 20(2)(d) of that directive, it is subject to three cumulative conditions, namely an unforeseeable event, extreme urgency rendering impossible the observance of the time-limits laid down for calls for tenders, and a causal link between the unforeseeable event and the extreme urgency resulting therefrom.

The fact that an authority which must approve the project concerned may impose timelimits is, in that regard, a foreseeable part of the procedure for approving that project.

M. Ilei and E. Levits, Judges,

Advocate General: F.G. Jacobs,

Registrar: K. Sztranc, Administrator, having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 8 December 2004, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 24 February 2005,

gives the following

Judgment

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that, by reason of the award by the public electricity undertaking Dimosia Epicheirisi Ilektrismoy of the contract for the construction of a conveyorbelt system for the thermalelectricity generation plant at Megalopolis by means of a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as amended by Directive 98/4/EC of the European Parliament and the Council of 16 February 1998, and, in particular, under Articles 20(1) and 21 thereof;

2. Orders the Hellenic Republic to pay the costs.

1. By its application, the Commission of the European Communities seeks a declaration by the Court that, by reason of the award by the public electricity company Dimosia Epicheirisi Ilektrismoy (hereinafter DEI') of a contract for the construction of a conveyor-belt system for the thermalelectricity generation plant at Megalopolis by means of a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84), as amended by Directive 98/4/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 February 1998 (OJ 1998 L 101, p. 1) (Directive 93/38'), and in particular Article 20 et seq. of that directive.

Relevant provisions

2. Under Article 15 of Directive 93/38,... works contracts... shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III, IV and V'.

3. Article 20(1) of Directive 93/38 provides that [c]ontracting entities may choose any of the procedures described in Article 1(7) [that is open, restricted and negotiated procedures], provided that, subject to paragraph 2, a call for competition has been made in accordance with Article 21'.

4. Article 20(2) provides:

Contracting entities may use a procedure without prior call for competition ... :

(c) when, for technical... reasons... , the contract may be executed only by a particular... contractor... ;

(d) in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseeable by the contracting entities, the time limits laid down for open and restricted procedures cannot be adhered to;

5. Article 21(1) of Directive 93/38 lays down the means whereby the call for competition may be made, in essence the publication of a notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities drawn up in accordance with the models contained in the annexes to the directive.

Facts and prelitigation procedure

6. In October 1997, DEI, for the purposes of an environmental impact assessment under Council Directive 85/337/EEC of 27 June 1985 on the assessment of the effects of certain public and private projects on the environment (OJ 1985 L 175, p. 40), submitted to the competent authority, namely the Ministry of Environment, Planning and Public Works, a project concerning the installation of a system for the desulphuration, stabilisation, transport and deposit of solid waste from the Megalopolis thermalelectricity generation plant.

7. By decisions of 29 October 1998 and 30 December 1999, that Ministry gave its approval for that project, subject, on the one hand, to DEI lodging a request within nine months, that is by September 2000, for final authorisation for the elimination of the waste produced by that plant and, on the other hand, to the installation within 12 months, that is by December 2000, of a conveyorbelt system for the transport of the ash between that plant and the mine of Thoknia, where the ash would be treated.

8. In view of those deadlines, DEI, on 27 July 1999, decided to carry out a negotiated award procedure without publication of a notice and invited the Koch/Metka consortium and Dosco Overseas Engineering Ltd (Dosco') to submit their offers.

9. On 18 January 2000, Dosco stated that it did not wish to take part in that procedure.

10. On 29 August 2000, after several months of negotiations, DEI awarded the contract for the construction of the conveyorbelt system for the transport of ash between the Megalopolis thermalelectricity generation plant and the mine of Thoknia (hereinafter the contract at issue') to the Koch/Metka consortium.

11. After giving the Hellenic Republic formal notice to submit its observations, the Commission, on 21 December 2001, issued a reasoned opinion stating that the contract at issue should have been made the subject of a notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities , in accordance with Directive 93/38. It therefore invited that Member State to adopt the measures necessary to comply with the reasoned opinion within a period of two months from the date of its notification. Since it was not satisfied by the Greek authorities' reply by letter of 3 April 2002, the Commission decided to bring this action.

The action

Admissibility

12. The Greek Government raises four pleas of inadmissibility on the grounds, respectively, of the Commission's lack of interest in bringing proceedings, the want of any purpose to the action, the imprecision of the reasoned opinion and abuse of process.

The Commission's lack of any interest in bringing proceedings

13. The Greek Government submits that the Commission had no legitimate interest in opening the procedure for failure to fulfil obligations since the alleged infringement of Community law had, when the period for compliance with the reasoned opinion expired, been fully or at least in large measure completed.

14. In that regard, it must be noted that, when exercising its powers under Article 226 EC, the Commission does not have to show that there is a specific interest in bringing an action (see Case 167/73 Commission v France [1974] ECR 359, paragraph 15, and Joined Cases C-20/01 and C28/01 Commission v Germany [2003] ECR I-3609, paragraph 29).

15. The Commission's function is to ensure, in the general interest, that the Member States give effect to Community law and to obtain a declaration of any failure to fulfil the obligations deriving therefrom with a view to bringing it to an end (see Commission v France , cited above, paragraph 15, and Commission v Germany , cited above, paragraph 29 and the caselaw there cited).

16. Article 226 EC is not therefore intended to protect that institution's own rights. It is for the Commission alone to decide whether or not it is appropriate to bring proceedings against a Member State for a declaration that it has failed to fulfil its obligations, and, depending on the circumstances, because of what conduct or omission those proceedings should be brought (see, to that effect, Case C-431/92 Commission v Germany [1995] ECR I2189, paragraph 22; Case C-476/98 Commission v Germany [2002] ECR I9855, paragraph 38, and Commission v Germany , cited in paragraph 14 above, paragraph 30).

The action's want of any purpose

17. The Greek Government submits that the action lacks any purpose, since the contract for works concluded between DEI and the Koch/Metka consortium for the purposes of the contract at issue, had, when the period fixed by the reasoned opinion expired, been almost fully performed. At that time, the works in question had been largely completed, that is to say to the extent of 85% of them. In actual fact, it was therefore no longer possible to comply with the reasoned opinion.

18. In that regard, it is indeed the case that, as far as concerns the award of public procurement contracts, the Court has held that an action for failure to fulfil obligations is inadmissible if, when the period prescribed in the reasoned opinion expired, the contract in question had already been completely performed (see, to that effect, Case C-362/90 Commission v Italy [1992] ECR I-2353, paragraphs 11 and 13).

19. Here, the contract concluded between DEI and the Koch/Metka consortium for the purposes of the contract at issue, was, when the period prescribed by the reasoned opinion expired, in course of performance, since only 85% of the works had been completed. That contract had therefore not been fully performed.

The imprecision of the reasoned opinion

20. The Greek Government submits that the reasoned opinion was too imprecise, in that the Commission had not specified the measures to be adopted in order to comply with it.

21. In that regard, it is clear from settled caselaw that, while the reasoned opinion must contain a cogent and detailed exposition of the reasons which led the Commission to the conclusion that the Member State concerned had failed to fulfil one of its obligations under the EC Treaty, the Commission is not, however, obliged to set out in that opinion the steps to be taken to remedy the infringement complained of (see, to that effect, Case C-247/89 Commission v Portugal [1991] ECR I3659, paragraph 22, and Case C-328/96 Commission v Austria [1999] ECR I7479, paragraph 39).

22. The purpose of the prelitigation procedure is to define the subjectmatter of the action for failure to fulfil obligations in order to give the Member State an opportunity to comply with its obligations under Community law and to avail itself of its right to defend itself against the complaints made by the Commission (see, to that effect, Commission v Austria , cited above, paragraph 34, and Case C476/98 Commission v Germany , paragraphs 46 and 47).

23. Consequently, it is only where the Commission intends to make failure to adopt measures to enable the infringement complained of to be remedied the subjectmatter of its action for failure to fulfil obligations that it has to specify those measures in the reasoned opinion (see, to that effect, Commission v Austria , cited above, paragraph 39).

24. Here, the subjectmatter of the action is limited to a declaration of failure to fulfil obligations by reason of the award of the contract at issue without prior publication of a notice. It does not therefore seek a declaration of a further infringement, based on failure to adopt measures to enable the first infringement to be remedied.

Abuse of process

25. The Greek Government submits that, instead of bringing an action for failure to fulfil obligations, the Commission should have intervened directly and ordered the suspension of the award of the contract at issue under Article 3 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33).

26. In that context, as regards the energy sector, it is not Directive 89/665, but Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14), which is applicable.

27. Even if the Greek Government had cited Article 8 of Directive 92/13, which provides for a procedure essentially identical to that under Article 3 of Directive 89/665, it follows from settled caselaw that, even were it preferable that the Commission use the procedure for direct intervention established by those directives, such a procedure is a preventive measure which can neither derogate from nor replace the powers of the Commission under Article 226 EC (see, in the context of Directive 89/665, Case C-359/93 Commission v Netherlands [1995] ECR I157, paragraph 13; Case C-79/94 Commission v Greece [1995] ECR I1071, paragraph 11; Case C-353/96 Commission v Ireland [1998] ECR I8565, paragraph 22; and Commission v Austria , cited above, paragraph 57). The fact that the Commission used or did not use that procedure is therefore irrelevant where it is a matter of deciding on the admissibility of infringement proceedings.

28. The Commission alone is competent to decide whether it is appropriate to bring proceedings under Article 226 EC for failure to fulfil obligations (see, to that effect, Case C431/92 Commission v Germany , paragraph 22, and Case C476/98 Commission v Germany , paragraph 38). Thus, the choice between the two procedures is within its discretion.

29. It follows from the foregoing considerations that the pleas of inadmissibility must be rejected.

Substance

30. In support of its action, the Commission relies on a single complaint alleging, in essence, breach of Article 15 of Directive 93/38, read in conjunction with Articles 20(1) and 21 of that directive, on the ground that DEI awarded the contract at issue without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

31. In that regard, it must be stated that the Greek Government does not dispute that the contract at issue is covered by Article 15 of Directive 93/38 and should therefore, as a rule, have been awarded in accordance with Titles III to V of that directive, which provide, in particular, for contracts to be put out to tender by the publication of a notice in the Official Journal.

32. The Government contends, however, that, under Article 20(2)(c) and (d) of Directive 93/38, the contract at issue could, in exceptional circumstances, have been awarded without publication of a notice. In its submission, first, only the Koch/Metka consortium was in a position to carry out the works in question in the light of the particular characteristics of the product to be transported and of the site's subsoil, as well as the need to attach the conveyor belts to the existing system. Secondly, the carrying out of those works was very urgent because of the timelimits set by the Ministry of Environment, Planning and Public Works.

33. In this respect, it should, as a preliminary point, be noted that, as derogations from the rules relating to procedures for the award of public procurement contracts, the provisions of Article 20(2)(c) and (d) of Directive 93/38 must be interpreted strictly. Also, the burden of proof lies on the party seeking to rely on them (see, to that effect, in the context of Directives 71/305 and 93/37, Case 199/85 Commission v Italy [1987] ECR 1039, paragraph 14; Case C-57/94 Commission v Italy [1995] ECR I-1249, paragraph 23; and Case C-385/02 Commission v Italy [2004] ECR I8121, paragraph 19).

34. As regards, first of all, Article 20(2)(c) of Directive 93/38, it follows from the caselaw that the application of that provision is subject to two cumulative conditions, namely, first, that there are technical reasons connected to the works which are the subjectmatter of the contract and, second, that those technical reasons make it absolutely necessary to award that contract to a particular contractor (see, to that effect, in the context of Directives 71/305 and 93/37, Case C57/94 Commission v Italy , paragraph 24, and Case C385/02 Commission v Italy , paragraphs 18, 20 and 21).

35. In this case, as the Advocate General noted in paragraphs 40 to 45 of his Opinion, while the works in question involve technical reasons in the sense of Article 20(2)(c) of Directive 93/38, the Greek Government has not convincingly shown that the Koch/Metka consortium was alone in a position to carry them out and that it was, as a result, absolutely necessary to award it the contract.

36. Neither the particular characteristics of the product to be transported, nor the instability of the subsoil and the need to attach the system of conveyor belts to the existing one proves, by itself, that that consortium of companies was the only contractor in the Community with the necessary expertise to carry out the works in question.

37. Moreover, since it also invited Dosco to tender, DEI itself considered that a contractor other than the Koch/Metka consortium was, in principle, also capable of carrying out the works.

38. In addition, it is clear from the Court file that, as regards similar works to be carried out on the same site, DEI had, in the past, initiated public procurement procedures by publication of a contract notice.

39. It cannot therefore be maintained that, because of technical reasons, the contract at issue could be performed only by the Koch/Metka consortium.

40. As regards, secondly, the derogation under Article 20(2)(d) of Directive 93/38, the caselaw has made it subject to three cumulative conditions, namely an unforeseeable event, extreme urgency rendering impossible the observance of the timelimits laid down for calls for tenders, and a causal link between the unforeseeable event and the extreme urgency resulting therefrom (see, to that effect, in the context of Directive 71/305, Case C-107/92 Commission v Italy [1993] ECR I-4655, paragraph 12, and Case C318/94 Commission v Germany [1996] ECR I-1949, paragraph 14).

41. The Greek Government has not shown that those conditions were met in this case.

42. The need to carry out the works in question within the timelimits imposed by the competent authority for the environmental impact assessment cannot be regarded as extreme urgency resulting from an unforeseeable event.

43. The fact that an authority which must approve the project concerned may impose timelimits is a foreseeable part of the procedure for approving that project (see, to that effect, in the context of Directive 71/305, Case C318/94 Commission v Germany , cited above, paragraph 18).

44. Also, DEI could, as regards the contract at issue, have launched the contract award procedure with publication of a contract notice when the procedure for the environmental impact assessment started, that is about three years prior to the expiry of the timelimits imposed.

45. It can therefore be no better maintained that extreme urgency resulting from events unforeseeable by DEI did not enable the timelimits laid down for calls for tenders to be observed.

46. In the light of all the foregoing, it must be declared that, by reason of the award by DEI of the contract for the construction of a conveyorbelt system for the thermalelectricity generation plant at Megalopolis by means of a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 93/38 and, in particular, Articles 20(1) and 21 thereof.

Costs

47. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission has applied for costs and the Hellenic Republic has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

[1] - OJ C 19 of 25.01.2003.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Jacobs delivered on 24 February 2005. Commission of the European Communities v Hellenic Republic. Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations - Directive 93/38/EEC - Public procurement in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors - Contract for the construction of a conveyor-belt system for the thermal-electricity generation plant at Megalopolis - Failure to publish a contract notice - Technical reasons - Unforeseeable event - Extreme urgency. Case C-394/02.

1. In this action brought under Article 226 EC the Commission seeks a declaration by the Court that, by reason of the award by the public electricity company Dimosia Epicheirisi Ilektrismoy (hereinafter DEI') of a contract for the construction of a conveyor-belt system for the thermal-electricity generation plant of Megalopolis (hereinafter the Megalopolis plant') by means of a negotiated procedure without previous publication of a notice, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (hereinafter the Utilities Sectors Directive') (2) and in particular Article 20 et seq. thereof.

The facts and background to the case

2. Towards the end of 1997 DEI submitted to the competent national environmental authority, the Ministry of Environment, Planning and Public Works, a project concerning the installation of a system for the de-sulphuration, stabilisation and transport of ashes and solid waste from the Megalopolis plant for the purposes of an environmental impact assessment under Council Directive 85/337/EEC of 27 June 1985 on the assessment of the effects of certain public and private projects on the environment (hereinafter the Environmental Impact Assessment Directive'). (3) By decisions of 29 October 1998 and 30 December 1999, the competent national environmental authority gave its approval. That approval was subject, on the one hand, to DEI lodging a request for a final authorisation for the elimination of the resulting waste within 9 months and, on the other, to the installation within 12 months of a conveyor-belt system for the transport of the ashes between the Megalopolis plant and the mine of Thoknia, where the ashes would be treated.

3. Having been unofficially informed of the possibility of those deadlines being imposed, on 27 July 1999 DEI decided to carry out a negotiated award procedure without publication of a notice and invited the firms Koch/Metka and Dosco to submit offers.

4. On 18 January 2000, Dosco declared that it was not in a position to take part and withdrew from the award procedure.

5. On 29 August 2000, after price negotiations that lasted several months, DEI awarded the contract for the construction of the conveyor-belt system to the firm Koch/Metka.

6. By letter of 3 October 2000 the Commission requested information from Greece concerning the disputed contract award. After receiving a reply from Greece by letter of 9 November 2000, the Commission sent its letter of formal notice on 17 April 2001. Greece replied by letter of 30 July 2001. After giving Greece the opportunity to submit its observations, on 21 December 2001 the Commission issued a reasoned opinion in which it stated that the contract for the construction of the conveyor-belt system for the transport of ashes between the Megalopolis plant and the mine of Thoknia should have been the subject of a notice published in the Official Journal in accordance with the Utilities Sectors Directive. It requested Greece to adopt all necessary measures to comply with the reasoned opinion within two months. Not being satisfied by the reply given by Greece dated 3 April 2002, the Commission lodged the present action on 8 November 2002.

Relevant provisions of Community law

7. Article 15 of the Utilities Sectors Directive requires that supply and works contracts and contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex XVI A shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III, IV and V'.

8. Article 20(1) of the Utilities Sectors Directive, which is contained in Title IV governing procedures for the award of contracts, provides that [c]ontracting entities may choose any of the procedures described in Article 1(7), provided that, subject to paragraph 2, a call for competition has been made in accordance with Article 21'.

9. Pursuant to paragraph 2 of the same provision:

Contracting entities may use a procedure without prior call for competition in the following cases: ...

(c) when, for technical or artistic reasons or for reasons connected with protection of exclusive rights, the contract may be executed only by a particular supplier, contractor or service provider;

(d) in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseeable by the contracting entities, the time limits laid down for open and restricted procedures cannot be adhered to.'

10. Article 1(7) of the Utilities Sectors Directive defines the three types of award procedures - open, restricted and negotiated - that contracting entities must follow whenever the directive applies.

11. Article 21(1) of the Utilities Sectors Directive lays down the means whereby the call for competition may be made, in essence the publication of a notice in the Official Journal drawn up in accordance with the models contained in the annexes to the directive.

Admissibility

12. Greece objects to the admissibility of the Commission's action on two grounds.

13. First, the Commission did not specify the measures that it was required to adopt in order to comply with the reasoned opinion. Since the procurement in question concerned public works which were to a large extent - around 85% - completed by the deadline set for compliance in the reasoned opinion, it was impossible to give effect to the opinion. In view of this, Greece questions the interest of the Commission in pursuing an infringement procedure.

14. Secondly, the use of the infringement procedure under Article 226 EC constitutes an abuse of procedure. The Commission should have resorted to the procedure under Article 3 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (hereinafter the General Remedies Directive'), (4) which entitles the Commission to intervene directly in a national award procedure and request action from the Member State to tackle alleged clear and manifest breaches of the general public supply, public works and public services directives.

15. As regards Greece's first plea, it must first of all be noted that, pursuant to settled case-law, the Commission does not have to show that there is a specific interest in bringing an action when exercising its powers under Article 226 EC. Given its role as guardian of the Treaty, the Commission alone is competent to decide whether it is appropriate to bring proceedings against a MemberState for failure to fulfil its obligations and to determine the conduct or omission attributable to the MemberState concerned on the basis of which those proceedings should be brought. (5)

16. The Court has further held that, where the effects of the breach subsist beyond the date for compliance laid down in the reasoned opinion, the Commission may have an interest in bringing an action. In the specific context of public procurement cases, without making a distinction between works, supply or services procurement contracts, the Court has held that the unlawful effects subsist during the entire performance of the contracts concluded in breach of the procurement directives. (6)

17. The Court has in the past also dismissed an objection of inadmissibility based on a claim that the alleged infringement had ceased in a situation in which the award procedures had been completed before the date on which the period laid down in the reasoned opinion expired, since the contracts had not been fully performed by that date. Here again the Court does not differentiate between the different procurement contracts covered by the various directives. (7)

18. In the present case it appears from the file that at the expiry of the period prescribed for compliance with the reasoned opinion, the contract was, by the defendant's own admission, still not fully implemented. In fact, the works were only completed in May 2002. It follows that the Commission's interest in bringing the action cannot be contested.

19. Greece's arguments as to the de facto impossibility of giving effect to the reasoned opinion, thereby rendering the Commission's action devoid of any purpose, must in my view also be dismissed.

20. First of all, as the Court has consistently held, even where the default has been remedied after the time-limit given in the reasoned opinion has expired, there is still an interest in pursuing the action in order to establish the basis of liability which a Member State may incur, as a result of its default, towards other Member States, the Community or private parties'. (8) I would add that the same applies whenever the default may no longer be remedied.

21. The establishment of a basis for potential liability claims may be particularly relevant in the case of breaches of public procurement rules. It is generally agreed that the setting aside of a fully implemented contract by reason of a breach of the applicable Community rules on public procurement is not always the most sensible solution since it does not, as a general rule, satisfy either the public or private interests involved. That is especially so in the case of contracts for public works which have been for the most part executed. In those circumstances the best remedy to injured parties may lie in the award of damages. That is precisely the logic that underlies both the General Remedies Directive and Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 (9) coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (hereinafter the Utilities Sectors Remedies Directive'). Article 2(6) of each of those directives enables Member States to provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures are to be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement. A declaration by the Court that a breach has occurred may provide a basis for claims for damages before national courts, even where the contract has already been awarded and fully executed.

22. That is so, moreover, in the case of breaches of the Utilities Sectors Directive. Assuming that Greece has properly implemented its obligations under the Utilities Sectors Remedies Directive - which, as I shall discuss below, applies in the instant case - any party injured by a breach should benefit from the relatively generous damages regime established thereunder. (10)

23. Greece argues that, in any event, there is no third party in the instant case which could avail itself of the Court's judgment to claim damages at national level. That argument should also be rejected.

24. First, such argument is not borne out by reality. The spectrum of possible claimants is defined in very broad terms by both the Remedies directives as any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement'. Thus, the number of persons that could claim relief under the applicable provisions is, potentially, significant and their existence cannot, in my view, be excluded a priori. In the instant case, a second company, Dosco, took part in the preliminary stages of the award procedure but withdrew (for reasons not specified before the Court). In addition, the Commission, according to its submissions, took action following an individual complaint. Thus, contrary to the arguments put forward in the defence, the possibility cannot be excluded that there may be parties who could benefit from a declaration by the Court of a breach of the Community public procurement rules.

25. Secondly, accepting Greece's arguments would be tantamount to allowing national authorities a means to circumvent their obligations under the EC public procurement rules. In view of the length of the pre-litigation and judicial procedures under Article 226 EC, it is highly likely that by the time the Court has ruled on the substance the contract affected by the alleged infringement will be fully implemented, unless interim measures suspending the award procedure or the execution of the contract are granted. It would therefore suffice for Member States, while proceeding to the execution of the contested contract, systematically to oppose the Commission's allegations throughout the pre-litigation procedure, only to argue subsequently the inadmissibility of the Commission's action on grounds of the impossibility of implementing the reasoned opinion. Moreover, it would be unacceptable for a MemberState to be in a better position where the breach is a fait acccompli than where it can still be prevented.

26. Finally, the Court has held that since the finding of failure by a Member State to fulfil its obligations is not bound up with a finding as to the damage resulting therefrom, that Member State cannot rely on the fact that no third party had suffered damage from the alleged breach of the public procurement rules committed by the national contracting authorities. (11)

27. As regards the need to specify the measures to be adopted by the defaulting MemberState, it is settled case-law that the Commission cannot be required to indicate in the reasoned opinion the measures or steps to be taken to eliminate the infringement in question. (12) That case-law, which sanctions the usual practice of the Commission under Article 226 EC, constitutes in my view an expression in the context of that provision of what may be referred to as the principle of institutional autonomy' which governs the relationship between the Community and its Member States. (13) According to the system of the division of powers established by the EC Treaty, in the absence of applicable Community rules, the responsibility for the implementation, application and enforcement of Community rules falls upon the Member States in accordance with their national legal systems, (14) subject, of course, to the constraints of the principle of effectiveness as developed by the Court.

28. Greece refers however to the judgment in Commission v Austria in support of its plea. In that case the Court held, as an exception to its previous case-law, that the Commission must specifically indicate to the Member State concerned that it must adopt a certain measure if it intends to make the failure to adopt that measure the subject-matter of its infringement action'. (15) The Court interpreted part of the Commission's application as seeking a declaration that the defendant State ought to have cancelled the contracts concluded by the national authorities in breach of Community law. Since such a failure had not been specified during the pre-litigation procedure, the Court declared that part of the application inadmissible as the Commission had altered the subject-matter of the proceedings, thereby violating the rights of defence of the Republic of Austria.

29. In my view the circumstances in the instant case are not comparable to those in Commission v Austria. In the present case the Commission has throughout the entire pre-litigation and judicial procedures maintained the same subject-matter for its action, namely the failure by Greece to fulfil its obligations under the Utilities Sectors Directive by reason of the award by DEI of a contract following a negotiated procedure without previous publication of a notice. In its application, the Commission has not sought to require Greece to adopt measures other than those that it had already mentioned in its reasoned opinion. It has therefore not changed the subject-matter of its action and has not prejudiced the defendant's rights of defence.

30. In its second plea of inadmissibility relating to an abuse of procedure, Greece claims that the Commission should have resorted to the direct intervention procedure provided for in Article 3 of the General Remedies Directive.

31. Reference to that provision is surely an oversight by Greece since that directive cannot apply to the instant case. (16) Breaches of the Utilities Sectors Directive are covered by the Utilities Sectors Remedies Directive, which was specifically designed to cater for the peculiarities of public procurement procedures in the sectors covered and to fill the gap left by the General Remedies Directive as regards breaches of the provisions of the Utilities Sectors Directive. (17)

32. That having been said, the Utilities Sectors Remedies Directive also provides in its Article 8 for a special procedure enabling the Commission to intervene directly before the MemberState when a clear and manifest breach of the Utilities Sectors Directive is detected. Apart from the different deadline that it lays down for the reply of the MemberState to the notification of the Commission, the procedure is the same as that laid down by Article 3 of the General Remedies Directive. Although the Commission did not address this point in its written reply, at the hearing it noted that, despite its written submissions, the relevant procedure was that under Article 8 of the Utilities Sectors Remedies Directive. Thus, it might be inferred that Greece's plea refers to the procedure under Article 8 of the Utilities Sectors Remedies Directive rather than Article 3 of the General Remedies Directive

33. The Court has, in my view somewhat reluctantly, (18) held that the special procedure under [Article 3 of the General Remedies Directive] is a preliminary measure which can neither derogate from nor replace the powers of the Commission under Article [226] of the Treaty. That article gives the Commission discretionary power to bring an action before the Court where it considers that a Member State has failed to fulfil one of its obligations under the Treaty and that the State concerned has not complied with the Commission's reasoned opinion.' (19) In view of the practically identical nature of both provisions, those statements should also be taken to apply to the procedure laid down by Article 8 of the Utilities Sectors Remedies Directive.

34. Given that, owing to their particular features, breaches of public procurement rules require swift action in order to avoid a situation of fait accompli and that the Commission's powers under the special procedures laid down in both Remedies directives were specifically designed to avoid such situations when a clear and manifest breach is detected, one may sympathise with Greece's point of view in terms of the expediency of the choices made by the Commission. However, the use made by the Commission of the special procedure provided for in both Remedies directives falls within the realm of its discretion when deciding its enforcement policy in this area and, even if one might disagree from a practical point of view, it cannot be condemned from a strict legal point of view.

35. It follows from the foregoing that the objections of inadmissibility raised by Greece should be dismissed.

Substance

36. The Commission claims that the contract in question falls within the scope of the Utilities Sectors Directive and should therefore have been awarded in accordance with one of the procedures involving publication of a notice as required by Article 20(1) of that directive.

37. Greece does not dispute the fact that the contract falls, in principle, within the scope of the Utilities Sectors Directive but claims that it was exempted from its discipline by virtue of Article 20(2)(c) and (d) thereof. As regards subparagraph (c), the technical specificity of the works in question made the chosen firm Koch/Metka the only contractor capable of performing the works. As regards subparagraph (d), the extreme urgency was brought about by the unforeseen decisions of the competent national authorities imposing tight deadlines for the completion of the environmental procedures which rendered respect for any of the procedures involving publication unviable.

38. It must first be noted that as a derogation from the rules intended to ensure the effectiveness of the rights conferred by Community law in relation to public procurement, both subparagraphs mentioned by Greece must be interpreted strictly. In addition, the burden of proving the existence of exceptional circumstances justifying the derogation which they provide lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances. (20)

39. As regards Article 20(2)(c) of the Utilities Sectors Directive, Greece claims that three types of technical reasons justified the award of the contract to Koch/Metka. First, the specific characteristics of the ashes to be transported, resulting from the fact that the fuel used in the plant is lignite rather than coal, required special technical solutions. Lignite is used as a fuel, according to the technical studies submitted by Greece, in only one other plant in the world and the technical solutions required for lignite are very rarely used by plants using coal. Secondly, the unstable nature of the sub-soil rendered difficult the building of the foundations for the conveyor belts. Finally, it was necessary to attach the new conveyor belts to the existing ones, and therefore to ensure their compatibility. In view of those technical specificities, only Koch/Metka enjoyed, in the contracting authority's view, the necessary expertise for the realisation of the works.

40. I am not convinced that the arguments put forward by Greece adequately establish that Koch/Metka was the only contractor capable of performing the works. The fact that the works to be carried out were subject to exceptional technical constraints does not necessarily mean, as Greece seems to believe, that only one firm has the know-how to deal with such constraints. As the Court of Justice has held, a Member State may rely on an exception such as that provided for by Article 20(2)(c) of the Utilities Sectors Directive only if it can both establish the existence of technical reasons' within the meaning of that provision and prove that those technical reasons' made it absolutely essential that the contract in question be awarded to the chosen undertaking. (21)

41. The passages of the independent technical report quoted in the written submissions of Greece do confirm the rare character and the peculiar properties of the fuel used by the Megalopolis plant and their consequences for the transport of the resulting ashes. However, nowhere in the technical report is it stated that only Koch/Metka was in a position to provide the required service. In fact, the passage cited acknowledges that the technical solutions for lignite-fuelled plants can also be used in coal-fuelled ones, even though they are very rarely used.

42. The same reasoning applies in my view as regards the constraints relating to the configuration of the sub-soil and the need to attach the new conveyor-belt system to the existing one. The geological instability of the sub-soil and the need for compatibility between the new and existing conveyor belts are indeed technical reasons which may be taken into account by the contracting authority when choosing the successful bidder, but they do not on their own prove that Koch/Metka was the only firm capable of performing the contract.

43. Greece's position is further undermined by two more facts. First, the same contracting authority has published award notices in relation to similar works carried out in Megalopolis in the past and, second, Dosco was also invited to negotiate. As the Commission points out, the Greek reply of 9 November 2000 indicates that Dosco was initially considered to be technically capable of performing the contract. The absence of other possible contractors was not as apparent as Greece claims.

44. In brief, to the extent that it tries to shift the burden of proof to the Commission on this aspect of the case, the reasoning of Greece appears to be misguided for the reasons set out in point 40 above. It must be recalled that one of the main aims of the public procurement rules is to enable contracting authorities and firms throughout the EU to benefit from the possibilities offered by the European market. By not testing the market by means of a publication of the notice, Greece has defeated such an aim.

45. In view of the foregoing, I must conclude that Greece has failed to prove that the difficulties arising from the technical constraints of the works to be carried out made it absolutely essential, pursuant to Article 20(2)(c) of the Utilities Sectors Directive, to award the contract to Koch/Metka.

46. As regards the derogation based on reasons of extreme urgency, in order to invoke successfully that derogation under Article 20(2)(d) of the Utilities Sectors Directive three cumulative conditions must be met, namely the existence of an unforeseeable event, extreme urgency rendering the observance of time-limits laid down by other procedures impossible and a link between the unforeseeable event and the extreme urgency resulting therefrom.

47. The unforeseeable event alleged by Greece in the instant case takes the form of the deadlines imposed by the decision of 30 December 1999 of the national authority competent for defining of the environmental conditions for the exploitation of the project. Pursuant to that decision the authorisation to dispose of the waste was to be obtained from the local authority by September 2000 and the new conveyor-belt system was to be operative by December 2000. Such short deadlines were allegedly the result of the pressures put on the competent national environmental authority by local authorities and the local population, who expressed their concerns about pollution problems resulting from the existing installations. According to Greece, failure to respect such deadlines would also have entailed serious legal consequences, principally in the form of sanctions.

48. In my opinion, any contracting authority exercising a normal standard of diligence must be aware of the compulsory authorisation procedures, environmental or otherwise, which it must respect under applicable rules at national level when planning the award of contracts falling within the scope of the public procurement directives. Contracting authorities are therefore bound to bear in mind such procedural steps, and their possible outcome, in their planning so as not to incur any breaches of Community law. In Commission v Germany , where, in view of the delay in approving the public works plans by the competent national environmental authority, the contracting authority decided to abandon the open procedure and to award the contract by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a tender notice, the Court held that the possibility that a body which must approve a project might, before expiry of the period laid down for this purpose, raise objections for reasons which it is entitled to put forward is... something which is foreseeable in plan approval procedure'. (22) I agree with the Commission that the same reasoning should apply here.

49. As the Commission points out, DEI had already submitted the project to which the contested contract award relates to the competent national environmental authority in the last quarter of 1997, that is, over 12 months before the deadlines were laid down in the decision of the competent national environmental authority. It also appears from the file that pollution caused by the existing solid waste transport installations at the site was a topical issue at both national and at local level. Furthermore, DEI had in the past carried out works which had in fact respected the applicable public procurement rules. One must therefore assume that DEI was fully familiar with the rules applicable both to environmental assessment and to public procurement procedures and was aware of the politically sensitive nature of the issue of pollution at the site.

50. In those circumstances, the establishment of tight deadlines by the competent national environmental authority cannot in my view qualify as an unforeseeable event within the meaning of Article 20(2)(d) of the Utilities Sectors Directive. Indeed there were apparently no unexpected changes either in the national regulatory framework or in the pollution levels at the site such as might have required immediate countervailing action.

51. Moreover, what is alleged to have caused the breach of the obligations under the Utilities Sectors Directive was the decision of the Ministry of Environment, Planning and Public Works. However, it is settled case-law that the notion of State for the purposes of Community law and, in particular, for the purposes of an action under Article 226 EC, must be understood as including all public authorities. It is also settled case-law that a Member State cannot rely on provisions, practices or circumstances existing in its internal legal order in order to justify its failure to comply with the obligations... laid down in a directive'. (23) The Court has further stated that the Community directives governing the award of public contracts would be deprived of their effectiveness if the actions of a contracting authority were not to be imputable to the State'. (24)

52. It would be not only unreasonable but also dangerous to allow a Member State to justify a failure to comply with its obligations under Community law on the basis of the action (or inaction) of one of its constitutive elements, in the instant case an integral part of the Greek Government. The obligations arising from the public procurement directives fall upon Member States and it is therefore their duty to ensure that the action or inaction of one of their constitutive elements does not cause or force another State body or agency to fail in its obligations under Community law. It is to be noted that the ultimate liability under Community law of Greece as regards the actions of the DEI is not disputed by the parties.

53. The chronology of the facts also belies the argument to the effect that a situation of extreme urgency' was present. In this respect it suffices to note, first, that DEI presented the project for environmental approval in 1997 and that final approval, subject to conditions, did not come through until the end of 1999. Secondly, the negotiations with Koch/Metka over the price for the contracted works lasted over six months. Lastly, the works were in fact still uncompleted two years after the expiry of the tight' deadlines imposed by the decisions of the competent national environmental authority on grounds of environmental hazards. Whereas I fully accept that environmental or public health hazards could in certain circumstances justify a departure from the discipline of the public procurement directives, there is nothing to indicate that such extreme urgency was a consideration in the present case. In fact, as mentioned at point 5 above, price negotiations lasted for several months, which may suggest that it was the reduction in the price of the contract which took precedence.

Conclusion

54. In view of the above, I am of the opinion that the Court should:

(1) declare that, by reason of the award by DEI of a contract for the construction of a conveyor-belt system for the thermal-electricity generation plant of Megalopolis by means of a negotiated procedure without previous publication of a notice, the Hellenic Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors and in particular Article 20 et seq. thereof;

Judgment of the Court (Second Chamber) of 14 September 2004
Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic. Failure of a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Directive 93/37/EEC - Public works contracts - Negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice. Case C-385/02.

1. Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 93/37 - Derogations from common rules - Strict interpretation - Existence of exceptional circumstances - Burden of proof

(Council Directive 93/37, Art. 7(3))

2. Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 93/37 - Derogations from common rules - Repetition of similar work awarded to the undertaking to which the original contract was awarded - Duration

(Council Directive 93/37, Art. 7(3)(e))

3. Actions for failure to fulfil obligations - Objective character - Excusable error - Not permissible

(Art. 226 EC)

1. Article 7(3) of Directive 93/37 concerning the procedures for the award of public works contracts which authorise derogations from the rules intended to ensure the effectiveness of the rights conferred by the Treaty in relation to public works contracts must be interpreted strictly and the burden of proving circumstances justifying a derogation lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances.

Having regard to the wording of Article 7(3)(b) of the directive, which provides that the contracting authorities may award their public works contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice when, for technical or artistic reasons or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the works may only be carried out by a particular contractor', a Member State must prove that technical reasons make it necessary to award the relevant contracts to the contractor who was entrusted with the original contract.

It is true that the aim of ensuring the continuity of works under complex projects which relate to the flood safety of an area is a technical reason which must be recognised as being important. However, merely to state that a package of works is complex and difficult is not sufficient to establish that it can only be entrusted to one contractor, particularly where the works are subdivided into lots which will be carried out over many years.

2. Article 7(3)(e) of Directive 93/37 concerning the procedures for the award of public works contracts authorises the use of the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice for new works consisting in the repetition of similar works entrusted to the undertaking to which an earlier contract was awarded only during the three years following the conclusion of the original contract'.

In the light of a comparison of the language versions of that provision, the expression conclusion of the original contract' must be understood as meaning the time when the original contract was entered into and not as that of the completion of the works to which the contract relates.

That interpretation is confirmed by the objective of the provision in question and its place in the scheme of Directive 93/37.

First, as it is a derogating provision which falls to be strictly interpreted, the interpretation which restricts the period during which the derogation applies must be preferred rather than that which extends it. That objective is met by the interpretation which takes the starting point as being the date on which the original contract is entered into rather than the, necessarily later, date on which the works which are its subject-matter are completed.

Secondly, legal certainty, which is desirable where procedures for the award of public procurement contracts are involved, requires that the date on which the period in question begins can be defined in a certain and objective manner. While the date on which a contract is entered into is certain, numerous dates may be treated as representing the completion of the works and thus give rise to a corresponding level of uncertainty. Moreover, while the date on which the contract is entered into is clearly established at the outset, the date of completion of the works, whatever definition is adopted, may be altered by accidental or voluntary factors for so long as the contract is being carried out.

3. Proceedings against a Member State for failure to fulfil obligations afford a means of determining the exact nature of the obligations of the Member States, particularly where there are differences of interpretation, and are based on the objective finding that a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty or secondary legislation. Accordingly, the concept of excusable error cannot be relied on by a Member State to justify a failure to comply with the obligations imposed on it under a directive.

gives the following

Judgment

Costs

43. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission has applied for costs and the Italian Republic has been unsuccessful, the latter must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that, as the Magistrato per il Po di Parma, a local agency of the Ministry of Public Works (now the Ministry for Infrastructure and Transport) awarded contracts for the completion of the construction of an overflow basin to retain flood waters of the Parma watercourse in the Marano area (in the Parma commune) as well as for works relating to the development and completion of an overflow basin for the Enza watercourse and to the retention of flood waters of the Terdoppio watercourse southwest of Cerano by the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, when the conditions necessary in that regard were not satisfied, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts;

2. Orders the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

1. By its application the Commission of the European Communities has brought an action for a declaration that, as the Magistrato per il Po di Parma, a local agency of the Ministry of Public Works (now the Ministry for Infrastructure and Transport) awarded contracts for the completion of the construction of an overflow basin to hold flood waters of the Parma watercourse in the Marano area (in the Parma commune) as well as for works relating to the development and completion of an overflow basin for the Enza watercourse and to the retention of flood waters of the Terdoppio watercourse southwest of Cerano by the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, when the conditions necessary in that regard were not satisfied, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) (hereinafter the Directive') and in particular Article 7(3) thereof.

Legal framework

2. Article 7(3)(b), (c) and (e) of the Directive provides:

The contracting authorities may award their public works contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, in the following cases:

(b) when, for technical or artistic reasons or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the works may only be carried out by a particular contractor;

(c) in so far as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseen by the contracting authorities in question, the time-limit laid down for the open, restricted or negotiated procedures referred to in paragraph 2 cannot be kept. The circumstances invoked to justify extreme urgency must not in any event be attributable to the contracting authorities;

(e) for new works consisting of the repetition of similar works entrusted to the undertaking to which the same contracting authorities awarded an earlier contact, provided that such works conform to a basic project for which a first contract was awarded according to the procedures referred to in paragraph 4.

As soon as the first project is put up for tender, notice must be given that this procedure might be adopted and the total estimated cost of subsequent works shall be taken into consideration by the contracting authorities when they apply the provisions of Article 6. This procedure may only be adopted during the three years following the conclusion of the original contract.'

3. Article 7(4) of the Directive states:

In all other cases, the contracting authorities shall award their public works contracts by the open procedure or by the restricted procedure.'

Facts

4. By Decrees Nos 11414 and 11416 of 9 October 1997 and No 11678 of 15 October 1997, the Magistrato per il Po di Parma approved contracts relating to the following works:

- the completion of the construction of an overflow basin to hold the flood waters of the Parma watercourse in the Marano area (in the Parma commune);

- the development and completion of an overflow basin for the Enza watercourse, and

- the retention of flood waters of the Terdoppio watercourse south-west of Cerano.

5. The value of those works amounted to approximately ITL 37 000 million, ITL 21 000 million and ITL 19 500 million respectively.

6. The original contracts for the works mentioned were awarded on the following dates:

- 22 December 1988, in the case of the Parma watercourse,

- 26 October 1982, in the case of the Enza watercourse, and

- 20 May 1988, in the case of the Terdoppio watercourse.

Pre-litigation procedure

7. By letter of 27 September 2000, the Commission requested the Italian authorities to provide information as to the procedure followed in awarding the contracts referred to in paragraph 4 of this judgment (hereinafter the relevant contracts').

8. By letters of 19 October 2000 and 26 March 2001, the Italian authorities replied, stating that the procedure followed by them complied with the requirements of Article 7(3)(e) of the Directive, as the works in question consisted in the repetition of works similar to those already entrusted by the Magistrato per il Po di Parma to the undertakings to which the original contracts had been awarded and conformed to a basic project for which an earlier contract was awarded according to the procedures referred to in Article 7(4) of the Directive. Furthermore, the right of the awarding authority to adopt the negotiated procedure was specified in the notices for the original contracts and the total estimated cost of the execution of each of the works had been taken into consideration by the Magistrato per il Po di Parma when applying the Community provisions. Lastly, the negotiated procedure was adopted during the three years following the conclusion of the original contract.

9. By letter of 23 April 2001, the Commission gave the Italian Republic formal notice to submit its observations.

10. The Italian authorities replied by letters of 8 June and 17 December 2001, maintaining inter alia that the three years following the conclusion of the original contract referred to in Article 7(3)(e) of the Directive run from the date on which the works under the original contract are handed over, as that date represents the end of the contract.

11. As it was not satisfied with that reply, the Commission issued a reasoned opinion on 21 December 2001, calling on the Italian Republic to take the measures necessary to comply with it within two months of its notification. As the Italian Republic did not reply to that opinion, the Commission brought the present action.

Forms of order sought

12. The Commission claims that the Court should:

- declare that, as the Magistrato per il Po di Parma awarded contracts for the completion of the construction of an overflow basin to hold flood waters of the Parma watercourse in the Marano area (in the Parma commune) as well as for works relating to the development and completion of an overflow basin for the Enza watercourse and to the retention of flood waters of the Terdoppio watercourse southwest of Cerano by the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Directive and in particular Article 7(3) thereof;

- order the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

13. The Italian Republic claims that, leaving aside the interpretation of Article 7(3) of the Directive for competition purposes, and interpreting it on the basis of its wording in the majority of the language versions, it should be held that the Italian Government made an excusable error due to the Italian version of the provision.

The infringement

14. It is not disputed that the relevant contracts are subject to the Directive and were concluded under the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice. That procedure is permitted only in the cases which are exhaustively listed in Article 7(3) of the Directive. In its defence, the Italian Government sets out three pleas in law seeking to show that the relevant contracts are covered by one of those cases.

15. The Italian Government argues, first, that between 1981 and 1990 the Magistrato per il Po di Parma initiated procedures for the implementation of flood safety measures for the territories and zones affected by the flood waters of the River Po and its tributaries through contracts for the development of the overall project and the carrying out of the works in lots as and when funding became available. The contracts relating to the development of the project and to the first lot of the works were awarded following a procedure which complied with Community law. The relevant contract notices contained a provision allowing the contracting authority to award the carrying out of the subsequent lots of the work to the same undertaking.

16. In the light of the complexity and the difficult nature of the works, the Public Works Authority stated in a technical opinion that those works were to be carried out by a single, qualified, contractor and that, if they were carried out in lots, it would be necessary to ensure their continuity. That technical opinion was reflected in the provision contained in the contract notice, as well as in the contracts for the development of the project and for the first lot of works. The adoption of the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice for the award of the relevant contracts represented the implementation of a contractual obligation.

17. According to the Italian Government, the awarding authority wished to address technical requirements relating to completion of the works by a single contractor. Completion by individual lots often causes problems arising from the fact that the work is not carried out in the same way and hence difficulties in establishing the respective liability for the damages due in respect of destruction or deterioration of the works.

18. That first defence plea must be understood as being based on Article 7(3)(b) of the Directive, inasmuch as that provision authorises the use of the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice for works which, for technical reasons, may only be carried out by a particular contractor.

19. The provisions of Article 7(3) of the Directive, which authorise derogations from the rules intended to ensure the effectiveness of the rights conferred by the EC Treaty in relation to public works contracts, must be interpreted strictly and the burden of proving the existence of exceptional circumstances justifying a derogation lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances (see, to that effect, Case C57/94 Commission v Italy [1995] ECR I-1249, paragraph 23, and Case C318/94 Commission v Germany [1996] ECR I-1949, paragraph 13).

20. Accordingly, the Italian authorities must prove that technical reasons made it necessary to award the relevant contracts to the contractor who was entrusted with the original contract (see, to that effect, Commission v Italy , paragraph 24).

21. It is true that the aim of ensuring the continuity of works under complex projects which relate to the flood safety of an area is a technical reason which must be recognised as being important. However, merely to state that a package of works is complex and difficult is not sufficient to establish that it can only be entrusted to one contractor, particularly where the works are subdivided into lots which will be carried out over many years.

22. In the present case, the Italian Government has confined itself to referring in general terms to the contents of an opinion of the Public Works Authority, without providing the detailed explanations on which the need to use a single contractor could be based.

23. With respect to the Italian Government's argument that the use of the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice for the award of the relevant contracts represents the implementation of a contractual obligation, even assuming it to be relevant, it must be held that that Government has failed to establish that such an obligation exists. On the contrary, according to the information provided to the Court, the Magistrato per il Po di Parma was not obliged to award subsequent lots to the contractors undertaking the original lots of work, but merely had the option of doing so.

24. It follows that the defence plea based on Article 7(3)(b) of the Directive is not well founded and must be rejected.

25. Secondly, according to the Italian Government, the works required to be completed urgently in this case, in order to avoid the increased risk of flooding which would occur if they were not finished.

26. That second defence plea must be understood as being based on Article 7(3)(c) of the Directive, which authorises the use of the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice where, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseen by the contracting authorities, the periods laid down for the normal procedures cannot be adhered to. The second sentence of that provision states that the circumstances invoked to justify extreme urgency cannot in any event be attributable to the contracting authorities.

27. In the present case, the original contracts relating to the flood protection works had been awarded in the 1980s. Furthermore, it had been anticipated from the start that the works would be carried out in lots as and when funding became available.

28. Those matters do not establish any extreme urgency. On the contrary, they arise out of the arrangements put into place by the contracting authority.

29. It follows that the second defence plea, based on Article 7(3)(c) of the Directive, is not well founded and must be rejected.

30. Thirdly, the Italian Government relies on Article 7(3)(e) of the Directive, which authorises, subject to certain conditions, adoption of the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice for new works consisting in the repetition of similar works entrusted to the undertaking to which the same contracting authorities awarded an earlier contract.

31. The last sentence of that provision states that that possibility is only open during the three years following the conclusion of the original contract. The Italian Government argues that that period runs from the completion of the works under the original contract and not from the time when that contract was awarded.

32. In the alternative, the Italian Government asks the Court to find that it made an excusable error due to the Italian version of Article 7(3) of the Directive.

33. In that respect, it must be pointed out that Article 7(3)(e) of the Directive authorises the use of the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice for new works consisting in the repetition of similar works entrusted to the undertaking to which an earlier contract was awarded. The last sentence of that provision states however that the procedure may only be adopted during the three years following the conclusion of the original contract'.

34. In the light of a comparison of the language versions of that provision, the expression conclusion of the original contract' must be understood as meaning the time when the original contract was entered into and not as referring to the completion of the works to which the contract relates.

35. In particular, the Danish version indgaaelsen af den orprindelige kontrakt', the English version the conclusion of the original contract', the Spanish version formalizacion del contrato inicial' and the Portuguese version celebraçao do contrato inicial' refer unambiguously to the contract and cannot be understood as meaning the works which are its subject-matter.

36. That interpretation is confirmed by the objective of the provision in question and its place in the scheme of the Directive.

37. First, as it is a derogating provision which falls to be strictly interpreted, the interpretation which restricts the period during which the derogation applies must be preferred rather than that which extends it. That objective is met by the interpretation which takes the starting point as being the date on which the original contract is entered into rather than the, necessarily later, date on which the works which are its subject-matter are completed.

38. Secondly, legal certainty, which is desirable where procedures for the award of public procurement contracts are involved, requires that the date on which the period in question begins can be defined in a certain and objective manner. While the date on which a contract is entered into is certain, numerous dates may be treated as representing the completion of the works and thus give rise to a corresponding level of uncertainty. Moreover, while the date on which the contract is entered into is clearly established at the outset, the date of completion of the works, whatever definition is adopted, may be altered by accidental or voluntary factors for so long as the contract is being carried out.

39. It follows that in the present case the period of three years laid down in the final sentence of Article 7(3)(e) of the Directive ran from the date on which the original contracts were entered into in 1982 and 1988. As the relevant contracts were awarded in 1997, the derogation laid down by the provision concerned accordingly did not apply.

40. With respect to the Italian Government's request that it be given the benefit of having made an excusable error, it must be pointed out that proceedings against a Member State for failure to fulfil obligations afford a means of determining the exact nature of the obligations of the Member States, particularly where there are differences of interpretation, and are based on the objective finding that a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty or secondary legislation (see, to that effect, Case C-83/99 Commission v Spain [2001] ECR I-445, paragraph 23). Accordingly, the concept of excusable error cannot be relied on by a Member State to justify a failure to comply with the obligations imposed on it under a directive.

41. It follows from that that the third defence plea, based on Article 7(3)(a) of the Directive, must be rejected as unfounded.

42. Having regard to all the above considerations, it must be held that as the Magistrato per il Po di Parma awarded contracts for the completion of the construction of an overflow basin to retain flood waters of the Parma watercourse in the Marano area (in the Parma commune) as well as for works relating to the development and completion of an overflow basin for the Enza watercourse and to the retention of flood waters of the Terdoppio watercourse southwest of Cerano by the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, when the conditions necessary in that regard were not satisfied, the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Directive.

Opinion of Advocate General Kokott delivered on 29 April 2004. Commission of the European Communities v Italian Republic. Failure of a Member State to fulfil its obligations - Directive 93/37/EEC - Public works contracts - Negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice. Case C-385/02.

I - Introduction

1. In these Treaty-infringement proceedings, the Commission asserts that the Italian Republic, when awarding three public works contracts, failed to comply with Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (hereinafter: Directive 93/37'). (2)

2. The central issue is whether, in the case of new works consisting of the repetition of similar earlier works, it is permissible - and if so, subject to what conditions - for a negotiated procedure to be conducted without prior publication of a contract notice. Directive 93/37 sets a three-year time-limit on such a procedure; how that time-limit should be calculated in the circumstances of this case forms the essential subject-matter of these proceedings. The Italian Republic maintains that, if it was indeed mistaken as to the method of calculation, any error was an excusable one.

II - Legal framework

3. The legislation governing these proceedings is contained in Article 7(3) and (4) of Directive 93/37. The relevant passages state:

3. The contracting authorities may award their public works contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, in the following cases:

(b) when, for technical or artistic reasons or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the works may only be carried out by a particular contractor;

(c) insofar as is strictly necessary when, for reasons of extreme urgency brought about by events unforeseen by the contracting authorities in question, the time-limit laid down for the open, restricted or negotiated procedures referred to in paragraph 2 cannot be kept. The circumstances invoked to justify extreme urgency must not in any event be attributable to the contracting authorities;

(e) for new works consisting of the repetition of similar works entrusted to the undertaking to which the same contracting authorities awarded an earlier contact, provided that such works conform to a basic project for which a first contract was awarded according to the procedures referred to in paragraph 4.

As soon as the first project is put up for tender, notice must be given that this procedure might be adopted and the total estimated cost of subsequent works shall be taken into consideration by the contracting authorities when they apply the provisions of Article 6. This procedure may only be adopted during the three years following the conclusion of the original contract.

4. In all other cases, the contracting authorities shall award their public works contracts by the open procedure or by the restricted procedure'.

4. The first and second recitals in the preamble to Directive 93/37 state:

Whereas Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts has been amended substantially and on a number of occasions; whereas, for reasons of clarity and better understanding, the said Directive should be consolidated;

Whereas the simultaneous attainment of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts awarded in Member States on behalf of the State, or regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law entails not only the abolition of restrictions but also the coordination of national procedures for the award of public works contracts.'

5. The eighth recital in the preamble to the Directive states:

Whereas the negotiated procedure should be considered to be exceptional and therefore only applicable in certain limited cases.'

6. The first sentence of the tenth recital in the preamble states:

Whereas, to ensure development of effective competition in the field of public contracts, it is necessary that contract notices drawn up by the contracting authorities of Member States be advertised throughout the Community.'

III - Facts and pre-litigation procedure

7. Three public works contracts were awarded in 1997 by the Magistrato per il Pô di Parma, a local agency of the Italian Ministry of Public Works (now the Ministry for Infrastructure and Transport). (3) The contracts concerned additional lots in respect of work on the following flood protection projects:

- completion of the construction of an overflow basin for flood waters of the Parma watercourse in the area of Marano in the Parma commune;

- development and completion of an overflow basin for the Enza watercourse and

- retention of flood waters of the Terdoppio watercourse - Scolmatore canal south-west of Cerano.

8. The parties agree that the value of the lots - ITL 37 000 million, ITL 21 000 million and ITL 19 500 million - exceeded the threshold of ECU 5 million laid down in Article 6 of Directive 93/37.

9. The work was entrusted - by negotiated procedure, without prior publication of a contract notice - to the firms to which the previous lots had been awarded in the 1980s. These earlier lots related to:

- a works contract relating to the Parma watercourse, of 22 December 1988;

- a works contract relating to the Enza watercourse, of 26 October 1982, and

- a works contract relating to the Terdoppio watercourse, of 20 May 1988.

10. The Commission wrote to the Italian authorities on 27 September 2000, asking for detailed information concerning the procedure followed when the three lots were awarded in 1997. In their reply of 19 October 2000, the Italian authorities explained that they had applied the procedure pursuant to Article 7(3)(e) of Directive 93/37. The lots consisted in the repetition of similar works entrusted to the same undertakings to which the same contracting authorities had awarded an earlier contact; the works conformed to a basic project for which the first contract was awarded according to the procedures referred to in Article 7(4) of the Directive. As soon as the first project was put up for tender, notice had been given that the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice might later be adopted and the total estimated cost of the subsequent works was taken into consideration. The negotiated procedure was duly adopted within the three years following the conclusion of the original contract, that period having started to run when the previous works were handed over.

11. The Commission sent a letter of formal notice on 23 April 2001 in which it rejected the Italian authorities' interpretation of how the three-year time-limit should be calculated. The Italian Republic replied on 8 June 2001 and 17 December 2001, essentially reaffirming its position.

12. On 28 October 2002, having received no reply to its reasoned opinion of 21 December 2001, the Commission brought the present action against the Italian Republic under the second paragraph of Article 226 EC.

IV - Forms of order sought

13. The Commission claims the Court should:

- Declare that the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, in particular Article 7(3) thereof, in that the Magistrato per il Pô di Parma, a local agency of the Ministry of Public Works (now the Ministry for Infrastructure and Transport), awarded the contracts concerning additional lots in respect of work on completion of the construction of an overflow basin for flood waters of the Parma watercourse in the area of Marano in the Parma commune, development and completion of an overflow basin for the Enza watercourse and retention of flood waters of the Terdoppio watercourse - Scolmatore canal south-west of Cerano by the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, when the conditions for such a procedure were not satisfied;

- Order the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

14. The Italian Republic is not claiming in terms that the action should be dismissed. However, it asks the Court, whatever its interpretation of Article 7(3) of Directive 93/37, to hold that the Italian version of that provision had led the Italian Government to commit an excusable error.

V - Assessment

A - Admissibility

15. The Court has consistently held that when the Commission exercises its powers under Article 226 EC, it does not have to show that there is a specific interest in bringing an action. The provision is not intended to protect the Commission's own rights. The Commission, as guardian of the Treaties in the general interest of the Community, must ensure that Member States give effect to Community law, and must obtain a declaration of any infringement with a view to bringing it to an end. Hence it is for the Commission alone to assess whether it is appropriate to institute Treaty-infringement proceedings, and to determine the act or omission on which such proceedings should be based. Even where a Member State's national legislation accords with Community law, the Commission may none the less seek a declaration that it has failed to fulfil its obligations, citing a specific instance in which Community rules were disregarded, and consequently, the result intended by a directive was not achieved. (4)

16. However, the subject-matter of an action brought under Article 226 EC is established by the Commission's reasoned opinion. Such an action becomes devoid of purpose, and accordingly inadmissible, to the extent that the alleged infringement is eliminated before the time-limit set by the Commission expires. (5) The Treaty-infringement procedure has then achieved its purpose in the course of the pre-litigation procedure.

17. In the present case, however, as the Italian Government acknowledges, it did nothing to eliminate the effects of any possible Treaty infringements in relation to the three public works contracts to which the Commission referred. While other award procedures were cancelled, technical considerations and the risks for public safety made it impossible to annul the award procedures at issue in these proceedings.

18. Although public procurement law does not require Member States to annul contracts which have already been concluded, any contract awarded in contravention of the relevant directive constitutes an ongoing infringement of Community law. (6) Moreover, it is consistent with the meaning and purpose of both Treaty-infringement proceedings and the public procurement directives for the Commission to be able to bring specific situations before the Community Courts to determine whether public procurement rules have been observed. From a finding against a Member State with regard to a specific case it may thus be deduced that the Member State, as addressee of the Directive, has failed to do everything necessary to implement it. (7)

19. The Italian Government maintains that it is now guided solely by competition considerations when awarding public works contracts, pursuant to the most recent developments in Italian public procurement law and its own practice in making awards; the events which led to the infringement proceedings could never occur again.

20. However, merely claiming that award procedures will be conducted henceforth on the basis of competition criteria cannot itself preclude future procedural errors. As the Commission has pertinently observed, it is entirely possible that other contracting authorities in Italy might similarly misinterpret the three-year time-limit, particularly since the transfer of power to regional and local authorities has considerably increased the number of potential contracting authorities.

21. That risk of the infringement being repeated (8) constitutes a further reason why the action should be held to be admissible.

B - Substance

22. For the Commission's action to be well founded, the Italian Republic must have failed to fulfil an obligation under the Treaty (Article 228(1) EC). The duty to implement Directive 93/37, which the Commission claims the Italian Republic has failed to discharge, follows from the first paragraph of Article 10 EC in conjunction with the third paragraph of Article 249 EC.

1. Infringement of Directive 93/37

23. The three public works contracts in question were awarded in 1997 by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice. However, Article 7(4) of Directive 93/37 makes it clear that, in principle, public works contracts are to be awarded by the open procedure or the restricted procedure - and not , therefore, by the negotiated procedure. Only in exceptional cases is it permissible to use the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice. (9) These cases are listed exhaustively in Article 7(3) of the Directive. (10) The only conceivable basis for applying a negotiated procedure in the present case is Article 7(3)(b), (c) or (e); I shall consider them in turn.

(a) Technical reasons under Article 7(3)(b) of Directive 93/37

24. The Italian Government submits first that technical reasons made it necessary to award the three works contracts to the contractor to whom the earlier work had been awarded. It is thus conceivable at first sight that Article 7(3)(b) is applicable.

25. However, it is clear from the plain terms of that provision that it applies only when the works may only be carried out by a particular contractor. (11) According to the Court's case-law, that constitutes a derogation which must be interpreted strictly and therefore applies only where there exist exceptional circumstances. (12)

26. More specifically, merely deeming it expedient to award a follow-up contract to the contractor who had performed earlier work cannot suffice to justify application of Article 7(3)(b) of Directive 93/37, just as it is not sufficient to invoke technical constraints in formulaic and non-specific terms. A contracting authority must explain in detail why, in the circumstances of the case, technical reasons made it absolutely necessary for the contract to be awarded to the very contractor to whom the previous works had been entrusted, and to none other. In the absence of such a requirement, contracting authorities might abuse Article 7(3)(b) of Directive 93/37, invoking the situation described therein so as to avoid calls for tender, and thus subverting the general purpose of the Directive, which is to promote competition in the field of public procurement. (13)

27. The burden of proving the existence of exceptional circumstances lies on the person seeking to rely on them. (14) In the present case, the Italian Government merely stated that the competent authority wished to forestall any damage to or deterioration of the works already completed, and to avoid difficult questions as to the respective liability of a number of contractors. Hence even if it may have seemed expedient to re-commission the contractor responsible for the first tranche of works, no compelling technical reasons required the selection of that particular contractor. It was therefore not possible to base application of the negotiated procedure on Article 7(3)(b) of Directive 93/37.

28. At the hearing, the Italian Government stated in addition that when the three contracts were awarded, no other potential contractors were discernible; at least in that particular instance, therefore, competition had not been impaired. I do not find that argument convincing. The whole point of prior publication of a contract notice is to ensure that as many potential tenderers as possible know that a contract is about to be awarded. It is quite possible that, if a notice had been duly published, other prospective contractors might have come forward.

(b) Urgency under Article 7(3)(c) of Directive 93/37

29. The Italian Government further contends that the three contracts had to be awarded as a matter of particular urgency. It is thus conceivable that Article 7(3)(c) of Directive 93/37 might apply.

30. However, the very terms in which subparagraph (c) is couched - strictly necessary', extreme urgency', events unforeseen' - attach strict conditions to any reliance on it; moreover, as it constitutes a derogation it must be construed narrowly. (15) That is the only way to prevent abuse by contracting authorities and to serve the purpose of the directive, the development of effective competition in the field of public contracts. (16)

31. It is moreover clear from the second sentence of Article 7(3)(c) that a contracting authority may not seek to justify alleged urgency on the basis of circumstances attributable to themselves. In the present case, planning of the flood-protection measures had been in hand at least since the 1980s when the lots were awarded for the first tranche of work. Moreover, the work to which the present proceedings relate had been contemplated from the very beginning, as the Italian Government itself stated, and was only kept back to be the subject of a second, separate, contract for budgetary reasons. These facts suggest that the contracting authority was actuated not by any particular urgency, but by purely internal and organisational considerations.

32. The burden of proving urgency lies on the person seeking to rely on it. (17) In the present case the Italian Government has merely alleged that there was an urgent need to award the public works contracts since the previous works had - they say - increased the danger of flooding. Yet I am not aware of any factors which would have prevented the competent authorities from foreseeing such an increased flood-risk, especially as, under their original plans, flood-protection measures were to be carried out in various stages. Hence the conditions for the application of Article 7(3)(c) were not met.

(c) Repetition of similar works within three years under Article 7(3)(e) of Directive 93/37

33. The Italian Government finally invokes Article 7(3)(e) of Directive 93/37. It is common ground between the parties that, when the contracts were awarded, all the conditions for the application of this subparagraph were met, save for the three-year time-limit. What is at issue between the parties is solely when that three-year period starts to run; whether or not it was open to the contracting authority to conduct a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice depends on how that issue is resolved.

34. The Italian Government's understanding is that the period in question starts to run only on completion of the works covered by the first contract. It bases this interpretation on the Italian version of Directive 93/37, which uses the phrase conclusione dell'appalto iniziale' to indicate when the period starts to run, in contrast to the form of words in the earlier directive (18) (aggiudicazione dell'appalto iniziale'), which plainly referred to the award of the original contract.

35. As the Court has consistently held, (19) all language versions of a Community provision must, in principle, be recognised as having the same weight. It follows that the proper starting-point for the three-year period referred to in Article 7(3)(e) of Directive 93/37 should be determined not by considering a single language version in isolation, but on the basis of an overview of all language versions.

36. Alas, some language versions of the directive are not as clear as one would wish. The German version, for example, refers to the Abschluss des ersten Auftrags' and the French to the conclusion du marché initial', while the Dutch simply refers to the oorspronkelijke opdracht'. However, a number of other language versions clearly tell against the interpretation supported by the Italian Government, and support the Commission's position, namely the English (conclusion of the original contract'), the Danish (indgåelsen af den oprindelige kontrakt'), the Spanish (celebracion de contrato inicial'), and the Portuguese (celebraçao do contrato inicial').

37. What is also noteworthy is that the change in the text of Article 7(3)(e) of Directive 93/37, to which the Italian Government refers, occurs solely in the Italian version - conclusione' replacing aggiudicazione' - whereas the other versions retain the text of the preceding directive (20) unchanged. That alone suggests that the change was a drafting amendment to the Italian text rather than a substantive modification of the provision itself. That conclusion is supported by the first recital in the preamble to Directive 93/37, which speaks of the previous directive being consolidated for reasons of clarity and better understanding.

38. Ultimately, though, what matters is not the text on its own, but the context of the provision and the purpose it was intended to achieve. (21)

39. On the issue, first, of how the disputed time-limit provision relates to Directive 93/37 as a whole, I would point out that Article 1(a) of the directive uses the term contracts (and not, say, works) to define public works contracts, not least in the Italian version: gli appalti pubblici di lavori sono contratti a titolo oneroso...'. (22)

40. Moreover, it follows a contrario from Article 7(4), which describes the procedures which would ordinarily fall to be applied, that Article 7(3)(e) deals with a derogation, and should ipso facto be construed narrowly.

41. As to the purpose of the three-year time-limit, that has a crucial part to play in assisting the achievement of freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services in the field of public works contracts, by promoting increased competition. (23) That consideration, too, must make the negotiated procedure, less advantageous for competitors, the exception - only permitted to be used in certain limited cases. (24)

42. Accordingly, both the context and the purpose of Article 7(3)(e) of Directive 93/37 tell in favour of a narrow interpretation of the three-year time-limit: time starts to run from the conclusion of the contract for the first works. To defer the starting-point until the first works had been completed would broaden the scope of the negotiated procedure, and work against the aim of creating competition in the field of public works contracts. It would also, as the Commission correctly observes, be detrimental to legal certainty: there is no compelling reason why the completion of construction work should be equated with acceptance by the principal - other events could conceivably be considered, such as the laying of the last stone, the dismantling of scaffolding, the closure of the site or the payment of the (outstanding) price. The date of conclusion of the contract, by contrast, can generally be determined unequivocally.

43. Thus on a proper construction of Article 7(3)(e) of Directive 93/37, the three-year time-limit referred to in the last sentence of that provision starts to run on the conclusion of the contract for the first works - not later, when work on the first tranche is completed. Thus the Italian Republic misinterpreted and misapplied Directive 93/37 with regard to the three public works contracts at issue in these proceedings.

(d) Interim conclusion

44. Since none of the derogating conditions prescribed in Article 7(3)(e) of Directive 93/37 obtains, it follows that the Italian Republic, in awarding the three public works contracts in question by the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, failed to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty.

2. No excusable error of law

45. The Italian Government finally argues that, in the light of the Italian version of Article 7(3)(e) of Directive 93/37, the contracting authority's application of the Government's own interpretation of the starting-point for the three-year period constituted an errore scusabile' - an excusable error.

46. The concept of excusable error is indeed not entirely unknown to Community law, more particularly in the field of State liability. For although fault is in principle not a precondition for a Member State's liability in damages, (25) whether or not an error of law is excusable may be a factor in determining whether a national authority manifestly and gravely disregarded the limits on its discretion and consequently committed a sufficiently serious breach of a rule of Community law. (26) In the field of non-contractual liability, it is accepted that a Member State, or a Community institution, will not automatically incur financial liability vis-à-vis an individual every time it is in breach of the law: whether or not damages are awarded will turn on the nature of the infringement of Community law. (27)

47. These aspects of State liability law cannot, however, be transposed to Treaty-infringement proceedings. The purpose of the latter is to ensure that Community law is applied correctly and uniformly in all Member States, and that any infringements are brought to an end: (28) such infringements being established entirely objectively , with no reference to what prompted them, or to the nature or seriousness of their consequences. (29)

48. Furthermore, each Member State is entirely responsible to the Community for ensuring that all State authority is exercised in a manner consistent with Community law. That responsibility includes a duty to take all appropriate steps to comply with obligations arising under Community law and to refrain from any act or omission which might threaten their fulfilment (Article 10 EC). It applies irrespective of fault.

49. Thus in Treaty-infringement proceedings - if only to preclude any possibility of abuse - there must be severe restrictions on the defences available to Member States. Accordingly, the Court only allows one defence unrelated to fault - the absolute impossibility of complying with obligations under Community law. (30)

50. By contrast, an error of law is not a permissible defence to a Treaty-infringement action. Thus the Court has held that a Member State may not rely on difficulties relating to the interpretation of a directive in order to delay transposing it until after the prescribed period has expired. (31)

51. Nor may a Member State plead that its infringement of Community law was only minor, or that no damage flowed from it. (32)

52. Moreover, it is settled case-law that Community law should not be interpreted and applied with reference to one single language version (as occurred here); but on the basis of an overall view of all language versions, mindful of the sense, purpose and context of the provision in question. (33) Any uncertainties should be taken up with the Commission, in accordance with the principle of cooperation in good faith established in Article 10 EC.

53. Only if the Commission itself has raised a legitimate expectation on the part of a Member State (perhaps in an opinion addressed to it) that that State's rights and duties under Community law should be interpreted in a particular way may such an expectation be subsequently pleaded in defence to Treaty-infringement proceedings. The Commission itself has very fairly pointed to cases where a Community institution's conduct caused a party to form an incorrect impression, or at least contributed significantly to that occurring. (34)

54. In the light of all the foregoing, the Italian Government cannot therefore succeed in its defence based on the assertion that the contracting authority committed an excusable error in determining when the period stipulated in Article 7(3)(e) of Directive 93/37 started to run.

3. Conclusion

55. It follows from the foregoing that the Italian Republic failed to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty in that it awarded the three public works contracts in question by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, when the requirements set out for that purpose in Directive 93/37, particularly Article 7(3) thereof, were not fulfilled.

VI - Costs

56. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. As is apparent from the foregoing, I consider that the Commission's action should succeed. Accordingly, since the Commission has applied for costs, and the Italian Republic has been unsuccessful, the latter must be ordered to pay the costs.

VII - Conclusion

57. For the reasons set out above, I propose that the Court should

1. Declare that the Italian Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty in that, through the Magistrato per il Pô di Parma, it awarded public works contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, when the requirements set out for that purpose in Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, in particular Article 7(3) thereof, were not fulfilled, for the following additional lots :

- completion of the construction of an overflow basin for flood waters of the Parma watercourse in the area of Marano in the Parma commune;

- development and completion of an overflow basin for the Enza watercourse and

- retention of flood waters of the Terdoppio watercourse -Scolmatore canal south-west of Cerano;

2. Order the Italian Republic to pay the costs.

Notice for the OJ

Reference for a preliminary ruling by the Unabhängiger Verwaltungssenat des Landes Vorarlberg by order of that Court of 15 October 2002 in the case of Fantom Gebäudereinigung Gesellschaft GmbH against Dornbirn

(Case C-380/02)

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by order of the Unabhängiger Verwaltungssenat des Landes Vorarlberg (independent administrative chamber for Vorarlberg) of 15 October 2002, received at the Court Registry on 21 October 2002, for a preliminary ruling in the case of Fantom Gebäudereinigung Gesellschaft GmbH against Dornbirn on the following questions:

Question 1

Is Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts[1] to be interpreted as meaning that under it entitlement to apply for a review procedure is available to any person seeking to receive a specific public contract whose award is pending, irrespective of whether such person has suffered or may suffer loss as a result of the infringement of the law alleged?

In the event that the answer to Question 1 is no:

Is the abovementioned provision of the directive to be construed as meaning that, where a bid was not eliminated by the contracting authority but the review body assumes and establishes as a preliminary matter that the bid had properly to be eliminated, an alleged infringement of the law - namely the contracting authority's acceptance of another bid as the best bid, has occasioned or may occasion loss to the bidder concerned, and the review procedure must therefore be available to that bidder?

THE COURT (First Chamber), composed of: P. Jann, President of the Chamber, S. von Bahr and K. Schiemann (Rapporteur), Judges,

Advocate General: L.A. Geelhoed,

Registrar: R. Grass,

having regard to the Report of the Judge-Rapporteur, after considering the observations submitted on behalf of the parties, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 11 March 2004,

gives the following

Judgment

Costs

46. Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs, if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission has applied for costs and the French Republic has been unsuccessful, the latter must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that, by virtue of the award by the Communauté urbaine du Mans of a study contract for assistance to the maitre d'ouvrage in respect of the Chauvinière sewage treatment plant, without publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities , the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, and in particular Article 15(2) thereof;

2. Orders the French Republic to pay the costs.

1. By its application, the Commission of the European Communities seeks a declaration that by virtue of the award by the Communauté urbaine du Mans (the municipal community of Le Mans; the MCLM') of a study contract for, inter alia, assistance to the maitre d'ouvrage (responsible contracting authority) in respect of the Chauvinière sewage treatment plant, without publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities , the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1; the Directive'), and in particular Article 15(2) thereof.

Legal background

2. Article 7(1) of the Directive states:

This directive shall apply to public service contracts, the estimated value of which, net of VAT, is not less than ECU 200 000.'

3. Pursuant to Article 8 of the Directive, contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I.A thereto must be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI of that directive.

4. Article 15(2), which appears in Title V of the Directive, entitled Common advertising rules', states:

Contracting authorities who wish to award a public service contract by open, restricted or, under the conditions laid down in Article 11, negotiated procedure, shall make known their intention by means of a notice.'

5. Article 11(3), which appears in Title III of the Directive, entitled Choice of award procedures and rules governing design contests', provides for derogation from the obligation of prior publication of a contract notice as follows:

Contracting authorities may award public service contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice in the following cases:

(c) where the contract concerned follows a design contest and must, under the rules applying, be awarded to the successful candidate or to one of the successful candidates. In the latter case, all successful candidates shall be invited to participate in the negotiations;

...'

6. Article 1(g) of the Directive states:

[For the purposes of the Directive] design contests shall mean those national procedures which enable the contracting authority to acquire, mainly in the fields of area planning, town planning, architecture and civil engineering, or data processing, a plan or design selected by a jury after being put out to competition with or without the award of prizes'.

Facts

7. The MCLM issued a number of calls for tenders for the provision of services connected with improvements to the Chauvinière sewage treatment plant.

8. To that end, a scheme of works was drawn up, consisting of the following three phases:

- First phase: feasibility study for a water treatment network with a view to bringing the Chauvinière sewage treatment plant into compliance with European environmental laws;

- Second phase: study contract to (1) assist the maitre d'ouvrage in drawing up detailed technical specifications on the basis of the solution chosen in the first phase, (2) draw up an impact assessment analysing all the effects of the works on the environment, and (3) assist the maitre d'ouvrage in appraising offers submitted in relation to the procedure comprising the third phase;

- Third phase: planning of the works and their execution.

9. Two contract notices were published, one in the Official Journal of 30 November 1996, Series S, No 233, and the other in the Official Journal of 10 December 1998, Series S, No 239.

10. The notice published on 30 November 1996 concerned a call under the restricted procedure, for tenders in respect of a design contest for the feasibility study required in the first phase. That design contest carried a prize of FRF 200 000 for each of the three selected participants, amounting to a total sum of FRF 600 000.

11. Point 2 of that notice also provided that the candidate whose solution was successful in the design contest relating to the first phase may be invited to cooperate in the execution of his idea, under a study contract for [inter alia] the provision of assistance to the maitre d'ouvrage ' envisaged in the first and third parts of the second phase.

12. The notice published on 10 December 1998 related to the third phase.

The pre-litigation procedure

13. By letter of 7 October 1999, the Commission called upon the French authorities to submit to it their observations on the circumstances and arrangements under which the calls for tenders referred to above had been conducted.

14. Since the French authorities failed to give any official response to that letter, on 3 August 2000 the Commission sent them a letter of formal notice in which it raised three complaints, alleging infringement of Article 27(2), Article 15(2) and Article 36(1) of the Directive.

15. By letter of 21 November 2000, the French authorities disputed all the complaints raised by the Commission. Finding that response unsatisfactory, the Commission delivered a reasoned opinion, by letter of 26 July 2001, in which it reiterated its complaints.

16. The French authorities replied to the reasoned opinion by letter of 4 February 2002. In that letter, they conceded that the first and third of the Commission's complaints were well founded.

17. In those circumstances, the Commission decided to bring the present action which concerns only the second complaint raised in the reasoned opinion.

The action

Arguments of the parties

18. In its application, the Commission asserts that the contract for assistance to the maitre d'ouvrage , which was the subject-matter of the second phase and the value of which was FRF 4 502 137.90, concerned services different from those relating to the design contest initiated by the notice of 30 November 1996. Therefore, that contract should have been advertised and put out to competition in accordance with the common rules on advertising and participation laid down in Titles V and

VI of the Directive. In fact, that contract was awarded to the successful candidate in the design contest organised for the carrying out of the feasibility study provided for in the first phase, without any further advertising or putting out to competition at Community level.

19. The Commission submits that the statement in the contract notice published in 1996 that the successful candidate in the contest might be invited to cooperate in assisting the maitre d'ouvrage within the framework of the second phase is of no relevance and that it in no way allowed the contracting authority to avoid its obligations under the Directive.

20. The Commission adds that the principle of equal treatment of tenderers established by the Directive requires that the subject-matter of the contract be clearly defined and that it be not extended in the course of the procedure. That principle also requires that the award criteria be clearly identified. However, not only did the successful candidate have neither any certainty, nor any right as regards the provision of other services under a later contract for the provision of technical assistance to the maitre d'ouvrage , but, in addition, no award criterion had been identified for that later contract.

21. In its defence, the French Government submits, first, that the relevant provisions of the contract notice of 30 November 1996 and of the rules to which the notice refers for further information, left no room for doubt as to the intention of the MCLM to reserve the option of awarding the successful candidate in the design contest a study contract for the provision of assistance to the maitre d'ouvrage. Consequently, the contract for assistance to the maitre d'ouvrage could legitimately be awarded to the successful candidate in the design contest without prior publication of a new contract notice.

22. Second, the French Government submits that, pursuant to Article 11(3)(c) of the Directive, the requirement of prior publication of a contract notice does not apply in the present case.

23. The French Government maintains that the Commission's argument that, in breach of the principle of equal treatment of candidates, the award criteria for the contract for assistance to the maitre d'ouvrage were not defined in the contract notice of 30 November 1996 must be regarded as inadmissible in so far as it was first advanced in the application and the French Government was thus not able to defend itself against that charge during the pre-litigation procedure.

24. On that last point, the Commission submits that that argument is not a new charge but an observation in support of its position, namely that the subject-matter of the contract related only to the design contest.

Findings of the Court

Admissibility

25. It is settled case-law that the purpose of the pre-litigation procedure is to give the Member State concerned an opportunity, on the one hand, to comply with its obligations under Community law and, on the other, to avail itself of its right to defend itself against the charges formulated by the Commission (see, in particular, Case C-152/98 Commission v Netherlands [2001] ECR I-3463, paragraph 23, and Case C-439/99 Commission v Italy [2002] ECR I-305, paragraph 10).

26. It follows that, first, the subject-matter of proceedings under Article 226 EC is delimited by the pre-litigation procedure governed by that provision. Accordingly, the application must be founded on the same grounds and pleas as the reasoned opinion. If a charge was not included in the reasoned opinion, it is inadmissible at the stage of proceedings before the Court (see, in particular, Commission v Italy , cited above, paragraph 11).

27. Second, the reasoned opinion must contain a cogent and detailed exposition of the reasons which led the Commission to the conclusion that the Member State concerned had failed to fulfil one of its obligations under the EC Treaty (see, in particular, Case C-207/96 Commission v Italy [1997] ECR I-6869, paragraph 18, and Case C439/99 Commission v Italy , cited above, paragraph 12).

28. In the present case, at paragraphs 20 and 21 of the reasoned opinion the Commission claims, in connection with the second complaint, that the reference in the contract notice to the option for the successful candidate to cooperate in the execution of the selected idea ... provided the successful candidate with no certainty, nor any right as regards the provision of other services under a later contract for the provision of technical assistance to the maitre d'ouvrage ' and... that the contracting authority unlawfully failed to apply an advertising and competition procedure to the various services to assist the maitre d'ouvrage , planned for the second phase of the comprehensive scheme of works in question'.

29. In those circumstances, it must be held that, by submitting that, in breach of the principle of equal treatment of candidates, the award criteria for the contract to provide assistance to the maitre d'ouvrage were not defined in the contract notice of 30 November 1996, the Commission merely expanded on the charge set out in paragraphs 20 and 21 of the reasoned opinion and did not formulate a new charge. It follows that the defence of inadmissibility raised by the French Government must be rejected.

Substance

30. In this action, the Commission is essentially alleging that the French authorities awarded the contract for assistance to the maitre d'ouvrage provided for in the second phase without implementing the tendering procedure laid down in the Directive.

31. At the outset, it should be noted that the parties do not dispute that the conditions for application of the Directive are met in the present case. The studies and the assistance to the maitre d'ouvrage which are the subject-matter of the second phase constitute services within the meaning of Article 8 of and Annex I.A to the Directive. Moreover, the minimum value of the contract laid down in Article 7(1) of the Directive was exceeded.

32. Consequently, pursuant to Article 8 of the Directive, the contract for the provision of those services could be awarded only in accordance with the rules laid down in Title III of the Directive, in particular Articles 11 and 15(2) thereof. The latter provision required the contracting authorities to publish a contract notice.

33. The French Government submits, however, that the option, set out in the notice of 30 November 1996, of awarding the contract relating to the second phase to the successful candidate in the design contest releases the contracting authority from the obligation to publish another notice prior to the award of that contract.

34. That argument cannot be accepted. The principle of equal treatment of service providers, laid down in Article 3(2) of the Directive, and the principle of transparency which flows from it (see, by analogy, Case C-87/94 Commission v Belgium [1996] ECR I-2043, paragraphs 51 to 53, and Case C-324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress [2000] ECR I-10745, paragraph 61) require the subject-matter of each contract and the criteria governing its award to be clearly defined.

35. That obligation exists where the subject-matter of a contract and the criteria selected for its award must be regarded as decisive for the purposes of determining which of the procedures provided for in the Directive is to be implemented and assessing whether the requirements related to that procedure have been observed.

36. It follows that in the present case the mere option of awarding the contract relating to the second phase according to criteria laid down in respect of a different contract, that is the one related to the first phase, does not amount to awarding the contract in accordance with one of the procedures laid down in the Directive.

37. The French Government also relies on Article 11(3) of the Directive, which authorises contracting authorities using a negotiated procedure to derogate from the obligation of prior publication in certain cases which are exhaustively listed. In particular, derogation is permissible under Article 11(3)(c) of the Directive where the contract concerned follows a design contest and must, under the rules applying, be awarded to the successful candidate or to one of the successful candidates.'

38. In that regard, it should be recalled that, as the Commission correctly points out, that provision, as a derogation from a fundamental rule of the Treaty, must be interpreted strictly and the burden of proving the existence of exceptional circumstances justifying a derogation lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances (see Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 Commission v Germany [2003] ECR I-3609, paragraph 58).

39. In the present case, as the Advocate General observes in point 40 of his Opinion, some of the services which make up the second phase do not come within the definition of a design contest given in Article 1(g) of the Directive, which refers to a plan or design'. While the first part of the second phase (assistance to the maitre d'ouvrage in drawing up detailed technical specifications on the basis of the solution chosen in the first phase) could perhaps be regarded as a plan or design within the meaning of Article 1(g) of the Directive, the third part of the second phase could not. The provision of assistance to the maitre d'ouvrage in appraising offers submitted in relation to the procedure planned for the third phase clearly does not constitute a plan or design within the meaning of Article 1(g) of the Directive.

40. In any event, the conditions for applying the derogation provided for in Article 11(3)(c) of the Directive are not met in the present case. It is clear from the wording of that provision that it is permissible to forgo publication of a notice only where the contract concerned follows a design contest and must be awarded to the successful candidate or to one of the successful candidates in that contest.

41. As the Advocate General stated in point 45 of his Opinion, the expression follows a design contest' as used in Article 11(3)(c) of the Directive implies that there must be a direct functional link between the contest and the contract concerned. Since the contest in question related to the first phase and was organised for the purpose of awarding the contract envisaged in that phase, the contract in the second phase cannot be regarded as following that contest.

42. Moreover, point 2 of the contract notice of 30 November 1996 simply provides for the option, but not the obligation, to entrust the second phase to the successful candidate in the contest relating to the first phase. Therefore, it cannot be asserted that the contract relating to the second phase must be awarded to the successful candidate or to one of the successful candidates in the contest.

43. Accordingly, the derogation from the obligation to publish a contract notice, provided for in Article 11(3)(c) of the Directive, does not apply in this case.

44. It follows from the foregoing considerations that, although the second phase came within the scope of the Directive, it was not the subject of a contract notice published in accordance with the rules of that directive.

45. In the light of the foregoing, it must be held that, by virtue of the award by the MCLM of a study contract for assistance to the maitre d'ouvrage in respect of the Chauvinière sewage treatment plant, without publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Directive, and in particular Article 15(2) thereof.

on the interpretation of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 amending Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts respectively (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1),

THE COURT (Second Chamber), composed of: R. Schintgen, President of the Chamber, V. Skouris (Rapporteur) and N. Colneric, Judges,

Advocate General: L.A. Geelhoed,

Registrar: R. Grass,

the national court having been informed that the Court proposes to give its decision by reasoned order in accordance with Article 104(3) of the Rules of Procedure, the persons referred to in Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice having been invited to submit any observations which they might wish to make in this regard,

Costs

37 The costs incurred by the Austrian and Finnish Governments and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, as amended by Directive 97/52/EC of the European Parliament and the Council of 13 October 1997 amending Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts respectively, must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority which has commenced a procedure for the award of a contract on the basis of the lowest price may discontinue the procedure, without awarding a contract, when it discovers after examining and comparing the tenders that, because of errors committed by itself in its preliminary assessment, the content of the invitation to tender makes it impossible for it to accept the most economically advantageous tender, provided that, when it adopts such a decision, it complies with the fundamental rules of Community law on public procurement such as the principle of equal treatment.

1 By order of 1 July 2002, received at the Court on 4 July 2002, the Korkein hallinto-oikeus referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC two questions on the interpretation of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 amending Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts respectively (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1) (Directive 93/36).

2 Those questions arose in proceedings between the company Kauppatalo Hansel Oy (Hansel) and Imatran Kaupunki (City of Imatra) regarding the City of Imatra's decision not to award a public supply contract for electricity for which Hansel had put in a tender.

Legal background

3 Article 7(2) of Directive 93/36 provides:

Contracting authorities shall promptly inform candidates and tenderers of the decisions taken on contract awards, including the reasons why they have decided not to award a contract for which there has been an invitation to tender or to start the procedure again, and shall do so in writing if requested. They shall also inform the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities of such decisions.

4 Directive 93/36 was transposed into Finnish law by the Julkisista hankinnoista annettu laki (Law on public procurement) 1505/1992, as amended by Laws 1523/1994, 725/1995, 1247/1997 and 633/1999 (Law 1505/1992).

5 Under Paragraph 1 of Law 1505/1992, national and local authorities and other contracting authorities specified in the law must comply with the provisions of that law in order to create competition and ensure fair and non-discriminatory treatment of participants. Under Paragraph 2 of Law 1505/1992, contracting authorities include municipal authorities.

6 Paragraph 5(1) of Law 1505/1992 states that all the competition possibilities in existence are to be made use of for the award of the contract.

7 Paragraph 7(1) of Law 1505/1992 provides that the contract is to be awarded as advantageously as possible; the tender to be accepted is the one which is lowest in price or overall the most economically advantageous.

8 Procedures for the award of public contracts are regulated in more detail by the Asetus kynnysarvot ylittävistä tavara- ja palveluhankinnoista sekä rakennnusurakoista (Regulation on supply, service and works contracts exceeding the threshold values) 380/1998 (Suomen säädökokoelma No 378-381, p. 1210, Regulation 380/1998).

9 Subparagraph 4 of Paragraph 19 of Regulation 380/1998 provides:

The contracting authority must inform on request, candidates or tenderers of the reasons why it has decided not to award a contract for which an invitation to tender has been published, or to start the procedure for the award of the contract again. The contracting authority must also notify its decision to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

10 It is clear from the order for reference that, as the contracting authority, the City of Imatra in Finland addressed an invitation to tender to 20 electricity companies for the award of an electricity supply contract for certain areas in that city, specified in the invitation to tender, for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001. The invitation to tender, which was published on 2 March 2000 in the Julkiset Hankinnat (the public procurement section in the Finnish Official Journal), mentioned the lowest price as the criterion for the award of the contract.

11 Of the tenders received by the City of Imatra within the prescribed period, that from Hansel was the lowest in price.

12 During a meeting on 23 May 2000, the Imatran tekninen lautakunta (City of Imatra Technical Committee, the Technical Committee) realised that changing the supplier would give rise to additional costs which had not been taken into consideration and decided that the tender submitted by its then supplier, Imatran Seudun Sähkö Oy, was overall the most economically advantageous tender.

13 The City of Imatra's Technical Office prepared a draft decision, according to which the electricity supply contract with Imatran Seudun Sähkö Oy would be extended for the period 1 July 2000 to 30 June 2001. However, that draft decision was taken off the agenda of the Technical Committee's meeting, so that the award of the contract was not made on the basis of the invitation to tender at issue.

14 On 31 August 2000, the City of Imatra published a new invitation to tender in which, following a more comprehensive assessment of the overall cost of the contract, the estimated amount of electricity required was now stated to be 25 GWh per year instead of the 16 GWh per year stipulated in the first invitation to tender, in order to ensure that the best tender was also overall the most economically advantageous. In the new procedure, the best tender was submitted by Lappeenrannan Energia Oy, to which the contract was awarded.

15 Hansel lodged an appeal before the Kilpailuneuvosto (Finnish Competition Board) against the decision of the contracting authority to discontinue the procedure for the award of a contract commenced by publication of the invitation to tender of 2 March 2000, asking it to set aside that decision and to order the City of Imatra to compare the tenders submitted in accordance with the national legislation on public procurement or, in the alternative, to pay it compensation of 15% of the total value of the contract.

16 In support of its appeal, Hansel argued, inter alia, that the City of Imatra did not have any valid reason to reject a tender satisfying the required criteria and to discontinue the procedure for the award of the contract, and that the organisation of a new procedure, replacing the original criterion for the award of the contract, namely the lowest price, with the criterion of the overall most economically advantageous tender, was unlawful. Hansel further submitted that the new procedure for the award of the contract amounted to a bargaining round. In its view, the City of Imatra had sought, by way of the first invitation to tender, to obtain information on prices and had subsequently commenced a new procedure in order to negotiate the price of the tenders submitted, using the information which had become public during the first invitation to tender.

17 The Kilpailuneuvosto dismissed the appeal. In particular, it held that, with the exception of the obligation to publish a notice, there are no express provisions on the discontinuance of a procedure for the award of a contract which is under way. Taking the view that such discontinuance is only possible for duly justified reasons, the Kilpailuneuvosto held that the city of Imatra had a valid reason, in accordance with Article 5 of Law 1505/1992, taking into account the public interest and the efficient use of public funds.

18 In that regard, the Kilpailuneuvosto held that the preparation of the invitation to tender was defective, since not all the factors influencing the costs of the project had been taken into consideration. The City of Imatra could not, however, be compelled to award a contract which would lead to an increase in its overall costs. Moreover, the Kilpailuneuvosto held that the new procedure initiated by the second invitation to tender could not be regarded as a bargaining round.

19 Hansel appealed against the Kilpailuneuvosto's decision to the Korkein hallinto-oikeus, seeking annulment of that decision and an order that the city of Imatra pay as compensation 15% of the total value of the contract.

20 In its order for reference the Korkein hallinto-oikeus states that there are no specific provisions in the Finnish legislation governing the discontinuance of a procedure for the award of a contract which is under way, apart from the provisions concerning the obligation to publish a notice. Accordingly consideration of the case requires an interpretation of the relevant provisions of Community law in order to determine whether the City of Imatra acted wrongly when it discontinued a procurement procedure which had been started and was based on the criterion of the lowest price, without awarding the contract, on the ground that the content of the invitation to tender did not enable it to accept the overall most economically advantageous tender.

21 In that regard, the national court assumes, first, that the contracting authority became aware only after receipt of the tenders of the fact that the total cost of the purchase of electricity is also affected by other factors, and does not depend exclusively on the price of the electricity and, second, that discontinuing the procedure for the award of a contract on the basis of the criterion stated in the first invitation to tender was dictated by the concern to avoid accepting what was not overall the most economically advantageous tender.

22 Referring to Case C-27/98 Fracasso and Leitschutz [1999] ECR I-5697, the Korkein hallinto-oikeus states that that judgment does not resolve the issue of whether the contracting authority has discretion to discontinue the procedure for the award of a contract in the absence of express provisions, or whether the fact that the reason for discontinuing the procedure is an error of assessment affecting the content of the invitation to tender is relevant for assessing the justification for the discontinuance of the procedure.

23 In the light of those considerations, the Korkein hallinto-oikeus stayed proceedings and referred the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

1. Is Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts to be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority which has commenced a procedure for the award of a contract on the basis of the lowest price may discontinue the procedure, without awarding a contract, when it discovers after examining and comparing the tenders that, because of the content of the invitation to tender, it is not possible for it to accept the tender which is overall the most economically advantageous?

2. Is it of importance, as regards the acceptability of discontinuing the procedure, that the content of the invitation to tender is defective because of the incorrectness of the assessment previously made by the contracting authority?

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

24 By its two questions, which may appropriately be considered together, the national court asks, essentially, whether Directive 93/36 must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority which has commenced a procedure for the award of a contract on the basis of the lowest price may discontinue the procedure, without awarding a contract, when it discovers after examining and comparing the tenders that, because of errors committed by itself in its preliminary assessment, the content of the invitation to tender makes it impossible for it to accept the most economically advantageous tender.

25 Taking the view that the answer to the questions as thus reformulated may be clearly deduced from its existing case-law, the Court, in accordance with Article 104(3) of the Rules of Procedure, informed the national court that it intended to give its decision by reasoned order and invited the persons referred to in Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice to submit any observations which they might wish to make in this regard.

26 None of those persons raised any objection to the Court's intention to give its decision by reasoned order referring to the existing case-law.

27 It must be observed that the only provision in Directive 93/36 relating specifically to the decision to discontinue a procedure for the award of a contract put out to tender is Article 7(2), which provides, inter alia, that where the contracting authorities have decided not to award a contract, they must promptly inform candidates and tenderers of the reasons for their decision.

28 The Court of Justice has already had occasion to define the scope of the obligation to notify reasons for abandoning the award of a contract in the context of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), in the version thereof resulting from Directive 97/52 (Directive 93/37) and in that of Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), in the version arising from Directive 97/52 (Directive 92/50), which contain in Articles 8(2) and 12(2) provisions with wording substantially identical to that of Article 7(2) of Directive 93/36.

29 In particular, in paragraphs 23 and 25 of its judgment in Fracasso and Leitschutz, cited above, the Court held that Article 8(2) of Directive 93/37 does not provide that the option of the contracting authority to decide not to award a public works contract put out to tender, implicity allowed by that directive, is limited to exceptional cases or must necessarily be based on serious grounds.

30 Moreover, in paragraph 41 of its judgment in Case C-92/00 HI [2002] ECR I-5553, the Court held that on a proper interpretation of Article 12(2) of Directive 92/50, although that provision requires the contracting authority to notify candidates and tenderers of the grounds for its decision if it decides to withdraw the invitation to tender for a public service contract, there is no implied obligation on that authority to carry the award procedure to its conclusion.

31 In paragraph 42 of HI, the Court stated that even though, apart from the duty to notify the reasons for the withdrawal of the invitation to tender, Directive 92/50 contains no specific provision concerning the substantive or formal conditions for that decision, the fact remains that the latter is still subject to fundamental rules of Community law, and in particular to the principles laid down by the EC Treaty on the right of establishment and the freedom to provide services.

32 More particularly, in interpreting the duty to notify reasons for a decision to withdraw an invitation to tender, laid down by Article 12(2) of Directive 92/50 in the light of the two-fold objective of exposure to competition and transparency pursued by that directive, the Court held that that duty is dictated precisely by concern to ensure a minimum level of transparency in the contract-awarding procedures to which that directive applies and hence compliance with the principle of equal treatment (HI, cited above, paragraphs 43 to 46).

33 Therefore the Court held that, even though Directive 92/50 does not specifically govern the detailed procedures for withdrawing an invitation to tender for a public service contract, the contracting authorities are nevertheless required, when adopting such a decision, to comply with the fundamental rules of the Treaty in general, and the principle of non-discrimination on the ground of nationality, in particular (HI, paragraph 47).

34 Thus it is clear from the case-law of the Court that Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 which, taken as a whole, constitute the core of Community law on public contracts, are intended to attain similar objectives in their respective fields (Case C-513/99 Concordia Bus Finland [2002] ECR I-7213, paragraph 90).

35 In those circumstances, there is no reason to give a different interpretation to provisions which fall within the same field of Community law and have substantially the same wording (Concordia Bus Finland, cited above, paragraph 91).

36 Therefore, the answer to the questions referred by the national court must be that Directive 93/36 is to be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority which has commenced a procedure for the award of a contract on the basis of the lowest price may discontinue the procedure, without awarding a contract, when it discovers after examining and comparing the tenders that, because of errors committed by itself in its preliminary assessment, the content of the invitation to tender makes it impossible for it to accept the most economically advantageous tender, provided that, when it adopts such a decision, it complies with the fundamental rules of Community law on public procurement such as the principle of equal treatment.

Costs

43. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) rules as follows:

Article 30(1) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts is to be interpreted as meaning that it precludes national rules which, for the purpose of awarding public works contracts following open or restricted tendering procedures, impose a general and abstract requirement that the contracting authorities use only the criterion of the lowest price.

1. The reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 30(1) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54; the Directive').

2. The reference was made in proceedings between Sintesi SpA (Sintesi') and the Autorità per la Vigilanza sui Lavori Pubblici (Public Works Supervisory Authority; the supervisory authority') concerning the award of a public works contract under the restricted tendering procedure.

Legal framework

Community rules

3. According to the second recital in the preamble to the Directive, ... the simultaneous attainment of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts awarded in Member States on behalf of the State, or regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law entails not only the abolition of restrictions but also the coordination of national procedures for the award of public works contracts'.

4. Article 30(1) of the Directive provides:

1. The criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) either the lowest price only;

(b) or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract: e.g. price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit.'

National legislation

5. Article 30(1) of the Directive was transposed into Italian law by Article 21 of Law No 109 of 11 February 1994 (GURI No 41 of 19 February 1994, p. 5; Law No 109/1994'), which is the framework law on public works in Italy.

6. Article 21(1) and (2) of Law No 109/1994, in the version in force at the material time, is worded as follows:

Criteria for the award of contracts - Contracting authorities

1. The award of contracts by open or restricted tender shall be based on the criterion of lowest price, below the base price in the tender notice, and shall be determined as follows:

2. The award of contracts by call for competitive tenders and also the allocation of concessions by restricted calls for tender shall be made on the basis of the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender, taking into account the following factors which vary according to the work to be carried out:

Main proceedings and questions referred to the Court

7. In February 1991, the City of Brescia (Italy) awarded Sintesi a concession contract for the construction and management of an underground car park.

8. Under the contract concluded between the City of Brescia and Sintesi in December 1999, Sintesi was required to submit the completion of the works to a restricted call for tenders, at European level, in accordance with the Community rules on public works.

9. By a notice published in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 22 April 1999, Sintesi made a restricted call for tenders based on the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender. This tender was to be assessed on the basis of price, technical merit and time necessary for completion of the works.

10. Following the preselection stage, Sintesi sent the selected undertakings a letter of invitation to tender and the file of tender documents. Ingg. Provera e Carrassi SpA (Provera'), one of the companies invited to submit a tender, sought and was granted an extension of the period for submitting its tender. However, it subsequently informed Sintesi that it would not take part in the tendering procedure, on the ground that it was unlawful.

11. On 29 May 2000, Sintesi awarded the contract, accepting the most economically advantageous tender.

12. Following a fresh complaint by Provera, the contracting authority, by letter of 26 July 2000, informed Sintesi that it regarded the tendering procedure in question as contrary to Law No 109/1994, and on 7 December 2000 it adopted Decision No 53/2000, which is worded as follows:

1. in the system governed by Framework Law No 109/1994 on public works, a contract can be awarded only on the basis of the criterion of the lowest price; the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender can be employed only in the hypotheses of competition for and the concession of the construction and management of public works;

2. the above rules are applicable to all works contracts, whatever the amount involved, including where that amount is above the Community threshold, and the system in question cannot be regarded as contrary to Article 30(1) of Directive 93/37/EEC...;

3. where, in cases where the law so allows, and therefore not in the case referred to us, assessment of the technical merit is provided for in the framework of the actual application of the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender, it is necessary, in order to allow such an assessment, that the project be capable of being altered by the candidates.'

13. Sintesi challenged that decision before the national court, claiming, in particular, that there had been a breach of Article 30(1) of the Directive.

14. It claimed that it follows from that provision that the two criteria for the award of public works contracts, namely the lowest price' criterion and the most economically advantageous' criterion, are placed on an equal footing. By excluding, on the basis of Law No 109/1994, the criterion of the most economically advantageous tender in the case of a public works contract concluded according to the restricted tendering procedure, the supervisory authority was, in Sintesi's submission, in breach of Article 30(1) of the Directive.

15. The national court observes that Article 21(1) of Law No 109/1994 seeks to ensure transparency in the procedures for awarding public contracts, but is uncertain as to whether that provision is capable of ensuring free competition, since price does not on its own appear to constitute a factor capable of ensuring that the best tender will be accepted.

16. The national court also makes the point that the car park in question will be situated in the historical centre of the City of Brescia. Consequently, the works to be carried out would be very complex and would require an assessment of technical elements, which should be provided by the tenderers, so that the contract can be awarded to the undertaking most capable of carrying out the work.

17. In those circumstances, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia decided to stay proceedings and refer the following two questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

1. Does Article 30(1) of [the Directive], in so far as it allows individual contracting authorities to choose either the lowest price or the most economically advantageous tender as the criterion for the award of a contract, constitute a logically consistent application of the principle of free competition which is already enshrined in Article 85 of the EC Treaty (now Article 81 EC) and requires that all tenders submitted as part of a procedure for the award of a contract announced within the single market be assessed in such a way as not to prevent, restrict or distort comparison between them?

2. Does Article 30 of [the Directive], as a strictly logical consequence, preclude Article 21 of Law No 109 of 11 February 1994 from excluding, for the award of public works contracts under open and restricted procedures, the choice by the contracting authority of the criterion of the most economical tender, and prescribing, as a general rule, that of the lowest price only?'

Admissibility of the reference for a preliminary ruling

18. The Italian Government has doubts as to the admissibility of the reference, on the ground that the questions are purely theoretical.

19. The Commission of the European Communities questions the very applicability of Article 30 of the Directive to the main proceedings, in so far as the award procedure was undertaken by a works concessionaire.

20. It states that under Article 3(3) and (4) of the Directive, only a public works concessionaire which is itself one of the contracting authorities referred to in Article 1(b) of the Directive is required, in respect of the work to be carried out by third parties, to comply with all the provisions of the Directive. Public works concessionaires other than contracting authorities, on the other hand, are only required to observe the rules on advertising set out in Article 11(4), (6), (7) and (9) to (13) and Article 16 of the Directive.

21. In that regard, it is settled case-law that the procedure provided for by Article 234 EC is an instrument of cooperation between the Court of Justice and national courts (see, inter alia, Case C-343/90 Lourenço Dias [1992] ECR I-4673, paragraph 14, and Case C-314/01 Siemens and ARGE Telekom [2004] ECR I0000, paragraph 33, and the case-law cited there).

22. In the context of that cooperation, it is for the national court or tribunal seised of the dispute, which alone has direct knowledge of the facts giving rise to the dispute and must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court (see, inter alia, Lourenço Dias , cited above, paragraph 15; Case C-390/99 Canal Satélite Digital [2002] ECR I-607, paragraph 18; and Siemens and ARGE Telekom , cited above, paragraph 34).

23. In the present case, it is by no means clear that the interpretation of Article 30 will be of no assistance in the resolution of the main dispute since, as stated in the decision for reference, under the contract concluded between the City of Brescia and Sintesi, the latter, in its capacity as concessionaire, was required, for the purpose of the works at issue in the main proceedings, to launch a restricted tender procedure, at European level, in accordance with the Community rules on public works.

24. The reference for a preliminary ruling must therefore be held to be admissible.

The questions for the Court

25. By its questions, which should be examined together, the national court is asking essentially whether Article 30(1) of the Directive is to be interpreted as meaning that it precludes national rules under which, when awarding public works contracts, following open or restricted tendering procedures, the contracting authorities are required to employ only the lowest-price criterion. In particular, it asks whether the objective pursued by that provision, which seeks to ensure effective competition in the field of public contracts, necessarily implies that the question must be answered in the affirmative.

Observations submitted to the Court

26. According to Sintesi, Article 30(1) of the Directive, in so far as it leaves to the contracting authority the free choice between lowest price and most advantageous tender as the criterion for awarding public works contracts, implements the principle of free competition. Reducing that authority's discretion to a mere analysis of the prices submitted by the tenderers, as required by Article 21(1) of Law No 109/1994, constitutes an obstacle to the selection of the best possible tender and is therefore contrary to Article 81 EC.

27. Provera and the Italian Government claim that in adopting Law No 109/1994 the national legislature was seeking, in particular, to combat corruption in the public works contracts sector by eliminating the administration's discretion in awarding contracts and by adopting transparent procedures apt to ensure free competition.

28. In their submission, it follows from the very wording of Article 30(1) that the Directive does not ensure that the contracting authority is free to choose one criterion rather than another, nor does it require that one or other criterion be used in certain specific circumstances. Article 30(1) merely sets out the two criteria applicable to the award of contracts and does not specify the cases in which they are to be used.

29. Nor does the national legislature's choice of the lowest price' criterion in restricted or open tendering procedures adversely affect tenderers' rights, since the same, pre-determined criterion is applied to each of them.

30. The Greek and Austrian Governments agree with that interpretation.

31. In particular, according to the Austrian Government, there is no indication in Article 30 of the Directive as to which of the two criteria, which are placed on an equal footing, the contracting authority must choose. The Directive thus leaves it to that authority to determine precisely what criterion it will use to obtain the best quality/price ratio in the light of its needs. However, Article 30 does not preclude the national legislature from itself directly making that choice, depending on the nature of the contracts in question, by authorising either both criteria, or only one of them, as the Directive does not confer on the contracting authority any subjective right to exercise such a choice.

32. The Commission also submits that the Directive does not express any preference for one or other of the two criteria set out in Article 30(1) of the Directive. That provision seeks only to ensure that contracting authorities do not adopt criteria for the award of public works contracts other than the two criteria which it sets out; it does not impose any choice between them. In order to preclude arbitrary conduct on the part of those authorities and to ensure healthy competition between undertakings, it is in principle immaterial whether the contract is concluded on the basis of the lowest price or the most economically advantageous tender. It is also essential that the award criteria be clearly stated in the contract notice and applied objectively and without discrimination.

33. The choice of the appropriate criterion is for the contracting authority, which examines each particular case when awarding a specific contract, or for the national legislature, which is entitled to adopt legislation applicable either to all public works contracts or only to certain types of contracts.

34. The Commission observes that, in the present case, Article 21(1) of Law No 109/1994 requires that the lowest-price criterion be used in order to ensure the greatest transparency of procedures relating to public works contracts, which is consistent with the objective pursued by the Directive, namely to ensure the development of effective competition. Such a provision is therefore not contrary to Article 30(1) of the Directive.

The Court's answer

35. According to the 10th recital thereto, the purpose of the Directive is to develop effective competition in the field of public contracts (see Case C-27/98 Fracasso and Leitschutz [1999] ECR I-5697, paragraph 26; Joined Cases C-285/99 and C286/99 Lombardini and Mantovani [2001] ECR I-9233, paragraph 34; and Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraph 89).

36. That objective, moreover, is expressly stated in the second subparagraph of Article 22(2) of the Directive, which provides that where the contracting authorities award a contract by restricted procedure, the number of candidates invited to tender is in any event to be sufficient to ensure genuine competition.

37. In order to meet the objective of developing effective competition, the Directive seeks to organise the award of contracts in such a way that the contracting authority is able to compare the different tenders and to accept the most advantageous on the basis of objective criteria (Fracasso and Leitschutz , cited above, paragraph 31).

38. Thus Article 30(1) of the Directive sets out the criteria on which the contracting authority relies when awarding contracts, namely either the lowest price only or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract, such as price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit.

39. A national provision, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which restricts the contracting authorities' freedom of choice, in the context of open or restricted tendering procedures, by requiring that the lowest price be used as the sole criterion for the award of the contract, does not prevent those authorities from comparing the different tenders and from accepting the best one on the basis of an objective criterion fixed in advance and specifically included among those set out in Article 30(1) of the Directive.

40. However, the abstract and general fixing by the national legislature of a single criterion for the award of public works contracts deprives the contracting authorities of the possibility of taking into consideration the nature and specific characteristics of such contracts, taken in isolation, by choosing for each of them the criterion most likely to ensure free competition and thus to ensure that the best tender will be accepted.

41. In the main proceedings, the national court has specifically highlighted the technical complexity of the work to be carried out and, accordingly, the contracting authority could profitably have taken that complexity into account when choosing objective criteria for the award of the contract, such as those set out, by way of example, in Article 30(1)(b) of the Directive.

42. It follows from the foregoing considerations that the answer to the questions referred to the Court must be that Article 30(1) of the Directive is to be interpreted as meaning that it precludes national rules which, for the purpose of the award of public works contracts following open or restricted tendering procedures, impose a general and abstract requirement that the contracting authorities use only the criterion of the lowest price.

Notice for the OJ

Reference for a preliminary ruling by the Bundesvergabeamt (Republic of Austria) by order of that Court of 14 May 2002 in the case of Neumayer Bau Ges.m.b.H against Abwasserverband Grossraum Bruck an der Leitha (Neusiedl/See

(Case C-231/02)

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by order of the Bundesvergabeamt (Republic of Austria) of 14 May 2002, received at the Court Registry on 20 June 2002, for a preliminary ruling in the case of Neumayer Bau Ges.m.b.H against Abwasserverband Grossraum Bruck an der Leitha (Neusiedl/See on the following questions:

Question 1:

Is Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts[1] to be broadly interpreted as meaning that under it entitlement to apply for a review procedure must be available to any person seeking to receive a specific public contract whose award is pending, irrespective of whether such person has suffered or may suffer loss as a result of the alleged infringement of the law?

Question 2:

In the event that the answer to Question 1 is no:

Is the abovementioned provision of the Directive to be construed in such a way that (where a bid was eliminated otherwise than in accordance with the law but the review body in the course of its review procedure assumes and establishes as a preliminary matter that the bid had properly to be eliminated (the tenderer of that bid is entitled to bring an application in respect of an alleged infringement of the law (in the present case the contracting authority's decision to make the award to another bidder (because owing to the contracting authority's defective award procedure the applicant may in any event be presumed to have suffered loss and errors in the award procedure can no longer be remedied subsequently in the review procedure by substitution of decisions of the contracting authority, and the review procedure must therefore be available to the applicant?

a step in the proceedings pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Bundesvergabeamt by order of 14 May 2002, hereby rules:

1. Articles 1(3) and 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, must be interpreted as not precluding a person from being regarded, once a public contract has been awarded, as having lost his right of access to the review procedures provided for by the Directive if he did not participate in the award procedure for that contract on the ground that he was not in a position to supply all the services for which bids were invited, because there were allegedly discriminatory specifications in the documents relating to the invitation to tender, but he did not seek review of those specifications before the contract was awarded.

2. Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 92/50, must be interpreted as precluding a person who has participated in a contract award procedure from being regarded as having lost his interest in obtaining the contract on the ground that, before seeking the review provided for by the Directive, he failed to refer the case to a conciliation committee such as Bundes-Vergabekontrollkommission (Federal Public Procurement Review Commission, established by the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Bundesvergabegesetz) 1997 (1997 Federal Law on Public Procurement).

1 By order of 14 May 2002, received at the Registry of the Court on 20 June 2002, the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Public Procurement Office) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC three questions on the interpretation of Articles 1(3) and 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) (`Directive 89/665').

2 Those questions were raised in a dispute between Grossmann Air Service, Bedarfsluftfahrtunternehmen GmbH & Co. KG (`Grossmann') and Republik Osterreich (Republic of Austria), represented by the Federal Ministry of Finance (`the Ministry'), concerning an award procedure for a public contract.

Legal background

3 Articles 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 provide:

`1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC... , decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles, and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

4 Under Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665:

`1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.'

5 Directive 89/665 was transposed into Austrian law by the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Bundesvergabegesetz) 1997 (1997 Federal Law on Public Procurement, BGBl. I, 1997/56, `the BVergG'). The BVergG provides for the creation of the Bundes-Vergabekontrollkommission (Federal Public Procurement Review Commission, `the B-VKK') and of the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Public Procurement Office).

6 Paragraph 109 of the BVergG sets out the powers of the B-VKK. It contains the following provisions:

`1. The B-VKK shall be competent:

(1) until such time as the contract is awarded, to reconcile any differences of opinion between the awarding body and one or more candidates or tenderers concerning the application of the present federal law or its implementing regulations.

6. A request for the B-VKK to take action made under paragraph 1(1) must be submitted to the directors of the Commission as soon as possible after the difference of opinion comes to light.

7. If the B-VKK does not take action following a request from the awarding body, it must inform that body immediately it does take action.

8. The awarding body may not award the contract until four weeks after ... it has been informed in accordance with paragraph 7, failing which the tendering procedure shall be declared void....'

7 Paragraph 113 of the BVergG sets out the powers of the Bundesvergabeamt. It provides:

`1. The Bundesvergabeamt is responsible on application for carrying out a review procedure in accordance with the following provisions.

2. To preclude infringements of this Federal Law and of the regulations implementing it, the Bundesvergabeamt is authorised until the time of the award:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

(1) to adopt interim measures and

(2) to set aside unlawful decisions of the contracting authority.

3. After the award of the contract or the close of the contract award procedure, the Bundesvergabeamt is competent to determine whether, on grounds of infringement of this Federal Law or of any regulations issued under it, the contract has not been awarded to the best tenderer.... '

8 Paragraph 115(1) of the BVergG provides that:

`Where an undertaking claims to have an interest in the conclusion of a contract within the scope of this Federal Law, it may apply for the contracting authority's decision in the contract award procedure to be reviewed on the ground of unlawfulness, provided that it has been or risks being harmed by the alleged infringement.'

9 According to Paragraph 122(1) of the BVergG, `in the event of a culpable breach of the Federal Law or its implementing rules by the organs of an awarding body, an unsuccessful candidate or tenderer may bring a claim against the contracting authority to which the conduct of the organs of the awarding body is attributable for reimbursement of the costs incurred in drawing up its bid and other costs borne as a result of its participation in the tendering procedure.'

10 Under Paragraph 125(2) of the BVergG, a claim for damages, which must be brought before the civil courts, is admissible only if the Bundesvergabeamt has made a declaration under Paragraph 113(3) prior to that claim being made. The civil court called upon to hear the claim for damages, and the parties to the proceedings before the Bundesvergabeamt, are bound by that declaration.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling 11 On 27 January 1998, the Ministry invited tenders for `the provision for the Austrian Federal Government and its delegations of non-scheduled passenger transport services by air in executive jets and aircraft'. Grossmann participated in the award procedure for that contract by submitting a tender.

12 On 3 April 1998, the Ministry decided to annul the first invitation to tender, in accordance with Paragraph 55(2) of the BVergG, which provides that `the invitation to tender may be revoked when, after offers have been rejected pursuant to Paragraph 52, only one offer remains'.

13 On 28 July 1998, the Ministry issued another invitation to tender for non-scheduled passenger transport services by air for the Austrian Federal Government and its delegations. Grossmann obtained the documents for that invitation to tender, but it did not submit an offer.

14 By letter of 8 October 1998, the Austrian Government notified Grossmann of its intention to award the contract to Lauda Air Luftfahrt AG (`Lauda Air'). Grossmann received that letter on the following day. The contract with Lauda Air was concluded on 29 October 1998.

15 By application dated 19 October 1998, posted on 23 October and received at the Bundesvergabeamt on 27 October 1998, Grossmann applied to have the contracting authority's decision to award the contract to Lauda Air set aside. In support of its application Grossmann claimed essentially that the invitation to tender had been tailored from the beginning to one tenderer, namely Lauda Air.

16 By decision of 4 January 1999, the Bundesvergabeamt dismissed Grossmann's application pursuant to Paragraphs 115(1) and 113(2) and (3) of the BVergG, on the ground that Grossmann had failed to assert its legal interest in obtaining the entire contract and, that in any event, after the award of the contract, the Bundesvergabeamt no longer has competence to set it aside.

17 As regards the absence of interest, the Bundesvergabeamt found that since it did not have large aircraft available to it, Grossmann was not in a position to provide all the services requested, and that it had not submitted a tender in the second award procedure for the contract at issue.

18 Grossmann appealed to the Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court) (Austria) seeking to have the Bundesvergabeamt's decision set aside. By judgment of 10 December 2001, the Verfassungsgerichtshof set aside that decision for breach of the constitutionally guaranteed right to proceedings before the ordinary courts, on the ground that the Bundesvergabeamt had wrongly failed to refer a question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling relating to whether its interpretation of Paragraph 115(1) of the BVergG was in accordance with Community law.

19 In its order for reference, the Bundesvergabeamt explains that the provisions of Paragraph 109(1), (6) and (8) of the BVergG are intended to guarantee that no contract will be concluded during the conciliation procedure. It adds that if an amicable agreement is not reached during that procedure an undertaking may still request, before the conclusion of the contract, the annulment of any decision of the contracting authority, including the decision awarding the contract, but subsequently the Bundesvergabeamt is competent only to rule that the contract has not been awarded to the tenderer who made the best offer by reason of an infringement of the BVergG or its implementing rules.

20 The national court points out that, in this case, Grossmann's application to have the decision awarding the contract to Lauda Air set aside, was indeed received before the contract between Lauda Air and the contracting authority was concluded, but that it could be dealt with by the Bundesvergabeamt, within the time-limit prescribed, only after the conclusion of the contract. The Bundesvergabeamt also states that the application was only posted on 23 October 1998, although the contracting authority had notified Grossmann by letter of 8 October 1998, received the following day, of its intention to award the contract to Lauda Air.

21 The Bundesvergabeamt thus finds that Grossmann allowed 14 days to elapse between notification to it of the decision awarding the contract (9 October 1998) and the institution by Grossmann of proceedings before the Bundesvergabeamt (23 October 1998), without any request for conciliation being lodged with the B-VKK (a request which would have caused the four-week time-limit laid down in Paragraph 109(8) of the BVergG, during which the contracting authority may not award the contract, to begin to run) or, in the case of a failure of the conciliation process, without the B-VKK being requested to grant interim measures and to set aside the decision awarding the contract. Therefore, according to the national court, the question arises whether Grosmann can establish an interest in bringing proceedings, in accordance with Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, since as it was not in a position to provide the services in question, owing, it claims, to provisions in the documents relating to the invitation to tender that are discriminatory within the meaning of Article 2(1)(b) of the Directive, it did not submit an offer in the contract award procedure at issue.

22 It was in those circumstances that the Bundesvergabeamt decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

`(1) Is Article 1(3) of... Directive 89/665... to be interpreted as meaning that the review procedure must be available to any undertaking which has submitted a bid, or applied to participate, in a public procurement procedure?

In the event that the answer to Question 1 is no:

(2) Is the abovementioned provision to be understood as meaning that an undertaking only has or had an interest in a particular public contract if - in addition to its participating in the public procurement procedure - it takes all steps available to it under national law to prevent the contract from being awarded to another bidder?

(3) Is Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, in conjunction with Article 2(1) thereof, to be interpreted as meaning that an undertaking must be afforded the opportunity in law to seek review of an award procedure regarded by it as unlawful or discriminatory even where it is not capable of performing the totality of the services for which bids were invited and, for that reason, did not submit a bid in that award procedure.'

The first and third questions

23 In the light of the facts in the main proceedings, as described by the national court, the first and third questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, must be regarded as asking, essentially, whether Articles 1(3) and 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as precluding a person from being regarded, once a public contract has been awarded, as having lost his right of access to the review procedures provided for by the Directive if he did not participate in the award procedure for that contract on the ground that he was not in a position to supply all the services for which bids were invited, because there were allegedly discriminatory specifications in the documents relating to the invitation to tender, but he did not seek review of those specifications before the contract was awarded.

24 In order to assess whether a person in a situation such as that referred to in the questions thus reformulated can establish an interest in bringing proceedings within the meaning of Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, it is appropriate to consider the fact that he neither participated in the contract award procedure at issue nor did he appeal against the invitation to tender before the contract was awarded.

Failure to participate in the contract award procedure

25 In that regard, it must be recalled that, in accordance with Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, the Member States are required to ensure that the review procedures provided for are available `at least' to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement of the Community law on public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

26 It follows that the Member States are not obliged to make those review procedures available to any person wishing to obtain a public contract, but may also require that the person concerned has been or risks being harmed by the infringement he alleges (Case C-249/01 Hackermüller [2003] ECR I-6319, paragraph 18).

27 In that sense, as the Commission pointed out in its written observations, participation in a contract award procedure may, in principle, with regard to Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, validly constitute a condition which must be fulfilled before the person concerned can show an interest in obtaining the contract at issue or that he risks suffering harm as a result of the allegedly unlawful nature of the decision to award that contract. If he has not submitted a tender it will be difficult for such a person to show that he has an interest in challenging that decision or that he has been harmed or risks being harmed as a result of that award decision.

28 However, where an undertaking has not submitted a tender because there were allegedly discriminatory specifications in the documents relating to the invitation to tender, or in the contract documents, which have specifically prevented it from being in a position to provide all the services requested, it would be entitled to seek review of those specifications directly, even before the procedure for awarding the contract concerned is terminated.

29 On the one hand, it would be too much to require an undertaking allegedly harmed by discriminatory clauses in the documents relating to the invitation to tender to submit a tender, before being able to avail itself of the review procedures provided for by Directive 89/665 against such specifications, in the award procedure for the contract at issue, even though its chances of being awarded the contract are non-existent by reason of the existence of those specifications.

30 On the other hand, it is clear from the wording of Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 that the review procedures to be organised by the Member States in accordance with the Directive must, in particular, `set aside decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications... '. It must, therefore, be possible for an undertaking to seek review of such discriminatory specifications directly, without waiting for the contract award procedure to be terminated.

Absence of proceedings against the invitation to tender

31 In this case, Grossmann complains that the contracting authority imposed requirements in respect of a contract for non-scheduled air transport services that only an air company offering scheduled flights would be in a position to fulfil, which had the effect of reducing the number of candidates capable of providing all the services required.

32 It is apparent, however, from the file that Grossmann did not seek review of the contracting authority's decision determining the specifications of the invitation to tender directly, but waited until the decision to award the contract to Lauda Air was notified before asking the Bundesvergabeamt to set that decision aside.

33 In that regard, in its order for reference the Bundesvergabeamt points out that, under Paragraph 115(1) of the BVergG, an undertaking may institute review proceedings against a decision of the contracting authority where it claims to have an interest in the conclusion of a contract in an award procedure and the unlawfulness on which it relies has caused or risks causing it harm.

34 The national court therefore asks, essentially, whether Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as meaning that it precludes a person who not only has not participated in the award procedure for a public contract but has not sought any review of the decision of the contracting authority determining the specifications of the invitation to tender either, from being regarded as having lost his interest in obtaining the contract and, therefore, the right of access to the review procedures provided for by the Directive.

36 In that regard, it is appropriate to recall that, as is apparent from the first and second recitals in the preamble, Directive 89/665 is intended to strengthen the existing mechanisms, both at national and Community level, to ensure the effective application of Community directives relating to public procurement, in particular at a stage when infringements can still be remedied. To that effect, Article 1(1) of that directive requires Member States to guarantee that unlawful decisions of contracting authorities can be subjected to effective review which is as swift as possible (see, in particular, Case C-81/98 Alcatel Austria and Others [1999] ECR I-7671, paragraphs 33 and 34, Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraph 74, and Case C-410/01 Fritsch, Chiari & Partner and Others [2003] ECR I-6413, paragraph 30).

37 It must be pointed out that the fact that a person does not seek review of a decision of the contracting authority determining the specifications of an invitation to tender which in his view discriminate against him, in so far as they effectively disqualify him from participating in the award procedure for the contract at issue, but awaits notification of the decision awarding the contract and then challenges it before the body responsible, on the ground specifically that those specifications are discriminatory, is not in keeping with the objectives of speed and effectiveness of Directive 89/665.

38 Such conduct, in so far as it may delay, without any objective reason, the commencement of the review procedures which Member States were required to institute by Directive 89/665 impairs the effective implementation of the Community directives on the award of public contracts.

39 In those circumstances, a refusal to acknowledge the interest in obtaining the contract in question and, therefore, the right of access to the review procedures provided for by Directive 89/665 of a person who has not participated in the contract award procedure, or sought review of the decision of the contracting authority laying down the specifications of the invitation to tender, does not impair the effectiveness of that directive.

40 Having regard to the foregoing, the answer to the first and third questions must be that Articles 1(3) and 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as not precluding a person from being regarded, once a public contract has been awarded, as having lost his right of access to the review procedures provided for by the Directive if he did not participate in the award procedure for that contract on the ground that he was not in a position to supply all the services for which bids were invited, because there were allegedly discriminatory specifications in the documents relating to the invitation to tender, but he did not seek review of those specifications before the contract was awarded.

41 In the light of the facts in the main proceedings, as set out by the national court, the second question must be understood as asking, essentially, whether Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as precluding a person who has participated in a contract award procedure from being regarded as having lost his interest in obtaining the contract on the ground that, before seeking the review provided for by the Directive, he failed to refer the case to a conciliation committee such as the B-VKK.

42 In that regard, it is sufficient to recall that, in paragraphs 31 and 34 of Fritsch, Chiari & Partner and Others, the Court held that, even though Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 expressly allows Member States to determine the detailed rules according to which they must make the review procedures provided for in that directive available to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement it none the less does not authorise them to give the term `interest in obtaining a public contract' an interpretation which may limit the effectiveness of that directive. The fact that access to the review procedures provided for by the Directive is made subject to prior referral to a conciliation committee such as the B-VKK would be contrary to the objectives of speed and effectiveness of that directive.

43 Accordingly, the answer to the second question must be that Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as precluding a person who has participated in a contract award procedure from being regarded as having lost his interest in obtaining the contract on the ground that, before seeking the review provided for by the Directive, he failed to refer the case to a conciliation committee such as the B-VKK.

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by order of the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Public Procurement Office) of 14 May 2002, received at the Court Registry on 20 June 2002, for a preliminary ruling in the case of 1. Tenderer: debis/AC, 2. ARGE Telekom & Partner, 3. Tenderer: SIEMENS AUSTRIA CARD against Hauptverband der österreichischen Sozialversicherungsträger on the following questions:

Question 1:

Is Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989[1] on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts to be interpreted as meaning that any person seeking the award of a specific pending public contract is entitled to institute a review procedure?

Question 2:

In the event that the answer given to Question 1 is no:

Is the abovementioned provision to be understood as meaning that, if a tenderer's bid is not eliminated by the contracting authority, but the review body finds in the course of the review procedure that the contracting authority would have been bound to eliminate it, the tenderer has been or risks being harmed by the infringement alleged by him (in this case the finding by the contracting authority that a rival tenderer submitted the best bid (and that he must therefore have the right to bring a review procedure?

By an application lodged at the Registry of the Court on 5 June 2002, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 226 EC for a declaration that, inasmuch as the Landesvergabegesetze (regional public procurement laws) of the Länder of Salzburg, Styria, Lower Austria and Carinthia do not in all cases provide for a review procedure whereby an unsuccessful tenderer may have an award decision set aside, the Republic of Austria has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33) and of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1991 L 76, p. 14).

Legal framework

2
Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 provides that:

'The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

3
In addition, Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 89/665 states that Member States are to ensure that the measures which they adopt include, for cases where a dispute arises in respect of award of a public contract, provision for the powers to:

'(a)
take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority; either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure'.

(b)

4
Article 1(3) and Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 92/13 contain essentially the same provisions.

5
The Bundesvergabegesetz 2002 (Federal Procurement Law of 2002), which was published on 28 June 2002 (BGBl. I, 2002/99), lays down, inter alia, a definition of the award decision, an obligation to communicate that decision to tenderers and a suspension period during which the awarding authority cannot validly award the contract to a tenderer.

6
The Bundesvergabegesetz 2002 states that the rules concerning contract awards must be the same for the Federal State, the Länder and the communes.

At the Federal level, the Bundesvergabegesetz 2002 entered into force on 1 September 2002. For the Länder, the equivalent legislation – namely, the Landesvergabegesetze – is as follows:

– Styria: the Supplementary Law (LGB1. 2002/41) entered into force on 16 March 2002 and was notified to the Commission on 1 July 2002.

– Lower Austria: the Supplementary Law (LGB1. 7200-5) entered into force on 31 January 2002 and the parties agree that it was notified to the Commission.

– Carinthia: the Supplementary Law was adopted on 23 May 2002 and is expected to enter into force in October 2002.

– Salzburg: the equivalent provisions were to be introduced upon the entry into force in that Land of the Federal Law on 1 January 2003.

Before the entry into force of those laws, a Circular from the Austrian Federal Chancellery stated that there should be a period between the award decision and the conclusion of the contract and an obligation on awarding authorities to communicate award decisions to all tenderers.

9
The Commission, since it considered that the Austrian authorities had not satisfied the conditions laid down by the EC Treaty for the purpose of correctly transposing Directives 89/665 and 92/13 on the review procedures available to unsuccessful tenderers against award decisions, gave the Austrian Government notice by letter of 22 November 1999 to submit its observations within two months. The latter sent its response on 8 February 2000, stating that it acknowledged most of the complaints put forward by the Commission but pointing out that, in the meantime, the Federal legislation had been amended and new laws had been adopted at the level of the Länder.

10
On 18 July 2001, the Commission delivered a reasoned opinion in which it asked the Republic of Austria to adopt the measures necessary to comply with that opinion within two months of its notification. The Commission took into account the legislative amendments which had been made at Federal or regional level and retained only the complaints which in its opinion were still relevant.

11
The Austrian Government responded to the reasoned opinion by letter of 26 September 2001, stating that legislative amendments had meanwhile been made in the Länder of Burgenland and Tyrol.

12
The Commission nevertheless took the view that Directives 89/665 and 92/13 had not been wholly transposed into Austrian law at the end of the two-month period laid down in the reasoned opinion, which ended on 26 September 2001. No review procedure whereby an unsuccessful tenderer may have the award decision set aside before the conclusion of the contract awarded was provided for in the Landesvergabegesetze for the Länder of Salzburg, Styria, Lower Austria and Carinthia. The Commission accordingly decided to bring the present action.

Substance

13
The Commission bases its action for failure to fulfil obligations on the position adopted by the Court in Case C-81/98 Alcatel Austria and Others [1999] ECR I-7671, paragraph 43. The Court took the view that the provisions of Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Directive 89/665 require Member States to provide in all cases a review procedure whereby an applicant may have set aside the contracting authority's decision prior to the conclusion of the contract as to the tenderer in a tender procedure with which it will conclude the contract. That right of review for tenderers is independent of the possibility for them to bring an action for damages once the contract has been concluded.

14
The Commission states that the Austrian system makes it impossible to contest the award decision for two reasons. First, the award decision and the conclusion of the contract occur at the same time, depriving interested parties of any possible review in order to have an unlawful award decision set aside or to prevent the contract from being concluded. Secondly, the decision of the contracting authority notified to the person to whom the contract is awarded may, as a general rule, not be contested as unsuccessful tenderers are not persons to whom that decision is addressed. The effect of the applicable national legislation is therefore to preclude the possibility of an action to have the award decision set aside. Such a situation is incompatible with the requirements of the Community law in question.

15
The relevant provisions of the directive must be implemented with unquestionable binding force and the specificity, precision and clarity necessary to satisfy the requirements of legal certainty (Case 168/85 Commission v Italy [1986] ECR 2945, paragraphs 11 and 13; Case C-433/93 Commission v Germany [1995] ECR I-2303, paragraph 18; and Case C-225/97 Commission v France [1999] ECR I-3011, paragraph 37).

16
The Austrian Government maintains, as its principal argument, that there is no prohibition on communicating the award decision to tenderers in the Länder. There is therefore no obligation, for the purpose of complying with the Community legislation, to adopt specific provisions requiring the communication of the award decision. It refers to paragraph 49 of Alcatel Austria and Others, cited above, which states that it is necessary to consider whether national provisions cannot be interpreted in a manner consistent with Directive 89/665.

17
The Austrian Government contends that in the absence of explicit legislation in the Länder, contracting authorities and supervising bodies have latitude to fill possible gaps in the procedure by means of interpretation. It infers from this that national provisions which do not preclude compliant implementation constitute adequate transposition of the Directive, so that no action need be taken by the legislature.

18
Nevertheless, the Austrian Government accepts that, following Alcatel Austria and Others, the Federal Chancellery adopted a Circular intended to ensure, until legal provisions had been adopted, a procedure in compliance with that which follows from that judgment when awarding public contracts. In addition, it maintains that that Circular could serve as a basis for decrees by the Governments of the Länder of Salzburg and Carinthia.

19
While the Austrian Government recognises that that Circular and the decrees issued by the Länder are not binding in nature, it nevertheless considers that they create obligations for the authorities since the rules are interpreted solely within the framework of existing Community law and in no case against the law, thereby ensuring adequate transposition of the Directive.

The provisions of Directives 89/665 and 92/13, which are intended to protect tenderers against arbitrary decisions by the contracting authority, seek to reinforce existing arrangements for ensuring effective application of Community directives on the award of public contracts, in particular at the stage where infringements can still be rectified (Commission v Germany, paragraph 23). Such protection cannot be effective if the tenderer is not able to rely on those rules against the contracting authority.

21
Complete legal protection presupposes, first, an obligation to inform tenderers of the award decision. Legislation relating to access to administrative documents which merely requires that tenderers be informed only as regards decisions which directly affect them cannot offset the failure to require that all tenderers be informed of the contract award decision prior to conclusion of the contract, so that a genuine possibility to bring an action is available to them.

22
The fact that such information is not prohibited does not release the Republic of Austria from its obligation to adopt legal provisions for the purpose of complying with the requirement to give practical effect to Directives 89/665 and 92/13. That Member State cannot claim to have ensured proper implementation of those directives by maintaining that nothing prevents the contracting authority from publishing award decisions some time before the conclusion of the contract. Such a power would in effect allow the contracting authority to decide whether or not to inform tenderers of the award decision, whereas those directives are intended to protect tenderers against arbitrary action on the part of the contracting authority.

23
Complete legal protection also requires that it be possible for the unsuccessful tenderer to examine in sufficient time the validity of the award decision. Given the requirement that the Directive have practical effect, a reasonable period must elapse between the time when the award decision is communicated to unsuccessful tenderers and the conclusion of the contract in order, in particular, to allow an application to be made for interim measures prior to the conclusion of the contract.

24
The Republic of Austria was therefore required to put in place appropriate procedures to enable unlawful decisions to be set aside and, in accordance with Articles 1(3) of Directives 89/665 and 92/13, to ensure that review procedures are available at least to any person having an interest in obtaining a public contract. That effectiveness depends not only on the existence of a sufficiently long interval in which tenderers may react to the award decision but also on the obligation to keep tenderers informed of the award decision.

25
The Federal Circular subsequent to Alcatel Austria and Others invoked by the Austrian Government cannot be considered adequate transposition, even if its content might have influenced certain decrees issued in two Länder, since those decrees were issued after the time-limit laid down in the reasoned opinion. Since circulars are administrative practices which by their nature are alterable at will by the authorities and are not given the appropriate publicity, they cannot be regarded as constituting the proper fulfilment of Treaty obligations or as an adequate means to remedy, if necessary, the incompatibility of national legislative provisions with Community law (Commission v Italy, paragraphs 11 and 13; Commission v Germany, paragraph 18; and Commission v France, paragraph 37). Those circulars are merely provisional in nature, as the Austrian Government admitted in its observations on the Commission's reasoned opinion and letter of formal notice.

Transposition of a directive in a national legal order requires the definitive elimination of incompatibility through binding national provisions which have the same legal value as those which must be amended (see to that effect Case C-152/00 Commission v France [2002] ECR I-6973, paragraph 19). The Member State must establish a specific legal framework in the area in question, since the implementation of Community Directives must be ensured by adequate measures of implementation (Case C-339/87 Commission v Netherlands [1990] ECR I-851).

Finally, while the Austrian Government states that amending laws have since taken effect, it is clear from its statements that they entered into force after the period of two months laid down in the reasoned opinion.

28
The question whether a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations must be determined by reference to the situation in the Member State at the end of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion. The Court cannot take account of any subsequent changes (Case C-147/00 Commission v France [2001] ECR I-2387, paragraph 26, and Case C-354/99 Commission v Ireland [2001] ECR I-7657, paragraph 45).

29
Consequently, it must be held that, inasmuch as the Landesvergabegesetze (regional public procurement laws) of the Länder of Salzburg, Styria, Lower Austria and Carinthia do not in all cases provide for a review procedure whereby an unsuccessful tenderer may have an award decision set aside, the Republic of Austria has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Council Directive 89/665 and of Council Directive 92/13.

Costs

30
Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission has asked that the Republic of Austria be ordered to pay the costs and the latter has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Second Chamber)

1.
Declares that inasmuch as the Landesvergabegesetze (regional public procurement laws) of the Länder of Salzburg, Styria, Lower Austria and Carinthia do not in all cases provide for a review procedure whereby an unsuccessful tenderer may have an award decision set aside, the Republic of Austria has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 2(1)(a) and (b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts and of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors;

2.
Orders the Republic of Austria to pay the costs.

Reference for a preliminary ruling by the Oberster Gerichtshof (Republic of Austria) by order of that Court of 31 January 2002 in the case of Eurokeramik Gesellschaft mbh & Co KG against Gemeinnützige Salzburger Wohnbaugesellschaft mbH

Reference has been made to the Court of Justice of the European Communities by order of the Oberster Gerichtshof (Republic of Austria) of 31 January 2002, received at the Court Registry on 11 March 2002, for a preliminary ruling in the case of Eurokeramik Gesellschaft mbh & Co KG against Gemeinnützige Salzburger Wohnbaugesellschaft mbH on the following questions:

1. Does a social housing association established as a limited liability company of which there are two shareholders, each a regional or local authority, in carrying out the objects laid down in its statutes which consist in the provision of social housing, meet needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character, and is the association therefore to be regarded as a body governed by public law for the purposes of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC[1] of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, where it carries out its activities with a limited intention to make a profit and is subject to both competition generally and competition specifically from other social housing associations, but at the same time is supported by public funds and is subject to special State controls?

2. Is a national procurement law which permits contracting authorities to exclude tenderers, without giving any reasons, from procurement procedures in respect of works contracts below the Community law threshold and within a minimal amount of up to, for example, EUR 10 000, compatible with Community law?

Order of the Court of First Instance (Fourth Chamber)
First Instance (Fourth Chamber)First Instance (Fourth Chamber)2004. Makedoniko Metro and Michaniki AE v Commission of the European Communities. Action for damages - Inadmissibility. Case T-202/02.

1. Non-contractual liability - Conditions - Lawfulness - Fact that the Commission did not initiate infringement proceedings - Not unlawful - Claim for compensation - Inadmissible - (Arts 226 EC and 288, second para., EC)

2. Actions for failure to fulfil obligations - Commission ' s right of action - Exercise of its discretion - Procedural position of parties who have submitted a complaint different from that in competition matters - (Art. 226 EC; Council Regulation No 17)

3. Approximation of laws - Review procedures relating to the award of public supply and public works contracts - Directive 89/665 - Procedure enabling the Commission to act where there has been a clear and manifest infringement of the Community rules on public procurement - Unrelated to the infringement procedure under Article 226 EC - Commission ' s choice not to make use of the procedure - Not unlawful - (Art. 226 EC; Council Directive 89/665, Art. 3)

4. Actions for annulment - Jurisdiction of the Community judicature - Unlimited jurisdiction - Issue of directions to an institution - Not permissible - (Art. 230 EC)

1. Since the Commission is not bound to commence infringement proceedings under Article 226 EC its decision not to institute such proceedings is not in any event unlawful, so that it cannot give rise to non-contractual liability on the part of the Community and the only conduct which might possibly be adduced as the source of damage is the conduct of the Member State concerned. Consequently, a claim for compensation based on the Commission ' s decision not to commence infringement proceedings against a Member State is inadmissible.

2. The procedural position of parties who have submitted a complaint to the Commission is fundamentally different in the case of a procedure under Article 226 EC from their position in the case of a proceeding under Regulation No 17.

The Commission is not bound to initiate a procedure under Article 226 EC but has a discretion which excludes the right for individuals to require it to adopt a specific position. It follows that, in the case of such a procedure, it is not open to persons who have lodged a complaint to bring an action before the Community judicature against a decision to take no further action on their complaint; nor do they have any procedural rights, comparable to those they may have in the case of a procedure under Regulation No 17, enabling them to require the Commission to inform them and to grant them a hearing.

3. Article 3 of Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts provides that the Commission may invoke the procedure for which the following paragraphs of that article provide when, prior to a contract being concluded, it considers that a clear and manifest infringement of Community provisions in the field of public procurement has been committed during a contract award procedure falling within the scope of Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts.

The clear wording of that provision, which neither derogates from nor replaces Article 226 EC, shows that only the Commission is allowed to use the procedure for which it provides. Since the choice not to make use of such power is not unlawful, it cannot give rise to non-contractual liability on the part of the Community. In fact, even when called on to use it the Commission retains the option of considering the complaint referred to it under Article 226 EC.

4. The Community judicature may not give directions to a Community institution without encroaching upon the powers of the administration. That principle not only renders inadmissible, in an action for annulment, heads of claim seeking an order requiring a defendant institution to adopt the measures necessary for the enforcement of a judgment by which a decision is annulled, but it is also applicable, in principle, in proceedings in which the Court has unlimited jurisdiction.

APPLICATION for compensation for the damage allegedly suffered by the applicants following the Commission ' s decision to take no further action on their complaint, No 97/4188/P, lodged on 23 January 1997 concerning the award by the Greek State of a public works contract for the design, construction, self-financing and operation of the Thessaloniki metro (Greece),

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES (Fourth Chamber), composed of:

H. Legal, President,

makes the following

Order

Costs

56. Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party ' s pleadings. Since the applicants have been unsuccessful, they must be ordered to pay, in addition to their own costs, the costs of the Commission, as applied for in the latter ' s pleadings.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Fourth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Dismisses the application as inadmissible;

2. Orders the applicants to pay the costs.

Background to the case

1. The first applicant is the consortium Makedoniko Metro (" Makedoniko Metro"), established in order to take part in the international public tendering procedure for the award of the contract for the design, construction, self-financing and operation of the Thessaloniki metro. The second applicant, Mikhaniki AE (" Mikhaniki"), is a limited company incorporated under Greek law and a member of Makedoniko Metro (together " the applicants").

2. The Greek State decided to issue an international invitation to tender in respect of the planning, construction, self-financing and operation of the Thessaloniki metro, amounting to GRD 65 000 000 000. It opted, in relation to the award of that contract, for a restricted procedure comprising six stages: preselection of candidates who would be invited to tender, submission of tenders by the preselected candidates, evaluation of their technical proposals, evaluation of their economic and financial proposals, negotiations between the contracting authority and the tenderer provisionally selected, and signature of the contract.

3. By decision of 18 June 1992, the Greek Minister for the Environment, Regional Development and Public Works (" the Minister") approved the contract notice initiating the first stage of the procedure (preselection of candidates). On conclusion of that stage, eight consortia, including Makedoniko Metro and the Thessaloniki Metro consortium (" Thessaloniki Metro"), were authorised to submit tenders.

4. By decision of 1 February 1993, the Minister approved the tender documentation for the second stage of the procedure (submission of tenders by the preselected candidates), including, in particular, the supplementary contract notice and the specific contract documents.

5. From those contract notices read together, it is apparent that during the second stage a preselected consortium could be enlarged by the addition of new members but that such enlargement was possible only until the deadline for submission of tenders.

6. During the second stage of the procedure, technical proposals, economic studies and financial proposals were submitted by, amongst others, Makedoniko Metro and Thessaloniki Metro.

7. When the preselection took place, Makedoniko Metro ' s members were Mikhaniki and the companies Edi-Stra-Edilizia Stradale SpA, Fidel SpA and Teknocenter-Centro Servizi Administrativi Srl, which held respectively 70%, 20%, 5% and 5% interests.

8. During the second stage of the procedure, Makedoniko Metro was extended to include AEG Westinghouse Transport Systems GmbH. The interests of the first four companies then amounted to 63%, 17%, 5% and 5% respectively, while AEG Westinghouse Transport Systems GmbH had a 10% stake.

9. On 14 June 1994 Makedoniko Metro was provisionally designated as the successful tenderer with that composition.

10. Following the formation, by decision of 24 June 1994, of the negotiating committee and following the commencement of negotiations between the Greek State and Makedoniko Metro as the provisionally designated successful tenderer, Makedoniko Metro gave notice to the Minister, by letter of 29 March 1996, of its new composition, which included as members Mikhaniki, ABB Daimler-Benz Transportation Deutschland GmbH (" Adtranz") and the Fidel Group, which in turn comprised Edi-Stra-Edilizia Stradale SpA, Fidel SpA and Teknocenter-Centro Servizi Administrativi Srl, their interests being 80% (Mikhaniki), 19% (Adtranz) and 1% (Fidel Group) respectively.

11. Subsequently, by letter of 14 June 1996, Makedoniko Metro informed the commission for major works, in response to questions concerning reports that members of the Fidel Group were insolvent and had gone into liquidation, that the companies within that group were no longer part of Makedoniko Metro and that, as of that date, the latter ' s members were Mikhaniki, Adtranz and Belgian Transport and Urban Infrastructure Consult (Transurb Consult), whose respective interests amounted to 80.65%, 19% and 0.35%.

12. Finding that Makedoniko Metro had substantially departed from the requirements laid down for the contract, the Minister took the view that the negotiations had failed and, by decision of 29 November 1996, terminated negotiations between the Greek State and Makedoniko Metro and called on Thessaloniki Metro to enter into negotiations as the new provisional contractor.

13. On 10 December 1996 Makedoniko Metro brought an action for annulment of the Minister ' s decision of 29 November 1996 before the Simvoulio tis Epikratias (Council of State, Greece). By judgment No 971 of 6 March 1998, the Council of State dismissed the action on the ground that Makedoniko Metro could not lawfully change its composition after tenders had been submitted and after having been chosen as provisional contractor, while also continuing to take part in the procedure at issue, and that, consequently, it was not entitled, with its new membership, to apply for annulment of the contested decision.

14. In addition, the applicants brought an action before the Diikitiko Protodikio Athinon (Administrative Court of First Instance, Athens) for damages against the Greek State for reparation of the damage allegedly suffered in the wake of the breakdown of negotiations and the failure to award the contract in question to Makedoniko Metro. By judgment of 30 April 1999, the Administrative Court, following the interpretation given by the Council of State, dismissed that action.

15. After the applicants appealed against that judgment to the Diikitiko Efetio Athinon (Administrative Court of Appeal, Athens), that court decided to stay the proceedings and refer to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling a question on the interpretation of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) and of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) (" Directive 89/665").

16. Ruling on that question, the Court, in Case C-57/01 Makedoniko Metro and Mikhaniki [2003] ECR I-1091, held that Directive 93/37 does not preclude national rules which prohibit a change in the composition of a group consortium taking part in a procedure for the award of a public works contract or a public works concession which occurs after submission of tenders. The Court also held that in so far as a decision of a contracting authority adversely affects the rights conferred on a consortium by Community law in the context of a procedure for the award of a public contract, that consortium must be able to avail itself of the review procedures provided for by Council Directive 89/665.

17. On 23 January 1997 Makedoniko Metro also lodged a complaint with the Commission, which was registered as No 97/4188/P. In that complaint Makedoniko Metro criticised the Minister ' s decision of 29 November 1996 referred to above, and submitted that by failing to award it the contract to build the Thessaloniki metro the Hellenic Republic had failed to fulfil its obligations under the Community ' s public procurement legislation. Makedoniko Metro therefore called on the Commission, in its capacity as guardian of the treaties, to institute against the Hellenic Republic all appropriate proceedings and actions, in particular proceedings under Article 226 EC for failure to fulfil obligations, and to initiate the procedure under Article 3 of Directive 89/665, which allows the Commission, where, prior to a contract being concluded, it considers that a clear and manifest infringement has been committed during a public contract award procedure, to intervene with the competent authorities of the Member State and the contracting authority concerned so that appropriate measures may be taken in order that any infringement complained of may be rectified quickly.

18. By fax of 30 July 1997, the Commission called upon the Greek authorities to suspend approval of the result of the procurement procedure and signature of the contract in question with the new provisional contractor until it had finished investigating this case.

19. Makedoniko Metro ' s complaint was initially discussed at the Commission ' s meeting on 7 April 1998. The Commission pointed out at the time that the voluminous documents relating to the invitation to tender contained provisions which might give rise to differing interpretations by the bidders of the specific requirements to which they were subject. However, in view of the complexity of the procedure and of the tender documents, the Commission drew the conclusion that it could not be argued that the contracting authority had not allowed a genuinely competitive procedure to take place. In that context, the Commission considered that it was not possible to show that there had been a clear infringement of the principle of equal treatment, requiring the institution of infringement proceedings. The Commission also decided on that occasion to authorise a member of the Commission, Mr Monti, to contact the competent Greek authorities to explain the Commission ' s position on this matter, and to gather the comments and obtain the assurances of those authorities concerning their future policy on the matter.

20. By letter of 20 May 1998, before the Commission gave its final decision on what action should be taken on the complaint, the Commissioner, Mr Monti, called on the Greek authorities to take all necessary measures to see to it that invitations to tender and contract documents were drawn up in such a way as to avoid differing interpretations and ensure compliance with the principle of equal treatment. In that regard, he asked those authorities to ensure that the relevant rules were complied with and to take appropriate measures to avoid a recurrence of such a situation in the future.

21. The Greek authorities gave their answer to that letter on 26 June 1998. Makedoniko Metro submitted its comments on the letter in a letter dated 15 July 1998.

22. By letter of 30 July 1998 the Director-General of the Commission Directorate General (DG) for the Internal Market and Financial Services informed Makedoniko Metro that his officials would suggest to the Commission that the case be closed, unless the applicants were in a position to provide additional evidence to show there had been an infringement of Community public procurement law.

23. By decision of 20 August 1998 (not 27 August 1998 as the applicants stated in the application), the Commission decided to take no further action on the case.

24. By letters dated 10 September, 7 and 21 October and 25 November 1998, sent to the Commissioner, Mr Monti, the applicants submitted to the Commission some additional evidence concerning in particular the allegedly unlawful way in which the competent authority conducted the negotiations with Makedoniko Metro, the abovementioned judgment of the Greek Council of State, and a number of alleged technical deviations in Thessaloniki Metro ' s bid. That evidence was alleged to show there had been clear and significant infringements of Community law, in particular the principle of equal treatment, and therefore to justify the institution of infringement proceedings. In their letter of 25 November 1998 the applicants also asked to be informed of the action the Commission proposed to take to prevent the signature of a concession contract which in their view was unlawful and deviated to a considerable extent from the tender documents.

25. After examining the applicants ' letters referred to above, the Director-General of the Directorate-General for the Internal Market and Financial Services informed the applicants by letter of 10 December 1998 that his officials considered that " no new evidence [had] been brought to their attention which justified instituting new infringement proceedings in that case".

26. Finally, following a complaint submitted by the applicants to the European Ombudsman by letters of 25 September and 23 November 1998, the Ombudsman, in his decision of 30 January 2001, observed that the Commission had demonstrated maladministration by failing to provide the complainant with sufficient reasons for its decision to take no further action on the case and by depriving the complainant of the opportunity to put forward its point of view before the case was closed. However, he rejected Makedoniko Metro ' s complaints alleging, first, that the Commission ' s decision to close the case was based on political criteria without any legal basis and was not motivated by public interest and, second, that the time taken to investigate the complaint and inform the complainant of the results of that investigation was excessively long. Lastly, referring to the case-law of the Court of Justice, he pointed out that the Commission had broad discretion with regard to instituting infringement proceedings under Article 226 EC.

Procedure and forms of order sought

27. By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 3 July 2002, the applicants brought the present action.

28. By a separate document lodged at the Registry of the Court on 8 October 2002, the Commission raised an objection of inadmissibility under Article 114 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court.

29. The applicants submitted their observations on that objection on 16 December 2002. By a separate document lodged at the Registry of the Court the same day they applied for the adoption of measures of organisation of procedure concerning the production of certain documents by the Commission. The Commission submitted observations on that application on 7 January 2003.

30. In their application the applicants claim that the Court should:

declare the action admissible in its entirety;

order the Commission to pay:

to Mikhaniki the sums of EUR 23 578 050, with interest at the rate of 8% from 29 November 1996, or otherwise from [20] August 1998, and EUR 224 654 and EUR 60 000 000, both with interest for late payment at the rate of 8% from the lodging of the action;

to Mr Emfietzoglou, Chairman of Mikhaniki, EUR 15 000 000 with interest for late payment at the rate of 8% from the lodging of the action, as compensation for non-material damage; to Mikhaniki EUR 1 025 839 598 with interest at the rate of 8% from the lodging of the present action, in respect of loss of earnings; to Makedoniko Metro a total of EUR 110 754 352, 20% of that sum being for the benefit of Adtranz and 0.35% for Transurb Consult;

order the Commission to send a memorandum to all its departments in order to restore the name and reputation of Mikhaniki and its chairman Mr Emfietzoglou; order the Commission to add to the case-file and communicate to the applicant the minutes of the meetings of 7 April 1998 and 20 August 1988 and the decisions which were adopted at those meetings, together with the originals of the letters of Mr Mogg, Mr Monti and the President, Mr Prodi;

the European Ombudsman at the time, Mr Söderman, the latter ' s assistants, Mr Harden and Mr Verheecke, the Chairman of Mikhaniki, Mr Emfietzoglou, whomever may be considered necessary after the documents sought have been lodged by the Commission; order the Commission to pay all the costs.

31. In its objection of inadmissibility the Commission claims that the Court should:

dismiss the application as inadmissible,

order the applicants to pay the costs.

32. In their observations on the objection of inadmissibility the applicants contend that the Court should:

dismiss the objection of inadmissibility;

in the alternative, join the objection of inadmissibility to the substance of the case;

order the Commission to pay the costs.

Admissibility

33. Under Article 114(1) of the Rules of Procedure, where a party so requests, the Court may rule on the admissibility without going into the substance of the case. Under Article 114(3), the remainder of the proceedings is to be oral unless the Court decides otherwise. In the present case, the documents in the case-file provide sufficient information to enable the Court to rule on the request without opening the oral procedure.

Admissibility of the claim for compensation

34. The Commission submits that an action for compensation before the Community courts cannot be founded on decisions adopted in the course of investigation of a complaint under the procedure laid down in Article 226 EC. In that regard, it points to the settled case-law of the Court of Justice and the Court of First Instance, according to which the Commission is not bound to institute infringement proceedings under Article 226 EC. Hence its decision not to institute such proceedings against a Member State does not constitute unlawful behaviour and cannot therefore give rise to non-contractual liability on the part of the Community.

35. As regards the complainant ' s position in respect of the procedure laid down in Article 226 EC, the Commission argues that persons who have lodged a complaint do not have the option of bringing an action before the Community judicature against any decision to take no further action on their complaint, nor do they have procedural rights comparable to those they may enjoy, in particular, in the context of proceedings brought under Regulation No 17 of the Council of 6 February 1962, First Regulation implementing Articles [81] and [82] of the Treaty (OJ, English Special Edition 1959-62, p. 87). It follows that Commission decisions not to institute infringement proceedings and to take no further action on a complaint cannot be unlawful in that respect and thus provide grounds for the admissibility of an action for compensation, even where the Commission has failed to provide adequate reasons for the decision to take no further action on the complaint and has not given the complainants sufficient time to put their point of view before taking that decision.

36. At any event, it is clear from the application that in seeking compensation the applicants are in essence basing their case on the fact that the Commission ' s contested measures, in their view, led to the loss of the contract in question with the Greek State, and not on the fact that those measures stated inadequate reasons or were adopted in breach of the rights of the defence. In addition, the administrative measures adopted by the Commission when dealing with a complaint do not influence or alter the nature of the action for infringement provided for in Article 226 EC. In that regard, the Commission ' s discretion in the matter excludes the right for individuals to require the Commission to adopt a specific position and to bring an action for annulment against its refusal to institute infringement proceedings or to base an action for compensation on that refusal.

37. Lastly, contrary to what the applicants assert several times in the application, the Commission argues that, as its decision not to institute infringement proceedings under Article 226 EC is not legally binding (Case 48/65 Lütticke v EEC Commission [1966] ECR 19), that decision cannot " approve" , much less " impose" , the Greek State ' s allegedly unlawful measure excluding Makedoniko Metro from the negotiations leading to the award of the contract for the construction of the Thessaloniki metro. That submission is therefore totally incorrect and manifestly inadmissible.

38. The applicants allege, first of all, that by deciding to take no further action on the complaint, the Commission infringed the principles and fundamental rules of Community law, both substantive and procedural, such as the principles of equal treatment, transparency, proportionality, sound administration, due care and legitimate expectations. The Commission was, in particular, in breach of its duty to ensure sound administration by infringing the applicants ' right to be heard and informed and by failing to comply with the duty to state the reasons on which a decision is based, a breach which the Ombudsman recognised in his decision of 30 January 2001. For that reason, the applicants are applying for the Commission ' s decisions of 7 April and 20 August 1998, together with the minutes of the meetings at which those decisions were adopted, to be placed on the file. Such infringements can give rise to non-contractual liability on the part of the Community.

39. As regards the Commission ' s discretion as to whether or not to set in motion infringement proceedings under Article 226 EC, the applicants consider that this should not, as the Ombudsman pointed out in his decision of 30 January 2001, be regarded as a dictatorial or arbitrary power. Indeed, action taken by the Commission in the exercise of that discretion is not excluded from review by the Court (Case C-16/90 Nölle [1991] ECR I-5163, paragraph 12). In such cases, the Commission should observe the general principles of Community law, in particular the principle of due care stemming from the duty to ensure sound administration. In those circumstances, application of the principle of due care, together with respect for the right to be heard and compliance with the duty to state reasons, makes it possible to ensure the correctness of decisions taken by Community institutions and the lawfulness of their content.

40. The applicants go on to challenge the assertion that the complaint of 23 January 1997 related exclusively to institution of infringement proceedings against the Hellenic Republic under Article 226 EC. In that complaint, in addition to protesting against the Minister ' s decision of 29 November 1996, which was regarded as unlawful, and against the conduct of the Minister and the committees of the Ministry of Public Works, Makedoniko Metro requested the Commission, in its capacity as guardian of the treaties, a role conferred on it by Article 211 EC in particular, to adopt " the measures needed in order to apply the principles and fundamental rules of public procurement" and to apply Article 3 of Directive 89/665 in conjunction with Article 2 of that directive.

41. In conclusion, the applicants, restating the pleas and arguments contained in their application, consider that this action fulfils the conditions laid down in the second paragraph of Article 288 EC, which in their view does not provide for any specific restriction as to which persons are entitled to bring such an action. The application should therefore be declared admissible. In that regard, the non-binding nature of the measures adopted by the Commission during the investigation of the complaint and of the decision to take no further action on the case is irrelevant.

42. First of all, it should be pointed out that the applicants are seeking compensation for the damage they consider they have suffered, first, because of the Commission ' s failure to institute proceedings against the Hellenic Republic for infringement of Directives 89/665 and 93/37 and the general principles of law and, second, because of the Commission ' s failure to set in motion the procedure provided for in Article 3 of Directive 89/665. They argue that, by failing to institute such proceedings and set in motion that procedure and, in its capacity as guardian of the treaties, to adopt any measure that would make it possible to apply in this case the Community rules governing the award of public works contracts, the Commission exceeded the limits of its discretion and was guilty of a breach of the duty to take due care in dealing with the complaint and the duty to state reasons, capable of engaging the non-contractual liability of the Community.

43. As regards, first, the failure to institute infringement proceedings against the Hellenic Republic, it should be pointed out that, according to the case-law, since the Commission is not bound to commence infringement proceedings under Article 226 EC its decision not to institute such proceedings is not in any event unlawful, so that it cannot give rise to non-contractual liability on the part of the Community and the only conduct which might possibly be adduced as the source of damage is the conduct of the Member State concerned, in the present case the Greek State (order in Case C-72/90 Asia Motor France v Commission [1990] ECR I-2181, paragraph 13; judgment in Case T-571/93 Lefebvre and Others v Commission [1995] ECR II-2379, paragraph 61; order in Case T-201/96 Smanor and Others v Commission [1997] ECR II-1081, paragraph 30; order in Case T-361/99 Meyer v Commission and EIB [2000] ECR II-2031, paragraph 13; and judgment in Case T-209/00 Lamberts v Ombudsman [2002] ECR II-2203, paragraph 53).

44. Consequently, a claim for compensation based on the Commission ' s decision not to commence infringement proceedings against a Member State is inadmissible (Asia Motor France , cited in paragraph 43 above, paragraph 15, and Smanor and Others , cited in paragraph 43 above, paragraph 31).

45. That conclusion is not undermined by the applicants ' argument that during the investigation of the complaint the Commission allegedly infringed general principles of law, in particular the applicants ' procedural rights, such as the right to be heard or the duty to state reasons.

46. It should be pointed out that the procedural position of parties who have submitted a complaint to the Commission is fundamentally different in the case of a procedure under Article 226 EC from their position in the case of a proceeding under Regulation No 17. According to settled case-law, the Commission is not bound to initiate a procedure under Article 226 EC but has a discretion which excludes the right for individuals to require it to adopt a specific position (see, in particular, Case 247/87 Star Fruit v Commission [1989] ECR 291, paragraph 11, and the order in Case C-422/97 P Sateba v Commission [1998] ECR I-4913, paragraph 42). It follows that, in the case of a procedure under Article 226 EC, it is not open to persons who have lodged a complaint to bring an action before the Community judicature against a decision to take no further action on their complaint; nor do they have any procedural rights, comparable to those they may have in the case of a procedure under Regulation No 17, enabling them to require the Commission to inform them and to grant them a hearing (order in Case T-83/97 Sateba v Commission [1997] ECR II-1523, paragraph 32, upheld on appeal by the order in Sateba v Commission , cited above, paragraph 42).

47. It should also be noted that, as the applicants themselves accept, the findings contained in the Commission ' s decision not to take further action on Makedoniko Metro ' s complaint do not have the effect of resolving the dispute between the applicants and the competent national authority as to the lawfulness of the procedure for awarding the public works contracts initiated by that authority. The opinion notified in that decision is a factual element which the national court called upon to give a decision in the dispute may certainly take into account in the course of its examination of the case. However, findings resulting from an examination under Article 226 EC are not binding on national courts (order in Case T-83/97 Sateba v Commission , cited in paragraph 46 above, paragraph 41).

48. Second, the claim for compensation for the damage allegedly suffered by the applicants as a result of the Commission ' s failure to initiate the procedure provided for in Article 3 of Directive 89/665 is also inadmissible.

49. Article 3(1) of that directive provides that the Commission may invoke the procedure for which the following paragraphs provide when, prior to a contract being concluded, it considers that a clear and manifest infringement of Community provisions in the field of public procurement has been committed during a contract award procedure falling within the scope of Directive 93/37.

50. The clear wording of that provision, which neither derogates from nor replaces Article 226 EC, shows that only the Commission is allowed to use the procedure for which it provides. Since the choice not to make use of such power is not unlawful, it cannot give rise to non-contractual liability on the part of the Community. In fact, even when called on to use it the Commission retains the option of considering the complaint referred to it under Article 226 EC (see, to that effect, Case C-359/93 Commission v Netherlands [1995] ECR I-157, paragraphs 12 and 13; Case C-353/96 Commission v Ireland [1998] ECR I-8565, paragraph 22; order in Case T-83/97 Sateba v Commission , cited in paragraph 46 above, paragraphs 36 and 37, upheld on appeal by order in Case C-422/97 P Sateba v Commission , cited in paragraph 46 above, paragraph 32).

51. In the light of the above, the claim for compensation in this action must be dismissed as inadmissible. In those circumstances, it is not necessary to adopt the measures of organisation of procedure or to order the measures of inquiry proposed by the applicants.

The claim for directions to be issued

52. In their third head of claim the applicants request the Court to direct the Commission " to send a memorandum to all its departments in order to restore the name and reputation of [Mikhaniki] and its chairman Mr ... Emfietzoglou".

53. It should be pointed out that the Community judicature may not give directions to a Community institution without encroaching upon the powers of the administration. That principle not only renders inadmissible, in an action for annulment, heads of claim seeking an order requiring a defendant institution to adopt the measures necessary for the enforcement of a judgment by which a decision is annulled, but it is also applicable, in principle, in proceedings in which the Court has unlimited jurisdiction (see, by analogy, Case T-156/89 Valverde Mordt v Court of Justice [1991] ECR II-407, paragraph 150).

54. That head of claim must therefore also be declared inadmissible.

55. In the light of all the preceding considerations, the application must be dismissed in its entirety as inadmissible.

Judgment

Costs

96 The costs incurred by the Austrian, Netherlands and Swedish Governments and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Bundesvergabeamt by order of 13 November 2001, hereby rules:

1. The Community legislation on public procurement does not preclude a contracting authority from applying, in the context of the assessment of the most economically advantageous tender for a contract for the supply of electricity, an award criterion with a weighting of 45% which requires that the electricity supplied be produced from renewable energy sources. The fact that that criterion does not necessarily serve to achieve the objective pursued is irrelevant in that regard.

On the other hand, that legislation does preclude such a criterion where

- it is not accompanied by requirements which permit the accuracy of the information contained in the tenders to be effectively verified,

- it requires tenderers to state how much electricity they can supply from renewable energy sources to a non-defined group of consumers, and allocates the maximum number of points to whichever tenderer states the highest amount, where the supply volume is taken into account only to the extent that it exceeds the volume of consumption expected in the context of the procurement.

It is for the national court to determine whether, despite the contracting authority's failure to stipulate a specific supply period, the award criterion was sufficiently clearly formulated to satisfy the requirements of equal treatment and transparency of procedures for awarding public contracts.

2. The Community legislation on public procurement requires the contracting authority to cancel an invitation to tender if it transpires in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665 that a decision relating to one of the award criteria laid down by that authority is unlawful and it is therefore annulled by the review body.

1 By order of 13 November 2001, received at the Court Registry on 20 November 2001, the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Procurement Office) referred to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC four questions on the interpretation of Article 26 of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and of Articles 1 and 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) (`Directive 89/665').

2 Those questions were raised in proceedings between a group of undertakings consisting of EVN AG and Wienstrom GmbH on the one hand, and the Republik Osterreich in its capacity as the contracting authority on the other concerning the award of a public supply contract in respect of which the applicants in the main proceedings had submitted a tender.

The legal background

Community legislation

3 Article 26 of Directive 93/36, which appears in Chapter 3 of Title IV of the directive, entitled `Criteria for the award of contracts', provides:

`1. The criteria on which the contracting authority shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(b) or, when award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract in question: e.g. price, delivery date, running costs, cost-effectiveness, quality, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical merit, after-sales service and technical assistance.

2. In the case referred to in point (b) of paragraph 1, the contracting authority shall state in the contract documents or in the contract notice all the criteria [it] intend[s] to apply to the award, where possible in descending order of importance.'

4 The sixth recital in the preamble to Directive 89/665 states that it is necessary to ensure that adequate procedures exist in all the Member States to permit the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully and compensation of persons harmed by an infringement.

5 Article 1 of Directive 89/665 states:

`1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC, and 92/50/EEC... , decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following articles and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

6 Article 2 of Directive 89/665 provides:

`1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

...

5. The Member States may provide that where damages are claimed on the grounds that a decision was taken unlawfully, the contested decision must first be set aside by a body having the necessary powers.

6. The effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law. Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.'

7 Recital 2 in the preamble to Directive 2001/77/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 27 September 2001 on the promotion of electricity produced from renewable energy sources in the internal electricity market (OJ 2001 L 283, p. 33) states:

`The promotion of electricity produced from renewable energy sources is a high Community priority as outlined in the White Paper on Renewable Energy Sources... for reasons of security and diversification of energy supply, of environmental protection and of social and economic cohesion...'.

8 Recital 18 of Directive 2001/77 states:

`It is important to utilise the strength of the market forces and the internal market and make electricity produced from renewable energy sources competitive and attractive to European citizens.'

9 It is clear from Article 1 of Directive 2001/77 that the purpose of that directive is to promote an increase in the contribution of renewable energy sources to electricity production in the internal market for electricity and to create a basis for a future Community framework thereof. To that end, Article 3(1) of the directive requires the Member States to take appropriate steps to encourage greater consumption of electricity produced from renewable energy sources in conformity with the national indicative targets referred to in paragraph 2 of that article.

10 Directives 89/665 and 93/36 were transposed into Austrian law by the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Bundesvergabegesetz) 1997 (1997 Federal Public Procurement Law, BGBl. I, 1997/56; `the BVergG').

11 Paragraph 16 of the BVergG provides:

`1. Public contracts for services must be awarded, at reasonable prices, by way of a procedure provided for in this statute, in accordance with the principles of free and fair competition and of equal treatment of all applicants and tenderers, to undertakings which - at the latest at the time when the tenders are opened - are qualified, competent and reliable.

7. In the award procedure, due account is to be taken of the environmental impact of the services and the employment of persons on training contracts.'

12 Paragraph 53 of the BVergG provides:

`From the tenders remaining after the elimination process, the most advantageous in technical and economic terms, in accordance with the criteria laid down in the invitation to tender, is to be selected (principle of the best tender).'

13 Paragraph 115(1) of the BVergG states:

`Where an undertaking claims to have an interest in the conclusion of a contract within the scope of this Federal Law, it may apply for the contracting authority's decision in the contract award procedure to be reviewed on the ground of unlawfulness, provided that it has been or risks being harmed by the alleged infringement.'

14 Paragraph 117 of the BVergG states:

`1. The Bundesvergabeamt shall set aside, by way of administrative decision, taking into account the opinion of the Conciliation Committee ..., any decision of the contracting authority in an award procedure where the decision in question:

(1) is contrary to the provisions of this Federal Law or its implementing regulations and

(2) is material to the outcome of the award procedure.

3. After the award of the contract, the Bundesvergabeamt shall, in accordance with the conditions of subparagraph 1, determine only whether the alleged illegality exists or not.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred

15 The defendant in the main proceedings invited tenders by way of an open procedure for the award of a public contract for the supply of electricity. The contract to be awarded consisted of a framework contract followed by individual contracts for the supply of electricity to all the Federal Republic's administrative offices in the Land of Kärnten (Carinthia). The contract term ran from 1 January 2002 to 31 December 2003. The invitation to tender, which was published in the Official Journal of the European Communities of 27 March 2001, included the following provision under the heading `Award criteria':

16 The tender had to state the price in ATS per kilowatt hour (kWh). This was to apply for the whole contract term, and was not to be subject to any revision or adjustment. The electricity supplier had to undertake to supply the Federal offices with electricity produced from renewable energy sources, subject to any technical limitations, and in any case not knowingly to supply those offices with electricity generated by nuclear fission. The supplier was not, however, required to submit proof of his electricity sources. The contracting authority was to have a right to terminate the contract and a right to punitive damages in the event of a breach of either of those obligations.

17 It was stated in the contract documents that the contracting authority was aware that for technical reasons no supplier could guarantee that the electricity supplied to a particular consumer was actually produced from renewable energy sources but that the authority had nevertheless decided to contract with tenderers who could supply at least 22.5 gigawatt hours (GWh) per annum of electricity produced from renewable energy sources, since the annual consumption of the Federal offices was estimated to be around 22.5 GWh.

18 In addition, it was specified that tenders would be eliminated if they did not contain any proof that `in the past two years and/or in the next two years the tenderer has produced or purchased, and/or will produce or purchase, and has supplied and/or will supply to final consumers, at least 22.5 GWh electricity per annum from renewable energy sources'. The award criteria laid down were net price per kWh, with a weighting of 55%, and `energy produced from renewable energy sources', with a weighting of 45%. It was stated in relation to the latter award criterion that `only the amount of energy that can be supplied from renewable energy sources in excess of 22.5 GWh per annum will be taken into account'.

19 The four tenders submitted were opened on 10 May 2001. The tender submitted by the Kärntner Elektrizitäts-AG and Stadtwerke Klagenfurt AG group of tenderers (`KELAG') stated a price of 0.44 ATS/kWh and, under reference to a table showing the amounts and origin of electricity produced or supplied by those companies, affirmed that they were able to supply a total amount of renewable electricity of 3 406.2 GWh. Energie Oberösterreich AG also submitted a tender, in which it proposed a price of 0.4191 ATS/kWh for annual consumption in excess of 1 million GWh and, in a table relating to 1999 to 2002, showed the various amounts of the electricity from renewable energy sources that it was able to supply for each of the years in that period. The highest amount stated in that connection was 5 280 GWh per annum. BEWAG also submitted a tender, which stated a price of 0.465 ATS/kWh. The table included with its offer showed the proportion of the electricity produced or supplied by BEWAG that came from renewable energy sources, on the basis of which the contracting authority deduced that the amount stated in that connection was 449.2 GWh.

20 The tender submitted by the applicants in the main proceedings stated a price of 0.52 ATS/kWh. Those applicants did not provide any concrete figures for the amount of electricity that they could supply from such sources, but instead merely stated that they had their own electricity generating plants in which they produced electricity from such sources. In addition, they had purchase options on electricity produced by hydroelectric power stations belonging to the Osterreichische Elektrizitätswirtschafts-Aktiengesellschaft and other Austrian hydroelectric power stations, and other electricity purchased by them derived predominantly from long-term coordination contracts with the largest supplier of electricity certified as coming from renewable energy sources. In 1999 and 2000, they had purchased exclusively hydroelectric power from Switzerland, and this would continue to be the case. The total amount of electricity from renewable energy sources was several times the amount of electricity referred to in the invitation to tender.

21 The defendant in the main proceedings considered that, of the four tenders submitted, the best was KELAG's, and that group received the most points for each of the two award criteria. The applicants in the main proceedings received the fewest points in respect of both criteria.

22 After having informed the contracting authority as early as 9 and 30 May 2001 that they considered that various provisions in the invitation to tender, including the award criterion relating to `electricity produced from renewable energy sources', were unlawful, the applicants in the main proceedings applied on 12 June 2001 to institute conciliation proceedings before the Bundes-Vergabekontrollkommission (Federal Procurement Review Commission), which refused their application on the ground that such proceedings had no prospect of success.

23 The applicants in the main proceedings then instituted review proceedings before the Bundesvergabeamt, seeking, inter alia, annulment of the invitation to tender in its entirety, of a series of individual provisions in the contract documents and of a number of decisions of the contracting authority. Those decisions included, in particular, the decision to make the absence of proof of the production and purchase of electricity from renewable energy sources in a defined period or the absence of proof of future purchase of such electricity grounds for elimination, the decision to make proof of the production or purchase of a defined amount of electricity from such sources over a defined period a selection criterion, the decision to make the availability of electricity from renewable energy sources in excess of 22.5 GWh per annum an award criterion, and the decision refusing to cancel the invitation to tender. In addition, the applicants applied for an interim order prohibiting the contracting authority from awarding the contract.

24 By decision of 16 July 2001, the Bundesvergabeamt granted the applicants' application and, initially, prohibited the contract from being awarded until 10 September 2001. On a further application by the applicants, the Bundesvergabeamt made an interim order, by decision of 17 September 2001, permitting the contracting authority to award the contract on condition that the award would be cancelled and the contract rescinded in the event that even only one of the applications made to that body by the applicants in the main proceedings were granted or the decision to award the contract in question to one of the applicants' co-tenderers proved to be unlawful on the basis of any other finding of the Bundesvergabeamt.

25 On 24 October 2001, the framework contract was awarded to KELAG, subject to the conditions subsequent laid down in the decision referred to above.

26 Taking the view that the interpretation of a number of provisions of Community law was necessary in order to resolve the dispute before it, the Bundesvergabeamt decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

`1. Do the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 26 of Directive 93/36/EEC, prohibit a contracting authority from laying down an award criterion in relation to the supply of electricity which is given a 45% weighting and which requires a tenderer to state, without being bound to a defined supply period, how much electricity he can supply from renewable energy sources to a group of consumers not more closely defined, where the maximum number of points is given to whichever tenderer states the highest amount and a supply volume is taken into account only to the extent that it exceeds the volume of consumption to be expected in the context of the contract to which the invitation to tender relates?

2. Do the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665/EEC, prohibit making the setting aside of an unlawful decision in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665/EEC dependent on proof that the unlawful decision was material to the outcome of the procurement procedure?

3. Do the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 26 of Directive 93/36/EEC, prohibit making the setting aside of an unlawful decision in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665/EEC dependent on proof that the unlawful decision was material to the outcome of the procurement procedure, where that proof has to be achieved by the review body examining whether the ranking of the tenders actually submitted would have been different had they been re-evaluated disregarding the unlawful award criterion?

4. Do the provisions of Community law relating to the award of public contracts, in particular Article 26 of Directive 93/36/EEC, require the contracting authority to cancel the invitation to tender if it transpires in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665/EEC that one of the award criteria it laid down is unlawful?'

27 It is clear from the explanations provided by the Bundesvergabeamt that the first question must be understood as having two parts. First of all, it seeks to determine whether the Community legislation on public procurement, in particular Article 26 of Directive 93/36, precludes a contracting authority from applying, in its assessment of the most economically advantageous tender for a contract for the supply of electricity, a criterion requiring that the electricity supplied be produced from renewable energy sources.

28 In second place, if the first part of its question is answered in the affirmative, the Bundesvergabeamt asks for clarification of the Community law requirements as regards the concrete application of such a criterion, given the specific wording of the criterion at issue in the dispute before it, and, consequently, the second part of its question can be broken down into several sub-questions.

29 More specifically, that body is unclear as to the compatibility of such a criterion with Community law given the circumstances set out in points (a) to (d) below, in other words, given that the criterion

(a) has a weighting of 45%;

(b) is not accompanied by requirements which permit the accuracy of the information contained in the tenders to be effectively verified, and does not necessarily serve to achieve the objective pursued;

(c) does not impose a defined supply period, and

(d) requires tenderers to state how much electricity they can supply from renewable energy sources to a non-defined group of consumers, and allocates the maximum number of points to whichever tenderer states the highest amount, where the supply volume is taken into account only to the extent that it exceeds the volume of consumption to be expected in the context of the contract to which the invitation to tender relates.

The first part of the first question

30 Referring to the lack of clarity of the expression `the most economically advantageous tender' used in Article 26 of Directive 93/36, the Bundesvergabeamt first asks as a question of principle whether Community law allows the contracting authority to lay down criteria that pursue advantages which cannot be objectively assigned a direct economic value, such as advantages related to the protection of the environment.

31 In that regard, it should be noted that, in a judgment delivered after the lodging of the order for reference in this case, which concerned the interpretation of Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50, whose wording is more or less identical to that of Article 26(1)(b) of Directive 93/36, the Court had occasion to rule on the question whether and in what circumstances a contracting authority may take ecological criteria into consideration in the assessment of the most economically advantageous tender.

32 More specifically, at paragraph 55 of the judgment in Case C-513/99 Concordia Bus Finland [2002] ECR I-7123, the Court held that Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 cannot be interpreted as meaning that each of the award criteria used by the contracting authority to identify the most economically advantageous tender must necessarily be of a purely economic nature.

33 The Court therefore accepted that where the contracting authority decides to award a contract to the tenderer who submits the most economically advantageous tender it may take into consideration ecological criteria, provided that they are linked to the subject-matter of the contract, do not confer an unrestricted freedom of choice on the authority, are expressly mentioned in the contract documents or the tender notice, and comply with all the fundamental principles of Community law, in particular the principle of non-discrimination (Concordia Bus Finland, cited above, paragraph 69).

34 It follows that the Community legislation on public procurement does not preclude a contracting authority from applying, in the context of the assessment of the most economically advantageous tender for a contract for the supply of electricity, a criterion requiring that the electricity supplied be produced from renewable energy sources, provided that that criterion is linked to the subject-matter of the contract, does not confer an unrestricted freedom of choice on the authority, is expressly mentioned in the contract documents or the contract notice, and complies with all the fundamental principles of Community law, in particular the principle of non-discrimination.

The second part of the first question

Second part, point (a)

35 In its order for reference, the Bundesvergabeamt states that even if an award criterion which relates to environmental issues, such as the one applied in the case at issue in the main proceedings, had to be regarded as compatible in principle with the Community rules on the award of public contracts, the fact that it was given a weighting of 45% would create another problem since it could be objected that the contracting authority is prohibited from allowing a consideration which is not capable of being assigned a direct economic value from having such a significant influence on the award decision.

36 The defendant in the main proceedings submits in that regard that given the discretion enjoyed by the contracting authority in its identification of the most economically advantageous tender, only a weighting which resulted in an unjustified distortion would be unlawful. In the case at issue in the main proceedings there is not only an objective relationship between the criteria of `price' and `electricity produced from renewable energy sources' but, in addition, precedence is accorded to purely arithmetical economic considerations, since the price has a weighting 10 points higher than that given to the capacity to supply such electricity.

37 It must be recalled that according to settled case-law it is open to the contracting authority when choosing the most economically advantageous tender to choose the criteria on which it proposes to base the award of contract, provided that the purpose of those criteria is to identify the most economically advantageous tender and that they do not confer on the contracting authority an unrestricted freedom of choice as regards the award of the contract to a tenderer (see, to that effect, Case 31/87 Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635, paragraphs 19 and 26; Case C-19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I-7725, paragraphs 36 and 37; and Concordia Bus Finland, paragraphs 59 and 61).

38 Furthermore, such criteria must be applied in conformity with both the procedural rules and the fundamental principles laid down in Community law (see, to that effect, Beentjes, paragraphs 29 and 31, and Concordia Bus Finland, paragraphs 62 and 63).

39 It follows that, provided that they comply with the requirements of Community law, contracting authorities are free not only to choose the criteria for awarding the contract but also to determine the weighting of such criteria, provided that the weighting enables an overall evaluation to be made of the criteria applied in order to identify the most economically advantageous tender.

40 As regards the award criterion at issue in the main proceedings, the Court has already held that the use of renewable energy sources for producing electricity is useful for protecting the environment in so far as it contributes to the reduction in emissions of greenhouse gases which are amongst the main causes of climate change which the European Community and its Member States have pledged to combat (Case C-379/98 PreussenElektra [2001] ECR I-2099, paragraph 73).

41 Moreover, as is clear, in particular from Recital 18 and Articles 1 and 3 of Directive 2001/77, it is for precisely that reason that that directive aims, by utilising the strength of market forces, to promote an increase in the contribution of renewable energy sources to electricity production in the internal market for electricity, an objective which, according to Recital 2 of the directive, is a high Community priority.

42 Having regard, therefore, to the importance of the objective pursued by the criterion at issue in the main proceedings, its weighting of 45% does not appear to present an obstacle to an overall evaluation of the criteria applied in order to identify the most economically advantageous tender.

43 In those circumstances, and since there is no evidence to support a finding that the requirements of Community law have been infringed, it must be held that the application of a weighting of 45% to the award criterion at issue in the main proceedings is not incompatible with the Community legislation on public procurement.

Second part, point (b)

44 The Bundesvergabeamt is also uncertain as to whether the award criterion at issue in the main proceedings is lawful under Community law, since the contracting authority itself has admitted that it does not have the technical ability to verify whether electricity supplied to it has actually been generated from renewable energy sources and it did not require the tenderers to supply proof of their actual supply obligations or existing electricity supply contracts.

45 The referring body is therefore essentially asking whether the Community law provisions governing the award of public contracts preclude a contracting authority from applying an award criterion which is not accompanied by requirements which permit the accuracy of the information contained in the tenders to be effectively verified.

46 In that context, the Bundesvergabeamt is also uncertain as to the extent to which such an award criterion is capable of achieving the objective which it pursues. Since there are no plans to verify how far the recipient of the award in fact helps by its production structure to increase the amount of electricity produced from renewable energy sources, it is possible that the application of that criteria may have no effect on the total amount of electricity produced in that way.

47 It should be recalled that the principle of equal treatment of tenderers which, as the Court has repeatedly held, underlies the directives on procedures for the award of public contracts (see, in particular, Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraph 91, and Case C-315/01 GAT [2003] ECR I-0000, paragraph 73) implies, first of all, that tenderers must be in a position of equality both when they formulate their tenders and when those tenders are being assessed by the contracting authority (SIAC Construction, paragraph 34).

48 More specifically, that means that when tenders are being assessed, the award criteria must be applied objectively and uniformly to all tenderers (SIAC Construction, cited above, paragraph 44).

49 Second, the principle of equal treatment implies an obligation of transparency in order to enable verification that it has been complied with, which consists in ensuring, inter alia, review of the impartiality of procurement procedures (see, to that effect, Universale-Bau and Others, paragraphs 91 and 92).

50 Objective and transparent evaluation of the various tenders depends on the contracting authority, relying on the information and proof provided by the tenderers, being able to verify effectively whether the tenders submitted by those tenderers meet the award criteria.

51 It is thus apparent that where a contracting authority lays down an award criterion indicating that it neither intends, nor is able, to verify the accuracy of the information supplied by the tenderers, it infringes the principle of equal treatment, because such a criterion does not ensure the transparency and objectivity of the tender procedure.

52 Therefore, an award criterion which is not accompanied by requirements which permit the information provided by the tenderers to be effectively verified is contrary to the principles of Community law in the field of public procurement.

53 As regards the Bundesvergabeamt's question as to whether the award criterion at issue in the main proceedings infringes Community law in so far as it is not necessarily capable of helping to increase the amount of electricity produced from renewable energy sources, it need only be noted that even if that is in fact the case, such a criterion cannot be regarded as incompatible with the Community provisions in the field of public procurement simply because it does not necessarily serve to achieve the objective pursued.

Second part, point (c)

54 The Bundesvergabeamt considers that since the contracting authority omitted to determine the specific supply period in respect of which the amount that could be supplied was to be stated, the criterion applied is incompatible with the principle of comparability of tenders, which derives from the requirement of transparency. As regards the proof required for the examination of the suitability of the tenderers, it was the period covering the two years preceding the invitation to tender and the period covering the following two years which were stated to be relevant as regards the amount of electricity which would in fact be required. According to the Bundesvergabeamt, even if that provision were also applied in the context of the award criterion, there would be no definite supply period allowing for an exact calculation of the amount which in fact had to be taken into account. On the contrary, in a period of four years, it might be that different amounts of electricity could be supplied. It would even be conceivable that tenderers would state amounts which relied on assumptions as to the construction of power stations or other merely potential means of production of electricity from renewable energy sources.

55 The defendant in the main proceedings explains that in Austria the electricity market was fully liberalised on 1 October 2001, and that since that date it has been possible to set up trading companies whose object is to buy and sell on electricity. As the invitation to tender was published approximately six months before that date, it was obliged to formulate the award criterion in terms which made it possible for both companies already on the market with their own means of electricity production and electricity trading companies which were only authorised to operate from 1 October 2001 to submit tenders. It therefore sought to give undertakings the possibility of stating the amount of electricity from renewable energy sources that they had produced or bought over the two years preceding the invitation to tender or to provide such information for the two coming years. Finally, all the undertakings provided in fact only information relating to the two years preceding the invitation to tender, and where the annual amounts were different the best tender was determined on the basis of the average.

56 It is clear from the Court's case-law that the procedure for awarding a public contract must comply, at every stage, with both the principle of the equal treatment of potential tenderers and the principle of transparency so as to afford all parties equality of opportunity in formulating the terms of their tenders (see, to that effect, Universale-Bau, paragraph 93).

57 More specifically, this means that the award criteria must be formulated, in the contract documents or the contract notice, in such a way as to allow all reasonably well-informed tenderers of normal diligence to interpret them in the same way (SIAC Construction, paragraph 41).

58 Consequently, in the case at issue in the main proceedings, the fact that in the invitation to tender the contracting authority omitted to determine the period in respect of which tenderers had to state in their tenders the amount of electricity from renewable energy sources which they could supply could be an infringement of the principles of equal treatment and transparency were it to transpire that that omission made it difficult or even impossible for tenderers to know the exact scope of the criterion in question and thus to be able to interpret it in the same way.

59 Inasmuch as that requires a factual assessment, it is for the national court to determine, taking account of all the circumstances of the case, whether, despite that omission, the award criterion at issue in the main proceedings was sufficiently clearly formulated to satisfy the requirements of equal treatment and transparency of procedures for awarding public contracts.

Second part, point (d)

60 The Bundesvergabeamt explains that the award criterion at issue in the main proceedings consists in the allocation of points for the amount of electricity from renewable energy sources that the tenderers will be able to supply to a non-defined group of consumers, where the supply volume is taken into account only to the extent that it exceeds the volume of consumption expected in the context of the invitation to tender. In so far as that criterion thus concerns exclusively the total amount which the tenderer will be able to supply in general and not the amount which the tenderer will be able to supply specifically to the contracting authority, the Bundesvergabeamt is uncertain whether it is linked to any direct economic advantages for the contracting authority.

- Observations submitted to the Court

61 The applicants in the main proceedings, the Netherlands Government and the Commission submit that in so far as the criterion in question relates to an amount of electricity exceeding the consumption expected in the context of the invitation to tender, the requirement of a direct link with the contract to be awarded is not met in the present case. In their opinion, the only relevant factor is the amount of electricity from renewable energy sources which can be supplied to the contracting authority.

62 According to the Commission, it would have been enough for the contracting authority to have required the tenderer to have access to a certain amount of electricity produced from renewable energy sources or to be able simply to prove that it was capable of delivering a certain amount of electricity in excess of the annual consumption, for example by calculating for a reserve of 10%.

63 The applicants in the main proceedings additionally submit that the award criterion in question is in fact a disguised selection criterion inasmuch as it in fact concerns the tenderers' capacity to supply as much electricity as possible from renewable energy sources and, in that way, ultimately relates to the tenderers themselves.

64 On the other hand, the defendant in the main proceedings and the Austrian Government consider that, by taking into account the amount of electricity produced from renewable energy sources that each tenderer was able to supply over and above 22.5 GWh, which had to be supplied in any case, the contracting authority gave the reliability of supply of electricity, which is a function of the total amount of electricity to which an undertaking has access, the status of an award criterion. They explain that since electricity cannot be stored, that criterion is in no way irrelevant to the service provided since the more productive a tenderer is, the smaller the risk that the contracting authority's demand for electricity will not be met and that it will have to find a costly alternative in the short term.

65 More specifically, the Austrian Government submits that although the production of electricity from renewable energy sources, such as wind and solar energy, is seasonal, the demand is greatest in the winter. The purpose of the award criterion in question is thus to ensure that the tenderer can provide a continuous supply of electricity notwithstanding the fact that supply and demand are not linear throughout the year, a consideration which also justifies the heavy weighting of 45% given to that criterion.

- Findings of the Court

66 As recalled in paragraph 33 of this judgment, ecological criteria used by a contracting authority as award criteria for determining the most economically advantageous tender must, inter alia, be linked to the subject-matter of the contract.

67 In the case at issue in the main proceedings, the award criterion applied does not relate to the service which is the subject-matter of the contract, namely the supply of an amount of electricity to the contracting authority corresponding to its expected annual consumption as laid down in the invitation to tender, but to the amount of electricity that the tenderers have supplied, or will supply, to other customers.

68 An award criterion that relates solely to the amount of electricity produced from renewable energy sources in excess of the expected annual consumption, as laid down in the invitation to tender, cannot be regarded as linked to the subject-matter of the contract.

69 Moreover, the fact that, in accordance with the award criterion applied, it is the amount of electricity in excess of the expected annual consumption as laid down in the invitation to tender which is decisive is liable to confer an advantage on tenderers who, owing to their larger production or supply capacities, are able to supply greater volumes of electricity than other tenderers. That criterion is thus liable to result in unjustified discrimination against tenderers whose tender is fully able to meet the requirements linked to the subject-matter of the contract. Such a limitation on the circle of economic operators in a position to submit a tender would have the effect of thwarting the objective of opening up the market to competition pursued by the directives coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts.

70 Finally, even assuming that that criterion was a response to the need to ensure reliability of supplies - an assumption which it is for the national court to verify - it should be noted that while the reliability of supplies can, in principle, number amongst the award criteria used to determine the most economically advantageous tender, the capacity of tenderers to provide the largest amount of electricity possible in excess of the amount laid down in the invitation to tender cannot legitimately be given the status of an award criterion.

71 It follows that in so far as it requires tenderers to state how much electricity they can supply from renewable energy sources to a non-defined group of consumers, and allocates the maximum number of points to whichever tenderer states the highest amount, where the supply volume is taken into account only to the extent that it exceeds the volume of consumption expected in the context of the procurement, the award criterion applied in the case at issue is not compatible with the Community legislation on public procurement.

72 In the light of all the foregoing, the answer to the first question submitted to the Court must be that the Community legislation on public procurement does not preclude a contracting authority from applying, in the context of the assessment of the most economically advantageous tender for a contract for the supply of electricity, an award criterion with a weighting of 45% which requires that the electricity supplied be produced from renewable energy sources. The fact that that criterion does not necessarily serve to achieve the objective pursued is irrelevant in that regard.

On the other hand, that legislation does preclude such a criterion where

- it is not accompanied by requirements which permit the accuracy of the information contained in the tenders to be effectively verified,

- it requires tenderers to state how much electricity they can supply from renewable energy sources to a non-defined group of consumers, and allocates the maximum number of points to whichever tenderer states the highest amount, where the supply volume is taken into account only to the extent that it exceeds the volume of consumption expected in the context of the procurement.

It is for the national court to determine whether, despite the contracting authority's failure to stipulate a specific supply period, the award criterion was sufficiently clearly formulated to satisfy the requirements of equal treatment and transparency of procedures for awarding public contracts.

The second and third questions

73 By these two questions, which can be examined together, the Bundesvergabeamt is essentially asking whether Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 precludes a provision of national law such as point 2 of Paragraph 117(1) of the BVergG, which makes the annulment in review proceedings of an unlawful decision by a contracting authority dependent on proof that the unlawful decision materially influenced the outcome of the procurement procedure and whether, having regard to Article 26 of Directive 93/36 in particular, the answer to that question must differ if the proof of that influence derives from the examination by the review body of whether the ranking of the tenders actually submitted would have been different had they been re-evaluated disregarding the unlawful award criterion.

74 It should be noted at the outset that, according to settled case-law, in the context of the cooperation between the Court of Justice and national courts provided for by Article 234 EC, it is solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case both the need for a preliminary ruling and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. Consequently, where the questions submitted concern the interpretation of Community law, the Court of Justice is, in principle, bound to give a ruling (see, inter alia, Case C-415/93 Bosman [1995] ECR I-4921, paragraph 59; PreussenElektra, paragraph 38; Case C-390/99 Canal Satélite Digital [2002] ECR I-607, paragraph 18; Case C-153/00 Der Weduwe [2002] ECR I-11319, paragraph 31, and Case C-318/00 Bacardi-Martini and Cellier des Dauphins [2003] ECR I-905, paragraph 40).

75 However, the Court has also stated that, in exceptional circumstances, it can examine the conditions in which the case was referred to it by the national court, in order to assess whether it has jurisdiction (see PreussenElektra, paragraph 39, and Canal Satélite Digital, paragraph 19). The spirit of cooperation which must prevail in preliminary ruling proceedings requires the national court for its part to have regard to the function entrusted to the Court of Justice, which is to contribute to the administration of justice in the Member States and not to give opinions on general or hypothetical questions (Der Weduwe, paragraph 32, and Bacardi-Martini and Cellier des Dauphins, paragraph 41).

76 Thus the Court must decline to give a preliminary ruling on a question submitted by a national court where it is quite obvious that the interpretation or the assessment of the validity of a provision of Community law sought by that court bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, or where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (see, in particular, Bosman, paragraph 61; Case C-437/97 EKW and Wein & Co. [2000] ECR I-1157, paragraph 52; Case C-36/99 Idéal Tourisme [2000] ECR I-6049, paragraph 20, and Bacardi-Martini and Cellier des Dauphins, paragraph 42).

77 More specifically, it must be borne in mind that Article 234 EC is an instrument of judicial cooperation, by means of which the Court provides the national courts with the points of interpretation of Community law which may be helpful to them in assessing the effects of a provision of national law at issue in the disputes before them (see, in particular, Case C-300/01 Salzmann [2003] ECR I-0000, paragraph 28).

78 It follows that in order that the Court may perform its task in accordance with the Treaty, it is essential for national courts to explain, when the reasons are not clear beyond doubt from the file, why they consider that a reply to their questions is necessary to enable them to give judgment (see, in particular, Bacardi-Martini and Cellier des Dauphins, paragraph 43).

79 In the present case, there is no information to that effect before the Court.

80 On the one hand, as observed in paragraph 23 of this judgment, the object of the review proceedings brought in the case at issue is, inter alia, the annulment of the invitation to tender in its entirety and the annulment of a series of individual conditions in the contract documents and of a number of decisions of the contracting authority relating to the requirements established by the award and selection criteria used in that tender procedure.

81 Therefore, in the light of the information in the order for reference, it is apparent that all the decisions whose annulment is sought in the main proceedings have a decisive effect on the outcome of the tender procedure.

82 On the other hand, the Bundesvergabeamt has not provided any explanation as to the precise reasons for which it considers that it needs an answer to the question of the compatibility with the Community legislation on public procurement of the condition laid down in subparagraph 2 of Paragraph 117(1) of the BVergG in order to give judgment in the case pending before it.

83 Therefore, since there is no information before the Court to show that an answer to the second and third questions is needed in order to resolve the dispute in the main proceedings, those questions must be regarded as hypothetical and, accordingly, inadmissible.

The fourth question

84 By its fourth question the Bundesvergabeamt is essentially asking whether the provisions of Community law governing the award of public contracts, in particular Article 26 of Directive 93/36, require the contracting authority to cancel the invitation to tender if it transpires in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665 that a decision relating to one of the award criteria laid down by that authority is unlawful.

85 According to the Bundesvergabeamt, if it is assumed that the review of the effects of unlawful decisions relating to award criteria is contrary to Community law, the only alternative where such a decision is unlawful seems to be cancellation of the invitation to tender, since otherwise the tender procedure would be carried out on the basis of a weighting of criteria which was neither laid down by the authority nor known by the tenderers.

86 The Austrian Government submits that Community law does not recognise an express obligation to cancel invitations to tender, just as the directives on public procurement do not lay down a tendering obligation, and concludes that it is for the Member States, acting in accordance with the principles of Community law, to lay down rules determining whether, where a decision relating to an award criterion is recognised to be unlawful, the contracting authority is obliged to cancel the invitation to tender.

87 The defendant in the main proceedings states that, pursuant to Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665, the consequences of an infringement of the rules relating to the award of public contracts which is established after the contract has been awarded must be determined in accordance with national law. In its view, where the contract has been awarded the review body is confined pursuant to Paragraph 117(3) of the BVergG to making a finding as to the existence of the alleged illegality. It thus concludes that this question must be answered in the negative.

88 On the other hand, the applicants in the main proceedings and the Commission consider that if, after the tenders have been submitted or opened, the review body declares a decision relating to an award criterion unlawful, the contract cannot be awarded on the basis of the invitation to tender and the only option is to cancel the invitation to tender. Any amendment to the criteria would have an effect on the evaluation of the tenders, whereas the tenderers would no longer have the possibility of adapting their tenders, prepared at a completely different time and in different circumstances and on the basis of different criteria. The only option would therefore be to start the entire tender procedure afresh.

Findings of the Court

89 It should be noted that a finding that a decision relating to an award criterion is unlawful does not always lead to the annulment of that decision.

90 As a result of the option granted to Member States under Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 of providing that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures are to be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement, where the review proceedings are instituted after the conclusion of the contract and the Member State concerned has made use of the option, if the review body finds that a decision relating to an award criterion is unlawful, it may not annul that decision, but only award damages.

91 It is clear from the explanations provided by the Bundesvergabeamt that the fourth question concerns the situation where the consequence of a finding that a decision relating to an award criterion is unlawful is the annulment of that decision. It must thus be understood as asking whether the Community legislation on public procurement requires the contracting authority to cancel an invitation to tender where it transpires in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665 that a decision relating to one of the award criteria laid down by that authority is unlawful and it is therefore annulled by the review body.

92 For the purpose of answering the question as reformulated, it should be pointed out that the Court has already held that the principles of equal treatment and transparency of tender procedures imply an obligation on the part of contracting authorities to interpret the award criteria in the same way throughout the procedure (see, to that effect, in particular SIAC Construction, paragraph 43).

93 As far as the award criteria themselves are concerned, it is a fortiori clear that they must not be amended in any way during the tender procedure.

94 It follows that where the review body annuls a decision relating to an award criterion, the contracting authority cannot validly continue the tender procedure leaving aside that criterion, since that would be tantamount to amending the criteria applicable to the procedure in question.

95 Therefore, the answer to the fourth question must be that the Community legislation on public procurement requires the contracting authority to cancel an invitation to tender if it transpires in review proceedings under Article 1 of Directive 89/665 that a decision relating to one of the award criteria laid down by that authority is unlawful and it is therefore annulled by the review body.

Costs

34 The costs incurred by the Austrian and French Governments and by the Commission of the European Communities, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main action, a step in the proceedings pending before the national tribunal, the decision on costs is a matter for that tribunal.

On those grounds,

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Bundesvergabeamt by decision of 25 October 2001, hereby rules:

Article 2 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, must be interpreted as meaning that it does not preclude the Member States from providing that when a body responsible for review procedures for the award of public contracts decides an application for interim measures, it is bound or authorised to take account of the prospects of success of an application for a decision of a contracting authority to be set aside on the ground that it is unlawful, so long as the national rules thus governing the adoption of those interim measures are not less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions and do not make it practically impossible or excessively difficult to exercise the rights conferred by Community law.

1 By order of 25 October 2001, received at the Court on the following day, the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Procurement Office) referred to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC two questions on the interpretation of Article 2 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) (Directive 89/665).

2 Those questions were raised in the course of proceedings between CS Communications & Systems Austria GmbH (CS Austria) and Allgemeine Unfallversicherungsanstalt (AUV), regarding the decision taken by the latter to reject, without considering its merits, the tender that CS Austria had made in relation to a contract to deliver, install and initialise various network electronic components, on the ground that it did not correspond to the specifications of the invitation to tender.

Community legal framework

3 As stated in the third recital in the preamble thereto, Directive 89/665 aims to increase the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination in relation to the opening-up of public procurement to Community competition and to ensure, in particular, that effective and rapid remedies are available in Member States in the case of infringements of Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

4 Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665 states, to that end, that the Member States are to ensure that the measures taken for the purpose of [guaranteeing that such effective and rapid remedies are available] include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

5 As regards the adoption of interim measures, Article 2(4) provides:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

The Member States may provide that when considering whether to order interim measures the body responsible may take into account the probable consequences of the measures for all interests likely to be harmed, as well as the public interest, and may decide not to grant such measures where their negative consequences could exceed their benefits. A decision not to grant interim measures shall not prejudice any other claim of the person seeking these measures.

6 Finally, under the first subparagraph of Article 2(8):

Where bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character, written reasons for their decisions shall always be given. Furthermore, in such a case, provision must be made to guarantee procedures whereby any allegedly illegal measure taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article [234] of the Treaty and independent of both the contracting authority and the review body.

National legal framework

7 Directive 89/665 was transposed into Austrian law by the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Bundesvergabegesetz) (Federal Law on the award of public contracts, BGBl. 1993/462). That law was replaced in 1997 by a law of the same title (BGBl. I, 1997/56, the BVergG).

8 Paragraph 113 of the BVergG provides:

1. The Bundesvergabeamt is responsible on application for carrying out a review procedure in accordance with the following provisions.

2. Until the award of the contract, the Bundesvergabeamt may:

(a) grant interim orders, and

(b) set aside unlawful decisions of the contracting authority in order to prevent infringements of this federal law and its implementing rules.

3. Once the contract has been awarded or the contract award procedure has been ended, the Bundesvergabeamt may determine that as a result of an infringement of this federal law, or of any regulations made hereunder, the award was not made to the tenderer who made the best offer. ...

9 Paragraph 116, concerning the adoption of interim orders, provides:

1. As soon as the review procedure is initiated the Bundesvergabeamt is bound in the case of an application to that effect to make without delay, by way of interlocutory order, the interim measures which appear necessary and appropriate to remove or prevent harm, existing or imminent, which adversely affects the applicant's interests on account of the alleged unlawful act.

3. Before making an interim order the Bundesvergabeamt must weigh the probable consequences of the measure to be taken for all the interests of the defendant, the other candidates or tenderers and the contracting authority likely to be harmed, as well as any specific public interest in continuing the contract award procedure. If it appears from that examination that the negative consequences of an interim order outweigh its advantages, it must not be granted.

4. An interim order may provisionally suspend the entire contract award procedure, or certain decisions of the contracting authority until any order to set aside the decision is made by the Bundesvergabeamt, or may prescribe any other appropriate measure. Further, it is appropriate to make an order for the interim measure which is the least onerous in the light of the aim pursued.

6. Interim measures have immediate effect. Their implementation is governed by the Verwaltungsvollstreckungsgesetz 1991 [Law on the enforcement of administrative decisions, BGBl. 1991/53].

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

10 On 9 July 2001 the AUV published an invitation to tender for a contract to deliver, install and initialise various network electronic components and network management software. The value of that contract, which also included training on the use of that software, was estimated at EUR 1 000 000.

11 By letter of 10 September 2001, CS Austria submitted a tender for the contract stating, however, that the products that it sought to supply were not new products, but that they had been subject to a general overhaul.

12 By letter of 19 September 2001, the AUV informed CS Austria that its tender had been rejected, without consideration of the content, on the ground that it did not correspond to the specifications of the invitation to tender. The AUV relied, in that regard, on the case-law of the Austrian civil courts, according to which in the case of doubt and in the absence of any express provision to the contrary, only new products may be tendered for a public supply contract.

13 CS Austria brought an action before the Bundesvergabeamt under Paragraph 113 of the BVergG, seeking to have the rejection of its tender set aside, and for an interim measure restraining the contracting authority from awarding the contract until the Bundesvergabeamt had ruled on the substance of its application to have the decision set aside. In support of its application, CS Austria argued, firstly, that the invitation to tender did not contain any indication that the products supplied had to be new, but only required the products to satisfy all the safety rules in force, which was the case in these proceedings because the products that it proposed for tender had been subject to a general overhaul and, as regards the electronic switches, were not liable to any form of wear and tear. Secondly, CS Austria argued that it had submitted the tender which was the lowest in price, although fully equivalent technically to the tenders of the other tenderers, and that the contract should therefore have been awarded to it, so that the AUV's decision to dismiss its tender without examining its content was unlawful, and was likely to cause it serious financial loss.

14 The AUV contended that the interim measure should be set aside on the ground, firstly, that a delay of two months in the award of the contract would expose it to considerable financial loss and would jeopardise the treatment capacity of the hospitals to which the supplies at issue were destined and secondly, that the application for an interim measure amounted to an abuse of process because the application to have the contracting authority's decision set aside, that the application for an interim measure was intended to preserve, was in any event bound to fail. The AUV pointed out, in that connection, that CS Austria admitted that it had only offered second-hand reconditioned products, while Austrian civil courts have consistently held that in the absence of an express stipulation to the contrary, the goods supplied under a contract must always be new. As used goods had not been expressly authorised in the invitation to tender, CS Austria's tender had purely and simply to be dismissed.

15 By decision of 25 October 2001, the Bundesvergabeamt allowed CS Austria's application in part, in so far as it restrained the contracting authority from awarding the contract before 25 November 2001. However, it reserved its decision on the other aspects of the interlocutory application, on the ground that that depended on an interpretation of Article 2 of Directive 89/665. It observed, in that regard, that although the Austrian legislature had taken, in Paragraph 116(3) of the BVergG, the measures necessary for the transposition of Article 2(4) of Directive 89/665, the latter provision did not explicitly provide for consideration, by the body responsible for the review procedures for the award of public contracts, of the prospects of success of the application to set aside the contracting authority's decision.

16 According to the Bundesvergabeamt, firstly, that provision could be interpreted as meaning that only the factual difficulties that the grant of an interim measure involves, such as the delay in awarding the contract and the difficulties which arise from that, would be taken into consideration by that body. Such an interpretation could be justified by considerations relating to the essential effectiveness of the interlocutory procedure for the purposes of Directive 89/665, as consideration of the substantive application's prospects of success as early as at the stage of the decision relating to the interim measure in fact anticipates the outcome of the substantive proceedings.

17 Secondly, the Bundesvergabeamt points out that Article 2(4) of Directive 89/665 explicitly authorises the body responsible for review procedures for the award of public contracts to take account of the probable consequences of interim measures for all interests likely to be affected, including the public interest. It is thus possible that in weighing those competing interests, that body may also consider the prospects of success of the application to set aside the contracting authority's decision.

18 Taking the view, in those circumstances, that the resolution of the dispute pending before it depended on an interpretation of Community law, the Bundesvergabeamt decided to stay its proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

1. When balancing interests prior to deciding an application for interim measures, as required by Article 2(4) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992, is the "body responsible for review procedures" within the meaning of Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665/EEC required to take into account the prospects of success of an application for an unlawful decision of a contracting authority to be set aside pursuant to Article 2(1)(b) of that directive?

2. If the answer to the first question is in the negative:

When balancing interests prior to deciding an application for interim measures, as required by Article 2(4) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992, is the "body responsible for review procedures" within the meaning of Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665/EEC entitled to take into account the prospects of success of an application for an unlawful decision of a contracting authority to be set aside pursuant to Article 2(1)(b) of that directive?

19 The national court also asked the Court to deal with the reference for preliminary ruling by way of an accelerated procedure, in accordance with Article 104a of the Rules of Procedure, on the ground that the questions arise in the course of interlocutory proceedings and concern the award of a public contract which is still under way, that the contracting authority wished to award as soon as possible, having regard to the fact that any delay in the award of the contract was likely to lead to a reduction in the radiological treatment capacity of two large Austrian hospitals.

20 By decision of 20 November 2001 that request was rejected by the President of the Court, on the proposal of the Judge-Rapporteur, on the ground that the circumstances put forward by the national court did not establish that the questions referred for a preliminary ruling were matters of exceptional urgency.

The admissibility of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

21 Relying on the Bundesvergabeamt's decision of 11 July 2001 to make a reference in other proceedings on the award of public contracts, registered at the Court Registry under number C-314/01 and currently pending before the Court, the Commission has expressed doubt as to the judicial character of the referring body, on the ground that it had acknowledged in that decision that its decisions do not comprise directions to the contracting authority that are enforceable. In those circumstances, the Commission wishes to know whether the questions referred by the Bundesvergabeamt in the present proceedings are admissible, having regard to the case-law of the Court and in particular Case C-134/97 Victoria Film [1998] ECR I-7023, paragraph 14, and Case C-178/99 Salzmann [2001] ECR I-4421, paragraph 14, according to which a national court may refer a question to the Court only if there is a case pending before it and if it is called upon to give judgment in proceedings intended to lead to a decision of a judicial nature.

22 In that regard, it must be observed, firstly, that Paragraph 116(4) of the BVergG indicates expressly that the Bundesvergabeamt, hearing an application for interim relief, may stay the award procedure as a whole, or only certain decisions of the contracting authority, or order other appropriate measures.

23 Secondly, it is clear from Paragraph 116(6) that the orders made by the Bundesvergabeamt in the course of interlocutory proceedings are immediately enforceable, and that they are governed in that respect by the Law of 1991 on the enforcement of administrative decisions.

24 As the Commission has not put forward any argument to cast doubt on the binding nature of those orders there is no reason, having regard to the provisions of Paragraph 116(4) and (6) of the BVergG, to question the judicial character of the Bundesvergabeamt.

25 It follows that the questions referred by that body are admissible.

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

26 By its two questions, which must be considered together, the national tribunal asks, essentially, whether it follows from Directive 89/665, and more particularly from Article 2(4), that when a body responsible for review procedures for the award of public contracts determines an application for interim relief, it is bound or, as the case may be, authorised to take account of the prospects of success of an application for annulment of the decision of the contracting authority based on the unlawfulness of that decision.

27 Taking the view that the answer to those questions did not admit of any reasonable doubt the Court, in accordance with Article 104(3) of the Rules of Procedure, informed the national tribunal that it intended to give judgment by reasoned order and invited the interested parties referred to in Article 23 of the EC Statute of the Court of Justice to submit observations on the matter.

28 Only the Commission submitted its observations within the time-limit. While it reiterated its doubts as to the admissibility of the questions referred, it expressed its agreement with the decision of the Court to give judgment by reasoned order.

29 It must be observed that the prospects of success of the substantive action are not mentioned among the factors which the body responsible for review procedures for the award of public contracts must or may take account of when it determines an application for interim measures under Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 89/665, but that provision does not preclude them from being considered. Article 2(4) of the directive merely states that the Member States may provide that when considering whether to order interim measures, the body responsible may take into account the probable consequences of the measures for all interests likely to be harmed, as well as the public interest, and may decide not to grant such measures where their negative consequences could exceed their benefits.

30 In the absence of specific Community rules governing the matter, it is therefore for the domestic legal system of each Member State to determine the rules governing the adoption of interim measures by the bodies responsible for review procedures for the award of public contracts, taking into account the purpose of Directive 89/665, which is to ensure that decisions taken by the contracting authority may be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible if there has been an infringement of Community law in the field of public procurement or of the national rules implementing that law.

31 However, according to settled case-law the Member States must ensure that the relevant national rules are not less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions (the principle of equivalence) and that they do not make it practically impossible or excessively difficult to exercise rights conferred by Community law (the principle of effectiveness) (see in particular to that effect Case C-92/00 HI [2002] ECR I-5553, paragraph 67, Case C-62/00 Marks &Spencer [2002] ECR I-6325, paragraph 34, and Case C-255/00 Grundig Italiana [2002] ECR I-8003, paragraph 33).

32 As regards the latter principle, it is plain that the fact that a national provision states that the body responsible for review procedures for public procurement is bound or, as the case may be, authorised to take account of the prospects of success of an application for a decision of a contracting authority to be set aside on the ground that it is unlawful is not such as to undermine the effectiveness of the rights conferred by the Community directives on the coordination of the procedures for the award of public contracts and, in particular, of the right to effective and rapid remedies laid down by Directive 89/665, because such a national provision merely provides for the consideration, in each particular case, of the degree of likelihood of an alleged infringement of Community law in the field of public procurement or the national rules implementing that law.

33 Therefore, the answer to the questions referred is that Article 2 of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as meaning that it does not preclude the Member States from providing that when a body responsible for review procedures for the award of public contracts decides an application for interim measures, it is bound or authorised to take account of the prospects of success of an application for a decision of a contracting authority to be set aside on the ground that it is unlawful, so long as the national rules thus governing the adoption of those interim measures are not less favourable that those governing similar domestic actions and do not make it practically impossible or excessively difficult to exercise the rights conferred by Community law.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Bundesvergabeamt by order of 25 September 2001, hereby rules:

1. Article 19 of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts is to be interpreted as meaning that the obligation to set out the minimum specifications required by a contracting authority in order to take variants into consideration is not satisfied where the contract documents merely refer to a provision of national legislation requiring an alternative tender to ensure the performance of work which is qualitatively equivalent to that for which tenders are invited.

2. Article 30 of Directive 93/37 can apply only to variants which have been properly taken into consideration by the contracting authority in accordance with Article 19 of that directive.

1 By order of 25 September 2001, received at the Court on 21 October 2001, the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Procurement Office) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC five questions on the interpretation of the first and second paragraphs of Article 19 and Article 30(1) and (2) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) (`the Directive').

2 Those questions have been raised in proceedings between the companies Traunfellner GmbH and Osterreichische Autobahnen- und Schnellstraßen-Finanzierungs-AG (`Asfinag') concerning the rejection of a tender submitted by Traunfellner for a public works contract.

Legal framework

Community legislation

3 Article 19 of the Directive provides:

`Where the criterion for the award of the contract is that of the most economically advantageous tender, contracting authorities may take account of variants which are submitted by a tenderer and meet the minimum specifications required by the contracting authorities.

The contracting authorities shall state in the contract documents the minimum specifications to be respected by the variants and any specific requirements for their presentation. They shall indicate in the tender notice if variants are not permitted.

Contracting authorities may not reject the submission of a variant on the sole grounds that it has been drawn up with technical specifications defined by reference to national standards transposing European standards, to European technical approvals or to common technical specifications referred to in Article 10(2) or again by reference to national technical specifications referred to in Article 10(5)(a) and (b).'

4 Article 30 of the Directive provides:

`1. The criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) either the lowest price only;

(b) or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract: e.g. price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit.

2. In the case referred to in paragraph 1(b), the contracting authority shall state in the contract documents or in the contract notice all the criteria it intends to apply to the award, where possible in descending order of importance....'

National legislation

5 The Directive was transposed into Austrian law by the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Bundesvergabegesetz) 1997 (Federal Procurement Law 1997, BGBl. I, 1997/56, `the BVergG').

6 Paragraph 42 of the BVergG states:

`1. In procedures other than the negotiated procedure, tenderers must ensure that their tenders meet the requirements of the tender notice. The wording prescribed by the contract documents may not be amended or supplemented.

4. An alternative tender is admissible only if it ensures the performance of qualitatively equivalent work. It shall be for the tenderer to prove equivalence. An alternative tender may relate to the work as a whole, to parts of the work or to the legal conditions underlying the performance of the work. Alternative tenders shall be designated as such and shall be submitted separately.

The main proceedings and the questions referred

7 Acting for and on behalf of Asfinag, the Federal Road Construction Division of the Government of the Land of Niederösterreich, which comes under the authority of the First Minister of that Land, published throughout the EU, on 27 November 1997, a call for tenders for the repair of the Neumarkt to Vienna section of the A 1 Westautobahn between kilometre 100.2 and kilometre 108.6. The contract concerned bridge and road construction works.

8 As regards performance of the road resurfacing work outside the areas covered by the motorway bridges, the tender notice stated, under the heading `Official Project', that concrete surfacing consisting of a two-layer high-grade concrete overlay should be laid without expressly making this a minimum specification.

9 The tender notice stated that alternative tenders were permissible but did not expressly set out the minimum technical requirements to be satisfied by such alternative tenders. It was merely stipulated that alternative tenders would be accepted only if accompanied by a full list of works as required by the tender notice (main tender).

10 No contract award criteria for assessing the economic and technical quality of tenders were defined for either tenders conforming to the tender notice or alternative tenders. Nor did the tender notice stipulate that alternative tenders had to ensure performance of work equivalent to that required by the official project and it was not explained what was meant by `performance of equivalent work'. The contract documents merely referred to Paragraph 42 of the BVergG.

11 Traunfellner submitted an alternative tender quoting a total price of ATS 78 327 748.53, which was the lowest of all the tenders. However, the lowest tender conforming to the tender notice, that is to say, to the official project, was submitted by the tenderers' consortium Ilbau - LSH Fischer - Heilit & Woerner, which quoted a total price of ATS 87 750 304.30.

12 In its alternative tender, Traunfellner proposed laying asphalt surfacing made from bitumen-based material rather than the concrete resurfacing provided for in the tender notice.

13 On 17 February 1998, the Federal Road Construction Division asked Traunfellner for information on the technical quality of its alternative tender. After Traunfellner had provided the requested documents and explanations, the Federal Road Construction Division of the Government of the Land of Niederösterreich drew up a technical test report in which it was stated that experience gathered from previous contracts had shown that, despite careful execution of an asphalt design of this kind in compliance with the contract, grooves of some considerable depth had appeared after a short time, which had called for additional repair work.

14 According to that test report, preference had to be given to the general repair of the carriageway in concrete in accordance with the tender notice, particularly in view of the long life (30 years as opposed to 20 years in the case of an asphalt overlay) and deformation resistance of concrete. In particular, a concrete surface would have a 50% longer life and yet cost only 8.5% more. Consequently, Traunfellner's alternative tender had to be deemed not to meet the specifications of the official project and therefore had to be rejected.

15 On the basis of that report, the commission responsible for the award of contracts within the Federal Road Construction Division decided, on 17 March 1998, to propose that the contract should be awarded to the Ilbau - LSH Fischer - Heilit & Woerner consortium.

16 On 17 April 1998, Traunfellner applied to the Bundesvergabeamt for a declaration that the contracting authority's decision to reject its alternative tender was null and void.

17 On 21 April 1998, the Bundesvergabeamt dismissed Traunfellner's application, its basic reasoning being that the question of the possible technical equivalence of Traunfellner's alternative tender was irrelevant. According to the Bundesvergabeamt, that `alternative tender' departed from the specifications of the tender notice to such an extent that it was no longer an admissible alternative tender and had to be rejected in any event. Moreover, even if it were an admissible alternative tender, it would not be technically equivalent and should not therefore be taken into consideration.

18 On 3 June 1998, Traunfellner brought an appeal against the Bundesvergabeamt's decision of 21 April 1998 before the Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court) (Austria). By judgment of 27 November 2000, the Verfassungsgerichtshof granted Traunfellner's appeal and annulled that decision on the ground that the constitutionally guaranteed right to equality before the law had been infringed. It held that that right is infringed, in particular, where an authority bases its decision on statements which have no value as supporting reasons. That was true of the present case since the Bundesvergabeamt had failed to set out the reasons on which it had based its finding that there was no `alternative tender'.

19 Under Austrian law, the Bundesvergabeamt is required to reconsider Traunfellner's application of 17 April 1998. However, as is explained in the order for reference, `the contracting authority's disputed decision may no longer be declared void' since the contract has already been awarded and, under the BVergG, the Bundesvergabeamt is merely required to determine whether a right has been infringed and thus whether the contracting authority's decision to exclude Traunfellner's alternative tender from consideration was lawful.

20 It was in the course of that re-examination that the Bundesvergabeamt decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

`1. Is an alternative tender that consists in proposing an asphalt surface instead of overlaying the carriageway with concrete as specified in the tender notice a "variant" within the meaning of the first paragraph of Article 19 of Directive 93/37/EEC?

2. Can a criterion established in national legislation to determine the admissibility of the acceptance of a "variant" within the meaning of the first paragraph of Article 19 of Directive 93/37/EEC, whereby "the performance of qualitatively equivalent work is ensured" by the variant, properly be regarded as a "minimum specification", required and stated by the contracting authority in accordance with the first and second paragraphs of Article 19 of Directive 93/37/EEC, if the contract documents refer only to the national provision and do not specify the comparative parameters to be used to assess "equivalence"?

3. Does Article 30(1) and (2) of Directive 93/37/EEC in conjunction with the principles of transparency and equal treatment prohibit a contracting authority from making the acceptance of an alternative tender which differs from a tender conforming to the tender document in that it proposes a different technical quality conditional on a positive assessment based on a criterion in national legislation requiring that "the performance of qualitatively equivalent work is ensured" if the contract documents refer only to the national provision and do not specify the comparative parameters to be used to assess "equivalence"?

4. (a) If the answer to Question 3 is in the affirmative, may a contracting authority conclude a tendering procedure like that described in Question 3 by awarding the contract?

(b) If the answers to Questions 3 and 4(a) are in the affirmative, must a contracting authority conducting a tendering procedure as described in Question 3 reject variants proposed by tenderers without examining their contents, at any rate if it has not defined contract award criteria for assessing the technical differences between the variant and the tender notice?

5. If the answers to Questions 3 and 4(a) are in the affirmative and the answer to Question 4(b) is in the negative, must a contracting authority conducting a tendering procedure as described in Question 3 accept a variant whose technical differences from the tender document it is unable to assess on the basis of contract award criteria owing to the absence of appropriate statements in the tender document if this variant is the lowest tender and contract award criteria have not otherwise been defined?'

21 Under Article 234 EC, which is based on a clear separation of functions between national courts and tribunals and the Court of Justice, the latter is empowered to rule on the interpretation or validity of Community provisions only on the basis of the facts which the national court or tribunal puts before it. However, it is for the national court or tribunal to apply the rules of Community law to a specific case. No such application is possible without a comprehensive appraisal of the facts of the case (Case C-107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I-8121, paragraphs 29 and 31). The Court therefore has no jurisdiction to give a ruling on the facts in the main proceedings or to apply the rules of Community law which it has interpreted to national measures or situations, since those questions are matters for the exclusive jurisdiction of the national court or tribunal (see Case C-318/98 Fornasar and Others [2000] ECR I-4785, paragraph 32).

22 In the present case, the Bundesvergabeamt is not, by its first question, seeking to obtain from the Court an interpretation of Article 19 of the Directive to enable it then to assess whether Traunfellner's tender is a variant within the meaning of that article but is asking the Court to make that assessment itself.

23 Such an assessment would, however, lead the Court to apply itself the aforementioned Community provision to the dispute brought before the Bundesvergabeamt, a task which, in accordance with the case-law cited in paragraph 21 of this judgment, does not fall within the jurisdiction conferred on the Court by Article 234 EC.

24 It follows that the Court has no jurisdiction to answer the first question.

The second question

25 By this question, the national tribunal is essentially asking whether Article 19 of the Directive is to be interpreted as meaning that the obligation to set out the minimum specifications required by the contracting authority in order to consider variants is satisfied where the contract documents refer only to a provision of national legislation requiring that the alternative tender ensure the performance of work which is qualitatively equivalent to that for which tenders have been invited, without further specifying the comparative parameters on the basis of which such equivalence is to be assessed.

26 It is apparent from the case-file that the provision of national legislation referred to in the second question is Paragraph 42(4) of the BVergG and that the term `alternative tender' used in that provision corresponds to the term `variant' used in Article 19 of the Directive.

27 This being so, it is clear from the very wording of the second paragraph of Article 19 of the Directive that, where the contracting authority has not excluded the submission of variants, it is under an obligation to set out in the contract documents the minimum specifications with which those variants must comply.

28 Consequently, the reference made in the contract documents to a provision of national legislation cannot satisfy the requirement laid down in the second paragraph of Article 19 of the Directive (see, by analogy, with respect to the reference made to a provision of national legislation with a view to defining the criteria for the award of a public works contract to the most economically advantageous tender, Case 31/87 Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635, paragraph 35, and Case C-225/98 Commission v France [2000] ECR I-7445, paragraph 73).

29 Tenderers may be deemed to be informed in the same way of the minimum specifications with which their variants must comply in order to be considered by the contracting authority only where those specifications are set out in the contract documents. This involves an obligation of transparency designed to ensure compliance with the principle of equal treatment of tenderers, which must be complied with in any procurement procedure governed by the Directive (see, to that effect, with respect to award criteria, Case C-19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I-7725, paragraphs 41 and 42).

30 In light of the above findings, the answer to the second question must be that Article 19 of the Directive is to be interpreted as meaning that the obligation to set out the minimum specifications required by a contracting authority in order to take variants into consideration is not satisfied where the contract documents merely refer to a provision of national legislation requiring an alternative tender to ensure the performance of work which is qualitatively equivalent to that for which tenders are invited.

The third question

31 In order to answer this question, a distinction must be drawn between the minimum specifications referred to in Article 19 of the Directive and the award criteria referred to in Article 30 thereof. Article 19 deals with the circumstances in which contracting authorities may take variants into consideration whereas Article 30, which lists the permissible criteria for the award of contracts, is concerned with a later stage in the procurement procedure. Accordingly, Article 30 can apply only to variants which have been properly taken into consideration in accordance with Article 19.

32 It is clear from paragraphs 27 and 30 of the present judgment that consideration of variants within the meaning of Article 19 of the Directive is subject to fulfilment of the requirement that the minimum specifications with which those variants must comply be set out in the contract documents and that a mere reference in those documents to a provision of national legislation is insufficient to satisfy that requirement.

33 It follows that variants may not be taken into consideration where the contracting authority has failed to comply with the requirements laid down in Article 19 of the Directive with respect to the statement of the minimum specifications, even if they have not been declared inadmissible in the tender notice as provided for in the second paragraph of Article 19 of the Directive.

34 The answer to the third question must therefore be that Article 30 of the Directive can apply only to variants which have been properly taken into consideration by the contracting authority in accordance with Article 19 of the Directive.

The fourth and fifth questions

35 By these questions, which are referred only in the event that the third question is answered in the affirmative, the national tribunal seeks clarification as to the effect which irregularities in the assessment of variants may have on the subsequent conduct of the procurement procedure. In particular, the national tribunal is uncertain whether, in the event of such irregularities, the contracting authority may conclude the procurement procedure in question by awarding the contract (Question 4(a)) and, if so, whether the contracting authority must reject the variants proposed without examining their contents in view of the failure to define the award criteria for assessing the technical differences between the variant and the work for which tenders have been invited (Question 4(b)) or whether it must accept the variant where it is the lowest tender (Question 5).

36 The defendant in the main proceedings takes the view that Question 4(a) must be declared inadmissible as it bears no relation to the actual facts of the case in the main proceedings. On the same ground, the Austrian Government, which also points out that, under the BVergG, the national tribunal's competence is limited once the contract has been awarded (see paragraph 19 of this judgment), takes the view that the Court should declare Questions 4(a), 4(b) and 5 to be inadmissible.

37 It is settled case-law that, in the context of the cooperation between the Court of Justice and national courts and tribunals provided for in Article 234 EC, it is solely for the national court or tribunal before which the dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver its decision and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. The Court may refuse to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling by a national court or tribunal only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main proceedings or to their purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted (see, in particular, Case C-399/98 Ordine degli Architetti and Others [2001] ECR I-5409, paragraph 41).

38 In the present case, it is clear from the case-file that the procurement procedure in question has already been concluded, that the contract has already been awarded and that the proceedings before the national tribunal are concerned not with the legality of the decision on the award but rather with the legality of the decision by which the contracting authority rejected Traunfellner's alternative tender. The question whether that procedure was properly conducted after the latter decision is therefore not the subject of the dispute brought before the national tribunal. The fourth and fifth questions, however, relate precisely to that stage in the procurement procedure.

39 It follows that those questions must be regarded as hypothetical and must therefore be declared inadmissible.

Costs

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

36 The costs incurred by the Austrian and French Governments and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the proceedings pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Bundesvergabeamt by order of 8 October 2001, hereby rules:

Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, precludes an undertaking which has participated in a public procurement procedure from being considered as having lost its interest in obtaining that contract on the ground that, before bringing a review procedure under that directive, it failed to apply to a conciliation commission, such as the Bundes-Vergabekontrollkommission established by the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Bundesvergabegesetz) 1997 (1997 Austrian Federal Law on Public Procurement).

1 By order of 8 October 2001, received at the Court on 16 October 2001, the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Public Procurement Office) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC two questions on the interpretation of Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1, `Directive 89/665').

2 Those questions were raised in proceedings between several companies, among them Fritsch, Chiari & Partner, Ziviltechniker GmbH, which formed a consortium of tenderers (hereinafter together called `Fritsch and Others') and Autobahnen- und Schnellstraßen-Finanzierungs-AG (`Asfinag') concerning the award of a public service contract for which Fritsch and Others had tendered.

Legal context

Community provisions

3 Article 1 of Directive 89/665 provides:

`1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the provisions set out in the following articles and, in particular, Article 2(7), on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

4 Article 2 provides:

`1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement....

6. The effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law.

Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.'

National legislation

5 Directive 89/665 was transposed into Austrian law by the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Bundesvergabegesetz) 1997 (1997 Federal Public Procurement Law, BGBl. I, 1997/56, `the BVergG'). The BVergG provides for the creation of a Bundes-Vergabekontrollkommission (Federal Public Procurement Review Commission, `the B-VKK') and of a Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Public Procurement Office).

6 Paragraph 109 of the BVergG sets out the powers of the B-VKK. It contains the following provisions:

`1. The B-VKK shall be competent:

(1) until such time as the contract is awarded, to reconcile any differences of opinion between the awarding body and one or more candidates or tenderers concerning the application of the present federal law or its implementing regulations.

6. A request for the B-VKK to take action made under paragraph 1(1) must be submitted to the directors of the Commission as soon as possible after the difference of opinion comes to light.

7. If the B-VKK does not take action following a request from the awarding body, it must inform that body immediately it does take action.

8. The awarding body may not award the contract until four weeks after ... it has been informed in accordance with paragraph 7, failing which the tendering procedure shall be declared void....'

7 Paragraph 113 of the BVergG sets out the powers of the Bundesvergabeamt. It provides:

`1. The Bundesvergabeamt is responsible on application for carrying out a review procedure in accordance with the following provisions.

2. To preclude infringements of this Federal Law and of the regulations implementing it, the Bundesvergabeamt is authorised until the time of the award:

(1) to adopt interim measures and

(2) to set aside unlawful decisions of the contracting authority.

3. After the award of the contract or the close of the contract award procedure, the Bundesvergabeamt is competent to determine whether, on grounds of infringement of this Federal Law or of any regulations issued under it, the contract has not been awarded to the best tenderer....'

8 Paragraph 115(1) of the BVergG provides:

`Where an undertaking claims to have an interest in the conclusion of a contract within the scope of this Federal Law, it may apply for the contracting authority's decision in the contract award procedure to be reviewed on the ground of unlawfulness, provided that it has been or risks being harmed by the alleged infringement.'

9 Paragraph 122(1) of the BVergG provides that `in the event of a culpable breach of the Federal Law or its implementing rules by the organs of an awarding body, an unsuccessful candidate or tenderer may bring a claim against the contracting authority to which the conduct of the organs of the awarding body is attributable for reimbursement of the costs incurred in drawing up its bid and other costs borne as a result of its participation in the tendering procedure.'

10 Under Paragraph 125(2) of the BVergG a claim for damages, which must be brought before the civil courts, is admissible only if the Bundevergabeamt has made a declaration under Paragraph 113(3). The civil court called upon to hear the claim for damages, and the parties to the proceedings before the Bundesvergabeamt, are bound by that declaration.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

11 In the autumn of 1999 Asfinag invited tenders prior to the award of a public services contract for `site management in respect of the construction of principal and subsidiary toll barriers, including electrical, internal and technological work, and the introduction of a data-transmission facility as part of the "LKW Maut Osterreich" project'. The invitation to tender was published on 18 November 1999.

12 By letter of 28 January 2000 Fritsch and Others were informed that the bid they had submitted had been placed second in the evaluation of the bids and was therefore unsuccessful. By letter of 8 February 2001, they were told that the contract had been awarded and were informed of the contract price.

13 Fritsch and Others then instituted a procedure under Paragraph 113(3) of the BVergG for a review by the Bundesvergabeamt seeking a declaration that the contract had not been awarded to the best tenderer.

14 Before the Bundesvergabeamt, Asfinag stated that under Paragraph 115(1) of the BVergG only an undertaking claiming an interest in obtaining a contract falling within the scope of that Law is entitled to apply for review of a decision of the contracting authority challenging the lawfulness of the decision, where the alleged unlawfulness has caused or risks causing it harm. According to Asfinag, Fritsch and Others clearly had no interest in obtaining the contract since they had not submitted an application for conciliation to the B-VKK, as they were entitled to do under Paragraph 109(1) of the BVergG.

15 In support of its view, Asfinag maintained that public procurement law does not exist for its own sake but rather serves to determine where pre-contractual liability lies amongst the various parties to public procurement procedures, including the tenderers. According to Asfinag, if a tenderer considers that the award criteria do not comply with the law, it is required, as provided inter alia in Paragraph 109(6) of the BVergG, to raise that objection as soon as possible, even before the invitation to tender is issued. The principle of competition prohibits allowing a tenderer who considers that the award criteria do not comply with the law first to submit a bid in order to ascertain whether it is the best tenderer and then to decide on its actions according to how the contract is awarded, not making an application if it is the best tenderer or, if it fails to obtain the contract or is not the best tenderer, applying to the competent authorities in order to have `a second bite at the cherry' as a result of the invitation to tender being revoked.

16 According to Asfinag, it is therefore apparent from Paragraph 109(6) of the BVergG that the submission of a tender without a prior request for conciliation being made to the B-VKK means that no claim of illegality may be brought in respect of the tendering procedure of which the tenderer, if it had exercised due care, should have been aware at the time it prepared its bid. If in the present case Fritsch and Others had applied to the B-VKK before preparing their bid and had drawn Asfinag's attention to the alleged errors, no costs would have been incurred in preparing the bid.

17 Fritsch and Others denied the allegation that they had no interest, stating that, according to the practice consistently followed by the public procurement supervisory bodies, submission of a bid within the time-limit was sufficient to establish an interest in obtaining a contract.

18 Considering that the Austrian legislation applying to the case before it should be interpreted in the light of Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 and that a decision in the case therefore required an interpretation of that provision, the Bundesvergabeamt decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

`1. Is Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665... to be interpreted as meaning that the review procedure must be available to any undertaking which has submitted a bid, or applied to participate, in a public procurement procedure?

2. In the event that the answer to Question 1 is no:

Is the abovementioned provision to be understood as meaning that an undertaking only has or had an interest in a particular public contract if, in addition to its participating in the public procurement procedure, it takes or took all steps available to it under national law to prevent the contract from being awarded to another bidder and so to secure the award of the contract to itself?'

The jurisdiction of the Court

19 On the basis of the order for reference made by the Bundesvergabeamt on 11 July 2001 in another case concerning public procurement, registered at the Court Registry under number C-314/01 and currently pending before the Court, the Commission expresses doubts as to the judicial nature of the body making the reference on the ground that it acknowledged in the order that its decisions `do not contain binding, enforceable directions addressed to the contracting authority'. In those circumstances, the Commission has doubts as to the admissibility of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Bundesvergabeamt in the present proceedings in the light of the case-law of the Court, in particular Case C-134/97 Victoria Film [1998] ECR I-7023, paragraph 14, and Case C-178/99 Salzmann [2001] ECR I-4421, paragraph 14, according to which a national court or tribunal may refer a question to the Court only if there is a case pending before it and if it is called upon to give judgment in proceedings intended to lead to a decision of a judicial nature.

20 It should be noted in that regard, first, that after the award of the contract the Bundesvergabeamt is competent, under Paragraph 113(3) of the BVergG, to determine whether as a result of an infringement of the relevant national legislation the contract has not been awarded to the best tenderer.

21 Secondly, it is apparent from the express wording of Paragraph 125(2) of the BVergG that a declaration made by the Bundesvergabeamt under Paragraph 113(3) of that Law not only constitutes a condition for admissibility of any claim for damages brought before the civil courts by reason of a culpable breach of that legislation but also binds the parties to the proceedings before the Bundesvergabeamt and the civil court hearing the case.

22 In those circumstances, neither the binding nature of a decision taken by the Bundesvergabeamt under Paragraph 113(3) of the BVergG nor, accordingly, the judicial nature of the latter can reasonably be called into question.

23 It follows that the Court has jurisdiction to reply to the questions raised by the Bundesvergabeamt.

The questions referred 24 In its order for reference, the Bundesvergabeamt points out, first, that under Paragraph 115(1) of the BVergG an undertaking may apply for review of a decision by a contracting authority where it claims to have an interest in the conclusion of a contract in a public procurement procedure and that the unlawfulness which it alleges causes it or risks causing it harm.

25 Secondly, the provisions of Paragraph 109(1), (6) and (8) of the BVergG are designed to ensure that no contract may be concluded while the mediation procedure is going on. In the event that a mediation procedure does not lead to amicable settlement the undertaking may, before the contract is concluded, apply for annulment of any decision of a contracting authority, including a decision to award the contract.

26 The national court therefore considers that for the purposes of reaching a decision in the main proceedings it is important to know whether the combined provisions of Paragraph 115(1) and 109(1), (6) and (8) of the BVergG, interpreted in the light of Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, must be interpreted as meaning that a tenderer which, before the conclusion of the contract, has been informed by the contracting authority that the contract has been awarded to a competitor, and which has failed to avail itself of the review procedures available under national law to delay the conclusion of a contract and possibly to have the award decision amended in its favour, may reasonably claim that it has an interest in the conclusion of the contract and, accordingly, institute a review procedure for a declaration that the award decision is unlawful and to claim damages.

27 As regards Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, the Bundesvergabeamt points out that in a judgment of 12 June 2001 (B 485/01-12, B 584/01-9, B 685/01-6) the Austrian Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court) held, referring to its judgment of 8 March 2001 (B 707/00), that in accordance with the case-law of the Court (see Case C-81/98 Alcatel Austria and Others [1999] ECR I-7671, paragraphs 34 and 35), locus standi for bringing a review procedure under Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 is to be interpreted widely and must therefore be accorded to any person wishing to be awarded a particular public contract which has been put out for tender. The national court therefore considers that the question arises whether this must also be the case if that person has not availed itself of the opportunity afforded by the awarding authority of exhausting all remedies available under national public procurement law (first question) or whether a failure to exhaust all possible domestic remedies results in its forfeiting that interest (second question).

28 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the two questions referred for a preliminary ruling must be understood as seeking to ascertain whether Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as meaning that it precludes an undertaking which has participated in a public procurement procedure from being considered as having lost its interest in obtaining that contract on the ground that, before bringing a review procedure under that directive, it failed to apply to a conciliation commission such as the B-VKK.

29 It is in the light of the aims of Directive 89/665 that it is necessary to consider whether Article 1(3) allows a Member State to make a tenderer's interest in obtaining a specific contract, and therefore its right to have access to the review procedures established by that directive, dependent on the condition that it has beforehand applied to a conciliation commission such as the B-VKK.

30 In that regard, it is appropriate to recall that, as is apparent from the first and second recitals in the preamble, Directive 89/665 is intended to strengthen the existing mechanisms, both at national and Community level, to ensure the effective application of Community directives relating to public procurement, in particular at a stage when infringements can still be remedied. To that effect, Article 1(1) of that directive requires Member States to guarantee that unlawful decisions of contracting authorities can be subjected to effective review which is as swift as possible (see, in particular, Alcatel Austria, cited above, paragraphs 33 and 34, and Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraph 74).

31 The inevitable conclusion is that making access to the review procedures provided for by Directive 89/665 conditional on prior application to a conciliation commission such as the B-VKK is contrary to that directive's objective of speed and effectiveness.

32 First, prior application to such a conciliation commission inevitably has the effect of delaying the introduction of the review procedures which Directive 89/665 requires Member States to establish.

33 Secondly, a mere conciliation commission, such as the B-VKK, has none of the powers which Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665 requires Member States to grant the bodies responsible for carrying out those review procedures, so that referral to it does not ensure the effective application of the Community directives on public procurement.

34 It should be added that the fact that Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 expressly allows Member States to determine the detailed rules according to which they must make the review procedures available to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement none the less does not authorise them to give the term `interest in obtaining a public contract' an interpretation which may limit the effectiveness of that directive (see, to that effect, Universale-Bau, cited above, paragraph 72).

35 In the light of the above, the answer to be given to the questions referred for a preliminary ruling is that Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 precludes an undertaking which has participated in a public procurement procedure from being considered as having lost its interest in obtaining that contract on the ground that, before bringing a review procedure under that directive, it failed to apply to a conciliation commission, such as the B-VKK established by the BVergG.

Judgment of the Court (Grand Chamber)
of 5 October 2004
Bernhard Pfeiffer (C-397/01), Wilhelm Roith (C-398/01), Albert Süß (C-399/01), Michael Winter (C-400/01), Klaus Nestvogel (C-401/01), Roswitha Zeller (C-402/01) and Matthias Döbele (C-403/01) v Deutsches Rotes Kreuz, Kreisverband Waldshut eV. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Arbeitsgericht Lörrach - Germany. Social policy - Protection of the health and safety of workers - Directive 93/104/EC - Scope - Emergency workers in attendance in ambulances in the framework of an emergency service run by the German Red Cross - Definition of 'road transport' - Maximum weekly working time - Principle - Direct effect - Derogation - Conditions. Joined cases C-397/01 to C-403/01.

1. Social policy - Protection of the health and safety of workers - Directive 89/391 on the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the safety and health of workers at work - Directive 93/104 concerning certain aspects of the organisation of working time - Scope - Activity of emergency workers - Included - Activity not forming part of civil protection services or road transport excluded from such scope

2. Social policy - Protection of the health and safety of workers - Directive 93/104 concerning certain aspects of the organisation of working time - Maximum weekly working time - Derogation - Worker's consent - Employment contract referring to a collective agreement permitting the extension of that time - Insufficient

(Council Directive 93/104, Art. 18(1)(b)(i))

3. Social policy - Protection of the health and safety of workers - Directive 93/104 concerning certain aspects of the organisation of working time - Activity of emergency workers - National legislation permitting the extension of the maximum weekly working time by means of a collective or works agreement - Not permissible

(Council Directive 93/104, Art. 6(2))

4. Social policy - Protection of the health and safety of workers - Directive 93/104 concerning certain aspects of the organisation of working time - Article 6(2) - Direct effect - Powers and duties of the national court - Non-application of national provisions permitting the extension of the maximum weekly working time set by that article

1. Article 2 of Directive 89/391 on the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the safety and health of workers at work and Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 concerning certain aspects of the organisation of working time must be construed as meaning that the activity of emergency workers, carried out in the framework of an emergency medical service, falls within the scope of those directives.

In that regard, that activity does not come within the exclusion in the first subparagraph of Article 2(2) of Directive 89/391 relating to certain specific activities within the public service. That exclusion was adopted purely for the purpose of ensuring the proper operation of services essential for the protection of public health, safety and order in cases the gravity and scale of which are exceptional and a characteristic of which is the fact that, by their nature, they do not lend themselves to planning as regards the working time of teams of emergency workers.

Likewise, the activity of emergency workers, even if it includes, at least in part, using a vehicle and accompanying a patient on his journey to hospital, cannot be regarded as road transport' and therefore must be excluded from the scope of Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104.

(see paras 55, 63, 72, 74, operative part 1)

2. The first indent of Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104 concerning certain aspects of the organisation of working time, which confers the right not to apply Article 6 of that directive containing the rule as to the maximum weekly working time, is to be construed as requiring consent to be expressly and freely given by each worker individually if the 48-hour maximum period of weekly working time, as laid down in Article 6 of that directive, is to be validly extended. In that connection, it is not sufficient that the relevant worker's employment contract refers to a collective agreement which permits such an extension, since it is by no means certain that, when he entered into such a contract, the worker concerned knew of the restriction of the rights conferred on him by Directive 93/104.

3. Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104 concerning certain aspects of the organisation of working time must be interpreted as precluding legislation in a Member State the effect of which, as regards periods of duty time completed by emergency workers in the framework of an emergency medical service, is to permit, including by means of a collective agreement or works agreement based on such an agreement, the 48-hour maximum period of weekly working time laid down by that provision to be exceeded.

First, it follows both from the wording of Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104 and from the purpose and scheme of that directive, that the 48-hour upper limit on weekly working time constitutes a rule of Community social law of particular importance from which every worker must benefit, since it is a minimum requirement necessary to ensure protection of his safety and health, so that national legislation which authorises weekly working time in excess of 48 hours, including periods of duty time, is not compatible with the requirements of Article 6(2) of the directive. Second, periods of duty time completed by emergency workers must be taken into account in their totality in the calculation of maximum daily and weekly working time, regardless of the fact that they necessarily include periods of inactivity of varying length between calls.

4. Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104 concerning certain aspects of the organisation of working time fulfils all the conditions necessary for it to have direct effect, since it imposes on Member States in unequivocal terms a precise obligation as to the result to be achieved, which is not coupled with any condition regarding application of the rule laid down by it, which provides for a 48-hour maximum as regards average weekly working time. The fact that the directive leaves the Member States a degree of latitude to adopt rules in order to implement Article 6, and that it permits them to derogate from it, do not alter the precise and unconditional nature of Article 6(2).

Accordingly, when hearing a case between individuals, a national court, which is required, when applying the provisions of domestic law adopted for the purpose of transposing obligations laid down by a directive, to consider the whole body of rules of national law and to interpret them, so far as possible, in the light of the wording and purpose of the directive in order to achieve an outcome consistent with the objective pursued by it, must do whatever lies within its jurisdiction to ensure that the maximum period of weekly working time, which is set at 48 hours by the said Article 6(2), is not exceeded.

Costs

121. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the actions pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. The costs incurred by parties other than those to the main proceedings in submitting observations to the Court are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Grand Chamber) rules:

1. (a) Article 2 of Council Directive 89/391/EEC of 12 June 1989 on the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the safety and health of workers at work and Article 1(3) of Council Directive 93/104/EC of 23 November 1993 concerning certain aspects of the organisation of working time must be construed as meaning that the activity of emergency workers, carried out in the framework of an emergency medical service, such as that at issue before the national court, falls within the scope of the directives.

b) On a proper construction, the concept of road transport' in Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 does not encompass the activity of an emergency medical service, even though the latter includes using a vehicle and accompanying a patient on the journey to hospital.

2. - The first indent of Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104 is to be construed as requiring consent to be expressly and freely given by each worker individually if the 48-hour maximum period of weekly working time, as laid down in Article 6 of the directive, is to be validly extended. In that connection, it is not sufficient that the relevant worker's employment contract refers to a collective agreement which permits such an extension.

3. Article 6, point 2, of Directive 93/104 must be interpreted, in circumstances such as those in the main proceedings, as precluding legislation in a Member State the effect of which, as regards periods of duty time (Arbeitsbereitschaft') completed by emergency workers in the framework of the emergency medical service of a body such as the Deutsches Rotes Kreuz, is to permit, including by means of a collective agreement or works agreement based on such an agreement, the 48-hour maximum period of weekly working time laid down by that provision to be exceeded;

Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104 fulfils all the conditions necessary for it to have direct effect;

1. These references for a preliminary ruling concern the interpretation of Article 2 of Council Directive 89/391/EEC of 12 June 1989 on the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the safety and health of workers at work (OJ 1989 L 183, p. 1) and of Articles 1(3), 6 and 18(1)(b)(i) of Council Directive 93/104/EC of 23 November 1993 concerning certain aspects of the organisation of working time (OJ 1993 L 307, p. 18).

2. The references were made to the Court in various sets of proceedings between (i) Mr Pfeiffer, Mr Roith, Mr Süß, Mr Winter, Mr Nestvogel, Ms Zeller and Mr Döbele, who work or used to work as emergency workers, and (ii) Deutsches Rotes Kreuz, Kreisverband Waldshut eV (German Red Cross, Waldshut section (Deutsches Rotes Kreuz')), a body which employs or employed the claimants in the main actions. The proceedings concern German legislation providing for weekly working time in excess of 48 hours.

3. Directives 89/391 and 93/104 were adopted on the basis of Article 118a of the EC Treaty (Articles 117 to 120 of the EC Treaty have been replaced by Articles 136 EC to 143 EC).

4. Directive 89/391 is the framework directive which lays down general principles concerning the health and safety of workers. Those principles were subsequently developed by a series of specific directives, including Directive 93/104.

5. Article 2 of Directive 89/391 defines the scope of the directive as follows:

1. This Directive shall apply to all sectors of activity, both public and private (industrial, agricultural, commercial, administrative, service, educational, cultural, leisure, etc.).

2. This Directive shall not be applicable where characteristics peculiar to certain specific public service activities, such as the armed forces or the police, or to certain specific activities in the civil protection services inevitably conflict with it.

In that event, the safety and health of workers must be ensured as far as possible in the light of the objectives of this Directive.'

6. Article 1 of Directive 93/104, entitled Purpose and scope', provides as follows:

1. This Directive lays down minimum safety and health requirements for the organisation of working time.

2. This Directive applies to:

(a) minimum periods of daily rest, weekly rest and annual leave, to breaks and maximum weekly working time; and

(b) certain aspects of night work, shift work and patterns of work.

3. This Directive shall apply to all sectors of activity, both public and private, within the meaning of Article 2 of Directive 89/391/EEC, without prejudice to Article 17 of this Directive, with the exception of air, rail, road, sea, inland waterway and lake transport, sea fishing, other work at sea and the activities of doctors in training;

4. The provisions of Directive 89/391/EEC are fully applicable to the matters referred to in paragraph 2, without prejudice to more stringent and/or specific provisions contained in this Directive.'

7. Under the heading Definitions', Article 2 of Directive 93/104 provides:

For the purposes of this Directive, the following definitions shall apply:

1. working time shall mean any period during which the worker is working, at the employer's disposal and carrying out his activity or duties, in accordance with national laws and/or practice;

2. rest period shall mean any period which is not working time;

8. Section II of the directive lays down the measures which the Member States must take to ensure that all workers are afforded, inter alia, daily minimum rest periods and weekly rest periods and it also regulates maximum weekly working time.

9. So far as maximum weekly working time is concerned, Article 6 of Directive 93/104 provides:

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, in keeping with the need to protect the safety and health of workers:

...

2. the average working time for each 7-day period, including overtime, does not exceed 48 hours.'

10. Article 15 of Directive 93/104 provides:

This Directive shall not affect Member States' right to apply or introduce laws, regulations or administrative provisions more favourable to the protection of the safety and health of workers or to facilitate or permit the application of collective agreements or agreements concluded between the two sides of industry which are more favourable to the protection of the safety and health of workers.'

11. Article 16 of the directive provides:

Member States may lay down:

...

2. for the application of Article 6 (maximum weekly working time), a reference period not exceeding four months.

12. Directive 93/104 sets out a set of exceptions to a number of its basic rules, in view of the specific features of certain activities and subject to compliance with certain conditions. In that connection, Article 17 provides:

1. With due regard for the general principles of the protection of the safety and health of workers, Member States may derogate from Article 3, 4, 5, 6, 8 or 16 when, on account of the specific characteristics of the activity concerned, the duration of the working time is not measured and/or predetermined or can be determined by the workers themselves, and particularly in the case of:

(a) managing executives or other persons with autonomous decision-taking powers;

(b) family workers; or

(c) workers officiating at religious ceremonies in churches and religious communities.

2. Derogations may be adopted by means of laws, regulations or administrative provisions or by means of collective agreements or agreements between the two sides of industry provided that the workers concerned are afforded equivalent periods of compensatory rest or that, in exceptional cases in which it is not possible, for objective reasons, to grant such equivalent periods of compensatory rest, the workers concerned are afforded appropriate protection:

2.1 from Articles 3, 4, 5, 8 and 16:

(c) in the case of activities involving the need for continuity of service or production, particularly;

(i) services relating to the reception, treatment and/or care provided by hospitals or similar establishments, residential institutions and prisons;

(iii) press, radio, television, cinematographic production, postal and telecommunications services, ambulance, fire and civil protection services;

...

3. Derogations may be made from Articles 3, 4, 5, 8 and 16 by means of collective agreements or agreements concluded between the two sides of industry at national or regional level or, in conformity with the rules laid down by them, by means of collective agreements or agreements concluded between the two sides of industry at a lower level.

The derogations provided for in the first and second subparagraphs shall be allowed on condition that equivalent compensating rest periods are granted to the workers concerned or, in exceptional cases where it is not possible for objective reasons to grant such periods, the workers concerned are afforded appropriate protection.

4. The option to derogate from point 2 of Article 16, provided in paragraph 2, points 2.1 and 2.2 and in paragraph 3 of this Article, may not result in the establishment of a reference period exceeding six months.

However, Member States shall have the option, subject to compliance with the general principles relating to the protection of the safety and health of workers, of allowing, for objective or technical reasons or reasons concerning the organisation of work, collective agreements or agreements concluded between the two sides of industry to set reference periods in no event exceeding 12 months.

13. Article 18 of Directive 93/104 is worded as follows:

1. (a) Member States shall adopt the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with this Directive by 23 November 1996, or shall ensure by that date that the two sides of industry establish the necessary measures by agreement, with Member States being obliged to take any necessary steps to enable them to guarantee at all times that the provisions laid down by this Directive are fulfilled.

(b) (i) However, a Member State shall have the option not to apply Article 6, while respecting the general principles of the protection of the safety and health of workers, and provided it takes the necessary measures to ensure that:

- no employer requires a worker to work more than 48 hours over a 7-day period, calculated as an average for the reference period referred to in point 2 of Article 16, unless he has first obtained the worker's agreement to perform such work,

- no worker is subjected to any detriment by his employer because he is not willing to give his agreement to perform such work,

- the employer keeps up-to-date records of all workers who carry out such work,

- the records are placed at the disposal of the competent authorities, which may, for reasons connected with the safety and/or health of workers, prohibit or restrict the possibility of exceeding the maximum weekly working hours,

- the employer provides the competent authorities at their request with information on cases in which agreement has been given by workers to perform work exceeding 48 hours over a period of seven days, calculated as an average for the reference period referred to in point 2 of Article 16.

National legislation

14. German labour law distinguishes between duty time (Arbeitsbereitschaft'), on-call time (Bereitschaftsdienst') and stand-by time (Rufbereitschaft').

15. The three concepts are not defined by national legislation but their features derive from case-law.

16. Duty time (Arbeitsbereitschaft') covers the situation in which the worker must make himself available to his employer at the place of employment and is, moreover, obliged to remain continuously attentive in order to be able to act immediately should the need arise.

17. While a worker is on call (Bereitschaftsdienst'), he must be present at a place determined by his employer, either on or outside the latter's premises, and must keep himself available to take up his duties if so requested by his employer but he is authorised to rest or occupy himself as he sees fit as long as his services are not required.

18. Stand-by time (Rufbereitschaft') is characterised by the fact that the worker is not obliged to remain waiting in a place designated by the employer: it is sufficient for him to be reachable at any time so that he may be called upon at short notice to perform his professional tasks.

19. Under German labour law only duty time (Arbeitsbereitschaft') is, as a general rule, deemed to constitute full working time. Conversely, both on-call time (Bereitschaftsdienst') and stand-by time (Rufbereitschaft') are categorised as rest time, save for the part of the time during which the worker has in fact performed his professional tasks.

20. The German legislation on working time and rest periods is contained in the Arbeitszeitgesetz (Law on Working Time) of 6 June 1994 (BGBl. 1994 I, p. 1170; the ArbZG'), which was enacted to transpose Directive 93/104.

21. Paragraph 2(1) of the ArbZG defines working time as the period between the beginning and end of work, with the exception of breaks.

22. Paragraph 3 of the ArbZG provides:

Employees' daily working time must not exceed eight hours. It may be extended to a maximum of 10 hours but only on condition that an average 8-hour working day is not exceeded over 6 calendar months or 24 weeks.'

23. Paragraph 7 of the ArbZG is worded as follows:

(1) Under a collective agreement, or a works agreement based on a collective agreement, provision may be made:

1. by way of derogation from Paragraph 3,

(a) to extend working time beyond 10 hours per day, even without offset, where working time regularly includes significant periods of duty time (Arbeitsbereitschaft),

(b) to determine a different period of offset,

(c) to extend working time to 10 hours per day, without offset, for a maximum period of 60 days per year,

24. Paragraph 25 of the ArbZG provides:

Where, at the date of entry into force of this law, an existing collective agreement or one continuing to produce effects after that date contains derogating rules under Paragraph 7(1) and (2)..., which exceed the maximum limits laid down in the provisions cited, those rules shall not be affected. Works agreements based on collective agreements are deemed equivalent to collective agreements such as those mentioned in the first sentence...'

25. The Tarifvertrag über die Arbeitsbedingungen für Angestellte, Arbeiter und Auszubildende des Deutschen Roten Kreuzes (Collective agreement on working conditions for German Red Cross employees, workers and apprentices; the DRK-TV') includes the following provision:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Paragraph 14 Normal working time

(1) Normal working time, exclusive of breaks, shall be on average 39 hours (from 1 April 1990 38 and a half hours) per week. As a general rule, the average weekly working time shall be calculated on the basis of a period of 26 weeks.

In the case of workers who work in rotas or on shifts a longer period may be set.

(2) Normal working time may be extended...

(a) to 10 hours per day (49 hours per week on average) if it regularly includes duty time (Arbeitsbereitschaft) of at least 2 hours per day on average:

(b) to 11 hours per day (54 hours per week on average) if it regularly includes duty time (Arbeitsbereitschaft) of at least 3 hours per day on average,

(c) to 12 hours per day (60 hours per week on average) if the employee must merely be present at the work-place in order to carry out his duties should the need arise.

(5) The employee shall be required, if so directed by his employer, to remain outside normal working hours in a particular place selected by the employer, from where he may be called to work if the need arises (on-call time, Bereitschaftsdienst). The employer may require such on-call service only when some work is expected but, on the basis of experience, work-free time will predominate.

26. An observation in the following terms is made in respect of Paragraph 14(2) of the DRK-TV:

Where Annex 2 concerning staff in the emergency and ambulance services applies, regard is to be had to the notice concerning Paragraph 14(2) of the [DRK-TV].'

27. Annex 2 includes special provisions under the collective agreement for staff in the emergency and ambulance services. The relevant notice provides that the maximum weekly working time of 54 hours provided for in Paragraph 14(2)(b) of the DRK-TV is to be progressively reduced. As a consequence, with effect from 1 January 1993, provision is made for the maximum period to fall from 54 to 49 hours.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

28. Seven cases have given rise to these references for a preliminary ruling.

29. According to the documents available to the Court, the Deutsches Rotes Kreuz operates inter alia the land-based emergency service in a part of the Landkreis of Waldshut. The Deutsches Rotes Kreuz maintains the stations at Waldshut (Germany), Dettighoffen (Germany) and Bettmaringen (Germany), which are manned round the clock, and a station at Lauchringen (Germany), which is manned for 12 hours per day. Land-based emergency rescue is carried out by means of ambulances and emergency medical vehicles. An ambulance crew consists of two paramedics, whilst an emergency medical vehicle consists of an emergency worker and a doctor. When they are alerted of an emergency, these vehicles go to the relevant place in order to provide medical assistance to the patients. Subsequently, the patients are usually taken to hospital.

30. Mr Pfeiffer and Mr Nestvogel were formally employed by the Deutsches Rotes Kreuz as emergency workers, whilst the other claimants in the main proceedings were still employed by that body at the time when their actions before the national court were commenced.

31. The parties to the main proceedings are at odds in essence over whether, in calculating the period of maximum weekly working time, account should be taken of periods of duty time (Arbeitsbereitschaft') which the workers concerned have been required to do in the course of their employment in the service of the Deutsches Rotes Kreuz.

32. The actions brought by Mr Pfeiffer and Mr Nestvogel before the Arbeitsgericht Lörrach claim payment for hours they worked in excess of 48 hours per week. They claim that they were wrongly required to work more than 48 hours per week on average from June 2000 to March 2001. As a consequence, they asked the national court to order the Deutsches Rotes Kreuz to pay them DEM 4 335.45 gross (for 156.85 hours at the overtime rate of DEM 29.91 gross) and DEM 1 841.88 gross (for 66.35 hours at the overtime rate of DEM 27.76), together with interest for late payment.

33. As regards the actions brought by the other claimants in the proceedings before the national court, they seek to determine the maximum period which they must work per week for the Deutsches Rotes Kreuz.

34. The parties to the main proceedings agreed in their various contracts of employment that the DRK-TV should apply.

35. The Arbeitsgericht Lörrach found that, on the basis of the rules of the collective agreement, weekly working time in the emergency service operated by the Deutsches Rotes Kreuz was, on average, 49 hours. Normal working time was extended pursuant to Paragraph 14(2)(b) of the DRK-TV, given the obligation of those concerned to be available for duty (Arbeitsbereitschaft') for at least 3 hours per day on average.

36. The claimants in the main proceedings submit that the provision made by the Deutsches Rotes Kreuz to set weekly working time at 49 hours is unlawful. They rely in that connection on Directive 93/104 and on the judgment in Case C303/98 Simap [2000] ECR I7963. In their submission, Paragraph 14(2)(b) of the DRK-TV infringes Community law by providing for working time in excess of 48 hours per week. Furthermore, the rules of the collective agreement are not permissible under the derogation provided for in Paragraph 7(1)(i)(a) of the ArbZG. Indeed, the claimants in the main proceedings argue that the ArbZG does not correctly implement the provisions of Directive 93/104 in that respect. Accordingly, they submit that the derogation in the ArbZG must be interpreted in conformity with Community law and that if it is not, it does not apply at all.

37. Conversely, the Deutsches Rotes Kreuz contends that the actions should be dismissed. It maintains inter alia that its rules on the extension of working time comply with national legislation and the collective agreements.

38. With these cases before it, the Arbeitsgericht Lörrach is in doubt, first, as to whether the activity of the claimants in the main proceedings falls within the scope of Directive 93/104.

39. In the first place, Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104, which refers, as regards the directive's scope, to Article 2 of Directive 89/391, excludes from that scope a number of areas to the extent to which characteristics peculiar to certain specific activities inevitably conflict with it. However, in the referring court's view, that exclusion is intended to cover only those activities which aim to secure public safety and order, which are indispensable to the common good or which, owing to their nature, do not lend themselves to planning. It mentions, by way of example, major catastrophies. By contrast, emergency services should not be excluded from the scope of the two directives, even though emergency workers must be ready to respond round the clock, since the duties and working time of each of them remain amenable to planning.

40. Second, it is necessary to ascertain whether work in a land-based emergency service must be regarded as road transport' for the purposes of Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104. If that term were to be construed as including any activity in a vehicle travelling on the public highways, a service operated by means of ambulances and emergency medical vehicles would also have to be subsumed thereunder, since a significant part of that activity entails going to places where emergencies have occurred and conveying patients to hospital. However, the emergency service normally operates within a limited geographical area, in general within a Landkreis (provincial district), so the distances are not great and the operations are of limited duration. The work of a land-based emergency service is thus to be distinguished from the typical line of work in the road transport sector. Doubts none the less subsist on this point on account of the judgment in Case C76/97 Tögel [1998] ECR I5357, paragraph 40).

41. The referring court then asks whether the non-application of the 48-hour limit for the average working week as provided for under Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104 requires the express and unambiguous consent of the employee concerned or whether the employee's general consent to the application of a collective agreement as a whole is sufficient, since the latter provides inter alia for the possibility of weekly working time being extended beyond the 48-hour limit.

42. Finally, the Arbeitsgericht Lörrach asks whether Article 6 of Directive 93/104 is unconditional and sufficiently precise to be capable of being relied on by an individual before a national court in the event of a Member State having failed to implement the directive correctly. Under German law, if the provision at Paragraph 14(2)(b) of the DRKTV, which is applicable to the employment contracts concluded by the parties to the main proceedings, were covered by the provision made by the legislature in Paragraph 7(1)(i)(a) of the ArbZG, the latter would permit the employer to extend daily working time without compensation, with the result that the restriction of weekly working time to 48 hours on average which derives from Paragraph 3 of the ArbZG and from Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104 would be negated.

43. Taking the view that in those circumstances an interpretation of Community law was necessary to enable it to reach a decision in the cases before it, the Arbeitsgericht Lörrach decided to stay the proceedings and to refer to the Court for a preliminary ruling the following questions, which are cast in identical terms in Cases C397/01 to C403/01:

1. (a) Is the reference in Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104... to Article 2(2) of Directive 89/391..., under which [those] directives are not applicable where characteristics peculiar to certain specific activities in the civil protection services inevitably conflict with their application, to be construed as meaning that the claimants' activity as emergency workers is caught by this exclusion?

(b) Is the concept of road transport in Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 to be construed as meaning that only driving activity which is inherently long-distance and for which, consequently, working times cannot be fixed owing to the unforeseeability of problems are excluded from the scope of the directive, or is road transport within the meaning of this provision to be taken to include the activity of land-based emergency services, which comprises at least in part the driving of emergency vehicles and attendance on patients during the journey?

2. In view of the judgment of the Court in... Simap (paragraphs 73 and 74), is Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104 to be construed as meaning that consent given individually by a worker must expressly refer to the extension of working time to more than 48 hours per week, or may such consent also reside in the worker's agreeing with the employer, in the contract of employment, that working conditions are to be governed by a collective agreement which itself allows working time to be extended to more than 48 hours on average?

3. Is Article 6 of Directive 93/104 in itself unconditional and sufficiently precise to be capable of being relied on by individuals before national courts where the State has not properly transposed the directive into national law?'

44. By order of the President of the Court of 7 November 2001, Cases C397/01 to C403/01 were joined for the purposes of the written and oral procedure and the judgment.

45. By decision of 14 January 2003, the Court stayed proceedings in those cases until the hearing in Case C151/02 Jaeger [2003] ECR I-8389, in which judgment was delivered on 9 September 2003. That hearing took place on 25 February 2003.

46. By order of the Court of 13 January 2004, the oral procedure in Cases C397/01 to C403/01 was re-opened.

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

Question 1(a)

47. By Question 1(a), the national court is essentially asking whether Article 2 of Directive 89/391 and Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 must be interpreted as meaning that the activity of emergency workers, performed within an emergency medical service such as the service at issue in the main proceedings, falls within the scope of the directives.

48. In order to reply to that question, it must be borne in mind at the outset that Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 defines the scope of the directive by referring expressly to Article 2 of Directive 89/391. Therefore, before determining whether an activity such as that of emergency workers in attendance in an ambulance or emergency medical vehicle in the framework of a service run by the Deutsches Rotes Kreuz falls within the scope of Directive 93/104, it is first necessary to examine whether that activity is within the scope of Directive 89/391 (see the judgment in Simap , paragraphs 30 and 31).

49. By virtue of Article 2(1) of Directive 89/391, the latter applies to all sectors of activity, both public and private', which include service activities as a whole.

50. However, as is clear from the first subparagraph of Article 2(2), the directive is not applicable where characteristics peculiar to certain specific activities, particularly in the civil protection services, inevitably conflict with it.

51. It must none the less be held that the activity of emergency workers in attendance in an ambulance or emergency medical vehicle in the framework of an emergency service for the injured or sick, run by a body such as the Deutsches Rotes Kreuz, is not covered by the exclusion referred to in the preceding paragraph.

52. It is clear both from the purpose of Directive 89/391 (encouraging the improvement of the health and safety of workers at work) and from the wording of Article 2(1) thereof that the directive must be taken to be broad in scope. It follows that the exclusions from its scope provided for in the first subparagraph of Article 2(2) must be interpreted restrictively (see the judgment in Simap , paragraphs 34 and 35, and the order of 3 July 2001 in Case C-241/99 CIG [2001] ECR I-5139, paragraph 29).

53. Furthermore, the first subparagraph of Article 2(2) of Directive 89/391 excludes from the directive's scope not the civil protection services as such but solely certain specific activities' of those services, whose characteristics are such as inevitably to conflict with the rules laid down by the directive.

54. This exclusion from the broadly-defined field of application of Directive 89/391 must therefore be interpreted in such a way that its scope is restricted to what is strictly necessary in order to safeguard the interests which it allows the Member States to protect.

55. In that regard, the exclusion in the first subparagraph of Article 2(2) of Directive 89/391 was adopted purely for the purpose of ensuring the proper operation of services essential for the protection of public health, safety and order in cases, such as a catastrophe, the gravity and scale of which are exceptional and a characteristic of which is the fact that, by their nature, they do not lend themselves to planning as regards the working time of teams of emergency workers.

56. However, the civil protection service in the strict sense thus defined, at which the provision is aimed, can be clearly distinguished from the activities of emergency workers tending the injured and sick which are at issue in the main proceedings.

57. Even if a service such as the one with which the national court is concerned must deal with events which, by definition, are unforeseeable, the activities which it entails in normal conditions and which correspond moreover to the duties specifically assigned to a service of that kind are none the less capable of being organised in advance, including, in so far as they are concerned, the working hours of its staff.

58. The service thus exhibits no characteristic which inevitably conflicts with the application of the Community rules on the protection of the health and safety of workers and therefore is not covered by the exclusion in the first subparagraph of Article 2(2) of Directive 89/391, the directive instead applying to such a service.

59. It is apparent from the wording of Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 that it applies to all sectors of activity, both public and private, within the meaning of Article 2 of Directive 89/391, with the exception of certain specific activities which are exhaustively listed.

60. None of those activities is relevant in relation to a service such as the one at issue in the main proceedings. In particular, it is clear that the activity of workers who, in the framework of an emergency medical service, attend on patients in an ambulance or emergency medical vehicle is not comparable to the activity of trainee doctors, to which Directive 93/104 does not apply by virtue of Article 1(3) thereof.

61. Consequently, an activity such as that with which the national court is concerned also falls within the scope of Directive 93/104.

62. As the Commission rightly pointed out, further support is lent to that finding by the fact that Article 17(2), point 2.1(c)(iii), of Directive 93/104 expressly refers to, inter alia, ambulance services. Such a reference would be redundant if the activity referred to was already excluded from the scope of Directive 93/104 in its entirety by virtue of Article 1(3). Instead, that reference shows that the Community legislature laid down the principle that the directive is applicable to activities of such a kind, whilst providing for the option, in given circumstances, to derogate from certain specific provisions of the directive.

63. In those circumstances, the answer to be given to Question 1(a) is that Article 2 of Directive 89/391 and Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 must be construed as meaning that the activity of emergency workers, carried out in the framework of an emergency medical service such as that at issue before the national court, falls within the scope of the directives.

Question 1(b)

64. By Question 1(b), the national court is essentially asking whether, on a proper construction, the concept of road transport' in Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 encompasses the activity of an emergency medical service, on account of the fact that the activity consists, at least in part, of using a vehicle and attending the patient during the journey to hospital.

65. In that regard, it must be observed that under Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104, the latter [applies] to all sectors of activity... with the exception of air, rail, road, sea, inland waterway and lake transport ...'.

66. In its judgment in Case C133/00 Bowden and Others [2001] ECR I7031, the Court ruled that on a proper construction of Article 1(3) all workers employed in the road transport sector, including office staff, are excluded from the scope of that directive.

67. Since they are exceptions to the Community system for the organisation of working time put in place by Directive 93/104, the exclusions from the scope of the directive provided for in Article 1(3) must be interpreted in such a way that their scope is limited to what is strictly necessary in order to safeguard the interests which the exclusions are intended to protect (see, by analogy, the judgment in Jaeger , paragraph 89).

68. The transport sector was excluded from the scope of Directive 93/104 on the grounds that a Community regulatory framework already existed in that sector, which laid down specific rules for, inter alia, the organisation of working time on account of the special nature of the activity in question. That legislation does not apply, however, to transport for emergencies or assistance.

69. Furthermore, the judgment in Bowden is based on the fact that the employer belonged to one of the transport sectors specifically listed in Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 (see paragraphs 39 to 41 of the judgment). However, it can hardly be argued that when the Deutsches Rotes Kreuz operates an emergency medical service such as that at issue in the main proceedings its activity pertains to the road transport sector.

70. The fact that that activity includes using an emergency vehicle and accompanying the patient on his journey to hospital is not decisive, since the main purpose of the activity concerned is to provide initial medical treatment to a person who is ill or injured and not to carry out an operation relating to the road transport sector.

71. Furthermore, it is necessary to bear in mind that ambulance services are specifically included in Article 17(2), point 2.1(c)(iii), of Directive 93/104. Their inclusion, which is intended to enable there to be a derogation from certain specific provisions of the directive, would be redundant if such services were already excluded from the field of application of the directive in its entirety pursuant to Article 1(3) thereof.

72. In those circumstances, the concept of road transport' in Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 does not encompass an emergency medical service such as that at issue in the main proceedings.

73. That interpretation is not undermined by the judgment in Tögel , to which the national court refers, since the subject-matter of the judgment was not the interpretation of Directive 93/104 but rather that of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (JO 1992 L 209, p. 1), the contents and purpose of which are wholly irrelevant for the purpose of determining the scope of Directive 93/104.

74. In the light of all of the foregoing considerations, the answer to Question 1(b) must be that, on a proper construction, the concept of road transport' in Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 does not encompass the activity of an emergency medical service, even though the latter includes using a vehicle and accompanying a patient on his journey to hospital.

75. By its second question, the national court is asking in substance whether the first indent of Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104 is to be construed as requiring consent to be expressly and freely given by each worker individually if the 48-hour maximum period of weekly working time, as laid down in Article 6 of the directive, is to be validly extended or whether it is sufficient in that regard that the relevant person's employment contract refers to a collective agreement which permits such an extension.

76. In order to reply to the question formulated in this manner, it must be borne in mind, first, that it is apparent from Article 118a of the Treaty, the legal basis for Directive 93/104, from the first, fourth, seventh and eighth recitals in the preamble to the directive and from the actual wording of Article 1(1) of the directive that its objective is to guarantee the better protection of the safety and health of workers by affording them minimum rest periods - especially on a daily and weekly basis -and adequate breaks and by providing for an upper limit on weekly working time.

77. Second, under the system established by Directive 93/104, only some of its provisions, which are exhaustively listed, may form the subject-matter of derogations by the Member States or the two sides of industry. Furthermore, the implementation of such derogations is subject to strict conditions intended to secure effective protection for the safety and health of workers.

78. Thus, Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104 provides that Member States have the right not to apply Article 6 provided that they observe the general principles of the protection of the safety and health of workers and that they satisfy a certain number of conditions set out cumulatively in Article 18(1)(b)(i).

79. In particular, the first indent of Article 18(1)(b)(i) requires that working time should not exceed 48 hours over a 7-day period, calculated as an average for the reference period referred to in point 2 of Article 16 of Directive 93/104, the worker none the less being able to agree to work more than 48 hours per week.

80. In that regard, the Court has already held, in paragraph 73 of the judgment in Simap , that, as is apparent from its actual wording, the first indent of Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104 requires the consent of the individual worker.

81. In paragraph 74 of Simap , the Court concluded that the consent given by trade-union representatives in the context of a collective or other agreement is not equivalent to that given by the worker himself, as provided for in the first indent of Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104.

82. That interpretation derives from the objective of Directive 93/104, which seeks to guarantee the effective protection of the safety and health of workers by ensuring that they actually have the benefit of, inter alia, an upper limit on weekly working time and minimum rest periods. Any derogation from those minimum requirements must therefore be accompanied by all the safeguards necessary to ensure that, if the worker concerned is encouraged to relinquish a social right which has been directly conferred on him by the directive, he must do so freely and with full knowledge of all the facts. Those requirements are all the more important given that the worker must be regarded as the weaker party to the employment contract and it is therefore necessary to prevent the employer being in a position to disregard the intentions of the other party to the contract or to impose on that party a restriction of his rights without him having expressly given his consent in that regard.

83. Those considerations are equally relevant so far as the situation described in the second question is concerned.

84. It follows that, for a derogation from the maximum period of weekly working time laid down in Article 6 of Directive 93/104 (48 hours) to be valid, the worker's consent must be given not only individually but also expressly and freely.

85. Those conditions are not met where the worker's employment contract merely refers to a collective agreement authorising an extension of maximum weekly working time. It is by no means certain that, when he entered into such a contract, the worker concerned knew of the restriction of the rights conferred on him by Directive 93/104.

86. The answer to the second question must therefore be that the first indent of Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104 is to be construed as requiring consent to be expressly and freely given by each worker individually if the 48-hour maximum period of weekly working time, as laid down in Article 6 of the directive, is to be validly extended. In that connection, it is not sufficient that the relevant worker's employment contract refers to a collective agreement which permits such an extension.

The third question

87. By its third question, the national court is essentially asking whether, if Directive 93/104 has been implemented incorrectly, Article 6(2) thereof may be taken to have direct effect.

88. As is clear both from its wording and from the context in which it occurs, there are two aspects to that question: the first concerns the interpretation of Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104 for the purpose of enabling the national court to decide whether the relevant rules of national law are compatible with the requirements of Community law, whilst the second concerns whether, if the Member State concerned has transposed Article 6(2) into national law incorrectly, that provision satisfies the conditions which would enable an individual to rely on it before the national courts in circumstances such as those in the main proceedings.

89. Those two issues must be examined in turn.

The import of Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104

90. As a preliminary point, it must be observed that Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104 requires the Member States to take the measures necessary to ensure, as a function of the requirement for the protection of workers' safety and health, that the average working time for each 7-day period, including overtime, does not exceed 48 hours.

91. It is apparent from Article 118a of the Treaty, which is the legal basis for Directive 93/104, from the first, fourth, seventh and eighth recitals in the preamble to the directive, from the Community Charter of the Fundamental Social Rights of Workers, adopted at the meeting of the European Council held at Strasbourg on 9 December 1989, points 8 and 19, first subparagraph, thereof, which are referred to in the fourth recital to the directive, and from the actual wording of Article 1(1) of the directive that the latter's purpose is to lay down minimum requirements intended to improve the living and working conditions of workers through approximation of national provisions concerning, in particular, the duration of working time. This Community-level harmonisation of the organisation of working time seeks to guarantee a better level of protection of the safety and health of workers by ensuring that they are entitled to minimum rest periods - particularly daily and weekly - and adequate breaks (see Jaeger , paragraphs 45 to 47).

92. Thus, Directive 93/104 imposes more specifically (in Article 6(2)) a 48-hour limit for the average working week, a maximum which is expressly stated to include overtime.

93. In that context, the Court has already held that on-call time (Bereitschaftsdienst'), where the worker is required to be physically present at a place specified by his employer, must be regarded as wholly working time for the purposes of Directive 93/104, irrespective of the fact that, during periods of on-call time, the person concerned is not continuously carrying on any professional activity (see Jaeger , paragraphs 71, 75 and 103).

94. The same must be true of periods of duty time (Arbeitsbereitschaft') completed by emergency workers in the framework of an emergency service, which necessarily entails periods of inactivity of varying length in between calls.

95. Such periods of duty time must accordingly b e taken into account in their totality in the calculation of maximum daily and weekly working time.

96. Furthermore, it is evident that under the system established by Directive 93/104, although Article 15 allows generally for the application or introduction of national provisions more favourable to the protection of the safety and health of employees, only certain specifically mentioned provisions of the directive may form the subject-matter of derogations by the Member States or social partners

97. However, in the first place, Article 6 of Directive 93/104 is referred to only in Article 17(1) and it is undisputed that the latter provision covers activities which bear no relation at all to those carried out by emergency workers such as the claimants in the main proceedings. By contrast, Article 17(2), point 2.1(c)(iii), refers to activities involving the need for continuity of service', including in particular ambulance services', but this provision gives scope for derogating from only Articles 3, 4, 5, 8 and 16 of the directive.

98. In the second place, Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104 provides that the Member States have the right not to apply Article 6 provided that they observe the general principles of protection of the safety and health of workers and that they satisfy a number of conditions set out cumulatively in Article 18(1)(b)(i), but it is not disputed that the Federal Republic of Germany has not availed itself of that option to derogate (see Jaeger , paragraph 85).

99. Moreover, by virtue of the Court's case-law the Member States cannot unilaterally determine the scope of the provisions of Directive 93/104 by attaching conditions or restrictions to the implementation of the workers' right under Article 6(2) of the directive not to work more than 48 hours per week (see, to that effect, Jaeger , paragraphs 58 and 59). Any other interpretation would misconstrue the purpose of the directive, which is intended to secure effective protection of the safety and health of workers by allowing them to enjoy minimum periods of rest (see Jaeger , paragraphs 70 and 92).

100. In those circumstances, it must be concluded that, in view of both the wording of Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104 and the purpose and scheme of the directive, the 48-hour upper limit on average weekly working time, including overtime, constitutes a rule of Community social law of particular importance from which every worker must benefit, since it is a minimum requirement necessary to ensure protection of his safety and health (see, by analogy, Case C173/99 BECTU [2001] ECR I-4881, paragraphs 43 and 47), and therefore national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which authorises weekly working time in excess of 48 hours, including periods of duty time (Arbeitsbereitschaft'), is not compatible with the requirements of Article 6(2) of the directive.

101. Accordingly, the answer to the third question, as regards the first aspect, is that Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104 must be interpreted, in circumstances such as those in the main proceedings, as precluding legislation in a Member State the effect of which, as regards periods of duty time (Arbeitsbereitschaft') completed by emergency workers in the framework of the emergency medical service of a body such as the Deutsches Rotes Kreuz, is to permit, including by means of a collective agreement or works agreement based on such an agreement, the 48-hour maximum period of weekly working time laid down by that provision to be exceeded.

The direct effect of Article 6(2) Directive 93/104 and the ensuing consequences in the cases before the national court

102. Since, in circumstances such as those in the main proceedings, the relevant national legislation is not compatible with the requirements of Directive 93/104 as regards maximum weekly working time, it remains to be considered whether Article 6(2) of the directive fulfils the conditions for it to have direct effect.

103. In that regard, it is clear from the settled case-law of the Court that, whenever the provisions of a directive appear, so far as their subject-matter is concerned, to be unconditional and sufficiently precise, they may be relied upon before the national courts by individuals against the State where the latter has failed to implement the directive in domestic law by the end of the period prescribed or where it has failed to implement the directive correctly (see, inter alia, Joined Cases C6/90 and C9/90 Francovich and Others [1991] ECR I5357, paragraph 11, and Case C62/00 Marks & Spencer [2002] ECR I6325, paragraph 25).

104. Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104 satisfies those criteria, since it imposes on Member States in unequivocal terms a precise obligation as to the result to be achieved, which is not coupled with any condition regarding application of the rule laid down by it, which provides for a 48-hour maximum, including overtime, as regards average weekly working time.

105. Even though Directive 93/104 leaves the Member States a degree of latitude when they adopt rules in order to implement it, particularly as regards the reference period to be fixed for the purposes of applying Article 6 of that directive, and even though it also permits them to derogate from Article 6, those factors do not alter the precise and unconditional nature of Article 6(2). First, it is clear from the wording of Article 17(4) of the directive that the reference period can never exceed 12 months and, second, the Member States' right not to apply Article 6 is subject to compliance with all the conditions set out in Article 18(1)(b)(i) of the directive. It is therefore possible to determine the minimum protection which must be provided in any event (see, to that effect, Simap , paragraphs 68 and 69).

106. As a consequence, Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104 fulfils all the conditions necessary for it to produce direct effect.

107. It still remains to determine the legal consequences which a national court must derive from that interpretation in circumstances such as those in the main proceedings, which involve individuals.

108. In that regard, the Court has consistently held that a directive cannot of itself impose obligations on an individual and cannot therefore be relied upon as such against an individual (see, inter alia, Case 152/84 Marshall [1986] ECR 723, paragraph 48; Case C-91/92 Faccini Dori [1994] ECR I3325, paragraph 20; and Case C-201/02 Wells [2004] ECR I0000, paragraph 56).

109. It follows that even a clear, precise and unconditional provision of a directive seeking to confer rights or impose obligations on individuals cannot of itself apply in proceedings exclusively between private parties.

110. However, it is apparent from case-law which has also been settled since the judgment of 10 April 1984 in Case 14/83 Von Colson and Kamann [1984] ECR 1891, paragraph 26, that the Member States' obligation arising from a directive to achieve the result envisaged by the directive and their duty under Article 10 EC to take all appropriate measures, whether general or particular, to ensure the fulfilment of that obligation is binding on all the authorities of Member States including, for matters within their jurisdiction, the courts (see, inter alia, Case C106/89 Marleasing [1990] ECR I-4135, paragraph 8; Faccini Dori , paragraph 26; Case C126/96 Inter-Environnement Wallonie [1997] ECR I-7411, paragraph 40; and Case C131/97 Carbonari and Others [1999] ECR I1103, paragraph 48).

111. It is the responsibility of the national courts in particular to provide the legal protection which individuals derive from the rules of Community law and to ensure that those rules are fully effective.

112. That is a fortiori the case when the national court is seised of a dispute concerning the application of domestic provisions which, as here, have been specifically enacted for the purpose of transposing a directive intended to confer rights on individuals. The national court must, in the light of the third paragraph of Article 249 EC, presume that the Member State, following its exercise of the discretion afforded it under that provision, had the intention of fulfilling entirely the obligations arising from the directive concerned (see Case C334/92 Wagner Miret [1993] ECR I-6911, paragraph 20).

113. Thus, when it applies domestic law, and in particular legislative provisions specifically adopted for the purpose of implementing the requirements of a directive, the national court is bound to interpret national law, so far as possible, in the light of the wording and the purpose of the directive concerned in order to achieve the result sought by the directive and consequently comply with the third paragraph of Article 249 EC (see to that effect, inter alia, the judgments cited above in Von Colson and Kamann , paragraph 26; Marleasing , paragraph 8, and Faccini Dori , paragraph 26; see also Case C63/97 BMW [1999] ECR I905, paragraph 22; Joined Cases C240/98 to C244/98 Océano Grupo Editorial and Salvat Editores [2000] ECR I-4941, paragraph 30; and Case C408/01 Adidas-Salomon and Adidas Benelux [2003] ECR I-0000, paragraph 21).

114. The requirement for national law to be interpreted in conformity with Community law is inherent in the system of the Treaty, since it permits the national court, for the matters within its jurisdiction, to ensure the full effectiveness of Community law when it determines the dispute before it (see, to that effect, Case C160/01 Mau [2003] ECR I-4791, paragraph 34).

115. Although the principle that national law must be interpreted in conformity with Community law concerns chiefly domestic provisions enacted in order to implement the directive in question, it does not entail an interpretation merely of those provisions but requires the national court to consider national law as a whole in order to assess to what extent it may be applied so as not to produce a result contrary to that sought by the directive (see, to that effect, Carbonari , paragraphs 49 and 50).

116. In that context, if the application of interpretative methods recognised by national law enables, in certain circumstances, a provision of domestic law to be construed in such a way as to avoid conflict with another rule of domestic law or the scope of that provision to be restricted to that end by applying it only in so far as it is compatible with the rule concerned, the national court is bound to use those methods in order to achieve the result sought by the directive.

117. In such circumstances, the national court, when hearing cases which, like the present proceedings, fall within the scope of Directive 93/104 and derive from facts postdating expiry of the period for implementing the directive, must, when applying the provisions of national law specifically intended to implement the directive, interpret those provisions so far as possible in such a way that they are applied in conformity with the objectives of the directive (see, to that effect, the judgment in Case C456/98 Centrosteel [2000] ECR I6007, paragraphs 16 and 17).

118. In this instance, the principle of interpretation in conformity with Community law thus requires the referring court to do whatever lies within its jurisdiction, having regard to the whole body of rules of national law, to ensure that Directive 93/104 is fully effective, in order to prevent the maximum weekly working time laid down in Article 6(2) of the directive from being exceeded (see, to that effect, Marleasing , paragraphs 7 and 13).

119. Accordingly, it must be concluded that, when hearing a case between individuals, a national court is required, when applying the provisions of domestic law adopted for the purpose of transposing obligations laid down by a directive, to consider the whole body of rules of national law and to interpret them, so far as possible, in the light of the wording and purpose of the directive in order to achieve an outcome consistent with the objective pursued by the directive. In the main proceedings, the national court must thus do whatever lies within its jurisdiction to ensure that the maximum period of weekly working time, which is set at 48 hours by Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104, is not exceeded.

120. In view of all the foregoing reasoning, the answer to the third question must be that:

- Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104 must be interpreted, in circumstances such as those in the main proceedings, as precluding legislation in a Member State the effect of which, as regards periods of duty time (Arbeitsbereitschaft') completed by emergency workers in the framework of the emergency medical service of a body such as the Deutsches Rotes Kreuz, is to permit, including by means of a collective agreement or works agreement based on such an agreement, the 48-hour maximum period of weekly working time laid down by that provision to be exceeded;

- the provision fulfils all the conditions necessary for it to have direct effect;

- when hearing a case between individuals, the national court is required, when applying the provisions of domestic law adopted for the purpose of transposing obligations laid down by a directive, to consider the whole body of rules of national law and to interpret them, so far as possible, in the light of the wording and purpose of the directive in order to achieve an outcome consistent with the objective pursued by the directive. In the main proceedings, the national court must thus do whatever lies within its jurisdiction to ensure that the maximum period of weekly working time, which is set at 48 hours by Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104, is not exceeded.

Opinion of Mr Advocate General Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer delivered on 6 May 2003. Bernhard Pfeiffer (C-397/01), Wilhelm Roith (C-398/01), Albert Süß (C-399/01), Michael Winter (C-400/01), Klaus Nestvogel (C-401/01), Roswitha Zeller (C-402/01) and Matthias Döbele (C-403/01) v Deutsches Rotes Kreuz, Kreisverband Waldshut eV. Reference for a preliminary ruling: Arbeitsgericht Lörrach - Germany. Social policy - Protection of the health and safety of workers - Directive 93/104/EC - Scope - Emergency workers in attendance in ambulances in the framework of an emergency service run by the German Red Cross - Definition of 'road transport' - Maximum weekly working time - Principle - Direct effect - Derogation - Conditions. Joined cases C-397/01 to C-403/01.

1. The Arbeitsgericht (Labour Court), Lörrach, Germany, which rules at first instance on employment matters, has referred to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling three questions regarding the interpretation of various provisions of Directive 93/104/EC concerning certain aspects of the organisation of working time. (2) The questions relate specifically to Article 1, which defines the scope of the directive; to Article 6, which establishes maximum weekly working time; and to Article 18(1)(b)(i), which provides for Article 6 to be disapplied in certain circumstances.

I - The facts of the main proceedings

2. The national court has submitted to the Court of Justice seven orders referring questions for preliminary rulings in seven separate disputes. In view of the fact that the questions in each dispute are identical and the facts similar, the seven cases were joined in the written stage of the procedure by Order of the President dated 7 November 2001.

3. All the plaintiffs are rescue workers who are qualified to provide emergency medical assistance and to operate patient transport, are employees or former employees of the German Red Cross (Deutsches Rotes Kreuz), and are seeking payment for overtime in two cases, and confirmation of their right not to work more than 48 hours per week in the other cases.

4. The defendant provides, inter alia, land-based emergency medical assistance services in part of the district of Waldshut, and operates several rescue posts which are open 24 hours and one which is only operational for 12 hours during the day. The service is effected using ambulances manned by two rescue workers or paramedics (Rettungtransportfahrzuegen), and by ambulances manned by a doctor accompanied by a rescue worker or a paramedic (Notarzt-Einsatzfahrzeugen).

When the alert is given, the rescue vehicles go to the place where the injured or sick person is to provide medical assistance. Usually, the vehicles then transport the patient to hospital.

5. In their employment contracts, it was agreed by the parties that the provisions of the Collective Agreement on Working Conditions for German Red Cross Employees, Workers and Trainees (Tarifvertrag über Arbeitsbedingungen für Angestellte, Arbeiter und Auszubildende des Deutschen Roten Kreuzes), hereinafter referred to as the Red Cross collective agreement', would be applicable.

6. In accordance with the provisions of that collective agreement, the average working time in the undertaking's emergency medical assistance service is 49 hours per week. It is common ground that the substantive requirements for extending the working hours, which are set out in Article 14(2)(b) of the collective agreement and entail the performance of stand-by duty (Arbeitsbereitschaft) of at least three hours per day, are met.

II - The applicable German legislation

7. In Germany, working time and rest periods are governed by the Law on working time (Arbeitszeitgesetz) of 6 June 1994, which was adopted in order to transpose Directive 93/104 into national law.

8. Under Paragraph 2(1), working time is defined as the time between the beginning and the end of the working day, excluding breaks. Under Paragraph 3, working time must not exceed eight hours per working day, although it may be increased to 10 hours if the average period of working time over six calendar months, or 24 weeks, does not exceed eight hours per working day.

9. Under Paragraph 7(1)(1), by way of derogation from Article 3, under a collective or works agreement:

(a) the working day may be extended beyond 10 hours, even without compensation, where working time regularly includes a significant period of time spent on stand-by;

(b) the compensatory rest time may be postponed; and

(c) working hours may be extended, without compensation, to up to 10 hours per day for a maximum of 60 days per year.

10. Under Article 14(1) of the German Red Cross Collective Agreement, weekly working time, excluding breaks, must not exceed 39 hours (38ì hours with effect from 1 April 1990) per week. The average is usually calculated over a 26-week period.

In accordance with Article 14(2), normal working time may be increased to: (a) an average of 10 hours per day or 49 hours per week, if it includes a period of standby duty of at least two hours per day on average; (b) an average of 11 hours per day or 54 hours per week if the period of standby duty is three hours; and (c) an average of 12 hours per day or 60 hours per week if the employee remains in the workplace but only works when he is asked to do so.

Annex 2 contains special rules for staff in the emergency services. When the annex is applied to rescue workers attached to the ambulance service and to transport staff, account must be taken of the note on Article 14(2), pursuant to which the maximum working time of 54 hours per week, referred to in Article 14(2)(b), must be progressively reduced. From 1 January 1993, it was reduced to 49 hours.

III - The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

11. Before ruling on the disputes, the Arbeitsgericht Lörrach decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

(1) (a) Is the reference in Article 1(3) of Council Directive 93/104/EC ... to Article 2(2) of Council Directive 89/391/EEC of 12 June 1989 on the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the safety and health of workers at work, (3) under which the provisions of the directives are not applicable where characteristics peculiar to certain specific activities in the civil protection services inevitably conflict with their application, to be construed as meaning that the activity of the applicant, who is a qualified worker in the emergency medical assistance service, is caught by this exclusion?

(1) (b) Does the concept of road transport, for the purposes of Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104/EC, exclude from the scope of the directive only those driving activities in which, by their nature, great distances are covered and where working times cannot be fixed owing to the unforeseeability of any difficulties, or, alternatively, does it include rescue vehicle services, which comprise, at least in part, the driving of such vehicles and attendance on patients during the journey?

(2) In view of the judgment in Simap , (4) does Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104/EC require the express consent of an employee in order to extend the weekly working time to more than 48 hours, or, alternatively, does it suffice if it is agreed in the contract of employment that the working conditions are those established by collective agreements which allow weekly working time to be extended to more than 48 hours on average?

(3) Is the wording of Article 6 of Directive 93/104/EC sufficiently precise and unconditional to be capable of being relied upon by individuals before national courts where the State has not properly transposed the directive into national law?'

IV - The Community legislation

12. An interpretation of the following provisions is sought:

Directive 89/391

2. This Directive shall not be applicable where characteristics peculiar to certain specific public service activities, such as the armed forces or the police, or to certain specific activities in the civil protection services inevitably conflict with it.

In that event, the safety and health of workers must be ensured as far as possible in the light of the objectives of this Directive.'

Directive 93/104

...

3. This Directive shall apply to all sectors of activity, both public and private, within the meaning of Article 2 of Directive 89/391/EEC, without prejudice to Article 17 of this Directive, with the exception of air, rail, road, sea, inland waterway and lake transport, sea fishing, other work at sea and the activities of doctors in training;

...'

Article 6

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, in keeping with the need to protect the safety and health of workers:

1. the period of weekly working time is limited by means of laws, regulations or administrative provisions or by collective agreements or agreements between the two sides of industry;

2. the average working time for each seven-day period, including overtime, does not exceed 48 hours.'

(b) (i) However, a Member State shall have the option not to apply Article 6, while respecting the general principles of the protection of the safety and health of workers, and provided it takes the necessary measures to ensure that:

- no employer requires a worker to work more than 48 hours over a seven-day period, calculated as an average for the reference period referred to in point 2 of Article 16, unless he has first obtained the worker's agreement to perform such work,

- no worker is subjected to any detriment by his employer because he is not willing to give his agreement to perform such work,

- the employer keeps up-to-date records of all workers who carry out such work,

- the records are placed at the disposal of the competent authorities, which may, for reasons connected with the safety and/or health of workers, prohibit or restrict the possibility of exceeding the maximum weekly working hours,

- the employer provides the competent authorities at their request with information on cases in which agreement has been given by workers to perform work exceeding 48 hours over a period of seven days, calculated as an average for the reference period referred to in point 2 of Article 16.

Before the expiry of a period of seven years from the date referred to in (a), the Council shall, on the basis of a Commission proposal accompanied by an appraisal report, re-examine the provisions of this point (i) and decide on what action to take.

V - Proceedings before the Court of Justice

13. Written observations in these proceedings were submitted, within the period laid down in Article 20 of the EC Statute of the Court of Justice, by the plaintiffs in the main proceedings and the Commission.

In view of the fact that none of the parties applied to present oral argument, the Court decided not to hold a hearing, in accordance with Article 104(4) of the Rules of Procedure.

VI - The observations submitted

14. It is the view of the plaintiffs in the main proceedings that the German Red Cross Collective Agreement allows the employer to decide unilaterally the average weekly working time, without the agreement of the employee, in the event that it is necessary to organise stand-by services at work. German academic opinion and case-law have defined such periods of duty, which are regarded as working time, as periods of active wakefulness under relaxed conditions. A collective agreement of this nature is contrary to Directive 93/104, since it provides for weekly working time to exceed 48 hours, from which it follows that, since the collective agreement complies with Paragraph 7(1)(1)(a) of the Law on working time, the German legislature has failed to implement correctly the provisions of the directive.

15. The Commission maintains that time spent by rescue workers on standby duty in their posts amounts to working time, which means that the activity they carry out is not covered by the exclusion in Article 2(2) of Directive 89/391 and is, therefore, included in the scope of Directive 93/104. The Commission also asserts that employees whose employer's activity is not in the road transport sector are not covered by the exclusion in respect of such activities which is laid down in Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104, even where the undertaking's activity includes the transport of goods or people. In the Commission's view, in order for weekly working time to exceed 48 hours, all the conditions set out in Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104 must be satisfied, including the condition which calls for the worker's express agreement. For that purpose, it will not suffice if the worker is merely aware that the employment relationship is governed by a collective agreement which allows for the weekly working time to be extended. The Commission argues that the wording of Article 6 of Directive 93/104 is sufficiently precise and unconditional to enable individuals to rely on it before national courts where a Member State has failed to implement it correctly.

In such cases, the court must interpret national law in the light of the wording and purpose of the directive in order to achieve the result pursued.

VII - Analysis of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

16. By the first question, which is in two parts, the national court asks the Court of Justice to define the scope of Directive 93/104, with a view to clarifying whether it covers the activity carried out by the plaintiffs in the main proceedings.

A - The first part of the first question

17. The Arbeitsgericht wishes to ascertain, firstly, whether Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 and Article 2 of Directive 89/391 exclude from the scope of the directives the activity of rescue workers who work in an emergency medical assistance service.

18. As the Court pointed out in Simap , (5) Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 defines its scope first by referring expressly to Article 2 of Directive 89/391 and, second, by providing for a number of exceptions in relation to certain specified activities. Accordingly, in order to determine whether the work of rescue workers in an emergency medical assistance service falls within the scope of Directive 93/104, it is necessary first to consider whether it is covered by Directive 89/391.

19. In accordance with Article 2(1) of Directive 89/391, the directive applies to all sectors of activity, both public and private, and in particular to industrial, agricultural, commercial, administrative, service, educational, cultural and leisure activities. However, Article 2(2) provides that the directive is not applicable where characteristics peculiar to certain specific public service activities, such as the armed forces or the police, or to the civil protection services, inevitably conflict with it.

20. In Simap , (6) the Court found that the specific public service activities, referred to in the provision, are intended to uphold public order and security, which are essential for the proper functioning of society, and that, under normal circumstances, the activities of medical staff who carry out on-call duty cannot be assimilated to such activities.

21. In the case before the Court, it is necessary to confirm whether the emergency medical assistance service provided by the Red Cross rescue workers is part of the civil protection services. In the event that the answer to that question is in the affirmative, it will then be appropriate to examine whether the treatment is included among the specific activities whose characteristics would inevitably preclude the application to them of Directive 93/104 on the organisation of working time.

22. As the Court also noted in Simap , (7) it is clear both from the object of Directive 89/391, namely to encourage improvements in the safety and health of workers at work, and from the wording of Article 2(1) thereof, that it must necessarily be broad in scope. It follows that the exceptions, including that provided for in Article 2(2), must be interpreted restrictively.

23. Usually, civil protection is a public service whose principal aim is to ensure the safety of people and property in situations involving a serious risk to the public, disasters and major catastrophes, where the safety and the lives of individuals could be in danger.

24. The aim of an urgent medical assistance service provided by doctors and rescue workers in ambulances, such as that which is operated by the Red Cross in the main proceedings, is to provide first aid to patients and to transport them in the right conditions to receive the medical treatment they need. Civil protection is intended to deal with general emergencies and it does not, therefore, include the activity carried out by the above medical service under normal circumstances.

25. In the event of a catastrophe or disaster, the public authorities supply the human and material resources available to them, while also relying on organisations and undertakings, and even on individuals, should the need arise. In such exceptional circumstances, there can be no doubt that any ambulance service would be under an obligation to contribute its manpower and equipment to civil protection duties.

26. To my mind, the exclusion of certain specific civil protection service activities from the scope of the directive can be attributed to a number of reasons. The first is the diversity and magnitude of emergency situations, of the needs they generate and of the human and material resources which must be mobilised in a short space of time. The second is that the activity of the civil protection services is performed using the organisation, planning, coordination and management systems of a number of public and private services, vis-à-vis the danger to be tackled. The third reason is that the civil protection services are entitled to call upon all the residents of a country to perform individual tasks, and they may also request the participation of the security services, the emergency medical assistance services, the public and private fire services, and even the media.

Those features highlight not only the unforeseeable nature of the activities of the civil protection services, but also the fact that the majority of people who are called upon to participate in the event of a disaster are employed in undertakings which rescue and assist people and recover property. When such people take part in a rescue operation, they perform the tasks for which they are qualified, in accordance with the measures for the protection against and prevention of risks which have been adopted in their undertaking pursuant to national legislation implementing Directive 89/391. Finally, since, in the majority of cases, the civil protection services do not operate in the same way as employee-based structures, it is logical that they should not fall within the scope of a directive designed to encourage improvements in the safety and health of workers.

27. As I have already pointed out, the scope ratione materiae of Directive 89/391 is very wide, and, under normal circumstances, includes the activity of the Red Cross, namely the provision of ambulance-based emergency medical assistance. Where, in the event of a national catastrophe or disaster, the Red Cross is called upon to assist by the civil protection services, Red Cross employees are required to perform the same, or similar, tasks as those which they normally carry out; accordingly, the obligations relating to the safety and health of workers, laid down in Directive 89/391, remain unchanged. Therefore, it cannot be claimed that characteristics peculiar to that activity inevitably conflict with the application of the directive to it.

Consequently, the disputed activity falls within the scope of Directive 89/391, both under normal circumstances and in cases where, in the event of a catastrophe, the Red Cross assists the civil protection services.

28. As concerns the material scope of Directive 93/104, I note that, apart from sectors which provide certain forms of transport, and carry out fishing and maritime activities, the only other exclusion applies to the work of doctors in training. (8)

Since the activity of rescue workers in an emergency medical assistance service is not included among the exclusions laid down, Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 and Article 2 of Directive 89/391 must be construed as meaning that such activity falls within the scope of both directives.

B - The second part of the first question

29. The Arbeitsgericht goes on to consider the concept of road transport in Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104, in so far as it is excluded from the scope of the directive, in order to ascertain whether that sector includes the activity of an emergency rescue service which consists, at least in part, of driving vehicles and attending to patients during the journey.

30. The Court ruled on the aim of Directive 93/104 in BECTU , (9) noting that it is clear both from Article 118a of the Treaty, (10) which is its legal basis, and from the first, fourth, seventh and eighth recitals in its preamble, as well as the wording of Article 1(1), that the purpose of the directive is to lay down minimum requirements intended to improve the living and working conditions of workers through approximation of national provisions concerning, in particular, the duration of working time. The Court went on to say that harmonisation at Community level is intended to guarantee better protection of the health and safety of workers, so that they are entitled to minimum rest periods and adequate breaks.

31. Thus, Directive 93/104 sets out the minimum health and safety requirements for the organisation of working time, which apply to minimum periods of daily and weekly rest, annual leave, breaks, and maximum weekly working time, as well as to certain aspects of night work, shift work and patterns of work.

32. In my view, road transport is excluded from the scope of Directive 93/104 because, when the directive was adopted, there was already Community legislation in place containing more specific rules for the organisation of working time and working conditions in that sector.

I refer specifically to Regulation (EEC) No 3820/85 (11) which governs various social aspects of road transport, such as driving periods, breaks and rest periods, and which excludes carriage by vehicles used in emergency or rescue operations, which, to my mind, includes ambulances. (12)

33. The Court examined the extent of the exclusion of road transport activities from the scope of Directive 93/104 in Bowden and Others , (13) stating that, by referring to air, rail, road, sea, inland waterway and lake transport', the Community legislature indicated that it was taking account of those sectors of activity as a whole, whereas in the case of other work at sea' and the activities of doctors in training' it chose to refer precisely to those specific activities as such'. (14) Therefore, the exclusion of the road transport sector in particular extends to all workers in that sector.

As the Commission points out, in that judgment the Court took into account the activity of the employer but did not assess the activity carried out by the employees of the undertaking. If an undertaking belongs to one of the sectors in the list which the Court concluded were referred to as a whole', for example the road transport sector, then all the employees of that undertaking are excluded from the scope of Directive 93/104.

34. The activity carried out by the Red Cross, which employs rescue workers to provide medical assistance at the place where the patient is located and to transport the patient by ambulance to a hospital to receive the treatment he needs, is not included in the road transport sector, regardless of the fact that carriage is by land, in the same way that carriage by light aircraft or helicopter in the most critical cases cannot be classified as air transport.

35. However, the German court questions the treatment to be accorded to transport by ambulance in the light of the judgment delivered in Tögel , (15) in which the Court ruled that aspects of the transport of injured and sick persons with a nurse in attendance come within Annex I A, Category No 2, to Directive 92/50/EEC (16) relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts.

36. I do not consider that ruling to be conclusive as regards the definition of the scope of Directive 93/104 on the organisation of working time.

37. Directive 92/50 provides for two-tier application, depending on whether the service is included in the list in Annex I A or in the list in Annex I B. The contracts listed in Annex I A are awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI, while those in Annex I B must comply with the rules set out in Articles 14 and 16. Where the services feature in both lists the procedure is determined by reference to their value.

In Tögel , the disputed services were listed in both Annex I A, Category 2 (land transport services), and in Annex I B, Category 25 (health and social services), which was why the Court found that the contract could be governed by either procedure, depending upon whether the value of the services under Annex I A was higher or lower than the value of the services under Annex I B.

38. However, the case before the Court is not concerned with ascertaining the correct procedure to use in the award of a public service contract, and therefore Directive 92/50 and the case-law relating to its interpretation are not applicable.

39. For the reasons set out, it should be held that the concept of road transport in Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 does not include the activity of an emergency rescue service which consists, at least in part, of driving vehicles and attending to patients during the journey.

C - The second question

40. Next, the Arbeitsgericht asks whether, under Article 18(1)(b)(i), first indent, of Directive 93/104, the extension of weekly working time to more than 48 hours requires the express agreement of the employee, or whether, alternatively, it will suffice if the employee has agreed to the working conditions laid down by collective agreements which, in turn, permit the extension of weekly working time to more than 48 hours on average.

41. Under the provision in question, Member States are entitled not to apply Article 6 of Directive 93/104, which refers to maximum weekly working time, provided that they respect the general principles of the protection of the safety and health of workers, and provided that they take the necessary measures to ensure that no employer requires a worker to work more than 48 hours over a seven-day period, calculated as an average for the reference period referred to in point 2 of Article 16, without that worker's consent.

42. As the Court noted in Simap , (17) the wording of the first indent of Article 18(1)(b)(i) requires the consent of the worker. If the intention of the Community legislature had been to replace the worker's consent by that of a trade union in the context of a collective agreement, Article 6 of Directive 93/104 would have been included in the list in Article 17(3) of the directive of those articles from which derogations may be made by a collective agreement or agreement between the two sides of industry.

43. The Arbeitsgericht also wishes to clarify whether it is enough that the employee has given his consent to the application of a collective agreement which grants the employer the power, under certain circumstances, to extend the weekly working time beyond the maximum of 48 hours on average per seven-day period, including overtime, laid down in Article 6 of Directive 93/104.

44. In my opinion, the reply must be in the negative for a number of reasons. First, because, from an employee's point of view, there is an important difference between extending the weekly working time beyond the maximum laid down in Directive 93/104 and the duty to work overtime at the request of the employer, which is liable to prolong the normal working hours or working week.

45. As regards the second situation, the Court has ruled that Article 2(2)(i) of Directive 91/533/EEC on an employer's obligation to inform employees of the conditions applicable to the contract or employment relationship, (18) referring as it does to normal working hours, is not concerned with overtime, the characteristic feature of which is that it is performed outside normal working hours and is additional thereto. However, the employer must notify the employee of any term of the employment contract or employment relationship pursuant to which the employee is required to work overtime. That information must be notified under the same conditions as those laid down for the essential elements of the contract expressly mentioned in Article 2(2) of the directive. It may, where appropriate, by analogy with the provisions of Article 2(3) of the directive concerning normal working hours, take the form of a reference to the relevant laws, regulations and administrative or statutory provisions or collective agreements. (19)

46. That option does not arise, however, where the employer proposes to alter the normal working time for each week, so that the working hours consistently exceed the maximum period which Article 6 of Directive 93/104 prescribes with a view to protecting the safety and health of workers. Member States which opt not to apply that provision undertake to fulfil the obligations imposed on them by Article 18(1)(b)(i) of the same directive.

47. The second reason why the reply to the question should be in the negative is that the condition requiring a worker's agreement is not the only condition which must be fulfilled under Article 18(1)(b)(i) in order for Article 6 not to apply. It must be recalled that the primary aim of Directive 93/104 is to safeguard the health and safety of workers, who are the most vulnerable party in an employment relationship. Quite rightly, in order to prevent an employer from obtaining from an employee, through subterfuge or intimidation, a waiver of that employee's right not to have his weekly working time extended beyond the maximum laid down, a whole series of guarantees are attached to the employee's consent; namely that the employee concerned must not be subjected to any detriment because he does not agree to work in excess of 48 hours per week under the conditions set out, that the employer must keep up-to-date records of all workers who carry out such work and whose working hours exceed the weekly maximum, that the records must be placed at the disposal of the competent authorities, and that the employer must provide the competent authorities, at their request, with information on cases in which consent has been given by workers.

The mere reference to a collective agreement in the employment contract, in the circumstances described by the Arbeitsgericht, does not fulfil those conditions.

48. The final reason why the question must receive a negative reply is that it is clear from the wording of Article 18(1)(b)(i) that the option not to apply Article 6 is not a power which is granted to the two sides of industry or to the parties to an employment contract, but rather to the Member States, who must comply with the general principles of the protection of the safety and health of workers and take the necessary measures to guarantee the result pursued, namely that consent must be express, informed and free, that a refusal to give consent must not result in any detriment, that a written record of the agreement must be kept, and that the information must be made available to the competent authorities.

49. Therefore, it is my view that Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104 requires Member States who opt not to apply Article 6 to take all steps necessary to ensure the achievement of certain results, which include the guarantee that no employer may require an employee to work, without that employee's consent, for more than 48 hours on average over each seven-day period. Acceptance by an employee in his contract that the working conditions are those provided for in collective agreements, which, in turn, permit the weekly working time to be extended, on average, beyond the threshold, does not constitute validly given consent for those purposes.

D - The third question

50. By this question, the German court seeks to ascertain whether the wording of Article 6 of Directive 93/104 is sufficiently precise and unconditional to enable individuals to rely on it before national courts in the event that the provisions of the directive have not been transposed into national law.

51. The Court has consistently held that, (20) whenever the provisions of a directive appear, as far as their subject-matter is concerned, to be unconditional and sufficiently precise, those provisions may be relied on by individuals against the State where that State fails to implement the directive

in national law within the prescribed period or where it fails to implement it correctly. A Community provision is unconditional where it is not qualified by any condition, or subject, in its implementation or effects, to the taking of any measure either by the institutions of the Community or by the Member States. (21) A Community provision is sufficiently precise to be relied upon by an individual and applied by a court where it imposes an obligation in unequivocal terms. (22)

52. Article 6 of Directive 93/104 requires the Member States to take the measures necessary to ensure that, in order to meet the need to protect the safety and health of workers, the period of weekly working time is limited so that it does not exceed 48 hours on average for each seven-day period, including overtime.

The provision is drafted clearly and precisely and it does not, in principle, allow the Member States any leeway when implementing the provision in national law.

53. It must be borne in mind, however, that for the purposes of calculating the average working time, Article 16(2) provides that the reference period must not exceed four months, although, under Article 17(4), it can extend to six or 12 months.

In that connection, the Court ruled in Simap (23) that even if those provisions of Directive 93/104 leave the Member States a degree of latitude regarding the reference period for the purposes of applying Article 6, that does not alter its precise and unconditional nature, since that degree of latitude does not make it impossible to determine minimum rights. The Court went on to say that it is clear from the terms of Article 17(4) of the directive that the reference period may not exceed 12 months and that it is therefore possible to determine the minimum protection which must be provided.

54. In the light of that interpretation by the Court, even in cases where Member States derogate from the reference period laid down in Article 16(2), Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104 is clear, precise and unconditional. In addition, Article 6(2) grants rights to individuals, and, accordingly, it may be relied upon before national courts where a Member State has not implemented it correctly within the prescribed period. (24)

55. Under Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104, Member States have the right not to apply Article 6, from which it follows that individuals are not always in a position to rely on the direct effect of the provision.

However, in order to exercise that option, the Member States must comply with the general principles of the protection of the safety and health of workers and must also take the measures necessary to achieve the specific results listed. It is for the national court to establish whether the Member State has exercised that power and whether the conditions laid down in Article 18(1)(b)(i) have been met. (25)

56. It is well-known that the Court has consistently refused to recognise that an individual may rely on a directive against another individual where that directive has not been correctly implemented by a State within the relevant period, ruling that, under Article 249 EC, the binding nature of a directive, which constitutes the basis for the possibility of relying on the directive before a national court, exists only in relation to each Member State to which it is addressed', from which it follows that a directive may not of itself impose obligations on an individual and that it may not therefore be relied on against that individual. (26)

57. In accordance with that case-law, the fact that the main proceedings involve disputes between individuals means that the employees are not entitled to invoke the direct effect of Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104. (27)

58. The Court has ruled, (28) in similar cases, that when applying national law, whether adopted

before or after the directive, the national court that has to interpret that law must do so, as far as possible, in the light of the wording and the purpose of the directive so as to achieve the result it has in view and thereby comply with the third paragraph of Article 249 EC. Where it is seised of a dispute falling within the scope of a directive and arising from facts postdating the expiry of the period for transposing that directive, the national court must interpret the provisions of national law in such a way that they are applied in conformity with the aims of the directive.

Where it is impossible to provide an interpretation which conforms to the directive concerned, the national court must ensure the full effectiveness of Community law by setting aside on its own authority, where appropriate, any conflicting provisions of national law. The national court is not obliged to request or await the actual setting aside by the legislative authorities or by means of any other constitutional process. (29)

59. It is clear from the matters set out above that, where a Member State has not exercised the option envisaged in Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104, Article 6(2) of that directive precludes a provision, such as Article 7(1)(1)(a) of the German Law on working time, which allows for the extension of working hours beyond 10 hours, in a collective agreement or works agreement, where working time includes regular, significant periods of stand-by duty.

Accordingly, Article 14 of the German Red Cross Collective Agreement must be construed as meaning that, in so far as it is based on Article 7 above, the workers to whom it applies are not obliged to work in excess of 48 hours per week on average, having regard to the provisions of Article 16(2) and Article 17(4) of Directive 93/104 on the setting of the reference period for calculation of the average.

VIII - Conclusion

60. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court should give the following replies to the questions referred by the Arbeitsgericht Lörrach:

(1) (a) Article 1(3) of Council Directive 93/104/EEC of 23 November 1993 concerning certain aspects of the organisation of working time and Article 2 of Council Directive 89/391/EEC of 12 June 1989 on the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the safety and health of workers at work must be construed as meaning that the activity of rescue workers working in an emergency medical assistance service falls within the scope of both directives.

(1) (b) The concept of road transport in Article 1(3) of Directive 93/104 does not include the activity of an emergency rescue service which consists, at least in part, of driving vehicles and attending to patients during the journey.

(2) Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive 93/104 requires Member States who opt not to apply Article 6 to take all steps necessary to ensure that no employer may require an employee to work, without that employee's consent, for more than 48 hours on average over each seven-day period. Acceptance by an employee in his contract that the working conditions are those provided for in collective agreements which, in turn, permit the weekly working time to be extended, on average, beyond that threshold, does not constitute validly given consent for those purposes.

(3) Even in cases where Member States derogate from the reference period laid down in Article 16(2), Article 6(2) of Directive 93/104 is clear, precise and unconditional. In addition, Article 6(2) grants rights to individuals, and, accordingly, it may be relied upon before national courts where a Member State has not implemented it correctly within the prescribed period. However, in view of the fact that the main proceedings involve disputes between individuals, the employees may not invoke the direct effect of the provision.

Where a Member State has not exercised the option envisaged in Article 18(1)(b)(i) of Directive

93/104, Article 6(2) of that directive precludes a provision, such as Article 7(1)(1)(a) of the German Law on working time, which allows for the extension of working hours to more than 10 hours in a collective agreement or works agreement, where working time includes regular, significant periods of stand-by duty. Accordingly, Article 14 of the Collective Agreement on Working Conditions for German Red Cross Employees, Workers and Trainees must be construed as meaning that, in so far as it is based on Article 7 above, the workers to whom it applies are not obliged to work in excess of 48 hours per week on average, having regard to the provisions of Article 16(2) and Article 17(4) of Directive 93/104 on the setting of the reference period for calculation of the average.

(24) - Judgment in Case 148/78 Ratti [1979] ECR 1629, paragraph 22.

(25) - At the hearing in Case C-151/02 Jaeger , in which the Court has also been asked to interpret certain provisions of Directive 93/104, the German Government's agent confirmed, in reply to a question put by me, that Germany has not relied on that provision in order to extend the weekly working time in the health care sector. See the Opinion which I delivered in that case on 8 April 2003.

(26) - Judgments in Case 80/86 Kolpinghuis Nijmegen [1987] ECR 3969, paragraph 9, Case C-91/92 Faccini Dori [1994] ECR I-3325, paragraph 24; and Case C-192/94 El Corte Inglés [1996] ECR I-1281, paragraphs 16 and 17. Academic opinion has been rather critical of that case-law. See, for example, Tridimas, T., Horizontal effect of directives: a missed opportunity', European Law Review , 1994, p. 621 et seq., particularly p. 635; Turnbull, E., The ECJ Rejects Horizontal Direct Effect of Directives', European Business Law Review , 1994, p. 230 et seq., particularly p. 233; Vilà Costa, B., Revista Jurídica de Catalunya , 1995, p. 264 et seq., particularly p. 269; Bernard, N., The Direct Effect of Directives: Retreating from Marshall', Industrial Law Journal , 1994, p. 97 et seq., particularly p. 99; Turner, S., Horizontal Direct Enforcement of Directives Rejected', Northern Ireland Legal Quarterly , 1995, p. 244 et seq., particularly p. 246; Emmert, F. and Pereira de Azevedo, M., Les jeux sont faits: rien ne va plus ou une nouvelle occasion perdue pour la CJCE', Revue trimestrielle de droit européen , p. 11 et seq., particularly p. 19; Betlem, G., Medium Hard Law - Still No Horizontal Direct Effect of European Community Directives After Faccini Dori', The Columbia Journal of European Law , 1995, p. 469 et seq., particularly p. 488; Regaldo, F., Il caso Faccini Dori: una occasione perduta?', Rivista di diritto civile , 1996, p. 65 et seq., particularly p. 110; and Antoniolli Deflorian, L., Il formante giurisprudenziale e la competizioni fra il sistema comunitario e gli ordinamenti interni: la svolta inefficiente di Faccini Dori', Rivista critica di diritto privato , 1995, p. 735 et seq., particularly p. 749.

(27) - It must be pointed out that Advocate General Lenz, in the Opinion he delivered in Faccini Dori , expressed his conviction that, for the future, it was necessary to recognise, in the context of the development of case-law based on the EC Treaty and in the interests of uniform, effective application of Community law, the general applicability of precise, unconditional provisions in directives in order to respond to the legitimate expectations nurtured by citizens of the Union following the achievement of the internal market and the entry into force of the Treaty on European Union. In paragraph 47 and footnote 36, the Advocate General named several members of the Court who had spoken out in favour of the horizontal effect of directives prior to 1994.

(28) - Judgments in Case C-106/89 Marleasing [1990] ECR I-4135, paragraph 8; Case C-334/92 Wagner Miret [1993] ECR I-6911, paragraph 20; Faccini Dori , paragraph 26; Joined Cases C240/98 to C-244/98 Océano Grupo Editorial and Salvat Editores [2000] ECR I-4941, paragraph 30; and Case C-456/98 Centrosteel [2000] ECR I-6007, paragraphs 16 and 17.

(29) - Judgment in Case 106/77 Simmenthal [1978] ECR 629, paragraph 25.

on the interpretation of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), and of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

THE COURT

Judgment

Costs

On those grounds,

THE COURT

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Bundesvergabeamt by order of 11 July 2001, hereby rules:

1. Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, does not preclude the court responsible for hearing review procedures, in an action brought by a tenderer, with the ultimate aim of obtaining damages, for a declaration that the decision to award a public contract is unlawful, from raising of its own motion the unlawfulness of a decision of the contracting authority other than the one contested by the tenderer. On the other hand, the directive does preclude the court from dismissing an application by a tenderer on the ground that, owing to the unlawfulness raised of its own motion, the award procedure was in any event unlawful and that the harm which the tenderer may have suffered would therefore have been caused even in the absence of the unlawfulness alleged by the tenderer.

2. Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts precludes the contracting authority, in a procedure to award a public supply contract, from taking account of the number of references relating to the products offered by the tenderers to other customers not as a criterion for establishing their suitability for carrying out the contract but as a criterion for awarding the contract.

3. Directive 93/36/EEC precludes, in a procedure to award a public supply contract, the requirement that the products which are the subject of the tenders be available for inspection by the contracting authority within a radius of 300 km of the authority as a criterion for the award of the contract.

1 By order of 11 July 2001, received at the Court on 13 August 2001, the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Procurement Office) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC five questions on the interpretation of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) (`Directive 89/665'), and of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1).

2 Those questions were raised in proceedings between Gesellschaft für Abfallentsorgungs-Technik GmbH (`GAT') and Osterreichische Autobahnen und Schnellstraßen AG (`OSAG') concerning the award of a public supply contract for which GAT had tendered.

Legal context

Community provisions

Directive 89/665

3 Article 1 of Directive 89/665 provides:

`1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the provisions set out in the following articles and, in particular, Article 2(7), on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

4 Article 2 provides:

`1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

2. The powers specified in paragraph 1 may be conferred on separate bodies responsible for different aspects of the review procedure.

6. The effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law.

Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.

8. Where bodies responsible for review procedures are not judicial in character, written reasons for their decisions shall always be given. Furthermore, in such a case, provision must be made to guarantee procedures whereby any allegedly illegal measure taken by the review body or any alleged defect in the exercise of the powers conferred on it can be the subject of judicial review or review by another body which is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article [234] of [the Treaty] and independent of both the contracting authority and the review body.

The members of such an independent body shall be appointed and leave office under the same conditions as members of the judiciary as regards the authority responsible for their appointment, their period of office and their removal. At least the President of this independent body shall have the same legal and professional qualifications as members of the judiciary. The independent body shall take its decisions following a procedure in which both sides are heard, and these decisions shall, by means determined by each Member State, be legally binding.'

5 Article 15(1) of Directive 93/36, which forms part of Chapter 1 (Common rules on participation) of Title IV, provides:

`Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Chapter 3 of this Title, taking into account Article 16, after the suitability of the suppliers not excluded under Article 20 has been checked by the contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing and of technical capacity referred to in Articles 22, 23 and 24.'

6 Article 23, which forms part of Chapter 2 (Criteria for qualitative selection) of Title IV, provides:

`1. Evidence of the supplier's technical capacity may be furnished by one or more of the following means according to the nature, quantity and purpose of the products to be supplied:

(a) a list of the principal deliveries effected in the past three years, with the sums, dates and recipients, public or private, involved:

- where effected to public authorities, evidence to be in the form of certificates issued or countersigned by the competent authority;

- where effected to private purchasers, delivery to be certified by the purchaser or, failing this, simply declared by the supplier to have been effected;

(d) samples, descriptions and/or photographs of the products to be supplied, the authenticity of which must be certified if the contracting authority so requests;

...'.

7 Article 26, which forms part of Chapter 3 (Criteria for the award of contracts) of Title IV, states:

`1. The criteria on which the contracting authority shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) either the lowest price only;

(b) or, when award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract in question: e.g. price, delivery date, running costs, cost-effectiveness, quality, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical merit, after-sales service and technical assistance.

...'.

8 Directives 89/665 and 93/36 were transposed into Austrian law by the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Bundesvergabegesetz) 1997 (1997 Federal Public Procurement Law, BGBl. I, 1997/56, `the BVergG').

9 Paragraph 113 of the BVergG sets out the powers of the Bundesvergabeamt. It provides:

`1. The Bundesvergabeamt is responsible on application for carrying out a review procedure in accordance with the following provisions.

2. To preclude infringements of this Federal Law and of the regulations implementing it, the Bundesvergabeamt is authorised until the time of the award:

(1) to adopt interim measures and

(2) to set aside unlawful decisions of the contracting authority.

3. After the award of the contract or the close of the contract award procedure, the Bundesvergabeamt is competent to determine whether, on grounds of infringement of this Federal Law or of any regulations issued under it, the contract has not been awarded to the best tenderer....'

10 Paragraph 115(1) and (5) of the BVergG provides:

`1. Where an undertaking claims to have an interest in the conclusion of a contract within the scope of this Federal Law, it may apply for the contracting authority's decision in the contract award procedure to be reviewed on the ground of unlawfulness, provided that it has been or risks being harmed by the alleged infringement.

...

5. The application shall contain:

(1) an exact designation of the contract award procedure concerned and of the contested decision,

11 Under Paragraph 117(1) and (3) of the BVergG:

`1. The Bundesvergabeamt shall set aside, by way of administrative decision, taking into account the opinion of the Conciliation Committee in the case, any decision of the contracting authority in an award procedure where the decision in question:

(1) is contrary to the provisions of this Federal Law or its implementing regulations and

(2) significantly affects the outcome of the award procedure.

3. After the award of the contract, the Bundesvergabeamt shall, in accordance with the conditions of subparagraph 1, determine only whether the alleged illegality exists or not.'

12 Paragraph 122(1) of the BVergG provides that `in the event of a culpable breach of the Federal Law or its implementing rules by the organs of an awarding body, an unsuccessful candidate or tenderer may bring a claim against the contracting authority to which the conduct of the organs of the awarding body is attributable for reimbursement of the costs incurred in drawing up its bid and other costs borne as a result of its participation in the tendering procedure.'

13 Under Paragraph 125(2) of the BVergG a claim for damages, which must be brought before the civil courts, is admissible only if the Bundevergabeamt has made a declaration under Paragraph 113(3). The civil court called upon to hear the claim for damages, and the parties to the proceedings before the Bundesvergabeamt, are bound by that declaration.

14 Pursuant to Paragraph 2(2)(c), point 40a, of the Einführungsgesetz zu den Verwaltungsverfahrensgesetzen 1991 (Introductory Law to the Laws on Administrative Procedure, BGBl. 1991/50), the Allgemeines Verwaltungsverfahrensgesetz 1991 (General Law on Administrative Procedure, BGBl, 1991/51, hereinafter `the AVG') applies to the administrative procedure adopted by the Bundesvergabeamt.

15 Paragraph 39(1) and (2) of the AVG, in the version applicable to the main proceedings, provides:

`1. The evaluation procedure shall be governed by the provisions of administrative law.

2. In so far as those provisions do not cover a matter, the authority shall proceed ex proprio motu and shall determine the procedure for the evaluation, subject to the provisions contained in this Part ...'.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

16 On 2 March 2000 OSAG, represented by the Autobahnmeisterei (the Motorway Authority) for Sankt Michael/Lungau, issued an invitation to tender for the supply of a `special motor vehicle: new, ready-to-use and officially approved road sweeper for the A9 Phyrn motorway, delivery to the motorway authority for Kalwang', in an open European procedure.

17 The five tenders submitted were opened on 25 April 2000. GAT had submitted a tender at a price of ATS 3 547 020 excluding VAT. The tender submitted by the firm OAF & Steyr Nutzfahrzeuge OHG was ATS 4 174 290 net; that of another tenderer was ATS 4 168 690, excluding VAT.

18 As regards the evaluation of the tenders, Point B.1.13 of the invitation to tender provided:

`B.1.13 Tender evaluation

The determination of which tender is technically and economically the most advantageous shall be made in accordance with the best tenderer principle. It is a fundamental condition that the vehicles tendered satisfy the conditions in the invitation to tender.

The evaluation shall be carried out as follows:

Tenders shall be evaluated in each case by reference to the best tenderer and points shall be calculated relative to the best tenderer.

(2) Other criteria:

A maximum of 100 points shall be awarded for other criteria, and shall count for 20% of the overall evaluation.

2.1 Reference list of road sweeper vehicle customers in the geographical area comprising the part of the Alps within the European Union (references to be provided in German): weighting 20 points.

Evaluation formula

The highest number of customers divided by the next highest number and multiplied by 20 points.'

19 On 16 May 2000, OSAG eliminated GAT's tender on the ground that that tender did not comply with the conditions in the invitation to tender inasmuch as the pavement cleaning machine tendered could be operated only down to temperatures of 0 _C, whereas the invitation to tender had required a minimum operating temperature of -5 _C. In addition, despite a request by the contracting authority, the applicant had not arranged for the machine to be available for inspection within a 300 kilometre radius of the authority issuing the invitation to tender, as required therein. Furthermore, OSAG doubted that the price in GAT's tender was plausible. Finally, despite requests by the OSAG, GAT had not provided a sufficient explanation of the technical specifications concerning cleaning of the reflectors on the machine it had tendered.

20 In accordance with the award proposal of 31 July 2000, OAF &Steyr Nutzfahrzeuge OHG was awarded the contract by letter of 23 August 2000. By letter of 12 July 2000, the other tenderers were notified that a decision had been taken regarding the recipient of the award. GAT had been informed by letter of 17 July 2000 that its tender had been eliminated, and by letter of 5 October 2000 it was notified of the identity of the recipient of the award and the contract price.

21 On 17 November 2000 GAT sought a review by the Bundesvergabeamt and a declaration that the award in the contract award procedure had not been made to the best tenderer, claiming that its tender had been eliminated unlawfully. The technical description included in its tender of the reflector cleaning had been sufficient for an expert. In addition, it had invited OSAG to visit its supplier's factory. GAT also contended that the award condition consisting of `the opportunity to inspect the subject of the invitation to tender within a 300 kilometre radius of the authority issuing the invitation to tender' contravened Community law because it constituted indirect discrimination. OSAG should have accepted any corresponding product in Europe. In addition, GAT argued, that criterion could be used only as an award criterion and not - as the contracting authority had subsequently wrongly used it - as a selection criterion. It was true that the basic version of the road sweeper GAT had tendered could be used only at temperatures down to 0 _C. However, OSAG had reserved the right to purchase an additional option. The additional option tendered by GAT could operate at -5 _C, as required in the invitation to tender. Finally, the price of GAT's tender was certainly not implausible. On the contrary, GAT was able to give OSAG an adequate explanation as to why its price was so favourable.

22 As the Bundesvergabeamt considered that an interpretation of several provisions of Community law was required in order to enable it to give a decision in the case before it, it decided to stay proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

`1 (a) Is Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665, or any other provision of that directive or any other provision of Community law, to be interpreted as meaning that an authority responsible for carrying out review procedures within the meaning of Article 1(1) of that directive, including the exercise of the powers referred to in Article 2(1)(c) thereof, is precluded from taking into account, of its own motion and independently of the submissions of the parties to the review procedure, those circumstances relevant under the law governing contract award procedures which the authority responsible for carrying out review procedures considers material to its decision in a review procedure?

(b) Is Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665, if necessary considered in conjunction with other principles of Community law, to be interpreted as meaning that an authority responsible for carrying out review procedures within the meaning of Article 1(1) of that directive, including the exercise of the powers referred to in Article 2(1)(c) thereof, is precluded from dismissing an application by a tenderer that is indirectly aimed at obtaining damages, where the contract award procedure is already vitiated by a substantive legal defect attributable to a decision taken by the contracting authority, other than the decision being contested by that tenderer, on the ground that if the contested decision had not been taken the tenderer would none the less have been harmed for other reasons?

2 If Question 1(a) is answered in the negative: Is Directive 93/36, in particular Articles 15 to 26 thereof, to be interpreted as prohibiting a public contracting authority conducting contract award procedures from taking account of references relating to the products offered by tenderers not as proof of the tenderers' suitability but to satisfy an award criterion, such that the fact that those references are given a negative evaluation would not exclude the tenderer from the contract award procedure but would merely result in the tender receiving a lower evaluation, for example under a points system in which poor evaluation of references might be offset by a lower price?

3 If Questions 1(a) and 2 are answered in the negative: Is it compatible with the relevant provisions of Community law, including Article 26 of Directive 93/36, the principle of equal treatment and the obligations of the Communities under public international law for an award criterion to provide that product references are to be evaluated on the basis of the number of references alone, there being no substantive examination as to whether contracting authorities' experiences of the product have been good or bad, and, moreover, that only references from the geographical area comprising the part of the Alps within the European Union are to be taken into account?

4 Is it compatible with Community law, in particular the principle of equal treatment, for an award criterion to permit opportunities to inspect examples of the subject of the invitation to tender to receive a positive evaluation only if available within a 300 kilometre radius of the authority issuing the invitation to tender?

5 If Question 2 is answered in the affirmative, or Question 3 or 4 in the negative: Is Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665, if necessary considered in conjunction with other principles of Community law, to be interpreted as meaning that if the breach committed by the contracting authority consists in imposing an unlawful award criterion, the tenderer will be entitled to damages only if he can actually prove that, but for the unlawful award criterion, he would have submitted the best tender?'

23 The national court has also asked the Court to apply an accelerated preliminary ruling procedure under Article 104a of the Rules of Procedure, claiming that the first question arises in almost half of the review procedures brought before it and that the Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court) has already set aside several of the Bundesvergabeamt's decisions specifically on the ground that it had raised ex proprio motu the unlawfulness of certain aspects of the award procedures at issue.

24 However, by decision of 13 September 2001, that request was denied by the President of the Court, on a proposal from the Judge-Rapporteur and after hearing the Advocate General, on the ground that the circumstances referred to by the national court did not establish that a ruling on the questions referred to the Court was a matter of exceptional urgency.

The jurisdiction of the Court

25 On the basis of the order for reference made by the Bundesvergabeamt on 11 July 2001 in another case concerning public procurement, registered at the Court Registry under number C-314/01 and currently pending before the Court, the Commission expresses doubts as to the judicial nature of the body making the reference on the ground that it acknowledged in the order that its decisions `do not contain binding, enforceable directions addressed to the contracting authority'. In those circumstances, the Commission has doubts as to the admissibility of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Bundesvergabeamt in the present proceedings in the light of the case-law of the Court, in particular Case C-134/97 Victoria Film [1998] ECR I-7023, paragraph 14, and Case C-178/99 Salzmann [2001] ECR I-4421, paragraph 14, according to which a national court or tribunal may refer a question to the Court only if there is a case pending before it and if it is called upon to give judgment in proceedings intended to lead to a decision of a judicial nature.

26 It should be noted in that regard, first, that after the award of the contract the Bundesvergabeamt is competent, under Paragraph 113(3) of the BVergG, to determine whether as a result of an infringement of the relevant national legislation the contract has not been awarded to the best tenderer.

27 Secondly, it is apparent from the express wording of Paragraph 125(2) of the BVergG that a declaration made by the Bundesvergabeamt under Paragraph 113(3) of that Law not only constitutes a condition for admissibility of any claim for damages brought before the civil courts by reason of a culpable breach of that legislation but also binds the parties to the proceedings before the Bundesvergabeamt and the civil court hearing the case.

28 In those circumstances, neither the binding nature of a decision taken by the Bundevergabeamt under Paragraph 113(3) of the BVergG nor, accordingly, the judicial nature of the latter can reasonably be called into question.

29 It follows that the Court has jurisdiction to reply to the questions raised by the Bundesvergabeamt.

The admissibility of the questions referred 30 The Austrian Government claims that Question 1(a) and Question 5 are not admissible because they were raised in proceedings brought under Paragraph 113(3) of the BVergG, which is not a review procedure within the meaning of Directive 89/665 but merely an application for a declaration.

31 It states that the Austrian legislature exercised the option offered by the second subparagraph of Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 to provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures are to be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement. However, in Austrian law the power to award such damages, for which Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 requires the Member States to make provision, was not conferred on the Bundesvergabeamt but, as is clear from Paragraphs 122 and 125 of the BVergG, on the civil courts.

32 The Austrian Government considers that in those circumstances a reply to Question 1(a) and to Question 5 is not necessary to a solution of the main proceedings.

33 The Court observes, first, that a division of the power provided for in Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 between several courts is not contrary to the directive, since Article 2(2) expressly allows the Member States to confer the powers specified in paragraph 1 of that provision on separate bodies responsible for different aspects of the review procedure.

34 Secondly, although after the award of the contract the Bundesvergabeamt is not competent to award damages to the person harmed by the infringement of Community law on public procurement or the national rules implementing that law, but only to find that as a result of that infringement the contract has not been awarded to the best tenderer, that finding, as is clear from paragraph 27 of this judgment, not only constitutes a condition for admissibility of any claim for damages brought before the civil courts by reason of a culpable infringement of that legislation but also binds the parties to the proceedings before the Bundesvergabeamt and the civil court hearing the case.

35 In those circumstances, it must be concluded that the Bundesvergabeamt, even if it is hearing a case brought under Paragraph 113(3) of the BVergG, conducts a review procedure as required by Directive 89/665 and, as has already been seen in paragraph 28 of this judgment, is called upon to adopt a binding decision.

36 Furthermore, as is confirmed by Paragraph 117(3) of the BVergG, in proceedings brought under Paragraph 113(3) of that Law the Bundesvergabeamt is competent to determine the existence of the alleged infringement. It is possible that, in the exercise of that competence, it may consider it necessary to refer questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling.

37 Where such questions, which the Bundesvergabeamt considers necessary to enable it to determine the existence of illegality, concern the interpretation of Community law they cannot be declared inadmissible (see to this effect, inter alia, Case C-379/98 PreussenElektra [2001] ECR I-2099, paragraph 38, and Case C-153/00 Der Weduwe [2002] ECR I-11319, paragraph 31).

38 On the other hand, the Bundesvergabeamt, which is not directly competent to award damages to persons harmed by unlawfulness, is not entitled to refer to the Court for a preliminary ruling questions relating to the award of damages or the conditions for awarding them.

39 It is thus clear that all the questions referred for a preliminary ruling in this case by the Bundesvergabeamt are admissible except Question 5, which specifically seeks to know under what conditions a tenderer who claims to have been harmed by the adoption of an unlawful award criterion is entitled to damages.

Questions 1(a) and 1(b)

40 In its order for reference, the Bundesvergabeamt states that it is clear from Paragraphs 113(3) and 115(1) of the BVergG that in a review procedure following the award of a contract it must examine the contested award decision as to its lawfulness, but can grant the application only if it is the contested unlawful decision that has caused the contract not to be awarded to the best tenderer within the meaning of that Law. Therefore, if the award procedure is already fundamentally unlawful because of another (possibly earlier) decision by the contracting authority, as a result of which the applicant is not in any event the best tenderer within the meaning of the Law, and the applicant has not contested that other decision of the contracting authority in the review procedure, an application for review cannot be granted. In such a case, the applicant has not been `harmed' by the contested infringement within the meaning of Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 because the harm, which may take the form of wasted tender costs, was caused by another infringement by the contracting authority.

41 The Bundesvergabeamt also points out that under Paragraph 39(2) of the AVG it must determine the relevant facts ex proprio motu and therefore consider ex proprio motu whether in the main proceedings award criteria other than that of the `inspection opportunity' contested by the applicant are lawful. It also points out that according to a judgment of the Austrian Verfassungsgerichtshof of 8 March 2001 (B 707/00) the question as to the applicability of rules of procedure characterised by the ex proprio motu principle - which enable the review body to take account of facts that are material under the law relating to contract award procedures, irrespective of the submissions of the parties - is likely to raise, in the light of the principle laid down in the second subparagraph of Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665 that both parties must be heard in the review procedure, certain problems of Community law, making a reference to the Court under the third paragraph of Article 234 EC mandatory.

42 The Bundesvergabeamt states that it is that precedent of the Verfassungsgerichtshof which has induced it to refer Question 1(a) and (b), even though it is itself fully aware that the requirement that both sides be heard in the procedure - which stems not from the second subparagraph of Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665, which applies only to `independent review bodies', but from the requirements imposed on a court within the meaning of Article 234 EC - is not inconsistent with the ex proprio motu rule applicable in administrative procedures, and that the Court has already implicitly found that the Bundesvergabeamt conducts a procedure in which both sides are heard, since it has recognised its right to refer questions for preliminary rulings.

43 It follows from the foregoing considerations, and from the legislation of which they form part, that by Questions 1(a) and (b) the national court is asking in essence whether Directive 89/665 precludes the court responsible for hearing review procedures, in an action brought by a tenderer, with the ultimate aim of obtaining damages, for a declaration that the decision to award a public contract is unlawful, from raising of its own motion the unlawfulness of a decision of the contracting authority other than the one contested by the tenderer. On the other hand, the directive does preclude the court from dismissing an application by a tenderer on the ground that, owing to the unlawfulness raised of its own motion, the award procedure was, in any event, unlawful and that the harm the tenderer may have suffered would therefore have been caused even in the absence of the unlawfulness alleged by the tenderer.

44 In that regard, it is appropriate to recall that, as is apparent from the first and second recitals in the preamble, Directive 89/665 is intended to strengthen the existing mechanisms, both at national and Community levels, to ensure the effective application of Community directives relating to public procurement, in particular at a stage when infringements can still be remedied. To that effect, Article 1(1) of that directive requires Member States to guarantee that unlawful decisions of contracting authorities can be subjected to effective review which is as swift as possible (see, in particular, Case C-81/98 Alcatel Austria and Others [1999] ECR I-7671, paragraphs 33 and 34, and Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraph 74).

45 However, Directive 89/665 lays down only the minimum conditions to be satisfied by the review procedures established in domestic law to ensure compliance with the requirements of Community law concerning public contracts (see, in particular, Case C-327/00 Santex [2003] ECR I-1877, paragraph 47).

46 If there is no specific provision governing the matter, it is therefore for the domestic law of each Member State to determine whether, and in what circumstances, a court responsible for review procedures may raise ex proprio motu unlawfulness which has not been raised by the parties to the case brought before it.

47 Neither the aims of Directive 89/665 nor the requirement it lays down that both parties be heard in review procedures precludes the introduction of that possibility in the domestic law of a Member State.

48 Firstly, it cannot be inconsistent with the objective of that directive, which is to ensure compliance with the requirements of Community law on public procurement by means of effective and swift review procedures, for the court responsible for the review procedures to raise ex proprio motu unlawfulness affecting an award procedure, without waiting for one of the parties to do so.

49 Secondly, the requirement that both parties be heard in review procedures does not preclude the court responsible for those procedures from being able to raise ex proprio motu unlawfulness which it is the first to find, but simply means that before giving its ruling the court must observe the right of the parties to be heard on the unlawfulness raised ex proprio motu.

50 It follows that Directive 89/665 does not preclude the court responsible for hearing review procedures, in an action brought by a tenderer, with the ultimate aim of obtaining damages, for a declaration that the decision to award a public contract is unlawful, from raising of its own motion the unlawfulness of a decision of the contracting authority other than the one contested by the tenderer.

51 However, it does not necessarily follow that the court may dismiss an application by a tenderer on the ground that, by reason of the unlawfulness raised of its own motion, the award procedure was in any event unlawful and that the harm the tenderer may have suffered would therefore have been caused even in the absence of the unlawfulness alleged by the tenderer.

52 Firstly, as is apparent from the case-law of the Court, Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 applies to all decisions taken by contracting authorities which are subject to the rules of Community law on public procurement (see inter alia Case C-92/00 HI [2002] ECR I-5553, paragraph 37, and Case C-57/01 Makedoniko Metro and Michaniki [2003] ECR I-1091, paragraph 68) and makes no provision for any limitation as regards the nature and content of those decisions (see inter alia the judgments cited above in Alcatel Austria, paragraph 35, and HI, paragraph 49).

53 Secondly, among the review procedures which Directive 89/665 requires the Member States to introduce for the purposes of ensuring that the unlawful decisions of contracting authorities may be the subject of review procedures which are effective and as swift as possible is the procedure enabling damages to be granted to the person harmed by an infringement, which is expressly stated in Article 2(1)(c).

54 Therefore, a tenderer harmed by a decision to award a public contract, the lawfulness of which he is contesting, cannot be denied the right to claim damages for the harm caused by that decision on the ground that the award procedure was in any event defective owing to the unlawfulness, raised ex proprio motu, of another (possibly previous) decision of the contracting authority.

55 That conclusion is all the more obvious if a Member State has exercised the power conferred on Member States by the second subparagraph of Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 to limit, after the conclusion of the contract following the award, the powers of the court responsible for the review procedures to award damages. In such cases, the unlawfulness alleged by the tenderer cannot be subject to any of the penalties provided for under Directive 89/665.

56 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the reply to be given to Question 1 is that Directive 89/665 does not preclude the court responsible for hearing review procedures, in an action brought by a tenderer, with the ultimate aim of obtaining damages, for a declaration that the decision to award a public contract is unlawful, from raising of its own motion the unlawfulness of a decision of the contracting authority other than the one contested by the tenderer. However, the directive does preclude the court from dismissing an application by a tenderer on the ground that, owing to the unlawfulness raised of its own motion, the award procedure was in any event unlawful and that the harm which the tenderer may have suffered would therefore have been caused even in the absence of the unlawfulness alleged by the tenderer.

57 It is clear from paragraph 18 of this judgment, and from the wording of Question 3, that the call for tenders at issue in the main proceedings specified that in order to evaluate the tenders so as to determine which offer was the most economically advantageous the contracting authority had to take account of the number of references relating to the product offered by the tenderers to other customers, without considering whether the customers' experiences of the products purchased had been good or bad.

58 In those circumstances, Question 2 should be understood as seeking to ascertain whether Directive 93/36 precludes the contracting authority, in a procedure to award a public supply contract, from taking account of the number of references relating to the products offered by the tenderers to other customers not as a criterion for establishing their suitability for carrying out the contract but as a criterion for awarding the contract.

59 According to the scheme of Directive 93/36, in particular Title IV, the examination of the suitability of contractors to deliver the products which are the subject of the contract to be awarded and the awarding of the contract are two different operations in the procedure for the award of a public works contract. Article 15(1) of Directive 93/36 provides that the contract is to be awarded after the supplier's suitability has been checked (see to this effect, regarding public works contracts, Case 31/87 Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635, paragraph 15).

60 Even though Directive 93/36, which, according to the fifth and sixth recitals, is intended to achieve the coordination of national procedures for the award of public supply contracts while taking into account, as far as possible, the procedures and administrative practices in force in each Member State, does not rule out the possibility that examination of the tenderer's suitability and the award of the contract may take place simultaneously, the two procedures are governed by different rules (see to this effect Beentjes, cited above, paragraph 16).

61 Article 15(1) of the directive provides that the suitability of tenderers is to be checked by the contracting authority in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing and of technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 22, 23 and 24 of the directive. The purpose of these articles is not to delimit the power of the Member States to fix the level of financial and economic standing and technical knowledge required in order to take part in procedures for the award of public works contracts, but to determine the references or evidence which may be furnished in order to establish the suppliers' financial or economic standing and technical knowledge or ability (see to this effect Beentjes, cited above, paragraph 17).

62 As far as the criteria which may be used for the award of a public contract are concerned, Article 26(1) of Directive 93/36 provides that the authorities awarding contracts must base their decision either on the lowest price only or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, on various criteria according to the contract involved, such as price, delivery date, running costs, cost-effectiveness, quality, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical merit, after-sales service and technical assistance.

63 As is apparent from the wording of that provision, in particular the use of the expression `e.g.', the criteria which may be accepted as criteria for the award of a public contract to what is the most economically advantageous tender are not listed exhaustively (see to this effect, regarding public works contracts, Case C-19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I-7725, paragraph 35, and, regarding public service contracts, Case C-513/99 Concordia Bus Finland [2002] ECR I-7213, paragraph 54).

64 However, although Article 26(1) of Directive 93/36 leaves it to the contracting authority to choose the criteria on which it intends to base its award of the contract, that choice may relate only to criteria aimed at identifying the offer which is the most economically advantageous (see to this effect Beentjes, paragraph 19, SIAC Construction, paragraph 36, and Concordia Bus Finland, paragraph 59).

65 However, the fact remains that the submission of a list of the principal deliveries effected in the past three years, stating the sums, dates and recipients, public or private, involved is expressly included among the references or evidence which, under Article 23(1)(a) of Directive 93/36, may be required to establish the suppliers' technical capacity.

66 Furthermore, a simple list of references, such as that called for in the invitation to tender at issue in the main proceedings, which contains only the names and number of the suppliers' previous customers without other details relating to the deliveries effected to those customers cannot provide any information to identify the offer which is the most economically advantageous within the meaning of Article 26(1)(b) of Directive 93/36, and therefore cannot in any event constitute an award criterion within the meaning of that provision.

67 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the reply to be given to the second question is that Directive 93/36 precludes the contracting authority, in a procedure to award a public supply contract, from taking account of the number of references relating to the products offered by the tenderers to other customers not as a criterion for establishing their suitability for carrying out the contract but as a criterion for awarding the contract.

Question 3

68 Since this question was predicated upon a negative reply to the second question, it need not be answered.

Question 4

69 By its fourth question, the national court is asking, in essence, whether Community law, in particular the principle of equal treatment, precludes a criterion for the award of a public supply contract according to which a tenderer's offer may be favourably assessed only if the product which is the subject of the offer is available for inspection by the contracting authority within a radius of 300 km of the authority.

70 The reply must be that such a criterion cannot constitute a criterion for the award of the contract.

71 Firstly, it is apparent from Article 23(1)(d) of Directive 93/36 that for public supply contracts the contracting authorities may require the submission of samples, descriptions and/or photographs of the products to be supplied as references or evidence of the suppliers' technical capacity to carry out the contract concerned.

72 Secondly, a criterion such as that which is the subject of Question 4 cannot serve to identify the most economically advantageous offer within the meaning of Article 26(1)(b) of Directive 93/36 and therefore cannot, in any event, constitute an award criterion within the meaning of that provision.

73 In those circumstances, it is not necessary to consider whether that criterion is also contrary to the principle of equal treatment, which, as the Court has repeatedly held, underlies the directives on procedures for the award of public contracts (see, inter alia, the judgments in HI, paragraph 45, and Universale-Bau, paragraph 91).

74 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the reply to be given to Question 4 is that Directive 93/36 precludes, in a procedure to award a public supply contract, the requirement that the products which are the subject of the tenders be available for inspection by the contracting authority within a radius of 300 km of the authority as a criterion for the award of the contract.

Costs

51. The costs incurred by the Austrian Government and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the proceedings pending before the national tribunal, the decision on costs is a matter for that tribunal.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Sixth Chamber)

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Bundesvergabeamt by order of 11 July 2001, hereby rules:

Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, and in particular Articles 1(1) and 2(7) thereof, must be construed as meaning that, in the case where a clause in an invitation to tender is incompatible with Community rules on public contracts, the national legal systems of the Member States must provide for the possibility of relying on that incompatibility in the review procedures referred to in Directive 89/665.

1. By order of 11 July 2001, received at the Court on 9 August 2001, the Bundesvergabeamt (Austrian Federal Procurement Office) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC four questions on the interpretation of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) (Directive 89/665').

2. Those questions have arisen in a dispute between the companies Siemens AG (Siemens') and ARGE Telekom & Partner (ARGE Telekom'), on the one hand, and, on the other, the Hauptverband der österreichischen Sozialversicherungsträger (Central Association of Austrian Social Security Institutions) (the Hauptverband'), in its capacity as contracting authority, concerning an adjudication procedure for the award of a public supply and service contract.

Legal framework

Community law

3. Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 provides:

The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the provisions set out in the following articles and, in particular, Article 2(7), on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.'

4. Article 2 of Directive 89/665 sets out in this regard the obligations devolving on Member States. Article 2(1), (6) and (7) provides:

1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

6. The effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law.

Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.

7. The Member States shall ensure that decisions taken by bodies responsible for review procedures can be effectively enforced.'

5. Directive 92/50 sets out common rules on participation in the procedure for the award of public service contracts. These include the possibility of sub-contracting part of the contract to third parties. Thus, Article 25 of Directive 92/50 provides:

In the contract documents, the contracting authority may ask the tenderer to indicate in his tender any share of the contract he may intend to subcontract to third parties.

This indication shall be without prejudice to the question of the principal service provider's liability.'

6. Directive 92/50 also sets out qualitative selection criteria which make it possible to determine the candidates admitted to participate in the procedure for the award of a public service contract. Article 32 of Directive 92/50 is worded as follows:

1. The ability of service providers to perform services may be evaluated in particular with regard to their skills, efficiency, experience and reliability.

2. Evidence of the service provider's technical capability may be furnished by one or more of the following means according to the nature, quantity and purpose of the services to be provided:

(c) an indication of the technicians or technical bodies involved, whether or not belonging directly to the service provider, especially those responsible for quality control;

...

(h) an indication of the proportion of the contract which the service provider may intend to sub-contract.

3. The contracting authority shall specify, in the notice or in the invitation to tender, which references it wishes to receive.

National legislation

7. Directives 89/665 and 92/50 were transposed in Austrian law by the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Bundesvergabegesetz) 1997 (1997 Federal Procurement Law), BGBl. I 1997/56, in the version published in BGBl. I 2000/125 (the BVergG').

8. Paragraph 31 of the BVergG, relating to services to be performed by subcontracting undertakings, provides:

1. The documents relating to the invitation to tender shall specify whether subcontracting is permitted. The subcontracting of the whole contract is not permitted except in the case of purchase agreements and subcontracting to undertakings associated with the contractor. In the case of building contracts the subcontracting of the majority of the services constituting the object of the undertaking is not permitted. ... The contracting authority shall ensure that the contractor's subcontractors themselves perform the greater part of contracts subcontracted to them. In exceptional cases the contracting authority may specify in the contract documents, stating its reasons, that it is permissible for the majority of the contract to be subcontracted. Subcontracting parts of the contract is, moreover, permitted only if the subcontractor is qualified to perform his share of the work.

2. The contracting authority should ask the tenderer in the documents relating to the invitation to tender to indicate in his tender the proportion of the contract which he may intend to subcontract to third parties. This information shall be without prejudice to the issue of the contractor's liability.'

9. Paragraph 40(1) of the BVergG, which concerns the withdrawal of an invitation to tender, provides as follows:

During the tendering period the invitation to tender may be withdrawn for compelling reasons, especially if before the end of the tendering period circumstances become known which, had they been known earlier, would not have led to an invitation to tender or would have led to an invitation to tender essentially different in substance.'

10. Paragraph 52 et seq. of the BVergG deals with the examination of tenders. Paragraph 52(1) provides:

Before the contracting authority proceeds to the selection of the tender qualifying for the award of the contract, it should immediately eliminate the following tenders on the basis of the results of the assessment:

...

(9) tenders received from applicants who, immorally or contrary to the principle of effective competition, have come to agreements with other applicants which are disadvantageous to the contracting authority;

...'.

11. Paragraph 113 of the BVergG sets out the powers of the Bundesvergabeamt. Paragraph 113(2) and (3) provides:

2. In order to preclude infringements of this Federal Law and of the regulations implementing it, the Bundesvergabeamt is authorised until the time of the award:

(1) to adopt interim measures and

(2) to set aside unlawful decisions of the contracting authority.

3. After the award of the contract or the close of the contract award procedure, the Bundesvergabeamt is competent to determine whether, on grounds of infringement of this Federal Law or of any regulations issued under it, the contract has not been awarded to the best tenderer....'

12. Under Paragraph 117(1) and (3) of the BVergG:

1. The Bundesvergabeamt shall set aside, by way of administrative decision, taking into account the opinion of the Conciliation Committee in the case, any decision of the contracting authority in an award procedure where the decision in question:

(1) is contrary to the provisions of this Federal Law or its implementing regulations and

(2) significantly affects the outcome of the award procedure.

3. After the award of the contract, the Bundesvergabeamt shall, in accordance with the conditions of subparagraph 1, determine only whether the alleged illegality exists or not.'

13. Under Paragraph 125(2) of the BVergG a claim for damages, which must be brought before the civil courts, is admissible only if there has been a prior determination by the Bundesvergabeamt under Paragraph 113(3) of the BVergG. The civil court which is required to rule on such a claim for damages is bound by that determination, as are the parties to the proceedings before the Bundesvergabeamt.

14. Article 879(1) of the Allgemeines Bürgerliches Gesetzbuch (Austrian General Civil Code) provides:

A contract shall be null and void if it infringes a statutory prohibition or is contrary to acceptable moral values.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for preliminary ruling

15. On 21 September 1999 the Hauptverband announced in the supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities that it intended to initiate a two-stage contract award procedure for the award of a contract for the design, planning and implementation of a smart-card-based electronic data processing system, including the delivery, initialisation, personalisation, distribution and disposal of cards throughout Austria, delivery, installation and maintenance of sector terminals, support for a call-centre unit, card management and other services necessary for the operation of the system.

16. On 22 February 2000 the Hauptverband decided to invite five of the six groups of candidates which had taken part in the first phase of the procedure to submit tenders. At the same time the Hauptverband decided to eliminate the sixth candidate. Point 1.8 of the invitation to tender of 15 March 2000, which replicated Point 1.9 of the contract notice of 21 September 1999, stated:

A maximum of 30% of the services may be subcontracted, provided that the characteristic parts of the contract, namely, project management, system design, development, construction, delivery and management of the central components of the overall system specific to the project development, delivery and management of the life-cycle of the cards and development and delivery of the terminals remain with the tenderer or tender consortium'.

17. According to the order for reference, this clause, which stresses the personal responsibility of the card provider, was retained in order to guarantee proper technical performance of the contract.

18. Three of the four tender consortia which submitted tenders, namely, Siemens, ARGE Telekom and Debis Systemhaus Osterreich GmbH (Debis'), included the card provider Austria Card, Plastikkard und Ausweissysteme GmbH (Austria Card'), which was to be responsible for supplying the cards. The fourth consortium, to which Austria Card did not belong, was Bietergemeinschaft EDS/ORGA (EDS/ORGA'); which consisted of the undertakings Electronic Data Systems (EDS Austria) GmbH, Electronic Data Systems (EDS Deutschland) GmbH and ORGA Kartensysteme GmbH.

19. By letter of 18 December 2000, the first three tender consortia were informed that the Hauptverband was minded to award the contract to EDS/ORGA.

20. After having unsuccessfully attempted to have arbitration proceedings instituted before the Bundesvergabekontrollkommission (Federal Procurement Review Commission), the three unsuccessful consortia lodged review applications with the Bundesvergabeamt in which they sought, principally, annulment of the decision of the Hauptverband to award the contract to EDS/ORGA and, in the alternative, cancellation of the invitation to tender.

21. By decision of 19 March 2001, the Bundesvergabeamt dismissed all of the review applications brought before it as being inadmissible on the ground of lack of locus standi and interest in bringing proceedings inasmuch as the applicants' tenders ought in any event to have been eliminated by the Hauptverband pursuant to Paragraph 52(1) of the BVergG on the ground that Austria Card's membership of the three tender consortia in question was liable to distort free competition by reason of the exchange of information and negotiations on the terms of the tenders which such threefold membership made possible.

22. It appears from the case-file that this decision of the Bundesvergabeamt was annulled by judgment of the Verfassungsgerichtshof (Austrian Constitutional Court) of 12 June 2001 on the ground that the constitutional rights of the three consortia in question to have their case properly adjudged before a judicial body had been infringed inasmuch as the Bundesvergabeamt had, prior to taking its decision, failed to refer the matter to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling.

23. On 28 and 29 March 2001, Debis and ARGE Telekom lodged a second series of review applications before the Bundesvergabeamt in which they sought, inter alia, annulment of the Hauptverband's decision refusing to cancel the invitation to tender and, by way of interim measure, a prohibition on awarding the contract during a period of two months calculated from the instigation of proceedings, in the case of the application brought by Debis, or until such time as the Bundesvergabeamt had reached its decision in the main proceedings, in regard to the application brought by ARGE Telekom.

24. By decision of 5 April 2001, the Bundesvergabeamt, ruling on the applications for interim measures, prohibited the Hauptverband from awarding the contract until 20 April 2001.

25. By decision of 20 April 2001, the Bundesvergabeamt upheld the principal applications of Debis and ARGE Telekom and, pursuant to Paragraph 113(2)(2) of the BVergG, annulled the decision of the Hauptverband not to cancel the invitation to tender. As the essential grounds for its decision, it stated that the invitation to tender included an unlawful selection criterion inasmuch as the prohibition of subcontracting set out in Point 1.8 of the invitation to tender infringed the subcontractor's right, derived from Community legislation as interpreted by the Court (see, inter alia, Case C-176/98 Holst Italia [1999] ECR I8607), also to have recourse to a subcontractor in order to justify its capacity to perform the contract in question. In the present case, if the invitation to tender had not laid down this condition, the consortia which had been eliminated could have had recourse to a subcontractor for the supply of the cards.

26. Notwithstanding that decision, the Hauptverband decided, on 23 April 2001, to award the contract to EDS/ORGA. As it took the view that the effects of the interim measure adopted on 5 April 2001 by the Bundsvergabeamt had expired on 20 April 2001 without being extended and that the Bundesvergabeamt's decision of 20 April 2001 contained no more than a statement on setting aside the failure to cancel' which was difficult to understand, the Hauptverband took the view that no legally binding decision had been taken that its own decision to award the contract to the tender consortium which had submitted the lowest tender was invalid or ought to have been annulled.

27. The Hauptverband also decided to bring proceedings before the Verfassungsgerichtshof for annulment of the decision taken by the Bundesvergabeamt on 20 April 2001. According to the case-file forwarded by the Bundesvergabeamt and the observations lodged with the Court, the Verfassungsgerichtshof initially rejected, by order of 22 May 2001, the request by the Hauptverband that its application be recognised as having the effect of suspending operation of that decision, on the ground that the disputed contract had in any event already been awarded, and, subsequently, by judgment of 2 March 2002, the Verfassungsgerichtshof annulled that decision on the ground that it was logically impossible to annul a decision requiring something not to be done and that the proceedings brought by Debis and ARGE Telekom to secure that end ought to have been declared inadmissible.

28. On 30 April 2001, Siemens brought a fresh application before the Bundesvergabeamt by which it sought the annulment of several decisions taken by the Hauptverband after its decision to award the contract to EDS/ORGA. Siemens essentially argued in these proceedings that the annulment by the Bundesvergabeamt of the decision by the contracting authority not to annul the contract award procedure rendered unlawful the Hauptverband's decision to award the contract because it took place within the context of a second award procedure which had not been publicised in the requisite manner.

29. On 17 May 2001 ARGE Telekom also applied for annulment of 11 decisions taken by the Hauptverband after the latter had decided not to annul the disputed award procedure notwithstanding the decision of the Bundesvergabeamt of 20 April 2001.

30. As it took the view that resolution of this third series of disputes required an interpretation of several provisions of Directive 89/665, the Bundesvergabeamt decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Is ... Directive 89/665... , and in particular Article 2(1)(b) thereof, if necessary in conjunction with Article 2(7) thereof, to be interpreted as meaning that the legal effect of a decision taken by a national review body within the meaning of Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665 relating to the setting aside of a contracting authority's decision not to cancel a contract award procedure is that if national law does not provide any basis for the effective and compulsory enforcement of the review body's decision against the contracting authority, the contract award procedure is automatically terminated by the national review body's decision, without the need for any further act by the contracting authority?

(2) Is Directive 89/665, in particular Article 2(7) thereof, if necessary in conjunction with... Directive 92/50... , in particular Articles 25 and 32(2)(c) thereof, or any other provisions of Community law, in particular having regard to the effet utile doctrine relating to the interpretation of Community law, to be construed as meaning that a provision in an invitation to tender which prohibits subcontracting material parts of the service concerned and, contrary to the case-law of the Court of Justice, in particular Case C-176/98 Holst Italia [1999] ECR I-8607, prevents the tenderer from using his contract with his subcontractor to prove that the services of a third party are actually available to him and which thus deprives him of his right to prove his own capability by relying on the services of a third party or to prove that he actually has available a third party's services, is so clearly contrary to Community law that a contract concluded on the basis of such an invitation to tender is to be regarded as invalid, in particular where national law in any case provides that illegal contracts are invalid?

(3) Is Directive 89/665, in particular Article 2(7) thereof, or any other provision of Community law, in particular having regard to the effet utile doctrine relating to the interpretation of Community law, to be construed as meaning that a contract concluded contrary to a decision by a national review body within the meaning of Article 2(8) of Directive 89/665 relating to the setting aside of a contracting authority's decision not to cancel a contract award procedure is invalid, in particular where national law in any case provides that immoral or illegal contracts are void but does not provide any basis for the effective and compulsory enforcement of the review body's decision against the contracting authority?

(4a) Is Directive 89/665, in particular Article 2(1)(b) thereof, if necessary in conjunction with Article 2(7), to be interpreted as meaning that where national law does not otherwise provide any basis for the effective and compulsory enforcement of the review body's decision against the contracting authority, the review body has, by virtue of the direct application of Article 2(1)(b) in conjunction with Article 2(7), the power to issue a compulsory, enforceable order to the contracting authority to ensure that the unlawful decision is set aside, even though national law authorises the review body to issue only non-compulsory, non-enforceable orders to set aside contracting authorities' decisions in tenderers' applications for review within the meaning of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665?

(4b) If Question 4a is answered in the affirmative: does Article 2(7) of Directive 89/665, if necessary in conjunction with other provisions of Community law, give the review body the power in such a case to threaten contracting authorities and the members of their executive organs with, and to impose on them, such fines or fines and imprisonment by way of coercive penalties as are necessary to enforce their orders and are calculated in accordance with judicial discretion, where the contracting authorities and the members of their executive organs do not comply with the orders issued by the review body?'

The admissibility of the reference for a preliminary ruling

31. It is clear from all of the questions submitted by the Bundesvergabeamt that the latter is unsure as to the compatibility with Directive 89/665 of the procedural rules contained in the Austrian legislation governing public contracts inasmuch as those rules are not adequate effectively to guarantee implementation of the decisions taken by the body responsible for review proceedings as, in the case in the main proceedings, notwithstanding the decision of the Bundesvergabeamt of 20 April 2001 setting aside the Hauptverband's decision not to annul the call for tenders, the contract in dispute was none the less awarded to EDS/ORGA.

32. It is common ground that the Verfassungsgerichtshof, by judgment of 2 March 2002, annulled the decision of 20 April 2001 taken by the Bundesvergabeamt.

33. According to settled case-law in this regard, the procedure provided for by Article 234 EC is an instrument of cooperation between the Court of Justice and national courts (see, inter alia, Case C-343/90 Lourenço Dias [1992] ECR I-4673, paragraph 14, and Case C-112/00 Schmidberger [2003] ECR I5659, paragraph 30, and the case-law cited therein).

34. In the context of that cooperation, it is for the national court or tribunal seised of the dispute, which alone has direct knowledge of the facts giving rise to the dispute and must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court (see, inter alia, Lourenço Dias , cited above, paragraph 15, Case C390/99 Canal Satélite Digital [2002] ECR I607, paragraph 18, and Schmidberger , cited above, paragraph 31).

35. The fact none the less remains that it is for the Court, if need be, to examine the circumstances in which the case was referred to it by the national court or tribunal, in order to assess whether it has jurisdiction and in particular to determine whether the interpretation of Community law which is requested bears any relation to the actual nature and subject-matter of the main proceedings, in order that the Court will not be required to give opinions on general or hypothetical questions. If it should appear that the question raised is manifestly irrelevant for the purposes of deciding the case, the Court must declare that there is no need to proceed to judgment (Case 244/80 Foglia [1981] ECR 3045, paragraph 21; Lourenço Dias , paragraph 20; Canal Satélite Digital , cited above, paragraph 19; and judgment of 30 September 2003 in Case C167/01 Inspire Art [2003] ECR I0000, paragraphs 44 and 45).

36. In the light of the foregoing, it is appropriate to examine whether the questions referred by the Bundesvergabeamt have remained relevant for the resolution of the disputes in the main proceedings, even though the Verfassungsgerichtshof annulled the Bundesvergabeamt's decision of 20 April 2001.

37. In this regard, it is clear from the order for reference that it is the fact that this decision of 20 April 2001 was not mandatorily enforceable in Austrian law that provided the essential grounds for the present request for a preliminary ruling, with the result that, since the annulment of that decision, those questions have become purely hypothetical, as is, moreover, emphasised by the Verfassungsgerichtshof in its judgment of 2 March 2002.

38. It must, however, be acknowledged that the possibility cannot be discounted that a reply to the second question, which incidentally concerns the scope of the Holst Italia judgment, will have a bearing on the resolution of the disputes in the main proceedings, particularly in the event that those disputes, following a finding that the award procedure followed by the Bundesvergabeamt pursuant to Paragraph 113(3) of the BVergG, was unlawful, were to be continued before the civil courts, which, under Austrian legislation, are the courts having jurisdiction to rule on a claim for compensation following the award of a contract.

39. In the light of the foregoing, the first, third and fourth questions need not be answered and the Court's reply should be confined to the second question.

The second question

40. By this question, the Bundesvergabeamt is seeking essentially to ascertain whether Article 2(7) of Directive 89/665, read in conjunction with Articles 25 and 32(2)(c) of Directive 92/50, must be construed as meaning that a contract concluded at the end of the procedure for the award of a public supply and service contract, the proper conduct of which is affected by the incompatibility with Community law of a provision in the invitation to tender, must be treated as void if the applicable national law declares contracts that are illegal to be void.

41. This question is based on the premiss that a provision in an invitation to tender which prohibits recourse to subcontracting for material parts of the contract is contrary to Directive 92/50, as interpreted by the Court in Holst Italia.

42. It must be borne in mind in this regard that Directive 92/50, which is designed to eliminate obstacles to the freedom to provide services in the award of public service contracts, expressly envisages, in Article 25, the possibility for a tenderer to subcontract a part of the contract to third parties, as that provision states that the contracting authority may ask that tenderer to indicate in its tender any share of the contract which it may intend to subcontract. Furthermore, with regard to the qualitative selection criteria, Article 32(2)(c) and (h) of Directive 92/50 makes express provision for the possibility of providing evidence of the technical capacity of the service provider by means of an indication of the technicians or technical bodies involved, whether or not belonging directly to the undertaking of that service provider, and which the latter will have available to it, or by indicating the proportion of the contract which the service provider may intend to subcontract.

43. As the Court ruled in paragraphs 26 and 27 of Holst Italia , it follows from the object and wording of those provisions that a party cannot be eliminated from a procedure for the award of a public service contract solely on the ground that that party proposes, in order to carry out the contract, to use resources which are not its own but belong to one or more other entities. This means that it is permissible for a service provider which does not itself fulfil the minimum conditions required for participation in the procedure for the award of a public service contract to rely, vis-à-vis the contracting authority, on the standing of third parties upon whose resources it proposes to draw if it is awarded the contract.

44. However, according to the Court, the onus rests on a service provider which relies on the resources of entities or undertakings with which it is directly or indirectly linked, with a view to being admitted to participate in a tendering procedure, to establish that it actually has available to it the resources of those entities or undertakings which it does not itself own and which are necessary for the performance of the contract (Holst Italia , paragraph 29).

45. As the Commission of the European Communities has correctly pointed out, Directive 92/50 does not preclude a prohibition or a restriction on the use of subcontracting for the performance of essential parts of the contract precisely in the case where the contracting authority has not been in a position to verify the technical and economic capacities of the subcontractors when examining the tenders and selecting the lowest tenderer.

46. It follows that the premiss on which the second question is based would prove to be accurate only if it were to be established that Point 1.8 of the invitation to tender prohibits, during the phase of the examination of the tenders and the selection of the successful tenderer, any recourse by the latter to subcontracting for the provision of essential services under the contract. A tenderer claiming to have at its disposal the technical and economic capacities of third parties on which it intends to rely if the contract is awarded to it may be excluded only if it fails to demonstrate that those capacities are in fact available to it.

47. Point 1.8 of the invitation to tender does not appear to relate to the examination and selection phase of the procedure for award of the contract, but rather to the phase of performance of that contract and is designed precisely to avoid a situation in which the performance of essential parts of the contract is entrusted to bodies whose technical and economic capacities the contracting authority was unable to verify at the time when it selected the successful tenderer. It is for the Bundesvergabeamt to establish whether that is indeed the case.

48. If it were to transpire that a clause in the invitation to tender is in fact contrary to Directive 92/50, in particular inasmuch as it unlawfully prohibits recourse to subcontracting, it would then be sufficient to point out that, under Articles 1(1) and 2(7) of Directive 89/665, Member States are required to take the measures necessary to ensure that decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible in the case where those decisions may have infringed Community law in the area of public procurement.

49. It follows that, in the case where a clause in the invitation to tender is incompatible with Community rules on public contracts, the national legal system of the Member State must provide for the possibility of relying on that incompatibility in the review procedures referred to in Directive 89/665.

50. The answer to the second question must therefore be that Directive 89/665, and in particular Articles 1(1) and 2(7) thereof, must be construed as meaning that, in the case where a clause in an invitation to tender is incompatible with Community rules on public contracts, the national legal systems of the Member States must provide for the possibility of relying on that incompatibility in the review procedures referred to in Directive 89/665.

Correction to the Official Journal notice in Case C-310/01

(Official Journal of the European Union C 55 of 8 March 2003)

In the Official Journal notice in Case C-310/01 Comune di Udine, Azienda Multiservizi SpA (AMGA) and Diddi Dino Figli Srl, Associazione Nazionale Imprese Gestione servizi tecnici integrati (AGESI), the text should be replaced by the following:

Order of the Court (Fourth Chamber) of 14 November 2002 (reference for a preliminary ruling from the Consiglio di Stato): Comune di Udine, Azienda Multiservizi SpA (AMGA) and Diddi Dino Figli Srl, Associazione Nazionale Imprese Gestione servizi tecnici integrati (AGESI) [1]

(Article 104(3) of the Rules of Procedure - Question to which the answer may be clearly deduced from the case-law - Directive 92/50/EEC - Public contracts concerning both products and services - Value of the products greater than that of the services - Application of Directive 93/36/EEC)

(Language of the case: Italian)

In Case C-310/01: reference to the Court under Article 234 EC from the Consiglio di Stato (Italy) for a preliminary ruling in the proceedings pending before that court between Comune di Udine, Azienda Multiservizi SpA (AMGA) and Diddi Dino Figli Srl, Associazione Nazionale Imprese Gestione servizi tecnici integrati (AGESI) - on the interpretation of Articles 1(b), 2 and 6 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) - the Court (Fourth Chamber), composed of: C.W.A. Timmermans (Rapporteur), President of the Chamber, D.A.O. Edward and S. von Bahr, Judges; S. Alber, Advocate General; R. Grass, Registrar, has made an order on 11 November 2002, in which it has ruled:

Article 2 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that that directive does not apply to a public contract which concerns both products within the meaning of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts and services within the meaning of Directive 92/50 if the value of the products included in the contract is greater than that of the services provided.

Directive 93/36 applies to such a contract unless the contracting authority exercises over the supplier a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and the supplier carries out the essential parts of its activities with the controlling contracting authority or authorities.

gives the following

Judgment

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 29 June 2001, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 226 EC for a declaration that:

- by failing, in respect of a contract to perform services involving coastal surveillance by means of aerial photography, to place a notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities, as required under Directive 92/50/EEC relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1); and

- by making use, without justification, of the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, the Kingdom of Belgium has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive and, in particular, Articles 11(3) and 15(2) thereof.

Legal framework

2 Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50 provides:

`This directive shall not apply to services which are declared secret or the execution of which must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions in force in the Member State concerned or when the protection of the basic interests of that State's security so requires.'

3 Article 8 of Directive 92/50 states:

`Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI.'

4 Article 9 of Directive 92/50 provides:

`Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I B shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.'

5 Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50 states:

`Contracting authorities may award public service contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice in the following cases:

(b) when, for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the services may be provided only by a particular service provider;

...'

6 Under Article 15(2) of Directive 92/50:

`Contracting authorities who wish to award a public service contract by open, restricted or, under the conditions laid down in Article 11, negotiated procedure, shall make known their intention by means of a notice.'

7 By virtue of Article 30(1) of Directive 92/50:

`In so far as candidates for a public contract or tenderers have to possess a particular authorisation or to be members of a particular organisation in their home country in order to be able to perform the service concerned, the contracting authority may require them to prove that they hold such authorisation or membership.'

Facts and pre-litigation procedure

10 On 7 April 1988, the Belgian waterways and maritime affairs authority issued a restricted invitation to tender for surveillance of the Belgian coast by means of aerial photography.

11 The contract was awarded to the Belgian undertaking Eurosense Belfotop NV (hereinafter `Eurosense Belfotop'), which was adjudged to be technically and financially the best candidate.

12 In view of the forthcoming regionalisation of the Belgian State, the then Ministerial Committee for Economic and Social Industrialisation decided to award the contract for one year only.

13 On 29 July 1989, the Flemish Government decided to extend the contract by six years on the basis of the 1988 tender.

14 That contract mainly concerned the provision of regular surveillance by means of aerial photography of the chain of dunes and beaches, both newly emerged and submerged, on the Belgian coast and the processing of the data obtained.

15 From 1992, the Flemish authorities examined the possibility of amending the contract by means of an addendum.

16 On 13 April 1995, following a negotiated procedure without prior notification, the Flemish minister for public works signed an addendum to the contract with Eurosense Belfotop, in the amount of BEF 534 000 000 (excluding VAT), for a duration of nine years.

17 On 27 December 1995, the Commission sent the Kingdom of Belgium a letter of formal notice claiming that the contract extended by the addendum of 13 April 1995 (hereinafter `the contract in issue') fell within the scope of Directive 92/50 and that, according to Article 15(1) and (2), an indicative notice and a contract notice should have been published in the Official Journal of the European Communities. The fact that no notice was published in respect of that contract constitutes an infringement of Article 15(1) and (2) of Directive 92/50. Furthermore, the award of a privately negotiated public contract cannot be justified on the basis of Article 11(3) thereof, which lays down the conditions under which awarding authorities may award their contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, since none of the conditions referred to in that paragraph had been met.

18 In its reply of 2 February 1996, the Belgian Government rejected the objections set down in the letter of formal notice of 27 December 1995.

19 First, Directive 92/50 does not apply to the contract in issue by virtue of Article 4(2) thereof. Next, the award of the contract by negotiated procedure was justified under Article 11(3)(b) of that directive. In that regard, the criteria set in the present case for awarding the contract by negotiated procedure are as follows: (a) possession of a military security certificate; (b) possession of a licence from the aviation authorities to engage in aviation activity; (c) possession of the requisite know-how, technology and equipment; (d) the above three elements to be in the possession of a single undertaking; (e) sufficient financial capacity to be able to provide services annually to the value of some BEF 80 000 000. Finally, other factors justified awarding the contract by negotiated procedure, such as the existence of exclusive rights (copyright), the availability of aircraft within two hours' flying time of the Belgian coast and knowledge of Dutch.

20 As those replies did not enable the Commission to withdraw its objections, it sent the Kingdom of Belgium a reasoned opinion on 10 March 1999, pursuant to Article 226 EC, in which it reiterated its objections and found that:

- by failing to cause to be published in the Official Journal of the European Communities the indicative notice and the contract notice required by Directive 92/50; and

- by failing to justify use of the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, the Kingdom of Belgium has failed to fulfil its obligations under Directive 92/50, in particular Articles 11(3) and 15(2) thereof.

21 The Commission called on the Kingdom of Belgium to take the measures necessary to comply with the reasoned opinion within two months of its notification.

22 The Belgian Government responded to the reasoned opinion by a letter of 1 June 1999. In particular, it claimed that the main object of the contract was to provide aerial photography services, which fall not within Category 12 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50 but within Category 27 (`Other services') of Annex I B. For the remainder, the Belgian Government referred to its reply to the letter of notice.

23 Not satisfied with that response, the Commission decided to bring the present action.

Substance

Pleas in law and arguments of the parties

24 By its action, the Commission essentially claims that the award of the contract in issue by way of a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice infringes Directive 92/50.

25 The Belgian Government puts forward three pleas in law in its defence. First, Directive 92/50 does not apply to the contract in issue because its performance must be accompanied by special security measures within the meaning of Article 4(2) thereof. Secondly, the services to which that contract relates fall within Annex I B to Directive 92/50 and, accordingly, the contract in issue is not subject to the provisions of that directive limiting the use of the negotiated procedure and requiring publication of a contract notice. Thirdly, use of the negotiated procedure is justified under Article 11(3) of the directive, in particular for technical reasons and for reasons to do with protection of exclusive rights.

26 By its first plea in law, the Belgian Government notes that one of the five criteria for obtaining award of the contract in issue was possession of a military security certificate. Undertakings which, when executing a public contract, have access to data, sites or equipment classified by the national authorities or NATO, can obtain a military security certificate after undergoing security checks. Those undertakings which do not possess a military security certificate must, before processing the data, transmit the results of their photography to the general intelligence services (SRG), which check to see whether they contain classified objects and, if necessary, make the latter unidentifiable.

Those undertakings which do possess such a certificate receive a list of the classified items, allowing them to work directly on the results of their photography and, before publishing or distributing them, themselves conceal the classified objects. The intention behind that rule is obvious: classified material is of great strategic importance. The dissemination of geographical information concerning such objects entails serious risks of terrorism, sabotage or espionage. Thus, the military security certificate is a special security measure within the meaning of Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50, and it therefore does not apply to the contract in issue.

27 The Commission claims that the exception provided for by Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50, which must be interpreted strictly, does not apply in the present case. According to Belgian law, those undertakings which do not possess a military security certificate must, before processing their data, transmit the results of their photography to the Belgian security services, which then check whether such photography contains classified objects and conceal them as necessary. The whole purpose of obtaining a military security certificate is to allow undertakings which possess it to be exempt from such measures. Indeed, it would not be necessary for the security services to check the photography of an undertaking possessing such a certificate since the undertaking is authorised to work directly with uncensored aerial photographs.

28 It follows, in the Commission's submission, that the condition stipulated in the contract in issue that the contracting undertaking should possess a military security certificate constitutes a particular authorisation required of tenderers within the meaning of Article 30(1) of Directive 92/50 rather than a special security measure within the meaning of Article 4(2) thereof. The former provision does not preclude the application of Directive 92/50 but merely allows the adjudicating authority to impose an additional requirement. The requirement of a military security certificate in the context of the contract in issue does not therefore entail the non-application of the abovementioned directive.

Findings of the Court

29 Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50 provides in particular that the directive is not to apply to services the execution of which must be accompanied by special security measures in accordance with the laws, regulations or administrative provisions in force in the Member State concerned.

30 It is not disputed that the Kingdom of Belgium is responsible for protecting the security not only of its national installations but also of the installations of international organisations within its territory, such as NATO. It is therefore for the Belgian authorities to lay down the security measures necessary for the protection of such installations.

31 The Belgian Government stated to the Court, without being contradicted by the Commission, that all aerial photography in Belgium must be submitted to the Belgian security services for checking and possible censoring, unless the undertaking concerned possesses a military security certificate, in which case it is for that undertaking itself to conceal images of sites classified secret before any dissemination of its photographs.

32 The Belgian Government further stated, without being contradicted on the point by the Commission, that the procedure for obtaining the military security certificate is strictly applied and involves a thorough vetting of the undertaking concerned. The past record, circle of contacts, trips abroad and membership of organisations of every member of staff who has access to the photographs, as well as of the shareholders and managers of that undertaking, is looked into in detail.

33 Moreover, again according to the uncontradicted submission of the Belgian Government, in order to guarantee the protection of classified information in its possession, the undertaking in question must fulfil conditions as to security commensurate with the level of confidentiality of the information held. Special procedures for accessing the recorded material are necessary and the equipment for storing and using the uncensored results of photography must meet certain security requirements, such as that photographs and related documents must be kept in a bombproof building with a metal-clad main door protected by a double alarm system permanently linked to a security firm.

34 Obtention of a military security certificate does not, therefore, constitute a merely administrative formality but requires that certain operational conditions be met by the certified undertaking. Furthermore, it means that the undertaking continues to meet security requirements in subsequent operations.

35 Obtention of a military security certificate does not have the effect of exempting the certified undertaking from taking any other security measure. The only difference is that the systematic involvement of the national security services is obviated, while the certified undertaking remains subject to security requirements, in particular the obligation to conceal any classified objects itself prior to the possible dissemination of the photographs.

36 In view of the Belgian provisions as a whole as they have been laid before the Court, it must be concluded that execution of the services under the contract in issue must be accompanied by special security measures within the meaning of Article 4(2) of Directive 92/50, including the obtention by the undertaking providing the service of a military security certificate.

37 It follows that, in accordance with that provision, Directive 92/50 does not apply to the services covered by the contract in issue.

38 Accordingly, the application must be dismissed, without there being any need to examine the second and third pleas in law advanced by the Belgian Government in its defence.

Costs

39 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Belgian Government has not applied for costs, the parties must be ordered to bear their own costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

(Sixth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Dismisses the application;

2. Orders the parties to bear their own costs.

Costs

30 The costs incurred by the Austrian and Italian Governments and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

(Sixth Chamber),

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Bundesvergabeamt by order of 25 June 2001, hereby rules:

1. Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, does not preclude the review procedures laid down by the directive being available to persons wishing to obtain a particular public contract only if they have been or risk being harmed by the infringement they allege.

2. Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 92/50, does not permit a tenderer to be refused access to the review procedures laid down by the directive to contest the lawfulness of the decision of the contracting authority not to consider his bid as the best bid on the ground that his bid should have been eliminated at the outset by the contracting authority for other reasons and that therefore he neither has been nor risks being harmed by the unlawfulness which he alleges. In the review procedure thus open to the tenderer, he must be allowed to challenge the ground of exclusion on the basis of which the review body intends to conclude that he neither has been nor risks being harmed by the decision he alleges to be unlawful.

1 By order of 25 June 2001, received at the Court on 28 June 2001, the Bundesvergabeamt (Federal Public Procurement Office) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC two questions on the interpretation of Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1, `Directive 89/665').

2 Those questions were raised in proceedings between Mr Hackermüller, architect and qualified engineer, and the companies Bundesimmobiliengesellschaft mbH (BIG) and Wiener Entwicklungsgesellschaft mbH für den Donauraum AG (WED) (`the defendants') concerning the defendants' decision not to accept the bid submitted by Mr Hackermüller for a public services contract.

Legal context

Community provisions

3 Article 1 of Directive 89/665 provides:

`1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC... ,

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the provisions set out in the following articles and, in particular, Article 2(7), on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

...

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

4 Under Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665:

`The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by infringement.'

National legislation

5 Directive 89/665 was transposed into Austrian law by the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Bundesvergabegesetz) 1997 (1997 Federal Public Procurement Law, BGBl. I, 1997/56, `the BVergG').

6 Paragraph 113 of the BVergG sets out the powers of the Bundesvergabeamt. It provides:

`1. The Bundesvergabeamt is responsible on application for carrying out a review procedure in accordance with the following provisions.

2. To preclude infringements of this Federal Law and of the regulations implementing it, the Bundesvergabeamt is authorised until the time of the award:

(1) to adopt interim measures and

(2) to set aside unlawful decisions of the contracting authority.

3. After the award of the contract or the close of the contract award procedure, the Bundesvergabeamt is competent to determine whether, on grounds of infringement of this Federal Law or of any regulations issued under it, the contract has not been awarded to the best tenderer....'

7 Paragraph 115(1) of the BVergG provides:

`Where an undertaking claims to have an interest in the conclusion of a contract within the scope of this Federal Law, it may apply for the contracting authority's decision in the contract award procedure to be reviewed on the ground of unlawfulness, provided that it has been or risks being harmed by the alleged infringement.'

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

8 The defendants invited tenders to select architectural designs and decision parameters in order to award general planning contracts for building the new Engineering Faculty for the Technical University in Vienna. The first stage of the procedure involved a competition designed to be an `open search for interested parties to identify ideas'.

9 Several interested parties, including Mr Hackermüller and the company Hans Lechner-ZT GmbH (`Lechner') replied to the invitation to tender and submitted projects. During the second stage of the procedure, the negotiation, the Beratungsgremium (the advisory panel) recommended pursuing the procedure in the short term with Lechner. By letter of 10 February 1999, the four other tenderers accepted for the negotiation procedure, including Mr Hackermüller, were informed that the Beratungsgremium had not recommended implementation of their project.

10 On 29 March 1999 Mr Hackermüller brought proceedings before the Bundesvergabeamt under Paragraph 113(2) of the BVergG seeking inter alia to have set aside (1) the decision in which the Beratungsgremium and/or the defendants accepted the bid of a rival tenderer as the best tender and recommended that the negotiation procedure should be pursued with the rival tenderer in the short term, and (2) the decision by which the selection of the bids was made without regard to the criteria laid down in the invitation to tender.

11 By decision of 31 May 1999 the Bundesvergabeamt, pursuant to Paragraph 115(1) of the BVergG, dismissed Mr Hackermüller's applications in their entirety on the grounds that he did not have locus standi because his bid should have been eliminated at the first stage of the procedure, under Paragraph 52(1), subparagraph 8, of the BVergG.

12 In support of its decision, the Bundesvergabeamt explained first of all that under Paragraph 115(1) of the BVergG a trader may apply for review only if he risks harm or some other disadvantage. It also pointed out that under Paragraph 52(1), subparagraph 8, of the BVergG the awarding body must, before selecting the successful bid, eliminate immediately, on the basis of the results of its examination of the bids, those which do not comply with the conditions of the invitation to tender or are incomplete or incorrect, if those errors have not been, or cannot be, rectified.

13 The Bundesvergabeamt went on to point out that point 1.6.7 of the invitation to tender expressly refers to Paragraph 36(4) of the Wettbewerbsordnung der Architekten (Competition rules for architects, `the WOA'), which provides that, where there is a ground for exclusion under Paragraph 8 of the WOA, the project in question must be rejected, and that Paragraph 8(1)(d) excludes from participation in architectural competitions, among others, persons who include in the portfolio information enabling the author to be identified.

14 Finally, having established that Mr Hackermüller had given his name under the heading `proposed organisation of overall planning', so that his project should have been eliminated under the combined provisions of Paragraph 52(1), subparagraph 8, of the BVergG and Paragraph 36(4) of the WOA, the Bundesvergabeamt concluded that the project could no longer be considered for the contract and that, since he could not be harmed by any potential infringements of the principle of the lowest tenderer and the rules of the negotiation procedure, Mr Hackermüller had no locus standi to claim the infringements alleged in his application.

15 On 7 July 1999, Mr Hackermüller brought an action for annulment of the Bundesvergabeamt's decision of 31 May 1999 before the Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court), Austria. In its judgment of 14 March 2001 (B1137/99-9), the Verfassungsgerichtshof held that, in view of the broad interpretation that should be given, according to the Court's case-law (see, in particular, Case C-54/96 Dorsch Consult [1997] ECR I-4961, paragraph 46, and Case C-81/98 Alcatel Austria and Others [1999] ECR I-7671, paragraphs 34 and 35), to the concept of locus standi to instigate a review procedure under Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, it was questionable to interpret the conditions for making an application under Paragraph 115(1) in conjunction with Paragraph 52(1) of the BVergG as meaning that a tenderer who was not eliminated by the contracting authority may be excluded from the review procedure by a decision of the body responsible for the procedure rejecting his claim for a judicial remedy, if that body finds at the outset a reason which would have given grounds for eliminating the tenderer. It therefore annulled the Bundesvergabeamt's decision of 31 May 1999 for breach of the constitutional right to a procedure before the appropriate court.

16 It was in those circumstances that the Bundesvergabeamt decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

`1. Is Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665... to be interpreted as meaning that any person seeking the award of a specific public contract is entitled to institute a review procedure?

2. In the event that the answer given to Question 1 is no:

Is the abovementioned provision to be understood as meaning that, if a tenderer's bid is not eliminated by the contracting authority, but the review body finds in the course of the review procedure that the contracting authority would have been bound to eliminate it, the tenderer has been or risks being harmed by the infringement alleged by him - in this case the finding by the contracting authority that a rival tenderer submitted the best bid - and that he must therefore be entitled to a review procedure?'

17 In this connection, it need only be pointed out that, under Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665, Member States are required to ensure that the review procedures laid down by the directive are available `at least' to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement of the Community law on public procurement or the national rules implementing that law.

18 It is thus apparent that the provision does not oblige the Member States to make those review procedures available to any person wishing to obtain a public contract but allows them to require, in addition, that the person concerned has been or risks being harmed by the infringement he alleges.

19 The reply which should therefore be given to Question 1 is that Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 does not preclude the review procedures laid down by the directive being available to persons wishing to obtain a particular public contract only if they have been or risk being harmed by the infringement they allege.

20 Since Question 2 has been raised in the event that Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 should be interpreted as meaning that it allows access to the review procedures laid down by the directive to be made conditional on the fact that the alleged infringement has harmed or risks harming the applicant, it should be answered.

21 In the light of the facts in the main proceedings, this question must be understood as seeking to ascertain whether a tenderer seeking to contest the lawfulness of the decision of the contracting authority not to consider his bid as the best bid may be refused access to the review procedures laid down by Directive 89/665 on the ground that his bid should have been eliminated at the outset by the contracting authority for other reasons and that, therefore, he neither has been nor risks being harmed by the unlawfulness which he alleges.

22 In that regard, it is appropriate to recall that, as is apparent from the first and second recitals in the preamble, Directive 89/665 is intended to strengthen the existing mechanisms, both at national and Community level, to ensure the effective application of the directives relating to public procurement, in particular at a stage when infringements can still be remedied. To that effect, Article 1(1) of that directive requires Member States to guarantee that unlawful decisions of contracting authorities can be subjected to effective review which is as swift as possible (see, in particular, Alcatel Austria, cited above, paragraphs 33 and 34, and Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraph 74).

23 It is thus plain that the full achievement of the objective of Directive 89/665 would be compromised if it were permissible for a body responsible for the review procedures provided for by the directive to refuse access to them to a tenderer alleging the unlawfulness of the decision by which the contracting authority had not considered its bid as being the best bid, on the ground that the same contracting authority was wrong not to eliminate that bid even before making the selection of the best bid.

24 There can be no doubt that a decision by which the contracting authority eliminates the bid of a tenderer even before making that selection is a decision of which it must be possible to seek review under Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, since that provision applies to all decisions taken by contracting authorities which are subject to the rules of Community law on public procurement (see inter alia Case C-92/00 HI [2002] ECR I-5553, paragraph 37, and Case C-57/01 Makedoniko Metro and Michaniki [2003] ECR I-1091, paragraph 68) and makes no provision for any limitation as regards the nature and content of those decisions (see inter alia the aforementioned judgments in Alcatel Austria, paragraph 35, and HI, paragraph 49).

25 Therefore, if the tenderer's bid had been eliminated by the contracting authority at a stage prior to that of the selection of the best bid, he would have had to be allowed, as a person who has been or risks being harmed by that decision to eliminate his bid, to challenge the lawfulness of that decision by means of the review procedures provided for by Directive 89/665.

26 In those circumstances, if a review body were to refuse access to those procedures to a tenderer in a position like that of Mr Hackermüller, the effect would be to deny him not only his right to seek review of the decision he alleges to be unlawful but also the right to challenge the validity of the ground for exclusion raised by that body to deny him the status of a person who has been or risks being harmed by the alleged unlawfulness.

27 Admittedly, if in order to mitigate that situation the tenderer is afforded the right to challenge the validity of that ground of exclusion in the review procedure he instigates in order to challenge the lawfulness of the decision by which the contracting authority did not consider his bid as being the best bid, it is possible that at the end of that procedure the review body may reach the conclusion that the bid should actually have been eliminated at the outset and that the tenderer's application should be dismissed on the ground that, in the light of that circumstance, he neither has been nor risks being harmed by the infringement he alleges.

28 However, if the contracting authority has not taken a decision to exclude the tenderer's bid at the appropriate stage of the award procedure, the method of proceeding described in the previous paragraph must be regarded as the only one likely to guarantee the tenderer the right to challenge the validity of the ground for exclusion on the basis of which the review body intends to conclude that he neither has been nor risks being harmed by the decision he alleges to be unlawful and, accordingly, to ensure the effective application of the Community directives on public procurement at all stages of the award procedure.

29 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the reply which should be given to Question 2 is that Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 does not permit a tenderer to be refused access to the review procedures laid down by the directive to contest the lawfulness of the decision of the contracting authority not to consider his bid as the best bid on the ground that his bid should have been eliminated at the outset by the contracting authority for other reasons and that therefore he neither has been nor risks being harmed by the unlawfulness which he alleges. In the review procedure thus open to the tenderer, he must be allowed to challenge the ground of exclusion on the basis of which the review body intends to conclude that he neither has been nor risks being harmed by the decision he alleges to be unlawful.

Costs

75 The costs incurred by the Austrian Government and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

(Sixth Chamber),

in answer to the question referred to it by the Diikitiko Efetio Athinon by order of 26 October 2000, hereby rules:

1. Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts does not preclude national rules which prohibit a change in the composition of a group consortium taking part in a procedure for the award of a public works contract or a public works concession which occurs after submission of tenders.

2. In so far as a decision of a contracting authority adversely affects the rights conferred on a consortium by Community law in the context of a procedure for the award of a public contract, the consortium must be able to avail itself of the review procedures provided for by Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts.

1 By order of 26 October 2000, received at the Court on 9 February 2001, the Diikitiko Efetio Athinon (Administrative Court of Appeal, Athens) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC a question on the interpretation of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), and of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54).

2 That question has arisen in proceedings between (i) the consortium Makedoniko Metro (`Makedoniko Metro') and the company Mikhaniki AE (`Mikhaniki') and (ii) the Greek State concerning a contract for the construction of an underground railway in Thessaloniki.

Legal framework

Community law

3 Article 1 of Directive 89/665 provides:

`1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EE, and 92/50/EEC... , decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles, and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

2. Member States shall ensure that there is no discrimination between undertakings claiming injury in the context of a procedure for the award of a contract as a result of the distinction made by this Directive between national rules implementing Community law and other national rules.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

4 Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665 provides:

...

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.'

5 Under Article 5 of Directive 89/665, Member States were to bring into force, before 21 December 1991, the measures necessary to comply with the directive.

6 Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the co-ordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682), which was amended on several occasions, has been repealed and replaced by Directive 93/37.

7 Article 1(a) and (d) of Directive 93/37 provides:

`For the purpose of this Directive:

(a) "public works contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a contractor and a contracting authority as defined in (b), which have as their object either the execution, or both the execution and design, of works related to one of the activities referred to in Annex II or a work defined in (c) below, or the execution, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority;

...

(d) "public works concession" is a contract of the same type as that indicated in (a) except for the fact that the consideration for the works to be carried out consists either solely in the right to exploit the construction or in this right together with payment'.

8 Article 3(1) of Directive 93/37 provides:

`Should contracting authorities conclude a public works concession contract, the advertising rules as described in Article 11(3), (6), (7) and (9) to (13), and in Article 15, shall apply to that contract when its value is not less than [a specified amount].'

9 Pursuant to Articles 4 to 6 of Directive 93/37, the directive applies, subject to certain exceptions, to public works contracts whose value is not less than a specific amount.

10 Article 21 of Directive 93/37 provides:

`Tenders may be submitted by groups of contractors. These groups may not be required to assume a specific legal form in order to submit the tender; however, the group selected may be required to do so when it has been awarded the contract.'

11 That provision is in essence identical to Article 21 of Directive 71/305, which it replaces.

12 Article 36(1) of Directive 93/37 repeals Directive 71/305 `without prejudice to the obligations of the Member States concerning the deadlines for transposition into national law and for application indicated in Annex VII'. According to that annex, the deadline for transposing Article 21 of Directive 71/305 was, as regards the Hellenic Republic, 1 January 1981.

13 Article 36(2) of Directive 93/37 provides that references to the repealed directive (71/305) are to be construed as references to Directive 93/37.

National law

14 It is apparent from the order for reference that the tender procedure at issue in the main proceedings is governed principally by Law No 1418/1984 (23 A) on public works and related matters and by Presidential Decree 609/1985 (223 A). That legislation provides, on certain conditions, for the substitution of a member of a consortium which has been awarded a particular contract. Such substitution, which is always subject to approval by the awarding authority, is provided for only at the stage when the works are being carried out, that is to say the phase which follows signature of the contract between the contractor and the awarding authority and not at a stage prior to award of the contract.

The main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

15 The Greek State decided to issue an international invitation to tender in respect of the planning, construction, self-financing and operation of an underground railway for Thessaloniki, with a budget of GRD 65 000 000 000. It opted, in relation to the award of that contract, for a restricted procedure comprising six stages: preselection of candidates who would be invited to tender, submission of tenders by the preselected candidates, evaluation of their technical proposals, evaluation of their economic and financial proposals, negotiations between the contracting authority and the tenderer provisionally selected and signature of the contract.

16 By decision of 18 June 1992, the Greek Minister for the Environment, Regional Development and Public Works (`the Minister') approved the contract notice initiating the first stage of the procedure (preselection of candidates). On conclusion of that stage, eight consortia which had put themselves forward as candidates, including Makedoniko Metro and the Thessaloniki Metro consortium, were authorised to submit tenders.

17 By decision of 1 February 1993, the Minister approved the tender documentation for the second stage of the procedure (submission of tenders by preselected candidates), including, in particular, the supplementary contract notice (`the supplementary notice') and the specific contract documents.

18 Article 6(2) of the supplementary notice specified that the preselected consortia were authorised to take part in the form that they had taken during the first stage of the procedure, that the creation of groupings or other forms of cooperation between them was strictly precluded and, finally, that it was possible for a consortium to be enlarged by the addition of a new member, provided that the new member had not been included in any other consortium preselected to take part in the second stage of the procedure.

19 Article 12(2) of the supplementary notice provided that each tenderer's file should include all the documents showing that the tenderer constituted, from a legal perspective, a consortium and, in particular, a certificate from a notary that a consortium had been formed by all the members of the preselected group, including any new members, in accordance with Article 6 of the supplementary notice. Under Article 12(3) and (4) of the supplementary notice, the tenderers' files were also to contain certified minutes of the meetings of the boards of directors of the members of the consortium, authorising their participation therein, and copies, certified by the competent authorities, of the Articles of Association of any new members of the consortium. Finally, Article 12(6) of the supplementary notice required that the file contain all the items referred to in Article 7(1) to (4) of the notice relating to the first stage of the contract concerning any new members of a consortium.

20 Article 7(2) of the supplementary notice provided that the consortia concerned were to set out their intentions regarding the extent of their involvement in the financing of the project and to submit a statement attesting to their willingness to invest the capital sums which were essential, in addition to any subsidies, to ensure completion, maintenance and operation of the underground railway.

21 Article 7(3) of that notice stated that any construction undertaking or consultancy was required to submit a certificate of registration in the commercial register of the country in which it was established and to submit evidence of its financial and economic resources and its technical capabilities and skills. Article 7(4) of the notice provided that undertakings within the consortium which would have more specific responsibility for operating the underground railway were required to submit appropriate certificates demonstrating their capabilities and experience in operating transport facilities and in particular underground railways.

22 If the contract notices are read together, it is apparent that a consortium preselected during the first stage of the procedure could be enlarged during the second stage by the addition of new members but that such enlargement was possible only until the deadline for submission of tenders.

23 During the second stage of the procedure, technical proposals, economic studies and financial proposals were submitted by, amongst others, Makedoniko Metro and Thessaloniki Metro.

24 When the preselection took place, Makedoniko Metro's members were the companies Mikhaniki, Edi-Stra-Edilizia Stradale SpA, Fidel SpA and Teknocenter-Centro Servizi Administrativi Srl, which held respectively 70%, 20%, 5% and 5% interests.

25 During the second stage of the procedure, the Makedoniko Metro group was extended to include AEG Westinghouse Transport Systems GmbH. The interests of the four abovementioned companies then amounted to, respectively, 63%, 17%, 5% and 5%, while AEG Westinghouse Transport Systems GmbH had a 10% stake. That was the composition of Makedoniko Metro when it was provisionally designated as the successful tenderer on 14 June 1994. That composition is not at issue between the parties to the main proceedings.

26 Following the formation, by decision of 24 June 1994, of the negotiating committee and following the commencement of negotiations between the Greek State and Makedoniko Metro as the provisionally designated successful tenderer, Makedoniko Metro gave notice to the Minister, by letter of 29 March 1996, of its new composition, which included as members Mikhaniki, ABB Daimler-Benz Transportation Deutschland GmbH (`Adtranz') and the Fidel Group, which comprised Edi-Stra-Edilizia Stradale SpA, Fidel SpA and Teknocenter-Centro Servizi Administrativi Srl, whose respective stakes were 80% (Mikhaniki), 19% (Adtranz) and 1% (Fidel Group).

27 Subsequently, by letter of 14 June 1996, Makedoniko Metro informed the commission for major works, in response to questions concerning reports that members of the Fidel Group were insolvent and had gone into liquidation, that the companies within that group were no longer part of Makedoniko Metro and that, as of that date, the latter's members were Mikhaniki, Adtranz and Belgian Transport and Urban Infrastructure Consult (Transurb Consult), whose respective interests amounted to 80.65%, 19% and 0.35%. The document establishing Makedoniko Metro with that membership was not submitted to the authorities. That document was signed on 27 November 1996. It was as thus constituted that Makedoniko Metro brought the main action.

28 Finding that Makedoniko Metro had substantially departed from the requirements laid down for the contract, the Minister took the view that the negotiations had failed and, by decision of 29 November 1996, terminated negotiations between the Greek State and Makedoniko Metro and called on Thessaloniki Metro to enter into negotiations as the first candidate for provisional contractor.

29 On 10 December 1996 Makedoniko Metro brought an action for annulment of the Minister's decision of 29 November 1996 before the Simvoulio tis Epikratias (Council of State, Greece). By judgment No 971/1998 of 6 March 1998, the Council of State dismissed the action on the ground that Makedoniko Metro could not lawfully change its composition after tenders had been submitted and after having been chosen as provisional contractor, whilst also continuing to take part in the procedure at issue, and that, consequently, it was not entitled, with its new membership, to apply for annulment of the contested decision.

30 In addition, Makedoniko Metro and Mikhaniki brought an action before the Diikitiko Protodikio Athinon (Administrative Court of First Instance, Athens) for a declaration that the Greek State was liable to pay certain sums by way of compensation and financial satisfaction for non-material damage suffered by them in the wake of the unlawful decision and the administration's breach of duty. By judgment No 3794/1999 of 30 April 1999, the Administrative Court dismissed the action on the ground that Makedoniko Metro, as composed at the time when it commenced proceedings, was not entitled to claim compensation.

31 Makedoniko Metro and Mikhaniki appealed against that judgment to the Diikitiko Efetio Athinon, which decided to stay proceedings and refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

`Must a change in the composition of a consortium participating in procedures for the award of a public-works contract which occurs after submission of tenders and selection of the group as the provisional contractor and is tacitly accepted by the contracting authority be interpreted in such a way as to result in the loss of that consortium's right to participate in the tender procedure and, by extension, also of its right to, or interest in, the award of the contract for execution of the works?

Is such an interpretation consistent with the provisions and spirit of Directives 93/37/EEC and 89/665/EEC?'

Request that the oral procedure be reopened

32 By letter of 15 July 2002, Makedoniko Metro requested that the oral procedure be reopened `so that further information about the subject-matter of the national procedure giving rise to the questions referred for a preliminary ruling could be given to the Court'.

33 Makedoniko Metro supports its request by disputing, inter alia, point 35 of the Advocate General's Opinion, in which she reformulates the question referred for a preliminary ruling, and point 79 of the Opinion, which explains the subject-matter of the question. In Makedoniko Metro's submission, the Advocate General was wrong to conclude that the national authorities took a decision excluding Makedoniko Metro from the procedure for the award of the contract at issue on the grounds of the change in its composition. The contracting authority at no time took a decision to exclude Makedoniko Metro from the procedure on the grounds of the change in its composition and, consequently, such a decision could not form the subject-matter of the main proceedings.

34 It is appropriate to bear in mind that the Court may of its own motion, on a proposal from the Advocate General or at the request of the parties, order that the oral procedure be reopened, in accordance with Article 61 of its Rules of Procedure, if it considers that it lacks sufficient information, or that the case must be dealt with on the basis of an argument which has not been debated between the parties (see Joined Cases C-270/97 and C-271/97 Deutsche Post [2000] ECR I-929, paragraph 30, and Case C-299/99 Philips [2002] ECR I-5475, paragraph 20).

35 As regards Makedoniko Metro's arguments, it must nevertheless be observed, first, that, in accordance with settled case-law, the Court may, where appropriate, reformulate a question referred for a preliminary ruling in order to avoid exceeding its jurisdiction and to provide the referring court with an answer that will be of assistance to it (see, to that effect, Case C-17/92 Distribuidores Cinematograficos [1993] ECR I-2239, paragraph 8, and Case C-107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I-8121, paragraph 33) and, second, that it is for the national court to decide what forms the subject-matter of the main proceedings.

36 The submissions which Makedoniko Metro seeks to put forward in the course of a reopened oral procedure relate solely to questions falling within the jurisdiction of the referring court.

37 Having regard to those considerations, the Court, after hearing the Advocate General, concludes that there is nothing in Makedoniko Metro's request to indicate that it is necessary to reopen the oral procedure or that it would serve any useful purpose to do so.

38 Makedoniko Metro's request must therefore be rejected.

The question referred for a preliminary ruling

Observations submitted to the Court

39 Makedoniko Metro and Mikhaniki argue that the decision of 29 November 1996 terminating negotiations between the Greek State and Makedoniko Metro was not based on the change in composition of the consortium. On the contrary, the decision treated Makedoniko Metro as though it were still a tenderer, that is as though, despite the changes in its composition, it retained the specific right to take part in the tender procedure at issue. Consequently, in its final composition, Makedoniko Metro remained entitled to engage in the legal relationships attendant upon the tender procedure at issue and could therefore rely on a capacity to bring legal proceedings and a legitimate interest in seeking compensation for infringement of the provisions of Directive 93/37 and for breach of the principle that tenderers should be treated equally which, as a general principle of Community law, also applies to the public contract at issue before the national court (even if it were to be classified as a public works concession). According to Makedoniko Metro and Mikhaniki, the present case concerns a typical public works contract but, even if the contract at issue in the main proceedings were to be classified as a public works concession, Directive 89/665 would none the less apply, since it is merely a specific expression of the general principle that the rights of persons adversely affected by breaches of Community law on public procurement must be protected.

40 Makedoniko Metro and Mikhaniki submit that the answer to the question referred should be that a change in the composition of a consortium which has responded to an invitation to tender for a public works contract or a public works concession - where the change has been tacitly accepted by the contracting authority and occurred after submission of tenders and after the consortium has been selected as provisional contractor and where, in addition, the change does not feature in the reasons given in support of the decision to terminate negotiations and exclude the consortium from the remainder of the procedure - cannot result in the consortium being deprived of its status as a tenderer, or in it or its members losing their interest in being awarded the public contract or their right to be awarded it or, by extension, in the loss of its legitimate interest in, or its capacity to bring proceedings to protect, the rights conferred on it by Community law, which form the subject-matter of the procedure at issue. Any other interpretation of the national provisions at issue would be at variance with the letter and the spirit of Directives 93/37 and 89/665 and especially with the general principle that the rights of persons subject to Community law must be effectively protected.

41 The Greek Government observes that Directives 93/37 and 89/665 do not address the question of change in the composition of a consortium.

42 Since the question of the lawfulness or unlawfulness of a change in the composition of a consortium participating in a public works contract is not governed by Community law, the relevant provisions of national law apply, and these do not permit the substitution of a member of the group of contractors at the stage of the procedure preceding award of the contract.

43 The Greek Government concludes that the question referred for a preliminary ruling should be answered affirmatively.

44 The Austrian Government submits that the question should be reformulated in such a way that it seeks to ascertain whether Directive 93/37 precludes a change in the composition of a consortium after submission of tenders, thus depriving the consortium of the right to take part in the tender procedure and, by extension, of its rights and interest as regards the award of the contract to carry out the works.

45 It maintains that Directive 93/37 includes only rudimentary provisions on consortia. It seeks to protect the interests of economic operators established in one Member State who wish to offer goods or services to the contracting authorities established in another Member State. The information given in the order for reference contains no suggestion that the principles of Community law have been infringed.

46 In the light of those considerations, the Austrian Government concludes that the question, as reformulated, should be answered as follows: Directive 93/37 does not preclude a change in the composition of a consortium following submission of tenders; regard being had to that directive, the group does not lose its right to take part in the tender procedure and, by extension, does not lose its rights or interest as regards the award of the contract to carry out the works.

47 The Commission draws attention to the fact that the first part of the question could be construed as inviting the Court to rule on the interpretation of national law, which falls outside its jurisdiction. With a view to resolving that difficulty and providing an answer which will assist the national court, the Commission suggests that the question should be reformulated and addressed as three distinct questions, namely:

1. Does Directive 93/37 include rules permitting or prohibiting a change in the composition of a group which has already submitted a tender? More specifically, may a Member State provide in its national law, and may a contracting authority provide in the tender documentation, for rules providing that tenderers are not to alter their composition during the tender procedure and are to be excluded if they do?

2. Does Community law allow a contracting authority to continue to negotiate with a tenderer which has altered its composition in breach of rules laid down by national law and by the contract documentation?

3. Does a change in the composition of a group, in breach of rules laid down by national law and by the contract documentation, affect the exercise by that group of its rights under Directive 89/665 and, more specifically, the right to claim damages?

48 As regards the first of those questions, the Commission submits that Directive 93/37 contains no express provisions dealing with a change in the composition of a consortium. The only provision on groups is found in Article 21 of the directive, which allows them to submit tenders without being required to assume a specific legal form before the contract has been awarded. In the Commission's submission, no provision of Directive 93/37 requires contracting authorities to adopt a specific course of conduct as regards that aspect of the procedure. Consequently, the approach to be taken is a matter for national legislation or a specific decision by the contracting authority.

49 Those observations, which refer to the general scheme of Directive 93/37, are also relevant to a contract for a public works concession. The specific arrangements provided for by Directive 93/37 for public works concessions are restricted to advertising rules and leave the awarding authority free to set the conditions on which candidates are selected and concessions awarded in accordance with rules of its national law.

50 Therefore, the Commission suggests that the answer to the first reformulated question is that Directive 93/37 contains no rules preventing national legislation or the contract documentation from providing that a change in the composition of a consortium will not be permissible after a certain stage in the tender procedure, and more specifically after submission of a tender.

51 As regards the second reformulated question, the Commission submits that there would be a breach of the principle of equal treatment as between tenderers if a contracting authority unilaterally departed, in favour of one tenderer, from the requirements and conditions laid down in the contract documents, where the conditions are stated to be unalterable, without reopening the whole procedure, thus enabling the other tenderers, including potential tenderers, to take advantage of that departure.

52 Thus, in response to that question, the Commission submits that Community law does not allow a contracting authority to continue to negotiate with a tenderer which has changed its composition in breach of rules laid down by national law and by the contract documents.

53 As to the third reformulated question, the Commission observes that under Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, only decisions which are alleged to have infringed Community law or national rules implementing that law may be reviewed. It follows that the provision does not require Member States to provide for review procedures in respect of decisions taken in the course of an award procedure which infringe rules of national law which are not implementing Community directives on public procurement.

54 In those circumstances, the answer to the third reformulated question must be that a change in the composition of a group, in breach of rules laid down by national law and in the contract documents, does not affect the exercise by that group of its rights under Directive 89/665 and, more specifically, the right to claim damages, provided that the grounds for excluding the group are contrary to Community law on public procurement or to the rules of national law implementing Community law.

Findings of the Court

55 In the context of Article 234 EC the Court has no jurisdiction to rule either on the interpretation of provisions of national laws or regulations or on their conformity with Community law. It may, however, supply the national court with an interpretation of Community law that will enable that court to resolve the legal problem before it (Distribuidores Cinematograficos, paragraph 8, and Teckal, paragraph 33).

56 Furthermore, according to settled case-law, it is for the Court alone, where questions are formulated imprecisely, to extract from all the information provided by the national court and from the documents in the main proceedings the points of Community law which require interpretation, having regard to the subject-matter of those proceedings (Case C-168/95 Arcaro [1996] ECR I-4705, paragraph 21, and Teckal, paragraph 34).

57 Having regard to the information included in the order for reference and given that the national court is posing its question from the point of view of both Directive 93/37 and Directive 89/665, the Court concludes that the national court is essentially asking:

1. whether Directive 93/37 precludes national rules prohibiting a change in the composition of a group of contractors taking part in a procedure for the award of a public-works contract which occurs after submission of tenders, and

2. whether and to what extent Directive 89/665 confers rights of recourse on such a group of contractors.

58 As regards the first part of the question, the order for reference does not indicate whether the contract at issue in the main proceedings is a `public works contract' or a `public works concession' within the meaning of Directive 93/37. It is not for the Court, on a reference for a preliminary ruling, to resolve that question. In such circumstances, the question must be addressed by examining each of those hypotheses in turn.

59 If the contract at issue were a `public works contract' within the meaning of Directive 93/37, the directive would apply as provided in Articles 4 to 6.

60 The only provision of Directive 93/37 dealing with groups of contractors is Article 21. That is confined, first, to stating that tenders may be submitted by groups of contractors and, second, to preventing them from being required to assume a specific legal form before the contract has been awarded to the group selected.

61 It must be pointed out that Article 21 makes no provision about the composition of such groups. Rules about their composition are thus a matter for the Member States.

62 The same is true a fortiori if the contract at issue in the main proceedings is a `public works concession' within the meaning of Directive 93/37. It follows from Article 3(1) of the directive that Article 21 does not even apply to public works concessions.

63 Consequently, the answer to the first part of the question must be that Directive 93/37 does not preclude national rules which prohibit a change in the composition of a group of contractors taking part in a procedure for the award of a public works contract or a public works concession which occurs after submission of tenders.

64 As regards the second part of the question, Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 requires Member States to take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of the relevant Community directives, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

65 Member States are also required, under Article 1(3), to ensure that the review procedures are available at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

66 It is thus in the light of those matters that it is necessary to consider whether, in circumstances such as those obtaining in the main proceedings, the review procedures provided for by Directive 89/665 must be available to a consortium such as Makedoniko Metro.

67 In that regard, the Court observes, first, that, as the order for reference shows and as pointed out at paragraph 28 of this judgment, the Minister took the view that Makedoniko Metro had departed substantially from the requirements laid down for the contract and, by decision of 29 November 1996, terminated negotiations with the consortium.

68 For the purpose of ascertaining whether the Minister's decision is covered by the expression `decisions taken by the contracting authorities' in Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, it should be borne in mind that the Court has stated that that expression encompasses decisions taken by contracting authorities which are made subject to the Community law rules on public contracts (Case C-92/00 HI [2002] ECR I-5553, paragraph 37).

69 As to whether such rules apply to the present case, even if the Community directives on public procurement do not contain specifically applicable provisions, the general principles of Community law, and the principle of equal treatment in particular, also govern procedures for the award of public contracts (see Case C-324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress [2000] ECR I-10745, paragraph 60, and HI, paragraph 47).

70 Since such principles have been held to apply to a decision taken in the context of a procedure for the award of a public contract, that decision also falls within the rules laid down by Directive 89/665 in order to ensure compliance with the rules of Community law on public contracts (see HI, paragraph 48).

71 Where appropriate, it will be for the referring court to decide, in light of the relevant factors, whether such principles apply in the main proceedings.

72 It will also be for the referring court to establish whether Makedoniko Metro can be regarded, including with its new membership, as having, or having had, an interest in obtaining the contract at issue in the main proceedings and as having been harmed by the Minister's decision of 29 November 1996 for the purposes of Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665.

73 In those circumstances, the answer to the second part of the question must be that, in so far as a decision of a contracting authority adversely affects the rights conferred on a consortium by Community law in the context of a procedure for the award of a public contract, the consortium must be able to avail itself of the review procedures provided for by Directive 89/665.

74 In light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred must be that:

1. Directive 93/37 does not preclude national rules which prohibit a change in the composition of a consortium taking part in a procedure for the award of a public works contract or a public works concession which occurs after submission of tenders; and

2. in so far as a decision of a contracting authority adversely affects the rights conferred on a consortium by Community law in the context of a procedure for the award of a public contract, the consortium must be able to avail itself of the review procedures provided for by Directive 89/665.

APPLICATIONS for declarations that:

- by failing to invite tenders for the award of the contract for the collection of waste water in the Municipality of Bockhorn (Germany) and to publish notice of the results of the procedure for the award of the contract in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Federal Republic of Germany, at the time of the award of that public service contract, failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8 in conjunction with Article 15(2) and Article 16(1) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1);

- at the time of the award of a public service contract, the Federal Republic of Germany failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8 and Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50 by virtue of the fact that the City of Braunschweig (Germany) awarded a contract for waste disposal by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, although the criteria laid down by Article 11(3) for an award of a contract by privately negotiated procedure without a Community-wide invitation to tender had not been met, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 28 November 2002,

gives the following

Judgment

Costs

69 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission sought an order for costs against the Federal Republic of Germany and the latter has been unsuccessful, it must be ordered to pay the costs. Under Article 69(4) of the Rules of Procedure, the United Kingdom is to bear its own costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

(Fifth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Declares that since the Municipality of Bockhorn (Germany) failed to invite tenders for the award of the contract for the collection of its waste water and failed to publish notice of the results of the procedure for the award of the contract in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Federal Republic of Germany, at the time of the award of that public service contract, failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8 in conjunction with Article 15(2) and Article 16(1) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts;

2. Declares that since the City of Braunschweig (Germany) awarded a contract for waste disposal by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, although the criteria laid down in Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50 for an award by privately negotiated procedure without a Community-wide invitation to tender had not been met, the Federal Republic of Germany, at the time of the award of that public service contract, failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8 and Article 11(3)(b) of that directive;

3. Orders the Federal Republic of Germany to pay the costs;

4. Orders the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to bear its own costs.

1 By applications lodged at the Court Registry on 16 and 21 January 2001 respectively, the Commission of the European Communities brought two actions under Article 226 EC for declarations that:

- by failing to invite tenders for the award of the contract for the collection of waste water in the Municipality of Bockhorn (Germany) and to publish notice of the results of the procedure for the award of the contract in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Federal Republic of Germany, at the time of the award of that public service contract, failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8 in conjunction with Article 15(2) and Article 16(1) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1);

- at the time of the award of a public service contract, the Federal Republic of Germany failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8 and Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50 by virtue of the fact that the City of Braunschweig (Germany) awarded a contract for waste disposal by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, although the criteria laid down in Article

11(3) for an award by privately negotiated procedure without a Community-wide invitation to tender had not been met.

Legal context

2 Article 8 of Directive 92/50 provides that:

`Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex IA shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI.'

3 Title V (Articles 15 to 22) of Directive 92/50 deals with common advertising rules. Under Article 15(2) of the directive contracting authorities who wish to award a public service contract by open, restricted or, under the conditions laid down in Article 11 of the directive, negotiated procedure, make known their intention by means of a notice.

4 Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50 provides that:

`Contracting authorities may award public service contracts by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice in the following cases:

(b) when, for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the services may be provided only by a particular service provider'.

5 Article 16(1) of Directive 92/50 provides that:

`Contracting authorities who have awarded a public contract or have held a design contest shall send a notice of the results of the award procedure to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities.'

Facts and pre-litigation procedure

Case C-20/01

6 The Municipality of Bockhorn in Lower Saxony concluded a contract for the collection of its waste water - for a term of at least 30 years from 1 January 1997 - with the energy distribution undertaking Weser-Ems AG (hereinafter `EWE').

7 By letter of 30 April 1999, the Commission gave the Federal Republic of Germany formal notice to submit observations on whether the provisions of Directive 92/50 should have been applied in that instance.

8 In its reply of 1 July 1999, the German Government conceded that the contract concluded by the Municipality of Bockhorn should have been awarded in accordance with Community rules. In addition, it pointed out that the Ministry of Internal Affairs of the Land of Lower Saxony would take the opportunity to call on local authorities to give a firm reminder to bodies in their area that they must comply strictly with Community legislation on the award of public contracts.

9 On 21 March 2000, the Commission sent a reasoned opinion to the Federal Republic of Germany, in which it asserted that the provisions of Directive 92/50 should have been applied, and that it was irrelevant in law that the infringement of the provisions of Community law had been acknowledged by Germany. The Commission also called on Germany to remind the authorities concerned without delay of the relevant requirements and to urge them to comply with the abovementioned provisions in the future.

10 In a letter of 12 May 2000, the German Government once again acknowledged the breach of obligations complained of. It explained that on the basis of its intervention following the Commission's letter of formal notice, the Ministry of Internal Affairs of Lower Saxony, by decree of 21 June 1999, had instructed all local authorities in the Land to take appropriate measures to ensure that contracting authorities complied strictly with the Community provisions on the award of public contracts. In response to the reasoned opinion, the Government of Lower Saxony had insisted that those provisions must be complied with.

11 Moreover, the German Government contended that, under German law, it was virtually impossible to put an end to the infringement of Directive 92/50, since there had been a valid contract between the Municipality of Bockhorn and EWE since 1 January 1997 which could not be terminated without substantial compensation being paid to EWE. The cost of terminating the contract was disproportionate in relation to the Commission's objective.

12 The City of Braunschweig, also in Lower Saxony, and Braunschweigsche Kohlebergwerke (hereinafter `BKB') concluded a contract under which BKB was made responsible for residual waste disposal by thermal processing for a period of 30 years from June/July 1999.

13 The competent authorities of the City of Braunschweig took the view that Directive 92/50 applied but relied on Article 11(3) thereof to release them from their obligation to publish a contract notice, and awarded the contract by a negotiated procedure.

14 The Commission challenged that interpretation by letter of formal notice of 20 July 1998.

15 By letters of 4 August, 19 October and 15 December 1998, the German Government replied to the letter of formal notice, arguing that the conditions on which Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50 applied were met, since for technical reasons thermal treatment of waste could be entrusted only to BKB. It had been an essential criterion of the award of the contract that the incineration facilities were close to the City of Braunschweig in order to avoid transport over longer distances.

16 By letter of 16 December 1998, the German Government admitted that the Braunschweig authorities had infringed Directive 92/50 by applying the negotiated procedure without publishing a contract notice when there were no grounds for doing so.

17 On 6 March 2000, the Commission sent the Federal Republic of Germany a reasoned opinion in which, in particular, it called upon Germany to remind the authorities concerned without delay of the relevant rules and to urge them to comply with the applicable provisions in the future.

18 In a letter of 17 May 2000, the German Government admitted the infringement complained of. It also pointed out that the Government of Lower Saxony had instructed all local authorities to comply with the provisions on the award of public contracts. As in Case C-20/01, it stated that it would not be possible to put an end to the infringement of Directive 92/50 by terminating the contract. Moreover, such termination would oblige the City of Braunschweig to pay large sums by way of compensation to the other party to the contract. The cost of terminating the contract was therefore disproportionate.

19 By order of the President of the Court of 15 May 2001, Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 were joined for the purposes of the written and oral procedure and judgment.

20 By order of the President of the Court of 18 May 2001, the United Kingdom was granted leave to intervene in support of the forms of order sought by the defendant.

Admissibility of the application

Pleas in law and arguments of the parties

21 The German Government argues, first, that the actions are inadmissible, since there is no ongoing breach of obligations which must be brought to an end by the defendant Member State. The Community legislation on the award of public contracts consists solely of procedural rules. The effects of breach of those rules are exhausted as soon as the breach is committed. Once the Federal Republic of Germany had admitted the breach, there was no longer any objective interest in bringing infringement proceedings.

22 As regards the need for such an objective interest, the German Government submits that proceedings for failure by a Member State to fulfil its obligations can be likened to an action for failure to act under Article 232 EC. The latter is inadmissible when the institution concerned, having been called upon to act, has defined its position. According to the Court's case-law, even the admission that there has been an unlawful failure to act removes the objective interest in obtaining a declaration that there has been such a failure.

23 Nor does the need to establish the basis of liability of the Member State concerned give rise in this instance to an objective interest in obtaining a declaration that that State has failed to fulfil its obligations. In particular, liability to individuals is not at issue, since no individual appears to have suffered loss as a result of the contracts concluded by the Municipality of Bockhorn and the City of Braunschweig.

24 The German Government, supported by the United Kingdom Government on this point, submits that the contracts concluded by the contracting authorities are protected by Community law by virtue of being established rights. The principle pacta sunt servanda is enshrined in Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33). By allowing national law to limit the powers of the bodies responsible for review procedures concerning the award of public contracts to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement of Community law on public procurement, Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 specifically refrains from imposing a requirement that contracts which have been properly formed should be terminated or not complied with.

25 The German Government explains that a feature of national law is the principle that a contract entered into by a contracting authority in breach of the provisions on public procurement may be terminated only for a serious reason, which does not include the circumstances leading up to conclusion of the contract. Furthermore, provision is made for such a contract to be void only in exceptional, restrictively defined, cases, which do not concern the contracts concluded in this instance. However, national law incorporates the provisions necessary to enable persons harmed to claim damages.

26 The Commission argues that it does not have to demonstrate that there is a specific interest in bringing an action under Article 226 EC for failure to fulfil obligations. The Court has considered whether such an interest exists only in cases in which a Member State complied with the Commission's reasoned opinion after the end of the period laid down in the opinion. In the Commission's submission, such an interest could, however, consist not only of establishing the basis of the liability of the Member State concerned but also of clarifying essential points of Community law and avoiding the risk of further infringements.

27 In this case, the Commission considers that the effects of the alleged breach of obligations were not entirely exhausted in a procedural defect and that the breach is continuing. First, general instructions to local authorities could not have resulted in cessation of the specific infringements. Second, a Member State cannot, in order to avoid legal proceedings brought by the Commission, plead a fait accompli perpetrated by itself.

28 Furthermore, although it is true that the Court has dismissed as inadmissible an action for failure to fulfil obligations in the sphere of public procurement on the ground that the infringement had ceased to exist at the end of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion, that outcome arose as a result of the particular circumstances of the case. The present cases are different in that the contracts concluded in breach of Community law will continue to have effects for decades. The German Government has thus not put an end to the infringement. The fact that it is impossible to terminate the contracts concerned does not affect the admissibility of the action, since it is incumbent on the Member States to select the appropriate way of making good an infringement.

Findings of the Court

29 It is settled case-law that in exercising its powers under Article 226 EC the Commission does not have to show that there is a specific interest in bringing an action. The provision is not intended to protect the Commission's own rights. The Commission's function, in the general interest of the Community, is to ensure that the Member States give effect to the Treaty and the provisions adopted by the institutions thereunder and to obtain a declaration of any failure to fulfil the obligations deriving therefrom with a view to bringing it to an end (Case 167/73 Commission v France [1974] ECR 359, paragraph 15; Case C-431/92 Commission v Germany [1995] ECR I-2189, paragraph 21; and Case C-476/98 Commission v Germany [2002] ECR I-0000, paragraph 38).

30 Given its role as guardian of the Treaty, the Commission alone is therefore competent to decide whether it is appropriate to bring proceedings against a Member State for failure to fulfil its obligations and to determine the conduct or omission attributable to the Member State concerned on the basis of which those proceedings should be brought. It may therefore ask the Court to find that, in not having achieved, in a specific case, the result intended by the directive, a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations (Commission v Germany, cited above, paragraph 22, and Case C-471/98 Commission v Belgium [2002] ECR I-0000, paragraph 39).

31 The German Government submits, however, that in this instance, the failure to fulfil obligations consisted of breaches of procedural rules, whose effects were entirely exhausted before the end of the periods laid down in the reasoned opinions and that the Federal Republic of Germany admitted before that date that it had failed to fulfil its obligations.

32 It is true that the question whether a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations must be determined by reference to the situation prevailing in the Member State at the end of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion (Case C-200/88 Commission v Greece [1990] ECR I-4299, paragraph 13; Case C-362/90 Commission v Italy [1992] ECR I-2353, paragraph 10; and Case C-29/01 Commission v Spain [2002] ECR I-2503, paragraph 11).

33 The Court did indeed find an action for failure to fulfil obligations in the sphere of public procurement inadmissible, but it was on the ground that all the effects of the contract notice at issue had been exhausted by the end of the period laid down in the reasoned opinion (Commission v Italy, cited above, paragraphs 11 to 13).

34 By contrast, the Court dismissed an objection of inadmissibility based on a claim that the alleged infringement had ceased in a situation in which the procedures for the award of contracts had been conducted entirely before the date on which the period laid down in the reasoned opinion expired, since the contracts had not been fully performed by that date (Case C-328/96 Commission v Austria [1999] ECR I-7479, paragraphs 43 to 45).

35 Furthermore, although Directive 92/50 contains essentially procedural rules, it was nevertheless adopted with a view to eliminating barriers to the freedom to provide services and therefore is intended to protect the interests of traders established in a Member State who wish to offer services to contracting authorities established in another Member State (see, inter alia, Case C-19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I-7725, paragraph 32).

36 Therefore the adverse effect on the freedom to provide services arising from the infringement of Directive 92/50 must be found to subsist throughout the entire performance of the contracts concluded in breach thereof.

37 In this instance, the contracts allegedly concluded in breach of Directive 92/50 will continue to produce effects for decades. It cannot therefore be maintained that the alleged breaches of obligations came to an end before the periods laid down in the reasoned opinions expired.

38 That conclusion is not affected by the fact that the Member States are able, pursuant to Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665, to limit the powers of the body responsible for review procedures, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement of Community law on public procurement.

39 Although Article 2(6) permits the Member States to preserve the effects of contracts concluded in breach of directives relating to the award of public contracts and thus protects the legitimate interests of the parties thereto, its effect cannot be, unless the scope of the Treaty provisions establishing the internal market is to be reduced, that the contracting authority's conduct vis-à-vis third parties is to be regarded as in conformity with Community law following conclusion of such contracts.

40 Furthermore, the admissibility of these actions is not affected either by the fact that the German Government, during the pre-litigation procedure, admitted the breaches of obligations complained of by the Commission or by that government's contention that a claim for damages may be made under national law even where the Court of Justice has not made a declaration that there has been a failure to fulfil obligations.

41 The Court has already held that it is responsible for determining whether or not the alleged breach of obligations exists, even if the State concerned no longer denies the breach and recognises that any individuals who have suffered damage because of it have a right to compensation (Case C-243/89 Commission v Denmark [1993] ECR I-3353, paragraph 30).

42 Since the finding of failure by a Member State to fulfil its obligations is not bound up with a finding as to the damage flowing therefrom (Case C-263/96 Commission v Belgium [1997] ECR I-7453, paragraph 30), the Federal Republic of Germany may not rely on the fact that no third party has suffered damage in the case of the contracts concluded by the Municipality of Bockhorn and the City of Braunschweig.

43 Given that the alleged breaches of obligations alleged have continued beyond the date set in the reasoned opinions and notwithstanding the Federal Republic of Germany's admission of those breaches, the latter may not base any argument on either a comparison with the action for failure to act provided for in Article 232 EC or on the circumstances in which the Court considers that a failure to act has been brought to an end.

44 In the light of the foregoing, the actions brought by the Commission must be held to be admissible.

Substance

Pleas in law and arguments of the parties

45 In Case C-20/01, the Commission argues that Directive 92/50 applied to the contract concerned, which should have been the subject of an invitation to tender in accordance with the provisions of Articles 8 and 15(2) of the directive, read together. The results of the award procedure should have been published in accordance with Article 16 of the directive.

46 In Case C-28/01 the Commission submits that the contract in question also falls within the scope of Directive 92/50. In its submission, the criteria allowing a negotiated procedure to be used without publication of a prior contract notice, as provided for in Article 11(3)(b) of Directive

92/50, were not met. Neither the location of the undertaking selected, on account of its proximity to the place where the services were to be provided, nor the fact that award of the contract was urgent, provides a basis for the application of that provision in this instance.

47 The principle, provided for in Article 130r(2) of the EC Treaty (now, after amendment, Article 174 EC), that environmental damage should as a priority be rectified at source, should be read in the light of that provision as a whole, according to which environmental protection requirements must be integrated into the definition and implementation of other Community policies. Article 130r(2) does not provide that Community environmental policy is to take precedence over other Community policies in the event of a conflict between them. Nor, in the context of a procedure for the award of public contracts, can ecological criteria be used for discriminatory ends.

48 Furthermore, the contracting authority justifies its choice of the award procedure at issue by an argument based on the guarantee that waste would be disposed of. In the Commission's submission, that argument refutes the argument that the procedure had been chosen on account of environmental considerations and the proximity of the waste disposal facility.

49 The German Government, which presents its arguments on substance only as an alternative plea, argues that the actions brought by the Commission are in any event unfounded, since the effects of the alleged breaches of Directive 92/50 had been exhausted at the time when the breaches were committed and were not continuing on the date on which the period laid down in the reasoned opinions expired.

50 In Case C-28/01, the German Government adds that only BKB was in a position to satisfy the quite lawfully selected criterion that the waste disposal facility should be close to the relevant region. The criterion was not automatically discriminatory, since it was not impossible that undertakings established in other Member States would be able to meet the requirement.

51 In general, a contracting authority is entitled to take account of environmental criteria in its considerations relating to the award of a public contract when it determines which type of service it is proposing to acquire. The German Government submits that, for that reason too, termination of the contract entered into between the City of Braunschweig and BKB cannot be required, given that, in the context of a further award, the contract would again have to be awarded to BKB.

Findings of the Court

52 As regards Case C-20/01, it is not disputed that the conditions on which Directive 92/50 applies were met. As the Advocate General observes at point 65 of his Opinion, the treatment of waste water is a service within the meaning of Article 8 and Annex IA, category 16, of the directive. The construction of certain facilities was ancillary to the main purpose of the contract which the Municipality of Bockhorn entered into with EWE. The value of the contract far exceeds the threshold laid down in Article 7 of the directive.

53 Under Article 8 and Article 15(2) of Directive 92/50, the contract should consequently have been awarded in accordance with the provisions of the directive. It is established, and the German Government does not deny, that the Municipality of Bockhorn did not award the contract in that way.

54 The Federal Republic of Germany's defence on the substance refers essentially to the arguments put forward to challenge the admissibility of the action. For the reasons set out at paragraphs 29 to 43 of this judgment, those arguments must be rejected.

55 It follows that the Commission's action in Case C-20/01 is founded.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Case C-28/01

56 In Case C-28/01 Directive 92/50 was evidently applicable and was indeed applied by the City of Braunschweig. However, the latter, relying on Article 11(3)(b) of the directive, used a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice.

57 Although it admitted during the administrative procedure that the conditions on which Article 11(3)(b) applies were not met, the German Government argues that BKB was actually the only undertaking to which the contract could be awarded and that a further award procedure would not affect that outcome.

58 In that regard, it should be stated at the outset that the provisions of Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50, which authorise derogations from the rules intended to ensure the effectiveness of the rights conferred by the Treaty in relation to public service contracts, must be interpreted strictly and that the burden of proving the existence of exceptional circumstances justifying a derogation lies on the person seeking to rely on those circumstances (Case C-318/94 Commission v Germany [1996] ECR I-1949, paragraph 13).

59 Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50 cannot apply unless it is established that for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, only one undertaking is actually in a position to perform the contract concerned. Since no artistic reason, nor any reason connected with the protection of exclusive rights, has been put forward in this instance, it is appropriate solely to ascertain whether the reasons relied on by the German Government are capable of constituting technical reasons for the purposes of Article 11(3)(b).

60 A contracting authority may take account of criteria relating to environmental protection at the various stages of a procedure for the award of public contracts (see, as regards the use of such criteria as criteria for awarding a contract relating to the management of the operation of a route in the urban bus network, Case C-513/99 Concordia Bus Finland [2002] ECR I-7213, paragraph 57).

61 Therefore, it is not impossible that a technical reason relating to the protection of the environment may be taken into account in an assessment of whether the contract at issue may be awarded to a given supplier.

62 However, the procedure used where there is a technical reason of that kind must comply with the fundamental principles of Community law, in particular the principle of non-discrimination as it follows from the provisions of the Treaty on the right of establishment and the freedom to provide services (see, to that effect, Concordia Bus Finland, paragraph 63).

63 The risk of a breach of the principle of non-discrimination is particularly high where a contracting authority decides not to put a particular contract out to tender.

64 In this instance, the Court notes, first, that in the absence of any evidence to that effect the choice of thermal waste treatment cannot be regarded as a technical reason substantiating the claim that the contract could be awarded to only one particular supplier.

65 Second, the German Government's submission that the proximity of the waste disposal facility is a necessary consequence of the City of Braunschweig's decision that residual waste should be treated thermally is not borne out by any evidence and cannot therefore be regarded as a technical reason of that kind. More specifically, the German Government has not shown that the transport of waste over a greater distance would necessarily constitute a danger to the environment or to public health.

66 Third, the fact that a particular supplier is close to the local authority's area can likewise not amount, on its own, to a technical reason for the purpose of Article 11(3)(b) of Directive

92/50.

67 It follows that the Federal Republic of Germany has not established that the use of Article 11(3)(b) of Directive 92/50 was justified in this instance. Consequently, the Commission's application in Case C-28/01 must also be upheld.

68 In the light of the foregoing, the Court finds that:

- since the Municipality of Bockhorn failed to invite tenders for the award of the contract for the collection of its waste water and failed to publish notice of the results of the procedure for the award of the contract in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Federal Republic of Germany, at the time of the award of that public service contract, failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8 in conjunction with Article 15(2) and Article 16(1) of Directive 92/50;

- since the City of Braunschweig awarded a contract for waste disposal by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, although the criteria laid down in Article 11(3) of Directive 92/50 for an award by privately negotiated procedure without a Community-wide invitation to tender had not been met, the Federal Republic of Germany, at the time of the award of that public service contract, failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 8 and Article 11(3)(b) of that directive.

Judgment

Costs

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

65 The costs incurred by the Finnish, French and Austrian Governments and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the proceedings pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

(Fifth Chamber),

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Kilpailuneuvosto by order of 14 December 2000, hereby rules:

1. A limited company established, owned and managed by a regional or local authority meets a need in the general interest, within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, where it acquires services with a view to promoting the development of industrial or commercial activities on the territory of that regional or local authority. To determine whether that need has no industrial or commercial character, the national court must assess the circumstances which prevailed when that company was set up and the conditions in which it carries on its activity, taking account in particular of the fact that it does not aim primarily at making a profit, the fact that it does not bear the risks associated with the activity, and any public financing of the activity in question.

2. The fact that the premises to be constructed are leased only to a single undertaking is not capable of calling into question the lessor's status of a body governed by public law, where it is shown that the lessor meets a need in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character.

1 By order of 14 December 2000, received at the Court on 16 January 2001, the Kilpailuneuvosto (Competition Council) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC three questions on the interpretation of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

2 Those questions were raised in proceedings between Arkkitehtuuritoimisto Riitta Korhonen Oy and Arkkitehtitoimisto Pentti Toivanen Oy and Rakennuttajatoimisto Vilho Tervomaa (hereinafter referred to together as `Korhonen and Others') and Varkauden Taitotalo Oy (`Taitotalo') concerning the latter's decision not to accept the tender they had submitted in connection with a contract for the supply of design and construction services for a building project.

Legal context

Community legislation

3 Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 provides as follows:

`For the purposes of this Directive:

...

(b) contracting authorities shall mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

Body governed by public law means any body:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

- established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

- having legal personality and

- financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law.

The lists of bodies or of categories of such bodies governed by public law which fulfil the criteria referred to in the second subparagraph of this point are set out in Annex I to Directive 71/305/EEC. These lists shall be as exhaustive as possible and may be reviewed in accordance with the procedure laid down in Article 30b of that Directive.'

National legislation

4 Directive 92/50 was transposed into Finnish law by the Julkisista hankinnoista annettu laki (Law on public procurement) 1505/1992 of 23 December 1992 (`Law 1505/1992').

5 That law contains, in Paragraph 2, a definition of a contracting entity (contracting authority) which is very similar to that in Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50. Under Paragraph 2(1)(2) of Law 1505/1992, legal persons `regarded as belonging to the public administration' are `contracting entities' within the meaning of that law. Paragraph 2(2) says that that is considered to be the case where a legal person is established to look after tasks in the general interest with no industrial or commercial character and either is financed primarily by a public authority, or is under its supervision, or has an administrative, managerial or supervisory board over half of whose members are appointed by a public authority.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

6 Taitotalo is a limited company whose capital is wholly owned by the town of Varkaus (Finland), and whose objects are to buy, sell and lease real property and shares in property companies, and to organise and supply property maintenance services and other related services needed for the management of those properties and shares. The company's board has three members, who are officials of the town of Varkaus, appointed by the general meeting of the company's shareholders, at which the town has 100% of the voting rights. According to the information provided by the national court, the company's foundation document was signed on 21 January 2000 and it was entered in the register of commerce on 6 April 2000.

7 Following the town of Varkaus's decision to create on its territory a technological development centre under the name Tyyskän osaamiskeskus (`Tyyskä Skills Centre'), Taitotalo is arranging for several office blocks and a multi-storey car park to be built. Taitotalo's stated intention is to buy the land from the town of Varkaus once the site has been parcelled out, and then to lease the newly constructed buildings to firms in the technology sector.

8 To carry out the project, recourse was had to construction, marketing and coordination services from Keski-Savon Teollisuuskylä Oy (`Teollisuuskylä'). According to its statutes, the objects of Teollisuuskylä - which is owned by a regional development company most of whose shares are held by the town of Varkaus and other municipalities in the central Savo region - are to build, acquire and manage premises for industrial and commercial use and properties primarily for the use of undertakings to which they are transferred at cost price.

9 By a first call for tenders of 6 July 1999, Teollisuuskylä asked for bids for the supply of design and construction services for the first stage of the building project described above, relating to construction of the Tyyskä 1 building, intended for the use of Honeywell-Measurex Oy, and the

Tyyskä 2 building for the use of several smaller undertakings. After the period for bidding had ended, at the end of August 1999, however, Teollisuuskylä informed the bidders that because of changes to the ownership basis of the property company to be set up - Taitotalo - the design and construction of the project had to be the subject of an open competition published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

10 After amending the contract documents, Teollisuuskylä therefore, by a second call for tenders of 4 September 1999, started a new procedure for awarding the contract for design and construction services for the first stage of the project. The main contractors were stated to be the town of Varkaus and Teollisuuskylä. An invitation to tender was also published in Virallinen lehti (Official Journal of the Republic of Finland) No 35 of 2 September 1999 under the heading `suunnittelukilpailu' (design contest). The notice gave the contracting authority as the town of Varkaus, on behalf of the property company to be set up.

11 Korhonen and Others submitted tenders in this new procedure, but were informed by letter from Taitotalo of 6 April 2000 that JP-Terasto Oy and the group led by Arkkitehtitoimisto Pekka Paavola Oy had been chosen to design and construct the Tyyskä 1 and Tyyskä 2 buildings respectively.

12 Since they considered that the Finnish public procurement legislation had not been complied with, Korhonen and Others brought applications before the Kilpailuneuvosto on 17 and 26 April 2000, seeking either for the award to be set aside with damages being awarded in the alternative, or merely for damages.

13 Before the Kilpailuneuvosto, Taitotalo submitted that the applications of Korhonen and Others should be dismissed as inadmissible, on the ground that it was not a contracting entity within the meaning of Paragraph 2 of Law 1505/1992. Relying in particular on a decision of the Korkein hallinto-oikeus (Supreme Administrative Court) in a similar case, Taitotalo submitted that it had not been established to look after tasks in the general interest with no industrial or commercial character, and that in any event the amount of public support granted to the building project in question was less than half the total value of the operation.

14 Since it considered that the outcome of the dispute before it depended on the interpretation of Community law, in particular in view of the common practice in Finland of public authorities setting up, owning and managing limited companies which do not themselves aim to make a profit but intend to create favourable conditions for the pursuit of commercial or industrial activities on the territory of those authorities, the Kilpailuneuvosto - which from 1 March 2002 became the Markkinaoikeus (Market Court) - decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

`1. Is a share company which a town owns and in which the town exercises control to be regarded as a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, where the company acquires design and construction services for a building lot comprising offices to be leased to undertakings?

2. Does it affect the decision on the point that the town's building project endeavours to create the conditions for business activity to be carried on in the town?

3. Does it affect the decision on the point that the offices to be built are leased to one undertaking only?'

Admissibility of the questions

15 On the basis of the Court's case-law according to which, in order to enable the Court to provide an interpretation of Community law which will be of use to the national court, that court must define the factual and legal context of the questions it is asking or, at the very least, explain the factual circumstances on which they are based (see, inter alia, Joined Cases C-115/97 to C-117/97 Brentjens' [1999] ECR I-6025, paragraph 38), the Commission voices doubts as to the admissibility of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling, on the ground that the order for reference does not make it possible to identify the provisions on the basis of which the two award procedures were initiated and those which were not applied in the main proceedings, and that the order also fails to disclose the identity of the entity which, at least formally, carried out the public procurement procedure.

16 The French Government observes for its part that, with respect to the second call for tenders, the order for reference mentions the town of Varkaus both as contracting authority and as main contractor. In those circumstances, the Government doubts the need for a reference, in that, first, at the time of publication of that call for tenders Taitotalo did not yet have the legal personality required by Directive 92/59 and, second, the town of Varkaus as a local authority is subject to the provisions of the directive in any event.

17 The French Government further submits that, contrary to what Teollisuuskylä told the bidders in August 1999, there was no publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities of the second invitation to tender.

18 Without there being any need to consider here whether or not the invitation to tender for the contract at issue in the main proceedings had to be the subject of publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the French Government's argument that there was no publication of the second invitation to tender must be rejected at the outset, since, as the Finnish Government stated at the hearing, that invitation to tender was published in supplement No 171 to the Official Journal of the European Communities of 3 September 1999.

19 As regards the French Government's doubts as to the need for the questions referred and the Commission's objections concerning the lack of detail as to the factual and legal context of the main proceedings, it should be recalled that, according to settled case-law, it is solely for the national courts before which actions are brought, and which must bear the responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the special features of each case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable them to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which they submit to the Court. Consequently, since the questions referred involve the interpretation of Community law, the Court is, in principle, obliged to give a ruling (see, inter alia, Case C-379/98 PreussenElektra [2001] ECR I-2099, paragraph 38; Case C-390/99 Canal Satélite Digital [2002] ECR I-607, paragraph 18; and Case C-373/00 Adolf Truley [2003] ECR I-0000, paragraph 21).

20 Moreover, it also follows from that case-law that the Court can refuse to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (see PreussenElektra, paragraph 39, Canal Satélite Digital, paragraph 19, and Adolf Truley, paragraph 22).

21 In the present case, it is not obvious that the questions referred by the national court fall within one of those hypotheses.

22 First, it cannot be maintained that the interpretation of Community law which is sought bears no relation to the actual facts or purpose of the main proceedings or is hypothetical, since the admissibility of the main proceedings depends in particular on the proper extent of the term `body governed by public law' in Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50.

23 Second, the national court has furnished the Court, albeit in summary fashion, with the material necessary to enable it to give a useful answer to the questions referred, in particular by stating in its account of the factual context of the main proceedings that the notice published in Virallinen lehti of 2 September 1999 mentioned as contracting authority the town of Varkaus acting `on behalf of the property company to be set up'.

24 In those circumstances, it cannot be excluded that Taitotalo, although lacking legal personality at the time of publication of the second call for tenders, played a decisive part in the award procedure at issue in the main proceedings.

25 It should also be noted that, in reply to a question put by the Court at the hearing, the Finnish Government explained that, under Finnish law, the founders of a company can act on behalf of the company before it is entered in the register of commerce, and on the date when the company is so registered it takes over all the previous commitments entered into on its behalf.

26 Such appears to have been the case in the main proceedings, since the national court observes that Taitotalo was entered in the register of commerce on 6 April 2000 and it was on that date that Korhonen and Others were informed by that company that their tenders had not been selected.

27 In those circumstances, it cannot be excluded that Taitotalo took over, on 6 April 2000, all the previous commitments entered into on its behalf by the town of Varkaus, and may on that basis be regarded as responsible for the award procedure at issue in the main proceedings.

28 In the light of the foregoing, the questions referred by the Kilpailuneuvosto must be declared admissible.

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

29 By its questions to the Court, the national court seeks clarification of the term `body governed by public law' within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, so as to be able to decide, in the main proceedings, whether Taitotalo should be regarded as a contracting authority.

30 According to the first subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, and associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law are `contracting authorities'.

31 The second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50 defines a `body governed by public law' as any body established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, with legal personality and closely dependent, by its method of financing, management or supervision, on the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law.

32 As the Court has consistently held (see, inter alia, Case C-360/96 BFI Holding [1998] ECR I-6821, paragraph 29; Joined Cases C-223/99 and C-260/99 Agorà and Excelsior [2001] ECR I-3605, paragraph 26; and Adolf Truley, paragraph 34), the conditions set out in that provision are cumulative, so that in the absence of any one of them an entity may not be classified as a body governed by public law, and hence as a contracting authority within the meaning of Directive 92/50.

33 Since it is not in dispute that Taitotalo is owned and managed by a local authority and - at least from its date of entry in the register of commerce, 6 April 2000 - has legal personality, the national court's questions must be understood as relating solely to whether that company was established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character.

The first and second questions

34 By its first two questions, which should be examined together, the national court essentially asks whether a limited company established, owned and managed by a regional or local authority may be regarded as meeting a specific need in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, where that company's activity consists in acquiring services with a view to the construction of premises intended for the exclusive use of private undertakings, and whether the assessment of whether that condition is satisfied would be different if the building project in question were intended to create favourable conditions on that local authority's territory for the exercise of business activities.

Observations submitted to the Court

35 Taitotalo and the French Government consider that those two questions should be answered in the negative, as Taitotalo's activity is not intended to meet needs in the general interest and/or in any event has an industrial or commercial character.

36 Taitotalo submits that its sole object is to promote the conditions for the exercise of the activities of specific undertakings, not for the exercise generally of economic activity in the town of Varkaus, while the fact that it is owned and financed by a contracting authority is of no relevance, since, in the case in the main proceedings, it meets industrial or commercial needs. Taitotalo states, in particular, that it acquired at market price the land needed for the building works at issue in the main proceedings and that the financing of the project will be taken in hand essentially by the private sector, by means of bank loans secured by mortgages.

37 In reliance on the Court's judgment in Case C-44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others [1998] ECR I-73, in which, it says, the Court was concerned to ascertain whether the activity of the entity at issue in that case - the Austrian State printing works - came under an essential prerogative of the State, the French Government considers for its part that the leasing of premises for industrial or commercial use cannot in any case be regarded as within the prerogatives which by their very nature are part of the exercise of public powers. Moreover, because of its commercial character, this activity cannot be compared with those at issue in BFI Holding and Case C-237/99 Commission v France [2001] ECR I-939, namely the collection and treatment of household waste and the construction of social housing.

38 In the Finnish Government's view, on the other hand, Taitotalo's activity typically appears among those which respond to a need in the general interest with no industrial or commercial character. First, Taitotalo's primary aim is not to generate profits by its activity but to create favourable conditions for the development of economic activities on the territory of the town of Varkaus, which fits in perfectly with the functions which regional and local authorities may assume by virtue of the autonomy guaranteed to them by the Finnish constitution. Second, the objective of Directive 92/50 would be compromised if such a company were not regarded as a contracting authority within the meaning of the directive, as municipalities might in that case by tempted to establish, in their traditional sphere of activity, other undertakings whose contracts would be outside the scope of the directive.

39 Finally, while not excluding the possibility that Taitotalo's activity may meet a need in the general interest because of the stimulus it gives to trade and the development of business activities on the territory of the town of Varkaus, the Austrian Government and the Commission state for their part that, in view of the incomplete information available, they are unable to assess the extent to which that need has an industrial or commercial character. They therefore invite the national court to perform that assessment itself, examining in particular the competition position of Taitotalo and whether it bears the risks associated with its activity.

Findings of the Court

40 The Court has already held that the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50

draws a distinction between needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character and needs in the general interest having an industrial or commercial character (see, inter alia, BFI Holding, paragraph 36, and Agorà and Excelsior, paragraph 32). To give a useful answer to the questions put, it must first be ascertained whether activities such as those at issue in the main proceedings in fact meet needs in the general interest and then, if necessary, it must be determined whether such needs have an industrial or commercial character.

41 As regards the question whether the activity at issue in the main proceedings meets a need in the general interest, it appears from the order for reference that Taitotalo's principal activity consists in buying, selling and leasing properties and organising and supplying property maintenance services and other related services needed for the management of those properties. The operation carried out by Taitotalo in the main proceedings consists, more precisely, in acquiring design and construction services in connection with a building project relating to the construction of several office blocks and a multi-storey car park.

42 In that that operation follows from the town of Varkaus's decision to create a technological development centre on its territory, and Taitotalo's stated intention is to buy the land from the town once the site has been parcelled out, and to make the newly constructed buildings available to firms in the technology sector, its activity is indeed capable of meeting a need in the general interest.

43 In this respect, it may be recalled that, on being asked whether a body whose objects were to carry on and facilitate any activity concerned with the organisation of trade fairs, exhibitions and conferences could be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, the Court held that activities relating to the organisation of such events meet needs in the general interest, in that an organiser of those events, in bringing together manufacturers and traders in one geographical location, is not acting solely in the individual interest of those manufacturers and traders, who are thereby afforded an opportunity to promote their goods and merchandise, but is also providing consumers who attend the events with information that enables them to make choices in optimum conditions. The resulting stimulus to trade may be considered to fall within the general interest (see Agorà and Excelsior, paragraphs 33 and 34).

44 Similar considerations may be put forward mutatis mutandis with respect to the activity at issue in the main proceedings, in that it is undeniable that, in acquiring design and construction services in connection with a building project relating to the construction of office blocks, Taitotalo is not acting solely in the individual interest of the undertakings directly concerned by that project but also in that of the town of Varkaus.

45 Activities such as those carried on by Taitotalo in the case in the main proceedings may be regarded as meeting needs in the general interest, in that they are likely to give a stimulus to trade and the economic and social development of the local authority concerned, since the location of undertakings on the territory of a municipality often has favourable repercussions for that municipality in terms of creation of jobs, increase of tax revenue and improvement of the supply and demand of goods and services.

46 A more difficult question, on the other hand, is whether such needs in the general interest have a character which is not industrial or commercial. While the Finnish Government submits that those needs have no industrial or commercial character, in that Taitotalo aims not so much to make a profit as to create favourable conditions for the location of undertakings on the territory of the town of Varkaus, Taitotalo puts forward the contrary argument, on the ground that it provides services precisely for commercial undertakings and that the financing of the building project in question is borne essentially by the private sector.

47 According to settled case-law, needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, within the meaning of Article 1(b) of the Community directives relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public contracts are generally needs which are satisfied otherwise than by the availability of goods and services in the market place and which, for reasons associated with the general interest, the State chooses to provide itself or over which it wishes to retain a decisive influence (see, inter alia, BFI Holding, paragraphs 50 and 51, Agorà and Excelsior, paragraph 37, and Adolf Truley, paragraph 50).

48 In the present case, it cannot be excluded that the acquisition of services intended to promote the location of private undertakings on the territory of a particular local authority may, for the reasons referred to in paragraph 45 above, be regarded as meeting a need in the general interest whose character is not industrial or commercial. In assessing whether or not such a need in the general interest is present, account must be taken of all the relevant legal and factual elements, such as the circumstances prevailing at the time when the body concerned was established and the conditions under which it exercises its activity (see, to that effect, Adolf Truley, paragraph 66).

49 In particular, it must be ascertained whether the body in question carries on its activities in a situation of competition, since the existence of such competition may, as the Court has previously held, be an indication that a need in the general interest has an industrial or commercial character (see, to that effect, BFI Holding, paragraphs 48 and 49).

50 However, it also follows from the wording of that judgment that the existence of significant competition does not of itself permit the conclusion that there is no need in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character (see Adolf Truley, paragraph 61). The same applies to the fact that the body in question aims specifically to meet the needs of commercial undertakings. Other factors must be taken into account before reaching such a conclusion, in particular the question of the conditions in which the body in question carries on its activities.

51 If the body operates in normal market conditions, aims to make a profit, and bears the losses associated with the exercise of its activity, it is unlikely that the needs it aims to meet are not of an industrial or commercial nature. In such a case, the application of the Community directives relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public contracts would not be necessary, moreover, because a body acting for profit and itself bearing the risks associated with its activity will not normally become involved in an award procedure on conditions which are not economically justified.

52 According to settled case-law, the purpose of those directives is to avert both the risk of preference being given to national tenderers or applicants whenever a contract is awarded by the contracting authorities and the possibility that a body financed or controlled by the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law may choose to be guided by other than economic considerations (see, in particular, Case C-380/98 University of Cambridge [2000] ECR I-8035, paragraph 17; Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-0000, paragraph 52; and Adolf Truley, paragraph 42).

53 In reply to a written question put by the Court, the Finnish Government stated at the hearing that although, from a legal point of view, there are few differences between companies such as Taitotalo and limited companies owned by private operators, in that they bear the same economic risks as the latter and may similarly be declared bankrupt, the regional and local authorities to which they belong rarely allow such a thing to happen and will, if appropriate, recapitalise those companies so that they can continue to look after the tasks for which they were established, essentially the improvement of the general conditions for the pursuit of economic activity in the local authority area in question.

54 In reply to a question put by the Court at the hearing, the Finnish Government further stated that, while it is not impossible that the activities of companies such as Taitotalo may generate profits, the making of such profits can never constitute the principal aim of such companies, since under Finnish law they must always aim primarily to promote the general interest of the inhabitants of the local authority area concerned.

55 In such conditions, and having regard to the fact mentioned by the national court that Taitotalo received public funding for carrying out the building project at issue in the main proceedings, it appears probable that an activity such as that pursued by Taitotalo in this case meets a need in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character.

56 It is nevertheless for the national court, the only one to have detailed knowledge of the facts of the case, to assess the circumstances which prevailed when that body was set up and the conditions in which it carries on its activity, including in particular whether it aims at making a profit and bears the risks associated with its activity.

57 As to the Commission's observation that it cannot be excluded that the activity at issue in the main proceedings represents only a minor part of Taitotalo's activities, that fact, even were it to be established, would be of no relevance to the outcome of the main proceedings, in so far as that company continues to look after needs in the general interest.

58 According to settled case-law, the status of a body governed by public law is not dependent on the relative importance, within that body's activity, of the meeting of needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character (see Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others, paragraphs 25, 26 and 31; BFI Holding, paragraphs 55 and 56; and Adolf Truley, paragraph 56).

59 In the light of the above considerations, the answer to the first and second questions must be that a limited company established, owned and managed by a regional or local authority meets a need in the general interest, within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, where it acquires services with a view to promoting the development of industrial or commercial activities on the territory of that regional or local authority. To determine whether that need has no industrial or commercial character, the national court must assess the circumstances which prevailed when that company was set up and the conditions in which it carries on its activity, taking account in particular of the fact that it does not aim primarily at making a profit, the fact that it does not bear the risks associated with the activity, and any public financing of the activity in question.

The third question

60 By its third question, the national court essentially asks whether the fact that the offices to be constructed are leased only to a single undertaking is capable of calling into question the lessor's status of a body governed by public law.

61 It suffices to state that it is clear from the answer to the first two questions that such a circumstance does not in principle prevent the lessor of the offices to be built from being classified as a body governed by public law, since, as the Advocate General observes in point 92 of his Opinion, the general interest is not measured by the number of direct users of an activity or service.

62 First, it is undeniable that the location of a single undertaking on the territory of a regional or local authority may likewise give a stimulus to trade and bring about favourable economic and social repercussions for that local authority and for all its inhabitants, since the location of that undertaking may inter alia act as a catalyst and stimulate the location of other undertakings in the region concerned.

63 Second, that interpretation is also consistent with the purpose of Directive 92/50, which, according to the 20th recital in its preamble, is intended inter alia to eliminate practices that restrict competition in general and participation in contracts by other Member States' nationals in particular. As the Finnish Government has observed, to accept that a body may fall outside the scope of that directive solely because the activity it carries on benefits one company only would amount to disregarding the very purpose of the directive, since, to avoid the rules it lays down, it would suffice for a company such as Taitotalo to maintain that the premises to be constructed were intended to be let to a single undertaking, which could then, as soon as the transaction were completed, transfer the premises to other undertakings.

64 In the light of the above considerations, the answer to the third question must therefore be that the fact that the premises to be constructed are leased only to a single undertaking is not capable of calling into question the lessor's status of a body governed by public law, where it is shown that the lessor meets a need in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character.

Judgment of the Court of First Instance (Third Chamber)
First Instance (Third Chamber)First Instance (Third Chamber)2002.
Scan Office Design SA v Commission of the European Communities.
Public procurement - Supply of office furniture - Action for damages.
Case T-40/01.

1. Non-contractual liability - Conditions - Procedures for the award of public supply contracts - Unlawfulness of alleged conduct - Damage - Causal link - None

(Art. 288, second para., EC; Council Directive 93/36)

2. Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public supply contracts - Directive 93/36 - Negotiated procedures - Power of the contracting authority to negotiate - Limits

(Council Directive 93/36, Art 1(f))

3. Procedure - Production of new pleas in law in the course of proceedings - Conditions - Amplification of an existing plea - Whether permissible

(Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, Art. 48(2))

$$1. In order for the Community to incur non-contractual liability, the applicant must prove the unlawfulness of the conduct alleged against the institution concerned, actual damage and the existence of a causal link between that conduct and the damage pleaded. If one of those conditions is not satisfied, the action must be dismissed in its entirety without its being necessary to examine the other conditions of non-contractual liability.

With respect to the first condition, which relates to unlawful conduct, there was a serious fault in the Commission's conduct where, in the course of a tender procedure published pursuant to Directive 93/36 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, it repeatedly denied the existence of documents which in reality existed and refused to communicate those documents or extracts from the successful bid, but, when an action was brought before the Court of First Instance, communicated those documents on its own initiative and without the slightest reservation. However, although the Commission committed a number of serious faults during that procedure which, individually or at the very least taken together, must be regarded as fulfilling the first of the three conditions necessary for the non-contractual liability of the Community to be incurred, the unsuccessful bidder failed to show that the Commission should have awarded it the contract.

2. As regards Directive 93/36 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts, even if the contracting authority has a certain margin of discretion in the context of a negotiated procedure, it is always bound to ensure observance of the terms and conditions of the tender specifications which it has freely chosen to make mandatory.

(see para. 76)

3. Under Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance no new plea in law may be introduced in the course of proceedings unless it is based on matters of law or of fact which have come to light in the course of the procedure. Thus, arguments which cannot be regarded as amplifying, directly or by implication, pleas already put forward in the original application and closely connected therewith are inadmissible.

OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES (Third Chamber),

Registrar: J. Palacio Gonzalez, Administrator, having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 7 May 2002

Judgment

Costs

123 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been asked for in the successful party's pleadings.

124 However, under Article 87(3) of those Rules, the Court may order that the costs be shared or that each party bears its own costs, where each party succeeds on some and fails on other heads, or where the circumstances are exceptional. The Court may order a party, even if successful, to pay costs which it considers that party to have unreasonably or vexatiously caused the opposite party to incur.

125 In the present case, in light of the numerous faults committed by the Commission in the course of the tendering procedure, the Commission should be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Third Chamber),

hereby:

1. Dismisses the application;

2. Orders the Commission to pay the costs.

Facts of the case and procedure

1 On 27 August 1996, acting pursuant to Article 56 of the Financial Regulation of 21 December 1977 applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 1977 L 356, p. 1), last amended, at the material time, in connection with the special provisions applicable to research and technological development appropriations, by Council Regulation (EC, Euratom, ECSC) No 2335/95 of 18 September 1995 (OJ 1995 L 240, p. 12) and also pursuant to Article 6(4) of Council

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1), the Commission published invitation to tender No 96/31/IX.C1 in the Official Journal of the European Communities (OJ 1996 S 164, p. 25, and OJ 1996 C 249, p. 15) for the supply of hierarchical office furniture'. Three of the four lots under that invitation to tender were awarded, whilst the fourth, lot 2A, was not, because the goods proposed did not meet the tender specifications or were not of an acceptable quality.

2 In accordance with Article 6(3)(a) of Directive 93/36, on 1 July 1997 the Commission commenced a negotiated procedure (No 97/25/IX.C1) with a view to awarding lot 2A.

3 On 10 July 1997, an information meeting took place and the new specifications were sent out to 38 suppliers the next day. Those 38 suppliers included all those who had tendered for lot 2A under invitation to tender No 96/31/IX.C1. The deadline for tenders was initially set at 18 August 1997, but was postponed to 27 August 1997, the date of opening of tenders, which, according to the explanations provided by the Commission in its written pleadings, was due to confusion on its part concerning the address of the Frezza company, whose B offer was the one finally chosen (the specifications were erroneously sent to Frezza Italie instead of Frezza Belgium). Of the 38 suppliers, 17 submitted tenders.

4 The analysis of the documentation submitted by the tenderers led the Commission to reject the tenders of two suppliers, who had proposed goods which manifestly did not meet the specifications. A display of the furniture was held from 13 to 27 October 1997. One supplier withdrew, but 16 office sets were displayed by the other suppliers.

5 Around 100 suppliers were invited to take part in the assessment of the products proposed, of whom 34 accepted. Those assessors were divided into seven groups (including a technical assessment group) and received assessment sheets adapted to their group and allowing for a mark of 0 to 5 to be given for each of the samples according to how they met the qualitative criteria set out in the specifications. The form used for the technical assessment (hereinafter the technical assessment sheet') stipulated that marks of 5 and 0 shall be supported by reasons'. The administrative file note concerning the methods for assessing tenders stated that the rejection of the product assessed shall be deemed valid if, without concertation, at least three assessors give a rejection mark of 0, supported by detailed reasons'. The analysis of the furniture displayed did not lead the Commission to reject tenders on the basis of non-compliance with the requirements of the specifications.

6 After examining the furniture displayed by the other tenderers, the manufacturer of the furniture proposed by the applicant wrote to the Commission on 23 and 24 February 1998 to draw its attention to the fact that the furniture proposed by the applicant met the tender specifications, whereas the furniture proposed by other competitors, including SA Frezza Belgium (hereinafter Frezza'), failed to do so in a number of respects.

7 On 23 April 1998, the applicant, not having received any reply, reminded the Commission of its tender.

8 On 20 May 1998, the Commission informed the applicant that its tender had not been successful, and that the contract had been awarded to Frezza.

9 On 24 July 1998, the applicant asked the Commission to provide it with a copy of the administrative file.

10 In a letter of 5 August 1998, Mr Taverne, Head of Unit 1 Budget policy and management; tender procedures and contracts (Brussels)' of the D Resources' Directorate, Directorate-General (DG) IX Personnel and Administration', acting on behalf of the Commission, sent the applicant certain documents, including the Commission's report of 26 January 1998 to the Advisory Committee on Procurement and Contracts (ACPC) (except Annex 7, which was Frezza's tender). The Commission refused to divulge the tender made by Frezza on the ground that it was a document from a third party which the code of conduct on public access to Commission documents did not allow it to divulge.

11 On 3 September 1998, in accordance with the procedure referred to by Mr Taverne in his letter, the applicant made the same request to the Secretary-General of the Commission, insisting on its wish to obtain inter alia the technical assessment sheets.

12 In a letter of 9 September 1998, Mr Taverne informed the applicant that those sheets had not been formally drawn up by the Commission.

13 In a letter of 25 September 1998, the Secretary-General of the Commission confirmed to the applicant the decision to deny access to the information or documents requested, on the ground that those assessment sheets did not exist.

14 On 9 December 1998, the applicant brought an action before the Court of First Instance seeking annulment of the decision taken by the Secretary-General on behalf of the Commission refusing to communicate to the applicant certain technical information in the Commission's administrative file. That case was entered in the Registry of the Court of First Instance under case number T-194/98. As part of that procedure, the Commission acknowledged that it had in its possession technical assessment sheets and undertook to supply the applicant with the sheets dealing with the furniture of all the tenderers. Thus the Commission supplied the applicant with two types of assessment sheets: those drawn up by officials from the technical department concerning whether the tender met the tender specifications (technical assessment sheets) and those drawn up by the other groups of assessors concerning the quality of the furniture proposed (aesthetic and ergonomic aspects, solidity, etc.). Under those circumstances, the Court of First Instance, after hearing the parties, ordered on 16 May 2000 that Case T-194/98 be removed from the register.

15 By application lodged with the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 21 February 2001, the applicant brought the present action pursuant to Article 235 EC and the second paragraph of Article 288 EC, for damages and interest against the Commission.

Forms of order sought

16 The applicant claims that the Court of First Instance should:

- declare the action admissible and well founded;

- declare that the Commission committed a fault for the purposes of Article 288 EC by awarding the contract to Frezza and that that fault occasioned loss to the applicant,

- order the Commission to pay to it the sum of EUR 1 023 895, together with the costs of the present proceedings.

17 The Commission contends that the Court of First Instance should:

- dismiss the action for damages as unfounded;

- order the applicant to pay the costs.

Law

18 It has been consistently held that, in order for the Community to incur non-contractual liability, the applicant must prove the unlawfulness of the conduct alleged against the institution concerned, actual damage and the existence of a causal link between that conduct and the damage pleaded (Case 26/81 Oleifici Mediterranei v EEC [1982] ECR 3057, paragraph 16; Case T-175/94 International Procurement Services v Commission [1996] ECR II-729, paragraph 44; Case T-336/94 Efisol v Commission [1996] ECR II-1343, paragraph 30; Case T-267/94 Oleifici Italiani v Commission [1997] ECR

II-1239, paragraph 20). If one of those conditions is not satisfied, the action must be dismissed in its entirety without its being necessary to examine the other conditions of non-contractual liability (Case C-146/91 KYDEP v Council and Commission [1994] ECR I-4199, paragraph 19; Case T-170/00 Förde-Reederei v Council and Commission [2002] ECR II-515, paragraph 37).

The unlawful conduct alleged against the Commission

19 The applicant maintains that the Commission committed faults which led to the applicant's losing the contract to Frezza. The irregularities relied on by the applicant relate to: communication of the assessment sheets and the tender submitted by Frezza; the date of Frezza's tender; the failure to eliminate bids at the stage of the initial assessment of the furniture; examination of the technical assessment sheets; compliance of Frezza's tender with the specifications; assessment of other criteria and the financial assessment of its tender as compared to Frezza's.

20 The applicant concludes that it should have been awarded the contract because it was the only company whose tender complied with the specifications.

21 The Commission takes the view that the applicant's action is unfounded. It argues that the applicant has not adduced any evidence of the Commission's allegedly unlawful conduct and maintains that it complied fully with the rules governing public contracts and the principle of sound administration.

Communication by the Commission of the assessment sheets and the technical assessment sheets submitted by Frezza

22 The applicant states that the Commission forwarded the technical assessment sheets only after an action had been brought before the Community Courts. In not communicating those sheets on the pretext that they did not exist, the Commission failed to observe the principle of sound administration, a failure which could be deemed to be a serious breach and in respect of which it should assure liability for the injurious consequences suffered by the applicant.

23 The applicant further maintains that the systematic refusal by the Commission to communicate to it the tender submitted by Frezza and its production for the first time only at the stage of the present proceedings (without the slightest reservation concerning the confidential nature of those documents) also constitute a serious and manifest breach of the principle of sound administration.

24 The Court finds that the assessment sheets exist, despite the fact that the Commission has denied their existence on several occasions. Thus, in a letter of 9 September 1998, Mr Taverne stated that such sheets had not been formally drawn up. Moreover, in a letter of 25 September 1998, Mr Trojan, Secretary-General of the Commission, stated:

As regards the communication of the technical assessment sheets on compliance with the specifications required, such sheets do not exist ...'.

25 In paragraph 30 of its defence in Case T-194/98, the Commission stated:

The reason why the Commission has refused to communicate the technical assessment sheets is quite plain: they do not exist.'

26 It was only when the first action was brought before the Court of First Instance that the Commission communicated the technical assessment sheets. Likewise, on its own initiative and without the slightest reservation, the Commission attached by way of annexes to its defence extracts from Frezza's bid which it had previously refused to divulge on the grounds that they were documents from a third party which the code of conduct governing public access to Commission documents did not allow it to divulge.

27 It cannot but be concluded that the Commission, in repeatedly denying the existence of documents which in reality existed and by refusing to communicate documents on the ground that they were confidential, committed a serious fault.

The date of Frezza's tender

28 The applicant states that, after the information meeting on 10 July 1997, with the deadline for tenders set at 18 August 1997, it learned that the deadline had been postponed to 28 August 1997, according to the Commission, because the specifications had been erroneously sent to Frezza Italie instead of to Frezza. In those circumstances, the applicant expresses surprise that Frezza's tender is dated 18 August 1997. Likewise, the alleged confusion between the addresses of Frezza and Frezza Italie is surprising, since the companies are most likely in close contact with each other.

29 In that regard the Commission states that it was not for it to verify whether Frezza and Frezza Italie were in close contact with each other or not and that no loss could be caused to the other tenderers by the postponement of the deadline for tenders, since the content of all the tenders remained unknown until the expiry of the extended deadline, namely, 28 August 1997, the date of opening of the tenders. It stresses that, in any event, the postponement of the deadline for the submission of tenders was of no practical consequence, since Frezza's tender is dated 18 August 1997.

30 The Court finds, first, that the invitation to the information meeting held on 10 July 1997, as well as all the correspondence concerning the initial invitation to tender, were sent to Frezza, but that the specifications were sent to Frezza Italie on 11 July 1997. In this connection, the Commission states merely that human error during the holiday period led to the confusion as to the addresses, but has refrained from particularising that claim.

31 Next it should be pointed out that the Commission, in its defence and rejoinder, has indicated that Frezza's tender was dated 18 August 1997. However, in response to written questions from the Court, it has been found that Frezza's tender arrived at the Commission on 22 August 1997, that is, four days after the expiry of the deadline set for the submission of tenders. The Commission maintains on this point that it allowed an extension of the deadline following a request to that effect by Frezza. However, the responses to the questions asked by the Court show that it was only by letter dated 21 August 1997 that Frezza asked for an extension of the deadline. That letter was posted on 22 August 1997 and received by the Commission on 25 August 1997. It follows that the request for an extension of the deadline set for the submission of tenders was made by Frezza only after expiry of that deadline.

32 It follows from the foregoing that both the submission of Frezza's tender as well as its request for an extension of the deadline and thus a fortiori the agreement of the Commission to an extension all occurred after expiry of the deadline set for the submission of tenders.

33 Accordingly, the Commission committed a fault in accepting Frezza's late tender.

The failure to eliminate tenders when the furniture was first assessed

34 The applicant observes that, in the report sent to the Advisory Committee on Procurement and Contracts, the Commission indicates that an initial examination of the furniture displayed did not lead it to reject any of the 16 office sets displayed. The applicant considers this statement to be a cause of some concern because, in its view, an examination of the technical assessment sheets shows that none of the tenders, apart from its own and Frezza's, met the requirements of the specifications. Thus, the Commission, it is submitted, committed a fault at this stage in the assessment of compliance by the tenders with the specifications.

35 In that regard the Commission confirms that examination of the furniture displayed did not lead it to reject tenders on the ground of non-compliance with specifications and also states that it allowed a certain degree of flexibility concerning compliance.

36 In that regard the Court notes that, according to the technical assessment sheets of three of the five assessors, namely, Messrs Ackermans, Reynen and Gasparini, none of the furniture other than that of Frezza and the applicant met the requirements of the specifications, since they awarded them 0 marks and added the remark non-compliant'.

37 However, the complaint that the Commission, on the initial examination of the furniture displayed, should have rejected some of the 16 sets displayed is devoid of relevance. The results of an initial examination are, by their nature, provisional and subject to revision at later stages of the procedure.

38 It is appropriate to examine whether the procedure for awarding the contract was, from an overall standpoint, carried out correctly and, more precisely, whether it ultimately enabled tenders which did not meet the requirements to be rejected and a tender which did meet the specifications to be accepted, if such were the case. Thus, it is immaterial in the present case that no tenders were rejected, rightly or wrongly, on an initial examination on the ground of non-compliance with the specifications, even if subsequently some assessors considered that none of the tenders, except Frezza's and the applicant's, met the tender specifications.

39 It follows that this plea cannot be accepted.

The examination of the technical assessment sheets

40 The applicant claims essentially that of the five technical assessments, only one of the assessment sheets (Mr Reynen's) can be considered to have been completed by a person who actually examined the furniture displayed by the tenderers.

- The sheets drawn up by Mr Wood

41 The applicant observes, first, that the technical assessment sheets drawn up by Mr Wood are not signed or dated. Next, the sheets contain no remarks. Thus, the mark of 5 given to Frezza concerning compliance with specifications is not elucidated by any supporting remarks, yet the tender in question manifestly does not meet the requirements of the tender specifications. The applicant also questions whether Mr Wood's opinion can be altogether objective, given that he is the person in charge of furniture and is in constant contact with suppliers of office furniture, such as Frezza.

42 The Commission argues that Mr Wood's assessment is handwritten and that, consequently, the absence of a signature does not prevent its author from being identified or, a fortiori, invalidate his analysis. The applicant has not adduced any evidence in support of its allegation of a manifestly erroneous assessment.

43 In that regard the Court points out, first, that the assessors had received forms enabling them to give a mark of 0 to 5 for each of the specimens according to how well they met the qualitative requirements laid down in the tender specifications. On each form, it was stipulated that marks of 5 and 0 shall be supported by reasons'.

44 Next, it should be recalled, as an examination of the technical assessment sheets shows, that Mr Wood did not sign or date them; nor did he make any remarks to justify the marks of 5 which he gave (including to Frezza's B and C tenders).

45 Moreover, Mr Wood omitted to fill out the specific section compliance with tender specifications' for each of the tenders. The Commission has offered no explanation for this.

46 As regards the absence of signature and date, the Commission's argument that Mr Wood's assessment is handwritten and that, consequently, the absence of a signature does not prevent its author from being identified or, a fortiori, invalidate his analysis, must be rejected.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

47 In fact, even on the supposition that a signature is not absolutely necessary, mere handwritten notes on the technical assessment sheets in question, namely IXC3', WOOD' and A', are insufficient to identify their author and thus may not replace a signature, the principal function of which is to identify with certainty the author of the document.

48 In any event, it must further be stated that the Commission has not provided any explanation for the absence of detailed comments by Mr Wood to justify the marks of 5 awarded. The failure to give reasons for those marks, in breach of the instruction to the assessors, and the fact that Mr Wood also omitted to fill out the specific section compliance with tender specifications', are of such a nature in themselves as to invalidate the technical assessment sheets drawn up by him.

49 However, as regards the applicant's complaint that Mr Wood's opinion might not be entirely objective because he is the person in charge of furniture and thus has ongoing contact with suppliers of office furniture, including Frezza, suffice it to state that it is reasonable for the technical assessments to be made by officials who are experts in the area. Moreover, as pointed out by the Commission, the five technical assessors were all with the procurement, supplies' unit in Brussels or Luxembourg. Consequently, the objection raised against Mr Wood could also be raised concerning the five assessments. Finally, the assessors who were favourable to the applicant also work in the same unit as Mr Wood.

50 None the less it follows from the foregoing that the Commission committed a fault in taking account of Mr Wood's assessment sheets.

- The sheets drawn up by Mr Zastawnik

51 The applicant states that the sheets drawn up by Messrs Scholtes and Zastawnik were fictitious, contained no remarks and were not signed or dated. The applicant further observes that Mr Scholtes did not take the trouble to make the slightest remark on the marks awarded by him and notes that the marks varied only between 3 or 4 for all the tenders, whereas other assessors gave marks of 0. The applicant concludes that Mr Scholtes did not complete the technical assessment sheets with due professional care.

52 The Commission argues that the technical assessment sheet bearing the names of Messrs Scholtes and Zastawnik in fact amounts to a single assessment, carried out by Mr Zastawnik, who was replacing Mr Scholtes. Contrary to the applicant's assertion, Mr Zastawnik's sheets are correctly filled out, and are dated and signed on the first page. The Commission further stresses that the applicant's statement that the sheets were fictitious' is insulting and above all without foundation. In fact, that assessor's marks largely coincide with those given by other assessors and are strictly within the range of marks given by the other assessors.

53 The Commission maintains that the applicant's criticism of the manner in which Mr Zastawnik completed the technical assessment sheet is based solely on the fact that the marks given by him are not comparable to those given by other assessors more favourable to the applicant. According to the same line of reasoning, in the Commission's view, the opposite conclusion could be reached, namely, that the assessments of the three assessors favourable to the applicant must be rejected owing to a lack of objectivity.

54 The Court finds that, contrary to the applicant's assertion that Mr Zastawnik's sheets are not dated or signed, it appears that they are indeed dated and signed on the first page (it being noted that the technical assessment sheet for each tender comprises three stapled pages). It must be observed that this rather unusual way of signing a document by putting the signature on the first page does not affect the validity of the technical sheets at issue here. The signature offers proof, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that its author is indeed the person who completed the technical assessment sheets.

55 As for the argument that Mr Zastawnik did not take the trouble to add the slightest remark to the marks he gave, an examination of the sheets shows that he did not give marks of 0 or 5, with the result that no justificatory remark was necessary. Consequently, this argument is unfounded.

56 As regards the argument that the technical assessment sheets were not completed with due professional care, the marks given by Mr Zastawnik varying between 3 and 4 only, whereas other assessors gave marks of 0 supported by reasons, it is indeed surprising to observe that some assessors (Messrs Ackermans, Reynen and Gasparini) considered that all of the tenders (except the applicant's and Frezza's) did not comply with the specifications, whilst Mr Zastawnik gave all of the tenders marks of 3 or 4 (with one exception). None the less, this difference between assessments is not sufficient by itself, even together with the fact that the sheets are signed and dated on the front page only, for a finding that the sheets drawn up by Mr Zastawnik are invalid.

57 In fact, the purpose of the technical assessment sheets is to gather the assessments conducted by various assessors whose viewpoints may obviously differ.

58 It follows that the Commission was entitled to take Mr Zastawnik's technical assessment sheets into account and that, consequently, this plea must be rejected.

- The technical assessment sheets of Messrs Reynen, Ackermans and Gasparini

59 The applicant notes that Messrs Reynen, Ackermans and Gasparini completed identical technical assessment sheets and concludes from this that they conducted a joint assessment of the furniture displayed. It also alleges that Mr Reynen alone (or jointly with Messrs Ackermans and Gasparini) seems to have examined the furniture.

60 The Commission states that the sheets completed by Messrs Ackermans and Gasparini contain certain errors of detail, although these do not affect the result of the assessment. Thus, only the first page is signed and Mr Reynen's signature appears on pages 2 and 3 of the forms completed by Mr Ackermans; the functionality' criterion is not assessed at all on Mr Gasparini's form for Frezza's C furniture, which led him to give a mark of 0 for that criterion in the qualitative assessment.

61 It should be noted, first, that it was legitimate for Mr Reynen's technical assessment sheets to be taken into consideration by the Commission in the procedure at issue here. Moreover, the applicant does not argue that the Commission committed an irregularity by taking them into account.

62 Secondly, as regards Mr Ackermans's technical assessment sheets, it cannot but be noted that they simply reproduce the ones drawn up by Mr Reynen. As the Commission, moreover, acknowledges, the sheets drawn up by Mr Ackermans are photocopies of Mr Reynen's sheets, on which Mr Ackerman merely deleted Mr Reynen's name and added his own signature (without even deleting Mr Reynen's). On some pages, Mr Ackermans deleted Mr Reynen's name but did not add his own and did not sign it. On the sheet for the tender M from the company Mercator, Mr Reynen, like Mr Ackermans, made no assessment of compliance. On one assessment sheet only, the one for Frezza's C tender, Mr Ackermans deleted two marks given by Mr Reynen and increased the assessment for functionality and compliance (from 2 to 3), whilst leaving Mr Reynen's remarks and signature.

63 In those circumstances, it appears that the Commission was not entitled to take account of Mr Ackermans's sheets.

64 Thirdly, as regards Mr Gasparini's assessment, an examination of the technical assessment sheets completed by him shows that the marks awarded by him match in all cases those given by Mr Reynen and also, consequently, those given by Mr Ackermans. Although this may be accounted for in cases where, owing to non-compliance of bids, the mark awarded is 0, it is more surprising in the other cases, in particular that of the applicant and Frezza. The similarity, not to say the identical nature, of the remarks made by Mr Gasparini and Mr Reynen tend to indicate that the sheets were copied without any actual individual assessment being conducted or, at the very least, that their content is the result of a joint assessment.

65 In that regard it should be recalled that the technical assessment sheets state that a mark of 0 for the criteria of solidity and finishing will result in elimination if it is awarded by at least three persons and is supported by reasons'. The technical assessment sheets completed by Messrs Reynen, Ackermans and Gasparini gave a mark of 0 for those two criteria for all of the tenders except for those of the applicant and Frezza. In response to written questions on this point from the Court, the Commission stated that the tenders in question had none the less not been eliminated. Recalling that the note in the administrative file concerning methods of assessing tenders stated that the rejection of the product assessed shall be considered valid if, without concertation, at least three assessors award a rejection mark of 0, supported by detailed reasons', the Commission argued that since these three assessments had manifestly been carried out in a concerted manner rejection could not take place on this basis.

66 It follows that the Commission itself acknowledges that the three assessors evidently assessed the bids in a concerted manner. It is true that Directive 93/36 does not expressly impose a specific number of assessments or provide that assessors must conduct their assessment completely independently and without any concertation. None the less, the principle of sound administration, which governs the conduct of negotiated procedures for the award of public contracts, requires assessors called upon to assess bids from tenderers to do so in an independent manner, at least initially, by awarding marks on the basis of their own personal expertise.

67 It follows that, in the present case, the Commission was not entitled to take Mr Gasparini's assessments into account.

68 In conclusion, it follows from the foregoing that the assessments by Messrs Wood, Ackermans and Gasparini should have been rejected and that the Commission committed an error in taking them into account.

Compliance by Frezza's tender with the tender specifications

69 Before examining the alleged irregularities committed by the Commission in the assessment of compliance by Frezza's tender with the tender specifications, it is appropriate to determine the margin of discretion available to the Commission in the context of the negotiated procedure for the award of the contract.

70 In that regard the applicant considers that the flexibility available to the Commission in the context of the negotiated procedure must be examined in the light of the criteria set by the Commission itself for award of the contract. The applicant refers to the Vade-mecum on public procurement and contracts drawn up by the Advisory Committee on Procurement and Contracts and concludes that certain of the conditions governing the contract at issue are deemed to have mandatory effect and leave no margin of discretion to the Commission.

71 The applicant maintains that the Commission's assertion that it is not required to adhere strictly to the technical specifications of the terms and conditions of a tender in the context of a negotiated procedure is contrary to Article 16(1) of Directive 93/96, which provides that the contracting authority may take account only of tenders which meet the minimum specifications required. Whatever margin of discretion the Commission may have in negotiations, it cannot be that it would not be obliged to apply criteria which it itself has set. Moreover, the Commission must abide by the principle that all tenderers are to be treated equally.

72 The Commission observes that strict adherence to the tender specifications in the present case would have led to the elimination of all the tenders, including the applicant's. It maintains that it follows from Article 6(3)(a) of Directive 93/36 that, in the context of the negotiated procedure, the contracting authority has a right to negotiate. It may accept bids which do not entirely comply with the technical specifications but offer a solution acceptable to it, in conformity with the principle that all tenderers are to be treated equally.

73 The Commission stresses that it adhered to the principle that tenderers are to be treated equally, particularly as regards the applicant. It states that, first, following an unsuccessful invitation to tender, it invited a large number of suppliers to display their furniture. It then allowed for a certain amount of flexibility in relation to the technical specifications, particularly as regards the applicant, in order to choose the furniture best suited to those specifications and its needs. Finally, it made its choice on the basis of the same criteria and ancillary criteria for the award as those used during the unsuccessful invitation to tender which preceded the negotiated procedure, in opting for the most economically advantageous tender'.

74 With regard to the Commission's argument based on Article 6(3)(a) of Directive 93/36 concerning its claim to a right to negotiate, the Court notes that that provision sets out the circumstances in which a negotiated procedure may be initiated but does not indicate the manner in which it must be commenced. Accordingly, the Commission's plea based on that provision is unfounded.

75 It is true that Article 1(e) of Directive 93/36 provides that "negotiated procedures" are those national procedures whereby contracting authorities consult suppliers of their choice and negotiate the terms of the contract with one or more of them'.

76 However, even if the contracting authority has a certain margin of discretion in the context of a negotiated procedure, it is always bound to ensure observance of the terms and conditions of the tender specifications, which they have freely chosen to make mandatory.

77 This is confirmed by Article 16(1) of Directive 93/36, which provides that where the criterion for the award of the contract is that of the most economically advantageous tender, contracting authorities may take account of variants which are submitted by a tenderer when they meet the minimum specifications required by the contracting authorities.

78 In the present case, appended to the terms and conditions of the tender are the various data sheets describing the technical features, some of which are regarded as mandatory requirements: Failure to meet these requirements will result in the tender being rejected' (part XII of the data sheets).

79 It should also be noted that the letter of 1 July 1997 addressed by Mr Rosin (Head of Unit 3, Procurement, supply' of Directorate C Administration' of DG IX) to the tenderers in the course of the tender procedure, stated: In this regard, I wish to stress the importance of observing the terms and conditions of the tender specifications, including the mandatory requirements listed therein. Non-observance of those requirements will unfortunately result in the elimination of your bid altogether.' That letter shows the importance attached by the Commission to observance of the terms and conditions of the tender specifications, irrespective of the fact that, according to the Commission, it did not form part of the specifications sent to the tenderers but announced the opening of the negotiated procedure by inviting the addressees to submit a bid.

80 It follows from the foregoing that, although the Commission had a power to negotiate in the context of the negotiated procedure, it was none the less required to ensure observance of those terms and conditions of the tender specifications which were regarded as mandatory.

81 The applicant's arguments alleging non-compliance by Frezza's bid with the terms and conditions of the tender specifications must now be examined.

82 In that regard the applicant maintains that it is clear from the remarks of Messrs Reynen,

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

Ackermans and Gasparini on the technical assessment sheets concerning Frezza's B and C tenders that those bids did not meet those requirements of the tender specifications regarded as mandatory. Thus, it notes that item VI-A did not have adjustable jacks; that the drawers of item VI-B did not open in such a way that the tray extended by 105% of its length; that no light colours were proposed; that the cut-away table for item V-F did not allow for versatile use to left and right of the desk; and that the dimensions of the furniture were non-compliant.

83 With regard to the dimensions of the furniture, the applicant maintains, in response to the Commission's argument concerning non-compliance of its bid on the ground that the dimensions of the meeting tables and desk tables proposed by it did not comply with the terms and conditions of the specifications, that if the dimensions were mandatory requirements, as the Commission maintains, then the dimensions of the desk tables and meeting tables mentioned in Frezza's tender were also not in conformity with the terms and conditions of the specifications.

84 The Court considers it therefore appropriate to examine whether the table dimensions formed part of the mandatory requirements which had to be met by the bids, failing which the bids would be eliminated for non-compliance with the terms and conditions of the tender specifications. In that regard it may be observed that the data sheets appended to the specifications expressly provided as regards both desk tables and meeting tables as follows: XII. Mandatory conditions. Failure to meet these requirements will result in non-compliance by the tender. ... Art. III: a minimum of 2 dimensions must be proposed'.

85 The Commission maintains that the dimensions defined within the parameters provided for in the terms and conditions of the specifications formed part of the mandatory conditions.

86 The applicant maintains that the data sheets concerning the tables did not mention that the dimensions were mandatory, unlike the data sheet for the item referenced 2.04, which provided for a mandatory height'.

87 In that regard the Court considers that the dimensions should be regarded as forming part of the mandatory conditions. The fact that a minimum of two dimensions were requested to be proposed implies that four tables, that is to say two meeting tables and two desk tables, having different dimensions but within the parameters referred to in the specifications, had to be included in the tender. Allowing tenderers to propose furniture having dimensions outside the parameters stipulated in the specifications would render nugatory the specification of dimensions in the invitation to tender.

88 The Court also notes that on other data sheets (for example, those for the casings or cupboards), the dimensions are not indicated in part XII concerning mandatory conditions and are preceded by the symbols +-'. It would thus appear that if the table dimensions had not formed part of the mandatory conditions, they would also have been preceded by the symbols +-' and the statement Art. III: a minimum of 2 dimensions must be proposed' would not have been included under the heading of mandatory conditions.

89 As for the applicant's comparison with the data sheet for the item referenced 2.04 indicating a mandatory height', it should be stated that the sheet in question defines the required dimensions in the following manner: (+- L. 120 x W. 80) x H. 72/75 cm'. Unlike the data sheets for the tables, the length and width are preceded by the symbols +-', which is why the wording mandatory height' was added.

90 Consequently, in regard to the tables, in order for the tenderers' bids to satisfy the mandatory conditions, they had to propose a minimum of two dimensions within the parameters indicated in the terms and conditions of the specifications.

91 As regards compliance by Frezza's tender, it should be noted, first, that for the desk tables the specifications required dimensions of between 160 and 200 cm for length, 80 and 100 cm for width and 72 and 75 cm for height. As to the dimensions of the meeting tables, the specifications required dimensions of between 180 and 240 cm for length, 90 and 120 cm for width and 75 cm for height.

92 The Court finds that, for the desk tables, Frezza's bid proposed two tables which were entirely in compliance with the requirements of the tender specifications, namely, the ZNS 160 table, which measured 166 cm long, 80 cm wide and 72 cm high, and the ZNS 180 table, whose dimensions were 186 cm long, 80 cm wide and 74 cm high. Accordingly, the applicant's argument concerning non-compliance of the desk tables in Frezza's bid must be rejected.

93 As regards the meeting tables, the applicant points out that the dimensions proposed by Frezza were 186 cm long, 80 cm wide and 72 cm high, or 210 cm long, 110 cm wide and 72 cm high. In its replies to the written questions raised by the Court, the Commission acknowledged that the dimensions for the meeting tables were not entirely in conformity with the dimensions laid down in the terms and conditions of the specifications.

94 Without its being necessary to examine the other arguments raised by the applicant concerning compliance by Frezza's bid with the tender specifications, it is clear from the foregoing that the plea that Frezza's bid did not comply with the tender specifications is well founded in so far as the dimensions of the meeting tables are concerned. Consequently, the Commission committed a fault in accepting Frezza's bid.

The Commission's assessment of other criteria

95 In its reply, the applicant argues that there is nothing in the Commission's file concerning the manner in which the criteria relating to warranty and services were assessed by the technical group. It also argues that there was no assessment of compliance by the products with environmental criteria.

96 It should be pointed out that under Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance no new plea in law may be introduced in the course of proceedings unless it is based on matters of law or of fact which have come to light in the course of the procedure. In the present case, as the Commission has rightly pointed out, the arguments, first, that there is nothing in the Commission's file about the manner in which the criteria relating to warranty and services were assessed by the technical group and, secondly, that there was no assessment of compliance by the products with environmental criteria, cannot be regarded as amplifying, directly or by implication, pleas already put forward in the original application and closely connected therewith. Consequently, they must be declared inadmissible (see Case C-104/97 P Atlanta v European Community [1999] ECR I-6983, paragraphs 27 and 29; Case T-252/97 Dürbeck v Commission [2000] ECR II-3031, paragraph 43; and Case T-62/99 Sodima v Commission [2001] II-655, paragraphs 67 and 68).

The financial assessment of the applicant's and Frezza's tenders

97 The applicant submits that, as regards the assessment of the tenders, its own calculations of the points show that its tender gains more points than Frezza's. Accordingly, it challenges the Commission's conclusion that Frezza's tender was the better one from both a technical and financial viewpoint and submits that the Commission manifestly committed a fault in accepting the bid by Frezza.

98 In its reply, the applicant carries out a fresh calculation of points in which it excludes the technical assessment sheets drawn up by Messrs Wood and Scholtes, together with the points awarded for the warranty and services, and re-evaluates on a basis of equality the prices proposed for the drawer casings.

99 The Commission confirms the result of its financial and qualitative assessment of all the tenders. It takes the view that the table attached to the application lacks clarity and, more importantly, does not take into account the weighting of each qualitative assessment criterion.

100 As regards the applicant's re-evaluation in its reply of the financial value of the tenders, the Commission essentially observes that the applicant is taking a selective approach to the criteria for awarding the contract, opting for or rejecting certain criteria or assessors according to what is favourable to its bid, and even inventing other criteria, while losing sight of the fact that the contracting authority is bound to apply the selection criteria provided for in the terms and conditions of the tender specifications.

101 In that regard the Court considers that the table attached to the application, in which the applicant re-evaluates the points given by the different groups of assessors, is totally lacking in clarity.

102 Likewise, the applicant's fresh calculation in its reply cannot be considered sufficiently reliable. Thus it may be observed, first, that, in its fresh calculations, the applicant included the technical assessment sheets drawn up by Messrs Reynen, Ackermans and Gasparini. However, as has been noted above, only the sheets completed by Messrs Reynen and Zastawnik were able to be used. Secondly, the applicant did not include the points awarded for warranty and services. However, it follows from the above analysis that the applicant's arguments on this point are inadmissible. Finally, the applicant calculated, without supporting evidence, additional costs of 40% for technical solutions which would allow 105% opening of desk drawers, whereas the Commission states that this additional cost would be no more than 11%. The applicant stated in its application that the supply of 105% opening desk drawers would increase the supply price by 10 to 15%.

103 Accordingly, this argument cannot be accepted.

104 The Commission goes on to state in its rejoinder that even were the applicant's assertions accepted concerning exclusion of the technical assessments by Messrs Wood and Zastawnik and the 40% estimate for the additional cost of the drawers, its tender would still rank below Frezza's. In that regard it should be observed that the difference between the applicant's analysis and the Commission's stems from the fact that the latter does not exclude points awarded for the warranty and services. Since the pleas concerning warranty and services have been declared inadmissible, the Commission cannot be criticised for having failed to take those two criteria into account.

105 Likewise, the file shows that even if the assessments by Messrs Ackermans, Gasparini and Wood which, as has been established, were not able to be taken into account by the Commission had been excluded and an additional cost of 40% for the drawers as proposed by the applicant were accepted, its tender would still rank lower than Frezza's.

106 It follows that the applicant's argument concerning the financial assessment of the tenders cannot be accepted.

107 In the light of the foregoing, it must be concluded, in regard to the unlawful conduct imputed to the Commission, that it committed a number of serious faults which, individually or at the very least taken together, must be regarded as fulfilling the first of the three conditions necessary for the non-contractual liability of the Community to be incurred under the terms of the case-law cited in paragraph 18 above.

Causal link

108 To prove the causal link between the faults committed by the Commission in awarding the contract and the alleged loss, the applicant essentially argues that, had it not been for those faults, it would have been awarded the contract and it would not have suffered any loss. It states that it can hardly be disputed that, if the Commission had not committed the faults established, its tender would have been found to be the only one which met the mandatory conditions of the tender specifications and would in any event have been considered to be the most economically advantageous tender with the result that the contract would have been awarded to it. It argues that the Commission did not have any margin of discretion.

109 In that regard it should be noted that, according to the case-law, in order to be successful the applicant must show that its tender met all of the tender specifications (see, by analogy, Case T-478/93 Wafer Zoo v Commission [1995] ECR II-1479, paragraph 49; and Case T-230/94 Farrugia v Commission [1996] ECR II-195, paragraph 46). Accordingly, it is appropriate to examine compliance by the applicant's tender with the terms and conditions of the tender specifications.

110 The Commission claims that non-compliance by the applicant's tender may be established in three respects. First, the dimensions of the meeting tables were not in accordance with the specifications; nor, secondly, were the dimensions of the desk tables; and thirdly, no desk-adjustment jack was installed. On this point the Commission states that the documentation submitted with the applicant's tender did not provide any alternative solutions, and that even though inserts were present, that does not negate the absence of adjustment jacks, which were required for the tender specifications to be met.

111 The applicant maintains that only its tender was fully in compliance with the terms and conditions of the tender specifications and observes that Mr Reynen awarded its bid a mark of 4/5 for compliance with tender specifications, whereas Frezza's tender received a mark of only 2/5.

112 As regards the meeting tables and the desk tables, the applicant maintains that the data sheet does not state that the dimensions were mandatory, and that the specifications merely stated that two dimensions had to be proposed. As for the adjustment jacks, the applicant expresses surprise that the jacks were not located on the furniture displayed and adds that the furniture was equipped with metallic inserts intended for installation of jacks.

113 In that regard it should be stated that, for the reasons set out above, the Court considers that the table dimensions formed part of the mandatory conditions.

114 First, as regards the dimensions of the meeting tables, the specifications provided for dimensions of between 180 and 240 cm long, 90 and 120 cm wide and 75 cm high. The Court points out that it is not disputed that the table displayed by the applicant was 180 cm long, 80 cm wide and 72 cm high, and that the alternative table proposed in the tender was 210 cm long, 120 cm wide and 72 cm high. Accordingly, as the Commission correctly points out, the Court finds that the two tables proposed did not meet the height specifications and that, in addition, the first table did not meet the width specifications.

115 Likewise, the Court finds, secondly, that the Commission correctly considered that the dimensions of the desk table did not comply with the terms and conditions of the tender specifications. The tender specifications required dimensions of between 160 and 200 cm long, 80 and 100 cm wide and 72 and 75 cm high, with a minimum of two different dimensions. The desk displayed by the applicant was 160 cm long, 80 cm wide and 72 cm high, whilst the alternative table proposed was 210 cm long, 120 cm wide and 72 cm high. Accordingly, as the Commission correctly observed, the alternative table proposed did not meet the length or width specifications, and the documentation submitted with the bid did not offer any alternative solution.

116 In these circumstances, it cannot be concluded that the tables proposed by the applicant did not comply with the mandatory conditions of the tender specifications.

117 Moreover, as regards the absence of adjustment jacks, the applicant merely expresses surprise that the jacks were not located on the furniture displayed and adds that the furniture was equipped with metallic inserts intended for installation of jacks. In response to a question from the Court, the applicant added that the presence of the metallic insert, to which only the jack may be fitted, confirms that the jacks indeed formed part of its bid.

118 It is none the less the case, however, that the applicant's furniture did not contain the adjustment jacks which were required to comply with specifications. Therefore, the furniture displayed did not comply with the terms and conditions of the tender specifications.

119 In those circumstances, the Court finds that the applicant has not established to the requisite legal standard that its tender satisfied all the conditions of tender specifications deemed to be mandatory.

120 Moreover, as paragraph 105 above makes clear, even when the sheets which could not be taken into account are eliminated and Frezza's tender price is increased by the additional cost connected with the desk drawers, the applicant's tender still appears less advantageous than Frezza's.

121 It follows that, although the Commission committed serious faults in the course of the tender procedure, the applicant has not, however, succeeded in showing that the Commission should have awarded it the contract and, therefore, has not established a causal link between the faults established and the loss alleged.

122 Consequently, and without its being necessary to examine whether the loss which the applicant claims to have suffered owing to the award of the contract to Frezza was actually sustained, the application must be dismissed.

APPLICATION for compensation for damage allegedly suffered by the applicant as a result of the Council's decision not to award it the contract forming the subject-matter of invitation to tender No 107865 issued on 30 July 1999 (OJ 1999 S 146) for general renovation and maintenance works in the Council's buildings,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

(Fifth Chamber),

Judgment

Costs

100 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the applicant has been unsuccessful and the Council has applied for costs, the applicant must be ordered to pay its own costs and those incurred by the Council.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

(Fifth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Dismisses the application;

2. Orders the applicant to pay its own costs and those incurred by the Council.

Legal context

1 The award of public works contracts by the Council is governed by the provisions contained in the first section of Title IV (Articles 56 to 64a) of the Financial Regulation of 21 December

1977 applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 1977 L 356, p. 1), last amended before this action was brought by Council Regulation (EC, ECSC, Euratom) No 2673/1999 of 13 December 1999 (OJ 1999 L 326, p. 1).

2 Under Article 56 of the Financial Regulation, `each institution shall comply with the same obligations as are imposed upon bodies in the Member States' by the directives on public works contracts, when concluding contracts for which the amount involved is equal to or greater than the threshold provided for by those directives.

3 In the present case the relevant legislation is Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), as amended by Directive 97/52/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1).

4 Article 8 of Directive 93/37, as amended by Directive 97/52, provides:

`1. The contracting authority shall, within 15 days of the date on which a written request is received, inform any eliminated candidate or tenderer of the reasons for rejection of this application or his tender, and any tenderer who has made an admissible tender of the characteristics and relative advantages of the tender selected as well as the name of the successful tenderer.

...'

5 Article 18 of Directive 93/37, as amended, provides:

`Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down [in Articles 30 to 32 of this Directive]...'.

6 Article 30 of Directive 93/37 provides:

`1. The criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) either the lowest price only;

(b) or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract: e.g. price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit.

2. In the case referred to in paragraph 1(b), the contracting authority shall state in the contract documents or in the contract notice all the criteria it intends to apply to the award, where possible in descending order of importance.

3. ...

4. If, for a given contract, tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request, in writing, details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received.

The contracting authority may take into consideration explanations which are justified on objective grounds including the economy of the construction method, or the technical solution chosen, or the exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer for the execution of the work, or the originality of the work proposed by the tenderer.

Facts

7 By Notice No 107865, published on 30 July 1999 (OJ 1999 S 146), the General Secretariat of the Council issued a restricted invitation to tender for general renovation and maintenance works in the Council's buildings in Brussels; that notice replaced a notice published on 4 June 1999 (OJ 1999 S 107). The procedure was to result in the conclusion of a five-year framework contract, renewable for 12-month periods. It was also stated in the notice that `[i]n 1998, the cost of the general renovation and maintenance work was in the order of EUR 5 000 000'.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

8 The contract documents relating to the tendering procedure provided, in point IV.5 entitled `Selection criteria':

`(a) The [General Secretariat of the Council] shall select from among the tenders submitted the one which it considers the most advantageous in the light of the information provided by the undertaking. The following criteria are regarded as especially important:

- the conformity of the tender;

- the price of the tender;

- the experience and competence of the permanent team in providing services similar to those described in the contract documents;

- the experience and technical competence of the undertaking;

- the proposal made with regard to the safety coordinator;

- the quality of any subcontractors and suppliers proposed;

- the technical quality of the equipment and materials proposed;

- the measures proposed for observing the prescribed time-limits for completion.

9 The contract documents stipulated that the contract constituted a framework agreement which bound the two parties for general administrative and technical matters, and for the procedures for fixing prices, qualities and time-limits.

10 The contract documents provided for three kinds of services. First, the contractor was to set up a permanent 16-man team covering various skills. Its role was to prepare, manage and coordinate the renovation and maintenance work and also to carry out part of it. Tenderers were required to state in part A of a summary the hourly rate for each member of the permanent team and the overall amount for the services of the permanent team based on an assumed total of 1 800 hours per member. The contract also included, in particular, two types of work. The first type of work covered renovation and maintenance works which were not yet defined by the Council. For those works, the tenderers were required to state, in part B of the summary, their price for each item in an illustrative list of services relating to labour and supply of materials. The second type of work covered seven items of work which the Council had already defined when it issued the invitation to tender, but which it subsequently might or might not decide to carry out. Tenderers were required to put in a price for those jobs in part C of the summary.

11 According to the contract documents, the work carried out by the permanent team would be remunerated at the price determined by application of the contractual rates to the actual time worked, whereas the work on the various jobs under parts B and C of the summary would be remunerated according to the prices submitted. In the three above cases, tenderers were required to state their rates and prices taking account of the fact that at the time of invoicing a cost plus rate or multiplication factor would be applied for `the undertaking's general office costs'.

12 The contract documents stated that the prices and rates for parts A, B and C of the summary did not include `services provided in the contractor's office or connected with it, such as (inter alia): indirect personnel costs in so far as they are not included in the rates; personnel management; general operating costs; general accounting costs; comprehensive site insurance and public liability insurance; the performance bond; the remuneration of company executives; staff training costs; the company's taxes [and] profits.' The `general office costs' as listed above were remunerated by a single cost plus rate or a multiplication factor which was to be fixed by the tenderers when they submitted their tenders and which would be applied to the prices and rates for the work covered by parts A, B and C of the summary. Furthermore, it is clear from the documents before the Court that, if the successful tenderer took on subcontractors to do the work, it was entitled to add to the prices charged by the subcontractors the cost plus rate quoted in its tender. The work in question could be the work provided for in the contract documents or work not so provided for.

13 It should be noted that the prices quoted for parts A and B represented only the approximate cost of the work concerned over one year, whereas the price quoted for part C was the price of certain projects identified in the contract documents to be carried out during the term of the contract.

14 On 28 October 1999, the candidates, eight in all, were informed that their applications to participate in the restricted tendering procedure had been accepted. Of those eight candidates, three submitted tenders conforming to the specifications: Strabag Benelux NV (`Strabag'), Entreprises Louis De Waele (`De Waele') and the applicant.

15 On 11 January 2000, the applicant submitted a tender in the amount of EUR 3 946 745.49 per annum. That tender was considered to conform to the provisions of the contract documents.

16 Following an initial examination of the applicant's tender, the Council considered that some of the prices it contained seemed `abnormally low' and that others `did not even [cover] the supply of materials and equipment'. By letter of 20 January 2000, it asked the applicant to check its calculations, specifying the items concerned. It also pointed out that the applicant had omitted to give certain prices for culinary equipment.

17 By letter to the Council of 24 January 2000, the applicant confirmed its prices, denied that they were abnormally low and stated:

`... we assessed and prepared our tender very carefully and involved our usual suppliers (with whom we have worked closely for many years) in the formulation of our prices; in this regard, our tender was designed to be extremely competitive (while complying with all the technical specifications) so that in the end we might be awarded the contract.'

18 By letter to the applicant dated 1 February 2000, the Council asked for details of certain prices omitted in its tender. It also stated that, although the applicant confirmed, in its letter of 24 January 2000, the prices for the items which the Council considered abnormally low, the letter did not give any justification for those prices, some of which, particularly in relation to plumbing, did not even cover the supply of the materials. The Council then asked for additional information about approximately a hundred items.

19 The representatives of the applicant and the Council met in Brussels on 9 February 2000 in order to clarify certain aspects of the tender. Following that meeting, the applicant, by letter of 11 February 2000, formally replied to the Council's letter of 1 February 2000, in general adhering to the prices quoted in its tender of 11 January 2000 and justifying them by the fact that the aggregation of the items made it possible for the various prices to offset each other. It stated inter alia:

`... our policy has been to assess each job on the basis of an inclusive price, splitting up the costs for the various items not always uniformly but in such a way as to save time in the preparation of the tender. That applies not only to the costs, but also to the profits anticipated in the tender. In the present case, we confirm our undertaking to carry out the work in whole or in part, in accordance with our tender and your requirements. We have assessed the risks connected with our decision.'

20 By decision of 12 April 2000, taken on the basis of an opinion of the Advisory Committee on Procurements and Contracts (`CCAM') dated 5 April 2000 and a report of the same date forwarded to the Committee (`the report to the CCAM'), the Council awarded the contract to De Waele, whose offer was EUR 4 088 938.10 per annum. That decision was the subject of Notice No 054869 published on 29 April 2000 (OJ 2000 S 84).

21 By letter of 14 April 2000, the Council informed the applicant that its tender had been rejected.

22 By letter of 26 April 2000, the applicant asked the Council to send it `within 8 days the official reasons adopted by the Community authority for [eliminating] the applicant from the aforementioned contract'. By letter of 10 May 2000, the applicant repeated that request.

23 By letter of 11 May 2000, the Council gave the following answer to the applicant's request:

`In accordance with the provisions of Directive 93/37... , the criteria for awarding the contract were set out in the contract documents relating to the invitation to tender...

Consequently, the three tenders received on 11 January 2000 were analysed and compared in the light of those criteria. The outcome was that the contract was awarded to De Waele, which had submitted the most economically advantageous tender.

For your information, I would add that Renco's tender was not ranked higher than De Waele's for any of the eight criteria referred to in the contract documents.'

24 By letter of 15 May 2000, the applicant, after pointing out that it considered that its tender was more advantageous than De Waele's, asked for additional information from the Council in respect of the rejection of its tender.

25 By fax of 24 May 2000, the applicant asked for a reply to its letter of 15 May 2000 and, by letter of 2 June 2000, repeated the request contained in its letter of 26 April 2000. It also asked for a `copy of the Committee's assessment reports on the tenders submitted in connection with the aforementioned contract'.

26 By letter of 14 June 2000, the Council replied to the applicant's letter of 15 May and 2 June 2000 and provided it with additional information in respect of the rejection of its tender. It indicated the position of the applicant's tender in relation to those of De Waele and Strabag for each of the eight award criteria. With regard, more particularly, to the price of the tender, it stated that the applicant's offer was ranked third because of `the large number of prices which were abnormally low and for which [it] had not provided adequate justification... , the high multiplication factor for general costs [and] the higher price of the contract when considered over the five-year term of the contract'. It concluded:

`Although the [applicant's] tender appears, in the short term, to be the lowest-priced, it has not been successful because of the amount of its quote over a five-year period and of the numerous questions regarding its prices, and because for other assessment criteria it is not ranked higher than De Waele.'

27 By letter of 21 June 2000, the applicant again asked the Council to send it a copy of the administrative file. By letter of 4 July 2000, the Council refused to accede to that request.

28 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 3 August 2000 and registered under Case number T-205/00, the applicant brought an action for annulment of the Council's decision of 4 July 2000 refusing to grant it access to the administrative file relating to the assessment of the tenders.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

29 By letter lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 5 February 2001, the applicant informed the Court that, since the Council had finally forwarded - through the Registry - the administrative file on the assessment of the tenders, when it lodged its defence on 12 October 2000, the applicant was abandoning its action in Case T-205/00.

Procedure and forms of order sought

30 The applicant brought the present action by application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 5 January 2001.

31 Upon hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court (Fifth Chamber) decided to open the oral procedure. By way of measures of organisation of procedure as provided for in Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, it posed written questions to the parties and asked the Council to furnish information, which was supplied within the time allowed.

32 The parties presented oral argument and their replies to the questions put by the Court at the hearing held on 7 February 2002.

33 The applicant claims that the Court should:

- declare the application admissible and well founded;

- order the Council to pay damages of EUR 26 063 000 together with compensatory interest thereon from 12 April 2000;

- order the Council to pay the costs.

34 The Council contends that the Court should:

- dismiss the application as unfounded;

- order the applicant to pay the costs.

Law

35 The applicant claims damages of EUR 26 063 000 to compensate for the harm which it has allegedly suffered as a result of the unlawful conduct of the Council in the procedure to award the contract in question. It maintains that the Council has exceeded the limits of its authority and administered the procedure with a manifest lack of diligence. The infringements attributable to the Council arise from:

- the reference in the contract documents to vague selection criteria permitting too wide a discretion having regard to the subject-matter of the contract;

- the use, in the final choice of contractor, of criteria not specified in the contract documents, in breach, inter alia, of Article 18 of Directive 93/37, thus frustrating the applicant's legitimate expectations;

- the failure to state reasons for rejecting its tender.

36 The Council considers that the applicant's claim is unfounded and, in the alternative, that the amount of compensation claimed is excessive. It maintains that it has committed none of the infringements alleged and that, in any event, those `infringements do not constitute sufficiently serious breaches' within the meaning of the case-law. In that regard, it recalls that, according to the judgment of the Court of Justice in Case C-352/98 P Bergaderm and Goupil v Commission [2000] ECR I-5291, it is only where the Member State or the institution in question has only considerably reduced, or even no, discretion that the mere infringement of Community law may be sufficient to establish the existence of a breach sufficiently serious to give rise to non-contractual liability on the part of the Community under Article 288 EC. Furthermore, it is settled case-law that, like the other institutions, the Council has a wide discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of the decision awarding a contract following an invitation to tender and the Court's review should be limited to checking that there has been no serious and manifest error (Case 56/77 Agence européenne d'interims v Commission [1978] ECR 2215, paragraph 20, Case T-19/95 Adia interim v Commission [1996] ECR II-321, paragraph 49, Case T-203/96 Embassy Limousines & Services v Parliament [1998] ECR II-4239, paragraph 56, and Case T-139/99 AICS v Parliament [2000] ECR II-2849).

Arguments of the parties Use of vague selection criteria

37 The applicant criticises the Council for using too vague selection criteria in the contract documents. It states that `it is apparent from the contract documents that factors relating to the competence of the contractor or its subcontractors were to be considered most important... , criteria relating to the tender - other than its conformity and price - being, surprisingly, almost non-existent', whereas `only objective factors, concerning the execution of the contract and, therefore, the tender, [would have been] able to maintain equality of opportunity between the tenderers and thus avoid value judgments which were difficult to justify'. Furthermore, Article 30(1)(b) of Directive 93/37 concerning `the most economically advantageous tender' listed only factors relating to the tender itself, which do not cover, in the present case, some of the criteria in the contract documents, such as the experience and technical competence of the company and the quality of any subcontractors and suppliers, which are difficult to evaluate.

38 The Council considers that this view cannot be accepted. The invitation to tender clearly stated the eight criteria on the basis of which it was to take its decision awarding the contract (see paragraph 8 above). They make it clear that the conformity and price of the tender were not the only factors to be taken into account, but that the contract would be awarded `to the most economically advantageous tender' within the meaning of Article 30(1)(b) of Directive 93/37 (see paragraph 6 above). The Council considers that that provision contains only an illustrative list of the criteria which may be taken into account and that these may vary depending on the contract in question. In the present case, the invitation to tender clearly stated eight criteria, amongst them the experience and technical competence of the company and the quality of any subcontractors and suppliers proposed. The Council adds that the applicant has not established that it seriously and manifestly exceeded its discretion by listing those criteria. It points out that it is also clear both from its correspondence with the applicant and from the report to the CCAM that it carried out an objective examination of the three tenders received in the light of the eight criteria set out in the contract documents.

Use of criteria not specified in the contract documents

39 The applicant claims that the Council did not base its choice of tenderer on the criteria stated in the contract documents. It maintains that its tender was in conformity with the contract documents, that it adequately satisfied the other criteria laid down and that its price was very much lower than the other tenders. Therefore, by applying other criteria, of which the applicant was not advised, the Council frustrated the legitimate expectations which the applicant was entitled to have concerning the regularity of the procedure to award the contract and the observance of the conditions imposed, and infringed the general principle of diligence and rigour which the institutions are required by the Court to observe (Case T-73/95 Oliveira v Commission [1997] ECR II-381). The Council rejected the applicant's tender mainly on the basis of the abnormally low prices, a multiplication factor which was too high and overall prices which were too substantial over the whole five-year term of the contract. However, the applicant has given a satisfactory explanation of the way in which it determined each of those factors, showing that the criteria actually applied to guide the Council's choice were unjustified and had frustrated its legitimate expectations. The applicant adds that, if the Council had based its decision on the contract documents, there would be no justification for its elimination.

40 As regards the prices regarded as abnormally low, that assessment is explained by the fact `that the prices thus referred to were overall prices, not unit prices, so that certain low prices could have been offset by increases' (see, in particular, paragraphs 17 and 19 above). Furthermore, in its letter of 24 January 2000 (see paragraph 17 above), the applicant mentioned the special relations it enjoyed with its usual suppliers. Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 does not in any case require the contracting authority to reject any abnormally low price. It only requires it to ask for details of the composition of tenders which seem abnormally low. Therefore, the quoting of abnormally low unit prices, when the overall prices of the various items were not abnormally low, cannot justify the Council's decision.

41 As regards the multiplication factor for general costs, the applicant wonders why the Council described a coefficient of 20% as high instead of being surprised that De Waele and Strabag used a multiplier coefficient of 6% to 8% when, in the light of the contract documents, that coefficient was to include all the costs set out in paragraph 12 above. The applicant applied the 20% coefficient taking account of the principles of sound company management. In the light of those principles, it would be impossible to contain the nine costs referred to in a margin of 6% to 8%. Furthermore, the contract documents did not, in any case, recommend that the coefficient should be as low as possible.

42 As for the calculation of the price of the tenders over the whole five-year term of the contract, the Council wrongly concluded that the applicant's tender was less competitive in the long term. The applicant points out that that criterion does not appear in the contract documents and that that method of calculation was therefore unforeseeable at the time the invitation to tender was issued. It also maintains that that method of calculation is incorrect, since it gives an overall price which cannot correspond to the actual cost over that term. It is undeniable that certain prices were likely to vary and that others were payable only once.

43 The applicant also points out that it was the only tenderer to conform to the contract documents and to allocate its profit margin to `part A' of its price - as it was required to do by the official documents governing the invitation to tender -, whereas Strabag and De Waele had allocated it to headings B and C. It was therefore inevitable that the globalisation of only heading A would be to the detriment of the applicant and that its offer on that point would be higher than those submitted by the other two companies (see paragraphs 10 to 13 above). Furthermore, the Council should not have considered the multiplication factor for general costs and the term of the contract cumulatively, because those two factors are really only one.

44 The applicant also considers that the reasoning adopted by the Council for assessing the criterion of the company's experience and technical competence is neither described nor clear.

45 The Council maintains that the applicant's argument cannot be accepted. It based its final choice on the criteria set out in the invitation to tender and in the contract documents and carefully examined the conformity of the three tenders with each of those criteria.

46 The Council states that its examination of the applicant's tender gave rise to the following conclusions:

`- conformity: all three candidates equal... ;

- price of tender: [the applicant] third;

- qualitative criteria: for three criteria [the applicant] is ranked in final position, for one criterion it is equal last and for two criteria the three tenderers are ranked equal'.

47 The Council submits that the criterion of the conformity of the tender is an absolute criterion in that a company which does not meet it is excluded at the outset, without its being necessary to examine its tender. The criterion of the price of the tender is an objective criterion since it allows the tenders to be ranked. The Council points out that it is more interested in the lowest-priced tender provided, however, that its meets the qualitative criteria. The other criteria are all qualitative and make it possible to assess the quality and competence of the company and of the methods it proposes. Nevertheless, they are all less important than conformity and price, since the qualitative criteria have already been examined, in part, during the first stage of the tendering procedure on the basis of their presentation file.

48 As regards the abnormally low prices, the Council states that it is required, under Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37, to reject any abnormally low price which cannot be justified. It adds that the provision allows it to ask for details of the abnormally low prices and to reject the tender if those details are not convincing. In accordance with that provision, the Council twice questioned the applicant about a large number of abnormally low prices, but the applicant gave only vague explanations about the prices and merely stated that they were fair (see, in particular, paragraphs 16 to 19 above). The Council adds that the `overall' method of replying to an invitation to tender used by the applicant is akin to speculation and therefore cannot be accepted.

49 Concerning the multiplication factor for general costs, the Council states that this is an important element of the organisation of the contract. That factor, according to the Council, was to be applied to the `basic' prices for every job and, as it was part of the `price of the tender' criterion, therefore appeared in the contract documents (see paragraphs 11 and 12 above). It points out that that coefficient was very high in the applicant's tender whereas it was significantly lower and in accordance with market practices in those of the other two tenderers. Therefore, the high percentage proposed by the applicant would have constituted a financial risk for the Council if the applicant, for tasks which were not provided for amongst the jobs specified in the summary, had had to call on subcontractors. In that situation, the actual cost for the Council would in fact have been made up of the price of the subcontracting or supply plus the aforementioned coefficient. In those circumstances, the actual cost for the Council would therefore have been significantly higher in the applicant's case than in the case of the other two tenderers. It is therefore for the applicant to show that the Council has seriously and manifestly exceeded its discretion by considering that the 20% coefficient which it proposed constituted a financial risk for the institution. Furthermore, the applicant has not adduced any evidence in support of its allegation that it was impossible to contain the nine costs referred to in the contract documents (see paragraph 12 above) within a margin of 6% to 8%, a margin which would have been in accordance with market practices.

50 The Council also points out that it was in its interest to compare the amount of the tenders not only over a year but also over the whole contractual period. It considers that, since the contract documents stated that the contract was concluded for a five-year term, it was natural, and in its interest, to examine the costs of the various tenders over that period. The Council adds that, on the basis of that comparison, the applicant's tender was not the most economically advantageous because of its high cost plus rate. It states that the works in part C of the tender (the predefined projects) were to be carried out only once whereas those in parts A and B might be carried out during the whole of the term of the contract. The Council analysed the offers submitted by the candidates on a financial level using objective and identical criteria. Those two criteria `[are shown] clearly in the contract documents:

- theoretical volume of work over one year (= amount of tender), equals: A + B + 50% C;

- theoretical volume of work over five years (= term of contract), equals: 5A + 5B + 100 C'.

51 As for the applicant's argument that the Council considered a high multiplication factor and the term of the contract cumulatively (see paragraph 43 above), the Council declares that it does not understand what it means.

52 In respect of the qualitative criteria, the Council also points out that the applicant has not given a proper reply with regard to the fifth criterion (concerning the safety coordinator) and that its reply regarding the sixth criterion (concerning the subcontractors) is unsatisfactory.

Failure to state reasons

53 The applicant maintains that the Council blatantly disregarded the provisions of Article 8 of Directive 93/37, which required it to communicate within 15 days of the date of the request the reasons for the rejection of its tender. It maintains that it has also infringed the national provisions (the Belgian Law of 24 December 1993 on public procurement and certain works, supply and services contracts) applicable to the award of public contracts. Those rules require contracting authorities to state the reasons for their decisions and prohibit discriminatory practices. However, in the present case, the Council has merely formulated vague considerations, giving the applicant no opportunity to assess its real chances of obtaining the contract or the reasons for the decision taken.

54 The applicant considers that the application of the Belgian Law cannot be ruled out on the ground that Directive 93/37 alone governs the transparency and duty to state reasons of the Community contracting authority. In was stated, on page 32 of the contract documents, that, `subject to specific provisions applicable to the European Communities, Belgian law is applicable to the contract'. The applicant also states that, by abandoning its application in Case T-205/00 (see paragraphs 28 and 29 above), it has not waived its right but only withdrawn the application. That application related only to the Council's decision to provide it with the administrative file requested and not the lawfulness of the Council's decision to reject its tender. The applicant claims that it may, in any event, still contest that latter decision as regards its statement of reasons under Article 8 of Directive 93/37.

55 The applicant claims that the Council's letter of 11 May 2000 (see paragraph 23 above), which is the first response to its request to be sent `the official reasons adopted by the Community authority in order to eliminate it from the contract', cannot constitute the communication of the reasons for the rejection required by Directive 93/37, because that letter does not state any reasons. It adds that the Council's letter of 14 June 2000 (see paragraph 26 above) likewise cannot constitute the required reasoning, because it was sent more than a month and a half after the applicant's first request and one month after its request for details of 15 May 2000 (see paragraph 24 above), and because it merely contains a classification of the three candidates according to the eight criteria, but without any reasons, except for the criterion concerning the price, the application of which is contested.

56 The Council considers that the applicant's claim alleging a lack of transparency is unfounded. It points out that the Belgian Law of 24 December 1993 is not applicable to the present case because the Council is required, as contracting authority for a public works contract, `to comply with Directive 93/37, which alone governs the transparency and duty to state reasons of the Community contracting authority'.

57 The Council points out that the applicant brought an action for annulment, under Article 8(1) of that Directive, against its decision refusing to accede to its request for the `administrative file' and that it abandoned that action because, during the proceedings before the Court of First Instance, the Council sent the file to it. It considers that it must be inferred from that abandonment that the applicant no longer contests - so far as concerns the reasons for the rejection decision - the lawfulness of that decision.

58 The Council states that it has fulfilled the duty to state reasons imposed by Directive 93/37 in that, first of all, by letter of 14 April 2000, it informed the applicant that its tender had been rejected, and then, by letter of 11 May 2000, replied to its express request of 26 April and 10 May 2000 to send it `the official reasons adopted by the Community authority' in order to eliminate it from the contract. In the letter of 11 May 2000, the Council indicated to the applicant the procedure which had been followed, the reasons why its tender had been rejected and the reasons why De Waele's tender had been successful.

Findings of the Court

59 The second paragraph of Article 288 EC provides that, in the case of non-contractual liability, the Community shall, in accordance with the general principles common to the Member States, make good any damage caused by its institutions or by its servants in the performance of their duties.

60 In order for the Community to incur non-contractual liability, a number of conditions must be met: the conduct alleged against the institutions must be unlawful, the existence of damage must be shown, and there must be a causal link between the alleged conduct and the damage. With regard to the first of these conditions, case-law requires it to be shown that there has been a sufficiently serious breach of a rule of law intended to protect individuals (see to this effect Bergaderm and Goupil v Commission, cited above, paragraph 42, and Case T-210/00 Biret and Cie v Council [2002] ECR II-47, paragraph 52). If any one of those conditions is not satisfied, the action must be dismissed in its entirety and it is unnecessary to consider the other conditions for non-contractual liability (Case C-146/91 KYDEP v Council and Commission [1994] ECR I-4199, paragraph 19).

61 In the present case, as regards the condition relating to the unlawfulness of the Community's conduct, the applicant complains that the Council has infringed the provisions of Directive 93/37 by disregarding the limits of its power and manifestly failing to administer with diligence the procedure to award the contract, on account of the infringements stated in paragraph 35 above.

62 In that regard, it should be remembered that, according to settled case-law, the Council has a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender (Agence européenne d'interims v Commission, paragraph 20, Adia interim v Commission, paragraph 49, and Embassy Limousines & Services v Parliament, paragraph 56).

63 When the institution has a discretion, the decisive test for finding that a breach of Community law is sufficiently serious is whether the institution concerned manifestly and gravely disregarded the limits on its discretion (see to this effect Joined Cases C-46/93 and C-48/93 Brasserie du pêcheur and Others [1996] ECR I-1029, paragraph 55; Joined Cases C-178/94, C-179/94 and C-188/94 to C-190/94 Dillenkofer and Others [1996] ECR I-4845, paragraph 25, and Bergaderm and Goupil v Commission, cited above, paragraph 43). It follows that the first condition for the Community to incur non-contractual liability is fulfilled only if it is established that the Council has committed the errors and infringements stated in paragraph 35 above and that they constitute a manifest and serious infringement of the limits on its discretion with regard to tendering procedures.

Preliminary observations

64 As a preliminary point, the Court considers it appropriate to recall some of the specific characteristics of the contract forming the subject of the invitation to tender in question. First, the contract was to be awarded not to the tender with the lowest price but to the most economically advantageous tender, which necessitates the application of various criteria which vary according to the contract in question (see, in particular, paragraph 65 below). Secondly, the procedure was to lead to the conclusion of a framework agreement for a term of five years renewable for 12-month periods. Thirdly, the contract was mixed and consisted of three different types of work for which the methods of determining the price varied. Furthermore, part B of the contract consisted of a large number of jobs to be defined and remunerated only during the execution of the contract. In the light of the specific characteristics of the contract in question, the comparative assessment of the tenders which the Council had to carry out necessarily meant that it not only had to check the accuracy and reliability of the unit prices given in the tenders but also had to estimate the total cost of the types of job covered by the contract over a five-year period on the basis of the contract terms and the prices stated in the tenders.

Use of vague criteria

65 As regards the alleged vagueness of the award criteria, it should be pointed out, first of all, that the Council, when applying Article 30(1) of Directive 93/37, did not state in its invitation to tender `the lowest price only' but `the most economically advantageous tender'. In that regard, Article 30(1)(b) of Directive 93/37, concerning the most economically advantageous tender, provides that the applicable criteria shall be `various criteria according to the contract: e.g. price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit'.

66 Under Article 30(2) of Directive 93/37, when a contract is awarded to the most economically advantageous tender, all the criteria on which the Council intends to base the award must be stated in the contract documents. Furthermore, the provision leaves it to the Council to choose the criteria on which it proposes to base its award of the contract, provided that the criteria chosen are aimed at identifying the offer which is economically the most advantageous. In order to determine the economically most advantageous tender, the Council must be able to exercise its discretion, taking a decision on the basis of qualitative and quantitive criteria that vary according to the contract in question (see to this effect Case 274/83 Commission v Italy [1985] ECR 1077, paragraph 25).

67 In that regard, the Court recalls that, in connection with similar provisions in Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), the Court of Justice has held that Article 36(1)(a) of that directive cannot be interpreted as meaning that each of the award criteria used by the contracting authority to identify the economically most advantageous tender must necessarily be of a purely economic nature, because it cannot be excluded that factors which are not purely economic may influence the value of a tender from the point of view of the contracting authority (Case C-513/99 Concordia Bus Finland [2002] ECR I-0000, paragraph 55).

68 It follows that Article 30(1)(b) of Directive 93/37 cannot be interpreted as meaning that each of the award criteria used by the Council to identify the most economically advantageous tender had necessarily to be either quantitative or related solely to the prices or rates contained in the summary. Various factors which are not purely quantitative may affect the execution of work and, as a result, the economic value of a tender. For instance, the experience and technical competence of a tenderer and its team, the familiarity with the kind of work covered by the contract in question and the quality of the subcontractors proposed are all qualitative factors which, if they do not reach the level required by the contract, may cause delays in the execution of the work or make additional work necessary. It follows that, even if some of the criteria mentioned in the contract documents for assessing a tenderer's competence to carry out the works are not expressed in quantitative terms, they may be applied objectively and uniformly in order to compare the tenders and are clearly relevant for identifying the most economically advantageous tender.

69 In the present case, as the Council has stated (see paragraph 47 above), the eight criteria referred to in the contract documents, apart from the first criterion concerning the conformity of the tender, are qualitative and quantitative. Since the criterion concerning the conformity of the tender is absolute, a tender must be rejected if it does not conform with the contract documents. The second criterion, namely the price of the tender, is quantitative and serves as an objective basis for comparing the respective costs, prices and rates of the tenders. The other six criteria are qualitative and their principal role is to ensure that each tenderer has the competence and skill needed for executing the work of the contract. The Court considers that, although those six criteria, amongst them the experience and technical competence of the company and the quality of any subcontractors proposed, are not absolute or quantitative like the first two, they are nevertheless not vague and can all be evaluated objectively and specifically. Furthermore, it should be pointed out that criteria like the experience and technical competence of the company and the quality of any subcontractors proposed are factors which may affect the value of the tender and, contrary to what the applicant claims, it is appropriate that they should appear amongst the criteria of the contract documents.

70 The Court also notes that the applicant merely asserts that the award criteria mentioned in the contract documents did not make it possible to maintain equality of opportunity between the tenderers, without adducing the slightest evidence in that regard and without alleging that it had suffered discrimination itself. In any event, it is clear from the documents before the Court and the report to the CCAM that the three tenders in the case were examined with all due care and that the award criteria were applied without discrimination.

71 Consequently, it must be held that the eight award criteria listed in the contract documents were transparent and relevant in relation to the nature of the contract and that they sought to identify the most economically advantageous tender.

72 It is evident from the foregoing that the Council did not infringe the limits of its discretion when formulating the award criteria in the contract documents.

Use of criteria not specified in the contract documents

73 The applicant also considers that the Council did not base its choice of tenderer on the criteria indicated in the contract documents, but on other criteria of which the applicant was not advised, thus frustrating its legitimate expectations that the award procedure would be properly conducted. It rejected the applicant's tender on three grounds, namely the quoting in its tender of abnormally low prices, a multiplication factor which was too high and overall prices which were too substantial over the full five-year term of the contract. However, according to the applicant, it has given a reasonable explanation of the way in which it decided each of those elements, thus showing that the criteria actually applied to guide the Council's choice were unjustified and had frustrated its legitimate expectations.

74 With regard to the prices which the Council considered to be abnormally low, it is not disputed that the applicant, instead of providing individual prices for each item specified in the contract documents, as required, used overall rather than unit prices for certain items. According to the report to the CCAM, if a tenderer's prices were less than half as much as the prices of the other tenderers and of architects' estimates, they were regarded as abnormally low, which means that the prices in question were dubious. It is apparent from the file that the Council asked the applicant for details on several occasions about many prices which it considered did not even cover the supply of the materials and equipment. However, in spite of numerous contacts between the parties on that point, the applicant continued to retain the same prices in its tender. It stated that its practice was to give an overall price which allowed it to gain time when preparing its tender, and confirmed that its prices were correct. It also stated that it had prepared its tender in liaison with some of its usual suppliers and confirmed its undertaking to execute the work in accordance with its tender (see paragraph 17 above).

75 The Court finds that the applicant cannot criticise the Council for checking many of the prices quoted in its tender. It is apparent from the wording of Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 that the Council is under a duty, first, to identify suspect tenders, secondly to allow the undertakings concerned to demonstrate their genuineness by asking them to provide the details which it considers appropriate, thirdly to assess the merits of the explanations provided by the persons concerned, and, fourthly, to take a decision as to whether to admit or reject those tenders (Joined Cases C-285/99 and C-286/99 Lombardini and Mantovani [2001] ECR I-9233, paragraph 55). The Court notes, for example, that the Council, in its defence, stated that it had questioned the applicant about very many of the abnormally low prices, namely the price of 319 items in the summary out of a total of 1 020. It also asked the applicant for clarification regarding a series of very blatant anomalies and particularly about the price of the doors, which are the same for single doors, double doors or glass doors. The applicant has not provided adequate explanations for those anomalies either in its reply or at the hearing.

76 In that regard, the Court observes that, although Article 30(4) of Direcrtive 93/37 does not require the Council to check each price quoted in each tender, it must examine the reliability and seriousness of the tenders which it considers to be generally suspect, which necessarily means that it must ask, if appropriate, for details of the individual prices which seem suspect to it, a fortiori when there are many of them. Furthermore, the fact that the applicant's tender was considered to conform to the contract documents did not relieve the Council of its obligation, under the same article, to check the prices of a tender if doubts arose as to their reliability during the examination of the tenders and after the initial assessment of their conformity.

77 The Court finds that the Council correctly followed the procedure laid down by Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37 and, in particular, satisfied the requirements relating to the inter partes nature of the procedure by providing the applicant, on several occasions, with the opportunity to demonstrate that its tender was serious. In that regard, it is apparent from the correspondence between the parties and, in particular, from the applicant's letters to the Council of 24 January and 11 February 2000 (see paragraphs 17 and 19 above) that the applicant, in spite of specific requests from the Council, merely confirmed generally that the prices quoted in its tender were reasonable, without adducing the slightest evidence to establish the reliability of the individual prices.

78 The Council did not manifestly and seriously disregard the limits of its discretion in the matter by taking into consideration, when assessing the applicant's tender, the quoting of many abnormally low prices and the failure to give a convincing explanation which persisted even after the inter partes procedure laid down in Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37.

79 Therefore, the applicant's arguments relating to the abnormally low prices must be rejected.

80 The applicant considers that the Council was wrong to regard as too high the multiplication factor of 20% given in its tender for the `general office costs' listed in paragraph 12 above. It maintains that it was impossible to contain those costs within a margin of 6% to 8% as De Waele and Strabag did in their tenders.

81 It should be observed that the applicant merely states that it was impossible without adducing any proof or evidence in that regard.

82 It should also be noted that the multiplication factor for the `general office costs' proposed by the applicant was markedly higher than that of the other tenderers and, according to the Council, represented a financial risk for it if the applicant, for jobs which were not included in the jobs specified in the summary of the contract documents, had had to call on subcontractors. In reply to a written question posed by the Court before the hearing with the aim of establishing the genuineness of the alleged financial risk, the Council made an extrapolation - on the basis of the work carried out on one of its buildings during the first year of the contract with De Waele - from the figures and multiplication factor given by the applicant in its tender, in order to determine what the work would have cost if it had been done by the applicant. The Council then compared that cost with the cost of the work carried out by De Waele over a period of one year and over a period of five years, the term of the contract. Given that a significant part of the work in question was carried out by subcontractors, the result of that simulation was that the Council might have had to pay the applicant a sum considerably higher than that paid to De Waele for doing the same work. It follows that the Council was right, when carrying out the assessment designed to obtain the most economically advantageous tender over the five years of the term of the contract, to take into consideration the potential effect of the difference between the multiplication factor of 20% proposed by the applicant and that proposed by the other tenderers.

83 The Court therefore considers that the applicant has not established that the Council committed a manifest and serious error of assessment by considering, when assessing its tender, that the multiplication factor of 20% represented a financial risk. Furthermore, the fact that the Council did not recommend, in the contract documents, that that factor should be as low as possible is irrelevant, because the very purpose of the summary is to require tenderers to quote all their prices, including the multiplication factor, whether they are high or not, which, depending on the circumstances, will bind the parties.

84 The applicant's arguments relating to the multiplication factor for the `general office costs' must therefore be rejected.

85 As regards the calculation, made by the Council when assessing the tenders, of their price over a five-year term, the applicant considers that the Council incorrectly concluded that its tender was less competitive in the long term. It points out inter alia that `the formula' of `5A + 5B + C' used by the Council does not appear in the contract documents and that that calculation method was unforeseeable at the time of the invitation to tender. It also maintains that the calculation method is misconceived because it gives an overall price which cannot correspond to the actual cost of the work over the five-year period.

86 The Court makes the preliminary point that, in regard to that matter, the Council had a wide discretion and the review of the Court must be limited to verifying the lack of a serious and manifest error. First of all, although the contract documents did not contain the formula in question, the invitation to tender and the contract documents clearly specified that the term of the contract was normally five years (see, in particular, paragraph 7 above). In fact, the application of the formula in question permitted an extrapolation, on the basis of the terms of the offers submitted by the three tenderers, of the total cost to the Council of the contract over five years taking into consideration the different characteristics of the jobs in parts A, B and C of the summary. Although the tender price of EUR 3 946 745.49 per annum submitted by the applicant (see paragraph 15 above) was lower than the annual price of the other two tenders, the extrapolation made by the Council enabled it to compare the overall economic advantages of the three tenders in the light of the five-year term of the contract and the specific characteristics of the jobs specified in parts A, B and C of the summary. That enabled the Council to judge that the applicant's tender was the most expensive in the long term. The Court finds that, although the formula stated in paragraph 85 above was not given in the contract documents, the use of such a formula was nevertheless foreseeable and reasonable, particularly in the light of the duration of the contract in this case.

87 The Court considers that the applicant's arguments set out in paragraph 43 above are incomprehensible. The applicant's replies to the questions put to it before and during the hearing were not sufficient to elucidate those arguments for the Court. They must therefore be rejected pursuant to Article 44(1)(c) of the Rules of Procedure (Case T-154/98 Asia Motor France and Others v Commission [1999] ECR II-1703, paragraph 49).

88 It is apparent from the foregoing that the applicant has not established that the Council committed a manifest and serious error in the assessment of the price of the tenders over the term of the contract. Consequently, the applicant's arguments relating to the evaluation of the tender prices must be rejected.

Failure to state reasons

89 As regards the alleged infringement of the duty to state reasons in this case, the Court points out that the claim for damages in the amount of EUR 26 063 000 lodged by the applicant (see paragraph 33 above) includes inter alia a claim for EUR 24 000 000 by way of compensation for the harm resulting from the loss of the chance of being awarded the contract in issue. It must be observed that, even if it were to be considered that the Council did not give adequate reasons for rejecting the applicant's tender, that does not mean that the award of the contract to De Waele constituted an error or that there is a causal link between that fact and the loss alleged by the applicant.

90 With regard to the Council's arguments set out in paragraph 57 above, the Court finds that the action brought by the applicant in Case T-205/00 sought the annulment of the Council's decision refusing to grant it access to the administrative file relating to the assessment of the tenders and was therefore brought against a decision other than the contested decision. That action, since the applicant has abandoned it, has no bearing on the present action.

91 As regards the applicant's argument set out in paragraph 54 above relating to the Belgian legal provisions on invitations to tender, the Court finds that the inclusion, in paragraph 26(a) of the contract documents, of the words `Belgian law is applicable to the contract' was intended to submit the eventual conclusion of the contract and the execution of the work to which it related to the relevant provisions of Belgian law. On the other hand, it does not cover the procedures prior to conclusion of the contract, which are governed exclusively by Directive 93/37. Consequently, it is necessary to determine the extent of the Council's duty to state reasons in respect of a tenderer who has not been successful in the award procedure under Article 8(1) of Directive 93/37, as amended by Directive 97/52.

92 It is apparent from this last provision and from the judgment in Adia interim v Commission, cited above, that the Council fulfils its obligation to state reasons if it first informs eliminated tenderers immediately of the fact that their tender has been rejected by a simple unreasoned communication and then subsequently, if expressly requested to do so, informs tenderers of the relative characteristics and advantages of the successful tender and the name of the successful tenderer within 15 days of receipt of a written request.

93 Such a manner of proceeding satisfies the purpose of the duty to state reasons enshrined in Article 253 EC, according to which the reasoning followed by the authority which adopted the measure must be disclosed in a clear and unequivocal fashion so as, on the one hand, to make the persons concerned aware of the reasons for the measure and thereby enable them to defend their rights and, on the other, to enable the Court to exercise its power of review (Case T-166/94 Koyo Seiko v Council [1995] ECR II-2129, paragraph 103, and Aida interim v Commission, cited above, paragraph 32).

94 Consequently, in order to determine whether the Council fulfilled its obligation to state reasons, the Court considers that it is necessary to examine the letter of 11 May 2000 sent to the applicant in response to its express request of 26 April 2000.

95 Clearly, in its letter of 11 May 2000, the Council gave a sufficiently detailed statement of the reasons for which it had rejected the applicant's tender and stated the characteristics and advantages of De Waele's tender. That letter clearly indicates the procedure which was followed to evaluate the tenders of the three tenderers and the fact that De Waele's tender was successful because it was the most economically advantageous. The Court considers that the applicant could immediately identify the specific reason for the rejection of its tender, namely the fact that it was economically less advantageous than that of De Waele. The Council added that the applicant's tender was not ranked higher than De Waele's for any of the eight criteria referred to in the contract documents.

96 In any event, and contrary to what the applicant claims (see paragraph 55 above), the Council's letter of 14 June 2000 may also be taken into consideration in order to examine whether the statement of reasons in this case was adequate, because the duty to state reasons must be assessed in the light of the information available to the applicant at the time the application was brought. If, as in the present case, the applicant, before bringing an action but after the date laid down by Article 8(1) of Directive 93/37, asks the institution concerned for additional explanations about a decision and receives those explanations, it cannot ask the Court not to take them into consideration when determining whether the statement of reasons is adequate; however, the institution is not permitted to substitute an entirely new statement of reasons for the original statement of reasons, but that is not the position in this case. In its letter of 14 June 2000, the Council, supplementing its letter of 11 May 2000, provided explanations which were more detailed but which correspond to the explanations given in the letter of 11 May as regards the rejection of the applicant's tender. Moreover, the Court considers that the fact that fuller information was given in the letter of 14 June 2000 does not mean that the reasons stated in the letter of 11 May 2000 were inadequate.

97 It follows that the applicant cannot rely on the alleged infringement of the duty to state reasons.

98 It is apparent from the foregoing considerations that the applicant has not established that the Council disregarded the limits of its discretion or, therefore, that it committed a sufficiently serious infringement of Community law.

99 The first condition for Community liability, namely the unlawfulness of the conduct of the institution complained of, not having been satisfied, the applicant's claim for damages must be dismissed, without there being any need to consider whether the other conditions are satisfied.

(Art. 226 EC)

In Case C-439/00,

Commission of the European Communities, represented by M. Nolin, acting as Agent, with an address for service in Luxembourg, applicant,

v

French Republic, represented by G. de Bergues and S. Pailler, acting as Agents, with an address for service in Luxembourg, defendant,

APPLICATION for a declaration that, by failing to adopt all the laws, regulations and administrative measures necessary to comply with Directive 98/4/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 February 1998 amending Directive 93/38/EEC coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1998 L 101, p. 1) or, at all events, by failing to communicate the same to the Commission, the French Republic has failed to comply with its obligations under that directive,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber), composed of: A. La Pergola, President of the Chamber, S. von Bahr (Rapporteur) and C.W.A. Timmermans, Judges, Advocate General: J. Mischo,

Registrar: R. Grass,

having regard to the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 2 May 2001,

gives the following

Judgment

1 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court on 28 November 2000, the Commission of the European Communities brought this action under Article 226 EC for a declaration that, by failing to adopt all the laws, regulations and administrative measures necessary to comply with Directive 98/4/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 February 1998, amending Directive 93/38/EEC coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1998 L 101, p. 1) or, at all events, by failing to communicate the same to the Commission, the French Republic has failed to comply with its obligations under that directive.

2 Under Article 2(1) of Directive 98/4 Member States were to bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative measures necessary to comply with the directive by 16 February 1999 and to inform the Commission thereof forthwith.

3 Taking the view that Directive 98/4 had not been transposed into French law within the prescribed period, the Commission started the procedure in respect of failure to fulfil Treaty obligations. Having given the French Republic formal notice to submit its observations, the Commission, on 18 February 2000, sent a reasoned opinion to the French Republic requesting it to adopt the measures necessary to comply with it within two months from the date of notification of the opinion. Since it received no information as to whether the transposition of the directive had been completed, the Commission brought the present action.

4 Pointing out the obligations of the Member States under the third paragraph of Article 249 EC, the Commission submits that the French Republic was required to take the measures necessary to comply with Directive 98/4 within the prescribed period.

5 The French Republic, which does not deny the failure, states that Directive 98/4 is in the course of transposition.

6 Since the directive has thus not been transposed within the prescribed period, the Commission's action must be regarded as well founded.

7 It must therefore be held that, by failing to adopt, within the prescribed period, all the laws, regulations and administrative measures necessary to comply with Directive 98/4, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive.

Costs

8 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission has applied for costs and the French Republic has been unsuccessful, the latter must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber),

hereby:

1. Declares that, by failing to adopt, within the prescribed period, all the laws, regulations and administrative measures necessary to comply with Directive 98/4/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 February 1998 amending Directive 93/38/EEC coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, the French Republic has failed to comply with its obligations under that directive.

2. Orders the French Republic to pay the costs.

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 18 April 2002,

gives the following

Judgment

1. By order of 29 September 2000, received at the Court on 10 November 2000, the Bundesvergabeamt referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC four questions on the interpretation of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

2. Those questions arose in the course of proceedings between Felix Swoboda GmbH (Swoboda) and the Österreichische Nationalbank (the Austrian central bank) (ANB), concerning the ANB's decision to use a negotiated procedure for the award of a contract in order to nominate the service provider contracted to undertake a removal to new premises situated approximately 200 metres from the original address.

Legal framework

Community law

Directive 92/50

3. Article 1(d) to (f) of Directive 92/50 provides:

For the purposes of this directive:

...

(d) open procedures shall mean those national procedures whereby all interested service providers may submit a tender;

(e) restricted procedures shall mean those national procedures whereby only those service providers invited by the authority may submit a tender;

(f) negotiated procedures shall mean those national procedures whereby authorities consult service providers of their choice and negotiate the terms of the contract with one or more of them.

4. According to Article 2 of Directive 92/50:

If a public contract is intended to cover both products within the meaning of Directive 77/62/EEC and services within the meaning of Annexes I A and I B to this directive, it shall fall within the scope of this directive if the value of the services in question exceeds that of the products covered by the contract.

5. Article 7(3) of Directive 92/50 provides:

The selection of the valuation method shall not be used with the intention of avoiding the application of this directive, nor shall any procurement requirement for a given amount of services be split up with the intention of avoiding the application of this article.

6. According to Article 8 of Directive 92/50:

Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI.

7. Article 9 of Directive 92/50 provides:

Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I B shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.

8. Article 10 of Directive 92/50 provides:

Contracts which have as their object services listed in both Annexes I A and I B shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI where the value of the services listed in Annex I A is greater than the value of the services listed in Annex I B. Where this is not the case, they shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.

9. It follows from Article 11(4) of Directive 92/50 that the use of the negotiated procedure constitutes an exception in the context of the procedure for the award of public service contracts, the contracting authorities being obliged, outside the cases referred to in paragraphs 11(2) and (3), to award their contracts by the open procedure or by the restricted procedure.

10. Amongst the services in Annex I A to Directive 92/50 are, in Category 2, land transport services ... including armoured car services, and courier services, except transport of mail (and rail transport services) covered, respectively, by Category 4 of Annex I A and Category 18 of Annex I B to the directive. With respect to land transport services, there are listed reference numbers 712 (except 71235), 7512 and 87304 of the common product classification of the United Nations (the CPC nomenclature).

11. As for the services which are listed in Annex I B to Directive 92/50, they include in Category 20 Supporting and auxiliary transport services, which correspond to reference number 74 of the CPC nomenclature.

Directive 93/36/EEC

12. Article 1(a) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) provides:

For the purpose of this directive:

(a) public supply contracts are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing involving the purchase, lease rental or hire purchase, with or without option to buy, of products between a supplier (a natural or legal person) and one of the contracting authorities defined in (b) below. The delivery of such products may in addition include siting and installation operations.

13. According to Article 5(6) of Directive 93/36

No procurement requirement for a given quantity of supplies may be split up with the intention of avoiding the application of this directive.

Directive 93/37/EEC

14. Article 1(a) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) provides that:

For the purpose of this directive:

(a) public works contracts are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a contractor and a contracting authority as defined in (b), which have as their object either the execution, or both the execution and design, of works related to one of the activities referred to in Annex II or a work defined in (c) below, or the execution, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority.

Directive 93/38/EEC

15. Article 1(4) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84) provides:

For the purpose of this directive:

...

4. supply, works and service contracts shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one of the contracting entities referred to in Article 2, and a supplier, a contractor or a service provider, having as their object:

(a) in the case of supply contracts, the purchase, lease, rental or hire-purchase, with or without options to buy, of products;

(b) in the case of works contracts either the execution, or both the execution and design or the realisation, by whatever means, of building or civil engineering activities referred to in Annex XI. These contracts may, in addition, cover supplies and services necessary for their execution;

(c) in the case of service contracts, any object other than those referred to in (a) and (b) ...

Contracts which include the provision of services and supplies shall be regarded as supply contracts if the total value of supplies is greater than the value of the services covered by the contract.

16. Finally, under Article 14(8) of Directive 93/98:

The basis for calculating the estimated value of a contract including both supplies and services shall be the total value of the supplies and services, regardless of their respective values. The calculation shall include the value of the siting and installation operations.

National legislation

17. Directive 92/50 was transposed into Austrian law by the Bundesgesetz über die Vergabe von Aufträgen (Federal law on the award of public contracts, BGBl. 1993/462, in the version published in BGBl. 1996/776, BVergG 1993). That law was replaced in 1997 by a law of the same title (BGBl. I, 1997/56, BVergG 1997).

18. In accordance with the terms of Directive 92/50, the regime applicable to public service contracts depends in Austria on the type of services provided. While all the provisions of the BVergG 1993 and 1997 apply to contracts for the services referred to in Annex III to those laws (which corresponds essentially to Annex I A to Directive 92/50), only the provisions of the first and fourth parts of those laws, concerning their scope and legal remedies, and four Paragraphs concerning the advertising of contracts, the use of the Common Procurement Vocabulary (CPV) and the technical specifications apply to contracts for the services referred to in Annex IV to the BVergGs of 1993 and 1997, which is identical, in essence, to Annex I B to Directive 92/50.

19. In addition, those laws contain a provision inspired by Article 10 of Directive 92/50 because in the case of contracts for services mentioned in Annex III and Annex IV to the laws Paragraph 1b(3) of BVergG 1993 and Paragraph 3(3) of BVergG 1997 make all the provisions of those laws applicable when the value of the services referred to in Annex III thereto exceeds that of the services referred to in Annex IV. Where the situation is reversed only the first and fourth parts are applicable to the contracts, together with the four Paragraphs referred to in the preceding paragraph of this judgment.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

20. In autumn 1996, after using the restricted procedure to award a contract for a move from premises situated in Vienna (Austria) to new premises some 200 metres away (the procedure was annulled in March 1997), the ANB awarded that contract by the negotiated procedure and in April 1997 published the contract award notice. In the notice, the ANB indicated as the procedure chosen for the award of the contract the negotiated procedure for a service provided for in Paragraph 1b(2) and (3) of the BVergG 1993, with the predominant value made up of services referred to in Annex IV to the BVergG, while in order to designate the services constituting the contract, it referred to the CPV reference numbers 63100000-0 (Cargo handling and storage services), 63200000-4 (Other supporting services for land transport), 63400000-0 (Freight forwarding services) and 60240000-2 (Freight transportation services by road).

21. Swoboda challenged the ANB's contract award decision before the national court which has made the reference, seeking a declaration that the contract had not been awarded to the most favourable tenderer as the result of a breach of federal law on the award of public contracts or of the rules governing its application. It argued, in that regard, that the value of the services listed in Annex III to the BVergG 1993 and 1997 was far greater than the value of the services in Annex IV to the BVergG, so that the BVergG had to be applied in full.

22. The ANB contested that view before the national court. Contending that the majority of the services to be provided by the supplier of services concerned, in the present case, logistics and computerised task management, planning and coordination of all the tasks connected with the move and the provision of storage facilities - the move and the transportation of the contents of the premises represented only 6.94% of the total value of the contract - the ANB argued that the contract concerned mainly supporting and auxiliary transport services, referred to in Annex IV to the BVergG 1993 and 1997, to which only the first and fourth parts and the four Paragraphs mentioned in paragraph 18 of the present judgment apply. It relied in particular, in that regard, on the CPC nomenclature which brings together, in Chapter 74, all supporting and auxiliary transport services, including, in sub-chapter 742, storage and warehousing and in sub-chapter 7480, freight transport agency services, freight forwarding services (primarily transport organisation or arrangement services on behalf of the shipper or consignee), ship and aircraft space brokerage services and freight consolidation and break bulk services, which correspond essentially to coordination and logistics.

23. In those circumstances, being uncertain of the interpretation to be given to Directive 92/50 in view, in particular, of the judgments in Case C-331/92 Gestión Hotelera Internacional [1994] ECR I-1329 and Case C-76/97 Tögel [1998] ECR I-5357, the Bundesvergabeamt decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Must a service which serves a single purpose, but which could be subdivided into part services, be classified as a single service consisting of a main service and accessory, supporting services in accordance with the scheme of Directive 92/50/EEC, and in particular the types of services contained in Annex I A and I B, and treated as a service listed in Annex I A or I B to the directive according to its main object, or must each part service instead be considered separately in order to establish whether the service is subject to the directive in full as a priority service or only to individual provisions thereof as a non-priority service?

(2) How far may a service which describes a specific type of service (e.g. transport services) be broken down into individual services in accordance with the scheme of Directive 92/50/EEC without infringing the provisions on the award of service contracts or undermining the effet utile of the directive on services?

(3) Must the services referred to in this case (having regard to Article 10 of Directive 92/50/EEC) be regarded as services falling within Annex I A to Directive 92/50/EEC (Category 2, Land transport services) so that contracts which have as their object such services are to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI of the directive, or must they be classified as services falling within Annex I B to Directive 92/50/EEC (Category 20, Supporting and auxiliary transport services, and Category 27, Other services) so that contracts which have as their object such services are to be awarded in accordance with Articles 14 and 16, and under which CPC reference number must they be subsumed?

(4) In the event that consideration of the part services leads to the conclusion that a part service falling within Annex I A to the directive which, in principle, is subject in full to the provisions of Directive 92/50/EEC is, by way of an exception, not subject in full to the provisions of the directive on account of the principle of predominance laid down in Article 10 thereof, is there an obligation on the contracting authority to split off non-priority part services and to award contracts for them separately in order to respect the priority nature of the service?

Admissibility of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

24. The arguments used by the Commission and the ANB to challenge the admissibility of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling must be examined first.

25. On the basis of the order for reference of the Bundesvergabeamt in Case C-314/01 Siemens and Arge Telekom & Partner pending before the Court, the Commission expresses doubts as to the judicial nature of the body making the reference on the ground that it acknowledged in the order that its decisions do not contain binding, enforceable directions addressed to the contracting authority. In those circumstances, the Commission has doubts as to the admissibility of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Bundesvergabeamt in the present proceedings in the light of the case-law of the Court, in particular Case C-134/97 Victoria Film [1998] ECR I-7023, paragraph 14, and Case C-178/99 Salzmann [2001] ECR I-4421, paragraph 14, according to which a national court or tribunal may refer a question to the Court or tribunal only if there is a case pending before it and if it is called upon to give judgment in proceedings intended to lead to a decision of a judicial nature.

26. In that regard, it suffices to observe that the doubts expressed by the Commission as to the admissibility of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling on the ground that the decisions given by the Bundesvergabeamt are not binding, which was strongly contested during the hearing by both the ANB and the Austrian Government, are without relevance in the circumstances of the main proceedings.

27. As the Commission itself admitted during the hearing, in answer to a question put by the Court, the main case relates to the period after the award of the contract. However, it is common ground that in Austrian law both the parties and the civil courts which are seised of a claim in damages during that time are bound in any case by the findings of the Bundesvergabeamt.

28. In those circumstances, the binding nature of the decision of the Bundesvergabeamt in the main case cannot reasonably be called into question.

29. The ANB, for its part, doubts the admissibility of the questions referred for the following reasons. First, the applicant in the main proceedings did not participate in the tendering procedure in question either as a tenderer or as a candidate, so that it has no direct individual right on which it can rely vis-à-vis the contracting authority. Second, the Court of Justice has already ruled on similar facts and questions in Tögel, so that the questions referred should either be dismissed for lack of relevance or dealt with by way of a reasoned order in accordance with Article 104(3) of the Court's Rules of Procedure. Third, the contract at issue in the main proceedings did not contain any cross-border aspect, which relieves the contracting authority of the obligation to award the contract by a public tendering procedure at Community level. The ANB refers in that respect to Case C-108/98 RI.SAN. [1999] ECR I-5219, also concerning a public tendering procedure, in which the Court held that Article 55 of the EC Treaty (now Article 45 EC) does not apply in a situation such as that in the main proceedings in which all the facts are confined to ... a single Member State and which does not therefore have any connecting link with one of the situations envisaged by Community law in the area of freedom of movement for persons and freedom to provide services.

30. In relation, first, to the ANB's argument that the applicant in the main proceedings did not participate in the public tendering procedure at issue in the main proceedings as a candidate or a tenderer, it is sufficient to observe that the right to bring proceedings is a question governed by the national rules of procedure. It is not for the Court of Justice to rule on the application of those rules in the circumstances at issue in the main proceedings.

31. Next, concerning the argument that in Tögel the Court of Justice has already ruled on comparable facts and questions, making it unnecessary to rule in the present case, or at least enabling it to decide by reasoned order, it must be observed that the facts and questions referred in the present case appear to be substantially different from those which gave rise to the judgment in Tögel. In that judgment the Court of Justice was not called upon to rule, in particular, on the question whether a contract for a single purpose but composed of various services, some falling within Annex I A to Directive 92/50 and others within Annex I B, should be classified in accordance with its main purpose.

32. In any case, Article 104(3) of the Rules of Procedure permits the Court to give a decision by reasoned order in the three situations mentioned therein, but by no means requires it to do so; the Court always retains in such cases the right to rule by means of a judgment.

33. Finally, as regards the argument that it was unnecessary to bring the existence of the contract at issue in the main proceedings to the knowledge of traders established in Member States other than the Austrian Republic because the contract had no cross-border aspect, it must be observed that that fact, supposing it to be established, is not such as to relieve the contracting authority of its duty to comply with the obligations set down in Directive 92/50. As stated expressly in the 20th recital in the preamble, the very purpose of the directive is to improve access for suppliers of services to the contract award procedures in order to eliminate practices which restrict competition in general and participation in contracts by nationals of other Member States in particular.

34. In the light of the above, the questions referred by the Bundesvergabeamt for a preliminary ruling must be declared admissible.

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

35. By the questions referred to the Court, the national court asks, in essence, which regime is applicable to public service contracts composed of both services falling within Annex I A to Directive 92/50 - described by that court as priority services - and services falling within Annex I B to the directive - described as non-priority. In that regard, it seeks to ascertain more particularly what regime applies to a removal contract such as that at issue in the main proceedings in which the transportation itself is only a relatively small part, the contract being essentially for coordination, logistics and the provision of storage facilities.

36. As the first, second and fourth questions relate to the scope of Directive 92/50, it is appropriate to examine them before the third question, which concerns the classification of the services at issue in the main proceedings in the annexes to the directive.

The first question

37. By its first question, the national court asks, in essence, whether the purpose of a contract is relevant in determining the applicable regime. It seeks to know more particularly whether, for the award of a contract with a single object but which is composed of several services, those services must be classified individually in the categories provided for in Annex I A and I B to Directive 92/50 in order to determine the regime applicable to the contract in accordance with Articles 8 to 10 of the Directive, or whether on the contrary the main purpose of the contract must be identified, in which case the ancillary services are governed by the same regime as the service relating to the main purpose. The Bundesvergabeamt refers in particular in that regard to the judgment in Gestion Hotelera Internacional, in which the Court laid down the principle that the main purpose of the contract determined which directive was applicable to a given contract.

Observations submitted to the Court

38. For the ANB and the United Kingdom Government, the latter approach is wholly excluded in the context of Directive 92/50. The directive does not contain any definition of what constitutes the main purpose of a contract, whilst Article 10 explicitly acknowledges, on the contrary, that a contract may have as its purpose the provision of different services falling under different annexes to the directive.

39. The United Kingdom Government also states in that respect that in Tögel the Court held that the references in the annexes to Directive 92/50 to the CPC nomenclature were binding. It is thus contrary to the purpose of the directive to classify a contract composed of several services, referred to in different sections of the CPC nomenclature, according to only one of those services.

40. As regards, moreover, the reference made by the Bundesvergabeamt to the judgment in Gestion Hotelera Internacional, the ANB and the United Kingdom Government maintain that the judgment is wholly irrelevant in the main case in so far as, first, its purpose was to determine whether a contract constituted a contract for works or a contract of another type, and secondly, the criterion adopted by the Court in that judgment was the merely incidental nature of repair work in relation to the main purpose of the contract based on the express definition of public works contracts at the time in Article 1(a) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682), as reproduced now in Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37. According to the ANB, if in the context of that judgment the Court had taken the view that the determining factor for distinguishing between contracts for works and contracts for services was the predominant nature of a service in terms of value, it would have clearly so ruled, referring to Article 10 of Directive 92/50 and not to the 16th recital in the preamble thereto, which provides that when those works are incidental rather than forming the object of a contract, they do not justify treating the contract as a public works contract.

41. On the other hand, the Austrian Government argues that for the award of a contract with a single object but composed of several services, it is the object and the corresponding principal service which, once identified, determine the classification of the contract.

42. The Austrian Government cites first in that regard the reference numbers of the CPC nomenclature and the explanatory notes to the CPC, which do not contain an exhaustive list of the services classified, but give a basic description of the typical composition of those services or of the activities necessary for the provision of such services.

43. Next, it refers to Article 7(3) of Directive 92/50 and Article 5(6) of Directive 93/36, from which it is clear that the division of a service into part services and the award of separate contracts relating to them is unlawful, especially when the value of each part service does not reach the threshold applicable and the contracting authority therefore avoids the application of those directives.

44. Finally, the Austrian Government relies on Article 1(a) of Directive 93/36 and Article 1(4)(b) of Directive 93/38 on the definition of public supply contracts and public works contracts respectively. Those provisions make it plain that all the Community directives on the coordination of the procedures for the award of public contracts define what constitutes a main service, which is decisive for the classification of the contract.

Reply of the Court

45. Directive 92/50 pursues fundamentally the same object as the directives on the coordination of the procedures for the award of public works and supply contracts, which is, according to the settled case-law of the Court, to avoid the risk of preference being given to national tenderers or candidates whenever a contract is awarded by the contracting authorities and the possibility that a body financed or controlled by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law may choose to be guided by considerations other than economic ones (see, to that effect, Case C-44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria [1998] ECR I-73, paragraph 33, Case C-360/96 BFI Holding [1998] ECR I-6821, paragraphs 42 and 43, and Case C-380/98 University of Cambridge [2000] ECR I-8035, paragraph 17). However, Directive 92/50 does not apply in the same way to all public service contracts.

46. Thus, the 21st recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50 states that the application of its provisions in full must be limited, for a transitional period, to contracts for services where its provisions will enable the full potential for increased cross-border trade to be realised, the contracts for other services during that period being subject only to monitoring.

47. To that end Directive 92/50 makes a distinction between contracts for services referred to in Annex I A, which under Article 8 are awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI, and those for services referred to in Annex I B, which under Article 9 are subject to the provisions of Articles 14 and 16.

48. In Article 10, Directive 92/50 also provides that contracts which have as their object services listed in both Annex I A and Annex I B are to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI where the value of the services listed in Annex I A exceeds the value of the services listed in Annex I B, and where this is not the case only in accordance with Articles 14 and 16.

49. It follows from those provisions that in the context of Directive 92/50 the argument that the main purpose of a contract determines the regime applicable to it cannot be accepted.

50. In the first place, Directive 92/50 itself states, in the seventh recital in the preamble, that for the application of procedural rules and for monitoring purposes the field of services is best described by subdividing it into categories corresponding to particular positions of a common classification, in this case the CPC nomenclature.

51. In paragraph 37 of the judgment in Tögel, the Court held that the reference made in Annexes I A and I B to Directive 92/50 to the CPC nomenclature was binding.

52. In the second place, Article 10 of Directive 92/50 provides an unequivocal test for the determination of the regime applicable to a contract composed of several services, which is based on the comparison of the value of the services referred to in Annex I A to the directive with the value of the services referred to in Annex I B.

53. In the light of the preceding observations, the answer to the first question must be that the determination of the regime applicable to public service contracts composed partly of services falling within Annex I A to Directive 92/50 and partly of services falling within Annex I B to the directive does not depend on the main purpose of those contracts and is to be made in accordance with the unequivocal test laid down by Article 10 of that directive.

The second and fourth questions

54. By its second and fourth questions, which it is appropriate to deal with together, the national court asks, in essence, whether in the award of a contract having one purpose but composed of several services the classification of those services in Annexes I A and I B to Directive 92/50 deprives the directive of its effectiveness. It also asks whether there is an obligation on the part of the contracting authority, if as a result of that classification the value of the services falling within Annex I B exceeds that of the services falling within Annex I A, to separate the services referred to in Annex I B from the contract in question and to award separate contracts in respect of them.

55. In that regard, it suffices to observe that the answer given to the first question makes it clear that the classification of services in Annexes I A and I B to Directive 92/50 - even in the context of a contract with a single object - is in accordance with the system provided for by the directive as it appears, inter alia, in the seventh and 21st recitals in the preamble and in Articles 8 and 10, which envisage the application of the directive on two levels.

56. Directive 92/50 must be interpreted as in no way requiring the separate award of a contract for the services referred to in Annex I B thereto when, in accordance with the classification made by reference to the CPC nomenclature, the value of those services exceeds, for the contract in question, the value of the services referred to in Annex I A. As the Advocate General observed in point 55 of his Opinion, to require such a separation in that case would effectively deprive Article 10 of Directive 92/50 of any purpose. Under the second sentence of Article 10 of the directive the contract is subject only to Articles 14 and 16.

57. It would be the same if the contracting authority artificially grouped in one contract services of different types without there being any link arising from a joint purpose or operation, with the sole purpose of increasing the proportion of the services referred to in Annex I B to Directive 92/50 in the contract and thus of avoiding, by way of the second sentence of Article 10, the application of its provisions in full.

58. Moreover, that conclusion is supported by the wording of Article 7(3) of Directive 92/50, from which it is clear that the choice of the valuation method is not to be made with the intention of avoiding the application of the directive. Although that article relates to a different situation (the artificial splitting up of the contract), the purpose which inspires it (the concern to avoid any risk of manipulation) also precludes a contracting authority from artificially grouping different services in the same contract solely in order to avoid the application in full of the directive to that contract.

59. In the main case there can be no question, however, of such an artificial grouping in so far as the Bundesvergabeamt has clearly established that the services forming the object of the contract awarded by the ANB, although different in nature, all serve to achieve a single purpose.

60. In the light of the preceding observations, the answer to the second and fourth questions must be that in the award of a contract with a single object but composed of several services, the classification of those services in Annexes I A and I B to Directive 92/50, far from depriving it of its effectiveness, is in accordance with the system laid down by the directive. When, following the classification thus made by reference to the CPC nomenclature, the value of the services falling within Annex I B exceeds the value of the services falling within Annex I A, there is no obligation on the part of the contracting authority to separate from the contract in question the services referred to in Annex I B and to award separate contracts in respect of them.

The third question

61. By its third question, the national court wishes to know which annex to Directive 92/50 and which reference numbers of the CPC nomenclature cover the services at issue in the main proceedings.

62. In that regard, it must be observed that the classification of services in Annexes I A and I B to Directive 92/50 is primarily a question of fact for the contracting authority to determine, subject to review by the national courts.

63. In the present case, it is thus for the national court to review the classification made by the ANB, taking account, in particular, of the principles laid down in paragraphs 49 to 51 of the present judgment. The Bundesvergabeamt must verify, more particularly, that the services which make up the contract and the reference numbers of the CPC nomenclature correspond.

64. However, the Commission's argument that Category 20 of Annex I B to Directive 92/50, on supporting and auxiliary transport services, can be interpreted as covering the whole of the services forming the object of the contract in the main proceedings must in any case be rejected.

65. It follows from the title of that category that the services to which it refers do not include the transportation itself. In that regard, it is common ground that land transport services fall within Category 2 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50, with the exception of postal services and rail services, covered by Category 4 of Annex I B and Category 18 of Annex I B respectively.

66. In the light of those considerations, the answer to the third question must be that it is for the national court to determine the regime applicable to the contract forming the object of the procedure at issue in the main proceedings on the basis of Article 10 of Directive 92/50, in particular by verifying that the services which make up that contract and the reference numbers of the CPC nomenclature correspond. In any case, Category 20 of Annex I B to Directive 92/50 cannot be interpreted as also including land transport services themselves, as they are explicitly covered by Category 2 of Annex I A to the Directive.

Costs

67. The costs incurred by the Austrian and the United Kingdom Governments and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main action, a step in the proceedings pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Fifth Chamber),

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Bundesvergabeamt by order of 29 September 2000, hereby rules:

1. The determination of the regime applicable to public service contracts composed partly of services falling within Annex I A to Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts and partly of services falling within Annex I B to the directive does not depend on the main purpose of those contracts and is to be made in accordance with the unequivocal test laid down by Article 10 of that directive.

2. In the award of a contract with a single object but composed of several services, the classification of those services in Annexes I A and I B to Directive 92/50, far from depriving it of its effectiveness, is in accordance with the system laid down by the directive. When, following the classification thus made by reference to the nomenclature of the United Nations Common Product Classification, the value of the services falling within Annex I B exceeds the value of the services falling within Annex I A, there is no obligation on the part of the contracting authority to separate from the contract in question the services referred to in Annex I B and to award separate contracts in respect of them.

3. It is for the national court to determine the regime applicable to the contract forming the object of the procedure at issue in the main proceedings on the basis of Article 10 of Directive 92/50, in particular by verifying that the services which make up that contract and the reference numbers of the nomenclature of the United Nations Common Product Classification correspond. In any case, Category 20 of Annex I B to Directive 92/50 cannot be interpreted as also including land transport services in themselves, as they are explicitly covered by Category 2 of Annex I A to the Directive.

THE COURT

(Fifth Chamber),

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien by order of 14 September 2000, hereby rules:

1. The term `needs in the general interest' in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts is an autonomous concept of Community law.

2. The activities of funeral undertakers may meet a need in the general interest. The fact that a regional or local authority is legally obliged to arrange funerals - and, where necessary, to bear the costs of those funerals - where they have not been arranged within a certain period after a death certificate has been issued constitutes evidence that there is such a need in the general interest.

3. The existence of significant competition does not, of itself, allow the conclusion to be drawn that there is no need in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character. The national court must assess whether or not there is such a need, taking account of all the relevant legal and factual circumstances, such as those prevailing at the time of establishment of the body concerned and the conditions under which it exercises its activity.

4. A mere review does not satisfy the criterion of management supervision in the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36. That criterion is, however, satisfied where the public authorities supervise not only the annual accounts of the body concerned but also its conduct from the point of view of proper accounting, regularity, economy, efficiency and expediency and where those public authorities are authorised to inspect the business premises and facilities of that body and to report the results of those inspections to a regional authority which holds, through another company, all the shares in the body in question.

1 By order of 14 September 2000, received at the Court on 11 October 2000, the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien (Public Procurement Review Chamber of the Land of Vienna) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC three questions on the interpretation of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1).

2 Those questions have been raised in proceedings between Adolf Truley GmbH (`Truley'), established in Drosendorf an der Thaya, Austria, and Bestattung Wien GmbH (`Bestattung Wien'), established in Vienna, concerning the latter's decision not to accept the tender submitted by Truley in the procedure for award of a contract to supply coffin fixtures.

Legal framework

Community legislation

3 Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36 provides:

`For the purpose of this Directive:

...

(b) "contracting authorities" shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

"a body governed by public law" means any body:

- established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

- having legal personality, and

- financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law;

the lists of bodies or of categories of such bodies governed by public law which fulfil the criteria referred to in the second subparagraph are set out in Annex I to Directive 93/37/EEC. These lists shall be as exhaustive as possible and may be reviewed in accordance with the procedure laid down in Article 35 of Directive 93/37/EEC.'

National legislation

Rules governing the award of public contracts

4 Under Austrian law, the regulation of public procurement falls partly within the competence of the State and partly within the competence of the federal units (the Länder). In the Land of Vienna, that sector is governed by the Wiener Landesvergabegesetz (Law on the award of public contracts of the Land of Vienna, LGBl. 1995/36, as published in LGBl. 1999/30, hereinafter `the WLVergG').

5 Paragraph 12(1) of the WLVergG provides:

`This Law shall apply to the award of contracts by contracting authorities. Contracting authorities within the meaning of this Law shall be:

1. Vienna as a Land or municipality and

2. bodies established under the law of the Land provided that they have been founded for the purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not being commercial in character, if they have at least some legal capacity, and

(a) more than half of whose managers are appointed by bodies of the City of Vienna or of another entity within the meaning of points 1 to 4 or are persons appointed by bodies of the said entities for this purpose or

(b) whose management is subject to supervision by the City of Vienna or other entities within the meaning of points 1 to 4 or

(c) which are financed, for the most part, by the City of Vienna or other entities within the meaning of points 1 to 4,

3. ...

4. ...'.

The Vienna Municipal Constitution

6 Paragraph 71 of the Wiener Stadtverfassung (Vienna Municipal Constitution, LGBl. 1968/28, as published in LGBl. 1999/17, hereinafter `the WStV') provides:

`1. Undertakings within the meaning of this Constitution are economic entities on which the Municipal Council has conferred the status of undertaking. The Municipal Council may also decide that an undertaking shall be composed of several component undertakings.

2. The undertakings shall not have legal personality. The administration of their assets shall be separate from that of the other assets of the municipality. The undertakings shall be managed in accordance with economic principles. Where an undertaking is entered in the registry of companies, its corporate name must clearly indicate its status as an undertaking of the City of Vienna.

3. The Municipal Council shall adopt articles of association for these undertakings taking account, in particular, of Paragraph 67(2). The provisions on internal procedure and the distribution of functions (Paragraph 91) shall apply to the undertakings only in so far as such provisions refer expressly to them. Taking into account considerations of expediency, economy and effectiveness as well as the greater degree of independence of the undertakings as compared with other units of the Magistrat [of the City of Vienna (municipal administration of the City of Vienna)], the articles of association shall lay down detailed provisions on the bodies, their areas of competence, their organisation and their administration, their management in accordance with economic principles and on the principles of accounting and the submission of accounts. The powers devolving on municipal bodies in relation to personnel matters shall also apply to the undertakings. As regards the determination of other areas of competence, the following are reserved:

1. to the municipal council:

(a) the conferment and withdrawal of the status of undertaking;

(b) the division of an undertaking into component undertakings;

(c) the determination of the main objects of the undertaking, guidelines, target planning and administrative programmes;

...

7 Paragraph 73 of the WStV concerning the tasks of the Kontrollamt der Stadt Wien (Monitoring Office of the City of Vienna, hereinafter `the Kontrollamt'), which, in terms of organisation, forms part of the Magistrat of the City of Vienna, states further:

`(1) The Kontrollamt shall examine the overall conduct of the municipality and of the funds and foundations having legal personality and administered by municipal authorities for proper accounting, regularity, economy, efficiency and expediency (review of conduct)...

(2) The Kontrollamt shall also examine the conduct of commercial undertakings in which the municipality has a majority interest. Where such a commercial undertaking has a majority interest in another undertaking, the examination shall extend to that other undertaking. The Kontrollamt's powers of examination shall be assured by suitable measures.

(3) The Kontrollamt may further examine the conduct of entities (commercial undertakings, associations, etc.) in which the municipality has an interest other than that referred to in paragraph 2 or on whose organs the municipality is represented, provided that the municipality has reserved the right to carry out such a review. This shall also apply to entities which receive financial support from municipal resources or for which the municipality accepts liability.

(6) Upon decision of the Municipal Council or the Monitoring Committee or at the request of the Mayor or, in respect of the area of responsibility of his unit, of an office-holding city councillor, the Kontrollamt shall carry out special reviews of conduct and safety and shall inform the requesting authority of its findings.

The rules governing the exercise of the activity of funeral undertaker

8 The activity of funeral undertaker is governed at federal level by Paragraphs 130 to 134 of the Gewerbeordnung 1994 (Austrian Trade Regulations, BGBl. 1994/194, as published in BGBl. I, 1997/63, hereinafter `the GewO'). Those provisions indicate that, under Austrian law, the activity of funeral undertaker is not reserved to specific legal persons such as the State, the Länder or the municipalities but that the exercise of such activity is subject to the issue of prior authority which is itself dependent on the existence of a current or future need. In this regard, Paragraph 131(2) of the GewO asks the authority competent to issue such authorisation to determine more specifically whether the municipality has adopted adequate provisions with regard to burials or cremations.

9 However, according to the information provided by the national court, the condition of the existence of a need is significant only in regard to obtaining authorisation to carry on a business as a funeral undertaker. If, subsequently, there is no longer a need, the administration cannot withdraw the authorisation previously granted.

10 Although the GewO also contains no provision restricting the exercise of the authorised activity to a particular geographical area, the Landeshauptmann (First Minister of the Land) is nevertheless competent, under Paragraph 132(1) of the GewO, to fix the maximum prices for funeral services either for the entire Land or by administrative unit or municipality.

11 In the Land of Vienna, the exercise of the activity of funeral undertaker is governed more specifically by the Wiener Leichen- und Bestattungsgesetz (Law of the Land of Vienna on the activity of funeral undertaker, LGBl. 1970/31, as published in LGBl. 1988/25, hereinafter `the WLBG'). Paragraph 10(1) of that law provides:

`Where no arrangements are made for the funeral of the deceased within five days of the death certification being issued, the Magistrat [of the City of Vienna] shall arrange the funeral (by burial or cremation) at a funeral facility of the City of Vienna. The City of Vienna shall bear the costs of the funeral only in so far as they are not to be met by third parties or covered by the deceased's estate.'

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

12 According to the order for reference, the provisions governing the business of funeral undertaker in Vienna have undergone significant amendments over the past few years.

13 Until 1999, those services were performed by Wiener Bestattung (Vienna Funerals), a component undertaking of the Wiener Stadtwerke (Vienna Public Utilities), which were themselves an undertaking of the City of Vienna within the meaning of Paragraph 71 of the WStV. As such, Wiener Bestattung - like Wiener Stadtwerke - lacked legal personality and formed part of the Magistrat of the City of Vienna. In connection with its activities, Wiener Bestattung had, on several occasions, organised calls for tenders in which Truley, which is a licensed funeral undertaker, had apparently participated successfully.

14 On 17 December 1998, the Municipal Council of the City of Vienna decided to separate the Wiener Stadtwerke from the municipal administration and to create a new company with its own legal personality, Wiener Stadtwerke Holding AG (`WSH'), which is wholly owned by the City of Vienna. That company comprises six operational subsidiaries which include, in particular, Bestattung Wien. According to the documents on the case-file, that company, the entire capital of which is held by WSH, has legal personality. The date on which its activity began was fixed, by order of the Magistrat of the City of Vienna, as being 12 June 1999.

15 Shortly after its creation, Bestattung Wien organised a tendering procedure, published both in the Amtlicher Lieferanzeiger (Official Bulletin of calls for tenders for supply contracts) and the Amstblatt der Stadt Wien (Official Journal of the City of Vienna), for the award of a public contract for the supply of coffin fittings. Truley submitted a tender during that procedure but was informed, by letter of 6 June 2000, that the contract had not been awarded to it on the ground that the price which it had quoted was too high.

16 Taking the view that the tender submitted by it was the only one which complied with the specifications in the call for tenders, Truley brought proceedings for review of the contract award procedure before the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien.

17 In those proceedings, Bestattung Wien claimed that it was no longer subject to the rules in Directive 93/36 and in the WLVergG as it had its own legal personality and was completely independent of the Magistrat of the City of Vienna, while Truley submitted that that directive and the WLVergG remained fully applicable by reason of the close ties which continued to bind that company to the City of Vienna. In that regard, Truley pointed out, inter alia, that all the shares in Bestattung Wien were held by WSH, which itself was wholly owned by the City of Vienna.

18 As it formed the view, in those circumstances, that the solution to the dispute pending before it depended on the interpretation of the concept of `contracting authority' in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36, particularly in light of the judgments in Case C-44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others [1998] ECR I-73 and Case C-360/96 Gemeente Arnhem and Gemeente Rheden v BFI Holding [1998] ECR I-6821, the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien decided to stay proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

`1. Must the term "needs in the general interest" in Article 1(b) of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts be interpreted as meaning that

(a) the definition of needs in the general interest must be derived from the national legal system of the Member State?

(b) the fact that a regional or local authority's obligation is subsidiary is in itself sufficient for the existence of a need in the general interest to be assumed?

2. In interpreting the requirement "meeting needs... not having an industrial or commercial character" laid down in Directive 93/36/EEC, is (a) the existence of significant competition an imperative condition or (b) are the factual or legal circumstances the determinant factors in that respect?

3. Is the requirement laid down in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36/EEC that the management of the body governed by public law must be subject to supervision by the State or a regional or local authority also fulfilled by a mere review as provided for through the Kontrollamt of the City of Vienna?'

The admissibility of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

19 Referring to Case C-186/90 Durighello [1991] ECR I-5773 and Case C-134/95 USSL N_ 47 Di Biella [1997] ECR I-195, in which the Court held, inter alia, that a reference for a preliminary ruling made by a national court is to be rejected where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law sought by that court bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, Bestattung Wien submits that the question whether or not it has the status of an awarding authority is irrelevant to the case in the main proceedings.

20 In its view, it is clear from the actual wording of Paragraph 99 of the WLVergG that the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien is only competent to find, after the award of a contract, that the contract was not awarded to the tenderer who submitted the best tender as a result of an infringement of the provisions of that law and that review proceedings can be brought only if the decision which is alleged to be unlawful was decisive for the outcome of the procurement procedure. In the main proceedings, the tender submitted by Truley was given the second to last place in terms of the prices quoted for coffin fittings, with the result that it has no legal interest in obtaining the remedy it seeks as it was, in any event, not the best bidder within the meaning of Paragraph 99(1) of the WLVergG and, consequently, the contract could never have been awarded to it.

21 Suffice it to point out in this regard that, according to the settled case-law of the Court, in particular the above judgment in Durighello, cited by Bestattung Wien, it is solely for the national courts before which actions are brought, and which must bear the responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the special features of each case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable them to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which they submit to the Court (Durighello, paragraph 8). Consequently, since the questions referred involve the interpretation of Community law, the Court is, in principle, obliged to give a ruling.

22 Moreover, the Court has also consistently held that it may refuse to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of Community law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (see, inter alia, Case C-379/98 PreussenElektra [2001] ECR I-2099, paragraph 39, and Case C-390/99 Canal Satélite Digital [2002] ECR I-607, paragraph 19).

23 In the present case, it is not entirely obvious that the questions referred by the national court fall within one of those situations.

24 First, there are no grounds for arguing that the interpretation of Community law sought bears no relation to the actual facts or the purpose of the main action since the assessment of the lawfulness of the decision on the award of the contract at issue in the main proceedings depends on whether the defendant can be treated as a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36.

25 Second, the national court has furnished the Court with all the material necessary to enable it to give a useful answer to the questions referred.

26 It follows that the reference for a preliminary ruling is admissible.

The first question

27 By its first question, which can be divided into two limbs, the national court essentially raises the question of the scope of the term `needs in the general interest' in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36.

The first limb of the first question

28 By the first limb of its first question, the national court asks whether the term `needs in the general interest' is to be defined by Community law or by the national legal system of each Member State.

Observations submitted to the Court

29 According to Truley and the Austrian Government, the term `needs in the general interest' is a Community law concept which must be assessed independently without reference to the national legal systems of the Member States. In that regard, they rely on, first, the purpose of the Community directives on the coordination of public procurement procedures, which is to introduce competition to previously closed-off national markets and to inform interested parties established in the Community of the bodies which are to be regarded as contracting authorities. Second, they rely on the judgment in BFI Holding, cited above, in which the Court declared that the term `needs in the general interest' must be appraised objectively, without regard to the legal forms of the provisions in which those needs are mentioned.

30 On that basis, Truley submits that, having regard to the principle of legal certainty, it is unacceptable that the same activity may be regarded either as being in the general interest or as not being so, depending on the Member State in which it is exercised, while the Austrian Government claims that the case-law of the Court, in particular Case 327/82 Ekro [1984] ECR 107 and Case C-273/90 Meico-Fell [1991] ECR I-5569, shows that terms of Community law must be interpreted by reference to national concepts only in those - exceptional - cases in which reference is expressly or implicitly made to definitions laid down by the legal systems of the Member States, which is not the case here.

31 Whilst they share the view of Truley and the Austrian Government that the term `needs in the general interest' is a Community-law concept, Bestattung Wien, the French Government and the EFTA Surveillance Authority nevertheless take the view that application of that term to specific cases falls rather within the competence of the Member States, depending on the tasks which those States wish to carry out. They refer in particular in this connection to the purpose of the relevant Community directives, which is to coordinate - but not harmonise - the national rules on the award of public contracts, and to Annex I to Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), which contains a list of the bodies fulfilling the criteria laid down in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36. According to Bestattung Wien, such a list of bodies regarded as being contracting authorities would serve no purpose whatever if the concept of general interest were conceived as being purely a Community-law concept. It is thus for each Member State, when determining the aims of its corporate policy, to state definitively what constitutes the general interest and, in each individual case, the legal and factual situation of the body concerned must be examined in order to assess whether or not there is a need in the general interest.

32 Finally, the Commission takes the view that the term `needs in the general interest' must be defined solely on the basis of national law. It relies in this regard on Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria, cited above, in which the Court based its finding that the Austrian State printing office was established for the purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, on the relevant national provisions and on BFI Holding, in which the Court ruled, on the basis of, in particular, the list set out in Annex I to Directive 93/37, that the removal and treatment of household refuse is one of the services which a Member State may require to be carried out by public authorities or over which it wishes to retain a decisive influence.

The Court's reply

33 First of all, it should be noted that Directive 93/36 does not define the term `needs in the general interest'.

34 The second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of that directive merely states that such needs must not have an industrial or commercial character, while it is clear from an overall reading of that article that meeting needs in the general interest which are not industrial or commercial in character is a necessary, but not sufficient, condition for designating a body as a `body governed by public law' and, therefore, a `contracting authority' within the meaning of Directive 93/36. In order to be covered by that directive, the body must also have legal personality and depend heavily, for its financing, management or supervision, on the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law (see, with respect to the cumulative nature of the criteria laid down, in the same terms, in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) and the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, Mannesmann Anlagenanbau Austria, paragraphs 21 and 38, BFI Holding, paragraph 29, Case C-237/99 Commission v France [2001] ECR I-939, paragraph 40, and Joined Cases C-223/99 and C-260/99 Agorà and Excelsior [2001] ECR I-3605, paragraph 26).

35 According to settled case-law, the need for uniform application of Community law and the principle of equality require that the terms of a provision of Community law which makes no express reference to the law of the Member States for the purpose of determining its meaning and scope must normally be given an autonomous and uniform interpretation throughout the Community; that interpretation must take into account the context of the provision and the purpose of the legislation in question (see, inter alia, Ekro, cited above, paragraph 11, Case C-287/98 Linster and Others [2000] ECR I-6917, paragraph 43, and Case C-357/98 Yiadom [2000] ECR I-9265, paragraph 26).

36 In the present case, it is common ground that the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36 makes no express reference to the law of the Member States, with the result that the abovementioned terms must be given an autonomous and uniform interpretation throughout the Community.

37 That finding is not invalidated by the fact that the third subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36 refers to Annex I to Directive 93/37, which lists the bodies and categories of such bodies governed by public law which, in each Member State, fulfil the criteria laid down in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36.

38 The Court notes, first, that that annex itself contains no definition of the term `needs in the general interest' featuring, in particular, in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36 and in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37.

39 Second, while it is clear from the wording of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36 that the list in Annex I to Directive 93/37 is intended to be as complete as possible and may be revised pursuant to the procedure provided for in Article 35 of Directive 93/37, that list is in no way exhaustive (see, inter alia, BFI Holding, paragraph 50, and Agorà and Excelsior, paragraph 36) as its accuracy varies considerably from one Member State to another.

40 It follows that the term `needs in the general interest' in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36 is a Community-law concept and must be interpreted in the light of the context of that article and the purpose of that directive.

41 The Court has already ruled on several occasions that the purpose of coordinating at Community level the procedures for the award of public contracts is to eliminate barriers to the freedom to provide services and goods and therefore to protect the interests of traders established in a Member State who wish to offer goods or services to contracting authorities established in another Member State (see, in particular, Case C-380/98 University of Cambridge [2000] ECR I-8035, paragraph 16, Case C-237/99 Commission v France, cited above, paragraph 41, Case C-92/00 HI [2002] ECR I-5553, paragraph 43, and Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-0000, paragraph 51).

42 Furthermore, settled case-law also shows that the purpose of the Community directives coordinating procedures for the award of public contracts is to avoid both the risk of preference being given to national tenderers or applicants whenever a contract is awarded by the contracting authorities and the possibility that a body financed or controlled by the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law may choose to be guided by considerations other than economic ones (see, in particular, University of Cambridge, cited above, paragraph 17, Commission v France, cited above, paragraph 42, and Universale-Bau, cited above, paragraph 52).

43 Given the double objective of introducing competition and transparency, the concept of a body governed by public law must be interpreted as having a broad meaning.

44 Accordingly, if a specific body is not listed in Annex I to Directive 93/37, its legal and factual situation must be determined in each individual case in order to assess whether or not it meets a need in the general interest.

45 In light of the foregoing, the answer to the first limb of the first question must be that the term `needs in the general interest' in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36 is an autonomous concept of Community law.

The second limb of the first question

46 By the second limb of its first question, the national court asks essentially whether the activity of funeral undertaker meets a need in the general interest. In that regard, it asks more specifically whether the fact that a regional or local authority is under a statutory obligation to arrange funerals - and, if necessary, to bear the costs of those funerals - where they have not been arranged within a certain period after a death certificate has been issued is sufficient, in itself, to establish a presumption that there is a need in the general interest.

Observations submitted to the Court

47 While, as an extension of their observations on the first limb of the first question, Truley and the Austrian Government argue that an obligation such as that laid down in Paragraph 10(1) of the WLBG is irrelevant to the question whether or not there is a need in the general interest, inasmuch as the decisive criterion for the assessment of that term is, in their view, one of Community and not national law, they nevertheless submit that there is no doubt that funeral services do in fact meet a need in the general interest. In that regard, they rely on Annex I to Directive 93/37, which, in regard to the Federal Republic of Germany, contains an express reference to cemeteries and burial services, and on the judgment in BFI Holding, in which the Court declared that the removal and treatment of household refuse was one of the activities which a Member State may require to be carried out by public authorities or over which it wishes to retain a decisive influence. According to Truley, funeral services are also part of the `hard core' of basic services provided by the State in the public interest.

48 That point of view is partially contested by the defendant in the main proceedings. Although Bestattung Wien, like Truley and the Austrian Government, considers Paragraph 10(1) of the WLBG to be irrelevant to the assessment of the possible existence of a need in the general interest, it none the less contends that, in the present case, that concept covers only burial services in the narrow sense of the term, namely, in its view, the interment and exhumation of bodies, cremation and the management of cemeteries and columbaria. On the other hand, services such as the issuing of death certificates, the placing and printing of death and funeral notices, the exposition of the deceased, the washing, dressing and placing in the coffin of the deceased, the transport of the deceased to his final resting place and the maintenance of graves - all activities which the defendant in the main proceedings classes as funeral services `in the broad sense of the term' - are not among those over which the State intends to retain influence and are therefore not covered by the term `needs in the general interest'. Bestattung Wien submits in particular that, in Austria, the activity of funeral undertaker is not subject to any particular supervision other than the authority conferred on the first ministers of the Länder to impose maximum prices for certain services.

49 Finally, according to the French Government, the Commission and the EFTA Surveillance Authority, a subsidiary legal obligation such as that provided for by Paragraph 10(1) of the WLBG does constitute strong evidence of the existence of a need in the general interest inasmuch as that paragraph provides for both the actual arrangement of funerals by the City of Vienna and the assumption by it of the costs of those funerals, where those are not covered by the deceased's estate.

The Court's reply

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

50 The Court has already held that needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, within the meaning of Article 1(b) of the Community directives coordinating the award of public contracts are generally needs which are satisfied otherwise than by the availability of goods and services in the marketplace and which, for reasons associated with the general interest, the State chooses to provide itself or over which it wishes to retain a decisive influence (see BFI Holding, paragraphs 50 and 51, and Agorà and Excelsior, paragraph 37).

51 It cannot be disputed that the activities of funeral undertakers may indeed be regarded as meeting a need in the general interest.

52 First, such activities are linked to public policy in so far as the State has a clear interest in exercising close control over the issue of certificates such as birth and death certificates.

53 Second, the State may be justified in retaining influence over those activities and in taking measures such as those provided for in Paragraph 10(1) of the WLBG on manifest grounds of hygiene and public health where funerals have not been arranged within a certain period after the death certificate has been issued. The very existence of such a provision therefore constitutes evidence that the activities in question meet a need in the general interest.

54 In that context, it is, inter alia, appropriate to reject the interpretation advocated by the defendant in the main proceedings that, in contrast to funeral services `in the broad sense of the term' such as the placing of death notices, the placing of the deceased in the coffin or the transport of the deceased, only the burial or cremation of the body and the management of cemeteries and columbaria - classified as funeral services `in the narrow sense of the term' - are covered by the concept of needs in the general interest. Such a distinction is artificial as all or most of those services are normally provided by the same undertaking or public authority.

55 Furthermore, as the Advocate General has pointed out in paragraph 68 of his Opinion, funeral services are governed by a single law of the Land of Vienna, namely the WLBG. Paragraph 33(4) of that law expressly provides that `the employees of the legal entity or the employees of the undertaking appointed by the legal entity shall carry out the funeral ceremony... , transport the body or ashes to the grave ... They shall also open and close all graves, lower the body or ashes and carry out exhumations...'.

56 In any event, even if funeral services `in the narrow sense of the term' constitute only a relatively unimportant part of the services provided by a funeral undertaker, that fact is irrelevant since that undertaking continues to meet needs in the general interest. According to settled case-law, the status of a body governed by public law is not dependent on the relative importance, within its business as a whole, of the meeting of needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character (see Mannesmann Anlagenanbau Austria, paragraphs 25, 26 and 31, and BFI Holding, paragraphs 55 and 56).

57 In light of the foregoing, the answer to the second limb of the first question must therefore be that the activities of funeral undertakers may meet a need in the general interest. The fact that a regional or local authority is legally obliged to arrange funerals - and, where necessary, to bear the costs of those funerals - where they have not been arranged within a certain period after a death certificate has been issued constitutes evidence that there is such a need in the general interest.

58 By its second question, the national court asks whether the activity of funeral undertaker meets a need in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36. Pointing out in this regard that more than 500 undertakings are active in the funeral-services sector in Austria but that, according to the applicant in the main proceedings, there is no competition on the local market in Vienna, the national court asks essentially whether the existence of significant competition is itself sufficient to justify the conclusion that there is no need in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, or whether account must be taken of all the relevant legal and factual circumstances in each individual case.

59 In that regard, it is sufficient to observe that, faced with a similar question, the Court held, in paragraph 47 of BFI Holding, that the absence of competition is not a condition which must necessarily be taken into account in defining a body governed by public law. The requirement that there should be no private undertakings capable of meeting the needs for which the body financed by the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law was set up would be liable to render meaningless the term `body governed by public law' used in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36 (see, to that effect, BFI Holding, paragraph 44).

60 However, the Court stated, in paragraphs 48 and 49 of that judgment, that the existence of competition is not entirely irrelevant to the question whether a need in the general interest is other than industrial or commercial. The existence of significant competition, and in particular the fact that the entity concerned is faced with competition in the marketplace, may be indicative of the absence of a need in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character.

61 It follows from the same wording used in the judgment in BFI Holding that, although not entirely irrelevant, the existence of significant competition does not, of itself, permit the conclusion that there is no need in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character.

62 In the present case, it is common ground that the activity of funeral undertaker is not reserved in Austria to specific legal persons and that the exercise of that activity is not, in principle, subject to any territorial restriction.

63 In contrast, it is clear from both the order for reference and the observations submitted to the Court that the exercise of that activity is subject to the grant of prior authorisation, which is dependent on the existence of a need in the general interest and on the provisions adopted by the municipalities in relation to funerals, and that the First Minister of the Land has competence to fix maximum prices for funeral services either for the entire Land or by administrative unit or municipality.

64 Furthermore, under Paragraph 10(1) of the WLBG, the City of Vienna is obliged to bear the costs of funerals where they have not been arranged by third parties or are not covered by the estate of the deceased.

65 That being so, the national court must, for the purpose of determining the exact nature of the needs met by Bestattung Wien, analyse all the legal and factual circumstances governing the activity of that company, as described in paragraphs 62 to 64 of the present judgment, the conditions of the separation from Wiener Stadtwerke and the transfer of the activities of Wiener Bestattung to Bestattung Wien and the terms of the exclusivity agreement which, according to the applicant in the main proceedings, links Bestattung Wien to the City of Vienna.

66 In light of the foregoing, the answer to the second question must be that the existence of significant competition does not, of itself, allow the conclusion to be drawn that there is no need in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character. The national court must assess whether or not there is such a need, taking account of all the relevant legal and factual circumstances, such as those prevailing at the time of establishment of the body concerned and the conditions under which it exercises its activity.

The third question

67 Finally, by its third question, the national court seeks clarification of the scope of the criterion, in the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36, of supervision of the management of the body concerned by the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law. It wishes to know, more specifically, whether that criterion is satisfied in the case of a mere review of the management of the body in question.

68 In that regard, suffice it to note that, according to the settled case-law of the Court (see, inter alia, University of Cambridge, paragraph 20, and Commission v France, paragraph 44), each of the alternative conditions set out in the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 reflects the close dependency of a body on the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law.

69 More specifically, as regards the criterion of management supervision, the Court has held that that supervision must give rise to dependence on the public authorities equivalent to that which exists where one of the other alternative criteria is fulfilled, namely where the body in question is financed, for the most part, by the public authorities or where the latter appoint more than half of the members of its administrative, managerial or supervisory organs, enabling the public authorities to influence their decisions in relation to public contracts (see Commission v France, paragraphs 48 and 49).

70 In the light of that case-law, the criterion of managerial supervision cannot be regarded as being satisfied in the case of mere review since, by definition, such supervision does not enable the public authorities to influence the decisions of the body in question in relation to public contracts.

71 However, as the Advocate General has pointed out in paragraphs 109 to 114 of his Opinion, the evidence supplied by the national court suggests that, in the present case, the supervision of Bestattung Wien's activities by the City of Vienna largely exceeds that of a mere review.

72 First, Bestattung Wien is, pursuant to Paragraph 73 of the WStV, subject to direct supervision by the City of Vienna as a result of its ownership by a company, WSH, which is wholly owned by that municipality.

73 Second, it is also apparent from the order for reference that Paragraph 10.3 of the shareholders' agreement governing Bestattung Wien expressly provides that the Kontrollamt is authorised to examine not only the annual accounts of the company but also its `conduct from the point of view of proper accounting, regularity, economy, efficiency and expediency'. That paragraph of the shareholders' agreement governing Bestattung Wien also authorises the Kontrollamt to inspect the company's business premises and facilities and to report the results of those inspections to the competent bodies and to the company shareholders and the City of Vienna. Such powers therefore enable the Kontrollamt actively to control the management of that company.

74 In light of the foregoing, the answer to the third question must be that a mere review does not satisfy the criterion of management supervision in the third indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/36. That criterion is, however, satisfied where the public authorities supervise not only the annual accounts of the body concerned but also its conduct from the point of view of proper accounting, regularity, economy, efficiency and expediency and where those public authorities are authorised to inspect the business premises and facilities of that body and to report the results of those inspections to a regional authority which holds, through another company, all the shares in the body in question.

Order

1 By order of 2 August 2000, received at the Court on 27 September 2000, the Oberlandesgericht (Higher Regional Court) Düsseldorf referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC a question on the interpretation of Articles 1 and 8 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1).

2 That question was raised in proceedings brought by Buchhändler-Vereinigung GmbH (Buchhändler-Vereinigung) against Saur Verlag GmbH & Co. KG (Saur Verlag) and the Deutsche Bibliothek (German Library) concerning the intention of the Deutsche Bibliothek to conclude a public service concession contract for the reproduction and distribution of the German National Bibliography in printed form and on CD-Rom.

The Community rules

3 The eighth recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50 states:

... the provision of services is covered by this directive only in so far as it is based on contracts;... the provision of services on other bases, such as law or regulations, or employment contracts, is not covered.

4 Article 1 of Directive 92/50 states:

For the purposes of this directive:

(a) public service contracts shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority, to the exclusion of:

....

5 Article 8 of the directive provides:

Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex I A shall be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III to VI.

6 Category 15 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50 covers publishing and printing services on a fee or contract basis.

The main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

7 It is apparent from the order for reference that, in accordance with the Gesetz über die Deutsche Bibliothek (German Library Act), the tasks of the Deutsche Bibliothek, a public-law institution having legal capacity which is directly accountable to the federal authority, include the establishment of the German National Bibliography, in other words, compilation of an inventory of German literature which is updated annually. It must also reproduce and market the bibliographical indexes which it has to compile.

8 On 3 March 2000, the Deutsche Bibliothek, by a restricted procedure, invited tenders for a contract for the reproduction and distribution of the German National Bibliography in printed form and on CD-Rom. The main contractual obligations provided for in that invitation were that the Deutsche Bibliothek was to compile the bibliographical indexes and make these available to the chosen contractor, which was to have the exclusive right to reproduce and distribute the German National Bibliography in printed form and as a CD-Rom. The invitation stipulated that the contractor was to reproduce and distribute the bibliography on its own account and to pay the Deutsche Bibliothek a fee on the basis of the publishing proceeds, for each copy sold. Moreover, the Deutsche Bibliothek was to have rights of supervision and codetermination with respect to the reproduction and distribution of the bibliography.

9 The Deutsche Bibliothek intended to award the contract to Buchhändler-Vereinigung. Saur Verlag objected to that by means of an application pursuant to the Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen (Act Prohibiting Restraints of Competition; the GWB) in which it complained of the infringement of certain provisions governing awards of public contracts.

10 By order of 26 May 2000, the Second Federal Procurement Chamber ruled on the application of Saur Verlag. It prohibited the Deutsche Bibliothek from awarding the contract to Buchhändler-Vereinigung on the basis of its previous assessment and ordered it to re-assess the bids of the two tenderers, taking into account the findings of that chamber, and to inform the tenderers which of them was to receive the contract at the latest 10 working days before awarding it.

11 Buchhändler-Vereinigung lodged an appeal against that order with the court making the present reference, claiming that the application of Saur Verlag was inadmissible on the ground that the contract in question is not covered by the public procurement rules but is a service concession.

12 In its order for reference, the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf states that the answer to the question whether a publishing contract of the kind at issue in the main proceedings is a contract governed by German law on the award of public contracts, namely Paragraphs 97 to 129 of the GWB, is primarily determined by whether such a contract falls within the scope of Directive 92/50.

13 The referring court finds that the contract constitutes a public service concession. It bases this finding on the fact that the contract involves the transfer of the right to exploit a particular service to the private undertaking, which bears the risk associated with that activity. It adds that the service provided by the undertaking is not paid for by the Deutsche Bibliothek by way of a fixed amount but that, on the contrary, a fee must be paid to the Deutsche Bibliothek by the undertaking itself. Furthermore, according to the referring court, the service tendered is performed in the public interest since the activity of the Deutsche Bibliothek, by reason of its nature, its purpose and the rules to which it is subject, falls within the responsibility of the State and since it is assigned to a private contractor subject to a right of supervision and codetermination of the Deutsche Bibliothek.

14 The referring court therefore concludes that the appeal pending before it can be granted only if service concessions fall within the scope of Directive 92/50. The court indicates that it is aware of the fact that a preliminary ruling concerning that question was sought from the Court of Justice in the proceedings which gave rise to the judgment of 7 December 2000 in Case C-324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress [2000] ECR I-10745, which was still pending before the Court at the time of the order for reference.

15 However, having regard to Article 8 of Directive 92/50 in conjunction with Category 15 of Annex I A to Directive 92/50, which refers to publishing and printing services on a fee or contract basis, the referring court is uncertain whether public service concessions, even if in general they do not fall within the scope of Directive 92/50, are in any event subject to procurement law when they have as their object publishing and printing.

16 In those circumstances, the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf decided to stay proceedings and refer to the Court the following question for a preliminary ruling:

Does Directive [92/50, as amended by Directive 97/52] also apply to a contract:

(a) by which the contracting authority confers on the contractor the exclusive publishing rights (right of reproduction and distribution) in a bibliography compiled by it - in this case the German National Bibliography,

(b) which requires the contractor to reproduce and market the bibliography on his own account and to pay the contracting authority an appropriate fee on the basis of the publishing proceeds for each copy sold, and

(c) in which the contracting authority reserves rights of supervision and codetermination with regard to the reproduction and distribution of the bibliography?

Findings of the Court

17 By its question, the referring court essentially asks whether a concession contract for public

publishing services is excluded from the scope of Directive 92/50 even though, by reason of its specific object, it is covered by Annex I A to that directive to which Article 8 thereof refers.

18 Since it is considered that the answer to the question referred for a preliminary ruling could be clearly deduced from its case-law, the Court of Justice, in accordance with Article 104(3) of its Rules of Procedure, informed the referring court that it proposed to give its decision by reasoned order and invited the interested parties referred to in Article 20 of the EC Statute of the Court of Justice to submit any observations in that regard.

19 In the observations which they submitted under Article 104(3) of the Rules of Procedure, Buchhändler-Vereinigung, the Deutsche Bibliothek and the Commission did not object to the Court's intention to give its decision by reasoned order.

20 First of all, it should be stated, as the referring court did, that a contract which has as its object the services referred to in paragraph 8 of this order may be covered by Directive 92/50.

21 Secondly, in paragraphs 39 and 40 of the judgment in Telaustria and Telefonadress, cited above, which concerned a concession contract for the production and publication of telephone directories, the Court stated first of all that the contract had as its specific object services covered by various categories of Annex XVI A to Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84) and that it was therefore covered by that directive.

22 In order to determine whether such a contract is covered by the definition of contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing in Article 1(4) of Directive 93/38, the Court then retraced the history of the directives governing public service contracts, including Directive 92/50.

23 In particular, in paragraph 46 of the judgment in Telaustria and Telefonadress, the Court pointed out that, both in its proposal 91/C 23/01 of 13 December 1990 for a Council Directive relating to the coordination of procedures on the award of public service contracts (OJ 1991 C 23, p. 1) and in its amended proposal 91/C 250/05 of 28 August 1991 for a Council Directive relating to the coordination of procedures on the award of public service contracts (OJ 1991 C 250, p. 4), which resulted in the adoption of Directive 92/50 which covers public service contracts in general, the Commission had expressly proposed that public service concessions be included within the scope of that directive.

24 In paragraph 47 of the judgment in Telaustria and Telefonadress, the Court pointed out, first, that, since that inclusion was justified by the intention to ensure coherent award procedures, the Commission had stated, in the 10th recital in the preamble to the proposal of 13 December 1990, that public service concessions should be covered by this directive in the same way as Directive 71/305/EEC applies to public works concessions. Second, the Court explained that, although the reference to Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682) was withdrawn from the 10th recital in the preamble to the proposal of 28 August 1991, that proposal none the less expressly maintained the purpose of ensuring coherent award procedures in that recital.

25 However, as the Court pointed out in paragraph 48 of the judgment in Telaustria and Telefonadress, during the legislative process the Council eliminated all references to public service concessions, in particular because of the differences between the Member States as regards the delegation of the management of public services and modes of delegation, which could have created a situation of very great imbalance in the opening-up of the public concession contracts (see paragraph 6 of document No 4444/92 ADD 1 of 25 February 1992, entitled Statement of reasons of the Council and annexed to the common position of the same date).

26 Finally, in the light of those considerations, which it then compared to the evolution of the scope of the directives on public works contracts, the Court found, in paragraph 57 of the judgment in Telaustria and Telefonadress, that public service concession contracts do not come within the scope of Directive 93/38 and are therefore not included in the concept of contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing appearing in Article 1(4) of that directive.

27 The Court concluded therefrom, in the second indent of paragraph 58 of the judgment in Telaustria and Telefonadress, that, although it is covered by Directive 93/38, a contract such as the one at issue in that case, the consideration for which consists in the right of the successful tenderer to exploit for payment his own service, is excluded from the scope of that directive under Community law as it stands at present.

28 Although the judgment in Telaustria and Telefonadress was delivered in respect of a contract which had as its object services relating to one of the specific sectors governed by Directive 93/38, it can clearly be deduced from that judgment that public service concessions are excluded not only from the scope of Directive 93/38 but also from the scope of Directive 92/50 which is intended to apply to services in general.

29 Having regard both to the fact that there is no specific provision relating to public service concessions in Directive 92/50 and to the history of that directive's adoption, as it is related by the Court in paragraphs 46, 47 and 48 of the judgment in Telaustria and Telefonadress, it must be concluded that the Community legislature knowingly excluded such concessions from the scope of that directive. Therefore, the interpretation of the concept, appearing in Article 1(4) of Directive 93/38, of contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing which was adopted in that judgment applies equally to the identical concept appearing in Article 1 of Directive 92/50.

30 The answer to the referring court's question must therefore be that a concession contract for public publishing services is excluded, under Community law as it stands at present, from the scope of Directive 92/50 even though, by reason of its specific object, it is covered by Annex I A to that directive to which Article 8 thereof refers.

Costs

31 The costs incurred by the French, Italian, Netherlands and Austrian Governments and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Second Chamber),

ruling on the question referred to it by the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf by order of 2 August 2000, hereby orders:

A concession contract for public publishing services is excluded, under Community law as it stands at present, from the scope of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997, even though, by reason of its specific object, it is covered by Annex I A to that directive to which Article 8 thereof refers.

(Sixth Chamber),

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia by order of 23 June 2000, hereby rules:

Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, must be interpreted as imposing on the competent national courts, where it is established that, by its conduct, a contracting authority has rendered impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of the rights conferred by the Community legal order on a national of the Union who has been harmed by a decision of that contracting authority, an obligation to allow as admissible pleas in law alleging that the notice of invitation to tender is incompatible with Community law, which are put forward in support of an application for review of that decision, by availing itself, where appropriate, of the possibility afforded by national law of disapplying national rules on limitation periods, under which, when the period prescribed for bringing proceedings for review of the notice of invitation to tender has expired, it is no longer possible to plead such incompatibility.

1 By order of 23 June 2000, received at the Court on 4 September 2000, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court, Lombardy) referred for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC two questions on the interpretation of Article 22 of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and Article 6(2) EU.

2 Those questions were raised in proceedings between Santex SpA (`Santex') and Unità Socio Sanitaria Locale n. 42 di Pavia (`USL') concerning a tendering procedure relating to a supply contract.

The legal context

The Community legislation

3 Article 1(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1, hereinafter `Directive 89/665'), provides:

`The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC, and 92/50/EEC... , decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.'

4 Under Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665:

`The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

...

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure'.

5 Directive 93/36 repealed Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1). The references made by Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, in particular, to the directive thereby repealed must be construed as references to Directive 93/36 by virtue of the second paragraph of Article 33 of the latter.

6 Article 22 of Directive 93/36 provides:

`1. Evidence of the supplier's financial and economic standing may, as a general rule, be furnished by one or more of the following references:

...

(c) a statement of the supplier's overall turnover and its turnover in respect of the products to which the contract relates for the three previous financial years.

2. The contracting authorities shall specify in the notice or in the invitation to tender which reference or references mentioned in paragraph 1 they have chosen and which references other than those mentioned under paragraph 1 are to be produced.

3. If, for any valid reason, the supplier is unable to provide the references requested by the contracting authority, he may prove his economic and financial standing by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate.'

The national legislation

7 Article 22 of Directive 93/36 was transposed into Italian law by Article 13 of Legislative Decree No 358 of 24 July 1992 entitled `Testo unico delle disposizioni in materia di appalti pubblici di forniture, in attazione delle direttive 77/62/CEE, 80/767/CEE e 88/295/CEE' (Consolidated provisions relating to public supply contracts, implementing Directives 77/62/EEC, 80/767/EEC and 88/295/EEC, GURI No 188 of 11 August 1992, supplemento ordinario No 104, p. 5, hereinafter `Legislative Decree No 358/1992'). The latter article provides:

`1. Evidence of the competing undertakings' financial and economic standing may be furnished by one of the following documents:

(c) a statement of the undertaking's overall turnover and the turnover in respect of the products to which the contract relates for the three previous financial years.

2. The contracting authorities shall specify in the notice or in the invitation to tender which of the documents mentioned in paragraph 1 must be produced and any references which are to be produced. ...

3. If, for any valid reason, the supplier is unable to provide the references requested, he may prove his economic and financial standing by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate.'

8 Article 36(1) of Royal Decree No 1054 of 26 June 1924 approving the `Testo unico delle leggi sul Consiglio di Stato' (Consolidated laws on the Council of State, GURI No 158 of 7 July 1924, hereinafter `Royal Decree No 1054/1924'), the scope of which was extended to include the administrative courts by Article 19 of Law No 1034 of 6 December 1971 relating to the `Istituzione dei tribunali amministrative regionali' (Establishment of the Regional Administrative Courts, GURI No 314 of 13 December 1971, p. 7891), provides:

`Except where time-limits are prescribed by specific laws relating to applications for review, the time-limit for submitting an application for review to the Consiglio di Stato in its judicial capacity shall be 60 days from the date on which the administrative decision was notified in the form and manner laid down by regulation or from the date on which it is apparent that the person concerned became fully aware of it...'

9 Article 5 of Legge no 2248 sul contenzioso amministrativo (Law No 2248 of 20 March 1865 on administrative proceedings, hereinafter `Law No 2248/1865'), provides:

`The judicial authorities shall apply general and local administrative acts and regulations in so far as they are in conformity with primary legislation.'

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

10 The order for reference shows that, on 23 October 1996, USL published in the Official Journal of the European Communities a notice of invitation to tender for the direct supply to people's homes of absorbent incontinence products, for an amount estimated at ITL 1 067 372 000 per year.

11 That notice contained a clause according to which the only undertakings which would be eligible to tender were those which had achieved `over the last three financial years, in respect of an identical service to that forming the subject-matter of the invitation to tender, [an] overall turnover of at least three times the amount of the contract in question' (hereinafter `the disputed clause').

12 By letter of 25 November 1996, Santex informed the contracting authority that it considered that that clause constituted an unlawful restriction on competition. It stated that, in view of the fact that that type of service had only been provided by local health authorities very recently, the application of that clause would create an unfair advantage in favour of the undertaking which had obtained the contract at the time of the previous tendering procedure and would exclude many candidates, including itself, even though it had, over the previous year, achieved a turnover equal to twice the annual estimated amount of the contract.

13 In view of those comments, USL postponed the examination of the tenders. It requested the tenderers to send it further documents, stating that the disputed clause could be interpreted as referring to the undertakings' total turnover. The turnover relating to supplies of products identical to those forming the subject-matter of the contract in question would be taken into account, not as a condition of eligibility to tender, but as one of the criteria for assessing the quality of the tenders.

14 Sca Mölnlycke SpA (hereinafter `Mölnlycke'), which had obtained the contract for the supply of identical products for the previous period, objected to that interpretation. It sent USL a letter calling for strict compliance with the disputed clause.

15 By letter of 24 January 1997, USL, implicitly upholding that objection by Mölnlycke, again requested the tenderers to send it information on the turnover which they had achieved in respect of supplies of products identical to those forming the subject-matter of the contract in question, together with a list of the health institutions to which those products had been supplied.

16 On 20 February 1997, USL adopted a decision excluding from the tendering procedure all companies which did not satisfy the economic condition laid down by the disputed clause, including Santex (hereinafter `the exclusion decision'). The contract was awarded to Mölnlycke by decision of 8 April 1997 (hereinafter `the award decision').

17 Taking the view that, if it had been allowed to tender, it would have been awarded the contract, Santex brought before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia an action for the annulment of, in particular, the exclusion decision, as well as the award decision and the notice of invitation to tender, on grounds of infringement of the law and misuse of powers. It also sought, by way of interim relief, suspension of the application of the acts thereby contested.

18 Both USL and Mölnlycke, which intervened in the main proceedings, pleaded that the action for annulment directed against the notice of invitation to tender was out of time. Only that notice had caused damage directly to Santex by preventing it from participating in the tendering procedure.

19 By interim order of 29 May 1997, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia suspended application of the contested acts. It held that, even though the action for annulment of the notice of invitation to tender was to be regarded as out of time, application of the disputed clause should nevertheless be barred on the ground of a breach of the principles of Community competition law.

20 By order of 29 August 1997, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) (Italy) set aside that order of the referring court.

21 The interim proceedings having been concluded, USL entered into a contract with Mölnlycke.

22 The Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia, to which the Consiglio di Stato remitted the case for adjudication on the substance, states in its order for reference that it is of the opinion that the disputed clause limits the right of access to a tendering procedure in breach of the provisions of Article 22 of Directive 93/36, which are reproduced verbatim in Article 13 of Legislative Decree No 358/1992.

23 In particular, the referring court considers that the clause in question is contrary to the principles of proportionality and non-discrimination in so far as it goes beyond what is necessary in order to verify the economic and financial soundness of the tenderers. It thus grants an unfair advantage to undertakings which hold a dominant position on the market, to the detriment of those which are able to demonstrate their reliability by other means.

24 However, that court states that it is required to rule first on the plea of inadmissibility raised by USL and Mölnlycke. In that regard, it observes that, if it were accepted that the disputed clause prevented Santex from participating in the procedure at the stage of the notice of invitation to tender, the conclusion would have to be that the clause in question should have been challenged within 60 days from the date on which Santex became aware of it, in accordance with Article 36 of Royal Decree No 1054/1924.

25 The referring court argues that, taking as its basis Article 5 of Law No 2248/1865, the Consiglio di Stato held, in general terms, that an administrative court may, in the same way as an ordinary court, disapply a provision of a regulation which is contrary to a higher-ranking provision and affects an individual right.

26 However, it is clear, according to the referring court, from the settled case-law of the Consiglio di Stato concerning public contracts that acts which have the effect of directly infringing the right to participate in an invitation to tender must be challenged within the ordinary limitation period of 60 days if such a challenge is not to be out of time, and that, when that period has expired, it is no longer possible to disapply notices of invitations to tender or their clauses.

27 The referring court is of the opinion that the principle laid down in Article 5 of Law No 2248/1865 should also apply to clauses in a public-contract notice which are contrary to Community law. It takes the view that, in order to ensure the effectiveness of the judicial protection of rights conferred by the Community legal order, it must be able to disapply the disputed clause regardless of whether national procedural rules have been complied with.

28 According to the referring court, the circumstances of the case in the main proceedings seem such as to warrant refusal to apply the disputed clause, in accordance with the approach described in the previous paragraph. On the one hand, it points out that USL led Santex to believe that the disputed clause would be interpreted restrictively or reformulated in the course of the tendering procedure. USL therefore created a situation of uncertainty prejudicial to the bringing of an action in time and thus made it excessively difficult, if not impossible, to apply Community law to the procedure for the award of the supply contract at issue in the main proceedings.

29 On the other hand, that court argues that a finding that the acts contested in the main proceedings are unlawful would serve the administration's interest, which is in opening the invitation to tender to as wide a participation as possible.

30 The Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia also considers it relevant to examine these issues in the light of the judicial protection of fundamental rights afforded by Articles 6 and 13 of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms.

31 In the light of all those considerations, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia decided to stay proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

`1. May Article 22 of Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 be interpreted as meaning that the competent national courts are required to protect citizens of the Union harmed by acts adopted in breach of Community law by resorting, in particular, to disapplication as provided for in Article 5 of the Italian law of 20 March 1865 with respect to clauses of an invitation to tender which are contrary to Community law but which were not challenged within the short limitation period laid down by national procedural law in order to apply Community law of their own motion whenever it is found, first, that the application of Community law has been seriously impeded or in any event rendered difficult and, second, that there is a public interest, of Community or national origin, which justifies such application?

2. Does Article 6(2) EU which, by providing for respect of the fundamental rights safeguarded by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, has adopted the principle of effective judicial protection enshrined in Articles 6 and 13 of that Convention, lead to the same conclusion?'

The first question

Observations submitted to the Court

32 The Italian Government argues that it is the principle of legal certainty which justifies the barring of challenges to a notice of invitation to tender where more than 60 days have elapsed since its publication. Otherwise the legitimate expectations of competitors convinced of the lawfulness of the tendering procedure would be infringed.

33 Referring also to the case-law of the Court, according to which, in the absence of Community rules, it is for the law of each Member State to lay down the detailed procedural rules governing proceedings before the courts to safeguard rights which individuals derive from provisions of Community law which have direct effect, the Italian Government argues that the requirements laid down by that case-law are fulfilled by the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings. It states, in particular, that there is no discrimination under Italian law, since any infringement of either national or Community law by an administrative act can result in the annulment of that act, and that there is nothing to prevent effective application of Community law.

34 The Italian Government also submits that the effect of allowing national courts to disapply national procedural rules whenever an unlawful act is challenged for being in breach of Community law would be to produce unjustified variations in the protection of individuals' rights depending on whether those rights derived from Community law or domestic law.

35 The French Government submits that a national court is not required to determine of its own motion whether a domestic legal act is compatible with a provision of Community law where that act has not been challenged within the time-limit laid down by the national procedural rules.

36 The rules on limitation periods at issue in the main proceedings are rules of public policy which cannot be disregarded by the parties or by the national court. In particular, the limitation period of 60 days is intended to implement the principle of legal certainty by regulating and limiting in time the right to challenge the clauses of an invitation to tender. That period cannot be regarded as rendering the exercise of the rights conferred by the Community legal order virtually impossible or excessively difficult.

37 According to the French Government, only where the contracting authority has, by its conduct, contributed to the non-compliance with the limitation period, is it possible to envisage allowing the party concerned, in addition to the possibility of obtaining compensation for the damage suffered, the right to bring proceedings after the expiry of that period. However, it contends that, in the circumstances of the case in the main proceedings, Santex could not disregard the need to protect itself against any eventuality by bringing, within the limitation period, proceedings for review of the notice of invitation to tender at issue in the main proceedings while continuing its discussions with the contracting authority.

38 The Austrian Government submits that, by its first question, the referring court is seeking to ascertain whether the provisions of Community law concerning public contracts preclude the application of rules under domestic law governing limitation periods. It infers from this that reference should be made to Directive 89/665.

39 In view of the fact that that directive does not contain any provision making the bringing of an action in connection with a procedure for the award of public contracts subject to a limitation period, the Member States are entitled to regulate this matter, on the twofold condition that the objectives of that directive are not undermined and that the principles of effectiveness and equal treatment under the EC Treaty are observed.

40 The Austrian Government adds that the national provisions at issue in the main proceedings have the effect not only of speeding up the tendering procedure, but also of reducing the likelihood of vexatious actions, while at the same time fostering the protection of the rights of all tenderers. Those provisions do not in any way infringe the principles of effectiveness and equality. Consequently, Directive 89/665 does not preclude their application.

41 The Commission likewise maintains that, since the main proceedings relate to a public contract, the first question should be examined in the light of Directive 89/665.

42 It observes in that regard that the directive in question provides for an obligation for Member States to ensure that decisions taken by the contracting authority can be reviewed effectively and rapidly, enabling unlawful decisions to be set aside regardless of whether an earlier decision has been challenged within the time-limit laid down. Both a decision excluding an applicant from an invitation to tender and a decision to award a contract constitute decisions taken by the contracting authority for the purposes of that directive.

Findings of the Court

43 As a preliminary point, it should be observed that, as may be seen from paragraphs 22 and 23 of this judgment, the referring court considers it to have been established that the disputed clause is incompatible with both Article 22 of Directive 93/36 and Article 13 of Legislative Decree No 358/1992.

44 However, as that court points out in its order for reference, it cannot declare the action in the main proceedings admissible since it is applying national procedural rules under which, once the period prescribed for bringing an application for review of a notice of invitation to tender has expired, all pleas in law alleging that that notice is unlawful are also inadmissible for the purpose of challenging another decision of the contracting authority.

45 In addition, the order for reference shows that the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia considers that the conduct of the contracting authority in the case in the main proceedings rendered impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of the rights conferred by Community law on the tenderer harmed by the disputed clause.

46 It is therefore clear that the referring court is seeking guidance as to whether, in those circumstances, it is required, under Community law, to disapply the national rules on limitation periods in order to declare admissible the plea alleging that the disputed clause is in breach of Community law, which is put forward in support of the action brought against decisions which the contracting authority subsequently adopted on the basis of that clause.

47 It must be pointed out in this regard that the detailed rules for the judicial review of decisions adopted in connection with procedures for the award of public contracts are not covered by Directive 93/36, but only by Directive 89/665. The latter directive lays down the minimum conditions to be satisfied by the review procedures established in the national legal systems, so as to ensure compliance with the requirements of Community law concerning public contracts.

48 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the first question must be construed as asking, in essence, whether Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as imposing on the competent national courts, where it is established that, by its conduct, a contracting authority has rendered impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of the rights conferred by Community law on a national of the Union who has been harmed by a decision of that contracting authority, an obligation to allow as admissible pleas in law alleging that the notice of invitation to tender is incompatible with Community law, which are put forward in support of an application for review of that decision, by making use, where appropriate, of the possibility provided for by national law of disapplying national rules on limitation periods, under which, when the period prescribed for bringing applications for review of the notice of invitation to tender has expired, it is no longer possible to plead such incompatibility.

49 In order to answer the question thus reformulated, it must be recalled that the Court has already had occasion to rule in general terms on the compatibility with Directive 89/665 of national rules establishing limitation periods in connection with applications for review of contracting authorities' decisions covered by that directive.

50 In paragraph 79 of its judgment in Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others v Entsorgungsbetriebe Simmering [2002] ECR I-0000, the Court held that Directive 89/665 does not preclude national legislation which provides that any application for review of a contracting authority's decision must be commenced within a time-limit laid down to that effect and that any irregularity in the award procedure relied upon in support of such application must be raised within the same period, if it is not to be out of time, with the result that, when that period has passed, it is no longer possible to challenge such a decision or to raise such an irregularity, provided that the time-limit in question is reasonable.

51 In particular, the Court noted that, whilst it is for the internal legal order of each Member State to establish time-limits in respect of the remedies intended to protect rights conferred by Community law on candidates and tenderers harmed by decisions of contracting authorities, those time-limits must not compromise the effectiveness of Directive 89/665, which seeks to guarantee that unlawful decisions of contracting authorities can be subjected to effective review which is as swift as possible (Universale-Bau, paragraphs 71, 72 and 74).

52 It was in those circumstances that the Court held that the setting of reasonable limitation periods for bringing proceedings satisfies, in principle, the requirement of effectiveness under Directive 89/665, since it is an application of the fundamental principle of legal certainty (Universale-Bau, paragraph 76).

53 It must therefore be established whether the limitation period at issue in the main proceedings satisfies the requirements of Directive 89/665, as identified by the case-law cited in paragraphs 50 to 52 of this judgment.

54 In that regard, it must be observed, first, that the limitation period of 60 days which applies to public contracts under Article 36(1) of Royal Decree No 1054/1924, as interpreted by the Consiglio di Stato, appears reasonable having regard both to the purpose of Directive 89/665 and to the principle of legal certainty.

55 Second, it must be held that such a period, which runs from the date of notification of the act or the date on which it is apparent that the party concerned became fully aware of it, is also in accordance with the principle of effectiveness since it is not in itself likely to render virtually impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of any rights which the party concerned derives from Community law.

56 However, for the purpose of applying the principle of effectiveness, each case which raises the question whether a national procedural provision renders application of Community law impossible or excessively difficult must be analysed by reference, in particular, to the role of that provision in the procedure, its progress and its special features, viewed as a whole (see Case C-312/93 Peterbroeck and Others v Belgian State [1995] ECR I-4599, paragraph 14).

57 Consequently, although a limitation period such as that at issue in the main proceedings is not in itself contrary to the principle of effectiveness, the possibility that, in the context of the particular circumstances of the case before the referring court, the application of that time-limit may entail a breach of that principle cannot be excluded.

58 From that point of view, it is necessary to take into consideration the circumstance that, in this particular case, although the disputed clause was brought to the notice of the parties concerned at the time of the publication of the notice of invitation to tender, the contracting authority created, by its conduct, a state of uncertainty as to the interpretation to be given to that clause and that that uncertainty was removed only by the adoption of the exclusion decision.

59 As is apparent from the information provided by the referring court, USL indicated initially that it would take account of the reservations expressed by Santex and that it would not apply the economic condition laid down by the disputed clause at the tender admission stage. It was only by means of the exclusion decision, which eliminated from the tendering procedure all tenderers who did not satisfy that condition, that the contracting authority stated its definitive position regarding the interpretation of the disputed clause.

60 It must therefore be acknowledged that, in the circumstances of the case in the main proceedings, it was only when it was informed of the exclusion decision that the tenderer harmed was able to find out what interpretation the contracting authority actually placed upon that clause of the notice of invitation to tender. In view of the fact that, at that stage, the period prescribed for bringing proceedings for review of that notice had already expired, that tenderer was deprived, under the rules on limitation periods, of any opportunity to plead before a court, in proceedings for review of the subsequent decisions which caused it harm, the incompatibility of that interpretation with Community law.

61 In the circumstances of the case in the main proceedings, the changing conduct of the contracting authority may be considered, in view of a limitation period, to have rendered excessively difficult the exercise by the harmed tenderer of the rights conferred on him by Community law.

62 Since the referring court alone has jurisdiction to interpret and apply the national legislation, it falls to it, in circumstances such as those of the case in the main proceedings, to interpret, as far as is at all possible, the rules establishing that limitation period in such a way as to ensure observance of the principle of effectiveness deriving from Directive 89/665.

63 As is clear from the case-law of the Court, when applying domestic law the national court must, as far as is at all possible, interpret it in a way which accords with the requirements of Community law (see, in particular, Case C-165/91 Van Munster v Rijksdienst voor Pensioenen [1994] ECR I-4661, paragraph 34, and Case C-262/97 Rijksdienst voor Pensioenen v Engelbrecht [2000] ECR I-7321, paragraph 39).

64 Where application in accordance with those requirements is not possible, the national court must fully apply Community law and protect the rights conferred thereunder on individuals, if necessary disapplying any provision in so far as its application would, in the circumstances of the case, lead to a result contrary to Community law (see, in particular, Case C-347/96 Solred v Administracion General del Estado [1998] ECR I-937, paragraph 30, and Engelbrecht, paragraph 40).

65 It follows that, in circumstances such as those of the case in the main proceedings, it is for the referring court to ensure observance of the principle of effectiveness under Directive 89/665 by applying its national law in such as way as to enable a tenderer harmed by a decision of the contracting authority adopted in breach of Community law to safeguard the possibility of raising pleas in law alleging that breach in support of applications for review of other decisions of the contracting authority, by availing itself, where appropriate, of the possibility afforded, according to the referring court, by Article 5 of Law No 2248/1865 of disapplying the national rules governing such applications so far as limitation periods are concerned.

66 The answer to the first question referred for a preliminary ruling must therefore be that Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as imposing on the competent national courts, where it is established that, by its conduct, a contracting authority has rendered impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of the rights conferred by the Community legal order on a national of the Union who has been harmed by a decision of that contracting authority, an obligation to allow as admissible pleas in law alleging that the notice of invitation to tender is incompatible with Community law, which are put forward in support of an application for review of that decision, by availing itself, where appropriate, of the possibility afforded by national law of disapplying national rules on limitation periods, under which, when the period prescribed for bringing proceedings for review of the notice of invitation to tender has expired, it is no longer possible to plead such incompatibility.

67 In view of the answer given to the first question, there is no need to answer the second question.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

(Sixth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Declares that, by failing to comply with all the provisions of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts in connection with the call for tenders for the execution of works for the Centro Educativo Penitenciario Experimental de Segovia issued by the Sociedad Estatal de Infraestruturas y Equipamientos Penitenciarios S.A. (`SIEPSA'), a company falling within the definition of a contracting authority for the purposes of Article 1(b) of the Directive, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive;

2. Orders the Kingdom of Spain to pay the costs.

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 18 July 2000, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 226 EC for a declaration that, in connection with the call for tenders for the execution of works for the Centro Educativo Penitenciario Experimental de Segovia (Experimental Educational Prison, Segovia) issued by the Sociedad Estatal de Infraestruturas y Equipamientos Penitenciarios S.A. (`SIEPSA'), a company falling within the definition of a contracting authority for the purposes of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54, `the Directive'), the amount of which far exceeds the threshold provided for by that directive, by failing to comply with all the provisions of that directive and, more specifically, the advertising rules laid down in Article 11(2), (6), (7) and (11), and the provisions of Articles 12(1), 29(3), 18, 27 and 30(4), the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive.

Legal background

The relevant provisions of Community law

2 The second recital in the preamble to the Directive states that `the simultaneous attainment of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts awarded in Member States on behalf of the State, or regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law entails not only the abolition of restrictions but also the coordination of national procedures for the award of public works contracts'.

3 According to Article 1(b) of the Directive:

`"[C]ontracting authorities" shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

A "body governed by public law" means any body:

- established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

- having legal personality, and

- financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law;

The lists of bodies and categories of bodies governed by public law which fulfil the criteria referred to in the second subparagraph are set out in Annex I. These lists shall be as exhaustive as possible and may be reviewed in accordance with the procedure laid down in Article 35. ...'

4 Article 11(2), (6), (7) and (11) of the Directive provides as follows:

`(2) Contracting authorities who wish to award a public works contract by open, restricted or negotiated procedure referred to in Article 7(2), shall make known their intention by means of a notice.

(6) The notices referred to in paragraphs 1 to 5 shall be drawn up in accordance with the models given in Annexes IV, V and VI, and shall specify the information requested in those Annexes.

The contracting authorities may not require any conditions but those specified in Articles 26 and 27 when requesting information concerning the economic and technical standards which they require of contracts for their selection...

(7) The contracting authorities shall send the notices referred to in paragraphs 1 to 5 as rapidly as possible and by the most appropriate channels to the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities...

(11) The notice shall not be published in the official journals or in the press of the country of the contracting authority before the date of dispatch to the Official Journal of the European Communities and it shall mention this date....'

5 Article 12(1) of the Directive provides as follows:

`In open procedures the time-limit for the receipt of tenders, fixed by the contracting authorities shall be not less than 52 days from the date of dispatch of the notice.'

6 Under Article 18 of the Directive:

`Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Chapter 3 of this Title, taking into account Article 19, after the suitability of the contractors not excluded under Article 24 has been checked by contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing and of technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 26 to 29.'

7 Article 24 of the Directive provides inter alia:

`Any contractor may be excluded from participation in the contract who:

(a) is bankrupt or is being wound up, whose affairs are being administered by the court, who has entered into an arrangement with creditors, who has suspended business activities or who is in any analogous situation arising from a similar procedure under national laws and regulations;

(b) is the subject of proceedings for a declaration of bankruptcy, for an order for compulsory winding up or administration by the court or for an arrangement with creditors or of any other similar proceedings under national laws or regulations;

(c) has been convicted of an offence concerning his professional conduct by a judgment which has the force of res judicata;

(d) has been guilty of grave professional misconduct proved by any means which the contracting authorities can justify;

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

...

(g) is guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required under this Chapter.

...'

8 Under Article 27(1) of the Directive:

`Evidence of the contractor's technical capability may be furnished by:

...

(c) a statement of the tools, plant and technical equipment available to the contractor for carrying out the work;

...

(e) a statement of the technicians or technical bodies which the contractor can call upon for carrying out the work, whether or not they belong to the firm.'

9 It is apparent from Article 29(3) of the Directive that certified registration in the official lists by the competent bodies is, for the contracting authorities of other Member States, to constitute a presumption of suitability for works corresponding to the contractor's classification, in particular, as regards Article 27(b) and (d).

10 Article 30(1) and (4) of the Directive provides:

`(1) The criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) either the lowest price only;

(b) or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract: e.g. price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit.

...

(4) If, for a given contract, tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the works, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request, in writing, details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant and shall verify those constituent elements taking account of the explanations received.

The contracting authority may take into consideration explanations which are justified on objective grounds including the economy of the construction method, or the technical solution chosen, or the exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer for the execution of the work, or the originality of the work proposed by the tenderer.

If the documents relating to the contract provide for its award at the lowest price tendered, the contracting authority must communicate to the Commission the rejection of tenders which it consider to be too low.

11 Part V of Annex I to the Directive contains a list of the categories of the bodies governed by public law referred to in Article 1(b) in respect of Spain. Those categories are the following:

`- Entidades Gestoras y Servicios Comunes de la Seguridad Social (administrative entities and common services of the health and social services),

- Organismos Autonomos de la Administracion del Estado (independent bodies of the national administration),

- Organismos Autonomos de las Comunidades Autonomas (independent bodies of the autonomous communities),

- Organismos Autonomos de las Entidades Locales (independent bodies of local authorities),

- Otras entidades sometidas a la legislacion de contratos del Estado español (other entities subject to Spanish State legislation on procurement).'

12 Article 1(1) and (2) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84), is worded as follows:

`For the purpose of this Directive:

(1) "[P]ublic authorities" shall mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, or associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

A body is considered to be governed by public law where it:

- is established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not being of an industrial or commercial nature,

- has legal personality, and

- is financed for the most part by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or is subject to management supervision by those bodies, or has an administrative, managerial or supervisory board more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law;

(2) "[P]ublic undertaking" shall mean any undertaking over which the public authorities may exercise directly or indirectly a dominant influence by virtue of their ownership of it, their financial participation therein, or the rules which govern it. A dominant influence on the part of the public authorities shall be presumed when these authorities, directly or indirectly, in relation to an undertaking:

- hold the majority of the undertaking's subscribed capital, or

- control the majority of the votes attaching to shares issued by the undertaking, or

- can appoint more than half of the members of the undertaking's administrative, managerial or supervisory body'.

The relevant provisions of national law

The general rules applicable to SIEPSA

13 The Directive was implemented in domestic Spanish law by the Ley 13/1995 de Contratos de las Administraciones Publicas (Law on public procurement) of 18 May 1995 (BOE No 119 of 19 May 1995, p. 14601).

14 Article 1(2) and (3) of Law No 13/1995 provides:

`(2) For the purposes of this law, "public authorities" shall mean:

(a) the central administrative authority of the State;

(b) the authorities of the autonomous communities;

(c) the bodies of which local authorities consist.

(3) This Law shall also apply to the award of contracts by independent bodies in all cases and by other bodies governed by public law and possessing legal personality, connected to or controlled by a public authority, if they meet the following criteria:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

(a) that they were established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character,

(b) that they carry on activity which is financed, for the most part, by public authorities or other bodies governed by public law, or that their management is subject to supervision by those [public] bodies, or that more than half of the members of their administrative, managerial or supervisory board are appointed by the public authorities or by other bodies governed by public law'.

15 The sixth provision supplementing Law No 13/1995, entitled `Rules applicable to the award of contracts in the public sector', is worded as follows:

`When awarding public procurement contracts, commercial companies in the capital of which public authorities or their independent bodies, or bodies governed by public law, have a majority holding, whether direct or indirect, shall comply with the rules on advertising and competition, unless the nature of the transaction to be effected is incompatible with those rules'.

16 Since these proceedings were initiated, the Kingdom of Spain has, by means of Real Decreto Legislativo 2/2000 por el que se aprueba el texto refundido de la Ley de Contratos de las Administraciones Publicas (Royal Legislative Decree approving the consolidated text of the Law on public procurement) of 16 June 2000 (BOE No 148 of 21 June 2000, p. 21775), adopted a new consolidated version of that law confined, however, to grouping together and rearranging the earlier provisions, without amending their content.

17 Article 2(2) of the Ley 30/1992 de Régimen Jurídico de las Administraciones Publicas y del Procedimiento Administrativo Comun (Law on the legal rules governing public authorities and common administrative procedure) of 26 November 1992, as amended by Ley 4/1999 of 13 January 1999 (BOE No 12 of 14 January 1999, p. 1739, `Law No 30/1992'), provides:

`Bodies governed by public law and possessing separate legal personality, connected to or controlled by any public authority whatsoever shall also be regarded as public authorities. The activities of such bodies shall be regulated by this Law where those bodies exercise administrative powers, their other activities being governed by the rules applicable to their formation.'

18 It is clear from the 12th provision supplementing Ley 6/1997 de Organizacion y Funcionamento de la Administracion General del Estado (Law on the organisation and working of the central administration of the State) of 14 April 1997 (BOE No 90 of 15 April 1997, p. 11755, `Law No 6/1997'), that State commercial companies are governed wholly by private law, whatever their legal form, except in the spheres regulated by statute with regard to budget, accounts, financial audit and public procurement, and that they may in no circumstances have powers which might suggest the exercise of public authority.

19 Furthermore, SIEPSA is regulated in particular by the Texto Refundido de la Ley General Presupuestaria (consolidated version of the General Budget Law), approved by Royal Legislative Decree No 1091/1988 of 23 September 1988 (BOE No 234 of 29 September 1988, p. 28406), by the Texto Refundido de la Ley de Sociedades Anonimas (consolidated version of the Law on public limited companies), approved by Royal Legislative Decree No 1564/1989 of 22 December 1989 (BOE No 310 of 27 December 1989, p. 40012), by the general laws on public limited companies and by its statutes.

SIEPSA's statutes

20 SIEPSA is a State company created by decision of the Council of Ministers of 21 February 1992 in the form of a commercial public limited company. Originally created for a period of eight years, the company has since become a company of unlimited duration, following amendment of its statutes in October 1999. At the beginning of 2000 its capital came to ESP 85 622 000 000, fully subscribed and paid up by the Spanish State as the sole shareholder.

21 In accordance with the provisions of its statutes, the company is directed and represented by a board of directors. The eight members of that board are appointed by the general meeting of shareholders, on a proposal made by the Ministries of Justice, the Economy and Finance. Its chairman is nominated by the board of directors and chosen from among the members of the board proposed by the Ministry of Justice.

22 Following the amendment to the statutes of 17 July 1998 the company has the following object:

`1. The development and execution of programmes and actions contained or which may in future be contained in the plan for repaying the costs of and establishing prisons, approved by decision of the Council of Ministers... so far as concerns the construction of prisons or annexes by the company itself or through others, and the repaying of the costs of or transfer of real property and centres which, once they have ceased to be used for prison services or for prison purposes, are to be assigned to the company pursuant to the plan, so that it may carry out in particular the following operations in accordance with the directives issued by the prison administration's central management:

(a) carrying on all town-planning management and consultancy activities necessary in order to implement the abovementioned plan and collaboration with public or private bodies for those purposes;

(b) locating and purchasing appropriate buildings or, if necessary, adapting those which prove suitable for being fitted out as new prisons or annexes, and making payment for the acquisitions made by the prison authorities by any means and for the purpose stated;

(c) drawing up works projects, making the plans and preparing the conditions for the award of the works involved in a procurement contract;

(d) organising and awarding the contracts for the performance of the works in accordance with statutory procedures, and taking such action as may be necessary for directing the works, quality control, measurements, certification and monitoring and everything relating to fittings and subsidiary material, in collaboration with technicians appointed by the prison authorities;

(e) organising and carrying out the necessary planning, construction, building and financing works and providing the necessary equipment for the commissioning of the new prisons and annexes.

2. The transfer of real property and prisons which, on no longer being used in the prison service or for such purposes, are assigned to it by the State... and which, where that would be expedient in order to increase the profits to be derived and the value of the transfer, may be in part transferred to the local authorities concerned or exchanged for other property belonging to those authorities, with which collaboration agreements may be concluded which allow of such improvement and which permit needs falling within their ambit to be met. The funds thus acquired shall be used to pay for the activities provided for in the plan.

The pre-litigation procedure

23 A complaint was laid before the Commission concerning a procedure for the award of a public works contract for the Experimental Educational Prison, Segovia, initiated by SIEPSA in connection with a plan approved by the Ministry of Justice and of the Interior, the maximum budget being ESP 4 392 399 500, exclusive of VAT. The call for tenders in the procedure in question had been published in the daily newspaper El País on 3 April 1997.

24 By letter of 24 September 1997 the Commission drew to the attention of the Spanish authorities the fact that many provisions of the Directive had been disregarded in that call for tenders.

25 In their reply of 17 December 1997 the Spanish authorities maintained that SIEPSA, as a State commercial company governed by private law, was not a contracting authority for the purposes of the Directive and that the provisions of the Directive were therefore not applicable to the circumstances of the case.

26 In response to that reply, on 6 November 1998 the Commission sent the Spanish authorities a letter of formal notice in which it argued that SIEPSA had to be regarded as a contracting authority and that, by the same token, it was required to comply with all the provisions of the Directive, notwithstanding the wording of Law No 13/1995.

27 By letter of 26 January 1999 the Spanish authorities communicated their observations, stressing in the first place the argument that State companies such as SIEPSA do not fall within the ambit of the Directive or of Law No 13/1995, since they are governed by rules of private law. In the second place, they maintained that SIEPSA did not meet the first condition laid down in Article 1(b) of the Directive, since it met general-interest needs of a commercial character. Furthermore, SIEPSA had in their view complied sufficiently with the rules on advertising and competition by publishing tender notices in the national and local daily papers.

28 Considering that reply to be inadequate, on 25 August 1999 the Commission issued a reasoned opinion under Article 226 EC in which it repeated and added to its arguments set out in the letter of formal notice, concluding that in connection with the call for tenders for the works to be carried out on the Experimental Educational Prison, Segovia, issued by SIEPSA, the Kingdom of Spain had failed to fulfil its obligations under certain of the provisions of Directive 93/37.

29 The Spanish Government answered that reasoned opinion by letter of 22 November 1999 rejecting the Commission's analysis.

30 Taking the view that the observations submitted by the Spanish Government showed that the failures to fulfil obligations referred to in the reasoned opinion had not been remedied, the Commission decided to bring the present action.

Substance

Arguments of the parties

31 The Commission states that certain of the provisions of the Directive were not complied with during the procedure followed for the award of the works in question. Having stressed the preliminary point that the maximum budget exceeded the threshold provided by Directive 93/37, then standing at ECU 5 million, it notes that the tender notice appeared in the national press only, and was not published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, in contravention of Article 11(2), (7) and (11) of the Directive. Moreover, the time-limit for the receipt of tenders was 35 days only, whereas Article 12(1) of the Directive specifies a minimum time-limit of 52 days in open procedures.

32 The Commission also claims that, among the conditions laid down in order to be able to tender, the first requirement is to belong to one of 25 various sub-groups of State contractors, the second is to have paid-up share capital of at least ESP one milliard and the third is to have won at least four works contracts in the past five years (at least two of them for construction work) for a minimum final amount of ESP 2 milliard per contract, confirmed by the relevant certificates. In the Commission's submission, the third condition is redundant since under Article 29(3) of Directive 93/37 certified registration in the official lists constitutes a presumption of suitability for the contracting authorities of the other Member States in respect of the list of works completed in the past five years.

33 The Commission then notes that the eight criteria for award of the contract include `technical team permanently assigned to the works' and `quality of the execution of the contracts awarded by SIEPSA'. On that subject, it points out that while those two criteria appear in Article 27 of Directive 93/37 among the factors which may constitute evidence of the contractor's technical capability and contribute to its being selected, they cannot however be used in determining the best tender, since the criteria for the award of contracts referred to in Article 30 of the Directive can relate only to the specific works in question. The Commission concludes therefore that it is contrary to Articles 18, 27 and 30(1) of Directive 93/37 to include those two criteria among the criteria for the award of the contract.

34 As regards the criterion of price, the Commission states that it is clear from the contract documents that `while they will not be excluded, tenders for an amount judged to be abnormally low will have points deducted, that is to say, where the amount differs by more than 10 units from the arithmetic average of the selected proposals'. According to the Commission, the effect of automatically penalising tenders for an amount considered to be abnormally low is equivalent to a practice of automatic exclusion of those offers, without allowing any opportunity of explaining the price, which is contrary to Article 30(4) of the Directive.

35 The Commission concludes that when it organised the call for tender at issue SIEPSA ought to have complied with the relevant provisions of the Directive for, according to the Court's case-law, the obligation placed on Member States by a directive to attain the result provided for by that act, and their duty under Article 10 EC, to take all appropriate measures, whether general or particular, to ensure fulfilment of that obligation, are incumbent on all authorities of the Member States. Here the Commission refers in particular to Case C-353/96 Commission v Ireland [1998] ECR I-8565, paragraph 23, where it is held that the directives on the award of public contracts would be deprived of their effectiveness if the actions of a contracting authority were not imputable to the Member State concerned.

36 The Spanish Government does not deny that the call for tenders in respect of the procedure for the award of the public works contract for the Experimental Educational Prison, Segovia, issued by SIEPSA, did not conform to the requirements of the Directive, but contends that that company is not to be considered to be a contracting authority for the purposes of that directive.

37 The Spanish Government argues generally that Directive 93/37, just like Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), does not include commercial companies under public control, such as SIEPSA, within the notion of bodies governed by public law. That finding is borne out by the fact that Directive 93/38 draws a distinction between the concept of a body governed by public law, identical in all four directives, and the concept of a public undertaking, the definition of which corresponds to that of a public commercial company.

38 On that subject the Spanish Government notes that the Community legislature was aware that many undertakings in the private sector, although possessing the form of a public undertaking, specifically pursue a wholly commercial object, despite their dependency on the State, and operate on the market in accordance with the rules of free competition and in conditions of equality with other private undertakings strictly for the purpose of making profits. That is why the legislature confined the Directive's ambit to bodies cumulatively satisfying the three conditions set out in Article 1(b) thereof.

39 While that Government acknowledges that SIEPSA fulfils the two last conditions under Article 1(b) of the Directive, it argues that SIEPSA possesses the attributes of a commercial company, given that its objects and tasks are typically commercial, and that it therefore meets general-interest needs of a commercial character, which is not in keeping with the first criterion of that provision.

40 In addition, referring to the list in Part V of Annex I to the Directive, which contains the categories of Spanish bodies governed by public law that meet the criteria laid down in the second paragraph of Article 1(b) of that directive, the Spanish Government asserts that SIEPSA does not belong to any of those categories, since it is not an independent body and since it is not subject to the Spanish laws on public procurement.

41 The Spanish Government explains that SIEPSA does not fall within the scope ratione personæ of Law No 13/1995 which, as Article 1 thereof makes clear, neither includes nor refers to State commercial companies. The only express reference to those State companies occurs in the sixth provision supplementing that Law, imposing on them the strict application of the advertising and competition rules in respect of procedures for the award of public procurement conducted by them, rules which it claims SIEPSA did observe in the circumstances of the case.

42 According to the Spanish Government, that exclusion from the scope ratione personæ of the Spanish rules on procedures for the award of public procurement contracts and, consequently, of the Community rules on public procurement is accounted for by the circumstance that, in the Spanish legal order, it is generally the task of public bodies governed by private law, a category consisting of commercial companies under public control, such as SIEPSA, to meet general-interest needs, which explains why they are under public control, but those needs are commercial or industrial in nature for, if that were not so, they could not be the object of a commercial company.

43 As more particularly regards SIEPSA, the Spanish Government states that its principal task entrusted to it, namely, the building of new prisons suited to the needs of society, consists of a general-interest requirement of a commercial character, which serves the ultimate purpose of contributing to prison policy, which is also in the general interest.

44 SIEPSA was created in order to carry out all actions which prove necessary to the proper management of the programmes and transactions provided for in the plan for paying off the costs of and establishing prisons, either itself or through others. Its attributes are those of a typical commercial company, it even being governed by commercial law, without prejudice to the exceptions provided for in the areas of budget, accounts and financial audit.

45 In order to attain those objectives, SIEPSA performs transactions which must, in the Spanish Government's submission, be objectively classified as commercial, such as locating and acquiring buildings to be fitted out as new prisons and the development and execution of preparatory and construction works.

46 That Government observes that, in carrying on those activities, SIEPSA makes a profit and that the performance of those operations with a view to generating profits is a typically commercial activity which can be successfully carried out only by a company subject to the free play of the commercial rules of the private sector with which it must necessarily engage. It goes on to say that that company's activity cannot be treated as administrative, since its objective is to acquire financial means or resources like any contractor, and that is so even though in the final analysis those resources are applied for other general-interest purposes.

47 Referring to Case C-360/96 BFI Holding [1998] ECR I-6821, paragraph 47, where the Court stated that the absence of competition is not a condition necessarily to be taken into account in defining a body governed by public law, the Spanish Government argues that, whether or not SIEPSA is subject to market competition, it carries on activity which is commercial in nature, which quite simply means that it cannot fall within the notion of a contracting authority used by the Directive.

48 According to that Government, the fact that State commercial companies such as SIEPSA are regulated by private law is not so much the cause as the consequence of their actual nature. It states in this regard that that company is not commercial in character because it is governed by private law, but that it is precisely the commercial character of its activity that confers on it the attributes it possesses and results in its being governed by private law.

49 The Spanish Government submits that its is the only view that respects the autonomous definition of the criterion of the non-industrial or commercial character of needs in the general interest, as it emerges from paragraphs 32 and 36 of BFI Holding. It contends that, since the State serves the general interest and since it has a majority shareholding in State commercial companies, it is logical to suppose that those companies will always serve the general interest to a greater or lesser extent. If, in order for the body to be classified as a contracting authority, it were sufficient that it should perform tasks in the general interest, such as contributing to the imposition of criminal penalties, then the condition that those tasks should not be industrial or commercial in character would be meaningless.

50 The Government concludes therefore that SIEPSA ought to receive the same treatment as undertakings supplying gas, electricity or water, sectors which satisfy essential social requirements and which are at present in the hands of entirely private undertakings. In that connection it notes that those undertakings also pursue broader objectives in the general interest since they guarantee, inter alia, the proper working of spheres essential to the productive life of the nation.

51 By contrast, the Commission is of the view that SIEPSA fulfils all the conditions laid down in Article 1(b) of the Directive and that it is therefore a contracting authority for the purposes of that directive.

52 As a preliminary point, it observes that the scope ratione personæ of Directive 93/37 is determined by the Directive itself and not by provisions of national law and that SIEPSA's classification under Spanish law is in consequence immaterial. The Commission notes that, when implementing Community directives in domestic law, the Member States are required to respect the meaning of the words and concepts used in those measures, in order to guarantee uniform interpretation and application of Community legislation in the various Member States. As a result, the Spanish authorities are bound to give the expression `body governed by public law', used in the Directive, the meaning it has under Community law. Thus, according to the Commission, if SIEPSA is excluded from the ambit of the Community rules on the award of public procurement contracts by Law No 13/1995, that is because Directive 93/37 has not been properly transposed into Spanish law.

53 In addition, the Commission claims that the functional interpretation of the notion of `contracting authority' and, therefore, of `body governed by public law' adopted in the established case-law of the Court implies that the latter notion includes commercial companies under public control, provided that they fulfil the conditions laid down in the second paragraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive.

54 As regards the distinction alegedly drawn by Directive 93/38 between the definitions of a body governed by public law and a public undertaking, the Commission states that that directive does not clarify the concept of a body governed by public law, which is identical in the four directives in question, but extends the scope ratione personæ of the provisions of Community law relating to public procurement to certain sectors (water, energy, transport and telecommunications) excluded from Directives 93/36, 93/37 and 92/50, in order to cover certain bodies carrying on significant activity in those sectors, namely, public undertakings and those which enjoy special or exclusive rights granted by the authorities. In addition, it ought to be borne in mind that the concept of a public undertaking has always been different from that of a body governed by public law, in that bodies governed by public law are created specifically to meet needs in the general interest having no industrial or commercial character, whereas public undertakings act to satisfy needs of an industrial or commercial character.

55 The Commission also disproves the Spanish Government's interpretation which makes the concept of `body governed by public law' dependent on the lists contained in Annex I to the Directive in respect of every Member State, with the result that a Community concept comes to have different meanings, depending on the way in which the various lists in Annex I were drawn up.

56 According to the Commission, the interpretation favoured by the Spanish Government runs counter to the primary object of the Directive, as set out in the second recital in the preamble thereto, and is also contrary to the third paragraph of Article 1(b) thereof, according to which the lists are to `be as exhaustive as possible'. The Commission stresses the point that that expression cannot be understood to mean anything other than that the lists are not exhaustive and that that interpretation has been confirmed by the Court in BFI Holding, paragraph 50. From that it deduces that the circumstance that State companies do not appear, directly or indirectly, in the list of `bodies governed by public law' in Part V of Annex I to the Directive does not mean that they fall outside the concept defined in the second paragraph of Article 1(b) thereof.

57 So far as the conditions laid down in the second paragraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive are more particularly concerned, the Commission observes that that provision makes no mention of the set of rules, whether public or private, under which bodies governed by public law have been formed, or of the legal form chosen, but rather refers to other standards, including the purpose for which the bodies in question were created.

58 The Commission submits that SIEPSA was established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, videlicet to contribute to the implementation of State prison policy through the management of programmes and actions contained in the plan for paying off the costs of and establishing prisons approved by the Council of Ministers.

59 Referring to Case C-44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others [1998] ECR I-73, paragraph 24, the Commission claims that that general interest, closely linked as it is to public order and the institutional operation of the State and even to the very essence of the State, inasmuch as the State holds the monopoly of power in the penal sphere consisting of the imposition of penalties depriving persons of their liberty, does not possess an industrial or commercial character.

60 The Commission next disproves the Spanish Government's argument that companies which, like SIEPSA, operate on the market subject to the principles of free competition in the same way as private undertakings and for the same purpose of making profits have a purely commercial object and by that token fall outside the ambit of the Community directives on public procurement. In particular, it refers by way of example to the award of works contracts for the construction of public prisons or the sale of the State's prison properties, which are two of SIEPSA's company objects and which cannot be regarded as activities subject to market competition.

61 Furthermore, the Commission submits that paragraph 47 of BFI Holding makes it clear that, even if it should be conceded that SIEPSA carries on activity subject to free competition, that fact does not mean that it cannot be regarded as a contracting authority.

62 In addition, the Commission claims that the Spanish Government's argument to the effect that all SIEPSA's activities are commercial is groundless.

63 In the first place, it states that, contrary to the claims made by the Spanish Government, SIEPSA's activity cannot be compared with private-sector activity. It explains that that company does not offer prisons on the penal establishments market (there is no such market) but rather acts as the representative of the State administration in order to assist the latter in a task of a typically State nature: the construction, management and selling of prison properties. On this subject the Commission notes that, as is clear from the company's statutes, in carrying out its tasks SIEPSA follows directives issued by the general management of the prison administration, and real property is sold and the sums so realised are used in accordance with the directives issued by the general management of State assets.

64 In the second place, the Commission observes that the Spanish Government separates the need to build prisons (from which it infers that it is of general interest and possessed of a commercial character) from the ultimate purpose, which is to contribute to penal policy (which it classifies as being in the general interest). It states that that separation, as well as being artificial in that the two needs are closely linked, is inconsistent with the reasoning followed by the Court in other cases, in which it has declared that the collection and treatment of waste (BFI Holding) or the printing of official administrative documents (Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others) are needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, without separating those activities from their ultimate purpose: public health and environmental protection, on the one hand, and public order and the institutional operation of the State, on the other.

65 In the third place, the Commission claims that even if SIEPSA's objective were profit, that aim would not prevent the company from meeting needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character. In its opinion, while the pursuit of profit may be a distinguishing feature of the company's activities, it is nowhere stated in the text of the Directive that that goal makes it impossible to consider that the general-interest needs to meet which SIEPSA was created have no industrial or commercial character.

66 It adds that it is debatable whether the pursuit of profit is an object for a State company such as SIEPSA, which is wholly funded out of public resources, and which was created for the purpose of drawing up and implementing a plan for paying off the costs of and establishing prisons. It is obvious to the Commission that in such a sphere making a profit is not a factor which a Member State would consider of prime importance. In support of its claim, it submits that the `Economic and Financial Reports of the State public sector' drawn up for the financial years 1997 and 1998 by the Intervencion General del Estado make it clear that SIEPSA recorded large losses for those years.

67 In any case, the Commission claims that, even on the assumption that SIEPSA did carry on activities of a commercial nature, those activities would amount to no more than a means of satisfying a need in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character, viz. the implementation of the State's prisons policy, which the company was specifically established to meet.

Findings of the Court

68 As stated in paragraph 36 above, the Spanish Government does not deny that the call for tenders for the public works contract for the Experimental Educational Prison, Segovia, issued by SIEPSA, was not in keeping with the requirements of the Directive, but contends that the Directive is not applicable to procedures for the award of public procurement contracts conducted by that company, because the latter is not to be regarded as a body governed by public law or, in consequence, as a contracting authority for the purposes of the Directive.

69 A preliminary point to be noted is that, according to settled case-law, in order to be defined as a body governed by public law within the meaning of the second paragraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive an entity must satisfy the three cumulative conditions set out therein, requiring it to be a body established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character, to possess legal personality and to be closely dependent on the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law (Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others, paragraphs 20 and 21, and Case C-214/00 Commission v Spain [2003] ECR I-0000, paragraph 52).

70 In the circumstances of this case, although the parties agree that SIEPSA satisfies the conditions of the second and third indents of the second paragraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive, they differ as to whether or not the needs in the general interest to meet which SIEPSA was specifically created are commercial in character.

71 In Commission v Spain the Court rejected the Spanish Government's arguments based on the fact that, under the Spanish legislation applicable to the case, viz. Article 1(3) of Law No 13/1995 read in conjunction with the sixth provision supplementing that Law, commercial companies under public control such as SIEPSA are excluded from the ambit ratione personæ of both the Spanish rules or the Community rules on public procurement.

72 More specifically, in order to determine whether that exclusion constitutes correct transposition of the concept of `contracting authority' employed in Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, the Court, considering that the ambit ratione personæ of that directive coincided with that of the Directive, referred to the scope of the concept of `body governed by public law' employed in the second paragraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive (Commission v Spain, paragraphs 48, 50 and 51).

73 In that context the Court noted that, in accordance with established case-law, in light of the dual purpose of opening up competition and of transparency pursued by the Directive, that concept must be given an interpretation as functional as it is broad (Commission v Spain, paragraph 53).

74 It is from that point of view that the Court has held that, following settled case-law, for the purposes of settling the issue of the classification of an entity governed by public law within the meaning of the second paragraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive, it is necessary to establish only whether or not the body concerned fulfils the three conditions set out in that provision, for that body's status as a body governed by private law does not constitute a criterion capable of excluding it from being classified as a contracting authority for the purposes of the Directive (Commission v Spain, paragraphs 54 and 55).

75 In addition, the Court has stated that that interpretation, the only one capable of maintaining the full effectiveness of the Directive, does not disregard the industrial or commercial character of the general-interest needs which the body concerned is intended to meet, for that aspect is necessarily taken into consideration for the purpose of determining whether or not that body satisfies the condition laid down in the first indent of the second paragraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive (Commission v Spain, paragraphs 56 and 58).

76 Nor is that conclusion invalidated by the want of an express reference in the Directive to the specific category of `public undertakings' which is, however, used in Directive 93/38. As the Commission has correctly observed, that last directive was adopted for the purpose of extending the application of the Community rules regulating public procurement to the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors which were not covered by other directives. From that point of view, by employing the concepts of `public authorities', on the one hand, and `public undertakings', on the other, the Community legislature adopted a functional approach similar to that adopted in Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37. It was thus able to ensure that all the contracting entities operating in the sectors regulated by Directive 93/38 were included in its ambit ratione personæ, on condition that they satisfied certain criteria, their legal form and the rules under which they were formed being in this respect immaterial.

77 With regard on the other hand to the relevance of the Spanish Government's argument that SIEPSA does not fall within any of the categories of Spanish bodies governed by public law listed in Annex I to the Directive, the Court has held in Case C-373/00 Adolf Truley [2003] ECR I-0000, paragraph 39, that that list is in no way exhaustive, as its accuracy varies considerably from one Member State to another. The Court concluded therefrom that, if a specific body does not appear in that list, its legal and factual situation must be determined in each individual case in order to assess whether or not it meets a need in the general interest (Adolf Truley, paragraph 44).

78 Next, with more particular regard to the concept of `needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character' appearing in the first indent of the second paragraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive, the Court has already had occasion to clarify its purport in the context of various Community directives on the coordination of procedures for the award of public procurement contracts.

79 The Court has thus held that concept is one of Community law and must accordingly be given an autonomous and uniform interpretation throughout the Community, the search for which must take account of the background to the provision in which it appears and of the purpose of the rules in question (see, to that effect, Adolf Truley, paragraphs 36, 40 and 45).

80 According to settled case-law, needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, within the meaning of Article 1(b) of the Community directives coordinating the award of public contracts are generally needs which are satisfied otherwise than by the supply of goods and services in the marketplace and which, for reasons associated with the general interest, the State chooses to provide itself or over which it wishes to retain a decisive influence (see, inter alia, Adolf Truley, paragraph 50, and Case C-18/01 Korhonen [2003] ECR I-0000, paragraph 47).

81 The case-law makes it equally clear that in determining whether or not there exists a need in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character account must be taken of relevant legal and factual circumstances, such as those prevailing when the body concerned was formed and the conditions in which it carries on its activity, including, inter alia, lack of competition on the market, the fact that its primary aim is not the making of profits, the fact that it does not bear the risks associated with the activity, and any public financing of the activity in question (Adolf Truley, paragraph 66, and Korhonen, paragraphs 48 and 59).

82 As a matter of fact, as the Court found in Korhonen, paragraph 51, if the body operates in normal market conditions, aims at making a profit and bears the losses associated with the exercise of its activity, it is unlikely that the needs it aims at meeting are not of an industrial or commercial nature.

83 It is therefore in light of the conditions defined in the case-law that the question whether or not the needs in the general interest that SIEPSA is designed to meet are other than industrial or commercial in character must be considered.

84 It is common ground that SIEPSA was established for the specific purpose of putting into effect, alone, the programmes and actions provided for in the plan for paying off the costs of and establishing prisons for the purpose of implementing the Spanish State's prison policy. To that end, as its statutes show, it carries on all activities which prove necessary in order to construct, manage or sell that State's prison assets.

85 The needs in the general interest which SIEPSA is responsible for meeting being, therefore, a necessary condition of the exercise of the State's penal powers they are intrinsically linked to public order.

86 That intrinsic link is to be seen in particular in the decisive influence wielded by the State over the carrying through of the tasks entrusted to SIEPSA. It is not in fact disputed that the latter puts into effect a plan for paying off the costs of and establishing prisons approved by the Council of Ministers and that it carries out its activities in accordance with directives issued by the public authorities.

87 What is more, imposition of criminal penalties being one of the rights and powers of the State, there is no market for the goods and services offered by SIEPSA in the planning and establishment of prisons. As the Commission has rightly argued, activities such as paying off the costs of and establishment of prisons, which are among SIEPSA's primary objectives, are not subject to market competition. That company cannot, therefore, be regarded as a body which offers goods or services on a free market in competition with other economic agents.

88 As to the argument which the Spanish Government bases on the fact that SIEPSA carries on its activities for profit, it is enough to state that, even if SIEPSA's activities do generate profits, it would appear inconceivable that the pursuit of such profit should be in itself the company's chief aim.

89 It is clear from that company's statutes that activities such as the acquisition of buildings to be fitted out as new prisons, the development and performance of planning and building works or the sale of disused facilities are simply the means it employs in order to attain its main objective, which is to contribute to the implementation of State prison policy.

90 That conclusion is confirmed by the fact that, as the Commission has noted without being contradicted by the Spanish Government, SIEPSA recorded large financial losses for the years 1997 and 1998.

91 It must be added that, regardless of the question whether or not there is any official mechanism for offsetting any losses made by SIEPSA, it seems unlikely that it itself should have to bear the financial risks bound up with its activity. In fact, having regard to the fact that the performance of that company's duties is a fundamental constituent of the Spanish State's prison policy, it seems likely that that State, being the sole shareholder, would take all necessary measures to prevent the compulsory liquidation of SIEPSA.

92 In those circumstances, it is possible that in a procedure for the award of public contracts SIEPSA should allow itself to be guided by other than purely economic considerations. It is precisely in order to guard against such a possibility that it is essential to apply the Community directives on public contracts (see, to this effect, inter alia, Adolf Truley, paragraph 42, and Korhonen, paragraphs 51 and 52).

93 Having regard to all the legal and factual matters governing SIEPSA's activity, as set down in paragraphs 84 to 92 above, it must be concluded that the needs in the general interest to meet which the company was specifically established possess a character which is other than industrial or commercial.

94 It follows that a body such as SIEPSA must be treated as a body governed by public law for the purposes of the second paragraph of Article 1(b) of the Directive and, therefore, as a contracting authority for the purposes of the first paragraph thereof.

95 Consequently, the Directive is applicable to the procedures for the award of public works contracts conducted by that company.

96 Having regard to all the foregoing considerations, it must be declared that, by failing to comply with all the provisions of the Directive in connection with the call for tenders for the execution of works for the Centro Educativo Penitenciario Experimental de Segovia issued by the Sociedad Estatal de Infraestruturas y Equipamientos Penitenciarios S.A., a company falling within the definition of a contracting authority for the purposes of Article 1(b) of the Directive, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive.

Advocate General: P. Léger,

having regard to the Report for the Hearing, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 13 June 2002,

gives the following

Judgment

Costs

104 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the other party's pleadings. Under Article 69(3) of the Rules of Procedure, the Court may order that the costs be shared where each party succeeds on some and fails on other heads. Since the Commission has failed on one head, it must be ordered to pay one third of the costs and the Kingdom of Spain two thirds of the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

(Sixth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Declares that, by failing to adopt the measures needed to comply with the provisions of Articles 1 and 2 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, and in particular:

- by failing to extend the system of review procedures provided for by that directive to decisions adopted by companies governed by private law established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest not being of an industrial or commercial nature, which have legal personality, and are financed for the most part by public authorities or other entities governed by public law or are subject to supervision by the latter, or have an administrative, managerial or supervisory board more than half of whose members are appointed by public authorities or other entities governed by public law, and

- by making the possibility of interim measures being granted in relation to decisions adopted by the contracting authorities subject, as a general rule, to the need first to appeal against the decision of the contracting authority, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive;

2. Dismisses the remainder of the application;

3. Orders the Commission of the European Communities to pay one third of the costs and the Kingdom of Spain to pay two thirds of the costs.

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 30 May 2000, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 226 EC for a declaration that, by failing to adopt the measures needed to comply with the provisions of Articles 1 and 2 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) (`Directive 89/665'), and in particular by failing to

- extend the system of review procedures provided for by that directive to decisions adopted by all contracting authorities, within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), including companies governed by private law established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest not being of an industrial or commercial nature, which have legal personality, and are financed for the most part by public authorities or other entities governed by public law or are subject to supervision by the latter, or have an administrative, managerial or supervisory board more than half of whose members are appointed by public authorities or other entities governed by public law,

- allow review to be sought of all decisions adopted by the contracting authorities, including all procedural measures, during the procedure for the award of public contracts, and

- provide for the possibility of all types of appropriate interim measures being granted in relation to decisions adopted by the contracting authorities, including measures aimed at allowing administrative decisions to be suspended, removing for that purpose all difficulties and obstacles and in particular the need first to appeal against the decision of the contracting authority, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive.

Legal context

Community provisions

2 It is apparent from the first and second recitals in the preamble to Directive 89/665 that the arrangements existing at the time of its adoption at both national and Community levels to ensure the effective application of Community Directives on public procurement, in particular Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1971 L 185, p. 5) and Council Directive 77/62/EEC of 21 December 1976 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1977 L 13, p. 1), were not always adequate to ensure compliance with the relevant Community provisions, particularly at a stage when infringements could be corrected.

3 The third recital of Directive 89/665 states that `the opening-up of public procurement to Community competition necessitates a substantial increase in the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination;... for it to have tangible effects, effective and rapid remedies must be available in the case of infringements of Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law'.

4 According to the fifth recital of the directive, `since procedures for the award of public contracts are of such short duration, competent review bodies must, among other things, be authorised to take interim measures aimed at suspending such a procedure or the implementation of any decisions which may be taken by the contracting authority' and `the short duration of the procedures means that the aforementioned infringements need to be dealt with urgently'.

5 Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 provides:

`1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC... decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the provisions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, Article 2(7), on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement...'

6 Under Article 2(1)(a), (3) and (4) of Directive 89/665:

`1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

...

3. Review procedures need not in themselves have an automatic suspensive effect on the contract award procedures to which they relate.

4. The Member States may provide that, when considering whether to order interim measures, the body responsible may take into account the probable consequences of the measures for all interests likely to be harmed, as well as the public interest, and may decide not to grant such measures where their negative consequences could exceed their benefits. A decision not to grant interim measures shall not prejudice any other claim of the person seeking these measures.'

7 Directive 71/305 and Directive 77/62 were repealed by Directive 93/37 and Directive 93/36 respectively. The references in the first recital in the preamble to and Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 to the repealed directives must be understood as made to Directives 93/37 and 93/36.

8 Under Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, which is in essence identical in content to Article 1(b) of Directives 93/36 and 93/37:

`contracting authorities shall mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

Body governed by public law means any body:

- established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

- having legal personality and

- financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law.

procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84) reads as follows:

`For the purpose of this Directive:

1. "public authorities" shall mean the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, or associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law.

A body is considered to be governed by public law where it:

- is established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not being of an industrial or commercial nature,

- has legal personality, and

- is financed for the most part by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or is subject to management supervision by those bodies, or has an administrative, managerial or supervisory board more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law;

2. "public undertaking" shall mean any undertaking over which the public authorities may exercise directly or indirectly a dominant influence by virtue of their ownership of it, their financial participation therein, or the rules which govern it. A dominant influence on the part of the public authorities shall be presumed when these authorities, directly or indirectly, in relation to an undertaking:

- hold the majority of the undertaking's subscribed capital, or

- control the majority of the votes attaching to shares issued by the undertaking, or

- can appoint more than half of the members of the undertaking's administrative, managerial or supervisory body'.

10 The review procedures initiated against decisions taken by contracting authorities under Directive 93/38 are governed by Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative decisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14), the fourth recital of which states that Directive 89/665 is limited to contract award procedures within the scope of Directives 71/305 and 77/62.

National provisions

11 The scope ratione personae of the Spanish legislation on public procurement is defined in Article 1 of Ley 13/1995 de Contratos de las Administraciones Publicas (Law on public procurement) of 18 May 1995 (BOE No 119 of 19 May 1995, p. 14601, hereinafter 'Law 13/1995'), which includes all public authorities, whether State authorities or authorities of the Autonomous Communities and regional or local authorities. Article 1(3) provides:

`This law shall also apply in every case to the awarding of contracts by autonomous bodies and by other bodies governed by public law having legal personality and connected with or under the control of a public authority, which fulfil the following criteria:

(a) they were established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not being of an industrial or commercial nature;

(b) they are financed, for the most part, by public authorities or other bodies governed by public law, or are subject to management supervision by those bodies, or have an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by public authorities or by other bodies governed by public law.'

12 The sixth additional provision of Law 13/1995, entitled `Rules applicable to the award of contracts in the public sector', reads as follows:

`Commercial companies in which public authorities or their autonomous bodies, or bodies governed by public law, hold, directly or indirectly, a majority shareholding, shall, when awarding contracts, comply with the advertising and competition rules, unless the nature of the operation to be carried out is incompatible with those rules.'

13 It should be pointed out that, since the present action was lodged, the Kingdom of Spain, by Real Decreto Legislativo 2/2000 por el que se aprueba el texto refundido de la Ley de Contratos de las Administraciones Publicas (Royal Decree-Law approving the codified text of the Law on public procurement) of 16 June 2000 (BOE No 148 of 21 June 2000, p. 21775), has adopted a new consolidated version of the aforementioned law; this, however, merely brings together and organises the previous provisions, without amending their substance.

14 As regards administrative appeals, Article 107 of Ley 30/1992 de Régimen Jurídico de las Administraciones Publicas y del Procedimiento Administrativo Comun (Law on the legal provisions governing public authorities and ordinary administrative procedure) of 26 November 1992, as amended by Ley 4/1999 of 13 January 1999 (BOE No 12 of 14 January 1999, p. 1739, hereinafter `Law 30/1992'), classifies as subject to direct appeal `procedural measures, if they decide, directly or indirectly, the substantive issues, render it impossible to continue the procedure, render it impossible to conduct a defence, or cause irreparable harm to legitimate rights or interests.'

15 So far as concerns administrative appeal proceedings, Article 25(1) of Ley 29/1998 reguladora de la Jurisdiccion Contencioso-administrativa (Rules of Procedure for Administrative Appeal Proceedings) of 13 July 1998 (BOE No 167 of 14 July 1998, p. 23516, hereinafter `Law 29/1998'), using the same wording as Law 30/1992, provides:

`Administrative appeal proceedings are admissible in respect of provisions of a general nature and express and implicit measures, whether definitive or procedural, adopted by the public authority which bring an end to the administrative procedure, if they decide, directly or indirectly, the substantive issues, render it impossible to continue the procedure, render it impossible to conduct a defence, or cause irreparable harm to legitimate rights or interests.'

16 Article 111 of Law 30/1992, entitled `Suspension of operation', provides:

`1. Unless otherwise provided, the lodging of an appeal will not suspend the operation of the contested measure.

2. Notwithstanding the provisions of the previous paragraph, the body responsible for carrying out review may, having weighed up the harm which suspension would cause to the public interest or third parties as against the harm caused to the applicant by the immediate implementation of the contested measure, and given adequate reasons, suspend operation of the contested measure, on its own initiative or at the request of the applicant, in one of the following circumstances:

(a) Operation is likely to cause harm which is irreparable or reparable only with difficulty.

(b) The dispute is based on one of the legal grounds for automatic invalidity ....

3. If the competent body has not given an express decision on the application for suspension of operation of the contested measure within a period of thirty days from the date on which the application was entered in the case-list, suspension will be deemed to have been granted.'

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

17 According to the statement of reasons for Law 29/1998, `[i]n the light of the experience gained in recent years and of the increasing importance which the subject-matter of administrative appeal proceedings now has, suspension of the contested provision or measure should no longer be the only possible protective measure' and `[t]he Law therefore provides for the possibility of adopting any protective measure, including positive measures'.

18 Under Article 129(1) of Law 29/1998:

`The parties concerned may request, at any stage of the proceedings, the adoption of any measures to ensure the effectiveness of the judgment to be given.'

19 Article 136 of that Law provides:

`1. In the circumstances referred to in Articles 29 and 30, a protective measure shall be adopted, unless it is evident that the criteria laid down in those articles are not fulfilled or that the measure will seriously affect the general interest or the interests of third parties, which the court shall assess in detail.

2. In the circumstances mentioned in the previous paragraph, measures may also be applied for before the appeal is lodged, and the application shall be examined in accordance with the provisions of the previous article. In that event, the party concerned shall request confirmation of the measures when he lodges the appeal, which he is required to do within ten days from the date of notification of the adoption of the protective measures....

If no appeal ensues, the measures granted will be automatically void, and the applicant will be required to pay compensation for the damage caused by the protective measure.'

20 It should be added that Articles 29 and 30 of Law 29/1998 apply, first, to cases in which the authority is required, pursuant to a provision, a contract or a measure, to provide a particular service to one or more specific persons; secondly, to cases in which the authority does not implement its definitive measures; and, thirdly, to blatantly unlawful conduct.

Pre-litigation procedure

21 By letter of 18 December 1991, the Spanish Government notified the Commission of the legislation in force at that time which it considered transposed Directive 89/665 into national law, namely the Ley reguladora de la Jurisdiccion Contencioso-Administrativa (Rules of Procedure for Administrative Appeal Proceedings) of 27 December 1956, the Ley de Procedimiento Administrativo (Law governing administrative procedure) of 18 July 1958, the Ley de Contratos del Estado (Law on public procurement) and the Spanish Constitution.

22 On 21 June 1994, the Commission sent its preliminary observations on the content of the national implementing measures to Spain's Permanent Representative to the European Union.

23 The Commission considered that the reply given by the Spanish authorities on 13 September 1994 was unsatisfactory and therefore, on 29 May 1996, sent the Spanish Government a letter of formal notice in which it stated, first, that the scope of the national measures was not the same as that of Directive 89/665; secondly, that, according to those measures, `procedural' acts were subject to direct appeal only in exceptional circumstances, and, thirdly, that an appeal must first be brought against an administrative measure before suspension could be granted.

24 In its reply, dated 9 October 1996, the Spanish Government pointed out, with regard to the first point, that Law 13/1995 contained a literal transcription of the term `body governed by public law' referred to in Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37. As regards the two other points, it reiterated the circumstances in which a procedural act may be subject to direct appeal and stressed the legal requirement that an appeal must be brought before an act may be suspended.

25 Following a meeting held in October 1997 between the competent Spanish authorities and the Commission's staff, the former sent the Commission another letter, dated 30 January 1998, in which they affirmed all the views expressed in their reply of 9 October 1996.

26 During a meeting held in October 1998 and in a letter dated 14 January 1999, the Spanish authorities maintained their position in respect of scope of application and interim measures. As regards the question of reviewable measures, it referred to Law 29/1998, which had partly amended the rules applicable to procedural measures.

27 Finally, on 2 February 1999, the Spanish authorities sent the Commission official notification of Laws 29/1998 and 4/1999. After examining these new texts the Commission concluded that the Kingdom of Spain had not put an end to the infringements of Directive 89/665 and, on 25 August 1999, sent it a reasoned opinion calling upon it to adopt the measures necessary to comply with that reasoned opinion within two months of its notification.

28 The Spanish Government replied to that reasoned opinion by letter of 8 November 1999, in which it refuted the Commission's assessment.

29 It was in those circumstances that the Commission decided to bring the present action.

Substance

Transposition of the scope ratione personae of Directive 89/665

Arguments of the parties

30 The Commission points out first of all that, when transposing Community Directives into national law, the Member States are required to respect the meaning of the terms and definitions contained in them, in order to ensure uniform interpretation and implementation of the Community legislation in the different Member States. Consequently, the Spanish authorities are required to give the term `body governed by public law', used in Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, the meaning that it has in Community law.

31 In that regard, the Commission points out that those directives make no mention of the regime, public or private, under which the bodies governed by public law were set up, nor the legal form adopted, but focus rather on other criteria, amongst them the purpose for which the bodies in question were created. It states, in particular, that the functional interpretation of the term `contracting authority' and, accordingly, of the term `body governed by public law' adopted in the settled case-law of the Court of Justice implies that the latter term includes commercial companies under public control, provided, of course, that they fulfil the conditions laid down in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the aforementioned directives; the legal form of the bodies concerned is irrelevant.

32 The Commission maintains that, although the wording of Article 1 of Law 13/1995 reproduces almost verbatim the content of the corresponding provisions of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, it nevertheless contains one essential difference, since it excludes entities governed by private law from the scope of application of that law. Law 13/1995 adds a prerequisite linked to the method by which the entities concerned are set up, which is not provided for in the Community legislation, namely that the entity must be governed by public law.

33 The Commission considers that the exclusion contained in Article 1(3) of Law 13/1995 is confirmed by the sixth additional provision of that Law, whose sole raison d'être lies in the fact that the contracts to which it refers would otherwise be wholly excluded from the scope of application of that law.

34 Since bodies governed by private law are excluded from the scope ratione personae of the Spanish legislation on public procurement, they likewise fall outside the scope of the provisions governing the procedures for awarding public contracts and, therefore, of the review procedures relating to public contracts. That exclusion thus infringes the provisions of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 which define their scope, and also the provisions of Directive 89/665, since it precludes the application of the procedural safeguards provided by that directive. The Commission therefore concludes that Directive 89/665 has not been correctly transposed into the Spanish legal system, since the latter does not ensure that the review procedures established by the Directive are coextensive with its scope ratione personae.

35 As its principal argument, the Spanish Government claims that that complaint is manifestly unfounded. It points out that, although the Commission alleges that it has infringed Directive 89/665, it makes no reference to that directive, but to the scope ratione personae of other directives, namely the substantive directives relating to the award of public contracts. It concludes that, in actual fact, what the Commission is putting in issue in the present case is the transposition of Article 1 of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, not the incorrect transposition of Directive 89/665, which it alleges has been infringed.

36 Firstly, Directive 89/665 does not contain rules governing the procedure for awarding public contracts and therefore does not define the scope ratione personae of the procedural rules set out in Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37. Secondly, it comes into play at a later stage, since it requires the Member States to arrange for effective and rapid review procedures if the rules laid down by the directives governing the procedures for the award of public contracts are infringed. Therefore, according to the Spanish Government, if the Court were to uphold that plea, it would be necessary, in the present case, to examine whether Directive 89/665 was correctly transposed, even though it does not govern the subject-matter which the Commission claims has been incorrectly transposed. In the opinion of the Spanish Government, the Commission should have brought different proceedings in order to establish whether the Kingdom of Spain correctly transposed Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, which do contain specific information and rules which define their scope ratione personae.

37 Alternatively, the Spanish Government contends that the scope ratione personae of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 was correctly transposed.

38 The Spanish Government states that the term `body governed by public law' is not interpreted in a uniform way in the different Member States and that it is therefore not possible to find a general definitive solution. It therefore considers that, in order to determine whether or not a body fulfils the conditions which would bring it within the scope ratione personae of the directives in question, it is necessary to carry out a detailed case-by-case examination.

39 The Spanish Government states in that regard, first, that the expression `body governed by public law' used in the aforementioned directives refers to an entity governed by public law and that, in the Spanish legal system, the expressions `entity governed by public law' and `body governed by public law' are used indiscriminately.

40 It also maintains that, in Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, the term `body governed by public law' does not include commercial companies under public control and that the fact that Directive 93/38 makes a distinction between that term, which is the same in the four directives, and the term `public undertaking', the definition of which corresponds to that of `public commercial company', shows that they are two distinct concepts.

41 The Spanish Government also considers that, in order to define the term `body governed by public law', it is first necessary to specify the commercial or industrial nature of the `need in the general interest' which it is designed to meet. In that respect, it points out that, in the Spanish legal system, public commercial companies have, in principle, the task of meeting needs in the general interest, which explains why they are under public control. However, those needs are of a commercial and industrial nature because, if that were not the case, they would not be the subject of a commercial company.

42 The Spanish Government maintains that it is difficult to dispute that commercial or industrial companies or the needs they meet are commercial or industrial in nature, because they are so in every respect. In that regard, it refers to their legal form, which is private, to the legal rules applicable to their activities, which are the commercial rules, to the fact that the object of those companies is always a commercial activity, and to their aim, which is to make a profit unrelated to the general interest served by associations, foundations and bodies governed by public law, which never affects the private interests of the members.

43 In response to the Spanish Government's argument that the Commission's first complaint is manifestly unfounded, the Commission points out that Directive 89/665 itself defines - in Article 1(1) - its scope by reference to that of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37. It adds that, in order to define the scope of Directive 89/665, the Community legislature could have reproduced in that directive the necessary provisions of the other three directives. The fact that it did not do so, but used another device in order not needlessly to overload the content of Directive 89/665, cannot be relied on in order to prevent the Court reviewing the transposition of that directive into the Spanish legal system.

44 As regards the alleged distinction drawn by Directive 93/38 between the terms `body governed by public law' and `public undertaking', the Commission states that that directive does not clarify the term `body governed by public law', which is defined in the same way in the four directives in question, but extends the scope of the Community provisions on public procurement to certain sectors (water, energy, transport and telecommunications) excluded from Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, in order to include certain entities having a significant activity in those sectors, namely public undertakings and those which enjoy special or exclusive rights granted by the authorities. It should also be pointed out that the concept of public undertaking has always been different from that of body governed by public law, since bodies governed by public law are created specifically to meet needs in the general interest not having any industrial or commercial character, whereas public undertakings work to meet industrial or commercial needs.

45 Finally, as regards the Spanish Government's argument that each case needs to be examined individually, in order to determine whether or not a body fulfils the conditions for being subject to Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, the Commission maintains that it is not possible to exclude a priori, as the Spanish legislation does, a whole group of bodies, that it to say, entities governed by private law which meet the three conditions stated in the aforementioned directives, from the field of application of Directive 89/665, even if that exclusion is subject to review on a case-by-case basis.

46 Furthermore, that interpretation is in accordance with the broad logic of the provisions in question. According to the Commission, if the Community legislature had wanted to link the absence of an industrial or commercial nature to a body's legal regime rather than to the interests it pursued, the words `not having an industrial or commercial character' would not have been inserted in the indent relating to the needs to be met, but in the preceding line in order to characterise the body directly.

Findings of the Court

47 The parties agree that, under Article 1(3) of Law 13/1995, read in conjunction with the sixth additional provision of that Law, public bodies constituted under private law - a category composed, in the Spanish legal system, of commercial companies under public control - are excluded from the scope ratione personae of the Spanish rules governing procedures for awarding public contracts and, accordingly, of the rules governing the review of public contracts.

48 It follows that, in order to determine whether that exclusion constitutes a correct transposition of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, it is necessary to ascertain whether the term `contracting authority' which appears in that provision refers only to bodies governed by public law, as the Spanish Government maintains, or whether bodies constituted under private law may also be covered by that term.

49 In that regard, it should be pointed out that, as is apparent from the first and second recitals, Directive 89/665 is designed to strengthen the existing arrangements, at both national and Community levels, in order to ensure the effective application of the directives relating to the award of public service contracts, supply contracts and works contracts, particularly at a stage when infringements could be corrected. To that end, Article 1(1) of the directive imposes on Member States the duty to ensure that unlawful decisions taken by contracting authorities in connection with contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 may be reviewed effectively and as rapidly as possible.

50 Since Directive 89/665 applies to review procedures brought against decisions taken by contracting authorities under Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, its scope ratione personae is bound to coincide with that of those directives.

51 It follows that, in order to determine whether the Spanish legislation adopted to implement Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 provides a correct transposition of the term `contracting authority' which appears in that article, it is necessary to refer to the definition of that term and, more particularly, to that of `body governed by public law' used, in essentially identical wording, in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37.

52 The Court has already stated, in connection with the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, that, in order to be defined as a body governed by public law within the meaning of that provision, an entity must satisfy the three cumulative conditions set out therein, according to which it must be a body established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, which has legal personality and is closely dependent on the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law (Case C-44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others [1998] ECR I-73, paragraphs 20 and 21).

53 Moreover, the Court has repeatedly held that, in the light of the dual objective of opening up competition and transparency pursued by the directives on the coordination of the procedures for the award of public contracts, the term `contracting authority' must be interpreted in functional terms (see, in particular, Case C-237/99 Commission v France [2001] ECR I-939, paragraphs 41 to 43, and Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraphs 51 to 53). The Court has also stated that, in the light of that dual purpose, the term `body governed by public law' must be interpreted broadly (Case C-373/00 Adolf Truley [2003] ECR-1931, paragraph 43).

54 It is from that point of view that the Court, for the purposes of settling the question whether various private law entities could be classified as bodies governed by public law, has proceeded in accordance with settled case-law and merely ascertained whether those entities fulfilled the three cumulative conditions set out in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, considering that the method in which the entity concerned has been set up was irrelevant in that regard (see to this effect, in particular, Mannesmann Anglagenbau Austria and Others, cited above, paragraphs 6 and 29; Case C-360/96 BFI Holding [1998] ECR I-6821, paragraphs 61 and 62; and Commission v France, cited above, paragraphs 50 and 60).

55 It is apparent from the rules thus identified in the case-law of the Court that an entity's private law status does not constitute a criterion for precluding it from being classified as a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 and, accordingly, of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665.

56 Furthermore, it should be pointed out that the effectiveness of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 as well as of Directive 89/665 would not be fully preserved if the application of those directives to an entity which fulfils the three aforementioned conditions could be excluded solely on the basis of the fact that, under the national law to which it is subject, its legal form and rules which govern it fall within the scope of private law.

57 In the light of those considerations, it is not possible to interpret the term `body governed by public law' used in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37 as meaning that Member States may automatically exclude commercial companies under public control from the scope ratione personae of those directives and, accordingly, of Directive 89/665.

58 Furthermore, it cannot be maintained that to reach that conclusion is to disregard the industrial or commercial character of the needs in the general interest which those companies meet, because that aspect is necessarily taken into consideration for the purpose of determining whether or not the entity concerned meets the condition set out in the first indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37.

59 Nor is that conclusion invalidated by the lack of an express reference, in Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37, to the specific category of `public undertakings' which is nevertheless used in Directive 93/38. In that regard, it need only be pointed out that the review procedures initiated against decisions taken by contracting authorities under Directive 93/38 are governed by Directive 92/13, not by Directive 89/665.

60 It therefore follows from the above that, to the extent that it automatically excludes companies governed by private law from the scope ratione personae of Directive 89/665, the Spanish legislation at issue in the present case is not a correct transposition of the term `contracting authority' appearing in Article 1(1) of that directive, as defined in Article 1(b) of Directives 92/50, 93/36 and 93/37.

61 In those circumstances, the Commission's first complaint should be upheld.

The transposition of the scope ratione materiae of Directive 89/665

Arguments of the parties

62 The Commission claims that the scope ratione materiae of Directive 89/665 has been improperly reduced since the Spanish review provisions, namely Article 107 of Law 30/1992 and Article 25(1) of Law 29/1998, preclude a challenge to certain unlawful decisions taken by contracting authorities. In particular, they limit the possibility of appealing against procedural acts, that is to say, administrative measures which do not bring administrative proceedings to an end. As the Court stated in Case C-81/98 Alcatel Austria and Others [1999] ECR I-7671, that directive does not provide for any derogation in that regard.

63 In support of its argument, the Commission refers to Articles 1(1), 2(1)(b) and 8 of Directive 89/665, from which it follows that it must be ensured that any allegedly illegal measure may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible.

64 The Commission claims that the first part of the proposition (`any allegedly illegal measure') must be understood as referring to all types of act alleged to be illegal, not only to definitive acts. Furthermore, the second part of the proposition (`reviewed effectively and ... as rapidly as possible') leads to the conclusion that the possibility of seeking review of procedural acts is one of the best means of ensuring the effectiveness and rapidity of review procedures, since to wait for the outcome of the contract award procedure is the best way of weakening, or even wholly undermining, the effectiveness and rapidity of the review procedures imposed by Directive 89/665.

65 By way of example, the Commission cites a judgment of the Tribunal Supremo (Supreme Court, Spain) of 28 November 1994, concerning a negotiated procedure, in which the Spanish court held that a contracting authority's decision to ask the undertakings which had submitted tenders to provide additional documents to regularise their situation was not subject to review, because its validity could be called in question only in connection with the procedure to review the definitive act putting an end to the negotiated procedure. The consequence of classifying the request to produce documents as a procedural act was, therefore, that it could be challenged only if the undertaking concerned was excluded from the procedure because it failed to produce the additional documents requested. However, the Commission considers that that undertaking, although it was not excluded from the procedure, could nevertheless find itself in a weak position in relation to the other competing undertakings, and that it should therefore be able to appeal against the request to produce additional documents.

66 The Spanish Government refutes that claim, stating that the Commission has not demonstrated the existence of an infringement. Indeed, it has merely demanded the removal of the distinction between definitive acts and procedural acts without giving the least example to show how that distinction thwarts the objective of Directive 89/665 and, accordingly, without demonstrating that the Spanish legislation might prevent that directive from achieving its objective.

67 The Spanish Government contends that the Commission's position is based on a misinterpretation of the term `procedural act'. It considers that a procedural act, by definition, does not cause any harm to the interested party but is at most a step preparatory to a decision which will be favourable or unfavourable to him. Thus, a procedural act does not imply the adoption of a position but is part of a procedure initiated in order to reach a decision. In that regard, the Spanish Government states that, if an act which appears to be a procedural act entailed per se the adoption of a position, it would cease to be a procedural act in the strict sense and would be reviewable.

68 The Spanish Government adds that the Spanish legal provisions cited by the Commission concerning the possibility of challenging procedural acts are not specific to the award of public contracts, but apply equally to all procedures. The Government points out that that device, which seeks to avoid procedures being paralysed by successive claims and appeals at the stage of preparatory measures which do not yet definitively affect the rights of those concerned, is not only deeply-rooted in the Spanish legal system but also common to all the legal systems of the Member States.

69 Referring inter alia to Case C-282/95 P Guérin automobiles v Commission [1997] ECR I-1503, the Spanish Government points out that that conception is referred to in Community case-law itself. The Court has also held that the preparatory nature of the act against which the action is brought is one of the grounds of inadmissibility of an action for annulment, and that that is a ground which the Court may examine of its own motion (Case 346/87 Bossi v Commission [1989] ECR 303).

70 Taking as an example the subject of State aid, the Spanish Government points out in addition that neither the provisions relating to State aid in the Treaty nor Council Regulation (EC) No 659/1999 of 22 March 1999 laying down detailed rules for the application of Article 93 of the EC Treaty (OJ 1999 L 83, p. 1), expressly provide that acts which are merely procedural and do not have any definitive consequences for the parties concerned may not be the subject of a separate action. Nevertheless, in principle, no action is admissible against the Commission's decision to initiate the Article 88(2) EC procedure, without prejudice to the pleas which may be raised against that decision, which is a procedural act, when the time comes to bring an action against the final decision. The Spanish Government therefore concludes that there was no reason to include in Directive 89/665 that elementary distinction enabling all administrative or legal review systems to operate.

71 Furthermore, it considers that the Commission likewise has not put forward the slightest reason to show how the criteria applied by the Tribunal Supremo in the judgment it has cited are contrary to the objectives of Directive 89/665. In that judgment, the Tribunal Supremo held that the request to produce additional documents was a procedural act, since it did not put an end to the tendering procedure, but was merely a preliminary to the award decision. The Spanish Government also states that the final award of the contract was challenged because the successful undertaking had not provided the documentation requested by the authority. However, the authority maintained that the missing documents were not essential and their absence was a defect which could be corrected. The Spanish Government adds that, in a negotiated procedure, which is not public and does not involve an exclusion stage, only the final award is relevant for the purposes of a possible action, owing to the very nature of the procedure, and that there is therefore no reason to distinguish between procedural acts and definitive acts.

72 The Commission replies that the Spanish Government's argument that the fact that an action may not be brought against procedural acts is a device which is deeply rooted in the Spanish legal system and common to all the legal systems of the Member States cannot be accepted, in so far as it seeks to interpret the wording of a directive using national legislation. The scope ratione materiae of the actions to which Directive 89/665 refers is determined by the directive itself, not by national provisions. If that were not the case, the directive would not be applied uniformly in the different Member States, which would risk negating the effectiveness of the harmonisation sought at Community level.

73 As regards the Spanish Government's arguments regarding the Community case-law on challenges to decisions taken by the Commission in the context of competition law and State aid, the Commission points out that these are judgments and provisions which are wholly unrelated to Directive 89/665 and which therefore cannot be used to show that the Spanish legal system is consistent with the directive. In that regard, it stresses the fact that a legal system contains a multiplicity of rules whereby different solutions are found to problems raised depending on the sector they govern and that the coherence of a legal system may not have the effect that it is uniform, or that the intention of the person interpreting it supplants the legislature's intention.

Findings of the Court

74 It should be noted at the outset that, under the Article 107 of Law 30/1992 and Article 25(1) of Law 29/1998, procedural acts are not open to administrative appeal or administrative appeal proceedings unless they decide, directly or indirectly, the substance of the case, make it impossible to continue the procedure, make it impossible to put up a defence, or cause irreparable harm to legitimate rights or interests.

75 The parties agree that those provisions therefore have the effect of excluding procedural acts from the scope ratione materiae of Directive 89/665, unless they fulfil one of the abovementioned conditions.

76 Since Directive 89/665 does not expressly define the scope of the term `decisions taken by the contracting authorities' which appears in Article 1(1), the question whether procedural acts which do not fulfil one of the abovementioned conditions constitute decisions in respect of which the Member States must provide review procedures within the meaning of Directive 89/665 must be examined in the light of the aims of the directive, while ensuring that its effectiveness is not compromised.

77 In that regard, it should be pointed out that Directive 89/665, according to the sixth recital in its preamble and Article 1(1), seeks to ensure that adequate procedures exist in all the Member States to permit the setting aside of decisions taken by contracting authorities in infringement of Community law on the award of public contracts or of national rules transposing that law, and also the compensating of persons harmed by such an infringement.

78 As is apparent from Article 1(1) and (3) of the directive, the review procedures to which it refers must be conducted effectively and as rapidly as possible and must be available to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

79 In that regard, it should be pointed out, first, that, as has been stated in paragraph 74 of this judgment, the Spanish legislation enables interested parties to bring actions against not only definitive acts but also procedural acts, if they decide, directly or indirectly, the substance of the case, make it impossible to continue the procedure or to put up a defence, or cause irreparable harm to legitimate rights or interests.

80 Secondly, the Commission has not established that that legislation does not provide adequate judicial protection for individuals harmed by infringements of the relevant rules of Community law or of the national rules transposing that law.

81 It follows from the above that the Commission's second complaint must be rejected.

The transposition of the system of interim measures provided for in Directive 89/665

Arguments of the parties

82 The Commission argues that the national provisions which transpose Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 89/665 into Spanish law, namely Articles 111 of Law 30/1992 and 129 to 136 of Law 29/1998, do not ensure the existence of an urgent procedure independent of the lodging of an appeal, designed to suspend the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision adopted by the contracting authorities.

83 More particularly, the Commission claims that, except in the exceptional case of Article 136(2) of Law 29/1998, the Spanish legislation does not provide any opportunity for adopting interim measures in the absence of an appeal on the merits. However, as is apparent from paragraph 11 of the judgment in Case C-236/95 Commission v Greece [1996] ECR I-4459, it must be possible to adopt, independently of any prior action, any interim measures.

84 The Commission also points out, first, that, in administrative appeals, the only interim measure which may be adopted is suspension of operation. Secondly, in administrative appeal proceedings, the court hearing the application for interim relief tends not to adopt measures other than suspension of operation. The Commission states that the settled case-law of the Tribunal Supremo shows that interim measures cannot relate to the substance, because they must not anticipate the outcome of the main proceedings. However, the rule that interim measures must be neutral as regards the substance of the main proceedings has the consequence that, contrary to the requirements of Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 89/665, the court hearing the application for interim relief cannot take all the measures necessary to correct an infringement.

85 The Spanish Government does not dispute that both the rules of administrative procedure and the rules governing administrative appeal proceedings have the effect that the adoption of an interim measure is linked to the prior lodging of an appeal and cannot, under any circumstances, be requested separately.

86 In respect of Article 136 of Law 29/1998, the Spanish Government states that, although, in the cases referred to therein, interim measures may be requested and granted even before an appeal is lodged, that provision does not imply that those measures are independent of the latter, since the person concerned is required to lodge such an appeal against the act he considers unlawful within a period of 10 days of notification of the decision granting the measures requested. He must then request confirmation of those measures and, if he does not lodge the appeal within the time-limit, the interim measures will automatically lapse.

87 As regards suspension by way of legal proceedings, the Spanish Government points out that administrative appeal proceedings are not initiated by application, but by a simple written document which must indicate the act challenged or allege inertia on the part of the authority, and in which the interested party may request suspension of the operation of the contested act without necessarily having to formulate his application. The Spanish Government states that, once an appeal is lodged, the court hearing it will ask the authority to forward the administrative file and that it is only after the applicant for review is in possession of the file that the time-limit within which he must formulate his application and set out the grounds for review will begin to run.

88 As for the lack of such a possibility in the legislation governing suspension by way of an administrative procedure, the Spanish Government points out that it is quite exceptional for it to be necessary to lodge an administrative appeal in respect of the award of public contracts and that in the unlikely case that it should be necessary to exhaust the administrative remedies, the time-limit laid down in Article 111(3) of Law 30/1992 is extremely short. Indeed, it considers that that provision contains rules which are particularly advanced in the field, because it provides that if the administrative authority has not adopted an express decision on the application for suspension within a period of 30 days, the suspension is deemed to be granted.

89 So far as concerns the question whether the requirement that an appeal be lodged against the act the illegality of which has given rise to the application for suspension of operation is justified, the Spanish Government points out that the interim measures mentioned in Article 2(1)(a) of Directive 89/665 are referred to as `interim' specifically because they are designed to secure the results of a case by creating a provisional situation until the outcome of the case and that that directive always presupposes that the interim measures are being sought by the person challenging the validity of the act. It follows that to demand that interim measures are as wholly independent as the Commission requires makes no sense since, by definition, any interim measure is an ancillary measure.

90 Furthermore, in the light of the fact that administrative appeal proceedings are initiated merely by letter, it would be inconceivable, on a teleological interpretation of Directive 89/665, for such a means of bringing those proceedings to be regarded as a hindrance or obstacle since the person concerned may request and obtain the interim measure which he seeks before specifying the grounds of the appeal he is bringing against the act considered unlawful.

91 The Spanish Government also refers to Articles 242 EC and 243 EC, and to Article 83 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, from which it is apparent that, in the Community legal system, an application for interim measures is not an independent legal remedy, but rather an application ancillary to an action for annulment.

92 As regards the conclusion drawn by the Commission from the judgment in Commission v Greece, cited above, the Spanish Government considers that, if the isolated statement made by the Court in paragraph 11 of that judgment were to have the consequence attributed to it by the Commission, Directive 89/665 would require a court to be able to adopt interim measures without anyone having requested it to do so. Furthermore, it maintains that, even if the word `action' used by the Court was employed in a technical sense denoting a procedural act, that does not mean that the judgment confirms the Commission's argument. The independent measures called for by the Commission would also involve taking action before a court. In any event, the Spanish Government states that in that judgment the Court did not have to give a ruling on the merits of the alleged infringement, because the defendant State had conceded that it had not transposed the provisions of Directive 89/665 into its national legal system within the period laid down in the reasoned opinion.

93 As for the possibility of adopting positive measures, the Spanish Government claims that, as is apparent from the statement of grounds and Article 129 of Law 29/1998, that Law made it possible to seek and obtain any interim measure, including positive measures, and that it is for the court hearing the case to determine which measures are appropriate depending on the circumstances. It adds in that regard that the Spanish Tribunal Constitucional (Constitutional Court) has held that the right to obtain interim measures arises from the fundamental right to effective judicial protection. More particularly, in a judgment of 29 April 1993, which concerned an administrative order against which an action had been brought because it provided for more extensive minimum services than was necessary, that court held that Article 24 of the Spanish Constitution, which lays down the right to effective judicial protection, allows the court, as a protective measure, to reformulate any decision adopted in order to ensure minimum services in the event of a general strike.

94 Finally, the Spanish Government states that it does not understand the Commission's argument that the obligation to challenge the legality of an act of a contracting authority on the merits at the same time as bringing an application for interim measures negates the effectiveness of the system, since, in its view, any application for interim measures involves an examination of the merits, even if it is restricted to a prima facie assessment of the problem.

Findings of the Court

95 It is not disputed that, with the exception of the cases referred to in Article 136(2) of Law 29/1998, the Spanish legislation makes it a condition for the grant of interim measures that an appeal on the merits must be brought beforehand.

96 In order to ascertain whether that legislation is consistent with Directive 89/665, it should be noted at the outset that, as is apparent from the fifth recital in the preamble to the directive, the short duration of the procedures for the award of public contracts means that infringements of the relevant rules of Community law or national rules transposing that law which mar those procedures need to be dealt with urgently.

97 For that purpose, Article 2(1)(a) of that directive requires Member States to empower the review bodies to take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authorities.

98 In the judgment in Commission v Greece, cited above, which concerned the compliance with Directive 89/665 of national legislation which restricted interim judicial protection to proceedings for suspension of the operation of an administrative act and made the suspension conditional on bringing an action for the annulment of the contested act, the Court had the opportunity to define the scope of the obligations arising in that regard under that directive. In particular, it found that, under Article 2 of Directive 89/665, the Member States are under a duty more generally to empower their review bodies to take, independently of any prior action, any interim measures, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of the public contract in question (Commission v Greece, cited above, paragraph 11).

99 In that regard, it should be pointed out that, although the Spanish legislation provides for the possibility of adopting positive interim measures, it nevertheless cannot be regarded as a system of interim judicial protection which is adequate to remedy effectively any infringements that might have been committed by the contracting authorities, since, as a general rule, it requires proceedings on the merits to be brought beforehand as a condition for the adoption of an interim measure against a decision of a contracting authority.

100 That finding is not affected by the fact that, where suspension is sought by way of legal proceedings, that may be done merely by a written document and the application initiating the proceedings may be formulated after the request for grant of the interim measure, since the requirement that that formality be completed beforehand likewise cannot be regarded as consistent with the requirements of Directive 89/665, as set out in the judgment in Commission v Greece.

101 It follows that the Commission's third complaint must be upheld.

102 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, it must be declared that, by failing to adopt the measures needed to comply with the provisions of Articles 1 and 2 of Directive 89/665, and in particular:

- by failing to extend the system of review procedures provided for by that directive to decisions adopted by companies governed by private law established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest not being of an industrial or commercial nature, which have legal personality, and are financed for the most part by public authorities or other entities governed by public law or are subject to supervision by the latter, or have an administrative, managerial or supervisory board more than half of whose members are appointed by public authorities or other entities governed by public law, and

- by making the possibility of interim measures being granted in relation to decisions adopted by the contracting authorities subject, as a general rule, to the need first to appeal against the decision of the contracting authority, the Kingdom of Spain has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive.

103 The remainder of the application is dismissed.

1 By application lodged at the Court Registry on 13 March 2000, the Commission of the European Communities brought an action under Article 226 EC for a declaration that, by failing to communicate the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with all the provisions of European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 amending Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts respectively (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1; the Directive), or by failing to adopt the measures necessary to comply therewith, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Directive.

2 As provided by the first subparagraph of Article 4(1) of the Directive, the Member States were to bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with the Directive by 13 October 1998 and forthwith to inform the Commission thereof.

3 Since the Commission received no communication from the French Government concerning measures for transposing the Directive and had no other information from which it could conclude that the French Republic had adopted the provisions necessary for that purpose, it gave that Member State formal notice by letter of 18 December 1998 to submit its observations in that regard within two months.

4 The letter of formal notice remained unanswered by the French authorities. In those circumstances the Commission, by letter of 3 September 1999, sent a reasoned opinion to the French Republic and called on it to comply with the opinion within two months from notification.

5 By letter of 6 January 2000 the French authorities informed the Commission that the process for adoption of a decree intended to transpose the Directive was underway and that the draft would be submitted shortly to the French Conseil d'Etat (Council of State). They also indicated that the Directive had already been partly transposed into French law by an Order of the Minister for Economic Affairs, Finance and Industry of 22 April 1998, setting the thresholds above which contract notices had to be published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

6 Since the Commission received no information to the effect that the abovementioned draft decree had been adopted, it brought the present action.

7 In its defence the French Government does not deny the infringement alleged against it. However, it asks the Court to find that the process for transposition of the Directive is in the course of being completed.

8 In this connection, the French Government points out, first, that the Directive has already been partly transposed by the Order of 22 April 1998 referred to in paragraph 5 of this judgment. Second, it states that a draft decree is undergoing interdepartmental examination and will be submitted to the Conseil d'Etat very shortly.

9 It should be remembered that, under the first paragraph of Article 10 EC, the Member States are to take all appropriate measures, whether general or particular, to ensure fulfilment of the obligations arising out of the EC Treaty or resulting from action taken by the institutions of the Community. Such action includes directives which, pursuant to the third paragraph of Article 249 EC, are binding as to the result to be achieved upon each Member State to which they are addressed. That obligation involves, for each Member State to which a directive is addressed, the adoption, within the framework of its national legal system, of all the measures necessary to ensure that the directive is fully effective, in accordance with the objective which it pursues (see Case C-336/97 Commission v Italy [1999] ECR I-3771, paragraph 19).

10 In the present case, since the Directive was not fully transposed within the period set by it, the Commission's action must be considered well founded.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

11 It must therefore be held that, by failing to adopt, within the prescribed period, the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with the Directive, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Directive.

Costs

12 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Commission has applied for costs and the French Republic has been unsuccessful, the latter must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Declares that, by failing to adopt, within the prescribed period, the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 amending Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts respectively, the French Republic has failed to fulfil its obligations under that directive;

2. Orders the French Republic to pay the costs.

Judgment of the Court (Sixth Chamber)
of 18 June 2002
Hospital Ingenieure Krankenhaustechnik Planungs-Gesellschaft mbH (HI) v Stadt Wien.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien - Austria.
Public service contracts - Directive 92/50/EEC - Procedure for the award of public service contracts - Directive 89/665/EEC - Scope - Decision to withdraw an invitation to tender - Judicial review - Scope.
Case C-92/00.

1. Preliminary rulings - Reference to the Court - National court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC - Definition - Body competent to hear appeals concerning the award of public contracts

(Art. 234 EC)

2. Approximation of laws - Review procedures relating to the award of public supply and public works contracts - Directives 89/665 and 92/50 - Withdrawal of an invitation to tender - Member States under an obligation to provide for review procedures - Limitation of the extent of the review of the legality of the decision - None - Determination of the time to be taken into consideration for assessing the legality of the decision - Jurisdiction of the national court - Limits

(Council Directives 89/665, Art. 1(1), and 92/50)

$$1. In order to determine whether a body making a reference for a preliminary ruling is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC, which is a question governed by Community law alone, the Court takes account of a number of factors, such as whether the body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, whether it applies rules of law and whether it is independent

Those criteria are satisfied by the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien (Public-Procurement Review Chamber of the Vienna Region), which is established by the Viennese law on public procurement as a body with jurisdiction to rule, applying rules of law, following an inter partes procedure, and by decision with binding force, on review proceedings concerning procedures for the award of contracts. Moreover, the provisions governing the composition and functioning of that body guarantee its permanence and independence.

2. Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, requires the decision of the contracting authority to withdraw the invitation to tender for a public service contract to be open to a review procedure, and to be capable of being annulled where appropriate, on the ground that it has infringed Community law on public contracts or national rules implementing that law.

That decision is subject to fundamental rules of Community law, and in particular to the principles laid down by the Treaty on the right of establishment and the freedom to provide services. It also falls within the rules laid down by Directive 89/665 in order to ensure compliance with the rules of Community law on public contracts.

In the context of such a review procedure, Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 92/50, precludes national legislation from limiting review of the legality of the withdrawal of an invitation to tender to mere examination of whether it was arbitrary.

Determination of the time to be taken into consideration for assessing the legality of the decision by the contracting authority to withdraw an invitation to tender is a matter for national law, provided that the relevant national rules are not less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions and that they do not make it practically impossible or excessively difficult to exercise rights conferred by Community law.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Sixth Chamber),

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien by order of 17 February 2000, hereby rules:

1. Article 1(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, requires the decision of the contracting authority to withdraw the invitation to tender for a public service contract to be open to a review procedure, and to be capable of being annulled where appropriate, on the ground that it has infringed Community law on public contracts or national rules implementing that law.

2. Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 92/50, precludes national legislation from limiting review of the legality of the withdrawal of an invitation to tender to mere examination of whether it was arbitrary.

3. Determination of the time to be taken into consideration for assessing the legality of the decision by the contracting authority to withdraw an invitation to tender is a matter for national law, provided that the relevant national rules are not less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions and that they do not make it practically impossible or excessively difficult to exercise rights conferred by Community law.

1 By order of 17 February 2000, received at the Court on 10 March 2000, the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien (Public-Procurement Review Chamber of the Vienna Region) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC three questions on the interpretation of Article 2(1)(b) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1; hereinafter Directive 89/665) and of Directive 92/50 in the version thereof resulting from European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 amending Directives 92/50/EEC, 93/36/EEC and 93/37/EEC concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, public supply contracts and public works contracts respectively (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1; hereinafter Directive 92/50).

2 Those questions were raised in a dispute between the German company Hospital Ingenieure Krankenhaustechnik Planungs-GmbH (hereinafter HI) and the City of Vienna, concerning the latter's withdrawal of an invitation to tender for a public service contract for which HI had submitted a tender.

Legal background

3 Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 provides:

1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC, and 92/50/EEC... decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, in Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

4 Under Article 2(1) and (5) of Directive 89/665:

1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

5. The Member States may provide that where damages are claimed on the grounds that a decision was taken unlawfully, the contested decision must first be set aside by a body having the necessary powers.

5 Article 12(2) of Directive 92/50 provides:

Contracting authorities shall promptly inform candidates and tenderers of the decisions taken on contract awards, including the reasons why they have decided not to award to a contract for which there has been an invitation to tender or to start the procedure again, and shall do so in writing if required. They shall also inform the Office for Official Publications of the European Communities of such decisions.

The national legislation

6 Paragraphs 32(2) to (4) of the Wiener Landesvergabegesetz (Viennese law on public procurement, hereinafter the WLVergG), LGBl. No 36/1995, in the version published in LGBl. No 30/1999, provide, under the heading Rectification and withdrawal of invitations to tender:

2. An invitation to tender may be withdrawn during the period for submission of tenders where events occur which, had they been previously known, would have excluded an invitation to tender being made or led to an invitation to tender with a substantially different content.

3. At the expiry of the period for submitting tenders, the invitation to tender must be withdrawn where compelling grounds exist. Compelling grounds exist in particular

(1) where the events described in subparagraph 2 are not known until after the expiry of the period for submitting tenders, or

(2) where all the tenders had to be excluded.

4. An invitation to tender may be withdrawn, for example, where

(1) no tender acceptable from an economic point of view has been submitted,

or

(2) ... only one tender remains after the exclusion of other tenders.

7 Under the WLVergG, the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien has jurisdiction to rule on review proceedings concerning procedures for the award of public supply, works and service contracts.

8 In particular, Paragraph 94(2) of the WLVergG provides that the Vergabekontrollsenat is to rule at first and last instance in review proceedings, and that its decisions cannot be amended or annulled through administrative channels. Under Paragraph 94(3), the procedure in such review proceedings is governed by the Allgemeine Verwaltungsverfahrensgesetz (General Code of Administrative Procedure) and the Verwaltungsvollstreckungsgesetz (Law on Execution in Administrative Matters), save where provision is made otherwise in the WLVergG.

9 Paragraph 95 of the WLVergG is worded as follows:

1. The Vergabekontrollsenat shall be composed of seven members, nominated by the Government of the Land for a mandate of six years. Mandates are renewable. Three members, who may also be employees of the Viennese municipal administration qualified in the area, shall be appointed after consultation with the municipal administration; one member shall be appointed after consultation with the Wirtschaftskammer (Vienna Chamber of Commerce); one member shall be appointed after consultation with the Kammer für Arbeiter und Angestellte (Chamber for Workers and Employees) of Vienna; and one member shall be appointed after consultation with the Architekten- und Ingenieurkonsultenkammer (Chamber of Architects and Consulting Engineers) for the Länder of Vienna, Lower Austria and Burgenland. The chairman shall be a judge, appointed after consultation with the President of the Oberlandesgericht Wien (Higher Regional Court, Vienna) ...

2. The members and their substitutes must have extensive knowledge of the are of the award of public contracts, especially, as regards members appointed after consultation with the municipal council, from the economic and technical standpoint:

3a. Any member under long-term incapacity from exercising his functions normally on account of physical or mental disability, or who has committed serious failures to fulfil his obligations, shall be removed from his mandate by decision of the Vergabekontrollsenat. That decision must be taken after hearing the person concerned, who may not take part in the vote.

4. The members of the Vergabekontrollsenat shall carry out their functions in full independence and shall not be bound by instructions.

5. The members of the Vergabekontrollsenat are under the duty of confidentiality, in accordance with Paragraph 20(3) of the Bundesverfassungsgesetz (Federal Constitutional Law).

6. The Vergabekontrollsenat shall sit when convened by the chairman. Where a member has a personal interest, or is temporarily prevented from fulfilling his functions, his substitute must be called. Members of the Vergabekontrollsenat may not adjudicate on a proceeding which involves the award of a contract within the area of operation of the institution (in the case of employees of the Vienna municipal administration, the service, the sub-contracting undertaking or the establishment) of which they form part. If there are serious reasons for doubting the impartiality of a member, he must refrain from exercising his functions and ask to be replaced. The parties may object to members of the Vergabekontrollsenat on grounds of partiality. Where the Vergabekontrollsenat rules on the possible partiality of a member and on objections, the member concerned shall not be entitled to vote. The names of the members of the Vergabekontrollsenat and of the institution (in the case of employees of the Vienna municipal administration, the service, the sub-contracting undertaking or the establishment) of which they form part shall be published in the Amtsblatt der Stadt Wien (Official Journal of the City of Vienna) at the beginning of each calendar year on the initiative of the chairman.

7. Review proceedings must be submitted to a vote in the order determined by the chairman. Five members constitute a quorum, decisions being taken by an absolute majority. Abstention is not allowed.

The Vergabekontrollsenat does not sit in public. Sessions are minuted. Decisions must be adopted in writing and mention the names of the members of the Vergabekontrollsenat who took part in the vote. The decision must be signed by the chairman....

8. Members of the Vergabekontrollsenat perform that activity without remuneration. They are to be sworn in before the Landeshauptmann (Prime Minister of the Land).

10. The Vergabekontrollsenat shall adopt rules of procedure.

...

10 Paragraph 99 of the WLVergG, headed Jurisdiction of the Vergabekontrollsenat, provides:

1. The Vergabekontrollsenat shall have jurisdiction, on request, over review proceedings in accordance with the following provisions:

(1) until the date of the award to issue interim orders and to annul unlawful decisions of the award section of the awarding authority in order to eliminate infringements of the law within the meaning of Paragraph 101;

(2) after the award of the contract to hold that the contract was not awarded to the tenderer who submitted the best tender, by reason of an infringement of this law within the meaning of Paragraphs 47 and 48(2). In such proceedings, the Vegabekontrollsenat also has jurisdiction to make a finding, at the request of the awarding authority, whether the contract would have been awarded to a candidate or tenderer whose tender was not accepted in the absence of the legal infringements found.

2. The Vergabekontrollsenat shall be obliged to entertain review proceedings only in so far as the decision alleged to be unlawful is essential to the outcome of the contract awarding procedure.

11 Paragraph 101 of the WLVergG provides:

The Vergabekontrollsenat must set aside decisions of the awarding authority adopted in the course of a contract awarding procedure:

(1) where discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications appear in the tender notice inviting undertakings to participate in a closed procedure or a negotiated tender, or in the invitation to tender or tender specifications; or

(2) where a tenderer is passed over in breach of the criteria appearing in the tender notice in which undertakings are invited to participate in a closed procedure or a negotiated tender and the awarding authority might have come to a decision more favourable to the applicant if the infringed provisions had been complied with.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred 12 The order for reference shows that the Mayor of the City of Vienna, acting on behalf of the contracting authority, the Wiener Krankenanstaltenverbund (Vienna Associated Hospitals), published an invitation to tender for a contract entitled Implementation of project management for realisation of the overall catering-supply concept in the premises of the Viennese associated hospitals in the Official Journal of the European Communities of 24 December 1996 and in the legal notices section of the Wiener Zeitung (Viennese Journal) of 30 December 1996.

13 After the submission of tenders, including the tender by HI, the City of Vienna withdrew the invitation to tender within the period for awarding the contract. It informed HI, by letter of 25 March 1997, that it had decided to abandon the procedure for compelling reasons in accordance with the first subparagraph of Paragraph 32(3) of the WLVergG.

14 Following a request for information sent to it by HI, the City of Vienna explained the withdrawal of the invitation to tender as follows in a letter of 14 April 1997:

Having regard to the results of the project carried out by the Humanomed company in 1996, the initial plan has been modified. In the discussion of these circumstances, which took place at the end of the period laid down for the submission of tenders and during the period for the award of the contract within the coordination committee, it was found that the project would in future have to be developed in a decentralised manner. It was therefore decided not to make provision for a coordinating body and the award of the contract to an outside project leader was therefore not necessary.

It is thus clear that the reasons in question would have excluded an award if they had been known previously. If another project management were to be found necessary in the context of the "provision of meals" project, an invitation to tender with a different content would have to be carried out.

15 HI then brought a number of claims before the Vergabekontrollsenat, seeking, inter alia, the opening of review proceedings, an interim order, the annulment of certain tender documents and the annulment of the withdrawal of the invitation to tender. In an adjunct to the latter claim, HI cited new evidence proving, in its submission, that the decision to withdraw the invitation to tender was unlawful and again requesting that the latter be annulled.

16 In particular, HI referred to its suspicions that the City of Vienna had a direct or indirect stake in the capital of Humanomed. HI argued that that company had carried out substantial preparatory work for the invitation to tender, carried out project management and influenced the preparation of the masterplan, and that the City of Vienna had withdrawn the invitation to tender in order to circumvent the obligation to exclude Humanomed's tender with the aim of continuing its collaboration with that company. HI concluded therefrom that the withdrawal decision was discriminatory in so far as it was designed to favour an Austrian company to the detriment of a candidate from a Member State other than the Republic of Austria.

17 By decisions of 30 April and 10 June 1997, the Vergabekontrollsenat dismissed the claims for annulment of the withdrawal of the invitation to tender as inadmissible on the ground that, pursuant to Paragraph 101 of the WLVergG, only certain decisions adopted in the course of a tendering procedure, exhaustively listed, may be annulled.

18 The Verfassungsgerichtshof (Constitutional Court) (Austria), before which HI brought actions against those dismissal decisions, annulled them for infringement of the right to have the matter tried before a regular court. It held that the Vergabekontrollsenat was required to make a reference to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling as to whether the decision to withdraw an invitation to tender constituted a decision within the meaning of Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665.

19 The referring court states at the outset that, in the event of unlawful withdrawal of an invitation to tender, the undertaking concerned may bring a civil action for damages under national law before the ordinary courts.

20 The order for reference further shows that the Vergabekontrollsenat considers that, since detailed rules for withdrawing an invitation to tender do not appear in the directives laying down substantive rules concerning public contracts, the decision to make such a withdrawal is not a decision covered by Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 and, therefore, is not a decision which, pursuant to that directive, must be capable of being the subject-matter of review proceedings.

21 Taking the view that the City of Vienna complied with the procedure laid down in Article 12(2) of Directive 92/50, the Vergabekontrollsenat is unsure whether, assuming Community law requires review of a decision withdrawing an invitation to tender, that review may concern solely the arbitrary or fictitious character of that decision.

22 Concerning the date to be taken into consideration in order to assess the legality of such a decision, the referring court considers that the fact that the decision of the awarding authority is subject to review and thus constitutes the subject-matter of the dispute would lead to the date of that decision being used, but concedes that the principle of effectiveness, as contained in the recitals in the preamble to Directive 89/665, would lead rather to the date of the decision of the review body being used.

23 In the light of those considerations, the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

(1) Does Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665/EEC... require the decision of a contracting authority to cancel the procedure for the award of a contract for services to be reviewable in review proceedings leading, if appropriate, to its being set aside?

(2) If Question 1 is answered affirmatively, is there any provision of Directive 89/665 or of Directive 92/50/EEC which precludes a review limited to examination of the issue whether cancellation of the award procedure was arbitrary or a sham?

(3) If Question 1 is answered affirmatively, which is the relevant moment in time for assessing whether the decision of the contracting authority to cancel he award procedure is lawful?

Admissibility of the questions referred 24 As a preliminary, it must be examined whether the Vergabekontrollsenat constitutes a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC, and thus whether its questions are admissible.

25 It is settled case-law that, in order to determine whether a body making a reference for a preliminary ruling is a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC, which is a question governed by Community law alone, the Court takes account of a number of factors, such as whether the body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, whether it applies rules of law and whether it is independent (see, in particular, Case C-54/96 Dorsch Consult v Bundesbaugesellschaft Berlin [1997] ECR I-4961, paragraph 23, and Case C-103/97 Köllensperger and Atzwanger v Gemeindeverband Bezirkskrankenhaus Schwaz [1999] ECR I-551, paragraph 17).

26 In this case, Paragraph 94 of the WLVergG clearly shows that the Vergabekontrollsenat complies with the criteria of being established by law, having compulsory jurisdiction and an inter partes procedure, and applying rules of law.

27 In addition, Paragraph 95 of the WLVergG, which governs the composition and functioning of this body, guarantees its permanence and, in conjunction with Paragraph 94(3), its independence.

28 It follows that the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien must be regarded as a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 234 EC and that its questions are admissible.

Substance

The first question

29 As the order for reference shows, the Vergabekontrollsenat wishes to know, in answer to its first question, whether the decision to withdraw an invitation to tender for a public service contract is a decision taken by the contracting authorities in respect of which Member States are required, under Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, to establish effective review procedures in their national law which are as rapid as possible.

30 In that respect, whereas Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 delimits the scope of the directive, it does not define the unlawful decisions of which annulment may be sought, confining itself to listing measures which Member States are required to take for the purposes of the review proceedings referred to in Article 1 (see, to that effect, Case C-81/98 Alcatel Austria and Others v Bundesministerium für Wissenschaft und Verkehr [1999] ECR I-7671, paragraphs 30 and 31).

31 The first question must therefore be understood as asking, essentially, whether Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 requires the decision of the awarding authority to withdraw the invitation to tender for a public service contract to be open to review proceedings, and to annulment in appropriate cases, on the ground that it infringed Community law on public contracts or the national rules transposing that law.

32 In order to reply to the question thus reformulated, it is therefore necessary to interpret the words decisions taken by the contracting authorities used in Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665.

33 The Austrian Government and the Commission essentially maintain that Member States are required to establish procedures allowing review proceedings to be brought against the withdrawal of an invitation to tender for a public service contract if that withdrawal is governed by Directive 92/50. In that respect, they consider that such withdrawal falls exclusively under national legal rules and therefore does not fall within the scope of Directive 89/665.

34 In particular, the Commission states that, in its proposal for a Council Directive 87/C 230/05 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on procedures for the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1987 C 230, p. 6), it expressly proposed that the obligation of Member States to establish review procedures should extend not only to decisions taken by the contracting authorities in breach of Community law but also to those infringing national legal rules. However, in the course of the legislative process, the obligation to establish a review mechanism was limited to its present scope, so as to cover only decisions which infringe Community law on public contracts or the national rules transposing that law.

35 The Austrian Government argues that the conclusion that the decision to withdraw an invitation to tender does not constitute a decision within the meaning of Directive 89/665 is confirmed by Article 2(1)(b) of that directive, which exclusively concerns decisions which the contracting authority adopts during the procedure for the award of a public contract, whereas a decision to withdraw an invitation to tender brings such a procedure to an end. Thus, the Government argues, where an invitation to tender is withdrawn unlawfully, the national legislature is required, under Directive 89/665, only to ensure that the candidates and tenderers are given a right to damages.

36 It should be recalled as a preliminary observation that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 places an obligation on Member States to lay down procedures enabling review of decisions taken in a tender procedure on the ground that those decisions infringed Community law on public contracts or national rules transposing that law.

37 It follows that, if a decision taken by a contracting authority in a procedure for awarding a public contract is made subject to the Community law rules on public contracts and is therefore capable of infringing them, Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 requires that that decision be capable of forming the subject-matter of an action for annulment.

38 Therefore, in order to determine whether the decision of the contracting authority to withdraw an invitation to tender for a public service contract may be regarded as one of those decisions in respect of which Member States are required, under Directive 89/665, to establish annulment action procedures, it needs to be examined whether such a decision falls within Community law rules on public contracts.

39 In that respect, it should be noted that the only provision in Directive 92/50 relating specifically to the decision to withdraw an invitation to tender is Article 12(2), which provides, inter alia, that where the contracting authorities have decided to abandon an award procedure, they must inform candidates and tenderers of the reasons for their decision as soon as possible.

40 The Court of Justice has already had occasion to define the scope of the obligation to notify reasons for abandoning the award of a contract in the context of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), in the version thereof resulting from Directive 97/52 (hereinafter Directive 93/37), which contains in Article 8(2) a provision similar to Article 12(2) of Directive 92/50. In particular, in its judgment in Case C-27/98 Fracasso and Leitschutz v Salzburger Landesregierung [1999] ECR I-5697, paragraphs 23 and 25, the Court held that Article 8(2) of Directive 93/37 does not provide that the option of the contracting authority to decide not to award a contract put out to tender, implicity allowed by Directive 93/37, is limited to exceptional cases or must necessarily be based on serious grounds.

41 It follows that, on a proper interpretation of Article 12(2) of Directive 92/50, although that provision requires the contracting authority to notify candidates and tenderers of the grounds for its decision if it decides to withdraw the invitation to tender for a public service contract, there is no implied obligation on that authority to carry the award procedure to its conclusion.

42 However, even though, apart from the duty to notify the reasons for the withdrawal of the invitation to tender, Directive 92/50 contains no specific provision concerning the substantive or formal conditions for that decision, the fact remains that the latter is still subject to fundamental rules of Community law, and in particular to the principles laid down by the EC Treaty on the right of establishment and the freedom to provide services.

43 In that regard, the Court has consistently held that the purpose of coordinating at Community level the procedures for the award of public contracts is to eliminate barriers to the freedom to provide services and goods and therefore to protect the interests of traders established in a Member State who wish to offer goods or services to contracting authorities established in another Member State (see, inter alia, Case C-380/98 University of Cambridge [2000] ECR I-8035, paragraph 16; Case C-19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I-7725, paragraph 32).

44 Directive 92/50 pursues just such an objective. As the 20th recital in its preamble shows, it is designed to eliminate practices that restrict competition in general, and participation in contracts by other Member States' nationals in particular, by improving the access of service providers to procedures for the award of contracts.

45 The Court's case-law also demonstrates that the principle of equal treatment, which underlies the directives on procedures for the award of public contracts, implies in particular an obligation of transparency in order to enable verification that it has been complied with (see, to that effect, Case C-275/98 Unitron Scandinavia and 3-S v Ministeriet for Fødevarer, Landbrug og Fiskeri [1999] ECR I-8291, paragraph 31; Case C-324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress v Telekom Austria [2000] ECR I-10745, paragraph 61).

46 In that respect, it should be noted that the duty to notify reasons for a decision to withdraw an invitation to tender, laid down by Article 12(2) of Directive 92/50, is dictated precisely by concern to ensure a minimum level of transparency in the contract-awarding procedures to which that directive applies and hence compliance with the principle of equal treatment.

47 It follows that, even though Directive 92/50 does not specifically govern the detailed procedures for withdrawing an invitation to tender for a public service contract, the contracting authorities are nevertheless required, when adopting such a decision, to comply with the fundamental rules of the Treaty in general, and the principle of non-discrimination on the ground of nationality, in particular (see, by way of analogy, concerning the conclusion of public service concessions, Telaustria and Telefonadress, paragraph 60).

48 Since the decision of a contracting authority to withdraw an invitation to tender for a public service contract is subject to the relevant substantive rules of Community law, it has to be concluded that it also falls within the rules laid down by Directive 89/665 in order to ensure compliance with the rules of Community law on public contracts.

49 That finding is corroborated, first, by the wording of the provisions of Directive 89/665. As the Court pointed out in paragraph 35 of its Alcatel Austria judgment, the provision in Article 1(1) of that directive does not lay down any restriction with regard to the nature and content of the decisions referred to therein. Nor can such a restriction be inferred from the wording of Article 2(1)(b) of that directive (see, to that effect, Alcatel Austria, paragraph 32). Moreover, a restrictive interpretation of the category of decisions in relation to which Member States must ensure the existence of review procedures would be incompatible with Article 2(1)(a) of the same directive, which requires Member States to make provision for interim relief procedures in relation to any decision taken by the contracting authorities.

50 Next, the general scheme of Directive 89/665 requires a broad interpretation of that category, in so far as Article 2(5) of that directive authorises Member States to provide that, where damages are claimed on the ground that a decision by the contracting authority was taken unlawfully, the contested decision must first be set aside.

51 To hold that Member States are not required to lay down review procedures for annulment in relation to decisions withdrawing invitations to tender would amount to authorising them, by availing themselves of the option provided for in the provision mentioned in the paragraph above, to deprive tenderers adversely affected by such decisions, adopted in breach of the rules of Community law, of the possibility of bringing actions for damages.

52 Finally, it must be held that any other interpretation would undermine the effectiveness of Directive 89/665. As the first and second recitals in its preamble show, that directive is designed to reinforce existing arrangements at both national and Community level for ensuring effective application of Community directives on the award of public contracts, in particular at the stage where infringements can still be rectified, and it is precisely in order to ensure compliance with those directives that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 requires the Member States to establish effective review procedures that are as rapid as possible (Alcatel Austria, paragraphs 33 and 34).

53 The full attainment of the objective pursued by Directive 89/665 would be compromised if it were lawful for contracting authorities to withdraw an invitation to tender for a public service contract without being subject to the judicial review procedures designed to ensure that the directives laying down substantive rules concerning public contracts and the principles underlying those directives are genuinely complied with.

54 In the light of the foregoing considerations, it must be held that the decision to withdraw an invitation to tender for a public service contract is one of those decisions in relation to which Member States are required under Directive 89/665 to establish review procedures for annulment, for the purposes of ensuring compliance with the rules of Community law on public contracts and national rules implementing that law.

55 The answer to the first question must therefore be that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 requires the decision of the contracting authority to withdraw the invitation to tender for a public service contract to be open to a review procedure, and to be capable of being annulled where appropriate, on the ground that it has infringed Community law on public contracts or national rules implementing that law.

56 By its second question, the referring court asks, essentially, whether national rules limiting the extent of the review of the legality of the withdrawal of an invitation to tender for a public service contract to mere examination of whether that decision was arbitrary is compatible with Directives 89/665 and 92/50.

57 It should be noted at the outset that questions concerning the scope of judicial review of a decision adopted in the context of a procedure for the award of public contracts are not covered by Directive 92/50, but fall solely within the scope of Directive 89/665. The second question must therefore be understood as asking whether Directive 89/665 precludes national rules from limiting review of the legality of the withdrawal of an invitation to tender to mere examination of whether that decision was arbitrary.

58 Since Directive 89/665 does no more than coordinate existing mechanisms in Member States in order to ensure the full and effective application of the directives laying down substantive rules concerning public contracts, it does not expressly define the scope of the remedies which the Member States must establish for that purpose.

59 Therefore, the question of the extent of the judicial review exercised in the context of the review procedures covered by Directive 89/665 must be examined in the light of the purpose of the latter, taking care that its effectiveness is not undermined.

60 In that respect, it should be recalled that, as is shown in the sixth recital in the preamble to, and in Article 1(1) of, Directive 89/665, the latter requires Member States to establish review procedures that are appropriate in the event of procedures for the award of public contracts being unlawful.

61 Therefore, having regard to the aim of strengthening remedies pursued by Directive 89/665, and in the absence of indications to the contrary, the scope of the judicial review to be exercised in the context of the review procedures referred to therein cannot be interpreted restrictively.

62 It follows that, even in cases where, as in the main proceedings, the relevant national legislation gives the contracting authorities a wide discretion in relation to the withdrawal of invitations to tender, the national courts must be able, pursuant to Directive 89/665, to check the compatibility of a decision to withdraw an invitation to tender with the relevant rules of Community law.

63 In those circumstances, it must be held that neither the letter nor the spirit of Directive 89/665 permits the conclusion that it is lawful for Member States to limit review of the legality of a decision to withdraw an invitation to tender to mere examination of whether it was arbitrary.

64 The answer to the second question must therefore be that Directive 89/665 precludes national legislation from limiting review of the legality of the withdrawal of an invitation to tender to mere examination of whether it was arbitrary.

The third question

65 In its third question, the referring court asks what time is to be taken into consideration for assessing the legality of the decision by the contracting authority to withdraw an invitation to tender.

66 In that respect, it is sufficient to note that, since Directive 89/665 is designed only to coordinate existing mechanisms in Member States in order to ensure that Community law in the matter of public contracts is complied with, it does not contain any provision as to the decisive moment for the purposes of assessing the legality of the decision to withdraw an invitation to tender.

67 Thus, in the absence of specific Community rules governing the matter, it is for the domestic legal system of each Member State to determine the decisive moment for the purposes of assessing the legality of the withdrawal decision, provided that the relevant national rules are not less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions (principle of equivalence) and that they do not make it practically impossible or excessively difficult to exercise rights conferred by Community law (principle of effectiveness) (see, by analogy, Case C-390/98 Banks v Coal Authority and Secretary of State for Trade and Industry [2001] ECR I-6117, paragraph 121; Case C-453/99 Courage and Crehan [2001] ECR I-6297, paragraph 29).

68 The answer to the third question must therefore be that determination of the time to be taken into consideration for assessing the legality of the decision by the contracting authority to withdraw an invitation to tender is a matter for national law, provided that the relevant national rules are not less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions and that they do not make it practically impossible or excessively difficult to exercise rights conferred by Community law.

Judgment of the Court (Fifth Chamber)
of 18 October 2001
SIAC Construction Ltd v County Council of the County of Mayo.
Reference for a preliminary ruling: Supreme Court - Ireland.
Public works contracts - Award to the most economically advantageous tender - Award criteria.
Case C-19/00.

1. Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 71/305 - Award of contracts - Principle that tenderers must be treated equally - Scope

(Council Directive 71/305)

2. Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 71/305 - Award of contracts - Award criteria - Choice of criteria by the awarding authority - Limits

(Council Directive 71/305, Art. 29(1))

3. Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public works contracts - Directive 71/305 - Award of contracts - Award criterion relating to a factual element that could be known precisely only after the contract had been awarded - Whether permissible - Conditions - Compliance with the principle that tenderers must be treated equally

(Council Directive 71/305, Art. 29(1) and (2))

1. Compliance with the principle that tenderers must be treated equally, which lies at the very heart of Directive 71/305 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by Directive 89/440, requires that tenderers be in a position of equality both when they formulate their tenders and when those tenders are being assessed by the adjudicating authority.

(see paras 33-34)

2. Article 29(1), second indent, of Directive 71/305 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by Directive 89/440, does not list exhaustively the criteria which may be accepted as criteria for the award of a public works contract. The choice of criteria made by the appointing authority may, however, relate only to criteria designed to identify the offer which is economically the most advantageous and must not confer on the adjudicating authority an unrestricted freedom of choice as regards the awarding of the contract to a tenderer.

(see paras 35-37)

3. In the case of the award of a public works contract coming within the scope of Directive 71/305 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by Directive 89/440, the use of a criterion for awarding the contract which relates to a factual element that will be known precisely only after the contract has been awarded will be compatible with the requirements of equal treatment of tenderers only on condition that the transparency and objectivity of the procedure are respected, which presupposes that the criterion is mentioned in the contract documents or contract notice, that it is there formulated in such a way as to allow all reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderers to interpret it in the same way, and that the adjudicating authority must keep to that interpretation throughout the procedure and apply the criterion in question objectively and uniformly to all tenderers.

Objectivity may be guaranteed by recourse to the professional opinion of an expert, on condition that his report is based, in all essential respects, on objective factors regarded in good professional practice as being relevant and appropriate to the assessment made.

Judgment

1 By order of 30 July 1999, received at the Court on 24 January 2000, the Irish Supreme Court referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC a question concerning the interpretation of Article 29 of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ, English Special Edition 1971 (II), p. 682), as amended by Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989 (OJ 1989 L 210, p. 1) (hereinafter referred to as Directive 71/305, as amended).

2 That question has been raised in a dispute between SIAC Construction Ltd (SIAC) and the County Council of the County of Mayo (the County Council) with regard to the procedure governing the award of a public works contract.

The legal framework

3 Article 29(1) and (2) of Directive 71/305, as amended, provides:

1. The criteria on which the authorities awarding contracts shall base the award of contracts shall be:

- either the lowest price only;

- or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract: e.g. price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit.

2. In the latter instance, the authorities awarding contracts shall state in the contract documents or in the contract notice all the criteria they intend to apply to the award, where possible in descending order of importance.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question submitted

4 On 20 February 1992 the County Council advertised in the Official Journal of the European Communities for tenders for a public works contract to be awarded by open procedure and involving, inter alia, the laying of sewers, storm overflows, ventilating columns, storm water drains, rising mains and water supply pipes.

5 This contract was a measure-and-value contract, under which the quantities estimated for each item are set out in the bill of quantities. For this type of contract, the tenderer completes the bill of quantities by filling in a rate for each item and a total price for the estimated quantity. The price payable is determined by measuring the actual quantities on completion of the work and valuing them at the rates quoted in the tender.

6 Under the heading Award criteria (other than price), the contract notice provided that:

the contract shall be awarded to the competent contractor submitting a tender which is adjudged to be the most advantageous to the Council in respect of cost and technical merit, subject to the approval of the Minister for the Environment.

7 The tendering documentation sent to tenderers consisted of, inter alia, instructions to tenderers, the bill of quantities and schedule of basic prices, the specifications and terms and conditions of the contract.

8 Twenty-four contractors submitted tenders. The three lowest tenders were submitted by SIAC, Mulcair and Pierce Contracting Ltd. Following arithmetic checking and correcting, the tender totals were IEP 5 378 528 for SIAC, IEP 5 508 919 for Mulcair, and IEP 5 623 966 for Pierce Contracting Ltd.

9 In his report, the consulting engineer appointed by the County Council to judge the tenders stated, among other things, that the three lowest tenders were equal from the point of view of their technical merit.

10 On the other hand, he stated that he had serious reservations regarding the tender submitted by SIAC and that the pricing system which it had used certainly greatly reduces the freedom of the consulting engineer to properly and fully administer the contract in a way that, in his view, is the most economically advantageous to the Mayo County Council.

11 He also pointed out that, under the heading Materials, a provisional sum of IEP 90 000 was included to which each tenderer was instructed to add a percentage for overheads, profit, and so on. SIAC, however, deducted this provisional sum in the amount of 100%. The consulting engineer took the view that SIAC was not entitled to make such a deduction.

12 The consulting engineer's report went on to state that the approach adopted by SIAC greatly reduced control over all the items in the bill of quantities, which would in one way or another vary on final measurement. More specifically, SIAC had zero-rated 27.5% of the items, whereas Mulcair, for example, had zero-rated only 18% of the items and had, according to the consulting engineer, priced all major items of measured work.

13 The report of the consulting engineer concluded that Mulcair had submitted a tender that was more balanced than that of SIAC, and that Mulcair's tender might give better value for money and might even cost less.

14 In his recommendations, the consulting engineer stated that the tender submitted by Pierce Contracting Ltd had to be rejected simply on the ground that its price, as corrected, came to IEP 115 047.33 more than that of Mulcair. He recommended that the tender submitted by SIAC should not be accepted on the following grounds:

- SIAC's failure to submit a time for completion at the date of tender;

- SIAC's withdrawal, by means of a 100% reduction, of a provisional sum of IEP 90 000 against which it was allowed only to add a percentage for overheads, profit, and so forth;

- SIAC's failure to price major items of measured work throughout the various bills of quantities, which distorted its bill of quantities and rendered proper management and control extremely difficult, if, indeed, not impossible.

15 The consulting engineer recommended for those reasons that Mulcair's corrected tender be accepted.

16 The County Council accordingly entered into a contract with Mulcair. This contract has now been completed.

17 In response to a request by SIAC, the County Council informed it, by letter of 30 August 1993, of the reasons why it had not accepted its tender.

18 SIAC thereupon instituted two sets of proceedings before the Irish High Court challenging the County Council's decision to award the contract in question to Mulcair.

19 By judgment and order of the High Court of 17 June 1997, SIAC's two actions were dismissed.

20 The High Court ruled that, in choosing criteria which were stipulated in the contract notice and amplified in other documents, the County Council had exercised a discretionary power of selection which was largely predicated on the exercise of professional judgment.

21 The High Court considered that it had to confine itself to examining whether the County Council's decision was unreasonable. It concluded that this was not the case.

22 SIAC appealed to the Supreme Court against the judgment and order of the High Court.

23 SIAC submitted in its appeal that the County Council was required to accept the lowest-priced tender, which happened to be that which SIAC itself had submitted. Since it had been accepted that all tenderers had the requisite technical merit, the only relevant criterion could be cost, which had to be understood as synonymous with the tender price. The criterion of cost/price could not, in any event, have referred to the ultimate cost to the County Council.

24 By purporting to take account of ultimate cost, the County Council had, according to SIAC, departed from the criteria that had been specified as award criteria. In so doing, it infringed the principles of transparency, foreseeability of the adjudication process, and equality of tenderers.

25 Against this, the County Council claimed that it was entitled to exercise a discretion and to award the contract on the basis of a recommendation from its consulting engineer as to which tender the latter adjudged to be the most advantageous in respect of cost and technical merit. It also submitted that, in the particular context of a measure-and-value contract, the cost should be understood as being the cost of the contract to the County Council, that is to say, the contract price.

26 The County Council further submitted that it followed, inter alia, from the specifications that, in examining the bills of quantities, the consulting engineer was entitled to make comparisons between the prices quoted and his own estimates of cost. SIAC, it contended, was also aware from the outset that the criterion of cost referred to the probable cost of the contract to the County Council.

27 In those circumstances, the Supreme Court decided to stay proceedings and to submit the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

In a situation where an authority is awarding a contract pursuant to the provisions of the second indent of Article 29(1) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC, Chapter 2, of 26 July 1971 as applied in the national law of a Member State, and where the authority shall have specified the "Award criteria (other than price)" as being that the contract would be awarded to "the competent contractor submitting a tender which is adjudged to be the most advantageous to the" (awarding authority) "in respect of cost and technical merit", and where the three lowest tenderers shall have been contractors of accepted competence and shall have submitted valid tenders of accepted technical merit, and where the tender prices of the three lowest tenderers shall not have diverged greatly, is the awarding authority obliged to award the contract to the contractor who shall have tendered the lowest price or is the awarding authority entitled to award the contract to the contractor with the second lowest price on the basis of the professional report of its consulting engineer that the ultimate cost of the contract to the awarding authority is likely to be less if the contract is awarded to the contractor who tendered the second lowest price than it would be if the contract were awarded to the contractor who tendered the lowest price?

The question submitted for preliminary ruling

28 By its question, the national court is asking essentially whether Article 29(1) and (2) of Directive 71/305, as amended, must be construed as allowing an awarding authority which has chosen to award a contract to the most economically advantageous tender to award that contract to the tenderer who has submitted the tender the ultimate cost of which is likely to be the lowest according to the professional opinion of an expert.

29 It should be noted at the outset that the parties to the main proceedings disagree as to whether the terms price and cost used in the tender documentation refer to the total price of the tender or to the ultimate cost of the contract. The High Court confined itself in this regard to holding that the terms price and cost had been used interchangeably.

30 In proceedings under Article 234 EC, the Court cannot resolve differences concerning the interpretation of terms used in tender documents, such interpretation being a matter for the national court.

31 It is, however, common ground that the requirements of Article 29(1) and (2) of Directive 71/305, as amended, must be examined in the light of the fact that the contract at issue in the main proceedings was awarded to a tenderer in consideration of the fact that its tender was, in the opinion of an expert, liable to represent the lowest ultimate cost.

32 The Court has held in this regard that the purpose of coordinating at Community level the procedures for the award of public contracts is to eliminate barriers to the freedom to provide services and goods and therefore to protect the interests of traders established in a Member State who wish to offer goods or services to contracting authorities established in another Member State (see, inter alia, Case C-380/98 University of Cambridge [2000] ECR I-8035, paragraph 16).

33 In accordance with that objective, the duty to observe the principle of equal treatment of tenderers lies at the very heart of Directive 71/305, as amended (Case C-243/89 Commission v Denmark [1993] ECR I-3353, paragraph 33).

34 More precisely, tenderers must be in a position of equality both when they formulate their tenders and when those tenders are being assessed by the adjudicating authority (see, to this effect, Case C-87/94 Commission v Belgium [1996] ECR I-2043, paragraph 54).

35 As for the criteria which may be accepted as criteria for the award of a public works contract to what is the most economically advantageous tender, Article 29(1), second indent, of Directive 71/305, as amended, does not list these exhaustively.

36 Although that provision thus leaves it to the adjudicating authorities to choose the criteria on which they propose to base their award of the contract, that choice may relate only to criteria aimed at identifying the offer which is economically the most advantageous (Case 31/87 Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635, paragraph 19).

37 Further, an award criterion having the effect of conferring on the adjudicating authority an unrestricted freedom of choice as regards the awarding of the contract in question to a tenderer would be incompatible with Article 29 of Directive 71/305, as amended (Beentjes, cited above, paragraph 26).

38 The mere fact that an award criterion relates to a factual element which will be known precisely only after the contract has been awarded cannot be regarded as conferring any such unrestricted freedom on the adjudicating authority.

39 The Court has already ruled that reliability of supplies is one of the criteria which may be taken into account in determining the most economically advantageous tender (Case C-324/93 Evans Medical and Macfarlan Smith [1995] ECR I-563, paragraph 44).

40 However, in order for the use of such a criterion to be compatible with the requirement that tenderers be treated equally, it is first of all necessary, as indeed Article 29(2) of Directive 71/305, as amended, provides, that that criterion be mentioned in the contract documents or contract notice.

41 Next, the principle of equal treatment implies an obligation of transparency in order to enable compliance with it to be verified (see, by analogy, Case C-275/98 Unitron Scandinavia and 3-S [1999] ECR I-8291, paragraph 31).

42 More specifically, this means that the award criteria must be formulated, in the contract documents or the contract notice, in such a way as to allow all reasonably well-informed and normally diligent tenderers to interpret them in the same way.

43 This obligation of transparency also means that the adjudicating authority must interpret the award criteria in the same way throughout the entire procedure (see, along these lines, Commission v Belgium, cited above, paragraphs 88 and 89).

44 Finally, when tenders are being assessed, the award criteria must be applied objectively and uniformly to all tenderers. Recourse by an adjudicating authority to the opinion of an expert for the evaluation of a factual matter that will be known precisely only in the future is in principle capable of guaranteeing compliance with that condition.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

45 In the light of all the foregoing, the answer to the question submitted is that Article 29(1) and (2) of Directive 71/305, as amended, must be interpreted as permitting an adjudicating authority which has chosen to award a contract to the most economically advantageous tender to award that contract to the tenderer who has submitted the tender the ultimate cost of which, in the professional opinion of an expert, is likely to be the lowest, provided that the equal treatment of tenderers has been ensured, which presupposes that the transparency and objectivity of the procedure have been guaranteed and in particular that:

- this award criterion was clearly stated in the contract notice or contract documents; and

- the professional opinion is based in all essential points on objective factors regarded in good professional practice as relevant and appropriate to the assessment made.

Costs

46 The costs incurred by the Irish, French and Austrian Governments and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT (Fifth Chamber),

in answer to the question referred to it by the Supreme Court of Ireland by order of 30 July 1999, hereby rules:

Article 29(1) and (2) of Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989, must be interpreted as permitting an adjudicating authority which has chosen to award a contract to the most economically advantageous tender to award that contract to the tenderer who has submitted the tender the ultimate cost of which, in the professional opinion of an expert, is likely to be the lowest, provided that the equal treatment of tenderers has been ensured, which presupposes that the transparency and objectivity of the procedure have been guaranteed and in particular that:

- this award criterion was clearly stated in the contract notice or contract documents; and

- the professional opinion is based in all essential points on objective factors regarded in good professional practice as relevant and appropriate to the assessment made.

Judgment of the Court of First Instance (Fifth Chamber)
First Instance (Fifth Chamber)First Instance (Fifth Chamber)2003.
Strabag Benelux NV v Council of the European Union.
Case T-183/00.

In Case T-183/00,

Strabag Benelux NV, established in Stabroek (Belgium), represented by A. Delvaux and V. Bertrand, lawyers, with an address for service in Luxembourg, applicant,

v

Council of the European Union, represented by F. Van Craeyenest and M. Arpio Santacruz, acting as Agents, assisted by J. Stuyck, lawyer, defendant,

APPLICATION for the annulment of the Council Decision of 12 April 2000 awarding to the company Entreprises Louis De Waele the contract forming the subject-matter of invitation to tender No 197865 issued on 30 July 1999 (OJ 1999 S 146) for general installation and maintenance work in the Council's buildings, and a claim for compensation for the damage allegedly suffered by the applicant as a consequence of the Council's conduct,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

(Fifth Chamber),

composed of: J.D. Cooke, President, R. García-Valdecasas and P. Lindh, Judges,

Registrar: D. Christensen, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 7 February 2002,

gives the following

Judgment

Costs

87 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the applicant has been unsuccessful and the Council has applied for costs, the applicant must be ordered to pay the costs incurred by the Council.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

(Fifth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Dismisses the application;

2. Orders the applicant to bear its own costs and pay those incurred by the Council.

Legal context

1 The award of public works contracts by the Council is governed by the provisions contained in the first section of Title IV (Articles 56 to 64a) of the Financial Regulation of 21 December 1977 applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 1977 L 356, p. 1), last amended before this action was brought by Council Regulation (EC, ECSC, Euratom) No 2673/1999 of 13 December 1999 (OJ 1999 L 326, p. 1).

2 Under Article 56 of the Financial Regulation, `each institution shall comply with the same obligations as are imposed upon bodies in the Member States' by the directives on public works contracts, when concluding contracts for which the amount involved is equal to or greater than the thresholds provided for by those directives.

3 In the present case the relevant legislation is Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), as amended by European Parliament and Council Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1).

4 Article 8 of Directive 93/37, as amended by Directive 97/52, provides:

`1. The contracting authority shall, within 15 days of the date on which a written request is received, inform any eliminated candidate or tenderer of the reasons for rejection of this application or his tender, and any tenderer who has made an admissible tender of the characteristics and relative advantages of the tender selected as well as the name of the successful tenderer.

However, contracting authorities may decide that certain information on the contract award, referred to in the preceding subparagraph, be withheld where release of such information would impede law enforcement or otherwise be contrary to the public interest or would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of particular undertakings, public or private, or might prejudice fair competition between contractors.

2. ...

3. For each contract awarded, the contracting authorities shall draw up a written report which shall include at least the following:

- the name and address of the contracting authority, the subject and value of the contract,

- the names of the candidates or tenderers admitted and the reasons for their selection,

- the names of the candidates or tenderers rejected and the reasons for their rejection,

- the name of the successful tenderer and the reasons for his tender having been selected...'.

5 Article 18 of Directive 93/37, as amended, provides:

`Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down [in Articles 30 to 32 of this Directive]...'.

6 Article 30 of Directive 93/37 provides:

`1. The criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) either the lowest price only;

(b) or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract: e.g. price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit.

2. In the case referred to in paragraph 1(b), the contracting authority shall state in the contract documents or in the contract notice all the criteria it intends to apply to the award, where possible in descending order of importance.

Facts

7 By Notice No 107865, published on 30 July 1999 (OJ 1999 S 146), the General Secretariat of the Council issued a restricted invitation to tender for general installation and maintenance works in the Council's buildings in Brussels; that notice replaced a notice published on 4 June 1999 (OJ 1999 S 107). The procedure was to result in the conclusion of a five-year framework contract, renewable for 12-month periods. It was also stated in the notice that `[i]n 1998, the cost of the general installation and maintenance work was in the order of EUR 5 000 000'.

8 The contract documents relating to the invitation to tender provided, in point IV.5 entitled `Selection criteria':

`(a) The [General Secretariat of the Council] shall select from among the tenders submitted the one which it considers the most advantageous in the light of the information provided by the company. The following criteria are regarded as especially important:

- the conformity of the tender;

- the price of the tender;

- the experience and competence of the permanent team in providing services similar to those described in the contract documents;

- the experience and technical competence of the undertaking;

- the proposal made with regard to the safety-coordinator;

- the quality of any subcontractors and suppliers proposed;

- the technical quality of the equipment and materials proposed;

- the measures proposed for observing the prescribed time-limits for the contract stages.

9 Three undertakings submitted tenders conforming with the specifications: Renco SpA (`Renco'), Entreprises Louis de Waele (`De Waele') and the applicant.

10 The applicant's tender, which was submitted on 11 January 2000, was in the amount of EUR 4 468 110.74 per annum.

11 By decision of 12 April 2000 (`the contested decision'), taken on the basis of an opinion of 5 April 2000 of the Advisory Committee on Procurements and Contracts (`CCAM') and a report of the same date forwarded to the Committee (`the report to the CCAM'), the Council awarded the contract to De Waele, whose tender was in the amount of EUR 4 088 938.10 per annum. That decision was the subject of Notice No 054869 published on 29 April 2000 (OJ 2000 S 84).

12 By letters of 14 April 2000 the Council informed the applicant and Renco that their tenders had been rejected.

13 By letter of 26 April 2000 the applicant asked the Council for a copy of the decision awarding the contract and for the reasons on which the decision was based.

14 By letter of 11 May 2000 the Council gave the following answer to that request:

`In accordance with the provisions of Directive 93/37... , the criteria for awarding the contract were set out in the contract documents relating to the invitation to tender (p. 16 of doc. IMM 99/2046).

Consequently, the three tenders received on 11 January 2000 were analysed and compared in the light of those eight criteria. The outcome was that the contract was awarded to De Waele, which had submitted the most economically advantageous tender.

For your information, I would add that your tender was also ranked highly for the qualitative evaluation criteria but was unsuccessful because of its price.'

15 By letter of 19 June 2000 the applicant asked the Council to send it a copy of `all the documents which led to the rejection of [its tender] and to the award of the contract to... De Waele'.

16 By letter of 4 July 2000, the Council replied to that letter in the following terms:

`...

The analysis carried out by the staff of the General Secretariat of the Council led to the following assessment of your tender in relation to the other two competing tenders, for each of the eight criteria on which the selection was based:

- administrative conformity of the tender; all three candidates equal,

- price of the tender; second,

- experience and technical competence of the permanent team; first,

- experience and technical competence of the company; equal first,

- proposal of safety-coordinator; first,

- quality of subcontractors and suppliers; first,

- technical quality of the plant and materials proposed; all three candidates equal,

- measures proposed in order to observe the time-limits: all three candidates equal.

To sum up, the staff of the General Secretariat of the Council concluded that:

> "The [applicant's] proposal, for almost all the criteria, is ranked in first position: however, it was not successful because of its higher cost" (about 10% more than De Waele's proposal).

I am unable to accede to your request for all the documents, in the light of Article 8 of Directive [93/37] as amended by Directive 97/52 ...'.

Proceedings and forms of order sought by the parties

17 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 13 July 2000 the applicant brought the present action.

18 Upon hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court (Fifth Chamber) decided to open the oral procedure. By way of the measures of organisation of procedure provided for in Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, the Court asked the Council to furnish certain information, which was supplied within the time allowed.

19 The parties presented oral argument and their replies to the questions put by the Court at the hearing held on 7 February 2002. At the hearing the applicant withdrew three of its pleas alleging that:

- by awarding the contract to a company whose tender did not conform to the contract documents, the Council acted in breach of the terms of those documents and the principle of equality between tenderers;

- by placing De Waele and the applicant equal in respect of the first, fourth and eighth criteria of the contract documents, the Council committed three manifest errors of assessment;

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

- by accepting abnormally low prices from De Waele, the Council infringed Article 30(4) of Directive 93/37.

The Court took formal notice of the withdrawal of those pleas in the minutes of the hearing.

20 The applicant claims that the Court should:

- declare the applications for annulment and for compensation admissible and well founded;

- annul the contested decision;

- subject to the applicant's claiming a higher sum, order the Council to pay the sum of BEF 153 421 286 or EUR 3 803 214 together with interest thereon at the rate of 6% from 12 April 2000;

- order the Council to pay the costs.

21 The Commission contends that the Court should:

- declare the application for annulment inadmissible or, at least, unfounded;

- declare the application for compensation unfounded;

- order the applicant to pay the costs.

The application for annulment

Admissibility

Arguments of the parties

22 The Council challenges the admissibility of the action for annulment on the ground that the applicant is not an addressee of the contested decision and is not directly and individually concerned by it.

23 It points out that it adopted, first, the contested decision, addressed to De Waele, and, secondly, the two decisions of 14 April 2000, addressed to the applicant and Renco, informing them that their tenders had been rejected. Referring to the judgment of the Court of First Instance in Case T-19/95 Adia interim v Commission [1996] ECR II-321, it maintains that the applicant should have contested the decision of 14 April 2000 which had been addressed to it, or at least that decision and the contested decision.

24 The applicant maintains that it is directly and individually concerned by the contested decision. It contends that that decision includes a series of decisions, namely a positive decision to award the contract to De Waele and two negative decisions not to award the contract to the other two tenderers. Therefore, the applicant is an addressee of the contested decision. Consequently, the Council's argument that it ought to have challenged the decision of 14 April 2000 not to award it the contract is fallacious. That negative decision and the positive award decision are, in fact, the two facets of a single decision.

25 The applicant adds that the contested decision has binding legal effects which affect its position inasmuch as it rejects the applicant's tender, which also ceases to produce its effects.

26 In the alternative, the applicant states that, because of its special status as a tenderer, it is individually concerned by the contested decision. Furthermore, since the effect of the decision has the direct effect of eliminating the applicant from the award of the contract, without requiring the intervention of any authority, it directly concerns the applicant.

Findings of the Court

27 Under the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC, any natural or legal person may institute proceedings for the annulment of a decision addressed to that person or of a decision which, although in the form of a decision addressed to another person, is of direct and individual concern to the former (Case C-403/96 P Glencore Grain v Commission [1998] ECR I-2405, paragraph 40).

28 It should be pointed out that a decision relating to the award of a contract to a single tenderer inevitably and inseparably entails a corresponding decision not to award the contract to the other tenderers. Since the Council awards the contract to one tenderer, the offers of the other tenderers are automatically rejected, and there is no need to adopt other decisions in that regard. It must therefore be held that the formal communication of the result of the tendering procedure to the rejected tenderers does not mean that a decision other than the decision awarding the contract will be adopted for the express purpose of stating a rejection.

29 In the present case the contested decision was formally addressed to De Waele. Therefore, it had the effect of awarding the contract in question to De Waele and, by so doing, of rejecting the offers of the other two tenderers. It follows that the contested decision is of direct and individual concern to the applicant and that it may be the subject of an action for annulment brought by the applicant.

30 It follows from the foregoing that the application is admissible.

Substance

31 The applicant puts forward three pleas in support of its action for annulment. The first plea alleges the non-existence of the contested decision. The second alleges infringement of the duty to state reasons and of Article 8(1) of Directive 93/37, and the third alleges infringement of Articles 18 and 30 of Directive 93/37 and of the contract documents.

The first plea, alleging the non-existence of the contested decision

- Arguments of the parties

32 In its reply the applicant asks the Court to declare that the contested decision does not exist.

33 It points out that, in its letter of 4 July 2000, the Council referred to a departmental document in which it had concluded: `[The applicant's] proposal is, for almost all the criteria, ranked first: however, it was not successful because its price was higher'. According to the applicant, that was probably an extract from the award decision. It points out that the Council did not, however, produce that decision or the report required under Article 8(3) of Directive 93/37. In those circumstances, it asks the Court either to declare that the decision does not exist or to order the Council to produce the document.

34 At the hearing the applicant conceded that this plea was not put forward in the application initiating the proceedings. However, it points out that the non-existence of the contested decision only emerged during the proceedings and in particular because the document in question was not communicated.

35 In its rejoinder the Council challenges the admissibility of this plea. It points out that Article 48(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance prohibits the introduction of new pleas in law in the course of proceedings unless they are based on matters of law or of fact which come to light in the course of the procedure. Since this new plea refers to the letter of 4 July 2000, which is annexed to the application, it clearly is not based on a new matter. The Council also states that the record of the decision to award the contract in question does not exist in the form of a single document but in the form of three documents, namely the report to the CCAM, the CCAM's favourable opinion and the Notice of contract awarded published in the Official Journal of the European Communities (see paragraph 11 above). It adds that those three documents, which contain all the information referred to in Article 8(3) of Directive 93/37, were drawn up in connection with the invitation to tender in question and ensure transparency with regard to the method of and the reasons underlying the award of the contract and the rejection of the other tenders.

36 At the hearing, in reply to a question put by the Court, the Council stated that the formal decision to award the decision to De Waele consists only in a framework contract signed on 12 April 2000 between De Waele and the Council. The Court took formal note of that statement.

- Findings of the Court

37 As a preliminary point it should be noted that , according to settled case-law, the Community judicature, drawing inspiration from the principles identified by the national legal systems, declares that acts tainted by irregularities which are particularly serious and obvious are non-existent (Case 15/85 Consorzio Cooperative d'Abruzzo v Commission [1987] ECR 1005, paragraph 10, and Case C-137/92 P Commission v BASF and Others [1994] ECR I-2555, paragraph 49). This plea relates to public policy and it is for the Court, in an action for annulment brought under Article 230 EC, to consider, of its own motion, the issue of the existence of the contested measure if the parties put forward sufficient evidence in that regard (see, to that effect, Case T-9/89 Hüls v Commission [1992] ECR II-499, paragraph 384).

38 In the present case the arguments expounded by the applicant, particularly during the hearing, provide sufficient support for the suggestion that the contested decision is non-existent. It is therefore necessary to ascertain whether, in the present case, the contested decision is tainted within the meaning of the case-law cited in the previous paragraph, without its being necessary to consider the matter - raised by the Council - of the admissibility of this plea.

39 It should be pointed out that the rules governing the procedure for comparing tenders for public works contracts ensure the compliance at every stage with the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers and the principle of transparency so as to afford equality of opportunity to all tenderers (see, to that effect, Case C-87/94 Commission v Belgium [1996] ECR I-2043, paragraph 54).

40 In the present case the applicant puts forward, in essence, two arguments in support of the plea alleging the non-existence of the contested decision: the lack of a formal decision awarding the contract in question to De Waele and the Council's failure to draw up a report in accordance with Article 8(3) of Directive 93/37.

41 As regards the first argument, the first point to note is that, contrary to what the applicant claims, the passage from the Council's letter of 4 July 2000 to which it refers (see paragraph 33 above) is not an extract from the decision awarding the contract but comes from the report to the CCAM. In order to determine whether the contested decision is tainted with particularly serious and obvious irregularities, it is necessary to examine the context in which it was adopted.

42 The tendering procedure culminates in the drawing-up of an agreement between the Council and the successful tenderer in respect of the works stipulated in the contract documents. Under the rules laid down in the contract documents, tenderers are required, when submitting their tenders, to transmit to the Council a signed offer which commits them to carrying out the works in accordance with the contract documents and with the prices and rates indicated by the tenderers in their tenders where appropriate. When, at the end of the tendering procedure, a tender is accepted, it only remains for the Council to sign the successful tenderer's offer in order to conclude an agreement binding the parties.

43 It is not disputed that, in this case, the Council did not adopt any formal decision awarding the contract in question other than by signing the framework agreement with De Waele on 12 April 2000.

44 Therefore, the Court considers that, as the Council maintains, the signing of the agreement with De Waele and the decision to award the contract were simultaneous and that that signing is deemed to constitute the award of the contract. It should also be pointed out that the decision awarding the contract was taken after receipt of a copy of the report to the CCAM and the CCAM's favourable opinion and, therefore, in accordance with a procedure which complied with the principles of non-discrimination and transparency. It follows that, contrary to the applicant's claim, the contested decision is not tainted with irregularities.

45 As for the applicant's second argument, alleging failure to draw up a report pursuant to Article 8(3) of Directive 93/37, the Court considers that it cannot be accepted. In that regard, it should be pointed out that, under that provision, for each contract awarded, the contracting authority is required to draw up a report (in the English version, `a written report') containing at least the details listed in the provision. For the contract in the present case the report to the CCAM drawn up by the Council includes 12 annexes, amongst them the Contract Notice, the record of the opening of the tendering procedure and a copy of the framework agreement concluded with De Waele. It must be stated that all the information required under Article 8(3) of Directive 93/37 (see paragraph 4 above) was contained in the report to the CCAM, in the CCAM's favourable opinion and in the Notice of contract awarded. The Council cannot be criticised for having reproduced that information in three documents rather than in one. In any event, the requirement to draw up a report under that provision arises out of the concern to ensure compliance with the principles of non-discrimination and transparency in the awarding of public works contracts. It should be noted that the applicant has not adduced the slightest evidence that those principles were infringed and, as the Court has already pointed out in paragraph 44 above, the procedure awarding the contract to De Waele complied with those principles.

46 It follows from the above that the plea alleging the non-existence of the contested decision is unfounded.

The second plea, alleging infringement of the duty to state reasons

- Arguments of the parties

47 The applicant maintains that the contested decision should be annulled owing to the absence of a statement of reasons or, at the very least, to the inadequacy of the reasoning.

48 It claims that the reasoning given in the Council's letter of 11 May 2000 does not meet the requirements for stating reasons laid down by Article 253 EC and Article 8(1) of Directive 93/37 (see paragraph 4 above) in that it does not give the characteristics and relative advantages of De Waele's tender, but merely makes the general statement that it was the most economically advantageous.

49 The additional information given in the letter of 4 July 2000, following the applicant's request of 19 June 2000, cannot be taken into consideration because it was communicated outside the 15-day period calculated from the first request for reasons. In any event, the reasoning contained in that letter is inadequate, because it neither explains why the other tenders were considered to be of equal merit to the applicant's nor identifies the undertaking which ranked second in respect of the third, fifth and sixth criteria or the undertaking ranked equal with the applicant in respect of the fourth criterion. Furthermore, the applicant points out that, contrary to the Council's argument, its request of 19 June 2000 did not have the effect of reopening that 15-day period, since it sought to obtain not additional reasons but disclosure of the award procedure file.

50 As a preliminary point, the Council recalls the mechanism established by Directive 93/37 in respect of the obligation to state reasons. Under Article 8(1) of that directive the contracting authority is required, first of all, to inform the eliminated tenderer, by a simple, unreasoned letter, that his tender has been rejected. It need give reasons for its decision to reject the tender only to tenderers who expressly request that, and that within a period of 15 days from the time of the request. Furthermore, it is settled case-law that the purpose of the duty to state reasons is to make the persons concerned aware of the reasons for the measure and thereby enable them to defend their rights and to enable the Court to exercise its supervisory jurisdiction (Adia interim v Commission, cited above, paragraphs 31 and 32).

51 Moreover, the Council claims that it gave adequate reasons, in its letter of 11 May 2000 - which had clearly been sent within the prescribed period of 15 days -, for its decision rejecting the applicant's tender. It points out that, in that letter, it clearly stated the name of the successful tenderer, the procedure which was followed, the reasons for rejecting the applicant's tender and the reasons for accepting De Waele's tender. The Council refers, in that regard, to paragraph 35 of the judgment in Adia interim v Commission, cited above. It adds that the applicant was obviously able to understand that, in the light, particularly, of the high price of its tender, it could not be regarded as the most economically advantageous.

52 According to the Council, the additional information contained in its letter of 4 July 2000 was communicated within the prescribed period of 15 days. The purpose of the letter was, in fact, to reply to a second request made by the applicant in its letter of 19 June 2000. It points out that, in that letter, it gave the applicant details of the comparison it had made between the various tenders.

53 The Council states that, in any event, the possible inadequacy of the reasons for rejecting the applicant's tender cannot invalidate the decision to award the contract to a third tenderer. The annulment of the decision to award the contract on the grounds of inadequate reasoning a posteriori for a decision to reject another tender is clearly a disproportionate penalty.

- Findings of the Court

54 It is apparent from Article 8(1) of Directive 93/37, as amended by Directive 97/52, and from the judgment in Adia interim v Commission, cited above, that the Council fulfils its obligation to state reasons if it first informs eliminated tenderers immediately of the fact that their tender has been rejected by a simple unreasoned communication and then subsequently, if expressly requested to do so, informs tenderers of the relative characteristics and advantages of the successful tender and the name of the successful tenderer within 15 days of receipt of a written request.

55 Such a manner of proceeding satisfies the purpose of the duty to state reasons enshrined in Article 253 EC, according to which the reasoning followed by the authority which adopted the measure must be disclosed in a clear and unequivocal fashion so as, on the one hand, to make the persons concerned aware of the reasons for the measure and thereby enable them to defend their rights and, on the other, to enable the Court to exercise its supervisory jurisdiction (Case T-166/94 Koyo Seiko v Council [1995] ECR II-2129, paragraph 103, and Aida interim v Commission, cited above, paragraph 32).

56 Consequently, in order to determine whether the Council fulfilled its obligation to state reasons, the Court considers that it is necessary to examine the letter of 11 May 2000 sent to the applicant in response to its express request of 26 April 2000 for a copy of the decision awarding the contract and for the reasons for the decision.

57 Clearly, in the letter of 11 May 2000 (see paragraph 14 above) the Council gave a sufficiently detailed statement of the reasons for which it had rejected the applicant's tender and stated the characteristics and advantages of De Waele's tender. That letter clearly indicates the procedure which was followed in evaluating the tenders of the three tenderers and the fact that De Waele's tender was successful because it was the most economically advantageous. The Court considers that the applicant could immediately identify the specific reason for the rejection of its tender, namely the level of its price in relation to that of De Waele. The adequacy of that statement of reasons is not affected by the fact that, on 4 July 2000, the Council provided, at the express request of the applicant, an even more detailed explanation of the evaluation of its tender.

58 In any event, and contrary to what the applicant claims (see paragraph 49 above), the duty to state reasons must be assessed in the light of the information available to the applicant at the time when the action was brought. If, as in the present case, the applicant, before bringing an action but after the date laid down by Article 8(1) of Directive 93/37, asks the institution concerned for additional explanations about a decision and receives those explanations, he cannot ask the Court not to take them into consideration when determining whether the statement of reasons is adequate; however, the institution is not permitted to substitute an entirely new statement of reasons for the original statement of reasons, but that is not the position in this case.

59 It is apparent from the foregoing that the second plea, alleging infringement of the duty to state reasons, must be rejected.

The third plea, alleging infringement of Articles 18 and 30 of Directive 93/37 and of the contract documents

- Arguments of the parties

60 The applicant maintains that, since the Council used the method of the most economically advantageous tender, as defined in Article 30(1) of Directive 93/37, it should - in accordance with Article 18 of the Directive - have compared the three tenders submitted in the light of each of the eight criteria set out in the contract documents (see paragraph 8 above). However, it is clear from the Council's letters of 11 May and 4 July 2000 that this rule was not observed in the present case, because the decisive criterion for awarding the contract was the price and the assessment of that criterion was not counterbalanced by the assessment of the other criteria. By so doing, the Council infringed Articles 18 and 30 of Directive 93/37 and also the contract documents.

61 The applicant states that, according to Article 30(2) of Directive 93/37, when a contract is awarded to the most economically advantageous tender, all the criteria on which the award is based are to be stated in the contract documents `where possible in descending order of importance'. The applicant considers that, since, in the present case, the contract documents did not list the award criteria in descending order of importance, the eight criteria selected all had the same value. It follows that, pursuant to that rule, the Council should have awarded the contract to the applicant since, as is clear from the report to the CCAM, it was ranked first for seven award criteria whereas De Waele was ranked first for only five.

62 In its reply the applicant points out that, contrary to what the Council states, it is not apparent from the report to the CCAM that, for the three criteria in which it ranks higher than De Waele, the differences between the two companies are insignificant. Thus, as regards the experience and competence of the permanent team, the report to the CCAM states that the applicant proposes to use again the permanent team which has technical `know-how' of the Council's buildings, which is a considerable advantage. Similarly, as regards the quality of subcontractors and suppliers, the report to the CCAM states that the applicant supplied a list of 60 subcontractors whereas De Waele's list contained only about 20. This difference is all the more significant because, as the Council points out, `the Council's general undertaking contract requires the contractor to arrange for competitive tendering between the subcontractors in order to obtain the best possible terms for the General Secretariat of the Council' and therefore `a high number of subcontractors is desirable'. Also, as regards the safety-coordinator, the applicant had proposed three independent companies whereas De Waele had designated only one.

63 In response to this the Council states that it is clear, both from the report to the CCAM and from its letter of 11 May 2000, that the three tenders were examined in the light of the eight criteria set out in the contract documents and that the price of the tender was not the only criterion adopted.

64 It states that the financial analysis - on which the CCAM's opinion is based - which was carried out to evaluate the amount of the tender did not contain solely the analysis of the price but also that of the multiplication factor for the general costs and a comparison of the tenders over the whole five-year term of the contract. It points out, in that regard, that the applicant's tender was 10% higher than that of De Waele. It is clear from this analysis that De Waele's offer was more advantageous from a financial point of view.

65 With regard to the other criteria, the Council points out that, as stated in the final paragraph of its letter of 11 May 2000, they were `qualitative'. It considers that, when, as in the present case, the candidates - in respect of the qualitative criteria - are of equal merit or there is no significant difference between them, it cannot be criticised for having chosen the candidate ranked first for the financial criteria.

66 The Council submits that it must be concluded from those considerations that it compared the various tenderers in the light of the different award criteria and that, in view of the fact that there were no significant differences between the applicant and De Waele with regard to the `qualitative' criteria and that, on a financial level, De Waele's offer was clearly more advantageous, it was fully entitled, in the exercise of its discretion, to judge that tender to be the most economically advantageous.

67 In its rejoinder the Council rejects the applicant's argument that the eight criteria were of equal value. It points out that the first criterion, namely `conformity of the tender' (see paragraph 8 above), is an absolute criterion in that the tenderer who does not meet it is excluded at the outset. The second criterion, `price of the tender' (see paragraph 8 above), is an objective criterion since it allows an order to be established between the tenders. The other criteria are all `qualitative' and make it possible to assess the quality and competence of the company and of the methods it proposes. Those last criteria are, however, less important that the first two.

68 The Council disputes the applicant's argument that, if there is no weighting, the eight criteria are bound to have the same value. It contends that, in a tendering procedure in which the contract is awarded to the most economically advantageous tender, it goes without saying that, when the financial criteria are placed first, the awarding authority has given them more weight than the others.

69 It challenges the validity of the applicant's claim that it was ranked first for seven award criteria. For the fourth criterion, it was ranked equal with De Waele and, for the seventh and eighth criteria, it was ranked equal with De Waele and Renco.

70 However that may be, since it was ranked last for the price criterion, the applicant could have been successful only if the differences between it and De Waele for the other criteria had actually been significant, which was not the case.

71 Furthermore, as regards the criterion relating to the experience and competence of the permanent team, the Council points out that it considered that the applicant's advantage in that regard, namely the fact that it was already working in the Council's buildings, could not prevail, since the specific purpose of a tendering procedure is to avoid monopoly situations and to allow an undertaking whose tender is the most economically advantageous to be selected.

72 Moreover, as regards the quality of the subcontractors and suppliers, the applicant was ranked in a better position than De Waele because of the number of subcontractors on the list enclosed with the tender. However, the number of 20 subcontractors proposed by De Waele was more than sufficient to satisfy the conditions of the contract documents, which require that at least three companies

First Instance (Fifth Chamber)First Instance (Fifth Chamber)1996. International Procurement Services SA v Commission of the European Communities. Action for damages - Public contract - European Development Fund - Non-contractual liability - Determination of the origin of goods. Case T-175/94.

International agreements ° Third Lomé ACP-EEC Convention ° Provisions concerning financial and technical cooperation ° Procedure for the award of public supply contracts ° Respective roles of the ACP State and the Commission ° Competence of the ACP State to conclude contracts ° Commission' s power of review ° Doubt concerning the Community origin of goods ° Liability of the Community alleged by reason of the request for evidence made by the Commission ° Excluded

(Third ACP-EEC Convention of 8 December 1984)

In the context of financial and technical cooperation under the Third ACP-EEC Convention, contracts financed by the European Development Fund remain national contracts which only the ACP States have the responsibility of preparing, negotiating and concluding. For their part, undertakings which submit tenders for or are awarded the contracts in question remain outside the exclusive dealings conducted on this matter between the Commission and the ACP States.

However, the Commission has not only the right but also the duty to ensure, before any payments are made out of Community funds, that the conditions for such payments are in fact fulfilled. To that end, it is under a duty in particular to seek the necessary information in order to ensure the economical administration of the resources of the European Development Fund and to refuse to endorse invoices submitted to it where it has serious grounds for doubting that the conditions for Community financing have been satisfied.

Since one of those conditions is that the goods in question must be of Community origin, proof of which is the responsibility of the successful tenderer, the Commission cannot be accused of unlawful or improper conduct for having, as a result of serious doubts, required the successful tenderer to produce documents or provide information evidencing the Community origin of the goods.

In Case T-175/94,

International Procurement Services SA, a company governed by Belgian law, whose registered office is in Brussels, represented by Peter De Troyer, of the Audenarde Bar, and Lydia Lorang, of the Luxembourg Bar, with an address for service in Luxembourg at the latter' s Chambers, 6 Rue Heine,

Registrar: H. Jung,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 7 May 1996,

gives the following

Judgment

Costs

62 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party' s pleadings. Since the applicant has been unsuccessful and the defendant has applied for costs, the applicant must be ordered to pay the costs in their entirety.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Fifth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Dismisses the application;

2. Orders the applicant to pay the costs.

Facts

1 On 21 March 1990 the Unidade de Coordenaçao dos Programas de Importaçao (Import Programme Coordination Unit, hereinafter "the UCPI") of the Ministry of Commerce of the People' s Republic of Mozambique issued an invitation to tender for a public contract for the supply of 11 batches of goods for a project financed by the European Community through the European Development Fund (hereinafter "the EDF") (OJ 1990 S 56, p. 5). The invitation to tender expressly indicated that the supplies must without fail originate in States of the European Economic Community or African, Caribbean or Pacific States (hereinafter "ACP") signatories to the Third Lomé ACP-EEC Convention signed in Lomé on 8 December 1984 (OJ 1986 L 86, p. 3).

2 For one of the batches, comprising 7 400 tonnes of steel billets, the UCPI accepted the tender submitted by the applicant, International Procurement Services SA, to which it sent a contract letter under reference LC 25/90/EEC on 13 July 1990.

3 The price stipulated in the contract for that batch (hereinafter "the contract") was BFR 97 561 461, that is to say BFR 13 320 per tonne.

4 Transport of the goods commenced in March 1991 and the final delivery was made on 24 April 1991.

5 On 17 and 30 April 1991, the South African branch of Société Générale de Surveillance (hereinafter "SGS"), an undertaking which on request carries out analyses of goods, issued inspection certificates in Johannesburg for the goods delivered, indicating that the inspections had taken place in March and April 1991.

6 On 20 June 1991, the UCPI received from the company Cifel, the end user of the steel billets, a message to the effect that, according to the documents accompanying the goods delivered, they came from ("proveniente da") the South African company Iscor and the consignee ("consignatario") was the South African company John Palmer Steel.

7 On 2 July 1991, the UCPI sent a telex to the applicant stating that the documents accompanying the goods gave the names of Iscor as supplier and John Palmer Steel as buyer. It requested clarification in view of the lack of any transport documents.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

8 On 20 July 1991 the Lugano Chamber of Commerce, at the request of a Swiss company named by the applicant as its supplier, drew up a certificate of origin mentioning the names of the applicant, the UCPI (preceded by the word "to"), and Cifel (preceded by the abbreviation "imp"), together with the number of the invitation to tender relating to the contract at issue and describing the goods as comprising three batches of steel billets of a total weight of 7 324 434 kg. The certificate gave Italy as the country of origin.

9 By telex of 25 July 1991, the UCPI asked the company RIH, a distributor of Iscor products, to confirm to it that the 7 400 tonnes of steel billets supplied to Cifel in April of that year by John Palmer Steel had been manufactured in South Africa by Iscor.

10 On 2 August 1991, RIH replied that it had received from the London company Gover, Horowitz & Blunt an order for 7 400 tonnes of steel billets, with instructions to forward the goods to the UCPI in Maputo. It also stated that the proposed price related to South African products.

11 By fax of 20 August 1991, the defendant asked SGS to forward to it the "work certificates of tests and analysis" and the "rail consignment notes" referred to by the inspection certificates drawn up by that company on 17 and 30 April 1991. It also asked it to confirm the identity of the manufacturer.

12 On the same day SGS informed the defendant that the requested documents had been forwarded to the company by which it had been instructed, Gover, Horowitz & Blunt. The next day it reported that, before forwarding the requested documents to third parties, it would first have to obtain the consent of that company.

13 On 22 August 1991, the defendant sent a fax to the applicant asking it urgently to obtain as a matter of urgency a copy of the work certificates of tests and analysis and the rail consignment notes from the company responsible for the pre-dispatch inspection of the goods. The next day the applicant replied that it would seek the requested certificates from the seller.

14 By telex of 19 September 1991, the UCPI, at the defendant' s suggestion, asked the applicant for a "bona fide" document indicating the identity of the manufacturer and the route of the goods from the manufacturing plant to the Cifel warehouse. It also stated that if the applicant failed to produce that document it would conclude that the contractual clause concerning the origin of the goods had been breached.

15 By fax of 6 November 1991, the defendant instructed its Mozambique delegation to inform the Mozambique authorities that the applicant had been unable to prove that the goods delivered had been manufactured in the Community or an ACP country and that the UCPI could therefore either cancel the contract or pay for the goods the market price corresponding to their presumed place of origin.

16 By letter of 25 November 1991, in reply to a letter from the applicant of 24 October 1991, the defendant stated that it could not pay the balance until it had received authorization from the UCPI and that no such authorization had been received. It also recommended that the applicant send the UCPI a request for payment if it considered that it had fulfilled all its obligations.

17 By telex to the applicant of 6 December 1991, the UCPI indicated that it had not received the requested "bona fide" document: it therefore considered that the goods had originated in South Africa and would pay for them at the price prevailing on that market.

18 By fax of 11 March 1992, the defendant asked its Mozambique delegation to inform the local authorities that, having regard to the contradictory documents produced by the applicant and Cifel, it endorsed the view of those authorities that the amount of the contract as a whole should be calculated on the basis of the price prevailing on the South African market.

19 By telex of 9 June 1992, the applicant stated that its financial situation left it no choice but to come to terms with the UCPI. However, it stressed that it would regard the payment to be made as a payment on account. It stated that it would refer to arbitration the question of the difference between the price initially agreed and the amount calculated on the basis of the South African price.

20 The next day the UCPI replied to the applicant that the defendant would not agree to issue a partial payment order if the balance was to be the subject of arbitration and that it would not effect payment until the file was closed. It expressed the view that two possibilities were open to the applicant: either to bring the dispute to an end by concluding an agreement for a reduced price or to initiate the arbitration procedure immediately.

21 On 17 July 1992, the applicant and the UCPI concluded an agreement recording acceptance of the goods, reduction of the price on the basis of the price prevailing on the South African market, set at BFR 12 000 per tonne, and waiver of the right to have recourse to arbitration (hereinafter "the agreement").

Procedure

22 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 20 April 1994 the applicant brought the present action under the second paragraph of Article 215 of the EC Treaty.

23 The Judge-Rapporteur was assigned to the Fifth Chamber, and the case was therefore assigned to that Chamber.

24 Upon hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court of First Instance decided to open the oral procedure without any preparatory inquiry. By way of measure of organization of procedure, the parties were asked to reply in writing to a number of questions before the hearing and to produce certain documents.

25 The parties presented oral argument and answered the questions put to them by the Court at the hearing on 7 May 1996.

Forms of order sought

26 The applicant claims that the Court should:

° order the defendant to pay it BFR 14 797 706 as compensation for the damage suffered by it or any other amount ° even if greater ° to be determined by the Court ex aequo et bono or by an expert, together with default interest at a rate to be fixed by the Court;

° order the defendant to pay the costs.

27 The defendant contends that the Court should:

° dismiss the application;

° order the applicant to pay the costs.

Summary of the pleas in law and arguments of the parties

28 The applicant criticizes the Commission for having authorized financing of the contract only as to 92.49% of the total amount even though it fulfilled all the conditions of that contract.

29 According to the applicant, the defendant acted unlawfully in that, first, it did not prevent consumption of the goods by Cifel even before acceptance of them by the other party to the contract with the applicant and transfer of title; secondly, it played an active role by calling for certificates of tests and analysis and rail consignment notes which were not required to be produced under the contract, and also a "bona fide" document, the nature of which was never clearly described; and, thirdly, it took the view, without justification, that the financing conditions had not been fulfilled, without giving any credence to the certificate of origin drawn up by the Brussels Chamber of Commerce.

30 Regarding the latter point, it maintains that a certificate of origin adequately establishes the origin of goods since chambers of commerce issue such certificates only on production of supporting documents. In contrast to the documents submitted by Cifel, which strengthened the defendant' s doubts as to the origin of the goods delivered, the certificate of origin, being an authenticated original document, carefully describes the goods to which it relates. On the other hand, the documents forwarded by Cifel are barely legible, unauthenticated photocopies of certificates concerning a casting test of steel regularly used in Mozambique. There is no evidence to show that those documents, drawn up eight months after delivery of the goods, relate to the steel used for the goods delivered.

31 The applicant maintains that it has suffered a loss corresponding to the difference between the initial contract price and the amount that it actually received (BFR 9 668 253), together with financial costs (BFR 5 129 453) which it claims it unavoidably incurred as a result of the defendant' s refusal to pay in full the price initially agreed, that is to say, a total loss of BFR 14 797 706.

32 It submits that the damage derives from the fact that the defendant considered that the conditions for the financing of the contract had not been fully satisfied and that it was appropriate to calculate the amount to be paid on the basis of the prices prevailing on the South African market.

33 Referring to the case-law of the Court of Justice to the effect that contracts financed under the EDF are national contracts to which the Commission is not a party, the defendant concludes that the action, purporting to be a claim for non-contractual liability, is inconsistent since the applicant criticizes it for having unilaterally changed the conditions of the contract.

34 It also considers that none of the conditions for non-contractual liability is fulfilled.

35 It contends that it did not act unlawfully. Good reasons for the serious doubts that it entertained as to the origin of the goods were provided, first, by the content of the letter from Cifel received by the UCPI on 20 June 1991 and RIH' s telex of 2 August 1991 and, secondly, as it stated at the hearing, by the fact that the inspection certificates drawn up by the SGS related to inspections carried out in South Africa. In that connection, the defendant had then sent numerous requests to the applicant for documents unambiguously proving the Community origin of the goods delivered. The defendant states that the applicant has produced neither those documents nor the pre-shipment inspection report referred to in Article IX.5 of the schedule of special requirements. However, it is incumbent on the applicant to prove the Community origin of the goods.

36 It casts doubt on the credibility of the certificate of origin produced by the applicant since it was drawn up by the Brussels Chamber of Commerce several months after delivery of the goods in question on the basis of a certificate issued by the Lugano Chamber of Commerce, which was not in a position to carry out any on-the-spot checks in Italy.

37 Finally, it emphasizes that the applicant was not able to give it details of the route by which the goods were transported or the name of the vessel carrying them or to produce the supporting documents on the basis of which the certificates of origin had been drawn up, whereas it could easily have at least allayed the doubts as to the existence of contractual relations with the South African companies Iscor and John Palmer Steel.

38 Referring to the judgments of the Court of Justice in Case 126/83 STS v Commission [1984] ECR 2769 and Case 118/83 CMC and Others v Commission [1985] ECR 2325, the defendant considers that it was entitled to verify compliance with the financing conditions, in particular the requirement concerning the origin of the goods, by asking for further information about the origin of the goods in order to dispel the doubts raised by the contradictory nature of the documents in its possession.

39 The defendant denies that the applicant has suffered any damage. The difference between the initial contract price and the amount actually received is merely the result of the agreement for reduction of the price of the goods and waiver of the right to have recourse to arbitration, an agreement freely entered into by the applicant and the UCPI on 17 July 1992. Moreover, the defendant contends that no damage arose in respect of financial costs because it paid the balance due following that agreement within the stipulated period.

40 The defendant also denies that there was any causal link between any unlawful conduct and the alleged damage. The difference between the initial price and the final price resulted not from its conduct but from the agreement entered into by the UCPI and the applicant on 17 July 1992. Not does it consider that any responsibility for the financial costs at issue can be imputed to it since it was required under Article 8.2 of the contract letter to await payment authorization from the UCPI. Responsibility for that part of the damage falls upon the applicant, which, in 1991 and 1992, temporized rather than producing evidence of the Community origin of the goods.

41 In its reply, the applicant claims that the agreement it concluded with the UCPI on 17 July 1992 is effective only between the parties to it and has no bearing on any claim for non-contactual liability. It emphasizes that it was the defendant which suggested recourse to the South African price. As far as it is concerned, the conclusion of that agreement was dictated by a need for liquid funds and, in the event, it had to choose between accepting a reduction in the price or not being paid at all in the short term.

42 According to the defendant, either the applicant freely entered into the agreement reducing the price of the goods and therefore cannot claim to have suffered damage or else it signed that agreement under duress so that the appropriate course would have been to challenge it, which it did not do.

Findings of the Court

43 The Court observes first that according to settled case-law contracts financed by the EDF remain national contracts which only the ACP States have the responsibility of preparing, negotiating and concluding. For their part, undertakings which submit tenders for or are awarded the contracts in question remain outside the exclusive dealings conducted on this matter between the Commission and the ACP States (STS v Commission, cited above, paragraph 18, Case C-257/90 Italsolar v Commission [1993] ECR I-9, paragraph 22, Case T-451/93 San Marco v Commission [1994] ECR II-1061, paragraph 42).

44 Furthermore, Community liability depends on proof by the applicant of the unlawfulness of the alleged conduct of the Community institution concerned, the reality of the damage and the existence of a causal link between that conduct and the alleged damage (Joined Cases 197/80, 198/80, 199/80, 200/80, 243/80, 245/80 and 247/80 Ludwigshafener Walzmuehle and Others v Council and Commission [1981] ECR 3211, paragraph 18, Italsolar, cited above, paragraph 33, Joined Cases T-481/93 and T-484/93 Exporteurs in Levende Varkens and Others v Commission [1995] ECR II-0000, paragraph 80).

45 Finally, the Commission has not only the right but also the duty to ensure, before any payments are made out of Community funds, that the conditions for such payments are in fact fulfilled (CMC, cited above, paragraph 44). To that end, it is under a duty in particular to seek the necessary information in order to ensure the economical administration of the resources of the EDF (same judgment, paragraph 47, and Case C-370/89 SGEEM and Etroy v EIB [1993] ECR I-2583, paragraph 31) and to refuse to endorse invoices submitted to it (San Marco, cited above, paragraph 50).

46 It is in the light of those factors that it must be considered whether the defendant has been guilty of unlawful or improper conduct.

47 In this case it was incumbent on the defendant to ensure, in particular, compliance with the precondition for financing, according to which the goods delivered had to originate in the Community or an ACP State.

48 The applicant cannot criticize the defendant for not having prevented consumption of the goods before their acceptance and transfer of title. Since contracts financed by the EDF are national contracts to which only the ACP State and the contractor are parties, it would certainly not have been appropriate for the defendant to interfere in such matters, which are of a purely contractual nature.

49 Nor can the applicant criticize the defendant for doubting, despite the existence of a certificate of origin from the Brussels Chamber of Commerce evidencing the Italian, and thus Community, origin of the goods, that the latter fulfilled the prescribed conditions. It is clear from a telex from Cifel to the UCPI that the documents accompanying the goods delivered mentioned that they came from a South African company. Moreover, the applicant has not denied that the inspection documents relating to the goods were not provided prior to their shipment and related to inspections carried out by a South African company. Furthermore, it was from South Africa that the goods came to Mozambique. However, South Africa is not a signatory to the Third Lomé Convention.

50 Since proof of the origin of the goods delivered was the responsibility of the successful tenderer, the defendant was, in the light of the foregoing considerations, fully entitled to require documents or additional information to support the certificate of origin. It must be pointed out that the applicant has produced no evidence such as to enable the Community origin of the goods delivered to be established beyond doubt. It has not even been able to provide the supporting documents on the basis of which the Lugano Chamber of Commerce drew up its certificate of origin, on which the Brussels Chamber of Commerce relied in issuing its own. In response to a written request from the Court, the applicant did no more than produce an incomplete copy of a documentary credit containing no information as to the origin of the goods sold, an undated letter from an Italian transport company certifying that the applicant is known as an exporter, consignee, principal or guarantor in respect of transactions involving goods, in particular steel, carried by Messrs Jadroplov between autumn 1989 and summer 1991, and extracts from Lloyds Registers concerning vessels bearing the name Africa mentioned on the export permit. The applicant cannot in any event base any argument on the imprecise nature of the term "bona fide document" since it has produced nothing to support its certificate of origin. The Court also considers that the applicant was fully informed as to the evidence that it was required to produce (see paragraphs 13 and 14, above).

51 It follows that the defendant was fully entitled to conclude that the financing condition concerning the origin of the goods was not satisfied in this case.

52 Finally, the applicant has no grounds for criticizing the defendant for playing an active role by requesting documents whose production was not required by the contract. The defendant did no more than inform the Mozambique authorities of its position and of the possibilities open to them. It did not, by so doing, in any way undermine the sovereignty of the People' s Republic of Mozambique. It is also apparent from the letter which it sent to the applicant on 25 November 1991 (see paragraph 16, above) and the fax that it sent to its delegation in Mozambique (see paragraph 18, above) that the Mozambique Government continued to take its own decisions independently.

53 Consequently, the applicant has not demonstrated that the defendant was guilty of any unlawful or improper action regarding the relations between the People' s Republic of Mozambique and the applicant.

54 It follows that the applicant has not proved any unlawful or improper conduct on the part of the defendant.

55 Furthermore, according to settled case-law the damage must be a sufficiently direct consequence of the conduct complained of (Joined Cases 64/76, 113/76, 167/78 239/78, 27/79, 28/79 and 45/79 Dumortier Frères and Others v Council [1979] ECR 3091, paragraph 21; see also, with regard to Article 40 of the ECSC Treaty, which is similarly worded and can be applied by analogy to this case, Joined Cases C-363/88 and C-364/88 Finsider and Others v Commission [1992] ECR I-359, paragraph 25, and the cases cited therein).

56 It is clear from the documents before the Court and the arguments presented at the hearing that the damage of which the applicant complains derives, primarily, from two factors: first, the People' s Republic of Mozambique' s ultimate refusal to pay the agreed price in its entirety and, secondly, the agreement of 17 July 1992 following that refusal whereby the initially agreed price was reduced and the right to have recourse to arbitration was waived.

57 The Court observes that, even though the defendant may have indirectly influenced the conduct of the Mozambique Government by suggesting the conclusion of that agreement, the fact remains that the applicant has not shown that either party entered into it under duress. Moreover, rather than concluding that agreement, the applicant could, as the UCPI suggested to it (see paragraph 20, above), have had recourse to arbitration in order to settle the difference. The fact that, according to the applicant, it chose not to follow that course because it was in urgent need of liquid funds cannot have the effect of attaching responsibility for the damage to the defendant, since the motive referred to does not involve it in any way.

58 It should also be borne in mind that it has been held that, where a contractual dispute between the State awarding a contract financed by the EDF and the successful tenderer has not been settled earlier on an amicable basis or by arbitration, the successful tenderer is unable to establish that the Commission' s action caused it to sustain damage distinct from the damage in respect of which it ought to have sought compensation from the State which awarded the contract, in accordance with the appropriate procedure (Case 33/82 Murri Frères v Commission [1985] ECR 2759, paragraph 38).

59 In this case the applicant seeks compensation for damage corresponding exactly to the price reduction which it granted to the UCPI under the agreement it concluded with the latter on 17 July 1992 together with the financial costs incurred as a result of that agreement. Since it has not challenged, in accordance with the appropriate procedure, that agreement and the refusal of the Mozambique Government to pay the full price initially agreed, the applicant is unable to establish that the defendant' s action caused it to sustain damage distinct from the damage in respect of which it ought to have sought compensation from that State.

60 Nor, for the same reason, has it established any causal link between the conduct for which the defendant is criticized and the alleged damage.

61 It follows that the action must be dismissed in its entirety.

be suggested. As for the safety-coordinator, the contract documents required the introduction of one or more persons or bodies able to assume those tasks and De Waele's tender fulfilled that requirement.

- Findings of the Court

73 It is settled case-law that the Council has a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender and that the Court's review must be limited to verifying that there has been no serious and manifest error (Case 56/77 Agence européenne d'interims v Commission [1978] ECR 2215, paragraph 20; Adia interim v Commission, cited above, paragraph 49, and Case T-139/99 AICS v Parliament [2000] ECR II-2849, paragraph 39).

74 In the present case, it is apparent from the file that the contract was awarded to the most economically advantageous tender. However, it should be pointed out that Article 30(2) of Directive 93/37 does not list the criteria which may be adopted as criteria for the award of a contract to what is the most economically advantageous tender. Although that provision thus leaves it to the Council to choose the criteria on which it proposes to base its award of the contract, that choice may relate only to criteria aimed at identifying the offer which is economically the most advantageous (see, to that effect, Case C-19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I-7725, paragraphs 35 and 36). In order to determine which is the most economically advantageous tender, the Council must be able to exercise its discretion in taking a decision on the basis of qualitative and quantitative criteria that vary according to the contract in question (see, to that effect, Case 274/83 Commission v Italy [1985] ECR 1077, paragraph 25).

75 In that regard, the parties agree that the Council set out in the contract documents eight award criteria which it intended to use. Notwithstanding the applicant's assertions, the documents before the Court clearly show that the Council correctly assessed and classified the three tenders submitted in the present case in respect of each of those eight criteria. The Court also considers that the applicant's argument that its tender was wrongly assessed in relation to that of De Waele in respect of the criteria relating to the experience and competence of the permanent team, to the quality of the subcontractors and suppliers and to the safety-coordinator cannot be accepted.

76 Admittedly, the applicant's tender was ranked first for most of the criteria listed in the contract documents. However, the Council considered, as is apparent from the conclusion of the report to the CCAM, that, although `the tenders submitted by both De Waele and [the applicant met] the criteria of the contract documents best overall, De Waele's financial proposal [was] the more advantageous'. It must be inferred from that that, although its tender was ranked higher for most of the eight criteria in question, the applicant was eliminated because of the relatively high price of its tender.

77 However, it should be pointed out that the Council listed the eight award criteria in question without specifying the order of importance applied to them. This is not incompatible with Article 30(2) of Directive 93/37, which does not prescribe but merely recommends that the criteria for awarding a contract should be placed in order of importance. In those circumstances, it should be pointed out that, contrary to what the applicant claims, each of the eight criteria does not necessarily have the same value unless there is an indication to the contrary in the contract documents. The Court considers that the Council has a wide discretion not only in choosing the contract-award criteria which it intends to follow but also as regards the relative weight it accords to the various criteria for the purpose of taking a decision to award a contract following a tendering procedure, provided that the assessment it carries out is designed to identify the most economically advantageous offer.

78 It is important to point out that the eight criteria referred to in paragraph 8 above are, apart from the first criterion concerning the conformity of the tender, qualitative and quantitative.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

The Court considers that the criterion concerning the conformity of the tender is absolute. If the tender does not comply with the contract documents, it must be rejected. The second criterion, the price of the tender, is quantitative and provides an objective basis for comparing the financial costs of the tenders. The other six criteria are all qualitative and their main function is to verify that each tenderer has the skills and aptitudes necessary for executing the contract works. However, it must be held that, as, in the present case, the three tenders revealed no significant differences - with regard to the qualitative criteria - which might affect their respective definitive financial values, the Council was entitled, within the limits of its discretion, to accord more weight to the second criterion, concerning the price of the tender.

79 As for the applicant's complaint that the Council had not taken sufficient account of the differences between the applicant and De Waele in respect of three criteria, namely those relating to the experience and competence of the permanent team, to the quality of the proposed subcontractors and suppliers, and to the safety-coordinator, the Court considers that that complaint must be rejected. With regard to the criterion concerning the experience and competence of the permanent team, the Court considers that, as the Council rightly submits, the fact that the applicant is already working in the Council's buildings cannot be a preponderant factor if the effectiveness of the tendering procedure is not to be negated. In any event, the applicant does not demonstrate the alleged lack of experience and competence of De Waele's permanent team. As regards the criteria of the quality of the subcontractors and suppliers and of the safety-coordinator, the applicant merely refers to the fact that it proposed more companies than De Waele, without challenging the quality of De Waele's proposals.

80 It follows that the Council has not infringed the contract documents and Articles 18 and 30 of Directive 93/37 by awarding the contract to the lowest-priced tender, all things being relatively equal otherwise.

81 It is apparent from the foregoing that this plea must be rejected in its entirety.

The claim for compensation

82 The applicant requests payment of the sum of BEF 153 421 286 or EUR 3 803 214, subject to increase, together with interest thereon at the rate of 6% from 12 April 2000, by way of damages for the harm which it has suffered owing to the unlawful conduct of the Council during the procedure for the award of the contract in question.

83 In accordance with settled case-law, for the Community to incur non-contractual liability, the applicant must prove the unlawfulness of the conduct alleged against the institution concerned, the fact of damage and the existence of a causal link between that conduct and the damage complained of (Case T-175/94 International Procurement Services v Commission [1996] ECR II-729, paragraph 44; Case T-336/94 Efisol v Commission [1996] ECR II-1343, paragraph 30, or Case T-267/94 Oleifici Italiani v Commission [1997] ECR II-1239, paragraph 20). Where one of those conditions is not fulfilled, the action must therefore be dismissed in its entirety and it is not necessary to examine the other conditions for that liability (Case C-146/91 KYDEP v Council and Commission [1994] ECR I-4199, paragraph 19).

84 It follows from the Court's conclusions relating to the application for annulment that the applicant has not adduced proof of unlawful conduct on the part of the Council.

85 It follows that the claim for compensation must be rejected.

86 It follows from all the above considerations that the application must be dismissed in its entirety.

Judgment of the Court of First Instance (Fifth Chamber)
First Instance (Fifth Chamber)First Instance (Fifth Chamber)2002.
Esedra SPRL v Commission of the European Communities.
Public contract for the supply of services - Day nursery management services - Principle of non-discrimination - Contract notice - Contract documents - Reasons stated for decision not to award contract - Misuse of powers.
Case T-169/00.

1. Budget of the European Communities - Financial Regulation - Provisions applicable to tendering procedures - Prohibition of all contact between the institution and the tenderer after tenders have been opened - Scope - Limits

(Commission Regulation No 3418/93, Art. 99(h), second subpara.)

2. Public procurement in the European Communities - Conclusion of a contract following an invitation to tender - Discretion of the institutions - Judicial review - Limits

3. Acts of the institutions - Statement of reasons - Obligation - Scope - Decision to reject a tender under the procedure for the award of a public service contract

(Art. 253 EC; Council Directive 92/50, Art. 12(1))

4. Actions for annulment - Pleas in law - Misuse of powers - Concept

1. According to the second subparagraph of Article 99(h) of Regulation No 3418/93 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of certain provisions of the Financial Regulation, any contact in tendering procedures between the institution and the tenderer after the tenders have been opened is prohibited save, exceptionally, if some clarification is required in connection with a tender, or if obvious clerical errors contained in the tender must be corrected. In those cases, the institution may take it upon itself to contact the tenderer and, in the event of a dispute, it is necessary to determine whether the tenderer's reply to the Commission's request for clarification should be regarded as clarifying the terms of its tender or whether it goes beyond that and modifies the substance of the tender by reference to the requirements of the contract documents.

(see paras 49, 52)

2. The Commission has a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender and the Court's review must be limited to verifying that there has been no serious and manifest error.

(see paras 95, 114, 135, 152, 162)

3. It follows from Article 12(1) of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, which, pursuant to Article 126 of Regulation No 3418/93, applies to contracts awarded by the institutions where the value of the contract exceeds the threshold fixed by Article 7(1) of that directive, that the Commission must, within 15 days of receipt of his request, inform an unsuccessful tenderer of the characteristics and relative advantages of the tender selected as well as the name of the successful tenderer, except for information described as confidential.

This manner of proceedings satisfies the purpose of the obligation to state reasons enshrined in Article 253 EC, according to which the reasoning followed by the authority which adopted the measure in question must be disclosed in a clear and unequivocal fashion so as, on the one hand, to make the persons concerned aware of the reasons for the measure and thereby enable them to defend their rights; and, on the other, to enable the Court to exercise its power of review.

(see paras 188-190)

4. The concept of misuse of powers has a precisely defined scope in Community law and refers to cases where an administrative authority exercises its powers for a purpose other than that for which they were conferred on it. A decision may amount to a misuse of powers only if it appears, on the basis of objective, relevant and consistent evidence, to have been taken for purposes other than those stated.

(see para. 198)

In Case T-169/00,

Esedra SPRL, established in Brussels (Belgium), represented by G. Vandersanden, E. Gillet and L. Levi, avocats, with an address for service in Luxembourg, applicant,

v

Commission of the European Communities, represented initially by X. Lewis and L. Parpala, and, subsequently, by H. van Lier and L. Parpala, acting as Agents, with an address for service in Luxembourg, defendant,

APPLICATION, first, for suspension of operation of the Commission's decision not to award to the applicant the public contract relating to invitation to tender No 99/52/IX.D.1, notified to the applicant by letter of 31 May 2000, and the Commission's decision to award the contract to a group of Italian companies represented by Centro Studi Antonio Manieri Srl, notified to the applicant by letter of 9 June 2000, and, second, for compensation for the damage allegedly caused by those decisions,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES (Fifth Chamber), composed of: P. Lindh, President, R. García-Valdecasas and J.D. Cooke, Judges, Registrar: B. Pastor, Administrator, having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 18 September 2001,

gives the following

Judgment

Costs

214 Under Article 87(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the applicant has been unsuccessful, and the Commission has applied for costs, the applicant must be ordered to pay the costs, including those incurred in the proceedings for interim relief.

On those grounds,

THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE (Fifth Chamber)

hereby:

1. Dismisses the application;

2. Orders the applicant to bear its own costs and pay those of the Commission, including the costs incurred in the proceedings for interim relief.

Legal context

1 The award of public contracts for the supply of services by the Commission is subject to the provisions of Section 1 (Articles 56 to 64b) of Title IV of the Financial Regulation of 21 December 1977 applicable to the general budget of the European Communities (OJ 1977 L 356, p. 1), as last amended, at the material time, by Council Regulation (EC, Euratom, ECSC) No 2673/99 of 13 December 1999 (OJ 1999 L 326, p. 1) which entered into force on 1 January 2000 (the Financial Regulation).

2 Under Article 56 of the Financial Regulation:

... when concluding contracts for which the amount involved is equal to or greater than the threshold provided for by the Council directives on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works, supplies and services contracts, each institution shall comply with the same obligations as are imposed upon bodies in the Member States by those directives. The implementing measures shall include appropriate provisions to that end.

3 Article 139 of the Financial Regulation provides that [in] consultation with the European Parliament and the Council and after the other institutions have given their opinions, the Commission shall adopt implementing measures for this Financial Regulation.

4 Accordingly, the Commission adopted Regulation (Euratom, ECSC, EC) No 3418/93 of 9 December 1993 laying down detailed rules for the implementation of certain provisions of the Financial Regulation (OJ 1993 L 315, p. 1). Articles 97 to 105 and 126 to 129 of that regulation apply to the award of public contracts for the supply of services. In particular, Article 126 provides as follows:

The Council directives on public works, supplies and services contracts shall be applicable to the award of contracts by the institutions whenever the amounts involved are equal to or greater than the amounts provided for in those directives.

5 In the present case, the relevant directive is Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended by Directive 97/52/EC of 13 October 1997 of the European Parliament and the Council (OJ 1997 L 328, p. 1) (Directive 92/50), Article 7(1)(a) of which provides for an application threshold of EUR 200 000 for public service contracts for, in particular, health and social services.

Facts giving rise to the dispute

6 In 1994 the Commission decided to entrust to a private company the management of the Centre de la Petite Enfance Clovis, which is a day nursery and kindergarten for children of the staff of the European institutions situated on its premises in Boulevard Clovis, Brussels (the CPE Clovis). The Commission issued an invitation to tender and subsequently awarded the contract to two Italian companies, Aristea and Cooperativa Italiana di Ristorazione. The management of the CPE Clovis was then entrusted to the applicant company, which was set up by the two aforementioned companies. The management contract was concluded for an initial term of two years from 1 August 1995, renewable for three one-year periods.

7 By letter of 15 April 1999, the applicant informed the Commission that it did not intend to seek renewal of the contract for 1999/2000.

8 On 26 May 1999, the Commission, pursuant to Council Directive 92/50, published in the Supplement to the Official Journal a first contract notice for the services relating to the management of the CPE Clovis (contract notice No 99/S 100-68878/FR, OJ 1999 S 100, p. 35). Those services are within category 25, Health and social services, of Annex I B to Directive 92/50. Three undertakings, among them the applicant and Centro Studi Manieri Srl (Manieri), applied to participate.

9 By letter of 2 July 1999, the Commission informed the applicant that it had decided not to award the contract for the management of the CPE Clovis within the framework of the procedure initiated on 26 May 1999 because the number of candidates was too low to ensure adequate competition.

10 On 10 July 1999, the Commission published a further contract notice for the management services of the CPE Clovis (contract notice No 99/S 132-97515/FR, OJ 1999 S 132). This notice was worded like the first and stated that the contract would be awarded to the economically most advantageous tender taking account of the prices tendered and the quality of the services proposed (details in the contract documents). Seven undertakings, including the applicant undertakings and Manieri, applied to participate.

11 The applications were examined on 28 October 1999 by an assessment panel consisting of four Commission officials (the assessment panel). The seven applicant undertakings were selected.

12 On 29 October 1999, the Commission sent the contract documents to the seven undertakings. The criteria on which the contract would be awarded were as follows:

The contract will be awarded to the economically most advantageous tender taking account of:

- the prices tendered and

- the quality of the tender and of the services proposed, evaluated, in descending order of importance, according to:

(a) the quality of the teaching programme (40%)

(b) the measures and resources employed to provide cover for staff absences (30%)

(c) the methodology and monitoring devices proposed for monitoring of: (30%)

- the quality of service and management

- the maintenance of staffing levels

- the implementation of the teaching programme.

13 The contract documents were supplemented by the report of the site visit and of the mandatory information meeting on 24 and 25 November 1999 (the contract documents).

14 By 7 February 2000, the final date set for that purpose, four undertakings, including the applicant and Manieri, had submitted tenders.

15 The tenders were opened on 14 February 2000. The Commission then asked for further particulars from the tenderers. The applicant received and replied to three such requests from the Commission, dated 25 and 29 February and 17 March 2000. Manieri received five requests dated 25 (two requests) and 29 February, 3 and 10 March 2000, to which it replied on 10 and 14 March 2000.

16 The tenders were then examined by three assessment panels.

17 First, they were considered from the viewpoint of quality by an assessment panel consisting of six representatives of the Commission and a representative of the parents' association (the qualitative assessment panel). That panel delivered its report on 5 April 2000. The report placed Manieri's tender first, before that of Esedra.

18 Secondly, the tenders submitted by the four bidders were assessed from the viewpoint of price

by Commission officials (the price assessment panel). That panel compiled a financial evaluation table of the tenders, which placed Manieri's tender second, before that of Esedra.

19 Thirdly, the qualitative assessment panel report and the abovementioned table were examined by a panel composed of six persons, of whom five were appointed in their capacity as Commission officials and the sixth in her capacity as representative of the Parents' Association (the tender assessment panel). That panel delivered its final assessment on 7 April 2000. The assessment repeats the conclusions of the two previous panels and concludes that Manieri's tender is the first and lowest tender in accordance with the requirements and qualitatively the best.

20 Following that examination, and after the favourable opinion of the Advisory Committee for Purchases and Contracts of 30 May 2000, the Commission awarded the contract in question to a group of Italian companies represented by Manieri, consisting of the latter and six other undertakings.

21 By letter of 31 May 2000, the Commission informed the applicant that it had not been awarded the contract in question (the refusal decision).

22 By letter of 2 June 2000, the applicant's lawyers asked the Commission to inform them of the reasons for the refusal decision. They also asked the Commission to suspend any measure designed to implement the decision to award the contract to another candidate (the award) and, consequently, not to conclude the contract referred to in the contract documents.

23 By fax of 9 June 2000, the Commission provided information regarding the reasons for awarding the contract to the Italian group represented by Manieri. Moreover, the Commission refused to suspend the operation of the award.

24 Following the award, the group represented by Manieri decided to entrust the work to a newly formed company incorporated under Belgian law called Sapiens in order to satisfy various obligations laid down by the Member State where the services were to be provided, in relation to employment law, tax law and social law (social insurance contributions and other employees' rights, payment of taxes, availability of a value-added tax (VAT) number, supervision of the management of facilities for small children in Belgium, etc.). The same procedure had been followed on the award of the previous contract.

Procedure and forms of order sought by the parties

25 The applicant brought the present action by application lodged at the Court Registry on 20 June 2000.

26 By separate document lodged at the Registry on the same day, the applicant submitted an application for interim relief in the form of suspension of the operation of the award decision and the refusal decision.

27 By order of 20 July 2000 in Case T-169/00 R Esedra v Commission [2000] ECR II-2951, the President of the Court of First Instance dismissed the application for interim relief.

28 In its application and reply, the applicant asked the Court to request the Commission to produce a number of documents and to allow it to submit its observations on them.

29 Upon hearing the report of the Judge-Rapporteur, the Court decided to open the oral procedure and, by way of the measures of organisation of procedure under Article 64 of the Rules of Procedure, requested the applicant to reply to a question and the Commission to produce certain documents and also to reply to several questions. The applicant replied to the Court's question by letters of 28 and 29 June 2001 and the Commission produced the documents and replied to the Court's questions by letters of 22 June, 9 and 24 July 2001.

on 18 September 2001. At the hearing, the applicant stated that the documents produced by the Commission were sufficient for it to prepare its case properly and therefore it considered that its request for production of the documents had been satisfied.

31 The applicant claims that the Court should:

- rule that the application is admissible and well founded;

- annul the refusal decision;

- annul the award decision;

- order the Commission to pay the applicant damages of EUR 1 001 574.09;

- order the Commission to pay the costs.

32 The Commission contends that the Court should:

- dismiss the application for annulment as unfounded;

- dismiss the claim for damages as unfounded;

- order the applicant to pay the costs.

33 By letter of 22 October 2001 the applicant requested the Court to reopen the oral procedure on the ground that the applicant had just become aware of a new fact which justified the reopening of that procedure. By letter of 27 November 2001 the Commission submitted its observations on that request and took the view that it was neither necessary nor justified to reopen the oral procedure.

The claims for annulment

34 The applicant puts forward five pleas in law in support of its application for annulment. The first plea alleges breach of the principle of non-discrimination. The second plea alleges disregard of the contract notice and the contract documents with regard to the evaluation of the successful tenderers' financial and technical standing. The third plea alleges disregard of the contract documents with regard to the appraisal of prices and the quality of the tenders. The fourth plea alleges breach of the obligation to state reasons, and the fifth plea misuse of powers.

The first plea, alleging breach of the principle of non-discrimination

35 The applicant claims that the Commission breached the principle of non-discrimination, which is a fundamental principle in relation to public contracts and is directly referred to in Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50, which provides that contracting authorities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between different services providers. Consequently the applicant contends, first, that the time it was allowed for submitting its tender was not the same as that allowed to the other applicants; second, that the Commission put questions to the tenderers which went beyond a request for clarification or the correction of obvious clerical errors in the tenders and, third, that the tenderers were not evaluated impartially.

1. The allegation that the applicant was not allowed the same time as the other tenderers for submitting its tender

Arguments of the parties

36 The applicant considers that the time it was allowed for submitting its tender was not the same as that allowed to the other tenderers. It observes that the final date for submitting tenders, which, according to the contract documents, was originally 6 January 2000, was postponed to 7 February 2000. The applicant states that it was the only candidate which was not informed of this as the Commission's letter in Italian dated 20 December 1999 stated that the final date had been deferred to 7 January 2000, not 7 February 2000. The applicant points out that the other candidates were informed of the later date by letter or telephone. In particular, the applicant observes that Manieri, which had also received a letter in Italian with the same mistake as to the new final date, was informed of the mistake by telephone. According to the applicant, it was only on 7 January 2000, when its representative went to the Commission's offices to lodge its tender, that he was informed that in fact the final date had been postponed to 7 February 2000.

37 The applicant states that it had made arrangements to meet the final date which it had been given, namely 7 January 2000. Therefore the fact that it could have taken back its tender of 7 January in order to supplement it and lodge it on 7 February did not put the applicant back on an equal footing with the other candidates, who had been able to spread the work over a longer period from the beginning. In this connection the applicant notes that it was not able to start work again on its tender until 24 January, when some of its staff who had taken part in drawing up the tender returned from holiday and the external consultants instructed to prepare it were able to free themselves from other commitments undertaken after 7 January 2000.

38 The Commission disputes the applicant's arguments because in any case the final date for the submission of tenders was the same for all the candidates, namely 7 February 2000 and the applicant was able to lodge its tender after 6 January 2000. According to the Commission, the error as to the date in the latter of 20 December 1999 did not lead to discrimination against the applicant.

Findings of the Court

39 There is no factual support for the applicant's assertion that it was not given the same deadline as the other candidates because its final date for the submission of a tender was deferred to the same date as for the other candidates.

40 It is clear from the facts set out above that the Commission originally set 6 January 2000 as the final date for the submission of bids. That date was shown in paragraph 2 of the terms and conditions in the contract documents which the Commission sent on 29 October 1999 to the seven successful candidates in the selection process.

41 On 20 December 1999 the final date was deferred to 7 February 2000. As a result of a copying error in the Commission's fax to Esedra and Manieri, they were informed that the final date had been deferred to 7 January, not 7 February, 2000. The mistake was noticed by Manieri, which contacted the Commission for clarification and was informed, by fax of 22 December 1999, that the final date had been deferred to 7 February 2000. Esedra, however, was misled and went to the Commission to lodge its tender on 7 January. Nevertheless, it was able to withdraw the tender and was allowed the extension to 7 February.

42 On this point it must be observed that it was Manieri which sent the Commission a fax on 21 December 1999 to inform it of the error as to the date, which the Commission rectified the next day by returning Manieri's fax with a handwritten note that the final date for the submission of bids had been deferred to 7 February 2000.

43 Although it is regrettable that the Commission, after being informed of the error, did not see fit to check whether the fax to Esedra contained the same error as that to Manieri so as to rectify it by contacting the applicant, nevertheless, if the applicant was unable to revise its tender before 24 January 2000, the reasons it puts forward in this connection are attributable to itself and not to the fact that the Commission was slow in informing it that the final date had been postponed. Moreover, the applicant has produced nothing at all to prove its assertion that it was unable to forewarn in good time the external consultants it used, who are said to have had other commitments from 7 January and would therefore not be free until 24 January.

44 In any case, the applicant does not claim that the fact that it was informed of the postponement of the final date on 7 January 2000, and not on 22 December 1999 like Manieri (or 20 December 1999, like the other candidates) had the consequence that the tender it presented was insufficiently detailed.

45 For those reasons the applicant's complaint of discrimination against it by reason of the postponement of the final date must be rejected.

2. The allegation that the Commission put questions to the tenderers which went beyond the request for clarification or the correction of obvious clerical errors in the tenders

Arguments of the parties

46 The applicant claims that the Commission put questions to Manieri which went beyond a request for clarification or the rectification of obvious clerical errors in the wording of Manieri's tender. In doing so, according to the applicant, the Commission infringed the second subparagraph of Article 99(h) of the detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation, which states that the Commission may not contact a tenderer after tenders have been opened unless some clarification is required or unless obvious clerical errors in the tender must be corrected. The Commission is also said to have breached the principle of non-discrimination underlying that provision.

47 The applicant claims that Manieri received several requests from the Commission, dated 25 and 29 February and 3 March 2000, which enabled it to finalise its bid. Likewise the Commission's requests entailed questions from Manieri, which was a further infringement of the second subparagraph of Article 99(h) of the detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation.

48 The Commission disputes the applicant's reasoning. According to the Commission, the questions put to all the tenderers on 25 and 29 February 2000 had already been dealt with in the tenders and the replies merely provided clarification, without which none of the tenderers would have been able to finalise its bid. The Commission adds that Manieri did not finalise its tender, which was lodged within the specified period. The Commission also contends that the three requests for clarification to which the applicant refers are entirely in accordance with the second subparagraph of the said Article 99(h) and, in that connection, cites the judgment in Case T-19/95 Adia Interim v Commission [1996] ECR II-321. The Commission adds that the only question raised by Manieri concerned the practical arrangements for speaking to the children in a different Community language.

Findings of the Court

49 It should be noted that, according to the second subparagraph of Article 99(h) of the detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation, any contact between the institution and the tenderer after the tenders have been opened is prohibited save, exceptionally, if some clarification is required in connection with a tender, or if obvious clerical errors contained in the tender must be corrected. In those cases, the institution may take it upon itself to contact the tenderer (see the judgment in Adia Interim v Commission, cited above, paragraph 43).

50 In this connection, the documents produced by the Commission in response to several measures of organisation of procedure show that Manieri received five requests for clarification from the Commission dated 25 February (two requests), 29 February, and 3 and 10 March 2000, and that it replied to them on 10 and 14 March 2000.

51 In the context of the measures of organisation of procedure, the Commission also produced Manieri's replies to the requests for clarification, and also extracts from Manieri's tender specifically relating to questions 1, 2, 5 and 6 in the first fax of 25 February 2000 and to the questions in the first, third and fourth indents of the fax of 3 March 2000. In addition, the Commission indicated, for each of the seven aforementioned questions, the parts of the contract documents to which the extracts from Manieri's tender and the requests for clarification relate.

52 For each of the seven questions considered below, it is necessary to determine whether Manieri's replies to the Commission's requests for clarification should be regarded as clarifying the terms of its tender or whether the replies go beyond that and modify the substance of the tender by reference to the requirements of the contract documents. The other questions are not contested by the applicant.

53 In the first question in the first fax of 25 February 2000 the Commission asked Manieri to provide very specific examples of a simulated staff training plan (frequency, type of sequence, type of training). It is clear from the file that Manieri's tender contained a detailed description of its training plan and that, in reply to the Commission's request, Manieri supplied a simulated training plan accompanied by a table entitled staff training plan.

54 In the light of those documents, it must be noted that the data used by Manieri in its reply had already appeared in the training plan included in its tender, in accordance with the requirements of the contract documents. Therefore Manieri's reply merely clarifies the data given in the tender, without modifying its terms.

55 In the second question in the first fax of 25 February 2000 the Commission asked Manieri to provide a description of the psychological and vocational tests (frequency, type of tests). The file shows that Manieri's tender contained a list of measures intended to limit staff absenteeism and these included the organisation of regular psychological and vocational tests of staff. In response to the Commission's request, Manieri provided the description required.

56 It must be observed, in the light of those documents, that psychological and vocational tests were not expressly required by the contract documents. However, Manieri's tender tackled the problem of staff absenteeism by envisaging the introduction of such tests and that is why the Commission requested clarification regarding those measures. Consequently Manieri's reply does no more than clarify for the Commission the concept of the psychological and vocational tests mentioned in the tender, without modifying its terms.

57 The fifth question in the first fax of 25 February 2000 was as follows: Is the entrance charge for museums and/or the charge for excursions paid by the contractor, with details of the number of excursions planned for each year, frequency and age groups. The file shows that Manieri's tender described the proposed visits and excursions, without expressly stating that the cost would be borne by the tenderer. In reply to the Commission's request, Manieri stated that it would indeed meet the cost. Manieri also provided information on the number and frequency of excursions and the age groups concerned.

58 In the light of those documents it must be observed, regarding the cost of visits and excursions, that the fact that Manieri's tender did not expressly mention that the cost would be borne by Manieri has no bearing on the present case. The contract documents stated that it could not be otherwise, but they did not require this to be stated in the tender. Therefore a negative response by Manieri to the Commission's request for clarification would have logically entailed the rejection of its tender, whereas a positive response in no way alters the tender. Likewise, with regard to, first, the frequency of excursions and, second, the age groups concerned, it must be observed that Manieri's reply merely repeats the information given in the tender and specifies the age of the children concerned, which does not mean that the tender was modified.

59 The sixth question in the first fax of 25 February 2000 was as follows: Stability of groups: is this a part-time staff member in terms of working hours and, if so, how many hours per week? Or is this a part-time staff member by virtue of function, but with effective full-time presence? Show on the basis of the general organisation chart and in the same structure, numbering each staff member from 1 to 50 paediatric nurses (e.g. P1, P2, P3, P4, etc.) in the division of each room and in the function of each person (A, B, C, part-time) and the same for the teachers. The file shows that Manieri's tender described the measures envisaged to ensure the stability of groups of pupils and groups of teachers. In particular, the tender stated that part-time teachers would carry out specific tasks or would provide for the presence of a third nurse in certain situations. In response to the Commission's request, Manieri gave the clarification required with regard to the question of part-time staff and supplied the organisation chart sought by the Commission.

60 In the light of those documents it must be observed that, on the question of part-time staff, Manieri's reply merely repeats the terms of its tender without modifying its substance. Moreover, it should be noted that, as regards the organisation chart desired by the Commission, that chart serves merely to illustrate Manieri's reply, without replacing the complete and detailed organisation chart required by the contract documents, which was included in Manieri's tender.

61 The first, third and fourth questions in the fax of 3 March 2000 were as follows:... please name the theoretical manual [Hazard Analysis Critical Control Point ("HACCP")] applicable on starting-up of the contract and state its period of adaptation.... Please describe the internal checks carried out by your company and what are the external checks made by Laboraco. Please state the types of checks, their frequency and numbers. It appears from the file that Manieri's tender contained, first, a general and theoretical description of the measures to be taken for health and cleanliness and that it considered health questions as an integral part of a general system of quality control. In addition, in its tender Manieri stated that it undertook to ensure the health quality of its services by using the services of a specialist firm, Laboraco. In response to those requests by the Commission, Manieri gave the clarification required and supplied an organisation chart of the proposed quality and self-regulation system, together with a description of the persons in charge of it, a theoretical list of checks and a theoretical HACCP manual.

62 In the light of those documents it must be observed that Manieri's reply merely clarifies the wording of its tender without modifying it in substance. Manieri's tender meets the requirements of the contract documents, which require each candidate to include with its tender a brief note of its own progress in the matter of health, the human resources and qualifications used and, failing that, the measures taken at present to ensure the health quality of its services, and Manieri's reply merely gives details of the proposed internal and external checks for that purpose. Likewise, sending a theoretical HACCP manual in response to a request from the Commission cannot be regarded as a modification of the tender because the latter contained a general and theoretical description of the measures to be taken for health and cleanliness, the HACCP manual being only one means to that end.

63 In conclusion, the foregoing examination of the contract documents, Manieri's tender, the requests for clarification and Manieri's replies show that the Commission did not breach the principle of non-discrimination enshrined in Article 3(2) of Directive 92/50 and the second subparagraph of Article 99(h) of the detailed rules for the implementation of the Financial Regulation. Manieri's replies to the Commission's requests constitute clarification of the terms of its tender and they in no way modify the substance of the tender in relation to the requirements laid down by the contract documents.

64 Consequently the applicant's complaints relating to discrimination against it by reason of Manieri's replies to the Commission's requests for clarification must be rejected.

3. The applicant's allegation that the assessment of the tenders was not impartial

65 According to the applicant, the assessment of the tenders was not impartial because the parents' association and the Joint Management Committee of the Early Childhood Centre (Cocepe), two bodies hostile to the applicant for illegitimate reasons, took part in the assessment. The applicant also considers that the Commission wished to make a clean sweep of the past and to exclude the applicant from the CPE Clovis because the applicant managed the CPE when alleged paedophilic acts were committed there in 1997.

66 First, the applicant observes that the deputy chairman of the parents' association took part in the procedure for assessing tenders in the present case. However, the chairman of that association had informed the Commission of her dissatisfaction by sending it a copy of a letter she had written to a member of Cocepe, complaining of the way in which the applicant had managed the CPE Clovis. Moreover, the parents' association had asked the Commission to terminate the contract current at that time.

67 The Court considers that there can be no objection to the participation of a representative of the parents' association in the assessment of tenders in view of the importance of the parents' contribution to the cost of the CPE Clovis and their interest in educational matters connected with the welfare of the children.

68 Similarly, discrimination against the applicant cannot be inferred from the dissatisfaction expressed by the chairman of the parents' association concerning the way in which Esedra managed the CPE Clovis. The letter on which that allegation is based was addressed to a member of Cocepe and a copy was sent to the Commission for information. Examination of the letter shows that it was sent by a parent of pupils in her personal capacity and not on behalf of the parents' association. The writer of the letter never refers to her position as chairman of the parents' association. Furthermore, it appears that in the final analysis she did not wish to damage the applicants' image or its business, as she made clear in response to the action brought against her by Esedra.

69 In addition, the applicant's allegation that the parents' association asked the Commission to terminate the applicant's management contract at the time is based solely on a leaflet of the local staff committee and that document does not justify attributing such a request to the parents' association.

70 Consequently, the applicant's complaint relating to the participation of a representative of the parents' association in the procedure for awarding the contract in question must be rejected.

71 Second, the applicant contends that Cocepe followed the progress of the procedure for awarding the contract and the procedure had been mentioned at the 221st meeting of that body on 24 March 2000. On this point the applicant observes that Cocepe is a joint body consisting of representatives of the staff committees. Like the parents' association, the local staff committee is hostile to the applicant, as shown by its objection to the privatisation of the activities of the CPE Clovis in 1995.

72 The Court observes that it appears from the specifications annexed to the contract documents that Cocepe is a joint body consisting of management representatives and staff committee representatives, with four representatives of the Commission, two of the Council, two of the Economic and Social Committee and of the Committee for the Regions, and two representatives of the Parliament. Within the framework of the CPE Clovis management contract, Cocepe assists the Commission in its task of monitoring, inter-institutional coordination and permanent evaluation. It also helps in observing the functioning of the CPE Clovis, considers requests by parents and delivers opinions on the operation of the Centre.

73 It must be noted that none of the members of Cocepe took part in appraising the tenders within the framework of the procedure for awarding the contract in question. In particular, the Commission states, without being contradicted by the applicant, that Cocepe cannot have access to tenders, which can only be disclosed to the assessment panels.

74 In addition, there is no basis for the applicant's assertion that the fact that Cocepe followed the procedure for awarding the contract or that it intervened in the preparation of the management contract infringes the principle of non-discrimination. Although Cocepe followed the procedure, this was only by way of a general outline of the progress of the invitation to tender at the 221st meeting, which had no influence on the assessment process.

75 The applicant's complaint that Cocepe took part in the procedure for awarding the contract in question must therefore be rejected.

76 Third, the applicant states that, as a result of alleged paedophilic acts committed in 1997, pressure was brought to bear on the Commission to exclude the applicant from the management of the CPE Clovis and that, in yielding to such pressure, the Commission's intention was to make a clean sweep of the past.

77 The Court observes that the applicant has not adduced the slightest evidence to show that the alleged paedophilic acts in 1997 resulted in any discrimination whatever against the applicant.

78 Accordingly, it must be made clear that it was the applicant, not the Commission, which terminated the contract for the management of the CPE Clovis, which is sufficient proof that the Commission did not regard the applicant as responsible for the events which are said to have occurred in 1997.

79 Likewise, the fact that the local staff committee criticised the way in which the applicant executed the contract and asked the Commission to make other arrangements for the management of the CPE Clovis does not affect the assessment of the applicant's tender because the staff committee did not take part in the assessment process.

80 Therefore the applicant's complaint that the Commission intended to eliminate the applicant because it managed the CPE Clovis at the time of alleged paedophilic acts in 1997 must be rejected.

81 It follows from the foregoing that the applicant is wrong in its submission that the Commission did not carry out an impartial assessment of the tenders.

82 The first plea in law must therefore be dismissed.

The second plea, alleging that the notice of invitation to tender and the contract documents were disregarded in relation to the assessment of the successful tenderer's financial and technical standing

83 The applicant contends that the successful tenderer, namely the group of companies represented by Manieri, does not have the financial and technical standing required by the notice of invitation to tender and the contract documents.

1. The successful tenderer's financial standing

Arguments of the parties

84 The applicant contends that the Commission ought to have eliminated Manieri from the procedure for the award of the contract in question because its financial standing and that of the other companies in the group it represents is insufficient. On this point the Commission disregarded the notice of invitation to tender and the contract documents, made a manifestly incorrect assessment and infringed Article 34 of Directive 92/50 and also the principle of non-discrimination.

85 Thus, the applicant notes that on 28 October 1999 the assessment panel decided to select the group represented by Manieri without having in its possession the balance sheets of three of the companies forming the group. Following the Commission's request of 13 October 1999, the balance sheets were received by the Commission only on 3 November 1999. On this point the applicant observes that the absence of the balance sheets could not be made up for by the joint and several undertaking given by the members of the group represented by Manieri because the Commission did not know the financial standing of three of them. Likewise, according to the applicant, the balance sheets supplied at the selection stage did not make it possible to establish that the candidate in question had the requisite financial standing as the annual financial value of the contract, which the applicant estimates at BEF 140 000 000 (EUR 3 470 509.34) was greater than the total turnover of the four members of the group represented by Manieri, whose balance sheet was given to the Commission, which was approximately BEF 60 000 000 (EUR 1 487 361.15) in 1998.

86 The applicant also criticises the assessment panel's preference for analysing technical standing rather than financial standing. The applicant contends that it is incumbent on the Commission to assess the financial criterion as well as the technical criterion, and not to prefer one to the other. From this viewpoint the applicant contends that, if the financial standing of the group represented by Manieri was not made clear in its application, the Commission ought to have obtained further particulars on that point, in accordance with Article 34 of Directive 92/50. The applicant adds that the different rules in force in the Member States governing the presentation of balance sheets and trading accounts of companies and legal persons cannot, in the absence of complete harmonisation in the matter, justify the abandonment of a criterion intended by the Community legislature. In this connection the applicant sees no reason why the balance sheets or accounts of a legal person should not include the figures requested, in particular the general turnover, the turnover specific to operating in the market in question and government aid, if any.

87 In addition, the applicant observes that the letter of 3 February 2000 from Deutsche Bank makes no significant contribution to the discussion because it was out of time and merely states, firstly, that Manieri can fulfil its financial obligations, but does not mention the amount of the contract in question and, secondly, that Manieri has a good reputation in its field of business, which is not that of the contract in question because it involves secondary education of the second grade.

88 The Commission contests the applicant's arguments and submits that the group represented by Manieri had the requisite financial standing to be selected, as proved by the documents it produced within the framework of the procedure for awarding the contract in question, in accordance with Articles 31 and 34 of Directive 92/50.

Findings of the Court

89 It should be observed that Article 31 of Directive 92/50 provides as follows:

1. Proof of the service provider's financial and economic standing may, as a general rule, be furnished by one or more of the following references:

(a) appropriate statements from banks or evidence of relevant professional risk indemnity insurance;

(b) the presentation of the service provider's balance sheets or extracts therefrom, where publication of the balance sheets is required under company law in the country in which the service provider is established;

(c) a statement of the undertaking's overall turnover and its turnover in respect of the services to which the contract relates for the previous three financial years.

2. The contracting authorities shall specify in the contract notice or in the invitation to tender which reference or references mentioned in paragraph 1 they have chosen and which other references are to be produced.

3. If, for any valid reason, the service provider is unable to provide the references requested by the contracting authority, he may prove his economic and financial standing by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate.

90 In addition, Article 34 of Directive 92/50 provides that within the limits of Articles 29 to 32, contracting authorities may invite the service providers to supplement the certificates and documents submitted or to clarify them.

91 Therefore, in accordance with Article 31(2) of Directive 92/50, the contract notice is the relevant document for determining whether the Commission made a serious and manifest error in selecting the application from the group of companies represented by Manieri.

92 Paragraph 13 of the contract notice, relating to information on the service provider's own situation and the formalities necessary for appraising the minimum financial and technical standing required, states that candidates must produce, together with their request to participate and mentioning reference 99/52/IX.D.1, the following documents:

(3) copies of the balance sheets and trading accounts for the last three years or if, for any valid reason, the candidate is unable to produce them, any other document proving his financial standing;

(4) a statement of the overall annual turnover in the last three financial years;

(5) a statement of the specific annual turnover in the sector to which the present invitation to tender relates, in the last three financial years;

...

93 In addition, paragraph 9 of the contract notice states that, if the tender is submitted on behalf of a group of service providers, all the members of the group must be jointly and severally responsible for the performance of the contract, while paragraph 12 states that the successful tenderer will be required to furnish a performance bond in the sum of EUR 400 000 before the contract takes effect.

94 Finally, the contract notice allows the Commission a certain discretion because paragraph 15(2) provides that the Commission may automatically reject an application which does not include all the information required in paragraph 13. Therefore the contract notice does not oblige the Commission to reject an incomplete application.

95 On this point, it must be observed that the Commission has a broad discretion in assessing the factors to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding to award a contract following an invitation to tender and the Court's review must be limited to verifying that there has been no serious and manifest error (see the judgments in Case 56/77 Agence Européenne d'Intérims v Commission [1978] ECR 2215, paragraph 20; the case of Adia Intérim v Commission, cited above, paragraph 49, and Case T-139/99 AICS v Parliament [2000] ECR II-2849, paragraph 39).

96 In the present case, the financial standing of Manieri and the other members of the group represented by it was appraised at two levels: at the time when applications were selected and, at a later stage, before the contract in question was awarded.

97 With regard to the first stage, it appears from the file that, when the selection of applications was carried out, Manieri's application was accompanied, firstly, by copies of the balance sheets and trading accounts for the last three years of four of the seven undertakings forming the group represented by Manieri, together with a substitute statement for the other three members (in accordance with paragraph 13(3) of the contract notice) and, secondly, a statement of the overall annual turnover in the last three financial years of each of the seven undertakings (in accordance with paragraph 13(4) of the contract notice) and a statement of the specific annual turnover in the sector to which the invitation to tender relates, in the last three financial years (in accordance with paragraph 13(5) of the contract notice).

98 Therefore, in view of the discretion granted to the Commission by the contract notice, the Commission cannot be criticised for not having rejected Manieri's application merely on the ground that Manieri gave no reason for the absence of copies of the balance sheets and trading accounts of three of the seven members of the group which it represents.

99 It must be observed that the Commission had other information which enabled it to determine the financial standing of the Manieri group in the absence of the balance sheets and trading accounts in question.

100 For example, the letter of 17 June 1999 from the bank Rolo Banca, which was annexed to Manieri's application, stated that Manieri had sufficient financial resources at its disposal. Such a document could be deemed an appropriate statement from a bank for the purposes of Article 31(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 which was in itself sufficient to prove the financial standing of a candidate and could be taken into account by the Commission on the basis of its discretion.

101 Manieri's offer of 23 October 1999 to furnish immediately the bank guarantee for EUR 400 000 mentioned in paragraph 12 of the contract notice also enabled the Commission to regard Manieri's financial standing as sufficient.

102 The same applies to the statement annexed to Manieri's letter of 23 October 1999, in which the seven members of the group represented by Manieri undertook jointly and severally to perform the contract in accordance with paragraph 9 of the contract notice.

103 In the present case these factors appear particularly relevant in so far as the financial standing of candidates for a public services contract must be assessed by reference to their ability to pay their staff and creditors if they are awarded the contract in question rather than by reference to the value of the contract. The draft framework contract accompanying the contract documents states accordingly that the Commission undertakes to pay the amounts due within a period of 60 days, which limits most of the risk associated with the candidate's financial standing to the expenses incurred in the two months during which it may have to allow the Commission credit and not, for example, to the annual value of the contract estimated by the Commission at EUR 4 000 000. In those circumstances a bank certificate, an offer of a guarantee or a joint and several undertaking are particularly appropriate for assessing a candidate's financial standing.

104 Furthermore, the priority given to technical standing over financial standing in the selection of candidates does not mean that financial standing was not considered at all. The conclusions of the assessment panel that the candidates' financial standing was not clear from the turnover figures given because of the different aids and subsidies they had received indicate expressly that a detailed check would have to be made of the proposed tenderer's financial cover before the contract was awarded.

105 In this connection it must be noted that, in conformity with the abovementioned request of the assessment panel, the Commission checked the financial standing of the Manieri group after it had been proposed for receiving the contract.

106 Consequently the balance sheets and the trading accounts of the three members of the group represented by Manieri which were not included with Manieri's application and which the Commission asked for on 13 October 1999 or, at least, the reason for their absence, as required by Article 34 of Directive 92/50, reached the Commission on 3 November 1999, thus completing the application.

107 Subsequently Manieri passed to the Commission a letter dated 3 February 2000 from Deutsche Bank which states that Manieri, taken on its own, has the financial resources at its disposal, it can meet its commitments and has a good reputation. This second letter, in addition to that from Rolo Banca 1473 of 17 June 1999, is further evidence of this applicant's financial standing.

108 It follows from the foregoing that, when considering the financial standing of Manieri and the other members of the group represented by it, the Commission did not disregard the contract notice or the contract documents, nor was there a manifest error of assessment on the Commission's part, nor did it infringe Article 34 of Directive 92/50 or the principle of non-discrimination.

109 Therefore the applicant's complaints relating to the successful tenderer's inadequate financial standing must be dismissed.

2. The successful tenderer's technical standing

Arguments of the parties

110 The applicant contends that the Commission ought to have eliminated Manieri from the procedure for the award of the contract in question by reason of its inadequate technical standing. On this point, the Commission disregarded the contract notice and erred manifestly in its assessment.

111 With regard to the technical standing of the successful tenderer, the applicant observes that Manieri's company object has no connection with the management of day nurseries because it relates to secondary education of the second grade. The applicant goes on to observe that, of all the companies in the group represented by Manieri, only the company Garden Bimbo, which has a staff of only 11 persons, has activities connected with very young children and a company object defined in relation to the nature of the market concerned. The applicant adds that the company object does not indicate the appropriate technical standing for fulfilling the contract in question because it also relates to sets of children under the age of one year.

112 Furthermore, the applicant observes that the contract in question was entrusted by the Manieri group to a company incorporated under Belgian law, Sapiens. However, the latter did not have the standing required to fulfil the contract because its only shareholders were a natural person and Manieri, none of the shares being held by other members of the group, particularly Garden Bimbo. Likewise, the applicant contends that the staff recruited by Sapiens are insufficiently qualified and do not have the requisite seniority, which was borne out by the negative reactions of which the applicant had heard regarding the fulfilment of the contract in question.

113 The Commission confirms that the successful tenderer meets the technical criteria required by the contract notice and that it has sufficient technical standing.

Findings of the Court

114 As a preliminary point, it must be observed that, with regard to the question under consideration, the Commission has a broad discretion and the Court's review must be limited to verifying that there has been no serious and manifest error (see paragraph 95 above).

115 On this point, it should be noted that paragraph 13 of the contract notice lists the particulars which are necessary for appraising candidates' minimum technical standing as follows:

(6) a statement of the candidate's annual average work force and the number of managerial staff in the last three years;

(7) a list of the main contracts in the field of the present invitation to tender carried out in the last three years, showing the amounts, dates and names and addresses of the persons receiving the services;

(8) a full description of the various measures taken by the candidate for quality control of the services;

(9) details of the part [of the] contract which the candidate intends, if necessary, to sub-contract, and the arrangements for quality control and supervision of the proposed sub-contract.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

116 As in the case of information on financial standing, a tender which gives no or only incomplete information on technical standing may be automatically eliminated by the Commission in accordance with paragraph 15(2) of the contract notice.

117 With regard to the applicant's argument concerning the company objects of the members of the group represented by Manieri, it must be observed that the company object is not one of the criteria listed in the contract notice which may be taken into account for assessing a candidate's technical standing. Moreover, such a criterion could be misleading in so far as a company object may be worded in very broad terms and may be altered.

118 Moreover, there is no factual foundation for this argument in relation to Manieri. IIn fact, examination of its company object shows that it relates not only to secondary education of the second grade but also, and in particular, to nursery school and kindergarten, which therefore includes activities connected with very young children.

119 With regard to the applicant's criticism of Sapiens, it must be observed that, firstly, the formation of that company in June 2000 occurred after the selection of candidates and the award of the contract in question and such criticism therefore is irrelevant for assessing the Manieri group's technical standing and, secondly, the Commission maintains, without being contradicted, that most of the staff employed by Sapiens were previously employed by the applicant.

120 In addition, as the Commission pointed out in its note of 10 May 2000 to the Advisory Committee on Procurements and Contracts, the formation of a company under Belgian law such as Sapiens is a means of fulfilling a number of obligations laid down by the Member State where the services are provided, in relation to employment law, tax law and social law (social insurance contributions and other employees' rights, payment of taxes, availability of a VAT number, supervision of management of facilities for small children in Belgium, etc.).

121 Moreover, when the selection of candidates was carried out, the Manieri group's application included a statement of the average workforce and the number of managerial staff in the last three years, in accordance with paragraph 13(6) of the contract notice.

122 Nevertheless, with regard to the figures for the workforce, it appears from the findings of the assessment panel that those figures were not reliable and conclusive as the contract would not have been carried out by the applicants directly, but by a company incorporated under Belgian law which they were to form and most of the staff were to be recruited on the spot.

123 Consequently the technical standing of the candidates was assessed on the basis of the other criteria laid down by the contract notice, namely the list of the main contracts in the field of the present invitation to tender carried out in the last three years (paragraph 13(7) of the contract notice), the measures taken for quality control (paragraph 13(8) of the contract notice) and the part of the contract which was subcontracted, if any, and the arrangements for the quality control of the sub-contract (paragraph 13(9) of the contract notice).

124 In the present case, the assessment panel took the view that Manieri's application, like that of the other six candidates, was satisfactory. In particular, it is clear from the panel's findings that Manieri, like the other six candidates, fulfilled the conditions laid down in paragraph 13(7) to (9) of the contract notice by furnishing all the information requested.

125 The applicant is therefore wrong in claiming that the Commission disregarded the contract notice and manifestly erred in its assessment when examining the technical standing of Manieri or the other members of the group which it represents. Accordingly the applicant's complaints concerning the successful tenderer's inadequate technical standing must be rejected.

126 Consequently the second plea in law must be dismissed.

The third plea, alleging that the contract documents were disregarded in relation to the evaluation of prices and the quality of the tenders

127 The applicant claims that Manieri's tender cannot be better than its own with respect to the price and quality criteria laid down by the contract documents.

128 In this connection, it should be observed that the criteria for awarding the contract in question, as set out in the contract documents, are as follows:

The contract will be awarded to the economically most advantageous tender taking account of:

- the prices tendered and

- the quality of the tender and of the services proposed, evaluated, in descending order of importance, according to:

(a) the quality of the teaching programme (40%)

(b) the measures and resources implemented to provide cover for staff absences (30%)

(c) the methodology and monitoring devices proposed for monitoring: (30%)

- the quality of service and management

- the maintenance of staffing levels

- the implementation of the teaching programme.

1. Evaluation of the prices offered by the tenderers

129 The following facts are common ground between the parties.

130 The starting point for the evaluation of the prices offered by the tenderers consists of the information supplied in accordance with the instructions in the tender schedule 2 of 3 (the schedule) annexed to the contract documents. This schedule required the tender of an overall fixed monthly price including all constraints of performance for the complete administrative and teaching management of the CPE Clovis on the basis of a distinction between the day nursery and the kindergarten. The schedule distinguished between five categories of prices:

- the price per child enrolled at the CPE Clovis (in EUR/month);

- the price per place reserved for a maximum of four months without attendance by the child at the CPE Clovis day nursery (in EUR/month);

- the price per child enrolled at the CPE Clovis kindergarten (in EUR/month);

- the price per place reserved for a maximum of four months without attendance by the child at the CPE Clovis kindergarten (in EUR/month);

- the price supplement beyond a quarter of an hour or part thereof outside the normal opening hours of the CPE [Clovis] (in EUR/quarter of an hour).

131 The tender prices were evaluated by the Commission on the basis of the information supplied in accordance with the instructions in the schedule (i.e. the price relating to each of the five categories mentioned above), by reference to three hypotheses regarding attendance at the CPE Clovis:

- hypothesis A: average number of children actually present in 1999;

- hypothesis B: number of children, forecast average occupation of rooms;

- hypothesis C: number of children, maximum occupation of rooms.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

132 According to the applicant, the Commission failed to comply with the contract documents and therefore acted unlawfully in considering three attendance hypotheses and not just the information required by the schedule. The applicant observed during the hearing that an evaluation in conformity with the requirements of the contract documents, i.e. on the basis of an aggregate of the price offered for each of the five categories mentioned in the schedule, would have led the Commission to find that the applicant's tender was lower than Manieri's.

133 Alternatively, the applicant notes that, even if the Commission had been entitled to disregard the tender schedules, it would also have been necessary for it to state the reason. However, the reason given, namely that direct comparison of the different price components given in the tender schedule was not possible, does not entitle the Commission to disregard the contract documents.

134 The Commission contends, on the contrary, that the prices were evaluated in strict accordance with the criteria laid down beforehand in the contract documents.

135 As a preliminary point, the Court observes that, with regard to the question before it, the Commission has a broad discretion and the Court's review must be limited to verifying that there has been no serious and manifest error (see paragraph 95 above).

136 As stated above, the starting point for the method of evaluating the tender prices was the price offered by each tenderer for each of the five categories shown in the schedule. The prices offered by Esedra and Manieri were as follows:

- Esedra: EUR 1 090 per child enrolled at the day nursery; EUR 430 per place reserved in the day nursery; EUR 965 per child enrolled at the kindergarten; EUR 300 per place reserved in the kindergarten and EUR 5 for each additional quarter of an hour;

- Manieri: EUR 1 050 per child enrolled at the day nursery; EUR 880.64 per place reserved in the day nursery; EUR 940 per child enrolled at the kindergarten; EUR 788.37 per place reserved in the kindergarten and EUR 6 for each additional quarter of an hour.

137 It should be added that the prices tendered for each of the abovementioned categories are unit prices (for each child enrolled at the day nursery or the kindergarten, for each place reserved in the day nursery or the kindergarten or for each quarter of an hour).

138 Each of those prices was then multiplied by the corresponding number of children enrolled in the day nursery or the kindergarten, reserved places in the day nursery or kindergarten or quarters of an hour envisaged by the Commission for each of the three hypotheses for attendance at the CPE Clovis. Those figures were as follows:

- hypothesis A (average number of children actually present in 1999): 211.08 children enrolled in the day nursery; 2 places reserved in the day nursery; 60.33 children enrolled in the kindergarten; 2 places reserved in the kindergarten and 12.5 additional quarters of an hour;

- hypothesis B (number of children, forecast average occupation of rooms): 253 children enrolled in the day nursery; 2 places reserved in the day nursery; 55 children enrolled in the kindergarten; 2 places reserved in the kindergarten and 12.5 additional quarters of an hour;

- hypothesis C (number of children, maximum occupation of rooms): 270 children enrolled in the day nursery; 0 places reserved in the day nursery; 108 children enrolled in the kindergarten; 0 places reserved in the kindergarten and 12.5 additional quarters of an hour.

139 With regard to hypothesis A (average number of children actually present in 1999), the results of the evaluation were as follows:

- Esedra: for each category, the monthly price was EUR 230 080.83, i.e. EUR 1 090 x 211.08 (children enrolled in the day nursery); EUR 860, i.e. EUR 430 x 2 (places reserved in the day nursery);

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

EUR 58 221.67, i.e. EUR 965 x 60.33 (children enrolled in the kindergarten); EUR 600, i.e. EUR 300 x 2 (places reserved in the kindergarten) and EUR 62.50, i.e. EUR 5 x 12.5 (additional quarters of an hour). The average monthly total was therefore EUR 289 825.

- Manieri: for each category, the monthly price was EUR 221 637.50, i.e. EUR 1 050 x 211.08 (children enrolled in the day nursery); EUR 1 761.28, i.e. EUR 880.64 x 2 (places reserved in the day nursery); EUR 56 713.33, i.e. EUR 940 x 60.33 (children enrolled in the kindergarten); EUR 1 576.74, i.e. EUR 788.37 x 2 (places reserved in the kindergarten) and EUR 75, i.e. EUR 6 x 12.5 (additional quarters of an hour). The average monthly total was therefore EUR 281 763.85.

140 With regard to hypothesis B (number of children, forecast average occupation of rooms), the results of the evaluation were as follows:

- Esedra: for each category, the monthly price was EUR 275 770, i.e. EUR 1 090 x 253 (children enrolled in the day nursery); EUR 860, i.e. EUR 430 x 2 (places reserved in the day nursery); EUR 53 075, i.e. EUR 965 x 55 (children enrolled in the kindergarten); EUR 600, i.e. EUR 300 x 2 (places reserved in the kindergarten) and EUR 62.50, i.e. EUR 5 x 12.5 (additional quarters of an hour). The average monthly total was therefore EUR 330 367.50.

- Manieri: for each category, the monthly price was EUR 265 650, i.e. EUR 1 050 x 253 (children enrolled in the day nursery); EUR 1 761.28, i.e EUR 880.64 x 2 (places reserved in the day nursery); EUR 51 700, i.e. EUR 940 x 55 (children enrolled in the kindergarten); EUR 1 576.74, i.e. EUR 788.37 x 2 (places reserved in the kindergarten) and EUR 75, i.e. EUR 6 x 12.5 (additional quarters of an hour). The average monthly total was therefore EUR 320 763.02.

141 With regard to hypothesis C (number of children, maximum occupation of rooms), the results of the evaluation were as follows (NB: this hypothesis does not envisage any reserved places in the day nursery or the kindergarten):

- Esedra: for each category, the monthly price was EUR 294 300, i.e. EUR 1 090 x 270 (children enrolled in the day nursery); EUR 104 220, i.e. EUR 965 x 108 (children enrolled in the kindergarten) and EUR 62.50, i.e. EUR 5 x 12.5 (additional quarters of an hour). The average monthly total was therefore EUR 398 582.50.

- Manieri: for each category, the monthly price was EUR 283 500, i.e. EUR 1 050 x 270 (children enrolled in the day nursery); EUR 101 520, i.e EUR 940 x 108 (children enrolled in the kindergarten) and EUR 75, i.e. EUR 6 x 12.5 (additional quarters of an hour). The average monthly total was therefore EUR 385 095.

142 The results of the Commission's evaluation of the tender prices on the basis of the method described above show that, on each of the three hypotheses in question, Manieri's tender is more favourable than that of Esedra.

143 It cannot be denied that the unit prices per child are multiplied by the total number of units (children enrolled in the day nursery or the kindergarten, places reserved in the day nursery or the kindergarten, or additional quarters of an hour) so as to make it possible to evaluate the prices of the different tenders.

144 The applicant's position in this respect is wholly illogical. To take account only of the unit prices per child does not make it possible to determine the total monthly price which the Commission must pay the service provider for managing the CPE Clovis because that total must necessarily take account of the number of children enrolled in the day nursery and the kindergarten, places reserved in the day nursery and the kindergarten, and additional quarters of an hour. The total price of the tenders can be determined and the tenders can be compared only by multiplying each unit price per child by the anticipated total number of children, reserved places and quarters of an hour.

145 Moreover, it must be observed that the three hypotheses regarding attendance envisaged by the Commission are based on reasonable data, namely the actual average attendance at the CPE Clovis during one reference year, 1999, the average attendance anticipated and the maximum possible attendance, and that most of those figures were known to the applicant. For example, with regard to hypothesis B, the contract documents state the average number of children enrolled in the day nursery (253). The contract documents also state, with regard to hypothesis C, the maximum number which can be enrolled at the day nursery (270) and the kindergarten (108). The figures for the numbers of children enrolled in the day nursery and the kindergarten are the most important for evaluating the tender prices under consideration on the three hypotheses envisaged by the Commission, taking account of their respective amounts (253 or 270 children enrolled in the day nursery, 55 or 108 children enrolled in the kindergarten) compared with the figures for the other three categories (2 or 0 places reserved in the day nursery or the kindergarten, 12.5 additional quarters of an hour). Finally, the applicant cannot pretend to be unaware of the figures relating to hypothesis A because the applicant itself provided the services in question in 1999, which was chosen as the reference year for determining historic attendance.

146 It follows from the foregoing that there was no manifest error by the Commission in its assessment of Manieri's and Esedra's tenders with regard to the criterion of prices. Consequently the applicant's arguments concerning the evaluation of the tender prices must be rejected.

2. Evaluation of the quality of the tenders

(a) Evaluation of the quality of tenders in general

Arguments of the parties

147 The applicant contends that there was a manifest error of assessment on the Commission's part in deciding that Manieri's tender was better than the applicant's with regard to the criterion of quality.

148 The applicant points out that it has obtained the quality certificate ISO 9001:94 and is therefore subject to regular and exacting internal and external checks. The applicant adds that its tender included different initiatives intended to improve the quality of its services, such as special programmes for handicapped children and the establishment of a five-year plan for each of its services.

149 The applicant questions the competence of the members of the qualitative assessment panel and notes that they did not go to the places where the tenderers provided their services, unlike what happened in the case of the preceding procedure for the award of a contract, which would have shown them that none of the companies in the group represented by Manieri - with the partial exception of Garden Bimbo, which works with children aged 12 months and above, whereas the contract in question also relates to children of under 12 months - provides services of the nature of those referred to by the invitation to tender, as demonstrated by the objects of those companies.

150 The Commission challenges that submission and observes that the qualitative assessment of tenders was carried out on the basis of the qualitative criteria announced beforehand in the contract documents and pursuant to a method laid down on 9 February 2000, i.e. between the date of the submission of tenders (7 February 2000) and the date when they were opened (14 February 2000). On this point, the Commission observes that the summary drawn up on the final assessment of tenders shows that there was a significant difference in quality between Manieri, which was placed first, and Esedra, which was second.

151 The Commission adds that the report of the qualitative assessment panel and the annexes thereto show that Esedra received fewer points than Manieri in relation to two of the three qualitative criteria.

Findings of the Court

152 As a preliminary point, it must be observed that, with regard to the question under consideration, the Commission has a broad discretion and the Court's review must be limited to verifying that there has been no serious and manifest error (see paragraph 95 above).

153 Before examining the results of the Commission's assessment, mention should be made of the qualitative criteria used by the Commission for assessing the tenders.

154 In the present case, the contract documents stated that the contract was to be awarded to the economically most advantageous tender taking account of:

the quality of the tender and of the services proposed, evaluated, in descending order of importance, according to:

(a) the quality of the teaching programme (40%)

(b) the measures and resources implemented to provide cover for staff absences (30%)

(c) the methodology and monitoring devices proposed for monitoring: (30%)

- the quality of service and management

- the maintenance of staffing levels

- the implementation of the teaching programme.

155 In this connection, it is clear from the final table compiled by the qualitative assessment panel that:

- Manieri's tender received 27.6 points in respect of the quality of the teaching programme, 21.6 points in respect of the measures and resources implemented to provide cover for staff absences and 21 points in respect of the methodology and devices for monitoring, i.e. a total of 70.2 points, which corresponds to the index 100, which meant that it was the best tender in terms of quality;

- Esedra's tender received 21.1 points in respect of the quality of the teaching programme, 13.2 points in respect of the measures and resources implemented to provide cover for staff absences, 22.2 points in respect of the methodology and devices for monitoring, i.e. a total of 56.5 points, which corresponds to the index 80.4, which meant that it was the second best tender in terms of quality.

156 It must be observed that the applicant has not adduced the slightest evidence to show that there was a serious and manifest error of assessment on the Commission's part when appraising the tenders in general.

157 For example, neither the fact that the applicant has obtained the quality certificate ISO 9001:94 and that it is subject to regular and exacting internal and external checks, nor the fact that its tender included different initiatives intended to improve the quality of its services are factors demonstrating that the quality of its tender exceeds that of Manieri's.

158 With regard to the applicant's submission that the members of the group represented by Manieri do not provide or provide hardly at all the services required by the contract in question, it must be observed that, apart from the fact that that argument does not apply in the present case (see paragraphs 117 and 118 above), the quality of the tenders must be assessed on the basis of the tenders themselves and not on that of the experience acquired by the tenderers with the contracting authority in connection with previous contracts or on the basis of the selection criteria (such as the technical standing of candidates) which were checked at the stage of selecting applications and which cannot be taken into account again for the purpose of comparing the tenders (see, to that effect, judgment in Case 31/87 Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635, paragraph 15).

159 So far as concerns the applicant's doubts regarding the competence of the members of the qualitative assessment panel and the absence of on-the-spot inspections of the premises where the tenderers provide their services, it must be observed that the applicant has not adduced any arguments capable of casting doubt on the competence of those persons who have, by virtue of their functions within the Commission, sufficient experience to evaluate tenders from the qualitative point of view, and that such inspections were not required in connection with the procedure for awarding the contract in question.

160 Consequently the applicant's submissions concerning the qualitative evaluation of its tender and that of the successful tenderer in general must be rejected.

(b) The qualitative evaluation of certain parameters of the tenders

161 The applicant also submits that the qualitative evaluation of certain parameters of its tender and that of the successful tenderer reveals a manifest error of assessment.

162 It must be observed that, with regard to the question under consideration, the Commission has a broad discretion and the Court's review must be limited to verifying that there has been no serious and manifest error (see paragraph 95 above).

163 The Court finds that the applicant has not adduced the slightest evidence to show that there was a serious and manifest error of assessment on the Commission's part when appraising certain parameters of the tenders. The applicant's submissions concerning each parameter are examined below.

(i) Parameters A.2 level of the continuous training plan for teachers and B.1 level of training of replacement staff

164 The applicant observes that it received a poor mark (2 points) and the comment information and not training, confusion between the roles of educational psychologist and instructor, whereas Manieri received an excellent mark (10 points). The applicant contends that the word confusion is mistaken because one of the main functions of an educational psychologist is to instruct adults who work with children and not to be in contact with children, which is the teacher's role. Likewise the finding information and not training is incorrect because Esedra's quality assurance system provides for setting up and complying with different training organisation and identification procedures. Furthermore, the quality of the training provided by the applicant has been praised by a study carried out by two students of the Catholic University of Louvain and a report of the Institut d'Enseignement De Mot-Couvreur on the courses attended by trainee paediatric nurses.

165 According to the applicant, such remarks also apply with regard to parameter B.1 level of training of replacement staff, for which it received 1 point as against 4 for Manieri.

166 The Court points out, as does the Commission, that that institution has sufficient knowledge to assess the quality of the training plan and the role of a team of educational psychologists in the light of the experience acquired in the contractual supervision and management of a group of three day nurseries with more than 600 children.

167 On this point, it should be observed that, although the teaching team may, in addition to its advisory role in the teaching and teacher-training fields, also play a part as instructor, nevertheless, firstly, the team inevitably needs external support and expertise (consultants, specialist organisers, etc.) in the various fields appertaining to early childhood and, secondly, that the training it provides internally or externally must be the subject of a general scheme within the framework of a training plan in correlation with the principles laid down in the teaching programme.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

168 However, the Commission can make comparisons between tenders in that field only if the tenderers provide training plans that are as detailed as possible. From this viewpoint, the checks carried out as part of the Esedra quality assurance system, the assessments by the students of the Catholic University of Louvain and the results of training courses at the CPE Clovis during the period of the applicant's management are not factors which reveal that the quality of the applicant's tender is superior to that of Manieri's tender.

169 The applicant's complaint in respect of the evaluation of parameters A.2 and B.1 must therefore be rejected.

(ii) Parameter A.4 quality and quantity of teaching aids (toys, equipment, etc.) for children

170 The applicant states that it was awarded the same mark (4 points) as the successful tenderer. However, the applicant points out that its equipment, of which a complete inventory was provided with the tender, was bought by Sapiens. Therefore the applicant is uncertain what equipment was described by Manieri in its tender if Manieri had subsequently to purchase from it the equipment required by the contract documents.

171 The Court observes, as does the Commission, that, since Manieri supplied an inventory of teaching aids in accordance with the requirements of the contract documents, it is immaterial whether Sapiens purchased some of the equipment from the applicant or acquired it from another supplier.

172 Consequently the applicant's complaint in respect of the evaluation of parameter A.4 must be rejected.

(iii) Parameter A.7 possibility of expression of the pace suitable for each child...

173 The applicant questions whether Manieri's teaching programme for children aged two or under exists because the only company in its group which had experience in that field (Garden Bimbo) only accepts children from the age of one year.

174 The Court observes that, as stated in paragraphs 114 to 126 above, the Commission could properly decide that Manieri had the technical standing necessary for its application to be selected and that this question did not have to be considered in connection with the award of the contract in question.

175 Furthermore, it appears from the file that the Commission considered that the teaching programme and activities offered by Manieri were suited to the different age groups covered by the contract in question.

176 The applicant's complaint in respect of the evaluation of parameter A.7 must therefore be rejected.

(iv) Parameters C.1.1 quality level of means of supervision and proposed actions and C.1.2 quality of management staff

177 The applicant observes that it has the quality certificate ISO 9001:94 and that it therefore undergoes half-yearly external checks. The applicant also provided a complete organisation chart going beyond the requirements of the contract documents and including, in particular, a quality assurance function coordinated by two persons working full-time. However, that function is not provided for within Sapiens and consequently the latter company did not take on the person responsible for the quality assurance function in Esedra on 31 July 2000. In this connection, the applicant considers that the award of equal points (8 points for parameter C.1.1 and 3 points for parameter C.1.2) to its own tender and to that of Manieri is manifestly erroneous. The applicant adds that, to its knowledge, the qualifications and length of service of the staff employed by Sapiens did not meet the requirements of the contract documents as only 10 of the 20 contracts of employment expiring on 31 July 2000 were renewed by Sapiens.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

178 The Court observes that the applicant's remarks concerning Sapiens are not relevant because that company was formed after the tenders were evaluated by the Commission. Similarly, the fact that the applicant has the quality certificate ISO 9001:94 and that it therefore undergoes half-yearly external checks does not show that there was a serious and manifest error of assessment on the Commission's part in awarding the same marks to the applicant and to Manieri.

179 In addition, it must be observed that the Commission's analysis rests on the presentation of specific training plans and not on the results of checks carried out in the past.

180 The applicant's complaint in respect of the evaluation of parameters C.1.1 and C.1.2 must therefore be rejected.

181 It follows from the foregoing that it has not been shown that there was a serious and manifest error of assessment on the Commission's part in concluding that Manieri's tender was qualitatively superior to that of Esedra.

182 Consequently the third plea in law must be dismissed.

Fourth plea, breach of the obligation to state reasons

Arguments of the parties

183 The applicant contends that the Commission failed in its obligation to state reasons under Article 253 EC, and infringed the principle of transparency which is given the status of a general principle of law by Article 255 EC, and also infringed Article 12 of Directive 92/50 as interpreted by the judgment in the case of Adia Interim v Commission, cited above, because the Commission's letter of 9 June 2000 in reply to the applicant's request for information on the reasons for which the contract in question was not awarded to it does not make it possible to assess the legality of the contested decisions.

184 In this connection, the applicant contends that the statement of reasons is insufficient because it merely discloses the marks awarded to the applicant and to Manieri for each of the award criteria referred to by the contract documents, without giving details of the evaluation method used and of the practical application of that method to the respective tenders. In particular, the applicant states that it does not understand how the different factors used for setting the prices required by the contract documents could have been evaluated globally by the Commission.

185 The applicant adds that it was given no information (making due allowance for the legitimate commercial interests of the successful tenderer) concerning Manieri's tender which would have enabled it to examine the legality of the contested decisions. The applicant is also unaware of the identity of the Italian companies forming the group represented by Manieri and the corporate ties between them and with Sapiens, which is described as the company formed by Manieri to carry out the contract in question.

186 The Commission points out that, with a view to transparency, in its letter of 9 June 2000 it informed the applicant of the characteristics and the advantages of the selected tender and the name of the successful tenderer in accordance with the requirements of Article 12(1) of Directive 92/50. The Commission adds that the applicant, which received the abovementioned reply in good time (by fax of 9 June), did not request any further information. In particular, the Commission notes that the applicant did not ask for the evaluation method used or information concerning the successful tenderer's tender mentioned in the application.

Findings of the Court

187 First of all, it is necessary to establish what is the Commission's obligation to state reasons in relation to a tenderer who was not successful in the procedure for the award of the contract in question.

188 Article 12(1) of Directive 92/50 provides as follows:

The contracting authority shall, within 15 days of the date on which a written request is received, inform any eliminated candidate or tenderer of the reasons for rejection of his application or his tender, and any tenderer who has made an admissible tender of the characteristics and relative advantages of the tender selected as well as the name of the successful tenderer.

However, contracting authorities may decide that certain information on the contract award, referred to in the first subparagraph, be withheld where release of such information would impede law enforcement or otherwise be contrary to the public interest or would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of particular undertakings, public or private, or might prejudice fair competition between service providers.

189 Pursuant to the abovementioned provision, the Commission must, within 15 days of receipt of his request, inform an unsuccessful tenderer of the characteristics and relative advantages of the tender selected as well as the name of the successful tenderer, except for information described as confidential.

190 This manner of proceedings satisfies the purpose of the obligation to state reasons enshrined in Article 253 EC, according to which the reasoning followed by the authority which adopted the measure in question must be disclosed in a clear and unequivocal fashion so as, on the one hand, to make the persons concerned aware of the reasons for the measure and thereby enable them to defend their rights; and, on the other, to enable the Court to exercise its power of review (see judgments in Case T-166/94 Koyo Seiko v Council [1995] ECR II-2129, paragraph 103, and in Adia Interim v Commission, cited above, paragraph 32).

191 In the present case, the Commission's letter of 9 June 2000 contained the following information:

1. Seven firms were invited to submit a tender, following the stage of selection of applications provided for in the contract notice.

2. Of the seven, four sent in a tender, two withdrew in writing and one did not reply.

3. The successful tenderer is a group of Italian firms represented by Centro Studi Antonio Manieri SRL (Via Faleria 21, I-00183 Rome).

4. Esedra's tender compares as follows with the successful tender with regard to the two criteria for the award of the contract (price and quality) laid down in paragraph 7 of the terms and conditions of the contract documents:

>lt>0

(1) Compared with the lowest tender in accordance with the requirements, on the basis of forecast attendance (minimum index: 100)

(2) Compared with the tender which received the best appraisal (maximum index: 100)

Esedra's tender is therefore 2.9% more expensive than that of the proposed successful tenderer (which is the lowest of all the tenders meeting the requirements).

In addition, the tenders assessment panel considered that the quality of Esedra's offer was inferior (index 80.4) to that of the successful tenderer (which submitted the best tender, with an index of 100).

5. The ratings received by Esedra and by the successful tenderer for each of the three qualitative sub-criteria are as follows:

>lt>1

6. It may be concluded from the foregoing points that the successful tenderer has presented the economically most advantageous tender, [namely] the lowest tender in accordance with the requirements and receiving the best rating with respect to the criterion of quality.

...

192 It must be found that, in the letter of 9 June 2000, the Commission gave a sufficiently detailed explanation of the reasons for which it rejected the applicant's tender by giving the name of the successful tenderer and the relative advantages of the tender selected by comparison with the applicant's tender with respect to the criteria laid down by the contract documents. That statement of reasons also has enabled the applicant to assert its rights and the Court to exercise its power of review.

193 It follows from the foregoing that the plea of breach of the obligation to state reasons must be dismissed.

Fifth plea, misuse of powers

Arguments of the parties

194 The applicant contends that the Commission misused its powers in failing to award it the contract in question on the ground that alleged paedophilic acts were committed on the premises of the CPE Clovis and that the parents' association and the bodies representing the staff were hostile to the applicant.

195 In addition, the applicant considers that the Commission's decision to close the first invitation to tender issued by the contract notice of 26 May 1999 amounts to a misuse of powers because the Commission had a suitable number of applications (three) for genuine competition in the matter of public contracts. In this connection the applicant cites the judgment in Case C-27/98 Fracasso and Leitschutz [1999] ECR I-5697 and adds that, if Manieri's application to participate in the first invitation to tender was irregular, that was evidence of misuse of powers, like the other irregularities of which it complains in its action.

196 The Commission denies those allegations. It claims that the only reason for which it withdrew the first invitation to tender was to enlarge competition in accordance with Article 27(2) of Directive 92/50 and adds that this succeeded because seven candidates, not three, replied to the second invitation to tender.

197 The Commission also observes that the applicant has not adduced the slightest evidence to show that the first invitation to tender was closed for a reason other than that given above. The Commission contends that the applicant's allegations are invalidated by the fact that Manieri also submitted its application in response to the first invitation to tender and that it was the applicant which did not wish to extend its contract.

Findings of the Court

198 The concept of misuse of powers has a precisely defined scope in Community law and refers to cases where an administrative authority exercises its powers for a purpose other than that for which they were conferred. In that respect, it has been consistently held that a decision may amount to a misuse of powers only if it appears, on the basis of objective, relevant and consistent evidence, to have been taken for purposes other than those stated (see, for example, the judgment in Joined Cases T-149/94 and T-181/94 Kernkraftwerke Lippe-Ems v Commission [1997] ECR II-161, paragraphs 53 and 149, upheld on appeal by judgment of the Court of Justice in Case C-161/97 P Kernkraftwerke Lippe-Ems v Commission [1999] ECR I-2057).

199 In the present case, the matters raised by the applicant do not show that the Commission pursued any object other than that of awarding the contract to the lowest and economically most advantageous bid, taking account of the criteria laid down in the contract notice and the contract documents.

200 Accordingly, the applicant has not adduced objective, relevant and consistent evidence, within the meaning of the judgment cited above, to show that the Commission exercised its powers to eliminate the applicant from the contract in question by reason of the allegations that paedophilic acts were committed at the CPE Clovis when it was under the applicant's management and by reason of the alleged hostility to the applicant on the part of the parents' association and the bodies representing the staff.

201 Similarly, the fact that only three candidates, of which Esedra and Manieri were two, responded to the first invitation to tender cannot justify the claim that the Commission misused the powers conferred upon it by the Financial Regulation and Directive 92/50 in deciding to close the invitation to tender so as not to award the contract in question to the applicant.

202 In that connection the judgment in the case of Fracasso and Leitschutz, cited above, offers no support for the applicant's argument. In that case, a national court referred to the Court of Justice a question as to whether Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), as amended by Directive 97/52, must be interpreted as meaning that the contracting authority must award the contract to the only candidate deemed suitable for participation. The Court's reply was in the negative, observing in particular that, in order to meet the objective of the development of genuine competition in the field of public works contracts, Article 22(2) of Directive 93/37 (which is in similar terms to Article 27(2) of Directive 92/50) provides that, where the contracting authorities award a contract by restricted procedure, the number of candidates invited to tender must in any event be sufficient to ensure genuine competition (see the judgment in Fracasso and Leitschutz, cited above, paragraph 27).

203 The Commission could therefore properly decide to close the first invitation to tender issued by the contract notice of 26 May 1999 on the ground that it did not have a sufficient number of applications to ensure genuine competition.

204 The plea alleging misuse of powers must therefore be dismissed.

205 Consequently it follows from the foregoing that all the claims for annulment must be dismissed.

The claim for damages

206 The applicant seeks damages of EUR 1 001 574.09 on the ground that the Commission acted unlawfully in the procedure for the award of the contract in question.

207 It is settled case-law that, in order for the Community to incur non-contractual liability, a number of conditions must be satisfied concerning the illegality of the conduct alleged against the Community institutions, the fact of the damage and the existence of a causal link between that conduct and the damage complained of (see the judgments in Case C-87/89 Sonito and Others v Commission [1990] ECR I-1981, paragraph 16, and Case T-13/96 TEAM v Commission [1998] ECR II-4073, paragraph 68).

208 The examination of the claims for annulment has shown that, in the course of the procedure for the award of the contract in question, there was no irregularity in the Commission's conduct which might have given rise to its liability vis-à-vis the applicant.

209 Consequently, as the condition relating to unlawful conduct on the part of the institution concerned is not satisfied, the applicant's claim for damages must be dismissed and it is unnecessary to examine whether the other conditions governing liability on the part of the Community are satisfied.

The application for the reopening of the oral procedure

210 In its letter of 22 October 2001, the applicant claims that, in connection with another action against the Commission for payment of the price in respect of a day's strike by the staff of Esedra on 22 June 2000, the Commission attempted, in supplementary pleadings lodged at the registry of the Court of First Instance, Brussels, on 9 August 2001, to refute the submission that the strike was a case of force majeure and to show that the strike was not unforeseeable by arguing that on 2 July 1999 the problem of the contractual transfer of the undertaking was raised and the participation [of Esedra] in the procedure for the invitation to tender did not affect the certainty that the [existing] contract would come to an end on 31 July 2000 and the [new] contract would most probably be awarded to another tenderer. According to the applicant, that statement is a clear indication that the Commission did not intend in July 1999 to award the contract to the applicant, that is to say, from the opening of the procedure for the invitation to tender. The applicant therefore submits that it did not receive equal and impartial treatment and that the procedure for the invitation to tender was flawed, and it seeks the reopening of the oral procedure.

211 In its letter of 27 November 2001, the Commission observes that the sentence singled out by the applicant was taken out of its context and that, when put back into the context of the national proceedings and their purpose, it cannot amount to an admission in relation to points of law raised in the proceedings before the Court of First Instance. In any case, and regardless of the perhaps somewhat elliptical terms used by the Commission's lawyer, the statement in question does not, having regard to the already lengthy discussion of this matter and the Commission's arguments to show that the procedure was properly conducted, constitute sufficiently objective, relevant and consistent evidence to justify reopening the oral procedure.

212 In assessing the implications of the sentence in question, it must be observed that it was written in the context of national proceedings the object of which was not to determine whether the procedure for the award of the contract was impartial, but to ascertain whether Esedra's failure to fulfil its contractual obligations could be justified by a strike within the CPE Clovis. It must also be noted that the strike took place on 22 June 2000, that is to say, after the contract was awarded to Manieri, and the matters to which the sentence quoted relate arose in July 1999, namely more than two years before the supplementary pleadings were lodged. Finally, it must be found that it is clear from the foregoing analysis that the procedure for the award of the contract took place without the slightest irregularity, discrimination or misuse of powers. In those circumstances, the statement in question does not contribute relevant evidence such as to cast doubt on the award procedure and justifying the reopening of the oral procedure.

213 The Court therefore finds that there are no grounds for reopening the oral procedure.

Order of the President of the Court of First Instance of 20 July 2000
Esedra SPRL v Commission of the European Communities.
Public contracts for the supply of services - Community tendering procedure - Proceedings for interim measures - Suspension of operation - Urgency - None.
Case T-169/00 R.

1. Applications for interim measures - Suspension of operation of a measure - Conditions for granting - Serious and irreparable damage - Pecuniary damage

(Art. 242 EC; Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, Art. 104(2))

2. Applications for interim measures - Suspension of operation of a measure - Conditions for granting - Serious and irreparable damage - Non-pecuniary damage

(Art. 242 EC; Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, Art. 104(2))

1. Pecuniary damage cannot, in principle, be regarded as irreparable, or even reparable only with difficulty, if it may be the subject of subsequent compensation. Consequently, it constitutes a loss which can be redressed economically by means of the legal remedies provided for by the Treaty, particularly Article 235 EC.

(see paras 44, 47)

2. The refusal to award a public contract will not necessarily cause irreparable damage to the reputation and credibility of tenderers whose offers were rejected. Participation in a public tender procedure, by nature highly competitive, necessarily involves risks for all the participants, and the elimination of a tenderer under the rules on tenders is not, in itself, prejudicial.

(see para. 48)

In Case T-169/00 R,

Esedra SPRL, established in Brussels, Belgium, represented by G. Vandersanden, E. Gillet and L. Levi, of the Brussels Bar, with an address for service in Luxembourg at the office of Société de Gestion Fiduciaire SARL, 2-4 Rue Beck, applicant,

v

Commission of the European Communities, represented by X. Lewis and L. Parpala, of its Legal Service, acting as Agents, with an address for service in Luxembourg at the office of C. Gomez de la Cruz, of its Legal Service, Wagner Centre, Kirchberg,

defendant,

APPLICATION, first, for the suspension of operation of the Commission's decisions not to award to the applicant the contract forming the subject-matter of Notice No 99/S 132-97515/FR for services relating to the management of a day nursery and to award that contract to another undertaking and, second, for the Commission to be directed to take the necessary steps to suspend implementation of the decision to award that contract or any contract concluded in pursuance of that decision,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

makes the following

Order

On those grounds,

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE

hereby orders:

1. The application for interim measures is dismissed.

2. Costs are reserved.

Facts and procedure

1 In 1994 the Commission decided to entrust to a private company the management of the Centre de la Petite Enfance Clovis, which is a day nursery and kindergarten for children of the staff of the European institutions situated on its premises in Boulevard Clovis, Brussels (hereinafter the CPE Clovis). It issued an invitation to tender and subsequently awarded the contract to two Italian companies, Aristea and Cooperativa Italiana di Ristorazione. The management of the CPE Clovis was entrusted to the applicant, which was formed of the two aforementioned companies. The management contract was concluded for an initial term of two years from 1 August 1995, renewable for three one-year periods.

2 By letter of 15 April 1999, the applicant informed the Commission that it had decided not to seek renewal of the contract. The letter included the following passage:

Furthermore, the company can already state that it will be available to participate in any future invitations to tender, if the objective will be to provide a more efficient management of the service and to foster the relations which ought to exist between the interested parties, especially in the case of non-contracting parties.

3 On 26 May 1999 the Commission, pursuant to Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), published in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities a first notice of invitation to tender (OJ 1999 S 100, p. 35), by restricted procedure, for the services relating to the management of the CPE Clovis. Three undertakings, amongst them the applicant and the company Centro Studi Antonio Manieri (hereinafter the Centro Studi), applied to participate.

4 The Commission considered that the number of candidates was too low to ensure proper competition, and therefore published on 10 July 1999 a further notice of invitation to tender (OJ 1999 S 132) for the management of a day nursery (No 99/S 132-97515/FR). The notice specified that the contract would be awarded to the economically most advantageous tender taking account of the prices tendered and the quality of the services proposed (details in the contract documents).

5 Following the selection of candidates, as described in the notice of invitation to tender, the contract documents were sent on 29 October 1999 to the seven companies invited to tender. It was made clear in the documents that tenders had to be submitted by 6 January 2000 at the latest, that the tender was valid for a term of nine months from 6 January 2000 and that the contract was for an initial two-year period, renewable for three one-year periods. Moreover, the criteria on which the contract would be awarded were as follows:

The contract will be awarded to the economically most advantageous tender taking account of:

- the prices tendered and

- the quality of the tender and of the services proposed, evaluated, in descending order of importance, according to:

(a) the quality of the teaching programme (40%)

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

(b) the measures and resources implemented to provide cover for staff absences (30%)

(c) the methodology and monitoring devices proposed for monitoring: (30%)

- the quality of service and management

- the maintenance of staffing levels

- the implementation of the teaching programme.

6 According to the report of the site visit and mandatory information meeting on 24 and 25 November 1999, the Commission's staff added further details to the contract documents on those occasions.

7 By fax of 20 December 1999, written in Italian, the Commission informed the applicant that the final date for submission of tenders had been deferred to 7 January 2000. In addition, it was stated with regard to the specific criteria contained in the contract documents:

The current contracting party has... stated that it will keep on staff and assign them to other posts if the contract is not awarded to it. Accordingly, the problem of safeguarding the rights of workers would not arise at all.

8 On 7 January 2000, a representative of the applicant went to the Commission's offices to submit a tender. He was told that, in fact, the final date had been deferred to 7 February 2000, and not to 7 January 2000 as had been wrongly copied in the fax of 20 December 1999. The applicant's representative therefore took back the tender.

9 By the final date set for the purpose, four companies, amongst them the Centro Studi and the applicant, had submitted tenders.

10 When the tenders had been submitted, the Commission sent the candidates two requests for further particulars, on 25 and 29 February 2000.

11 The tenders were examined by an appraisal committee composed of six people, of whom five were appointed in their capacity as officials in the Directorate-General for Personnel and Administration, and the sixth in her capacity as representative of the Parents' Association. This sixth person, who was the Vice-President of the Association, did not have a child attending the CPE Clovis day nursery.

12 By letter of 31 May 2000, the applicant was informed that it had not been awarded the contract in question (hereinafter the refusal).

13 By letter of 2 June 2000, the applicant's lawyers asked the Commission to inform them of the reasons for that decision. They also asked the institution to suspend any measure designed to implement the decision to award the contract at issue to another candidate (hereinafter the award) and, consequently, not to conclude the contract referred to in the contract documents.

14 By fax of 9 June 2000, the Commission provided information regarding the reasons for the refusal. It pointed out, in particular, that the tender submitted by the Centro Studi was better than that of the applicant in respect of both price and quality (in the first place, the applicant's price rating was 102.9 whereas the Centro Studi's was 100 as against the tender of the lowest bidder, and secondly the applicant's quality rating was 80.4 while that of the Centro Studi was 100 in relation to the bid which obtained the best assessment). Moreover, the Commission refused to suspend the operation of the award.

15 By an application lodged at the Court Registry on 20 June 2000, the applicant brought an action under the fourth paragraph of Article 230 EC before the Court of First Instance for annulment of the award and the refusal, and a claim for compensation to redress the damage it has allegedly suffered on account of those decisions.

16 By a separate document lodged at the Court Registry on the same day, the applicant brought the present application seeking, first, suspension of the operation of the Commission's award and refusal and a direction to the Commission to take the steps necessary to suspend the legal effects of the award or of any contract concluded in pursuance thereof and, secondly, under Article 105(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of First Instance, a ruling to be given as a matter of urgency on these requests for suspension.

17 On 21 June 2000, the President of the Court asked the Commission to answer questions concerning the progress made in the tendering procedure at issue and to produce any contract it had concluded with the Centro Studi.

18 On 22 June 2000 the Commission replied to the questions put to it. It produced the contract concluded with the Centro Studi and pointed out that it had been signed on 21 June 2000 and would take effect on 1 August 2000.

19 On 26 June 2000 the Commission was requested to produce documents relating to the Centro Studi.

20 On 30 June 2000, the Commission submitted its observations on this application for interim measures, and enclosed the documents requested. It stated that the Centro Studi's tender and the letter of guarantee were confidential and should not be communicated to the applicant.

21 The President of the Court therefore decided not to add those documents to the file.

Law

22 Under the combined provisions of Articles 242 EC and 243 EC and Article 4 of Council Decision 88/591/ECSC, EEC, Euratom of 24 October 1988 establishing a Court of First Instance of the European Communities (OJ 1988 L 319, p. 1), as amended by Council Decision 93/350/Euratom, ECSC, EEC of 8 June 1993 (OJ 1993 L 144, p. 21), the Court may, if it considers that the circumstances so require, order the suspension of the operation of the contested measure or prescribe the necessary interim measures.

23 Article 104(2) of the Rules of Procedure provides that applications for interim measures must state the circumstances giving rise to urgency and the pleas of fact and law establishing a prima facie case (fumus boni juris) for the measures applied for. These requirements are cumulative; accordingly, an application for suspension of operation must be dismissed if one of them is lacking (order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-211/98 R Willeme v Commission [1999] ECR-SC I-A-15 and II-57, paragraph 18). Also, where appropriate, the judge hearing the application for interim measures weighs up the interests involved (order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C-107/99 R Italy v Commission [1999] ECR I-4011, paragraph 59).

24 Having regard to the documents in the case, the President of the Court considers that he has all the information necessary to give a ruling on this application for suspension of operation, without the need to hear oral argument from the parties first.

25 It is necessary, in the present case, to examine the condition relating to urgency.

Arguments of the parties

26 The applicant points out that the implementation of the award and of the refusal are liable to cause it serious and irreparable damage. Its action on the merits could only lead to an award for compensation which, in this instance, would be inadequate in the circumstances of the case and having regard to the main purpose of its action.

27 The damage allegedly suffered by the applicant is not exclusively pecuniary. It consists, on the one hand, of direct loss, which can be evaluated at BEF 40 000 000 (EUR 991 574.09) and, on the other hand, indirect loss, in the light of the fact that the applicant set up an original, collaborative scheme for day nursery management, based on franchise agreements. Such a structure can succeed only if supported by an adequate volume of business. The loss of the management of the CPE Clovis places that structure at risk.

28 According to the applicant, the contract in question is a reference contract, on which the selected candidate may quite properly rely in order to obtain future contracts. Consequently, references play a decisive role in awarding the public contracts. It adds that this is also apparent from the qualitative selection process established by Directive 92/50, Article 32 of which lays down criteria based, in particular, on the experience which the service provider may refer to when submitting a tender.

29 Consequently, the applicant will not be able, in the future, to rely on the contract in question and the damage incurred thereby cannot be redressed by an award of damages. The interim measures sought will make it possible for the applicant to avoid being precluded, once and for all, in spite of the illegality of the award decision, from obtaining the contract.

30 Arguing that no lesson can be drawn from the Community case-law relating specifically to the notion of loss of references in respect of public contracts, the applicant proposes to refer to the case-law of the Belgian courts, since Belgian law is, after all, the law applicable to the contract in question. According to that case-law, the loss of a reference or prestige contract is, to a certain extent, regarded as coming under the heading of risk of serious damage reparable only with difficulty.

31 In the present case, the contract was a reference contract, and the award and refusal adversely affected the applicant's credibility and reputation. In that connection, it states that the contract is especially significant on account of both its annual financial value (EUR 3 470 509.35) and the number of child placements (400). The quality and very specific and prestigious nature of the contracting authority should also be taken into account. For the applicant, which had obtained the previous contract to manage the CPE Clovis, the fact of not being awarded the one in question amounts to a public rejection very detrimental to its business interests and compromises its credibility and reputation. Consequently, various projects in which the applicant is involved, and which are based on the reference provided by the contract at issue, will be jeopardised.

32 The applicant also maintains that it has some 95 assistants (members of staff), whose work is organised in such a way as to comply with the ISO 9001:94 management and organisation principles. It has held an ISO 9001 certificate since February 1998. It will probably be unable to redeploy them all and will therefore lose the main potential of its service-providing company and the investments made in acquiring the quality label afforded by the aforementioned certificate.

33 The situation is also urgent because the contract in question will be not only concluded but also, to a large extent, performed before judgment is delivered on the merits. The judgment in the main action will therefore have no useful effect (see, to that effect, the orders of the President of the Court of Justice in Case 45/87 R Commission v Ireland [1987] ECR 783, in Case 194/88 R Commission v Italy [1988] ECR 5647, and in Case C-272/91 R Commission v Italy [1992] ECR I-457, delivered in actions for failure to fulfil obligations).

34 Finally, the applicant states that the Commission was informed that it intended to contest the award and the refusal; the fact that the institution has taken steps to implement them by concluding the contract cannot prevent the present application from being upheld (see, by analogy, the order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C-87/94 R Commission v Belgium [1994] ECR I-1395).

35 The Commission considers that the damage alleged by the applicant is neither serious nor irreparable within the meaning of the case-law of the Court of First Instance. The applicant is in a position to quantify the direct damage, which may therefore be fully redressed by the payment of damages.

36 As regards the other head of damage which the applicant claims to have suffered and describes as indirect loss, this is the loss of a reference contract. By describing this head of damage as indirect loss, the applicant has acknowledged that there is no causal link between that damage and the award and refusal, and that its position with regard to other contracts is uncertain. The applicant has been unable to establish a link between obtaining the contract in question and obtaining other contracts. Furthermore, Community law provides no protection against the indirect consequences of acts of the Community institutions.

37 Moreover, damage arising from the loss of a reference contract is not defined, in Belgian case-law, as serious and irreparable damage, but rather as serious damage reparable only with difficulty. For a candidate not to retain a limited-term contract when a new invitation to tender is issued is the inevitable consequence of the periodic nature of invitations to tender for public service contracts. In any event, the applicant's argument that the interim measures should be imposed to prevent it being precluded from obtaining the contract in dispute is not well founded.

38 The Commission points out that, contrary to what the applicant claims, references do not play a decisive part in awarding contracts, the criteria for which are listed in Articles 36 and 37 of Directive 92/50. They are one of many factors in the qualitative selection made before contracts are awarded, pursuant to Article 32 of the Directive.

39 The Commission also considers that the applicant has not shown that there are exceptional circumstances enabling the pecuniary damage it has incurred to be defined as serious and irreparable. Indeed, the applicant did not adduce proof that, if the interim measures it seeks are not granted, it risks being placed in a position which might jeopardise its very existence or irremediably alter its share of the market.

40 The Commission then states that the alleged loss of profit from part of the applicant's investment, in particular in staff training in order to obtain an ISO 9001 certificate, which would result if the staff were made redundant, is also purely pecuniary damage.

41 The applicant's argument that the matter is urgent because the contract concluded between the Commission and the candidate whose tender was successful will have been performed, to a large extent, before a ruling is given on the merits, is irrelevant in this case. The applicant relies on the case-law applicable to actions for failure to fulfil obligations. These are very specific cases and cannot give rise to a claim for compensation before the Community court. Moreover, the facts in the order in Commission v Italy, cited by the applicant, are not comparable to those in the present case. If the Court of First Instance were to annul the award in this case, the Commission could arrange another tendering procedure, in which the applicant could participate without encountering any particular difficulty.

42 Finally, the Commission points out that it was the applicant itself which had expressed the wish not to continue with the contract to manage the CPE Clovis. It is thus impossible to define as serious and irreparable damage a loss which was contemplated on its own initiative.

Findings of the Court

43 It is settled case-law that the urgency of an application for interim measures must be assessed in relation to the need for an interim order in order to avoid serious and irreparable damage being caused to the party who requests the interim measure. It is for that party to adduce proof that it cannot await the outcome of the main action without suffering such damage (orders of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-73/98 R Prayon-Rupel v Commission [1998] ECR II-2769, paragraph 36, in Joined Cases T-38/99 R to T-42/99 R, T-45/99 R and T-48/99 R Sociedade Agrícola dos Arinhos and Others v Commission [1999] ECR II-2567, paragraph 42, and in Case T-144/99 R IMA v Commission [2000] ECR II-2067, paragraph 42).

44 As regards the pecuniary damage alleged by the applicant, it should be noted that, as the Commission has pointed out, according to settled case-law such damage cannot, in principle, be regarded as irreparable, or even reparable only with difficulty, if it may be the subject of subsequent compensation (orders of the President of the Court of Justice in Case C-213/91 R Abertal and Others v Commission [1991] ECR I-5109, paragraph 24, and in Case T-70/99 R Alpharma v Council [1999] ECR II-2027, paragraph 128).

45 Pursuant to those principles, the requested suspension would be justified, in the circumstances of this case, only if it appeared that, if the measure were not granted, the applicant would find itself in a situation which could jeopardise its very existence or irremediably alter its position in the market.

46 The applicant has not been able to establish that, if the interim measures it has requested are not granted, the loss of the management of the CPE Clovis would jeopardise the day nursery management structure it has set up or, in any event, the applicant's very existence. In that regard, it should be noted that the applicant has referred to several other projects in which it is already involved and which could lead to the establishment of day nurseries with a capacity of over 410 places.

47 It follows that the financial damage alleged by the applicant must be considered to be reparable. The damage constitutes a loss which can be redressed economically by means of the legal remedies provided for by the Treaty, particularly Article 235 EC (order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-230/97 R Comafrica and Dole Fresh Fruit Europe v Commission [1997] ECR II-1589, paragraph 38).

48 As regards the non-pecuniary damage alleged by the applicant, and its argument that interim measures are urgent because of the irreparable damage which would be caused to its reputation and credibility, it should be noted that the refusal will not necessarily cause such damage. Participation in a public tender procedure, by nature highly competitive, necessarily involves risks for all the participants, and the elimination of a tenderer under the rules on tenders is not, in itself, prejudicial (order of the President of the Court of Justice in Case 118/83 R CMC v Commission [1983] ECR 2583, paragraph 51). Furthermore, the applicant was aware of the risk when it decided not to seek renewal of its contract with the Commission, leading the Commission to initiate a new public contract tendering procedure.

49 As for the applicant's argument that references play a decisive role in the award of public contracts, it should be noted, as the Commission has rightly indicated, that it is apparent from Article 32 of Directive 92/50 that references represent merely one of many criteria taken into account in the qualitative selection of service providers. Furthermore, the prejudicial effects which the applicant claims would result if its credibility and reputation were compromised cannot be regarded as an inevitable consequence of the implementation of the award and refusal. The harm which that implementation could cause the applicant is therefore purely hypothetical (order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-322/94 R Union Carbide v Commission [1994] ECR II-1159, paragraph 31).

50 In the same way, as regards the damage which would allegedly be occasioned by the redundancy of its members of staff, the fact that the applicant itself describes this as likely shows that it is hypothetical.

51 Finally, the fact that the performance of the contract concluded with the Centro Studi will already have commenced before judgment is delivered in the main action is not a circumstance establishing urgency. If the Court of First Instance considers the main action well founded, the Commission will have to adopt the measures necessary to ensure appropriate protection of the applicant's interests (order of the President of the Court of First Instance in Case T-108/94 R Candiotte v Council [1994] ECR II-249, paragraph 27). The applicant has not referred to any circumstance which might prevent its interests from being protected, possibly by payment of compensation together with a new tendering procedure.

52 In the circumstances, it must be concluded that the evidence adduced by the applicant has not established to the requisite legal standard that the non-pecuniary damage which it alleges is certain or irreparable and is the direct consequence of the decisions taken by the Commission or of their implementation.

53 It follows from the above that the applicant has not succeeded in proving that it will suffer serious and irreparable damage if the requested interim measures are not granted.

54 Accordingly, the application for interim measures must be dismissed, and it is not necessary to consider whether the other conditions for granting suspension of operation are fulfilled.

Judgment of the Court of 17 September 2002

Concordia Bus Finland Oy Ab, formerly Stagecoach Finland Oy Ab v Helsingin kaupunki and HKL-Bussiliikenne.

Reference for a preliminary ruling: Korkein hallinto-oikeus - Finland.

Public service contracts in the transport sector - Directives 92/50/EEC and 93/38/EEC - Contracting municipality which organises bus transport services and an economically independent entity of which participates in the tender procedure as a tenderer - Taking into account of criteria relating to theprotection of the environment to determine the economically most advantageous tender - Whether permissible when the municipal entity which is tendering meets those criteria more easily.

Case C-513/99.

Approximation of laws - Procedures for the award of public service contracts - Directive 92/50 - Award of contracts - Most economically advantageous tender - Criteria - Protection of the environment - Whether permissible - Conditions - Criterion which can be satisfied only by a few undertakings, one of which belongs to the contracting entity - No effect - Same result if Directive 93/38 applicable

(Council Directives 92/50, Art. 36(1)(a), and 93/38, Art. 34(1)(a))

$$Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that where, in the context of a public contract for the provision of urban bus transport services, the contracting authority decides to award a contract to the tenderer who submits the economically most advantageous tender, it may take into consideration ecological criteria such as the level of nitrogen oxide emissions or the noise level of the buses, provided that they are linked to the subject-matter of the contract, do not confer an unrestricted freedom of choice on the authority, are expressly mentioned in the contract documents or the tender notice, and comply with all the fundamental principles of Community law, in particular the principle of non-discrimination.

Moreover, the principle of equal treatment does not preclude the taking into consideration of such criteria solely because the contracting entity's own transport undertaking is one of the few undertakings able to offer a bus fleet satisfying those criteria.

It would be no different if the procedure for the award of the public contract in question fell within the scope of Directive 93/38 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors. Since the directives concerning public procurement, whose provisions relating to award criteria have substantially the same wording, aim to achieve similar objectives in their respective fields, and the duty to observe the principle of equal treatment lies at the very heart of those directives, there is no reason to give them different interpretations.

94 The costs incurred by the Finnish, Greek, Netherlands, Austrian, Swedish and United Kingdom Governments and by the Commission, which have submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

THE COURT,

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Korkein hallinto-oikeus by order of 17 December 1999, hereby rules:

1. Article 36(1)(a) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that where, in the context of a public contract for the provision of urban bus transport services, the contracting authority decides to award a contract to the tenderer who submits the economically most advantageous tender, it may take into consideration ecological criteria such as the level of nitrogen oxide emissions or the noise level of the buses, provided that they are linked to the subject-matter of the contract, do not confer an unrestricted freedom of choice on the authority, are expressly mentioned in the contract documents or the tender notice, and comply with all the fundamental principles of Community law, in particular the principle of non-discrimination.

2. The principle of equal treatment does not preclude the taking into consideration of criteria connected with protection of the environment, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, solely because the contracting entity's own transport undertaking is one of the few undertakings able to offer a bus fleet satisfying those criteria.

3. The answer to the second and third questions would not be different if the procedure for the award of the public contract at issue in the main proceedings fell within the scope of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors.

1 By order of 17 December 1999, received at the Court on 28 December 1999, the Korkein hallinto-oikeus (Supreme Administrative Court) referred for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC three questions on the interpretation of Articles 2(1)(a), (2)(c) and (4) and 34(1) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84), as amended by the Act concerning the conditions of accession of the Republic of Austria, the Republic of Finland and the Kingdom of Sweden and the adjustments to the Treaties on which the European Union is founded (OJ 1994 C 241, p. 21, and OJ 1995 L 1, p. 1) (Directive 93/38), and Article 36(1) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1).

2 Those questions were raised in proceedings between Concordia Bus Finland Oy Ab (Concordia) and Helsingin kaupunki (City of Helsinki) and HKL-Bussiliikenne (HKL) concerning the validity of a decision of the Liikepalvelulautakunta (commercial service committee) of the city of Helsinki awarding the contract for the operation of a route in the urban bus network of Helsinki to HKL.

or fulfilling the conditions in Article 6(2) of the same Directive;

4 Article 36 of Directive 92/50, headed Criteria for the award of contracts, reads as follows:

1. Without prejudice to national laws, regulations or administrative provisions on the remuneration of certain services, the criteria on which the contracting authority shall base the award of contracts may be:

(a) where the award is made to the economically most advantageous tender, various criteria relating to the contract: for example, quality, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical assistance and after-sales service, delivery date, delivery period or period of completion, price; or

(b) the lowest price only.

2. Where the contract is to be awarded to the economically most advantageous tender, the contracting authority shall state in the contract documents or in the tender notice the award criteria which it intends to apply, where possible in descending order of importance.

Directive 93/38

5 Article 2 of Directive 93/38 provides:

1. This Directive shall apply to contracting entities which:

(a) are public authorities or public undertakings and exercise one of the activities referred to in paragraph 2;

(b) when they are not public authorities or public undertakings, have as one of their activities any of those referred to in paragraph 2 or any combination thereof and operate on the basis of special or exclusive rights granted by a competent authority of a Member State.

2. Relevant activities for the purposes of this Directive shall be:

(c) the operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, trolley bus, bus or cable.

As regards transport services, a network shall be considered to exist where the service is provided under operating conditions laid down by a competent authority of a Member State, such as conditions on the routes to be served, the capacity to be made available or the frequency of the service;

...

4. The provision of bus transport services to the public shall not be considered to be a relevant activity within the meaning of paragraph 2(c) where other entities are free to provide those services, either in general or in a particular geographical area, under the same condition as the contracting entities.

...

6 Under Article 34 of Directive 93/38:

in question, such as: delivery or completion date, running costs, cost-effectiveness, quality, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical merit, after-sales service and technical assistance, commitments with regard to spare parts, security of supplies and price; or

(b) the lowest price only.

2. In the case referred to in paragraph 1(a), contracting entities shall state in the contract documents or in the tender notice all the criteria which they intend to apply to the award, where possible in descending order of importance.

4. References to Directive 90/531/EEC shall be construed as referring to this Directive.

National legislation

8 Directives 92/50 and 93/38 were transposed into Finnish law by the Julkisista hankinnoista annettu laki (Law on Public Procurement) 1505/1992, as amended by Laws 1523/1994 and 725/1995 (Law 1505/1992).

9 Under Paragraph 1 of Law 1505/1992, State and local authorities and other contracting entities specified in the law must comply with the provisions of the law in order to create competition and ensure fair and non-discriminatory treatment of participants in tender procedures.

10 Under Paragraph 2 of Law 1505/1992, contracting entities include municipal authorities.

11 Paragraph 7(1) of Law 1505/1992 provides, first, that contracts are to be awarded as favourably as possible and, second, that the tender to be approved is the one which is cheapest in price or most advantageous in overall economic terms.

12 Procedures for the award of public contracts in Finland are regulated in more detail by Regulation 243/1995 on supply, service and works contracts exceeding the threshold values and by Regulation 567/1994 on contracts of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors exceeding the threshold value, as amended by Regulation 244/1995 (Regulation 567/1994).

13 Paragraph 4(1) of Regulation 243/1995 excludes from the scope of that regulation contracts to which Regulation 567/1994 applies. Paragraph 1(10) of the latter excludes from its scope contracts to which Regulation 243/1995 applies.

14 Paragraph 43 of Regulation 243/1995 provides:

1. The contracting entity must approve either the tender which is economically most advantageous overall according to the assessment criteria for the contract or the tender which is lowest in price. Criteria for assessment of overall economic advantage may be, for example, the price, delivery period, completion date, costs of use, quality, life cycle costs, aesthetic or functional characteristics, technical merit, maintenance services, reliability of delivery, technical assistance and environmental questions.

15 Similarly, Paragraph 21(1) of Regulation 567/1994 lays down that the contracting entity must approve the tender which is economically most advantageous overall according to the assessment criteria for the supply, service or works, or the tender which is lowest in price. Criteria for assessment of overall economic advantage may be, for example, the price, delivery period, costs of use, life cycle costs, quality, environmental effects, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical merit, maintenance services and technical assistance.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

Organisation of bus transport services in the city of Helsinki

16 It appears from the order for reference that the Helsinki city council decided on 27 August 1997 to introduce tendering progressively for the entire bus transport network of the city of Helsinki, in such a way that the first route to be awarded would start operating from the autumn 1998 timetable.

17 Under the rules governing public transport in the city of Helsinki, the planning, development, implementation and other organisation and supervision of public transport, unless provided otherwise, are the responsibility of the Joukkoliikennelautakunta (public transport committee) and the Helsingin kaupungin liikennelaitos (transport department of the city of Helsinki, the transport department) which is subordinate to it.

18 According to the regulations applicable, the commercial service committee of the city of Helsinki is responsible for decisions on awarding public transport services within the city in accordance with the objectives adopted by the Helsinki city council and the public transport committee. In addition, the purchasing unit of the city of Helsinki is responsible for carrying out operations relating to contracts for urban public transport services.

19 The transport department is a commercial undertaking of the municipality which is divided operationally and economically into four production units (buses, trams, metro, and track and property services). The production unit for buses is HKL. The department also includes a head unit, which consists of a planning unit and an administrative and economic unit. The planning unit acts as an order-placing office concerned with the preparation of proposals for the public transport committee, the routes to be put out to tender, and the level of service to be required. The production units are economically distinct from the rest of the transport department and have separate accounting and balance sheets.

The tender procedure at issue in the main proceedings

20 By letter of 1 September 1997 and a notice published in the Official Journal of the European Communities of 4 September 1997, the purchasing unit of the city of Helsinki called for tenders for operating the urban bus network within the city of Helsinki, in accordance with routes and timetables described in a document in seven lots. The main proceedings concern lot 6 of the tender notice, relating to route 62.

21 It appears from the documents in the case that, according to the tender notice, the contract would be awarded to the undertaking whose tender was most economically advantageous overall to the city. That was be assessed by reference to three categories of criteria: the overall price of operation, the quality of the bus fleet, and the operator's quality and environment management.

22 As regards, first, the overall price asked, the most favourable tender would receive 86 points and the number of points of the other tenders would be calculated by using the following formula: Number of points = amount of the annual operating payment of the most favourable tender divided by the amount of the tender in question and multiplied by 86.

23 As regards, next, the quality of the vehicle fleet, a tenderer could receive a maximum of 10 additional points on the basis of a number of criteria. Thus points were awarded inter alia for the use of buses with nitrogen oxide emissions below 4 g/kWh (+2.5 points/bus) or below 2 g/kWh (+3.5 points/bus) and with external noise levels below 77 dB (+1 point/bus).

24 As regards, finally, the operator's quality and environment programme, additional points were to be awarded for various certified quality criteria and for a certified environment protection programme.

25 The purchasing office of the city of Helsinki received eight tenders for lot 6, including those from HKL and from Swebus Finland Oy Ab (Swebus, subsequently Stagecoach Finland Oy Ab (Stagecoach), then Concordia). The latter's tender comprised two offers, designated A and B.

26 The commercial service committee decided on 12 February 1998 to choose HKL as the operator for the route in lot 6, as its tender was regarded as the most economically advantageous overall. According to the order for reference, Concordia (then Swebus) had submitted the lowest-priced tender, obtaining 81.44 points for its A offer and 86 points for its B offer. HKL obtained 85.75 points. As regards the bus fleet, HKL obtained the most points, 2.94 points, Concordia (then Swebus) obtaining 0.77 points for its A tender and -1.44 points for its B tender. The 2.94 points obtained for vehicle fleet by HKL included the maximum points for nitrogen oxide emissions below 2 g/kWh and a noise level below 77 dB. Concordia (then Swebus) did not receive any extra points for the criteria relating to the buses' nitrogen oxide emissions and noise level. HKL and Concordia obtained maximum points for their quality and environment certification. In those circumstances, HKL received the greatest number of points overall, 92.69. Concordia (then Swebus) took second place with 86.21 points for its A offer and 88.56 points for its B offer.

The proceedings before the national courts and tribunals

27 Concordia (then Swebus) made an application to the Kilpailuneuvosto (Finnish Competition Council) for the decision of the commercial service committee to be set aside, arguing inter alia that the award of additional points to a fleet with nitrogen oxide emissions and noise levels below certain limits was unfair and discriminatory. It submitted that additional points had been awarded for the use of a type of bus which only one tenderer, HKL, was in fact able to offer.

28 The Kilpailuneuvosto dismissed the application. It considered that the contracting entity was entitled to define the type of vehicle it wanted to be used. The selection criteria and their weight had to be determined objectively, however, taking into account the needs of the contracting entity and the quality of the service. The contracting entity had to be able, if necessary, to give reasons to justify its choice and the application of its criteria of assessment.

29 The Kilpailuneuvosto observed that the city of Helsinki's decision to give preference to low-pollution buses was an environment policy decision aimed at reducing the harm caused to the environment by bus traffic. That did not constitute a procedural defect. If that criterion was applied to a tenderer unfairly, it was possible to intervene. The Kilpailuneuvosto found, however, that all the tenderers had the possibility, if they so wished, of acquiring buses powered by natural gas. It therefore concluded that it had not been shown that the criterion in question discriminated against Concordia.

30 Concordia (then Stagecoach) appealed to the Korkein hallinto-oikeus to have the decision of the Kilpailuneuvosto set aside. It argued that awarding additional points to the least polluting and least noisy buses favoured HKL, the only tenderer which was able in practice to use a fleet which could obtain those points. It further submitted that, in the overall assessment of the tenders, no account can be taken of ecological factors which are not directly linked to the subject-matter of the tender.

31 In its order for reference, the Korkein hallinto-oikeus states, first, that in order to decide whether Regulation 243/1995 or Regulation 567/1994 is applicable in the present case, it is necessary to examine whether the contract at issue in the main proceedings falls within the scope of Directive 92/50 or Directive 93/38. It notes that Annex VII to Directive 93/38 mentions, with respect to Finland, both the public or private entities which operate bus transport in accordance with the Laki luvanvaraisesta henkilöliikenteestä tiellä (Law on licensed passenger transport by road) 343/1991, and also the transport department which operates the metro and tram networks in Helsinki.

32 It states, next, that examination of the case also requires the interpretation of provisions of Community law as to whether a municipality, when awarding a contract of the kind at issue in the main proceedings, may take account of ecological considerations concerning the bus fleet tendered. If Concordia's argument as regards the points awarded for the environmental criteria and in other respects were accepted, that would mean that the number of points obtained by its B offer exceeded the points obtained by HKL.

33 It observes that Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 and Article 34(1)(a) of Directive 93/38 do not mention environmental questions in the list of criteria for determining the economically most advantageous tender. It notes that the Court has ruled in Case 31/87 Gebroeders Beentjes [1988] ECR 4635 and Case C-324/93 Evans Medical and Macfarlan Smith [1995] ECR I-563 that in selecting the most economically advantageous tender the contracting authorities are free to choose the criteria to be used in awarding the contract. Their choice may relate only, however, to criteria designed to identify the most economically advantageous tender.

34 It refers, finally, to the Commission's communication of 11 March 1988, Public Procurement in the European Union (COM(1998) 143 final), in which the Commission considers that it is legitimate to take environmental considerations into account for the purpose of choosing the economically most advantageous tender overall, if the organiser of the tender procedure itself benefits directly from the ecological qualities of the product.

35 In those circumstances, the Korkein hallinto-oikeus decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

1. Are the provisions on the scope of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors ..., in particular Article 2(1)(a), (2)(c) and (4), to be interpreted as meaning that that directive applies to a procedure of a city which is a contracting entity for the award of a contract concerning the operation of bus transport within the city, if

- the city is responsible for the planning, development, implementation and other organisation and supervision of public transport in its area,

- for the above functions the city has a public transport committee and a city transport department subordinate thereto,

- within the city transport department there is a planning unit which acts as an ordering unit which prepares proposals for the public transport committee on which routes should be put out to tender and what level of quality of services should be required, and

- within the city transport department there are production units, economically distinct from the rest of the transport department, including a unit which provides bus transport services and takes part in tender procedures relating thereto?

2. Are the Community provisions on public procurement, in particular Article 36(1) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts ... or the equivalent Article 34(1) of Directive 93/38/EEC, to be interpreted as meaning that, when organising a tender procedure concerning the operation of bus transport within the city, a city which is a contracting entity may, among the criteria for awarding the contract on the basis of the economically most advantageous tender, take into account, in addition to the tender price and the quality and environment programme of the transport operator and various other characteristics of the bus fleet, the low nitrogen oxide emissions and low noise level of the bus fleet offered by a tendering undertaking, in a manner announced beforehand in the tender notice, such that if the nitrogen oxide emissions or noise level of the individual buses are below a certain level, extra points for the fleet may be taken into account in the comparison?

3. If the answer to the above question is affirmative, are the Community provisions on public procurement to be interpreted as meaning that the awarding of extra points for the abovementioned characteristics relating to nitrogen oxide emissions and noise level of the fleet is, however, not permitted if it is known beforehand that the department operating bus transport belonging to the city which is the contracting entity is able to offer a bus fleet possessing the above characteristics, which in the circumstances only a few undertakings in the sector are otherwise able to offer?

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

36 It should be observed to begin with that, as may be seen from the order for reference, the arguments put forward by Concordia in support of its appeal to the Korkein hallinto-oikeus relate solely to the alleged unlawfulness of the points system for the criteria relating to the bus fleet specified in the invitation to tender at issue in the main proceedings.

37 Thus by its second and third questions the national court essentially asks, first, whether Article 36(1) of Directive 92/50 or Article 34(1)(a) of Directive 93/38 permits the inclusion, among the criteria for the award of a public contract on the basis of the most economically advantageous tender, of a reduction of the nitrogen oxide emissions or the noise level of the vehicles in such a way that if those emissions or that noise level is below a certain ceiling additional points may be awarded for the comparison of tenders.

38 It also asks, second, whether the rules laid down by those directives, in particular the principle of equal treatment, permit the taking into account of such criteria where it appears from the outset that the transport undertaking which belongs to the municipality organising the tender procedure is one of the few undertakings able to offer buses which satisfy those criteria.

39 It is clear that the provisions of Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 and Article 34(1)(a) of Directive 93/38 have substantially the same wording.

40 Moreover, as appears from the order for reference, there was no discussion in the main proceedings as to the national or Community legislation applicable.

41 As may be seen from the wording of the first question, the Korkein hallinto-oikeus is not asking the Court about the applicability of Directive 92/50, but only about the applicability of Directive 93/38 to the main proceedings.

42 It must therefore be considered, first, that the second and third questions relate to the compatibility with the relevant provisions of Directive 92/50 of award criteria such as those at issue in the main proceedings, and, second, that by its first question the national court essentially asks whether the answer to those questions would be different if Directive 93/38 were applicable. It follows that the second and third questions should be considered in turn, followed by the first question.

The second question

43 By its second question, the national court essentially asks whether Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 is to be interpreted as meaning that, where in the context of a public contract for the provision of urban bus transport services the contracting authority decides to award that contract to the tenderer submitting the most economically advantageous tender, it may take into account the reduction of nitrogen oxide emissions or the noise level of the vehicles in such a way that, if those emissions are or that noise level is below a certain ceiling, additional points may be awarded for the purposes of comparing the tenders.

Observations submitted to the Court

44 Concordia contends that in a public tender procedure the criteria for the decision must, in accordance with the wording of the relevant provisions of Community law, always be of an economic nature. If the objective of the contracting authority is to satisfy ecological or other considerations, recourse should be had to a procedure other than a public tender procedure.

45 On the other hand, the other parties to the main proceedings, the Member States which have submitted observations and the Commission submit that it is permissible to include ecological criteria in the criteria for the award of a public contract. They refer, first, to Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 and Article 34(1)(a) of Directive 93/38, which list merely as examples factors which the contracting entity may take into account when awarding such a contract; next, they refer to Article 6 EC, which requires environmental protection to be integrated into the other policies of the Community; finally, they refer to the Beentjes and Evans Medical and Macfarlan Smith judgments, which allow a contracting entity to choose the criteria it regards as relevant when it assesses the tenders submitted.

46 In particular, the city of Helsinki and the Finnish Government state that it is in the interest of the city and its inhabitants for noxious emissions to be limited as much as possible. For the city of Helsinki itself, which is responsible for protection of the environment within its territory, direct economies follow from this, especially in the medico-social sector, which represents about 50% of its overall budget. Factors which contribute even on a modest scale to improving the overall state of health of the population enable it to reduce its charges rapidly and to a considerable extent.

47 The Greek Government adds that the discretion given to the national authorities as to the choice of the criteria for awarding public contracts presumes that that choice is not arbitrary and the criteria taken into consideration do not infringe the provisions of the EC Treaty, in particular the fundamental principles enshrined in it, such as freedom of establishment, freedom to provide services and prohibition of discrimination on grounds of nationality.

48 The Netherlands Government states that the criteria for awarding public contracts applied by the contracting authority must always have an economic dimension. It contends, however, that that condition is satisfied in the main proceedings, as the city of Helsinki is both the contracting authority and the body with financial responsibility for environment policy.

49 The Austrian Government submits that Directives 92/50 and 93/38 introduce two essential restrictions on the choice of the criteria for awarding public contracts. First, the criteria chosen by the contracting entity must relate to the contract to be awarded and make it possible to determine the most economically advantageous tender for it. Second, the criteria must be capable of guiding the discretion of the contracting entity on an objective basis and must not include elements of arbitrary choice. Moreover, according to the Government, the award criteria must be directly linked to the subject-matter of the contract, have effects which can be measured objectively, and be quantifiable at the economic level.

50 Similarly, the Swedish Government submits that the contracting entity's choice is limited, in that the award criteria must be related to the contract to be awarded and suitable for determining the most advantageous tender from the economic point of view. It adds that the criteria must also be consistent with the Treaty provisions on the free movement of goods and services.

51 According to the United Kingdom Government, the provisions of Article 36(1) of Directive 92/50 and Article 34(1) of Directive 93/38 must be interpreted as meaning that, when arranging an award procedure for the operation of bus transport services, a contracting authority or entity may, among other criteria for awarding the contract, take environmental criteria into consideration for assessing the economically most advantageous tender, provided that those criteria allow a comparison of all the tenders, are linked to the services to be provided, and have been published beforehand.

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

52 The Commission contends that the criteria for the award of public contracts which may be taken into consideration when assessing the economically most advantageous tender must satisfy four conditions. They must be objective, apply to all the tenders, be strictly linked to the subject-matter of the contract in question, and be of direct economic advantage to the contracting authority.

Findings of the Court

53 Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 provides that the criteria on which the contracting authority may base the award of contracts may, where the award is made to the economically most advantageous tender, be various criteria relating to the contract, such as, for example, quality, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, technical assistance and after-sales service, delivery date, delivery period or period of completion, or price.

54 In order to determine whether and under what conditions the contracting authority may, in accordance with Article 36(1)(a), take into consideration criteria of an ecological nature, it must be noted, first, that, as is clear from the wording of that provision, in particular the use of the expression for example, the criteria which may be used as criteria for the award of a public contract to the economically most advantageous tender are not listed exhaustively (see also, to that effect, Case C-19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I-7725, paragraph 35).

55 Second, Article 36(1)(a) cannot be interpreted as meaning that each of the award criteria used by the contracting authority to identify the economically most advantageous tender must necessarily be of a purely economic nature. It cannot be excluded that factors which are not purely economic may influence the value of a tender from the point of view of the contracting authority. That conclusion is also supported by the wording of the provision, which expressly refers to the criterion of the aesthetic characteristics of a tender.

56 Moreover, as the Court has already held, the purpose of coordinating at Community level the procedures for the award of public contracts is to eliminate barriers to the free movement of services and goods (see, inter alia, SIAC Construction, paragraph 32).

57 In the light of that objective and also of the wording of the third sentence of the first subparagraph of Article 130r(2) of the EC Treaty, transferred by the Treaty of Amsterdam in slightly amended form to Article 6 EC, which lays down that environmental protection requirements must be integrated into the definition and implementation of Community policies and activities, it must be concluded that Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 does not exclude the possibility for the contracting authority of using criteria relating to the preservation of the environment when assessing the economically most advantageous tender.

58 However, that does not mean that any criterion of that nature may be taken into consideration by the contracting authority.

59 While Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 leaves it to the contracting authority to choose the criteria on which it proposes to base the award of the contract, that choice may, however, relate only to criteria aimed at identifying the economically most advantageous tender (see, to that effect, concerning public works contracts, Beentjes, paragraph 19, Evans Medical and Macfarlan Smith, paragraph 42, and SIAC Construction, paragraph 36). Since a tender necessarily relates to the subject-matter of the contract, it follows that the award criteria which may be applied in accordance with that provision must themselves also be linked to the subject-matter of the contract.

60 It should be recalled, first, that, as the Court has already held, in order to determine the economically most advantageous tender, the contracting authority must be able to assess the tenders submitted and take a decision on the basis of qualitative and quantitative criteria relating to the contract in question (see, to that effect, concerning public works contracts, Case 274/83 Commission v Italy [1985] ECR 1077, paragraph 25).

61 Further, it also appears from the case-law that an award criterion having the effect of conferring on the contracting authority an unrestricted freedom of choice as regards the award of the contract to a tenderer would be incompatible with Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 (see, to that effect, Beentjes, paragraph 26, and SIAC Construction, paragraph 37).

62 Next, it should be noted that the criteria adopted to determine the economically most advantageous tender must be applied in conformity with all the procedural rules laid down in Directive 92/50, in particular the rules on advertising. It follows that, in accordance with Article 36(2) of that directive, all such criteria must be expressly mentioned in the contract documents or the tender notice, where possible in descending order of importance, so that operators are in a position to be aware of their existence and scope (see, to that effect, concerning public works contracts, Beentjes, paragraphs 31 and 36, and Case C-225/98 Commission v France [2000] ECR I-7445, paragraph 51).

63 Finally, such criteria must comply with all the fundamental principles of Community law, in particular the principle of non-discrimination as it follows from the provisions of the Treaty on the right of establishment and the freedom to provide services (see, to that effect, Beentjes, paragraph 29, and Commission v France, paragraph 50).

64 It follows from the above considerations that, where the contracting authority decides to award a contract to the tenderer who submits the economically most advantageous tender, in accordance with Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50, it may take criteria relating to the preservation of the environment into consideration, provided that they are linked to the subject-matter of the contract, do not confer an unrestricted freedom of choice on the authority, are expressly mentioned in the contract documents or the tender notice, and comply with all the fundamental principles of Community law, in particular the principle of non-discrimination.

65 With respect to the main proceedings, it must be stated, first, that criteria relating to the level of nitrogen oxide emissions and the noise level of the buses, such as those at issue in those proceedings, must be regarded as linked to the subject-matter of a contract for the provision of urban bus transport services.

66 Next, criteria whereby additional points are awarded to tenders which meet certain specific and objectively quantifiable environmental requirements are not such as to confer an unrestricted freedom of choice on the contracting authority.

67 In addition, as stated in paragraphs 21 to 24 above, the criteria at issue in the main proceedings were expressly mentioned in the tender notice published by the purchasing office of the city of Helsinki.

68 Finally, whether the criteria at issue in the main proceedings comply in particular with the principle of non-discrimination falls to be examined in connection with the answer to the third question, which concerns precisely that point.

69 Consequently, in the light of all the foregoing, the answer to the second question must be that Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 is to be interpreted as meaning that where, in the context of a public contract for the provision of urban bus transport services, the contracting authority decides to award a contract to the tenderer who submits the economically most advantageous tender, it may take into consideration ecological criteria such as the level of nitrogen oxide emissions or the noise level of the buses, provided that they are linked to the subject-matter of the contract, do not confer an unrestricted freedom of choice on the authority, are expressly mentioned in the contract documents or the tender notice, and comply with all the fundamental principles of Community law, in particular the principle of non-discrimination.

The third question

70 By its third question, the national court essentially asks whether the principle of equal treatment precludes the taking into consideration of criteria concerned with protection of the environment, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, because the contracting entity's own transport undertaking is one of the few undertakings able to offer a bus fleet satisfying those criteria.

Observations submitted to the Court

71 Concordia submits that the possibility of using buses powered by natural gas, which were in practice the only ones to meet the additional criterion of reducing the level of nitrogen oxide emissions and the noise level, was very limited. At the date of the invitation to tender, there was only one service station in the whole of Finland supplying natural gas. Its capacity enabled it to supply about 15 gas-powered buses. Shortly before the invitation to tender, HKL placed an order for 11 new gas-powered buses, which meant that the station's capacity was fully used and it was not possible to supply fuel to other vehicles. Moreover, the service station was only a provisional one.

72 Concordia concludes that HKL was the only tenderer which had a real possibility of offering gas-powered buses. It therefore proposes that the answer to the third question should be that awarding points according to the nitrogen oxide emissions and reduced noise levels of the buses cannot be permitted, at least in a case where not all the operators in the sector in question have, even theoretically, the possibility of offering services eligible for those points.

73 The city of Helsinki submits that it was not under any obligation to put its own bus transport services out to tender, either under Community legislation or under Finnish legislation. Since an award procedure always involves additional work and expense, it would have had no reasonable ground for organising that procedure if it had known that the undertaking it owns was the only one able to offer a bus fleet satisfying the conditions laid down in the tender notice, or if it had really wished to reserve to itself the operation of that transport.

74 The Finnish Government submits that assessing the objectivity of the criteria stated in the invitation to tender at issue in the main proceedings is ultimately a matter for the national court.

75 The Netherlands Government submits that it follows from the Court's case-law that the award criteria must be objective and that there must be no discrimination between tenderers. It says, however, that in paragraphs 32 and 33 of the judgment in Case C-27/98 Fracasso and Leitschutz [1999] ECR I-5697 the Court indeed held that where, following a procedure for the award of a public contract, only one tender remains, the contracting authority is not required to award the contract to the only tenderer judged to be suitable. But it does not follow that if, as a result of the award criteria applied, there is only one tenderer left, those criteria are unlawful. In any event, it is for the national court to determine whether, in the case at issue in the main proceedings, competition was in fact distorted.

76 According to the Austrian Government, the use of the award criteria at issue in the main proceedings may in principle be permitted, even in a case where, as here, only a comparatively small number of tenderers are able to satisfy those criteria. It appears, however, according to the Court's case-law (Case 45/87 Commission v Ireland [1988] ECR 4929), that there is a limit to the permissibility of certain minimum ecological standards where the criteria applied restrict the market for the services or goods to be supplied to the point where there is only one tenderer remaining. There is no indication, however, that that was the case in the main proceedings.

77 The Swedish Government submits that the taking into account of the criterion relating to nitrogen oxide emissions in the way in which this was done in the case at issue in the main proceedings meant that a tenderer which had buses powered by gas or alcohol was rewarded. According to the Government, there was nothing to prevent the other tenderers from acquiring such buses. They had been available on the market for some years.

78 The Swedish Government maintains that the award of additional points for low nitrogen oxide emissions and noise levels of the buses which the tenderer intends to operate does not constitute direct discrimination, but is applied without distinction. Moreover, it does not appear to be indirect discrimination, in the sense of necessarily having the effect of benefiting HKL.

79 According to the United Kingdom Government, Directive 93/38 does not prohibit the awarding of additional points in the assessment of tenders where it is known beforehand that few undertakings will be able to obtain those additional points, as long as the contracting entity has made it known at the stage of the tender notice that such additional points may be obtained.

80 The Commission considers that, in view of the divergent opinions of the parties in the context of the main proceedings, it is not in a position to determine whether the criteria which were applied breach the principle of equal treatment of tenderers. It is therefore for the national court to rule on that question and to determine, on the basis of objective, relevant and consistent evidence, whether those criteria were adopted with the sole purpose of selecting the undertaking which was eventually selected or were defined to that end.

Findings of the Court

81 It must be stated that the duty to observe the principle of equal treatment lies at the very heart of the public procurement directives, which are intended in particular to promote the development of effective competition in the fields to which they apply and which lay down criteria for the award of contracts which are intended to ensure such competition (see, to that effect, Case C-243/89 Commission v Denmark [1993] ECR I-3353, paragraph 33).

82 Thus, according to the case-law cited in paragraph 63 above, the award criteria must observe the principle of non-discrimination as it follows from the Treaty provisions on freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services.

83 In the present case, it should be noted, first, that, as is apparent from the order for reference, the award criteria at issue in the main proceedings were objective and applied without distinction to all tenders. Next, the criteria were directly linked to the fleet offered and were an integral part of a system of awarding points. Finally, under that system, additional points could be awarded on the basis of other criteria linked to the fleet, such as the use of low-floor buses, the number of seats and tip-up seats and the age of the buses.

84 Moreover, as Concordia acknowledged at the hearing, it won the tender for route 15 of the Helsinki urban bus network, even though that invitation to tender specifically required the operation of gas-powered vehicles.

85 It must therefore be held that, in such a factual context, the fact that one of the criteria adopted by the contracting entity to identify the economically most advantageous tender could be satisfied only by a small number of undertakings, one of which was an undertaking belonging to the contracting entity, is not in itself such as to constitute a breach of the principle of equal treatment.

86 In those circumstances, the answer to the third question must be that the principle of equal treatment does not preclude the taking into consideration of criteria connected with protection of the environment, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, solely because the contracting entity's own transport undertaking is one of the few undertakings able to offer a bus fleet satisfying those criteria.

The first question

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

87 By its first question, the national court essentially asks whether the answer to the second and third questions would be different if the procedure for the award of the public contract at issue in the main proceedings fell within the scope of Directive 93/38.

88 On this point, it must be noted, first, that the provisions of Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 and Article 34(1)(a) of Directive 93/38 have substantially the same wording.

89 Second, the provisions concerning award criteria of Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating procedures for the award of public supply contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) and those of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) also have substantially the same wording as those of Article 36(1)(a) of Directive 92/50 and Article 34(1)(a) of Directive 93/38.

90 It should be observed, third, that those directives taken as a whole constitute the core of Community law on public contracts and are intended to attain similar objectives in their respective fields.

91 In those circumstances, there is no reason to give a different interpretation to two provisions which fall within the same field of Community law and have substantially the same wording.

92 It should also be noted that the Court has already held, in paragraph 33 of Commission v Denmark, that the duty to observe the principle of equal treatment lies at the very heart of all the public procurement directives. The documents in the main proceedings have not disclosed anything to show that, as regards the contracting entity's choice of award criteria, the interpretation of that principle should depend in this case on the particular directive applicable to the contract in question.

93 The answer to the first question must therefore be that the answer to the second and third questions would not be different if the procedure for the award of the public contract at issue in the main proceedings fell within the scope of Directive 93/38.

having regard to the Report for the Hearing, after hearing the oral observations of Entsorgungsbetriebe Simmering GmbH, represented by C. Casati, Rechtsanwalt, of the Austrian Government, represented by M. Fruhmann, acting as Agent, and of the Commission, represented by H. van Lier, acting as Agent, assisted by R. Roniger, at the hearing on 12 September 2001, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 8 November 2001,

Judgment

Costs

101 The costs incurred by the Austrian and Netherlands Governments, and by the Commission, which submitted observations to the Court, are not recoverable. Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the proceedings pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court.

On those grounds,

THE COURT

(Sixth Chamber),

in answer to the questions referred to it by the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien by order of 12 November 1999, hereby rules:

1. A body which was not established to satisfy specific needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character, but which has subsequently taken responsibility for such needs, which it has since satisfied, fulfils the requirement of the first indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts so as to be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of that provision, on condition that the assumption of responsibility for the satisfaction of those needs can be established objectively.

2. Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, does not preclude national legislation which provides that any application for review of a contracting authority's decision must be commenced within a time-limit laid down to that effect and that any irregularity in the award procedure relied upon in support of such application must be raised within the same period, if it is not to be out of time, with the result that, when that period has passed, it is no longer possible to challenge such a decision or to raise such an irregularity, provided that the time-limit in question is reasonable.

3. Directive 93/37 is to be interpreted as meaning that where, in the context of a restricted procedure, the contracting authority has laid down in advance the rules for weighting the criteria for selecting the candidates who will be invited to tender, it is obliged to state them in the contract notice or tender documents.

1 By order of 12 November 1999, received at the Court on 7 December 1999, the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien (Public Procurement Review Chamber of the Land of Vienna) referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC four questions on the interpretation of Article

1(a), (b) and (c) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), and Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1, hereinafter `Directive 89/665').

2 Those questions were raised in the course of proceedings between Universale-Bau AG (hereinafter `Universale'), and the consortium of undertakings (`Bietergemeinschaft') formed by Hinteregger & Söhne Bauges.mbH and OSTU-STETTIN Hoch- und Tiefbau GmbH (hereinafter `the consortium'), and Entsorgungsbetriebe Simmering GesmbH (hereinafter `EBS'), concerning a procedure for the award of a public works contract.

Relevant provisions

Community legislation

3 It is apparent from the first and second recitals in the preamble to Directive 89/665 that the mechanisms, which existed at the date of its adoption at both national and Community levels, for ensuring the effective application of Community directives in relation to public procurement, were not always adequate to ensure compliance with the relevant Community provisions, particularly at a stage when infringements could still be corrected.

4 In the terms of the third recital in the preamble to that directive, `the opening-up of public procurement to Community competition necessitates a substantial increase in the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination and... for it to have tangible effects, effective and rapid remedies must be available in the case of infringements of Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law'.

5 Article 1(1) and (3) of Directive 89/665 provide:

`1. The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC and 92/50/EEC decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.

3. The Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular public supply or public works contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement. In particular, the Member States may require that the person seeking the review must have previously notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to seek review.'

6 As is apparent from the first recital in its preamble, Directive 93/37, for reasons of clarity and better understanding, consolidated Council Directive 71/305/EEC of 26 July 1971 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1971 L 185, p. 5), as subsequently amended.

7 In the words of its second recital, `the simultaneous attainment of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services in respect of public works contracts awarded in Member States on behalf of the State, or regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law entails not only the abolition of restrictions but also the coordination of national procedures for the award of public works contracts'.

8 The 10th recital in the preamble to Directive 93/37 states that, `to ensure development of effective competition in the field of public contracts, it is necessary that contract notices drawn up by the contracting authorities of Member States be advertised throughout the Community; whereas the information contained in these notices must enable contractors established in the Community to determine whether the proposed contracts are of interest to them; whereas, for this purpose, it is appropriate to give them adequate information on the works undertaken and the conditions attached thereto; whereas, more particularly, in restricted procedures advertisement is intended to enable contractors of Member States to express their interest in contracts by seeking from the contracting authorities invitations to tender under the required conditions'.

9 Further, it is apparent from the 11th recital in the preamble to Directive 93/37 that `additional information concerning contracts must, as is customary in Member States, be given in the contract documents for each contract or else in an equivalent document'.

10 Article 1(a) to (c) of Directive 93/37 provides:

`For the purposes of this Directive:

(a) "public works contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a contractor and a contracting authority as defined in (b), which have as their object either the execution, or both the execution and design, of works related to one of the activities referred to in Annex II or a work defined in (c) below, or the execution, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority;

(b) "contracting authorities" shall be the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or bodies governed by public law;

A "body governed by public law" means any body:

- established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

- having legal personality, and

- financed, for the most part, by the State, or regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, or subject to management supervision by those bodies, or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities or by other bodies governed by public law.

(c) a "work" means the outcome of building or civil engineering works, taken as a whole that is sufficient of itself to fulfil an economic and technical function.'

11 Article 7(2) of Directive 93/37 provides:

`The contracting authorities may award their public works contracts by negotiated procedure, with prior publication of a contract notice and after having selected the candidates according to publicly known qualitative criteria, in the following cases:

...'

12 Article 13(2)(e) of Directive 93/37, which applies to restricted and negotiated procedures provides:

`The contracting authorities shall simultaneously and in writing invite the selected candidates to submit their tenders. The letter of invitation shall be accompanied by the contract documents and supporting documents. It shall include at least the following information:

...

(e) the criteria for the award of the contract if these are not given in the notice.'

13 Article 30(1) and (2) of Directive 93/37 provides:

`1. The criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of contracts shall be:

(a) either the lowest price only;

(b) or, when the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender, various criteria according to the contract: e.g. price, period for completion, running costs, profitability, technical merit.

2. In the case referred to in paragraph 1(b), the contracting authority shall state in the contract documents or in the contract notice all the criteria it intends to apply to the award, where possible in descending order of importance.'

Austrian legislation

14 Paragraph 48(2) of the Wiener Landesvergabegesetz (Law of the Land of Vienna on public procurement, LGBl. No 36/1995, hereinafter `the WLVergG'), provides:

`The contract must be awarded to the tender which is technically and economically the most advantageous in the light of the criteria stated in the contract notice...'

15 Paragraph 96(1) and (2) of the WLVergG, entitled `Pre-litigation procedure', provides:

`(1) If a contractor considers that a decision taken by a contracting authority before the award of a contract infringes this Law and he has been or risks being harmed thereby, he shall formally communicate in writing to the contracting authority a statement of reasons and his intention to institute review proceedings.

(2) On receipt of the communication under subparagraph 1, the contracting authority shall either rectify the alleged infringement without delay and inform the contractor thereof or communicate in writing to the complainant why the alleged infringement does not exist.'

16 Paragraph 97 of the WLVergG, entitled `Application for review', is as follows:

`(1) An application for review prior to the award of a contract shall be admissible only if the contractor has formally notified the contracting authority of the alleged infringement and of his intention to apply for review (Paragraph 96(1)) and the contracting authority has not informed him within two weeks that the infringement has been rectified.

(2) Review may be applied for by:

1. a contractor who claims a business interest in the conclusion of a supply, works, works concession or service contract or a contract in the water, energy, transport or telecommunications sectors, in respect of a ground of nullity under Paragraph 101;

2. a tenderer who claims that the contract was not awarded to him in spite of the inapplicability of the grounds of elimination within the meaning of Paragraph 47 and contrary to Paragraph 48(2).

(3) The application under subparagraph 2 shall contain:

1. the precise designation of the award procedure concerned and of the decision challenged;

2. the precise designation of the contracting authority;

3. a precise statement of the facts;

4. particulars of how the applicant risks being or already has been harmed;

5. the grounds on which the allegation of infringement is based;

6. a specific request for a declaration of nullity or amendment;

7. in cases under subparagraph 1, evidence that the contracting authority was notified in a pre-litigation procedure in accordance with Paragraph 96 of the alleged infringement and of the intention to apply for review, and reference to the contracting authority's failure to rectify the infringement within the specified time-limit.

(4) The review procedure does not have suspensory effect on the contract award procedure to which it relates.

17 In addition, Paragraph 98 of the WLVergG, entitled `Time-limits', provides:

`Applications for review on the ground of the following alleged infringements shall be lodged with the Vergabekontrollsenat within the following time-limits:

1. as regards applications which are refused, two weeks, and where Paragraph 52 applies, three days after notification of the refusal;

2. as regards provisions in the notification by which contractors are invited to apply to take part in a restricted or negotiated procedure or as regards provisions of the invitation to tender, two weeks, and where Paragraph 52 applies, one week before expiry of the date for submitting applications or tenders;

3. as regards the award of a contract, two weeks after the publication of the award in the Official Journal of the European Communities or, where the award is not published, six months after the award of the contract.

The main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

18 It is apparent from the order for reference that EBS issued a public invitation to tender for the award, under a restricted procedure, of a public works contract (terrassing, large-scale and specialist works) for the construction of the second biological treatment phase of the principal sewage treatment plant of Vienna.

19 In the invitation to tender, which was published in the Amstblatt der Stadt Wien of 17 March 1999, it was stated, under the heading `Criteria for the award of the contract', that the contract would be awarded to the economically most favourable tender according to the criteria set out in the invitation to tender.

20 In the explanatory notes concerning applications to take part, EBS stated the criteria for ranking those applications in the following manner:

`For the ranking of the applications to take part, the technical operating capacity over the last five years of the candidate, of each member of the consortium of contractors and of the sub-contractors indicated will be taken into account.

The five highest ranked candidates shall be invited to submit a tender.

The evaluation of the applications submitted shall be made according to a scoring procedure.

The following works shall be analysed in the following order:

© An extract from a JUSTIS database

1. sewage treatment plants, 2. prestressed components, 3. large-scale foundations supported by columns in gravel, 4. oscillating pressure compaction, 5. high pressure soil consolidation.'

21 EBS also stated to the candidates, in the said explanatory notes, that the required references would be evaluated according to a `scoring' method lodged with a notary and that it had lodged with a notary on 9 April 1999, that is prior to the receipt of the first application to take part, the detailed rules of that method.

22 Universale and the consortium of undertakings (hereinafter together `the applicants in the main proceedings') made known their interest in taking part in the restricted procedure, without first of all seeking review of the conditions or terms of the invitation to tender. After being informed by EBS, by letter of 7 July 1999, that they were not amongst the five best-ranked candidates and were therefore not invited to submit a tender, they challenged the award procedure before the Vergabekontrollsenat.

23 In its application dated 3 August 1999, Universale sought a declaration by the Vergabekontrollsenat that the contracting authority's decision to engage in a restrictive procedure was unlawful and void; alternatively, that the limitation of the number of invited contractors to the five best-ranked candidates was unlawful and void; alternatively, that the `scoring' method applied did not observe the principles of transparency and reconstructability and that therefore the contracting authority's decision on the ranking of applications to take part was unlawful and void; finally, alternatively, that if the `scoring' method had been correctly applied, the applicants should have been ranked among the five best candidates and that the contracting authority's ranking was therefore unlawful and void.

24 In its application dated 20 September 1999, the consortium of undertakings sought a declaration that the decision not to include it among the five best-ranked candidates was unlawful and, alternatively, that the restricted procedure was unlawful.

25 The applicants in the main proceedings also applied for an interlocutory order restraining EBS from awarding the contract.

26 In the order for reference, the Vergabekontrollsenat states, on the one hand, that under the WLVergG, it has jurisdiction to determine applications for review of procedures for the award of public supply, works, and service contracts and, on the other hand, that under Paragraph 6(1) of the Allgemeines Verwaltungsverfahrensgesetz of 1991 (Code of Administrative Procedure, BGBl. No 1991/51), in the version of BGBl. I No 1998/158 (hereinafter `the AVG'), it is bound to confirm, of its own motion, that it has jurisdiction. It adds that, under Paragraph 6(2) of the AVG, the parties' consent can neither found nor vary the jurisdiction of an administrative authority and that, therefore, the fact that EBS stated in its invitation to tender that the WLVergG was applicable cannot suffice to establish the jurisdiction of the Vergabekontrollsenat.

27 Therefore, in order to decide whether it has jurisdiction, the Vergabekontrollsenat has to establish, first of all, whether EBS is a `contracting authority' within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37.

28 The Vergabekontrollsenat notes that it is clear from the judgment of the Court in Case C-44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others [1998] ECR I-73, paragraph 21, that an entity must satisfy the three conditions set out in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 to be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of that provision.

29 After finding that EBS has legal personality and is majority-controlled by the city of Vienna, that is a regional or local authority, the Vergabekontrollsenat concludes that EBS satisfies the conditions set out in the second and third indents of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37.

30 With regard to the condition laid down in the first indent of that provision, the Vergabekontrollsenat stated that it was apparent from EBS's statutes at the time of its establishment that it operated, on a commercial basis, sewage treatment installations. It states that such activities were not reserved or allotted to the public sector and that there was no indication in the said statutes that EBS was established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character.

31 According to the findings of the Vergabekontrollsenat, a substantial change took place when EBS was made responsible for the operation of the city of Vienna's principal sewage treatment plant. In particular, in 1985 EBS entered into a lease with the city of Vienna, under which it undertook to manage the said sewage plant with staff supplied by the city of Vienna, which undertook to reimburse EBS the expenses occasioned by such personnel. Under two contracts made between the city of Vienna and EBS on 8 and 18 July 1996, the city of Vienna further undertook to transfer to EBS an appropriate global amount to cover the operating expenses. In that regard the Vergabekontrollsenat explains that EBS did not carry on that branch of its activities for profit. It was in fact an activity of general interest which the city of Vienna delegated to EBS and which was managed in such a way as to cover the expenses. The Vergabekontrollsenat concludes therefore that that activity is not of an industrial or commercial character.

32 According to the Vergabekontrollsenat, the possibility that it was an evasive manoeuvre can be ruled out since EBS was established in 1976 as a sanitation undertaking whereas the transfer of the management of the main sewage treatment plant did not take place until 1 January 1986. In particular, it considers that such a time-scale, as well as the fact that the Republic of Austria was not, at that time, a member of the European Union and that EBS was not, in any event, covered by Directive 71/305, which was then in force, which used the term `legal persons governed by public law', indicate the absence of any intention of evasion.

33 Nevertheless, since EBS was not responsible for satisfying needs in the general interest having a character other than industrial or commercial at the time of its establishment, but after changes in its sphere of activities, the Vergabekontrollsenat raises the question whether EBS satisfies the condition set out in the first indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37.

34 In addition, the Vergabekontrollsenat points out that clause I of the contract made between EBS and the city of Vienna on 8 July 1996 stipulates that EBS is to carry out the enlargement of the main sewage treatment plant and to enter into the necessary contracts in its own name and on its own account. No specific condition is laid down as regards the detailed performance of that undertaking. Clauses II and III of the contract none the less impose on EBS a specified method of operating the main sewage treatment plant, without however specifying the actual form of the project.

35 Furthermore, it is apparent from a decision of the Buildings Department of 30 December 1998 that EBS has obtained permission to build on a site of which the city of Vienna is the proprietor. In a letter of 8 September 1999, EBS stated that the sewage treatment plant in question is to be built in its name and on its account, writing in particular: `We will have ownership of the sewage plant in question. The sewage plant will be transferred in the event of termination of the lease and management contract entered into for an indefinite period with the city of Vienna. In that case the city of Vienna is obliged to buy back our sewage plant. It must pay us the current market value of the sewage plant'.

36 In those circumstances, the Vergabekontrollsenat inquires whether, in light of the abovementioned agreements between EBS and the city of Vienna which, as a regional or local authority, is in any event a `contracting authority', the contract at issue in the case before it is a public works contract within the meaning of the combined provisions of Article 1(a) and (c) of Directive 93/37.

37 Next, if it is appropriate for it to declare that it has jurisdiction to hear the dispute before it, the Vergabekontrollsenat inquires whether the provisions of Paragraphs 96 to 98 of the WLVergG are compatible with Directive 89/665 inasmuch as they provide that an application for review of a particular provision in the invitation to tender is admissible only if made within a certain time-limit. In that regard, it states that, if no application for review of a specific provision of the invitation to tender is brought, or if such an application is brought out of time, it is not then possible to review the contracting authority's decision as to whether that provision of the invitation to tender infringes the WLVergG or Directive 89/665 and that that question is relevant to the dispute before it, because EBS expressly relies upon the fact that the application for review was brought out of time.

38 Finally, the Vergabekontrollsenat states that, in the context of the dispute before it, it is also called upon to decide whether it was correct for the applications of the applicants in the main proceedings to take part to be not accepted as a result of the `scoring' method adopted by the contracting authority, the detailed rules of which were only made known after expiry of the time-limit for applications and the award of the contract. The Vergabekontrollsenat makes clear that it cannot be excluded that the results of that method had a decisive influence on the contracting authority's decision.

39 Having regard to all those considerations, the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Wien decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

`1. Does a legal person constitute a "contracting authority" within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37/EEC even if it was not established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, but now meets such needs?

2. If Entsorgungsbetriebe Simmering GesmbH is not a contracting authority, does the planned construction of the second biological treatment phase of the principal sewage plant, Vienna, constitute the execution, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority, and thus a "public works contract" within the meaning of Article 1(a), read in conjunction with Article 1(c), of Directive 93/37/EEC?

3. If Question 1 or Question 2 is answered in the affirmative, does Directive 89/665/EEC preclude a national provision which fixes a time-limit for the review of an individual decision of the contracting authority so that on expiry of that time-limit the decision can no longer be challenged in the course of the ongoing contract award procedure? Is it necessary, for the persons concerned to plead every defect, failure to do so entailing loss of their right to do so?

4. If Question 1 or Question 2 is answered in the affirmative, is it sufficient for the body inviting tenders to determine that the applications will be evaluated according to a method lodged with a notary, or is it necessary for the evaluation criteria already to have been communicated in the call for candidates or the tender documents?'

The first question

40 By its first question, the Vergabekontrollsenat is asking, in essence, whether an entity which was not established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, but which has subsequently taken responsibility for such needs, which it has subsequently been actually meeting, fulfils the condition required by the first indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 so as to be capable of being regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of that provision.

Admissibility

41 On a preliminary point, it is appropriate to point out that, as is apparent from the order for reference, the Vergabekontrollsenat seeks clarification as to whether an entity such as EBS is a `contracting authority' within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, in order to determine whether it has jurisdiction in connection with the applications for review of a decision by that company made by the applicants in the main proceedings.

42 In that regard, it must be recalled that, according to settled case-law, it is for the legal system of each Member State to determine which court or tribunal has jurisdiction to hear disputes involving individual rights derived from Community law. However, it is the Member States' responsibility to ensure that those rights are effectively protected in each case. Subject to that reservation, it is not for the Court to involve itself in the resolution of questions of jurisdiction to which the classification of certain legal situations based on Community law may give rise in the national judicial system (see, in particular, Case C-446/93 SEIM [1996] ECR I-73, paragraph 32, and Case C-54/96 Dorsch Consult [1997] ECR I-4691, paragraph 40).

43 However, the Court has power to explain to the national court points of Community law which may help to solve the problem of jurisdiction with which that court is faced (see, in particular, SEIM, cited above, paragraph 33, and Joined Cases C-10/97 to C-22/97 IN.CO.GE.'90 and Others [1998] ECR I-6307, paragraph 15).

44 Furthermore, the character of EBS as a contracting authority affects the replies to the third and fourth questions referred, whose admissibility is not disputed.

45 Therefore, the question must be answered.

Substance

46 In the dispute in the main proceedings, it is common ground that, since EBS took over the operation of the main sewage treatment plant, under the contract made in 1985 with the city of Vienna, that company satisfies a need in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character. Therefore, its treatment as a body governed by public law within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 depends on the answer to be given to the question whether the condition set out in the first indent of that provision precludes an entity from being regarded as a `contracting authority' where it was not established for the purposes of satisfying needs in the general interest having a character other than industrial or commercial, but has undertaken such tasks as a result of a subsequent change in its sphere of activities.

Observations submitted to the Court

47 EBS submits that it cannot be regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, on the ground that it is clear from the actual wording of the first indent of that provision that the sole deciding factor is the task which it was given at the date of its establishment. It adds that the fact that it has, subsequently, taken responsibility for tasks in the general interest having a character other than industrial or commercial does not affect its status since it continues to carry out industrial and commercial assignments.

48 The Commission also maintains that EBS cannot be regarded as a `contracting authority' within the meaning of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, because the change in its activities stems neither from an amendment to that effect of its objects as defined in its statutes, nor from a legal obligation.

49 In contrast, the applicants in the main proceedings, as well as the Austrian and Netherlands Governments, submit that it is EBS's current activity which is to be taken into consideration and not its purpose at the date of its establishment, and they assert that a different interpretation would mean that, notwithstanding the fact that an entity corresponded as a matter of fact to the definition of `contracting authority' in Directive 93/37, it would not be required, in awarding public works contracts, to observe the requirements of that directive. In addition, they maintain that a functional interpretation of the term `contracting authority' is the only one capable of preventing possible evasion, since, otherwise, Directive 93/37 could easily be circumvented by transferring tasks in the general interest having a character other than industrial or commercial not to an entity newly established for that purpose, but to an existing one which previously had another object.

Findings of the Court

50 The Court has already had occasion to clarify the scope of the term `body governed by public law' in Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, in the light, in particular, of the purpose of that directive.

51 Thus the Court has held that the purpose of coordinating at Community level the procedures for the award of public contracts is to eliminate barriers to the freedom to provide services and goods and therefore to protect the interests of traders established in a Member State who wish to offer goods or services to contracting authorities established in another Member State (see, in particular, Case C-380/98 University of Cambridge [2000] ECR I-8035, paragraph 16, and Case C-237/99 Commission v France [2001] ECR I-939, paragraph 41).

52 It has deduced therefrom that the aim of Directive 93/37 is to avoid both the risk of preference being given to national tenderers or applicants whenever a contract is awarded by the contracting authorities and the possibility that a body financed or controlled by the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law may choose to be guided by considerations other than economic ones (see, in particular, both cases cited above, University of Cambridge, paragraph 17, and Commission v France, paragraph 42).

53 The Court has therefore held that it is in the light of those objectives that the concept of `body governed by public law' in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 must be interpreted in functional terms (see, in particular, Commission v France, cited above, paragraph 43).

54 Thus, at paragraph 26 of the judgment in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others, cited above, in relation to the treatment of an entity which had been established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character, but which also carried on commercial activities, the Court held that the condition laid down in the first indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 does not entail that the body concerned may be entrusted only with meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character.

55 In particular, as is clear from paragraph 25 of the judgment in Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others, cited above, the Court has held that it is immaterial that, in addition to the specific task of meeting needs in the general interest, the entity concerned is free to carry out other activities, but, on the other hand, decided that it is a critical factor that it should continue to attend to the needs which it is specifically required to meet.

56 It follows therefrom that, for the purposes of deciding whether a body satisfies the condition set out in the first indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, it is necessary to consider the activities which it actually carries on.

57 In that regard, it should be pointed out that the effectiveness of Directive 93/37 would not be fully upheld if the application of the scheme of the directive to a body which satisfies the conditions set out in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) thereof, could be excluded owing solely to the fact that the tasks in the general interest having a character other than industrial or commercial which it carries out in practice were not entrusted to it at the time of its establishment.

58 The same concern to ensure the effectiveness of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 also militates against drawing a distinction according to whether the statutes of such an entity were or were not amended to reflect actual changes in its sphere of activity.

59 In addition, the wording of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 contains no reference to the legal basis of the activities of the entity concerned.

60 It is appropriate, furthermore, to point out that, in relation to the definition of the expression `body governed by public law' in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 92/50, which is in terms identical to those contained in the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37, the Court has already held that the existence or absence of needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character must be appraised objectively, the legal form of the provisions in which those needs are mentioned being immaterial in that regard (Case C-360/96 BFI Holding [1998] ECR I-6821, paragraph 63).

61 It follows that the fact that, in the main proceedings, the extension of EBS's sphere of activities did not give rise to an amendment to the provisions of its statutes concerning its objects is irrelevant.

62 Although EBS's assumption of responsibility for needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character has not been formally incorporated in its statutes, it is none the less set out in the contracts which EBS made with the city of Vienna and is therefore capable of being objectively established.

63 It is therefore appropriate to reply to the first question that a body which was not established to satisfy specific needs in the general interest not having an industrial or commercial character, but which has subsequently taken responsibility for such needs, which it has since actually satisfied, fulfils the condition required by the first indent of the second subparagraph of Article 1(b) of Directive 93/37 so as to be capable of being regarded as a body governed by public law within the meaning of that provision, on condition that the assumption of responsibility for the satisfaction of those needs can be established objectively.

The second question

64 In light of the reply to the first question, there is no need to reply to the second question, since it was referred to the Court only in the event of a negative reply to the first question.
